The house met at 11 a.m.

TRADE

WHEAT—POSSIBLE REDUCTION IN SALES TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. It arises out of some questions I asked the other day relative to a suggestion in the press that the U.S.S.R. would not be buying much more Canadian wheat. I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether his attention has been directed to a statement made yesterday by Mr. Khrushchev in Odense, Denmark, as follows:

> It is unlikely Moscow will make further purchases of grain from the west which has provided millions of bushels of wheat to offset poor Russian crops of 1963.

This is a matter that is very important to the economy of Canada. Is the Prime Minister in a position to say what discussions have taken place in this connection, and whether there is sound reason to fear that the U.S.S.R. will be greatly reducing, if not entirely ending, the contracts for the purchase of wheat?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is of course a very important question; it is a question of long range significance. I will have to wait until the return of the Minister of Trade and Commerce today, and perhaps he will be in a position to make a statement on the whole matter early next week.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the Prime Minister, in view of the uncertainty of continuing wheat sales to the U.S.S.R., if the government would expedite its policy of foreign aid in order to take up some of the slack in wheat exports later this year.

Mr. Pearson: I will be very glad to look into that situation, Mr. Speaker. I was not quite sure that I heard the hon. member's question correctly, but I think it was that we should expedite and increase foreign aid. Certain steps have already been taken in this connection, and if the situation requires it and makes it possible, more steps could be taken.

Mr. Olson: The government have announced that they intend to step up foreign aid, particularly in food exports, to somethink like $40 million a year. I am asking the government now if they will take some action to implement this stated policy of theirs to take up some of the slack.

Mr. Pearson: I said I would be very glad to look into that suggestion, Mr. Speaker.

FINANCE

FAMILY ALLOWANCES—CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION EXTENDING APPLICATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Finance and ask whether he could not persuade the government to allow him to bring in at once legislation that will extend family allowances to students of 16 and 17 years of age while attending school, so they might make preparations for the next school term.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it is the intention of the government to bring in legislation along those lines at the very earliest date, and I hope it will be in early July.

Mr. Starr: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could not the minister try to persuade the government to break into the flag debate in order to bring forward this very important legislation?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I think the government is—

An hon. Member: In trouble.

Mr. Gordon: —in an excellent position to decide on the order in which the business should be presented to the house.

Mr. Starr: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does not the minister consider that this legislation would be far more important and beneficial to the people of this country than the flag debate?

Mr. Gordon: My personal opinion, Mr. Speaker, is that we should dispose of the flag debate at the very earliest moment.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question to the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Is that a new suggestion of closure?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am under the impression that a supplementary question has been missed. Was the hon. member for Greenwood rising on a supplementary question?

Mr. Brewin: Mine is not a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONSIDERATION OF REFINANCING BILL BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Leon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. I wonder whether the minister could tell the house if, when the bill for the refinancing of the C.N.R. is brought forward, it will be sent to the railway committee so the trucking association will have a chance to bring forward their very legitimate representations on this matter.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): It will be my intention, Mr. Speaker, if that legislation receives second reading, to ask that it be referred to the standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines, which committee, I would hope, would hear not only the truckers but any other interested parties.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister say whether this association could be called before the committee now?

Mr. Pickersgill: I think this is perhaps a question I ought not to answer, because the matter is before the committee. But perhaps it will save time if I just say that I understand the committee has unanimously taken the decision that the right time to hear them would be when the legislation was before the committee. They could then make representations having knowledge of what was proposed.

PUBLICATIONS

INTENTION OF GOVERNMENT RESPECTING PENDING LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question which may appear repetitious but which is asked in light of the fact that we know he has been having encounters with men in the publishing field. Has he gone any further in his reconsideration of the magazine legislation which was proposed, and in particular does he intend to withdraw the presently indicated legislation from the order paper and substitute a different appoach?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I have gone no further in this matter.

PROCEDURE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION ON LIMITATION OF DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice in his capacity as house leader. In view of the urgency of change in the procedure of this house if it is to be able to conduct the business before it with reasonable dispatch, will the house leader inquire from the committee on procedure and organization and inform this house whether it may expect an early report recommending reasonable means of limiting debate without unduly restricting the rights of members?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will be delighted and I will make it a point of duty to inquire.

INDUSTRY

GASOLINE—REQUEST FOR ROYAL COMMISSION INQUIRY INTO PRICE PATTERNS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Justice. Has the minister received a telegram from the maritime retail gasoline association asking that a royal commission investigate gasoline price patterns in Canada and, if so, what are the thoughts of the minister on this?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have received such a telegram, and I have the matter presently under consideration.

Mr. Bell: A supplementary question. In view of the regional nature of the petroleum industry in the maritimes, and their pricing system, will the minister give this matter more than just a routine referral and promise some sort of report back to this house as to the disposition of the matter?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I will consider this suggestion.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the President of the Privy Council. Was the President of the Privy Council in the cabinet room when the film "Mr. Pearson" was being filmed, and were political matters being discussed by those present during the filming?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question twice. There was no filming of a cabinet meeting at any time by anyone. Surely that answer can stand.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was not the question.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I think for the third time the Prime Minister has attempted to mislead this house. The first time was in the answer he gave to the hon. member for Royal on Tuesday, and then in the answer he gave me yesterday. Now, when I ask the specific question of the President of the Privy Council as to whether he was present in the cabinet room when the film called "Mr. Pearson" was being filmed, and whether political matters were being discussed, there is confusion on the front benches, and the Prime Minister interferes and says he has already answered that question. I should like my question answered.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has accused me of misleading the house in answers I have given. The answers I have given on this matter are strictly and absolutely true, and I would ask the hon. member to accept the fact that there was no filming of any meeting of the cabinet or any committee of the cabinet; and I wish he would discontinue this kind of inquiry when the matter has already been dealt with.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, for the fourth time the Prime Minister has given an answer which he claims is the truth. On the basis of the evidence we have I say that it is not the complete truth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. member to withdraw the suggestion that the answer I gave him was not the complete truth. It was the total and complete truth.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, my question was simple. Was the President of the Privy Council present—

Mr. Pearson: I would ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw the statement that I misled the house and that I did not give the house the total and complete truth.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: The Prime Minister has made a request, and I think the hon. member should withdraw the statement unless he has substantial facts to the contrary. There are other ways and means of making a charge instead of making a statement.

Mr. Pearson: You have said, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member should withdraw the statement unless he has substantial facts to disprove my statement. I ask that this be an unqualified withdrawal.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): The Prime Minister ran into a question that was not directed to him. The question was directed to the President of the Privy Council, who allegedly made the statement in question outside of this house. This is the basis for the question asked by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

I point out this, Mr. Speaker, when you are asking for a withdrawal. I am interested in the Prime Minister's attitude today because when a definite statement in this regard was made against me there was no withdrawal, and that was only a few days ago. The statement was made in your presence and it was an improper statement, far and beyond this statement. Nobody was asked for a withdrawal, and I am sure the Prime Minister should not be so touchy.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is not a matter of being touchy. It is a matter of dealing with a statement made by an hon. member opposite that I did not tell the truth in answer to a question. I claim that I have told the truth, totally and completely. I ask him to withdraw the insinuation and the statement that I did not.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to speak to the point of privilege raised. I am certain that this statement was based on a viewing of the film by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle. I also happen to have seen it; and having seen the film, Mr. Speaker, I do not see how the Prime Minister can ask for a withdrawal of the statement by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle because it is based on what seems to me a legitimate point. I am speaking as one who has viewed the film. Either these ministers and the Prime Minister were appearing as actors playing a scene, some sort of facsimile, or there was a subcommittee meeting of the cabinet which a cameraman filmed and to which the producer had access.

I wanted to express this point of view to you in the light of the demand for a withdrawal; because unless we have a statement from the Prime Minister indicating that this was just a play game for camera purposes I am certainly left with the impression that this was a meeting of the subcommittee of cabinet in the Pearson film.

An hon. Member: Let the public see the film.

Mr. Pearson: There was no committee of the cabinet or subcommittee of the cabinet, no meeting of the cabinet which was filmed. I am informed, but I have not seen the picture, that the particular picture appearing in the press purporting to be of a meeting of the cabinet does not even appear in the film.

Mr. Fisher: On that point may I refer to the meeting which is shown in the film. It shows the Prime Minister in the chair. Then we have the Minister of Transport, who was then house leader, sitting to one side; then, ranged in order, we have the Minister of Labour, the then minister of transport and the Minister of Trade and Commerce. They are carrying on a discussion as to how to meet the problems and difficulties in Montreal. Then they go into the question of how to manage the house business and how to meet the difficulties that may be raised by the particular character and attitude of the Leader of the Opposition.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: This certainly gives the impression of a meeting of a committee or subcommittee of cabinet discussing government business in relation to the House of Commons. It is either that or it is a remarkable job of acting. I think, Mr. Speaker, you should keep this in mind before you ask the hon. member for Qu'Appelle to withdraw anything at the request of the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: I must say this seems to be my week of decision. In any event, each particular case has to be judged on its own merits and I do not think I have to deal with something that is over and, I am happy to say, finished with, I hope. However, I am faced with certain allegations. I have not seen the film. I have not even seen the picture. At this stage I do not want to. But when general allegations of this sort are made against the Prime Minister of the country and the Prime Minister in his capacity as Prime Minister says they are not true, I do not see how anyone can expect the Chair to rule on whether or not they are true. I have to take the word of hon. gentlemen in this chamber.

In view of the demand of the Prime Minister of this country and the fact that, if I understood correctly, he said the statements made were not so, were not true, it seems to me I have no alternative but to ask respectfully that the hon. member, who is making general allegations so far as I know at this stage, be kind enough to withdraw.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, you have the statement of a member of this house, the hon. member for Port Arthur, who saw this thing. He saw it. Certainly his word is to be taken too. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle has made certain statements, and I submit that when one hon. member is supported, as is the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, by one of the audience that was privileged the other day to see this film which has been suppressed everywhere else, the Prime Minister should not be pressing for a withdrawal. Otherwise, if he presses that point I am going to ask that we have this film so we can get the truth. I am going to ask that it be produced for the benefit of the house so we can find out by actual visual inspection who is telling the truth.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak for anybody else but I propose to say that I was telling the truth, the total truth, and I ask the hon. gentleman to accept that. He says, in throwing doubt on my word, that two hon. members have seen this film.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I said one.

Mr. Pearson: One hon. member has seen this film. The hon. member may have seen this film. I have not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You did.

Mr. Pearson: I have not seen this film.

Mr. Churchill: What have you seen, then?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What did you see, an expurgated edition of an expurgated edition?

Mr. Pearson: If the hon. gentleman will contain his excitement I will finish my statement.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Give us the truth.

Mr. Pearson: The hon. gentleman who says he has seen the film—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Where is the truth squad now?

Mr. Pearson: I know hon. gentlemen do not like the truth. That is why they are interrupting.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We like the truth. That is what we want.

Mr. Pearson: I ask the hon. member for Port Arthur if he can bring in evidence to confirm that he saw in the film the particular picture in the newspaper, and that there was any picture in the film of a meeting of the cabinet; because there was not.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): How do you know? You never saw it.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, with regard to the point of order and whether or not I should withdraw, I submit there are two or three small points that may have escaped your notice. One is that yesterday when I asked my original question I pointed out that a certain picture had appeared in a Montreal newspaper. In this picture I recognized certain things and certain people. Then I looked at the question by the hon. member for Royal on Tuesday and at the answer by the Prime Minister, and there was a discrepancy between that answer and the picture which I saw, in which I recognized certain things as a member of parliament and as an ex-member of the cabinet.

The Prime Minister yesterday repeated to me the answer he gave to the hon. member for Royal, and when I thought Your Honour was ruling future questions like this out of order I rose and put in a caveat to the effect that there were serious implications in the answer of the Prime Minister that I would like to review in the light of fuller evidence which I am in the process of collecting.

I would like to read to you, if I may, the reasonable way I put my question yesterday:

> I have in my hand a copy of the Montreal Gazette of yesterday which shows what purports to be—

Mr. Pearson: "What purports to be".

Mr. Hamilton:

> a still picture from this controversial film. It is labelled "At cabinet. This picture of Prime Minister Pearson addressing the cabinet was taken from the controversial film". I would like to ask the Prime Minister—and I am sure there is a rational explanation for this—whether he could give to the house a more rational explanation of this apparent contradiction, so that unhappy interpretations will not be placed on this apparent difference.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, I would have liked yesterday, as a reasonably moderate member of the house, to have the Prime Minister give me the full explanation of what went on. Apparently one of the members of the press went to the Prime Minister's office and got a fuller explanation last night, and it appears in the Globe and Mail this morning.

The Prime Minister refused that fuller explanation to me yesterday so today, when I asked a follow up question to get at more of the facts from the President of the Privy Council, whether he was at a meeting in the cabinet room when these people were filming this film called "Mr. Pearson", and whether political matters were being discussed, I would like an answer to that question. On that answer a great deal depends as to whether or not I am willing to withdraw the remarks I have made to the Prime Minister.

Once again I repeat; the third point is that I did not say what the Prime Minister said yesterday was in the narrow sense untrue. I said in my view it was not the complete truth. The Prime Minister says it was the complete and total truth; but the hon. member for Port Arthur, who has seen the film, knows from his observations of that film, and on his word as a member of this house, says it left the impression in his mind that this was in the cabinet room and that certain things were being discussed that left the impression with the viewer of that film that this was part of the daily life of a prime minister.

I am suggesting here that when the Prime Minister made that statement yesterday it was not the complete truth. The complete truth can only be found when we see the film, so I am asking certain ministers what went on there and whether certain things said in that film were said by them.

I would like to ask the President of the Privy Council, was he there when this film crew was in the cabinet room when certain political matters were being discussed, and when I get an answer from him I will at least know where I stand. I would be willing to withdraw if the Prime Minister feels hurt over these things, if I could get an answer to my question, but I do not want a red herring drawn across the question I asked. I want to get an answer, which is my right.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. member to withdraw the statement he made, and you have asked him to withdraw. He is now talking about the impression which may have been created in people's minds that this was a meeting of the cabinet. I tell him again, and the house, that I am informed this particular newspaper photograph did not appear in the film at all.

An hon. Member: How do you know?

Mr. Pearson: I repeat, I am informed that it did not, by those responsible for showing the film. I also repeat that there was no filming of a cabinet meeting at all, and the picture in question was not a picture of a meeting of the cabinet. It was a picture of certain cabinet ministers assembling before a cabinet meeting. There was no filming of any cabinet meeting or any committee of the cabinet, and I repeat that according to my information the particular picture in question did not appear in the film that was shown.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, before an irrevocable decision is made on your part may I refer Your Honour to citation 154 in the fourth edition of Beauchesne, paragraph 5, which says:

> It is not unparliamentary to say that a statement is untrue, but it is unparliamentary to say that it was untrue to the knowledge of the member addressing the house.

I think this illustrates the wisdom of the decisions laid down under this citation.

Mr. Hamilton: One thing finally, Mr. Speaker. I will withdraw my remarks if I can get an answer to the original question I asked the President of the Privy Council, without interference from the Prime Minister and any of his colleagues.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, before the President of the Privy Council replies I ask you to confirm the ruling you have made.

[Mr. Hamilton.]

According to the hon. member the withdrawal is now made conditional on the President of the Privy Council answering a question. Surely, Mr. Speaker, you have asked for unconditional withdrawal, and it should be given.

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber): Mr. Speaker, I am one of the members of the house who saw that film in its entirety when it was presented by members of the press gallery down at Crawley Films. I was there from the beginning until the very end, and I can back up the Prime Minister in every detail of his statement when he states that the picture purporting to be a meeting of the cabinet, the picture that appeared in the newspaper, does not appear in the film from beginning to end. There are one or two pictures purporting to show meetings of committee of the cabinet which occupy a good portion of the film but which I consider the worst piece of motion picture t.v. programming I ever did see. I repeat that the purported picture in the newspaper did not appear in the film; only those two committee meetings.

Mr. Speaker: This is certainly not the easiest decision to give especially when the evidence, to my poor legal brain, seems to be somewhat faulty. It seems to me allegations are made this morning on pictures which appear in newspapers and on implications drawn from the seeing of a film. On the one side that is the charge. On the other side you have the total repudiation by the Prime Minister of the country, that there was no meeting of the cabinet at this time.

Inasmuch as the right hon. Prime Minister must have been at that meeting, or at least his colleagues were, I think the benefit of the doubt should be given to the people who were on the spot and not to pictures that may appear in the newspapers or to implications drawn from headings, or otherwise from the viewing of the film. Therefore in view of the complete, absolute and total denial by the Prime Minister of the implication and of the charge, it does seem to me that according to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 155:

> It will be useful to give examples here of expressions which are unparliamentary and call for prompt interference. These may be classified as follows:
> 1. The imputation of false or unavowed motives.
> 2. The misrepresentation of the language of another and the accusation of misrepresentation.
> 3. Charges of uttering a deliberate falsehood—

Therefore in the circumstances and in view of the discussion I would respectfully ask the hon. member for Qu'Appelle to withdraw.

Mr. Hamilton: Mr. Speaker, I think I made my conditions known. I asked quietly for an answer from the President of the Privy Council and it was not given to me. I know the Prime Minister's statement leaves aside the real issue. I am not talking about this film particularly; I am simply trying to get an answer to the question. Until I get that answer I think my rights have been infringed, and I have no recourse but to say my conditions are unchanged and I will leave the course of action up to you.

Mr. Speaker: I know very well the hon. gentleman, whom I respect and have respected ever since I had the privilege of meeting him; and without in any way wishing to imply that I am dodging the issue—because I am not dodging the issue—in view of the statements and countercharges and allegations and questions asked yesterday and today I do think it is reasonable for the Chair to be allowed some time to examine this matter carefully. I do not wish to make a wrong decision or to render injustice to either side, but I think the Chair is taken somewhat by surprise. It is my responsibility, but I should like, over the week end, to go into this further and consider the matter carefully. Therefore I will take it under consideration.

Mr. Pearson: Well, the Leader of the Opposition suggested that one way of clearing up this particular allegation would be to have a showing of this film for members of parliament. I hope that can be arranged, and that this can be done without interfering with the C.B.C., who have custody of the film. I will take the right hon. gentleman's request to the C.B.C. and join in that request that this film be made available to members.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That shows the benefit of discussion, Mr. Speaker. The other day there was suppression. Now we are to get the film, possibly, if the Prime Minister can direct the C.B.C.—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I resent the right hon. gentleman's words. There has been no suppression. I said in this house a week ago that whatever decision was made by the C.B.C. I would gladly accept it. If I had told the right hon. gentleman at that time that I would ask the C.B.C. to make this film available he would then have accused me of interference, as he is doing now.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege—

Mr. Pearson: I have the floor and wish to complete my remarks.

Mr. Speaker: I can only say I am very glad I do not have to attend caucus any more.

Mr. Pearson: Now, Mr. Speaker, to complete my statement—

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege, the Prime Minister may wave his hand—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Prime Minister was, I believe, completing his statement, and I do not know on what ground the Leader of the Opposition is rising.

An hon. Member: He is annoyed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am not at all annoyed. I am, rather, amused by the Prime Minister.

An hon. Member: Calm him down.

Mr. Speaker: Let us take this in sequence. First, the Prime Minister.

Mr. Pearson: Since I am going to be accused of interfering with the C.B.C. whatever I do or do not do, I agree that the C.B.C. should be asked to show the film to members of parliament. And in view of what has happened this morning I hope I shall not be accused of interfering with the affairs of the C.B.C. if I get in touch with the president of the corporation and express my own view that this film should now be exhibited publicly.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of privilege, the Prime Minister a moment ago adopted the fighting attitude of Bonnie Dundee. Well, Bonnie Dundee had some influence. The Prime Minister does not exercise the same influence. He now says, after ten days of soul searching, that he will get in touch with the C.B.C. to find out whether they might produce this film and allow members to see it. Well, we have got that far along the road. Now we want the Canadian people to see it.

An hon. Member: That is what he said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Prime Minister is the one who stopped this being shown.

Mr. Pearson: On a question of privilege, that last statement by the right hon. gentleman is false and untrue.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not ask for withdrawals. I do not have that thin skin which the Prime Minister showed today and which he has shown so often. I do not mind what he says. The facts tell the story, that the Prime Minister and the government interfered. Otherwise they would not have had the 12 screenings. It was not enjoyment and entertainment which kept them there watching it all those times.

Mr. Speaker: We now seem to have reached a happy conclusion, and I am not going to admit any more supplementaries.

Mr. Hamilton: I wish to ask a small supplementary question. If the Prime Minister intends to ask the C.B.C. to let members of parliament see this film, I think we would want to see the complete film before editing took place. We want to see the original film before it was censored; we want to find out why the C.B.C. refused to produce it. It is these missing parts that are of interest to us. I think the C.B.C. have been under tremendous pressure as a result of all these screenings; they have turned it down because they will not publish, under their own name, a censored film. I should like to look at the uncensored film to see what has been taken out.

Mr. Pearson: I will be very glad to ask the C.B.C. to show the hon. gentleman the missing parts of the film.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Let us get on with the business before the house.

[Later:]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State and ask him if he will ascertain whether the C.B.C. yesterday refused to permit the screening of a print of the film "Mr. Pearson" for a group in Ottawa last night. Did the C.B.C. take the stand that the expurgated edition which they have on hand is being held in escrow, and will the minister direct the attention of the C.B.C. to the fact that what is wanted is not the revised or expurgated edition but the entire edition before it received excision following the consideration given it by ministers of the government?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Bell: I want my $2 back.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Pearson: I told you that you would be disappointed.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Secretary of State. Will the Secretary of State say that no pressure through any agency has been brought to bear on any private television system which would preclude such system from showing the Ballentine film of the Prime Minister?

Mr. Lamontagne: I know of no pressure, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Secretary of State in relation to certain other matters that have happened this morning. I wondered whether he would ask the president of the C.B.C. to arrange for a public showing of the unexpurgated edition of their film on the Leader of the Opposition?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sure. That would be wonderful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would welcome that, for the edification of hon. gentlemen opposite.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State?

If the C.B.C. intends to show the film "Mr. Pearson" on the English t.v. network, will it be possible to see it also on the French network?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I shall pass on to the C.B.C. the hon. member's request.

Mr. Pigeon: For $35,000, it is worth the trouble.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

INQUIRY AS TO STEPS TOWARD REPATRIATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. I wish to point out in the first place that if the suggestion I made a year ago, namely that the proceedings of the House of Commons be televised, had been accepted, we would certainly have seen a good show this morning.

The question which I wish to ask to the right hon. Prime Minister is based on the official report of June 18, 1964, in the right column on page 4445, when the Prime Minister made a statement concerning the submission of a resolution to the parliament of Westminster to amend our constitution. He said the following:

> The means for achieving this purpose — that is by submission of a resolution to the parliament at Westminster is of course strangely out of date and indeed inappropriate.

My question is as follows. Does the present government intend to introduce a bill or a measure to repatriate our constitution as a result of the Prime Minister's statement yesterday?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This matter has, of course, been discussed, and it is before the house in connection with the resolution. If I did not deal yesterday with this particular point it was because I thought it would be out of order to do so, since the resolution provides only for an amendment to the British North America Act for a particular purpose; it does not deal with the whole process of the repatriation of our constitution. But I can assure the hon. member that in the course of the debate, if it were in order, we would be very glad indeed to take up this matter, and we do have every intention of taking steps to repatriate our constitution. As a further step in the progress which has been made we propose to put the matter on the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference to be held in Charlottetown, I believe, in August.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

When hon. members on this side ask questions which are serious enough for the Prime Minister to answer them seriously and intelligently, people like the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) keep on saying they are stupid questions.

This is my question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. Hon. members on this side have the right to ask questions without being interrupted by people like the hon. member for Lotbinière and without having their questions called stupid.

In this connection I feel that you must call people like that to order because not only during the question period but throughout the whole day they flout the privileges of the house and do not act in a gentlemanly way in this assembly.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me every member in the house owes respect to his colleagues, and I hope that it sufficient warning for the future.

NATIONAL PARKS

NOVA SCOTIA—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON KEJIMKUJIK PARK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and in his absence I direct it to his parliamentary secretary. In view of the importance of the tourist industry in the province of Nova Scotia, can the minister's parliamentary secretary tell the house what progress is being made on the Kejimkujik national park, and when can we expect development to start on this tourist attraction?

Mr. Speaker: This is a delightful question for the order paper.

WATER SAFETY

OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR SUPERVISOR OF MOONEY'S BAY AREA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have an urgent question that affects public safety. I direct it to the Minister of Transport and ask him whether in conjunction with the Minister of Justice he is prepared to provide immediate supervision of the Mooney's bay and adjacent areas of the Rideau river for the protection of the public.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I was much intrigued by the suggestion of the mayor of Ottawa that I should go "canoedling" with that lady, and if I were not so frightfully busy I would like to do it. But I am going to suggest to the honourable lady that she invite the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to replace me on that occasion. Actually I think it is well known that the laws regarding offences are made by the parliament of Canada but that the primary responsibility for the enforcement of these laws rests on the provincial and local authorities. I think the mayor of Ottawa was quite right in referring the matter to the police commission of the city.

Mr. Churchill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As a resident of that area I noticed that last year the patrol was carried out by the R.C.M. Police. Is that not to be the case again this year? It is an urgent and serious matter. I did not mention the interesting suggestion of the mayor of Ottawa, but I am a better canoeist than my hon. friend. It is a very serious matter because of the accident that occurred there just a few days ago, and on several occasions in the past I have observed similar near accidents. I should hope that immediate action would be taken effective this week end.

Mr. Pickersgill: I will have the matter looked into as soon as the orders of the day are over, Mr. Speaker.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF SECOND PART OF FLAG RESOLUTION—BUSINESS FOR NEXT WEEK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister and ask him, with regard to the flag resolution, whether when part A is disposed of, part B will be immediately debated.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government will announce the order of the business in due course. Naturally the order of business in the house is determined by the length of time devoted to any particular measure.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can either the Prime Minister or the government house leader tell us what the business will be for Monday and Tuesday? I ask this question not only as a supplementary but because I do not think we got the complete picture last night.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We didn't get the picture at all last night.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, to complete what I said last night, on Monday we will be taking interim supply if the debate on the constitutional amendment is completed, but we will complete the debate on the constitutional amendment first. Just before taking interim supply we will live up to the arrangement made among the house leaders to have a short debate on the measure respecting the Roosevelt Campobello international park.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT HANDLING ON FERRY SERVICE, NORTH SYDNEY-PORT AUX BASQUES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. It is in reference to his announcement last night concerning the ferry to operate between Port aux Basques, Newfoundland, and North Sydney. Would the minister consider making a statement in order to alleviate the anxiety that exists in North Sydney and district concerning this new ferry service that is to be put into operation? Could he make a statement to the effect that freight handling will still be carried out in North Sydney, so as to continue employment there? This is a question I posed on another occasion, and I believe it was posed last night by the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott). I should like to know whether it is possible to get a reply of some sort, because the mayors of the towns, the boards of trade and the stevedores who will be affected are very interested in this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has asked his question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I beg your pardon, sir?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has asked a rather long question.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Could I get a reply, sir?

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member will put it on the order paper. I am sure he would get a reply.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): With Your Honour's permission I should like to debate this question at the first opportunity at ten o'clock.

EDUCATION

LOANS TO STUDENTS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Prime Minister. Because it is necessary for some students wishing to continue their education to be assured of a student loan before applying for college entrance this summer, does the Prime Minister not consider the proposed student loan legislation urgent enough to be proceeded with at once?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this is very urgent and important legislation, but so is other legislation before the house. I hope this particular proposal to which my hon. friend refers will be disposed of in ample time for students to benefit from it before the beginning of the next academic year.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

FIRST VOLUME OF REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister based on his announcement yesterday that at one o'clock today the report of the royal commission on health services would be tabled. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he will be making a statement at the time he tables that report at one o'clock, after asking that the house revert to motions, or will he be tabling any kind of summary with respect to this important document?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is my impression, subject to checking, that at one o'clock, if the house agrees, we will be tabling volume 1 of the report. Volume 2 is merely the volume containing the supporting papers and evidence, and volume 1 is the substantive report. With it will be tabled, I believe, a summary made by the commission of the contents and recommendations of the report.

Mr. Knowles: May I ask a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the report contains some specific recommendations, will the government be acting on them as soon as possible?

Mr. Pearson: We will have to consider the recommendations first, to see whether it is the government's policy to implement them. They have to be studied. Those which are to be implemented should, I agree, be put into effect as soon as possible.

OTTAWA—X-RAY EXAMINATION OF POST OFFICE EMPLOYEES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, a couple of days ago the hon. member for Kootenay West posed to me the question whether a request had been received from employees of the Post Office Department in Ottawa for X-ray testing as the result of one of their members having to be hospitalized with a case of active tuberculosis. I should like to thank my hon. friend for this inquiry and to inform him that my department has arranged for chest X-rays of all the employees in that department, and we are looking into the possibility of extending this examination.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to compliment the minister for taking effective action.

WATER RESOURCES

SUGGESTED DEPARTMENTAL DIVISION TO DEAL WITH WATER LAWS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Transport. In consideration of the complex problems of low water in the great lakes and the St. Lawrence seaway, and flood conditions in other parts of the country, has any thought been given to the establishment of a departmental division staffed by competent engineers to deal with these matters governed by properly constituted water laws?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there is a very great deal of governmental machinery to deal with this very important problem that we are seeking to improve all the time. If there is any possibility of improving its co-ordination, and if hon. members from any quarter of the house or anyone else can make any suggestions for improving what is, after all, one of the greatest of all our national assets, this would be very welcome to the government.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

QUEBEC—EMPLOYMENT FOR WORKERS LAID OFF FOLLOWING MERGER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour.

Can the minister tell the house if he contacted the government of the province of Quebec in order to settle the problem which now exists in the Thetford Mines area, concerning the merger of two or three asbestos mines?

[Text]

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, Mr. Speaker, I have no communication on that subject from the Quebec government.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORTHLAND NAVIGATION LIMITED—SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH S.I.U.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I answer a question asked by the hon. member for Kootenay West regarding the presumed signing of an agreement between the S.I.U. and Northland Navigation Company Limited.

It is not the role of the trustees to approve or disapprove any agreements entered into by unions under trusteeship, though they are entitled under the law, as the hon. member realizes, to tender advice to bargaining committees or to designate officers to act on such committees where they do not exist.

In the particular case reported by the hon. member for Kootenay West I am advised that a memorandum of understanding has been concluded to be placed before the membership and, if ratified, an agreement between the S.I.U. and the Northland company will be signed. This is a renewal of an existing agreement. Its acceptance or rejection is up to the membership of the union itself, and naturally members of any other union will have no opportunity to determine what action the S.I.U. itself will take on this agreement.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I thank the minister for the information, but is this memorandum of agreement approved by the trustees?

Mr. MacEachen: On that specific point, Mr. Speaker, I do not think the trustees have indicated either approval or disapproval of the memorandum itself. I realize the circumstances in which my hon. friend is interested, and I can understand the relationship which may exist between this memorandum and the negotiations undertaken by the other union. I know there is a relationship, but the membership of the S.I.U. must itself ultimately determine whether the agreement is or is not a good agreement.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN STUDY OF WATER LEVELS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I undertook to try to have an answer today to the question asked by the hon. member for Chapleau concerning a meeting to be held on June 30 regarding the water level in the port of Montreal.

I believe the hon. member is referring to a meeting organized by the port council of Montreal. I understand that the Minister of Transport and the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources will both be present at least for part of the meeting, and that officials of a number of interested government departments will be participating.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

ADDRESS REQUESTING AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR SURVIVORS' AND DISABILITY BENEFITS

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Pearson:

That a humble address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the ..... Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that you may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An act to amend the British North America Act 1867.

Whereas the Senate and House of Commons of Canada in parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinafter set forth:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Amendment as to legislation respecting old age pensions. 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3; 9 Eliz. II, c. 2.

1. Section ninety four A of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

Legislation respecting old age pensions and supplementary benefits.

"94A. The parliament of Canada may make laws in relation to old age pensions and supplementary benefits, including survivors' and disability benefits irrespective of age, but no such law shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to any such matter."

Short title and citation.

2. This act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1964, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960, and this act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1964.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Shortly before government business was suspended last evening for royal assent proceedings, when the house was considering a motion by the right hon. Prime Minister for the presentation of an address requesting a constitutional amendment, the hon. member for Villeneuve moved in amendment thereto the following:

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), that the following words be added to section 94A after the words "to any such matter": "but this amendment to the British North America Act does apply only to those provinces who will ask for it".

A number of hon. members were considerate, enough to offer their views on the legality of the amendment. As I pointed out last night, many of the arguments put forward either in support of or in opposition to the amendment touched on the constitutional aspect of the matter rather than on the very limited procedural aspect that must be of concern to the Chair in accepting or rejecting the motion.

The hon. member for Lapointe made a very interesting contribution to the discussion. He argued that this amendment proposed by the hon. member for Villeneuve is constitutional. He said in particular, as reported at page 4671 of the French edition of Hansard:

I say that the subamendment is constitutional and that it completes the other one because it bears no relation to the legislation which the government proposes to introduce this year concerning old age pensions.

It is a complementary amendment because it is connected with the future legislation that the federal government will wish to move as regards the Old Age Pensions Act; it will also permit the government to legislate on the supplementary benefits, including survivors and disability benefits, irrespective of age.

And further on:

Mr. Speaker, I believe that to save a principle is far more important that all the arguments put forward by representatives of the four other parties. We must save the principle that, in such fields, in provincial fields, the federal government should never be able to take action without the consent or the agreement of the provinces, more particularly of the province of Quebec.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, I believe you should declare the amendment in order.

The suggestion that the amendment is constitutionally acceptable or that it deserves the support of the house as to its principle, does not, I think, mean that it is necessarily acceptable as far as standing orders are concerned.

An amendment is out of order from the procedural standpoint if it contradicts the main motion it is intended to amend. In the remarks he made last night, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) said:

—I submit that the amendment is entirely out of order, because it is contrary to the very nature of the subject matter and also because it would render meaningless the aim and object of the resolution now under consideration.

The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul), the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Chapdelaine) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) were of the same opinion.

[Text]

May I refer particularly to the opinion expressed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, who said in part, as reported at page 4479 of Hansard, when speaking to this amendment:

It is not relevant in that it says that it does not apply to the provinces. Section 94A does not apply to the provinces either. This is an amendment giving the federal parliament power; and when an hon. member comes along with an amendment which says that it does not apply to the provinces unless that is asked for, our problem is that it does not seem to make any sense in English or in French.

I should like to refer hon. members to citation 203(1) of the fourth edition of Beauchesne, page 171, which reads as follows:

Every amendment proposed to be made either to a question or to a proposed amendment should be so framed that if agreed to by the house the question or amendment as amended would be intelligible and consistent with itself.

I also refer hon. members to citation 202, paragraph 12, which reads as follows:

An amendment proposing a direct negative, though it may be covered up by verbiage—

I might say I am not too enthusiastic about the word "verbiage". It seems to have a rather strong connotation which I would not like to apply to the amendment proposed by the hon. member.

—is out of order.

Then, paragraph 15 reads as follows:

An amendment approving part of a motion and disapproving the remainder is out of order. On the Division

20 October, 1932, the prime minister moved that the house approve a trade agreement entered into between Canada and the United Kingdom. An amendment was moved that the house welcomed certain terms of the agreement and condemned several features of it. The Speaker ruled it out because (a) the portion of the amendment which approved the agreement was useless as it suggested no change in the main motion, and also, (b) an amendment to disapprove what the main motion approves is nothing but an expanded negative.

[Translation]

That is why I must reluctantly rule out of order the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I appeal from your ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The house has heard the Speaker's ruling which was appealed by the hon. member for Lapointe.

All those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

[Text]

All those in favour of sustaining the decision of the Chair will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Call in the members.

And the members having been called in:

Mr. Deputy Speaker put the question as follows:

The question is an appeal to the house from the ruling of the Chair which is as follows:

Some hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Deputy Speaker:

The Chair ruled the proposed amendment out of order in that it was in effect an expanded negative and also that what it proposed was foreign to and in contradiction of the proposal in the main motion.

Whereupon the hon. member for Lapointe appealed to the house from a decision of the Chair.

The house divided on the question: Shall the Speaker's decision be sustained? And the decision of the Chair was sustained on the following division:

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the decision of the Chair confirmed.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Speaker, I was paired. Had I voted I would have voted to sustain your ruling.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, other hon. members who have preceded me dwelt on the very unhappy situation relating to amendments to our constitution. I do not intend to speak along those lines, but rather to apply myself directly to the nature of the address itself and to the amendment to the British North America Act which is being proposed.

The purpose of the motion is to permit survivor and disability benefits to be included in the pension legislation which the government has proposed. I cannot quarrel with this purpose. In fact, when I made a critical analysis of the plan during the throne speech debate this was one of the major matters I discussed, and in the past other hon. members have spoken of some of the shortcomings in the Canada pension plan. Therefore, in principle I am in agreement with the need for an amendment to permit survivor and disability benefits to be included.

However, the mere fact that this proposal is now before the house puts very severe doubt on the sincerity of certain members of the government and certain other members in stating that there were survivorship benefits in the former plan. Time and again we raised the criticism that there were no survivor benefits but government speakers rose to say that there were.

The first thing I would point out is that the title of Bill C-75 describes the bill as "an act to establish a comprehensive program of old age pensions in Canada payable to contributors and survivors." To say the least I think that was misleading, because it was well known there were no survivorship benefits for people who did not come within the old age category.

I would also like to refer to the remarks of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, recorded at page 449 of Hansard for March 2, in which he stated there were survivorship benefits. I do not intend to belabour this point but I think this is an appropriate time to draw these remarks to the attention of the house. The hon. member said:

> Thus there are benefits for survivors under the Canada pension plan.

A little further down the right hand column he said:

> Surely these facts, which are on record, completely debunk any suggestion that there is no survivor benefit under this plan.

I believe, Mr. Speaker that in the anxiety of the government to sell what was obviously a deficient plan to the people of Canada its members were insincere, and I would go so far as to say were misleading the general public.

Mr. Munro: On a point of privilege, the hon. member referred to my speech when I said there were survivorship benefits under the Canada pension plan. I would point out I went into a little further detail than he has mentioned. Surely, before he makes accusations of insincerity, he must have studied the plans and white papers which showed there were always aging survivor benefits under the Canada pension plan. This was always so, and I am sure the hon. member was aware of it. There was never any doubt that a constitutional amendment would be required for survivorship benefits to people who were not aged; I think the hon. member should be more careful when casting slurs on people's characters.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: To my mind there is no point of order in what the hon. member for Hamilton East has said. He is simply debating the issue, and he will have an opportunity later to rectify any statements made.

Mr. Munro: On the point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member was not observing the rules of propriety when he said there was insincerity. He is very well aware of what I was referring to when I mentioned survivorship benefits.

Mr. Aiken: May I say, Mr. Speaker, if it had not been unparliamentary, the expression I used would have been much more severe. The term "insincerity" was the least offensive word I could think of using under the circumstances. In fact the hon. member has proven the very point I was trying to make. The government was trying to tell the people of Canada that there were survivorship benefits in this plan when in fact there were no benefits for anyone under the old age criterion of 65 years, and to read that into the bill was not a proper approach.

I do not withdraw my remarks. The government attempted to sell this plan across the country, stating there were survivorship benefits in it. Various people wrote to me saying "You say there are no survivorship benefits and the government says there are. Which is right"? I am merely trying to point out that there were no survivorship benefits, that this was an incomplete plan, and that now we are coming to the truth of the matter.

I want to direct my next remarks to the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg North Centre who sits to my left. I see he is in the house. I would think he also finds himself in a difficult position in this situation, because during the course of the debate on the original plan the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre rose in the house on several occasions—and I have the quotations here—and told those who would listen to him or read his remarks that this was a wonderful plan, that we must get along with it and have it approved. I do not doubt his sincerity in thinking so, but surely he was wrong. He now finds the government has pulled the rug from under him by saying, in effect, "This great plan you were so proud of a couple of months ago really was not any good; we are having to bring in these amendments to the constitution".

Mr. Knowles: Would the hon. member permit a question? Would he not like to quote accurately what I said, which was to the effect that I thought the other plans were good but that the new one is better? What is wrong with an improvement?

Mr. Aiken: Unfortunately we did not have a statement of that sort at the time. If the hon. member wishes me to quote him, I will quote the concluding sentence of his speech as it appears on page 1186 of Hansard, the second paragraph:

> As far as the Canada pension plan itself is concerned, the principle is good and it is our responsibility to the Canadian people to try to get it into effect at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Knowles: Hear, hear.

Mr. Aiken: I say that the principle was not good. The principle was bad. The principle was to proceed with the Canada pension plan without any survivors or disability benefits. That was a matter of principle.

Mr. Francis: The hon. member says there was no provision for survivors benefits. I ask him whether provision was not made for dependant widows, who are of course survivors.

Mr. Aiken: If it were so good, what are we doing today?

Mr. Knowles: We are improving it. What is wrong with that?

Mr. Aiken: I merely say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre must find himself in an embarrassing position, and I will leave it at that. I think the government has left him holding a big empty bag.

Mr. Knowles: May it not be because of the criticisms made from this side of the house that the government was put in the position of having to improve its own legislation?

Mr. Aiken: I did not hear any criticism coming from the hon. member. I heard nothing but praise.

Having battered about a little, I should like now to get down to the meat of my speech, because I think there are some serious discrepancies in the plan. I think it is right to say that amendments should have been made in the first place. I believe that we are proceeding now in the right direction. The question I wish to raise is this; whether all the loose ends of the plan can be pulled together to make a cohesive and successful national plan. My fear, and it is a real one, is that with the various new starts, changes and alterations, white papers and bills which are now lying around, these innumerable letters and votes that I tried to pull together myself in my limited way in order to find out whether they had any connection with the Canada pension plan—and I am afraid I was just unable to do so—

Mr. Munro: That is obvious.

Mr. Aiken: The hon. member for Hamilton East is trying to get his own back. He can make a little speech of his own, perhaps, and I hope it is better than the last one he made.

The first thing I should like to do is to look at the physical condition of the plan, by which I mean the papers.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Are we discussing the pension plan or the amendment to the constitution?

If we are discussing the amendment to the constitution, I would ask the hon. member to stop talking about the pension plan, and if we have a right to speak about that, please let us know.

[Text]

Mr. Aiken: If I may be so bold as to say so, I feel I am speaking to the question before the house. The point which the hon. member's leader raised had nothing to do with the amendment; it concerned the general question of what we should do about amending the constitution. That is not what we are discussing at all. We are discussing an application to the United Kingdom to amend section 94A with reference to survivors and disability pensions. In fact I think I am the first speaker who has been on the point.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: May I also point out to the hon. member that, to my knowledge, my leader has never talked about any amendment to the constitution.

[Text]

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Before the hon. member asks his question, I should like to say that looking at the matter before the house at the moment and reading the marginal note, I would think the essence of this matter is legislation respecting old age pensions and supplementary benefits. So I would think that as long as members talk about old age pensions and supplementary benefits they are in order.

Mr. Aiken: May I tell the hon. member for York-Scarborough that I only have about 12 minutes left before one o'clock and I should like to finish my speech before that time. If he would withhold his question, he might be fortunate enough to have a member of his own party begin after the noon adjournment. I am trying to set out the approach I take to this amendment and the reasons we should, or should not, apply for it.

I should like to consider the bits and pieces of this plan which are now before us. The first is Bill No. C-75, which is on the order paper. I am sure this will have to be withdrawn and a new one presented, because the form of the plan has been radically changed. The second is the resolution on the order paper to set up a committee. It is not properly worded to suit the new plan, and I assume it will have to be withdrawn, or amended, or that some other action will have to be taken. In any case it does give the government the chance to proceed with a reference to a committee.

I wonder whether the intentions of the government are still the same as they were before it was decided to seek these amendments. At first, perhaps, the government was anxious for the committee to bail it out of its difficulties; the Prime Minister consented to the committee having the broadest terms of reference so as to be able to make reports on questions of principle. I believe he had in mind a vague hope that the committee would throw the bill back and say "No, we must have these disability and survivors' benefits". Now that the course has changed, I wonder whether the government still wishes the committee to have such broad terms of reference. We do not know, because we are in a completely new situation.

The third difficulty arises from the innumerable exchanges of letters between the Prime Minister and the premiers of the provinces. I have examined the parliamentary records and find there are a great number of returns in connection with the Canada pension plan. There are many letters. There is sessional paper No. 202-J, filed on June 10, which is the most recent. There are others which contain copies of letters written by the Prime Minister to private individuals and to provincial premiers. There have been two white papers filed, in addition to the bill, and we wonder which of these documents and letters are applicable to the proposed new plan, which of these undertakings we can now consider to be live. In addition, I wonder what other letters, documents or statements are still outstanding, papers which no one has been wise enough to ask for, or which have not yet been made public.

I think the Canada pension plan is in a state of disarray as far as the papers are concerned. I believe the Prime Minister and the Minister of National Health and Welfare must have nightmares about the undertakings which may come back to haunt them when the plan is finally brought before the house.

Not only is the plan itself, the physical condition of the plan, in disarray; so is its application. The first thing I would like to point out is that the provinces now have four alternatives if the present proposal is put into effect. First, they can permit the Canada pension plan to be operated by the federal government within the province. Second, the province itself can operate the Canada pension plan within the province and administer the funds and the plan. Third, the province can operate its own plan on a basis that would make it portable with the Canada pension plan; that is, making its minimum provisions approximately the same so that a person may go from province to province and have some portability of pension. Finally, a province can ignore the Canada pension plan and operate completely outside it.

This latter point is confirmed, mainly in principle, by the vote we had this morning on the amendment. I do not wish to say anything more about that, but the fact is that even the amendment for which we are asking does not exclude a province either now or in the future from bringing in its own plan having no relationship whatsoever to the Canada pension plan.

This is the ludicrous position the Canada pension plan is now in. There are four alternatives for the provinces to adopt. Which one, or which combinations of plans, will each of the provinces adopt? I would hope —and I am not saying these things for the purpose of causing trouble—that when this is all sorted out the provinces can be persuaded to implement something which will constitute a national plan. But certainly, Mr. Speaker, there is nothing of that type in evidence now.

Just to illustrate my point let me say this. Having got Quebec into this whole deal, Quebec is now out. The plan that Quebec proposed has been, in substance, accepted by the federal government, although I know that in the provincial legislature there is some difference of opinion between Mr. Lesage and Mr. Johnson. Mr. Lesage says that Ottawa followed his plan and Mr. Johnson says that Mr. Lesage followed Ottawa's plan. Regardless of which of these allegations may be true, there is still some time in which to consider these two plans. We have to ascertain whether the Quebec plan will be portable with the plans which other provinces now have in readiness. I think particularly of Ontario, and of the province of Saskatchewan. Will these plans be portable?

[Mr. Aiken.]

Then what about private plans, Mr. Speaker? This is the most recent difficulty that has arisen. We have heard that the province of Quebec intends to take over the registration and control of private plans that will operate outside the Canada pension plan. I am not sure how far this will go, but it does point up the difficulty that we are going to encounter in the need to tie in private plans with the Canada pension plan. Where are these plans going to be tied in? We have no direction on this whatsoever. In addition to the four alternatives the provinces have with regard to public plans, they have just as many alternatives with regard to private plans. Ontario has in readiness a plan for portability; it should come into effect at the beginning of next year.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might interject on a question of privilege upon which I would like a ruling. I am sorry to make it necessary for the hon. member to continue his speech at 2.30.

Mr. Aiken: That's all right; I shall be here.

Mr. Munro: I should like to quote from the hon. member's speech as reported at page 321 of Hansard, the speech to which the hon. member referred, and my speech in reply. The hon. member said, as is reported in the first column on page 321:

> In the third place, wives and children of breadwinners need not wait anxiously for the implementation of the Canada pension plan. There is nothing in it for them. There are no survivorship or dependency benefits in the Canada pension plan.

Then he referred to my speech, but to only one part, unfortunately, and I should like to read where I commented on this statement that there were no survivorship benefits in the Canada pension plan. I refer to page 449 of Hansard, the first column, where I am reported as having said:

> The hon. member talked—I think this should be on the record—about the wives and children of breadwinners who would not be covered because there was no survivorship or dependency of benefits. I would point out that the hon. member says a man could pay into the Canada pension plan for 40 years—I think these were his words—and at age 64 neither he, his wife nor his children would receive any benefit from the plan.

I was quoting the hon. member. Then I went on:

> He is wrong when he says that. I think this can be pointed out by all the literature that has already been distributed on the plan, and these are the facts. If a contributor such as the hon. member spoke of dies at the age of 65, his widow will be able to receive at age 65 a pension of 60 per cent of the benefit he would have received. If he is over age 65 at the date of death and is receiving benefit, she will be entitled to receive 60 per cent of his benefit, provided she is over age 65. Thus there are benefits for survivors under the Canada pension plan.

When it was claimed that there were survivorship benefits under the Canada pension plan, I specifically spelled out on the record what kind they were. I did this in answer to the hon. member who was saying there were no survivorship benefits under the plan. At no time did I claim—and that is why I went into detail—that there were survivorship benefits for widows under 65. At that time there were not, because there was not a constitutional amendment.

In view of the fact that this has been explained in detail, Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member should withdraw his remarks and should be reprimanded, because all he did was quote one blanket statement that I made without quoting in detail the explanation I gave for the purpose of the record. I was indeed accurate in what I said, and I think the hon. member was certainly out of order in saying I was insincere.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am afraid I can only repeat what I said a moment ago, namely that I do not think there is a question of privilege here. The hon. member claims that he has been misquoted. It is his privilege to say so, but he has the opportunity to take part in the debate and try to rectify the record as he thinks it should be rectified. I certainly do not think it is unparliamentary for an hon. member to say that he suspects another hon. member of insincerity. I do not believe precedent would show that the use of this particular expression is unparliamentary. I would therefore have to rule that there is no question of privilege.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might have the privilege of calling it one o'clock, so that I may continue my remarks after the adjournment.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TABLING OF FIRST REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as agreed, and in the name of the Prime Minister I would like to table—

Mr. Knowles: Revert to motions.

Mr. Favreau: I thought there was agreement. I ask for leave to revert to motions, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Favreau: In the name of the Prime Minister I now wish to table in English and in French, the report of the royal commission on health services, together with summaries in English and in French prepared by the commission.

Mr. Knowles: This is volume 1, is it?

Mr. Favreau: Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is volume 1. Volume 1 is the report and volume 2, which is to come, contains the annexes to it.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

ADDRESS REQUESTING AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE FOR SURVIVORS' AND DISABILITY BENEFITS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pearson:

That a humble address be presented to Her Majesty the Queen in the following words:

To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty:

Most Gracious Sovereign:

We, Your Majesty's most dutiful and loyal subjects, the ..... Commons of Canada in parliament assembled, humbly approach Your Majesty, praying that you may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the parliament of the United Kingdom to be expressed as follows:

An act to amend the British North America Act, 1867.

Whereas the Senate and House of Commons of Canada in parliament assembled have submitted an address to Her Majesty praying that Her Majesty may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before the parliament of the United Kingdom for the enactment of the provisions hereinafter set forth:

Be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, as follows:

Amendment as to legislation respecting old age pensions. 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3; 9 Eliz. II, c. 2.

1. Section ninety four A of the British North America Act, 1867 is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:

British North America Act

Legislation respecting old age pensions and supplementary benefits.

"94A. The parliament of Canada may make laws in relation to old age pensions and supplementary benefits, including survivors' and disability benefits irrespective of age, but no such law shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to any such matter."

Short title and citation.

2. This act may be cited as the British North America Act, 1964, and the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1960, and this act may be cited together as the British North America Acts, 1867 to 1964.

Mr. Aiken: Mr. Speaker, just before one o'clock I was interrupted by the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro), who took exception to my previous statement that he had tried to give the impression that there were survivorship benefits in the former pension plan. His intervention on a question of privilege I took to be an effort to prove that he did know all the time that the previous pension plan was no good. In the result he proved the very point I was trying to make, which was that with full knowledge that the former plan was not satisfactory he nevertheless continued to give the public the general impression that the plan was wonderful.

I was discussing, Mr. Speaker, the question of private pension plans when I was interrupted. The government has dipped into matters of provincial jurisdiction to bring on the benefits of a pension plan, but they do not want the responsibility of the private pension plan problems. They just invade the provincial field far enough to create a problem in connection with private pension plans, but not to the point of giving any assistance to help solve the problem they have created. They say to the provinces: "We are bringing forward a national plan which we want you to accept, because it is beneficial". To this point the present legislation and proposals go; but having reached that point and created problems for private plans all across the country, the government stop there and say to the provinces: "Well, this question of private plans really is not our responsibility; it is yours, so you solve it the best way you can".

Just before one o'clock I stated my contention that this is not a satisfactory way of solving the problem. There are four alternatives the provinces can take in connection with the national plan. There are just as many or even more alternatives that can be taken in connection with private plans. My point is that the situation is going to be so confused that there will not be any national plan or any uniformity in pensions across Canada.

I am seriously concerned, Mr. Speaker, about the economic effects of this whole plan. So far as a pension plan provides a vehicle for compulsory savings for retirement, I can see no objection in principle. I think it is a worthy effort to encourage, in fact to compel in some cases, people to save for their retirement years and for their future. To this extent I have no objection, and to the point to which this plan goes it is a worthy effort. But the trouble now is that this plan has gone far beyond what one would call a compulsory savings plan; it is developing into something else.

I should like to express the situation by saying that the plan now is not a pension plan but a pension deal. In other words, it is based on the result of bargains which have been struck all over the place and is not the result of a calm and considered pension plan. This is not the time to go into details, Mr. Speaker, but there are departures from the basic set-up for pensions which have gone far beyond what I believe to be suitable for a national pension plan. These changes are alarming. The escalation of benefits is much too steep for any actuarial plan, or for anything approaching an actuarial plan, to be suitable; and the new plan is making them much steeper. The widows' benefits are calculated on a double standard. They start off on a price index basis for a certain period of time, the first ten years, then they go on to a wage index and finally, when the widow becomes of pensionable age under the Old Age Security Act, they go back to a price index basis. This is a most confusing method of calculating a widow's allowance. She has no knowledge from one day to the next what the amount of her pension will be or the method by which it will be calculated in the future.

There are many other things which I do not wish to go into now. My point is that the plan is now in such a very difficult state, both from an actuarial and physical point of view, it is difficult to know whether any actuarial basis will result in the end or whether, in reality, this will become another welfare scheme. This is what many people feared in the beginning, that it might become another welfare scheme and not a compulsory savings plan. We appear now to be coming to the point where it will be a combination of both and nothing much of either.

I say, Mr. Speaker, there are too many tag ends lying around. The whole situation is very confused. We should really have another white paper so that we will know where we are, and we should have had one before this debate commenced. We had a white paper in July, 1963, setting out the Canada pension plan. We had another white paper in March, 1964, setting out another pension plan. One of my colleagues suggests that the white paper is now getting a little grey. As I pointed out in the beginning, it is difficult to know exactly where we are with this particular pension plan at this moment.

In concluding, may I say that the time is opportune for a constitutional amendment. I think we must pass it now and deal with the problem of the Canada pension plan as a secondary matter. To that extent, therefore, I support the motion before us.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would not like to prolong this discussion, for the very simple reason that I too am anxious to go on holidays. Therefore, the less we talk, the better it is.

However, I should like to say that, in its present form, the motion may entail some difficulties for the provinces on the administrative level. When the provinces transfer their rights to the federal government, they cannot take them back later on. Here is what I mean: When the provinces gave the federal government permission to set up an old age pension scheme for instance, that legislation was put into force at once and the federal government became competent to administer any old age pension plan, which means that it can now increase at will the benefits paid to elderly people.

Therefore, it means that the central government can establish its own legislation regardless of the provinces.

If an intelligent amendment had been brought to the constitutional amendment as it appears on the order paper it would have been possible for the house to express its feelings on the matter.

However, since all the provinces have been consulted and since the government would have to seek their approval once more if the House of Commons changed anything in the resolution, I feel it would not be appropriate to move a subamendment at this time. The same situation prevails as with the Columbia river treaty; if we had changed anything to the treaty we would have had to get in touch with the other party, the United States, to get its consent.

The fact that it has to deal with ten provinces would mean longer discussions for the federal government. Now, since the provinces have accepted the amendment as proposed, I do not see why we should introduce one ourselves. However, had we presented one, it could have read something like this:

After "irrespective of age", we could have said: "But no subsequent legislation to that effect may be passed without the further consent of the provinces."

That would have meant that the federal government would now be able to legislate about the pension plan as proposed, or as accepted by the provinces, but that, if ever it wanted to amend this plan a little later on, it would have, once again, to get the provinces' permission.

However, as I said a while ago, if the provinces did not want to ask or to demand guarantees other than those they obtained when they agreed to sign, it is not up to us to defend them against their will.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, hon. members who have participated in this debate before me have made reference to the anomalous situation which existed when we interrupted the debate with regard to national symbols which have been proposed for this country and found ourselves faced with the very extraordinary position of having, within the terms of the motion we are now discussing, to humbly approach Her Majesty praying that she may graciously be pleased to cause a measure to be laid before parliament, and so on. Now, all hon. members who have discussed this have said how ironical it is, and I do not think it is necessary to enlarge on that except to make this point wihch I think is a necessary corollary to be drawn from what has been said.

Hon. members have said, let us hope that this situation will not again occur; let us hope that before too long we will have domiciled in Canada the constitution for which we now seek changes in the United Kingdom. I say, Mr. Speaker, that I see little prospect of that. I believe I am entitled to mention this point at this time. I see little prospect of that because of the fact that during the course of the last year there have been deep and strong currents of hostility sweeping across this land, and the very debate which we interrupted, in my opinion—I will say more about this on a more appropriate occasion, but I think I must say it here—has hardened or deepened these emotions across our country to the point where violent emotions may yet sweep over this land and prevent the degree of unity which we must have if we are going to have the constitution returned to Canada.

I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), in his unusual approach to this problem, indicated that a measure of unanimity would be required before we could even at the very least bring the constitution back to Canada. I say, is there any hon. member in this house who honestly believes that the situation which now exists will not be so reflected in any constitutional conference with the provinces that the prospect of obtaining unanimity has been put back for years, if not for generations? Whether we like it or not, because of this fact, it is my opinion from what I have observed and read that when we come to consider further amendments, because of what happened last year and particularly in the last few weeks we will still be going through this process of humbly asking Her Majesty to have her parliament in Westminster amend our constitution, when the need next arises. I was very glad to hear the Prime Minister say this morning, in response to a question, that this matter will be placed on the agenda for the next federal-provincial conference. However, I would point out that some time ago I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), who would be the member of the government most concerned, whether or not in his opinion the time was ripe to reconvene the constitutional conference of the attorneys general, about which the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) spoke, when he said that in 1960 and 1961 such great progress had been made. I think the Minister of Justice is a realisitic man and so in his answer he said not only had no date been fixed but that no formal letter had been sent out suggesting that a date be fixed. It might well be that the minister has been alerted as a result of my question, and I hope he is now sending out a letter for that purpose.

However, I do make the statement in all seriousness that the situation which has existed, which does exist and will continue to exist, in my humble opinion will make it most difficult, if not impossible for some considerable time, for us to secure the things we need; and all the brave and bold words, all the ringing terms and stirring declarations in the very fine debate on the flag question are, to my way of thinking, so much waste because of this situation.

[Mr. Baldwin.]

I generally accept the principle in this motion, but I must say I hinge a qualification, an attaching condition, that I do not think it should be assumed that because we are accepting and approving the motion for this address to be forwarded to Her Majesty, we also accept with it, as the tail of the comet, the principles of the proposed pension legislation about which we have heard from time to time from members of the government.

Reference has been made to this by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken). I am not going to say any more about it, except to suggest a very good expression is one which we used in the front lines during the last war, when the brass in the field and the brass on the staff had got together and had thoroughly messed up the situation. We used to say it was "snafu"—situation normal, all fouled up. I think this is about as good a description as the pension legislation situation is worth at this time.

But I say in approaching this motion—and there are some other qualifications—I do so on the distinct understanding that it does not indicate by any means a wholehearted approval of the pension legislation. It is my opinion that a large percentage of the people of Canada have come to the decision that some type of contributory pension plan is desirable. On the other hand, when the legislation is laid before us it will be our duty to examine it as to its reasonableness, as to the degree of contribution required, and as to whether or not it will lay a burden upon the economy of the country that the country can well bear, having in mind all its other responsibilities. These are matters upon which we must reserve our decision until the appropriate time, and in approving the motion this, with other qualifications, must be the first condition attached.

Now, let us look at the proposed amendment itself. I have some doubts as to whether, having in mind it was essential for the government to secure this constitutional amendment, it might not well have gone further and done better, and possibly saved the necessity of coming back here again. In the first place this amendment purports to repeal and replace section 94A of the British North America Act.

I call to the attention of hon. members that the position of section 94A must be of some significance. Sections 91, 92 and 93 deal with exclusive rights, given respectively to the federal and provincial governments as the case may be. However, sections 94A and 95 deal with what is in effect concurrent legislation, where both federal and provincial governments have been given rights to legislate. In section 95, as hon. members know, the provinces are given the right to legislate in respect of agriculture and immigration, and so is the federal government; but it is laid down that where there is a conflict—as necessarily there would be a conflict if you have legislation on these subjects by distinctive legislatures—the federal government legislation must prevail. This is placed immediately after section 94A, which also gives rights to both provincial and federal governments to legislate; but there the reverse is the case, and provincial legislation must be dominant.

The section as it now reads, and this particular part has been carried on in the new, proposed amendment:

> —no law made by the parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions.

In order to establish a foundation for the point I propose to make I would like to refer hon. members to the amendment in its present form, which was brought forth in 1951. At that time there was an exchange of correspondence between the then minister of justice, Mr. Garson, and the provincial premiers, and the original proposition made by Mr. Garson was contained in the form of a proposed amendment quite distinct from section 94A as it now appears. It was as follows:

> Notwithstanding anything in this act, the parliament of Canada may make laws in relation to old age pensions.

And there it stopped. In other words, the original amendment as suggested was an amendment which, in the view of many of the attorneys general of the provinces and of the premiers of the provinces, expressed in the correspondence tabled in this house in 1951, gave to the federal government not necessarily exclusive but certainly paramount jurisdiction in the field of pension laws. I think it was probably wise that this should have been the case, and this is the first point I make, that I would have much preferred this amendment to have eliminated the words which appear there, that—> —no law made by the parliament of Canada in relation to old age pensions shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to old age pensions.

It is my submission that by leaving this portion in as it now appears, we are putting in the hands of the provinces the right of any province at any time to veto by means of enacting legislation, which is distinct in any material respect from the federal legislation, and so prevent the federal legislation from operating in that province.

Let me give an illustration of that. I have before me a news item from the Montreal Gazette of June 17, 1964, dealing with when this matter was being debated in the legislature of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Johnson, the leader of the official opposition in the legislature in Quebec, is reported in this way: "Johnson Says Pension Plan Socially Bad". He is reported as giving a number of reasons which he thinks are sound why this is not good legislation and why in its present form it should not be carried out. I simply put the case in this way. If Mr. Johnson thinks that the legislation which the province of Quebec now desires, which is comparable to and parallel with the legislation and the plan of the federal government, is bad legislation, then if he should secure power in a future election in the province of Quebec he will repeal or amend it. The minute he does that it will be legislation distinct in form from the legislation that the federal government has passed and consequently the federal plan will no longer be operative.

I think this can apply in any province. Any leader of a political party seeking power in a province might, if I may use a distinguished parallel, make a promise on the election platform that within two years after being elected he will bring before the legislature a distinctive provincial plan and then upon securing power bring into effect this distinctive provincial plan whereupon the federal plan must immediately fall to the ground.

Section 94A relating to old age pensions probably did not present any particular difficulty as it stood, because under our pension legislation up to this time it has been a matter of the federal government making a payment at the age set by statute, which payment has been increased from time to time; and actually there have been no rights accruing, save possibly general legislative rights with respect to individuals in the country who reach this age. But on the basis of a contributory pension plan it is my submission that an entirely different situation will prevail. There will be contributions made form workers' salaries and by employers. Large funds will be accumulated which will be susceptible of being used for development purposes. The people living in each province will acquire distinct, specific vested rights in contributory pension plans. Then instead of that degree of permanency which must be present to ensure the success of a contributory pension plan, the position will be that at any time a provincial government sees fit to introduce legislation of this nature which is at variance with the federal plan the provincial legislation will then prevail.

While I support this address, I should like to have seen it provided that in the event of there being any conflict between federal and provincial legislation the federal plan must prevail, and I think in due course the government will find it will have to come to this, if it can ever secure that degree of unanimity to which I referred before. Whether we like it or not, if we are going to have a sound, successful, permanent plan I suggest that we will have to bring ourselves to this position.

There is one other point I should like to make before I resume my seat. The new section 94A is to read in part as follows:

The parliament of Canada may make laws in relation to old age pensions and supplementary benefits, including survivors' and disability benefits—

I heard the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and others say that the law officers of the crown have indicated in the past that the use of the term "old age pensions" is sufficiently wide to include a scheme of contributory pensions. I accept that the law officers of the crown are distinguished and knowledgeable members of my profession, and I certainly do not propose to set my views up in complete opposition to theirs. But as a member of the house I must say that some doubt runs in my mind with regard to whether or not it would not have been better to have eliminated the words "old age" and substituted the word "contributory" or else use the words "old age and contributory pensions".

I look at the matter in this way. What is old age? When does old age start? At what stage of a man's or woman's life does old age begin? I see the Prime Minister smiling at that. It may be that the process of aging goes on a little more rapidly in this house than in other places. But let us assume that at some time in the future it may be desirable to reduce the age at which the contributory pensions are paid. We do not know when that will be desirable or when it will be financially feasible. We may find that from an age of 65 we will come down to 62, 60 or even less than 60. Are these pensions then old age pensions? Can they be brought under the description now appearing in section 94A, that "the parliament of Canada may make laws in relation to old age pensions"?

I submit with respect that there is very grave doubt in that regard. While we were in the process of securing a constitutional amendment I think we should have gone the whole distance and used such words as "old age and contributory pensions". It may be suggested that follows from the use of the words "old age pensions and supplementary benefits" but I think that the word "supplementary" must be related to "old age" and that the legal principle of ejusdem generis applies. I doubt that you can use this particular phrase to say that a pension payable at a lower age than what might be considered old age is a pension included in this legislation.

There is no doubt at all that some of the best legal minds in the country are going to be scrutinizing this constitutional amendment and examining the legislation which the government proposes to introduce. I say that if we are going to have pension legislation we should leave nothing to chance. In my thinking there are defects in this proposal. While I support the address I feel it is my duty to say that I think there are defects, and these defects will appear in the future.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I support the address which will provide for survivor benefits in the pension legislation but, as the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) and the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) have said, I accept it with certain reservations. My reservations are based on the fact that the whole handling of the pension plan has been a monstrosity. I do not know of any other word to cover the situation. From the very start we have had nothing but that sort of approach to this legislation, ever since the Liberal government brought in their plan, and the same approach to most of their other legislation as well.

Let me be a little more specific. If I may go back to the legislation for a pension plan brought in by the Conservative party, the Liberals put forward strong criticism that an amendment such as is now being put forward by that party was not necessary. If you will examine the speeches you will find that one after the other they got up and said it was not necessary. They pooh-poohed the idea all along the line, but now they are faced with the fact that they have to ask for such an amendment. That is the first point.

Let us take the history of their production of a plan. The Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh) brought in a plan last year. I have no doubt that plan was approved by the whole cabinet. They obviously must have discussed it. But the plan she brought in was a mess. There is no question about that. It was so much of a mess that in line with practically all legislation it had to be completely dropped.

She brought in another plan and it was more or less dropped and, indeed, most of us—and this expresses the reservations put forward today—are wondering just how far this government has gone in getting its legislation properly prepared and looking into the future. We need only have regard to the words of my hon. friend from Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) who has just resumed his seat. He brought forward point after point and I am wondering whether this government has done anything in relation to the matters he put forward. Those questions are most germane to this subject.

My third point is this: We have almost exactly the same question before us as has arisen over the flag. The government says: This is the plan—take it or leave it. And, personally, I do not think we should be subjected to legislation in this form. The fourth point I wish to bring forward concerns the lack of consultation with the provinces, and in this regard the strong talent for diplomacy which the Prime Minister is supposed to possess in such abundance. This plan was brought forward without any consultation with the provinces whatsoever. Premier Lesage could not make a speech quickly enough and could not get to the press quickly enough, when the initial plan was put forward, to say: Count me out; I am not with this; there has been no consultation whatsoever. We also have the position taken by Premier Robarts. Premier Robarts put forward from time to time, after a certain amount of consultation, the points which he thought necessary for the plan to be successful. He got the short end of the stick. In fact the Prime Minister made some most uncomplimentary remarks with regard to the premier of that province. So we have to consider that there were two provinces which rejected the plan. In the field of diplomacy, I do not know what the Prime Minister was thinking about but it is perfectly obvious that after a short time his people told him he had better get the concurrence of those provinces, otherwise the plan as a national plan would be a flop.

We read lately in the newspapers, and it was trumpeted by various members of the Liberal party, what a tremendous diplomatic job had been done. The Prime Minister had gone to the plains of Abraham and consulted with Premier Lesage and others, and I am just wondering who won the second battle of the plains of Abraham. There is no question about it. The plan put forward by this government had to be changed so as to conform almost completely with the Quebec plan. It may be, now, that it is a good plan. It may be that this is the plan required by Canada. Certainly Premier Robarts says these are the changes which he thought were necessary to meet Canada's requirements.

We also find a little of the Prime Minister's diplomacy seeping down to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Miss LaMarsh). She listened to certain objections which were put forward by the insurance companies of Canada. I gathered from the newspapers, from the reports which were current at one time, that the minister thought the insurance companies of Canada did not know what they were talking about. I should like to remind the hon. lady that the insurance companies of Canada have played a long and important part in the development of our economy. They have provided survivors' benefits all down the line and they might well have been listened to a little bit more and handled, I will use the word again, with diplomacy. Maybe the hon. lady does not like to hear about this, but she has to.

Once again I am in favour of seeking this amendment, because it is a necessary step to take. It was the Conservative plan, to start with. We must get concurrence. We must get this change made right away and we must get on with the establishment of these pensions, too. Once again, subject to the points I have put forward, points more ably expressed, probably, by my hon. friends from Peace River and Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken), I am in complete agreement with this proposal, and I believe we should get along with the legislation.

Hon. D. S. Harkness (Calgary North): I regret the way in which the proposed contributory pension legislation has been handled, and what I think have been the unnecessary difficulties which have been raised by the government as a result of the stops and starts it has made with regard to this matter.

In addition, I have very grave doubts as to what the financial effects and implications will be, first as far as the government's own financial position is concerned and, what is more important, what the effect will be as far as the reduced amount of capital available in Canada for the starting of new industries and the general development of the country is concerned. However, I do not propose to go into these questions now. I have risen at the present moment really to ask one question. Yesterday, on the orders of the day, I asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) the following:

> Is the government proposing to take action to bring private pension plans into the same situation in the rest of Canada as Mr. Lesage apparently announced yesterday would be the case in the province of Quebec, in view of the fact that the pension plan in Quebec and the pension plan for the rest of Canada are supposed to be on an equal footing?

To which the Prime Minister replied:

> We will be discussing this matter shortly, Mr. Speaker. It is difficult for me to answer that question in detail on the orders of the day, but I will be glad to take it as notice.

Well, the Prime Minister did not say anything in his speech yesterday with reference to the position of private pension plans in the rest of Canada, and I am now asking that he deal with this matter before the debate is closed today. I think this is of particular importance because, as I understood the announcement from Quebec city yesterday, the government of Quebec proposes to bring private pension plans under its pension legislation to the extent of laying down three or four conditions which all private pension plans must meet. This is of immediate concern, I think, to all people who have an interest in private pension plans throughout the rest of Canada, particularly since this scheme proposed by the federal government is to be national in scope; so I hope the right hon. gentleman can deal with the matter.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): I have a few remarks to make on this question. They will not be along the lines followed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), by the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Aiken) or by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin). They deal with another aspect of this subject.

The question before us raises the whole question of national sovereignty. It portrays vividly the source and origin of our constitution. The British North America Act distinguishes Canada as a unit, a nation, a people. The B.N.A. Act outlines the guarantees and protections provided to the elements which compose that union. Upon these articles contained in the Act of Union of 1867, the one-nation concept was adopted. The necessity of proceeding to Westminster to amend our constitution is a relic of the suspicions and fears of the generation before confederation. It is the only remaining symbol to mark our immaturity as a nation. It, more than any other thing, has delayed and prevented the welding of interest which might otherwise have brought Canadians together.

It is a remarkable achievement that confederation has been able to survive under the handicap contained in this particle of immaturity. Confederation has survived. Confederation has spread from four to ten provinces and two territories. Each of the four, and each of the others, can measure the sacrifice voluntarily assumed and suffered to achieve our present status. This measure before us today reminds us all that a great mutual trust and respect is required if we are to be liberated from this relic of the past.

That is for Canadians to choose for themselves. The new Canadians, from which my family originates, have been ready and even eager for Canada to take unto herself the right to determine her own constitution. We believe it would be a step along the way to national unity and national purpose; it would complete the foundations upon which this nation could choose and develop those symbols that could rally our people in the building of this nation.

The Canada of 1964 is not the Canada of 1867. Throughout the years one thing has remained unchanged. Confederation has held a common objective for all Canadians. In the beginning divergent elements joined in a common purpose. Their decision was a deliberate one, despite their differences. They must have known that conflict might arise in an emerging nation. That much this generation owes in tribute to the spirit and tolerance of those days, as revealed by the articles of confederation. That union has admitted new loyalties, and I have the abiding courage to believe that union continues as the greatest inspiration on which people in every part of Canada have to draw on.

The concept of the one nation is, if anything, more urgent and desirable today than ever before. The nations of the world no longer can feel secure in their own separate worlds. Why then should the cry of separatism within a nation hope to achieve anything but a lesser security and recognition by following the paths of division? The cry of the separatist is the cry of those who say, "You have nothing to lose". It is a negative cry; it is a denial of courage and purpose of the generation that chose confederation. It measures the extent to which the fires of isolation have been fed and nurtured. Confederation still beckons; the opportunities it offers return again and again, providing the opportunity for wholesome participation in the building of a greater Canada. The years have passed, since 1867, like dropping leaves, and have left a tree somewhat more naked than any of us would like to see. The history of those years cannot be rewritten; it will always be with us as a nation. Surely we can make a new beginning. That is one of the reasons I am proud to be a member of this party now constituting the official opposition in parliament. This party has not been ready to barter the heritage of Canadians. Our leader has never sought to isolate the people in any area of Canada. His hands have never reached to feed the fires of division and isolation. His invitation has always been participation, not separation. Equality within confederation requires participation. Participation yields the fruits of recognition. That is the path upon which Canadians can leave the imprint of their identity and personality. That is the emerging nation, sought and promised by confederation.

That being so, sir, I wish to take this opportunity to renew the request for a joint conference of provincial and federal government officials to study our constitution for the purpose of providing a new beginning for confederation and the elements that now comprise confederation as we know it. This party and my leader, the Leader of the Opposition, were ready to proceed along these lines when we were swept from office. I urge the present Prime Minister to unfetter himself from the tortuous course he has been embarked upon and give recognition to the positive fruits of confederation by calling together a full-fledged conference to deal with the matters of confederation. Of course, Mr. Speaker, I am in favour of this resolution as it is and I join with those others of my party in the remarks they have made regarding it.

Hon. J. W. Monteith (Perth): Mr. Speaker, I too will be brief in my remarks today, but I think I would be remiss in my duty if I did not at least express our hope and desire that this resolution will go through rapidly and get to Westminster so that permission can be granted before the dissolution of that parliament as a result of the coming election. Yesterday both the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) expressed deep regret and embarrassment at having at this stage to go to Westminster in order that we might provide survivor and disability benefits in our pension scheme. I also feel this way; but I think it has been and is up until now essential that this be done.

We all know that at one stage hon. Mr. Fulton when he was minister of justice did his utmost to come up with a plan to repatriate the constitution. Great efforts went into this endeavour, but they were unsuccessful. As was explained yesterday by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, there were two stumbling blocks to that achievement, the province of Saskatchewan but primarily the province of Quebec. We remember that some time ago, as again the Leader of the Opposition pointed out, an effort was made to have a constitutional amendment put through as is now agreed to and admitted by the government to be necessary, in order to provide survivor and disability benefits. We recall the history of the many plans we have had. I think I outlined these fairly accurately on July 18 last, although since that date there has been another one. We remember the election literature of the present government, which claimed that their plan would have survivor benefits. This was not proven to be correct in their March 17 endeavour, and survivor benefits as we understand them, despite what the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro) may say, were not included in those two previous efforts.

We are now faced with another plan. We do not have its details. We are anxious, of course, to know just whether all the details have been worked out. I suppose it will be some time before the newest plan is put before us. However, when these details are worked out, if they are all worked out, it will certainly be necessary to consider them carefully because in many respects this plan has gone beyond what was originally anticipated. We hope there will not be any further delay in this regard.

As I stated on March 17 last, we are for a pension plan, and I think my words were "there are no if's, and's and but's about it". We want to see this plan put into operation.

As a consequence, Mr. Speaker, we are heartily in accord with the passing of this resolution to enact an amendment to the British North America Act. I remember the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) when I held the portfolio of national health and welfare criticizing us to the extent of saying this amendment would not be necessary. It has proven to be necessary; the Liberals now admit that. They found it was necessary to implement their election promises even though their first two endeavours did not do so.

I am intrigued by the present plan as it unfolds. I think it was on April 20 that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) first outlined in very broad terms what was going to happen to the then existing plan and what our new scheme might be. I think on April 23 the present parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Benson) spoke in Kingston and gave some further details. And then according to the Montreal Gazette of June 11 the Prime Minister again added more details. Therefore, we are most anxious to see what this new over-all completed plan will entail. I imagine there will be a white paper prepared on this newest and latest plan, and of course it will have to be given a great deal of study. I should simply like at this stage to reiterate, Mr. Speaker, that we have tried in the past to get this amendment through and we are certainly very anxious that it be gone ahead with at the present time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Bow River.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Well, Mr. Speaker, I did see one or two members asleep but some of them have just awakened. I do not intend to take very much time, but I do not think that I have spoken on this amendment to our constitution on any other occasion and I should like to say a few words with regard to it. I feel today—and I think it is time somebody said this—that when we take a really cold look at our constitution, as we should do so at a time like this when asking for an amendment to the constitution in connection with survivor benefits, we realize we have wandered somewhat astray from the intention of the fathers of confederation. There was no doubt at that time when they were considering union, about which I shall have something to say in few minutes, that there was the question posed as to whether we should have a legislative union or a federal union. A legislative union, as we all know, would have put most of the powers into the central government which would have been delegated to the various provincial governments. The alternative was a division of powers in a federal system, such as that finally adopted. Then they ran into difficulty at the first conference in 1864 and at the second conference in Quebec, and a compromise was reached between Sir John A. Macdonald and Cartier on a federal union.

In a federal union certain powers are put in the central government and other powers are delegated to provincial governments. Unfortunately this federal type of system, which was, as I have said, a compromise reached between Macdonald and Cartier, has had serious repercussions. At one time when our constitution went before the Supreme Court of Canada and the judicial committee of the privy council, the interpretation given to the constitution was that it took certain powers away from the central government and strengthened the provincial government. When this system is compared with the federal system of the United States one finds that their courts interpreted the powers away from the states and made the central government stronger.

The charge I am making against the Liberal party—and here I speak for myself as a member of parliament and not as a member of any particular party—is this. It may be a passing phase of Liberalism under Pearson, which I call a wishy-washy type of Liberalism, but in order to reach certain compromises—although some people call this diplomacy—the Liberal government brought in a pension plan three times and then withdrew it. The point I am making is that if this country is to survive in confederation we have to make certain that we have a strong federal administration. We must have a strong central government at Ottawa. The kind of federalism which we have today is a balkanization of Canada which I believe was never intended. If this country is to survive we cannot have ten distinct governments dictating every time to the federal authorities. We must delegate to Ottawa some supremacy.

With regard to amending the constitution, we have just heard the last two speakers and also the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), in which he properly put forward the fact that this party realized that when dealing with survivor benefits we must have an amendment to our constitution.

We had the consent of all ten provinces except Quebec. If we are to have the kind of constitution which can only be amended with the consent of all provinces, then this puts our constitution in the middle of the political field.

Why do I say that, Mr. Speaker? Well, we happen to have in Quebec today a premier who is not sympathetic, and if it were not for the fact that he dictates his own terms to this government we would probably never be here today arguing this point. I take the position that Lesage is running the government of Canada, not the present Prime Minister or the Liberals who sit opposite.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: Someone says shame. Of course it is a shame. It has always been a shame. But the fact is that the constitution is put in the middle of politics. Why? We would never have got an amendment in the development and evolution of our democratic principles unless we had a sympathetic government in certain provinces with federal authority. Therefore, in order to amend our constitution we have to have the same parties in certain provinces as we have in Ottawa. Surely this is not good enough, and it certainly was not the intention of the fathers of confederation, who had a greater dream than that.

The first thing to do, Mr. Speaker, and I know it has to be done in this way because there is some expediency for it, is that instead of spending days on arguing about a flag when there are so many other important things to do, particularly when there is a sensitivity in confederation, we should come to grips with the problem of amending our constitution on a sound legal basis. Surely if we are to have the contract system in order to amend our constitution, when there are ten parties to the contract it should not be the kind of contract where in law, if you wish to change it, you have to get the consent of all parties to the contract. If we have a democracy at all in this country this should be done by majority rule. For example, if nine or eight of the provinces want to amend the constitution, and it is important to Canadians that this be done—whether it be in the field of welfare or health or any other field—surely the majority of Canadians should be able to say to the government of the country or to whatever authority exists having jurisdiction over the constitution that it should be so amended. That is the first point I want to make and we should take a hard look at this problem. We are worrying about the flag and spending a lot of time debating the issue. Surely the thing we should have been considering, if we want to be an independent and great nation with all the sovereignty we dream and speak about with such great emotion, is giving the country the right to amend its own constitution, and doing so on this side of the ocean. If you read what Mr. St. Laurent said during his term of office about the various manners in which you can amend the constitution, I am sure you will find that he felt then the same as I feel at this time. It is a far more important thing that we have the ability to amend our own constitution.

I come back to the other point, that it is unfortunate we did not obtain the ability to amend our constitution when the imperial parliament passed the act in 1867 making this nation. When I am talking about the nation, I am sorry that my friend in the corner whom I call the "little Beauchesne" is not here. I am one of those people who believe that confederation was not the union of two nations; it was the union of four colonies who united at that time and who realized their destinies individually by combining to create a nation. It may have been, and indeed it was, a union of two great cultures, the French on the one hand and the English on the other. My friends opposite laugh, but they only laugh because they have never dusted off the pages of history or read the debates that took place at that time.

If they want to try to explore the real birth certificate of our nation, then they should look at the pages of history. They will find that it was the four colonies who united. The earliest meetings relating to confederation were not held in the province of Quebec or in the province of Ontario. The first meetings were held in the maritimes. The first real problem we had with confederation did not relate to Upper or Lower Canada but to the fact that Nova Scotia wished to withdraw. I do not want to take the time this afternoon to go through history to show that the birth of our nation was the result of the union of four colonies. There was just as distinctive a culture in the maritimes as there was in Quebec. There was just as distinctive a culture in Ontario as there was in Quebec. If you look at the pages of history you will see that at the time the northwest was controlled by the Hudson's Bay Company. These men had a great vision. The culture of the northwest likewise would be a part of our way of life.

British North America Act

I should like now to quote from a historian, George W. Brown. Sometimes when we get so far off the track it is best to ascertain what the real facts of history are, especially when there is this talk across the country that spreads dissension and disunity. I quote from Mr. Brown's book:

"Sir, it is my fervent aspiration and hope that some here tonight may live to see the day when the—

—one—

—flag shall proudly wave from Labrador to Vancouver island, and from Niagara to the shores of Hudson bay." So spoke the Canadian leader, George Brown, in 1858. Lord Durham and others had also dreamed of a united British American nation, but in the 1850's it was still nothing but a dream.

We only have to walk in the door of the House of Commons to find out what our history is. These words of Durham, these words of Brown, the words of Cartier and Macdonald are spelled out quite simply over the entrance as we come into this House of Commons. This is the reason I say it never was the union of two nations, it was the union of four colonies. It was the vision of these men that we would become a great nation. People came to this land from various parts of the world. They came from Europe to carve out a new destiny. Why did they come? There had been wars and fears of wars in Europe and this left in the bosom of these people hatred and animosities. When they came to Canada they set aside those animosities and those prejudices. They came to live with one another as neighbours and to build the nation, Canada.

I should like to quote again from the historian, Mr. George Brown. I ask every one of you, if you have not done so before, to take a look above the door as you enter the House of Commons. Carved in stone above the main door of the parliament buildings of Canada are these words, "The wholesome sea is at her gates, her gates both east and west." This is the situation. We are in a period of sensitivity for confederation. We are in a period of sensitivity for confederation because of the ambitions, because of the desires of a certain group who, for their own political purposes, would like to carve up this nation rather than unite. We had people of this type back in 1864 when we were trying to get together. Every time the Liberals enter the gates of office, we have a period of sensitivity for confederation. As one distinguished member said last night, they have a habit of pitting the French against the English, one religion against another. We have a sensitivity of confederation and in that period of sensitivity we must not forget one thing when we are dealing with amendments to our constitution. It is time somebody stood up in this house and said it. This nation can only last as long as we have a strong central government. Even under federalism you must have a strong central government. The Liberals are like the waves of the ocean—they roll with the tides.

During the war and after the war, they believed in centralizing everything. Today, in order to buy the votes of certain provinces in this country of ours they now say we must have a weak government. It is time we adopted the same principles in respect of our constitution that were used to carve out this land in 1867, the same principles that were followed to solve the depression of the thirties and which brought us through two wars. As I said at the beginning, we should have the right to amend our constitution on this side of the ocean.

Now, I have said something about confederation and I want to turn just for a moment to my second point. We are dealing with the pension plan. I do not suppose there is any member of parliament who would dare, for his own political health, to oppose a form of pension plan at the moment. Why is this so? Well, we have had across this nation the stories for three or four different pension plans. We have seen newspaper headlines so high about the great compromiser. He went to Quebec and met Lesage on the plains of Abraham. They embraced, but we do not know what they whispered to one another. He came back with the great compromise. He is the great diplomat. The fact is that they brought in three plans. Madam Minister, who is not in her place this afternoon, said, I stake my reputation on this plan. Now, she is looking for greener pastures, the leadership of the Liberal party in the province of Ontario. There is one thing I would say in passing, if I may digress for a moment. If she does get that job it ensures the Conservatives another 50 years in office.

Mr. Munro: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Does it not seem unusual for the hon. member to cast aspersions on the character of another person, especially when she is not in the house? I think he would prove himself more of a man if he did so next week when the minister is here.

Mr. Woolliams: I thought that the hon. member was really serious. I read a newspaper report in a newspaper not unfriendly to that side of the house, that here was the living dynamo, the great intellect of the Liberal party, who will one day walk in and lead the Liberals. If the hon. member had any real point of order, then what we saw on orders of the day will be nothing to what we will see in the future when he takes over a responsible position.

Coming back to my point before I was interrupted by such a frivolous interruption, may I say this: We have had three pension plans. I said at the time that they were conceived by the hon. lady in haste and delivered in confusion. We still do not know what kind of conception there was or what kind of delivery there is going to be. We do not know what the terms and the conditions of the pension plan will be. I repeat the warning that I have issued before. I know that people do not like to be reminded of what other people have said in the past. I say we are moving in Canada into a period of great inflation. This government said when they took office that they would balance the budget, but they are going to have bigger and better deficits. I would like to know, and this is what should be spelled out when we are dealing with pensions, what it is going to cost the people of Canada. How is it going to affect those planned pension schemes set up by the unions of this country, whether they be the united mine workers of America or the unions dealing with railways? How is it going to affect the teachers of this nation who have their own pension plan? How is it going to affect those people who have some ambition and initiative, who have carved out pension plans for themselves? This is something we should have laid on the line, and I hope when the government introduces its bill there will be less talk and more facts about what it is going to cost the nation in taxes.

I say the taxes of this nation must go up. They have already gone up substantially. Anyone can see this by going out into the country and watching how the administrators in the tax department, in more indirect ways, are milking the taxpayers, squeezing out the last dollar, and the dollar past the last dollar, in order to get the necessary revenue to finance the government's socialistic programs.

All of us are in favour of a pension plan, but let us make sure we know what the plan is so that when we are asked to vote on it we can adopt a plan that is reasonable and workable. Let us know what it is going to cost. It is awfully easy to go to the people when you have given them a brand new Cadillac, but it is not easy to go to the people when you are asking them to make the 33 payments.

The Liberal party seems to be building up for an election. It wants to go to the people when it has a pension plan in the box, or the drawer, but it will not tell the people it is ready to send out this tax octopus across the nation in order to pay for it.

An hon. Member: You did it.

Mr. Woolliams: I am glad you said that. I have been waiting for you to make a speech for 25 years. Mr. Speaker, I need not say I support the resolution to amend our constitution. In summary I would say once again Canada should have the right to amend its own constitution. Canada's constitution should be amended without having to get the consent of all the provinces, because this gives the right to one province to control the nation, particularly for political expediency when you have got a Liberal government.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I had no intention of taking part in this debate today, but after hearing the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams), I feel bound, as a French Canadian, to challenge or refute a great part of the stupid things he said this afternoon. I did not want to interrupt the hon. member by raising points of orders or questions of privilege while he was speaking, even though I would have had ample opportunity to do so.

Once again, the hon. member for Bow River, who aspires to become, sooner or later, leader of the Conservative party, has shown us in striking manner that the Conservative party in this house, now as ever, is more opposed to French Canadians and to the province of Quebec than any other party Canada has ever known or might know.

This afternoon, Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a point of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I have no time to waste. During his speech, I did not want to bother the hon. member with interruptions and I now want to go on with my remarks—

[Text]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. The hon. member for Bow River rises on a point of privilege.

Mr. Woolliams: I want to say now and repeat as I said a few minutes ago—and I think I am entitled to the expression of that opinion—that it was not a union of two nations but a union of four provinces, with a desire to extend it to 10 provinces. But I did say it was a union of two great cultures, the union of French and English. The record will speak for itself; but when we hear people like that, they are the kind of people breeding disunity in this nation.

[Translation]

Mr. Rondeau: Mr. Speaker, I think that the kind of speech made by his leader during the flag debate a few days ago suits to perfection a man trying to bring about disunity in Canada.

The hon. member has been talking and is still talking through his hat. This afternoon we were under the impression that he thought for a while he was somebody else. He stated, and we refuse to admit that, that the province of Quebec may have been one of the provinces which formed the basis for the establishment of confederation and that, as such, it should be treated as the others, that at the time of the union of the four provinces, it was but one of the four.

The province of Quebec has never accepted and will never accept being treated as one of the ten parts of Canada or of the dominion, as part of confederation. We have contributed to the establishment of confederation. Everybody knows that at the time of the union of Upper Canada and Lower Canada, French Canadians were in majority. However, the situation has changed since then and that is why we do not want to lose our rights and be assimilated by the majority as suggested by the hon. member for Bow River.

He accused the Liberal party of working for centralization but he failed to prove that the Conservative party acted otherwise when it was in power. It had the same attitude during the five years it was in office and even before the Liberals were voted out of office in 1956 or 1957.

It is unfortunate that such speeches are made in the house. It is obvious that the Conservative party has not yet understood the mentality of the province of Quebec and that it does not care for French Canadians. The latter have learned to know the Conservatives in the past, especially their present leader.

It is not speeches such as the one that the hon. member for Bow River has just made which will strengthen Canadian unity. It is certainly not such speeches that will lead to a better understanding between the two races which served as a basis for our Canadian confederation.

We have been patient too long. We have already made too many concessions to allow ourselves, in 1964, exactly three years before the celebration of confederation, to be insulted or told that we are only one of the ten provinces of Canada—

An hon. Member: One in ten, that's all.

Mr. Rondeau: That is exactly what they were driving at. It is a good thing to have these remarks reported in Hansard, as it shows once and for all that the Conservative party never was the national unity party and, considering the interruptions such as those they are making at present in the house, I cannot see how we will be able to satisfy both races, the English Canadian and the French Canadian, and ensure a better understanding in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, what we do want, the hon. member for Villeneuve stated it yesterday: we do not want to take anything away from anyone.

We want to retain our rights. We were once recognized as a nation, and, today, they want to give us the status of a province, when the French Canadian nation accounts for about one third of the population of Canada as a whole.

We are told to our face in this house that we are but one out of ten provinces within confederation, that we are now but 250,000 people, when actually the province of Quebec has a population of around 6 million. They want to put us on the same footing as any other province, and then they are surprised and shocked to find that there are separatists in Quebec.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I must say that if there are at present separatists in Canada, the greatest of them all are to be found within the ranks of the Conservative party, and I refer especially to the hon. member for Bow River, who just resumed his seat.

It is pitiful that in 1964, when the Liberals, among whom the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and others, are doing their best to encourage agreement and understanding, such a speech should have been made by the hon.

member for Bow River, who does all he can to propagate dissension and disagreement in Canada.

I know that it might be to the advantage of Conservatives to be able to say that there is more disunity, haggling and misunderstanding in Canada under the present Prime Minister and that the situation is worse than it ever was in our history. Well, I say that it is not so much the Prime Minister or the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) who could settle this issue; every hon. member has his part to play if we want to create better feelings.

If we are to be bullied, by those who would use the majority, the constitution, or the weaknesses of our confederation to crush us further, if we are to be refused the undeniable rights of French Canadians with regard to Canada, it will only increase the hope of seeing the province of Quebec manage its own affairs.

I realize now that the government of the province of Quebec has had this tendency for some time. We are wondering whether there would be a way to come to some agreement in this house with members who are as narrow-minded as the one we just heard this afternoon, when he expounded his views on the amendment to the constitution which the Canadian parliament would have us pass.

[Text]

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, it would be difficult, I think, to have a better example of how far apart two speakers can be in their viewpoints as to the make-up of this nation, some of the constitutional difficulties we face and generally the points of view represented by individuals coming from different parts of the country. Certainly I must confess that the last speaker distressed me a little by some of his comments. I wish he had been a little more specific when he talked about such things as taking away some of the French Canadian's rights, and the too many concessions that French Canada had to make to the rest of the country. If he had put forward a couple of concrete examples of where he thinks the province of Quebec has not been treated right I think he would have had a better chance of achieving some understanding in this house. In my opinion it is perhaps not so important that we know each particular complaint, but when we are now talking about a constitutional amendment to make possible the fulfilment of a pension plan we must realize just how far apart we are in Canada today, how deep seated are some of the feelings and why we need to look very closely not only at our constitutional government but also try to foresee some of the effects which this pension plan is likely to have, where it may impose the stresses and strains that go with change and what it will do to our make-up as one country.

I should like to say to my friend from Quebec that he rather surprises me when he is so indignant about the province of Quebec being called a province rather than a state, and goes on to say that Quebec was formerly regarded as a nation. I must say I had never heard this said before and I am unable to comprehend how he can seriously say that French Canada was ever regarded as a nation. Certainly it was a French colony, just as other parts of Canada were English colonies. These colonies joined together to make one nation. I wish he had explained his reference to Quebec having been formerly regarded as a nation.

With regard to Quebec's special status, certainly it has a special status with respect to its language and its religion and I am sure that the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Woolliams) would not want to change that in any manner, shape or form. I do not think anyone who accuses the rest of Canada of trying to take away these special French rights is going to find any evidence to support his claim. With regard to whether or not Quebec is just a province, I say that each province in this country is a province with rights in its own house as guaranteed by the constitution. We as a party want to see each province have and maintain its own rights and responsibilities and we want to see that each province, as a political area, has a voice in federal affairs proportionate to its size and population. To that extent each province is different. But since each province has the same rights and obligations and is protected in the same way under the law, it is incorrect to say that any province has a different status other than in the manner I have indicated.

We are here considering an amendment to the constitution with regard to the pension plan, and anyone who looks at the proposed amendment will see that it contains the following provision:

> —no such law shall affect the operation of any law present or future of a provincial legislature in relation to any such matter.

Every member of the house is familiar with the history of pension legislation as it has been improved from time to time. We have heard many speeches about the fact that the Conservative government made a strenuous effort to secure complete agreement among the provinces for a constitutional amendment because we did not feel it was wise to attempt to bring in a pension plan without survivor benefits. In other words, we felt if we were going to do the job it should be done right and that therefore first things should come first and we should achieve the consent of the provinces to an amendment.

The Liberals have chosen their own method of proceeding. They thought that political considerations should come first in bringing in a pension plan. They brought one in and we spent considerable time in the house on that first version. They wasted considerable time of the house with a second version. Both versions were of no help to the people of Canada. They simply gave the Liberals a great opportunity for propaganda so that they could say what valiant efforts they were making to bring in a pension plan and so that they could point a finger at others and say: See, they did not do what we can do. They were perfectly right; what they did we did not do. We did not play politics, and they certainly proved they know how to do it.

Those of us who do not have short memories will recall that it was only because the province of Quebec brought out a formula which they sold to the Liberal government that it was possible to avoid a head-on clash and having a so-called pension plan under which provinces would have the power to opt out. Indeed, it looked like we were going to have a so-called Canada pension plan with the two largest provinces out of it altogether.

I bring this up so that we may realize the importance of having agreement, especially with our largest provinces, and so that we may properly settle the background against which we must look at the resolution now before us. In my view, far too little attention has been paid to the fact that with the proposed pension plan, once it starts to work and we get built up in the various provinces large investment funds, there is going to be a great deal of difficulty unless there is some uniformity of investment, some uniformity of agreement among the provinces as to the manner in which these funds can be handled. There is going to be a great deal of difficulty between the federal government and the provinces as to who is going to control them and how much control each is going to have. But I ask the house to consider for one moment the fact that we have different types of government in many of our provinces, that the governments are Liberal, Conservative and Social Credit in the two western provinces, and that the types of leaders of each of these governments in the provinces vary very widely, from some very conservative people, with a small "c" to some who are, I would think, radical.

We know for instance in the province of British Columbia which, in name at least, has a Social Credit government, that the premier of the province has done such things as nationalize a power company, and some of his views on the duties and scope of government intereference with private enterprise come as a little surprising. Frankly, I am never amazed at how widely his views may range in what I call a political sense, all the way from the far left to the far right, and I suggest that with this range of possibility of government action on investment funds there is going to be a tremendous impact on potential investors in Canada—and I am speaking generally. Certainly, no businessman is going to invest his money in an industry in some of the provinces where he has to look seriously at a huge investment fund built up by that province, where the province has not only control over the fund but the ability to direct that fund into a competing business, as well as the ability to make laws and regulations which might cripple him in competition with a government enterprise. This is going to slow down the possibility of investment in Canada. It is going to make this nation almost as risky as some of the, shall I say, unstable Latin American republics. These, I suggest, are not fanciful thoughts at all. The possibility of large government investment funds, coupled with the type of government administration which can become indiscreet from time to time is going to have an effect not just on those industries upon which the government puts its fingers but on every type of investment that might be made in that province, and is something at which all of us should take a long and serious look.

Anyone who has read what the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act provides for regulation of investment of trust funds built up for insurance policies would be aware of the extreme care we take to make sure that those funds cannot be dissipated. We also very carefully regulate, by regulations which were just recently amended, the types of investment. We take a very close look, when they want to amend that act, at the impact on the demand for capital of each of the various deals in which insurance companies are likely to invest their money. Therefore I say when we are going to contemplate here even vaster sums of money, where there is apparently not at the moment any regulation made by us, where there is very little hope, it seems, that the federal government will be having any control over these investments in a regular pattern, where we have such a wild range and diversity of provinces and have some conception of their different ideas and how wide ranging their regulations for applying those funds may be, we can see the divisive forces which can come about once these funds get going, forces which are really going to wreck this nation. Since we have been able to do so little about our present difficulties in this regard and since we see those difficulties so bitterly expressed as they are today, it is time we gave a little more planning and proceeded more cautiously in putting into force this pension plan no matter how much we may want to see it implemented.

Mr. Churchill: I should just like to say that we have other speakers who are interested in the subject but they are prepared, now, for the measure to be passed. If there is time remaining later today, without other legislation intervening, we are prepared to go ahead with the act respecting the Roosevelt-Campobello international park.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Aye.

Motion (Mr. Pearson) agreed to.

MOTION REQUESTING CONCURRENCE OF THE SENATE IN ADDRESS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson moved:

That the said address be endorsed and a message sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that the House of Commons has passed the said address and requesting Their Honours to unite with this house in the same by inserting therein the words "Senate and".

Motion agreed to.

[Later:]

MOTION CONCURRING IN ADDRESS OF THE SENATE TO TRANSMIT

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, by leave of the house I move, seconded by Mr. McIlraith:

That this house do concur in the address of the Senate to His Excellency the Governor General, respectfully requesting that His Excellency may be pleased to transmit the joint address to Her Most Excellent Majesty the Queen;

That the words "and Commons" be inserted in the said address from the Senate; and

That a message be sent to the Senate informing Their Honours that this house does unite with the Senate in the said address.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

INQUIRIES AS TO FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER—SPEAKER'S RULING

Mr. Speaker: I wonder whether hon. members would bear with me if I interrupt the proceedings. I have a duty to perform and I hope it will end in a pleasant way.

Again, it is my duty and obligation to give a definite ruling on certain incidents which took place in the house this morning. This decision could well have been made at the time were it not that such heat had been engendered that it did seem preferable to allow a cooling-off period to elapse so as to permit hon. members to look at things rationally.

As the events to which I refer are still fresh in the minds of each and every one of us, I will not go over them again. However, following an answer from the Prime Minister tne hon. member for Qu'Appelle stated:

On the basis of the evidence we have, I say that it is not the complete truth.

The Prime Minister objected to the words of the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and asked the Chair to decide that the hon. member should withdraw the words to the effect that he, the Prime Minister, had not stated the complete truth. At this point, and later on during the debate which followed, in other words twice during the debate, and relying on Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 145 which states—

—it has been formally ruled by Speakers in Canadian Commons that a statement by an honourable member respecting himself and peculiarly within his own knowledge must be accepted—

—I did then, rightly or wrongly, make a decision that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle should withdraw the words he had used and accept the word of the Prime Minister. The actual words I used are as follows:

Therefore, in the circumstances, and in view of the discussion, I would respectfully ask the hon. member for Qu'Appelle to withdraw.

That, evidently, was a decision of the Chair which leads to two conclusions, and they are as follows. The first conclusion is to be found in Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 69 and it is:

> The Speaker exceeds his authority, if, without having been specially instructed by the house, he takes upon himself to alter any of his rulings which, once given, are under the exclusive control of the house.

The second conclusion follows from the same citation and it is that a Speaker's ruling, once given, belongs to the house which, under standing order 12, is free to reject it.

Also in the same citation it is mentioned that when a member has risen and announced that he appeals from a ruling, no argument should be brought forward to influence the vote about to be given by the house. For the information of the house I wish to refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 133, which reads in part as follows:

> When the Speaker takes notice of any expression as personal and disorderly, and tending to introduce heat and confusion, and calls upon the offending member to explain, it is the duty of the latter immediately to explain or retract the offensive expressions...The Speaker's demand usually produces the required explanation, at once; if not, the Speaker then repeats the call for explanation, and informs the member, that if he does not immediately respond to it, it will become the duty of the Chair to name him to the house...

Then the first lines of citation 134, paragraph 1, are as follows:

> In case a member persists in using unparliamentary language, the Speaker will be compelled to name him, which is equivalent to submitting his conduct to the judgment of the house.

Finally there is a last quotation which I would like to refer to, and it is the first lines of paragraph 2 of citation 55 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, which read:

> The rulings of the Speaker or chairman must always be respected even though the member against whom they are given may find them arbitrary. If he declines to bow-down and does not appeal to the house he inevitably places himself in the position of having infringed upon the rules of parliamentary practice.

Having stated what the parliamentary practice is and has been throughout the years, I would again ask the hon. member to accept the Prime Minister's word and to withdraw; otherwise the matter will be out of my hands and I will ask the house itself to come to a decision.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, this morning, without any heat in my heart or mind I put myself in your hands. Based on the facts before me at that time, I felt I was correct in making the statement that I did make, and I am afraid I still feel so. Therefore I am still in Your Honour's hands for any action that you consider necessary.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: This is a most unpleasant duty, but it is part of my job—

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on this matter. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken has said that he feels exactly as he did this morning when he made the statement to which you have referred, in which he stated, for the third time, that I had attempted to mislead the house in answer to a question. I took exception to these words, because it was the use of the words "attempted to mislead" which made it a specific and deliberate attempt on my part to mislead the house. I said that was not the case and I appealed to you for a ruling, and Your Honour has given a ruling that the hon. gentleman does not accept.

I hope we can avoid taking any action in this matter by agreement, because it certainly reflects on a ruling of the Chair when a matter of this kind requires that type of action. I know perfectly well that when the hon. gentleman asked his first question it was not addressed to me; it was addressed to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith), and in looking at the Hansard report I realize now that I should not have intervened at that time and should have waited until a question was addressed to me. To that extent I admit that I was quite wrong and I apologize to the house for that.

But the hon. gentleman made the statement that I had for the third time attempted to mislead the house—and there can be no attempt that is not deliberate. If he had just said I had misled the house it might have been, as was pointed out this morning, an unwitting and unconscious misleading of the house; but an attempt to mislead the house is deliberate. Therefore I had no alternative, as a member of the house, and only in that capacity as a member of the house who should be treated as any other member of the house, no better or no worse, but to take exception to the statement that I had three times attempted to mislead the house in answer to a question. Only in that capacity as a member of the house did I take exception to the statement. But I do express to my hon. friend my regret for having intervened at that time in his question to the President of the Privy Council, which I should not have done.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if discussion is going to be allowed, discussion will take place. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is endeavouring to back away from the position he took this morning.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I want to point this out, that the Prime Minister spoke in the same terms regarding words that I spoke in this house, and I did not ask for a withdrawal and you, Mr. Speaker, did not exercise the right of requiring him to withdraw those statements. I have never asked for withdrawals in this house, and I will not. He made the identical charge against me—

An hon. Member: Worse.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —that this afternoon he holds the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) responsible for, and demands that action be taken by the house. I remember the 25th of May, 1956; similar circumstances took place then—and in 1957 the people spoke.

Mr. Habel: Eight years ago.

Mr. Speaker: May I once more ask the hon. member for Qu'Appelle if he would accept my ruling and withdraw his words.

Mr. Hamilton: I regret, Mr. Speaker, that the remarks of the Prime Minister, after your statement here today, simply convince me that my actions this morning were sound and correct.

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Hamilton, with the greatest regret I have to name you for disregarding the authority of the Chair.

And the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) having withdrawn from the chamber.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): There is a man who did so much for Canada.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the reason they are annoyed with him.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He did so much. Now you are happy.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, is it not now in keeping with the proceedings and procedures of this house for the Prime Minister or someone on that side of the chamber to move accordingly, now that the hon. member has left? Let the government now continue its action by the appropriate motion.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has left the house, and I would assume it is for the balance of the sitting day.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Nobody said anything. There is no motion.

Mr. Speaker: I have no authority myself to go beyond what I have done so far.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government is required to act now in order to confirm this procedure, and I am simply asking them to do the rest of their job.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): They know they are guilty.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, you will perhaps recall that a similar situation arose in respect of a member of the Social Credit group, and he withdrew from the house in the same circumstances as have occurred today. That was the action taken.

Mr. Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Then, Mr. Speaker, may I ask if the member may be immediately recalled? I will bring him right back.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The government is going to do the job they set out to do.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): It just proves that they admit they are guilty.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There is a regular procedure for this, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member withdrew. Therefore he is waiting for the action of the house, and the government is required now to act. We intend to vote against that action.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the right hon. gentleman has done his best to bring the Chair into disrepute. Therefore, we have no alternative, at the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition, but to—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege. The right hon. gentleman has said I have endeavoured to bring the Chair into disrepute. It is the government that is in disrepute. I ask, sir, your ruling on this. The Prime Minister cannot ascribe motives to others, and he is endeavouring to place on your shoulders the responsibility for his picayune action.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the refusal of a member of this house to accept your ruling in such a serious matter brings the Chair into disrepute; there could be no other result. When a ruling has been made by the Speaker and the Speaker has taken three or four hours to think over the matter and has confirmed his ruling, and has asked for the co-operation of the member and of other members of the house in accepting his ruling, when his ruling is rejected by the hon. member concerned, and when the hon. member then of his own volition leaves the house, and when the Leader of the Opposition insists that the formality be completed by a motion to eject the member from the house, then I suggest that once again reflection is cast upon the Chair.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, black Fridays there have been before. There was one on May 26 and another in June, 1956. I ask the Prime Minister to withdraw the suggestion that, in asking, as it is the right of any hon. member in this house to do, that the proprieties be carried out, I am bringing the Chair into disrepute. I ask the Prime Minister to withdraw that statement unequivocally; and if the rules are to be equally applied Your Honour must call upon him to withdraw that suggestion.

Mr. Pearson: If there is any imputation on the motives of the right hon. gentleman I withdraw it unequivocally, and I hope my hon. friend will do the same with his statement.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): You are not on the plains of Abraham now.

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Speaker, if one looks at Beauchesne's fourth edition, citation 134, which is to be found on pages 117 and 118, he reads:

> In case a member persists in using unparliamentary language, the Speaker will be compelled to name him, which is equivalent to submitting his conduct to the judgment of the house. The member should then explain and withdraw, and it will be for the house to consider what course to follow in reference to him. If the explanation is deemed sufficient, some member will move that it be accepted. In case the offending member does not explain and persists in remaining in the house, a motion shall forthwith be made, preferably by the leader of the house, that Mr. ... member for... be suspended for... days from the service of the house".

I submit that this procedure should be followed.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that in November 1962, I think it was, when the hon. member for Bellechasse found himself in the same situation as the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, the government of that day made no motion and the hon. member was allowed to withdraw.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Speaker: In the present case I would point out that the important words are:

> In case the offending member does not explain and persists in remaining in the house, a motion shall forthwith be made...

In this case the hon. member withdrew.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): He has not withdrawn; he is still in the house.

Mr. Speaker: And subsequently he came back. The Chair can only go so far. I believe I have taken as many steps as I can at this stage. It will be for an hon. member to make a motion, if a motion is in order.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, at the request of the Leader of the Opposition—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Favreau: Oh yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is one matter I can handle. If the hon. member is to make a motion he will have to take the responsibility for that motion.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): What a Minister of Justice.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I take full responsibility and I agree to that request. I move, seconded by the President of the Privy Council—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The silent man.

Mr. McIlraith: I put you in your place.

Mr. Favreau:

> That the hon. member for Qu'Appelle be suspended from the service of the house for the remainder of today's sitting.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

All those in favour please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

Mr. Speaker put the question as follows:

> Mr. Favreau, seconded by Mr. McIlraith, moves that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle be suspended from the service of the house for the remainder of this day's sitting.

The house divided on the motion which was agreed to on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: It being five o'clock p.m., the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely public bills, private bills.

BROADCASTING ACT

AMENDMENT PROVIDING CONTROL OVER COMMUNITY ANTENNA

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-40, to amend the Broadcasting Act (community antenna).

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would have had hopes of withdrawing this bill from the order paper if the government had shown a little more alacrity in facing up to the problem created by community antenna television systems. Some hon. members may recall that on the first of January the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) issued a statement that serious consideration was being given to doing something about this matter. We have had a number of partial statements since and the difficulty still exists. In the time I have I want to put on the record what I think are the two major problems involved in community antenna television systems, and since I have changed my own attitude with regard to one of them I want to be quite clear as to what these two potentials are that are involved in the bill and which I think are essential, whatever action the government takes.

The first question, and the one where I still believe we must have this kind of legislation, relates to the threat to free t.v. or to advertising revenue supported television going into homes that is in prospect as the result of the development of wired systems, and the potential that exists in using them as a network. I think this is a very real threat and it has to be met by the broadcasting authorities, in this case the government agencies.

The second problem, and the one on which I have changed my attitude, really relates to the inroads that C.A.T.V. is making upon the commercial prospects of Canadian stations, particularly in minor markets where C.A.T.V.

brings in a number of American channels and so tends to build a trend whereby the listening audience, the number of homes with television sets that are tuned or can be tuned to the local station and so to the local market, is reduced, and so offers a potential threat to advertising revenue and therefore to the commercial viability of these local stations. The reason I have changed my views in this regard relates partly to a straight recognition of the fact that more than 60 per cent of the television homes in Canada now have, through wired systems and through just sheer closeness to American stations, the ability to have both Canadian and American channels come into their homes. It does not seem to me that at this late date, with 60 per cent of the homes open to this kind of television fare, that we can have the kind of regulation and control based upon some control of the Canadian content, that is, in terms of television stations coming into the community, that might have been envisaged a couple of years ago.

In order to put this matter into what I think is a North American perspective I should like to read from an article that appeared in the New York Times on the 5th of April, 1964. It is headed, "Neighbourly Lines" and it is by a well known authority on television in the United States, Jack Gould. It reads in part as follows:

Nearly one million American families pay a monthly charge to see television and the number could rise with the mushrooming growth of a branch of t.v. probably unknown to the vast majority of viewers.

The relatively novel form of video is known as community antenna television. Originally it was designed as a service for families living in areas where it was difficult or impossible to pick up a station.

But with the technical restlessness characteristic of the electronic business, new applications are being found for community t.v., and there are some who suggest it may prove to be the back door by which pay as you see television might come into being.

Moreover, community t.v. also has been in the headlines because of its potential importance in Austin, Tex., where the system promises to break the local television program monopoly enjoyed for over a decade by station KTBC-TV. KTBC-TV is one of the broadcasting interests of Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson...

The simplest explanation of community antenna television can be found in the case of a town which is situated deep in a valley with high mountains blocking reception of pictures from distant t.v. stations.

A huge master antenna is erected atop the mountain. Then the pictures from several t.v. stations and the sound from radio stations are sent down the mountainside on wires to a terminal point. From such a terminal more wires fan out to homes throughout the valley, carrying qualitative pictures and sound into a subscriber's parlour.

The charge for being connected to the community system can vary from 75 cents to $5 a month.

I have known cases in Canada where the charge is as high as $10 a month.

The income goes only to the system operator, not to stations providing its raw material.

At present there are about 1,300 such community systems in 46 states and their construction has become more sophisticated. By use of one or more relay towers between an isolated locale and a t.v. station, it is technically feasible to span almost any distance.

The broadcast industry's eyes really went up when J. Leonard Reinsch, president of the Cox Broadcasting Corporation, announced that he would like to pipe the programs of stations WPIX and WOR in New York halfway across Pennsylvania to the community antenna systems for Tyrone and Chambersburg. The Cox firm also is contemplating the relay of Chicago stations to community systems in Ohio.

I introduce this particular section, which may seem irrelevant, to make a comparison with an application by one community antenna television group to pipe programs all the way from Duluth up to the Winnipeg area, a very great distance, by use of satellite relays.

If, by chance, community systems between New York and Chicago should be linked up, something a prominent Pennsylvania broadcaster...fears, there could be the first primitive system of network pay t.v.

The basis for such intriguing speculation is the technical feasibility of using the community t.v. systems as a straight pay as you see t.v. method. In a few instances community antenna operators have done a little of their own programming and some systems have carried sports events blacked out on advertising-sponsored t.v.

I have mentioned this because, at the lakehead, the community antenna television system carried a fight broadcast which was blacked out on free television. I have spoken to Mr. Bassett of the Toronto Maple Leafs about the attitude of that particular firm or company and the national hockey league with regard to this question of major sports events and the likelihood of their disappearing from free t.v. He assured me that as far as he knew there was nothing in it and he would fight against it. But I wish to place on record at this point a part of Dennis Braithwaite's column on December 16, 1963. It covers an interview with Stafford Smythe of the Toronto Maple Leafs hockey club and it goes this way:

The possibility that Saturday night hockey may pass from home screens to become an exclusive pay t.v. attraction is another indication of the shaky economic position of the television industry in this country.

That is all I wish to read from this article. I wanted to slip it into this context. To continue:

But the more immediate influence of community —t.v. is being felt in areas where there may be only one station on the air, such as Austin. If a community system can double or triple the volume of available t.v., it may not sit well with the one station concerned.

This is the matter about which I have said I have changed my opinion. I no longer see any way in which this can fairly be controlled. It is not for this reason, now, that I would offer this amendment to the Broadcasting Act.

Mr. Munro: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he still advancing this amendment to the Broadcasting Act?

Mr. Fisher: Very much so, because I think this threat to free t.v. is very important. I appreciate that the hon. member who intervened comes from Hamilton and I think it was as a result of the Hamilton community antenna television operator coming up here to see him that I had an opportunity of seeing him. He was one of the community-antenna people who was quite prepared to accept these changes of government regulations. He himself could see that this is really the master plan or the great potential of some of the big interests who are interested in promoting and becoming shareholders in community antenna television. If I may read on—

The federal communications commission, which has had a rather ambivalent policy—

Much like the present Minister of Transport's policy.

—on whether it should worry about the economic consequences of its acts, has tried to help the affected station where it could.

I understand the same situation exists in this country as far as the Department of Transport stepping in is concerned.

Thus far it has ruled that such a system should not carry a given t.v. program until the local station, in effect, has exercised a first refusal. But if a community system uses only wires and does not need a relay facility, the agency, at the moment is powerless to act.

This also is the situation in Canada as I understand it.

The larger problem for the F.C.C., of course, is that the agency is confronted with something like two modes of t.v. All its traditional thinking has been directed to the distribution of t.v. broadcast stations requiring channels on the air. Now along comes a supplementary system which could sprawl considerably without recourse to hard-to-get facilities.

Present signs in Washington point to a full-fledged inquiry probably leading to future regulation of all kinds of community antenna t.v.... While the major broadcasting stations are not likely to lose their dominant role the little-noticed community t.v. antenna operator is really sitting pretty. It pay-t.v. and free t.v. come into conflict, he can handle both systems side by side and offer his customers the best of the two video worlds. Which may explain why some of the bigger boys are becoming interested in a system which has introduced another abbreviation into the video vocabulary: "CATV".

The final point I wish to make about United States set-up is this: starting in July, out in California, such a wired network is going into operation, and it will cover all the large networks as well as the broadcasting stations. I suggest to hon. members the question really is whether we are prepared to have the right to regulate—not regulate, now, but to have the right to regulate—in order to make sure that wired television systems do not develop into the kind of provincial or national network which will take off the air free t.v. as we know it. I am prepared to take a position on this. I do not see that there is any great principle involved, but I am prepared to take a position myself. I can see the potential when someone gets to 400,000 or 500,000 wired homes in this country which can be linked up with all Canadian football and national hockey. Some of the greatest entertainment going will disappear from free television airways in favour of these wired arrangements because there is a tremendous money potential there, as anyone who has attended any of the hockey games shown at the theatre in Toronto last winter knows. That field, it seems to me, is a legitimate one. What I am afraid of is the linking of this kind of enterpreneurship and this kind of money with a co-operative or ownership arrangement with the multitude of wire systems which have been developed in this country. I say this is a threat to free television, or advertising revenue sponsored television as we know it, and we need to face up to it at the present time.

I wish to point out that the government is none too clear where it stands. I have a speech here by the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) who answers in this field. This speech is called "The Eighth Lively Art". It was made on April 6, 1964 and the hon. minister has something to say about re-broadcasting and pay t.v.

As for pay-t.v., though not yet established firmly as a commercial television system in the home, it has been making strides into the cinemas, as many Ontario hockey fans know very well.

And, after the Etobicoke and Hartford experiments, pay-t.v. is about to get a full trial in California beginning July 1.

As Mr. Ouimet has suggested, t.v. re-broadcasting stations and pay-t.v. require study before situations develop in Canada which may or may not be in the best interests of Canadian broadcasting and the Canadian public.

That is not a very definite position to take. The troika, the three wise men who considered broadcasting and presented reports not long ago, Dr. Stewart, Mr. Jamieson and Mr. Ouiment, went out of their way to leave this problem to the government. Recently, the government announced the setting up of an advisory committee on broadcasting. Again, the terms of reference to this committee specifically say that community antenna television systems are excluded. In other words, the government intends to deal with this. In other words there is an onus upon the government to reach some decision on this matter.

I wish to repeat that two problems are involved. One is the whole future of free television. The other is the effect of the proliferation of community antenna systems upon the economic viability of certain private stations or C.B.C. affiliated stations in small market areas, where the taking away of a sizeable part of the audience could have a disastrous effect, certainly a potentially disastrous effect, on television revenue. I really feel that this bill should be accepted by the government—not as legislation, but I think it should be referred to a committee of this house so that we could hear arguments pro and con.

I wish to make one final point. I received a letter from a constituent protesting the government's intention to regulate in this field. It is from Mr. Robert Prettie who is president of Northern Wood Preservers Limited, Port Arthur. He said, in effect, the following:

It is surprising, to say the least, that Ottawa is concerned about the effect of cable t.v. on the "commercial health" of our broadcasting system. No concern was shown over the effect of these same stations on cultural attractions, movie theatres or on hockey games. Up until now the public has had a certain freedom of choice within the financial means of the individual to enjoy that freedom.

While I am, naturally, interested in and concerned about the local situation, I am also concerned about the over-all approach and the principles involved. For example, if people in Vancouver, Montreal and Port Arthur can have the services of cable television—why can't the people in Winnipeg have such services? If people in Toronto, Hamilton and Vancouver can receive American television stations direct on their own sets, why should the people of Winnipeg be deprived of receiving the same programs over cable television if they can get it and if they are prepared to pay for it?

Freedom of the air would seem to me to be just as essential as freedom of the press. However, the present thinking would appear to leave to Ottawa the ultimate decisions as to what will be available to the general public. With so many individual tastes and desires,—do you think that the general public can ever be happy with any selection but their own?

[Mr. Fisher.]

I replied to Mr. Prettie in this form. I want to put it on the record because I think it is relevant to this question:

At least one of the points that you raise was one that I did not take into account, this was lack of any previous concern about the effect of television broadcasting on other cultural attractions and events. The problem in its essence is this (for me and I believe for the government) if cable t.v. systems develop much further, they provide the basis for a potential wired network across the country which could drastically alter what we get on so-called "free television". The battle is already joined in the United States on this. Any action by the government has the intention to stop the development of a network, rather than the creation of any individual community cable system, and I believe this is going to be clarified.

I wrote this letter a few weeks ago, on May 25, when I thought some clarification was coming. Then I went on:

The difference between freedom of the air and freedom of the press is a substantial one. In theory, anyone can start a newspaper or magazine. This is impossible in broadcasting because channels are limited. As you say it would be unfair to deny to others in Canada what many Canadians in other areas receive from American television stations. For that reason, I can no longer, in fairness, oppose the licensing of a cable television system in Winnipeg, but I do oppose the possibility of a network in which Winnipeg is a link with other C.A.T.V. systems and I do advocate a clear order forbidding this as soon as possible.

That in essence sums what is a rather complicated argument on one of the most confusing minor issues that has come into the political arena in the last few months. I have a file of letters here that have come to me, and I am sure most other members can match it. Dozens of people have written about their concern, which has been stirred up through the national community antenna association of Canada. I believe the matter should be solved fairly quickly by a government order to the effect that I have argued this afternoon.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps I should mention that the hon. member's time had just expired, although the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Munro) might be allowed to ask a question with the consent of the house. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro: As I understand the hon. member, he is primarily concerned with the first problem rather than second, for which he finds no solution. Does he think the regulations under the Radio Act to some extent deal with the implications of his first problem, which he feels should still be dealt with?

Mr. Fisher: No; I think it still requires amendments to both acts, because I would suggest that the personnel who manage and look after the radio listening side of it, the technical side of it, are not in a position to move or act or weigh the consequences or the possibilities in the same way that the board of broadcast governors are.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Speaker, since permission has been granted for one question to be asked, I wonder if another question might be asked.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. MacRae: When the hon. member spoke he suggested that he did not now oppose another community antenna television system for Winnipeg. Is that the position at which we stop? Does he now feel that there might be one granted for Winnipeg but no others should be granted for anywhere else?

Mr. Fisher: No, Mr. Speaker; I am for the granting of them any place in Canada to bring in television programs from anywhere from which they can be obtained; and obviously, from the references, electronic developments are making this more and more possible. I say we have to have the power to regulate to prevent these systems from becoming linked into a wire system that will eventually lead to the cutting off of free television, because the wired systems, with their economic potential, will be able to buy and attract major attractions off free television—the blackout kind of situation.

[Translation]

Mr. Yves Forest (Stanstead): Mr. Speaker, if I congratulate the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), the sponsor of this bill, it is for the interest he has shown in this very important matter and the opportunity he is giving us to discuss, in this house, the necessity or inadvisability to submit the community antenna systems and the like to the supervision and control of the board of broadcast governors, with the results we know and might expect, especially as regards programming and other non-technical questions.

It is the second time that a motion for second reading of this bill is brought before the house. Last November 29, the hon. member introduced Bill No. C-30, of which Bill No. C-40 now before us is an exact replica. I had the opportunity then to take part in the debate and I am glad today to add new comments to the few remarks I could make before the time allocated to the examination of that proposal had expired.

As the hon. member himself pointed out at the time, it is not sure either that the bill is complete or constitutional and that parliament has the authority to legislate in that respect.

This is a burning question at the present time and it could have great repercussions on Canadian t.v. viewers; it concerns, as well it might, several hon. members. It was discussed in the press throughout the country.

Indeed, all the newspaper accounts I have read were against any measure which would restrict individual freedom. One has to be jealous of one's freedom and be especially alert in that respect these days because governments have taken the habit of enacting legislation and regulations which often infringe upon the fundamental rights of citizens.

Like many others, I received from my constituents several communications showing concern on their part and the desire to get information or to make representations to me. Though a good number of them were perhaps prompted by people who had an interest in the matter, I am sure that many of them wrote to us of their own accord.

However, I can understand, as the hon. member has put it, why he is concerned and disturbed by the fact that these systems may, providing certain circumstances and in certain places, facilitate the reception of American broadcasts and promote the participation of foreign capital in the setting up and managing of corporations or companies which operate systems of that kind.

Since the first bill was introduced and while waiting for the report requested from the board of broadcast governors, the ministers concerned, that is the Minister of Transport and the Secretary of State, then in office, decided to stop issuing licences in some cases, everything following the press release of last December 30. I think that order has now been cancelled. However, since then the requested report was tabled in the house last March 19 and printed in Hansard. I agree with the hon. member that, in the not too distant future and in the interest of all those concerned in those operations, the government will announce the future policy it intends to follow in that field. Many people or corporations already have invested rather considerable sums of money and are waiting impatiently for the government's decision to proceed. Personally, I feel that this policy or decision will not necessarily follow the recommendations made last March 19 by the joint committee of the board of broadcast governors and the Department of Transport.

I think that many hon. members would be opposed to that body being granted the right to decide what our fellow citizens can see on their television screen, especially when such regulations could apply to only a certain part of the population.

I know that the government, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) and the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) are studying that matter seriously, and I am confident that they will find a logical and realistic solution, in keeping with the best interests of Canadians, taking into account the special circumstances surrounding that case, which is very complicated and hard to solve.

The systems involved—and I am still referring only to the community television networks, which in fact are only an extension of the antenna any individual can instal on his house and which are used only to get a better reception of the signals which are already there, in the air, and which play a totally passive role and are no substitute for any television broadcasting of signals—do not transmit any program and, therefore, from the logical and practical viewpoint, cannot be subjected to the same standards and regulations which are provided or set up by radio and television broadcasting stations.

It is one thing to control what programs can be broadcast, but it is another thing to tell the people what programs they will be allowed to watch on their set.

Also, we know that everything that concerns the field of communications is very important here in this country and plays a leading part in what is called "The search for national purposes or objectives".

We must take into serious consideration and not exaggerate the role played by those systems as regards the transmission of signals coming from our neighbours to the south. As a matter of fact, 30 per cent of all cable systems in Canada do not transmit signals from the United States, but are used only to provide a variety and an improvement of programs already picked up in an area, or else they increase the capacity to pick up programs of Canadian stations which could not be seen otherwise.

Moreover, the subscribers of these networks represent only 5 per cent of all homes having television and even in this small percentage, one has to take into account all those who, like myself, live near the American border and can pick up television shows with an ordinary antenna or even without any.

It is obvious that in our country, the great majority of our people are concentrated in more or less narrow strips of land in the southern part of the country along the borders and can easily pick up the powerful American television stations. Such is the case in the eastern townships and except channel 7, the excellent station operated by the newspaper La Tribune in Sherbrooke, we can easily pick up American channels but hardly French and English stations of Montreal if we did not have the cable transmission services which are much appreciated by some 20,000 subscribers to the dozen of networks operating in our area.

Such is the situation of about half of the Canadian people. Regulations restricting the freedom and rights of a class of citizens would, in my opinion, only be unfair and discriminatory.

We appreciate the efforts and the contribution of the national network and of all private stations which are indispensable to us, and we acknowledge their merits. They actually offer us several interesting programs which are sometimes of great value.

It must be recognized, however, that our fellow citizens often look at programs originating south of the border and which our neighbours, with their unlimited means and greater facilities in every respect, can offer us in a more complete and elaborate manner.

At a time when, as evidenced by the Telstar experience, we shall soon be able to see programs coming from any country in the world, television viewers in Canada should not be prevented from seeing programs of interest to them. In my opinion, attempts should be made rather to encourage, help and prompt the C.B.C. network, as well as t.v. and radio stations and our artists, to present choice programs of prime quality and likely to hold the attention of Canadians who, in general, are interested in their country, in their culture, in our projects, in our artists, and who gladly watch our programs when they satisfy their legitimate aspirations.

That solution would perhaps be more practical, more realistic and easier to apply. I know that we are already immensely contributing towards the operations of the C.B.C., the national film board, etc., corporations promoting a Canadian culture and a Canadian mentality, but we sometimes wonder if the best means are being taken to achieve this highly desirable purpose.

I do not want to imply that I am against all controls; wire television systems now have to comply with regulations established by the Department of Transport which controls the issuance of licences and which can, beforehand, give particular attention to stations receiving and relaying programs, the area covered, etc., and, above all, it is reasonable to expect that those networks have the obligation to broadcast Canadian programs when it is technically possible to do so.

I have no objection either to corporations or companies which operate such systems and want to obtain a licence being owned and controlled by Canadian interests in a large proportion, if not entirely.

However, we must avoid passing regulations that would deprive an individual of the right to watch on his t.v. set what he might pick up himself by using or erecting a more expensive aerial, which he avoids by becoming a subscriber to a community system. A regulation to the contrary would be an undesirable change. Our present legislation provides and assures that our country has broadcasting means under Canadian control and requiring a certain amount of Canadian content.

The objectives and purposes mentioned in section 10 of the Broadcasting Act passed in 1958 certainly did not forbid to listen to or watch programs from foreign countries, in order to seal off our culture against outside influence, when on the contrary it can develop and improve through contact with the views and the clash of ideas from all parts of the world.

[Text]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-40 before the house this afternoon, the purpose of which is to give the board of broadcast governors some control over the so-called community antenna t.v. and cable systems which are regularly picking up broadcast programs and relaying them for profit by cable to private homes, is one which I think needs to be studied by a committee of this house to determine whether or not this bill provides the manner in which it should be controlled or whether some other appropriate means should be set up. I say that for the reason that up to the present time the Department of Transport has exercised some control over the establishment of cable television systems, but at the same time I do not believe there has been an adequate or clear concept of how they do in fact go about setting up such control. As I understand it, they simply issue a licence or refuse to issue a licence to instal a cable system in a city, and that is about as far as it goes.

A few months ago a hearing lasting several days was held in the city of Ottawa at which the television and cable relay people all over the country presented their views. I think it is fair to say that at that time the main contention they put forward at the hearing was that these groups were nothing more or less than a large antenna system. In other words, a large number of people had banded together in a co-operative effort which resulted in their being able to receive programs which, in fact, they could individually receive anyway.

When the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) introduced this bill, he mentioned that there was some confusion surrounding the regulations and the actual functions of this cable television system. I believe he said a mouthful when he said that. There are so many conflicting interests and conflicting regulations when you consider how this is going to affect private television, but certainly the House of Commons ought to give some consideration to it. I believe an agency of government should be concerned, in fact has an obligation to be concerned, when there are large segments of the Canadian population who may be deprived of something such as free television. In addition to the argument advanced by the hon. member for Port Arthur, I think we should very carefully consider the implication in rural areas as opposed to urban areas. We should consider what would happen if free television were either downgraded or discontinued. In many areas, even in my own constituency, there are people who are objecting vigorously to the establishment of cable television. They feel that, if and when it is installed, it is certainly going to delay the day when other satellites are set up in the area. This would mean the people in rural areas would be denied the opportunity of listening to more than one channel.

Most of my constituency, which may or may not be typical, is confined to one channel television. It happens that the C.B.C. serves both ends of the constituency from two different broadcast areas. I know that large numbers of these people feel their interests are being hurt by the establishment of cable television because this is going to pick up all these urban customers, if you want to call them that, and there would be no commercial incentive to establish free broadcasting satellites.

I do not want to take up too much time, but I do believe that the expansion of cable television in Canada has reached the point where we have to recognize the fact that the regulation for the 55 per cent Canadian content in programming is being defeated. In other words, if it is possible, and we know now it is, to bring into these cable systems the entire programming of a United States station for one day, then these Canadian listeners do not get any Canadian content in their programs. I believe that this subject should be referred to a committee, and we should re-examine the regulation calling for 55 per cent Canadian content. If we are going to insist that private television stations in the country have 55 per cent Canadian content in their programs, whether or not their audience likes it, then in my opinion it is not fair that cable television should be allowed to broadcast the complete program schedule of stations which are not required to have that 55 per cent Canadian content. On the one hand, perhaps we have too little control, and on the other hand we are insisting on too much control.

I think perhaps we could argue that in certain areas satellites serve almost exactly the same purpose as cable television. In other words a satellite broadcasting 50 miles or 100 miles away from some major city into a small town or rural area is simply relaying the programs that originate in a television station in a city some distance away. The argument that there should be some local programming for that area is not valid at all, because of the point of origin of the program.

I do not wish to say any more, Mr. Speaker, except that I support the suggestion by the hon. member for Port Arthur that a committee of this house neds to have a look at this cable television development in Canada in view of the tremendous expansion of it. I agree with him also that there is a danger —I think that was the main basis of his argument—that it might develop into a closed circuit network from one end of the country to the other. Certainly if this happens I can see no difference between the control that should be exercised on that network and the control that should be exercised over private television networks. I am not sure that I can accept the bill that is before us, because it does seem to give blanket control to the board of broadcast governors over cable television without any indication as to what the members of the House of Commons would like to have done. I think it would be better if the subject were referred to a committee to be studied, and then recommendations made by the members of this house as to the regulations that should govern.

Mr. MacRae: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Olson: Certainly.

Mr. MacRae: Does he not realize the essential unfairness of a situation whereby a portion of our population close to the border can get half a dozen television program, while those who live 50 or 100 miles away are subjected to the delicate refinements of the C.B.C.?

Mr. Olson: I certainly do recognize that problem. I also recognize the problem, and I tried to outline it in the remarks I made, that private, free television broadcasting stations which are 100 miles away from the border are subjected to severe regulation, and if we are not going to do the same thing in controlling cable television then we should also relax these regulations for private television.

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to the comments of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher). I think many of the things he said are quite correct, and they are receiving the attention of the government.

The only area in which the hon. member became critical of the government, at least so far as I could ascertain, was that it could have moved faster in this area; but possibly the hon. member himself suggested a good reason why the government has not moved faster. Although the regulations in the Radio Act are holding the line adequately for the present, he himself indicated that he has been having second thoughts on this very complicated matter, and that is one of the reasons why the government itself has not moved so fast in this area.

The hon. member indicated what is going through his mind on the basis of second thoughts, on the question of C.A.T.V. providing competition or cutting into broadcasting stations' service, and the implications that flow from this. He has indicated he is not so much concerned about this any more, and to a degree the matter gets down to the more technical aspects of the question with respect to C.A.T.V., and with respect to which is the most competent body or agency to deal with these matters, and with respect to what the technical criteria should be.

Perhaps there is some merit in what the hon. member suggests when he states he would bring that authority under the B.B.G. At the present time the Radio Act does provide some control. The hon. member did not deal with the question of foreign ownership to any great extent, at least that I heard, and I think this is one of the most serious matters concerned.

As I understand it, the Radio Act at present provides for a minimum of 75 per cent home ownership or partly Canadian ownership, and 25 per cent non-residential foreign ownership, and many people, including myself, have serious doubts whether this ownership provision is at all adequate. A lot can be said, especially when there is expensive technical equipment to purchase, in favour of a United States company purchasing 25 per cent of the equity stock in any C.A.T.V. network and, with the adequate financing they have, that they in fact should have the managerial control of the company. There is some question as to whether the provision in the Radio Act is sufficient to maintain Canadian ownership of C.A.T.V. This is very important, due to the fear that has been expressed, not only by the mover of this bill but by other hon. members who have spoken, regarding the implications of a possible network throughout the country.

We also have to be very concerned about foreign ownership because of the fact that these people might bid on something that is really Canadian, something like hockey night in Canada, and if this would happen we would have cause for real concern. I believe the government would be well advised to consider this bill, but to do so in conjunction with an over-all communications policy, not only in so far as foreign ownership of C.A.T.V. is concerned but with reference to television generally and radio as well.

Mr. Fisher: And Time and Reader's Digest.

Mr. Munro: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put on the record a few comments by a man who has written to me on this subject. He is the operator of one of these C.A.T.V. stations in my constituency, Mr. Norman Curry, and in his letter he says he is concerned about the possibility of Famous Players buying into C.A.T.V. operations across the country. I do not think there can be any doubt about who owns Famous Players. It is foreign owned and is having very significant influence in the C.A.T.V. field, and in the national association to which the hon. member referred.

In his letter he states:

> With this in mind, I am taking the liberty of putting my views forward, and I came here to give warning that if Famous Players are allowed to purchase and control cable systems across Canada, without any regulation, then the government is faced with the possibility of a third network in Canada, completely controlled by American sources. This is not a far fetched statement. Technically, all the systems that Famous Players now own or operate, or can purchase in the future, are capable of being interconnected. Various means exist in Canada that can be used to accomplish this purpose.
> The Bell Telephone Company of Canada, the Canadian National Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway each possess micro-wave facilities, and wire facilities, licensed by the dominion government as common carriers, at the service of those who wish to pay the fee.
> So that in the event Famous Players decided to interconnect their systems, through these organizations, the use of their facilities, the number of viewers that they will have as a captive audience, and if a method of charging for a program placed on these facilities was carried out, they would be able to outbid any Canadian broadcaster in Canada, including the C.B.C., in the purchase of entertainment.
> If the government wishes programs for Canadians to be determined by Americans or for that matter, by private Canadian interests across Canada, then there will be no regulations. If this occurs, I firmly believe that within a matter of a very few years, Famous Players Corporation, with the assets available to them, and their resources will succeed in removing the Saturday night hockey games from Maple Leaf Gardens, from the reach of Canadian broadcasters, and place it on their own system for a few.
> But if the government believes that Canadian programming should be operated by Canadians for Canadians, then we must have regulations, and one of the keys to the whole situation is the interconnection between cable systems across Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): The hour for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask whoever is the acting house leader about the business for next week?

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member I can only repeat what the house leader said earlier. The first business will be the legislation respecting the Roosevelt-Campobello international park, the second reading of that bill to be followed by the interim supply motion.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 22, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WOOLLIAMS—STATEMENTS BY PRIME MINISTER ON VIEWING OF FILM

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a question of privilege that affects all members of the house. Not only does it affect all members of the house, but it reflects on what happened last Friday. The particular point of privilege which I raise today is this. With the greatest respect to the position he holds, I say that the Prime Minister has misinformed the house with reference to the film which has been discussed many times previously in this house.

I should like to read the answers to some questions which were put. I will give the dates to the Prime Minister and I should like him to follow me carefully. As reported at page 3429 of Hansard for May 21, 1964—I will leave out the first part of the questions because they do not go to the very root of my point of privilege—the Prime Minister was asked this question by the hon. member for Port Arthur:

> In that event, Mr. Speaker, if it were possible for the production to be seen on some network other than the C.B.C., would the Prime Minister and his advisers give their approval for that to be done?
> Mr. Pearson: We do not censor films on this side of the house.
> Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if he has had a private preview of the film?
> Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.
> Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh? What were you doing it for?
> Mr. Pearson: My right hon. friend should not get so excited.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there may be some question as to the definition of "preview", and I should like to read that definition to the house. The reason I do so is that on another occasion when I raised a point of privilege as to the winter games the Prime Minister appeared to find some difference between the word "conference" and the word "committee". According to the Oxford dictionary "preview" means "to view or examine a film".

Now I come to Friday, June 19, when some question was raised as to the integrity of the Prime Minister and there was some difference between what the hon. member for Qu'Appelle had said and what the hon. member for Port Arthur had said. At page 4490 there is some very interesting reading, and I will quote these extracts in chronological sequence. The Prime Minister is reported as follows:

> Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak for anybody else but I propose to say that I was telling the truth, the total truth, and I ask the hon. gentleman to accept that. He says, in throwing doubt on my word, that two hon. members have seen this film.
> Mr. Diefenbaker: I said one.

Then the Prime Minister continued at the top of page 4491:

> One hon. member has seen this film. The hon. member may have seen this film. I have not.
> Mr. Diefenbaker: You did.
> Mr. Pearson: I have not seen this film.
> Mr. Churchill: What have you seen, then?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to go back to June 2, where at page 3836 the Prime Minister was being questioned by the hon. member for Yukon regarding the film and an article which had appeared in the Globe and Mail. The Prime Minister is reported as follows:

> I did not see it in my office. I saw it in Toronto at a studio, and it was shown in an office in the east block. I saw part of it there but the sound track was so bad I left after a few minutes because it could not be understood.
> Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): I have a question supplementary to the previous question asked of the Prime Minister. I was wondering if, as a sophisticated critic of art, he would tell us what he thought of the film "Mr. Pearson" when he saw it?
> Mr. Pearson: I found it exceedingly interesting, Mr. Speaker.

The point I want to make, Mr. Speaker, is this. On May 21 last, as reported at page 3429 of Hansard, the Prime Minister, in answer to a question from the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue, said that he had seen the film. May I now refer to his statement made last Friday, June 19, when he said he had not seen the film. Also on June 2, as reported at page 3836 of Hansard, he said he had found the film exceedingly interesting.

Therefore the point I make is that it could hardly have been exceedingly interesting if the Prime Minister had not seen it.

I would think, and I suggest this to the Prime Minister with the greatest respect to the position he holds—because we in Canada must not only respect the man but also the position he holds as Prime Minister of this country—that on this occasion he owes an apology to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle who left due to a procedural argument, and due to an argument definitely on the subject, when he charged that it was not the complete and full truth the Prime Minister was telling the house. I say in that regard, with the greatest respect, that the house has been misinformed and the Prime Minister owes an apology to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle and other members of the house.

INTERNATIONAL LABOUR CONFERENCE

TABLING OF INSTRUMENTS ADOPTED AT GENEVA MEETING

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the texts, in English and in French, of the instruments adopted at the international labour conference held in Geneva, Switzerland, and to make a brief explanation of the instruments. Its conclusions included one international labour convention and two recommendations.

The convention and one of the recommendations deal with the problem of the risk caused in industry by inadequately guarded machinery. They seek the prohibition of the sale, hire and use of inadequately guarded machinery. These were adopted at the conference without opposition. The provisions of these instruments are being taken into account in legislation now under active consideration in the occupational safety field.

The other recommendation deals with the principles and practices to be followed in relation to the termination of employment of workers at the initiative of the employer.

All of these instruments were supported by Canadian employer, worker and government delegates.

The constitution of the I.L.O. requires a member state to bring conventions and recommendations "before the authority or authorities within whose competence the matter lies for the enactment of legislation or other action". In the case of a federal state there is a further obligation to refer the instruments to the appropriate state or provincial authorities "for the enactment of legislation or other action", and to arrange for periodic consultations with a view to promoting coordinated action to give effect to the provisions of the instruments.

The instruments will, therefore, in accordance with past practice, be brought officially to the attention of the provinces. My colleague the Secretary of State has sent copies to the lieutenant governor of each province, with the request that they be placed before the competent authority in the province for consideration.

CORPORATIONS AND LABOUR UNIONS RETURNS ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING FILING OF CORPORATION RETURNS

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the first reading of Bill No. S-35 (from the Senate), to amend the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

GRAIN

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF PRICES PAID BY LIVESTOCK FEEDERS

On the order: Government notices of motion:

June 19—the Minister of Forestry—The following proposed motion: —That the standing committee on agriculture and colonization be empowered to examine and inquire forthwith into all matters arising out of and relating to the difference between the prices received for feed grain by the producers in the prairie provinces of Canada and the price paid by livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia, and that the evidence adduced before this committee in the twenty sixth parliament be referred to the committee, and that the committee have leave to receive such evidence as part of the said examination.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to section 2 of standing order 21 this government notice of motion stands transferred to and ordered for consideration under government orders at the next sitting of the house.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

MANPOWER CONSULTATIVE SERVICE

Question No. 901—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Is the agency known as the manpower consultative service now in operation and, if so, since what date and what work has been done in relation to the objectives of the agency?

2. If the agency is not yet in operation what has been done since the program was announced in the House of Commons last June?

3. What grants has the government provided for research purposes to (a) unions (b) companies (c) which unions and which companies and what amount was granted in each case?

4. What is meant by definite manpower problems and in the case of unions and companies who may have received grants, what were these problems?

5. In order to be entitled to these grants for research, how many companies gave the government advance notice of technical changes?

6. How many companies or unions made representations and were turned down?

7. Who are the six experts and who were given the task of setting up the agency and causing measures to be taken and (a) what are their qualifications and their salaries (b) where are they working at the present time, and (c) do they have any staff?

8. Who made up the three member commission that was to travel across Canada in order to interview candidates for the six positions?

9. Who were the 30 candidates and for what reasons were the six candidates chosen?

10. What is the nature of the federal fund established to decrease transfer expenses for workers displaced through technical changes?

11. Who is directly responsible to the treasury for this fund?

12. According to what standards or conditions is it administered?

13. What moneys have been spent to date?

14. Will this agency soon be reporting on its activities and, if so, when can the report be expected?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. Staff is currently being appointed for the manpower consultative service. Four appointments have been made and the personnel will be reporting for duty during the month of May. Preliminary work on developing the program of the service has been undertaken by the Department of Labour.

2. Numerous discussions have been held with labour and management groups representing a variety of industries about the work planned for the agency, the staff mentioned in question 1 has been recruited and the plans for the new service were reviewed at the federal-provincial labour conference of ministers of labour and deputy ministers in March 1964.

3, 4, 5. No grants have yet been made.

6. No companies or unions making representations have been turned down.

7. (a) Three senior and three intermediate positions were established to administer this service, four of which have been filled by open competition through the civil service commission.

G. G. Brooks, head of the service, salary $16,000. University graduate with a B.A. and M.A. degrees with over 20 years experience in labour relations and personnel work in industry. During past 13 years was personnel manager with United Aircraft of Canada Limited.

D. Adamson, salary $13,100. A veteran of world war II with a diploma in electrical engineering and a number of years experience as a personnel manager and industrial relations consultant in industry. Latterly manager of employee relations with Levy Industries Limited, Toronto.

A. M. Sargent, salary $9,030. A war veteran and a graduate in arts and honours economics from McGill University. Former employee of the economics and research branch of the Department of Labour, who since 1950 has been engaged in a number of research projects providing him with knowledge of Canadian industry and manpower problems. His last major project was with the Canadian aspects of an international study, conducted by the organization for economics co-operation and development on effects of technological change in manpower and on manpower adjustment policies.

John Drew, salary $8,310. University graduate with a B.Com. and M.A. degrees; formerly research director for the B.C. federation of labour and latterly owner director of an economics and industrial relations centre in British Columbia.

(b) The present headquarters are the Department of Labour, Ottawa.

(c) Yes, three as of this date; three additional will likely be required to complete the establishment of this branch.

8. The committee which interviewed candidates for these positions consisted of R. C. Labarge, assistant deputy minister of National Revenue (customs and excise); W. R. Dymond, assistant deputy minister, Department of Labour; and A. F. Mackey, civil service commission officer.

9. Having regard for the right to privacy of the candidates and the possibility that publication of information could prove to be not only embarrassing but prejudicial to them, the commission feels it should not release for publication the names of the candidates who were not included on the eligible lists. The successful candidates were chosen because they met the standard of experience and ability which was required.

10, 11, 12. The Minister of Labour, through the manpower consultative service, is empowered to enter into agreements to provide re-employment incentives to a province or employers or both, of one half the costs incurred in moving workers displaced by industrial change, and their dependents to other communities where employment is available. This provision is limited to those workers who, except for the payment of the incentive, would not otherwise be able to move.

13. No moneys have been spent to date.

14. The manpower consultative service will normally be reporting on its activities through the annual report of the Department of Labour, and through statements made from time to time by the Minister of Labour.

*COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF 12 MILE FISHING LIMIT

Question No. 1,081—Mr. Mather:

Is it the intention of the government to place the 12 mile fishing limit proposals before the standing committee on marine and fisheries and, if so, when will this be done?

Mr. Robichaud: Mr. Speaker, in reply I wish to state that the subject is at present before the committee on marine and fisheries.

ASSISTANCE TO GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY

Question No. 1,177—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Since 1960, has the government assisted the Canadian Geographical Society or the Canadian Geographical Journal by way of (a) technical advice given by any government department (b) research facilities on any department (c) direct co-operation of any government officials (d) credits, subsidies, or grants for travel, study, etc. (e) participation in the activities of international geographical organizations?

2. To which of these organizations does Canada belong and what appropriations has the government provided for this year's Canadian participation in and contribution to these organizations?

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. Since 1960 the geographical branch, Department of Mines and Technical Surveys, has assisted the Royal Canadian Geographical Society in an incidental manner from time to time. This has involved occasional small drafting jobs covering maps to be published in the Canadian Geographical Journal.

No direct grants, subsidies or travel grants have been provided. Geographical branch personnel have occasionally acted as representatives of the Royal Canadian Geographical Society in an incidental manner when attending international meetings.

No credits, grants or subsidies have been provided by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. The department has responded in the normal way to requests for information and available photographs from time to time. The present deputy minister and his predecessor have been elected by members of the society to the board of directors of the society and departmental staff members have contributed occasional articles or book reviews to the journal.

2. Canada belongs to the international geographical union and the pan American institute of geography and history. For the current year the following appropriations have been made for Canadian participation: (a) membership, international geographical union, annual fee, $550; (b) travel expenses to cover participation of branch scientists in the international geographical congress (I.G.U.) in London, England, July 1964, $3,000; (c) annual membership fee, pan American institute of geography and history, $9,800; (d) travel expenses for attendance at directing council of the pan American institute of geography and history, Mexico, June 1964, $600; (e) travelling expenses of members of the Canadian national committee of the international geographical union, $1,600.

P.O. DEPARTMENT DEFICIT ON SECOND CLASS MAIL

Question No. 1,198—Mr. Orlikow:

1. How much was the deficit of the Post Office Department for delivering second class mail for each of the past five years?

2. Of this, how much was for delivering newspapers and how much was for delivering magazines?

3. Of the deficit for delivering newspapers, how much was for delivering daily newspapers and how much for delivery of weekly newspapers?

4. Of the deficit for delivering magazines, how much was caused by delivering Canadian magazines, how much by delivering United States magazines?

5. Of the deficit for delivering magazines, how much was caused by delivering institutional and how much by delivering commercial publications?

Mr. Nicholson: 1.

	(1) Deficit	(2) Deficit adjusted to reflect expenditures arising from the transfer to first class mail of costs for preferential treatment
1958-59	$23,147,000	$18,643,100
1959-60	24,407,400	19,675,800
1960-61	26,773,800	21,750,700
1961-62	26,420,700	21,307,400
1962-63	26,987,800	21,751,800

2, 3, 4 and 5. Amounts not available because costs have not been apportioned to the various categories of publishers mail.

The above deficits for second class mail include transient mail which consists of newspapers and magazines mailed by the general public. As from the 1st April 1964 there is no longer a transient second class mail category. The amounts do not include charges such as the cost of accommodation supplied by the Department of Public Works or the superannuation payments made by the Department of Finance. A complete apportionment of these costs by classes of mail and services will commence with the current fiscal year.

The preferential treatment accorded to first class mail results in expenditures chargeable to first class mail but not reflected in the allocation of costs on the basis of the departmental cost ascertainment system. The inclusion of these costs with the direct expenditures on first class mail produces corresponding deductions from certain other classes of mail. The deduction of costs applicable to second class mail reduces the deficit to the amounts shown in column (2).

OFFICIAL FLAG

Question No. 1,208—Mr. Martineau:

1. Is the flag embodying three maple leaves conjoined on one stem in the colours red and white the personal choice of the Prime Minister as the official emblem of Canada?
2. What advisers did the Prime Minister consult before proposing this flag as Canada's official flag?
3. What are the names of the heraldic experts which were consulted in regard to this choice?
4. Were any alternative models suggested by the Prime Minister's advisers and experts as possible models for Canada's new flag?
5. What is the heraldic significance of the new proposed flag?
6. Did the Prime Minister or the government receive from any other persons or associations any other suggestions for a national flag?
7. From whom were these suggestions received?

Mr. Pearson: 1. No.

2 and 3. The government has had the benefit of the advice of many Canadians including Mr. Alan Beddoe, consultant on heraldry, emblems and badges for Canada, Mr. J. R. Matheson, M.P., and Mr. Howard Measures, director protocol branch, Secretary of State Department.

4. Alternative models were suggested by the government's advisers.

5. Sprigs of maple leaves have been emblematic of Canada from earliest times while the colours red, white and blue have traditional and historic attachments for Canada. By royal proclamation on November 21, 1921, a coat of arms was granted to Canada which included in the third division of the shield three maple leaves conjoined on one stem on a white field, and a motto "From Sea to Sea" as the distinguishing features of the coat of arms. The design of these arms was simplified and corrected by the government, as announced in October 1957, and in 1962 was incorporated in the Queen's personal flag for use in Canada.

6. Yes.

7. At 15 June, 1964, including those submitted during and since the proceedings of the joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate in 1945-46, approximately 5,952 flag models and designs have been received by the government. Almost all of these have been submitted by individuals although suggestions have also come from the national flag of Canada league, la ligue du drapeau national du Canada, the association of Canadian clubs, the Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the I.O.D.E. and the Royal Canadian Legion.

*CORPORATE INCOME TAX RETURNS

Question No. 1,246—Mr. Doucett:

How many business enterprises in Canada filed corporate income tax returns for the years 1957, 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962, 1963?

Mr. McIlraith: The number of business enterprises in Canada which filed corporate income tax returns for the taxation years stated, as recorded up to the end of the following calendar year, was as follows: 1957, 96,122; 1958, 105,480; 1959, 115,983; 1960, 128,986; 1961, 138,509; 1962, 147,970; 1963, not yet available.

WHARF RECONSTRUCTION, BLUE ROCK, N.S.

Question No. 1,252—Mr. Crouse:

1. Were public tenders called for the reconstruction of the public wharf at Blue Rock, Lunenburg county, Nova Scotia and, if so, what are the names of all companies bidding on this project and the amount of their bids?
2. What is the name of the successful bidder, and the amount of his contract?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Public tenders were rereceived on May 13, 1964 for breakwater replacement at Blue Rock, N.S.

Mosher & Rawding Limited, $49,250; Acadia Construction Limited, $53,500; Kenney Construction Co. Limited, $59,200; Porter Brothers Limited, $66,600; T. C. Gorman (Nova Scotia) Limited, $127,060.

2. The successful bidder was Mosher & Rawding Limited of Liverpool, N.S. at $49,250.

Questions

POST OFFICES CONSTRUCTED, ROBERVAL COUNTY, QUE.

Question No. 1,256—Mr. Gauthier:

1. How many post offices were built in Roberval county during the year ended March 31, 1964, under the program designed to combat unemployment and in what municipalities are they situated?
2. How many projects are still pending?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. Construction of three post offices commenced during the year ending March 31, 1964. They are located at: Albanel, St. Prime and Rivière au Doré.

2. Two, one at Ticouape and the other at Chambord, are under consideration.

[Text]

PURCHASE OF CONCESSIONAIRES, MALIGNE LAKE, ALTA.

Question No. 1,258—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

Is the department of northern affairs considering purchasing the concessionnaires at Maligne lake and, if so, for what reasons?

Mr. Laing: Yes. Public facilities, especially day use facilities, must be greatly expanded to meet the needs of a rapidly growing number of visitors. This will require the use of shore line and other areas now occupied by concessionaires.

USE OF PALISADES LODGE, ALBERTA

Question No. 1,259—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

1. With regard to the Palisades lodge, was the federal government ever approached by the provincial government in order to set up a cultural training establishment using the Palisades as a headquarters?
2. Has the department of northern affairs had any correspondence from any member of the Alberta government in this regard and, if so, what is the nature of the correspondence?

Mr. Laing: 1 and 2. No.

TENDERS FOR PENAL INSTITUTION, SPRINGHILL, N.S.

Question No. 1,269—Mr. Coates:

1. What is the proposed date for the calling of tenders for the construction of the young offender's institution at Springhill?
2. What will be the length of the tender call?
3. Will the tender call be comprehensive with all aspects of construction involved, or will there be a series of tender calls?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. July, 1964.

2. A period of six weeks is contemplated.

3. The tender call will be comprehensive for the site development and construction of all buildings under the one contract. Separate tenders were called and accepted in March 1964 for the boiler plant equipment. Local tenders were called for two wells last year, and another local tender will be called for a third well in July.

[Mr. Deschatelets.]

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY BYPASS, NEW GLASGOW, N.S.

Question No. 1,272—Mr. MacEwan:

When was work commenced on the New Glasgow, Nova Scotia bypass of the trans-Canada highway, and what amount has been contributed by the federal government to this work?

Mr. Deschatelets: The first contract on the New Glasgow bypass was awarded on November 10, 1961. The federal government has contributed a total of $1,377,065.77 up to the present time for this project.

PIER REPAIRS, BAILEY'S BROOK, N.S.

Question No. 1,273—Mr. MacEwan:

What are the details of the pier repairs to be carried out at Bailey's Brook, Nova Scotia, as listed in supplementary estimates (A), 1964-65?

Mr. Deschatelets: Repairs to the east pier at Bailey's Brook will include reconstruction of (a) 100 foot section of inner end in timber pilework, (b) 145 foot section of wavebreak in concrete, (c) 650 foot outer section of deck system in concrete. Minor repairs to deck system of outer 80 feet of west breakwater will also be carried out.

LABOUR SHORTAGE ESTIMATES

Question No. 1,285—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Has the Department of Labour a definition of a labour shortage and, if so, what is it?
2. In how many occupations does the Department of Labour estimate there will be labour shortages in 1964? What are they?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. The Department of Labour has no official definition of a labour shortage.

2. Not applicable.

IMPROVEMENT OF HAUL-OUT FACILITIES, WHITE POINT, N.S.

Question No. 1,289—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to carry out improvements to the haul-out facilities for the benefit of the fishermen at White Point, Victoria county, Nova Scotia and, if so, what are the improvements and how soon will they commence?

Mr. Deschatelets: Yes. A contract has been awarded for repairs to the concrete top of the skidway, and the work is expected to commence in the near future.

*TORONTO AIRPORT—LIMOUSINE AND TAXI SERVICE

Question No. 1,304—Mr. Cowan:

1. What is the nature of the exclusive rights which have been granted to Air Terminal Transport Limited to provide limousine and taxi service at Toronto international airport?
2. When were these arrangements made?
3. On what basis was limousine and taxi service provided at Toronto international airport prior to these arrangements?
4. On what basis may other taxi operators provide service to or from the airport?
5. What is the reason for granting an exclusive concession to Air Terminal Transport?
6. Does Air Terminal Transport hold taxi licences from the appropriate municipal or metropolitan authorities?
7. What provincial or municipal franchises does Air Terminal Transport hold?
8. How many buses, limousines and taxis does Air Terminal Transport have available for this service; and how many of these are available at the airport?
9. What rates are charged by Air Terminal Transport; and what authority do they have for the charging of these rates?
10. How many passengers were carried by Air Terminal Transport by bus, limousine or taxi by categories, for the years ending July 31, 1961, July 31, 1962, July 31, 1963?
11. What revenues were paid by Air Terminal Transport to the Department of Transport under these arrangements?
12. Has the Department of Transport, Canadian National Railways or Canadian Pacific Railway Company made any payments to Air Terminal Transport in connection with the carriage of freight and express and, if so, has any concession fee been paid to the department on such occasions?

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I have a rather long winded answer to this question, and I wonder whether it could be taken as a non-starred question and the answer printed in Hansard in order to save the time of the house.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

1. Air Terminal Transport Limited have been granted the exclusive right and privilege to maintain and operate a limousine and taxi station at Toronto international airport for the operation of a limousine and taxi service, together with the right and privilege to park buses, limousines and taxis in connection with the operation at such locations to be determined by the airport manager.

2. The department first entered into an agreement with Air Terminal Transport Limited on August 1, 1951. The agreement was renewed in 1955 for five years; and again in 1960 for ten years, but at a higher rental.

3. Carter Transportation Limited provided the previous ground transportation service at Toronto international airport. In accordance with the established policy of the department at the time, the air line operators serving the airport were permitted to select their own ground transportation carrier, following which the department negotiated with the carrier for an agreement to permit them to enter the airport to carry on their business. Carter Transportation Limited, having been selected by the air lines concerned, were granted a four year agreement by the Department of Transport effective August 1, 1947. Prior to the expiry of that term, the airlines concerned informed the department that they were not prepared to renew their agreement with Carter Transportation Limited, but instead wished to enter into an agreement with Air Terminal Transport Limited. Following negotiations between the department and Air Terminal Transport Limited, the Department of Transport agreed to grant them an agreement to serve the Toronto international airport, provided they first obtained the necessary public vehicle licence from the Ontario highway transport board. Air Terminal Transport Limited purchased the equipment of Carter Transportation Limited and subsequently the Ontario highway transport board, following public hearings, agreed to transfer Carter's public vehicle licence to Air Terminal Transport Limited.

4. Other taxi operators are free to bring passengers to the airport, or to collect passengers at the airport by prearrangement. However, they may not solicit business at the airport, or pick up fares without prearrangement.

5. Air Terminal Transport Limited is required to provide a 24 hour service at the airport to meet the needs of the airlines serving the airport and the travelling public. They are required to operate limousines, buses and special cars and to have them available in sufficient numbers at the airport to meet peak demands, both scheduled and unexpected, arising from weather delays, diversions, etc. They are required to provide modern equipment, to carry public liability insurance, and provide uniformed employees. All of this requires a very heavy capital investment on the part of the company, and to maintain such an investment it is necessary that the company be given exclusive rights to the passenger traffic offerings at the airport. To permit unrestricted competition from taxis would make the whole operation economically unsound. Without granting the company exclusive rights, it would be impossible to provide the type of service required by the travelling public. Experience elsewhere indicates that ground transportation dependent on the chance availability of taxis at an airport would be most unsatisfactory. There might be an oversupply of taxis available during certain periods with objectionable efforts to compete for the available passengers. In bad weather when business might be brisk downtown there would be a shortage of vehicles at the airport, leaving passengers to wait long periods for transportation. A split concession as between limousines and taxis is also unworkable. The department tried such an experiment at another major airport and had to abandon it in favour of the single operator. There, taxis were competing with the limousine by soliciting group fares at the airport, or preceding the limousine to known hotel pick-up points, and again soliciting group fares.

6. Air Terminal Transport Limited does not hold taxi licences. These are not required for the type of service performed by the company.

7. Air Terminal Transport Limited holds public vehicle licence No. 1519 from the province of Ontario, which allows its vehicles to carry passengers to and from Toronto international airport, and to any point in the province of Ontario.

8. The company operates 13 buses of the highway cruiser type. Eight are 41 passenger, and five are 33 passenger vehicles. Seven buses operate on a regular 15 minute service, and six are available for extra backup service. The company operates 90 late model sedans. These sedans are replaced with new ones every six months. An average of 55 cars are on duty at all times, 78 at peak periods, seven on the Hamilton service and five surplus at peak periods. The company's garage is located one half mile from the airport.

9. The limousine fare is $1.50, and the cars are operated on a zone rate basis comparable to taxi meter rates. The rates are subject to the approval of the Ontario highway transport board, the Department of Transport and the various air lines serving the airport.

10. Passengers carried:

	Bus	Car
Year ended July 31/61	357,950	358,143
" " July 31/62	344,319	413,564
" " July 31/63	349,862	434,705

11. Revenue paid the Department of Transport: Year ended July 31/61, $60,609.24; year ended July 31/62, $67,552.04; year ended July 31/63, $68,856.88.

12. Air Terminal Transport Limited does not have any agreement with the Department of Transport covering the carriage of freight and express. There are no exclusive agreements covering this type of operation, and in this respect Air Terminal Transport compete freely with the trucking and express companies.

CERTIFICATE OF MASTER, PATROL CRAFT "SCATARI LIGHT"

Question No. 1,305—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

How long has Peter Gerald Boudreau, master of the fisheries patrol craft Scatari Light, held a temporary certificate as master of a steamship of not more than forty tons, valid on the coastal waters of Cape Breton island and the adjacent mainland?

Answer: May 21, 1964. Prior to this date Mr. Boudreau held temporary certificate as master of a steamship of not more than 40 tons, limited to the area from Port Hawkesbury to St. Esprit, including Canso. He was master of his own fishing vessel from 1945 to 1963.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

ADMINISTRATIVE RESPONSIBILITIES OF MINISTERS

Question No. 707—Mr. Martineau:

1. What are the statutes and acts that are being administered in each case by each of the departments of government?

2. Have there been any changes or transfers from one department to another since the 23rd of April 1963 and, if so, what was each change or transfer?

3. What are the names of all crown corporations or agencies giving, in each case, the minister who is responsible for same in parliament?

4. Has there been any change or transfer of responsibility for such crown corporations or agencies since the 23rd of April 1963 and, if so, what are such changes or transfers, giving the names of the ministers involved?

5. Does the government propose any further changes or transfers of the administration of acts or statutes from one department to another or from one minister to another?

6. Does the government propose any changes in regard to crown corporations or agencies of the minister who is responsible in each case to parliament for such crown corporations or agencies?

Return tabled.

RECOMMENDATIONS OF JOINT INDIAN AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Question No. 867—Mr. Howard:

What action, in detail, has been taken with respect to each of the following recommendations of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on Indian affairs:

"(a) Education is the key to the full realization by Indians of self determination and self government.

(b) Education of Indian children in schools under the jurisdiction of the provinces should be continued and expanded.

(c) Kindergarten facilities for Indian should be provided.

(d) The provincial authorities should be approached to ensure that a more comprehensive and accurate account of the Indian people is used and described in history courses and texts.

(e) Agreements should be entered into with provincial authorities to extend adult education facilities to Indians with the program expanded.

(f) Travelling library facilities to Indian communities should be expanded wherever possible.

(g) Academic upgrading and social orientation courses to prepare young Indians for placement or specialized training should be greatly expanded.

(h) Full support and encouragement should be given to formation of home and school or parent-teacher associations.

(i) The fullest possible encouragement and incentive should be given to Indian children to go as far as they can in school.

(j) In addition to an intensive educational program, the economic opportunities and environment of the Indian people should be developed.

(k) The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and other agencies should prepare factual presentations of the Indians' way of life and their contribution to the development of Canada."?

Return tabled.

EMPLOYEES OF WORLD FAIR CORPORATION

Question No. 1,119—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How many people has the Canadian corporation for the 1967 world exhibition hired since February 19 last and how have these new employees been assigned to the various services of the company?

2. Who are the corporation's new administrative officers and what are their qualifications, salaries and responsibilities as of March 31st, 1964?

Return tabled.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR SHOWING OF FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, is the Secretary of State in a position to advise the house with regard to the report in the press this afternoon that he has been in communication with the C.B.C., as was the Prime Minister on Friday last, relative to the film "Mr. Pearson" being shown to the Canadian public?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have received the following letter from the president of the C.B.C.:

The corporation has been advised by the Prime Minister that in his personal view a television film known as "Mr. Pearson", rejected for broadcast by the C.B.C., should be given a public showing.

The corporation has also noted opinions expressed in the house by the Leader of the Opposition and other speakers.

The C.B.C. is responsible to parliament and must at all times carry out the wish and intent of parliament.

The independence of the C.B.C. from political influence in its operations is a cardinal point of public broadcasting policy. The corporation could not discharge its responsibility to parliament without this policy. Further, the public might well lose its confidence in the corporation and its program services if there were serious reason to doubt the corporation's integrity in such matters. Consequently, the corporation must at all times be careful not to confuse political matters with questions of broadcast responsibility.

With respect to the present situation it does not appear to the corporation that parliament has clearly indicated its wish that the rejected film be broadcast. In attempting to interpret the intent of parliament on this matter the corporation has encountered some difficulty.

This difficulty stems from the fact that since the inception of the C.B.C. it has been the custom of parliament to direct the work of the corporation only through approval of broadcasting policies in their broadest sense. The present instance is a question of whether or not a single program should be broadcast. Consequently there appears to be a question of principle or policy involved which may well transcend the more obvious and immediate considerations.

In the corporation's view this is a matter of great importance, keeping in mind the precedent that could be established in connection with broadcasting or showing of the film in question.

The corporation has already taken a broadcast decision with respect to this film. That decision was based solely on the professional broadcasting standards of the corporation which are used to judge such matters. The film has not changed and those standards have not changed.

Consequently the corporation must determine whether more compelling factors now exist in the realm of public interest. The corporation will give the matter immediate attention at the annual meeting of its board of directors this week and will advise you of its conclusions not later than Thursday, June 25.

As stated already, it is the desire of the corporation to carry out at all times the wishes of parliament.

Mr. Pugh: Was that letter dated a week ago?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Without making any observations on that, which of course I cannot do at this time, did the minister ascertain from the C.B.C. whether, in the event it decided to show this film to the Canadian people, the excised portion or the expurgated portion, the tenderized or disinfected portion, would also be shown?

Mr. Lamontagne: I think the corporation is well aware of the requests which were made last Friday. I have not received any answer yet.

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): May I ask a supplementary question. I wonder if the minister, in his communication with the C.B.C., would take into account the desires of the Leader of the Opposition as they apply to the film "Mr. Pearson", and make the same request for the same application of those desires as they apply to the film, "The Chief"?

Mr. Diefenbaker: May I point out that I had nothing whatever to do with that, and every portion of it can be produced. I challenge the government to produce "Mr. Pearson".

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON RETURN OF MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I notice that the Minister of National Defence is back in the house and I feel that all hon. members would like to know if he has comments to make concerning our troops, especially as far as morale and the military program are concerned.

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I do not have a report, but I should like to say that the troops I visited everywhere, in France, Germany, Cyprus and the Gaza strip, were all in high spirits, and they are doing their jobs most effectively. I can assure the hon. gentleman that he would be very proud of the Royal 22nd regiment and the magnificent way they are carrying out their responsibilities on the island of Cyprus, where young men of tender age are acting as excellent ambassadors for Canada and really doing a job there of which we can be proud.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): May I ask a supplementary question. I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence, is it his intention now to request an extension of the terms of reference affecting our troops on Cyprus so they may take more active steps to prevent trouble on the island?

Mr. Hellyer: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention. A suggestion has been made, however, that it may be necessary to review the terms of reference some time in the future if the United Nations force is to carry out a more active role there.

Mr. Churchill: Was the minister accurately reported when he was reported in the press as saying that he thought the terms of reference should be extended so some disarmament of the people causing the trouble in Cyprus could take place?

Mr. Hellyer: That was not accurate; I made no such suggestion.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Could he tell us whether he intends to go to Washington to meet the president of Turkey or to invite him to Canada so that we might explain to him our country's point of view on the Cyprus situation?

[Text]

Mr. Hellyer: My colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs is keeping in constant touch with all those who are doing their best to reach some settlement in that strife-torn island, and I do not think there is anything which could be done which is not presently being done.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Does he propose to meet the president of Turkey when the latter is on American soil in a few days, in order to discuss the Cyprus situation?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I will be in Washington Thursday for discussions with the joint defence committee, and I may have something to say to the hon. member and to the house on Friday.

[Text]

[Later:]

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Can the hon. gentleman advise the house whether the continued operation of Canadian troops in Cyprus will be financed by Canada, or whether financial assistance can be expected from the United Nations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I wish the financial situation of the United Nations was such that we could count upon the collective financial responsibility of all the state members. But that is not the case, and we shall have to continue under the arrangement for the first three months.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

IMPLEMENTATION OF RECOMMENDATIONS OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. My question is based on his statement on Friday that those recommendations of the royal commission on health services which are to be implemented should be put into effect as soon as possible. In the light of this assertion, may I ask the Prime Minister whether it is the intention of the government to carry out the recommendation that a federal-provincial conference be convened within six months of the date of the tabling of volume 1 of the report to consider initial steps in connection with a health services program?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): It is the intention of the government to give this important report the detailed study which it deserves and which it must receive before the government can appear at a federal-provincial conference to discuss with the provinces the policy which should be adopted jointly with them. As soon as a study of this kind has been completed we shall be in a better position to approach the provinces with a view to holding a conference on this matter.

Mr. Knowles: Will the Prime Minister give consideration to the recommendation in the report that even before such a conference is held, changes be made in the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act?

Mr. Pearson: Well, there is a meeting next month with the provinces at which time this matter will be discussed, but the hon. gentleman knows that we are dealing with as important a report as has been given to the people of Canada for many years. It will require very careful consideration both by this government and by provincial governments. I hope, indeed I know, we can reconcile the need for this kind of consideration with the urgent need for getting ahead with these matters.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice?

Can the minister tell the house if the government intends to implement the recommendations of the royal commission on health services and amend the Criminal Code to allow the provinces that so wish to set up lotteries to help meet the cost of health services?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that recommendation will receive the same serious and full consideration of which the Prime Minister spoke a while ago, as all the other recommendations made by the commission.

[Text]

INCLUSION OF MENTAL HOSPITALS AND TUBERCULOSIS SANATORIA IN FEDERAL PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Is the government considering immediate legislation to designate mental and tuberculosis hospitals as facilities under the Hospital Insurance and Diagnostic Services Act?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows this was a recommendation of the advisory council on health. As the Prime Minister has already mentioned, there is a meeting of ministers of health to be held in Ottawa next month, and this will be one of the matters on the agenda.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF TRANSFER OF HOSPITAL CONTROL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): My question is directed to the Minister of Veterans Affairs. May I first take this opportunity to welcome him back in our midst. Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman's department to refer the question of veterans hospitals to the standing committee on veterans affairs before any definite action is taken to transfer control of such hospitals?

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): I believe I have answered that question on other occasions. The question was discussed by the committee during the course of the last session. It made a recommendation, and we have undertaken to consult with veterans organizations before anything is made final. I do not think it would serve a useful purpose at this stage, because of the need for completing some of these arrangements, to refer this back to the committee.

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I wonder if the minister would tell us how many hospitals have actually been transferred from the administration of the Department of Veterans Affairs to date.

Mr. Teillet: None, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Pugh: Not even Calgary?

Mr. Teillet: No, Mr. Speaker.

SPEECH BY MINISTER AT UNVEILING OF MEMORIAL IN NORMANDY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Veterans Affairs whether he has apologized to the Royal Winnipeg Rifles for his inappropriate remarks on the occasion of the unveiling of the Winnipeg Rifles war memorial in Normandy.

Mr. Pearson: Down in the gutter again.

Hon. Roger Teillet (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there was no apology necessary, and I offer none. The remarks I made at that very impressive ceremony were appropriate and in keeping with the circumstances. If one reporter among many others present who made a specific report—quite inaccurate in its quotations—had been listening to what I said and had read the very well prepared historical record of the Royal Winnipeg Rifles before writing his story, I am sure his report would have had a different orientation.

FLOODS

BRITISH COLUMBIA AND YUKON—STEPS TO ALLEVIATE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): May I address this question to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources and his parliamentary secretary. In view of the grave concern among many people in the Fraser valley that the dikes which extend for some 233 miles along the lower Fraser and its tributaries, having been subjected to an unusually high level of the river over an extended period, are endangered as a result of saturation, seepage and undermining, can the Prime Minister advise us what the situation is and what steps the federal government is taking in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Not today, but I will look into the situation and see whether we can make a report tomorrow.

Mr. Chatterton: To allay the fears of the people, can the right hon. gentleman state in advance that in the unfortunate event of breaches in the dikes and widespread losses, the federal government will give generously and without bickering to relief, and not in the picayune Alberni tidal wave fashion?

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I do not think that question is in order.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I ask the acting minister this. Can he inform the house whether any financial assistance has been or will be given to the government of the Yukon territory with respect to the serious damage caused by floods in the Mayo and Dawson City area?

Mr. Pearson: I will take that up with the minister.

FISHERIES

NEW BRUNSWICK—PROTECTION OF SALMON IN DAM CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister received a telegram from Kenneth Homer of Upper Woodstock, New Brunswick, requesting a copy of a recent report from the Atlantic office of his department relative to the effects of the proposed Mactaquac power development on the Atlantic salmon in the Saint John river?

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): I did receive such a telegram, and my reply was to the effect that there were no official reports available. There is a study being made by the federal Department of Fisheries and the government of New Brunswick, but while negotiations are under way it would not be proper to make public any report which we have available to us.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Will the minister assure the house that when the report is available it will be made public?

Mr. Robichaud: When the negotiations with New Brunswick are complete, and with the consent of the provincial government, because they are a party to this study, the report will be made public.

EDUCATION

LOANS TO STUDENTS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. William Dean Howe (Hamilton South): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the recommendation of the royal commission on health services, will the government consider immediate implementation of its proposed university scholarship and loan plan, and a major extension of it to include medical students, postgraduate physicians, dentists and nurses?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): As I have already stated, we hope to put this into effect as quickly as possible this summer.

BROADCASTING

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE EXAMINATION OF C.B.C. ACCOUNTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I want to address a question to the Secretary of State. Would the minister advise the house whether it is the intention of the government to have an examination of the accounts of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation by a special committee on broadcasting?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN CONFEDERATION

RESOLUTION OF ST. JEAN BAPTISTE SOCIETIES RESPECTING ASSOCIATE STATES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether he received a copy of a brief presented by the St. Jean Baptiste societies of Quebec, concerning a new federation of two associate states in Canada?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I do not recall having received it. It has not been brought to my attention if it has arrived, but I will look into it right away.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

REPORTED SPEECH IN BRITAIN BY ARNOLD HEENEY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs based on a report of a speech made by Mr. Arnold Heeney to a British audience on Friday last, when he is reported to have said:

> It seems to me unprofitable...to place undue emphasis nowadays on friendship and special relationship within the commonwealth. The winds of change...have laid bare the dry and brittle roots of much cherished doctrine.
> It is obvious enough that the commonwealth cannot recover nor achieve any meaningful degree of political cohesion.

Would the minister inform the house if this statement is a reflection of government policy and, if it is not, what right has a servant of the public to go travelling around making statements in contradiction to that policy?

Mr. Speaker: I do not think this question is in order under the rules given to the Chair. It fails in that questions should not inquire whether statements reported in a newspaper are correct.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): In view of the fact that the hon. gentleman has made a statement concerning a distinguished public servant, I think, in fairness to that public servant, I should make a reply.

Mr. Speaker: If the question is not in order I doubt very much if a reply can be permitted. I am sure there will be another opportunity to make a statement. If I make an exception for the minister I will have to make exceptions in other cases, and the rules are destroyed.

Mr. Herridge: I will go into this matter further at ten o'clock.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FORESTRY

NOVA SCOTIA—CONTINUATION OF IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Minister of Forestry. On June 10 I asked the minister a question in regard to the urgency of agreement being reached between the federal government and the government of Nova Scotia with respect to the forest stand improvement program, to provide employment for unemployed miners in Cape Breton. At that time the minister said he would have an answer the following week. I am wondering whether he is in a position to throw any light on that subject today.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Acting Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I know that the matter has been under urgent consideration by the minister and senior officials of his department. I shall give him notice of this further question today, and I think he will be in a position to answer within the next three or four days.

UNITED NATIONS

DISARMAMENT—CANADIAN CONTRIBUTION TO SO-CALLED BOMBER BONFIRE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, although I think he might wish to consult his colleague the Minister of National Revenue before giving a categorical answer. Will the Canadian government consider a contribution to what is known as the "bomber bonfire", which seems to be the most promising approach to disarmament at the present time?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, there are two proposals currently before the 18 nation disarmament committee concerning the destruction of bomber aircraft; the Soviet proposal for the destruction of all bombers by all countries, and the United States proposal for the reciprocal destruction of a specific number of B-47's and TU-16's which have similar long range missions. In its present form the Soviet proposal is unrealistic. The United States proposal concerns major armaments of a type not held by Canada.

TRADE

WHEAT—POSSIBLE REDUCTION IN SALES TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce based on the undertaking the Prime Minister gave last Friday, when he said the Minister of Trade and Commerce "perhaps will be in a position to make a statement on the whole matter early next week".

My question is based on the apparent contradiction between what the Minister of Trade and Commerce said in Los Angeles a few weeks ago and what Mr. Khrushchev said in Denmark late last week, when he said it is unlikely that Moscow will make further purchases of grain from the west, which has provided millions of bushels of wheat to offset poor Russian crops. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said in Los Angeles that he expected this trade with Russia would carry on for a number of years. I wonder whether he is now in a position to clarify this matter, or when he will be able to do so?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will be very happy to make a statement now. In the first place, the statement I made in Los Angeles was to the effect that I did not think the Soviet union was likely in the near future to be a large exporter of wheat, and I think this statement is probably true, although it is just a personal opinion.

May I go on to answer the two questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Medicine Hat last Friday in my absence. The Leader of the Opposition asked me to comment on a statement made by the premier of the Soviet union in Denmark the other day, in which he is quoted as having said that he did not think Moscow will make further purchases of grain from the west in 1964.

When the Leader of the Opposition asked me a similar question the other day I made it quite plain that we were waiting for the Soviet union to make up their mind. This continues to be the situation. The wheat board is constantly in touch with the Soviet union, and when they have made up their mind they will let the wheat board know whether or not they require any grain. I have never made any statements to the contrary, and I certainly would not want to mislead anyone. This is a decision that has to be made by the Soviet union. But may I say that so good has been the performance under the existing contract with the U.S.S.R. that the Soviet authorities have made it quite plain to us that if they need wheat they will certainly buy some from Canada. The shipments against the enormous contract that we signed last fall will be completed this July. Deliveries have been made ahead of schedule, the quality has been excellent, and the Russians are happy.

May I add, so that I may not be accused of having misled the house, that in the fall I forecast that our exports of wheat and flour this year would be of the order of 550 million bushels, which as hon. members know is a couple of hundred million bushels more than the largest figure reached in the last six years or so. I now find that I was wrong, and that the shipments will be of the order of 590 million bushels.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sharp: I thought, in case anyone in the house should think I had misled them in any way, I should bring them up to date on these figures.

The second question, asked by the hon. member for Medicine Hat, had to do with our shipments under foreign aid. We do expect this year to make a very substantial increase in shipments of wheat and flour under foreign aid. I am not in a position to give the exact figures now, but they will be very substantial. This will restore the level at least to what it was before the previous government made very big cuts, and I am hoping it will not be long before we are able to reach the target which I stated previously, of about $40 million a year.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think one matter should be corrected as far as the cut was concerned. We increased the amount very greatly after cutting it one year, so there was an increase during the period we were in office. The question I asked the minister was this. As a result of the conversations that are taking place between the U.S.S.R. representatives and the Canadian wheat board, has the U.S.S.R. given any indication that there is foundation for the suggestion by Mr. Khrushchev that further purchases are not to be expected?

Mr. Sharp: I can answer that about as well as I could answer a question as to how large the crop will be in western Canada this year. The Russians, like ourselves, are a bit uncertain.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That, of course, is not quite as direct as the hon. gentleman was when he was on his pilgrimage to Saskatoon on Friday. However, I think things look very hopeful since he has been there—for us.

I would ask him, though, is it a fact that there has been any indication by the U.S.S.R. that Mr. Khrushchev's prediction, if I may call it such, has some foundation?

Mr. Sharp: I had the opportunity, both going to and coming from Saskatoon, to have considerable discussion with the members of the Canadian wheat board, and they brought me up to date and said that the answers I had given to the right hon. gentleman during the week had been exactly right, namely that there is great uncertainty and that the Soviet union has yet to make up its mind. But may I add this, Mr. Speaker. I would like to offset the rather pessimistic tone of the remarks made by the Leader of the Opposition, because I know he is just as interested as I am in getting as high a price as possible for Canadian wheat. The sales prospects for next year, whether or not the Russians buy, are excellent.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the Minister of Trade and Commerce would undertake to allay some of the apprehension in the flour milling industry by making a forward announcement to the effect that with regard to this tremendous or substantial increase in foreign aid in the form of flour, the orders for flour will be placed immediately after July 31 when they have completed the Russian order. I might say that if there are not some further orders forthcoming, more than 50 per cent of our flour milling industry will be shut down.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, I share the concern of the hon. gentleman about the outlook for the flour milling industry. I understand the situation very well, and I will be pleased to look into the suggestion he has made.

CITIZENSHIP AND IMMIGRATION

DELAY IN GRANTING CERTIFICATES TO CHINESE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. It relates to the announcement made by the minister last week that he was going to appoint a commissioner to inquire into certain aspects of the immigration branch of his department. I wonder whether, in course of considering the terms of reference for that commissioner, the minister would include a proviso that the commissioner also inquire into the inordinately long delay, ranging in some cases up to five or six years, which results from the process of granting people of Chinese origin their citizenship certificates?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall have a long statement to make to the house in a few moments when interim supply is brought in.

[Text]

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

INQUIRY AS TO IMPLEMENTATION OF GILL REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reynold Rapp (Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour regarding the Gill report on unemployment insurance. Is it the intention of the government to present this report during this session?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, we have several times stated the policy of the government with respect to the implementation of all or part of the recommendations of the Gill committee. If parliamentary time will permit, as the Prime Minister indicated in the debate on the address in reply, this is one of the matters which might be dealt with this session.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY INTO METHOD OF LIMITING ELECTION EXPENDITURES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he is having any difficulty in finding people to serve on the inquiry which he undertook to start into the practicable way of enforcing election expenditure limits?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No special difficulty, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question. Would the Prime Minister then give us an explanation why it has been some four and a half months since he indicated that he would do this and we still have not had this inquiry?

[Mr. Howard.]

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it will be done as quickly as possible. After all, there is a good deal of time between the present and the next election.

Mr. Lambert: What do you mean by "present"?

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

STEPS TO DEAL WITH REPORTED BANKRUPTCY RACKET

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Justice. In view of reports to the effect that a bankruptcy ring is operating a huge racket in Canada and that representatives of the superintendent of bankruptcy and of the attorney general's department of the province of Quebec have met to discuss the situation, and in view of public concern at these reports, would the minister inform the house what action is to be taken to deal effectively with this situation?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this would be a proper question for the order paper.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR ANSWER TO QUESTION ON ORDER PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of immigration. On June 3 I put down a question, No. 1,213, and I am wondering whether the minister is now in a position to answer it. I asked that it be answered verbally and it relates to his department, which has been under discussion for at least six weeks.

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of this question, but I will look into it.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration what method he would suggest to the house to draw to his attention questions which have been on the order paper since June 3.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, we are trying to answer as soon as possible the questions asked on orders of the day. I think that our department has quite a good record in that regard.

SHIPPING

IMPLEMENTATION OF COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS RESPECTING COASTING TRADE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as there is great concern today at reports of royal commissions I am wondering whether I could ask the Minister of Transport when the government intends to put into effect the recommendations of the royal commission on coasting trade.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a bill proceeding through the other place, if it is not already through—I have not looked at the order paper today—dealing with this matter. It is going to come here in due course. Some time between now and Christmas I hope we will deal with it.

ROOSEVELT-CAMPOBELLO PARK

ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMISSION TO ADMINISTER INTERNATIONAL PARK

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (for the Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-26, respecting the commission established to administer the Roosevelt-Campobello international park.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to move second reading of Bill No. S-26 on the order paper in the name of the Prime Minister respecting the Roosevelt-Campobello international park. As hon. members know, this bill was read for the third time and passed by the Senate on May 28. May I be permitted to give a very brief explanation of the purpose of the bill.

This bill is designed simply to implement the international agreement signed by the President of the United States and by our Prime Minister in Washington on January 22, 1964. The purpose of this agreement was to establish an international park, symbolic of friendship between Canada and the United States, on the property on Campobello island, New Brunswick, which is so clearly identified with the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt. It was here that President Roosevelt was afflicted with the attack of poliomyelitis which impaired his physique from then on but which, however, did nothing to impair the indomitable spirit of courage which was the hallmark of his great service to his own country and to the world in subsequent years.

The agreement signed on January 22 in Washington by the President and the Prime Minister concluded months of negotiation between officials of the two governments, in consultation with the province of New Brunswick, where the property is located, regarding the best method for dealing with the generous offer made by the owners of the property, the Hammer brothers, to donate the house and adjacent grounds to the governments of Canada and the United States as a suitable memorial to President Roosevelt and as a symbol of friendship between these two great neighbours.

In May 1963, at the Hyannis Port meeting between the late President Kennedy and Prime Minister Pearson, the Hammer brothers made this offer public and, after communicating with Premier Robichaud, the two heads of government announced their grateful thanks for the offer in principle. The negotiations which followed led to the emergence of the concept of an international commission composed equally of United States and Canadian representatives to administer the proposed park to be established on this site. This concept is embodied in the January 1964 agreement which is annexed to the present bill as the schedule.

At every stage of these negotiations the government of New Brunswick was consulted, and the warm agreement of the New Brunswick authorities to the proposed arrangements was consistently given. I should add that certain aspects of the January agreement involved matters within the provincial jurisdiction of New Brunswick, particularly certain phases of the tax exemptions referred to in article 8 of the agreement. We have been informed that the New Brunswick legislature has already adopted the necessary legislation to implement those aspects of the agreement which fall within the province's jurisdiction.

Meanwhile steady progress is being made in regard to parallel legislation in the United States congress, and all concerned hope that arrangements will be completed in order that the commission may be established and the park opened to tourists as early as possible. Of course, until the necessary legislation has been adopted and the commission formed the title to this property remains with the Hammer family who acquired the property in 1952.

I would like to draw the attention of the house to one or two features of the proposed bill and of the international agreement which is attached as its schedule. It is intended to establish an international commission comprising three representatives of each government, together with alternates, who would be responsible for administering the park. It is specifically provided in article 3 of the agreement that one of the Canadian commissioners is to be nominated by the government of New Brunswick and one of the United States commissioners by the government of Maine. Nationals of both countries may be employed on the staff of the commission, and of course the commission has been given all necessary legal powers and capacities to discharge its functions.

I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to article 8 of the agreement, which provides that the commission shall be exempt from various federal and local taxes and, as stated, we have been informed that the New Brunswick legislature has already taken action under this article. Regarding admission fees for entrance to the park, the agreement leaves it to the discretion of the commissioners as to whether or not it would be desirable to impose such fees. However, the agreement specifically states that, if the commission decides to impose admission fees, "such fees shall be set at a level which will make the facilities readily available to visitors".

The remaining sections of the agreement and of the implementing legislation are, in my opinion, self explanatory. I should add that in the Senate consideration of this bill the proposed legislation was referred to the Senate committee on external relations where detailed consideration of the bill was given. Officials of various departments appeared as witnesses. In view of this I hope the house will agree that it would not be necessary to refer this bill to our own committee on external affairs.

Therefore I would like to close my remarks with the well-known words of the statesman whom this park is intended to honour. In his first inaugural address on March 4, 1933, President Franklin D. Roosevelt stated, "In the field of world policy I would dedicate this nation to the policy of the good neighbour".

Mr. J. Chester MacRae (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak very briefly in support of Bill S-26 which, when passed, will establish a commission to administer the Roosevelt-Campobello international park. Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who was one of the greatest of the American presidents, came to this part of the country from the time he was one year old until 1921, and it was on this beautiful little island of Campobello that he contracted poliomyelitis. After his election as president of the United States he returned very infrequently, but he and his family always loved this island and his home on it.

As has been outlined by the Minister of Fisheries, this property was sold by the family in 1952 and for 11 years was in the possession of a private family in the United States, but in 1963 the owners of the property offered it to the governments of Canada and the United States as a memorial to Franklin D. Roosevelt.

I may add that there are other beautiful islands in this part of Canada, in the southwest corner of New Brunswick, such as Grand Manan, Deer island, the Wolves and others where perhaps the kindest people anywhere in Canada can be found. I know that when the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton speaks on this bill he will draw attention to the bridge which was built from Lubec to Campobello, linking the island with the mainland, during the time when he was the distinguished premier of New Brunswick and the right hon. Leader of the Opposition was the prime minister of Canada. That bridge has proven to be of great assistance to the people there, and it will help to make this memorial park one of the greatest tourist attractions in eastern Canada.

I join with the Minister of Fisheries and other hon. members who will be following me in supporting this measure to establish a commission to administer this memorial.

Hon. H. J. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of expressing my great satisfaction that we have this bill before us today, a bill that brings about co-operation between the government of the United States and the government of Canada in contributing to a national shrine to a very great man, a very great friend of Canada and a great leader at a most difficult period in the world's history. I associate myself with everything that has been said by the Minister of Fisheries and the hon. member for York-Sunbury.

We may well express our approval of this measure, because this is one of the few times that the governments of Canada and the United States have jointly purchased property, this time for the express purpose of doing honour to the man whose home was on this island. This park, I am sure, will be a great source of satisfaction to the citizens of both our countries.

I have some personal knowledge of the events leading up to the signing of the agreement. A few years ago the governor of Maine came to Saint John, New Brunswick, to address a meeting, and he and I found ourselves in complete agreement that something should be done in connection with this property. Now, under this agreement, we will have a park established in honour of a very great man, a friend of Campobello island, of New Brunswick, of Canada and of the free world. I am sure the bill will receive the warm approval of every member of the house.

This little island is located in Passamaquoddy bay. It lies south in the province of New Brunswick and at one point is very close to the state of Maine. In fact it is so close that, as was mentioned by the hon. member for York-Sunbury, not too long ago a bridge was constructed with the co-operation of the governments of New Brunswick and Canada and the governments of the state of Maine and the United States of America. This really brings about the possibility of access by tourists to the home of this great man.

Those who have seen the play "Sunrise at Campobello" in one of the New York theatres will remember that the incident when the late president was stricken with poliomyelitis was vividly portrayed; but in spite of never again walking unaided the late president, as we all know, was elected four times to the office of president of the United States. He guided his country through the great depression, and he skilfully and resolutely assisted as much as possible and as quickly and as effectively as possible the struggle of the free world prior to Pearl Harbor and subsequently.

As has been said, the government of New Brunswick is co-operating fully, and I am certain that all Canadians will be pleased, particularly the residents of New Brunswick as well as the people of the state of Maine. The agreement contained in the bill provides that the commission accepts title to the property comprising the Roosevelt home and grounds. The commission is to take the necessary measures to restore the home as nearly as possible to its condition when occupied by President Roosevelt. The commission is to administer as a memorial the Roosevelt Campobello international park. As the minister very properly pointed out, of the six members who will comprise the commission one of the Canadian members will be nominated by the government of New Brunswick and one of the United States members by the government of the state of Maine, which seems to me a most excellent idea.

It is very pleasing to me to see that steps are being taken to maintain the summer home of a great president, that steps are being taken to provide that the administrative body shall be composed of representatives from each country, that steps are being taken to do honour to the great president who spent much of his young life and a portion of his mature life in this home, and that steps are being taken so that the public shall have the opportunity of visiting this international shrine. It is most pleasing to know that immediate action is being taken to carry out something that I feel will be in accordance with the desires of all citizens of the United States and Canada. Therefore I have a great degree of pleasure in indicating that I support wholeheartedly the substance of the bill, and I congratulate the minister on presenting it to the house.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, we share the general regard for the memory of the late President Roosevelt. One of the paradoxes of his career so far as Canada is concerned is that his popularity in Canada always tended to run ahead of his popularity in the United States. Around 1936, when his career was at its height in political terms, I made my summer living United States tourists, most of them prosperous industrialists or farmers from the corn belt in the middle of the United States. Needless to say they were almost all Republicans, and the comments they used to make about President Roosevelt actually shocked me. I almost thought it was treason that Americans, even Republicans, could think so little of a president.

This came to my mind not long ago during Easter week end when I was in Washington and happened to comment to an old Washingtonian about the fact that there were mobs at the Kennedy grave at Arlington, obviously a shrine, and mobs milling around the Washington monument, the Jefferson memorial and the Lincoln memorial. I said "It is hard to understand why Washington has not created or erected anything in memory of Franklin Roosevelt". I got an answer that might indicate that men who are dead sometimes have to wait for a rewriting of history. This man's answer was "Roosevelt made a lot of mistakes. After all, consider the way he behaved at Yalta. He sold us out to Joe". Then he went on to indicate that the United States has the problem of creeping socialism, and that in some ways the late President Roosevelt was responsible for this.

I mention these points because it is so often the case that a great American is looked upon as a greater hero by people outside his country. I think this is especially true of President Roosevelt so far as Canada and Great Britain are concerned. I would hope that the very initiative and part that Canada is playing in this matter will be the beginning of what might be termed a popular return to the real level that we think President Roosevelt should be on in terms of his popularity and his reputation as, in my mind, the greatest of all United States presidents. I know that my colleagues share this very high estimate of the late president.

We think this is an excellent piece of legislation. We do not think Canadians can pay enough tribute to what the late president meant not only to the United States and the world but to his Canadian neighbours.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 8 inclusive agreed to.

On the schedule—

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I want to ask the minister about the schedule. It is my understanding that in this regard the two jurisdictions are breaking new ground, and that for the first time title to property will be held by a commission. In other words the old bugaboo of sovereignty goes by the board, and a part of Canada is being vested in a creature of the parliament of Canada and of the house of representatives of the United States. Is this the way in which the property is to be held?

Mr. Robichaud: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I understand that this is the decision that was taken. The property will be held jointly by the governments of Canada and the United States and, as specified in the bill, it will be administered by a commission with the appointees named by the two governments.

Mr. Fairweather: Is this the first time that property has been held in this manner?

Mr. Robichaud: I do not know of any other instances.

Schedule agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the third time?

[Mr. Fisher.]

Mr. Knowles: Now, by leave.

Mr. Robichaud (for Mr. Pearson) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Friday, June 12, consideration of the following resolution—Mr. McIlraith—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $469,308,421.26, being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of all of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $329,299,209.25;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amount of agriculture item 5, privy council item 25 (schedule A) of the said main estimates, $2,259,116.67;

(c) four twelfths of the total of all of the items in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $134,897,245.34;

(d) an additional seven twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L37a (schedule B) of the supplementary estimates (A), $2,625,000.00;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L12a (schedule C) of the supplementary estimates (A), $227,850, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Chairman, I know that hon. members wish to take advantage of this motion to discuss immigration matters, during this debate and I wonder if I could make a statement on that subject. I might say right now that my speech will be quite long. However, I am sure that it will enable the committee to understand my point of view on several important aspects of immigration and to clarify misunderstandings, even if certain points should normally be discussed during consideration of my department's estimates.

It goes without saying that I will welcome any question which may be asked here concerning my statement or any other point.

I believe that this budget motion will give me a wonderful opportunity to explain my vews with regard to that important sector of my responsibilities as a minister.

Mr. Chairman, the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has been lately the subject of sharp criticisms from some members of the House of Commons and other people, with regard to its procedure concerning one aspect of immigration, deportation. As those critics are almost confined entirely to that particular aspect of immigration, they will probably give a wrong impression of the situation.

In order to put the whole question in its true light, to begin with I should like to set out the responsibilities and activities of immigration as a whole, and then to consider the very important matter of deportation, as well as the particular charges levelled against my department in that respect.

The Department of Citizenship and Immigration is entrusted, pursuant to an act of parliament, with two main responsibilities. It rests with it to apply a well-defined immigration policy and for that purpose it must activate the migratory movement, look after the applications for entry, the selection and consideration of a continuous flow of immigrants without sponsors; it must also help them on their arrival, find them a job when necessary, in addition to studying the cases of the large number of immigrants sponsored by relatives.

Immigrants arrive in Canada at an average of 2,000 to 3,000 per week. The second main task of the department is to make easier the controlled movements of non-immigrants in Canada. The latter include tourists, travellers, businessmen, etc. There are over 600,000 such movements per week and this task falls on the department. In view of the large number of people who come to Canada, we really get few complaints about the department's work.

Let us look now at the matter of deportations. They are relatively few. In 1963, for instance, an average of 30 deportation orders a week were issued; in 1964, when the number of immigrants increased considerably, in general the number of deportation orders per week remained practically at the 1963 level. There were a little fewer than 500 deportations between January 1 and April 30. Present criticism against the deportment's procedures is directed at about 20 of those cases. Far be it from me, while comparing that number to the total number of immigrants, to try to underestimate the importance of each person involved. After all, every person is important, and we must see that everyone is treated fairly and equitably. In many cases, an appeal is made to me as minister. I must personally settle some of those cases, and I can assure members of the house that I spend many hours looking into those matters concerning the welfare of the persons concerned. It is a heavy responsibility which is of constant concern to me.

Let us now examine the allegations made concerning—

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to interrupt the minister, but how many deportations did the minister say there were in 1963?

Mr. Tremblay: There were 30 each week; that is an average.

[Translation]

Let us now examine the allegations which were made concerning the way the department dealt with some deportation cases.

It is alleged, first, that certain departmental officials have refused to carry out the necessary practices provided by our Canadian legislation, by neglecting to summon before the court, at regular intervals, persons detained for deportation.

Second, that department officials have deprived individuals of a natural right, by refusing or neglecting to let them know that they were entitled to the assistance of counsel and by not allowing them to secure such assistance.

Third, that individuals are kept in detention for an unreasonable length of time, because of the indifference or unkindness of officials who, as has been implied, act in a bureaucratic manner toward such questions.

Mr. Chairman, we should put the question in its proper light, and that is what I intend to do right now.

Immigration to Canada is a concession and not a right. To be a Canadian, or to become one, is a great privilege which should always be considered as such. That fact is reflected in the immigration legislation and regulations. Canada has the sovereign right to determine who shall be authorized to enter our country and become a permanent resident and to prescribe the terms and conditions to be met in order to gain admission.

If we do not want chaos to prevail in matters of immigration, Canada must apply the control measures required to deport persons who, somehow, entered our country illegally. Here, Canada, is no exception. All countries consider it essential to control immigration, and I think it is easy to understand why.

Parliament has passed legislation to protect the Canadian people in regard to such matters, and it is the responsibility of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration to apply those measures.

I prefer to be criticized for complying with the rules of parliament rather than to be accused of neglecting my duty.

I shall not go into the details here, in respect of the statutory cases resulting in deportation, such as criminal activity, illegal entry, etc. However, I should like to explain the methods normally followed in procedures for deportation. There are several stages. Let us consider, for instance, what happens in the case of persons who elude the law and procedure required for those who enter the country surreptitiously—like ship deserters—or in any other illegal way.

When they are arrested, those individuals are no doubt subject to deportation after the necessary legal action.

The question of illegal entry should not be taken lightly, Mr. Chairman. It represents a serious problem and I have no doubt whatsoever that, at least in some areas, there are organized rackets in this field. That method of entry also allows for the infiltration of members of subversive and criminal organizations. My department and other agencies concerned spend substantial amounts of money and make every effort to maintain the problem within reasonable limits.

First, for instance, when a ship deserter is arrested after evading the law and illegally establishing his residence in Canada, he is normally put in detention—

[Text]

Mr. Peters: A new immigration smear.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the minister permit a question? He has made a serious allegation that it is possible that subversive organizations are involved in bringing people here illegally. The minister has a prepared statement and if we are to try to discuss this question which has been before parliament for a month or more we ought to have more than these veiled suggestions which really do not give us anything to work on; we ought to have some evidence of these supposed subversive organizations about which the minister has just talked.

Mr. Tremblay: I will finish my speech and after that I will be happy to answer questions by hon. members.

[Translation]

First, when a deserter from a ship is arrested after having evaded the law and illegally established his residence in Canada, he is normally detained, for obvious reasons.

Second, an inquiry is held with the shortest possible delay, as provided by law. May I recall that, on June 3 last, I announced having introduced a new procedure to ensure the elimination of any unjustified delay in the case of persons detained under the Immigration Act. I mentioned more particularly that each case will be reviewed every day, here in Ottawa.

Third, in each inquiry, the individual is asked whether he fully understood the object of the procedure, and whenever there are any language difficulties, he can avail himself of the free services of a competent interpreter. I know that unfavourable comments have been made about those interpreters. The hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) drew my attention to certain allegations in this respect.

I immediately ordered an inquiry. The interpreters were questioned and I can categorically state that, in those cases, the charges proved utterly untrue.

Fourth, in every inquiry the person concerned is informed in the clearest possible terms, of his right to a counsel's help. The government does not assume the lawyer's fees for the person involved. If that individual asks for counsel, which is frequently the case, the proceedings of the inquiry are suspended to give him time to retain a lawyer. That appears in the minutes of each case.

Various cases have recently been drawn to the attention of the house by hon. members who alleged that individuals were deprived of certain rights respecting their own defence. Investigations were carried out in certain cases and it has been established that those allegations were unfounded. Those individuals were told that it was not required for counsel to be a member of the bar—

[Text]

Mr. Orlikow: May I ask the minister a question?

The Chairman: The minister apparently wishes to complete his statement. He said a moment ago that he will answer questions when he is through. I suggest to the hon. member that if that is the position the minister is taking he should be allowed to complete his statement.

Mr. Orlikow: The minister can do it however he wants to do it, of course. I wish to say, however, that he has already made about five statements with which the information that some of us have is in complete conflict. If the hon. gentleman wants to be on his feet four, five or ten times in the next few days it certainly will not bother me. If he would prefer us to ask questions now, I think that would save time, but the minister can take his choice. I just want him to know we intend to discuss this matter in some detail.

The Chairman: The minister wishes to complete his statement and I think he should be allowed to do so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the minister should be allowed to read his statement without interruption.

Mr. Peters: I do, too.

Mr. Tremblay: I think it would be useful for me to do that because our discussion would then be in the right perspective when we come to it.

[Translation]

Then, in each case this is shown in the report. Recently the attention of the house has been drawn to various cases by some hon. members. They claimed that individuals had been deprived of certain rights concerning their own defence. Inquiries have been made in certain cases and it has been found that such allegations were unfounded. These individuals are told that it is not necessary for counsel be a member of the bar; he may be a minister, a priest, a friend or a relative.

Hon. members raised the question as to whether the government should provide, free of charge, legal services for the individuals concerned. I am keenly interested in this matter, which greatly exceeds the jurisdiction of my department, and I would like to study it more extensively.

Five, at the end of the inquiry, if deportation has been ordered, the individual in question is informed of his right of appeal to the immigration appeal board. He is also informed that he or his counsel may prepare written representations to be made to the appeal board, or that he may appear in person or be represented by his lawyer before the appeal board here.

Six, if he chooses to appeal, copy of the verbatim report of the special inquiry is forwarded to the immigration appeal board as soon as possible.

Seven, upon receipt of the verbatim report of the special inquiry, the appeal board sets a subsequent date for the hearing. The date will depend, of course, to some extent, on the number of appeals to be considered by the board.

However, in every case it is usual for the board to select a date at least ten days following reception of the notice, so that the appellant or his counsel can prepare the arguments or take steps to be represented at the hearings if he wants to.

Eight, the appeal board, after reaching a decision, advises the appellant and the immigration branch.

Nine, if the appeal is rejected, the immigration branch must take steps with a view to the deportation of the individual in question, unless there are strong humanitarian reasons to defer those steps. Such administrative action, in many cases, is not as simple as one might think.

The individual in question might very well have lived in Canada under a borrowed identity. He may no longer have any identification as to the place of his birth or his citizenship. Representatives of foreign governments in Canada will not grant travelling warrants or landing guarantees for the deported individual, unless his citizenship is certain, which often requires confirmation from the authorities of the country of origin.

The transportation company that is to take the deported person to the country of destination must confirm the identity of the person and the liability of the company in that matter, before accepting to supply transportation.

Then, final transportation arrangements must be made and they depend on prospects and arrangements over which the department has no control.

[Text]

It will be obvious to all that the various steps outlined above even when carried out with all possible dispatch will still require a considerable period of time to complete. I have already assured the house and I assure it again that I have taken steps to make certain that there is no undue delay in handling these matters.

At the same time I would not like this house to overlook one other frequent cause of delay in deportation cases. In order to give the person detained the benefit of extended consideration of any matter which may be in doubt, such delay is often of considerable duration, but I make no apology for it. Under the Immigration Act the minister has the authority to re-open inquiry proceedings if there is any substantial basis for belief that new evidence may be introduced which would have a bearing on the decision originally reached. Frequently, even when transportation arrangements have been completed, I or my senior officers are informed that additional representations are about to be received from responsible agencies or individuals, including members of this house.

On the eve of deportation or even within hours of scheduled departure I have instructed the department to postpone deportation to allow consideration of the new material. If there is evidence in favour of the individual which might have a bearing on the decision reached at the inquiry, I will order the inquiry re-opened. On the other hand, if there is another element, for instance a strong humanitarian factor not previously exposed, I am always glad to review the whole case personally to determine if there are grounds to suspend deportation. Again I say that I make no apology for delaying removal in these circumstances brought about by the individual or someone acting on his behalf. As long as I am minister I shall ensure that I and the officials of the department do not act in a bureaucratic and arbitrary manner to remove anyone with undue haste, if there are valid reasons for reviewing the original decisions.

I have dealt, thus far, with those policies, practices and procedures involved in the process of apprehension, inquiries, appeals and deportation which require time to complete and which come under the jurisdiction of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration for administration. I should now like to mention another factor, outside the scope of this department, which has a bearing on the lapse of time between the start of deportation proceedings and their ultimate completion. It must not be overlooked that in gaining entry by stealth and remaining in Canada without authority, a person has committed an offence. The individual thereby makes himself subject to prosecution in the courts of this land established under provincial jurisdiction. While the immigration process is under way the authorities responsible for deciding whether prosecution will take place carry out their own investigation. Where a charge is laid, the matter then becomes one for disposition by the courts.

The scheduling of appearances in court or the handling of these matters before the court are not matters which come within the purview of this department and I do not feel it proper for me to comment on them. This is very important to understand: as soon as a decision is taken to press charges before a tribunal of provincial jurisdiction, I cannot, as Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, intervene in any way whatsoever.

[Mr. Tremblay.]

I would, however, like to say a word about detention under the Immigration Act, both as to the need for it and the procedures which apply to it so far as the courts are concerned. It is far from an over-all practice to detain all persons who may become subject to deportation proceedings under the Immigration Act. Many individuals are released on a cash or other form of bond, or in some instances on their own recognizance where the special inquiry officer is satisfied that they will respect the conditions of their release and report as required under the law. This is a matter for the considered judgment of the special inquiry officers, whose responsibility it is to ensure that the proceedings can be carried on to completion. Persons are not kept in immigration custody unless there are good and valid reasons for believing that they may abscond if released or that they present a threat to safety or to the security of Canada. As to immigration officials not bringing persons detained under the Immigration Act before the courts for review at regular intervals, the legality of the detention is always subject to verification by the courts, on habeas corpus. As hon. members are aware, this frequently happens.

The minister and the department are responsible for the administration of the Immigration Act. In these difficult cases which are currently before us, every effort is made to deal with them in a decent and humane way. I have been studying the system and considering it, however, during my few months in office and I would not claim that everything is perfect as it now exists. In my own view, for example, it is both desirable and urgent that consideration be given to making the decisions of the immigration appeal board final and not subject to ministerial discretion as at present.

Mr. Chairman, I would now like to comment on some of the regrettable allegations imputing misbehaviour on the part of immigration officials concerned with deportation proceedings. It has been suggested, for example, that officers have, by threats or promises, endeavoured to persuade individuals to furnish information on other illegal entrants or to coerce persons into admitting they are guilty of an offence under the Immigration Act. I have checked these allegations and have found no evidence to support them.

Before concluding, I would like to take this opportunity also to indicate the character of the planning going on at present in the immigration branch, better to enable them to carry out the mandates of parliament. The government's program in immigration is a positive one—a greater volume of immigrants than in the past few years, and with higher selection standards. That requires a greatly increased effort to make the attractions of Canada and the opportunities here for immigrants better known. The immigration branch has in it many devoted, hard-working and capable persons, but the branch has been badly in need of planning and rearrangement that will better equip it to meet the tasks of 1964 and the years ahead. This is imperative even to keep up with present demands, let alone to meet any expanded program.

Such planning has been under way for several months. It involves a functional approach to the administration of immigration, not only at the headquarters in Ottawa but elsewhere in Canada and overseas. The divisions of the branch will correspond to the stages in the flow of immigration itself, beginning with policy and planning, moving on to a selection of immigrants, then to their reception and settlement in Canada, and finally to those exceptional but difficult problems involving enforcement of our immigration legislation here and including such elements as deportation and, on occasion, prosecution. With the branch reshaped in order to reflect each phase as it occurs, staff can be used to much greater advantage and many of the present difficulties eliminated.

Provisions will be made, among other things, for an active promotional program overseas to attract good immigrants and for more effective public information programs in Canada to explain immigration and to develop broad public support for the government's objectives in this field. The re-organization planned will involve a limited number of added positions and a reclassification of positions in order to attract and to retain people who can give service of the standards required. Additionally, the physical facilities for immigration in Canada, and especially overseas, badly need improvement since the offices where potential immigrants are dealt with are too frequently dull and unattractive. It is necessary that we make an effort to improve these conditions if our immigration program is to be really positive and productive.

Every procedure in attracting immigrants, in their processing, their selection, transport, reception in Canada, their placement, their settlement and whatever follow-up is necessary, will, it is planned, be sharpened and brightened in such a way as to ensure a favourable outcome to the government's effort to expand immigration, both in volume and in quality.

In connection with the questions put to me, either in the house or from sources outside, regarding a number of persons subject to deportation orders and in some cases held in detention because of criminal charges in connection with offences under the Immigration Act, I wish to announce that I am tabling individual reports giving all the pertinent facts about each such case.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, may I table those two documents, one in English and one in French, which represent the list of the cases which have been discussed here during the last few days?

[Text]

Mr. Peters: Now give us the report from the one-man commission.

The Chairman: May I ask the minister, what is the purpose of tabling these documents? Is he just tabling the documents so that they are available to hon. members who might want to consult them?

Mr. Diefenbaker: What do these documents contain? They must contain more than names.

Mr. Tremblay: All the facts in each case. They are a review of all the facts concerning each case which has been brought forward either inside or outside the house. It is to enable hon. members to have all the facts.

Mr. Peters: Read them.

The Chairman: If the hon. minister wants to table them so that they will become a sessional paper, this would have to be done with the Speaker in the chair. Is it agreed we do that?

Mr. Peters: We do not want them at all.

Mr. Orlikow: There may be some question about this. When will hon. members be able to get them and when will we have the chance to study these matters? Surely these documents should have been tabled days ago, if we are to discuss them sensibly now.

The Chairman: The only thing we can do now is to table them, I suggest at five o'clock, when the Speaker is in the chair. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: I would bring to the attention of the minister that his time has expired.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Let him go on.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Mr. Peters: No.

The Chairman: The minister does not have the unanimous consent of the committee to continue his statement.

Mr. Tremblay: I do have an announcement to make which is in answer to the hon. member for Skeena.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister gets to that question, one would like to see these documents which have been tabled to ascertain whether or not they should be tabled, or whether they are simply an exculpatory explanation of a case which has been before the house.

Mr. Tremblay: It is not an explanation. They just give the facts and the dates.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I see. With regard to the other question, I am sure that all of us in the committee are most anxious to have the minister give a full explanation, because the longer the explanation, I hope the more the committee will know.

The Chairman: That may be the position adopted by the Leader of the Opposition, but there are other hon. members sitting at the end of the chamber who are not agreed. I ask again whether hon. members give unanimous consent to allow the minister to complete his statement.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Chairman: Then it is agreed.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I thank my hon. friends. That is the end of my statement, but I now want to say that following a decision by the government the Minister of Justice and myself have secured counsel in the person of Joseph Sedgwick, Q.C., of Toronto, and my colleague has written the following letter to Mr. Sedgwick:

> This will confirm your appointment as counsel to inquire into the following matters and report to the undersigned and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.
> As you are aware, serious allegations have been made in the House of Commons and elsewhere in recent days that certain aliens have been unlawfully detained and deprived of access to counsel. In this regard I am enclosing the relevant copies of Hansard for the period May 25 to June 18. Other material respecting these allegations will be forwarded to you within a day or two.

[The Chairman.]

> The terms of reference are to carefully inquire into these allegations or any other allegation relevant thereto and to let us have a full report concerning the truthfulness of same.
> Apart from the specific charges referred to we should also like you to inquire into the general procedure now being followed in relation to the arrest, deportation and prosecution of persons who enter Canada or remain therein illegally. Your assessment of the reasonableness and correctness of these procedures should be included in the report, together with any recommendations which, in your view, should be adopted in this regard.
> You will appreciate that we would like to have your report at the earliest date possible consistent with the thoroughness with which we have requested that you inquire into this matter.

With your permission, Mr. Chairman, I now ask to table a copy of this letter with a translation in French.

The Chairman: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Might I ask the minister this. Was this appointment made by order in council? If so, on what date?

Mr. Tremblay: No, it was a decision of the Department of Justice following upon a decision of the cabinet. It was a decision of the Department of Justice, acting on a resolution of the cabinet.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Do I understand the minister to say that the cabinet discussed this matter and then, without there being a formal order in council, the appointment was made by the Department of Justice?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, if I may just explain this, cabinet dealt with the matter last Thursday, I think it was, and recommended that both the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the Minister of Justice retain counsel to proceed with whatever informal inquiry was required. Informal terms of reference were to be sent to counsel. This is not an inquiry under the Inquiries Act, at least for the moment. This is the retention of counsel both by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the Minister of Justice for the purpose of inquiring into each of the matters which was dealt with or referred to in questions put in the house, with the instruction that counsel report to the two ministers, and also that he give advice on the procedure being followed, with whatever comments or recommendations counsel chooses to make. This may lead the way to a rather more formal inquiry, but it will allow us at least to obtain a ready and rapid answer to the questions which have been put in the house. It will also allow us, instead of having the matter investigated and reported upon by the civil service within the department, to have the independent opinion of counsel experienced in these matters.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does that mean that the independent viewpoint will cover the whole field of the department of immigration in connection with the procedures now followed, and that Mr. Sedgwick, Q.C., will be asked to make recommendations as to what changes, if any, should be made in the department of immigration to meet extraordinary situations or injustices which have been found to exist?

Mr. Favreau: I think the penultimate paragraph of my letter will cover that situation and answer the question of the right hon. gentleman in the affirmative. If I may be allowed to quote it, it says:

Apart from the specific charges—

That is, the charges relating to the specific cases mentioned in the house in the course of the question period and at other times—

—referred to we should also like you to inquire into the general procedure now being followed in relation to the arrest, deportation and prosecution of persons who enter Canada or remain therein illegally. Your assessment of the reasonableness and correctness of these procedures should be included in the report together with any recommendations which, in your view, should be adopted in this regard.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How are people going to have an opportunity to present their cases before Mr. Sedgwick? Is there going to be public notice given to anyone who desires to make suggestions or recommendations, and to point out cases that were not dealt with here—not charges as suggested in that letter, but allegations upon which questions were based? Is there going to be an opportunity for anyone to make representations to Mr. Sedgwick?

Mr. Favreau: As I just said, Mr. Chairman, this is not a formal inquiry under the Inquiries Act. Our first intention is to have Mr. Sedgwick inquire into the specific matters raised here and to place before him the types of procedure which have been followed until now in relation to arrests, detention and deportation. It has not been our intention, as in the case of royal commissions, that a formal notice be given, but I think the right hon. gentleman may be assured—and both ministers will make it very clear to Mr. Sedgwick in further discussions with him—that he is not to refuse access to him of any person who, knowing about and being concerned, like quite a few of the hon. gentlemen here, is interested in making representations to him. He should accept these recommendations as fully and as readily as possible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I think the word "charge" is improperly used in the minister's letter. There were questions asked in the house based upon information available, and that is far removed from the word "charge" as used in the minister's letter. Being very frank about what has been done, I would ask the minister whether it is his intention to make the various reports made by Mr. Sedgwick available to the house? In other words, are they going to be tabled, or are we going to be told later on that these are matters purely for the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, and that we are not going to be able to see these reports?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I want to reaffirm what I said last week, that this report will be tabled, will be available to all hon. members.

Mr. Brewin: Will the proceedings and matters that are brought to the attention of the commissioner be a matter of record so that those of us who are interested can see the facts and the representations made? I must confess that this sort of commissioner or counsel advising the minister falls far short of what I understand by a public inquiry. I am wondering whether the hearings will be public hearings so that the public can be satisfied that these matters are being adequately dealt with by the commissioner. Is there to be a formal record? Will members of parliament have a chance to hear what representations are made, and to hear the facts revealed to the commissioner as counsel for the minister?

Mr. Favreau: I want to make the position very clear and to repeat that this is not an inquiry under the Inquiries Act. Mr. Sedgwick has been appointed as counsel to advise the minister as to findings which he will make in relation to the allegations which are incorporated in the questions concerning the cases referred to here. I may add that we have gone further than that and we are asking him, again as counsel and as adviser to the minister—not as an inquiring officer reporting on a public inquiry—to assess the types of procedure that have been followed in the departments of immigration and justice with respect to the arrest, detention and deportation—and conviction, if you want—of immigrants, in relation both to illegal entry and staying illegally in Canada, and in relation to other aspects of the application of the Immigration Act.

But in view of the fact that he is being appointed or retained as counsel and adviser to the minister—and he has a wide experience, as my hon. friend will know, in the field of criminal and penal law, and also has experience in the field of immigration—his report will be a report to the minister, in the same way as counsel whom we appoint, for instance, to advise us independently as to whether or not a prosecution ought to be launched, does not submit a public report. However, so as to make sure that the house will not be deprived of the knowledge of the advice which will be given to the ministers in this report, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and I agree that the report will be tabled. But I wish to repeat that although this is not a public inquiry, not only do I not see any objection but it is my firm belief that the counsel should receive and consider any representations coming from outside sources and from persons who are interested in the matters with which he is concerned.

Further, I do not see that this will be the final means at the disposal of the ministers concerned to make themselves completely conversant with details relating to these matters, but I believe very sincerely that this, being given to an independent counsel, will entail a greater measure of assurance on the part of the public, to the effect that it will be done in a very objective and impartial fashion. This is why we have chosen that method rather than a commission of one or two, or more, civil servants conversant with the cases, to make a report to advise the ministers as to what in fact has taken place.

Mr. Brewin: I recognize the high standard, calibre and experience of Mr. Sedgwick, but I wish to comment at some later time that I do not think this is the best form of procedure in the circumstances. But to be perfectly clear on the question, I would like an assurance that the advice Mr. Sedgwick is being asked to give is not confined to questions of arrest and formal orders of deportation, but also covers the procedure of special inquiry officers in respect to people seeking admission to Canada.

Mr. Favreau: This is very definitely included, because it refers to the whole procedure relating to the arrest and deportation, so that between arrest and deportation there is the whole range of the procedure before the inquiry officer. I may assure the hon. member for Greenwood that this is our clear intention.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, I want to clear up one thing with the minister. When the Minister of Justice uses the word "charge" in his letter it conveys only one connotation to lawyers, and I want it made perfectly clear that that word is not accepted as a description of what took place here in the house.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, I do agree with the right hon. gentleman that the word "charge" must be used and interpreted in its lightest possible sense.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, it is an interesting afternoon because first of all we have had an apology by the minister for certain procedures, and at the end of the apology we have had an announcement of an inquiry by eminent counsel into the very procedures concerning which we have just had an apology. I feel it is too bad that the inquiry is to be restricted. I have followed with great interest the various questions and the explanations made by both ministers with regard to what the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration referred to last Thursday, June 18, as the investigating commissioner.

Mr. Tremblay: On a point of order, the word "commissioner" has been used in the English translation but the word I used in French was "officier" and that has been translated as "commissioner". I have never used the word "commissioner". I have used the word "officier".

Mr. Fairweather: I thank the minister for his explanation. I had wondered about that. Nevertheless it points up the fact that Mr. Joseph Sedgwick, Q.C., whatever his title may be in the French or English versions of Hansard, will have to have the widest possible scope in his investigation. I am also glad to know that a committee of parliament will have his full report before them in order that they may study it. Then we will get down to the semantics of the word "charge" and so on as used by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. Tremblay: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I said in the house that the report will be referred to the house. I think it was the hon. member for Royal who asked me to which committee the report would be referred. I said I would be very glad to table the report in the house, but that it would be up to the house to decide which committee, if any, would study the report. The undertaking we made was to submit the report to the house.

Mr. Brewin: I wonder whether I could ask the minister a further question arising out of that. Does the minister not think that there is some obligation on him either to find out what committee will look into this or to recommend a special committee being appointed? In my view the fact that a committee of the house is taking hold of the whole matter is far more important than the appointment of any number of eminent counsel from outside.

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, I hope my time is not running while the ministers are consulting each other.

The Chairman: I wonder whether we are still on the point of order raised by the minister?

Mr. Fairweather: Mr. Chairman, if Mr. Sedgwick's report is not to be referred to a committee of the house, then this is a lot of nonsense. We are wasting our time and we might as well go on to something else. It would be a grave breach of faith on the part of the minister if he were to drop the report on the table of the house and then allow it to lie there in limbo. I want to know what committee of the house the report will be referred to, and I asked this question last Thursday. It would be a shocking thing to have Mr. Sedgwick do this work and then have the report lie on the table. Is the minister going to answer me?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, in answer to the hon. member for Greenwood—

Mr. Fairweather: I want an answer.

Mr. Tremblay: —I will try to see which committee will be best suited to receive a report of this kind. On the other hand, as I said, it will be up to the house to decide which committee and at what time this report will be studied in a committee. It is not the business of the minister to decide or to announce to the house what committee will study this report.

Mr. Fairweather: Now we have a qualification. The minister now says that it is up to the house to decide which committee. Therefore I assume that there will be a committee and that the report will not just lie on the table of the house. If I may make a gentle suggestion to the minister, the very reason he stands here today making an apology is that he has been less than candid in his answers to the questions that have been quite properly asked by members over the last few weeks. The minister is taking refuge behind the law. The Hooper case is not within the law. There is no statute that says a man should be in jail for 90 days under these circumstances. The Vergakis case is not within the ambit of the statute.

I appreciate that it must be agonizing for the minister to reflect on some of these human problems. He says that he spent long hours reflecting. I assume Mr. Hooper had lots of time to spend long hours reflecting while the minister was reflecting. We were told that this whole thing blew up because of an administrative breakdown between Toronto and Ottawa. There are members here who seem to be able to travel between Ottawa and Toronto in a very short time any day. The problem is that the officers on the spot are not making decisions and the whole mass of detail has to be referred to the monolith here in Ottawa.

Last week the Ontario minister of reform institution set out a formula—I think this is a very forward step—that he directed to all governors of jails and other institutions within his constitutional jurisdiction. The purpose of the formula is to acquaint people with their rights. The minister, Mr. Grossman, said that because of the constitution he could not interfere with the candidates for jail of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration but at least he could let the department know regularly how long these people had been in these institutions. I hope that the Ontario formula will be followed right across the country so that the ministry of justice and the ministry of immigration in Ottawa will be able to take action when they receive information as to long and inordinate delays.

We were told not too long ago that we would be considering policies to excite the daring. Yet this afternoon we had a long explanation involving a backward step, so far as any such policy is concerned. In my opinion undue detention in jail is an intolerable thing and I say that the minister should be candid enough to admit the error and tell us what procedures he is going to take so that this kind of thing will not happen again.

Before interim supply is granted and we return to the consideration of what I like to term the artificially manufactured issue of the flag I should like to say one or two specific things about some departments of government and the policies they are pursuing. If it is the habit to speak in context or within certain guidelines, I want to do so in the context of the remarkable document published in Forum and also conjointly in Cité Libre in May of this year by a new group of seven. Like the group of seven who gave a distinctly Canadian aspect to painting half a century ago, I submit that if we follow some of the policies of today's group of seven we can give a Canadian concept to some of the issues facing us.

It still continues to amaze me that parliament, after it regurgitates the platitudes of debates on the speech from the throne and the cliches of budget debates, hardly ever gets the opportunity to debate on-going policy at all. I should like to refer to a remarkable talk at the Canadian conference on the family a couple of weeks ago by Dean Kaspar Naegle. He is a rather remarkable example that all immigrants are not bad, because this dean of arts of the University of British Columbia spent some time in a prison camp in Canada courtesy of the government during the last war. He reminded those of us who had the privilege of attending the conference of the stricture of T. S. Eliot, "Go, go, go, said the bird: human kind cannot bear very much reality."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am afraid Canadians cannot bear very much reality, either. All of us here must take some responsibility for the truth of the Eliot adage.

In the manifesto which is entitled, "An Appeal to Realism in Politics", the authors condemn the indifference of the public and private sectors of our society in the face of many problems. The authors say:

> We declare our disagreement with most of the panaceas at present in vogue among our politicians.
> Canada, today, is a country in search of a purpose. Emphasis on regional interests and the absence of leadership from the central government risk the utter disintegration of the federal state.
> In the present context of Canadian politics, it is necessary above all else to reaffirm the importance of the individual—

This is a nice, old fashioned Tory adage.

> —without regard to ethnic, geographic or religious accidents. The cornerstone of the social and political order must be the attributes men hold in common, not those that differentiate them. An order of priorities in political and social matters that is founded upon the individual as an individual, is totally incompatible with an order of priorities based upon race, religion or nationality.

I think we should all read this manifesto and take a good deal of it to our hearts. In this context I wish to make an appeal to the minister of citizenship and, I say this modestly, I hope it may help him in some of the unpleasant aspects of his department's policy. I do not hold any brief for Mr. Hooper who recently spent 90 days in the Toronto jail because of what I suggest is an exasperatingly typical phenomenon—a breakdown in administrative communications. This case need never have reached the stage it did if two basic policies had been followed: One, the local officials in the department should have been able to make decisions, rather than refer every detail to Ottawa; two, counsel should be provided for everyone charged with a breach of the Immigration Act. This latter policy, in my opinion, should be followed in all cases coming under the Criminal Code or federal statutes. This would assure equal justice before the law.

Just the other night I had occasion to speak with a counsel in this city who gave up two weeks of his time to defend a person accused of a very ugly murder. This counsel did this because he had been asked to do so. I believe that in these capital cases the state should look after the counsel fee. This is now the case in the United States. We seem to like copying everything else they do, so it is time we copied this formula.

At the moment the minister is considering what action can be taken against the Greek citizens who admittedly have come to Canada illegally. In some instances they have lived here four or five years, have married and have jobs. If their only offence is illegal entry I submit that in the name of humanity, if for no other reason, the minister should exercise his discretion and permit these people to stay in Canada. I like the type of man who will try to get into this country illegally. I think he has a great future here. It shows a great amount of zeal and daring, qualities which the Liberal government professed to have a year ago but which seem to have been forgotten.

On May 1, 1947, prime minister Mackenzie King said in a debate in the House of Commons that it is not a fundamental human right of any alien to enter Canada, it is a privilege. As a matter of fact, the minister echoed those words today. This classic policy statement was made 17 years ago. I, of course, had not spoken when the minister did, but I think this statement could stand re-examination. By this I mean no criticism of evolving and widening immigration into Canada. I realize that a great educational process is involved and that attitudes must change. However, I am bold enough to believe that we who live in this opulent land in the western world can no longer smugly say that we have a fundamental, God-given right to this land, irrespective of the needs of our brothers in this world. In my opinion, this is the philosophy of 1964 and not one expounded 17 years ago by Mr. Mackenzie King. The hungry and the wretched in the world are not impressed by Mr. Mackenzie King's narrow strictures. Perhaps while rights are being glibly exhorted in this world, a part of mankind will take up the slogan and adopt it.

Let these people stay in Canada. By their illegal entry, they have already exhibited the qualities of initiative and enterprise which should be useful to all of us. Here I should like to thank the minister for a letter handed to me just before this debate began. For over a year now, the social service council of the Anglican church of Canada has been trying to arrange with the immigration department, as an indication of our concern, the admission of 50 Hong Kong boys to Canada. These boys would be sponsored by and live with Canadian families. They would be given a chance to continue their education, either technical or otherwise. I know the minister views this plan sympathetically, and I am grateful to him for that. He, himself, has been to Hong Kong to check on the administrative procedures there. I earnestly request him to announce soon that his department will agree to this very modest proposal. We had hoped the boys could be in Canada during the early fall of this year so they could continue their education.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to deal for just a minute—I see it is five o'clock. Will I continue with my observations on interim supply?

The Chairman: Order; it being five o'clock, it is my duty to leave the chair in order that the house may go to the business listed on today's order paper as private members' business.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In committee of supply, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mr. Tremblay) referred to certain documents he wished to table. Does he have leave now to table these documents?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

HONG KONG VETERANS—REQUEST FOR SPECIAL MEASURES TO ALLEVIATE DISABILITIES

Mr. D. W. Groos (Victoria, B.C.) moved:

That the standing committee on veterans affairs be empowered to consider the particular circumstances of Hong Kong veterans and to report their opinions and observations as to the special measures that could be undertaken to alleviate the disabilities resulting from the Hong Kong veterans' internment as prisoners of war.

He said: This is not a very complicated measure. I put forward this motion because I am concerned about the lives and the livelihood of upwards of 1,200 Canadian army veterans who served just short of four years as prisoners of war in the Far East.

The men on whose behalf I speak in this house are the Hong Kong veterans and they are the survivors of two Canadian regiments —the Winnipeg Grenadiers and the Royal Rifles of Canada from Quebec city who, together with their brigade headquarters, were sent from Canada to Hong Kong in the closing days of 1941. As we all know, they were subsequently captured and imprisoned and, because this was so, perhaps this is a chapter in Canadian history which some of us would like to put out of our minds. I submit this is something which we cannot do. These men survived almost four years of prison camp life of a type unique in its severity. It was a time of trial for which they were not and could not have been prepared. The figures tell us something of the story. Of a total strength of less than 2,000 men, 228 were killed in the action which preceded the fall of Hong Kong. A further 19 died of wounds resulting from this action and 277 more died in prison camps. In addition, I calculate that another 150, or at least 10 per cent—the figures are not too clear—have since died. I suggest this is a high proportion, considering the age of these men.

I am a veteran and I take the view—I think it is shared by a great many other veterans—that a man has little claim on his country because of what might have happened to him when he was in uniform, but I do earnestly believe that the nation owes at the very least a decent life to veterans who did suffer lasting damage as a result of service in their country's cause. I am sure I can convince members of this house that there is ample evidence to suggest that the Hong Kong veterans, all of whom were prisoners of war, did suffer a great deal during their imprisonment and that they do continue in many ways to feel the effects—the lingering effects—of their imprisonment. Indeed, I believe we owe it to these men to pass the motion now before the house in order that we may establish the facts; in order that we may show these men that we are interested in their difficulties and are prepared to grapple with their problems, and if the existence of those problems is confirmed by the investigation, we must make it clear that we are ready to discharge the nation's responsibility.

The number of prisoners involved in this motion is comparatively small. I am told there are about 1,250 Hong Kong survivors still alive. Most of them are easy to trace, because about 90 per cent of them are in receipt of disability pensions of one kind or another. In spite of their comparatively small numbers there has never been, as far as I can find out, since 1946 a thorough canvass made of these veterans to investigate and analyse their situations, although a sampling was taken in 1950, 14 years ago. I think such an analysis would be revealing. What is disturbing to me is the likelihood that we know little about the after effects and side effects of the type of imprisonment these men endured. For example, there seems to be a disproportionately high number of these men suddenly passing away at an early age without giving any indication that they were ill. The death rate is higher than in the case of a comparable age group. I am advised that one out of every 19 of the Hong Kong veterans who were repatriated is now blind, and that there are many more who have suffered severe eye trouble. It cannot be doubted that this is an unusually high proportion. I think it must follow that the possibility of such things happening has had a disturbing effect on these men. Again, I am told that one out of every five of them is suffering from some degree of hypertension, a dangerous disease of the heart. Although nine out of ten of them are in receipt of disability pensions, as hon. members know, unless a man has been receiving a disability pension to the extent of at least 48 per cent there is no provision for any payment to survivors. I am told that three out of every four of these veterans are in this category, receiving less than 48 per cent disability pensions. So it is no wonder they are worried. I think there are few of us in this house who would not be worried in similar circumstances. And their worry increases each time they hear of another early or unexplained death or disability among their comrades.

If the house, having considered the matter, would agree to pass this motion, I think we shall have taken a step in the direction indicated by the committee on veterans affairs which last year in its report dated December 12, 1963, recommended to the house the following:

In view of the special problems that time and experience have revealed concerning the Hong Kong veterans, this committee urges that a special study and survey be made of their problems and particular disabilities.

[Mr. Groos.]

When this motion is passed I hope the veterans affairs committee will see that such a survey is made. Before entering the house today I was informed that the Canadian pension commission is being authorized to undertake the kind of survey to which I have just referred. I was of course pleased to hear this, since it was in order to encourage such a course that I placed my motion on the order paper last February. However, I do not intend to ask that my motion be withdrawn. I feel that the two proposals—mine, and that of the veterans affairs committee—are complementary and I should like to feel that the members of this house through the committee on veterans affairs would have a hand in directing the course of the survey suggested. If I had my way I would recommend that the survey be not just a sampling, as it was in the past. After all, there are only about 1,200 veterans involved and, as I said before, these men are not hard to find. I think this survey should deal not only with purely medical matters, but that it should extend into the realm of livelihood—the difficulty of maintaining a home, making a living, and so on.

I see that in the past there has been some difference of opinion between the Department of Veterans Affairs and the Hong Kong veterans association with regard to some of the questions which were discussed by the committee last year. When such differences exist, it is, I believe, our duty as members of parliament to find out beyond doubt which side is correct.

The committee last year was presented with a brief by the Hong Kong veterans association which indicated that the very serious lack of food and vitamins, and the general ill treatment suffered by these prisoners produced long hidden side effects which did not disappear when the men affected were outwardly restored to health. These side effects, as I must call them, seem to me to fall into four main categories; there is acute nervousness, heart conditions of one sort or another, trouble with vision, and fatigue. I should point out here, Mr. Speaker, that not all, or for that matter any of these troubles, apply to all Hong Kong veterans; there are some who have been completely rehabilitated and show no evidence of after effects from their wartime experience. But this should not blind us to the unpleasant fact that there is good evidence that an abnormally high number of these veterans are unable to hold on to their jobs in this competitive world. Too many develop serious eye troubles and too many, as I have said, die suddenly at an early age, leaving behind them wives in their early middle age, and young children.

I was advised only yesterday that in Vancouver, where there are fewer than 200 Hong Kong veterans, three more have died within the past two months, and all three were under the age of 47. These are some of the Canadian youths who volunteered for service in their late teens and early twenties. Mr. Speaker, anyone who like myself, witnessed the return to this country in 1945 of prisoners of war from the Far East will agree with me, I know, that their appearance and their stories of their treatment as prisoners of war will not fade from our memories no matter how long we live.

Before putting forward this motion today I have satisfied myself that we do have a problem here and that it is the responsibility of this house to set matters straight. I have had some difficulty in gathering the facts supporting the motion, but I have had considerable assistance from members of the Hong Kong veterans association, to which I have referred, from the Department of Veterans Affairs and from a group of students at the University of Victoria in my own city of Victoria, B.C., and I would like to thank them for their help. I now seek the approval, the wholehearted approval, of the house for this notice of motion.

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to back this motion of the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) (Mr. Groos). The Hong Kong veterans are a really unique group in one particular aspect, I think. Although we had many prisoners of war in Europe, this group of prisoners was held for over four years under very, very inhuman conditions. I have known some of these veterans myself and I think there is one aspect of their service which I do not want to dwell on too long but which I think is rather unique in this respect. The Canadian soldier generally was well trained, and part of a soldier's training, I think, is to toughen him up so that when he is given the shock of war, the shock of battle, he is mentally prepared for it. A good many of these Hong Kong veterans were shipped over to Hong Kong with very sketchy training indeed, and I would submit that under these circumstances they would go into battle, and into prison, green and scared. I do not mean they would be scared of battle, because Canadian soldiers are magnificent troops, but I think this aspect of being untrained and not prepared for the shock of war had a decided effect in hurting their morale. They felt right from the start that they had not geen given a fair chance to prepare themselves for battle and for prison camp. In addition to that, they were held prisoner in the tropics on the most disgraceful rations you have ever heard of; in fact, some 5 per cent of them have become permanently blind, not to mention the very large number who died under the prison camp conditions. The boys who survived were the toughest of the lot; they were able to stand four and a half years of starvation rations and oriental brutality. As I have said, this bad morale contributed to their mental problem in thinking that they had been somewhat let down by the Canadian people who sent them over there.

Here we have an opportunity to undo, even at this late date, some of the harm that we did to these young men. One of the difficulties, I believe, the pension commission has come up against has always been our very sketchy knowledge of the main disease suffered by these veterans; I think you would call it a disease. They suffered from a vitaminosis, which I suppose in lay language means being starved to death or to near death. The layman who does not know anything about it says, "Just feed him and he will make a complete recovery"; and some of them have apparently made a near complete recovery. However, I do not think very many of us here could face four and a half years of prison diet and the terrible morale conditions that existed in those camps and expect ever to make a really complete recovery.

These veterans die young. This is one reason—and I am quite sure the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.), will agree with me—why we should give these boys every consideration and should take full advantage of section 70 of the Pension Act, which says that the benefit of the doubt should be given to these veterans in every case. They will not come and ask for help unless they need it. I have known some of these veterans personally. When they came back, although their sight was bad and they could hardly read, they went back to school. I know of one case—I will not mention him by name because he would not want me to do so—where the man went right through university and became a dentist. He was struggling along, often at the bottom of the class, and it was very difficult for him to make his grades. When he joined the army he was top-rate in intelligence and stamina and I would say that if he had gone to university then he would have stood at the top of his class, instead of being somewhere near the bottom. The only reason he ever did graduate was that he had that same grit and determination which is only too typical of these boys who have tried to rehabilitate themselves under great difficulty after returning home.

The evidence which I have to go on to assess whether or not they are 50 per cent pensioners—and that is what these boys want; they want to be entitled to a 50 per cent pension, particularly because this gives coverage, as was mentioned by the previous speaker, to their widows or orphans—is this: These boys are dying young. Just because we cannot state a special reason for their death and say they died of this or that disease, we know it is because they were prisoners of war in these camps. I know that the pension commission wants to treat all veterans in the same way, and some objection has been taken to calling them Hong Kong veterans. It has been suggested that perhaps they are asking for something special. I claim they are not asking for anything which we would not give to any other veteran under the same circumstances, because one and all they were prisoners for the same length of time. I think it is quite safe to group them together in this way and say that any man who spent four and half years in a Japanese prison camp is only 50 per cent effective physically.

I do not believe that any one of these men could go, for instance, to a lumber camp, work alongside other men who had not been through this struggle and be, say, any more than half as good. The whole principle behind giving pensions to soldiers has been based on their ability to earn their living with their own hands. We have never suggested that we should compensate a soldier for the loss of a great career on the stage, a career in law or medicine, or something like that. We have always said that we would compensate them in relation to helping, say, their fathers on the farm. If a man is able only to take care of the horses or to saw boards in the bush, we would give him 50 per cent pension. The fact that he is still six feet tall is irrelevant.

From personal knowledge of these men who have come out of these camps, having worked alongside them, I submit that they are no more than 50 per cent physically effective. If they were to come forward, either individually or as a group, and were able to say that there is plenty of evidence to show that Hong Kong veterans are no more than 50 per cent effective in terms of physical ability, then I do not think there is any argument against this proposal. The main evidence before the pension commission has always been that of Dr. Crawford, who was in one of these camps himself. He personally is a magnificent specimen of physique. He has tremendous mental stability, which is doubtless shown by the fact that he is still able to carry a tremendous burden as medical adviser to the department. But I do not think we could use a man like Dr. Crawford as the criterion. Our job here is to deal with average men. We do not look for physical or mental giants when assessing the ability of the average soldier to stand up to this terrible ordeal. Therefore I think we must go further afield than a case like Dr. Crawford—and I am not being sarcastic in saying that. He is the hero type. He has been a hero in the way he has rehabilitated himself, and the contribution he has made since the war. I am not trying to cut these other fellows down, but the average man cannot be expected to put up with what these fellows put up with and come through with flying colours.

I think there is evidence which could be produced when this commission or board is set up. I think we could go to the Japanese themselves, now that the war is over. I am sure the Japanese must have had thousands and thousands of prisoners from other nations, and even their own, who were treated in the same way. Perhaps there is medical evidence to be found in Japan of this same disease from which our Hong Kong veterans are suffering.

I am very pleased to hear that some notice has been taken of our plea in the veterans affairs committee to set up such a commission, as asked for by the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.); and I am sure there are other hon. members who would like to say a few words about this. We certainly do not want to talk this measure out. If it is only a question of spending a little money to make a proper survey, I would certainly recommend such expenditure. I would go further and say that if we are to take section 70 of the Pension Act at face value it would be no crime against the Canadian taxpayer to give the benefit of the doubt to any of these men who spent four and a half years in a Japanese prison camp, and to give them an entitlement to at least a 50 per cent pension, thereby protecting the wives who have stood by them all these years, and the children who make it difficult to get along with a reduced scale of living. Because I submit these boys are just not capable of earning a living 100 per cent with their hands.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I rise to give support to this motion which has been proposed by the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) (Mr. Groos). I believe it to be a very worthy matter deserving of the support of every hon member in this house. I personally know many of the veterans who came out of the Hong Kong affair, and I know something of the problems faced by practically all of these men. Likewise it has been my privilege to visit the cemetery in Hong Kong and to thoroughly explore the actual locations where the fighting took place, where many of our Canadian boys gave their lives and where many of those who are still with us were taken prisoner. I have seen some of the projects they were forced to work at through compulsory labour, before many of them were moved to Japan and other parts. In fact, when one lands on the runway at Hong Kong airport today he is landing on top of rocks carried there by the hands of many of these Hong Kong veterans during their period of compulsory labour while detailed in Hong Kong prison camps.

All of the Hong Kong veterans at the time of their return from imprisonment showed the adverse effects of their experiences in varying degrees. The treatment and care which has been given them subsequently has in many cases rebuilt physical bodies, and restored health at least in some measure. But one of the most difficult aspects of being able to judge just how much disability is involved as far as these veterans are concerned revolves around the fact that many of their disabilities cannot be measured as the normal disability from the effects of war is measured. It is comparatively easy to categorize a man's pension rights from the loss of a limb or other physical disability, but in the conditions under which these men lived for four and a half years they often broke down psychologically and physically in a way upon which it is very difficult today to place a measurement. Therefore it is my opinion that every one of the Hong Kong veterans is deserving of some kind of pension remuneration, and we should be thinking about this while we still have a sizeable number of them with us. Because they are rapidly leaving the scene.

I have before me a statement which was part of a brief presented to the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Teillet) by the Hong Kong veterans association. It concerns the increase of pension and the entitlement to medical care for these veterans. One statement in the brief impressed itself upon me and I would like to share it with others. It is as follows:

> The psychological stresses to which Hong Kong veterans were subjected during their period of imprisonment were severe and long continued. Four years of rough treatment, beatings and constant threat of torture in many forms, stress of undernourishment, inadequate clothing along with forced labour under intolerable conditions, have left hidden personality scars which continue to lower these veterans' ability to adjust into normal civilian life. Even cursory observation of many of these veterans today will verify the permanent damage that was suffered under deplorable conditions experienced by no other prisoner of war.

This brings me to the point that it is not only the physical problem which these veterans face but also the psychological and mental problems, which represent even a greater difficulty sometimes than physical incapacity. They are not requesting any special treatment. If there is any group of veterans deserving of our consideration, I believe it is this group. What they have asked for is reasonable and should be considered. There would be no better way for these things to be brought into public focus than to permit the veterans affairs committee to undertake a study of not just a few but, as has been mentioned by the mover of the motion, of as many as possible,—in fact of all the veterans, in order to determine accurately what our responsibilities are to them.

I should like to outline some of the things these veterans are seeking. First, they are asking that present pensions be reviewed for all Hong Kong veterans. They are also asking that a revival of the survey started in 1950 be undertaken, and that there should be a yearly regular check-up of every individual. They are asking for the supplying of eyeglasses, and dental care without question. They ask for a study of the effects of avitaminosis and other diseases which they developed as a result of dietary deficiency. They ask for a study of the effects of beri-beri, pelagra and dysentery to establish without question the connection between them and their present disabilities such as optic atrophy, cardiac deficiencies, nerve destruction, stomach conditions, etc.

They are also asking an award of a minimum 50 per cent of pension for residual effects of avitaminosis to every ex-Japanese prisoner of war. The previous speaker mentioned that it was not fair to condemn them for seeking special privileges over and above other prisoners of war. It would be very easy to categorize all prisoners of war in the same class, prisoners who went through similar situations whether out of Hong Kong or some other place.

These men ask that all Hong Kong prisoners of war be given complete entitlement to normal pension provisions. I believe these are very reasonable requests. Therefore on behalf of this party I give our complete support to the motion and hope it will be passed by the house so that the veterans affairs committee may make recommendations covering these prisoners. In fact, I find it difficult to understand why this problem has been passed over for so many years. Therefore I would urge the house to permit the passage of this motion today.

Mr. Robert Temple (Hastings South): Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion presented by the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) (Mr. Groos). The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Bigg) quite correctly referred to the fact that these troops from the Royal Rifles and the Winnipeg Grenadiers went to Hong Kong in 1941 without top level training. There is something else that should be pointed out, Mr. Speaker, and it is that the Hong Kong contingent was entirely without any mechanical transport.

The majority sailed on the Amatea, a British naval transport, on October 26, 1941. Originally it was intended that the force be supplied with 212 motor vehicles composed of 45 motorcycles, 6 Ford cars, 57 universal carriers, 63 15-cwt. trucks, 2 15-cwt. water tanks and 39 3-ton trucks, but due to various administrative difficulties none of these vehicles arrived at the docks in Vancouver until October 27 and 28 when the Amatea had already sailed, along with H.M.C.S. Prince Rupert, an escort vessel, which carried four officers and 105 other personnel.

What happened then is history. All the vehicles were loaded on the Don Jose, an American freighter, which set sail on November 4, 1941, bound for Hong Kong, but was re-routed to Manila and authority was subsequently given by the Canadian authorities to have these vehicles used by American troops. It may seem, Mr. Speaker, that I am digressing a little, but I think there is a lesson to be learned from this, and I am happy to see that in the white paper on defence, and in the all party special committee on defence, matters like this are under consideration, so that we shall have transport available for highly mobile forces in future.

The casualties suffered by the Canadians in Hong Kong, due to fighting, and later malnutrition and the cruel treatment they received, were very heavy indeed. As a matter of fact, the losses from December 8, 1941 until December 25, 1941 were very heavy. At brigade headquarters five officers and 16 other ranks were either killed or died of their wounds, while in the Royal Rifles seven officers and 123 other ranks were killed or died of their wounds. Fatal casualties among the Winnipeg Grenadiers totalled 11 officers and 128 other ranks. But this is only part of the story.

They then suffered further harrowing experiences. Until 1943 they were all kept in prisoner of war camps at Hong Kong, and as a result of the deplorable conditions there four more officers and 124 other ranks died. It is of interest, as was pointed out by Colonel Stacey, in his official Canadian war history, that the losses would have been much more severe except for a very ironical situation. There was an outbreak of diphtheria in the camps and the Canadian prisoners were refused medical supplies to treat the disease. As a result of that they in turn infected some of the Japanese guards with diphtheria, and the Canadians were then taken off their heavy work details and placed in isolation. Perhaps, inadvertently, more lives were saved as a result of that outbreak than would otherwise have been the case.

In January, 1943, 1,183 other ranks together with one officer, significantly a Captain J. A. G. Reid, of the Royal Canadian Army Medical Corps, were taken to Japan and were forced to work in various industries, chiefly mining. Again the conditions were extremely bad and this can be shown as evidenced by the fact that here 136 more men died.

I was very happy, Mr. Speaker, to hear my hon. friend from Victoria (B.C.) announce that the Canadian pension commission is now prepared to launch an investigation into the status of these Hong Kong veterans. I expect this investigation is designed to produce information about the Hong Kong veterans and to give some indication of points which will require further and more detailed investigation. I have asked for other information, and I would like to refer to an article concerning this whole matter, which appeared in the Victoria Daily Times of June 13, 1964. It is stated there that the death rate among these men, referring to the Hong Kong veterans, is 27 per cent. I have asked for information on this point, and I imagine that there probably must be a typographical error because up to the end of 1963, 108 of the over 1,400 men who were repatriated to Canada after the war had died. This is a death rate of approximately 7.7 per cent. Certainly we are not happy about this at all and we must look into the matter further, but the figure is not 27 per cent as reported in the Victoria Times. I think this bears correcting.

There is no question in my mind that these men suffered more and for a greater length of time than the ordinary, if I may use that word, prisoner of war in other parts of the world. There is no question in my mind that they are deserving, not of special treatment but of treatment which will assure them justice.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be very brief but I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) (Mr. Groos) for having raised this matter in a private member's notice of motion, and I hope the government will do something about it. I have had the opportunity of being a member of the veterans affairs committee since I was first elected to parliament. Each year we have heard from the Hong Kong veterans association all the details and particulars of the special problems they have. These problems are many, and I certainly want to leave a few minutes for the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) who has had experience in prisoner of war camps. The problems of prisoners of war of the Japanese were considerably aggravated, it is generally agreed, beyond those of prisoners in any other prisoner of war camp throughout the world. These problems developed because of long exposure to foods unknown to the western palate and because of diseases unknown to the medical profession. When the association presented their brief last year this fact was admitted and expanded upon by the medical advisers of the Department of Veterans Affairs.

The result was that the veterans affairs committee decided that this matter warranted immediate consideration and made a recommendation to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, as has been done on a number of occasions, that special consideration be given to these men.

Mr. Herridge: Since 1945.

Mr. Peters: I am told by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) that this has been done by the veterans affairs committee every year since the end of the war. Yet the Liberal government, the government of the member who introduced this motion, has been unwilling to do anything about the matter. We even had the sad spectacle last year of officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs defending their action in not granting some of the requests of these prisoners.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) outlined some of their requests. They asked for a 50 per cent pension because of the service they gave and when you apply this to 1,200 people it is small compensation for the suffering they have endured over the years. I do not think there is anyone in the house who disagrees with that suggestion. In my opinion it is up to the Department of Veterans Affairs to do something about the matter now and I hope that this measure will pass. To my knowledge the 60 members of the veterans committee are all veterans, and there are more than 60 members of the house who are veterans. Having that in mind, surely it behooves the government to give some consideration to this matter. I hope that the motion will pass quickly and that action will be forthcoming to assist these people. As one hon. member said, they are becoming fewer in number each year. Whether their death rate is 27 per cent or 7 per cent, it is much above the average.

We had people appear before us who obviously were suffering from disabilities such as beri-beri and heart and stomach conditions that were the direct result of their treatment by the Japanese while they were in the Japanese prisoner of war camps. I strongly urge that this matter be dealt with now and that the veterans affairs committee be allowed to get on with other matters, because the committee has already made a favourable decision with regard to the subject matter of this motion.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, like other members it is not my intention to speak at length or to impede the passage of the motion moved by the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) (Mr. Groos) in any way. As a matter of fact, if the record is examined I think hon. members will find that a similar suggestion has been made on numerous occasions. I recall that during the sittings of the veterans affairs committee some years ago I endeavoured to bring about a study of this matter because of cases that had been referred not only to myself but to other members, having in mind the possible influence we might have with regard to the determination of the course to be followed by the department or by the government.

I make the same plea to the present government as I made to the former government. The hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) has made it very clear, and other members have supported him, that these veterans require something a little different and a little more specialized in the way of treatment than other veterans. However, I should like to see included in this motion all members of the forces who were interned in prison camps.

I say that because of cases with which I am well acquainted personally. In the course of the next two or three days a veteran with whom I had the privilege of serving will be coming to Ottawa to determine if any assistance from the government is available to him because of the special circumstances mentioned by one member who participated in the debate. This problem is a continuing one. As my colleague who participated in the debate has mentioned, these people sometimes will not come forward themselves until it is too late. Sometimes it is the case that they have made no representations at all to the Department of Veterans Affairs since 1945 and therefore it is a very easy thing for the departmental officials to say that their condition is in no way related to their wartime experiences.

I think of names such as Bill Warren. I do not recall his home town but he was in the camp I was in, and I know this man has a justifiable case. His case has been before the pension commission on several occasions but now the door is completely closed. There is a widow in the province of Manitoba with a family of young children, and I know the difficulty this veteran had when he was in the camp. It was precisely his experiences there which caused his death. The same is true of my colleague and friend, Danny Evans of Toronto. There is also the case of a young widow of a year and a half ago in the city of Hamilton. Now we have this chap coming to Ottawa in the course of the next few days.

In each and every case their own doctors have said that their condition is attributable to the severe experiences they had in the prison camps. Some of us who were there may not show signs of what had to be endured. As a matter of fact, I recall that when I returned home I weighed approximately 128 pounds. I wish I were a little closer to that mark today, but that is beside the point. Some people have not been as fortunate as some of us. There are quite a number of members in the house who have had these experiences and can well appreciate the sensible views that have been put forward today.

I appreciated the eight points that were set down by the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson). There is not one of them that would not apply to every colleague of mine who was in southeastern Germany. Perhaps our treatment was not as rough as that given out to the Hong Kong veterans. I qualified my remarks at the beginning with that statement. However, I wish the hon. member had included these people in his motion because the cases I have mentioned all seem to me to have a common denominator, and that is the life they endured as members of the services and the experiences they had to go through.

I could mention to the house specific instances. I can remember one day in particular when there was a great escape. The German authorities sent their storm troopers into the camp, about 300 of them. They were lined up across the front and down one side with their tommy guns at the fire. When they did not get the kind of co-operation they wanted, some officer in the wehrmacht blew his top and all of these guards started blasting down in between the camp, through the barracks and so on. This lasted for a period of two days. Throughout the whole night, people had to stand out on the parade ground, make fires, and so on. Though this is only one incident, but such experiences as these had a reaction on the people and left a mark on them. In addition, there were deprivations, diet and so on. There should be a recognition of the things mentioned specifically by the hon. member for Red Deer, as well as those referred to by the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.)

I should like very much to have this motion include all those who have been in prisoner of war camps. Dr. Crawford in the department knows that I brought this matter to the attention of the committee many years ago. He said that it was difficult to get any statistics covering these people because of the situation which exists in Canada. I did not know until a short time ago that this subject would be discussed today or I would have endeavoured to produce some of the information that was given to the committee at that time. I assure you that the statistics that have been given to us here apply equally right across the board to the people who have had these experiences. I will be very satisfied if during the course of this particular study it is borne in mind that the people I have mentioned have particular rights. I have only referred to these cases from memory, but all cases of a similar type should be given special consideration. If this is done I will consider it a wonderful effort on the part of the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.), the committee on veterans affairs and the Canadian parliament. I am grateful to the hon. member for bringing this forward now and I am pleased to support the terms of the motion.

Mr. Bernard Pilon (Chambly-Rouville): Mr. Speaker—

[Text]

Mr. Peters: If you are not a veteran, don't talk about it.

Mr. Pilon: I should like to remind the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) that I am a veteran.

Mr. Winch: All we want you to do is not talk out this resolution.

[Translation]

Mr. Pilon: I shall just take a few minutes, Mr. Speaker. I wish to add my own comments to those of the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) (Mr. Groos) and all the other previous speakers.

As the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler) said, we should consider the case of all the prisoners. A great deal has been written about the Hong Kong incident, as pointed out by the hon. member for Hastings South (Mr. Temple), but I do not believe the Canadian government of the day was responsible for what happened as far as transportation was concerned.

We appreciate the fact that veterans who were taken prisoners in Hong Kong have been badly affected. I recall that one of my friends had to face the firing squad four times in the same month. We came back to Canada, suffering from malnutrition, and the matter should have been considered many years ago.

I would like to mention here the fact that the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) said a little earlier that the Liberal party was to blame. To that I say, that at the present time a commission is studying the case of the Hong Kong prisoners and that this study will be much more comprehensive than anyone might imagine. That commission will consider the possibility of those prisoners obtaining life insurance, pensions when they need them, because Canada is aware of the debt it owes them.

Mr. Speaker, before closing, I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Victoria and all those who spoke before me.

Mr. C. W. Carter (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I should like to join with those who have expressed gratitude to the hon. member for Victoria (B.C.) (Mr. Groos) for focusing the attention of the house on the problem of the Hong Kong prisoners, which is set forth in the resolution now before us. I think hon. members should understand that the purpose of this motion is already being served, because the Canadian pension commission has already undertaken a survey of this problem following the recommendation made in the report of the standing committee on veterans affairs.

In order to refresh the minds of hon. members, may I read that recommendation which appears at page 430 of the report:

> In view of the special problems that time and experience has revealed concerning the Hong Kong veterans this committee urges that a special study and survey be made of their problems and particular disabilities.

Mr. Winch: May I ask the hon. member a question? Is it the intention of the hon. member to talk out this motion when it is obvious it would be passed unanimously by this house?

Mr. Carter: Well, I was just about to point out to the hon. member that if this motion were acted upon now we would only be duplicating what is already being done by the Canadian pension commission.

Mr. Winkler: Let us duplicate it, then.

Mr. Carter: This proposed study could be more properly undertaken after the Canadian pension commission has completed its survey. Hon. members should read the motion and realize what it asks the house to do.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please; the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has now expired.

Mr. Winkler: Shame.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), statements by Arnold Heeney regarding the commonwealth.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Fairweather: As we have wide rules of relevancy in this debate I wish to say a word or two now about the question of Canadian unity.

I have much sympathy with the aspirations of Quebec and its so-called quiet revolution. I think we in the rest of Canada must understand that this revolution is directed as much against the past in Quebec as it is against the rest of Canada. I think we must remind ourselves of the French fact in Canada and of the perfectly natural desire for this great culture to preserve its language in a changing country and a changing world. Having said that, I say with great respect to my Quebec confreres. Do not let the quiet revolution become so inward looking that its aspirations make Quebec a narrow, insulated community in Canada, in North America and in the world. If this is the consequence of the present movement, it is a movement in defiance of man's progress in the 20th century. Nationalism in the restrictive sense became outmoded when bombs fell on Hiroshima. Turn outward, so that Canada and the world may share the fruits of your culture and your learning. As the manifesto which I discussed earlier this evening puts it:

> The future of a language depends upon the dynamism of those who speak it...To use nationalism as a yardstick deciding policies is both sterile and retrograde. Overflowing nationalism distorts one's vision of reality, prevents one from seeing problems in their true perspective, falsifies solutions and constitutes a classic diversionary tactic for politicians caught by facts.

In saying this I do not speak only to Quebec. I speak about all those manifestations of nationalism current in our land. Little Englanders must not be transplanted here as little Canadians. To quote again from the manifesto:

> The most valid trends today are toward more enlightened humanism, toward various forms of political, social and economic universalism. Canada is a reproduction on a smaller and simpler scale of this universal phenomenon. The challenge is for a number of ethnic groups to live together.

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

> It is a modern challenge, meaningful and indicative of what can be expected from man.

I have no trained and sophisticated mechanism which can tell me what is in the minds of the people of Canada, but I have a hunch that we parliamentarians would be surprised to learn that the truth of some, at least, of what I say, is well understood by many people all across this land. I suggest—and here again I adopt the words of the manifesto—that to confess one's inability to make confederation work is, at this stage of history, to admit one's unworthiness to contribute to the universal order.

I cannot think that Canadians of whatever origin—as if origin mattered—are going to turn our backs on what Sir Ernest Barker calls, in an important book, "The Tradition of Civility". Canada is indeed a small reproduction of that part of the world which established for men everywhere the great salutary rules which are part of what Walter Lippmann terms the "public philosophy"—the "public philosophy" from which springs freedom of religion, of thought and of speech. Some of this public philosophy is embedded in bills of rights, other parts in jurisprudence and others in constitutions.

Sir Ernest Barker puts it this way:

> The rational faculty of man was conceived as producing a common conception of law and order which possessed a universal validity—

I am suggesting that it is our duty and responsibility to make sure it does not wither and die from neglect. It is a greater responsibility than a design for a flag or a revision of a constitution. It is of more importance than preserving an international boundary or a parochial pattern. The list of Canada's priorities—and this is what I believe we are considering—is too long for me to capitulate in any detail tonight. But it includes the fight against poverty—and may I remind hon. members that dramatic schemes to clear city slums leave untouched that wasteland of rural poverty which can be seen in too many parts of my own province and, I suppose, in others. It includes unemployment, particularly regional unemployment, and the parallel problem of the inequitable distribution of wealth and income. It includes the pollution of our streams and rivers and the erosion of our soil; it includes ruthless exploitation of some of our heritage; it includes the monotonous pap of some of our radio and television programs, which seem to be based on a denominator which is often subterranean. It includes an antiquated penal system where, too often, punishment is substituted for rehabilitation; crowded hospitals and a lack of decent provisions for proud and honest men to settle their doctors bills. It includes people who will not recognize the French cultural fact, and the reasonable wish on the part of this co-founding race to maintain its tongue and enlarge its share of the development of the whole of Canada. It includes, unfortunately, a still pitifully inadequate foreign aid program and, with great respect to the minister of citizenship, a much too restrictive formula for immigration into this country.

Mr. Chairman, I said we had a responsibility, and I think we do. We have a responsibility to public opinion, and I am going to suggest that public opinion is not just an unworked lump of dough; it needs yeast to make it work—and I suggest that it is our responsibility to be that yeast. Walter Lippman reminds us that, "The naïvely democratic theory was that out of the mass of the voters there arose a cloud of wills which ascended to heaven, condensed into a thunderbolt, and then smote the people". We as political people—and I am proud of that adjective—know that this is not so.

James Reston wrote in a column in the New York Times on March 28:

> We must not demand the serenity of faith without the agony, victory without the struggle, solvency without the taxes, leadership without the criticism, peace without sacrifice, and salvation without conviction.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I take this opportunity, when we are discussing interim supply, to raise a few points which we would like to stress in the hope that the government will bring about some improvements.

One of the first points I would like to bring up is one I have repeatedly mentioned in the house. Unfortunately, we did not see any improvement in this field. I am speaking of the behaviour of employees in the Quebec office of the income tax department.

After my having complained time and again in the house, the Minister of National Revenue suggested that I should submit to him the cases I might have so that he could examine them and see what is wrong with the office of his department at Quebec. During the past two months—and the minister will be able to confirm this—I have sent him at least three score letters from people in the county of Lapointe who were dissatisfied with the decisions of the inspectors at the Quebec office.

Mr. Chairman, I hardly know whether the minister looked into those cases, or whether he had some inquiry made to see what was happening in his department, but there is one thing I know, which is that we always get the same routine: the inspectors of the Quebec office of the Department of National Revenue behave like dictators and tyrants, depriving people of their savings.

I have received some letters signed by the Minister of National Revenue to the effect that his inspectors in Quebec had consulted the parish priests in their rectories. Now, parish priests from the riding of Lapointe have sent me sworn statements to the effect that no inspector from the Quebec office has ever come to their rectory to secure information in that connection. The minister tells me that his department's investigators in Quebec have made enquiries with the parish priests and the latter send me sworn statements to the effect that such allegations are entirely untrue.

Mr. Chairman, I will send those sworn statements to the Minister of National Revenue and I think it will then be time for him to open his eyes and realize that officials of his department in Quebec are purely and simply robbing the people by reducing their deductions for charitable donations, though there are receipts signed by parish priests who swear that the inspectors of the Department of National Revenue never came to see them.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, that is serious, because we are told that enquiries are made when there are none. What happens is merely that an official stays at his desk in his office where he makes an arbitrary decision to rob the people of their income.

Those dictators of the income tax office make a great show to try to get promotions, and when they can make the Department of National Revenue save a few dollars, such promotions are given to them under the pretext that they are good servants.

Mr. Chairman, I say to the minister that they are not good civil servants, but dictators who discredit the government and the Department of National Revenue in public opinion. It is because of such attitudes that the citizens of the province of Quebec rebel more and more against the dictatorial action and the gangsters of the income tax in Ottawa.

Mr. Chairman, this is not the first time that we raise this problem in the house, but such cases are excessively numerous; the hon. member for Villeneuve gave evidence for half an hour in this house, I myself did the same and, during the last two months, I have been sending every day to the Minister of National Revenue evidence of cases of injustice in my riding, in Quebec city and vicinity. We always get the same commonplace and unsignificant answers: "We had the file sent to us and the inspectors tell us that they made an inquiry, that they went to see the parish priest and that he said that such and such taxpayer had not given such an amount to charity".

Those parish priests write to us again to tell us that it is false and that the officials of the Department of the National Revenue did not see them.

Those individuals in the Quebec office are failing in their duty and, in my opinion, the minister should start an investigation immediately so as to control their activities, and more particularly those of a Mr. Gingras and of a Mr. Audet, of the Quebec income tax office, who are often rude in their replies or are content with sending the same replies in every case—

Mr. Gauthier: Circulars.

Mr. Grégoire: Circular letters, as stated by the hon. member for Roberval. The officials of the Quebec office always give the same answer. "After going through your file, under such and such a paragraph, or such and such a section of the act, your receipt for charitable donations has been reduced to $300, $200 or $100". In most cases, the matter has not even been investigated.

I am asking the Minister of National Revenue to have the activities of those Quebec office dictators investigated, for that office is discrediting the Ottawa government in the province of Quebec, because of those people's behaviour.

I believe that the minister should consider this request, because if he does not, we will bring all the cases before the house—sworn letters, affidavits, etc.—and put everything before the minister, and more particularly the actions of some inspectors whom I shall name again so that the minister may take note of them: They are Mr. Gingras and Mr. Audet, of the national revenue office in Quebec.

I think that Mr. Paquin, who is in charge of that office, would also need to be called to order, as he does not properly supervise his employees' attitude in his own office.

Mr. Chairman, you will agree with me that this is somewhat surprising, when the minister writes me—the letter does bear hon. Mr. McIlraith's signature, i.e. the signature of the Minister of National Revenue—to say that, on his instructions, his officers went to a rectory to get some information with regard to a particular case, and the priest, in his turn, sends me a letter under oath certified by a notary, to the effect that nobody from the national revenue office ever appeared at his rectory to ask for information on this matter.

You will admit that the minister at the other end, who sent that letter, should feel somewhat ashamed because he cannot rely any more than that on his officials. Personally, when I send a letter to someone under my signature, I check its contents before signing it. This is not what the minister does. Moreover, when it is letters of this kind, it does not bother him at all, and he does not even bother to check certain affidavits, like those he received from my riding, before signing the letters stating that an inquiry has been made. The minister should get better information than is the case at the present time. I can state that no such thing would happen with letters signed by me.

Now, Mr. Chairman, let us take another department. I see that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) and the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) are not present, but since we are in the farming season, I should like to make a request to the government, through the Minister of Agriculture or the Minister of Forestry, whichever department is concerned.

We realize that in the province of Quebec there are not enough farm credit advisers. There are many applications made by farmers for loans. Unfortunately, there are not enough farm credit advisers or inspectors to go and make inquiries at the place of all the farmers who make applications, so that the granting of loans is delayed and, of course, the farmers are delayed in their seeding or in their crops, and it is Quebec agriculture that suffers.

I think that in a province such as Saskatchewan, with 15 or 16 counties, there are 37 inspectors or supervisors of farm credit. In the province of Quebec, with a population seven times larger, there are hardly 16 of them.

I think that all members of the house will recognize that there is discrimination there. I am in favour of those 37 advisers or supervisors of farm credit in Saskatchewan, and if they want more, I am not against it. But when there are not enough in the province of Quebec to meet the needs, I cannot help but protest.

That leads me to say that there is something wrong in our system. I think that there is overlapping by the federal government and the provincial government in too many fields.

There is some in agriculture. When something has to be settled in agriculture, steps must be taken with the provincial government and then with the federal government. It takes time to convince the provincial government and then it takes time to convince the federal government, and it takes even more time to convince both of them together. When some ARDA project has to be carried out, it has to go through the provincial government and the provincial government must go to the federal government and then it comes back to the provincial government, so that the delays are three times longer than if there were only one government to look after that. The same thing happens with respect to winter works. The municipality applies to the provincial government; the matter has to be referred to the federal government, then it is returned to the provincial government, and, finally, it comes back to the municipality.

This implies a loss of time, some delays causing trouble for interested parties and bodies. As regards winter works ARDA and farm credit, pension plans and any other field, we see two governments interfering with each other; each has a decision to make, each one has its own legislation, its rules and regulations. In such circumstances, delays are bound to occur and everything is being neglected.

This leads us to conclude that an end should be put to those programs where two governments must be consulted and where two governments must legislate before results are obtained. In my opinion, the federal government should withdraw purely and simply and leave sources of income to the provinces in order that they may be in a position to deal alone and by themselves with such problems, and that these be settled sooner and to everybody's satisfaction.

It is obvious that if the council of ministers, before reaching a decision, was obliged to consult the cabinet or the council of ministers in Mexico, our country would suffer because it would take from now to doomsday to get action. That is exactly what occurs in every field with the joint plans.

There are too many governments, too many different things, too many levels of government, so that everything is delayed and everything is bungled. This leads us to an inevitable conclusion; the federal government must withdraw as soon as possible from joint plans to allow the provincial governments to legislate in the fields these plans cover at present.

What creates most problems nowadays in Canada for the federal government, for provincial and municipal governments, and also for individuals, is that the Canadian citizens, in the economic field, do not think as Canadian citizens but as a colonized people subject to other countries.

I read recently, and this is one of the things which disgusts me the most in our country's administration, that in our international trade, we had, during the last three months, in our goods account only, a surplus of $47 or $48 million. On the other hand, we notice that we have a deficit of approximately $375 million concerning the outflow of money.

Why all this? Because each year there is $1,200 million—this is a huge amount, Mr. Chairman—which is paid by Canada to other countries for interest, dividends or benefits to foreign companies who are developing natural resources of our country.

I came back yesterday, having held several meetings in the Chicoutimi county, in an area where we find a good number of lumbermen. Now, these men are cutting wood for $5 a cord, are paying their room and board in the forest, and their power saw at the end of the season; they come back more indebted, having barely enough to live on, while foreigners, who do not even come and fell a single tree in our forests, who do not even know what our trees look like, collect the profits and lead an easy life in other countries thanks to the profits due to the labour of our people.

Mr. Chairman, I say that the Canadian people today, are an economically colonized people who only work for wages, while the benefits, dividends and interests are going at a rate of $1,200 million a year to foreign countries, to make their capitalists richer.

If that problem were solved, if there were organized in this country a system whereby we would remain masters of our natural resources, of our industry, of our forests and waters, we could keep the benefits, dividends and interests for ourselves and each year our country would be $1,200 million richer.

Imagine what we could do with all that money. We could build schools, colleges, universities, pay our professors and build hospitals.

And in the province of Quebec, persons who are ill have to wait 15 days, three weeks or a month to be admitted to hospital, because there is a shortage of hospital beds.

Mr. Chairman, with $1,200 million we could build hospitals, roads and bridges, we could develop our industry and increase family allowances. Can you imagine what would be within our reach if dividends earned in Canada remained in our province? Unfortunately those profits go elsewhere.

Mr. Chairman, that is precisely what is wrong with this country; it has no control over its capital, and its credit and its citizens remain small wage earners while foreigners make all the profits. I have nothing against their getting the profits in their own country but I object to their laying their hands on the profits in Canada just because they can afford to provide the required capital and we cannot.

When we settle that problem a lot of others will be solved at the same time. When we can create our own credit and keep our own profits instead of letting them fall into foreign hands, then quite a few problems will have been solved.

Those are the few comments I wanted to make.

I also wanted to refer briefly to a rather typical example of patronage. We have just found out that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has seen fit to hire, at $7,500 a year, an individual who works for him in his riding of Matapédia-Matane. I am wondering whether there are a great many immigrants in that constituency or if the man's job is to look after patronage or to prepare elections on behalf of the minister.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

The hon. member said that I hired an official and suggests that he is looking after patronage in my constituency. I will point out to the hon. member that this official belongs to my Ottawa office and that he has always been on my staff, but it is true that he has been performing certain duties, which I am unable to do as Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in my own constituency.

Since Mr. André Côté has been appointed to my staff, he has never dealt with political matters either in my constituency or in the province. He was exclusively appointed in Ottawa and in my constituency, where I cannot deal with the correspondence of every case submitted to me as a minister or a member of parliament.

Mr. Grégoire: I feel that the minister did not give us enough information, but it is easy to see what it means.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

In my riding, when constituents complain that the bandits of the income tax division have cut down their receipts for charitable donations, I am the one who has to settle the matter. It is never done by an official, because the department does not want the matter to be settled. But when this happens in the riding of Matapédia-Matane, the minister has an official deal with the matter on his behalf.

The same applies when problems relating to farm credit and unemployment insurance have to be settled. We have to write to the Quebec office, but inspectors are too few and it takes time to settle the matter. As for the minister, he is lucky, because he has someone in this riding to look after farm credit and unemployment insurance matters, and when a tax problem arises and the bandits of the income tax division do not want it to be settled—

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member uses the word "bandit" to designate officials of the Department of National Revenue, he goes far beyond the parliamentary terms used in the house, and I would therefore ask him to withdraw his words.

Mr. Grégoire: I do not know whether the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) was here a while ago when I mentioned tioned that inspectors stated that they made inquiries in rectories and that parish priests claim that they have not received the visit of an inspector. Then, when I see that inspections are being made directly in the inspector's office, and I can prove it, I find that we are using the term very loosely. I do not know how the hon. member calls that, but I think the term is quite proper and I will not withdraw my words. I will only withdraw them if it is proven that I am wrong. But, it will not be proven, not with all the facts I now have. The term is sufficiently loose not to go beyond what I have in mind.

If the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration wants to present in his constituency—

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has asked the member who insulted the federal officials to withdraw. I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to make a ruling on that question of privilege.

Mr. Grégoire: Maybe these problems do not occur in the riding of the hon. member for St. Hyacinthe-Bagot (Mr. Ricard). It is also possible that if he would visit his electors a little more often, he might realize that this problem is there. As for us, we want to serve the interests of our electors, and that is normal. We object because we know that in his riding the situation is similar and I know that his electors complain, the same as in other ridings; that is why I am surprised to see his attitude, to see him rise and make—

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the hon. member for Lapointe, in the remarks he is now giving, is making them directly against officials of the department. If he has any criticism of the department to make it would be more in order if he made it to the minister.

[Translation]

Mr. Lambert: The civil servants are not here to defend themselves. You are being cowardly.

Mr. Grégoire: It is obvious that I am making remarks and that I cannot treat the minister like that, since he does not take such action himself; his senior officials do it for him, because if he had to deal with all the cases, he would really have too much to do. On the other hand, his responsibility is to see that his officials do not behave like they do and, if they behave badly, it is his responsibility to set his department in order.

As I was saying, I think the hon. member for Matapédia-Matane is very fortunate to have been able to hire a civil servant solely to look after such problems. They take up a lot of our time, because our electors feel that things are going badly in all those fields, income tax, farm credit, unemployment insurance. As far as the minister is concerned, he has somebody to look after all those things. But we have no one. The minister is assisted by officials to do his research work in the house. He even employed some one to go and see his electors and calm them. As far as we are concerned, we try to settle those things directly with the department without any patronage in the riding. The minister should avoid patronage when he employs someone to look after all his little worries and try to quiet the discontented ones and make friends with them.

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege.

I do not think that members can use the word "patronage" to describe the services rendered by someone to all the electors of a riding who have needs or requests to be made known to the government.

Therefore, I ask the hon. member to withdraw the word "patronage" to describe the services rendered by a member of parliament, by a minister or by one of his officials who deals with the correspondence and tells the minister about the goings on in his county.

I do not think that we can use the word "patronage" to describe such activities and, therefore, I ask him to withdraw that word.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, with respect to the question of privilege, let the minister see to it that there is an individual like that in every riding in Canada. Then, when there is one everywhere, we will not hear the ministers' say: It is because they want to arrange their little schemes in their ridings.

We do not have such employees; we have to spend our week ends visiting the homes of those farmers, seeing electors, but we see them, we talk with them, we know them; it is not officials who do our job for us because we go and see our own people; this is much more satisfactory, because when we come back to the house, we can say that as representatives we talk knowingly because we visited them, we saw them, we met them and we discussed their problems with them.

Mr. Chairman, the minister did not tell us exactly what were the duties of this Mr. Côté who is paid $7,500 per year to work for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, because I imagine that the minister must have many immigrants in his riding of Matapédia-Matane. Can he tell us what are his duties and what cases he tried to solve down there? Perhaps the minister could give us more details and inform us of the duties of this official, and then perhaps patronage would not be mentioned so much.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted, while we are discussing interim supply, to avail myself of the opportunity of expressing some views, because it is not always possible to vent our thoughts on various issues.

I wanted to deal with farm credit, for while I think that inspectors are doing a good job, there are too few of them. I would ask the government to increase the number of supervisors and farm credit advisers, more particularly in the province of Quebec, to answer the need.

I also would ask the Minister of National Revenue to put some order into his department, more particularly in the Quebec office.

And, if the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) were able to give this country a financial system enabling Canadians to develop their own industries, natural resources and trade, by their own means, instead of having them developed by foreigners, then we would keep our profits at home, and develop Quebec better than we do now.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, in the early part of his remarks, the hon. member for Lapointe dealt at some length with the Department of National Revenue, of which department I am the acting minister. In the course of his remarks he referred to the civil servants of the department as tyrants, dictators, robbers and several other terms of that nature.

Mr. Ricard: He does not know any other language.

Mr. McIlraith: I merely want to point out that it is quite contrary to the usage and practice of the house to refer to civil servants in that way, for the rather obvious reason that it has always been thought to be improper to refer to persons who are unable to defend themselves. It is improper to take advantage of the privilege of the house—where they cannot reply—to use language in reference to them that could not be used outside the house without incurring the responsibility consequent on such actions.

Mr. Churchill: Spank him some more.

Mr. McIlraith: I think the abuse of the correct practice and procedures of the house will be apparent to anyone who gives the matter any thought. Having objected to this wholly improper practice, I think I can leave the matter there for the moment.

The hon. member's other remarks concerning the department had to do with claims for charitable donations by taxpayers in certain parts of his constituency, those claims in a large number of cases having run to 10 per cent of income. There has been some question whether or not these claims for charitable donations were made due to a misunderstanding of the law or whether in fact the amount of money claimed as having been donated to charities was actually so donated.

As I understand the duty of the minister, it is to see that the act is administered fairly. That implies that each taxpayer is treated fairly under the provisions of the act—

Mr. Grégoire: They are not.

Mr. McIlraith: —as the law requires that they shall be treated. Under our modern system, practically every citizen is a taxpayer and it is important that the taxpayer who pays his taxes should know and be able to feel that all other taxpayers are being required to pay their taxes on an equal footing under the law. If that has meant the investigation of certain individual cases, surely that is the necessary and proper thing to do.

Each case the hon. member has referred to me has been checked or is being checked. When he says that he sends a letter a day about some particular taxpayer, I can only tell the committee that he is being quite accurate: In fact, I thought it was more than a letter a day. In any event, whatever the number, these cases are checked in each instance to find out if these people have been treated fairly and in accordance with the law. As best that can be done, it is being done.

Mr. Grégoire: No.

Mr. McIlraith: As I have indicated, in some areas there is a misunderstanding as to what the law is.

Mr. Grégoire: The misunderstanding is in the department.

Mr. McIlraith: The fact is that actual donations up to a maximum of 10 per cent of income are what are allowed, but there seems to be an impression in some areas of the hon. member's constituency that there is an allowance of 10 per cent of income for such donations, which is quite a different thing. I assure the hon. member that as long as I have the responsibility as acting minister for this particular portfolio, the cases he refers will be looked into and dealt with. If he has any particular complaints and can substantiate them, I will be very glad to receive the information and, they will be looked into.

The hon. member also referred to the matter of affidavits. Offhand I have no recollection of receiving any such affidavits, but if there are any such affidavits that appear to be in conflict with our information or to add information that has a bearing on a particular case, I certainly will be glad to see that they are properly examined to make sure that the law is administered with absolute fairness. This is the only way that a system as all-embracing as our present taxation system can be administered.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask the minister a question?

Mr. McIlraith: By all means.

Mr. Grégoire: Is it not a fact that in many of the cases I have sent the minister the people were claiming only 6 or 7 per cent of their net income, and not 10 per cent as the minister mentioned?

Mr. McIlraith: No, I would not agree that is so. The point is that they are only entitled to claim what they actually gave to charities. That is the point. They are only entitled to claim what they actually gave up to a maximum of 10 per cent of their income.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Chairman, if the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration were a philosopher instead of an economist I suppose he could console himself with the fact that the criticism he and his department have received in the last month or so is the same as the criticism levelled at nearly every minister of citizenship and immigration for the last 15 or more years. I think the only person who escaped that criticism was the minister who preceded him, and I suppose he only escaped it because he did not remain in the department long enough for some of us to get at him.

I think that anyone who wants to be realistic will realize that the minister is not entirely responsible for the difficulties in which he finds himself, but rather it is the Immigration Act, the regulations drafted for the administration of the act and the administration itself which has become so involved and so obviously discriminatory that it is impossible for the affairs of the department to be conducted without criticism being forthcoming.

If we have been harsh on the minister in the last month or two it is because the minister has been so quick to rise to the defence of not only his deputy but every single person who works for the department either full time or part time. Let some member of the house, or counsel for one of the people who have been in trouble, suggest for a moment that possibly the interpreter who works part time for the department, I assume, may have left the wrong impression with one of the people involved, and the minister is immediately on his feet to tell us that neither the interpreter, any other member of the staff nor the deputy minister has ever made a mistake. He tells us that the department is perfect and always has been perfect.

I have had dealings with ministers of this department before and it is not surprising that after a minister has been on the job for eight or ten years and has worked closely with his department he comes to feel that the officials are very fine people, which they probably are, and that they do not often make mistakes. But I want to tell the minister that I have never known a minister before who developed this kind of departmental paralysis so fast. He has been on the job only a couple of months and already everything is perfect.

From the very beginning when these cases were first raised we have had a series of explanations, excuses and denials and even today when the minister announced he was appointing eminent counsel to look into this matter he still denied that anything was wrong was done. I suggest to him that if nothing was wrong there was no need to have an inquiry. The very fact that he has authorized an inquiry indicates that the minister finally realizes that possibly there is something which needs to be investigated. While we welcome the inquiry, I must say that I for one have a good deal of doubt about it because I am not quite clear how it will work. I am not clear whether Mr. Sedgwick is going to hold hearings, where he is going to hold the hearings or whether they are going to be held in public. I am not quite clear whether there is going to be a complete record kept of everything said, whether all the people involved are going to be heard, whether counsel for these people who have had difficulties are going to be heard, whether the press is going to be allowed to be present.

If the minister had taken the advice of the people on this side of the house who asked the questions a week ago and talked to the people who made the complaints, talked to Mr. Hooper and the lawyers who acted for these people, we would not be debating this matter today. Probably, we would not have had to have this inquiry.

I should like to raise briefly a couple of matters which the minister mentioned this afternoon when he made his statement. First of all, he left the impression with me, and I am sorry I have not the text of his address before me, that he was suggesting that possibly a good deal of the trouble was due to the fact subversive organizations are involved in these illegal entries. This is a rather serious charge. I think it ought not to be made by the minister unless he is prepared to give to the house and the country some kind of evidence of what has happened, some evidence upon which he bases this statement. If he does not, Mr. Chairman, certainly the members on this side of the house are going to treat that kind of suggestion with a great deal of scepticism.

Then, I was concerned about the minister's statement, which he has made again and again, not about whether people have been told that they could have legal aid, but his assumption that they could have legal aid, but that it was their responsibility to get that legal aid. I want to suggest that the people who are here legally, especially those about whom we have heard, are very often people who cannot speak the language. They have not got many friends and certainly have not got much money. Even if they are told they can have counsel, I think it is expecting too much to expect them to be able to get counsel.

I have before me, Mr. Chairman, the minutes of an inquiry held in the case of Mr. George Sarris on March 31, 1964. I should like to read one question put by the inquiry officer to Mr. Sarris, so the minister will understand what I am talking about. I quote:

> If you so desire and at your own expense, you have the right to obtain and to be represented by counsel at this hearing.

I want to suggest that that is not good enough. A person charged with being here illegally, either at an inquiry or during court proceedings, should be able to get counsel, and he should not have to pay for it himself. I have before me, Mr. Chairman, the transcript of a court hearing in which four people, including Mr. Sarris and Mr. Thomadakis were charged—I intend to discuss this case later. This hearing was on April 10. I have the transcript here and not once during the course of these hearings were these four accused informed by the person representing the department, or the magistrate, that they were entitled to get counsel through legal aid. They were not told that if they were not ready to go ahead they could have their case postponed until they could make arrangements to get counsel. Not one of these hearings could have taken more than two or three minutes, because each one covers one page of typing, double spaced.

This afternoon the minister said that when a criminal charge is laid it is no longer the responsibility of the department. I want to take issue with that completely. I am not so concerned about the letter of the law. I believe every person is entitled to counsel. In no case where you have an indictable offence should a person appear without counsel. In a case where you are dealing with immigrants who do not have friends, do not have people to represent them, I think it is the responsibility of the department to make sure that counsel is obtained. Whether the department pays for this service or somebody else pays for it is, in my opinion, a very small matter.

I am glad we are going to have an inquiry because, after all the weeks we have been discussing this subject, after listening to the long statement that the minister made, I still do not know to whom he spoke. He told us that everything was okay, but did he speak to anybody outside the department? Did he speak to the people who have been held for long periods of time, who have been taken to the court, charged and sentenced? Did he speak to their counsel? I think the story which counsel for the people concerned tell is entirely different from the story which the minister tells. I am not saying that the minister came into the house today or any other day and deliberately misrepresented the facts. I am suggesting however, Mr. Chairman, that there comes a time when any minister should go outside of his department so that he can get the whole story.

There are some questions which I think have to be answered, and perhaps some of the answers are in the documents the minister tabled today. I think we have to know how many people are now being held or were held in Toronto and in Montreal. I think if we look into the situation in Montreal we will find it is not much different from the situation in Toronto. How many people were held or are being held for more than a month before their hearings? What opportunity did they have to get counsel? I think it is important to look into the charge which has been made by my friend, the member for Greenwood, who has had a lot of experience in this field. He has said that very often people are told, off the record, during the inquiry, that of course they can have counsel but it really won't do them much good; they might as well get on with the job. It is a very serious thing, I think, and we need to look into this matter. Were they told not only that they could have counsel but there was counsel available without cost to them? I do not think so, because there is nothing in the transcript which would indicate this. Were they, in fact, told it would do little good to get counsel? I will come back to that a little later. Were they told it may go easier for them if they pleaded guilty? All these charges have been made either by counsel representing the people concerned or by others. These are very serious charges and I certainly hope Mr. Sedgwick will get some of the answers.

There are other things we need to know. Why are these people held in the Don jail? After all, this is looked upon as a prosperous land, a land of milk and honey and the people from the have-not countries want to come here. We cannot blame them. I am not saying we should allow all those who enter illegally to stay. However, if they come here, why do they have to be held in the Don jail or Bordeaux jail until their hearing is held? I understand that some of these cases take quite a long time. It has been suggested that while they are in jail awaiting their hearings they are treated just like anybody else in jail, it is assumed they are already guilty, although the trial has not yet been held and very often not even an inquiry has been held. I am told they cannot have visitors more often than a couple of times a week. I am told that the number of letters they can write is severely restricted. It seems to me this is completely unfair. It seems to me that these are questions which need to be looked into and looked into thoroughly.

Now a serious charge has been made. It has been asserted by a number of people, including a minister, Father Koulouras, who was friendly with many of these Greek seamen, that until recently when the department found people who were believed to be here illegally, a hearing was held and, if it was decided they were here illegally, they were deported quickly, and that was the end of the case. Father Koulouras claims that the whole business of charging people with a criminal offence in these circumstances began very recently. Until the practice was changed, the men apprehended were allowed bail until their cases were heard. Now Father Koulouras says, the men are being charged, which means, of course, that they have to stay here longer while they are being brought to trial, and, if found guilty, they are sentenced to periods ranging from one month to five months in jail.

I want to know what is the purpose of charging these people and sentencing them to jail. Is it true, as is being said openly in Toronto, that the department has reached the conclusion that there are a large number of people here illegally? The figure which has been mentioned—and I have heard it mentioned in more than one place—is 700. The department, it is suggested, has estimated that there are more than 700 people here illegally; the administration wishes to set an example and wants to discourage these people from coming here illegally. Is this why, instead of being deported immediately, they are being charged and sent to prison?

Another serious charge has been made by a number of these people and I hope Mr. Sedgwick will look into this. Several of them have said—I will not go into detail today, but newspaper reports have quoted them—that they were told while being questioned that if they would tell the department the names of people they know are here illegally, so that the department could apprehend those people, they would not be charged and, therefore, they would not have to serve a sentence before being deported. This charge has been made by a number of the people concerned. I can only describe it as blackmail, and I think that blackmail, whether carried on by a government or by an individual, is completely wrong and ought to be stopped. I do hope Mr. Sedgwick will look into this matter —that he will get to the bottom of it, and if this kind of tactic has been used, it will be stopped immediately.

This may be threshing old straw, but this is the kind of case which led to the Minister of Justice saying that he intended to institute an inquiry. I wish to deal, in fact, with a few of these cases which have come to light. A great deal has been made of the Hooper case. Maybe the minister feels he has been hard done by in the columns of the Toronto Telegram because he is a Liberal, and the Telegram is a Conservative newspaper. Well, I have before me an article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press. If there is any newspaper which will find more reason to pat a Liberal government—any Liberal government—or any minister on the back, I do not know of one.

Mr. Knowles: It does not exist.

Mr. Orlikow: I wish to quote from this article which appeared in the Winnipeg Free Press on June 1, 1964. It is headed: "Disregard of Human Rights" and it was written by Maurice Western. I wish to quote a few paragraphs just to show the minister that this affair disturbed not only members of the house and not only the Conservative papers; it became a matter of concern to everybody. I quote:

> The minister made the point that Mr. Hooper was originally held in custody not only on the immigration count but also because of a charge brought by Toronto police. This was, however, withdrawn on March 15 and it is therefore indisputable that the department was solely responsible for his confinement in the Don jail for 72 days. Nor can the previous three weeks be left entirely out of the reckoning, for this time was presumably available to officials in preparing their case.
> From March 15 onwards Mr. Hooper was held "undue the authority of the Immigration Act" and on March 23 the inquiry got under way. Because of his refusal to answer questions the inquiry officer adjourned the hearing to April 7 when other evidence was produced to establish his unlawful entry. Mr. Hooper was ordered deported and did not appeal.
> But he was not then deported. Instead he was kept in Don jail for another 45 days while the department considered whether or not it would lay the charge which was ultimately to be dropped. Mr. Favreau on Thursday frankly conceded that there had been "certain delays" which had been "occasioned in the administrative machinery in processing this matter."

Later the paper says:

Why was Mr. Hooper without counsel while all these administrative processes were moving majestically to the climax of May 22 and anticlimax of May 25? Speaking of the situation on March 23, Mr. Favreau told the house on Thursday that "he had been given ample opportunity to retain counsel if he wished to do so".

Further on, the article states:

This does not, however, throw much light on the circumstances. Mr. Hooper is a Negro, probably of limited means. Was he aware that he could obtain legal aid? Was he assisted in finding it or left to his own resources? Mr. Brewin, a lawyer of integrity and wide experience in immigration cases claims that it is "the practice of special inquiry officers to notify people of their entitlement to the right of counsel and then tell them it is not worth their while having a counsel because in effect a decision has been made before the hearing".

Mr. Hooper's charges may be quite baseless. The fact is, however, that they cannot be tested because after these incredible delays the charge was made, only to be swiftly dropped in favour of deportation. Suspicions linger and they will not quickly be dispelled if Mr. Tremblay persists in the attitude that whatever is departmental is right. Mr. Favreau did, however, make a more favourable impression with his assurance that steps will be taken to prevent the repetition of such an occurrence in future; an assurance to which the ministry will certainly be held.

And this is from the most Liberal newspaper in Canada.

I hope the minister will reconsider some of the remarks he made on May 28 about the Hooper case when he said—and I quote:

I would state, therefore, that Mr. Hooper was held prisoner under Canadian laws and enjoyed all the privileges granted to a Canadian resident even though he is not a Canadian citizen.

If the only rights Canadians have are the kind of rights which Mr. Hooper got, then God help all of us.

I wish to deal, now, for a few moments with what I thought was a most moving plea sent to the Ontario supreme court by Mr. Thomadakis who was held in the Don jail for a long period of time. I read a few paragraphs so that they will be on the record for the future when this case is forgotten—and when more cases of this kind may occur, unless the minister takes this situation more seriously than he has done until now. I quote from the statement this man made on March 3, 1964:

On March 3, 1964, I was arrested without warrant by immigration officers. I was very co-operative an help them as much as I could. Had I want to escape I could have as I was given opportunities by being left alone.

However, around 3.30 p.m. on March 3rd I was taken to Don jail. I was not advised of any rights and not allowed to call lawyer. I did not know what I was charged with and did not make an appearance in court or before any authority.

Two days later the immigration come to see me and question me about how I come to Canada. They did not tell me any rights or that I could have lawyer.

I do not speak English very well and the jail authorities did not help me to understand my position. On 3rd or 4th of April the R.C.M.P. came and tell me why I was arrested for the first time.

Here again we have a period of five or six weeks:

On April 9, 1964, I got a letter saying I would go to court next day. I had not chance to get in touch with anyone as the letter came in afternoon and jail regulations say I must put in requests in the morning.

No one told about legal aid. I have great trouble explaining things to the guards and everyone says it doesn't matter. I went to court on April 10 (38 days after my arrest) for the first time.

I had no lawyer and interpreter for immigration told me to plead guilty and I go home.

I want to interject for a minute and point this out to the minister. This is what Mr. Thomadakis says; I repeat it:

—interpreter for immigration told me to plead guilty and I go home, If I make trouble and plead not guilty I go back to jail until the case comes up again and maybe I get a heavy prison sentence. I plead guilty but I still do not understand.

Even if Mr. Thomadakis is not completely right, the very fact that an illegal immigrant, 21 years of age, who does not know the language, thinks this is what happened to him is, I think, an insult to the kind of justice which this country provides. The minister on a number of occasions has said that he checked into this particular case and that this did not happen. I asked the minister—and Hansard will show this was done three weeks or more ago—to contact the lawyer for Mr. Thomadakis, and the minister rejected my suggestion. I was not as squeamish as the minister; I called Mr. Mintz, who has acted for a number of these people, and here are the notes that I made of that conversation. Mr. Mintz said that he got in touch with the interpreter. He said that the interpreter said she told Mr. Thomadakis, "You can plead guilty or you will be found guilty; and if you want to get things over quickly, you had better plead guilty". I am not saying the minister knew this is what the interpreter was saying, but I am saying these whole procedures need to be looked into.

The same day on which Mr. Thomadakis was convicted in court a Mr. Georgios Sarris appeared in the same court.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. gentleman a question? I understand that the hon. gentleman is now speaking of the proceedings before the court; is that right? Was this the interpreter who interpreted to that immigrant before the court, or is the hon. member referring to the proceedings before the board of inquiry?

Mr. Orlikow: This is the interpreter who acted in court. What I said was that Mr. Mintz quoted her as advising Mr. Thomadakis to this effect. It was not said in court; it was said before the court proceedings.

Mr. Favreau: May I put a further question, Mr. Chairman? Is the hon. gentleman aware that the interpreter in court is an officer of the court and of the province; he is not an officer of the immigration department or any other department of the federal government. Is the hon. member also aware that normally if a judge is not sure whether a plea of guilty is motivated by the proper factors, it is he who normally must inquire into the reason for the plea of guilty, and the judge is free to accept or refuse the plea of guilty. But one thing that ought to be made clear is that from the moment a person is before a court under the jurisdiction of the province, the officers of the court are within the authority of the province, and not of the federal government; and the proceedings, as far as the plea of guilty is concerned, are within the authority of the judge himself. It might make some difference.

Mr. Orlikow: I do not know what difference it would make to Mr. Thomadakis or to Mr. Sarris whether the people they were appearing before represented the federal government, the immigration department, the Department of Justice or the provincial government. In the final analysis, the end result was the same; they wound up in jail. I do not think it makes a hoot of difference who was responsible. I am sure that the Minister of Justice, who has a great number of tasks to perform, has seen this transcript; but if he has not, I will be glad to send it over to him. This is a transcript of the proceedings in which these four people were concerned. And I repeat what I said earlier, namely that the whole proceedings could not have taken more than 15 minutes. Nobody—not the representative of the department, not the magistrate or anybody else asked these people if they understood what was going on. Nobody asked them if they had counsel. Nobody asked them if they knew they could have counsel.

What difference does it make whose responsibility it was I have said before, and I say it again—and perhaps we will have more success with the Minister of Justice than we have had with the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration up till now—that I think it is our responsibility to make sure these people are properly represented. We should take a leaf from the decisions made recently by the United States supreme court, to the effect that every person in every case involving an indictable offence is entitled to counsel, and if they do not have counsel they cannot get a fair trial. I think we should stop splitting these legal hairs; I am not too concerned about that aspect of the matter and I will leave this to my legal friends, who do a very good job. But I am interested in seeing that these people receive some kind of justice, because they did not get it and they are still not getting it.

There has been some question about how old Mr. Sarris was, but I think it is now established that he was not more than 17 years old when he appeared before the magistrate. He was 15 years old when he committed the offence of entering this country illegally. He was 16 when he was apprehended. He was, as I say, the ripe age of 17 when he was convicted. I wonder what purpose there was in giving Mr. Sarris a jail sentence. Could he not have been simply deported, because he was guilty? He pleaded guilty. This would have solved that problem. But no, he had to get a jail sentence.

The minister said on one occasion that there were only six people who had been held more than 30 days. I am speaking from memory now. The Telegram, on the basis of information given to them by Mr. Mintz, who has been counsel for many of these people, had a list of about 22 people. I hope the correct information is in those documents which the minister tabled today.

I want to deal with one more matter, Mr. Chairman, and then finish by reading from a letter which the minister received. I do this to show that this kind of thing cannot help but bring our kind of justice into contempt. This case was reported in the Toronto newspapers on June 16 in which three people were brought before the magistrate and were permitted to go free until their trial, on bail of $500. The three people are Nick Polycratis, Peter Theodorou and Steve Kafouros. Bail was put up for them by a Mr. Bassel, acting on behalf of the Greek-Canadian congress. Each of the three men was given his clothing and taken upstairs. But in each case the immigration department still had a hold order in force—so back down to the cells they went—

The Chairman: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired.

Mr. Orlikow: I will only be about two minutes, Mr. Chairman. I wonder if I could have unanimous consent to finish my remarks.

The Chairman: Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: In these three cases, back down to the cells they went, to take off their own clothing and put on the jail uniform again. I am sure the Minister of Justice could again read quite a lecture on how they were given bail and how these were proceedings against them in a criminal court; but the provisions of the Immigration Act, which we are going to discuss on another occasion, do not give the minister or the department the right to hold people in this way, and I am sure the minister thinks these people must have been very confused. I am sure they did not know which side was up by the time the magistrate had finished with them. To be told by a magistrate that they were free to go on bail, and then to be told they could not go until hours or days later, must certainly have been confusing.

I want to finish up by putting on the record a letter sent to the minister by Mr. Mintz and Mr. Weisdorf, both of whom work for the legal aid organization in Toronto and have had a good deal more experience with this kind of case than I. Their experience has been both hard and bitter. I will just quote a few paragraphs from the letter which they sent to the minister, which I think summarizes the situation better than I could:

> We request an admission from Mr. Tremblay that he recognizes the excesses carried out under the harsh, dictatorial provisions of the Immigration Act by his administrative officers.
> Once this is conceded, the government should convene a royal commission to investigate the prevention of administrative excess in the future —either in the form of an amended Immigration Act, or in a uniform code of procedure for all administrative officers and tribunals, or in the institution of the office of ombudsman.
> The abuses which the legal aid department has recently brought to light are certainly not limited to the department of immigration, but occur on every level of industry and government.
> Wherever employees of any organization are given untrammelled power, unchecked by the judiciary and hidden from the light of public opinion, injustice is bound to occur.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Chairman, I will end on those words to the minister and I hope that he will pay some attention to them in the next few weeks.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, it is not my intention to deliver a lecture for the benefit of the hon. member for Winnipeg North, first of all because I am not too good at that sort of thing and I am afraid that having not taught at university for quite a few years I have probably lost touch with teaching. But one thing I do want to say, which is in no way intended to do away with any responsibility that any federal department may have, is that because of the division of responsibilities—I will not say powers, because I hate the use of that word under the British North America Act—between the federal government and the provincial governments it so happens that in the course of a few weeks or months one and the same person has to cope with authorities which in certain phases are federal and in certain phases are provincial.

The hon. gentleman was referring a few minutes ago to what happened to one person whose case went before the courts. The reason I raise the matter is because the interpreter involved was surely not a federal officer, and could not be given instructions by the federal Department of Citizenship and Immigration or the Department of Justice. Therefore, it was up to the court to decide whether or not, in view of the fact that this detainee was not perfectly possessed of either the French or English language, which are the two official languages of this country, he was not totally conversant with the consequences of his decision in deciding to plead guilty.

All I mean by that is that in a series of facts and circumstances one must try to ascribe responsibility to the proper authority. I do not mean to say that there was any wrong act or action on the part of the provincial authorities; I am not the judge of that. But surely it is important when dealing with a man who at certain moments falls within the jurisdiction of provincial authorities and at other moments falls within the jurisdiction of the federal authorities, not to charge the federal authorities only with the whole of the responsibility because the person concerned happened to have entered Canada illegally and is faced with the application of the Immigration Act.

I should like to give an example of this, and it is a converse example. The administration of justice in the provinces rests with the attorneys general of the provinces. Very often an attorney general, because of a conviction entered in one case, causes the person who has been prosecuted by him and who is condemned to more than two years in prison to be sent a federal penitentiary. From the moment that person enters the federal penitentiary it is surely no more the responsibility of the attorney general of the province to see to it that this man be treated according to standards otherwise applicable while he is within the confines of the penitentiary. It is up to the federal commissioner of penitentiaries and to the latter's subordinate officer to see to it that the proper standards be applied; and I say that from that moment on nobody could say that there is an onus upon that attorney general of the province, he having carried out his duty as attorney general and sent that person to the penitentiary, to see to it that that person in the penitentiary be dealt with according to the provisions of the bill of rights, or otherwise. This does not deny any of the responsibilities which under the federal statutes lie with the appropriate minister of any federal department, including myself.

Both the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and myself have shown to what extent it is important that we must be satisfied in our own minds that we have been or will be discharging in the future our responsibilities in the most complete fashion. This has been proven, if you like, by the appointment of Mr. Sedgwick as counsel as early as last Friday, with the relatively broad terms of reference which were given to him. I mean by this that one must always be careful not to give the impression that all of the evils which might happen to a man must be blamed upon the department which, at one moment in that man's life, happened to have been dealing with him.

On the whole, Mr. Chairman, I must say, and I know the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration shares my view that we are all indebted to the hon. members in this house, because I know this is the only context in which these suggestions must be taken, for their co-operation in directing our attention to certain cases, which of course could not have been brought to the attention of the minister before or were not part of the minister's knowledge before. We should also like to thank them for making suggestions, which illustrates once more the importance of this great institution, the House of Commons, which by the method of questions, remarks, comments or statements, makes for a better and always more human administration, both of justice and the statutes of this country.

Mr. Brewin: Would the minister permit a question. I understand that the minister is recognizing another member who contributed to this debate, and although I should like to take part later in the debate I would like to ask a question now. Although it is true, as he says, that the administration of justice is a provincial responsibility, in cases such as immigration cases where the prosecution is initiated by the department and in which they are responsible to that extent for bringing the immigrant to court, is there any reason the minister can suggest why the department should not take the responsibility of seeing that the immigrant is in fact properly instructed as to his rights, has access to counsel, and has knowledge of the case to be made against him?

Does not the minister think that the good name and reputation of Canada require that the federal department, which initiates these prosecutions of persons for illegal entry into Canada, should also take the responsibility to see the legal proceedings which ensue are such that they are a credit to Canada, rather than the sort of thing we have been hearing about in the last few weeks?

Mr. Favreau: The remark just made by the hon. member corresponds to quite an exact degree with the statement made this afternoon by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, when he said he thought this particular measure was one that deserved very serious and thorough consideration. The only reason I made the remark was because the very act which was charged against one particular officer, that is, the interpreter in the case concerned—which was a positive act—could surely not be controlled at that moment by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration or by the Department of Justice. But I agree we will have to go into this very serious question, the question of the general instructions at the very inception of a case, both to counsel and otherwise.

Mr. Fairweather: Does the Minister of Justice think that, if the federal department of citizenship had provided counsel, any such problem would have arisen with interpreters?

Mr. Favreau: I did not catch the latter part of the question.

Mr. Fairweather: Does this not point up the need for the federal government, through its Department of Citizenship and Immigration, to provide counsel to these citizens, or quasi citizens, so that problems with interpreters will not arise? Do the arguments the minister is using not point up the federal responsibility?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, that would be a strict matter of opinion. I do not think there is responsibility incumbent upon the government, if everybody concerned at all levels performed their duty in a full and complete fashion; but I can only repeat that human beings being what they are, they are susceptible to error, and the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was right in stating this afternoon that this was a matter to which he was bent on giving serious consideration.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, some time ago, I was surprised to learn that an important plant in the city of Joliette, that of the Consolidated Textile, which provides jobs to quite a few family heads, had decided to put aside its $3 million expansion project and transfer it to Alexandria, in the province of Ontario. That plant, which is already in operation in Joliette, was to add to its present establishment a weaving and dyeing plant which would have employed more than 200 persons.

The city of Joliette and the province of Quebec are losing this building project valued at $3 million, because the company would rather carry it out in an area designated as economically weak by the federal government, to benefit from tax incentives, that is, tax exemptions and benefits to be gained therefrom. That policy was announced by the federal government and particularly by the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury).

In the Joliette area, there are already over 4,000 unemployed persons. As Joliette is not designated as a depressed area according to federal government standards, it follows that the province of Quebec and the city of Joliette are losing an important factory which employed more than 200 people.

I protest on behalf of the people of the county of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who surely do not deserve such punishment from the government. The people of my constituency pay taxes just as the people of any other constituency in the country, and I believe that this decision of the government to designate certain areas in the country as depressed areas, where factories benefit from tax exemptions, is detrimental to the economy of the Joliette region.

Mr. Chairman, several members are surprised by the revolution which is smouldering at the present time in French Canada and more especially in the province of Quebec. I can tell you that I am surprised that such a revolution, or unrest, did not take place 40 or 50 years ago. One of the reasons why the province of Quebec is the setting for that unrest is certainly that, from the economic viewpoint, it lags behind all the others. Therefore, the Quebec people want to make up for lost time and they are trying to find a formula to improve their economy.

Let me point out that the standard of living of the Quebec citizen is 10 per cent lower than that of the average Canadian and 27 per cent lower than that of the Ontario citizen.

We barely control 5 per cent of the economic activity of Canada, while our ethnic group represents 29 per cent of the population. In the province of Quebec itself, our group forms about 82.6 per cent of the population, but only controls 10 per cent of the economic activity, while we hold only 20 per cent of the key positions.

Mr. Chairman, about 40 per cent of the unemployed in Canada live in Quebec and the average income per capita in 1963 amounted approximately to $1,700 while it reached $2,000 in Ontario and $2,600 in the United States. While France and Belgium experienced heavy losses during the last world war, the average income per capita was $1,750 and $1,850.

Mr. Chairman, I can go on. The average income of the Quebec farmer is less than $1,200 per year.

In view of this situation the people of Quebec are justified in being concerned and in getting agitated so as to stir public opinion.

As for the federal government, the province of Quebec does not get its fair share. As a matter of fact, it only has 11 per cent of the railways built in Canada, and the federal government has cancelled the proposed building of a railway in the Gaspé peninsula, which would surely have provided a means of restoring economy in that part of our province.

On the federal level, French speaking Canadians do not get their fair share within the federal civil service. French speaking Canadians must be bilingual, whereas the other element in our country only has to know one language.

In the province of Quebec, the rights of the minorities are respected. As a matter of fact, the English speaking minority enjoys the same rights, in the field of education, as the French speaking majority, whereas in most of the other provinces, the French speaking minority does not share equal rights with the English speaking majority.

The province of Quebec has contributed greatly to our country's development. It never lagged behind and, during the last world war, Quebec gave more soldiers, more of its children, to the Canadian army, proportionately speaking, than the other provinces. It did its share not only in men but also in money for peace.

Moreover, it must be remembered that from 1942 to 1947, Ottawa received $2,258,381,000 from Quebec and gave it back only $103 million. That shows, therefore, that the province of Quebec also did its war effort. It sacrificed a large share of its rights to enable the federal government to get the necessary income for its war effort and the maintenance of peace.

Mr. Chairman, the St. Jean Baptiste societies recently held an important convention in the province of Quebec. They adopted rather strong, energetic and categorical resolutions concerning the future of our country. Now, they feel that the time has come not only to revise our constitution, but to call all the provinces to a conference in order to find a definite solution and to give recognition to the existence of two free nations, both of which would carry out their destiny while remaining closely associated. In other words, Mr. Chairman, they would be in favour of convening a federal-provincial conference in the future to consider the possibility of setting up two national states if the majority of the people from Quebec—

Mr. Lamontagne: And two parties.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean (Mr. Lamontagne) just made a remark which I did not hear. I would be very happy if he would repeat it.

Mr. Lamontagne: And two parties.

Mr. Pigeon: Perhaps the hon. member for Outremont-St. Jean helped, by his centralizing theories, the change and the revolution which is going on in the province of Quebec. And everybody knows what the elite of that province thinks of his new brilliant formula, co-operative federalism. People know what Mr. René Lévesque and many citizens of the province of Quebec and even of the country think of it.

Mr. Lamontagne: Even the member for Three Rivers.

Mr. Pigeon: And it is probably this lucky find on the part of the Secretary of State, which induced the federation of the St. Jean Baptiste societies to draw this conclusion that it would be preferable if there were two associate states in Canada instead of a single federal state.

Mr. Chairman, I am always surprised to hear the English speaking members in this house wonder about the province of Quebec. They should not be worried, and if there is presently a revolution in the province of Quebec, this definitely concerns the inhabitants of the province of Quebec. I do not say that the inhabitants of the other provinces should not have a look at what goes on in the province of Quebec, but if the inhabitants of the other provinces and my English speaking colleagues really want to work in the interests of confederation, they simply have to advise their provincial governments to follow the example set by the province of Quebec in its handling of the English speaking minority in that province.

A great uneasiness prevailing in Canada at the present time certainly comes from failure to recognize our rights in regard to language and religious teaching in the provinces other than the province of Quebec.

Mr. Chairman, reference is made to national unity. People want a strong nation, but two bills are introduced in the house asking us to accept at the same time a maple leaf flag and the union jack.

Mr. Chairman, such a formula is not acceptable for the people of the province of Quebec, who want only one distinctive flag. On that flag, they want no symbol of the past, no fleur-de-lis, but they want a national distinctive flag, no matter if it has one or three maple leaves.

It is not that the province of Quebec does not hold the union jack or the red ensign in some veneration, but it will always object to the choice of a symbol other than a national distinctive flag.

Mr. Chairman, in two days, the French Canadians will celebrate their national day. Let me read an advertisement published in the newspaper Le Devoir this morning and paid for by Henry Morgan Company Limited, a large English store in the province of Quebec:

—and finally, since the sun was married with the fleur-de-lis as a modern sign of the French renewal in Quebec, it is no longer permitted to doubt, not of our survival, but of our living which is already radiant, brilliant and intensive.

Let us think of the 1,200 immigrants of the early days of the colony who developed to the point that they make up a people of some 5 or 6 million French Canadians forming a young, dynamic and forward-looking nation. French Canada, a living reality.

Mr. Chairman, in my opinion there are two nations in Canada, and I believe that French Canadians are numerous enough in this country to be considered a nation. This is what I believe, and I hope that the government will, as soon as possible, examine the important suggestions made by the St. Jean Baptiste society of the province of Quebec.

Canada should fully understand that we have to reach a compromise, to remake our Canadian constitution and, if necessary, in order to save Canada from annexation by the United States, recognize two associated states, which might have their own responsibilities and co-operate in the interest of this country's economy.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm a question?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Chairman, if I understood the hon. member rightly, he said that we, in Quebec, do not want to preserve any symbol of our past. Those are his exact words—

Mr. Pigeon: Excuse me—

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Would you agree to the French language—which is also a symbol of our past—being completely abandoned, and a new language being spoken in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I think that the hon. member for Lake St. John understood me. First of all, the French language is certainly not a symbol. When I was speaking of symbols, I meant flags. I said that the majority, at least 99 per cent of the people in the province of Quebec want a distinctive flag without any trace of the past. That is what they want, and that is what I said.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, I want to return to the subject of immigration. I regard it as one of very great importance because, although this is not always recognized, the good name and reputation of Canada throughout the world hinges to some extent upon the way that we in Canada through our immigration department treat those who come from all parts of the world. We know that they come to Canada from every part of the world at the present time. Very often they return to those countries, and the ideas they get of the administration of Canadian justice, the fairness of our laws, the consideration, kindness and understanding of the officials that they meet, are the hallmarks by which they judge Canada as a whole. Therefore, I make no apology for returning to this subject although I hope not to repeat what has been said earlier in the debate or to repeat some of the matters I have discussed on other occasions.

First of all, I should like to say at once that so far as I am concerned I do not propose to take part in any attack upon the minister or upon the staff which advises him. It is natural, as has been said, that in his department he should be subjected to a great deal of criticism. Personally, I have found both this minister and other ministers considerate, careful and conscientious about the individual cases that are drawn to their attention. I have absolutely no complaint whatever to make about the individual approach of the minister to these problems.

Having said that, I want to say at once that basically in the administration of our immigration, the system is rotten. I use the words "rotten system"—they may be strong words—advisedly and carefully. I must confess my disappointment that the minister, in making the announcement he has made, was not able to tell this house that certain positive steps were going to be taken. I appreciate the fact that the advice of an eminent lawyer such as Mr. Sedgwick will be helpful to the department. Knowing Mr. Sedgwick, and knowing the department, I hope that out of that advice will come certain worth-while things. However, no advice from a lawyer is going to substitute for the department itself deciding to go to the very root of the problem of immigration by deciding whether or not the would-be immigrant is, in fact, to have what parliament itself has said is required, namely a fair hearing under the act. I have said the system is a rotten system because the basic right to know the case that is made against you, the basic right to be able to defend yourself against hidden aspersions, is denied in practice.

The Immigration Act provides, as the minister well knows, a series of sections that entitle the would-be immigrant to a hearing.

My friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North, has spoken about the need for having counsel. I have been counsel in hundreds of these cases. I tell the minister and I tell anybody who wants to listen, that the right to counsel itself is meaningless unless counsel, by some system that can be evolved can find out what is the basis of the objection to the admission of the person in question or, alternatively, why they are now being put out of the country. As long as we have what I can only describe as "phony" reasons such as, "You have not got a visa" or "You have not got a medical certificate", then an individual will not have a fair hearing. The department says: We will not tell you why; those are the reasons.

I do not know if the minister has at his fingertips how many immigration cases have been disposed of out of those 30 a week, on the grounds that "You do not have a visa" or "You do not have a medical certificate". I suspect the very large percentage of cases are being disposed of on these grounds. I say to the minister and to the house, therefore, that those grounds are virtually meaningless, because if you then inquire why the the person has not got a visa, why they refuse him a visa, they will not tell you. There may be some sort of police record that has been secured from the country of origin. There may be some health condition about which you do not know, which has been revealed on a medical examination. There may be innumerable reasons, good, bad or indifferent. However, behind this screen of reasons that are not given, any sort of discriminatory reason that an individual officer may have could operate to keep a would-be immigrant out of the country.

Does the minister feel any sense of justice? Could I feel any sense of justice if I wanted to bring my brother to this country from Italy or wherever he may be when I am told he cannot come because he does not have a visa? Why has he not got a visa? The department says, "We will not let you". I do not know what the reason is, but they do not tell you the real reason for not admitting a person. I say, therefore, that until the immigration department or Mr. Sedgwick, or anybody else, make up their minds to the fact that those who apply for admission to this country or who wish to bring their relatives into this country are entitled to a sort of basic hearing, the situation will not be rectified. I am not asking for a legal hearing where the evidence is disclosed in detail, but only for the basic elements of a fair hearing. So long as these elements are not conceded, then the minister will continue to be subjected to all sorts of criticisms, because the basic, elementary rule of justice does not apply to these would-be immigrants.

The reason I say it should be applied—I know there are difficulties—is that it would first of all enable the immigrant and his family to recognize that they have had justice. In addition, it would enable them, in many cases, to dispose of the objections that have been made. I have been fortunate enough in some cases in which I represented an immigrant to be told by the minister the reason for the objection, after all the proceedings were over. The minister has been good enough to say, "Well, this is the reason". Then, I have had a chance to look into the reason and find out that the reason was not of great substance. I have been able to persuade the minister to change his mind. This is fine; but this course is not available to the average person. This right to meet the objection is not available except in cases where the person is able to get a member of parliament or a qualified lawyer to take up his case.

It looks as though it were ten o'clock, Mr. Chairman. I have a few observations to make and I would prefer to make them tomorrow, —if it is ten o'clock.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader if we continue with interim supply tomorrow?

Mr. Favreau: In answer to the question by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I must say that tomorrow we will try to complete the debate on interim supply, and as soon as that debate is completed we will resume the debate on the flag resolution.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS—REPORTED SPEECH IN BRITAIN BY ARNOLD HEENEY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on November 28, 1963, we find that on page 5199 of Hansard the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) is reported as saying this during a debate on external affairs:

> The nurturing of one of our cornerstones of foreign policy, the commonwealth, is a basic feature of our external policies. In the past few years membership has been progressively enlarged until today it embraces 16 sovereign states. The majority now are in Asia and in Africa. It is because of the special insight which the commonwealth gives us into the new forces which have emerged in the post-war era that we most value this unique association of states. The commonwealth practice of continuing consultation among members on matters of mutual concern is especially valuable in a world in which race and colour have too often tended to be divisive forces.

We can well imagine the minister making that statement with the organ-like clarity of voice which prompted one Texan visitor in the galleries on one occasion to go out and ask a member of the protective staff: "What is the name of that cathedral?"

In any event, I was horrified, on Friday, to pick up a copy of the Ottawa Citizen and see on the front page an article entitled "Commonwealth slipping—Heeney". It was written by Charles King and it went as follows:

> London—Canada's former ambassador in Washington today rejected the commonwealth as a "meaningful" political reality.
> He argued: "Whatever the future of the commonwealth, it can no longer be centred on London, nor, for the great majority of its members, clustered round the monarchy.
> Just two weeks before commonwealth prime ministers gather in London for an important conference, Arnold Heeney delivered his blockbuster to a British audience assembled by the Ditchley foundation, which calls itself "an active educational centre for British-American understanding."

Then the chairman of the Canadian section of the international joint commission had this to say—and it is in quotes:

> It seems to me unprofitable...to place undue emphasis nowadays on friendship and special relationship within the commonwealth. The winds of change...have laid bare the dry and brittle roots of much cherished doctrine.
> It is obvious enough that the commonwealth cannot recover nor achieve any meaningful degree of political cohesion. Nor does it seem likely that our economic relations will become much closer.

Now, in view of the minister's announcement of this government's policy with respect to the commonwealth, and after reading this article by such an important civil servant—a man who, I am informed, has never been known to express a single opinion on anything outside the minister's office previously, except on the weather—I was moved to ask the hon. gentleman this question: "Would the minister inform the house if that statement is a reflection of government policy and, if not, what right has this servant of the public to be making statements in contradiction of government policy?"

This matter was also brought to my attention by a number of other people who were certainly shocked at this statement by Mr. Arnold Heeney as reported from London, in contradiction to the attitude taken by this government toward the commonwealth. I am sure all of us here take strong exception to Mr. Heeney's opinion with respect to the present and future value of the commonwealth of nations of which we are a member.

I do not know how much more time I have. I have a number of authorities here, but I shall not have a chance to quote them. However, I have brought one particularly interesting authority with me and I should like to read briefly from page 12 of Lecture Series No. 2. This is from a lecture delivered at the University of British Columbia:

> The official does not make decisions. His responsibilities fall into two categories. First, it is his duty to inform and advise the political authority—usually the minister of his department. In the words of A.D.P. Heeney, himself one of the most distinguished of Canadian civil servants: "Decision is the prerogative of the minister."

Now I am quoting Mr. Heeney against Mr. Heeney. He goes on to say:

> But the expert must stick to his last. He must appreciate the limitations of his office. He must appreciate the limitations of his own expert knowledge. He has neither the experience nor the special kind of wisdom—let alone the authority—to govern.
> The second duty of the civil servant is to carry out the tasks imposed by the policy of the government, that is, to administer the law. President Cleveland summarized it in the single sentence: "Public officers are the servants and agents of the people, to execute the laws which the people have made."

I have drawn this matter to the attention of the house. I see my time has practically expired. I look forward to an explanation from the Secretary of State for External Affairs in answer to the questions I have raised.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman referred a few moments ago to the most recent statement in this house of government policy with regard to the commonwealth. From that statement it is clear, of course, that there is the fullest appreciation by the government, as there is by this house, of the importance of the commonwealth; and this will be highlighted at the commonwealth prime ministers' conference next month. While there have been changes in the commonwealth, these changes do not in any way detract from the essential quality that makes it a valuable institution in this day of interdependence. There can be no doubt, then—as we are basically all agreed in this house and, as I think we are in most parts of this country—that the commonwealth is a vital institution.

I have not found in the statement of Mr. Heeney, which I have before me, anything warranting the conclusion that he does not share this opinion of the commonwealth's importance, although he does note that there are revolutionary processes with which all of us might not agree.

It was only late this morning that I first received the complete text of the Ditchley foundation lecture which Mr. Heeney delivered on June 19. The text is 45 pages long, and I hope that the hon. gentleman will take the opportunity of reading every word of it so that any isolated parts can be related to the main thesis. Upon publication of an article in the Daily Express of June 20 Mr. Heeney sent the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) a telegram in which he described the Daily Express article as "distorted and misleading and false in the impression it conveys". Among other things, that report describes Mr. Heeney as a former Canadian ambassador to London, which of course is incorrect on two grounds. In London we have a high commissioner, not an ambassador; and Mr. Heeney has never held that post. Mr. Heeney, in defence of his own position, calls the report "a distortion of what I had to say in a lecture of some 45 minutes from a carefully prepared text on the subject 'Friends and relations: A Canadian perspective on Anglo-American affairs' ". Mr. Heeney's telegram also says, "You are fully aware of my attachment to the commonwealth, and in fact this emerges from the text itself." I note that at page 12 of the text Mr. Heeney says:

> So, we Canadians assert a very special relationship with you in Britain, one hallowed by blood and treasured at every stage of our development from colony to nation, embracing within its friendly circle many principal elements in our national life, crowned by the monarchy itself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret that I have to interrupt the hon. minister, but his time has expired.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 23, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. GRÉGOIRE—REMARKS IN DEBATE ON JUNE 22

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege with regard to the rather harsh remarks I made last night against the civil servants of the national revenue office in Quebec city.

In reading over Hansard this morning I noticed a remark which escaped me last night and that is why I rise today on a question of privilege.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) is reported to have made that remark. He said, as reported on page 4579 of Hansard, English version, left hand column.

> The civil servants are not here to defend themselves. You are being cowardly.

And the Acting Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McIlraith) said then:

> —they cannot reply—to use language in reference to them that could not be used outside the house without incurring the responsibility consequent on such action.

And the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) said:

> Spank him some more.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to say this. I was not being cowardly, I was not using improper language, because I am prepared to repeat outside the house, before the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), the Acting Minister of National Revenue (Mr. McIlraith), the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) and anyone they care to bring along, what I said here; I am ready to repeat my remarks any time outside the house, because I know that I was right in speaking as I did about those civil servants.

If those civil servants cannot defend themselves in the house, I am convinced that the taxpayers are even less able to defend themselves against theft by those income tax inspectors outside the house.

Mr. Lambert: It is even worse.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Fourth report of standing committee on banking and commerce—Mr. Pennell.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STEPS TO DEAL WITH SEASONAL UNEMPLOYMENT DURING COMING WINTER

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Although it is early summer, I should like to make a statement concerning the government's programs to attack seasonal unemployment next winter. While the employment situation has improved over the past year, the problem of seasonal unemployment will be with us again next winter. An announcement of the government's measures to increase winter employment is desirable at this time so as to allow municipalities and the construction industry adequate time to engage in advance planning.

The municipal winter works incentive program which has been so successful in providing additional winter employment at the local level will be continued next winter. The winter house building incentive program, introduced on an experimental basis last winter, was successful beyond all expectations. It will be carried out again during the winter of 1964-65.

Every effort will be made to improve the effectiveness of both the municipal winter works incentive program and the winter house building incentive program for the coming winter, and any modifications which may be desirable in this connection will be announced at a later date. The basic principles on which both these programs operate, however, will not be modified.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): We are happy to hear that the government intends to continue these programs, particularly the municipal winter works program which was started in 1958-59 and which has met with tremendous success year after year. The municipalities have become increasingly aware of the value of this program and are participating more actively each and every winter. As time goes on many more projects are being undertaken under this plan.

We are glad the government have decided to carry it on, and I hope they will continue to expand it in order to help those who would otherwise be seasonally unemployed. I might say in passing that the Secretary of State for External Affairs was one of those who disagreed with this program, but now he is smiling; he is happy about it because it has proved successful.

As far as the house building program is concerned, after only one winter's experience it has yet to be seen whether it will continue its impetus, and we look forward with interest to seeing whether this program will expand or whether it has been only a flash in the pan.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, we greatly appreciate the statement just made by the Minister of Labour (Mr. MacEachen) and the assurance he has given to municipalities and provinces to the effect that the winter works program will be continued and also his intention to increase the assistance provided to stir up housing construction during winter.

However, I should like to call the Minister of Labour's attention to certain conditions prevailing in some areas of our country, so that he may reconsider his decision to curtail the winter works period in the so-called designated areas or in those where severe weather conditions make it practically impossible to carry out some winter works.

I should like also to suggest to the minister that, among the projects that the municipalities can undertake under the provisions of the act concerning winter works incentives, there is the construction of buildings which could be rented by municipalities to small enterprises and secondary industries which cannot themselves put capital in the construction of large buildings. I know that certain municipalities consider erecting buildings which could be rented to agencies and small companies in the province of Quebec and throughout Canada which can produce nothing now but would then be able to produce. I believe that this would help designated areas by giving work to the available manpower and creating employment which could not exist otherwise.

I know that during the winter works period just terminated Quebec received a large share of the amounts made available to the provinces. We are glad to see that for once a piece of legislation permits Quebec to obtain benefits it has never known before.

I commend the government for it, but I must also admit that this legislation had been first introduced by the previous government. It is a good piece of legislation which helps to alleviate unemployment, but we find that unemployment is still our main concern, especially in the province of Quebec where, according to the latest statistics, the largest number of unemployed persons, that is 38 per cent, is to be found.

I think the government, in co-operation with the Quebec government and the municipalities, should find some other solution to improve a situation which is unfavourable to our province, for it is largely responsible for the present difficulties and discontent. I hope the government will take advantage of the summer period to prepare programs to be announced in the fall and which will tend to markedly reduce unemployment.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, of course, the winter works program supplies jobs for the unemployed during the most difficult period.

However, I wonder if the government deserves congratulations or should be made the butt of ridicule, because during the winter works period, steam shovels and bulldozers are left in heated garages or on parking lots, and while the temperature is often 20 or 30 below zero, men are employed on outside work; they have to dig for sewer systems and water works when the ground is frozen. That goes against common sense, against progress.

Mr. Speaker, I remind the government that it would now be possible to find other solutions to unemployment without compelling individuals to work in ditches in winter, when it is very cold, while tractors and steam shovels are left in heated garages.

We should try and find another method, another system; but under our absurd system, I admit that the Minister of Labour could not find another solution to get the men to work. Nevertheless, improvements should be made, as the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) said a while ago.

Last year, we of the Ralliement Créditiste exerted pressures in order to have the winter works period extended in places where the weather is the most severe, so that they could enjoy the advantages provided by the legislation.

[Text]

Mr. Fisher: Carried.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I heard the hon. member for Port Arthur say "carried." I wish to draw to your attention the fact that when it is time to discuss western wheat many hon. members endlessly take the floor and we bear with them, because it is a problem with which their region is faced.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Port Arthur is always discussing problems which do not interest us and we do not interrupt him. Therefore, he should grant us the privilege to deal with the problems we are interested in.

Mr. Fisher: Carried.

Mr. Grégoire: Another observation, Mr. Speaker. The salary of those who carry out winter works is not the same all across the country. In fact, in certain regions or localities it varies from $2 to $2.25 per hour, while in some other places it is $1, $1.15 and $1.25 per hour.

I think that in setting the winter works period for next year, the minister should take steps to standardize the salary all across the country, so that everybody can earn a reasonable pay, that is $2 or $2.25 per hour.

[Text]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour related to his earlier statement. Is the minister aware that housing starts dropped by 9.9 per cent in the month of May last and that this is due to the winter incentive program, as stated by the Canadian builders' association? Is the minister considering any announcement in this regard, or any expansion of the winter works program?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I am aware that in the past winter we had record construction activity in Canada. I am also aware that the doleful predictions made by members of the opposition as to the effect of the winter house building program have not been fulfilled, and that residential activity in Canada at the present time compares favourably with any preceding year, notwithstanding the winter housing program.

Mr. Winkler: It is starting to drop.

[Later:]

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Labour arising out of the statement he made earlier today. In view of the problem that many municipalities had during this last winter in completing by the deadline date some of the projects they undertook under the winter works program, and the consequent heavier load these municipalities had to bear to pay for them, is the minister or the government considering ways and means of allowing completion of certain projects that were under way, and were uncompleted because of inclement weather?

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me this is a question that requires a detailed answer. Would the hon. member put it on the order paper.

CANADA DAY

PROVISION FOR NAME FOR NATIONAL HOLIDAY ON JULY 1

Mr. Jean Chrétien (St. Maurice-Laflèche) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-104, to establish Canada day.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Chrétien: Mr. Speaker, last year, after the celebration of our national day, July 1, several questions were put to the minister in the house concerning the proper designation of that day. In 1946 a bill similar to the one I am introducing now was passed by the House of Commons but was rejected by the Senate. In view of the numerous different designations used from one province to another, the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Cashin) and I felt that it would be appropriate to designate the national day of all Canadians, from sea to sea, Canada day or "Journée du Canada".

THE MINISTRY

NATIONAL REVENUE—APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house would allow me to extend congratulations to the Secretary of State for External Affairs on this, the anniversary of his birthday. We wish him the very best. He shares this day with the Minister of Transport who, if he were here, would be joined in the felicitations from us all. However, even in his absence we wish him the best.

I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the decision yesterday by the people of the Saskatoon constituency not to accept the proferred cabinet position, is the Prime Minister in a position to say when we can expect the appointment of a minister of national revenue so that department may receive the services of a full time minister rather than one who is only in an acting capacity?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been giving a great deal of thought to this for some weeks and I am now in a position to say a decision will be made very shortly.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to a question directed a while ago by the Leader of the Opposition to the Prime Minister as regards the impending appointment of a minister of national revenue.

Does the Prime Minister intend to take into consideration the suggestions made by most of his party backbenchers so as to support the appointment of the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance, the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Benson), as minister of national revenue?

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Has the co-operation gone that far?

HEALTH AND WELFARE

CONSIDERATION OF ROYAL COMMISSION RECOMMENDATIONS BY DOMINION-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister whether any date has been set for the convening of a federal-provincial conference to study the recommendations of the Hall commission on health services.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. As I said yesterday, we in the federal government are studying these recommendations ourselves. As soon as we have come to some preliminary conclusions in regard to them then we shall get in touch with the provinces and try to ascertain what date would be convenient for them to meet us.

Mr. Douglas: As a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister whether the government hopes to be able to call a conference within the six month period in which the commission recommends a conference be called.

Mr. Pearson: Subject to the agreement of the provinces on the date I would hope we could meet within the six months deadline.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the government considered extending an invitation to Sir Guy Powles, the New Zealand ombudsman, when he visits this country in September, to appear before the appropriate committee of the house?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be a good idea, if the committee is sitting at that time.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN NAME OF BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister. Since he has indicated his intention to put the study of repatriation of the Canadian constitution on the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference, could the right hon. Prime Minister suggest that the name of the act be changed? For instance, would he consider the title "Constitutional Act of Canada" to be appropriate for the Canadian constitution?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to decide what we should put in the act before we worry about the title; but I did say, and I repeat it, that at the next federal-provincial conference in Charlottetown I would hope this matter would be on the agenda so we could see what progress can be made on this important matter which has occupied the attention of so many governments over so many years.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): As a supplementary question, may I ask the Prime Minister whether, in addition to this matter being placed on the agenda of the federal-provincial conference, it is also intended to reconvene the meetings of the provincial attorneys general and the Minister of Justice to deal with this very important subject.

Mr. Pearson: That would be one of the matters which should be discussed when the matter is on the agenda. I should point out that the federal-provincial conference in Charlottetown will be largely a ceremonial meeting in connection with the one hundredth anniversary of the Charlottetown conference, and it will not last very long. All we will be able to do at that conference is put the matter on the agenda before the provinces so we can then decide what could be done.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

TRAIL, B.C.—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO OVERTIME MAIL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General, based on a lengthy telegram I have received from R. Kiever, president of local 400 of the mine, mill and smelter workers union. It appears that last evening between six and ten o'clock the postmen of the city of Trail were required to work overtime.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I object to these interruptions, because anything that happens in Kootenay West is of national significance. They were required to work overtime in order to distribute a letter from the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company to its employees in the city of Trail, pending a referendum being taken today on a labour dispute. There is not much objection to the material in this letter, but there is objection—

Mr. Speaker: Order. As one of the experienced members of the house, surely the hon. member could shorten that question by two minutes or so.

Mr. Herridge: I have just arrived at that point, Mr. Speaker. In view of the unusual circumstances of this special delivery, extra delivery, in the city of Trail, would the minister have this whole situation investigated and let the house know under what authority this was done?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR SHOWING OF FILM RESPECTING PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Prime Minister a question—

Mr. Grégoire: Carried.

Mr. Fisher: I wondered whether the Prime Minister had turned his mind to the problem of accepting or taking up the invitation presented to the house yesterday by the C.B.C. with regard to the Pearson film, particularly in view of the fact that procedurally it seems difficult.

Mr. Grégoire: Carried.

Mr. Speaker: Really, I have difficulty in understanding that question myself. Perhaps it is the heat; I do not know.

Mr. Fisher: Then I will put it in simple terms, Mr. Speaker. The C.B.C. yesterday, as I understand it, put an invitation before parliament for parliament to state that it wants the Pearson film shown. As I understand it, this is what they are looking for. How can this be done? Surely the onus is upon the government to inform us how this can be done.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, surely my hon. friend can contain his impatience and his desire to see this picture for the second time until tomorrow, when the board of directors of the C.B.C. are going to determine whether it should be shown publicly.

Mr. Fisher: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. There was nothing, as far as I can see, in that letter of yesterday that indicated the board of directors did not want this motion or approval from the house before their meeting.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the Broadcasting Act gives to the C.B.C. control of its own broadcasting, would the government ascertain whether it would be in order for the House of Commons by a resolution to interfere with the operation of that statute?

Mr. Pearson: That matter might be academic after the meeting tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

TRADE

GATT—REQUEST FOR LIST OF CANADIAN GOODS TO BE CONSIDERED

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Could the minister tell the house whether his department has established a list of Canadian goods that will be recommended to the GATT meeting; and with regard to these goods is the government willing to publish the exact tariff reduction they propose on each one, or is it an across the board 50 per cent reduction?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

U.S. CONSIDERATION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTIES ON AUTOMOBILES AND PARTS

On the order of the day:

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Has the minister or his department received formal notice that the treasury department of Washington is considering whether a countervailing duty should be imposed on the imports of Canadian cars and parts because of tariff action taken by this government on November 1?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

WHEAT—POSSIBLE REDUCTION IN SALES TO RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. H. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Can the minister clarify his statement appearing in the Toronto Globe and Mail that prospects for wheat sales in the coming crop year are excellent, and that we might export 550 million bushels?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thought what I said yesterday was clear. In the fall I said I thought that our exports this crop year would be of the order of 550 million bushels. Then I went on to say, in view of certain pessimistic statements made by some hon. members, that I now thought that our shipments would be of the order of 590 million bushels.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Then are prospects for the coming crop year excellent whether or not Russia buys our wheat?

Mr. Sharp: That is what I said yesterday.

FINANCE

SUGGESTED CHANGES IN SMALL BUSINESS LOANS LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a very important question to the Minister of Finance.

As it is rumoured that the interest rate on small business loans will be increased this fall, can the Minister of Finance tell us whether he intends to propose changes in the Small Businesses Loans Act of 1960?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This question, if it is in order, is surely one for the order paper.

WORLD FAIR

SALES TAX ON MATERIALS USED IN CONSTRUCTING PAVILIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. I wonder whether the minister is giving consideration to the suggestion by the Canadian Manufacturers' Association that the federal government should grant complete exemption from the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials used in constructing pavilions for expo 1967?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): An announcement has already been made on that subject, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacEwan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister referring to the announcement that the federal government has agreed to write off in one year the full capital costs of building pavilions, for each company?

Mr. Gordon: I apologize to the hon. member, Mr. Speaker; that was the announcement to which I referred. There is no suggestion that these buildings should be exempt from sales tax.

ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

PRODUCTION OF COIN WITHOUT LIKENESS OF THE QUEEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I have a question for the Minister of Finance, Mr. Speaker. Is it correct that the Royal Canadian Mint have in the planning stage a coin which will be without the likeness of the Queen?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): I will be glad to inquire into this matter, Mr. Speaker. Not to my knowledge.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INQUIRY AS TO SUMMER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Considering that the two by-elections have gone by, considering also that the Leader of the Opposition seems to be in a good humour, does the Prime Minister intend to announce the summer recess right after the adoption of the distinctive Canadian flag, that is during the first week of July?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that the happiness engendered by the very satisfactory result of the two by-elections should interfere with our plans to work here most of July.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps I might address it, however, to the government house leader. In view of the fact that the prospect of a recess seems to be melting away, will the government house leader look into the possibility of arranging that, even so, the members of the staff of the House of Commons might in some way be able to get their holidays during the summer season, rather than having to wait for us until some time in the fall or winter?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, although I do not accept the assumption which prefaced the question, I am advised that the office staffs are now beginning to get their holidays in turn.

Mr. Knowles: Does that apply to sessional staff as well as to year round staff?

Mr. Favreau: I will look into the question completely, Mr. Speaker, and report as early as possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether the house will be sitting on July 1, Canada day?

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: No decision has been reached on that point yet, Mr. Speaker.

EDUCATION

LOANS TO STUDENTS—INQUIRY AS TO LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, could the government house leader inform the house when he anticipates bringing forward the student loan legislation for consideration by the house?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, the legislative program, as announced, is to first dispose of interim supply and then the flag resolution. We will be in a position to make further statements to the house on this matter when these two measures have been dealt with.

Mr. Starr: The flag first, and student loans second?

Mr. Winkler: Government obstruction.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

CONSIDERATION OF ESTIMATES BY STANDING COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the house leader. Could he advise the house whether it is the government's intention to take the initiative and convene the standing committee on estimates, in the light of the Prime Minister's preoccupation with main estimates, so that this committee, which has not sat under this present administration, could get on with the estimates of some departments, such as the Department of Justice?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I will consider the matter, Mr. Speaker, and answer the hon. gentleman as early as possible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FISHERIES

REPORTED PRESENCE OF JAPANESE WHALING SHIP IN CANADIAN WATERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question which I was going to address to the Minister of Fisheries, but in his absence perhaps the Secretary of State for External Affairs will deal with it. I should like to ask the minister whether he has knowledge of the operation of a Japanese whaler inside Canadian territorial waters off the northeast coast of Vancouver island. If so, can he tell us whether this has been authorized by the Canadian government. If he has no knowledge of such an operation will he look into it and determine whether some unauthorized intrusion on Canadian sovereignty has taken place?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I shall see that this question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. I have no knowledge in this regard.

Mr. Speaker, while I am on my feet may I thank the right hon. gentleman for his greetings today, which I am pleased to accept also on behalf of the Minister of Transport who shares with me the fact that today is our birthday anniversary.

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBLE SETTLEMENT OF ALGERIANS ON QUEBEC FARMS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Perron (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration concerning a statement made by him and the Quebec minister of agriculture about Algerian immigrants who are anxious to come over and settle as farmers in Canada.

Can the minister rely on the co-operation of other federal departments such as the Department of Agriculture which is responsible for the Farm Credit Corporation and the Department of Forestry which is responsible for the administration of the ARDA program, so as to provide the necessary funds for the establishment of these newcomers to Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is surely a question for the order paper.

[Mr. Favreau.]

Mr. Perron: Mr. Speaker, my question is intended once again for the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and deals with the Algerian immigrants anxious to settle in Canada. The minister announced the impending arrival of those immigrants, but I should like to know approximately how many will soon be admitted to Canada as immigrants in order to take up farming?

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, applications are still being examined and I believe that 30 or 40 families at most will be coming here, as a first step in a future general policy.

Mr. Perron: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

Could the minister tell us approximately what the settling up of these people on farms in the province of Quebec is going to cost the government, in each case?

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, there will be no cost to the government, except the regular expenses we make in the case of immigrants.

Those immigrants will be able to apply to the Farm Credit Corporation and should a loan be granted it will mean that their application was taken into consideration, as any other application for a loan.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FORT WILLIAM, ONT.—REPORTED SEGREGATION OF STUDENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Is the minister aware of the claim of the Ontario Indian-Eskimo association that Indian children attending a school at Fort William are being segregated from the rest of the students at the school? If so, what action is his department taking in the matter?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper, as it requires a detailed answer.

WATER SAFETY

OWEN SOUND, ONT.—INADEQUACY OF LADDERS IN HARBOUR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I have a question for the Minister of Public Works. Due to the low water level in Owen Sound harbour the ladders are now out of reach of anyone falling into the water, which may have contributed to a drowning which occurred there last week. Would the minister give consideration to having these ladders lengthened as well as installing more ladder accommodation?

Mr. Speaker: This is an important question, of course, but it is also one for the order paper.

AGRICULTURE

AMENDMENTS TO FARM IMPROVEMENT LOANS LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence may I ask the house leader when we might expect the amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act to be brought before parliament.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. gentleman I must advise the house that the Minister of Agriculture is presently in hospital for an indefinite period with a very serious condition. I will communicate with him and will be in a position to advise the house somewhat later as to this.

CANADIAN COMMERCIAL CORPORATION

TRANSFER OF EMPLOYEES TO DEPARTMENT OF INDUSTRY

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, some weeks ago the Leader of the Opposition asked a question about the transfer of employees of the Canadian Commercial Corporation to the Department of Industry, and I said that inquiries had been made into the circumstances surrounding that matter. Inquiries have been made and discussions have been held with the civil service commissioners concerning the respective responsibilities of the government and the commission in such cases, and I should like to make a short statement in reply to the question of my right hon. friend.

Mr. Lambert: Revert to motions.

Mr. Pearson: I am answering a question which was asked.

Mr. Lambert: This is a statement.

Mr. Pearson: When employees of an exempt agency are transferred to a department or agency which is subject to the Civil Service Act, the civil service commission is required under that act to determine the classification and grade for which those employees are qualified. This procedure was followed in connection with the transfer of employees of the Canadian Commercial Corporation to the Department of Industry. The government has decided that where a function and staff are transferred in this way, the employees concerned should not suffer a reduction in salary. Employees who are rated by the civil service commission in classifications having a lesser salary will be paid their former rate of pay until such time as the rate attaching to the classification in which they are being certified becomes equal to that former rate.

In line with this policy the employees of the Canadian Commercial Corporation transferred to the Department of Industry who are filling positions at classifications for which the rate of pay is lower than the rate paid by the corporation will be paid on transfer at their former rate. As hon. members will have seen, a number of the employees who would be affected by this policy have appealed to the civil service commission against the classification they have been given, and the effect of the new policy in each of these cases will naturally depend on the outcome of the appeal.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in view of the added statement at the end may I thank the Prime Minister for following the suggestion made in this connection, in order to remove what was an apparent injustice.

AWARDS AND DECORATIONS

POLICY RESPECTING GRANTING OF HONOURS BY FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I should now like to direct a question to the Prime Minister having regard to an announced foreign award to a Canadian within the last few days. Has there been any change of policy in regard to the awarding of honours and decorations by foreign states to Canadians? In other words, has there been any change in the accepted policy that awards and decorations by foreign states should not be accepted by Canadians unless approved by the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there has been no change whatever in the policy which has been followed in this matter for a good many years.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There has been no order in council altering the situation in this respect in any way, or placing foreign powers in a higher position relative to the granting of honours to Canadians than that possessed by Her Majesty the Queen?

Mr. Pearson: To my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, there has been no change.

GRAIN

PRINCE RUPERT, B.C.—INCREASE IN ELEVATOR CAPACITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Frank Howard (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Minister of Agriculture, and I am sure I speak for everyone in the house in expressing our regrets that the minister is hospitalized. We wish him a speedy recovery from his ailment. I wonder if I can ask whether, in the course of the absence of the minister, the acting minister will be in a position to make any decision regarding the grain elevator at Prince Rupert?

Hon. René Tremblay (Acting Minister of Agriculture): I will take this question as notice, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN CENTENNIAL

JOINT PARTICIPATION IN CELEBRATION BY CANADA AND U.S.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to the Secretary of State. Has the hon. gentleman any information he can give the house with respect to legislation coming before the Senate of the United States which will provide for joint participation by the United States and Canada in the 1967 centenary celebrations?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): No, Mr. Speaker.

SUPPLY

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Monday, June 22, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. McIlraith—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $469,308,421.26, being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of all of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $329,299,209.25;

[Mr. Pearson.]

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amount of agriculture item 5, privy council item 25 (schedule A) of the said main estimates, $2,259,116.67;

(c) four twelfths of the total of all of the items in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $134,897,245.34;

(d) an additional seven twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L37a (schedule B) of the supplementary estimates (A), $2,625,000.00;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L12a (schedule C) of the supplementary estimates (A), $227,850,

be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

Mr. Brewin: May I briefly recapitulate the points I was making yesterday before the committee adjourned at ten o'clock. I said then that I had no complaint whatever to make about the minister or his staff with respect to the way in which they dealt with individual cases brought to their attention. My quarrel was with the system which I described—and I did so deliberately—as a rotten system.

In my view that strong expression of opinion is justified for this reason. Parliament has in fact, contrary I suggest to what the minister said or implied, conferred on prospective immigrants a statutory right. This is not a statutory right to enter the country absolutely, but it is a statutory right under the act to the benefit of a hearing to determine whether they are admissible in accordance with the standards set out in the act and the regulations. This statutory right is denied in practice. The reasons which are given for denying the right to a hearing are meaningless; statements such as "You do not have a visa". Of course the only authority which can grant a visa is the department itself, and the department has already refused to give a visa, and refused, also, to give any reason for withholding a visa.

The minister told the committee that he is getting advice as to immigration procedure from an eminent lawyer, Mr. Sedgwick. That is all very well. I do not complain about it; I think Mr. Sedgwick could be helpful. But let me say this to the minister. We have absolutely no need of an eminent lawyer to discover that a hearing without disclosure of the real grounds for rejection is practically meaningless; it is not, in fact, a fair hearing. There are plenty of lawyers on both sides of this house who are perfectly capable of informing the minister of the elementary principle involved, which is this. Before any important question affecting the rights of an individual is determined, that individual should have the right to be heard, and this means knowing why he is being denied the right he is seeking.

This is an elementary principle of justice, and there are dozens of cases to support my contention. As I say, we need not go outside this house, or beyond the lawyers who sit on the hon. gentleman's side of the house, to find that this principle has long been recognized. The courts have made it abundantly clear. As long ago as 1932 Mr. Justice Duff in a supreme court case described immigration proceedings with which he was dealing as "hugger-mugger". Mr. Justice Rand, in the Supreme Court of Canada and Mr. Justice Aylesworth in the Brent case, in the court of appeal, as I recall it, described similar proceedings as farcical.

This farcical procedure, this "hugger-mugger", is still going on. Indeed, it is the standard procedure in immigration matters. It negates the bill of rights. The bill of rights says that no act of parliament shall be construed or applied so as to deprive a person of the right of a fair hearing in accordance with the principles of fundamental justice for the determination of his rights and obligations. This solemn undertaking made by parliament and given to the people of Canada is flouted almost daily in immigration proceedings as a result of which people seeking to exercise a statutory right to come to Canada—if they can comply with the standards of admission—are deported on meaningless grounds after a mere parade of words which conceals the real reason for rejection.

I know there is a reason for this, but I suggest to the minister and the committee that it is not an adequate reason. The basis is said to be the need for security, and it is contended that in many of these cases reasons for non-admission cannot be disclosed without breaking faith with some outside source. I say to the minister, what crimes are committed in the name of security; what unjust, misleading lists of so-called subversives have been compiled on the basis of gossip, malice and sheer stupidity. I suggest that if there are security reasons for refusing, for example, a son in Canada the right to bring his parents to this country, or parents the right to bring their children, or a husband the right to have his wife join him here, such grounds should be carefully scrutinized by an independent judicial tribunal having full access to all the facts available to the department. Nothing short of such a full review will refute the belief that security reasons are sometimes advanced as a smokescreen to hide less creditable motives.

What do I suggest is the remedy? I recognize it is not enough simply to complain about the administration of this act and its regulations. First of all, I say there is no one remedy. The first step toward a remedy is that the department should decide in all cases except where serious security questions are in issue to disclose fully the real reasons for refusal of admission.

I say that I am personally acquainted with cases in which the real reason for refusal of admission was totally different from that advanced in the formal record, yet had nothing whatever to do with security reasons when it was looked into. Let the department decide, without getting the advice of eminent lawyers, to make fuller disclosure of the reasons. Let it take the advice of members of the house, for example, and decide that it will disclose these things more fully.

Second, I suggest that an independent judicial review of an administrative nature is required in all cases of refusal of admission. The appeal board should be given full access to the real reasons for rejection, and they should be given the power to recommend clemency or suspension of the full letter of the law on compassionate grounds.

Third, I suggest there should be a parliamentary committee charged with the responsibility of reviewing the immigration laws and regulations and their administration. I believe it is this parliament that has the primary responsibility for ensuring that the laws it makes are applied with fairness and justice to those who seek to come to Canada, and I urge that such a parliamentary committee, if no appropriate committee exists, be established not just to examine this matter now but to carry on a review throughout the years. I suggest that this will relieve succeeding ministers from the frequent embarrassment to which they are subject when parliament does not have an established right to look into these matters.

Fourth, I recommend that there should be something in the nature of an immigration ombudsman, if I may use that term, some independent parliamentary commissioner who would be able to advise both members of parliament and individuals, who would have full access to immigration records. In cases where in his judgment he thought there was some unfairness or injustice produced, he would have the duty of reporting to parliament.

Lastly, Mr. Chairman, the minister needs no eminent counsel to advise him that the traces of discrimination that remain in the act and the regulations should be removed. These overt references to discrimination on racial grounds should be wiped out. The house will recall that in the past the act and the regulations clearly and explicitly referred to discrimination on racial grounds as a basis of Canadian policy. Fortunately most of that has disappeared, but I have called the attention of the house and the minister to the fact that sections remain which deal specifically with this form of discrimination. I give as an example section 61, I think it is, of the Immigration Act. I have introduced a private members' bill, No. C-69, which will not be reached during this session. I would not feel badly at all if the minister would say he would take the onus of removing this section from the Immigration Act which refers specifically to racial discrimination.

On this score I recommend that the minister should take another look at regulation 31. This is the main regulation dealing with the admission of relatives, and I urge him to see whether it cannot be amended so there will be no explicit discrimination in the regulations. I remind the house and the minister that there is one section which imposes harsh and narrow standards for the admission of people who come from Asia or Africa but far more liberal standards of admission for those who come from Europe or America. In the world as we have it today I do not believe there is any room for this continuing discrimination on geographical or on racial grounds.

I cannot leave this subject without expressing the hope that we can change the immigration administration so that no one can be expelled without the reasons therefor being given. Let us make sure that the will of parliament as expressed in the Immigration Act is not flouted from day to day and that the principles of natural justice, which are familiar to every member of the house, are brought into play in the daily administration of these regulations. I believe this would then predispose immigration officers to treat immigrants as though they were persons with rights.

I have heard too often that these people have no rights. They have rights. Parliament has given them rights. As long as these rights are flouted in practice the officers themselves can hardly be blamed for treating these people as though they do not matter very much and in some cases, for example, letting them languish in jail beyond any reasonable time. I suggest that what is basically important is that we recognize that these people who come from various parts of the world are human beings who are entitled to be treated with dignity as human beings.

I want to close by saying to the minister that many ministers have struggled with the problem of the Immigration Act and regulations. He is by no means the first to do this. Many of them have made promises as to what they were going to do and how they were going to change everything. I say the minister has a wonderful opportunity to score a real break-through in this area, a break-through that has eluded his predecessors.

I do not particularly think the advice of eminent lawyers is what is required. I think a basic change of heart and a recognition of the rights of these immigrants are what is in issue. Therefore I have refrained and intend to continue to refrain from hurling insults and criticisms at the minister himself, but I say to him that I hope he will take the opportunity that is his to make a real break-through in this regard so that Canadians can be proud of their immigration laws and can hold their heads high anywhere in the world when discussing immigration matters.

Mr. Macaluso: Mr. Chairman, I do not wish to take much of the time of the committee now, as I understand the estimates of the department will be coming forward in the very near future. However, I do want to make a few remarks on the general topic of immigration and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration. First of all I want to extend my congratulations to the hon. member for Greenwood on the remarks he has made today. I certainly wish to associate myself with what he has said and the remedies he has suggested to the committee.

One of the most frustrating things that a member of parliament or any individual dealing with immigration matters encounters is not being able to obtain the reasons for a person being refused admission to the country. Perhaps there are logical reasons for this stand, but to date I have not been able to find out why this position is taken. As the hon. member for Greenwood has stated, on many occasions the only reason given is security. What does "security" mean? It is a nebulous term unless it is defined, unless we are made aware of what are the security reasons and what precautions are being taken.

At the present time the security reason is not known. It is very difficult to explain to a sponsor who comes to your office that his son or daughter and son in law have been refused admission on security grounds. I say to the minister that this matter has to be reviewed very carefully because the word "security" alone is not sufficient.

Dealing with general immigration practice, Mr. Chairman, I would point out that some three years ago it was decided that the emphasis with regard to immigration would be placed on those with skills and education, and I think this is good. However, this policy is being interpreted in too restrictive a manner. It is being used as a disguise and smokescreen to justify the refusal of immigrants who wish to come to this country. It is too restrictive.

A sponsor who wants to bring his son or daughter or orphan nephew to this country receives a form letter from the department saying they do not meet the requirements of the Immigration Act, and therefore consideration cannot be given at this time to allowing so and so to enter the country. These are the only reasons given, and I think it is time this policy was reviewed. There is a growing recognition that Canada's immigration facilities are inadequate, and we certainly want more immigrants who will become Canadian citizens. In the 1960's, as in the 1860's, Canada is the most underpopulated country in the world, yet we encompass a greater land area than any other nation except perhaps the U.S.S.R. If the minister really wants a more ambitious program to attract the kind of skilled immigrants we need, then we will have to take off our kid gloves and fight a strong battle with our most active competitors, especially Australia and South Africa.

If the present economic expansion should be slowed down for the lack of skilled workers, many economists state that the unskilled workers will suffer. The decision three years ago by the previous Conservative government to put the immigration emphasis on skills rather than race or country has placed Canada in direct competition with other nations. No longer do the skilled people migrate from Britain or Europe out of desperation or fear. Europe today has a generally high standard of employment and living. Canada's continuing policy "If you want to come", is not good enough for today. The people from Britain and western Europe have to be wooed and won. The skilled people in Europe are remaining in Europe today.

I must compliment the minister on a recent speech he made in which he stated:

> We need an active immigration policy, better facilities, better personnel, more personnel, more contact with other governments and more publicity.

I could not agree more with this statement, Mr. Chairman. I doubt if the department, as it is presently constituted, can launch an aggressive, active program to obtain more immigrants. We have some 32 offices abroad staffed by some 350 people. This is a ridiculous number of people to be staffing these offices. In my opinion there are not enough offices. Perhaps the minister's remarks portend a greater activity in this field.

We have heard a great deal, Mr. Chairman, about changes in the Immigration Act and in immigration regulations. In my opinion the biggest sin in our immigration policy today is that it is being dealt with by regulation rather than by an act. We need a sound Immigration Act to which we can look for enforcement, to which we can look for an aggressive policy of immigration. We should be able to look to the Immigration Act and say, this is our immigration policy. The regulations are really only a smokescreen, as the hon. member for Greenwood said.

The regulations leave too much to the discretion of departmental officials, not only those abroad but those in Canada today. There is too much power in the hands of departmental officials because there is vagueness in the regulations. Vagueness breeds power and, so far as I am concerned, vagueness breeds all kinds of definitions which cannot be pinned down. The time has come, therefore, when there should be an overhaul of our Immigration Act and regulations. I am not one who believes in immigration policy by regulation. We can only benefit from a liberalization of our immigration policy. Newcomers influence our economy in many, many ways. They contribute to manpower. They participate in establishing new industries. In fact they promote employment for Canadian workers and many times they repopulate our farms. They become important consumers who bring with them immense sums of capital and personal effects.

I should like to deal very briefly with the problem of Chinese immigration from Hong Kong. I hope the minister will be able to answer these questions. I understand that immigration offices have been opened in Cairo and Beirut. I have nothing against immigration from these two parts of the world, and presumably there were good reasons for the opening of these offices. However, in 1962 only 964 immigrants came from Egypt and 292 from Lebanon. We have offices in other countries such as Italy, France where we have two, Hong Kong. I do not believe we have sufficient staff in Italy where we only have the one office in Rome. So far as I am concerned this is a disgraceful situation, not only because the department cannot handle the volume of applicants but because the applicants cannot be examined. Surely in a country from which there is a great volume of immigrants we should have better facilities, more personnel and at least two offices, one for the northern part of the country and one for the southern part.

We know the discrimination that has been practised in Hong Kong. The minister, in his speech yesterday, mentioned the organization of many rackets for illegal entry of immigrants. This is not more prevalent anywhere than in Hong Kong today or in the past few years. The Chinese people have had a problem, and I feel that problem is one that we have created. There is a great backlog of applicants in Hong Kong. No one knows what happens to these applicants. I have had exerience with many of them, and when the sponsors in Canada make application for these people in Hong Kong, sometimes these people are not heard from for a year or longer. The representatives of the Chinese community submitted a brief to the former minister of citizenship and immigration, now the Minister of Justice, in which they requested improvements in the machinery for admitting their relatives to Canada. They have suggested various remedies, one of which was the establishment of an independent tribunal, as mentioned by the hon. member for Greenwood. This independent tribunal would verify the bona fides of the Chinese immigrants.

This brief suggested also the admittance of sons and daughters of Chinese Canadian residents irrespective of age or marital status; the elimination of existing delays in the applications of sponsored relatives; the discontinuance of the prosecution of Chinese for past illegal entries into Canada. I am happy to say that as soon as this government took office this practice, established by the former administration, was eliminated.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if the hon. member will permit a question.

[Mr. Macaluso.]

Mr. Macaluso: I will as soon as I am finished. Our immigration, not only from Hong Kong but from Great Britain and all other countries, has been most unsatisfactory for several years. I wonder at times what is wrong. Is our immigration geared to bringing people in or keeping them out? I wonder at times, Mr. Chairman, why we speak very actively and very aggressively about immigration, but we really have not done too much about it over the past 10 or 15 years. I believe the last year in which there was active immigration was right after the war and in 1956 after the Hungarian uprising. Since that time we have not done too much about it. Our staffs are poorly paid; the personnel is not too strong. I sincerely ask the minister, when he is reviewing policy, to deal with these matters as soon as possible in order to alleviate this backlog of applications.

I should like to mention one other matter, Mr. Chairman; the Canadian citizenship courts. I believe this was a policy the former government established, and it was a good policy. I believe that today the immigrant who goes to one of these courts to obtain his certificate of citizenship, receives it with pride. I should like to mention the ceremonies that are performed by the court president and the great job that is done in the city of Hamilton by the I.O.D.E. in their reception for these people after the ceremonies, and by the city officials themselves. I know that they felt more pride in becoming citizens of this country. However, I believe the minister should very actively review the questions that are being asked by some of the citizenship court presidents. When immigrants go to fill out their applications for Canadian certificates of citizenship and are examined, many of the examinations are held in camera. Applicants at times are very nervous, and they are asked certain questions by the president of the citizenship court. Because of a lack of complete understanding of the language they may be at a disadvantage.

This is something I have discussed with the minister on many occasions. I have also talked about it with some other hon. members on this side of the chamber, and we are agreed there is no uniformity in the examination of applicants for citizenship papers. This is something that causes hardship. When I am in my offices at home people come and ask me why they have been refused citizenship, and tell me they have been remanded for one or two years. The explanation is simple. A person must have an understanding of the English or French language, and this is only right. It is very difficult to obtain employment in this country if one does not have an understanding of the languages of the country, and sometimes of the geography of the country.

On occasion applicants have been asked how many square miles there are in Canada, what is the largest or smallest river, and who is the lieutenant governor of B.C. These are questions which are asked of people in Hamilton. They are unfair questions; many of us could not answer them ourselves. I urge the minister to see to it that there is some form of uniform examination, and I suggest that a booklet be prepared and sent to citizenship court presidents outlining procedures for a uniform examination.

I do not say this is the case with all the presidents of the courts. I know of instances where excellent examinations are conducted, but I also know of cases where the examinations are not just or equitable. When he is summing up later on I hope the minister will outline what he intends to do regarding citizenship court presidents and our offices abroad.

I now turn to another matter. The policy of the Liberal party in the general elections of 1962 and 1963 called for an appeal tribunal to be set up. I quote from that policy:

> Decisions of immigration officials will be subject to review by appropriate and independent tribunals.

I urge the minister to advise the committee when this policy will be implemented. I shall now accept the question from the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Woolliams: The question is a short one. Is it not a fact that during the time hon. Mrs. Fairclough was minister of citizenship and immigration the regulations were changed which affect the Chinese and other people from that area? Is not that a fair comment in that regard?

Mr. Macaluso: No, Mr. Chairman, I say it is not a fair comment in that regard. I do not say this critically, but at no time were the regulations affecting the Chinese alleviated; let us put it that way. In fact it was the opposite. At no time was there more action to deport Chinese citizens who came in illegally. This is not a criticism, because I believe it was the duty of the departmental officials to concern themselves with those who came into the country illegally. I do not make any criticism of that policy, but I do not follow the hon. member for Bow River when he says the regulations were changed. Perhaps they may have been.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to make a speech at this time, but if the hon. member will check Hansard he will see that the regulations affecting the Chinese and other people from that area were changed so they were given equal status in coming to Canada with people from other lands. Whether the departmental officials started to implement that immediately might be another question, but I say to the hon. member that if he checks Hansard he will find the regulations, in fact and by number, were changed so they were given equal status with people coming from Europe and other lands.

Mr. Macaluso: I will say this; I agree the regulations were changed so that the qualification regarding race and country of origin was thrown out and the emphasis was placed on education and skills. As I stated previously, the interpretations of these regulations is being used as a smokescreen. The hon. member and I are not in disagreement, but there is ministerial discretion even in that case, and this applies to all ministers who have held the citizenship portfolio. The regulation was made uniform regarding education and skills, but there is still discrimination in the regulations, and when you examine section 31 you find this discrimination is still practised in the department or by some officials.

I repeat that Canada today needs skilled people, educated people, but we are finding it more and more difficult to compete and we need an aggressive policy in order to take advantage of that situation.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, it is 11 days since debate on interim supply started. At that time I opened up on the subject of citizenship and immigration and said many people had spent a lot of time in jail without legal justification, without excuse, and apparently without enough attention being paid by the minister. The attitude has changed slightly since then, in that now we have the appointment of Mr. Sedgwick, who is going to inquire into some of these matters.

I must congratulate the government on the choice of its appointee. Mr. Sedgwick is a most capable man, and I am sure the advice he gives the government will be most helpful. It has been previously mentioned that the type and exact scope of the inquiry are a little indefinite. The minister has made it plain it is not under the Inquiries Act, but when pushed as to how far he will go and what representations he will receive, he places the scope of that inquiry closer and closer to a full scale inquiry under the Inquiries Act.

The minister's attitude has been revealed throughout, ever since this question was first raised by hon. members asking why it was that certain people had been held in jail so long. My first observation on the attitude of the minister was that he did not seem to understand the seriousness of the allegations made. Apparently it did not occur to the minister that merely because an individual may be in the country illegally, or that he may happen to be a lawbreaker to some extent, does not excuse any government officials or anyone else taking away his legal rights.

The minister has seemed to fail to understand that he as the head of a department, and especially as head of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration where the rights of individuals can be so easily tampered with and where there can be so much hardship caused by the ordinary routines of the department, has a very special duty to know and comprehend the meanings and duties and actions of his officers. When there is an allegation made that people have been denied legal counsel, or that they have not been able to get in touch with relatives, or that they have not been admitted to bail even in the ordinary courts of the land where people appear on various charges, the minister should be aware that sometimes these allegations are made by long time Canadian citizens, by people who have their friends and relatives around, people who speak our languages, who are familiar with counsel in their own cities and who have people willing to provide bail for them.

I find that the minister ignored completely the fact that in the ordinary enforcement of law in this country, law enforcement officers can become so zealous in their duty, so determined to put a lawbreaker behind bars, that they themselves are the first to deny the accused his legal rights. Certainly the minister should comprehend that the position of our courts of justice in this country is to stand between the law enforcement agencies and the threat of overzealous action interfering with the liberty of the individual. As I said when I started on this point, Mr. Chairman, so precious is the liberty of the individual that it takes priority 10 to 1 over the possibility of an accused who is actually guilty going free.

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has a stronger reason than even a judge of the court. His is a double duty. The tribunals that hear these applications, that hold these hearings as to whether or not someone should stay, are acting in a judicial capacity. The minister has the right to review those decisions himself. If the minister is going to be as slow as he appeared to be in this house day after day, seemingly concerned only with protecting departmental officials and relatively unconcerned with the possibility of injustice in his department, I do not see how he thinks he can hold himself fit to review decisions of a judicial nature. Added to the ordinary complications of a citizen who is arrested by the police and charged with a crime are, in this case, the difficulties of language; perhaps no friends or relatives; perhaps little or no knowledge of our judicial process; little or no knowledge of our immigration procedures, rules and regulations. On top of these natural difficulties in trying to assure for himself a fair trial, that individual is likely to be subjected to the threat of prosecution as an illegal immigrant.

I suggest that the recent increase in charges of this type being laid should have been a warning to the minister—something that he should have looked at very carefully the first time he heard of people being held in jail a long time, or the first time he heard of any injustice being suffered by these people—that perhaps the dedication of overzealous civil servants in his department to get information, to find out how many illegal immigrants there are, to do their job thoroughly and try to root them out, could lead to the threat of a criminal charge being used as a sort of blackmail, as a club over their head. This is not at all far fetched, Mr. Chairman; this is the logical outcome of a dedication to one aspect of a duty, which is to pick out those people who according to law should not be here.

It is not those officials I am criticizing so much, because certainly if we are to have our laws respected and if we are going to have admitted to this country only that type of people who we think will be a credit to Canada, we need dedicated people; we need dedicated enforcement officers, be they law enforcement officers or immigration officials. But we also need some balance. We need the minister to remember his position; we need the minister to remember what a court of justice is. A court of justice is not there to send people to jail; it is there to protect the liberty of the individual. I submit to the minister that he has completely ignored that aspect of his duty with regard to the actions of his department. I may say, Mr. Chairman, that I am not really shocked, because the minister has been consistent, as a minister of this government in this house, in his slowness in responding to questions. I have watched as questions were asked, and the minister was, if not arrogant, certainly hesitant to even talk about it at all. Next he resorted to those bland assurances that we always get from this government. There was anything but an honest, straightforward answer containing the required information, given at once.

This is consistent with the behaviour of all ministers in this government. When there is a realization in the minister's mind finally that this case is more than just a storm in a teacup, that the matter is not going to be dropped, that there is more than a little suspicion that there is much injustice to be cleaned up, and therefore perhaps things in his department are not running as smoothly as they should and with as much justice as we would like to see, he acts in the typical manner of the ministers of this government and starts to be pushed and edged toward things just a little.

Where is that bold action that we would have expected; the recognition of a problem and the action this government should take? I submit that when the minister first started to hint that he was going to have an investigation, it seemed to me it was going to be someone in his own department upon whom he could rely, and next he was sort of going to have somebody outside the department to look into this problem. Then he announced that there was going to be a real inquiry, and in response to further questions it appears that the inquiry may have something of the scope of an inquiry under the Inquiries Act. I would not be surprised if the minister ended up with a formal commission of inquiry. I submit to the minister that in these days, when we hear so much complaint about the house not being able to get the business done, that we take too long with our business, if the minister would only look at his own actions in this regard he would find there the reasons for the troubles of this government and this parliament; namely, the failure to give information when questions are asked, the failure to cope when the situation is finally driven home, the failure to come up with some direct action, and then the complete failure to be completely honest and frank with parliament.

Mr. Chairman, we are not here to try to subvert the workings of the government; to try to torpedo or undermine the work of any minister in any department. But we do feel that a minister has a very great responsibility in this house and to this house; that where there are obvious signs that things are not right, that there have been injustices, the duty of a minister is to face up to them frankly and promptly and secure the immediate help of this house in curing them. I am sure we will not be slow in coming forward with any assistance that we can.

I noticed that the other day the Minister of Justice intervened finally. In fact, there was a peculiar situation. The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration yesterday started with a very long statement about this matter and then the Minister of Justice had to come to his rescue. During the time the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration was apparently unable to see where the injustice was in these cases, why parliament was so troubled by them, and the importance of his department being cleared of any imputation of injustice, I wonder where the Minister of Justice was. Is there no cabinet collaboration? The Minister of Justice should have been the first to see the serious implication of the allegations being made by various members as to what was going on; the Minister of Justice should have been able to put at the disposal of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, on the first day, an experienced officer who could have gone down and in a couple of days have obtained the information that would have brought the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration up to date, so he would know what he was talking about and would have had some conception of how to handle the problem in this house.

I suggest that at this point the minister might ask the Minister of Justice for the loan of a lawyer, who could be seconded to his department and act as counsel for all people who had been held in jail for a period of as much as seven days, and who had not yet been represented by counsel of their choice. The duty of this person would simply be that he would act for anyone not represented by counsel, at least to the extent of making sure that he is advised of his rights, and has a chance to get counsel. He could also get in touch with people who could put up bond. In other words, there would be someone from the Department of Justice who would be interested just in justice and would assist the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in making sure that injustices do not occur. Mr. Chairman, I think that is all I wish to say.

[Translation]

Mr. Bélanger: Mr. Chairman, I am glad to take advantage of this debate to bring certain facts to the attention of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) and the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) who is in charge of the administration of ARDA. Unfortunately, they are not in the house today, but I trust that their colleagues will mention to them my remarks which concern them directly.

Mr. Chairman, I know that these two ministers are seeking a means of assisting agriculture in the eastern part of our country. The efforts made at present by the Minister of Forestry to reach that goal are no doubt genuine. In fact, I was happy, on Sunday last, to hear on television the Minister of Forestry say that he was waging war against poverty in the Gaspé peninsula.

That is why I want to take advantage of his good intentions and his good dispositions to tell him that unfortunately I question the efficiency of the methods he intends to use to solve the problem of poverty and to help agriculture at the same time.

I also want to tell him that poverty does not exist only in the Gaspé peninsula but that it is just as serious in my riding of Charlevoix. That is why I want to call his attention to that region of my province.

But, contrary to our Conservative friends, I will do more than criticize, I will offer solutions; contrary also to those who believe that the role of the opposition is simply to bring down the government, I admit that the opposition must criticize the government's legislation, but it must also suggest ways to improve it and help the Canadian people by suggesting better ideas. That is what I shall do today.

Consequently, I would ask the Ministers of Forestry and Agriculture to kindly give very special consideration to the ideas I will now put forward; afterwards, I would be most interested to have their comments on my suggestions.

I will start by reminding the house that we already have a municipal winter works incentive program of which the federal and provincial governments pay respectively 60 and 40 per cent of labour costs. Even if the program greatly alleviates unemployment, it does have serious disadvantages. To name but a few, I will say that if the present system is continued, our municipalities will one day find themselves so deep in debt that the program will no longer be applicable because the taxpayers and especially the farmers, whose burden is heavier than that of anyone else, will revolt. In fact, they have already started protesting against the tax burden.

They have already started to revolt since, to quote but one example, the farmers' march on the parliament of the province of Quebec has just been organized by the catholic farmers' union, precisely to protest against these too burdensome taxes.

On the other hand, this system, while it solves the unemployment problem for a certain number of people, does so very temporarily, for after being idle for a few months, our unemployed, in the fall, starts working for the municipal corporation, having already incurred debts, and after the municipality has furnished him with work for a month or a month and a half, our man finds himself the same as before, the day after his dismissal. Therefore, in most cases, this system is only a poultice on an artificial limb.

Moreover, in the major part of the countryside, at least in my constituency, farmers have a very low income on which they cannot live. Nevertheless, the social service refuses them any aid because they are supposed to have enough revenue, but I will not go into that.

When the winter works period starts, there begins also for these farmers the unemployment season; as they pay municipal taxes, they go and claim their share of winter works, although many of them go and spend some time in the lumber camps after which, they come back to winter works. I do not say this to reflect on the farmers of my constituency, but to show what is wrong with this winter works system, and the disorder it creates.

In brief, let us say that the winter works, as they are carried out now, affect the farmers in the first place by gradual increases of real estate taxes, to such an extent that farmers who succeeded in making a living, a few years ago, are now leaving our rural regions. In my own riding, and I think I can say in every corner of the province, you could find complete rural roads where there were once 25 or 30 farmers and where there are only two, four or six left.

If, because of the fact that farmers, in order to survive, have to become lumbermen during fall and winter, we must face another chaos, because if farmers could make a decent living with the income from their farm, they would not cut wood and thus take the jobs of professional lumbermen and sometimes compete unfairly with them.

If only professional lumbermen had the privilege to cut wood, it would have this important result:

1. The cutting season, as we say, would last longer because there would be fewer workers to do the annual cutting;

2. The workers joining a union could get better salaries.

In the final analysis, if everyone attended to his own business all would be sure to be right, as the proverb says.

But to achieve such a result, we must first of all give the farmers an opportunity to make a decent living on their farms. That leads me to my solution which, although it is not perfect, like everything that is tried within the "concentrationary" monetary system in which we live, would not cost any more than winter works and would be more efficient in the long run.

If, for instance, under ARDA, somebody were to go and see the farmers in my riding, say around May 15, and tell them: "Look, for the next three months we are going to pay you a dollar an hour, five hours a day, to work at improving your own land." In my constituency, according to the dozens of farmers I have consulted, we could start by having them prepare and develop what they call permanent pastures. That includes drainage operations, stone removal, fencing, ploughing, seeding and what not. Now, suppose that in my riding of Charlevoix, which is in a designated area, the government were to pay farmers a dollar an hour—which, as we all agree, is not much—over a three-month period, that would make, for 20 days a month, $100 a month or, for three months $300.

By applying this system to a thousand farmers during three years, we would have an amount of $900,000. That may seem a large sum but if the results of the winter works programs were compared with those we would obtain through the method I just proposed, it is seen that we would get ten times more for the same amount.

Here is, as I see it, what would happen. First, everybody knows that when one works for oneself, one works better and harder. Hence, if a farmer is paid to work on his land, that is to do something which will belong to him, which he will keep and will bring profits to him later, you may rest assured that he will work hard.

I know that it will be necessary to set up some kind of control of the amount of work done by each of the farmers, through the use of a supervisor, namely one for every parish, who would find out whether the amount of work done during five hours every day is enough but it will be much more for statistical purposes than for anything else, for with a few exceptions, necessary to confirm the rule, I am sure that the results would be good and even surprising, especially compared to the efficiency of those same men during the winter works, when they are assigned to work in very cold temperatures on more or less useful projects.

I am convinced that if the government would carry out such an experiment in my riding, it would once and for all take its people out of the depression in which they wallow.

Think of the enrichment that would follow if the farmers in that riding could obtain 900,000 paid hours of work to develop permanent pastures.

I am convinced that would encourage them to such an extent that they would add themselves, without pay, twice as many hours, which means that in three years very large tracts of land—now lying idle or producing very little—would be turned into permanent grazing grounds with a high carrying capacity.

Starting from there those farmers' income would increase. And why? Because the governments, having played their part as supplementary bodies, would have enabled those farmers to go very profitably into dairy farming which is the only key to agricultural prosperity, at least in my riding.

With permanent grazing grounds the problem of feed grain would be much less acute because, if well operated, those grazing grounds could produce very economically all the feed for the cattle needed to ensure a high production of dairy products.

On the other hand, request for a deep water wharf at Baie St. Paul has always been rejected. One of the reasons for this refusal is that Charlevoix county is not sufficiently developed and that it is not in a position to supply the farm produce required by the large cities rapidly developing in the north-east region adjacent to Charlevoix county.

If the government would try this method to help agriculture in the county, it would save a great deal of money on what it is now paying by way of unemployment assistance, social assistance and unemployment insurance, and it would permit the farmers of the county to take pride in their achievements as they would no longer depend on any one. Charlevoix could become the granary of the cities of the north. Farmers' sons would be less inclined to leave a prosperous farm for the city where they only swell the number of unemployed.

In short, I advocate for the government to assist the farmer directly on his farm during two or three years; thereafter he will be able to make it on his own with an adequate income. In my opinion, it would be a better solution than the plan just put into effect by the government and which enables you to buy various pieces of land, and join them together. With such a system, the number of land owners decreases but the number of proletarians increases. It has been done and it is still done in some countries which are rightly called communist countries. If the system I advocate were adopted, the opposite would occur; the number of land owners would increase which is an important asset in our struggle against communism.

Like my colleague, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) I receive many complaints about charitable donations receipts for income tax purposes. The minister replied yesterday that receipts for charitable donations were only reduced when they exceeded 10 per cent of income. Now that is false, because in every case which was submitted to me, the amounts of the receipts were less than 10 per cent of income and these receipts were signed by respectable and trustworthy persons. In spite of that, without further ado, a petty dictator, an official of the Department of National Revenue decides that those people have lied and deducts and more or less steals part of their income. Well, the hon. member for Lapointe had the right word, yesterday, for someone who takes away what belongs to another person. And to those who said last night that members of the house should not avail themselves of their privileges to attack the absent, I must point out that those privileges have been granted to us better to protect the interests of the people. That is what the hon. member for Lapointe did yesterday and he deserves to be commended for it.

It is suggested that income tax officials are unable to defend themselves when they are attacked by members in the house. But the taxpayer is even less able to defend himself when an income tax official tries to take his property away from him.

On the other hand, could the minister tell us whether the expense accounts of income tax inspectors are scrutinized by income tax officials as arbitrarily as are receipts for charitable donations? The minister should inquire about this.

That is why, before closing, I shall take the liberty of suggesting to the Minister of National Revenue to think about revising that act, in order to put an end to this tyranny which can be found only in the province of Quebec.

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: In taking part in the debate today I might perhaps begin by reminding hon. members that we are spending now approximately $7 billion a year; the government is asking for supply amounting to approximately that sum. I believe the exact sum they are asking for today is $469 million, and in these circumstances I would have hoped—and I think most of us would have hoped—that more members on the other side of the house would have taken the opportunity to be present.

I see two ministers in their places. I have something very important to say about the C.B.C. and about certain of the remarks made by the Prime Minister with reference to this now famous film. I would have thought that the right hon. gentleman and others of his colleagues on the treasury benches would have been interested in being present. I have not counted the number of members who are in the chamber, but in the light of the amount of money we are spending, and when we realize the height taxation has reached in Canada today, and when we know that it is still increasing and will continue to increase, I would have thought more hon. members would have realized the importance of this situation.

Before I proceed to matters affecting the C.B.C., perhaps I could say a word or two about these immigration cases. I have had nothing to say about them so far, except for some questions directed to the minister of immigration whom I am happy to see present in the chamber. Probably his great mistake—and to date he has been criticized by the press, not by me—is that he has tried to protect his department even though he knows the department has been wrong. I would have thought, irrespective of what the regulations say, and irrespective of what the facts are in reference to a person, as the hon. member for Royal said the other evening a decision should have been made in respect of any man who was held for 90 days. I have had a question on the order paper since June 3; the Speaker asked me to put it on the order paper—

Mr. Tremblay: You will have your answer tomorrow.

Mr. Woolliams: I am to have my answer tomorrow. It is like Alice in Wonderland—never jam today; always jam tomorrow. Anyhow, I have not received my answer. I would have liked to know how many times Mr. Hooper was brought before the bar of justice. How many times was he remanded? Was it every eight days according to the Criminal Code or the Immigration Act? Did he get an opportunity to consult counsel? And what about the 16 or 17 other people who were in jail at the same time? What happened to them? Surely the people who come to this land, even if they do slip into Canada illegally, come here sometimes because they wish to create a new life for themselves; because they want to leave a land which has been devastated by war, or the effects of war, or similar reasons. Many of us could give instances of such things happening.

I do not think the minister should have to take all the blame. The house leader was the former minister and what did he do about the situation? The present minister has taken the whole responsibility, the whole shot in the arm. The house leader is played up as the next prime minister if the Liberals succeed in retaining office; but there is a question mark about that, of course. They may need him quicker than they think they do right now. But the fact is that he must take some responsibility for the situation.

I say to the present minister: Clean up the mess. If the department will not co-operate with him, do something about it. If the regulations are not being interpreted properly, then let us see they are interpreted and make sure the Canadian Bill of Rights really functions in this country.

I now turn to the main subject I wish to discuss this afternoon, namely the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. In my introductory remarks I should like to say that there has been much criticism in the newspapers, and perhaps justly so, about the state of parliament and how it functions. I do not believe parliament will ever function properly or efficiently if ministers of the crown do not give information properly and honestly when they are asked questions. We have the fact that a film, "Mr. Pearson", was made at a cost of $35,000. We know how the C.B.C. gets money from the taxpayers; but while the fact that the film cost $35,000 is not unimportant it may not be very important. However, arising out of this film certain fundamental weaknesses of the government have been exposed. Let us look at them. I charge the government, whose members are almost all absent, with failing to disclose proper information to parliament; and this, in light of the fact that supply of $7 billion is involved, is a very serious matter.

I want to place on the record as I did yesterday the facts of the matter because the question of privilege I raised then involved something very important. The Prime Minister of our country is not so much important as a person as he is because of the fact that he holds a very important position. Anyone who rises to that position has a hard row to hoe from the time he enters the House of Commons, and I am sure all Canadians respect the position of prime minister. The Prime Minister holds this important position with which is associated not only dignity of office but also responsibility of the highest, because he holds the highest position in parliament and the highest position in the land.

But when we tried to ascertain what really took place with regard to this film red herrings were drawn across the trail. The government has continually referred to another film, "The Chief", depicting the Leader of the Opposition, and have talked about the censoring of that film. The film I am dealing with now is the one that has been censored. What has the government to hide in this regard? Why has it been so like pulling teeth to get information and why, to put it mildly, has information been given dishonestly?

Just the other day a respected member of parliament, the former minister of agriculture, was removed from the house because he charged the Prime Minister with not telling the complete truth. Let us look at the record. I want to refer once again to Hansard of May 21, 1964, page 3429, where certain simple and complete questions were directed to the Prime Minister with reference to the action of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in respect of this film. At that time the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue asked this question:

> Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister if he has had a private preview of the film?

The answer of the Prime Minister was simple and direct. I continue the quotation:

> Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.
> Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh? What were you doing it for?

Mr. Pearson: My right hon. friend should not get so excited.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Did you find it a horror film?

The Prime Minister went on to say that he saw the film. I charge that the Prime Minister was right when he said that he saw the film. But let us see what he said on another occasion. I refer to Friday, June 19, the day that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle, the former minister of agriculture, was removed from the house because he said that the Prime Minister of this country had only partly told the facts. I suggest that the Prime Minister did not tell the truth because one statement must be wrong. They cannot both be correct. This is what he said, as found on page 4490 of Hansard for that day:

Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to speak for anybody else but I propose to say that I was telling the truth, the total truth, and I ask the hon. gentleman to accept that. He says, in throwing doubt on my word, that two hon. members have seen this film.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I said one.

Mr. Pearson: One hon. member has seen this film. The hon. member may have seen this film. I have not.

Mr. Diefenbaker: You did.

Mr. Pearson: I have not seen this film.

On May 21, 1964, the Prime Minister of this country came into the House of Commons and said that he had seen a preview of the film in question. Then he came into the house on June 19 and said that he had not seen the film. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that this is a very serious charge indeed, and I accept the responsibility for making it. I am going to quote some other things to show how much misinformation the house has been given, and I say given deliberately.

I am going to suggest that it matters not what the facts are about which a member of the government or any other member of parliament tells an untruth. If we believe in the parliamentary system, the same system Great Britain has, and if it is proven in the House of Commons that the Prime Minister did not tell the truth, because the two statements cannot stand together, then he has a responsibility.

When speaking on the budget after the Liberal government was first formed I pointed out that they had got outside help, that there was a suggestion that there had been leakages with respect to the budget and that the minister had a responsibility, which was to resign. I say to the Prime Minister, not only because he is Prime Minister but because he is a member of the house and leads the largest group of members in the house, that he must either make an explanation or resign.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if I could ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. Woolliams: Certainly.

Mr. McIlraith: In view of the fact he is making direct charges of a rather serious nature regarding the leader of the government, has he followed the usual practice of notifying the member against whom the charges are being made to be present while they are being made?

Mr. Woolliams: I would say, Mr. Chairman, that when I started my remarks I pointed out I intended to discuss the C.B.C. I also pointed out what kind of facts I was going to discuss with reference to the C.B.C. I noticed that the minister himself, and I do not say this by way of criticism, wandered into the house after I started to make my remarks. I am glad to see him here.

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Chairman, I think I should correct that statement. I was in the house when the hon. gentleman started his remarks. I asked him a question having to do with the practice of the house, and I think that as an honourable member he would wish to observe the practice in a serious matter like this. All I want to know is whether or not he sent the usual notice. If by any reason he inadvertently omitted doing so I will be glad to send the usual notice for him now.

Mr. Woolliams: My answer is that yesterday I rose on a question of privilege, raised the same points then and the Prime Minister of Canada remained silent. I say that by his silence he convicted himself. What better notice could he have had?

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, my remarks were merely addressed to the point of order having to do with the practice of the house and had nothing to do at this stage with the substance of what the hon. member is saying. I draw the omission on his part to his attention because in my opinion and that of other hon. members, I think, it would be a reflection on himself if he did not observe the practice. It may be a pure oversight. I make nothing of the fact if it is an oversight, but I am simply calling it to his attention so he can let us know.

Mr. Woolliams: My time is always limited; of course, I can speak again on interim supply. I will say that I have not written the Prime Minister a letter. The reason I did not write him a letter is that I raised a point of privilege yesterday and brought to his attention these two statements, in fact three. He said once that he did not see the film; those words are clear. In his next statement he said he did see the film. There are two contradictory statements concerning the same film. When the question was raised yesterday the Prime Minister remained silent. He did not reply. I hope the Prime Minister is in the building, and I hope he comes in to the house because I have several things I wish to raise.

I say that the respect of parliament is at stake. I will go farther. I say there is a responsibility on the Prime Minister, as a member of parliament, to resign and hand over the tools of office to someone else. Since my hon. friend has raised this question, I should like to quote no less an authority than the present Prime Minister when he spoke on another subject. However, the analogy will be perfect. Speaking on October 1, 1962, as reported at page 53 of Hansard—I brought this along because I thought this very question may be raised, the question of my right to speak on this subject this afternoon. This was in reference to a question of whether the same man, the hon. member who was expelled from this house, had broken a cabinet confidence during the election campaign when he stated he was not concerned about whether the dollar was pegged at 95 cents or 90 cents because it would be good for Canada. The present Prime Minister said at that time:

> One of the reasons for the acceleration of this crisis, not the cause of it but the acceleration of it, was the minister's own incredible gaff when he calmly announced during the election in Vancouver that he did not like the 92.5 cent dollar of which the Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the minister of finance at that time were so proud. They had been telling the Canadian people what a master stroke of policy that was. Then, the Minister of Agriculture gets up some ten days before the election and says he does not like it. Talk about cabinet secrets and the inviolability of cabinet discussion. What would have happened to a British cabinet minister in Westminster if he had made this kind of public gaff?

The minister of agriculture would have had to resign. Not so long ago we witnessed a situation in Great Britain—I am not going into these facts in which a British minister of the crown said no when he should have said yes. We have no once and then yes again. What did that cabinet minister do? He resigned because he felt responsible to the house. He had misinformed the house and he resigned to keep the respectability of the House of Commons and to keep the parliamentary system alive. I say therefore that the Prime Minister today, if he accepts his responsibility seriously, should resign. I say again that the fact he would not answer yesterday convicted him; he was convicted by his silence. He knew there was no answer. There is no explanation. What makes it far worse, what makes it very sad indeed, is the fact that another member of the privy council was expelled from this House of Commons because he dared tell the Prime Minister, who on two occasions had said two different things as recorded in Hansard, that he was not telling the complete truth.

The Chairman: I am sure the hon. member knows that he cannot reflect upon a vote of the house. I am not saying that the whole substance of his speech is out of order, but certainly when he refers to a particular incident on which a vote of the house was taken I would think that he is reflecting on that vote. This is the suggestion I make. The hon. member, I know, will want to take that into consideration.

Mr. Woolliams: I would want to take cognizance of your ruling and stay within your ruling. I want to say this: I was not reflecting on any vote of the house. I was reflecting on certain circumstances which took place before the vote.

However, I will move along now because I do not want to have a red herring drawn over my speech. I want to lay down the facts and bring them before the members of this house. In my opinion, as a member of this house, the Prime Minister has misled the house. I have read two statements and I want to read another. I quote from page 3836 of Hansard for June 2, 1964, and the reference is to this same subject. The Prime Minister was asked by the hon. member for Yukon, a certain question and this was his reply:

> I did not see it in my office. I saw it in Toronto at a studio, and it was shown in an office in the east block. I saw part of it there but the sound track was so bad I left after a few minutes because it could not be understood.

Then the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue asked a supplementary question as follows:

> I have a question supplementary to the previous question asked of the Prime Minister. I was wondering if, as a sophisticated critic of art, he would tell us what he thought of the film "Mr. Pearson" when he saw it?
> Mr. Pearson: I found it exceedingly interesting, Mr. Speaker.
> Mr. Diefenbaker: Revealing?

It is revealing; it is revealing that they will not come forward and tell the facts in this house when they are asked for the facts.

Let us consider another story, an independent story for a few moments. I should like now to turn to another set of facts that took place on June 15, 1964. I emphasize again that if we, as members of parliament, irrespective of the side of the house on which we sit, endorse what is going on now on the front benches of this government, parliament will come into such disrespect it will take years for parliament to regain its importance in our land.

An hon. Member: What about five or six years ago?

Mr. Woolliams: My friend is inquiring about six years ago; he left out two years, and I suppose he is talking about the pipe line debate. It is still haunting him.

Let me go back to the facts. I should like to quote from page 4329 of Hansard for June 15, 1964, a speech by the Leader of the Opposition:

> When the Prime Minister indulged in quotations he did not think of bringing to the attention of the house the letter he received from the various intellectuals who signed that message on May 27.

In order that the record will be clear, I should say that the letter was from a group of intellectuals in this country with reference to the flag. The Prime Minister said:

> Mr. Speaker, I received no such letter.

I am going to lay the groundwork for the statement that again the Prime Minister did not tell the facts and the truth in this house.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Woolliams: I know; I feel the same way. On May 27, there was a letter written and signed by various intellectuals in this country. One of those intellectuals was Denis Smith, assistant to the president and assistant professor of politics, Trent University, Peterborough. This letter was dated May 27, 1964. I am now going to read from page 4330 of Hansard. Why does the Prime Minister want to hide these things? What is he afraid of? Why is he afraid of this film? Is he afraid because of the fake build-up of images in another land? Is he afraid because he has been told images have proven to be very important in political life? Well, if this image crosses the land then the people of Canada will find out what goes on in this government, and particularly what comes from the mouth of the Prime Minister.

At page 4330 he is recorded as saying that he would not like to mislead the house.

> I received no such letter but I did get a letter on my desk. It was addressed "Dear Mr. . . ." blank, and there was no signature to it, but it had that body.

I suggest that the Prime Minister did receive a letter dated May 27, 1964, and that it was not addressed to his blank office, because his office is not blank at the moment. It was addressed "The Right Hon. Lester B. Pearson, P.C., M.P., Prime Minister of Canada, Ottawa, Ontario" and it began "Dear Mr. Prime Minister". The letter had on it the names of various people, one of whom was the assistant to the president and assistant professor of political science at Trent University, Peterborough, a Mr. Denis Smith.

Why did the Prime Minister say it was not directed to him? Why did he say it was addressed "Dear Mr. . . ." blank? Did he want to tell the house that he had not received a letter from the intellectuals criticizing the flag which his government is bringing in, and which the hon. member for Royal said last night is a manufactured issue to cover up the irresponsibility, inadequacy and inefficiency of the government?

Those are the two points I want to make and I have made them. First of all the facts in reference to the questions on the film were not true, and he has not told us the facts in reference to the flag.

I could bring up another matter, but I do not have time to quote upon it. When this house first met after October of 1963, I asked the Prime Minister about the winter games in Banff. He said that the Department of External Affairs sent officials and one important minister to a conference; but later, when I placed the question on the order paper, I got a written reply stating there were no officials sent and the answer from the minister, which was different from that by the Prime Minister, was to the effect that it was against the law to send them; that it was not a conference but a committee. And so the Prime Minister sneaked out the back door instead of the front door in discussing that problem.

I say this, respecting the office of the Prime Minister, that the Prime Minister who gave that answer knew no officials of the Department of External Affairs were at that winter games meeting, whether it was a conference, a committee or whatever it was.

Having gone that far, and certainly I have gone far, I would say to him that he should take and reread something that should haunt the government and himself because of these discrepancies which I have set out, and on which he sat silently and failed to speak on a most important point of privilege. I may add there were many shocked people on the government back benches yesterday, as there were on this side of the house, when the Prime Minister remained silent and refused to answer. But what he should do is reread what he said in this chamber on February 4, 1963, when he wanted an election, when the Liberals were hungry for power. This is what he said in reference to our leader:

> We face emergencies and problems in this country at this time. We need a government that will make decisions—

Then he went on:

> He must have felt very sad—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: You can clap now as much as you like, but when I come to the section you don't like you won't be clapping.

> He must have felt very sad in making the kind of speech he had to make, but at that time he said, quoting the immortal words of Cromwell when he went into the Long Parliament:
> "You have sat here too long for the little good that you have been doing.

Then, after some interruption, he finished the quotation:

> "Depart, I say, and let's have done with you. In God's name, go."

I say to the Prime Minister, who is not here now, what he said to the former prime minister, "in God's name, go."

Mr. Lamontagne: That is not what they said yesterday.

Mr. Woolliams: I say this, according to the natural law, according to the law of wisdom, according to the divine law, the law of God, this Prime Minister should leave because he is misinforming and misrepresenting facts in this House of Commons; and if he knows his responsibility he will leave.

I can only believe, when someone said he was steeped in the fine arts, that he might have been steeped in the fine arts of diplomacy. I believe most people will accept that, but maybe he read too seriously and got his two positions he has held mixed up, because I quote from page 452 of Plato's work, "The Republic", where the author discusses diplomacy:

> The rulers of the state are the only ones who should have the privilege of lying, either at home or abroad; they may be allowed to lie for the good of the state.

We know what Plato meant, when you are dealing with external affairs; but when we are dealing with the business of the House of Commons and the business of the Canadian people then I say to you, Mr. Chairman, it is a different situation.

The Prime Minister remains silent. The words were read while he was here in the chamber and they showed he said, "I did not see that film." Then he said, "I did see that film," and then he said, "I saw a part of that film." If he had been allowed to answer again we would probably have received another version; but I must not digress because it is important. He now has a responsibility to come into the chamber and say, "I misinformed the house. I have done so. I know my responsibility. Someone else is taking over as the leader of the Liberals." That is the charge I make against the Prime Minister. I say it is a serious charge and I have documented the statements I have made. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to take up any more time of the committee.

Mr. Pugh: As I listened to the hon. member for Bow River certain things struck me very strongly. A serious charge was made against the Prime Minister, which was a reiteration of a point of privilege brought up yesterday. At the outset the hon. member said he wished the Prime Minister were in his seat. I counted the house at that time and there were eight Liberals over there sitting and yawning, and talking away—

Mr. Macaluso: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, I would like to correct the hon. member's statement. I counted the opposition benches and there were 13 members there. Let us have the record straight.

Mr. Pugh: There were only eight Liberals. This was before the hon. member came in.

Mr. Macaluso: On a point of privilege, Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Pugh: Sit down. I am talking on a point of order.

Mr. Macaluso: I have been in the chamber all afternoon and I heard every speech made. I think the hon. member should look straight before he makes comments. I ask him to count the members on the opposition benches, and not on those opposite him.

Mr. Pugh: There were eight Liberals in the chamber at the time the hon. member—

Mr. Dupuis: That is entirely wrong.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I think the committee would be well advised to get along with the resolution in hand.

Mr. Pugh: Well now, Mr. Chairman, I counted the chamber and there were eight Liberals present. What I cannot understand is how the Liberals can be so silly as to try and hide the facts that have been brought forward. Why does not one of them stand up and say something about them? These are charges which should ring right across Canada, misstatements—one, two, three, four, any number of them have been made. And not only were there misstatements but questions were asked and sloughed off. We have heard a lot on the business of the house and the flag issue, but it seems to go on, and on and on, and I am rather inclined to agree with the hon. member for Bow River, and also the hon. member for Royal, who said the government will bring up any controversial issue but that it will not bring on any important business before the house for determination. I thing it is high time it did.

There is another point which is very germane, and that is all this laughing which is going on, on the Liberal side. I and many people across Canada think they are well equipped to sit down and laugh but they cannot get up and talk any sense.

There is another matter I would like to mention—that the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was expelled from this house—that is the only word I can use—as a result of statements which he made as to the facts which the Prime Minister of this country had put before the house.

He doubted those things and said that the Prime Minister intended to mislead the house. This was all dealt with in the question of privilege raised yesterday by the hon. member for Bow River. In that question of privilege the very words were documented. Out of that documentation, the thing I cannot understand is how the Prime Minister can sit in his seat and say nothing. All he did was get red in the face—and I am reminded of an old expression that arose out of the French revolution, "See, the blood of Danton chokes him".

Mr. Deschatelets: What a contribution.

The Deputy Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Some hon. Members: No, Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal with a subject which interests more particularly the farmers of the province of Quebec. A large number of farmers including pipe, cigar and cigarette tobacco growers, are concerned at the present time because they have no protection against crop damage by hail or frost.

The federal government has drawn up a bill which should be very beneficial to farmers if, of course, the interested provinces will sign an agreement with Ottawa to avail themselves of such benefits.

In 1961, I wrote to the provincial minister of agriculture, Hon. Alcide Courcy, to ask him what were the intentions of the provincial government in this regard, so that the government could decide whether or not to take advantage of this crop insurance legislation.

I am happy to read to the house part of the reply dated July 24, 1961, from the provincial minister of agriculture:

> Dear Sir: In reply to your letter of June 14, I can assure you that the provincial government intends, in principle, to take advantage of the federal Crop Insurance Act to the extent that the people primarily interested, that is the agricultural producers, will want to take advantage of it.

Mr. Chairman, there is no doubt that farmers who go in for special crops need the protection offered by the Crop Insurance Act.

Recently again, in Joliette, a storm swept through several farms where cigarette tobacco is grown. Losses amounted to thousands of dollars. If, in 1961, the Quebec government had signed an agreement with Ottawa, the owners of those farms would have been protected and could have received the money needed to recoup their losses.

Again I ask the federal Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), who unfortunately is not in the house, as well as the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and a great number of ministers—

Mr. Lamontagne: You should know that he is in hospital.

Mr. Pigeon: I take this opportunity to ask the Secretary of State, who gets along so well with the authorities of the province of Quebec—

Mr. Lamontagne: That is true.

Mr. Pigeon: —including Mr. René Lévesque, to urge the Quebec government to sign an agreement so as to protect the farmers of that province, especially those who go in for special farming, such as the tobacco growers.

The average income of eastern farmers, that is, of Quebec farmers, is approximately $1,200 a year. I know, Mr. Chairman, that a few provinces have already entered into an agreement with the federal government so as to benefit from the Crop Insurance Act. It would be essential, in my opinion, that the Quebec government should sign this agreement without delay and start by extending this act to tobacco growers, and then to fruit and vegetable growers, in order to cover eventually all Quebec farmers.

Mr. Chairman, this is what I had to say and I hope that the federal government and the Minister of Agriculture, as well as the Minister of Forestry, who is unfortunately absent from the house, will do their best in this connection.

I hope that some other minister will tell them to meet with Hon. Alcide Courcy—we all know that the federal Minister of Agriculture is on excellent terms with the provincial minister of agriculture—to ask him to co-operate as soon as possible with Ottawa in the best interests of Quebec agriculture.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, during the next few minutes, I should like to express the views of the average worker in Quebec and throughout Canada concerning the way the government of the day is handling the affairs of our country.

May I say that workers, who are commonly called average citizens, have lost all confidence in the present Liberal administration. Considering the numerous promises which were made during the 1962 and 1963 election campaigns, they had a right to expect that things would be a lot better than they are at present. After having trusted the Liberal party, they now realize that they have been deceived, and they deeply regret the defeat of the government which was in office from 1957 to 1962.

Mr. Chairman, you will certainly recall that during the 1962 and the 1963 election campaigns, workers were promised a pension scheme without taxation.

That promise was made in all the provinces and it brought votes to the Liberal party. Since the present government has been in power, not only has it introduced a pension plan only to withdraw it later, but it has brought in another scheme, and there is now some talk about a third one.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I wonder how the Liberal party could promise a pension plan during the 1962 and 1963 election campaigns and how it could honestly expect to carry out its pledges.

I have before me a booklet published by the Liberal party during the election campaign, prior to the election held on June 18, 1962. It reads in part:

[Text]

> $140 a month for today's retired couple.
> Up to $295 a month when you retire.

[Translation]

And further on, dealing with contributions, it reads as follows:

[Text]

> The Liberal plan will add a contributory pension to the existing old age pension. The addition will be paid for entirely by contributions, not by taxes.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that the rate of tax on income has been moved from 3 per cent to 4 per cent. This was to cope with the increase in pension to $75 a month for the old age pensioners. You will also recall, Mr. Chairman, that this increase of $10 a month which was paid to the old age pensioners was implemented only after the official opposition had forced the government to fulfil its promise. Had it not been for the Conservative opposition, as sure as anything the old age pensioners would still be on the $65 a month pension as they were before.

[Translation]

But I would like to prove to the house that the Liberal promises made during the two election campaigns have become dead letters and that those who were supposed to bring such prosperity to the average worker are now unable to fulfil their promises.

I would refer to the two deduction tables with regard to income tax, and particularly forms 101 and 101A, as well as the one which was introduced in January 1963. If we take as deduction basis a salary of $65 a week, we shall see, for instance, that, for an unmarried person earning $65 a week, the income tax shows a 40 cents increase per week, whereas the married man without dependants, is paying 25 cents a week over and above the amount paid at the time we were in power; the head of a family with two dependant children is paying 50 cents more than under the Conservatives; and a person with four dependant children, 5 cents more a week.

This government made many other promises, which remained just promises. For instance, I wonder why the government is waiting to carry out its promise to create an industrial council. Moreover, during the election campaign, those who are now supporting the government had promised Canadian citizens a special compensation to workers struck by illness. With regard to unemployment insurance, the Liberal party promised, during those elections, to extend its benefits to farm workers and, more than a year after the Liberal, have come into power, there is still no sign that farm workers will, in the near future, be covered by the Unemployment Insurance Act.

Another promise which has certainly not been fulfilled is the one I find in the Liberal program of March 1963, and I quote according to this booklet:

[Text]

The Liberals' objectives for the future are designed to ensure a square deal for labour.

In one of the promises hereafter enunciated we see that a Liberal government would institute a federal labour code, including a minimum wage of $1.25 an hour, a maximum work week of 40 hours, two weeks' vacation and seven statutory holidays. We are still waiting for this.

An hon. Member: We are getting close to shore.

Mr. Ricard: The hon. member says we are getting close to shore. We are closer to the end of the world than we have ever been before. The promise leaves us a long way from the shore, just as much as we are a long way from the day when the promise will be fulfilled.

I also see in this pamphlet that the Liberals' policy of economic expansion will restore the unemployment insurance fund and return it to its proper function. It was only a couple of months ago that the fund was drained to the bottom, and if it had not been for some emergency measures the workers of this country would have been deprived of their weekly benefits. Would the hon. member for Levis repeat his remark? I heard what he said though I will not repeat it; but I would have something to tell him if he did repeat it.

[Translation]

All this goes to say that the Canadian people lost confidence in this government long ago.

You will recall, Mr. Chairman, the 1962 election campaign opposed the dollar devaluation. They insisted that such a measure would be detrimental to the Canadian people. According to certain Liberal speakers, a Conservative administration would mean that the Canadian people would head straight for disaster. But, once in power, they forgot to re-establish the dollar parity and carried on where the Conservative party had left off. They even tried to get credit for measures introduced by the Conservative government.

[Mr. Ricard.]

This is not the only thing they had promised. You will recall, Mr. Chairman, that they had promised to give Canada a balanced budget. Goodness knows how the budget has been balanced since they are in power. Not only has the budget been in a worse state than ever before, but from one year to the next, we are going from one catastrophe to another, and deficits are piling up.

The Liberals have nevertheless thought they would cure all ills by establishing new taxes. You know as well as I do, Mr. Chairman, that the 11 per cent tax is not extremely popular. It has not been of much help in developing our country. It has momentarily brought money to the government and had it not been for that extra revenue, I wonder what the government would have done.

Not only was 11 per cent tax increased, in addition to the 3 and 4 per cent on income tax, but there was also an increase in postal rates. As you know, the Postmaster General still has a resolution on the order paper to further increase postal rates.

I continually meet middle class people in my riding and I realize that, as a general rule, the people, the ordinary workers, have lost faith in the present Liberal government. I cannot repeat it too often for it is precisely what is happening, and people are anxious to have another opportunity to show their discontent to those who had promised them the moon and stars if they ever came back into power.

We have often been blamed for doing nothing or almost nothing to help the working class. Well, allow me to remind you of some measures which we took when our government was in power and which favoured more particularly what is commonly known as the average citizen.

As soon as we came into office, we amended the Unemployment Insurance Act to make it more consistent with present requirements. For example, we gave married women a status equal to that of the ordinary worker. In 1957, 250,000 workers drew for the first time benefits amounting to $13 million. We changed the periods of seasonal benefits under the Unemployment Insurance Act and extended them from 16 to 24 weeks and, in 1958, we extended to 30 weeks the benefits which a worker can draw under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

This favoured 200,000 workers who shared among them an amount of $14 million and, in 1959, we increased the number of weeks for regular unemployment insurance benefits from 36 to 52 weeks a year. This enabled 80,000 more Canadians to benefit thereby.

What single step did this government take in order to help the working class? It merely continued what the previous Conservative government had established, for which the Liberals are now trying to take credit.

You remember that when the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr), who was at that time minister of labour, introduced in the house the legislation intended to help municipalities and the measure concerning winter works, those proposals were greeted with mockery by Liberal members who were then in opposition and who even tried to ridicule them. Those people contended at the time that those measures would not give any practical results. However, if you listen now to their speeches, you realize that they are trying to make us believe that those programs were initiated by them and that they are giving very interesting results.

It is a fact that the results are very interesting and the municipalities are happy to take advantage thereof, but they know however, to whom credit belongs.

For instance, you have the measure concerning sewage treatment plants. Several municipalities have availed themselves of that measure and the results have been excellent and continue to improve constantly, since all the municipalities go on taking advantage of this act, as drinking water supplies are decreasing all the time.

Now, I cannot resume my seat without making a few comparisons in a particular field which concerns more especially the constituency of St. Hyacinthe-Bagot. I want to show that this government did not do very much in order to reduce unemployment, especially in the province of Quebec, where we have the sad honour of the greatest number of unemployed in all the provinces of the country.

In the province of Quebec, 112,000 unemployed are looking for jobs. If we refer more especially to the burning speeches made by the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin), we see that the unemployed, who do not now have a job and are deprived of a salary to support their families, are certainly entitled to expect more from a team which had promised so much, especially in their first 60 days in office.

Indeed, if I refer to a speech made in the house by the hon. member for Essex East, the present Secretary of State for External Affairs, where he promised that the Liberal party would pass a whole series of measures if elected, I see that not one of them—except perhaps a half measure—has been implemented to stem unemployment.

Well, I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to read his past speeches over again. I regret he is not in the house, because I would be very happy to remind him of his statements. However, I would ask his colleague, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) or the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) to advise the Secretary of State for External Affairs to read over the speech he made on September 20, 1961, and to convey to his colleague, the Minister of Labour, the information he said he had, so that the latter may take the necessary steps to give work to the unemployed in the province of Quebec.

For over a year, the unemployed in the province of Quebec have been hoping something would be done for them. When we were in power, we were blamed for not doing enough for unemployed workers. If it was wrong at that time to have unemployed people, it is no better now, especially in view of the fact that the province of Quebec alone has at least from 110,000 to 112,000 jobless people. I am asking Liberal hon. members from Quebec who are now in the house to bring pressure to bear on the minister, to discuss the matter in their caucus, in short, to speak for the unemployed. As a matter of fact, it is just as sad to see a man out of work in 1964 as it was in 1962 or 1963.

However, Mr. Chairman, you will recognize that we do not take advantage of human distress as the government members used to do when they were in opposition. In fact, when we were in power, almost not a day went by that the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) or some other Liberal members took the floor to try and make capital out of human distress and to paint a gloomy picture of the lot of Canadian workers.

If government members and more particularly those from Quebec wish to give evidence of honesty, they should work relentlessly on the unemployment problem and discuss it with the Minister of Labour as often as they did when they were in opposition. Only then shall we realize that they were sincere at that time. If they do not follow that course in 1964, it would become clear that their only object was blackmail and that they were not the least interested in the welfare of the Canadian people.

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for St. Henry (Mr. Lessard) should rise a little more often.

Mr. Guay: If he did rise, it would not be to talk nonsense, like you.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I said a while ago that I wished to put on the record some statistics concerning my riding more specifically. I have in my hand some official figures supplied to me by the St. Hyacinthe unemployment insurance office and if I compare the statistics for January, February, March, April and May for the years 1961, 1962, 1963 and 1964, I find that this government did not really try very hard to give employment to unemployed people in Canada.

Thus, in January 1961 at the St. Hyacinthe unemployment insurance office, there were 3,578 unemployed applicants; 2,528 in 1962; 2,543 in 1963 and in 1964, under a Liberal administration, 2,344.

An hon. Member: It is falling off.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I realize that the figures are decreasing, but it is due to the measures passed by the former Conservative government and which today are bringing results. In fact, I feel compelled to ask, once more, the members of the government to name one single measure taken by this government in order to alleviate unemployment, because I notice that this government continues to apply measures which were all put into effect by the previous government.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. I should like to answer the hon. member who just quoted some figures; I would tell him that in my riding, in Bonaventure—

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I do not think that this point of order is well taken.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member has asked for figures and I am prepared to oblige him.

The Chairman: Order. It might be difficult for the Chair to make a ruling before the hon. member for Bonaventure has stated his point of order, but judging by his first words, I do not think that there is any point of order.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I am going to complete my remarks and then the hon. member for Bonaventure will have all the necessary time to make a speech, if he wishes. He will be then in a position to refute my arguments if he believes that I am wrong.

[Mr. Ricard.]

Indeed, I would very much like to see the Liberal members, especially those from Quebec, insist on rising as much as they did when they were in opposition.

Mr. Pigeon: Including the hon. member for St. Henry.

Mr. Ricard: And I say again that the fact that they do not will prove that they were totally insincere at the time. Indeed, I want to show it beyond any doubt. If my hon. friends opposite feel that the comments I have just made are not in keeping with the facts, let them try and prove it.

In February, 1961, there were 3,919 claimants registered at the St. Hyacinthe unemployment insurance office; 2,613 in February, 1962; 2,700 in February, 1963, and 2,470 in February, 1964.

Now if we look at the number of placements effected during the same period, we note that there were 188 in 1961, 162 in 1962, 208 in 1963 and 231 in 1964. The situation is not too much different from that which prevailed when we were in office. There has been some improvement which, I repeat, is due to the steps we took.

As for the month of February, 139 placements were made in 1961, 177 in 1962, 196 in 1963 and 185 in 1964. There also, there is an advance, but in the opposite direction. I want to draw the attention of the hon. member for Longueuil (Mr. Côté) to this fact, to spare him the trouble of making rapid calculations.

Mr. Chairman, I do not have time to read the whole table I have here, but it does show rather well what is happening. Far from experiencing, under a Liberal regime, a prosperity beyond compare, Quebec's unemployed are still waiting for something to be done for them, and it is on their behalf that I ask the present government, which had promised full employment, to implement its program.

Mr. Chairman, as I have said, the unemployed in the province of Quebec have been waiting for a solution from this government for more than a year. Surely they will get tired of waiting. Poverty will continue to increase and the blame will lie with the present government which will not have taken necessary steps to prevent that disaster.

Members of the government, set to work. Your turn has come. You have criticized us long enough. Now, it is up to you to show some leadership and to do something for those in need.

Mr. Badanai: Mr. Chairman, I wish to make only a few remarks in this debate, which I would say has been a very fine one. Members' contributions to the debate have been useful and helpful. However, if I may say so there were many exaggerations and statements by various members of the opposition which were not entirely in accordance with the facts. It also appears that in this debate members are primarily concerned with the deportation proceedings in regard to individuals who have illegally entered the country. However, it should be understood that the deportation laws have been approved by parliament and are for the protection of the Canadian people. They are administered by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and that department is charged with the responsibility of upholding the laws of this country. I believe that no hon. member would treat lightly the matter of illegal entry into the country. As pointed out by the minister in his statement, he has given an explanation of the elaborate precautions taken to protect the legal and human rights of those who are to be deported. The department goes to great lengths, I might say, to insure that every deportee is furnished with an interpreter whenever necessary, in order to insure reasonable protection for the individuals concerned.

Several instances were brought to my attention in which the minister had personally intervened on the eve of a scheduled deportation and instructed the officials of the department to postpone the deportation to allow further consideration of a case. The Department of Citizenship and Immigration has been charged with the responsibility of increasing Canada's population through immigration, so that we may expand our domestic markets for our agriculture and manufactured products, stimulate economic activity and by providing new skills and ideas to support a higher level of cultural development and cultural independence.

I am sure it is unnecessary for me to remind hon. members of the tremendous responsibilities which the minister and the officials of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration are facing in carrying out this task. Since the end of world war II, more than two and a half million persons have immigrated to this country. Immigrants today comprise approximately 8.3 per cent of our total population and 12.25 per cent of our labour force. The minister referred also to the 30 million visitors, tourists and businessmen who cross our borders each year. The importance of these non-immigrants, in terms of good will or economic value to this country, cannot be overemphasized.

This tremendous volume of traffic has been handled efficiently by immigration officers without fuss, without fanfare and with very few complaints. I think they should be congratulated on the job they have done. I repeat these important points only to indicate to hon. members the extent to which the criticisms of some members of this house, in the course of the past few weeks, have reflected in a disproportionate way on the performance of a highly dedicated, hard working group of people. I must confess, and I am sure many hon. members will share my feeling, that I found this regrettable.

Although the number of persons involved in deportations is small in relation to the total number dealt with by immigration officers, the operation of elaborate procedures, the time and effort necessary to deal with them and to protect their human and legal rights are well worth while, as the outline given by the minister has indicated. Parliament has imposed upon the Department of Citizenship and Immigration the responsibility to protect Canada and the people of this country from invasion, if you like, by unsuitable and undesirable elements. The government is anxious that this difficult task should be carried out fairly, with due regard for the protection of the rights of the individual, as well as humanitarian and compassionate considerations.

It is difficult, sometimes, to make generalizations in matters of this kind. However, hon. members can be certain that there is no desire on the part of the minister or the department to act in an arbitrary or tyrannical manner, as suggested by one hon. member this afternoon. I believe it was the hon. member for Bow River who made that assertion. At the same time parliament has placed on the minister and this department the responsibility of exercising a discretion in the granting of admissions. This is not an exercise which the minister takes lightly. While it may not be in the public interest to give an explanation in detail in all situations, as the hon. member for Greenwood has been emphasizing the department should, nevertheless hon. members may take it as a matter of record that a very exhaustive examination of the circumstances is undertaken before a decision is reached.

Apart from deportations, another very important side to this general problem which hon. members might bear in mind is that illegal entrants are not infrequently prohibited persons under the Immigration Act and would be refused a Canadian visa if they applied from another country. By entering Canada illegally as ship deserters, stowaways and non-immigrants, they attempt to obtain priority consideration for their cases, ahead of other more desirable immigrants who follow authorized procedures. They attempt also to obtain priority over the relatives of Canadians who are anxious to be reunited with their families in Canada.

Having said that, I honestly believe that in the light of present day conditions the act, as it now stands, as pointed out by the hon. member for Hamilton West, is inadequate. I hope that when legislation is brought before this house we shall be able to enact some improvements.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona made statements this afternoon about inefficiency and a lack of due regard for the rights of individuals held in custody for illegal entry. I suggest to him that he should read the various exhaustive statements made by the minister in this house, and he will immediately realize that the minister has been more than fair, and any implication to the contrary is not in accordance with the facts.

The hon. member for Royal referred to Greek nationals who enter illegally but who have lived here for four or five years, some of whom have married and have jobs. I might say in this connection that the minister has been lenient in some of these cases and has been instrumental in seeing that landed immigrant status was granted to them.

This I am sure should prove that he is not blind to the humanitarian instincts, and does not hesitate to exercise discretion, giving to many of those who may or may not qualify the benefit of the doubt.

I want to assure the hon. member that this government has not forgotten its promises, nor the intent to gradually develop a progressive immigration policy to fit the times. I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that the members of this committee will bear with the minister and the Department of Citizenship and Immigration to the end that we, in the not too long distant future, will bring about regulations and changes in the act that will be beneficial to the country. I say so because there seems to be some impatience, and I quite understand that. I have also been impatient for the past six years, advocating a more progressive immigration policy. But now that I know a little more about the difficulties, about the problems involved, I want to tell members of the committee something which may not be general knowledge, that we are also short of staff in our department. Our minister has perhaps been a little reluctant in demanding greater consideration from treasury board. We need more money to employ more qualified persons to aid in the work of the department. Our minister is working hard at this. I think he has been able to get the ear of the President of the Privy Council and of the rest of the cabinet, so that we will be able to get sufficient funds to enable this department to be developed to the point where we will be able to introduce and develop a policy which will be consistent with the great potentials of this great country of Canada.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I was motivated to participate in this debate by the very vicious and unwarranted attack made by the hon. member for Bow River on the Prime Minister. I think it was a prostitution of the obvious talent of that hon. member that, by using question period statements out of context, he was thus able to turn around and attack a man as great as our Prime Minister.

There are people in this chamber such as the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition who have served the country and the House of Commons well, and I think it is a tragedy in this day and age that people of that stature should be subjected to that type of unwarranted attack, rendered all the more vicious by the fact that the Prime Minister was not present in the chamber at the time.

Mr. Grafftey: Read Cardin's speech.

Mr. Mackasey: It was pointed out with some accuracy by most hon. members in front of me that it is traditional when making this type of unwarranted attack at least to have the courtesy to notify the person in question about the subject matter in order that he be entitled to refute and answer it. That opportunity was denied the Prime Minister this afternoon.

Mr. Smith: Check with your Associate Minister of National Defence.

Mr. Mackasey: You may make your speech later. I think there is something reverent about leaders of parties, about the positions they fill, and I think that a prime minister of a country as great as Canada should be free of this type of unwarranted attack, which disgusted most of us here. The Prime Minister has served his country well in war, like many others in this chamber. Later he served this country very well as one of its senior civil servants, and his record as the Canadian delegate to the United Nations is second to none. As the leader of our opposition he did an excellent job.

I know this is a house debate. I know at times the argument gets charged and there are moments when things we say are of a spontaneous nature, but the unfortunate aspect of the attack by the hon. member for Bow River was that it was coldly calculated, and it is little wonder most hon. members on this side feel it was more than a coincidence that this attack on the person of the Prime Minister took place when he was not here to defend himself. I leave it up to hon. members of the committee to say whether or not our Prime Minister has to satisfy hon. members such as the hon. member for Bow River.

People who lie are motivated by fear, and the Prime Minister of Canada has nothing to fear from anybody in this chamber. He has nothing to fear from the film "Mr. Pearson" which I think has occupied a little too much of the time of this house. If the reason the film is being discussed is because of interference with the C.B.C. then I say continue to discuss that matter, because the C.B.C. should not be interfered with by this government or any government, past or future.

But this is not what is happening in our debate. This was not the attack made by the hon. member for Bow River. He was simply using the opportunity, like a jackal chasing deer through the forest, to discredit a man like our Prime Minister; and this is a despicable thing.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

The Chairman: Before I call it six o'clock it is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A, to inform the committee that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock p.m. this day are as follows:

The hon. member for Kent, (Ont.) (Mr. Danforth), imposition of countervailing duty on imports of Canadian cars and parts by the United States government; the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), segregation of Indian children from other students attending school at Fort William.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, before supper I was motivated to participate in this debate as the result of what I thought to be a rather vicious, unwarranted and fully premeditated attack both on the Prime Minister as a person and on the high office that he represents. I realize from the interjections that came my way in the few minutes that I had the floor that my remarks were not too well received by opposition members.

Mr. Woolliams: Nobody complained.

Mr. Mackasey: But it is significant to me that these hon. members in rebuttal—from their seats, I may add—pointed out that similar attacks had been waged on the then prime minister, the present right hon. Leader of the Opposition. Let me say this, that one of the advantages of being a relatively new member in the house is that I do not have a vast store of insults and attacks launched three years ago, five years ago or ten years ago, at my disposal. Frankly, this house suffers too much from the elephantine memory of many of the members of the House of Commons.

I am not afraid of a good, bitter debate; I have participated in a few of them in my time in civic politics. In fact I sometimes relish them. But I think there is a vast difference between debate and the type of unwarranted and unnecessary attack that was made on the Prime Minister this afternoon. And I am rather disappointed that the attack should come from the hon. member for Bow River, whom I happen to like more than perhaps most acquaintances I have met since I have been here. I am afraid he may have an affinity for this type of attack, because en editorial appearing in the Calgary Herald of March 12, 1962, entitled "The wrong kind of politics", had this to say:

> When a man is elected to the House of Commons, he accepts a public trust which places upon him, among other things, a certain burden of moderation including moderation in speech.
> This point seemed to escape Mr. Eldon Woolliams, Conservative member from Bow River, when he addressed a recent meeting in Edmonton and said the Liberal party—

The Chairman: Order. May I suggest that the hon. member is out of order in referring to the hon. member by name. It is better that he should refer to hon. members by the constituencies they represent.

Mr. Mackasey: That is proof, Mr. Chairman, of my relative newness to this house, and I apologize for my mistake.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I wonder whether the hon. member, before he reads the editorial, would permit one simple question. I did not hear all his remarks just before six o'clock because I had an appointment, but I certainly came here to hear him tonight. I wonder if he would explain—because no doubt he has had some conversation in this regard—how it was that the Prime Minister was able to absolutely contradict himself on at least two occasions; and there were many other occasions to which I could refer. If he can throw some enlightenment on that point, for the benefit of the house, I would be most grateful. I do not call that a vicious attack.

Miss Jewett: You don't like the editorial.

An hon. Member: Hark who's talking.

Mr. Woolliams: I don't mind the editorial. It is a Liberal newspaper.

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, among the other talents that the hon. member has, of course, I must now add patience, because I certainly intend to get to that point. The member from Bow River is an honourable member who usually, while making his point forcibly, stays within the bounds of decency—

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, is the hon. member reading from an editorial? The hon. member is apparently being critical of one of the members of this house. I think, Mr. Chairman, you will find he is out of order. Let the hon. member make his own assessment of other hon. members in this house and not rely on outside people for it.

The Chairman: I did not understand that the hon. member, at least at this point, was reading an editorial.

Mr. Woolliams: He certainly was.

The Chairman: If he was, perhaps the hon. member would say so.

Mr. Mackasey: I can assure the committee, Mr. Chairman, that this was written in the Calgary Herald on March 12, 1962; but I will not go any further with it except to assure the hon. gentleman who just interrupted that this is a very authentic document—and I am sure he understands what I mean.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: The fundamental point that the hon. member for Bow River should have emphasized in the debate revolving around the Pearson film is, not whether the Prime Minister and his advisers had seen it once, twice or 50 times but whether, having seen it, they passed judgment on it and were then able to influence the C.B.C. not to show it. The basic principle that this parliament should not interfere with the C.B.C. programming is one that every member of this house should endorse, whether he is a government or an opposition member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: I am already on record in this regard; so are, for that matter, most members of this house, if we look back far enough, including the hon. member for Bow River.

But where is the consistency in this regard, if the same members who stress the sanctity of the C.B.C. in the field of programming now ask the government to interfere, intervene and order the C.B.C., through the good offices of the Secretary of State, to show the film. Incidentally, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bow River suggests that the government in this debate or during the question period—and I have not the blues and I apologize if I am quoting incorrectly—made reference to the film "The Chief". It is possible that an individual member on the government side may have made reference across the floor of the house, and if so I apologize for that; but I cannot find any references in Hansard of the government so doing. To show my own high regard, not only for the Prime Minister's office and the office of the right hon. Leader of the Opposition and, of course, for the fine men who occupy these positions, let me say that I personally sent a note of congratulation to the right hon. Leader of the Opposition the night I saw "The Chief". I said then, and I repeat it now, that he is a great Canadian, and I am not ashamed of this fact.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mackasey: I say that attacks on the personalities of men of this stature, our great figures, can only result in the further deterioration of parliament and its great traditions. However, since the hon. member for Bow River has questioned the answers given —off the cuff, by the way—by the Prime Minister during the question period—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Mackasey: —and has tried to infer that they are contradictory, let me give this explanation, which I hope members will accept in the light of the fact that the Prime Minister is an honourable gentleman—

Mr. Woolliams: Let the Prime Minister answer for himself. Why doesn't he?

Mr. Mackasey: I am sure, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bow River, with his courtroom experience, is not going to let a simple novice like myself get under his skin. I am sure he will have enough patience to listen to me without interruption. The facts are as follows. Although the Prime Minister made these facts, as he thought, as clear as possible to the house it is obvious that the hon. member for Bow River did not understand or perhaps did not choose to understand. He is the only man who knows that. But the basic fact is that the Prime Minister has not seen the Pearson film as it has now been shown to the press—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Mackasey: —and as it now exists in the hands of the producer.

An hon. Member: You are splitting hairs.

Mr. Mackasey: Surely everyone realizes that making a film in many ways resembles the preparation of a speech; it must go through several drafts if the finished product is to be worth while. The Prime Minister, as was his privilege since he was the subject matter of the film, saw the first draft, and that is what he told the house in his answer. Later when he had the opportunity he saw a slightly revised draft; but he again told the house that the sound on the second occasion was so bad that he left the showing before it was finished and has never seen it since. He repeated time and time again that he had not seen the "Mr. Pearson" film, as the press have, and hon. members have asked to have shown on the C.B.C. I do not know whether all hon. members believe him, but I for my part am quite happy to accept the Prime Minister's statement as the statement of a gentleman.

Another point brought up today by the hon. member for Bow River was the supposed shots of a cabinet meeting. Now, I think that this is a trap which I might have fallen into had I been on the other side, but this charge was prompted by a picture which appeared in several newspapers, supposedly taken from the actual film itself. But again the Prime Minister and my hon. friend who sits just in front of me but whose constituency escapes me for the moment, has testified that the picture appearing in the morning newspaper does not appear in the finished film. Again I appeal to hon. members to accept the veracity of the statement of the people who made it.

Mr. Bigg: A lie is a lie.

Mr. Mackasey: Well, some of us can recognize lies more easily than others. I cannot, and perhaps I am unfortunate in that respect. But I do honestly and sincerely believe in the premise that we are all honourable gentlemen and that if we make a statement in this house it should be believed by everyone, and no hon. member of the House of Commons should take advantage of that fact and deliberately lie, and least of all the Prime Minister of Canada.

Another point is this, and it concerns the supposed meeting of the cabinet committee. The opposition is full of members of former cabinets and they know what a committee meeting of the cabinet is, that it has an agenda, that minutes are taken, and so forth. In actuality the film simply photographed—and this might be poetic licence, if you like—a meeting of several ministers in the Prime Minister's office for a conference. Is this so unusual? This has been done before to accommodate news photographers, and I trust the opposition will accept this statement as true without requiring my source of information.

Second, my hon. friend from Bow River, gathering steam as is customary when he really gets going, became a little indignant about a letter from some so-called intellectuals, who I think lived up to their reputation as absentminded professors because they actually forgot to sign the letter. In fact, the Prime Minister did not get one version but two versions of the letter, neither of which was signed, and one of them was not even addressed to him as the Prime Minister of Canada. That is hardly the conduct of intellectuals.

Mr. Churchill: He got one letter addressed to him though, did he?

Mr. Mackasey: Does the hon. member for Bow River really think that the Prime Minister was misleading the house in his answers? I submit he cannot be serious.

Mr. Churchill: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Mackasey: The fourth and final charge to this house in this terrible indictment of the Prime Minister concerned the Olympic games, a matter of national concern. Everyone knows that the minister of health and welfare did attend the winter Olympic games, and the Prime Minister as well as the hon. lady herself so answered when questioned in the house. The confusion, if any exists, lies in the definition as to whether or not we presented a brief on behalf of Banff for the 1968 games. What purpose could the Prime Minister have in misinforming the house on this subject? The facts are very simple. Under the Olympic rules the government could not officially—and I emphasize officially—make representations for the next winter Olympic games since they are awarded to cities, not countries. Whether or not the minister and other officials made unofficial representations on behalf of Banff or on behalf of the country is left for hon. members to decide.

The hon. member for Bow River has made many friends on this side of the house by his very impartial conduct in the privileges and elections committee recently, where he fought hard but fair and square and honestly, and we appreciated his efforts. His aggressiveness remained fair and unsullied, and we would not want to see his reputation tarnished in this house by his unwarranted and unsubstantiated attack on the Prime Minister this afternoon. On reflecting a little I am sure that he, like all hon. members in the house, would not like to take political advantage of a man who has the complete respect of all Canadians. Perhaps the hon. member this afternoon was carried away by the power of his words. He invoked the law of God to strengthen his belief—and these are his words as I saw them later this afternoon—that the Prime Minister should resign. Certainly all hon. members would need not only the law of God but the law of wisdom, the divine law and even the natural law—and he invoked them all—to convince them that the Prime Minister is other than what all hon. members of the house know to be the fact, namely a great Prime Minister, a great Canadian, and a simple, honest, true citizen of Canada.

Mr. Starr: That was a nice job of whitewash.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, I was one of those who were initially interested in this matter of the C.B.C. suppression which this government brought on in respect to the film "Mr. Pearson", and I have remained interested in it throughout. I followed the debate on the film and the various questions which were asked, and not only do I think that the hon. member for Bow River was justified in making the remarks he did, which I wholly endorse, but I intend to go further than he did.

After reading Friday's proceedings when hon. members opposite were so thin-skinned as to move a motion to expel the hon. member for Qu'Appelle from the house, I thought to myself that this is a very strange change indeed from the days when the four horsemen of the apocalypse were sitting on this side of the house and charging the then prime minister, who is now the Leader of the Opposition, with gross deceit and other similar epithets to which no objection was raised on the government side at that time.

I am not going to say that the Prime Minister lied; but when reading page 3429 of Hansard we find this answer of the Prime Minister to a question:

> —We do not censor films on this side of the house.

I say, sir, that that is a lie, because that is precisely what happened, as I intend to show tonight.

I say too that at page 3430 of Hansard we find a reply of the Prime Minister which is reported as follows:

> The circumstances were perfectly proper. The initiative was taken by the producer of the film, and no question of censorship arises.

I also say that that statement is a lie, and I intend to back up my assertions this evening by facts, not by diversionary tactics and flights of fancy such as that embarked upon a moment ago by the hon. member for Verdun.

I submit that all of this points up a pattern which has been forming over the past several months where the government has been using the C.B.C. as a tool for their own propaganda purposes. This has shown itself in a speech which the Minister of Transport made in Quebec city in February of this year; and the Secretary of State, the notable "minister of culture" in this house, has made similar remarks with respect to public communications media. This episode of the film "Mr. Pearson" produced for the C.B.C. at a cost to the Canadian taxpayer of $35,000 is just the culmination of this whole pattern of control which the government is attempting to exercise over the C.B.C. They may have control over the management of the C.B.C. I think, too, this switch from Mr. Dunton to Mr. Ouimet is significant in this regard; it was brought about shortly after the government now sitting on the treasury benches took office. But while they control the management of the C.B.C., many of the personnel of the corporation's public affairs division do not like this transpiring of events at all. The public affairs personnel I am sure are endeavouring to do a job as impartially as they can and when they receive instructions from top management which in turn receives instructions from cabinet ministers, the Prime Minister, the Prime Minister's secretary and the supreme brain truster of the Prime Minister's office, what can they do? He has a $40,000 a year salary to lose and the other management officials have careers to lose as well. I say that pressures were brought to bear on the C.B.C. in this case and I suggest the facts point indisputably to that conclusion.

I was disappointed in the hon. member for Verdun. I thought he was perhaps overwhelmed by his own press releases which appeared after his contribution to the debate on the flag issue in this house. He almost had us in tears. If it were not for the crocodile nature of his own tears just before supper time he might have made more of an impression on the sensibilities of members of the committee. But, as he said, he is a new member and he was not sitting over here when his party was in opposition, and listening to new lows in the calibre of debate such as that which was exemplified by the Associate Minister of National Defence on one occasion when he made an unpardonable and absolutely rotten attack on the prime minister of Canada. Search as the hon. member for Verdun will, he will not find in any public speech on any public occasion an instance where the leader of the official opposition has had the degrading things to say about the present Prime Minister that the Prime Minister of today had to say about the Leader of the Opposition when he was prime minister of this country. A more degrading exhibition of distortion of the truth which the present Prime Minister was guilty of when he was leader of the opposition could not be found anywhere, and all for the purpose of gaining power, and all for the purpose of deception. If any deception, and to use the present Prime Minister's own words, if any gross deception, existed at that time it existed in the utterances he made at that time with respect to the activity of the then prime minister, now the Leader of the Opposition.

What are the circumstances which have led to an examination of the film "Mr. Pearson"? I believe that pressures were not only brought to bear by the Secretary of State for External Affairs—that appears to be quite evident—and by the Secretary of State, to whom I am more prone to refer as the minister of culture, since he is in control of every government-controlled medium of information in this country, as well as by the Prime Minister himself, but also by Mr. O'Hagan, the Prime Minister's secretary, and by the supreme brain truster, Mr. Kent, who works in the Prime Minister's office. All these people had a word to say about the cutting and snipping which went on in the film "Mr. Pearson". Yet the Prime Minister has the gall to stand and say: We do not stand for censorship.

An hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Nielsen: Absolute nonsense and deception, I say, because apart from the hair-splitting tactics which all the cabinet ministers including the Prime Minister have adopted in respect to the covering up of their snipping and cutting of this film, and their suppression of it and their censorship of it, one fact here emerges: The film was made at a cost of $35,000 to the Canadian taxpayer by a body which is supposed to be independent of any political pressure and yet, mysteriously, for the sole reason, the C.B.C. says, of technical inadequacies, the film is not shown. I have a fairly high regard for the capability of C.B.C. technicians and, surely, the management of the C.B.C. is not so naïve as to retain a producer of films—Intervideo Productions—if they do not have sufficient regard for the technical ability of that firm as being likely to meet C.B.C. standards. So this reason, it seems to me, is very shallow indeed. Both the Prime Minister's office and the C.B.C. have denied that political pressure was a factor in shelving this show. But the account I intend to put on the record now—an account of the backstage manoeuvring which culminated in a decision to shelve the film—was made public in the Toronto Globe and Mail on June 16 last. The hon. member for Verdun has the naïveté to say that the pictures which were published, pictures taken inside the cabinet chamber, were not part of the production of the C.B.C. film "Mr. Pearson". Yet in this issue of the Globe and Mail there appeared, obviously clipped out of the film—

Mr. Mackasey: At no time did I say they were not in it. I said they did not appear in the film as presently—

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Nielsen: At least the hon. member for Verdun has the honesty to rise now and say that there has been clipping and snipping of this film which amounts to censorship, and twist and squirm as hon. members opposite would like, they cannot get around that fact. There is only one member opposite I can think of who could squirm and quiver his way around that fact, and he is the Secretary of State for External Affairs whose fine hand was very prominently displayed in the snipping and cutting which went on.

I asked the Prime Minister on May 21 if the film had been viewed in his office. Instead of being as devious as he was in his replies on that day, he could have said: No, it was not viewed in my office, but I did see it in Toronto. Instead of that he chose not to say anything. He said: It was not seen in my office. Subsequently, under pressure from questioning, he said he had in fact seen it in Toronto. Then, under further pressure, he said he had also seen it in his office in the east block. I asked him if he had seen it five times.

It now transpires that it was viewed on no less than 12 occasions by members of the Prime Minister's cabinet and staff. I believe what I read in the Globe and Mail in this regard. Mr. Braithwaite has obviously made a very careful investigation into these facts. Nobody has denied it. Nobody has denied it over there. The danger exists here that if they viewed it once, if any one of the cabinet ministers or the Prime Minister viewed it once with a view to censoring or snipping any part of it, it was wrong and they know it. What they have done in this whole episode is to prostitute the integrity of the C.B.C. The C.B.C. has no alternative now but to refuse to produce the film. If they do produce it, it will be subject to the pressures brought about by the political connivances of the government, and if they do not produce it the result will be the same. It seems to me that the government is on a very sticky wicket indeed.

What about this right of censorship? When the Prime Minister got back to Toronto from New York where he had a meeting with Mr. Ballentine, Mr. O'Hagan, Mr. Pennebaker and others, the producer drafted a letter to the Prime Minister setting out the conditions he had discussed with the Prime Minister personally. This letter, which Ross McLean of the C.B.C. helped to rewrite into its final version, was an extraordinary document that practically gave the Prime Minister full right of censorship over the proposed film. At one point it stated:

> The finished film will be yours to judge and approve before it is made public and thus will contain nothing to which you object.

Mr. Sharp: Is this objectionable?

Mr. Nielsen: In reply to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, may I say that I think it is very objectionable. Surely such a reasonable man, such an intelligent man as the Minister of Trade and Commerce will agree with me—

Mr. Sharp: No, I do not.

Mr. Nielsen: —that any letter which would subject any production of the C.B.C. to the right of review is wrong.

Mr. Sharp: If they took a picture of me I would demand it.

Mr. Nielsen: This film was contracted to be produced for the C.B.C. with the Canadian taxpayers bearing the cost, and here is Mr. McLean of the C.B.C. agreeing with a state of affairs which became rather uncomfortable for him later on, as I will point out when I have the opportunity. He is agreeing with a policy whereby the producer writes to the Prime Minister and says: You have the right to review the film and anything you wish to object to will be cut out.

Mr. Sharp: Perfectly proper.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, if that is the minister's conception of what is proper, then I think we have no hope for any further independent action on the part of the C.B.C. The minister absolutely astounds me when he says that sort of conduct is perfectly proper. Surely if we are to maintain the integrity of the C.B.C., its actions with regard to what it will produce and what it will not produce cannot be subjected to any action which would in effect constitute a censorship board, whether it be by an individual or by a group such as the cabinet. Surely this is very wrong. The letter did not stop there because Mr. Ballentine agreed to shut off the camera whenever requested to do so. It seems to me that this is going a little bit far if any integrity of independent action on behalf of the C.B.C. is to be maintained.

Finally, he stated he would like to be regarded as a biographer "as official or unofficial as you desire".

At a later time when the project came under Mr. McLean's control he is reported as having said with regard to the letter:

"We just can't pretend it doesn't exist."... Public affairs supervisor Reeves Haggan wrote to the Prime Minister withdrawing the Ballentine concessions—

Mr. Francis: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Nielsen: Certainly.

Mr. Francis: Would he himself as a member of the house be prepared to let the C.B.C. do a film on a day in the life of the hon. member for Yukon under the conditions he has now indicated are proper?

Mr. Nielsen: I can see no reason why I would not agree completely to the C.B.C. hiring an independent producer like Intervideo Productions to make a film concerning the activities of a day or a month, if they could keep up with me, without any concessions made to me as to what would be kept in that film and what would be taken out of it. There is the nub of the thing. The Prime Minister and his cabinet ministers have had very positive things to say about what will stay in the film and what will be cut out of it, and this is what we on this side say is censorship. This is what is wrong. Belatedly they realized this very thing, because after the letter granting the Prime Minister these concessions had been perused and given a second hard look by the C.B.C. they then repudiated the letter, and after they repudiated it the cutting and snipping still carried on. This is even more astonishing if the minister has been following the events that have transpired because of this fact:

Reeves Haggan wrote to the Prime Minister withdrawing the Ballentine concessions and stating the film would be made according to normal practice, which would be to give the Prime Minister the right to raise certain objections but not permit him to control the film's entire contents.

The Secretary of State for External Affairs apparently came away from the viewing with a long list of objections. Similarly, the Minister of Finance came away from his first viewing of the film with a long list of objections, as did other cabinet ministers. The Secretary of State for External Affairs looks puzzled, so I think I will take him now to the list of objections he raised, in the event that he may want to leave early.

At the screening on January 6, with McLean, Ballentine, O'Hagan and Hal Dornan of the Prime Minister's staff attending, Mr. O'Hagan requested the following sequences be deleted:

A remark by O'Hagan involving Canadian Press.
A remark by the P.M. about a former press secretary of opposition leader Diefenbaker.

An unguarded comment by labour minister MacEachen.
A facetious remark by Mrs. Pearson.

I can remember another facetious remark by Mrs. Pearson that was published in Maclean's magazine just after the last election about the dirty dogs on the prairies.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The prairies will never forget it.

Mr. Nielsen: I continue:

Comments by a government chauffeur. One "Lord" and two "Gods" by the P.M. (One "hell", one "damn" and one other "God" to be retained.)

Then there is reference to what has come to be familiarly known as the Coutts car sequence. The article continues:

—and some remarks by Gordon Robertson, clerk of the privy council, were discussed, but finally it was agreed the latter would remain. At the conclusion Mr. O'Hagan expressed the opinion that the film was a good one.

What have they left after all these snips and cuts? Usually the Secretary of State for External Affairs is more prominently displayed in the press, but I cannot seem to find him at the moment.

Mr. Fairweather: They cut out God.

Mr. Nielsen: Here we have the reference to the prominent Secretary of State for External Affairs:

By April 5 all was settled and Mr. Ballentine screened the finished film for Reeves Haggan. On April 30 he took the print to Ottawa for what was to be the final screening for the Pearson people. This event which took place at the east block office at the fashionable hour of 8 p.m. had some trappings of a major movie opening.

On hand were such luminaries as Keith Davey, president of the National Liberal Federation; Trade Minister Mitchell Sharp; External Affairs Minister Paul Martin (whose comments were to be a highlight); Tom Kent, supreme brain truster to the Prime Minister; O'Hagan, Reagen, Coutts, Haggan, Ballentine, Dornan and a number of wives and secretaries to the principals. Labour Minister MacEachen arrived about half way through the screening. The Prime Minister wasn't there.

At the final fadeout, Mitchell Sharp described the picture as an "astounding document." Mr. Haggan asked Mr. O'Hagan—

There are a lot of Irish in this.

—if the cut-down Coutts car sequence was okay. Mr. O'Hagan said it was. Paul Martin, who had made notes during the showing, now read these to the happy first night audience, noting his reservations as he went along.

I can just imagine that the reservations of the hon. minister must have been as long as the film itself.

He objected to a portrait of Sir John A. Macdonald in the Prime Minister's office being shown twice while the one of Sir Wilfrid Laurier was never shown.

He objected to the Prime Minister (in the film) referring to Hailie Selassie as the last emperor in the world, since Japan still had an emperor.

As a Roman Catholic, Mr. Martin did not object to the cuss words, but was afraid Presbyterians and Methodists would.

The next bit is understandable, knowing the hon. minister for even the short space of seven years as I have.

Mr. Martin would have gone on, but Mr. O'Hagan suggested that they all go into his office to discuss the film privately, leaving Mr. Ballentine outside with Mr. Haggan. Mr. MacEachen stayed with them and they screened for him the part he had missed. He found it highly amusing, as the press gallery reporters would when they saw it much later.

In about half an hour, Mr. Ballentine and Mr. Haggan were called to Mr. O'Hagan's office, where they were told that everyone thought highly of the film. Tom Kent called it brilliant. However, it must be understood that there was some concern about it from a publicity and political point of view.

Mr. Haggan said he thought it was sympathetic to the Prime Minister. But some of the Liberals were afraid it might not be understood by the public, that it might too confusing. Anyhow, Mr. O'Hagan said, there could be no decision right then because the matter had to be discussed with the Prime Minister.

Possibly it is reasonable, sir, to wonder whether Mr. Ballentine's offer to the C.B.C. over the film rights had not coloured his attitude considering the almost incredible concessions he made to the Prime Minister in his letter of September 23. It is almost inconceivable that such concessions could be made which would so prostitute a government crown corporation charged with the responsibility of independently and impartially disseminating public information. To have made such a concession, I think, is gross control and, in fact, censorship. The main point of the C.B.C. was to conduct a private screening for the Prime Minister and his aides of the film that was later to be shown to the public as a candid documentary, independently made and not an official government or Liberal party film.

Here, I would suggest to the Minister of Trade and Commerce is the distinction between his assertion that these concessions were perfectly proper, the distinction between that sort of attitude which, in effect, I suggest to him amounts to absolute censorship of a production by the C.B.C., something to which the C.B.C. should not be subjected to at all, and the situation where the Liberal party may have had a film made which they could review, snip and cut to their hearts' content. However, in this situation, the propriety of the corporation's accommodating attitude and action is open to question.

I say it is open to question, and this is one of the reasons that the government is in such a dilemma now. If the C.B.C. does submit to the pressures that are brought and continues to refuse to show the film, then you have a situation where the government is, in effect, controlling broadcasting. On the other hand, the integrity of the C.B.C. management cannot be the same at all because if they do show the film the only reason they will change or alter their decision will be the political implications that have arisen out of the fumbling and bumbling of the government in its handling of this whole issue. What we have in this situation is a crown corporation responsible to a political party, the Liberal party. What we have in this situation is a crown corporation, which is supposed to be independent and which has been subjected to political control, censorship and political pressure by the government in office.

I well remember how the present Minister of Transport, when he was on this side of the house, rose in his righteous wrath and indignation at the time of the suspension of the production "Capital Report". I can still hear him waxing eloquently on the independence of the C.B.C. Where has that independence gone today? It has been completely suppressed by the actions of the government.

The Chairman: Order, I regret that I have to advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, the committee has had, I think, far too much of the Pearson film. I think the responsibility, in the main, rests on the fact that the whole matter has been bungled, I will not say by the government, but obviously by the coterie within the Prime Minister's office. On the whole, I think they have been less than candid.

I should like to begin my remarks with what is, in effect, an apology. In looking at Hansard I see the Prime Minister challenged me during the question period to indicate whether I had any evidence to prove there was actually a formal cabinet meeting or a formal meeting of the subcommittee of cabinet for the film, since I had seen the film. I had hoped that I had not tried to give that impression. Certainly, I was aware that this was a meeting of cabinet ministers. It was obvious that there was not an official there from the privy council office to give it any official sanction.

However, I should like to make one particular point in connection with this matter.

The real power, as is so often the case in a Canadian situation, is in the shadow or ceremonial imprimatur that cloaks reality and is a myth not in things such as an official cabinet meeting, a subcommittee of the cabinet, and so on. The reality is that we were given in that film something a little more racey than a subcommittee meeting. We were actually seeing an ad hoc group of ministers meeting with the Prime Minister to discuss an issue of the day. It is obviously not an official cabinet meeting nor an official subcommittee meeting of the cabinet, but I would suggest it is not semantic to argue that the impression of the real reality was that this was an important meeting.

I do not know whether these things should have been exposed to film or not, but I just want to present that as a bit of an addendum to the discussion which took place here when the hon. member for Qu'Appelle was named. There is a hypothesis I want to put before the committee. I do not think we will ever get the true and exact story of what took place. I have spoken at length to the official spokesman of the C.B.C. about this and questioned him about it. I refer to Ron Fraser, vice president of the C.B.C.

I have known Mr. Ballentine for some years and have been acquainted with his whole position, and I believe Dennis Braithwaite of the Globe and Mail was almost completely indebted for the details in this column, that was read by the hon. member for Yukon, to Mr. Ballentine. Also, like many other members around here I have other contacts through which information comes to me and I think I can reconstruct almost everything that took place. There is very little that took place that is not in the Braithwaite story, but the whole key of the issue is: Was there political interference?

My hypothesis—and of course it depends how you look at it—is that there was. I honestly believe that at this meeting where the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Trade and Commerce buttered up Mr. Ballentine a little bit after seeing the film, and then withdrew into their private discussions—I honestly believe that the decision was taken there that this film should not run. I honestly believe that from what I know, and my hypothesis is that the vote was overwhelmingly that the film should not run.

I also believe that Mr. Haggan was privy to this decision at this very point, and I think Mr. Haggan, from the views set out in Mr. Braithwaite's article, was prepared to fight against this, but I think in honesty to his own superiors I should point out and remind hon. members that here is the director of the public affairs programming of C.B.C. television, repeatedly in on these discussions. In other words he recognized this was a very important and difficult film, and he had close contact throughout. I am convinced, and I advance it as my hypothesis, that Mr. Haggan was aware, either through Mr. Richard O'Hagan, the press secretary, or through some closer contact with the people who took the vote, that it was the feeling of the government that this film should not be shown, and it is my hypothesis that he submitted this opinion to his superiors; but I think he wanted to show it despite what they felt.

But I think once that view was given to his superiors about the way the cabinet ministers, and the particular little coterie that hangs around the Prime Minister's office and assists as his advisers on things like that, felt—once that happened, this led the officials to make their decision. Obviously the idea of the Prime Minister picking up the phone and calling Mr. Ouimet or Mr. Fraser and saying, "We don't want that to run" did not happen. I think it is nonsense to suggest that.

I am not suggesting there was anything particularly devious or dirty about what took place, but certainly that vote of the Liberals against the film somehow got to the senior people of the C.B.C. and I think this influenced their judgment, along with the fact that some of them were against what they called the technical shortcomings of the film. That is my hypothesis and I do not know where we go from here.

I suggest one of the reasons this situation developed is because typically this government and this Prime Minister continue to be less than candid with the House of Commons and with the people. I am not suggesting the members of the government are deliberately dishonest, but they are managerial. They are trying to manipulate, and I want to offer evidence of this. A lot of hon. members have not seen the film but I want to mention two incidents in the film which indicate the kind of managerial approach I am talking about.

There is a little discussion in the film, at least in the film I saw down at Crawleys, about a telecast the Prime Minister is going to do the next day, and it is very entertaining to watch the sort of Uriah Heap-ish mothering that Tom Kent gives him. He is going to make sure he has everything lined up for the telecast, but in that discussion that takes place, with Mr. Kent's unction flowing around the scene, there is a suggestion that the Leader of the Opposition would demand equal time. The Prime Minister says, "We are not going to have any of that," or words to that effect. It is right there in the film itself but no one has picked it out and selected it as an indication of the approach I am talking about. There is the suggestion, "No, we are going to handle this thing so that the Leader of the Opposition is not going to have a go."

It illustrates something it is hard for me to understand—the inordinate fear the Prime Minister has of the former prime minister; but it also indicates the approach, "We are going to manage things so that we are going to have things our way. We are going to have the image, not them."

The other point is also a compelling one. The Minister of Labour is interviewed by Mr. Harnett of CFRB, a radio man here on parliament hill. The minister gets into a predicament in this scene and I sympathize with him because I have encountered it myself on occasion. He gets into this predicament and says too much about the fact that it may be necessary to call troops in on the Montreal dockers' strike. Then he starts up the stairs—a beautiful scene—then turns back and says, "I would appreciate it very much if you did not run that little bit," and the reporter, Mr. Harnett, says, "You want it cut out"? and the minister says, "I would really appreciate it." Well, a minister of the crown asks you to do something like that. Fine. There is nothing really wicked, but I suggest to you it is part of the managerial approach—"we know how to govern; we know how to manage things," and one of the great problems of the government across the way is that this approach is really their downfall.

They think they are the administrative geniuses. They think they know how to handle things, but ever since they got in they flubbed on point after point. These people are manipulators. They think they can manage and think they can do things, and though I do not feel sorry I do feel sympathy for a lot of the government backbenchers who have to sit there and watch the finicky perambulations along the front bench, as they watch one minister after another getting into trouble, right from the budget of last year down to this last and silliest of things.

Can you imagine the amount of time parliament has taken up with this ruddy television film? Yes, I have helped to bring that about because it is a classic example of the approach of this government. They don't like criticism. They cannot stand it. They have not got the skin for it. When they were over here we used to call them the four horsemen of the apocalypse. You could not stop them; they were in there knifing. But once they got into power they wanted to get back to those pre-1957 days, warm, with Blair Fraser putting out the honeyed phrases about this greatest collection of talent in Canadian history. Haw, haw, haw.

Here we have a situation that could have been cleared up right off by a candid, complete statement of about 200 words by the Prime Minister. But instead, what happened—they backed away and backed away, and the terrible thing is that one television man's reputation, Mr. Ballentine's reputation, could have been ruined. Maybe it is ruined over this incident, but not one of the ministers in this particular case was prepared to come to the rescue.

What does the Secretary of State for External Affairs tell us? He rebuffed me and there was this big laugh. This was his private life; why should anybody interfere with his private life? He told this producer he was pretty good. Tom Kent thought this was a brilliant documentary. The Minister of Trade and Commerce, what was his approach—"an astounding documentary". He told this producer he had done a good job. Yet where were they when it came to standing up for this man who had been insulted by the C.B.C.? This is the kind of thing I think is important. Where is your heart, I say to them, when someone's whole career is put in jeopardy? Where are you? You saw the film; you did not like it; you handed out a bit of blarney, and then you turned around and let the fellow sink. This is one of the tragic things about it, this managerial nonsense about the crew.

This is an excellent television film and it would not do the Prime Minister one bit of harm. As a matter of fact, I think it would show him to a great many people in this country in a sympathetic light. But they are so smart-alecky, so managerial, so much the image-makers that they just could not let it go through; they could not take the chance. This is a government that, as a result of one tawdry little incident, have lost sight of the fact that they have blighted one man's reputation and have put the C.B.C.'s integrity in jeopardy. Yet the Prime Minister the other day told us, "Wait till interim supply and I will have a statement". What do we get? I mean no insult to the hon. member for Verdun, but that hon. member comes in, in reply to an attack made by the hon. member for Bow River, and reads a speech that I suggest he must have had some advice on from certain quarters.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fisher: I do not object to that.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, I am sure that the hon. member, who was not in the house when the hon. member for Verdun first rose, would not want to mislead the committee. The hon. member for Verdun was here and started to speak immediately he had the opportunity.

Mr. Fisher: I am not a sensitive soul like the crew over there or the crew here; I am not making an accusation. If the hon. member for Verdun thinks this Prime Minister is a great Prime Minister and he has been unfairly attacked, more power to him in getting up and defending him. But where is the Prime Minister? He undertook last week that he would be here. I am not suggesting that he can be here all the time, but he should have come here on interim supply and given us the full story, because it appears that his spokesman on radio and television matters, the Secretary of State, knows nothing about it in fact; he knows nothing about this story because he was excluded, really, from the developments.

Mr. Danforth: The quiet man.

Mr. Lamontagne: Quieter than you, anyway.

Mr. Fisher: I am not trying to be unfair to him; but the whole point is that there was this small group centred in the Prime Minister's office who wanted to turn out something that would be really terrific, and when they found out it was not really terrific, then we get the squeeze, then we get the pressure, then we get the clamp.

I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that this house should forget about this incident in any detail as soon as we get a statement from the Prime Minister or someone who is authorized to speak for him, and who can set out the thing from the beginning to the end from the government's point of view. Then let us have some kind of solution initiated by the government, about which I am sure spokesmen for the parties in the house are prepared to agree, and have indicated to the C.B.C. that this film must and will be shown. I want to suggest to hon. members that when the film is shown everyone will wonder what all the panic was about. This is to my mind, despite what the hon. member for York-Humber said about it, a rather brilliant film. I think the conception of starting with a radio broadcast in the morning and ending with the national news at night, with the voice of Earl Cameron blending all the way through, is a very good idea. There is the deliberate denial of a great deal of editing or pushing by any announcer to tell you what is going on. This is part of the success of the film. But this is a matter of individual judgment.

One of the things I find it hard to forgive the C.B.C. for is the excuse that this film had technical shortcomings and was not up to normal standard. This really hurt me, because I was on a C.B.C. program last year that, frankly, was a turkey; it was one of the real lousy stinkers the C.B.C. has turned out. It was an hour program. I can still remember it when they talk of technical shortcomings. For about two minutes there was the voice of John Deutsch, the head of the economic council, I think, over the film with the view of the Ottawa river sparkling in the sunlight. This is what you get when you talk about the technical standards of some of the C.B.C. programs. There was another long shot in the program. I remember that the band was playing "Chicago, Chicago" and we had a view of some skyscrapers silhouetted against the sky. And it was supposed to be a program on university education. I saw this three times while waiting for the show to go on, and I could not figure out what it was doing there. But this is in reference to the C.B.C.'s idea of technical excellence.

I would like to suggest to the minister who answers for the C.B.C. that we have had a little bit too much of this technical shortcomings aspect of the matter. We had the film about the advertising agency and the beauty product by Kelly that was withdrawn because it did not come up to technical standards. We have had a film on "Toronto File" of a young lady who had some unfortunate adventures, and that has not been shown because supposedly it is not technically good enough. This technical difficulty may be an indication of the high standards of the C.B.C., but I would like to suggest they would be much better giving us some more direct and thorough answer and reasons, particularly in connection with the "Mr. Pearson" film.

The last point I wanted to make, Mr. Chairman, with regard to the Pearson film returns to this whole question of the managerial approach this government seems to have to news, news management and to its image. This terrible sensitivity of the government to criticism is a complete denial of the tactics that government members themselves used when they were in opposition. Surely they do not think they can go back to the good old pre-pipe line days when the sun shone in the sky, C. D. Howe was right with the world and the Liberals were wonderful. They cannot go back to that, and it is about time they faced up to the fact that maybe some of the criticism that is coming their way is merited and worth while. I cannot think of a better challenge to government backbenchers than to read what the hon. member for Bow River said in his indictment. Not that I support it all the way down the line. They should read it to see the number of times and the indications of prevarication, half truth or just a part of the truth. I do not say it is lying, Mr. Chairman, but I do say there is so much of it; so many of these inconsistencies.

I think of the comment of Charles Lynch of Southam News Services the other day about the capacity of the government. One of the things he had to say about the Diefenbaker government was, "They were never really clever or sharp enough to cover up their mistakes". He said about the present government, "It is using all its cleverness and sharpness to cover up its mistakes". I suggest this is the perfect incident that symbolizes the effect that has become so apparent in this government. I would like to suggest it is about time the Prime Minister or those who have some influence with him began to seize upon some opportunities to be honest and direct in all the dealings they have with this house and with the country.

Mr. Nielsen: Hear, hear; it's about time.

Mr. Fisher: Let us put the challenge to this government that has so much conceit and has done so little to deserve its own conceit, that from now on in their dealings with the House of Commons and with the country they stop speaking either out of only one side of their mouth or telling only one part of the truth. As someone in my own constituency said after the Prime Minister appeared on one of his television interviews a few months ago, "One thing you have to say about him, he will admit his mistakes". I am not suggesting that we have the whole confessional here, but I would suggest that the cabinet and the Prime Minister had better be a little more candid and deal a little more quickly with their mistakes. Then perhaps they will have some effect in this country and in this house and will begin to move toward all the claims which hon. members are making for them.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): Mr. Chairman, in the last speeches made in this house by the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member for Port Arthur, and earlier today by the hon. member for Bow River, serious charges have been made. There has been documentation of deceit resembling half truths and deviousness of the worst kind. Thus we have come at this hour to suggest to the Prime Minister and to the members of the government that it would not be enough to come to the house and admit their error or to apologize. I think it has gone far beyond that. We require one thing and one thing only, and that is that if these charges are correct—and they have not been denied; the documentation is so complete that they could not be denied—we must have some resignations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): We have had documentation of half truths, incomplete explanations, devious explanations, false explanations, no explanation. What is the tradition of parliament if we do not demand resignations? When a government is found guilty of these things, as this government has been, there must follow the resignations of those who are responsible; and if the backbench members of the government understand their position and the situation the government is in, they will demand the resignation of those who have led them into such a situation.

What is involved here, and let there be no mistake about it, is censorship; the total and complete control of the major public communications medium in this country. It is possible to become emotionally involved in this, and perhaps I am speaking with heat, but I have the right to do so. I have sat in this house this afternoon and again this evening listening to hon. members making charges against the government more serious than those which were made of any government since the Liberal government of 1956. Yet there has been total silence and no defence. There can be no defence possible of an indefensible position.

What has been the consequence of this? The Canadian people have made their judgment on that, and perhaps the last court of appeal will again be the Canadian people. But there ought to be in the party which now forms the government, a party with a great tradition behind it, sufficient strength among its backbenchers to demand the truth, not just for parliament but for the people of Canada, about the censorship of the principal medium of communication in Canada. This is no time for playing or for making light-hearted decisions. We have been altogether too kind on this side of the house in asking for some kind of explanation from the Prime Minister. It is too late for explanations. It is too late even now for the truth from the Prime Minister, the complete and total truth, the whole story. This has had to be dragged out, not here on the floor of the house but by newspaper articles which are undenied, and from other sources of information unchallenged. We on the opposition side of the house challenge the government side that we not only require the total truth but we also require the resignations of those who have misled this house and given the house less than the truth in the last several weeks. There is no other answer to the charge. If there is, let anyone who can suggest it get up and challenge me now.

Mr. Woolliams: And let them not hide outside this house.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): I have said, Mr. Chairman, if there is anyone on the government side who wishes to challenge my position now, I will yield him the floor.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): They haven't got the guts.

Mr. Fleming (Okanagan-Revelstoke): But they do not. Our position is that we have read the story in the Globe and Mail. We have heard the accusations which have been made by a number of speakers on this side of the house. It seems quite apparent that this film was subjected to scrutiny both by the cabinet and by the government. It was never shown. I do not think there has ever been an occasion since the founding of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation where a film of this kind was made ostensibly for the members of the cabinet of the government of the day, and then withdrawn and refused to the public of Canada. There is no question that, whether or not it was a deliberate censorship, it was censorship in fact, because the Prime Minister, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Trade and Commerce and many other senior ministers expressed dissatisfaction with, or less than enthusiasm for, the film. This became very apparent to those who headed this public corporation, which is supposed to come under the jurisdiction of parliament but which in fact has now been debased and comes under the influence of the government itself. There is no precedent for this in Canada. There is no justification for what has taken place. Therefore my suggestion to the government is that those who are responsible for this censorship must resign, and they must resign at once.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Mr. Chairman, it seems a shame that no one on the front benches of the government will rise in his place and defend the Prime Minister of the day.

Mr. Nielsen: They cannot do it.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): And defend the cabinet ministers who saw the preview of the film. It is a shame, and once again I am thankful that I do not belong to a party which is so gutless that they allow three or four speakers in a row to accuse them of lying, accuse them of deviation, of half truths, and not one of them will rise in his place to defend the cabinet members or the Prime Minister. I call them "gutless wonders", and that includes the cabinet and the gutless bunch of backbenchers over there.

I sat in my seat and gave these people time to rise and defend themselves. But shame on them; they would not.

Mr. Nielsen: They cannot.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I only accept their silence as an admission that they are guilty. The hon. member for Yukon, the hon. member for Port Arthur and the hon. member for Bow River, who spoke this afternoon, laid the facts bare and there was no defence or denial.

Mr. Churchill: No answer, nothing.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): The Minister of Trade and Commerce was in the house and made some halfhearted attempts to answer the hon. member for Yukon when he was speaking. He said that censorship was all right when it concerned the Prime Minister; at least that is what I understood him to say. I am sure Castro would agree with him. I am sure Khrushchev would agree with him. But why did he not remain in the house and set the record straight? Why did he not rise in his place when the hon. member for Yukon had finished and say: "I never saw the film and I deny I voted either for or against it". He left the house because he knew that if he remained in his seat he would have to rise and make some sort of an attempt to answer the accusations made. In fact, when I look at the front benches now I see very few of the ministers who were in on the 12 previews. Why are not some of them in the chamber—some of those who saw the film? It is because they do not want to answer the charges which have been made tonight. That is the nub of it, as far as I can see.

Mr. Munro: May I ask a question? Does the hon. member not think that the reason these ministers are not in the house may be that they have judged the calibre of the back benches of the opposition parties who are making these filthy smear charges?

Mr. Grafftey: You are learning arrogance quickly.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): I have ripped up and down the cabinet and the back benches and finally provoked a weak effort to smear me and fellow members who have spoken on this side of the house. But there has been no defence—no answer to the accusations which have been made. There has only been this weak attempt to smear previous speakers by those who feel they rule by divine right, as the hon. member for Port Arthur said—by those who feel that through proper management they can create and project an image which will never be forgotten by the Canadian people and which will keep them in their places forever and a day.

The Canadian people are not so gullible. They will not stand for a minister who has jurisdiction over the C.B.C but who fails to rise to defend the C.B.C. when charges are made. He does not care. I have never seen a minister in this house fail to come to the defence of his department or of the civil servants for whom he is responsible. I have never seen that happen before in my six years in parliament. But tonight accusations have been made and the minister has failed to defend the people involved.

Mr. Lamontagne: Heads will roll.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Perhaps Ballentine's head will roll all right; there is no question about it. This is the very threat they hold over the C.B.C. This is the threat they hold over Mr. Ouimet. They increased his salary to $40,000, and now they say: This is what you do, and heads will roll if you don't do it. "Heads will roll". That will go down in history as a statement by the minister in charge of the C.B.C. In western Canada we have a few sayings we like to remember in political history. One is "heads will roll". Another is the famous saying of Mr. Howe—"What's a million?". Another favourite saying we remember is "dirty dogs". We will remember that. We will also remember "heads will roll" which the minister in charge of the C.B.C.—

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member has forgotten the famous statement made by representatives of the previous government: "Heads will roll".

That is the only thing I wanted to remind the hon. member tonight. In doing so, I had no intention of referring to the C.B.C., since I have defended the corporation.

The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has stated on several occasions that it has taken a free decision concerning the film.

[Text]

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, it is nice to be able to recall prime ministers of other days, present or past—how far past, no one really knows. It is nice to be able to say: He said this once upon a time. I would not be surprised if somebody sat in the seat from which I am speaking and said what I am saying now.

Mr. Lamontagne: Read the record.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Now they say "Read the record". That is a way of getting out of a statement which the minister made. Now he is trying to backtrack. He said "Heads will roll" and I accept this.

Mr. Moreau: Speaking of famous sayings in the west, I wonder if the hon. member recalls the saying "Bennett buggies"?

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Oh, it is nice to hear from backbenchers who do most of their speaking in other places. It is nice to hear from fellows who should wield great influence in other places. One cannot really blame them for trying to wield some influence in this place once in a while.

An hon. Member: Louder.

Mr. Woolliams: Blow on your earphone.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): We have heard some of their recent contributions to this debate. They are great. They are coming from the gutless wonders on the back benches, but there have been none by the ministers who saw this film and were responsible for interfering with the C.B.C.—those who said: Don't show it; we have decided we want to create the right image for the Canadian people; we do not want to see Mr. Coutt's face too often—he might be tempted to enter the political arena. I may say I do not know exactly why they should take exception to seeing him, he is a nice young fellow.

Mr. Sharp who, no doubt, was very sharp the night he saw the film—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member knows he should refer to members by their constituencies, not by their names.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Well, the Minister of Trade and Commerce no doubt was quite sharp the night he saw the film and took part in this private discussion among those cabinet ministers who left Mr. Ballentine and the Minister of Labour out of the office in which they held their caucus, one might say, in the inner sanctum to see whether or not the film would create the right image. This is what I gather took place. There is no question about it, the hon. member for Eglinton was at his sharpest that night and did a lot of clipping.

I think that we have had in this parliament a cabinet which has gone from one blunder to another, as the hon. member for Port Arthur said—a cabinet which has thought it could override all these blunders. It is interesting to find the member for Port Arthur accusing the cabinet of being so blunderous because he is, after all, a journalist, and journalists as a rule have been extremely kind with regard to all the blunders committed by this government and to the weakness of so many of the cabinet ministers. I do not know what they are saying, or will say, about this particular debate tonight, but there is no question about this: As far back in the history of parliament as I can go there has never been an occasion on which a government has been so forthrightly accused of lying, dishonesty and putting out half truths. Never before has a government so accused failed so completely to defend itself as has been the case this evening. Hon. gentlemen opposite have failed to rise, and one can only take this as an admission of guilt. Their silence means there is no defence to the charges which have been made. This is the only interpretation I can take from it.

I had no intention of entering the debate, but on noting their silence I accepted that they were guilty, that they had betrayed the house and the people of Canada by interfering with Canada's national broadcasting network. This is a charge against which a defence certainly should be mustered. They have failed to offer any defence. I opened my remarks by saying that this was a shameful action on the part of the cabinet and even shameful on the part of the backbenchers, who at other times so stoutly defend the Prime Minister and leader of their party. I can only accept that they are guilty and ashamed of it.

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, may I intervene in this debate for a short while to deal with a subject which I think is a wider issue and a much higher cause than the question of some film.

An hon. Member: A red herring.

Mr. Pennell: It seems to me that one of the most important and significant announcements made in the house for some time was made by the Prime Minister on April 30 when he announced that there was going to be established a scientific secretariat to assemble and analyse information about the government's scientific programs and their interrelations with other scientific activities throughout the country.

Mr. Nielsen: How did they talk you into that?

Mr. Pennell: It is an incontrovertible fact that the progress of this nation will be no swifter than her progress in scientific endeavours. The battle for supremacy in world markets is going to be fought and will be either won or lost in the scientific laboratories and institutes of this nation, both in universities and in private industry.

The Chairman: Order. May we have order in the committee, please.

Mr. Pennell: It has become abundantly clear that we are facing two very urgent problems, the necessity for more industrial research and an increase in the numbers of scientists, technicians and technologists. It is a sad commentary, Mr. Chairman, that it is much easier to find a politician than it is to find a first class technician.

Mr. Nielsen: There are lots of film makers.

Mr. Pennell: The question of what we sometimes refer to as the brain exodus is becoming increasingly important. The problem in this regard is, of course, twofold. We must have more scientific research laboratories if we are to keep the finest brains of the nation in this country. Twenty five per cent of all the scientists emigrating to the United States are coming from this country and this can rightly be termed a brain giveaway, for our finest brains, the greatest resource of this country, trained at tremendous expense to the Canadian taxpayer, are now being given away to the United States.

May I also say I do not wish to get into the field of education in its entirety because as we all know it is a matter of provincial jurisdiction. But it seems to me that if we are going to deal adequately with this problem we will have to wipe out any previous intellectual bias we have had toward graduates of technical institutes and schools of technology because, after all, our scientific research and development will be useless unless we have the technicians to carry out the application of these activities in our industries.

So far as I have been able to determine, the total amount of money spent for scientific activities in 1963 approximated $510 million, and the reason I have had great difficulty in determining the precise figure is that this nation has not paid sufficient attention to this very critical and crucial problem. It might seem that $510 million was not an unreasonable sum, but let me measure this figure in other terms. In the United States they are today spending 3.1 per cent of their gross national product for scientific activities. In the United Kingdom they are spending 2.8 per cent while in Canada the figure is scarcely more than 1 per cent. If I may express it in other words, in Great Britain they are spending $36.50 per person on research and scientific activities while in Canada we lag behind at approximately $27.50 per person. So the problem and the challenge are clearly before us.

Mr. Orlikow: What is the government doing about it?

Mr. Pennell: The hon. member for Winnipeg North asks what we are doing about it. We at least have taken the initiative and the Prime Minister made the first really concrete suggestion when he set up the scientific secretariat on the 30th of April this year.

Mr. Orlikow: Is the hon. member aware of the fact that the committee appointed by the national research council to look into this precise question has recommended that the grants by the research council for research in universities, which this year amounted to $9 million, should be increased next year to $19 million? I wonder whether the hon. member can tell us what the government proposes to do about that and how the scientific secretariat will add even $1 to scientific research in the next year?

[Mr. Pennell.]

Mr. Pennell: Mr. Chairman, may I say I appreciate the very important question posed to me by the hon. member for Winnipeg North. I also want to commend him for the interest he has shown in this subject because I have followed very closely the questions he has placed on the order paper. So I think we have a common interest in this matter. As I say, the secretariat is the first definite approach. Let me point this out to the house and to the hon. member for Winnipeg North who has been here for a number of years. In my research I found that the dominion bureau of statistics had not been able to compile any figures beyond 1961 as to the amount of money being spent on industrial research in this country. That in itself is an indictment of the interest that was being shown in this country prior to the present administration.

I feel that our deficit in international payments alone ought to have provided the incentive to spur us on in this very critical area. This is a problem of long standing, of course, and I do not attempt to allocate it to any particular administration; but as the house well knows we have been running a deficit of close to a billion dollars a year for the past ten years and, as I say, that in itself ought to be an incentive.

We hear members of the house talk about putting on export drives as if it were simply a matter of stepping up mass production, but it is now abundantly clear that we are not going to break into foreign markets unless we have new ideas, new techniques, new inventions, all of which, Mr. Chairman, are the end results of scientific research and development.

As I have said, the most recent figures I have been able to compile go back to 1961 and they show that at that time there was a total of $146½ million being spent on industrial research in this country. I realize that in what we call a free economy there is a distinct role both for government and industry, and in the past industry has had to carry the major portion of this responsibility. But it seems to me that the government must assume a greater responsibility in this all-important area.

May I say that there are approximately 37,000 manufacturing plants in Canada and of that number over 31,000 have 50 employees or less. So it is obvious that factories with 50 employees or less cannot undertake the tremendous load of carrying on scientific research, and it may be necessary to set up a system of co-operative pooling between various industries in order to have proper industrial research developed. I know there has been considerable comment on and criticism of United States ownership of Canadian industry. This is not the time nor the occasion for me to attempt to discuss the inherent weaknesses and dangers of this system. But I do say, Mr. Chairman, that many of the Canadian subsidiaries have been able to maintain a reasonably adequate position in this matter of providing scientific ideas and techniques because we have had the benefit of the outlay of millions of dollars by their United States principals.

In concluding my few remarks, Mr. Chairman, I desire to commend the Prime Minister for setting up the scientific secretariat and I would urge that this house give full attention to this very vital problem.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to make two speeches today but I was attacked by the hon. member for Verdun. In opening my remarks I might say that since the hon. member for Verdun has been in the House of Commons we have become very close friends. I want to assure him, through you, Mr. Chairman, that we are going to remain friends, too, even in the heat of debate. I want to preface my remarks by saying that during the time he was at the United Nations serving his country I paired with him. When I was away sick, he paired with me, and on other occasions when I have not been sick he has paired with me. I just want to assure him, through you Mr. Chairman, that we will remain friends. As Mr. Truman said, if you cannot stand the heat, get out of the kitchen. I want to assure him that what he said during this debate did not in any way erode our friendship.

However, I do want to say that I feel sorry for him that he should, as a backbencher of the Liberal party that many Canadians used to know, be used as a tool of the frontbenchers to come in here and answer for the Prime Minister who will not answer for himself. His henchmen on the treasury benches could be known tonight, and I will coin a phrase, as the silent men.

Mr. Mackasey: I rise on a point of privilege.

The Chairman: Order; the hon. member for Verdun is rising on a point of privilege.

Mr. Mackasey: If I might digress for a moment, I want to thank the hon. member for his friendly remarks. I also have to voice my disapproval of his terminology. What the frontbenchers do in the Liberal party is the business of the frontbenchers. We are not relegated to the backbenches. If I spoke out tonight—

The Chairman: Order; if the hon. member has a question of privilege, perhaps he might state it.

Mr. Mackasey: I object to the word "tool" being used in this sense. I entered this debate and I can assure the hon. member for Bow River it was a spontaneous gesture motivated by my sincere appreciation of and affection for the right hon. Prime Minister who I am sure, as well as anybody in this house, can protect himself when he has the opportunity of knowing beforehand what he can expect and the type of attack that is going to be made upon him.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not know whether or not that was a question of privilege. I am certainly not going to get into an argument with the hon. member for Verdun. He objected to the word "tool". It seemed to me—I could be wrong and I have not had a chance to discuss it with him nor have I heard any rumours on this side of the house in that regard—that by the silence of the members of the treasury benches, he at least appeared to be their instrument. More than that, I cannot say.

I would say this to the hon. member for Verdun, when he suggests that I did not give notice to the Prime Minister that I was going to attack him in these remarks. The fact is that yesterday on orders of the day, when the house is generally filled, I rose on a point of privilege and referred to certain pages in Hansard. I showed the Prime Minister's statements with regard to this film. It is not a question of a $35,000 film we are considering tonight. This has not engendered the heat of debate. The opposition has an important function, the same as the government. Our job is to find out the facts for the people of Canada. The experienced members of the cabinet, when they were on this side of the house, questioned the former government, and properly so. This is the function of the government and the function of the opposition.

Then I come back to the point. When I rose on a question of privilege I stated, and I stated fairly I believe if you read my remarks, that there should be respect not only for the position of the prime minister of Canada, but respect for the man himself. The Prime Minister was there; he faced me. I saw, as the members of the press saw, the people on this side saw, and his colleagues saw, a man whose face was as red as a beet. I saw him embarrassed. None of us saw him rise in his place, Mr. Chairman, to answer the charge that he had misinformed the house. These are the charges that have been levelled against the Prime Minister. There is nothing personal about it. We see in the record of the debates of the House of Commons his answer: I have not seen that film. Then, on another day he said: I have seen that film. The question was clear and the answer was very clear. We have one in the negative and one in the affirmative.

When the Prime Minister was faced with this situation, he only had to get up and say, I made a mistake, we are all human. The only people who seem to be superhuman around here are the Liberals. He made a mistake. If that is his explanation, I say this, and this is the point I want to make now—I want to make it quickly before time expires—that by his silence he convicted himself. These tactics tonight—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I have listened to the hon. member, and because the Prime Minister is preoccupied with very important matters concerning the interests of this country, and at this moment is not in the house, the hon. gentleman is not warranted in making statements which are clearly contrary to the rules. The hon. gentleman has said, in effect, that the Prime Minister has not stated the facts in this situation. There is another series of phrases that could be used to describe the language of the hon. gentleman, but the hon. gentleman cannot under the rules of this house be allowed to go unchallenged when he suggests that the Prime Minister has misinformed this house, because the effect of that is to say that the Prime Minister has not told the truth.

An hon. Member: Right.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman may continue his arguments, but under the rules of this house, that is an unparliamentary statement and the hon. gentleman ought to be asked to withdraw it. What the hon. gentleman has done has been to take a particular film and say that the Prime Minister said, with regard to that, that he had not seen it. The Prime Minister, quite frankly, told this house that he had seen the film and he did not like it.

Now, when you relate those two statements with what the hon. gentleman has said, it is clear there is no basis whatever for the allegation. However, that is not the point of order. The point of order is, whether or not that is true, the Prime Minister never misinformed this house. He stated that he had not misinformed this house. Under the rules of our house, the hon. gentleman must accept that. To go on with this language and this form of argument is to prostitute the rules of this house. I would ask you to ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw an indictment he has made against a man who, whatever one may say about him, can never be said to be guilty of deliberately stating something that is not in accord with the facts. I ask the hon. member to consider seriously what he has said. He has charged the Prime Minister of this country, the head of the government of this country, with something that he has no right to charge, and I ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw that statement, to make his argument if he will—because this is a free parliament—but not to indulge in rules that are contrary to our procedures.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Secretary of State was sitting here throughout all of the speech I made. I quoted from page 3429 of Hansard and page 3430 of Hansard, where the Prime Minister categorically said those on that side of the house do not censor. I quote his words again:

> We do not censor films on this side of the house.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, on a point of order—

Mr. Nielsen: According to the rules—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I have raised a point—

The Chairman: Order. My understanding is that the hon. member for Yukon is speaking on the point of order which has been raised by the minister.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): With the greatest respect, I have raised a point of order—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

The Chairman: Order please. May we have some order. Order, please. May I suggest that if the hon. member for Yukon or other hon. members want to speak on the point of order they should limit or confine their remarks to the point of order which has actually been raised by the minister.

Mr. Nielsen: The Secretary of State for External Affairs has had his say on the point of order, and I am endeavouring to do that right now, and if he would just—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. My point of order is—

Mr. Nielsen: There cannot be a point of order within a point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My point of order has to do—

Mr. Nielsen: I am on a point of order—

The Chairman: Order, please. I am just wondering whether the Chair could not be given an opportunity to hear the point which the hon. member for Yukon wishes to make. I am not saying whether he is on the point of order or not, but I have not had the opportunity to hear what he has to say.

Mr. Nielsen: The point of order I am speaking to was raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and if he would contain himself in patience he would hear—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

Mr. Nielsen: I am on the point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): May I state my point of order. I was complaining—

The Chairman: Order please. I recognize or I suspect what the minister has in mind, and I understand his suggestion is that the hon. member for Yukon is now reverting to a previous proceeding.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): That is right.

The Chairman: But, as I said, I have not really had an opportunity to hear what the point is.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister should be quiet.

Mr. Nielsen: If the minister will stop his attempts at closure I will complete my point of order. I said, sir, concerning those words I quoted, that they were lies and I maintain they were lies—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order.

Mr. Nielsen: —and I was not interrupted at that time on a point of order, and there was no point of order to the words uttered by the hon. member for Bow River—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise—

Mr. Nielsen: We have a smokescreen raised—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

The Chairman: As the hon. member for Yukon, I understand, has spoken to the point of order, the minister is rising on another point of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): My point of order is—

Mr. Nielsen: I am still on the point of order—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I was referring—

The Chairman: Order. Would hon. members kindly co-operate with the Chair. I appreciate that much heat has been generated in the course of the evening about this debate, and perhaps at this point I might read to hon. members the relevant citations in Beauchesne. I believe it is the duty of the Chair to bring the relevant citations to the attention of hon. members, but without going into the details I would refer hon. members to citations 140 and 141 of Beauchesne's, which might take a little time to read. I will not read them at this moment, but if hon. members are familiar with the substance of these two citations I feel they should bear them in mind in the course of this debate.

Mr. Nielsen: I was going to conclude very quickly—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): On a point of order—

Mr. Nielsen: —on the point of order raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs—

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I rise—

Mr. Nielsen: On the point of order—

The Chairman: Order please. I do feel that the hon. member for Yukon, whether he is right or not in the position he is taking now, should be given an opportunity to complete his remarks, to complete the point he is making.

Mr. Nielsen: I was simply going—

The Chairman: Provided, of course, he limits himself to the point of order which has been raised by the minister, which refers to statements made by the hon. member for Bow River, and not statements made by the hon. member for Yukon.

Mr. Nielsen: I was simply going to conclude —and I could have done so five minutes ago if not for the intervention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs—by saying that this is a typical breach of the rules of the house by the typical deviousness of the minister himself who rises on spurious points of order.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The hon. gentleman has not, of course, addressed himself to the point of order. I ask you, sir, to ask the hon.

gentleman who spoke just before the hon. member for Yukon to withdraw what he said about the statement made by the Prime Minister, and the hon. member for Yukon a moment ago has violated our rules when he referred to statements made by the Prime Minister as lies. That is contrary to the rules of the house—

Mr. Nielsen: I backed them up.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and I would ask you, in accordance with the rules, to ask both hon. gentlemen to withdraw imputations which they have made against the Prime Minister of this country. The rules you have referred to in Beauchesne are clear. No hon. gentleman has the right, under our rules, to refer to anything said by an hon. member of this house using the language of condemnation which has just been used by the hon. member for Yukon and the hon. member who preceded him.

This is contrary to the rules of the house, particularly when addressed to the head of the government of this country. Hon. gentlemen should know that that rule should be observed with great strictness and I ask you, Mr. Chairman, to call this to the attention of hon. members.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder if I might finish my remarks.

The Chairman: Well, of course, there is a point of order which has been raised by the minister and I suppose we should have some views expressed by the Chair in that connection, unless what the hon. member has to say is by way of explanation of the suggestion made by the minister that he has used unparliamentary language. If this is his intention certainly I think the committee would like to hear him.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, the Secretary of State for External Affairs would have to state specifically the unparliamentary expressions that he says were used. He has not done that. He has discussed this in general terms, as he has always done, without coming to the point, and we have absolutely nothing in front of us on the point of order he raised.

Mr. Pugh: On a point of order—

The Chairman: Order. Before we adjourn —and it is practically ten o'clock—with the indulgence of hon. members I would like to read into the record the citations which I have just referred to a moment ago, citations

[Mr. Martin (Essex East).]

140 and 141, and I may say I do not intend to make a decision now. Citation 140 reads:

(1) The rule relating to personal reflections occurring in debate, may be stated thus, namely: that it is doubly disorderly for any member, in speaking, to digress from the question before the house, and to attack any other member, by means of opprobrious language, applied to his person and character, or to his conduct, either in general, or on some particular occasion, and tending to bring him into ridicule, contempt, or hatred, with his fellow members, or to create ill blood in the house.

(2) The whole law of parliament on this subject is admirably summed up and expressed in the following standing order of the Lords: "To prevent misunderstanding, and for avoiding offensive speeches, when matters are debating, either in the house, or at committees, it is for honour's sake thought fit, and so ordered, that all personal, sharp, or taxing speeches be forborne; and whoever answereth another man's speech shall apply his answer to the matter without wrong to the person; and as nothing offensive is to be spoken, so nothing is to be ill taken, if the party that speaks it shall presently make a fair exposition, or clear denial, of the words that might bear any ill construction; and if any offence be given in that kind, as the house itself will be very sensible thereof, so it will sharply censure the offender, and give the party offended a fit reparation, and full satisfaction."

There is also citation 141 (1), but I think the committee has been indulgent enough to allow me to read citation 140, and perhaps at their leisure hon. members might read citation 141 also. Perhaps in the light of these words we might be in a position to make some progress tomorrow.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader about the business for tomorrow. I judge it will be interim supply, but is there something that will come ahead of that?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, I understand that there will be agreement at the beginning of the sitting tomorrow to dispose of item 55 by consent, and to refer the matter recited therein to the standing committee on agriculture and colonization. Then we will continue with the debate on interim supply. When the debate on interim supply is completed, we will continue the debate on the flag resolution.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

TRADE—UNITED STATES CONSIDERATION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTIES ON AUTOMOBILES AND PARTS

Mr. H. W. Danforth (Kent, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, on the orders of the day today I addressed a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce and asked whether he or his department had been informed that the treasury department in Washington were considering whether a countervailing duty should be imposed on Canadian cars and parts entering that country. The ruling this afternoon was that I should place this question on the order paper. I quite understand the ruling in this instance because in my question there was no consideration, and could not be any consideration, of the urgency of this matter. But there is indeed urgency because of the fact that during the months of April, May and June many of the large suppliers of automotive parts to the manufacturers of automobiles in the United States tender for the business of these large automobile companies. It was with this in mind, Mr. Speaker, that I asked my question, because any imposition of duty would seriously affect and impair the tender price of our suppliers.

In order to provide a little background on this matter I should like to point out that when the previous government were in office they, by order in council, put into effect a measure that very much affected the automoble industry in Canada. I refer to the fact that they allowed the importation of certain automobile parts, namely automatic transmissions and stripped engines, into this country duty free. Then it was provided that one dollar of exported Canadian content was to earn the remission of duties on one dollar of dutiable imports.

At that time there was no serious objection from any firm or government official in the United States. This provision was changed last year by the present government and the Minister of Industry (Mr. Drury) as is reported at page 3999 of Hansard for October 25, 1963, said there had been a change in this policy with regard to imports from the United States. He stated:

> The new measures provide for the remission of duties paid on importations of vehicles and parts for vehicles for use in the manufacture of motor vehicles in Canada.

This was with regard to the provisions that had previously obtained. Then he stated:

> If full advantage of the plan is taken by industry, it could lead to increased production and exports of between $150 million and $200 million annually—

The automobile industry began to consider seriously whether, with this great change in the act and a great deal more business coming into Canada, the United States government or the automobile manufacturers in the United States would take exception to this policy. As a matter of fact, on April 2 of this year, as reported at page 1700 of Hansard, the following question was asked of the Minister of Industry:

> Following a report to the effect that the United States are planning to use reprisals in protest against the Canadian government decision to give assistance to the automotive industry, can the minister tell us what stage has been reached in the implementation of the formula he has devised to promote the automotive industry development in Canada?

To this the minister replied:

> Mr. Speaker, it is needless to say that I cannot go into details at this stage. However, I can say that results to date indicate great success. However, I do not think that the time is right to give a complete report.

The industry in this country began to feel the adverse effects of this almost immediately, for last autumn it became quite obvious to the suppliers in this country that there was a change in attitude on the part of the United States government. As a matter of fact, their tariffs of 1930 were revised, and in nearly every instance car parts going into the United States were subject to an increased tariff rate. I have one specific instance of Canadian Filters Limited who supplied fans for piston-type engines. The rate increased from 8½ per cent to 14 per cent, which was indeed a 5½ per cent increase in the rate, and in effect influenced quite a little the tendering of these companies for contracts in the United States. There were other instances where it became quite apparent that if this was not retaliation it was something very much like it. These companies, and a lot of them are located in my riding, supply a tremendous number of parts to automobile builders in the United States. This question concerns hundreds of thousands of items and brings in hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of business. These people are seriously concerned at this time.

I should like to refer to an article in the Western Producer for Thursday, June 18, which has caused undue alarm. It says, in part:

> Senator Stuart Symington, Democrat of Missouri, said the Canadian plan went into effect last November 1 and "already has succeeded in taking thousands of jobs from this country".

This senator said he was alarmed because it was his information that Canada's tariff system is luring United States auto parts factories to Canada, and that we were planning to extend this program to the aviation and chemical industry. The paragraph which alarmed me most was this:

> In Washington, the treasury department gave formal notice that it is considering whether a countervailing duty should be imposed on imports of Canadian cars and parts.

I wish to state that the officials of the Department of Trade and Commerce and the Department of Industry are aware of the problem and have indicated that they are working to find a solution. What we want to know is what progress has been made, what is the policy of the government, and what can be done in this respect?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, as hon. members are aware, the automotive program introduced on November 1, 1963 was designed to bring about a rationalization, to some extent, of the automobile and parts industries and to encourage efficient production. These measures provide for the conditional removal of import duties on automobiles and parts and do not involve a grant or bounty.

It is public knowledge that at least six months ago and probably longer the United States treasury department received a petition from the Modine Manufacturing Company of the United States in respect of radiators shipped from Canada to the United States. Under the terms of section 303 of the United States tariff act the U.S. treasury has referred this for investigation, as they must do, to the bureau of customs.

The Canadian government has made representations to the United States in connection with this whole matter and has pointed out that we attach the greatest possible importance to this policy, which is designed not only to provide jobs all through this country in our manufacturing industries, and is doing it, but is designed to increase our exports to the United States and in this way reduce our balance of payments. I think I can say we expect great things from this policy and I can assure the hon. member that we have been bringing and will continue to bring the strongest pressure on our American friends to make sure it is not interfered with. In this connection we have had conversations with the United States government both in Washington and here, and last week end I also had the opportunity of a discussion with Secretary Dillon in Paris. This matter is being pressed by the government most energetically and I can assure the hon. member that we consider, as he does, that it is a very urgent matter and one which is most important for the future of this country.

INDIAN AFFAIRS—FORT WILLIAM, ONT.—REPORTED SEGREGATION OF STUDENTS

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): This afternoon I directed a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration having to do with news items which appeared in the press a week or more ago to the effect that, in a school in Fort William, Indian students were being segregated from the rest of the students.

People all across Canada and members of all parties have been and are concerned about the plight of the Indian population of Canada and the steps taken to improve their condition. One of the most important of these steps in the long run was the decision of the department that whenever possible Indian children attending school should have the opportunity to attend the regular school attended by students drawn from the population as a whole. It was therefore disturbing to read reports of a conference held in Kenora, Ontario, a couple of weeks ago sponsored by the Indian-Eskimo association and attended by representatives of government and various agencies interested in the problems and rights of the Indians at which it was alleged that Indians from a reserve attending one school in Fort William were segregated. There was subsequent report that there is no segregation of the students in classes. Then it was suggested there was some segregation in the play facilities. Later it was explained that there was segregation in the lunch room.

I will be the first to recognize the fact that there may be difficulties. If, for example, certain students are slow learners, then whether they be Indians or anybody else, if the education authorities think that they can best be educated in special classes, then I for one would have no objection. Similarly I would have no objection to people who were physically handicapped, for instance, having their own play facilities. But I think it would be completely wrong if Indian students attending a school in Fort William or anywhere else had to eat their lunches completely separated from the other students. If it is suggested, for example, that the students are rowdy or difficult, maybe that is a legitimate reason for some kind of separation, but let it include all students who are rowdy or difficult to handle. I would hope that the department would not countenance segregation in total or in part.

That is all I wanted to inquire about this afternoon, Mr. Speaker, and I hope that the minister's representative will be able to assure me and the house that the department does not and will not countenance any type of segregation against any minority group, whether it be Indians or anybody else.

Mr. Hubert Badanai (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the officials of the Indian affairs branch, on seeing the newspaper articles referred to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow), got in touch with the school authorities in question and have received assurances from them that there is no segregation. I want to assure the hon. member that the Department of Citizenship and Immigration, which has jurisdiction over Indian affairs, is in full agreement with total integration and we certainly do not countenance segregation at any time.

The allegation made at a meeting in Kenora, Ontario, referred to by the hon. member, was to the effect that Indians were taught in the same building as white children but ate in separate rooms and were not integrated on the playground. I understand that a meeting called by the separate school board of Fort William, will be held for the purpose of investigating these allegations. As soon as we receive information as to the result of the meeting I will communicate the information to the hon. member.

Again I want to assure him and all other hon. members that there is no intention on the part of the Indian affairs branch to countenance anything having to do with segregation. We believe in integration, particularly of the children in our public schools.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ST. JOHN THE BAPTIST DAY, QUEBEC—DISCOVERY DAY, NEWFOUNDLAND

[Translation]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to take this opportunity to extend our best wishes to our French speaking friends at this time when they are all celebrating together their national holiday, the feast of St. John the Baptist.

This year, I know, their national holiday has been extended to exceptional proportions. The people of French Canada are celebrating their origins and asserting their identity during a whole week. This is all to their credit. It is proof positive of their dynamic strength, their vitality and their attachment to traditions.

[Text]

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this attachment to tradition is an important element in a country that wishes to progress, but with ease and stability, toward greatness. In our country an even more indispensable condition is the establishment of a spirit of unity among people of all races and all sections of our country so we can give the world an example of good will and mutual understanding. We think of this good will and understanding, Mr. Speaker, as we congratulate our French speaking colleagues in the house and our French speaking fellow Canadians on this, their special day.

The feast day of St. John the Baptist has an additional meaning in the history of Canada, for it was on this day 466 years ago that the redoubtable explorer John Cabot—or Jean Cabot or Giovanni Caboto, as you will—had the great fortune to discover the land that became the ancient colony and is now the Canadian province of Newfoundland, to which stalwart and courageous people we also pay our tribute of respect today.

[Translation]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wish to join with the Prime Minister on this occasion and it gives me great pleasure to extend to all French speaking Canadians my heartfelt congratulations on this their national holiday, the feast of St. John the Baptist.

[Text]

Sir, it is very seldom that the Prime Minister and I have the opportunity to reveal in such a striking manner our capacity to express ourselves in the French language. This is an occasion not only for those who are French Canadians but for all of us to pause in solemn recollection of the splendid contribution they have made to Canada. It is an occasion on which we share the memory of that faith that made possible the preservation of this portion of the North American continent under the British crown, and the contribution since which continues to grow and expand. It is well to recall on an occasion such as this that in 1864, none other than Sir George Etienne Cartier, speaking on behalf of those of French origin, said that without confederation the result would be the absorption, progressive and inevitable, of Canada into the American orbit as part of the United States of America. Whether overtly through formal recognition or not, there would have been absorption in fact, economically, socially and culturally but for the confederation that binds us. We on this occasion join with our compatriots of the French race and language and bid for them an equal partnership which is essential to the preservation of the unity of our country.

The Prime Minister mentioned as well the fact that this is Newfoundland Discovery day. This reminded me of the fact that over that long period of time since John Cabot made his discovery the union jack has floated over that country, whether as a colony or as a province. We join on this day in paying our tribute to those from Newfoundland who today, having joined us, are making their contribution to the unity of our country which was the hope of the fathers of confederation and which was not achieved until more than 80 years thereafter.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, this morning I visited the dentist and he told me that he had succeeded in preventing me from speaking for at least 48 hours. I regret to say he has been only partially successful. However, I shall have sufficient difficulty in saying anything in English without trying to mangle the French language at this particular time.

I do want, on behalf of the New Democratic party, to join with those who have spoken in extending our congratulations to our French Canadian colleagues in this house and our French Canadian compatriots across Canada in this celebration of St. John the Baptist day. We rejoice in the pride which they take in their culture and traditions. I am sure that all of us were inspired this week by the words of Cardinal Léger in which he set forth, in moderate terms and with far-seeing vision, the hope that the French people and English people would work out the necessary modus vivendi to build here in Canada a great country.

We join with all those who on this day are celebrating the feast day of the French Canadian patron saint. We trust that their pride in their race, their language and their culture will have every reason to continue to grow from year to year.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, it gives me pleasure, on behalf of the members of our group—particularly those from the province of Quebec—and in the name of all my fellow countrymen, to sincerely thank the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) for the feelings they expressed toward all French Canadians on this occasion of the feast of St. John the Baptist, patron saint of French Canadians from Quebec and all other provinces in Canada.

All French Canadians, throughout Canada, are celebrating today the feast of their patron saint. Of course, those celebrations are specially prominent in the province of Quebec and this year it was the intent of the organizers of this feast day, all across Quebec, that it be even more imposing through diversified celebrations which got under way last Saturday and will be going on until next Saturday, while reaching their peak this evening. Such an exceptional pageant on this occasion is a mark of a sound vitality within the French-Canadian people who, more than ever, are conscious of the role they must and can play and of the importance of their contribution in the development and the establishment of a Canada strong and united in the diversity of its parts.

The magnitude of today's celebrations in Quebec must in no way be interpreted as a sign of hostility toward anyone or anything.

It is only the evidence of our will to contribute to the making of Canada, my country, our country, a place where it will be good to live together harmoniously.

But, in order to achieve that harmony as soon as possible, we must show on both sides some understanding and moderation.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker, now that the Prime Minister and the Leader of the Opposition have spoken a few words in French I would like to attempt to say something in English. I would like to quote from an editorial in today's Montreal Gazette to bring to the attention of the house what it said about French Canada and about this particular day:

> The vigour of French Canada today is the vigour of a society seeking a new and progressive identity. And if this vigour sometimes seems to have about it a great hunger, this is not surprising.

It went on to say:

> During the past few years, there have been some, including some of marked talent, who have followed paths of extremism. But the over-all movement of French Canada has been one of positive and purposeful advance. Every French Canadian, and every friend of French Canada, can take pride in what has been done.
> This year the spirit of St. John the Baptist day is one of confidence. It is a spirit that is fully justified. For this is the spirit of French Canada today. The paths of progress are open. And French Canadians are following them as never before in their history.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to make these words mine, and I would like to have it that Canada will be strong if Quebec, where one third of all Canadians live, is strong, and that is how sincere Quebeckers wish it. I would also like to extend my sincere congratulations to our fellow Canadians from Newfoundland and say that we share with them this particular day, June 24, as one of the most important days for the people of Quebec and Newfoundland. I also hope that, as the years go round, St. John the Baptist will become the patron saint of all Canadians.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the members of our group, on behalf of all hon. members—and I think that unanimity is not a problem on that matter—as well as on behalf of all French Canadians, we wish to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and others who expressed their best wishes to the French Canadians on the occasion of our national holiday.

This year the celebrations are on a larger scale than usual and express our nation's maturity. A sculpture wrought in solid metal, has replaced the sheep to show our solidity, our vitality and our energy.

Mr. Speaker, the French Canadian nation will live on because it has faith in its future. We are confident that we have made to Canada and North America a vast cultural contribution which can only benefit all the citizens of this continent.

Our two great cultures existing side by side in Canada are the patent evidence that we can make of our country a powerful country where the true human values, the cultural values will be put in the foreground, making of Canada a still greater country because it will have as a basis the greatest of all values, culture.

[Text]

I should like to take this opportunity to invite all members of this house to the celebration of St. John the Baptist day in Montreal so that each and every one of them may be able to see for themselves what is going on in French Canada today. They will see, amid all the demonstrations and parades tonight, that French Canada is full of life and is ready to contribute to the development of a great and powerful country, Canada.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): It was not my intention to rise on this occasion, but I cannot ignore the statement made by the hon. member for Lake St. John (Mr. Lessard) when he said he hoped that St. John the Baptist would become the saint of all Canada. May I say to him, sir—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, pardon me if I cannot speak French.

[Text]

—that we honour the provincial day in Quebec and all that it means to French Canadians.

I am sorry the Prime Minister and his friends said "provincial" instead of "national" day. I tie the two together. May the day come in Canada when it is not the day of St. John the Baptist, St. Andrew, St. George, St. Patrick or any other, but all of them together in honesty, integrity, and sincerity, believing in all that it really and truly means.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. In view of the Prime Minister's remarks at the commencement of today's proceedings may I ask the right hon. gentleman whether he is aware that the Cape Breton historical society is today celebrating, complete with bagpipe bands and all that goes with a rousing Cape Breton celebration, the landing of John Cabot on Cape Breton island? Is he also aware that this is an annual event?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for that serious omission in my statement of which, of course, I was aware.

DUMPING OF RAW SEWAGE INTO GREAT LAKES

Question No. 717—Mr. McMillan:

In connection with the strong recommendation by the international joint commission to cease dumping raw sewage and other waste products in the great lakes system (a) what program has been decided on in Canada to this end (b) how many American and Canadian communities dump raw sewage, directly or indirectly, into the great lakes system (c) have the American people assumed any time limit on any program to clean up the water in the great lakes system by sewage disposal plants, elimination of detergents and other wastes etc.?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): (a) The I.J.C. program relates only to the connecting channels of the great lakes where surveillance of water quality is actively maintained by the commission's technical advisory board.

In Ontario, jurisdiction over matters relating to water pollution abatement rests with the Ontario water resources commission, which, under its act, has the power to control and regulate the collection, production, treatment, storage, transmission, distribution and use of water for public purposes and to make orders with respect thereto. The commission maintains an energetic and effective program which includes a constant review of those municipalities and industries which are deficient in the provision of waste treatment facilities.

Pollution of Canadian waters by oil from vessels is covered by the oil pollution prevention regulations under the Canada Shipping Act. The question of providing appropriate regulations covering other waste from vessels is presently being studied.

(b) At the present time, ten Canadian communities having a total population of 232,850, discharge untreated or insufficiently treated sewage into the great lakes. Similar information regarding U.S. communities has been requested from the U.S. authorities and will be provided as soon as available.

(c) Information is being requested from the U.S. authorities and will be provided when available.

SUPERIOR COURT JUDGES, NORTHWESTERN QUEBEC

Question No. 944—Mr. Caouette:

1. How many justices of the superior court are there in the constituencies of northwestern Quebec, that is, the constituencies of Villeneuve, Chapleau and Pontiac-Témiscamingue?

2. How many cases are pending at the present time before the superior court of this judicial district?

SUPERIOR COURT JUDGES, QUEBEC CONSTITUENCIES

Question No. 1,116—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How many superior court judges are there in the electoral districts of Compton-Frontenac, Mégantic, Sherbrooke and Beauce?
2. Has the Department of Justice information concerning the number of cases presently pending before the superior court in that judicial district?
3. Is there a sufficient number of superior court judges in that district and will there be further appointments in the near future?

Mr. Macdonald: 1. Four justices of the superior court reside in the electoral districts of Compton-Frontenac, Mégantic, Sherbrooke and Beauce.

2. No.

3. Determination of the need for additional judges is the responsibility of the provincial authorities.

DEEPENING OF GREAT LAKES CHANNELS

Question No. 1,128—Mr. Aiken:

1. Since construction of the St. Lawrence seaway began in 1954, what channels in the great lakes system above lake Ontario have been deepened and what are the dates and particulars thereof?
2. Which projects have been undertaken by United States authorities?

Mr. Pickersgill: The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

1. The Welland canal was deepened during the period 1955-59 to provide a 27 foot minimum depth throughout, with an extra depth to 29 feet in rock areas.

2. All channel deepening above lake Erie has been done by United States authorities.

VETERANS HOSPITALS, QUEBEC

Question No. 1,143—Mr. Latulippe:

1. To what veterans hospital are veterans from the constituency of Compton-Frontenac sent in the province of Quebec?

2. During the last two years, how many veterans from Compton-Frontenac were treated in a veterans hospital?

3. How many permanent patients are there in veterans hospitals in Quebec?

4. On the average, during the past three years, how many temporary patients were there in veterans hospitals in Quebec?

5. How much has it cost the federal government to operate veterans hospitals in Quebec in each of the last three years?

Mr. Teillet: 1. (a) To Queen Mary veterans hospital, Montreal, P.Q., if resident in county of Compton. (b) To Ste Foy hospital, Ste Foy, Quebec, P.Q., if resident in county of Frontenac.

2. It would not be possible to provide the answer to this question from our records.

3. As at midnight May 31, 1964, there were 1,098 chronic and domiciliary care patients in D.V.A. hospitals in the province of Quebec.

4. We are unable to provide an average for the past three years, however, as at midnight May 31, 1964, there were 582 patients in D.V.A. hospitals in the province of Quebec who had been in hospital less than 60 days. This represents approximately 34 per cent of the total patient load at that time.

NEW INDUSTRIES IN DESIGNATED AREAS

Question No. 1,191—Mr. Stenson:

1. How many new industries have been established in designated areas and have taken advantage of the tax incentive program?

2. How many people are these industries employing?

3. In what province is each industry established?

Mr. Drury: 1. Sixty one new manufacturing and processing businesses have declared their intention to establish in such a manner as to benefit from the designated areas tax incentive program. Of these, the government is aware of eight which are now in commercial production. There may be other new businesses which plan to take advantage of the tax incentive program. The government will not necessarily be aware of these until such times as the new businesses apply for certification by the Minister of Industry, as required under the Income Tax Act.

2. The planned employment reported by the 61 new businesses is 5,225.

3. Any announcement of a particular firm's intentions regarding location is made by the firm itself. The proposed locations of the 61 new businesses, as reported to the government, is broken down by provinces as follows: B.C.-Alta., 2; Ont., 32; Que., 20; N.B., 3; N.S., 4.

COMPENSATION TO CRIME VICTIMS

Question No. 1,205—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government giving consideration to initiating a scheme of compensating crime victims through a system of cash payments to persons who have been injured as a result of criminal attack, as is now being done in countries such as Great Britain?

Mr. Macdonald: The government is following with interest such schemes in the United Kingdom and elsewhere but has no immediate plans for proposing any such legislation in Canada. Any such legislation in Canada might raise a question of legislative jurisdiction as between parliament and the provincial legislatures.

*HARRY HOOPER—DETENTION AWAITING DEPORTATION

Question No. 1,213—Mr. Woolliams:

1. What charges, if any, existed against Hooper during the time he was incarcerated in jail for 90 to 100 days, other than the fact that he was held in custody for refusing to answer certain questions alleged to be in accordance with the regulations and law?

2. How many times during the 90 to 100 days of Hooper's incarceration was he brought before the court for a further remand in accordance with the terms and conditions of the Criminal Code of Canada?

3. During the 90 to 100 days that the said Hooper was incarcerated before being deported, how many times was he questioned by those in authority or by the court as to whether he was willing to answer the questions which it was alleged he refused to so answer?

4. How many people are at the present time incarcerated in Canada under similar conditions that Mr. Hooper was held?

5. How many people were held during the period of 90 to 100 days the said Hooper was held?

Mr. Badanai: 1. Harry Claude Hooper came under the jurisdiction of the Immigration Act on March 16, 1964. Prior to that time his detention was the responsibility of local police. He was detained from March 16 to May 26, 1964, a total of 71 days. He was detained from March 16 to March 23 to enable him to obtain counsel if he so wished at an immigration inquiry. Because he refused to answer any questions, the inquiry was adjourned from March 23 to April 7 to obtain essential documentary evidence that he was deportable and from April 7 to May 26 he was detained pending completion of travel arrangements and deportation. On May 22 he was charged under section 50(e) of the Immigration Act for having refused to answer questions. Section 50(e) of the act reads as follows:

> Every person who refuses to be sworn or to affirm or declare, as the case may be, or to answer a question put to him or does not truthfully answer all questions put to him at an examination or inquiry under this act is guilty of an offence and is liable on summary conviction, for the first offence to a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars and not less than fifty dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding six months and not less than one month or to both fine and imprisonment, and, for the second offence to a fine not exceeding one thousand dollars and not less than one hundred dollars or to imprisonment for a term not exceeding twelve months and not less than three months or to both fine and imprisonment, and, for the third or a subsequent offence to imprisonment for a term not exceeding 18 months and not less than six months.

This charge was withdrawn on May 26 and Hooper was deported May 26.

2. Subsequent to March 16, 1964, Hooper appeared before an immigration inquiry on March 23 and April 7. He was charged in court on May 22. The Criminal Code does not require that immigration detainees be brought before the courts and there is no authority in the Immigration Act for such action. However, all persons held under the Immigration Act may question the legality of the detaining or deportation orders by appealing to the courts.

3. During the 71 days Hooper was held under the Immigration Act an immigration inquiry was held to determine his liability to deportation. The inquiry was opened on March 23, adjourned, and concluded on April 7 with a deportation order. In the course of the inquiry Hooper was asked 17 times to answer questions and he refused to do so.

4. As of May 29, the first previous weekly reporting date, 33 persons were held in custody under the provisions of the Immigration Act.

5. The department's filing and statistical systems do not permit the immediate compilation of the information requested in part 5 of this question. To obtain the information will require a physical review of numerous immigration files. This review is under way and as soon as the information is available it will be forwarded to the hon. member.

CITIZENSHIP OF C.B.C. WASHINGTON COMMENTATOR

Question No. 1,219—Mr. Gundlock:

1. Has the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation any information as to the citizenship of Mr. Minifie, C.B.C. commentator in Washington, D.C.?

2. Has Mr. Minifie renounced his Canadian citizenship and, if so, when?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am advised by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that they have received the following information from Mr. James M. Minifie, O.B.E. He was born in England, was brought to a Saskatchewan homestead at an early age. While in his teens he fought with the Canadian army in the first war; returned to University of Saskatchewan in March 1919 when demobilized. Won a Rhodes scholarship in 1923 and graduated from Oxford in 1926. Later became correspondent for New York Herald Tribune and C.B.C. contributor while in Europe travelling under a British passport, became naturalized U.S. citizen when newspaper transferred him to Washington in 1946, and continued C.B.C.

work first as freelance and later as correspondent under contract, which he is today.

IMMIGRATION FORM 1000

Question No. 1,220—Mr. Smith:

1. What is immigration form 1000 and what is its use?
2. Are any Canadian citizens by birth or naturalization required to complete this form on their return to Canada from visits outside Canada and, if so, what category of Canadian citizens are so required?

Mr. Badanai: 1. The form IMM. 1000 is a card prescribed by the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration under the provisions of the Canadian Immigration Act and regulations. The card must be completed by all persons granted the status of landed immigrants in Canada and constitutes the department's official record of such admissions.

2. No.

*SUPERVISION AND MAINTENANCE OF PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS AND GROUNDS

Question No. 1,231—Mr. Irvine:

Under what act or regulation or order in council are the centre block, east block, west block and grounds, managed, supervised and maintained?

Mr. McWilliam: The management, charge and direction of the property is vested in the Minister of Public Works pursuant to section 9 of the Public Works Act, chapter 228, R.S.C. 1952. The Government Property Traffic Act, chapter 324, R.S.C. 1952, as amended by chapter 34, S.C. 1960-61 and regulations provide for the control of traffic on the said property.

The National Capital Act, chapter 37, S.C. 1958, provides for the maintenance and improvement of the grounds pursuant to section 10 (2) (d). P.C. 865 dated May 21, 1934 is the authority for the national capital commission to maintain the grounds at parliament hill.

DORVAL AIRPORT, MONTREAL—ACCESS OF TAXIS

Question No. 1,235—Mr. Pigeon:

1. Does the government intend to allow taxi cabs of the Montreal area to have access to the Dorval airport, and to withdraw this concession from the Murray Hill Company?
2. What airports in Canada restrict the transportation of passengers to a single agency or company as is done at the Dorval airport?

[Translation]

Answer: 1. All taxi cabs of the Montreal area have access to Montreal International Airport (Dorval) to deliver passengers to the airport and to pick up passengers by prearrangement.

[Mr. Lamontagne.]

Murray Hill Limousine Service Limited has entered into an agreement with the department undertaking to maintain a 24 hour service for air line passengers and for this purpose maintains a limousine and taxi station at the airport. It is not intended to cancel this agreement.

2. Arrangements similar to those at Montreal International Airport are in effect at all major airports in Canada and at all or practically all others where there is a local taxi operator willing to guarantee that service will be available whenever required by air line passengers.

PESTICIDES IN MILK

Question No. 1,238—Mr. Prittie:

1. Does the Department of National Health and Welfare make tests with regard to the amount of pesticides which are present in milk?
2. Has the department calculated the danger mark of pesticides in milk?
3. Is the present level of chlorinated hydrocarbon in milk in any area reaching the danger mark to human beings?
4. If the danger mark for pesticides is exceeded in any area, what steps does the department take in this regard and, is the local or provincial government in the area notified?

Miss LaMarsh: 1. Yes.

2. The Department of National Health and Welfare has on file extensive toxicity data on all pesticides which are likely to find their way into milk. From such data it is possible to determine the level of a pesticide which has had no effect on experimental animals when administered over their entire lifetime. From this figure the acceptable daily intake for man can be calculated. It is not possible to give precise values for a danger level in milk unless one knows the probable period of exposure to the pesticide and other factors such as the presence of related pesticides in the milk and other foods.

3. Pharmacologists in the food and drug directorate of the Department of National Health and Welfare do not believe that the levels of pesticides which have been found in milk represent any immediate hazard to health. However such residues are undesirable and could represent a potential health hazard if milk containing these residues were consumed over long periods of time. The food and drug directorate is continuing to examine samples of milk for pesticide residues.

4. The Department of National Health and Welfare would take immediate action to remove from the market any samples of milk which were considered to represent a hazard to health. The appropriate local and provincial authorities are kept informed on such matters.

DEVELOPMENT OF MARMOT BASIN, ALBERTA

Question No. 1,260—Mr. Horner (Jasper-Edson):

1. For what reason was Marmot Basin Ski-Lifts Limited's proposal for the development of the Marmot basin chosen over that of the rival company Marmot Territory Development Company?
2. Who are the directors of each of these firms?
3. What is the estimated revenue accruing to the federal government from each of these tenders?

Mr. Laing: 1. An assessment of the tenders revealed that Marmot Basin Ski-Lifts Ltd., had submitted a more satisfactory proposal with respect to four of the five items under which the tenders were assessed as specified in the call for tenders: financial capability, facilities to be provided in the form of a ski chalet, service to the public and rates to be charged for the use of the lift. The fifth item —schedule of construction and expected date of completion—was identical for both tenders as they indicated that the ski-lift would be operational for the 1964-65 skiing season.

2. The directors of Marmot Territory Development Ltd., are: Dr. Brian Dunsworth, Mr. Toby Rayner, Dr. Robert Van Alstine, Mr. R. Evan Potter, Mr. Howard Bouey, and Mr. John Schlosser. The directors of Marmot Basin Ski-Lifts Ltd., are: Mr. C. R. Kiefer, Mr. J. A. Clarke, Dr. R. D. Wilson, and Mr. D. H. Husel.

3. In each case 5 per cent of gross receipts from the lift operation. While no minimum revenue was guaranteed, each tenderer submitted the following estimates of revenue to the crown:

1966	1,200	1,126
1967	1,500	1,259
1968	1,800	1,363
1969	1,950	1,500

LIVING EXPENSES PAID JUDGES ON CONCILIATION BOARDS

Question No. 1,266—Mr. Knowles:

1. What is the amount allowed per day for living expenses to federally appointed judges serving on conciliation or arbitration boards and is this amount over and above salary and travelling expenses?
2. By what authority are such living expense allowances paid?
3. What is the answer of the government to the criticism of the auditor general that the paying of such allowances is invalid?

Mr. Lamontagne: In so far as the Department of Justice is concerned:

Questions

1. The amounts allowed are not determined at the instance of this department. Section 39 of the Judges Act provides that the amount allowed by the governor in council or a lieutenant governor in council is in addition to judicial salary; no additional travelling allowances are paid under section 21 of the Judges Act.

2 and 3. Section 39 of the Judges Act.

In so far as the Department of Labour is concerned: 1. The usual living allowance is $60 per day to a judge while engaged as a member and chairman of a board of conciliation and investigation. This amount is over and above transportation expenses. A judge receives no salary for such work.

2. By authority of the governor in council in each case, pursuant to section 38(1) and section 39(3) of the Judges Act and section 64(1) of the Industrial Relations and Disputes Investigation Act.

3. The government is of the view that the payment of this living allowance is in compliance with the provisions of the Judges Act.

*HANDING OVER OF WORLD FAIR SITE

Question No. 1,270—Mr. Marcoux:

1. On what date will the city of Montreal hand over to the world fair administration the site chosen as the location for the fair and is this the date specified in the act?
2. Will the entire site be turned over on this occasion?
3. Will there be a reception to celebrate the event and, if so, how many guests will be invited to attend and what will be the estimated total cost of the reception?

[Translation]

Mr. Pepin: 1. The city of Montreal will officially hand over the exhibition site to the C.C.W.E. on June 30, 1964, in conformity with clause 17 of the tripartite agreement of January 18, 1963 between the government of Canada, the government of the province of Quebec and the city of Montreal.

2. Legally yes, and physically in accordance with the schedule requirements of the C.C.W.E.

3. It is understood that the city of Montreal is arranging a ceremony on that occasion to which, among others, will be invited representatives from the C.C.W.E. and delegates of member countries of the Bureau International des Expositions who will be in Montreal at that time.

Questions of guests and costs are the responsibility of the city of Montreal as host for that ceremony.

MOVING OF R.C.M.P. PERSONNEL, PICTOU, N.S.

Question No. 1,274—Mr. MacEwan:

What moving and trucking firms are listed for the electoral district of Pictou, Nova Scotia, for the moving of personnel of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police?

Mr. Favreau: Moving and trucking services in that region are obtained from: English's Transfer, 70 Elm street, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia. Cooke's Transfer, New Glasgow, Nova Scotia.

*TENDERS FOR COAL, NATIONAL DEFENCE, LONDON, ONT.

Question No. 1,280—Mr. Irvine:

Have tenders been called for the supply of coal to the London armoury, No. 204 Base Workshop, Wolseley Barracks and 27 C.O.D. in London, Ontario and, if so (a) what tenders have been received (b) for what amounts (c) who was the successful tenderer?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as this is quite a long answer I have the agreement of the hon. member concerned to treat it as a non-oral question. Therefore, with the consent of the house I ask that the answer to this question be printed in Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Does the house give unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Editor's note: The answer referred to above is as follows:]

In so far as the Department of Defence Production is concerned: (a) and (b) tenders received and amounts for the supply of coal from June 1, 1964, to May 31, 1965:

(c) Successful tenderers were as follows:

NUMBER OF BANKRUPTCIES IN 1963

Question No. 1,282—Mr. Irvine:

1. What was the total number of declarations of bankruptcy in Canada in each quarter of the year 1963?

2. How many of these declarations were filed by firms connected with the building or building supply industry?

3. How many were filed by firms in the hardware and/or appliance merchandising industry?

Answer: The number of declarations of bankruptcy in Canada under provisions of the Bankruptcy Act for the four quarters of 1963:

	Number of bankruptcies	Construction industry	Hardware and building materials	Furniture and appliances
1st quarter	916	171	41	42

MARITIME UNION "DO NOT SHIP" LIST

Question No. 1,286—Mr. Orlikow:

1. When former seamen who have been on the "do not ship" list for more than three years contact the maritime trustees to seek reinstatement, are they referred to Mr. Leonard McLaughlin?

2. In order to be reinstated are such seamen required to pay back dues, assessments, initiation fees, etc? If so, will such back payments total over $500 per person, in some cases?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. No. Any seaman appearing on the "do not ship" list who applies to the board of trustees or to any agency of the S.I.U. of Canada is referred to the maritime appeals board, a body set up to deal with such matters. The policy of the trustees is to seek the reinstatement of any former member of the S.I.U. who can establish that he was placed on the "do not ship" list and who did not leave the union for any other reason.

2. The maritime appeals board has jurisdiction to determine what back dues, assessments, and initiation fees, if any, will be assessed against the member as a condition of his reinstatement. The policy of the board of trustees, which is again reflected in the maritime appeals board, is that no member who has been deprived of his rights as a result of being placed on the "do not ship" list will be required to pay any back dues or assessments.

GOLF CONCESSION, CAPE BRETON NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 1,287—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Were tenders called for the golf professional concession at the Cape Breton highlands national park for the 1964 season and, if so, (a) what were the names of those who tendered (b) what were the addresses and occupations of each of those who tendered, and (c) what was the amount of each tender?

2. To whom was the concession awarded and for what amount?

Mr. Laing: 1. Tenders were called to obtain the services of an individual to operate the golf course concession at the Cape Breton highlands national park. While the word "professional" was used in the call for tenders, it was also made clear that it was not an essential requirement for the successful tenderer to be capable of giving golfing lessons.

(a) (i) John Clifford Shea; (ii) Christopher Mickey; (iii) J. Roland Donovan; (iv) Lorne Jennex.

(b) (i) Antigonish, N.S., student; (ii) Ingonish, N.S., truck driver; (iii) Ingonish, N.S., labourer; (iv) North Sydney, N.S., labourer.

(c) (i) Tender incomplete; (ii) Tender incomplete; (iii) $350 per month; (iv) $625 per month.

2. J. Roland Donovan—$350 per month.

*OFFICE OF CITIZENSHIP MINISTER

Question No. 1,290—Mr. Knowles:

Where is the office of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration?

Mr. Badanai: The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration performs the duties of office in various places, but principally at the following addresses: Citizenship building, 22-30 Slater street, Ottawa; 439C, House of Commons, parliament buildings; and 2nd floor, Immigration building, Champlain harbour station, Wolfe's Cove, Quebec.

*OFFICE OF HEALTH AND WELFARE MINISTER

Question No. 1,291—Mr. Knowles:

Where is the office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare?

Mr. Munro: The Minister of National Health and Welfare performs the duties of her office in various places, but principally at the following addresses: Copeland building, Ottawa, Canada; Room 253S, House of Commons, Ottawa, Canada; 551 Clifton Avenue, Niagara Falls, Ontario.

AIRPORT LIMOUSINE CONCESSION, FORT SMITH, N.W.T.

Question No. 1,292—Mr. Rhéaume:

1. What procedure is followed in awarding the airport limousine concession at Fort Smith, Northwest Territories?

2. Which company presently holds this concession and (a) when was this concession awarded (b) what were the terms of the concession (c) when does this concession expire (d) which companies applied for the concession or were considered for it (e) on what basis was the concession awarded to the present operator?

3. Was the present limousine operation recently investigated as to adequacy and cleanliness of vehicles and, if so (a) what were the findings of this investigation (b) what action, if any, does the government propose to take?

Mr. Pickersgill: 1. Late in 1960 it was decided to establish a taxi concession at Fort Smith airport. After investigation by the regional officers of the department it was found that there were two taxi operators in the area who would be interested in serving the airport and who were qualified to provide the service required by the department and Pacific Western Airlines, the scheduled airline serving the airport. The two taxi companies were invited to submit sealed offers to the department for the concession.

2. The concession is held by Alex Collier operating under the name of Yellow Cabs. (a) The concession was awarded effective April 1, 1961. (b) The concession was for a term of three years and thereafter from year to year, subject to cancellation at any time after three years by 30 days' notice one party to the other. The rental payable is $1,020 per annum with monthly instalments of $85 each. The agreement covers the exclusive operation of the limousine and taxi service at the airport. (c) The initial term of three years expired on March 31, 1964, but in accordance with the agreement it runs from year to year thereafter, but is subject to cancellation at any time on notice. (d) Sealed offers were received from Yellow Cabs (A. Collier) and Ole's Taxi Service (Ole Pedersen). (e) The concession was awarded to Yellow Cabs on the basis that they offered a higher annual payment ($1,020 per annum as against $200 per annum offered by Ole's Taxi Service).

[Mr. Munro.]

3. Yes. (a) Yellow Cabs supplies sufficient number of vehicles to accommodate the traffic at the airport and these vehicles are generally of recent make. The condition of the vehicles and their cleanliness has been rated as fair. Pacific Western Airlines have not had any complaints from their passengers regarding the service but their airport agent occasionally complained about the cleanliness of the cabs. (b) The department has given legal notice under the terms of the agreement requesting immediate action to correct the above deficiencies and to bring the operation up to the standard required by the department. The department is now awaiting a further report from the regional official.

LOGGING OPERATIONS, FUNDY NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 1,293—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Is it proposed to permit logging operations to be conducted in Fundy national park in the near future (i.e. within the next 12 months) and, if so, will all saw mill operators in south eastern New Brunswick be given an opportunity to bid for this privilege by competitive notice of tender?
2. Have any cutting rights been authorized in Fundy national park from its inception to date?

Mr. Laing: 1. No.

2. From time to time permits have been issued to individuals living near the park for small quantities of dead or diseased timber for their own use, usually as firewood. No commercial cutting of timber has ever been authorized.

GROUNDING OF VESSEL, PUGWASH, N.S.

Question No. 1,295—Mr. Coates:

Was the inexperience of the pilot in any way responsible for the recent grounding of the vessel in Pugwash habour and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. Pickersgill: No. The master of the vessel absolved the pilot from all blame.

HALIFAX SHIPYARDS LTD.

Question No. 1,306—Mr. MacEwan:

In regard to question 1,241, what type of work was carried out by Halifax Shipyards Limited in the case of each item and also on what ships was the work completed?

Mr. Drury: In so far as the Department of Defence Production is concerned: The work carried out by Halifax Shipyards and name of the ship on which the work was completed in regard to each item included in reply to question 1,241 is as follows:

Ship	Nature of Work	Amount
New Waterford (frigate 304)	Emergency	$15,023
Algonquin (destroyer escort 224)	Emergency	16,852
St. Charles (ocean going tug)	Emergency	9,201

B.A. Peerless (tanker, ocean going)	Degaussing repairs	4,817
Qu'Appelle (destroyer escort 264)	Emergency	12,650
Alcide (submarine)	Emergency	10,305
Imperial Sarnia (ocean going tanker)	Degaussing repairs	7,494
YBE494 (calibration barge)	Docking, refit	24,846
Yukon (destroyer escort 263)	Emergency	18,648
Chaudière (destroyer escort 235)	Docking, refit	80,000
Chaudière (destroyer escort 235)	Emergency	6,310

FLYING OF ROYAL UNION FLAG ON CANADIAN EMBASSIES

Question No. 1,310—Mr. Marcoux:

Will our ambassadors, as representatives of the Queen of Canada, fly the royal union flag on Canadian embassies throughout the world?

Mr. Davis: Canadian embassies now fly the red ensign. If resolution No. 44 now before the house is carried, steps will be taken to establish officially the flag that is clearly described as being the intended "flag of Canada". Once it is so established, Canadian embassies, high commissioners' offices, and all other Canadian offices throughout the world will fly that flag.

STUDY OF ATLANTIC SALMON

Question No. 1,311—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton):

Has the government received a request from the New Brunswick fish and game protective association to have a study made by a competent authority relative to the Atlantic salmon before the Mactaquac development is undertaken?

Answer: No letter located.

NEW BRUNSWICK—EFFECT OF DAM CONSTRUCTION ON SALMON PROPAGATION

Question No. 1,313—Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton):

1. Has the Department of Fisheries made close studies of the effect of the proposed Mactaquac hydro project on the future propagation of salmon in the Saint John river and its tributaries?

2. Have suggestions been made relative to spawning grounds and, if so, is any information available relative to the cost?

3. What is the opinion of the Department of Fisheries concerning the effect of the proposed Mactaquac dam on the salmon fishing in the Saint John river and tributaries thereof?

Answer: 1. Yes. Studies of the lower tributaries are being confirmed.

2. Proposals have been developed and negotiations with N.B. Electric Power Commission are in progress.

3. Department is hopeful that a plan now being considered will be capable of maintaining a salmon run to the Saint John river.

*STATUS OF QUEBEC DELEGATE GENERAL IN PARIS

Question No. 1,337—Mr. Choquette:

Has the government of the province of Quebec asked the federal government to seek, for its delegate general in Paris, status similar to that enjoyed by its agent general in London and, if so, what are the problems involved in this project?

[Translation]

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the reply to the question is as follows:

Since the opening of the Quebec delegation in Paris we have had consultations with the delegate general and the French government for the purpose of securing the privileges required for the efficient operation of the delegation.

We have found out that the relevant French regulations do not permit the granting to the delegation of a status exactly equal to that given by the British government to the agents general of the provinces posted in London. This is an administrative problem which the French government is considering at present and we trust that a solution will be found before long.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 132 is accepted. I ask that notices of motions Nos. 133, 134, 135 and 136 be allowed to stand, in the absence of the hon. members who propose to make those motions. Would Your Honour now call notice of motion No. 123.

SECURITY PROCEDURES AND INVESTIGATIONS

Motion No. 123—Mr. Knowles (for Mr. Orlikow):

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all government statements and directives to government departments during the past year regarding security procedures and investigations.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, there has only been one directive to government departments during the past year regarding security procedures and investigations, which adhered to the policies and procedures explained by myself and the then minister of justice on October 25. To table the directive in detail would, however, make public certain details prejudicial to national security. I therefore must, with great regret, decline to accept the motion as not being in the public interest, and in view of that fact I would hope the hon. member might be prepared to withdraw the motion.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, may I say that the hon. member for Winnipeg North, who is unavoidably absent today, informed me yesterday that he had been told, and it was quite proper for him to be told, that the answer would be of the nature that has just been indicated by the Prime Minister. The hon. member for Winnipeg North therefore asked me on his behalf to request that this motion be transferred to notices of motions, papers, for debate on a Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: The motion is transferred for debate.

DETENTION OF UNITED KINGDOM VISITORS AT WINNIPEG AIRPORT

Motion No. 132—Mr. Baldwin:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of all letters and communications regarding Mrs. Elizabeth McGarvie and Miss Joyce McGarvie who, as visitors from the United Kingdom were detained by officials of the department of immigration at the Winnipeg international airport on April 3rd, 1964.

Motion agreed to.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NORTH BAY, ONT.—REMOVAL OF AIR FORCE PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence and ask him whether the order given some time ago regarding the removal from the air force base at North Bay of some 200 married servicemen and their families, and I think over 100 single men, has been altered or revoked in any way in the last few days.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker; there has been no decision taken in the past few days that was not decided some time ago.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was there a communication received by the Prime Minister on Friday last asking him or his executive assistant whether there had been a change in connection with the order, and was the answer that the department or the minister was not able to provide the information but that it could be secured from Mr. Keith Davey?

Mr. Cardin: No, Mr. Speaker. I was asked on Friday last whether there had been any changes in so far as the squadron of Voodoos in North Bay was concerned. It was decided that the Voodoos would be withdrawn from North Bay toward the end of the summer. I was asked whether there would be any replacement, and to that I answered no. I was also asked to give information as to what number of personnel were involved in the withdrawal of the Voodoos, and I ascertained that it was about 250. As a supplementary question I was asked what had been the increase in personnel in that area since the manning of the Bomarc, or the arming of the Bomarc, was undertaken, and the manning of the SAGE installation there, and I answered that it was over 300.

MEETING OF JOINT U.S.-CANADIAN MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. A dispatch from Washington states that there are secret discussions to be held tomorrow in Washington between ministers of the Canadian and United States governments to discuss the use of nuclear weapons during an emergency. I want to ask the Prime Minister if such a meeting is being held; if so, who will represent Canada at this meeting, and what is the nature of the discussions?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there is to be a meeting tomorrow. It is a regular meeting of the ministerial defence committee of Canada and the United States such as has been held in the past. The Canadian government will be represented by the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Defence Production, the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I ask the Prime Minister whether two of the items on the agenda are the revision of the provisions whereby the United States may obtain permission to fly nuclear aircraft over Canada, and discussions to work out communication procedures for the firing of United States nuclear warheads on Canadian territory?

Mr. Pearson: Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is not possible to give the subjects on the agenda of a meeting of this kind without the agreement of both governments. But I can say—in fact I must say, in view of the fact that the hon. gentleman has mentioned them—that those two subjects are not on the agenda.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the Prime Minister's previous statements with respect to nuclear weapons, will the question of the gradual withdrawal of Canada from the nuclear field also be discussed?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, all questions of mutual interest in the defence field will, I am sure, come up for discussion. I do not think that particular matter is mentioned.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question. May I ask the Prime Minister whether he could give the house the assurance that there will be no extension of Canada's nuclear role as a result of these discussions, without submitting the matter to parliament?

Mr. Pearson: I certainly can give that assurance, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister, one which I cannot place on the order paper, sir. In view of the statement of the Prime Minister today about a meeting on defence to be held in Washington, which will be attended by the Minister of National Defence, Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Defence Production, is the Prime Minister in a position to inform this house whether those ministers have been advised in their discussions to fulfil the Prime Minister's promise to negotiate Canada out of a nuclear role?

Mr. Pearson: Undoubtedly they will be informed of recent developments in Canada's defence policy.

Mr. Winch: My question was, is there any discussion to be held concerning the fulfilment of the Prime Minister's promise, now over two years old, to negotiate Canada out of a nuclear role?

Mr. Pearson: The Minister of National Defence made quite clear the development of our defence policy and the direction in which it is leading. If that is not already clear to the United States government, it will be made so tomorrow.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

HUNGARY—REPORTED ARREST OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is intended for the Secretary of State for External Affairs but in his absence perhaps I can address it to his parliamentary secretary. What steps are being taken to assist a Canadian citizen by the name of Christian Reuter, who is reported to have been arrested and held by the Hungarian authorities? This matter takes on particular significance since only in the last few days it has been announced that diplomatic relations have been established between the two countries.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have some information on that matter, and perhaps my hon. friend would permit me to answer for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Christian Reuter's plight, I am informed, was reported last week by the Canadian embassy in Vienna. There is no Canadian representative in Budapest; therefore the British embassy there kindly consented to act on our behalf. Accordingly the British consul applied to the Hungarian authorities seeking the right of consular access to Mr. Reuter in order that the circumstances of his arrest might be established, his treatment investigated and his rights as a Canadian citizen upheld. Up to this moment the British consul has not yet been granted consular access, and it is therefore not possible to provide the house with the official facts concerning Mr. Reuter's arrest, detention and the nature of the charge. I can assure the house and the hon. member that every effort is being made on his behalf.

Inquiries of the Ministry

HEALTH AND WELFARE

POLICY DECISIONS RESPECTING REPORT OF ROYAL COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, before directing my question to the right hon. Prime Minister, I wish to take this opportunity, as an English speaking member representing a riding which is 70 per cent French Canadian, to congratulate and offer my best wishes to my fellow citizens, not only those inhabiting the beautiful province of Quebec, but living in every part of Canada, who are celebrating today their national feast day, the feast of St. John the Baptist.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Speaker, while the right hon. Prime Minister has stated that the federal government will very carefully study the Hall commission report on health services before meeting with the provinces, is it the intention of the government to make public any policy decisions relating to this royal commission on health services before meeting with the provinces?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be unwise to make public any policy decisions on behalf of the federal government until we have had an opportunity to discuss the matter with the provinces.

SHIPPING

MONTREAL—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN STUDY OF WATER LEVEL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. H. Aiken (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising from the agenda for the water level seminar to be held in Montreal on Monday next at which the Minister of Transport and the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources will be addressing the conference. Will these hon. gentlemen be making some announcement in connection with water level policy on behalf of the government?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I cannot answer that question, Mr. Speaker. The matter will be discussed in cabinet tomorrow.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Aiken: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Apart from this conference may we expect soon some announcement on water level policy?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I hope we will soon be able to have another announcement.

FINANCE

TARIFF CONCESSIONS TO FOREIGN AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Finance a question of which I sent him notice.

Could the minister inform the house of the tariff concessions which were offered to the French firms, Peugeot and Renault, if they choose to open plants in Quebec?

[Text]

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my hon. friend would not expect me to announce government policy on this or any other subject on the orders of the day. Before the government could reach a decision on this matter it would have to have all the facts respecting the plans and proposals of the two companies in question.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry?

Could he tell us whether he has met or been in touch with representatives of the French firms Peugeot and Renault concerning tariff concessions?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I did not quite catch the question. Is it asked whether I received a communication from the company? Well, the answer is no.

Mr. Pigeon: Has the minister been in touch with those firms?

Mr. Drury: The answer is no.

[Text]

LABOUR CONDITIONS

BANCROFT, ONT.—REQUEST FOR DESIGNATION AS LABOUR SURPLUS AREA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Has the minister had an opportunity yet to consider the request made by telegram yesterday by the mine and smelter workers of the Bancroft area that the area be designated a labour surplus area thereby qualifying, as Sudbury did, for transportation assistance to workers forced to leave that area to seek employment?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, this matter is under consideration.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Labour tell the house whether, since the winter works period came to an end on April 30, the depressed areas, commonly known as designated areas, have also been abolished?

[Text]

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Labour. Can the minister tell the house whether the Thetford Mines area, where 600 men will be laid off, is still considered as a designated area, since there is some doubt in this connection as a result of the visit of the Quebec minister of natural resources, Mr. René Lévesque, in that area last week?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I really do not quite get the import of the question. Perhaps the hon. member would put it on the order paper.

[Later:]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I would like to rephrase a question I put to the Minister of Labour a few minutes ago. Is the minister willing to express to the house the fact that the Thetford Mines region is still a designated area for the coming year?

Mr. MacEachen: There has been no change in the areas that were designated last fall. The areas designated then are still designated. It is expected that the system will be reviewed this fall, and perhaps changes may be made at that time.

Mr. Langlois: In view of the fact that this area is faced with the closing of mines, and that some companies are interested in establishing in it this summer and are waiting for this answer, could the minister possibly let it be known as soon as possible so that they can establish industries there this summer, thus helping to combat unemployment in that region?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I do not just understand the import of my hon. friend's question. If this particular area is presently designated, or has been designated, then there will be no change, and whatever benefits are available now will be available in the course of the summer.

TRANSPORT

APPOINTMENT OF DIRECTOR OF METEOROLOGICAL SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport but possibly his parliamentary secretary can take it as notice. In view of the fact that Dr. How has resigned as director of the meteorological service and that an appeal has been lodged against the appointment of Mr. R. Noble as his successor; and in view of the deterioration of our image in this field at international meetings as a result of appointing a director to this position with no scientific reputation, will the minister give consideration to requesting the civil service commission to initiate a new competition for this position at the earliest date possible?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It does strike me that this question, while very important, could nevertheless go on the order paper.

Mr. Coates: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I am quite agreeable to doing that if there is any possibility of getting any kind of answer in a reasonable time, but I have had a question on the order paper since May 1 and I have not had a reply yet.

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the difficulty with the question is that it is not in proper order. It contains several allegations, and does not ask merely for information.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

CONSIDERATION BY DIRECTORS OF SHOWING OF FILM ON PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State.

If he cannot answer it today he might obtain an answer for the edification of members of the house concurrently with or before the announcement in the house tomorrow of the decision of the C.B.C. on the showing of the film "Mr. Pearson". Before arriving at their decision not to show the film, "Mr. Pearson", did the corporation refer the matter to the board of directors for a decision?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I do not think so, Mr. Speaker. The first decision was taken on the basis of program standards which have been applied by the corporation.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Secretary of State inform the house whether the same body, the program standards division, will be making the decision which will be announced tomorrow?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, as I said last Monday when I gave my answer to the Leader of the Opposition, the management of the corporation has submitted this question to the board of directors.

OMISSION FROM NEWS BULLETIN OF REFERENCE TO HOUSE DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): I have a question for the Secretary of State concerning the C.B.C. Will the minister inform the house whether there was any action taken by the minister or any member of the government to suppress from the C.B.C.-T.V. national news bulletin last night any reference to yesterday's debate concerning the C.B.C. film "Mr. Pearson"?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I certainly did not communicate in any way with the C.B.C. on this matter.

Mr. Slogan: I should like to ask the minister if, as a matter of information to the members of the house, he would inquire from the C.B.C. and inform the house tomorrow whether any official from the C.B.C. edited out any reference to yesterday's debate. Also will he inform the house as to what percentage of domestic national news compared with foreign news appeared on the C.B.C. national news last night?

Mr. Lamontagne: I will, Mr. Speaker.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

REPAIR AND OVERHAUL WORK ON ARGUS AIRCRAFT BY FAIREY AVIATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Is he yet in a position to make a statement as to whether the Argus aircraft repair and overhaul work done at Fairey Aviation will be continued beyond the expiry date which otherwise will come fairly soon?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, this important problem is under active consideration at the present time but no decision has been reached yet.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will there be a decision and an announcement before the end of this month, in view of the current expiry date?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not think there is a current expiry date, but I should like to reassure the hon. member that we are working as hard and as rapidly as possible to reach a decision.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

RESOURCE MINISTERS COUNCIL—LACK OF INFORMATION TO PRESS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister comment on the recent meeting of the resource ministers council in Charlottetown, particularly in the light of the comments by Mr. Hennessy over the C.B.C. today which indicated that the conference was somewhat less than cordial?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. While this is no doubt very interesting, we only have a half hour today and I wonder if the hon. member would not put his question on the order paper. I am sure he would get a detailed reply.

Mr. Dinsdale: With due deference, Mr. Speaker, I think it is rather important that the spirit of co-operation that existed in the past in this council continue. Perhaps the minister could answer this question. Can he comment on the charge made by Mr. Hennessy that there was a lack of information provided to the press from the conference?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I do not know whether the instructions given the Chair by the house itself, namely that questions should not inquire whether statements made in newspapers are correct, would include radio. I assume that would be the legal interpretation; therefore the question is out of order.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NORTHLAND NAVIGATION LIMITED—SIGNING OF CONTRACT WITH S.I.U.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour if he is aware that a situation is developing on the west coast that is potentially far worse than that of the seaway problem. Picket lines are being established. This results from the fact that the trustees, in collusion with others, have allowed engineers from Montreal to go to the west coast, despite the fact there are men available on the west coast. This is in conflict with the engineers and the C.M.S. guild.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): I am aware of the situation which exists on the west coast. Whether it involves all the ramifications described by my hon. friend is something I am not prepared to admit.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the minister take into consideration the implications I have outlined in my question and take a serious look at the problem? Would he also consider the fact that Mr. Cunningham, a former west coast S.I.U. boss, is now the management consultant for the steamship line involved. This again seems to be with the blessing of the trustees, who are apparently working in collusion with others to the detriment of shipping in Canada.

FLOODS

WATERTON LAKES PARK—STEPS TO ALLEVIATE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): I have a question for the minister of northern affairs. I should like to ask him if he is now in a position to answer a question I asked on June 10, that is what aid will be given to those suffering from the recent flood disaster in Waterton lakes national park?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): We have not yet assessed the full damage that was done. We have had some representations made by some of the lessees there, but no action has been taken to date.

Mr. Gundlock: May I ask a supplementary question. May I ask the minister if he is aware that even as late as last night the C.B.C. news carried pictures showing the flood in this area, which is actually not a fact? This is adverse publicity and is almost as bad as the disaster itself. I wonder if the minister could, publicly or in some way, inform the nation that this is not the case?

Mr. Laing: Yes, I understand that the portrayal last night by the C.B.C. was about a week late. This is most unfortunate. I am informed that over 90 per cent of the facilities for the public are available for public use. A statement has been made by our regional director in Calgary that this is the situation. We have had the utmost co-operation from the newspapers in the district and from radio stations in making the facts known. There have been a few cancellations, but we realize that probably the cancellations that have taken place were from the other side of the line where Glacier park, it would appear, suffered much higher damage than did Waterton. We are back in business at Waterton again.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): While the minister was absent I asked the Prime Minister a question concerning floods in the Yukon. I wonder if the minister would refer to this question and give a statement to the house tomorrow?

Mr. Laing: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): Is the minister of northern affairs in a position to give us a statement on the flood disaster situation at Stand Off, Glenwoodville and Cardston, or does his jurisdiction extend to that situation? Has the minister who is in charge been co-operating with him in taking care of it?

PROCEDURE

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE RECOMMENDATION ON LIMITATION OF DEBATE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): I have a question for the Minister of Justice which is based on what he said on Friday in answer to a question of mine about a matter that some members are beginning to think is becoming very urgent, namely that he would inquire how soon the committee on procedure and organization expects to report an acceptable recommendation on limiting debate in this house?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I have not had a report on that yet.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

TRAIL, B.C.—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO OVERTIME MAIL DELIVERY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Postmaster General on a matter I brought to his attention yesterday inside and outside the house. Has the minister any information to give the house with respect to his inquiries concerning an unconventional special delivery of mail in Trail, undertaken at the request of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company Limited on the evening prior to a vote of the employees on an arbitration award?

Mr. Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member put this on the order paper.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter of national significance. It involves a principle.

Mr. Speaker: I have not the slightest doubt that every question asked in the house is of national significance.

Mr. Herridge: I should like to bring the matter to the attention of the house at ten o'clock.

[Later:]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I desire to direct a question to the Postmaster General which I believe must be answered now. Is the Postmaster General in a position to tell the house whether it is correct that in the past few days, and without his authority, a postmaster has delivered 3,000 letters without special delivery stamps and not within the general postal delivery time?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me this is the same question but in another form. Would the hon. member put this on the order paper.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, this is something which is of the utmost importance, because as I understand the situation it involves a breakdown of the authority of parliament with regard to what must be done in the delivery of letters. Is the Postmaster General in a position to answer this question?

Mr. Speaker: Whether he is in a position or not, I suggested that the hon. member put this on the order paper, and I think that judgment should stand.

DENIAL OF INFORMATION RESPECTING TENDERS AND CONTRACTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Postmaster General and ask him why I have been denied today the information in respect to the calling of tenders and the renewal of contracts in the Post Office Department in the riding of Hastings-Frontenac?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thought the letter I wrote the hon. member yesterday covered the situation. In it I said:

> I appreciate the reasons behind your request and much as I would like to assist in this matter, you will realize that it has not been the policy of my predecessors to follow the requested course of action.

That is, under this or former governments.

> The fact that there is no precedent is not in itself justification for non-compliance with your request.
> I have looked into the matter fully and I find that, in order to supply the required information, we would have to add considerably to the administrative and clerical routines of the department. This in turn means setting up involved procedures to operate as a general practice. In view of the increase in work, I am loath to start an arrangement with you which could not be extended to your confrères in the House of Commons.

I thought this would have satisfied my hon. friend when I added:

> While I cannot accede to your request for general information, I can assure you that the department will be pleased to furnish specific information about any particular case you may wish to inquire about.

Mr. Webb: As a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, as the Postmaster General is a new postmaster general and he may not be aware of this, I would say to him—

Mr. Speaker: Question, please.

Mr. Webb: —that this information is supplied to the defeated Liberal candidate in my riding. All it would involve now is another carbon copy which could be posted free, and then I—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Webb: —would get the same information.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend really wants this information he can put a notice of motion for the production of documents on the order paper, but it would take time and expense to produce them. If he wants some rambling information it is going to take some weeks to prepare it.

Mr. Webb: I was of course suggesting it would be more economical if he put in another carbon copy—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Webb: —and I could get the information that way.

Mr. Speaker: The time for questions under our standing orders has elapsed.

Mr. MacInnis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the hon. member for Cape Breton South did not hear me. The time for questions on Wednesdays is one half hour and the time has expired, so orders of the day were called. That is what we are doing at the moment.

GRAIN

COMMITTEE CONSIDERATION OF PRICES PAID BY LIVESTOCK FEEDERS

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry) moved:

That the standing committee on agriculture and colonization be empowered to examine and inquire forthwith into all matters arising out of and relating to the difference between the prices received for feed grain by the producers in the prairie provinces of Canada and the price paid by livestock feeders in eastern Canada and British Columbia, and that the evidence adduced before this committee in the twenty sixth parliament be referred to the committee, and that the committee have leave to receive such evidence as part of the said examination.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Tuesday, June 23, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. McIlraith—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $469,308,421.26, being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of all of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $329,299,209.25;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amount of agriculture item 5, privy council item 25 (schedule A) of the main estimates, $2,259,116.67;

(c) four twelfths of the total of all of the items in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $134,897,245.34;

(d) an additional seven twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L37a (schedule B) of the supplementary estimates (A), $2,625,000.00;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L12a (schedule C), of the supplementary estimates (A), $227,850, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

The Chairman: Order. Perhaps the committee would expect the chairman at this time to express an opinion or render a judgment in connection with the very important point of order which was raised by the Secretary of State for External Affairs shortly before we adjourned last evening. The minister at that time took exception to and requested a ruling from the Chair concerning certain expressions used by the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Yukon.

The minister said, as reported at page 4644 of yesterday's Hansard:

—the hon. gentleman cannot under the rules of this house be allowed to go unchallenged when he suggests that the Prime Minister has misinformed this house—

And later, as recorded at page 4645 of Hansard the minister said:

I ask you, sir, to ask the hon. gentleman who spoke just before the hon. member for Yukon to withdraw what he said about the statement made by the Prime Minister, and the hon. member for Yukon a moment ago has violated our rules when he referred to statements made by the Prime Minister as lies.

Referring first to the words used by the hon. member for Bow River, these words are reported at page 4644 of yesterday's Hansard. The hon. member said:

None of us saw him rise in his place, Mr. Chairman, to answer the charge that he had misinformed the house.

These are the words to which the minister took exception, and I must say in my opinion the suggestion that there is misinforming of the house is not unparliamentary. I believe this statement or this phrase would have to be coupled with the suggestion that the misinforming was deliberate and voluntary to make it a breach of the privileges of the house and to make the phrase unparliamentary. This is my ruling in connection with that point.

Now, I would like to refer to the other matter referred to in the point of order raised by the minister. This has reference to the statements made by the hon. member for Yukon, and these are reported at page 4645 of yesterday's Hansard where the hon. member for Yukon said:

> I said, sir, concerning those words quoted, that they were lies and I maintain they were lies—

I am sure the hon. member will agree with me that those words constituted rather strong language and my impression, knowing the hon. gentleman, was that perhaps they were uttered in the heat of debate and went beyond his thoughts. I would ask the hon. member if he would, perhaps, rephrase the statement he has made in order to facilitate the position of the Chair.

Mr. Nielsen: I want to be as co-operative as possible in all the circumstances. I think it would be rather difficult to rephrase, as Your Honour has suggested, the words I used last night. But before entering upon the merits of the point raised by Your Honour I wish to draw your attention to a point of order which the Chair may have overlooked and which may have been overlooked also by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

If Your Honour would refer to page 121 of Beauchesne's fourth edition, 1958, and page 120, citation 138(2) you will see there is a specific procedure set out which must be adopted in committee and by the Speaker of the house in order to set the wheels in motion, should there be any question of enforcing an order which might be made by Your Honour or by Mr. Speaker. This procedure is also set out in May's Parliamentary Practice, sixteenth edition, commencing at page 468. The substance of these rules—I do not intend to go into detail now, but if the matter is pursued I should like to reserve the right to deal with it in more detail—the substance appears to be, according to May at page 473, that the matter must be raised at once, and if the house is in committee a specific procedure is laid down whereby the Chairman reports to the Speaker, and thus begins the chain of procedure which must then be followed. I raise this point now because I feel the point of order takes precedence over the suggestion made by Your Honour that the words I made last night should be altered in any way at all.

In brief, my statement at this time is that the matter must be dealt with at once and, therefore, that there is no jurisdiction resting with Your Honour or with Mr. Speaker to deal with it now at all.

The Chairman: I do not wish to argue with the hon. member but he must realize that when we had to adjourn at ten o'clock the matter was then under consideration, and we are now continuing the consideration of the matter which was under way at that time. It is true that an objection must be made immediately if any member objects to words uttered by hon. members in committee, in the same way as objection must be taken in the house. But this, to my mind, is exactly what the minister did. These words were uttered as reported at page 4645 by the hon. member for Yukon. He said he had uttered those words, and he repeated them. He said: "I maintain they were lies". This is the moment when the Secretary of State for External Affairs raised the point, and I do not agree with the suggestion made by the hon. member for Yukon that it was too late then, or that it is too late now, to pursue the matter.

On this particular question of procedure I must rule against the hon. member and I again ask him to give serious thought to withdrawing the words he used.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, I only wish at this time, before the procedure develops further, to refer Your Honour to page 4630 of Hansard where, in the right hand column, in addition to the words quoted subsequently by Your Honour from Hansard, I said, as reported: "I am not going to say that the Prime Minister lied."

The Chairman: I do not wish to put the hon. member in a difficult position, but he has just confirmed what I said. When he made that statement as reported at page 4630 he could not be called to order because he did not make a statement that these were lies. But he did make a statement, as reported at page 4645, and these were his words—unless they were incorrectly reported in Hansard and, if they were, now is the time to make the correction; he used the words: "I maintain they were lies". Perhaps the hon. member would like to tell us that he was wrong when he said what was reported at page 4645, and that what he really believes is what he said as recorded on page 4630 of Hansard.

Mr. Nielsen: I can only repeat that as reported at page 4630 of Hansard, I said: "I am not going to say that the Prime Minister lied". But when we read page 3429 of Hansard we find the following answer given by the Prime Minister to a question: "We do not censor films on this side of the house". I say, sir, that that is a lie, because that is precisely what happened. I would point out, too, that at page 3430 of Hansard we find a reply by the Prime Minister which is reported as follows:

> The circumstances were perfectly proper. The initiative was taken by the producer of the film, and no question of censorship arises.

I also say that that statement is a lie. I went on to say, as reported at the page Your Honour has mentioned, page 4645—to quote the words in their full context:

> If the minister will stop his attempts at closure I will complete my point of order. I said, sir, concerning those words I quoted, that they were lies and I maintain that they were lies.

That, in my humble opinion, sir, is my view of the matter. There was a question of censorship involved. That is what the whole debate is about, and this question of censorship has been under debate now for two days, as well as during several question periods; it concerns the statement by the Prime Minister that there was no censorship on that side of the house. This whole debate revolves around the matter of government censorship and, in my humble view, the statement that there is no censorship involved in this question is as I described it.

Mr. Pearson: I suggest we accept the hon. gentleman's explanation as satisfactory and sufficient.

An hon. Member: No martyrs today.

The Chairman: Of course, the matter rests with the committee, and if the Prime Minister, who is actually the person concerned, accepts the words which have just been spoken by the hon. member for Yukon I have no further quarrel and I will recognize the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps, Mr. Chairman, I might—

Mr. Diefenbaker: My hon. friend from Bow River had the floor. Ordinarily, I do not raise these matters, but it seems to me—

The Chairman: That is correct. The hon. member for Bow River had the floor last night and should be allowed to conclude his remarks.

Mr. Woolliams: I shall be very brief. I began to answer an attack upon me with reference to remarks I made earlier in the evening; I felt duty bound to answer those remarks.

In brief, I was accused of making a vicious attack upon the Prime Minister. This was said by the hon. member for Verdun. I was accused of making an unwarranted attack upon him. I was accused of making a premeditated attack upon him. If to point out to members of this house and to the country facts in absolute contradiction to the statements of the Prime Minister—if that is what the hon. member means by "vicious", then I am guilty. If it is unwarranted for me to dare to bring forward definite, concise contradictions made by the Prime Minister of this country when we on this side of the house are seeking information—if that is what the hon. member for Verdun meant by "unwarranted", I am guilty. If, in the words of the hon. member for Verdun, I have prostituted my ability clearly to bring before the house the facts relating to the C.B.C. and to other matters, but particularly relating to the C.B.C. to keep it independent politically, to keep it free from bias and to keep it out of the field of politics—and I did this with all the ability I can command—if that is what he means by that statement, then I am guilty. I say I am guilty because it is my responsibility to the people I represent, as it is also the responsibility of us all to the people of the nation and to parliament, to bring these facts carefully before parliament in relation to any other member, particularly in relation to the Prime Minister of this country. If by a "premeditated attack" the hon. member meant that I had done some research, read through Hansard and picked out those absolute contradictions, if that is the charge he makes against me, then I am guilty.

However, if the charge he made against me, which I say he failed to prove, was that I took out of context statements in Hansard or statements made in the debate itself, then I am innocent. I have appeared, and I say this with modesty, in every court in Canada, including this court, which is the highest court in the land, and I have never been accused of taking anything out of context, either unintentionally, as in the argument I produced yesterday, or intentionally. In that regard I say I am innocent. No words that Mr. Kent or anyone else wishes to place in the hands of the hon. member will create such fear that I will shirk my responsibility first to my constituency, then to the nation and to every hon. member in this house. Good or bad press is immaterial when one is dealing with the facts in this house. The facts must be known.

The hon. member for Verdun, speaking for the cabinet as their agent—and he admitted that to me very frankly—stated that in this day and age people of the stature of the Prime Minister of Canada should never be subjected to that kind of attack. I say through you, Mr. Chairman, to the hon. member who does not appear to be in the committee this afternoon—

An hon. Member: Yes he is.

Mr. Woolliams: I am sorry; I did not see him. I would say to him this, that I intend, and I accept this as my responsibility, to bring these facts before the house. But if he thinks that this kind of attack was a vicious attack or was an unwarranted attack I should like to call a very good witness before the bar of the House of Commons. This witness of whom I speak gave on September 18, 1962, the evidence I will produce. If that distinguished member used the kind of language he used at that time with reference to another prime minister, I would have thought that the hon. member for Verdun should carefully analyse his remarks when he charges that I made an unwarranted attack on the Prime Minister.

It seems very strange, Mr. Chairman, that these men who now sit on the cabinet benches and who used to sit on this side in the past could make the kind of personal attacks that they did make in the past, and it would be all right. But this is the new era. This is the era of 60 days; this is the era of decision. And what decision. Today, because they sit on that side of the house, if people bring forward the facts in parliament for the people of Canada to read and appreciate, this is unwarranted and vicious.

Now let us see what this distinguished witness said on this former occasion. I observe some hon. members on the other side of the house are starting to wriggle because they do not know which witness I am going to call to the bar of this house. This witness can be corroborated in this kind of conduct by many who now sit in high places. This speech was made on September 18, 1962 by the present Prime Minister in Toronto when he was addressing the district Liberal members of parliament in the Royal York hotel. In these references he was referring to the present Leader of the Opposition. So that we get the atmosphere of this speech, it was made after the 1962 election, after the charge by the Liberals, who were then in opposition, with reference to the financial situation—and I see the minister of health trying to say something. Anyway, I could bring her in as a good witness if she wants.

In this speech these are some of the things the present Prime Minister said against the then prime minister. At that time no one now on that side said it was unwarranted, no one said it was vicious. Oh no—it was good for the country, because hon. members opposite were hungry for power. First of all the right hon. gentleman was very mild in tone. He said it was an "incredible effrontery," referring to the then prime minister. Then in dealing with the financial problem which arose during the election and the explanation given by the then prime minister, the present Leader of the Opposition, he said it was "gross and unpardonable deceit", still referring to the then prime minister. Then he referred to another man who was recently expelled from this house because he dared stand up in his place and bring certain facts before the house. This is what he said of him on that occasion, that "he still kept up the deceit". That is referring to the hon. member for Qu'Appelle.

On the second page of his speech the Prime Minister said this about the then prime minister:

> The prime minister, after the election was over, did not try any longer to conceal the facts.

In other words, the present Prime Minister charged the then prime minister, now the Leader of the Opposition, with concealing facts. If I were to use that kind of language this afternoon, or if I had used that kind of language yesterday, I would be called to order. The Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is not here this afternoon, would have risen from his seat. Today he is out of the atmosphere of politics; but yesterday he would have said that it was terrible for anyone to use that kind of language. And particularly so, said the hon. member for Verdun, against the Prime Minister of the country. I say with the greatest respect to the Prime Minister, to his person and to his position that in the House of Commons in debate we recognize the Prime Minister as the leader of the country and the leader of the house. But, as the former president of the United States, Harry Truman, said, if in debate you cannot stand the heat, stay out of the kitchen.

Mr. Churchill: He stayed out last night.

Mr. Woolliams: I will now move on to page 3 of this speech. He said that it was a "farcical explanation" and that there was "contempt of parliament". Then he went on to say that the former prime minister was—> —the man who cannot make a speech without boasting how he has restored the rights of parliament.

Then he referred to all of the Conservative cabinet and put them in the same category, every one of them. This is what he said about them. He referred to "the government's stupidity and deceit"—he used the word "deceit". We know, Mr. Chairman, what the word "deceit" means. It means deliberate deception, in this case of the people, the House of Commons and the members of the House of Commons.

I now come back to my original point. When I made my attack yesterday afternoon, which I felt I did with responsibility and justification, the great brains of the Liberal party handed down a speech, which was read here, which said in effect that I had prostituted my ability and that I had made an unwarranted and a vicious attack. Why was that said? It was because the government realized that this attack was justified, and if they could whitewash the news items in the press of this country to make it more mild and palatable the people might accept it and understand.

Miss LaMarsh: Everyone is against you.

Mr. Woolliams: I hear the minister of health saying they are all against me. After seeing certain cartoons which went across the land I do not think she should talk like that.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, on a matter of personal privilege. May I suggest to my hon. friend that if he is desirous of appearing in cartoons I would be pleased to present him to several members of the press gallery.

Mr. Woolliams: I do not want to get into an argument at the moment with the minister of health, but I was thinking about that last cartoon I saw where the present Prime Minister was walking up the staircase with two balls and chains, one representing the minister of health and the other the Minister of Finance. That may have been the reason why when I raised my first question of privilege on this matter, the Prime Minister blushed and looked as red as a beet. If hon. members opposite care to read what the present Prime Minister said in that same speech, they will see that he linked Mr. Diefenbaker with the London Daily Worker; he linked Mr. Diefenbaker with Khrushchev, with regard to the suggestion concerning a world trade conference. In other words, it was fine for the Prime Minister, then the leader of the opposition, to call a then Conservative prime minister deceitful; it was fine for him to link the prime minister with the Daily Worker; it was fine for him to link the then prime minister with Khrushchev—and it was also fine for any man who sat in high places to refer to him as a nazi.

That was the kind of abuse that poured out across this nation for five years. Sometimes we Tories have to take off our coats, because this is an old, Liberal trick, namely that in order to defeat a Conservative government the first thing you do is destroy its leader. They did it to Arthur Meighen; they did it to Bracken; they did it to Drew, and they did it to R. B. Bennett from my own city—and they finally tried to do it to the present Leader of the Opposition. But they have not succeeded.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: So they hired a boy to do a man's job last night, because these people over there on the front benches were not in the chamber at the time. I want to hear from the cabinet on this; I want an explanation of these matters; I want to hear what they have to say.

Mr. Mackasey: On a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Woolliams: We could put on—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Verdun is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Woolliams: Is he rising because he isn't a boy?

Mr. Mackasey: Mr. Chairman, I would accept that description of myself in preference to the one the hon. member used last evening on a question of privilege. I had no intention of interrupting the hon. member, but on several occasions in his speech so far he has emphasized that someone else wrote my speech for me. I know it may be straining the credulity of the hon. member, but I would ask him to accept as a fact that I prepared my own speech, as I have always prepared my speeches, whether they have been ordinary or excellent, in my short political career. Whether the hon. member accepts that fact or not is entirely up to him. While I am on my feet, Mr. Chairman, I may say that I completely accept—I say this in the presence of everybody—the hon. member's admission of guilt as he eloquently expressed it at the beginning of his remarks.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member said he did write that speech, there is one thing we are sure of—that he did read that speech.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Woolliams: Somebody said "shame". Of course it is a shame; it takes up the time of the house and it is so uninteresting.

An hon. Member: Not as uninteresting as your speech.

Mr. Woolliams: Before I leave this matter, Mr. Chairman, I want to put a little more evidence on the record. I wish to read from Hansard of May 21, page 3428. This is in reference to a communication with Her Majesty the Queen with respect to the flag. This is what the Prime Minister said about this particular matter. There are dozens of these cases that I could mention, but I want to put one more on the record:

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps that will explain the inaccuracy of the right hon. gentleman's report.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is the report inaccurate in stating that the Prime Minister said that he had telegraphed the Queen and had advised her that the red ensign would not be our flag?

This is the point:

Mr. Pearson: Yes, it is inaccurate.

Meaning that he had not telegraphed the Queen. A few days passed, not very many; and just so we have the record straight I would point out that this was on Thursday. Then there was Friday, Saturday, Sunday; and on Monday—

Mr. MacEwan: Jack returned.

Mr. Woolliams: Yes, Jack returned. I should now like to read from Hansard of May 25, 1964, page 3533:

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I think I should tell the house that I have, in an informal way, informed the Queen, through her private secretary, of the intentions of the government in this matter, without of course asking for the Queen's advice, which would be unconstitutional. As a matter of courtesy it was surely desirable to let the Queen know what the intentions of the government were in this matter, and that has been done.

An hon. Member: Why didn't you tell the hon. member for Hull (Mr. Caron)?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I do not want the Prime Minister in any way to go into detail, because the Queen would not get any more information than the house has received, I suppose—

Then there is this passage:

—but would the Prime Minister say when it was that he communicated with the secretary of Her Majesty the Queen?

I ask hon. members to keep in mind that the Prime Minister said he had not communicated with Her Majesty the Queen, and to keep in mind that the Prime Minister does not contact the Queen directly.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Woolliams.]

Mr. Woolliams: You can't shout me down now; you can make as much noise as you want. I know you don't like to hear these facts because you feel very uncomfortable; and I know the Prime Minister will be blushing today as he did when he refused to answer the question of privilege.

Mr. Sharp: We would like to have facts, not fiction.

Mr. Woolliams: I never knew the debates in Hansard were fiction, except when the hon. member who has interrupted me is talking.

Mr. Sharp: It is your interpretation that is fiction.

Mr. Woolliams: I will continue reading from Hansard:

Mr. Diefenbaker: —but would the Prime Minister say when it was that he communicated with the secretary of Her Majesty the Queen?

Mr. Pearson: I have not the exact date in my mind, Mr. Speaker.

Not the exact date. Then he said:

The first communication was a good many days ago, and there has been one since that time.

In the house on Thursday the Prime Minister said there was no communication, and on Monday he said there was communication.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Woolliams: My friends say no. We are anxious to hear the explanations of these things.

I now want to turn to one other subject before I sit down, Mr. Chairman. I think it is very important because we do not want to lose the perspective of the debate. First of all, these irregularities and contradictions were pointed out because we have read in the newspapers recently and have heard a lot of talk about the respect for parliament; but if members of the opposition cannot get the information for which they ask, if they cannot get the information without wishy-washy answers or contradictory answers, respect for parliament will go down and down, and not only will we lose our democratic system but we will eventually lose parliament itself.

Let us consider the C.B.C. for a few moments. I need not remind hon. members that the C.B.C. was incorporated as an independent corporation. It is supposed to be independent from political influence; it is supposed to be away from bias. But I say this to the Prime Minister through you, Mr. Chairman, that the way they have conducted this affair over the famous Pearson film raises a great many queries in our minds. It is not the $35,000 the taxpayers have thrown in the wastepaper basket that we are complaining about; but as soon as they get into the realm of communications it is a sad state of affairs, because we know what has happened in other lands when any government has controlled thought by communication.

I say they have politically interfered with the C.B.C. If we could have certain members of the C.B.C. appear before a special committee, when it would not be said that heads would roll in the aisle and they could come here freely, to a free institution and speak for themselves, they would say how many calls they have received from the Prime Minister's office on this and other matters; they would say how much interference there has been from other cabinet members. The C.B.C. was incorporated as an independent body to be a news medium and means of communication across this nation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Woolliams: My good friends clap; they make noises, but their words do not bear out the purpose for which the C.B.C. was incorporated. They have interfered with the C.B.C.; they are guilty of censorship and interference. I still say that I hoped that on the day I raised the question of privilege, yesterday, there would have been a few more cabinet members in the chamber. At one time we were down to eight or nine members on that side. It was a serious charge. I made it with responsibility and I made it because I believed it was my duty to the people of my constituency, the people of the nation and to the members of parliament in this house.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I greatly welcome the opportunity to take part in this discussion and in doing so I do not propose to go back and read the election speeches or post-election speeches of leading members of the opposition. I propose to confine my remarks to what has been happening in the house as appears in Hansard. I have made the same kind of election speech which my hon. friend who has just sat down complains so bitterly about when they are uttered by members on this side of the house, and no doubt in the heat of debate outside the house at political meetings we do say things which we should perhaps regret later. At times we may even accuse members of this house of being more interested in their salary increase than they are in the settling of the flag question.

The hon. member who just sat down once said, and I am sure he regrets this very much, that the Liberal party is a cesspool of civil servants with red friends.

Mr. Woolliams: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. What I did say at the time Hazen Argue, who had said he was a socialist, joined the Liberal party was that birds of a feather flock together and birds of red feathers roost together.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, we have the hon. member's speech, and he also said that. But this is a kind of idle talk. What we want to do is decide in respect of the situation which is now before us on the basis of the facts because the facts, Mr. Chairman, often give a sufficient answer to the product of frenzied imaginations or calculated malevolence.

I am sorry that I was not able to be in the house last night to listen to what was apparently a very interesting evening of debate. In my present office there are certain duties and obligations which keep me out of the house. They entail certain sacrifices and my absence last night was one of those sacrifices. The extent and nature of the sacrifice I will leave to those who were here and were subjected to the debate.

I do not want to spend very much time dealing with the remarks of the hon. member for Bow River, but I want to thank him for his reiterated respect for the office of the prime minister, uttered with a kind of nauseating sanctimoniousness, very often as a prelude, to use his own words, to taking off his coat and destroying the leader. I also want to thank him for his devotion to the standards of parliamentary purity and the dignity and decency of debate. These are things we can all support, however inadequate we may be in our performance.

But I have to refer to what he said because he has demanded my resignation. This is a very serious matter, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nielsen: Let us have it.

Mr. Pearson: He has demanded my resignation, not on the ground that I produced an economic report marked "confidential" with the page marked "confidential" torn off, not on the ground that I introduced into Hansard a forged letter designed to stir up trouble between Canada and the United States. The hon. gentleman, with his passion for the purity of parliament, was strangely silent when these things were done in the House of Commons. But now he thinks I should resign because I got a little mixed up about a meeting—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Oh, you got a little mixed up.

Mr. Pearson: —concerning the Banff games that was held at the winter games in Austria, and perhaps I called a "conference" a "meeting" or something of that kind, that took place in Austria. I may have misled the house in relation to the nature of that meeting at Salzburg and I really do apologize. I should have said Innsbruck. There is another example of misleading the house. I said Salzburg when it was Innsbruck, but I really feel I cannot resign on those grounds.

Far more serious is the use I made or did not make of a letter from 12 intellectuals—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Sneeringly.

Mr. Pearson: —dealing with the flag. The hon. gentleman opposite said I should resign because I misled the house by saying this letter was not signed, when it was signed. That is what he said.

Mr. Woolliams: I wonder whether the Prime Minister would read what I said.

Mr. Pearson: I will deal with that.

Mr. Woolliams: Read it.

Mr. Pearson: I received two letters, one addressed "Dear Mr. Prime Minister" and one addressed "Dear Mr. . .". The "Dear Mr. . ." letter apparently was a kind of form letter reproduction of the first letter which was sent to a great many people, including members of parliament. It was sent to them by one of the 12, if not all 12, before I received the letter which was addressed to me. It had no address on the top and no salutation. I did get one about the same time—a little later, I think, because it was sent special delivery, and it was addressed "Dear Mr. Prime Minister". It had no indication of origin. It had no signature of any kind, except 12 typewritten names—not one signature, just 12 typewritten names, and no indication where I should send an acknowledgement if I desired to send one, as I generally do to my communications. There were just 12 typewritten names. We have to be very careful in receiving letters of this kind without signature, Mr. Chairman, because they might well be forged, and we on this side try to be careful about that sort of thing.

Mr. Churchill: You are still worried about that.

Mr. Pearson: But the hon. member for Bow River has misled the house by stating this letter to me was signed.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. Would the Prime Minister read from Hansard where I said it was signed?

Mr. Pearson: We will find it and I will be glad to read it. Here it is: "A signed communication", he said, "with 12 typewritten names". If the hon. gentleman has misled the house in this regard I hope he will at least resign his seat in accordance with his own precepts of divine and natural justice.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to deal with this question of the film which has got me so much undeserved publicity. If and when it is shown, I think I am now guaranteed the largest audience that any Canadian television performer has had, including the hon. member for Port Arthur. For that, of course, I should be, and indeed I am, grateful. No doubt a decision is now being made by the C.B.C. board of directors as to whether or not I am to get this publicity.

Before I deal with certain aspects of the film, I want to clear up one point, I hope once and for all, although I am not quite sure my ambitions in that regard will be realized. I have been accused, as the leader of the government, of permitting cameramen into a meeting of the cabinet or a meeting of a cabinet committee. I confess, Mr. Speaker, I was very angry and indignant at that charge, even by implication, because that would have been a violation of my oath as a privy councillor. If indeed that had happened, I should resign. But it did not happen and the insinuations and suggestions that it did happen are false, misleading and untrue. There was no filming of a cabinet meeting or any part of a cabinet meeting or any committee of the cabinet. A picture was given to the press—by whom I do not know, presumably it would appear to be Intervideo Productions—of what purported to be a cabinet meeting, and was so described in certain newspapers where that picture appeared.

This picture, Mr. Chairman, was not of the cabinet in session which would, as I have said, have been a violation of our oath as privy councillors. Moreover, this picture did not appear, in fact, in the film as shown to the press, as the hon. member for Port Arthur must have known because he was there, but who did not attempt to clarify the matter when it came up. The picture was in fact, Mr. Chairman, a shot of certain cabinet ministers in the cabinet room before a meeting. What was in the film, as shown to the press, I have ascertained from those who were there, was a discussion in my office with three or four ministers, the sort of thing I have every day and which the producer asked leave to photograph under conditions which I will refer to later. It was not a cabinet committee meeting. A cabinet committee has a formal agenda and formal minutes. What was photographed and included in the film was simply a sort of informal discussion with ministers in my office, such as take place practically every day.

There is of course, Mr. Chairman, no impropriety of any kind in taking a picture of the full cabinet before a meeting of the cabinet, in informal discussion. There is no impropriety in that procedure at any time. I have no doubt that when my right hon. friend the Leader of the Opposition was in office such a picture or pictures may have been taken and displayed in the press, pictures of cabinet ministers in discussion before a cabinet meeting occurred. I have no doubt in the world that that happened. Indeed there is no doubt on the point, so I hope there will not be any allegations of impropriety in using that picture.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a few words about this famous but unseen film, its origin and its present position. I am very glad to have the opportunity of putting these facts on the record. This is the first opportunity I have had because it is not possible to tell the story in answer to questions. There has been no other opportunity. There was no other opportunity until we got into interim supply, and interim supply has been going on for two or three days. Naturally, I wished to hear the allegations and charges made by the other side before I stated what, in fact, had happened. If I had done otherwise, it is quite obvious what would have been the reaction of hon. gentlemen opposite. They would have said that while they were ambitious to get ahead with the flag resolution and the important legislation before this house, I had introduced this question into supply by making the first statement about it; that would have been the charge.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I am not answering statements made in the house by frontbenchers of the opposition. I am dealing with statements made by other members of the official opposition, and with questions that were raised on orders of the day. It is difficult to answer questions on a matter of this kind on orders of the day. If you give a simple, direct answer to the specific question asked, in its limited interpretation, you are accused of not telling the whole story. If you try to tell the whole story, the antecedents, surroundings, and so on, you are accused of trying to mislead the house by a wealth of detail. I have the opportunity now, Mr. Chairman, and I propose to take full advantage of it.

The idea of this film was first suggested to a member of my office in September, 1963, by a telephone call from a producer of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. This telephone call was followed by a letter on September 9. I have a copy of that letter before me dated September 9. It is signed by Mr. Ross McLean, who is a producer for the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and it is addressed to Mr. Richard O'Hagan, office of the Prime Minister, Ottawa, Ontario. This letter says this, he having made the request that we allow this to be done on behalf of the C.B.C.:

> I know that you understand what such a request involves. I won't pretend that a film of this kind can be made without some intrusion into private areas of an individual's life. For a full understanding of the job he performs, we would need to follow him fairly closely over a period of several days. We would want to see him in a variety of official activities, and we would hope as well to see him informally at home and elsewhere.

He made a very strong plea that we allow this film to go on. I mention this because it is important, Mr. Chairman. It shows that the initiative in this matter, and this is important, did not come from anyone connected with my office or with the government; so there was no question of any image making overtures from the government which so upset the former minister of agriculture the other day. He thought we had been going in for image making, and this was the most horrible example he had yet discovered of this process. I welcome his conversion to the iniquities of image making because, in all the long history of political image making in Canada, there is nothing to compare with a trip from Ottawa to Hong Kong at public expense to be photographed signing a treaty with the Chinese communists which had, in fact, been signed two days before. I agree that there was a great deal for him in his position; but image making techniques can go too far. They are rather an unfortunate development on the body politic, and I am very glad indeed that this particular film was initiated by the C.B.C. and not by anyone connected with a government or with a political party.

The C.B.C. spokesmen, Mr. Chairman, stated from the beginning that they were anxious to film—and these are their words—"an intimate, candid, documentary study" of myself and the working of my office. They wanted to film conferences between myself and the ministers, as Mr. Ross McLean mentioned in his letter, and staff meetings, activities at my home and that sort of thing. They said they wanted to break new ground and produce an entirely new kind of t.v. film, and I think they succeeded.

Mr. Diefenbaker: After the clippings were done.

Mr. Pearson: They emphasized that no similar film had ever been attempted by them and that new procedures and new arrangements for review would therefore be necessary in a film of this kind. This was the proposal made by the C.B.C.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I still hesitated. I was conscious that this might be a difficult, indeed an impossible operation, for a government corporation, and I don't mind admitting that I wish my hesitation had been more prolonged and had resulted in a negative decision. But it was emphasized again, to remove this hesitation, that for obvious reasons we would have to have the right, the customary right in pictures of this kind, the right of review of certain material to protect privacy because of the nature of the filming going on, to ensure good taste and the security of private conversations on questions of public policy.

Well, Mr. Chairman, I still had doubts even after these assurances, even after the filming began, so the producer, Mr. Ballentine, sent a letter to me on September 23 to remove these doubts and make it possible for him to go ahead with the production. We had every right to assume that this letter was sent with the knowledge and the approval of the C.B.C., because he was doing the job for them.

This letter is dated September 23, 1963 and it begins, "Dear Mr. Prime Minister" and includes these paragraphs:

> I know that there is much we would like to film that you do not wish in the final documentary and the time you take to consider these requests is valuable. I can see that we are an embarrassment to you when you are with other people. I know of no way to eliminate these and the other problems entirely, but we can keep them to a minimum.

[Mr. Pearson.]

Then he goes on:

—the finished film—

I am quoting from his letter—

Mr. Churchill: Are you going to table it?

Mr. Pearson: I am reading from it.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Table it.

Mr. Pearson: It is not an official document. I take full responsibility for this letter and there is nothing in it I would not be glad to put on the record. I will read the whole letter so far as that is concerned, but I am trying to save the time of the committee so that we can get on with the business of the country, but this is the important part and bears on this matter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a question of order, it will not waste any time of the committee if the right hon. gentleman just tables the letter, which he is required to do. He cannot simply pick out selected portions.

Mr. Pearson: My right hon. friend—

The Chairman: Order please. I understand there is no specific ruling or practice in the house that requires or obligates an hon. member to table a letter, unless it is an official document, although I also understand it is the custom to do so.

Mr. Churchill: On the point of order, surely this is an official document coming from a person employed by a crown corporation. It is not just from an ordinary individual in the country.

The Chairman: It is official in a way, but it is not a state document in that way. It is not an official document.

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am reading parts of this letter—

Mr. Churchill: There is something you want to conceal or you would read the whole of it.

Mr. Pearson: I assure my hon. friend there is nothing I want to conceal and that this is a genuine document signed by the writer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The committee has a right to these documents. The Prime Minister cannot simply place before the committee those portions of them that he desires. This is an official document. It cannot be anything else, and to simply endeavour, by a sneering reference such as he just made, to get around the necessity of producing the letter is simply not in keeping with the dignity of this chamber.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I know my right hon. friend is very suspicious—

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, not suspicious.

Mr. Pearson: And I would hope I would not have to read some personal references to other people in this letter, but I will ask the man who wrote me the letter if I have his permission to put the whole letter on the record. I will be very glad to do so. I am reading portions which have been made public in the public press, to which he cannot obviously object because they deal with the arrangements covering the film. But I will get in touch with him as soon as this day's session is over and ask his permission to table the whole letter.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I don't think he will object.

Mr. Pearson: I would like to observe the ordinary courtesies in this matter, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: We also ask that the ordinary amenities be observed and that the Prime Minister do not hide behind any point of insinuation.

Mr. Pearson: This is a paragraph which has already been referred to in the press and which I should put in, in its textual form, because it is extremely important. It gets to the heart of the arrangements made with regard to the film, and Mr. Ballentine writes as follows:

> The finished film will be yours to judge and approve before it is made public and, thus, will contain nothing to which you object.

Now, that is a perfectly obvious arrangement to make because of the nature of the filming that was going on in my own home and outside the house. Mr. Ballentine further wrote:

> But in this kind of film, candid documentary, we need access to a wealth of material in order to catch the right material. One of the great limitations of the camera is that, unlike a writer, if it isn't present it can never know what happened.

Then he went on and said this:

> We would, however, appreciate being with you during as many private times as you can allow, so that we can begin filming again when you permit.

Because I had for the time being suspended operations.

> In any event, anything we get on film that you have reservations about can be corrected later. The fact that something is filmed does not compromise you or your staff in any way.

It was an effort on his part to remove my feeling that there would be a great deal of personal filming done. Indeed, that was insisted upon by the producer, that I must have some right of review in the interests of public security, and in case any secret conversations on policy were filmed.

Mr. Churchill: What secret conversations could you have as a member of the privy council?

Mr. Pearson: I would be very glad to answer that question. There were conversations in my office with cabinet ministers and we talked about public policy. The cameraman wanted to have a film of this kind of operation going on, and it would be quite improper for a conversation between the Prime Minister and a minister to be filmed if it had dealt with some matter that had not been presented before the House of Commons; and we were anxious to make sure that would not happen in any public production.

Now, the film was subsequently discussed at its various stages, when we discussed it at all, with the C.B.C. and the producer on the basis of this agreement contained in a letter to me by the producer. But it was discussed with a full awareness on our part that there was need to respect the producer's editorial prerogative as well. The problem was to reconcile these two things. There was no transgression of editorial independence by our side and there was no request made either at that time or later by any member of the government or any representative of my office, or of mine, that the film in the form in which it was completed should be shown or not shown publicly. Never at any time was a request made that it be shown or not be shown. I make that statement as a member of this house and as leader of the government, and any insinuations to the contrary are false. And insinuations have been made in this house. Indeed, it has been charged in the house that we stopped the showing of this film. That charge is false.

Mr. Woolliams: Like your other statements.

Mr. Pearson: What did the hon. member say?

Mr. Woolliams: "Like your other statements".

Mr. Pearson: Well, I will leave the hon. member in his gutter where he wallows so readily.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is the second time in a week you have talked about gutters. You must be acquainted with them.

Mr. Pearson: Will the right hon. gentleman contain himself for a few moments and control his impatience. He will have his opportunity to speak and I am sure we will listen with interest to his remarks. In the meantime, let him keep silent.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, this is the second time in a week that the right hon. gentleman has talked about gutters. I wonder why he is always talking about gutters.

An hon. Member: You should know.

Mr. Pearson: The reason must be that I sit so close to the opposition.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I wish the right hon. gentleman would not single me out like this. It makes me nervous.

Mr. Nielsen: I rise on a point of order concerning the quotations made by the Prime Minister not only from the letter he is reading now but the letter he read a moment or two ago. I refer Your Honour to pages 328 and 329 of May's thirteenth edition where it is set forth that as a principle of debate a minister of the crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a dispatch or state paper not before the house unless he is prepared to lay it on the table. This is also referred to by Beauchesne in citation 159. To go further, I should like to quote from Sir Gilbert Campion's book, "Introduction to the Procedure of the House of Commons" where the following words appear at page 195:

> The rule as laid down by May (p. 433) is, "A minister is not at liberty to read or quote from a dispatch or other state paper not before the house, unless he is prepared to lay it upon the table."

Some hon. Members: He is.

Mr. Nielsen: If hon. members opposite will wait for a while, they will see the point. They are always so anxious to impose closure here—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nielsen: The citation continues:

> The rule is akin to the rule of evidence in courts of law, and is a recognized standard for ministerial practice. It only applies to direct quotation from a paper, not to a mere summary of arguments contained. Nor is it always enforceable in the case of actual quotation. In the first place it may be overridden by considerations affecting the public interest. Nor does it apply to private memoranda or correspondence or generally to any papers the production of which would, but for it, be refused to the house as being beyond its jurisdiction. The conclusion from these divergent considerations is that papers which cannot be laid in toto should not be read or quoted in extracts.

I submit that having regard to the number of times this matter has been raised in the house, and because they concern a matter of public importance, that these papers, or any others from which the Prime Minister attempts to quote should be laid on the table of the house in order that all members, and the country at large, may have all the facts which the Prime Minister is urgently attempting, he says, to lay before us.

Mr. MacEachen: Perhaps I may say a word on a point of order raised by the hon. member for Yukon. A similar point of order was raised previously when the Prime Minister was quoting from these letters. At that time you made a ruling, Mr. Chairman, to the effect that there was no obligation on the part of a minister, including the Prime Minister, to lay on the table any paper which was not a state paper. This is certainly not a state paper. You have made your ruling, Mr. Chairman, and it seems to me there is no validity in the point of order raised by the hon. member, particularly in view of the assurance given by the Prime Minister that he would consult with his correspondents, and that, with their permission, he would place on the table voluntarily the letters from which he is quoting.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Yukon has already spoken on this point of order. Does he wish to submit additional views?

Mr. Nielsen: Very briefly, Your Honour. I would simply point out in rebuttal of the Minister of Labour that the volume from which I quoted—the volume written by Sir Gilbert Campion—contains, in addition, this illuminating quotation:

> Nor is it always enforceable in the case of actual quotations. In the first place it may be overridden by considerations affecting the public interest.

I submit that this issue is of overriding public interest, and because of this fact the Prime Minister should want to facilitate the placing of all the facts before the committee. He can only do this, surely, if he tables the documents from which he is quoting.

Mr. Winch: I simply rise on what I hope is a point of order to make a suggestion to the members of this house. It is this. In view of the interest in this matter, which has been the subject of discussion for many days, and perhaps for the sake of the dignity and decorum of parliament, we might give the Prime Minister the privilege of being allowed to make his statement uninterrupted, and if we are not satisfied with what he has to say, then we have the opportunity on this supply motion to go after him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

The Chairman: A cursory look at the sixteenth edition of May confirms the position I took earlier when this point of order was first raised. If the hon. member would look at page 460 of that volume, he would see the following:

> A minister of the crown is not at liberty to read or quote from a dispatch or other state paper not before the house unless he be prepared to lay it upon the table.

The word "state", of course, constitutes the distinction which must be drawn here. Then there is the following paragraph which appears at page 461:

> A minister who summarizes a correspondence, but does not actually quote from it, is not bound to lay it upon the table. The rule for the laying of cited documents cannot be held to apply to private letters or memoranda.

Then it continues:

> Indeed, it is obvious that, as the house deals only with public documents in its proceedings, it could not thus incidentally require the production of papers which, if moved for separately, would be refused as beyond its jurisdiction.

In other words, if the document is an official document the hon. member can move for its production. If it is not official, it does not have to be tabled if the Prime Minister, in this case, does not want to table it.

I might also refer the hon. member to citation 159(3) of Beauchesne's fourth edition:

> It has been admitted that a document which has been cited ought to be laid upon the table of the house, if it can be done without injury to the public interest. The same rule, however, cannot be held to apply to private letters or memoranda. On the 18th May, 1865, the attorney general, on being asked by Mr. Ferrard if he would lay upon the table a written statement and a letter to which he had referred on a previous day, in answering a question relative to the Leeds bankruptcy court, replied that he had made a statement to the house upon his own responsibility, and that the documents he had referred to being private, he could not lay them upon the table. Lord Robert Cecil contended that the papers, having been cited, should be produced; but the Speaker declared that this rule applied to public documents only.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Chairman, I will do my best to get the permission of the gentleman who wrote those letters so that voluntarily I can table them or have someone read them into the record. Because there is nothing in those letters which I would wish to conceal from the House of Commons.

If I may continue, after the arrangements suggested to us by the C.B.C. were found acceptable and we agreed to proceed with the film, I must say that I lived not for one day but for a great many days under the eyes of a camera and tape recorder, as was the arrangement we made with those producing the film. It certainly was a candid camera. I lived and talked normally when the tape recorder and the camera were on hand, as did those with whom I was meeting. All this, Mr. Chairman was, of course, on the understanding that the interview filming or the actuality filming or the candid camera filming would produce a great deal of raw material from which anything within the category agreed upon for revisionary suggestions would be excluded in putting together the actual film as it was finally shown the press, and which I repeat I have never seen, myself—which deals, I hope with another point raised by the hon. member for Bow River.

I assumed from the beginning, Mr. Chairman, not having been told otherwise, that the film was being produced by the C.B.C. But we discovered as the filming went on that the nature of the working agreement between the C.B.C. and Intervideo Productions was such that the latter were in fact the actual producers, as agents for the C.B.C.

I was invited, Mr. Chairman, in accord with the arrangements made with the producer in my office, and to which I have referred in the letter, to see the first assembled version of the film, the first draft, on December 26 in Toronto, where I had been spending Christmas. And I did see that first draft; I said that in the house. That was not the film as it was finally produced and shown to the press.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: It was not the film; it was the first draft. I have never seen the final draft. It is apparently on that distinction between the first draft, which I saw and which was greatly changed, and the final draft, which I did not see, that the hon. member for Bow River based his charge that I should resign, and I am sorry to disappoint him once again.

As a result of seeing the rough first draft in Toronto, Mr. Chairman, I asked a member of my staff, in accordance with the arrangements suggested to us by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, to bring to the attention of the producer certain sequences and tape recorded remarks which, in my view, were inappropriate and should be revised. They were in the categories for revision agreed upon. They were inappropriate because they were too personal, and there were one or two others which referred, in conversations with ministers, to matters which I thought should not be made public. They were under discussion, for one thing, in the House of Commons at that time. We were told by the producer for the C.B.C., we thought, that consideration would, of course, be given to these suggestions.

There was then a second review of the film in Ottawa, which was seen by members of my staff but not by me, a short time later, some time in January. Certain of the deletions which I had brought to the attention of the producer had been made; other deletions had not been made. The ones which had not been made included one which was a jocular and very personal remark made to me by Mrs. Pearson, who indeed did not realize when she made the remark that she was being filmed. It was a very personal remark. Second, there was a conversation with the Minister of Labour about the longshoremen's strike which was held in my office, and which I thought should not have been shown in the film. We had asked that this be taken out in the first instance, but it was not taken out of the second draft. Third, there was a reference to the Leader of the Opposition by the Clerk of the Privy Council. Mr. Robertson's comment was perfectly proper and entirely respectful in its mention of the Leader of the Opposition; but because it did mention the Leader of the Opposition by name I considered it to be an example of the type of remark and discussion taking place on a confidential basis which should be subject to revision and control, and which should not be included in the film; and that was not taken out.

These matters were brought to the attention of the C.B.C. and they were asked to reconsider the first suggestion that they should be excluded. They thought that this could be done at the time, and I was assured in January that there would be no special difficulty in meeting these suggestions, which were recognized to be, as I thought, quite reasonable.

There was a viewing of another revision of the film on January 21 in an office in the east block. This was not the film as later shown, but another revision. I saw part of this edition. It was the last version of the film I saw, and I saw only a small part of it because the sound and projection facilities were very bad. I also had to leave because I was going to Washington that afternoon to meet the President of the United States. I saw, however, 10 or 15 minutes of that version of the film. I learned when I got back that certain of the changes originally promised had, on the basis of that showing of the film, not yet been made.

On January 28 the director of the C.B.C. in charge of talks and programs of this kind wrote me, and again, Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to ask him to allow this letter to be tabled. The director asked me to agree that the arrangements proposed by Mr. Ballentine in his letter of September 23, and agreed to by me as the basis on which this production would proceed, be now set aside and that the program be completed in accordance with the normal principles and practices of the C.B.C. However, in his letter he added that they and the C.B.C. always bore in mind that I was fully entitled to raise objections to matters appearing in the program that touch on your private life or involve incidents or conversations normally and properly regarded as secret. I did not object to that proposal made by the representative of the C.B.C. but I replied that before any formal decision could be made by me there should be a further clarification of the relations between the corporation and Mr. Ballentine, which we had learned were becoming difficult, and we wished to know how this matter stood in regard to that relationship. The C.B.C. accepted that position.

Then later, Mr. Chairman, the C.B.C. advised my office that they were anxious for us to see a print, as they put it, of the complete film. That was arranged for April 30, with three ministers and certain members of my office present. I was not there myself; I was not able to see that showing.

Mr. Nielsen: Who were the ministers?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Martin, Mr. Sharp and Mr. MacEachen.

Mr. Knowles: Order.

Mr. Pearson: I am sorry to have transgressed the rules of the house, but they were referred to by name. They were the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Labour and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, as well as the members of my office, for whom I take full responsibility—and I do not wish to drag names of people into debates of the House of Commons when they cannot defend themselves.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: I should like to observe that in this respect the conventions have always been adhered to in the past in this regard, and if there is to be criticism of people in my office, that criticism should be directed at me, not to officials by name who cannot defend themselves in the house.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was there anyone outside the staff of the Prime Minister's office?

Mr. Pearson: I will continue, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes, because you do not want to answer. What about the gentleman up there in the diplomatic gallery; was he present?

Mr. Pearson: I wish my right hon. friend would not get so indignant and so impatient. If he would only just simmer down a little bit—

An hon. Member: Just tell us the facts.

Mr. Pearson: —as I will be expected to simmer down when he speaks. This was a perfectly normal procedure. The C.B.C. invited us; indeed, they asked us to see this completed print, and as the film focused so closely and confidentially, and indeed searchingly, on the office of the Prime Minister and on the processes of the government, I asked two or three of my colleagues to see it. I wanted the Minister of Labour especially to be there, because he had been photographed and tape-recorded particularly in talking with me. The ministers made varying comments on the film, but no view was expressed to the C.B.C., then or subsequently, as to the showing of it. I repeat that I did not then see, nor have I subsequently seen, the completed film.

On May 6, just after 9 a.m., the C.B.C. representative phoned a member of my office staff that the film was not to be shown; a decision, he said, taken by a panel of senior C.B.C. officials after watching a special viewing of the film.

Mr. Nielsen: After, or before, cuts?

Mr. Pearson: This was the film that was shown at the meeting I have just mentioned.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: That decision was told by the vice president of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation to a reporter of a Toronto newspaper on May 20, and I quote from the report. Mr. Fraser, the vice president, said:

> The film is simply not up to our standards.

That must have been very disappointing, after all the hard work:

> The decision was made by network officials in Toronto. The lighting was poor, the sound was bad ...the camera work was so erratic as to make me dizzy.

The man in charge of the production on C.B.C., Mr. Haggan, said, according to the same report—and it was in quotation marks in the newspaper—

> The decision not to show the film—

I want to repeat this. It has been put on the record but it should be put on the record again. This was said by the man directly responsible for the film:

> The decision not to show the film was made in Toronto, not Ottawa, and there was absolutely no government pressure...There is no question of censorship.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: This is from the official of the C.B.C. who was concerned with this matter, and if he said there was no question of censorship, Mr. Chairman, am I to be pilloried by hon. gentlemen opposite for saying there was no censorship?

Mr. Nielsen: Who asked for the cuts?

Mr. Pearson: There was no question of heads rolling in connection with this film, Mr. Chairman.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: That is an episode which will live long in the history of parliamentary relations with the C.B.C. On the same day, May 20, the vice president of the C.B.C. released the following statement. This is the official statement of the C.B.C. and it should, of course, be put on the record in its entirety, though it is well known, I am sure, to hon. members. This is the statement issued in Toronto on May 20, 1964:

> The C.B.C. has decided not to broadcast a filmed television program on a day in the life of the Prime Minister, entitled "Mr. Pearson—the Man and the Office".
> The program was filmed for the corporation by Intervideo Productions Limited of Toronto.
> C.B.C. senior program officials in Toronto viewed the finished print May 5, shortly after it became available to them, and decided it was unacceptable for broadcast, a decision concurred in by the program council and other senior executives.
> It is the corporation's decision that the film does not meet C.B.C. program standards. The camera work is distracting: the lighting and sound are of uneven quality and often poor, and the editing is inadequate. These shortcomings are further aggravated by the problem of timeliness in some of the program content. The corporation recognizes it may have set a difficult objective for the film production and accepts its share of responsibility in this matter.

But there can be no sharing of decisions on what is broadcast or not broadcast. This is the corporation's responsibility. The program will not be broadcast because it does not meet minimum C.B.C. standards.

That was the formal decision made by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. Hon. gentlemen may challenge that decision if they will, but there is a decision in black and white. If the C.B.C. is to have a position of independence and prestige, which its importance deserves in this country, surely it is not helping the C.B.C. to challenge the validity and accuracy of a statement issued formally by them in respect of such an important matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: In view of the discussions that have taken place, the charges that have been made and the insinuations that have been levelled, the C.B.C. is now referring the matter to its board of directors, who have met or are meeting. They are being given, as a board of directors, an opportunity to examine, presumably, the whole matter. I am speaking as a private member of this house, and though I know the risk involved in any kind of interference in this matter, in view of what has happened and in spite of the risk which may be entailed, I hope that the board of directors of the C.B.C. decide that in the circumstances this film should be shown to the Canadian public. If they make that decision, it will be their decision. If this film is shown I hope, Mr. Chairman, that this will be the end of the matter and we can get on with the business of legislation in this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Chairman, the longer the Prime Minister spoke, the deeper became the mystery connected with the non-production of this film and the clearer it became that censorship was applied by the government or representatives of the Prime Minister. And let that be understood to begin with, because it is underlined everywhere.

I am going to deal with one of the meetings that he did not deal with; I shall do that a little later on. I am going to review some of the matters that he did not deal with, and understandably so. Censorship has been defined—and I take the dictionary definition here—as "control over; making excisions or changes". If ever there was a document that received the full treatment, the life of the Prime Minister as it was reviewed by Mr. Ballentine, by picture and voice, was such a document; but the Prime Minister and those associated with him did not desire it to be seen by the Canadian people.

As the Prime Minister spoke I could only conclude this; removing the smokescreens of personalities that punctuated his remarks, the Prime Minister is in the most difficult and trying position he has ever been in. He is embarrassed by his friends, embarrassed by his staff, embarrassed by his fellow members in the cabinet—and he is embarrassed because the facts finally came out when Mr. Ballentine revealed them. He said: Let us get on with the business of parliament. There is nothing more important, than that this house should assure that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation shall not be a toy to be played with by the government of the day. The Prime Minister allowed this matter to drag on for two weeks before making a statement. He dealt very uncertainly with the contradictions and evasions pointed out by the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Yukon. He glossed over the fact that he had in fact seen the film in question. He says now that it was not the same one that exists today. It was one of the earlier ones before the operations took place thereon.

Sir, his statement today was, to anyone listening to it objectively, one that constituted an admission of a series of things that are inconsistent with any other hypothesis than that the government did not like the image in "Mr. Pearson". That is very clear.

I am going to deal in particular with the various events that took place right from the beginning. There is a strange situation here. The Prime Minister admits that there was an arrangement made with Mr. Ballentine whereby the Prime Minister or somebody associated with him would have a right of veto over the material produced. Cromwell once said: "Paint me, warts and all". In their several meetings the present government said in effect: Paint me, but put nothing in that will in any way deteriorate the image that Madison avenue has endeavoured to create.

Sir, there were veto rights. The Prime Minister says that the reason for the veto rights was so that matters of secrecy would not be made available to the Canadian people. I ask, why were matters of secrecy being discussed between the Prime Minister and the members of his cabinet knowing that not only were photographers and technicians present but that a record was being made? Surely that is a strange explanation. Certainly there should be no revelation of secrets, but why make them available by discussing such matters in the presence of these people?

The Prime Minister would brush this matter aside and say that there is really nothing to it. He would have us believe that it is a trivial situation and that parliament should not be wasting its time on it. I say immediately that censorship is clearly apparent, that interference with the C.B.C. was revealed by him in his remarks and that it is quite apparent that the reason for the suppression was the fact that the high officials of the C.B.C. realized that, to say the least, the government was not pleased with the production that was made.

What has been done here strikes at the very roots of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. If I had time I should like to quote what the Minister of Transport said on one occasion. In this case the C.B.C. has allowed itself to become the government's cat's-paw because the Prime Minister and those associated with him did not like what they saw. He said that the deletions were in the interests of security. I ask him, whose security was affected when these various words of pseudo-profanity were removed? What security was affected when the deity was reduced from four to one in mentions by the Prime Minister? Surely such nonsense as he endeavoured to place before us today is answered as one goes into detail regarding the several meetings that took place.

No censorship? What were the ministers there for? It must have been a most enjoyable film because there were 12 reviews. I have seen people go to the movies for the first show and stay for the second because they enjoyed the picture, but for one or other of these five ministers to see this film in its several repetitions is something else again. Was it because of the entertainment value? Were they there purely and simply for the purpose of trying to understand the nature of the picture and to recommend excisions that were based on secrecy? What they were trying to do was to bury something that they did not want seen by the Canadian people.

The facts would never have come out, Mr. Chairman, if it had not been for the revelations made in two Toronto newspapers. We know the facts and there has been no denial. I want to review these various meetings because there is one in particular to which reference has not been made. Throughout the Prime Minister's speech Keith Davey was present in the diplomatic gallery, which is an indication that he has a diplomatic interest in the discussions that are taking place on this occasion. Why his interest? Why his presence on the 5th day of April? Why the presence of these other ministers? Why these various screenings?

I think we ought to review first some of the screenings because they reveal a most interesting situation. The first of the political screenings took place in December. The Prime Minister's press secretary was there and also his appointments secretary, Mr. Coutts, who I am informed has emerged as a promising candidate for Hollywood, and the only one who did. Mr. O'Hagan was also there on that occasion, December 23, I believe. They were worried about sequences. I am not going into the particulars. There was worry about the Coutts car sequence. That had nothing to do with secrecy. It was a revelation, I understand, but it had nothing to do with secrecy.

On the 26th of December, Boxing day, again they gathered and there were present the assistant press secretary, James Reagan, the Minister of Finance, who is quite a judge of the aesthetic although I understand he just happened to walk in on the thing and was not really a party to the gathering, and the Prime Minister. We are informed that what the Minister of Finance saw regarding the Prime Minister did not fill that minister with the assurance and feeling that it should be reproduced.

Then things started to move. The Prime Minister endeavoured to have the house believe that there was no interference, no censorship. Why all these meetings? On January 6, 1964 another meeting was held at the request of Mr. O'Hagan, the press secretary of the Prime Minister, and there they really got the scissors out. There, they really pointed out what should be removed. They asked that a remark by Mr. O'Hagan about the Canadian Press, a remark by the right hon. gentleman about a former press secretary of the opposition leader, an unguarded remark by the Minister of Labour, a facetious remark by a lady, comments by the government chauffeur, be removed. On that occasion there was no censorship. It was said that there were rather too many references to the deity. They finally decided that one reference would be enough and the rest would go by the board. Was that in the interests of security?

Well, I would have liked to hear the remarks by the chauffeur, because they certainly could not have done anything. Then, there was a further one by Mr. O'Hagan. Did you ever see such anxiety on the part of a prime minister and those associated with him to see something that they were not going to interfere with? They just came to see, to listen. I hear the Prime Minister walked out on one showing because he said the tonal effects were such that he could not understand himself. I can only say, in the kindest way, that we have been in the same position this afternoon.

On January 21, there was a screening for the Prime Minister, but he walked out. He had to go somewhere, and I understand that. Following that, there were requests for more deletions. Sir, when the Prime Minister says, "We do not censor films on this side of the house", I wonder what it is. Was it an exercise in self-appreciation? Did they want to see themselves as others see them? Did something there not appeal to their finer, aesthetic sensibilities? Why these repeated showings?

On this occasion, there were a number of things, I think, that went out. One was the reference by the Clerk of the Privy Council to the Leader of the Opposition; one was the Coutts car sequence and the final deity was taken out altogether. You see, they are making progress. You can just see them, Mr. Chairman. There they sit.

I will come now to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who had a notebook. We wish he were here. Then, there was the screening on April 5 in the east block. I should like to have been present in that cave of Adullam, when all of these disgruntled people got together. The Prime Minister said he would not give me the names because he was not going to mention his staff. I do not want to know about his staff. I do not want him to have to defend his staff. They were simply carrying out their responsibilities under his direction. There was no screening in his office. It must have been a great get-together over there, just like the beginning of a premiere. There was everything except the searchlights and the autograph hunters.

Who was present? There was the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I don't know whether he was trying to find markets abroad for it. There was the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Mr. Tom Kent. Of course, he is on the Prime Minister's staff. However, Keith Davey was not on the staff. What was he doing there? He was present on that occasion and he was in the diplomatic gallery today. What was he there for? I am sure it was not for the purpose in any way, according to the Prime Minister, of censorship. He was just there to enjoy himself. I hope he enjoyed himself more than the Prime Minister has since. Here was the whole office staff of image makers gathered together with their wives and secretaries.

Then, the Secretary of State for External Affairs decided that he had to do something in the interests of the observation of the international amenities. He looked the thing over, and he said: I object to these points. He said it conjured up in him feelings of regret, that there had been some mistake made. There were no politics in there, no censorship, but imagine a picture in which there were two particular views of Macdonald and none of Laurier. The Secretary of State for External Affairs said that was not proper. Then, Emperor Hailé Selassié came into it. Somebody said, is he the only emperor in the world today? I am informed that the Prime Minister said—this is all hearsay and if he says it did not take place I will immediately withdraw it with apologies—"I think there is another emperor in Cambodia; you cannot keep up with these things". They forgot altogether about the emperor of Japan, so out went any reference to Hailé Selassié in the form in which it originated. This was an amazing performance.

There was a discussion of profanity, and the Secretary of State for External Affairs was worried about the effect of that language on Presbyterians and Methodists. Mr. Chairman, it would be ridiculous in any forum; but this is a serious effort on the part of the Prime Minister and his cabinet, facing great issues in Canada, and they are worrying about the use of words that are in general use within our country. Then it is said, and again if the Minister of Labour says it did not take place I will accept his word, that the Minister of Labour has a discerning taste for things aesthetic. He was not shocked by what he saw. He said it was highly amusing. The Minister of Trade and Commerce said it was an astounding document. Apparently they did not have agreement in cabinet that day, because to others that which was astounding and amazing was neither.

Now, that is just a short record. I could place a great deal more on the record were I to choose to do so but I do not want to bring up anything further in this connection because my time is disappearing. But I do say this to the Prime Minister on the basis of what he said today, that while his words denied censorship what he said admitted censorship in every sense of the word. I said a moment ago I was not going to quote the Minister of Transport, but I think I should. This is what he said on January 18:

> I may say that I fully subscribe to that view and I have, I think, in my private life and in my public life always been a supporter of public broadcasting for that reason, and for that reason only, because I do recognize the dangers of public broadcasting as they were manifest in some parts of Europe 25 years ago when some of us were rather younger than we are now, and as they still exist today in many totalitarian countries. This is potentially a very dangerous instrument in the hands of an unscrupulous government and it needs to be safeguarded in every possible way against control by the government as opposed to control by parliament itself in which people are freely elected whether or not the people who elect them like the government.

Sir, can anyone deny that the 12 showings were held, the multiplicity of showings, without the government having pointed out that they did not like what they saw? They admitted they tore it asunder. They did not remove—no; they asked, they suggested, they publicly stated in these meetings what they saw wrong in what was taking place.

Sir, it is a picture that is hard to understand. The Prime Minister said he did not have anything to do with it, that it was not he who asked to see it. I point out that on December 24 Mr. McLean of the C.B.C. had a request from the Prime Minister to see the film and it was stated he could see the film on Boxing day. Sir, all the way along, all through the piece, the Prime Minister was there examining, either in his own person or through the means of those of his staff. He cannot get away from that.

Why was it cancelled out? Well now, just a nod from the government might have its effect, but a continuing campaign of 12 meetings of condemnation and of suggestion could not leave the C.B.C. in any other position than, to use the immortal words of the Secretary of State, "heads might roll".

Why all these meetings? On May 7, after all these peregrinations back and forth, in Toronto, in Ottawa, in the various locations here, Mr. Ballentine wrote a letter to Mr. Alphonse Ouimet and asked about this and he received a letter, according to what he says, simply reading "Mr. Ballentine"—without "Yours truly" even added, stating the film did not meet with C.B.C. programming standards, that the camera work was distracting and that the quality of editing was inadequate. They did not find this out until ministers gathered together over and over again and looked upon what they saw, and were not pleased.

Sir, why was this stopped? On May 5 Mr. Ballentine was called into Mr. Haggan's office—and a more reputable man there is not anywhere to be found—and told the telecast had been scheduled for June 25. Later that day the final decision was made that it be not shown, and later on Mr. Haggan telephoned Mr. Ballentine and said he wanted to screen it one last time for his superiors, one last screening after all the screenings, and the screenings, and the screenings, and the screenings multiplied several times.

They had this screening in Toronto, attended by the top C.B.C. programming people, and at nine o'clock that night Mr. Haggan telephoned Mr. Ballentine and said the program officials in Toronto and Ottawa had decided not to have the film run. If ever there was a flagrant interference with the C.B.C. this is one, and all the Prime Minister does is endeavour to bring along a number of smokescreens. He did not answer this. He gave no explanation whatever regarding all these interesting revelations that were being made.

He told us today that any excisions were to be made on the basis of security. I ask this again as I did earlier, whose security? As I look at the government opposite and I see them as they join together, the security that they had in mind, as they interpreted the national security, was their own political security and nothing else.

From beginning to end the story is one that is now worse than it was following the explanation of the Prime Minister. Why did he have the head of his national Liberal organization present? Was that in order to assure security? I would like to have an answer to that. He talked today about calculated malevolence. Bringing forth the facts is not malevolence, but the discharge of constitutional responsibility. It is always the case that when people find themselves in a serious position, as he and those associated with him do, they resort to that type of personal abuse that was levied against the hon. member for Bow River and the hon. member for Yukon.

Sir, I could say a great deal more but I simply set out in very terse detail the sinuous course taken by this government, and it got found out.

The Prime Minister said no pictures were taken in the cabinet. Well, all I have to say is that I would like to have this matter brought before a committee of parliament and Mr. Ballentine given the opportunity to give evidence. I must accept what the Prime Minister says, but Mr. Ballentine says it took place.

Mr. Ballentine, if he is correctly reported has said:

> Shooting now continued in Ottawa, at the Prime Minister's home, in his office, in his private limousine as he drove to the east block, at a meeting of the cabinet in the privy council chamber.
> This last occasion was on the day after the Ontario election and all members of the cabinet spoke for about 15 minutes on the political implications of that event.

It will be recalled that one or other of the ministers took a prominent part in that connection, and it was on that occasion the pictures were taken, according to Mr. Ballentine.

> Later that day Mr. Pearson asked Mr. Ballentine not to use the cabinet sequence since his colleagues were shocked at the idea of their remarks being recorded for television. The producer assented.

If Mr. Ballentine is correctly reported, then all I can say is that I am surprised he would not know the difference between four or five ministers in the Prime Minister's office in the east block, and a whole lot of ministers in the privy council office. But that is not what the Prime Minister says, and I would like to hear the views of Mr. Ballentine in this connection. In order to get to the bottom of this and get the facts we have to have his story and know what has taken place.

Now I pass on for a moment and I refer to what happened on June 18. In this city a group of young men known as the Confederation club announced they were going to show something of what had taken place by revealing the particular print that they had. So far as the film negative is concerned it is held in escrow in Toronto by Pathe News, or some of those organizations.

Who interfered on this occasion? Was Mr. Ballentine advised that he would not be allowed to do this? Was he told he would be refused permission to use the film that belonged to him? Why was that done? Is it not further evidence of the suppression that is characteristic throughout the entire period of this continuing performance? It was not 60 days of decision; it was eight months of indecision. I think that is the number of months that it was before one group or another. It started in September. It went on for several weeks. The climax was on October 7, the day the Prime Minister had the pictures taken in his office. What happened in all those months? Why the change? Why was it that for the first time, late in May, the order was given that this film was not to be produced?

Now what about it? The Canadian people have a right to see, not the expurgated edition, not the excised edition, not the edition to which scissors under the direction of ministers have been taken; the Canadian people have the right to see this film as it was originally produced, before so much of it found its way on to the cutting floor. What has taken place here is a serious act of censorship.

I cannot understand it. Last evening, on the national television network, the C.B.C., there was not one reference to what took place yesterday. Not a word. Why? Why was there nothing in this regard? What took place is just as serious as censoring a newspaper article of which one does not approve. Indeed, it is immeasurably worse, because this is a government corporation. Do you mean to tell me, sir, that the Minister of Finance and the Secretary of State for External Affairs and the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Minister of Labour and the Prime Minister and the members of the Prime Minister's staff and Keith Davey are able to fill the positions of producers and directors, adding here, snipping there, chopping somewhere else—all for artistic considerations or for security purposes? That is what the Prime Minister said. I do not intend to quote what the Minister of Finance was alleged to have said. But I can imagine what happened in the C.B.C. when word came to them: "Paul does not like it." I can just see the fluttering of the dovecots as they began to realize that the Secretary of State for External Affairs thought something was wrong.

Be that as it may, this film should be restored, and what the image makers tore asunder should be replaced and put together. To do otherwise, to produce what has been revised, to produce what has gone through the hopper of governmental disinfection, is not what we are entitled to expect. What we are entitled to see is the film which was originally produced, subject to one consideration—that if there is anything at all affecting national security, no one would ask that it be produced.

On the other hand, what decisions, what legislation, what planning on the part of the Prime Minister and cabinet ministers could possibly justify the discussion of security matters in these circumstances, whether in the cabinet room or in the Prime Minister's office?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was one of the most serious revelations made this afternoon. I can understand the Prime Minister's feelings in this situation. All of us have a great deal more hindsight than we have foresight. He laid the foundations for what he wanted. The private secretaries, the executive secretaries and the president or the chairman of the national organization had their ideas. The C.B.C. made a mistake when it accepted the veto right of anyone in that agreement which was entered into and accepted by the Prime Minister. I should like to see the letter which was written to him by Mr. Ballentine in that connection or on his behalf.

The picture was produced. I can just see them. How they must have enjoyed it. They asked: Show it over and over again; give it to us again. And every time they looked at it they had a few more qualifications to make, a few more subtractions, a few more diminutions. Finally, even what was then produced did not meet with the high standards of the government. They saw much wrong in it; they saw things in it which were detrimental to the national security—which I define as being the political security of the Liberal party, translated into higher spheres by the Secretary of State for External Affairs.

There has not been a more serious matter before parliament than this. Now the board of governors is meeting. What a dish of crow has been handed to them. Mr. Ouimet says there has been no improvement in the technical qualifications of the film. Yet now, because, as he said, there are larger matters to be considered, he has placed this question before the board. These are his words:

> The corporation must at all times be careful not to confuse political matters with questions of broadcast responsibility.

That is what this government put the corporation in the position of doing. With respect to the present situation it does not appear to the corporation that parliament has clearly indicated a view.

Then he says this:

> The corporation has already taken a broadcast decision with respect to this film. That decision was based solely on the professional broadcasting standards of the corporation which are used to judge such matters. The film has not changed and the standards have not changed.

I accept that statement. Then I ask: What were you people doing there? What were you doing there with this great coterie and retinue, with all the staff surrounding you? I end with these words from the quotation:

> Consequently, the corporation must determine whether more compelling factors now exist in the realm of the public interest.

What are the more compelling factors? The most compelling up to date has been the interference on the part of this government. What is more compelling than that?

Mr. Fisher: May I raise one point in connection with the tabling of the letters?

The Chairman: Is it agreed that we sit beyond six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Fisher: It is not an argumentative point. I merely wish to point out that on Wednesday, June 17 the house passed an order that these particular letters be produced. I would suggest to the Prime Minister that this would give him an opportunity to table the letters today so that they may be on the record.

Progress reported.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, June 25, 1964

The house met at 2.30 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. WINKLER—OFFER OF CO-OPERATION IN PASSING STUDENT LOAN LEGISLATION

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I wish to bring this matter to the attention of the house and the country because of a statement issued by the Prime Minister this morning over the C.B.C. with regard to legislative matters to be brought before this house, and because of a presentation that was made in a non-political fashion to the members of parliament shortly before the opening of the house today.

The Prime Minister, I believe, suggested that a measure covering student loans would be introduced prior to a summer recess. I bring this question forward because of its importance. If the Prime Minister is prepared to present this legislation to the house, we will offer our co-operation in its passage immediately.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

FILM ON PRIME MINISTER—TABLING OF LETTERS

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to table copies of the letters to which I made reference in my statement in the house yesterday about the television program.

DECISION ON SHOWING OF FILM ON PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I have received the decision made by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation on the film entitled "Mr. Pearson" and I should like to communicate it to the house. It is as follows:

The directors of the corporation at their annual meeting have carefully reviewed those aspects of the rejected television film "Mr. Pearson" which are directly its concern:

(1) The broadcasting or professional decision not to show the film, and

(2) Whether compelling factors now exist which would outweigh the corporation's operational standards and judgment.

The corporation has made its decision on the basis of the full responsibility in programming matters delegated to it by parliament. There are three basic elements in the decision:

(1) The film remains unacceptable for showing on the basis of broadcast standards.

(2) The corporation is satisfied there has been no political interference.

(3) Though an interest in the film has been stimulated in segments of the public, nevertheless the corporation does not judge the broadcasting of the film to be warranted.

The corporation's decision is not to show the film or parts thereof.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

CONSIDERATION OF MATTERS TO BE DISCUSSED AT PRIME MINISTERS' CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, with the approach of the commonwealth prime ministers' conference I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether an opportunity will be given to the members of the house to present, in general, their views regarding commonwealth matters and such questions as in the ordinary run of things would come before that conference. I know that on previous occasions this has been done, and I think it is most beneficial for the Prime Minister to have the general consensus of the views of the house respecting those matters that will be discussed.

Second, in that connection would the Prime Minister say whether the government of Canada would support the setting up of a committee or commission, representative of commonwealth countries, to give consideration to the serious situation that prevails today in British Guiana, a matter that naturally is not one for the United Nations, as it is distinctly an internal one, but is of great importance to the commonwealth?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, regarding the first suggestion made by my right hon. friend, I shall be glad to give consideration to that possibility. Regarding the second suggestion about a commonwealth committee being set up to consider such questions as British Guiana, I think we would have to reserve our opinion until the forthcoming conference has met and we have ascertained the views of the United Kingdom government, which is responsible for the administration of that colony.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Might I ask whether any discussions have been going on between the United Kingdom government and the government of Canada and other governments within the commonwealth in connection with British Guiana. I am not asking for particulars. I realize these communications are confidential, but would the Prime Minister be able to say whether such a suggestion has been placed before him or had received any consideration?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, of course there have been messages received from the United Kingdom government about conditions in British Guiana which, as my hon. friend knows, is customary in matters of this kind in regard to commonwealth exchanges. To my knowledge no specific request has come in from the United Kingdom government to consider any machinery of the kind suggested by my right hon. friend, but one may have come in within the last day or two to the Department of External Affairs. If so it has not been brought to my attention yet, but I shall look into the matter.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SOUTHEAST ASIA—CANADIAN POSITION RESPECTING U.S. POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the newly announced policy of the United States with respect to Viet Nam and the situation in Southeast Asia, and the fact that this may result in a confrontation with mainland China, will the Canadian ministers who are in Washington today inform the United States government that Canada dissociates itself from this policy and that we will accept no responsibility for any repercussions which may follow such a policy?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, the Canadian ministers in Washington today will undoubtedly be receiving reports from the United States government on this subject which is of such immediate interest to all countries. I hope the Secretary of State for External Affairs will be in a position, perhaps tomorrow morning, to report on these discussions generally. The Canadian government has no commitment to Viet Nam except that of our membership in the United Nations, and we would wish to discharge our obligations in that regard to Viet Nam or any other country in the light of our obligations under the charter only.

Mr. Douglas: Could the Prime Minister give the house his assurance that the Canadian ministers in Washington have been instructed not to make any commitment on behalf of Canada with respect to either South Viet Nam or any of the countries in southeast Asia?

Mr. Pearson: I can assure the hon. gentleman that the Canadian delegation will make it quite clear that we are not extending our commitments in that area beyond those we have undertaken as a member of the United Nations.

MALAYSIA—REQUEST TO COMMONWEALTH GOVERNMENTS FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wish to address a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the recent breakdown in talks between President Sukarno of Indonesia and Premier Abdul Rahman of Malaysia, and in view of today's announcement by Deputy Premier Mikoyan in Indonesia that Russia will be supporting Indonesia with military equipment, would the government consider giving an answer to the call of the premier of Indonesia for commonwealth help to this critical area of the commonwealth?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): We have had the advantage of exchanges of views with the premier of Malaysia, who has put the point of view of his government to us, and we are hoping that he will be paying a visit to Canada in July. At that time we shall be able to discuss all these questions with him personally.

CYPRUS—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESENT POSITION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his absence I should like to direct it to the Prime Minister. In view of press reports at noon today that the United Kingdom Cyprus contingent is to be cut in half, will the Prime Minister request the Secretary of State for External Affairs to make a statement to the house on the Cyprus situation so that all of us may be brought up to date as to what is going on in Cyprus and, in particular, as to how the usefulness and effectiveness of the United Nations force will be affected by the withdrawal of more than 1,000 United Kingdom troops?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will be glad to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs to bring the house up to date on this matter. Within the last 24 hours he has had the advantage of a talk in New York with the president of Turkey. In the light of that talk, in the light of any discussions he may be having in Washington, and also in view of the reports which have been received from London, I agree that it would be proper to make a statement at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Nesbitt: In view of the change in United Kingdom policy and its effect on the United Nations Cyprus force, is the government reassessing Canada's role in Cyprus or considering making any change in our commitment to the United Nations in this regard?

Mr. Pearson: We are not contemplating any change at the moment in our contribution to this force.

[Later:]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, arising out of the Prime Minister's reply to my hon. friend for Oxford, that Canada does not at the present time intend to extend its commitment in Cyprus, has the government of Canada received a request for additional staff officers and headquarters troops in the event that Britain withdraws her forces in this particular sector, as was suggested in the British press last week?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to look into that matter. There may have been a request for a few additional staff officers in certain contingents, but I am not sure. I shall look into the matter right away.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED STATEMENT BY OPPOSITION LEADER RESPECTING ELECTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, under standing order No. 39 we are allowed to direct questions to ordinary members about a public matter connected with the business of the house and in which some members may be concerned, and accordingly, I wish to ask the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) if it is true he stated last night that general elections could be called in Canada any day now and if he intends to see His Excellency the Governor General about that matter?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I must advise the hon. member that his question is out of order.

AGRICULTURE

APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER FOR EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister. In view of the deep unrest among Quebec farmers, which will find a dramatic outlet tomorrow when 10,000 farmers march on the parliament of Quebec, would the Prime Minister tell us whether he intends to reconsider his decision not to appoint a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The intentions of the government have been made known in this regard, and it is hoped that we shall be able shortly to bring in legislation which will provide for the appointment of a minister of forestry and rural development, but not for a special minister for eastern agriculture.

[Translation]

Mr. Balcer: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Does the Prime Minister intend to appoint a minister who will at least be able to get on well with the Quebec minister of agriculture?

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could the Prime Minister delegate a federal minister to Quebec tomorrow as an observer, to attend the farmers' march on the parliament of the province of Quebec, since that might give him some ideas about increasing the income of the eastern farmer?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The last two questions are hardly serious.

Inquiries of the Ministry

SUBSIDY ON GRAIN TRANSPORTED BY TRUCK

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Forestry.

Following the decision which we took yesterday to refer to the committee on agriculture and colonization the controversial problem of the cost of feed grain in eastern Canada, is the minister in a position to tell us whether he will await the result of the study made by that committee on the matter before announcing whether he intends to subsidize the shipping of grain by rail as well as by truck?

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it will be necessary to wait until the final report of the committee of agriculture on feed grain is received to take immediately appropriate steps in order to assist the transportation of feed grain by truck in certain areas of eastern Canada.

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister in a position to tell us when he intends to announce this new policy to provide assistance to the transportation of feed grain by truck?

[Text]

HEALTH AND WELFARE

SMOKING—WARNING ON CIGARETTE CONTAINERS OF CANCER DANGER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Has the attention of the minister been drawn to the fact that the United States government will require a warning on all cigarette packages and cartons after January 1, 1965 stating that cigarette smoking is dangerous to health and may cause death from cancer, and that a similar warning will be required in all cigarette advertising in the United States after July 1, 1965?

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): My attention has been drawn to this, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I realize the importance of this question, but is it so urgent and so pressing that it requires an immediate answer? I do not think so. Would the hon. member put it on the order paper.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Rynard: I bow to your ruling, Mr. Speaker, but I think it is important whether the minister does know and can take the necessary action.

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I could raise the same subject but with more currency, which might possibly enable it to pass as a question. I wonder whether, in view of the United States government's decision as pointed out by the previous speaker, the Department of National Health and Welfare is already considering some similar recommendation to the Canadian government.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Speaker, I have of course noticed in the press and have had brought to my attention the newspaper articles regarding the United States action. I should like to say to the house and my hon. friends that the advisory committee set up by the government after the conference on smoking and health last fall has been looking into the question. It appears to be as much a question of whether the federal government can do it as it is whether to do it. At the moment the whole matter is under very active consideration by the advisory committee. When they make a report to me as to action or no action, it will be necessary to ascertain whether the federal government can take such action, and then to decide whether the federal government wishes to do so. I should like to say to my hon. friends, both of whom have shown a great interest in this matter, which I appreciate, that when government policy is decided it will be announced in the house.

FLUORIDATION—REQUEST FOR ENDORSATION BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, and I should like to say to him that I am not asking it facetiously but most sincerely. It is most timely inasmuch as the Canadian Dental Association is now meeting in Edmonton. In view of the statement by the royal commission on health services that wherever fluoridation has been adopted the saving in dental costs has been impressive and the reduction in human suffering equally great, and in view of the statement already made by the department of health, would the Prime Minister express his endorsation of this vital public health measure?

Mr. Speaker: Order. It strikes me that in its form the question is out of order.

[Later:]

Mr. Slogan: I have a question for the Prime Minister. When the federal-provincial conference on health services takes place, will the Prime Minister give consideration to sharing in the costs, with the provinces, of the installation of fluoridation equipment?

Mr. Speaker: This question is out of order.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ACTIONS OF OFFICIALS OF S.I.U.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Donald MacInnis (Cape Breton South): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour but in his absence I would put it to the Prime Minister. Will the Prime Minister draw to the attention of the trustees the present activities of Mr. Cunningham, a henchman of Hal Banks, and the contributions he may be making to further shipping strikes on the seaway and the west coast?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to bring that matter to the attention of the minister.

[Later:]

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour, but in view of the fact that he is not here I should like to direct it either to the acting minister or to the Prime Minister because the question is of such pressing importance that any delay could cause a tie-up in shipping on the Pacific coast.

Has the attention of the government been drawn to the situation surrounding the T.S.S. Alaska, a Liberian ship which is operated by United States owners who have been put under pressure by the S.I.U. to place all masters, mates and engineers under the control of the S.I.U.? This company has been threatened by Mr. Paul Hall of the S.I.U. in the United States that he will give them what he calls a "hard time" unless licensed personnel jobs are given to the S.I.U. This is causing picketing and a good deal of disturbance on the Pacific coast.

First, has this situation been drawn to the attention of the government? Second, is the board of maritime trustees aware of the situation and has this action been taken with their co-operation and consent? If not, what action do they intend to take regarding this matter?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Acting Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I do not have any personal knowledge of this matter, but I shall see that it is taken up with the Department of Labour at once and whatever action is taken will be made known to the house.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I received a wire similar to that received by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam. Would the Prime Minister personally look into this matter because of the serious situation in which Mr. Hall of the S.I.U. is apparently adopting arrogant and overbearing tactics in order to pressure those named by the hon. gentleman to join the S.I.U.? This is something that I think should be brought to the attention of the trustees immediately. It involves serious repercussions on the west coast, and there is a danger of them spreading. I ask the Prime Minister whether he personally will get in touch with the trustees today because this situation, uncontrolled or unmet by them immediately, can only lead to serious results.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad to join with the Acting Minister of Labour in dealing with this matter at once.

Mr. MacInnis: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In answer to a question put by me yesterday the Minister of Labour indicated to the house that he was well aware of and was in touch with the situation. Now we are informed by the Prime Minister that the matter is going to be brought to his attention. Where do we stand on this particular matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Lotbinière.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, because this matter most vitally concerns the people of my riding and I have spent over half an hour on the telephone talking with those concerned. When the Prime Minister is making his investigation will he make inquiries whether this most serious action in Vancouver, so far as the shipping industry in concerned, was not taken under the authority of the trustees; and if not, how the situation could possibly develop without their knowledge or authority? Would the Prime Minister look into that?

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, if I may be allowed to raise a point of order, a moment ago the hon. member for Cape Breton South asked a question. I do not think Your Honour heard the question he asked. This is a very important matter, and he wanted to know why it was that on another occasion it was stated that the matter was being considered but now the Prime Minister apparently has no information or knowledge of it.

Mr. Speaker: There must be a misunderstanding. I thought I heard only two statements and no question; that was why I interrupted. If the hon. member has a question perhaps he might put it now.

Mr. MacInnis: I will rephrase my question. How is it that the Minister of Labour, in answer to a question by me on this particular matter yesterday, informed the house that he was fully aware of and in complete touch with the situation on the west coast? I put a question to him about S.I.U. interference with shipping with engineers from Montreal replacing engineers on the west coast. The Minister of Labour said he was fully aware of the situation, but now we have the acting minister and the Prime Minister rising in their places and saying that they will make the Minister of Labour aware of the situation, in spite of the fact that yesterday he claimed he was fully in touch with it.

Mr. Pearson: This seems to be a different question from that brought up by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

MEASURES TO BE CONSIDERED BEFORE SUMMER RECESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. My question is based on the words we heard from him this morning on the C.B.C. with regard to the business for the balance of this part of the session. I believe he indicated that the matters to be dealt with were the flag, the Canada pension plan, the family allowance measure and the student loan legislation. Is this the government's program between now and the recess, and will arrangements for parliamentary business be made so that these matters will be got through, particularly the family allowance and the student loan legislation?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I mentioned these as matters which should be dealt with before the parliamentary recess. No particular significance is to be attached to the order, nor was this list exclusive. I hope to make a statement on this matter next week.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that three of these matters are not yet on the order paper—two are not there at all and one is not in its final form—will they be put on the order paper soon? I refer to the student loans and family allowance legislation and the latest version of the Canada pension plan.

Mr. Pearson: Yes, Mr. Speaker, we will be able to put the youth allowance legislation on the order paper today or tomorrow.

[Later:]

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a question for the Prime Minister which arises out of an answer he gave a few minutes ago concerning the youth allowance bill which he said was to be put on the order paper tomorrow, I believe. Would he also consider putting on the order paper the measure covering loans to university students, so this noncontentious matter can be dealt with and students wishing to attend university in the fall may be assured of adequate finances?

Mr. Pearson: The resolution on that matter will be on the order paper in good time to deal with it. I know how important it is.

FINANCE

TARIFF CONCESSIONS TO FOREIGN AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking a question of the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Industry. It arises out of questions asked yesterday by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm with respect to tariff concessions offered to the French firms Peugeot and Renault if they chose to open plants in Quebec. The answer generally was that government policy would not be announced; and as far as the Minister of Industry was concerned he stated that he had not received any communication from those companies.

I ask the Prime Minister this question. Has the government of Canada communicated with the minister of trade in the province of Quebec outlining the government's position with respect to these tariff concessions in the event that the manufacture of automobiles by these companies commences in the province of Quebec? That information appears in the press, and parliament has not had it.

Second, is it a fact that officials of the firms in question have been meeting with federal officials within recent weeks in this connection?

Finally, has the ambassador of France been in consultation with officials of the Department of Industry or Department of Finance in this matter? I want to point out immediately, sir, that yesterday the answer was nebulous and uncertain. Today's press contains information which parliament has not had. Therefore I am asking the Prime Minister particularly to state what policy has been determined upon in this connection by the government, for parliament has the right to know.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take that question as notice and give an answer tomorrow.

SUGGESTED ELIMINATION OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIAL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice as leader of the Liberal members from Quebec?

Considering that the province of Quebec has 38 per cent of all the unemployed in Canada and the decrease in the building industry in this country, does the minister intend to put some pressure on the government to remove the 11 per cent tax on building materials, so as to stimulate the Canadian economy and promote building in Canada?

[Text]

The minister refuses to take his responsibility on this matter.

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question has been asked several times.

TRADE

FLOUR—REPORTED WITHDRAWAL OF EXPORT ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, notice of which was sent to his office shortly before noon. Has the Canadian wheat board announced that export assistance to the Canadian flour milling industry in the amount of 6⅞ cents per bushel is being withdrawn? If so, can the minister tell us why this action is being taken at this time?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this assistance, as the hon. gentleman described it, on the part of the Canadian wheat board is not a government subsidy. It concerns the price at which wheat is sold to the mills by the Canadian wheat board. As hon. members are aware, under the Canadian Wheat Board Act the Canadian wheat board is solely responsible for pricing, whether for the domestic or the export market, and does not ordinarily explain the changes which are made in these prices from time to time. However, I have taken notice of the hon. gentleman's question and will discuss it with the board to determine whether it feels that an explanation would be in the interests of the farmers, to whom the board is ultimately accountable.

Mr. Eldon Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question, somewhat related to a question I was going to raise a few minutes ago. It is addressed to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As we are nearing the end of the crop year I was wondering whether the minister could tell us today, or later if he has not the information with him, whether the full commitment under the contract between Russia and Canada as to deliveries of grain has been completed to this stage and, if so, will there now be open quotas for the farmers of western Canada?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, my answer to a question from the Leader of the Opposition the other day explained that deliveries under the Russian wheat contract are ahead of schedule. The Russians are very happy, and I fully expect we will fulfil that contract well ahead of time. If we are still here around the end of July and I have an opportunity, I will bring the house up to date as to the position.

CANADIAN FLAG

CONSIDERATION OF SECOND PART OF RESOLUTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, in his capacity of house leader.

Can the hon. gentleman assure the house that the examination of resolution 44B, to adopt a second flag, the union jack, will be immediately followed by that of resolution 44A concerning the three-leaved flag?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this matter comes under the organization of the business of the house and will be announced as the business of the house progresses.

[Text]

USE OF PROPOSED DESIGN IN ST. JEAN BAPTISTE PARADE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister?

Did the right hon. gentleman have the occasion to watch on television yesterday the St. John the Baptist parade and, if so, has he noticed that the tri-leaf flag was leading the parade and has favourably impressed all Montrealers?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, and it certainly impressed me.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (St. Maurice-Laflèche): I merely wished to point out to the Prime Minister that the tri-leaf flag was carried by the cadets of Shawinigan South and was a gift from the member for St. Maurice-Laflèche.

Mr. Grégoire: I should like also to point out that the finest float of the parade, according to the press, came from the riding of Lapointe and was presented by the aluminum company of Arvida.

TRANSPORT

GASPE—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Transport I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Is it the Prime Minister's intention to follow up the recent request made by Gaspe north chamber of commerce to the effect that the government should reconsider its position and carry out the construction of the Matane-Ste Anne des Monts railway and also extend by one year the expiry date of the bill, in order to help the Gaspe economy?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

At the time the former government was in power a bill was passed. This bill, which had been approved by all members, with the exception of the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher), provided for the building of a railway in the Gaspe peninsula. The present government cancelled that project, which is an infringement of the rights of parliament.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: —the way it is done in Soviet Russia.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. If the hon. member is not satisfied with my judgment he has the privilege of raising the matter at ten o'clock.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Thomas M. Bell (Saint John-Albert): I have a question for the Prime Minister. Has the government made a decision on the tolls on the seaway? When can we expect a formal statement in this regard?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will bring this matter to the attention of the Minister of Transport and ask him to make a statement at the earliest possible date.

Mr. Bell: May I ask a supplementary question. Can we be assured the statement will be made in the house before July 1, so we will not have to read about the decision in United States newspapers?

Mr. Pearson: I will try to insure that the statement is made first in the house.

FLOODS

BRITISH COLUMBIA AND YUKON—STEPS TO ALLEVIATE SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I directed a question to the minister of northern affairs and referred him to a question I had previously asked of the Prime Minister. The minister undertook to provide me with an answer today. I see he is not in the house but perhaps his parliamentary secretary, who has been trying to catch your eye, might be able to catch the eye of the Chair now so I might have an answer.

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for his anticipated co-operation. I might say that the question put to the Prime Minister by the hon. member last Monday had to do with whether any financial assistance has been or will be given to the government of the Yukon. When I was up in the Yukon ten days ago I put a question to Commissioner Gordon Cameron, and he assured me at that time that the damage was still within the resources of the territorial government, and to this date we have received no request from the Yukon for assistance.

I might say with respect to flood damage, Mr. Speaker, that we have been advised by telegram from the commissioner's office as late as yesterday evening that the Yukon and Klondike river levels at Dawson city have receded; that the damage still remaining is some flooding in the Anglican hostel and hospital; that sewer lines are being pumped out, and when the flood waters are completely receded the area will be disinfected. At Mayo, as the hon. member knows, the flood waters have again receded and the river is in its normal channel.

[Later:]

Mr. G. L. Chatterton (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources can his parliamentary secretary answer the question I put to the Prime Minister on Monday last with regard to the dikes on the Fraser river?

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, there was a breach in the dikes, as the hon. member knows, but the flood level of the Fraser is now down a foot from its peak. Although I do not have the latest report, I would hope that conditions are less critical than they were when the hon. member posed his question.

Inquiries of the Ministry

GRAIN

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL ELEVATOR CONSTRUCTION IN EASTERN CANADA

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

In view of the possibility that Russia may be buying less wheat from Canada, could the minister inform us whether extra elevators will be built in eastern Canada so that wheat orders may be delivered quickly and our high standard in foreign trade may be maintained?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This is a question for the order paper.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Public Works.

Following an urgent message I have received from St. Jean Deschaillons, in the riding of Lotbinière, I would like to know whether the minister is aware of the serious landslide which occurred in that community and whether he intends to take the necessary remedial steps, considering the seriousness of the situation?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for drawing that situation to my attention. I shall advise my officials immediately so that they may see to it without delay.

[Text]

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO RESIGNATIONS FROM PUBLIC AFFAIRS STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State in connection with the announcement of the decision of the C.B.C. this morning. Can the Secretary of State inform the house whether he is aware of any resignations that have taken place from the C.B.C. public affairs staff and whether any further resignations are anticipated, if indeed there have been resignations? If he cannot answer today, will he ascertain what the situation is and inform the house tomorrow morning?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any resignations.

Mr. Nielsen: Will the Secretary of State make inquiries and inform the house tomorrow morning?

Mr. Lamontagne: I will.

SHIPPING

EFFECT OF LOW WATER LEVEL IN GEORGIAN BAY AND LAKE HURON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John Loney (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary. Has the minister answered the communication he received from the Georgian bay development association dated June 16, 1964 with regard to the current low water levels in the lake Huron and Georgian bay area?

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will have to make inquiries about that.

Mr. Loney: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As this communication refers to a letter to the Prime Minister dated April 28 and unanswered as of June 16, will the minister give this matter immediate consideration?

Mr. Turner: Since he is absent, I will certainly draw it to his attention.

SUPPLY

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Wednesday, June 24, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. McIlraith—Mr. Batten in the chair:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $469,308,421.26, being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of all of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $329,299,209.25;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amount of agriculture item 5, privy council item 25 (schedule A) of the main estimates, $2,259,116.67;

(c) four twelfths of the total of all of the items in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $134,897,245.34;

[Mr. Nielsen.]

(d) an additional seven twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L37a (schedule B) of the supplementary estimates (A), $2,625,000.00;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L12a (schedule C), of the supplementary estimates (A), $227,850, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, there was something rather grotesque in the concentration of the house yesterday upon the Pearson film. I think it has been made even more grotesque by the decision of the C.B.C. today. I do not intend to carry on the discussion, but I want to place some questions before the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister indicated that this was his first opportunity to speak in full on this matter. I think he started well, but in so far as the fulsomeness of the explanation was concerned, he began to run out well before the end of his speech.

I do not believe we will have a full explanation. I would predict, as a result of the repercussions within the structure of the C.B.C. that we have not heard the end of this. As a matter of fact it begins to look very much as though we have almost a duplicate of the "Preview Commentary" situation of a few years ago brewing. I hope if this should be the case we will have the matter referred to a committee rather more quickly than was the case at that time.

I wanted to raise this point with the Prime Minister. He indicated that there were two reasons why the film was screened for him and other members of his staff. One was the question, which I think we will all accept, of the secrecy of matters in relation to the cabinet and the Prime Minister's office. The other was the question of something that you may call good taste, that was the question of the personal selection that was involved in the television production.

I want to ask the Prime Minister this question. At the first showing did he have with him a professor from York University by the name of William Kilbourn? I raise this question because I understand Professor Kilbourn was with him. He is a man for whom I have a great deal of respect. As well as being a supporter of the Prime Minister he is considered somewhat of an authority on television, on the standards of television performance. I can quite understand that it might have been completely informal that Professor Kilbourn wound up seeing this particular film. I happen to know—the Prime Minister may wonder where I got the information, but I got it directly—that Professor Kilbourn had an opinion after seeing this film. He had an opinion upon its worth, not in connection with secrecy or the Prime Minister's personal taste but on the basis of whether it was good television and a good projection of the subject.

I think this is something that runs through the whole matter. Many members of the house know that the national director of the Liberal party happens to be a friend of mine of long standing. I want to raise the issue that he was included also in the screenings that were given of this film. I ask the Prime Minister, how does this square with the two matters, the question of personal taste and the question of secrecy? I suggest to the Prime Minister that yesterday in his speech when he got toward the end he missed out entirely on the explanation for all the screenings.

I can only assume from his performance yesterday that he has what I can only call in order to get around the need for a name, the man from Prince Albert syndrome. He is obsessed, in some way, with the position and attitude of the Leader of the Opposition. It was revealed in his speech yesterday. For some reason this does not allow him to be completely open and direct about the details in connection with this particular film.

Mr. Pearson: Put it in your column.

Mr. Fisher: The Prime Minister has made a number of references to my column and television show. I appreciate these very much, but I am speaking here as a parliamentarian very closely watching this particular situation develop, and in connection with this film I want to ask the Prime Minister if he can see the possibilities in this light.

For some reason he withdrew his own personal judgment in connection with the matter some time before that final screening attended by the Minister of Trade and Commerce and the Secretary of State for External Affairs. For some reason the Prime Minister decided that he would leave the judgment to these colleagues of his and to those associates of his within his own office. I do not know why he did this, but I would ask him whether he can tell me in all candidness that these gentlemen did not form a judgment upon the merit of the film as it affected him as Prime Minister and leader of the Liberal party, and whether that judgment—I am not saying to the Prime Minister's knowledge it was communicated deliberately—whether he really believes that judgment made by that group or those associated with him was not given to Reeves Haggan, the director of public affairs of the C.B.C.

I would like to point out to the Prime Minister that his explanation yesterday began to run out of detail just where the Dennis Braithwaite descriptions of the incident began to get to grips with what I think are some very important things. I just want to take this extract from the second column and draw it to the Prime Minister's attention:

> In about half an hour,
> —this is after the screening—
> Mr. Ballentine and Mr. Haggan were called to Mr. O'Hagan's office, where they were told that everyone thought highly of the film. Tom Kent called it brilliant. However, it must be understood that there was some concern about it from a publicity and political point of view.
> Mr. Haggan said he thought it was sympathetic to the Prime Minister.

In other words Mr. Haggan, the director of public affairs, was arguing that the film should be accepted, that there should be some kind of seal of approval.

There is only one thing I could draw from this kind of group passing approval on it, and I am suggesting we have not had a clear explanation from the Prime Minister as to whether the judgment of this group, on this question of publicity from a political point of view, was not given to Mr. Haggan; and I would suggest, as I did two days ago, that Mr. Haggan as a good executive and good employee of the C.B.C. almost certainly let this opinion be known to his senior officials. I think this is the only explanation one can get of just what transpired, and I think the Prime Minister should tell us whether he does not believe this is possible, that this is likely.

We are prepared to accept the Prime Minister's statement that he was not guilty of political interference, but surely in the light of the two points he was trying to bring out all through yesterday's debate that he felt he had the right—and indeed he behaved as if he had the right, and he delegated the right to his associates—to judge the film on the question of his personal tastes and personal affairs and on the whole question of whether it was secret or not, he must realize that this spreads out and makes possible the judging of that film on the basis of what Mr. Braithwaite has called the publicity and political points of view.

I do not know whether we are going to get a key answer but I suggest that the Prime Minister—I shall not say would be well advised because that is presumptuous—might take it up with his staff and see whether it was not accurate that Mr. Haggan, the senior man in C.B.C. relations respecting this film, was aware of the views on the part of the Prime Minister's associates to whom he delegated or apparently delegated the judgment, that they felt the film would be a poor one to show because of the publicity and political problems inherent in it.

The last point I want to make in connection with the Pearson film concerns the decision that the C.B.C. has taken not to show it. They have the right to make that decision, but I think it is a wrong one on two counts. Having seen the film I cannot accept that it is bad technically, that it is below normal C.B.C. standards. To my mind it was well above the C.B.C. technical standards, but that is my personal opinion.

I know there will continue to be an interest in this film. I would not like to suggest that the house should get into the position of asking the C.B.C. to go any further so far as putting it on television is concerned, but I certainly think that in the minds of almost all members of the house the whole question will not be at rest until they have an opportunity to view the film. I would like to suggest that some of us should make an arrangement to form a film society, because Mr. Braithwaite has prints, and I suggest that the Prime Minister would do very well, in the light of these people's comments, if he would become the honourary patron of the House of Commons film society. I am suggesting this with a certain amount of humour, but I hope we actually form a society so that we can see the film. I want to see it shown to back up what I have said on the record, that it is a brilliant film, technically excellent, and should be shown to the Canadian people; and I want my associates in the house, not only my associates over here but also on the other side, to form their judgment.

There is one other matter I want to touch on very briefly, a matter that may in a sense be related to this. This party I represent is very disappointed over the failure of the house to come up with some limitation upon debate, some formal arrangement. It is not proper for me to make any comments on the operations of a committee of the house, a committee that is presently sitting, but we are disappointed that that committee has not brought forward recommendations so we could have a means of negotiating limitation of debate.

On this point I would express some views to the official opposition. If it considers fairly, it will agree that minor parties in the house have more to lose from a limitation upon debate than the official opposition itself. The Leader of the Opposition has unlimited time to speak. He has the first opportunity to speak, and in any kind of ratio we have worked out in recent years the official opposition of the day, whether the Liberal party in opposition or the Conservative party in opposition, has done well—I will not say unfairly well, but fairly well—in the ratio of speakers. I put it to the official opposition that if anything the people who should worry about a restriction and time limit on debate, particularly on legislation, are the members of our party and our colleagues to our left.

I would ask the official opposition, particularly the Leader of the Opposition, in appraising this matter which I think is the most vital before parliament in so far as parliament's own good health is concerned, that they look more favourably than they have so far on this question of limiting debate. I think it is absolutely essential if we are going to resurrect the health and I think the life, if you want, of an institution that is not very favourably situated at the present time. Even if we do not think so, many people out in the country feel this is so.

We would like to close our remarks—and I say "we" because I am speaking for my colleagues—by putting to the Prime Minister that we feel he has not taken a strong hand in leading discussions and in presenting possibilities in connection with the matter of limitations upon debate. We can understand the fear which exists in the mind of any alert politician with regard to the whole question of closure in the light of what happened in 1956 and thereafter, but I should like to point out to the right hon. gentleman how much the climate and attitude have changed since then. I remember in 1957 arguing with my colleague, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that we needed limitation of debate negotiated in the same way as in the British parliament. He disagreed very strongly with me. He felt this was really a denial of what we were setting out to do. I think it will be agreed that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has changed his mind. He now feels as I do on this question, which is perhaps the most vital of all the points to be considered in connection with the reform of parliament.

I suggest that the Prime Minister has never, except in the loosest or vaguest way, put forward anything in the nature of a formula or plan by which we could move toward this objective. He is probably saying "Why should I get involved in something like that?"

Mr. Pearson: We have done so. We set up a committee.

Mr. Fisher: When has the Prime Minister ever put forward publicly and in this house an effective way of doing it? I have not seen it or heard of it.

Mr. Pearson: Perhaps the hon. member would allow me to answer that question now. I put forward four proposals to expedite and make more effective parliamentary procedure when we were in opposition in the last parliament. I put those four proposals forward after we formed the government. I advanced a proposal to set up a committee to look into parliamentary procedure. We put a cabinet minister to sit on that committee with instructions that he should support every proposal which would expedite and make more effective the business of this house.

Mr. Fisher: Well, in our opinion that has not been enough, and I will tell the right hon. gentleman one of the reasons.

Mr. Pearson: You blocked every motion.

Mr. Fisher: This is the key. What we need in this problem is good faith.

Mr. Pearson: Hear, hear.

Mr. Fisher: We need good faith in connection with this matter and the Prime Minister, as the senior person in this house, has not been able to engender that good faith.

Mr. Pearson: Quite right.

Mr. Fisher: I say this is a responsibility which rests upon him. It is not enough for him to say he has put forward four proposals. If this parliament wishes to achieve these objectives, something more aggressive has to be done and, I suggest, something much more friendly than the Prime Minister has come forward with as yet.

I should also like to suggest something further. If we are to get over these limitations and if we cannot get co-operation after a fair effort, then another responsibility rests upon the Prime Minister; that is to begin to consider other means by which the results can be achieved.

Mr. Pearson: Quite right. Put it on the order paper.

Mr. Fisher: You extend the hours of sitting. I remember I myself once had the honour of having a motion accepted in this house to extend the hours of sitting, and the right hon. gentleman will remember what happened as a result. We just got the longest Hansard in history, and I do not think we got out of here any sooner. I am wondering whether the same thing is likely to happen as far this motion is concerned.

My proposition on behalf of this party is twofold. First, we want more co-operation from the Prime Minister in working on this problem, and if no solution is apparent in the next few weeks we think the Prime Minister then has to begin to consider the other steps —and I think they are obvious; I think we have a tradition in this regard—

Mr. Pearson: Will the hon. member tell us what they are?

Mr. Fisher: They have existed since the time of the debate on the naval bill before the first world war.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Bring in closure?

Mr. Knowles: You are not speaking for all of us now.

Mr. Fisher: My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre "You are not speaking for all of us now".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: You have a split, eh?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Can they settle their dispute between them before they tell us what the policy is?

Mr. Fisher: The point here is that I am not taking it upon myself or upon my colleagues to set out a policy. I am suggesting that if the Prime Minister, who has the power, wants to achieve the legislative program he talks about there is an ultimate responsibility upon him—

An hon. Member: That is not very friendly.

Mr. Fisher: An hon. gentleman says it would not be very friendly, but that is the challenge to the Prime Minister. It is he who has undertaken to get through this legislative program. It is not moving very well. He is having a great time blaming everybody else, and I suggest that if he cannot obtain the kind of co-operation which results from negotiation on the basis of good faith then he has to consider other means, whether friendly or not, of achieving his purpose—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: The very reaction one gets in connection with this subject indicates the timidity in the thinking of hon. members over there. It is not the responsibility of members of the opposition to suggest the introduction of closure, but I say it is about time this government began to think about doing something like that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: Let us put it this way.

Mr. Herridge: I object. I object.

Mr. Diefenbaker: How about a caucus?

Mr. Fisher: Obviously I have not been exact in my phrasing. I want to make it very clear that there is a responsibility vested in the Prime Minister to get the business through this house. The Prime Minister has been having a fine time blaming everyone else for the slowness with which we have proceeded. I should like to suggest that if he cannot achieve the reforms which many of us feel are needed, he should consider those other responsibilities which rest upon him.

Some hon. Members: What?

Mr. Fisher: I have already indicated what those other measures are. Never mind. I am very sorry if my colleagues fear that I was advocating closure.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Fisher: Well, let us consider the other possibility. What is this other possibility? It is the dissolution of this parliament and the holding of an election. Those are the three possibilities. I personally—this is a personal preference—would prefer the third one, because I am not convinced that this government or this Prime Minister are ever going to act with the kind of resolution which would enable them to use the other thing in this connection. I just want to leave this issue before the house as a whole, this being a debate in which anyone can discuss the matter, because I think it is very obvious that we are fighting back and forth without really achieving the legislative program we should.

Just before 2.30 today a number of us met with a group of Canadian students, members of the Canadian union of students who are anxious to have certain legislation put forward. I am not trying to read anything into their attitude, but it appeared to me they were cynical and sceptical to a marked extent about the capacity of this parliament to get on with this legislation and get it through in any reasonable time. I suggest that when an attitude of this sort is abroad in the country among such a group as this, the Prime Minister should begin seriously to consider means of getting down to the implementation of measures such as the student loan bill, because it is evident that parliament is not handling these things very quickly.

Mr. MacInnis: Would the hon. member permit a question? Does he have in mind the statement made by the Minister of Finance on a national television broadcast, when he said "the Liberal party has the program and the platform and we think we have the leader"?

Mr. Fisher: I do not think I need to comment on that. I believe the house knows my views.

Mr. Cashin: I should like to take a few moments of the time of the committee in order to comment on the extraordinary situation I witnessed a few moments ago. I listened to an hon. member saying that he did not want to take very much upon himself. It seemed to me that he had taken a great deal upon himself in giving advice when he evidently did not even have the support of his own party.

Mr. Peters: Everyone in this group has the support of the party.

Mr. Cashin: In that particular group over there it would seem that if there is one man who does not have their support, it is their deputy leader. He talked about co-operation, and as I watched the reaction of his colleagues there seemed to be a great lack of co-ordination in their view. The point I would like to make is one that I think is valid, because the hon. member, unlike myself or my colleagues over here, has a great forum across this nation and he has pontificated on a great many subjects ad infinitum and occasionally ad nauseam.

I would just like to use this opportunity to draw particular attention to the contradictions and inadequacies of his remarks and to point to what I think is the most crucial point, namely that he is a man who is an independent member and does not really understand the problems of leadership. It is almost like—and I use this by way of analogy—a deaf mute sitting down lip reading a great oration. He can try to write about it, but unless you listen to an oration you cannot appreciate it. I think this represents an analogy to the hon. member for Port Arthur and shows the invalidity of his comments today.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, before saying a word or two concerning what the hon.

member for Port Arthur said I want to refer to an incident in the debate of yesterday when there was an incomplete reporting in Hansard of something that I said. I would like to put the record straight. The Prime Minister was talking about the difficulty of secret conversations appearing on the film, and as reported at page 4681 of Hansard I asked him this question, which is reported incompletely:

> What secret conversations could you have, as a member of the privy council, in the presence of outsiders?

Because of the commotion in the house the latter part of the question was omitted. The Prime Minister replied that he would be very glad to answer that question and went on to say:

> There were conversations in my office with cabinet ministers and we talked about public policy.

The point I was making was simply this, that the Prime Minister has admitted that members of the privy council, subject to the privy council oath, talked about matters of public policy in the presence of outsiders. Because he had done that, and because these conversations were recorded on tape, he wanted the right to excise them from the final version of the film, in the interests of security. In the interests of security these subjects should never have been talked about by members of the privy council in the presence of outsiders.

This surely is a gross dereliction of duty and responsibility, and I thought the Prime Minister failed to give an adequate explanation to the house yesterday with regard to that matter. I have been wondering since, what about these sections of the film that I understand have been cut out of the final production, which nobody is to see now? What about these sections which have recorded permanently secret conversations among members of the privy council on matters of public policy? Who has these sections of the film? In whose possession are they? Into whose hands will they fall?

Mr. Grégoire: The communists.

Mr. Churchill: This is a very grave situation indeed, Mr. Chairman, and I wonder why the Prime Minister failed to give a more adequate explanation of those secret conversations of privy councillors. I wish to make that extension and correction of Hansard because I was inadequately reported yesterday. I do not propose pursuing that subject at the moment, although there is plenty one could say with regard to the inadequate explanation of the Prime Minister.

I would like to talk for just a few minutes about what the hon. member for Port Arthur has said. He is in effect asking for the regimentation of this free institution. He wants everything put in a strait-jacket. He is in favour of curtailing freedom of speech. He is advocating closure. I say this because he referred to the naval debate of 1913. What was the purpose of referring to that unless he was asking the Prime Minister to put into effect what was done at that time? Then in 1956 we had another example of the curtailment of debate.

I am surprised that the deputy leader of the New Democratic party would be advocating the curtailment of speech in this house. No party has made better use of the freedom this institution provides than that party. The members of the New Democratic party time and time again have made use of the time of this house to present their views. In days gone by I well recall filibusters by members of that party week after week on subjects that were before this house, and there was no curtailment of the right of speech.

Mr. Nielsen: Timiskaming and Skeena.

Mr. Churchill: There was no closure applied. The hon. member for Port Arthur was talking about the public image of this institution. I do not know why members of parliament are trying to destroy the image of this institution by constantly condemning it in public. Let them make their statements here in the house—and I welcome the statement he made this morning—and not outside, so we can have a debate on the subject and can reply to such statements. But going outside this house, talking to high school students and other people and saying this is a sick parliament and that the institution has something faulty about it, does a great deal of harm. What are you doing? You are tearing down something that has centuries of tradition and prestige behind it. This is where the flame of freedom glows in Canada, right here in this chamber. There is no suppression of news here, except by those who do not want to give the full facts.

This is where every subject under the sun can be discussed. There is no curtailment of the important news of the country, as happened on the C.B.C. the other night when there was no mention of the fact that parliament was in session. This is the institution that preserves the liberties of the subject. Here is where you have freedom of speech, and now the hon. member wants to curtail it. I ask him, for what purpose?

An hon. Member: To get down to the business.

Mr. Churchill: He said "Let us operate the way they do in the House of Commons at Westminster, where debates are curtailed". Debates in the House of Commons at Westminster are shortened on some occasions by mutual agreement, just as has been done here for years and will continue, I hope, to be done here for years. There is no curtailment of debate in the British House of Commons except by the action of the Speaker, who has greater authority than the Speaker has been given in the Canadian House of Commons. He can, when it comes to the amendment of legislation, accept some amendments and reject others on his own authority. There are certain over-all time limits spent on some aspects of parliamentary business at Westminster, just as we have over-all time limits on the speech from the throne, the budget debate and on supply motions, and within those limits we attempt to operate.

The British House of Commons does not impose a time limit on legislation very often. It is only on average once in two years, on occasions when they have a very controversial piece of legislation in front of them and which they feel they must under the circumstances pass, that the government imposes an allocation of time and there is restriction of debate. This is normally undertaken only after reaching the committee of the whole house stage, after the house has spent several days debating the subject in question. It is not normal practice at all, and it is ridiculous for people to suggest that we should be doing here what they do there as if it was normal practice in the British House of Commons. It is not so at all.

The British house introduced allocation of time back in the days when the Irish nationalists were obstructing the parliament of Great Britain and brought things to a dead stop. Allocation of time was first imposed on two bills affecting Ireland introduced into the House of Commons by Balfour, who was secretary of state for Ireland. That is when they started, and that system of allocation of time has persisted in the British house and was used more frequently during that period and up to the 1930's than it has been since. It is not a popular measure in the British House of Commons. If you were to read the debates over recent years since the second world war, on occasions when allocation of time was applied with regard to legislation, every party in the house at one time or other, Conservative, Liberal and Labour, when forming the government applied an allocation of time order; and each one of those parties when in opposition has resisted the application of such an order. It is not in common use at all. They operate as we do—

Mr. Fisher: Would the hon. member permit me to intervene, because I think he and I are talking about two different things. I am talking about the agreement that is reached every week among the whips of the major parties in England by which definite limits are set on almost everything but the most controversial matters, when the time factor is left open.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Why did the hon. member mention the navy bill if he did not mean closure?

Mr. Fisher: The hon. member is talking about two separate things.

Mr. Churchill: We have had constant communication in this house ever since I have been here with regard to limitation of debate by agreement, which time and time again happens. I can give countless examples of this. We did it yesterday in making a reference to the committee on agriculture.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask a question?

Mr. Churchill: That was done by conference among the party house leaders.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask a question? When did the hon. member as Conservative house leader last attend the meeting of house leaders?

Mr. Churchill: I think it was two months ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Thompson: And he talks of constant communication between house leaders. Does the hon. member consider two months as constant communication?

Mr. Churchill: The hon. and somewhat inexperienced member of the house does not understand the operation of this institution.

Mr. Thompson: And I do not intend to, the way you carry it on.

Mr. Churchill: He never has. I do not know whether he will be given time to gain knowledge of this institution or whether his constituents will throw him out at the next election, but if he stays here long enough perhaps he will get to understand how this institution operates. I have not attended these so-called meetings of the house leaders for two months, and for a very good reason which I gave at Easter time. I am not going to repeat it now, but if the hon. member wants it now I can tell him that it will involve some acrimonious debate.

Mr. Grégoire: You have never given the reason.

Mr. Churchill: Since that time I have been in conversation and had meetings with the government house leader, and we have come to arrangements with regard to the business of this house.

Mr. Grégoire: You never gave your reasons.

Mr. Churchill: That is surely the position of the house leader for the official opposition.

Now, why are meetings with house leaders held? For only two purposes. One meeting is held so that the government house leader can, as a courtesy gesture, outline to the people in the opposition his program for the week or for the month. That is one reason for those meetings. The second reason is when the government house leader wants to get some arrangement with or concession from the opposition. There are only two reasons for having meetings of house leaders, and I found when I was attending these meetings that I was facing not only the government house leader but three associates of his, sitting together and putting the entire blame on me if there was no agreement. I find it much better to deal directly.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on a question of privilege; as house leader of our party I say we were not associate house leaders of the government house leader. I resent that suggestion. But I would say that we were opposed to the continuous obstruction by the house leader of the opposition. He is the one who obstructs the house, and if he were not in the house I think we would move ahead with the business of the house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am sorry if I offended the sensibilities of the person who takes up more time in this house than anyone else. I should put it in this way, that I gained the impression at those meetings that it was the government house leader and three associates who were attempting to put me in a false position. As I say, the hon. member for Red Deer has not an understanding of this institution, and I hope he gets one as time goes on.

Mr. Nielsen: It will take a lot of time.

Mr. Thompson: It will not be according to your interpretation.

Mr. Churchill: Every session there is plenty of opportunity, and this opportunity is taken, to make arrangements among parties for the expediting of business of the house. That is done very frequently and is a normal and a useful arrangement which works reasonably satisfactorily. I am opposed to any limitation of time taken by members of this house, because every hon. member comes here in the same way; he is voted in by the inhabitants of a constituency—the electors—and every hon. member, no matter where he may sit in the house, deserves to be heard. Why should only the deputy leader of the New Democratic party be heard, or the hon. member for Red Deer, or the deputy leader of the Creditistes party? Why do not other hon. members have the chance to be heard? The hon. member for Port Arthur is suggesting limitation of debate so that he can be heard, and perhaps somebody else in his party too, and then all the rest are cut out. I do not approve of that at all. I think an opportunity should be given to others.

Let me just point out this fact. We talk of not getting the business of the country done. I am not at this moment criticizing the government house leader, but let me point out that as of last Friday we completed the 88th day of this session and have passed quite a number of pieces of legislation. They are now listed, of course, in orders of the day.

The hon. member for Port Arthur is wrong in placing the emphasis on legislation. As my colleague and seatmate has pointed out, on more than one occasion the business of the house, after the preliminaries are over, is to determine the amount of money which will be made available for the carrying on of the business of the country, and the question of supply overrides so many of these other matters. It is not just to deal with legislation that we are here; and the weakness of the present session is that we have had only six days on the main estimates. We should be settling the problem of supply first, and then proceeding with some of the legislative matters; or work out the two together so that we would deal with very important pieces of legislation and at the same time with the supply to be voted for the carrying on of the business of the country.

This is the way people get a misconception of the house. We are constantly reading that parliament has not passed much legislation. Parliament is not assembled solely for the purpose of passing legislation. It is assembled in order to determine taxation and the granting of supply. If, incidentally, it passes legislation for the good of the country, that is a gain. But it is quite conceivable that parliament could assemble, go through the preliminaries, pass supply and do nothing else. That is quite conceivable, and it would be essential because the government cannot operate otherwise.

May I say that when people talk about this institution and suggest that sessions are getting too long and this, that and the other thing is happening, they have not searched the record. I wish they would. I have before me a table covering the sessions from 1952 to 1963. It shows the number of sitting days, when each session began and ended and the number of pieces of legislation passed, if that is something that is going to be insisted on. In addition to passing legislation, of course, supply was approved.

In the 1952 session there were 87 sitting days and 55 pieces of legislation were passed. The 1952-53 session lasted 108 days and 54 legislative items were passed. The 1953-54 session lasted 139 sitting days and 67 legislative items were passed. In 1955 the session lasted 140 days, with 60 items passed; in 1956 the session lasted 152 days, with 50 items passed; in 1957 it lasted 71 days, with 39 items passed. The 1957-58 session lasted 78 days and 30 items were passed. The 1958 session took 93 sitting days and 44 items were passed. The 1959 session lasted 127 days and 55 items were passed. The 1960 session lasted 146 days and 48 items were passed. The long session of 1960-61 lasted 174 days and 64 legislative items were passed, in addition to the estimates and everything else. The 1962 session lasted 65 sitting days and 29 items of legislation were passed. The 1962-63 session lasted 72 sitting days and 17 items of legislation were passed. Finally, the 1963 session lasted 117 days and 42 items were passed.

If you will look at the record you will see that in years when an election occurred the sessions were perhaps shorter, but you will also see that there is no great extension of the time of sessions in this country. Despite all the complaints, year after year these sessions are passing supply involving estimates for 20 different departments and are passing 40 to 60 legislative items per session. Over and above that we have the opportunity here to debate and discuss public issues and bring to the attention of the public things that are going on in this country, the mismanagement of the government, the deprivation of the liberties of the subject in some instances. These things are of vital importance to the welfare of Canada, and this is the reason parliament exists. Here the voice of the people may be heard in complete freedom and without any restraint. That is why I reject and resist the suggestion that there should be a limitation on debate imposed by government action, which is what the hon. member for Port Arthur asked for today. He was asking the Prime Minister to impose, I presume with the support of the member for Port Arthur, a limitation on debate, a deprivation of the freedom of speech that every member of this house should enjoy.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we heard, in turn, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) and then the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) tell us about the inefficient manner in which the business of the house is being conducted.

At the start of his remarks, the hon. member for Port Arthur mentioned briefly the famous film "Mr. Pearson", which has now been loudly publicized throughout the country. It has been said that the production costs of that film were about $35,000.

The film was shown to members of the government. For several weeks the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) has been questioned and asked whether or not the film would be shown on the C.B.C. television network.

The Secretary of State does not know what is going to happen; he has nothing to say to the C.B.C.; and he has no suggestions to offer. He tries to obtain some information but gets no answer. So his answer is always the same; he does not know. We are by no means surprised that he does not know anything, because he never knew much in the past.

But one fact remains. That famous film cost the Canadian taxpayer $35,000, and I maintain that the decision not to show the film taken at mid-day by the directors of the C.B.C. clearly establishes that the government gave some instructions, or made some suggestions, to the corporation not to show this film on television.

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. The hon. member for Villeneuve just said that the government instructed the C.B.C. not to show this film. Now I think that the statement in the letter I read a short while ago absolutely contradicts this statement of the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, what the Secretary of State may have read to us a short while ago in no way contradicts what hon. members, as well as the general public, have been thinking for the past few weeks.

Mr. Lamontagne: Prove it.

Mr. Caouette: This Pearson film business has created, among the Canadian public, a sort of desire mixed with anxiety, to see what had been done for $35,000. It seems to me that the wish of the people to view a film which cost such a tremendous amount of money is perfectly justified. The public should at least have the satisfaction of seeing what was done with the $35,000 which the film cost. But such is not exactly the point.

Mr. Chairman, the C.B.C., through its decision, and a letter which was made public at noon, proved once more it has some entirely irresponsible governors. Besides, it is not the first time I rise in the house to protest against the doings of the C.B.C., against its discriminatory practices.

I shall give to the Secretary of State another example: Last night, we could see on television, for two hours, the St. Jean Baptiste parade. Afterwards, we listened to the C.B.C. newscast, during which we were offered sequences from this parade we had just seen.

Before the showing of these crumbs, we heard, in the name of the Liberal party, of the government of the Prime Minister, the hon. member for Dollard "Desormeaux" (Mr. Rouleau) offering his good wishes to the French Canadians on the occasion of the feast of St. Jean Baptiste; we then heard the good wishes of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and afterwards, those of the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas). But as far as we are concerned, there was no mention of the wishes we were making for our own fellow citizens, the French Canadians in Canada.

Mr. Grégoire: Shame.

Mr. Caouette: Certainly, it is a shame. Those are the doings of the C.B.C., not only for the last couple of weeks, but ever since its inception.

I wonder whether an individual such as Mr. Ouimet, who is paid $40,000 per year, has the right to indulge in discrimination within the C.B.C. which is financed by the whole Canadian people, no matter what partisanship or political colour might exist, all across the country.

Mr. Chairman, last night, we saw another instance of discrimination and I hold the governor of the C.B.C. responsible—

Mr. Choquette: The president.

Mr. Caouette: —president or governor. We write him letters and he does not even have enough time or courage to sign his answers in his own handwriting. He uses a rubber stamp.

For the information of the Secretary of State, Mr. Ouimet is an arrogant person. He thinks he is above the national parliament and can look down upon hon. members of parliament as minor cogs in the machinery for the administration of public affairs. He flouts the federal hon. members. He thinks he is above the government and that is so true that the Secretary of State tells us that he has no authority to tell the C.B.C. how the most elementary justice must be applied within confederation.

Mr. Lamontagne: Read the act.

Mr. Caouette: The C.B.C. has a French branch in our province of Quebec—

Mr. Grégoire: All we do is pay.

Mr. Caouette: As suggested by the hon. member for Lapointe all we do is pay and that is it.

But I would be remiss if I did not draw to the attention of the Secretary of State the doings of C.B.C.

To come back to the "Mr. Pearson" film, it cost $35,000; the people know very well the amount that was spent. If that film is not fit to be seen by the public, C.B.C. officials show their lack of qualifications because when you spend $35,000 and then say that the film is not to be shown because it is not of a good quality, there is something wrong somewhere.

If businessmen and industrialists operated that way, they would have had deficits for a long time, just like C.B.C. has had for many years, because it is administered by unqualified people.

Another point I should like to raise is the business of the house. The government introduces its legislation, and we heard the hon. member for Port Arthur say: Let the government restrict the discussion. Perhaps the members of his own party would be the first ones to be affected, because last year, during the previous session, we saw two members of the New Democratic party carry on a filibuster for several days take a pride in having us sit as late as Christmas eve; they rejoiced at that. It is fortunate that the hon. member for Port Arthur specified that his opinions were not necessarily shared by the members of his group, that he was probably the only one to think that way, but that he took the liberty of suggesting to the Prime Minister that he cut the debates if necessary.

Another question was raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre clearly accusing the hon. member for Port Arthur of making outside this house statements he should make here so that we may discuss them. At this point, I shall call the attention of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre to the fact that if there is a group in this house which endeavours by all means to extend the debate, it is the Conservative group. No wonder, because recently we could read in the papers that the Leader of the Opposition had decided to use every possible means one can think of to come back into office. This is to no avail, for the Leader of the Opposition will never come back into power in this country.

[Text]

Mr. Diefenbaker: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Chairman. I can hear the applause for the hon. gentleman by hon. members opposite; the alliance is clear. However, the statement made by him is entirely false.

Mr. Dupuis: You do not even know what he said.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I heard the Leader of the Opposition say that my statement is untrue—

Mr. Dupuis: He does not know what you said.

Mr. Caouette: —but I do not have to point out what one reads in the papers, one only has to look at the conduct of the Leader of the Opposition in the house to have immediately the proof that he is trying to embarrass the government as much as possible and that he is trying by all possible means to create confusion instead of informing the Canadian people of what is going on.

I hear some members speaking in the back of the house, chatterers who have never been able to do anything else. Mr. Chairman, we had the proof of this when they were in power for six years and everything they failed to do during those six years they are now blaming the present government for not doing it now.

It is not that I approve the manner in which the government introduces its legislation. Indeed not, because we object to it. We also find that a great deal of time is lost because this legislation is not ready.

I have just been among the people and at the present time we keep hearing about the distinctive flag. Everybody wants a distinctive flag. Now, the Leader of the Opposition, who is against the resolution of the Prime Minister—I am told that 50 members of his party might want to speak on the flag resolution—himself promised a distinctive national flag seven or eight years ago. However, he did not have the courage to propose one when he was prime minister.

It was the same prime minister who stated publicly when there were a million unemployed in Canada: Ladies and gentlemen, I shall not close an eye and I shall not sleep as long as there is a single unemployed in Canada. And since that time the former prime minister seems terribly tired because he has not slept for five years. He was almost paralysed at that time.

This is the game that we see. This is the spectacle that the Leader of the Opposition is showing now to the public. He is trying to stir up one part of the population against the other, and putting the blame on the government.

Mr. Pigeon: This is untrue.

Mr. Caouette: I hear the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm say it is untrue. Yet, here is the same member who turned white, as white as a sheet, the other day, when his leader was speaking.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege—

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm rises on a point of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I should like to tell the house that I object to the views expressed by the hon. member for Villeneuve and which are offensive. I can tell the house that he has entirely lost the people's confidence, because Quebec no longer believes in Mussolini.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, there is no question of privilege in what my good friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm has just said. He is objecting. Have you ever seen him not objecting in the house? He objects about anything. He is always a conscientious objector, wherever he may be. But he does not know why he is objecting. He is a "protestant" in the proper sense of the word.

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: What were you doing in the last war?

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: He reminds me of swallows pricking a squirrel from time to time here. Those people feel sick—

Mr. Pigeon: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman. Surely, the hon. member for Villeneuve abuses in his remarks—

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Is the hon. member rising on a point of privilege?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: The hon. member for Villeneuve abuses his privileges. I am not surprised to hear those remarks and I would suggest to him not to take Canada for a country once ruled, as it was seen in the old countries, by Hitler and Mussolini. Moreover, his great admiration for those two dictators is well known.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I cannot accept the words of the hon. member as a point of privilege.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, what the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm just said was prompted by his leader. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm refers to Hitler and Mussolini; I will tell him one thing. Last year, why did certain ministers from his own party run away from the Conservative party? Because their own leader acted high handedly with them.

"Pigeons" and "parrots" are not lacking in the house at present. But there is nevertheless a limit to hearing those people lay the blame on everybody.

For instance how can the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre state that at house leaders' meetings the government house leader has the support of the three other parties, when we know full well that it is not the case with the Conservative party, which is not even represented at those meetings.

As for us, when the government introduces a piece of legislation in the interests of the Canadian people, we shall support it. But if it is not in the interests of the Canadian people, then we shall oppose the government. That is why we stated for instance, that we shall give our full support to the government's proposal with regard to the adoption of a distinctive flag.

But as for a second flag, we shall not support it; should we do so, it would surely be with reservations. On this point, we shall be as unanimous as in connection with the adoption of a national distinctive flag. This means that we are consistent with what we have been preaching for a number of years, not only in the province of Quebec but throughout this country as well.

In concluding, Mr. Chairman, I will say this. The impression created by the Conservative party in Canada at present is that the national distinctive flag concerns the French Canadians only, while the union jack will become the flag of the English Canadians.

An attempt is being made to have people believe that the national distinctive flag will be accepted merely to please French Canadians in the province of Quebec, when this is not the case. We have not asked that the emblem of France appear on the national distinctive flag. We requested a totally Canadian flag which will be readily recognizable as Canadian in Canada as well as abroad.

It is this impression that some people are attempting to create in Canada, in Ontario, in the western provinces and in the maritime provinces, to the effect that the adoption of a national distinctive flag is solely to please French Canadians. I must say that the Leader of the Opposition is putting the Canadian people in a dilemma and, instead of filling the chasm which divided the two ethnic groups in Canada, he is widening and deepening it by his untimely and irresponsible statements made in western Canada, such as those he made recently—

Mr. Pigeon: It is not true.

Mr. Caouette: It is disgraceful for the Leader of the Opposition to state anywhere in Canada, as he did in Toronto, that a small group of the splinter parties wanted to maintain the government in office in order to keep on receiving the $18,000 a year they are getting, because he knew then that he was shamelessly lying.

An hon. Member: Shame.

Mr. Caouette: He asserted that he, the Leader of the Opposition, had voted against the increase of emoluments.

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member, according to the translation, has said with regard to the Leader of the Opposition that he made a statement and that he knew he was lying. I am not certain whether the words "lie" and "lying" are now acceptable in parliamentary practice, but I would like to test the case and ask for a withdrawal.

The Deputy Chairman: I have listened to the hon. member for Villeneuve, and if the translation which I heard is a correct translation of what he said, and he did use the word "lie", I would suggest to him it might be far better if he were to phrase his statement in some other way.

Mr. Churchill: He must withdraw the statement. It is not just a rephrasing.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, that translation, intended for my very good friend from Winnipeg South Centre, did not help any. What I meant to say, and I repeat it in French, is this: The Leader of the Opposition tried to make people believe, which in English means:

[Text]

—misled people like the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I understand the eagerness of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre—

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, do I understand that the hon. member has withdrawn his remarks accusing the Leader of the Opposition of lying? I would like your ruling on that.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I never said "lie". I never uttered that word. I was speaking in French and the translation given is inadequate. The English translation would mean:

[Text]

—misled the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre.

The Deputy Chairman: If it is the contention of the hon. member for Villeneuve that the translation was not exactly what he did say, then maybe the committee would accept the statement of the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. MacInnis: On that point of order, Mr. Chairman, in that the hon. member has made the statement that the translation was incorrect—

An hon. Member: How would you know; you don't speak French?

Mr. MacInnis: I might remind the hon. member that when I do have something to say I don't say it from behind the curtain. What I want to know from the hon. member is this: if in referring to the fact that the translation was wrong, is this a complaint against the translation staff?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, on the question of privilege, I think we have had enough such cases lately to recognize that a French word may have several meanings in English and vice-versa.

Now, I feel the interpretation given by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) deserves to be accepted as such. We had a striking example of the point I wish to make when the premier of the province of Quebec made a request at the federal-provincial conference and the French word "demande" was translated by "demand", which, although quite similar, does not mean the same thing.

In my opinion, the hon. member should accept the interpretation given by the hon. member for Villeneuve of the word he used in French.

Mr. Caouette: I was not listening to the translation myself. It is my friends the Conservatives who listen to the translation. As for me, when they speak, I listen to them directly, because I can understand their language. I am not taking them to task. I merely wish to point out that I was not listening to the translation. I am sure the interpretation team is doing a good job, and I congratulate them. Far be it from me to accuse them of interpreting incorrectly what I said in my speech.

Mr. Chairman, this session has already been going on for months and all hon. members would no doubt welcome a summer recess. That is only natural.

Mr. Pigeon: We do not want any. In our group, we want to work.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm says he wants to work. There you have the most useless member of this house who wants to keep on doing nothing all summer long.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I am never absent from the house. Since the beginning of the session, the hon. member for Villeneuve has been coming here once a week, and I would ask the Canadian Mussolini to use his own judgment.

Mr. Choquette: He meant the most harmful member.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say here that I strongly object to the remarks made by the irresponsible member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

I ask, Mr. Chairman, that you make the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm withdraw the words "Canadian Mussolini".

Mr. Pigeon: No, this is a fact.

Mr. Choquette: On the point of order, Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member for Villeneuve said that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm was the most useless member in the house, it was a slip of the tongue. He actually meant to say that the hon. member is the most harmful member here, and he is absolutely right.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: In the list of unparliamentary expressions I have here, I do not find the one the hon. member used. Nevertheless, I think it might be in the interest of better decorum in the house if the hon. member would rephrase his statement and use some other word.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: I believe you are right, Mr. Chairman. I did make a mistake when I said the hon. member for Villeneuve is a Canadian Mussolini. I should have said a Canadian Hitler.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. In my opinion, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is challenging your authority. I feel he should withdraw the words he has just spoken.

Mr. Chairman, I request a ruling on that point.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: May I say to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm that I do not think the expression he used is a proper one and perhaps he would be willing to help the Chair by changing the phrase he used, and withdrawing it.

Mr. MacInnis: On a question of privilege. I have had some trouble identifying the member concerned, but the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville has just made another interjection from his seat and I wish to take exception to his conduct, especially to his conduct yesterday evening when he saw fit to send a note implying something which, actually, was not so, and not signing his name to it. He has been identified as the sender of the note, and his conduct is not the conduct one expects from members on the other side of the house.

The Deputy Chairman: I think the best course would be for the committee to allow the chairman to handle one problem at a time. At the moment I am asking the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm to rephrase the statement he made. I think that would be more in keeping with what we would like to have on public record.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, as I have a great deal of respect for the authority of the house, I am pleased to withdraw what I said but, on the other hand, the hon. member for Villeneuve will admit that he has a lot of admiration for Mussolini and Hitler.

Mr. Grégoire: Silly, as usual.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, we are not asking for anything more from the hon. member, because he is known in Quebec as a kind of political clown. That is obvious, when you think of the questions he asks in the house. They are stupid, nonsensical and, once again, he has just made stupid assertions in the house. We shall leave him to his stupidity and keep from falling into his trap.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: I will appeal to the good sense of the committee and ask members whether in discussing the motion before us we could refrain from these personalities.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. The regrettable expression just used by the hon. member for Villeneuve suits very well a former Liberal member of the house, which he was in the past.

Mr. Dupuis: Never.

Mr. Pigeon: Liberal candidate.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, he has just shown once again that he is always off the track; he is perfectly ignorant and he will never know any better than what he is doing now.

Mr. Choquette: An excretion.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the Conservatives are in the habit of always making interruptions whenever we throw at them what they have done and what they are still doing to the country, which goes to show that we are right in not believing them any more than the party opposite, on the government side.

All we are asking is that the government introduce its legislation, so that all political parties, whatever they are, may consider it. It is up to the government to see to it that bills are passed, so that the public can benefit by legislation put forward to serve the Canadian individual and to take advantage of Canadian abundance, the potential abundance which exists and which we can create by our intelligence, our brains, our labour, our ability and our great potentialities.

If we do this, we shall be of service, not only to tired members of parliament, but to the people who are quite tired of paying taxes only to get results such as we have now.

[Text]

Mr. Thompson: I think it would be well if we could bring the debate in this committee down to a more reasonable level than we have had in the last few minutes.

We are in the fourth day of the debate on interim supply.

Mr. McIlraith: The fifth.

Mr. Thompson: If we go back a few years we will find from the evidence of the record that rarely did such a debate occupy more than a day. In fact, it was very often over in an hour or two. We have discussed at length the film "Mr. Pearson". We have discussed the topics brought to the attention of the minister of immigration on Monday—something about the inadequacies of the immigration laws as they are presently administered. We have heard members call each other liars and a lot of other names which are certainly far below the dignity of this house of which we are all members.

It seems to me we ought to come back to just a little more sense of balance and understand that it is our particular responsibility at this time to authorize the expenditure of certain moneys for the carrying on of the administration of the government and our country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: We should let this film matter go by the way for a little while and accept the word that has been given by various members of this house in answer to charges that have been made against them, in the honourable way that we would expect our own word to be accepted. For this reason, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me it would be far more befitting our responsibilities if we were to come to an amiable conclusion of this debate, because obviously we are not debating the subject which is before us at all. I was going to answer the house leader of the official opposition and some of the remarks he made, because I disagree with a number of them; but let us leave that aside as well. Certainly no one can disagree with the fact that I have just mentioned, namely that our responsibility now is to authorize the expenditure for another month of the moneys needed by the government in their responsibilities of carrying on the administration of this country.

We may not have agreed with all the things said by the hon. member for Port Arthur in regard to facilitating the work of this house, but on the other hand we must certainly agree with his basic premise, that we are not making the progress that we should be making. This responsibility falls upon, not just the government, not just the official opposition, but upon all of us. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has inferred very specifically that the house leaders of the minor parties have been in some kind of liaison or behind the scenes plot to work against the official opposition. I do not agree with this; I do not think it is true at all. Many remarks have been made recently to the effect that the fact this house of minorities is not making progress is the fault of the minor parties. This is not true at all. When the house leaders of the minor parties do come together in an effort to facilitate the work of the house, I am convinced they do so with a real depth of sincerity and, shall I say, patriotism, to try and make this house of minorities work. I say it can work if we make up our minds that it will work. It is not good enough just to be harping back to Westminster to try and show that they do not do things any differently than we do, or that they do things differently than we do. Our responsibility now is to each other and it is also to the nation, because there is important legislation on the order paper, waiting to be dealt with. The way we have been carrying on these past four days is certainly neither to the credit of anybody in this house, nor to the advantage of anybody in this house—because we are the ones who are the final losers, as well as the country.

An hon. Member: Are you speaking for yourself?

Mr. Thompson: Yes, I am speaking for myself. For four days we have listened patiently to the carryings on of this house without making any remarks at all, because it seemed there was already too much being said.

I would appeal to hon. members present today to think upon these things. It is not a question of throwing sticks or stones, as an editorial in today's Globe and Mail points out; it is a question of facing up, in an honourable and responsible way, to the things we have been given the responsibility of doing. It is not a question, as I have just mentioned, of looking back to the past to try to justify our present shortcomings and sins. Rather it seems to me, we should take our hats off to the past, but take our coats off to the future and settle down and get to work.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, newspapers operating as they do, I quite imagine there will be a report out of this chamber today referring to a difference of opinion between the hon. member for Port Arthur and myself. I do not deny for a moment the difference of opinion which was reflected a while ago, but I would be very happy if some newspaper reporter would be responsible enough—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: —to draw attention to the wide measure of agreement between the hon. member for Port Arthur and myself, rather than just drawing attention to the disagreement. So far as the introduction of closure under the rule that is in our books is concerned, I am against it, as are other members of my party; but this is not true for all the members of my party. However, we are all united, and strongly so, behind the position stated by the hon. member for Port Arthur to the effect that the time has come when we have got to do some planning of our parliamentary time.

I feel so strongly about this, and at the same time I am so hopeful that it is an idea that will yet prevail, that it is not my purpose to speak about it in controversial terms. The reason for this I am sure is clear to all hon. members. I have had the honour of being named as the chairman of the subcommittee on procedure of the special committee on procedure and organization, and in both that subcommittee and the main committee we are wrestling with this question of finding some way by which we might allocate our parliamentary time.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: The position in which I find myself makes me, in effect, a negotiator among the parties in this house. Because I am a negotiator, because I am still hopeful that the viewpoints of the various groups in this house can be brought together behind a proposal for planning and allocating our time, I shall refrain from indulging in any argumentative discussion of that point during the course of these remarks.

Some hon. Members: Five o'clock.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, I hear hon. members calling my attention to the fact that it is five o'clock.

Mr. Pascoe: It is one minute past.

The Chairman: Order. In order to permit the house to proceed to the consideration of private members' business, and in accordance with section 3 of standing order 15, it is my duty to leave the chair.

Progress reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely notices of motions, papers; private bills, public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. As there are five private bills standing for consideration in committee of the whole, is it agreed that in accordance with section 1 of standing order 54 they be referred to committee of the whole in one motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SEICHO-NO-IE

The house in committee on Bill No. S-23, to incorporate Seicho-No-Ie—Mr. Ryan—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Clauses 1 to 17 agreed to.

On clause 18—Territorial powers.

Mr. Macdonald: Mr. Chairman, could the sponsor of the bill explain to us the effect of this amendment?

Mr. Ryan: Mr. Chairman, the effect is simply to make clear in the bill that this religious body as incorporated must still make an annual summary or return to the federal government, as if it were an incorporation with share capital.

Clause 18 agreed to.

Bill reported and read the third time and passed.

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. S-15, to incorporate Evangeline Savings and Mortgage Company.—Mr. Ryan (for Mr. Regan).

Bill No. S-18, respecting the Montreal Board of Trade.—Mr. Mackasey.

Bill No. S-30, respecting the Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company.—Mr. Chrétien (for Mr. Lachance).

Bill No. S-31, respecting the Casualty Company of Canada.—Mr. Chrétien (for Mr. Lachance).

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 18, consideration of the motion of Mr. Brown for the second reading of Bill No. S-27, respecting The Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I should caution the house that if the hon. member for Brantford (Mr. Brown) speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it is not usual to have the Bell Telephone Company before parliament, and when we do I think we should take the opportunity to ask a few questions about the company. I understand that this bill is to increase from 15 to 20 the maximum permissible number of directors. I think the time has arrived that we should look at the Bell Telephone Company in particular, as the largest telephone company in the nation, and the other telephone companies, with a view to incorporating them as a public utility to be operated for the good of the nation.

Telephones are a part of the same field of communication which includes radio, television, telegraph lines and so on. The telephone is used by everybody across the nation in the course of their daily activities. The Bell Telephone Company has been able to exercise tremendous control over the rights of the individual and in my opinion these rights have quite often been abused by the corporation. In Canada we have a large microwave communications system extending from coast to coast which is owned by the telephone companies of Canada. About 25 per cent of its operations are for purposes of television broadcasting, and a considerable proportion is used for communication purposes by the army, navy and air force.

The telephone has become a vital necessity in the carrying on of the affairs of the nation not only in a military sense but in the business and personal life of the people. I believe that in amending this act we should also include an amendment to provide for the expropriation of the Bell Telephone Company so that, like most other communications media, it will come directly under the control of the federal government.

There are many abuses to which people are subjected by the Bell Telephone Company. Some of these abuses have come to my attention since I have been a resident of southern Ontario, because in northern Ontario we have a different telephone company and the same rules do not apply. I am informed that many arbitrary acts are perpetrated by the Bell Telephone Company in its relations with the general public. If the company wishes to do so it will supply a telephone to an applicant, but if it does not wish to supply a telephone it does not do so. If it wishes to impose a surcharge on a particular line it does so. If a bill is overdue several days the company has been known to cut off the telephone service, although the person may have an exceptionally good credit rating. This has been done several times in the rooming house where I live. It is caused partly by the fact that several persons use the telephone, with the result that the bills are quite large and cannot be apportioned until such time as they arrive at the house. Of course, the company charges an extra $5 to reconnect the telephone. They do not give the normal 30 days for the payment of a bill which is usually extended to those with a good credit rating. Instead they adopt an arbitrary attitude and may cut off the telephone within two or three days with or without warning.

In my opinion the company has used methods that are not conducive to the good and the welfare of the nation. Therefore I believe the time has arrived when we should put the telephone system under the control of the federal government in the same way that other communications media are being operated as public utilities at the present time. There are probably many who have had an extended connection with the Bell Telephone Company and know more about it than I do. However, I would request an amendment that would provide not only for this company but other telephone companies as well to be brought under public ownership.

I hope that the bill will be referred to a committee. I presume it will and I hope that consideration will be given by members of the committee to a discussion of the merits of whether or not this particular amendment should be granted to the Bell Telephone Company and whether or not it will prove to be in the interests of the people of Canada. The argument may be made, of course, that this does not come within the purview of this amendment. This is perfectly true, but the Bell Telephone Company has a federal charter and therefore it is our responsibility to consider the broader aspects of its operations whenever an opportunity arises as the result of the introduction of amendments. I hope that the sponsor will ask that the bill be referred to a committee so that some consideration can be given to present problems and the advantages that Canada would obtain if the Bell Telephone Company were brought under public ownership in the same way as other communications media which operate under the control and direction of the federal government.

Mr. E. Nasserden (Rosthern): Mr. Speaker, I have a few remarks I should like to make on the bill. In reading its language certain questions arise in my mind. First of all, I should like to know if the majority of directors at the present time are Canadians. I should also like to raise the question whether or not all of the directors should be Canadian, in an organization of this type dealing with communications in this country. Generally speaking there is no reason to raise a question of this kind in regard to many of our commercial organizations, but when communications are involved I think the question is a valid one. I should also like the sponsor of the bill to indicate whether there would be any objection to including such a provision in the bill. There is nothing more I wish to say at the moment, but I should like these questions to be dealt with.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I must remind the house that the hon. member is now closing the debate.

Mr. J. E. Brown (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, this is a very simple bill. Its sole purpose is to increase from 15 to 20 the number of directors provided in the act incorporating the company. I might point out to the house that in 1888, when the original bill was passed by parliament, the number of telephones in Canada was 14,550 while at December 31, 1963, there were over 4,090,000. I am referring to those operated by the Bell Telephone Company. In 1888 the total assets of this company amounted to $2,224,290 while at the end of 1963 their assets totalled $2,347,095,000.

In answer to the question of the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden) I should like to state that at December 31, 1963, the number of shareholders of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada was 195,037. Of this amount, the total number of Canadian shareholders was 189,718. The total number of shares owned by United States citizens was 3,969. The total number of shares owned by other foreign shareholders was 1,350. As can be seen, this is an almost wholly owned Canadian company. As a matter of fact 93.1 per cent of the capital stock is held by Canadians and 97.3 per cent of the shareholders were residents in Canada as at the end of December, 1963. The holding of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company as of December 31, 1963, was 2.8 per cent of the total number of shares.

These figures I have given the house in order to refute the statement made in the house by the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) in the earlier debate on the bill. Further, in reply to the hon. member for Rosthern (Mr. Nasserden), I should like to state that all the directors of the Bell Telephone Company except one; are Canadians; that is, 14 out of the 15 present directions are Canadian citizens. Only one director is a United States citizen and he is also a director of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company which holds 2.8 per cent of the stock. At the present time, therefore, all the directors but one are Canadian citizens. This is a very high proportion of directors who are Canadian citizens and a very high percentage of shareholders.

With these few explanatory remarks, Mr. Speaker, I shall draw my own remarks to a close and leave the bill to the discretion of the house.

Mr. Peters: May I ask, Mr. Speaker, if it is the intention to send this bill to a committee?

Mr. Brown: I think the bill will, of course, go to the committee on railways canals, and telegraph lines.

Mr. Pigeon: Could the hon. member give the house a list of the directors of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada as well as a list of the companies those directors control in Canada?

Mr. Brown: I will be glad to bring any of those matters before the committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on railways, canals, and telegraph lines.

NOVA SCOTIA SAVINGS AND LOAN COMPANY

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax) moved the second reading of Bill No. S-34, to incorporate Nova Scotia Savings and Loan Company.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill to incorporate the Nova Scotia Savings and Loan Company. A company known as the Nova Scotia Loan and Building Society has carried on business for many years in the province of Nova Scotia with its head office in Halifax. This company has provided a service to the people of that area. Because of certain limitations of the old building society type of incorporation that has been in existence for a long time, it has been found desirable by the company to continue its present business by incorporation of this Nova Scotia Savings and Loan Company. The two companies would then be amalgamated. I would expect to give a more detailed explanation in committee.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the standing committee on banking and commerce.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING WITHHOLDING OR REFUSAL OF RIGHTS

Mr. Jack McIntosh (Swift Current-Maple Creek) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-39, to amend the Civil Service Act (bureaucratic oppression).

He said: Mr. Speaker, when I first introduced this bill in parliament I said, by way of explanation, that I had reason to believe some officials of the government, by virtue of their office, have on occasion intentionally deprived certain citizens of their rights declared under the provisions of Canadian statutes. I believe these officials have intentionally withheld those rights or refused the implementation of those rights until, in a given case, the citizen has bent to the official's will.

[Mr. Brown.]

At present there is no penalty in the Civil Service Act for such bureaucratic oppression. This bill will provide a penalty if guilt for such action can be established. Perhaps I should have prefaced my remarks by saying any allegation I may make is not directed against the rank and file of the civil service, most of whom I believe are loyal, devoted and efficient public servants, but rather against the few who trample freedom and ride roughshod over individual rights. Generally speaking, I think I would agree that Canada has a high grade civil service, manned by personnel who are dedicated people, but a service that is handicapped by a system, a system badly needing revision, and one which in many ways represses initiative and favours the status quo.

It has been said that an administrator is a bureaucrat whose prime loyalty is to the public good; a bureaucrat is an administrator whose prime loyalty is to the administrative machine of which he is a cog. While I know that bureaucrats are necessary I also feel a number of them overemphasize their authority and at times eliminate justice. I am one of those who believe that public servants are the servants of the public and not the masters, as some seem to believe by their actions.

Many Canadians, I feel certain, could testify to at some time having suffered the embarrassment and humiliation of tangling with some dominating bureaucrat within our federal departments. If we allow trained, efficient civil servants to take over we get a bureaucracy, and democracy ceases to exist. This fact is a weakness in our democratic system, a weakness which we as members of parliament are charged to watch.

I have stated before and I will repeat that, no matter what party the taxpayers elect, no matter what government is in power, the bureaucratic dictators still run the country. To a large degree the government is a captive of the civil service, and the ministers are hostages to their deputies and senior departmental officials. Successive governments in the capital of our country have, without thought, or I should say without intent, gradually vacated certain areas of authority or responsibility which, in a democracy, should always be occupied by publicly elected officials or their representatives, leaving the departmental officials decisions which they have neither the practical training nor the mandate to exercise.

It may be a revelation to some Canadians, particularly to us members of parliament, to find out for ourselves the degree to which civil servants have taken over the affairs of our country. As members of parliament I believe that two statements made by the high commissioner of New Zealand in a speech to the royal commonwealth society should be of interest to us. The first statement refers to travellers in his country, New Zealand, and the contact they have with people in that country. I think the same applies here in Canada:

> Even for the native inhabitants it will be found that the public servant has more effect on their lives than all the politicians, businessmen, church, law and press combined.

The second statement that I bring to hon. members' attention is this:

> In France before de Gaulle, governments came and went three or four times a year, but the government of France by its highly organized public servants carried on, hardly aware of the changes.

Some hon. members may say this cannot happen in our country; but I wonder if it can. Just a few days ago a press item appeared in the Ottawa Journal regarding civil defence, and dealing with an appearance by a former deputy minister, now a minister of the crown, before the Commons special defence committee. It was in the issue of Friday June 19 and read as follows:

> Mr. Drury was questioned in his statement that survival of government was ensured through special shelters, complete with essential records, and rapid transit to them of government officers and a selected 200 top officials, presumably to the four major underground bunkers in the Ottawa area.

He was asked by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. Smith):

> —where M.P.'s stood on the list of priorities for evacuation in an emergency—

And the hon. member was told:

> —they were well down the list, since the plan was to evacuate "only important people."

In other words they do not feel that M.P.'s are important people. In fact lots of times I have felt that maybe we were a sort of nuisance so far as civil servants were concerned.

The article continues:

> The laughter this prompted caused Mr. Drury to explain that the 200 officials were top ones "who work for the government"—

This apparently drew another laugh in the committee.

To me, this degree of influence by the civil servants is startling. As a member of parliament since 1958, I have become increasingly concerned about the number of times I have had to accept a ruling, or an answer from a departmental official without a means to challenge the decision of the bureaucrat. At present there is no adequate parliamentary procedure available to a member of parliament to obtain redress for his constituents' grievances against an unjust ruling handed down by departmental officials, other than appealing to a very busy minister.

In the case of an individual citizen who comes into conflict with some government official, there does not exist for him any procedure whereby he can challenge the action of the executive. There are executives in fact who appear to have the sole power to interpret the act they are charged with administering, and do so without the risk of being penalized for any wrong action on their part. In a great many cases I would suggest the rights of the individuals are being sacrificed to the efficiency of government planners. I have stated previously that I believe the basic trouble lies in the fact that the government has allowed itself to become captive of the civil service, and the ministers are hostages to their deputies and senior departmental officials.

The most recent personal experience I encountered in this regard took place in the private members' hour on Tuesday June 16, when I endeavoured to pilot Bill C-37 through this house. It was talked out by government supporters, with the main excuse that it would be too difficult for the department to administer. The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) brought this to the attention of the house when he said, as recorded at page 4366 of Hansard:

> It—

—referring to Bill C-37—

> —will not receive the attention it deserves because the spokesman for the government, the hon. member for Chambly-Rouville (Mr. Pilon) raised the usual objections which come from officials. He said it would be difficult for the department to administer it; that it would be hard to determine the number of people who might qualify.
> Well, all these difficulties can be overcome. The records are there; they just have to be searched. They show when a man enlisted, how long he was in Canada and how long he was overseas. They have been carefully kept and this is not an insuperable job at all. I was amused to hear the objections which emanate from officialdom. I do not mind the officials raising the objections; that is their job. They have to point out to ministers and parliamentary secretaries the difficulties in the way of new legislation, and they are responsible for showing that these difficulties exist. But as far as the government is concerned, it should deal with the difficulties and take the necessary steps to put some new measure into effect, if it is found as a matter of policy to be worth while.

I wish to document statements I have made in support of my bill by actual cases I have dealt with, where I have felt citizens have been deprived of their rights under our statutes or had their rights unneccessarily withheld for a lengthy period of time. The first document I have is a copy of a letter received by a legal firm in my constituency, and it has to do with an immigration case. It is signed by a deputy minister of that department, and I will just read parts of it:

> This application has been held up, pending completion of inquiries into the circumstances under which certain members of the applicant's family arranged for the illegal entry into Canada of a young Chinese lady under the guise of the applicant's sister.

The letter continues, and further on there is this paragraph to which I object most strongly:

> I am quite prepared to authorize the admission of Mr. Wong's wife to Canada, now that the facts with respect to the illegal entry of his "sister" have been firmly established: but before doing so I think I should give Mr. Wong a final opportunity to show his good faith by giving the department a truthful statement with respect to the matters which he has thus far been attempting to conceal.

Then there is another sentence:

> If you can persuade him that he should do so, this would go far in re-establishing Mr. Wong's good faith in his dealings with the department and would facilitate very greatly his wife's early admission—

To my mind, the last sentence amounts to something like blackmail. If we were to use it in our business, I am sure a charge would be laid against us. I turn again to the beginning of the paragraph where it is stated: "I am quite prepared to authorize". This is the deputy minister. He does not say "my minister" or "my government". It is the boss of the department speaking. Where do these people get this power? Who gave it to them? We gave it to them. That is why I say we have a bureaucratic dictatorship today and not a government of the people. I heard someone say "the minister", meaning the minister gave him that power. This confirms what I said before; we have lost the authority we had. It also confirms what the minister said the other day—that members of parliament are not important. We see here the same situation as exists in France where the country can run without members of parliament. Maybe we should change this system and save the people a lot of money by not having members of parliament. Let us admit we have a bureaucratic dictatorship.

I have here a copy of a letter where the postal cancellation stamp by the Department of Citizenship and Immigration is the product of the deputy minister's signature, not the minister's. Therefore, I contend that the most powerful man in the department is not the minister, but his deputy.

I would turn to another department, now, the Department of National Revenue. Some time ago I had a request from one of the local schools to bring into Canada some tuned hand bells which the applicant thought were duty free. Then I received a letter from the department saying they were not duty free. I will not repeat all the arguments used by the applicant or by myself as representative of the constituency to prove that they were duty free, other than to quote a sentence from the last letter I received from the minister. It reads:

> The fact remains that tuned hand bells are not provided for in item 696(1). While they may well be instruments, they are not "philosophical instruments" nor "scientific instruments".

I used the department's own terms to prove otherwise. If we look at any dictionary we see that the term "philosophical" means "belonging to or used in the study of material philosophy or physics." Philosophy means reasoned science. There are many definitions of "science", but the fourth one set out in the dictionary I use is this: "any one of the seven liberal arts—grammar, rhetoric, logic, arithmetic, music, geometry, astronomy". The definition of "music" is "the science and art of the rhythmic combination of tones." In other words, the department set out those two qualifications, that they must be philosophic instruments or scientific instruments, and when we proved that they were, the answer was still, no.

The next case is a peculiar one. It has to do with the commanding officer of a local unit. To make the story as brief as I can, this commanding officer was let out of his command without cause. A mutual friend asked me if I would try to find out why this officer was let out. After five or six weeks of trying, I finally went to the Prime Minister's office about it and received an answer. I will not read the whole of the letter which was written to me on the subject. The main part of it was to the effect that the unit was in a parlous state, that much difficulty had been experienced with reports and returns, and that the over-all situation was most unsatisfactory. In other words, this officer was a poor administrator. Incidentally, the officer concerned did not know I had endeavoured to find out why he was let out.

When I got this information I went to this mutual friend of ours and said: "You had better tell him now why he was let out". This was done. At that time, the commanding officer did not really care whether he got the unit back or not. However, when he received this information he became very annoyed and said: "All right. Now they will either put up or shut up". I got permission to go over all his reports and as far as administration was concerned there was not one lower than "good". They were all either "very good" or "excellent".

Most of the transaction was carried on by correspondence. I could see by the reports I was receiving that I was losing my case fighting for this officer. However, that fall there was an army corps conference down here at which a trophy was to be awarded for the best administered unit in all Canada —perhaps I should say "western Canada" to be sure. Lo and behold, the unit under this particular commanding officer won this trophy for the best administered unit. I think that was the clincher. They withdrew what they had said. They said the officer could retain his unit, and they hoped I was satisfied.

I was not satisfied, Mr. Speaker. First of all, the commanding officer would not take the unit back, in the circumstances. Furthermore I, as a member of parliament, had a further point I wished to raise. I had received a reply from the Prime Minister's office—I presume it came from officials in the department—to the effect that the man was a bad administrator, that the unit was in a parlous state, and so on. The men who acted as judges to decide who should win this trophy were not I believe army men, though they had been in the past, nor were they connected with the government. The award was made on a fair basis. In other words, the Prime Minister was getting false information from one of his departments.

My question is this: How can any prime minister run a country if this is the type of information he is getting from the departments? Something should be done about it. Something should be done about the persons who originated the report I have in my hand. When I brought this latter question up, the reply I got about a month later was that the man concerned retired "about 30 days ago."

I have another case here which is peculiar to the west. This concerns an application from one of the ranchers in my constituency —an application to establish a basic herd. This application must be made to the Department of National Revenue. In order to be as brief as possible, I will just read the reply which this applicant received:

> It has been decided that a basic herd cannot be granted, due to the following reasons:
>
> (a) Insufficient sales shown in the years the returns were filed.
> (b) Possibility that livestock was taken in trade for machinery and claimed as an expense.

Hon. members will note the word "possibility". In this connection I do not think I could do better than quote the reply sent by this man's lawyer to the department. Here is his letter to the Department of National Revenue:

> We are absolutely astounded and amazed at the contents of your letters of the 8th instant..... May we suggest further that before you should be entitled to make the statements contained in your letter which appear to be nothing short of accusations of fraud on the part of our client, there should be some very definite basis for said statements.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I have to interrupt the hon. member because his time has expired.

Mr. D. S. Macdonald (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): I am sure the remarks of the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek will have met with a receptive audience in all corners of the house, not only because of the tone in which he presented his arguments but also from the personal experience of hon. members on occasions in dealing with various aspects of government. It is, after all, one of the most important functions of a member of parliament to try to assist constituents in connection with problems raised by particular administrative decisions which affect them adversely.

The remarks made by the hon. member will find a considerable echo over the years in connection with development which has taken place in Canada, as well as in many other countries, of a body of law referred to as administrative law. It is now more than 50 years since Lord Chief Justice Hewart the former chief justice of the high court in Britain wrote a book entitled "The New Despotism", in which he objected to the very evident growth in Britain and elsewhere in the world of an administrative procedure whereby the rights of individuals were affected, not by decisions of courts of law, which had to proceed upon pre-determined principles and from which there were rights of appeal, but by administrative officers who could not be reached by the law.

It seems to me the objection which the hon. member is making is not so much that there has been a greater ramification of bureaucracy itself—because if the many measures which find support in this house for increasing activity by the government in all phases of life are to be effective, then inevitably there is going to be an increase in government action and decision making by government officials—but rather his criticism is as to the manner in which these officials act, the manner in which they take their decisions and the manner in which they carry out those decisions. In one of the long standing cases of British administrative law which has been applied by the courts of this country, the case of Board of Education v. Rice, it has been said that the obligation of an administrative official is to act fairly, to hear both sides of any particular question; because after all that is a basic obligation upon anybody who has to decide anything.

Many measures have been proposed in this house, in addition to that proposed by the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. McIntosh), which are directed to the same end. We have had in this and earlier sessions a number of legislative proposals for the introduction of the office of ombudsman. I was interested in the hon. member's reference to a speech made by the New Zealand high commissioner because, as hon. members know, the office of ombudsman has been introduced into that dominion and has, to my knowledge at least, worked effectively. The real responsibility of the ombudsman is to make sure that the administrative decision is taken with an absence of arbitrariness, that it is taken fairly and—as the judge said in the case of the Board of Education v. Rice—that where it is appropriate both sides are heard by the particular official.

There have been other proposals along this line. I recall that there was a proposal by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett) in her maiden speech in this house. The proposal was that we should consider the enactment of an administrative procedure act which resembles, perhaps, that which exists with regard to the federal service in the United States. That, again, might well be a desirable objective, but it will not entirely meet the concern the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek expressed today and which I think is echoed by hon. members. There are many, many areas which cannot be reached effectively by legal process because the decision is not a legal one or is not of such a scale, in terms of either time or money, that it is possible for a court or series of courts to review it.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

Another suggestion which has come from many hon. members is that there should be increased research facilities for members of parliament so that, to borrow a vernacular phrase, the rights of any particular constituent will not be buried under a "snow job" by an individual administrator who is in better possession of the facts than is the member of parliament.

I think all these matters deserve attention by this parliament, but I would submit that the particular measure put forward by the hon. member would not be likely to correct this particular wrong, which we all recognize and which many of us feel should be corrected in a variety of ways. My reason for saying so is by reference to the words of the proposed amendment itself. Hon. members will note, in looking at it, that, to borrow a lawyer's term, there is no element of mens rea; there is no element of guilty intent required to establish the offence under the particular section. The offence can be established and the particular official can be punished, and very severely, in accordance with the provisions of subclause (b), by the mere proof that there has been action which deprives an individual of his rights, whether or not action was taken by the official with a completely honest intent, was taken by him because of a genuine and honest mistake as to the law, or whether it was taken by him, again, with complete genuineness, but without being in full possession of the facts. I would suggest that the measure proposed by the hon. member for the purpose of inhibiting oppressive action is itself almost more oppressive than that which it seeks to restrain.

A further problem which arises in this regard is the very obvious difficulty of any administrative officer in determining the extent to which any particular action may or may not accord with the basic guarantees set down by the Canadian Bill of Rights. The Canadian Bill of Rights is modelled very closely, or certainly took inspiration from, the bill of rights which has been included in the amendments to the United States constitution. That constitution is a living document, and for the past 150 years or more it has been the subject of continued and very intense definition by the courts.

I suggest it would be well nigh impossible for any particular individual in any particular instance to determine, for example, whether he was depriving an individual of property or liberty without due process of law. It would be almost impossible for him to determine whether in any particular instance his conduct did or did not amount to a violation of the Canadian Bill of Rights. While it certainly is desirable, as the hon. member suggested, that there should be fairness in arriving at decisions—and I think all hon. members would support that—I think all hon. members, on reflecting on the difficulty which would be created, would agree that there would be a great risk that the heavy criminal penalties the hon. member is proposing here against members of the civil service, who may be acting in perfect honesty, would result in the civil service in critical areas being paralysed rather than assisted and decision making being impaired by this particular measure. For these reasons I feel this particular legislative proposal is not one that should commend itself to members of this house; it is not one that is appropriate for dealing with this problem.

As to the particular cases referred to by the hon. member, I am sure there may well be problems of the kind referred to but I am not in the position to answer each one individually. However, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that even in those cases there was very probably that honest difference of opinion which, while it might call for administrative action, does not call for the harsh kind of action which this bill proposes.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour assigned for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A to inform the house that the questions to be raised at ten o'clock this evening are as follows:

[Translation]

1. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm: Repeal of the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials.

2. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm: Transportation—the Gaspe peninsula railway.

[Text]

It being six o'clock, the house will now revert to consideration of the business interrupted at five o'clock.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman, during the course of the discussion this afternoon the subject of the procedure of this house came up for a little discussion. Because like you, sir, I am a member of the special committee on procedure and organization, it was not my intention to raise this matter at this time, and even so the remarks that I shall make will be brief.

The hon. member for Port Arthur said something this afternoon which I hope will be noted. He suggested that perhaps the most important question that faces us procedurally, the most important question that faces us in the management of the affairs of the House of Commons, is this question of planning or allocating our parliamentary time. As our business in parliament grows apace from year to year and as issues which we discuss become sharper, it seems to me that we are going to have to face this problem and come up with an answer to it. I think we should be mature enough to realize that doing some planning and organizing of our debates does not involve the denial of free speech or the down-grading of democracy.

We already have, Mr. Chairman, many rules and regulations which some believe might have interfered with free speech. We have a rule that no member can speak at one time for more than a certain number of minutes. We have a rule that when Mr. Speaker is in the chair no member can speak more than once to the same question. We have rules as to when the house sits and when it adjourns. We have rules that limit the debate to eight days with respect to the address in reply to the speech from the throne and to six days on the main budget debate. In addition to that we have a rule that limits debates on supply motions to two days each. We introduced this year the temporary rule that limits the length of debate on a notice of motion for the production of papers. I do not think anyone would allege that because we have these various limitations, in some dastardly way we have denied freedom of speech to members who are elected by their constituents to come here and represent them in parliament. These rules are simply common sense regulations that we have agreed to, so that one person will not talk all the time, so that there will not be anarchy and so that we can get along with the business we have come here to do.

It just so happens, Mr. Chairman, that some of us here feel that the amount of that business has so increased that we are going to have to extend this principle of planning, regulating and organizing our parliamentary time. That is why I think we should put our minds to this problem. That is why I think we should consider it and discuss it and negotiate it in committees and in conferences, and resolve that we will come up with a solution. What some of us have proposed is already in the public domain and I do not intend to refer to it at length. Indeed, what I shall say is offered not in any argumentative sense but rather as an example of one way in which I think this problem can be solved.

I think we could by a standing order provide for a special committee which could make recommendations as to the length of time that would be spent on certain debates. I think we could, if we could agree to such a standing order, reach agreement in advance before a certain debate on second reading, or in committee of the whole or what have you, got started, and having reached agreement could then have the debate end at that agreed point, just as the debate on the address now ends at the end of eight days and the debate on the budget now ends at the end of six days.

It seems to me that by some such process we could introduce regularity, order and some common sense into the use of the time which we have. We have only so much time. There are only 12 months in the year, and the amount of business that we have, if you take into consideration the necessity to spend some time in our constituencies, compels us to plan and organize our business. I hope that we will move to some form of this kind of planning. I certainly do not urge that the particular proposal, the drafting of which I have had something to do with, is sacrosanct; if someone else can draw up a better one, that is fine. But I do plead that we look at this whole problem objectively and realize that, if we can reach agreement on the planning and organization of our time, we are not denying freedom of speech, we are not bringing down the curtain on democracy; we shall be making the work of this house more effective.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Knowles: I think, Mr. Chairman, we should be honest enough to admit that the criticisms which are made of us sometimes in the press and by commentators are merited. Instead of just saying they are wrong we should pay some attention to them. For example, I think of last night's "Viewpoint" on the C.B.C., wherein James Stewart of the Montreal Star gave his assessment of the debate of yesterday and the previous two or three days. It was pretty critical, and I think it was a valid criticism. I think it is good for us to hear that kind of criticism. But in addition to hearing it, I think we should take it to heart and try to make some improvements in our proceedings.

This afternoon there was obviously a little difference of opinion between some of us in this group about a certain word, the word "closure". I mention it again only to draw the distinction between closure as it is now in our standing orders—it is standing order 33—and the planning or the allocating of our time in the way the hon. member for Port Arthur urged the house to consider. Closure is something which is imposed by the government when it has a majority one way or the other, and it is brought on after a debate has bogged down, after there is ill will and antagonism and all the things which we know have developed on those few occasions in Canadian history when closure has been used. But the kind of thing the hon. member for Port Arthur urged this afternoon on behalf of this group, the kind of thing I have had a part with you, sir, in drafting for consideration of those who were dealing with this matter, is quite different.

What we propose is not that the government use whatever majority it commands to compel the house to quit a debate that has already bogged down. What we propose instead is agreement among the parties through a committee that will consider the matter, and what we also propose is that agreement be reached in advance. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that is not a denial of free speech, not a ringing down of the curtain on democracy. It is something that is sensible, that is a case of planning, a case of organizing the time that we have.

As I have already said this afternoon and repeated when I started this evening, if it had not been for the fact that the question was opened up I would not be speaking on it, for the reason I already gave. I have the great privilege of being a member of the committee on procedure and organization and we are working hard on this very question. We have been on the question of the allocation of time, or what have you, for over two months. We have had meetings of the main committee and the subcommittee times without number. The proposal I have referred to is before the committee and an alternative proposal was presented by a member of the committee yesterday. We are wrestling with the matter. It is slow business. I do not blame members for being impatient, but because I am involved in the negotiating I should like any remarks I make to be of a general nature rather than a case of indulging in controversy.

But I do support the proposition that the hon. member for Port Arthur put forward this afternoon, namely that this whole question of coming to grips with the planning of our parliamentary time is one of the most important questions that faces us as members of parliament.

Mr. Langlois: Do like we did in Quebec. Get rid of the Conservative party.

Mr. Knowles: That remark is not consistent with the spirit in which I am trying to approach this question because I think that if we are going to achieve anything of the kind I am advocating it has got to be done by general agreement, almost by unanimous agreement, among the parties and groups that make up the House of Commons. My plea is that we should think about this matter and consider the representations that are being made to us by people outside who criticize our activities, and let us see if we cannot do something along this line.

I say again, Mr. Chairman, that I am as opposed to the use of closure as I was in 1956. I have said on occasion, and I think it is in print in various places, that it is not closure itself that is bad but rather it is the abuse of closure that is bad. That is a nice, academic statement to make, but the fact of history is that every time it has been used since it was first brought in in 1913 it seems to have been a case of abuse. It has always produced a nasty, difficult situation in the House of Commons.

I think we have got to find something better than the stopping of debate by the vote of the majority. I think we have got to find a better way whereby we can get together, bargain in good faith, negotiate and come up with a method of planning our business. I agree 1000 per cent with the words used in this connection this afternoon by the hon. member for Port Arthur, that this is the most important problem facing us, and I think we have got to grapple with it. When suggestions are made there is no point in trying to find some easy way out; but we will grapple with the problem if we face suggestions seriously, as we are doing in the special committee on procedure and organization. If some members are impatient with our delay, I accept that criticism on behalf of my subcommittee at any rate. But it may be that if it takes us a little while longer to come up with something, we will produce something that will be lasting and worth while and will help to make parliament a place where freedom of speech remains, but where we will do our job a little more efficiently than is sometimes the case.

If it had not been for this subject being raised this afternoon I would have spoken only on the one other subject about which I now wish to say a few words. I am glad that the President of the Privy Council is in his place, as he has been throughout this debate on interim supply because he is piloting it through the committee and the house. I remind him that on June 11, as recorded on page 4186 of Hansard, he made a commitment as to something he would do in committee of supply.

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Mr. Knowles: This was the second time to my knowledge that the question of ministers having secretaries or employees on the government payroll working in their constituencies had been raised. The first time it was raised was on June 9, as recorded on page 4088 of Hansard. It was raised on that occasion by the hon. member for Red Deer and the President of the Privy Council gave a short answer, but went on to say he would do his best to see what further answer could be brought forward. Then, as I have said, on June 11 the matter was raised by the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency. My leader, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, took part in the discussion. It was obvious that we were not satisfied, and so it was that on that occasion the President of the Privy Council said:

I will be glad to discuss the matter further on interim supply. I do not yet have all the information I want. Since this question was raised in the house I have had the appropriate officials get the information and put it together, but it is not complete at the moment. However, I will be able to give more information later.

This question arose because of news reports that got out to the effect that in at least two cases people had been taken on staff at government expense and assigned to offices or places within the constituencies of the ministers concerned. Some of us felt this was a questionable procedure and I for one looked up the Civil Service Act under which we were told this had been done. I am looking at the Statutes of 1960-61, chapter 57, and I find that section 71, subsection 1, reads as follows:

A minister may appoint his executive assistant and his private secretary, and other persons to be employed in the office of a minister shall be appointed by the governor in council.

Surely the key words in that subsection are the words "to be employed in the office of a minister". We learned that there were two orders in council. There may be others, but we know of two. One is P.C. 1964-5/490 which appointed Mr. André Côté as special assistant in the office of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration at Baie des Sables, Quebec, with salary at the rate of $7,500 per annum, effective March 2, 1964. The other was order in council P.C. 1964-18/738 which recommended the appointment of certain persons as indicated on the document in the office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, with salaries at the rates stated, effective May 1, 1964. One of those listed by name is referred to as "principal clerk at Niagara Falls, Ontario", and the salary is $5,220 a year.

I wondered how it was possible to appoint people by order in council to work at these places, one in the province of Quebec and the other at Niagara Falls, in view of the wording in the act which says that such appointments shall be made of persons "to be employed in the office of a minister". That is the reason, of course, that I put on the order paper two rather harmless looking questions. One read, "Where is the office of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration", and the other read, "Where is the office of the Minister of National Health and Welfare". It seemed to me those were very simple questions which could be answered almost immediately. Surely these ministers know in each case where his office is, but it took ten days to get answers to these questions. When the first opportunity went by without the questions being answered I got up on a question of privilege. In reply the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State said that there was some difficulty involved, and I quote his words as found on page 4399 of Hansard:

—the delay here is due to the problem of interpreting the precise meaning of the word "office". Does this refer to the place, or does it refer to a particular legal function performed by the minister? When this question has been dealt with, the answers will be forthcoming.

Well, a week later, on June 24 on page 4661-62 of Hansard, we got the answers as to where these offices are located. In the case of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, this is the answer:

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration performs the duties of office in various places, but principally at the following addresses: Citizenship building 22-30 Slater street, Ottawa; 439C, House of Commons, parliament buildings; and second floor, Immigration building, Champlain harbour station, Wolfe's Cove, Quebec.

Now, how can one stretch the words "can be employed in the office of the minister", to offices in the plural? I point out also, that unless my geography is completely lacking, I do not see any connection between Wolfe's Cove and Baie des Sables. In other words, there is no attempt in the order in council to suggest that this person is employed in any one of the offices of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration.

In the case of the Minister of National Health and Welfare this was the answer given on June 24:

The Minister of National Health and Welfare performs the duties of her office in various places, but principally at the following address: Copeland building, Ottawa, Canada; room 253S, House of Commons, Ottawa, Canada; 551 Clifton avenue, Niagara Falls, Ontario.

Well, it is very obvious, Mr. Chairman, that the reason for the delay in producing answers to this simple question was to produce something that would fit the facts that had been brought out in the meantime. But the fact still remains that the act under which these orders in council were produced speaks of the office of the minister in the singular. I will read it again:

—other persons to be employed in the office of a minister shall be appointed by the governor in council.

I suggest that it is just playing with the law to say that, on the basis of that, persons can be employed anywhere in the country where the minister says, "This is a place where I am doing the work of my office". What is "office"? Is it a function or is it a working place, the place where people are employed?

If this is true, I want to give some information to the Leader of the Opposition, if I could have his attention for a moment, because there is a subsection in this same section 71 that happens to deal with him. Subsection (5) of section 71 says:

> This section applies to a person employed in the office of the person holding the recognized position of Leader of the Opposition in the House of Commons as it applies to a person employed in the office of a minister.

Now, Mr. Chairman, if what the government has done is valid, all the Leader of the Opposition has to do is say he has an office in Prince Albert, that he performs his work at offices in various places, say in the House of Commons and in the home that is provided for him in Rockcliffe, in Prince Albert or wherever he chooses, then under the same provision he can get, at government expense, clerical or secretarial help in his office. Now, mind you, the law does not go any further but fairness would go further. If a minister can have people on the government payroll in his office in his constituency, if the Leader of the Opposition can have this help, then the member for Cape Breton South should have clerical help at an office in Sydney or Glace Bay. I have an office at 1036 Notre Dame avenue, Winnipeg, and I should like to have some help there.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If the hon. gentleman would allow me, I would say he does not tempt me. I was not tempted when I was prime minister, and paid my own office expenses. I am not tempted now, but it is a very interesting observation.

Mr. Knowles: The Leader of the Opposition is such a good Baptist, I knew there was no point in putting temptation in front of him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am always able to resist.

Mr. Knowles: I trust that Hansard got his words, that he is always able to resist.

We are having a bit of fun about this. Even this last bit of fun that has been raised is not inappropriate. If it is fair for a minister to have assistance with his work in the constituency, it is fair for a member. The amount of work is growing so that this is becoming a real issue. Perhaps we do not need the same amount of help, but I suggest we need help if we are going to do our job effectively and efficiently. If it is fair and proper for some people to have this kind of help, then the provision should be extended to all.

The point I am making now, Mr. Chairman, is not the question of extending it but the question of the validity of those two orders in council. They are purportedly based—they say so—on the provisions of section 71 (1) of the Civil Service Act; both of them name that section. I have read the section. The section says people can be employed by order in council in the office of a minister. The ministers have stretched things a bit by telling us they have several offices. However, the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration has not even told us he has an office at Baie des Sables, Quebec.

One of the reasons given by the President of the Privy Council for following this practice was that the former government did it; it had been done down through the years. The President of the Privy Council said that one change had been made. Previously, it had been done by a minute of the treasury board, and now it is done by order in council.

Mr. McIlraith: No, it is the very opposite.

Mr. Knowles: I see the minister shaking his head.

Mr. McIlraith: I should like to be quoted accurately. Perhaps I can help the hon. member if he wishes. I will help him clarify the point he is making.

Mr. Knowles: I am glad the hon. member asked me to read his words. There is a slight difference between what I said and what he said. He did say one change had been made. I am quoting now from page 4185 of Hansard for June 11, 1964:

> The practice of appointing persons to the staffs of ministers outside of Ottawa is a long established practice which goes back many years. When this government took office it reviewed the practice followed by the previous administration and continued to maintain it in force. There was one change; now the appointments have to be approved by the treasury board before the order in council is submitted to the governor in council.

I thank the hon. member for suggesting that I read it correctly. What does that one change amount to? The fact is it is still being done by order in council, supposedly based on a particular section of the act. If I understand the meaning of words at all, surely that meaning is clear, that the persons to be employed in the office of the minister shall be appointed by the governor in council. But the ministers do not know where their offices are. Having appointed these people to offices in their constituencies, then they try to come up with a definition that includes this. I suggest that is playing with the law. This is not good. The law is something very serious, and I think that the government, of all people, should pay attention to the strict observance of the law.

Mr. Otto: Mr. Chairman, I was not going to take part in this debate, but since the subject has turned to what I consider a more sensible point of view, particularly in connection with the house, its rules and procedures, I would like to say a few words.

I am a relative newcomer here and have not been aged in the parliamentary process that is apparently so much required. I agree to a great extent with what the hon. member for Port Arthur said, that the house is here to protect the rights of individuals, to debate principles and legislation and to supply money to the government, but I wonder whether the people of the country think we should be doing more in the way of legislation.

Quite recently many comments were made about the other place. It would probably surprise hon. members to know that the work done there by the members of the other house is probably more than has been accomplished here, and they have given more knowledge and initiative to the people of Canada than we have given. Indeed, I think it is time we must consider whether we should not change and drastically reform the rules under which we work.

This is going to require the wisdom of Solomon because, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre pointed out, if limitation is put on debates—and in all likelihood this will be organized by the whips—then my chance of getting to speak will be very slim, as will be that of the hon. member for Port Arthur. On the other hand I do agree with the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg North Centre when he says we must make some attempt to plan the order of business of the house. If we are going to do that however, we shall have to plan a little deeper than we have up to now, and I say this with the greatest respect. The only example I can use is that of the question period, which used to take anywhere from an hour to an hour and a half. A decision was taken to postpone part of it, but it still takes an hour and a half, and we have that second question period as well. We have not done very well in that reform.

It is said hon. gentlemen ask questions because they do not know the answers. Of course this is not so. If they did not know the answers they would not ask the questions. They know the answers quite well. In this void of activity in the house we have come to a new era where the establishment has grown. What is the establishment? Well, it is difficult to define, but its power is easily felt in anything we do. Indeed I would say that most of the comments, most of the barbs aimed from the other side in this debate have not been so much at the ministers but at this establishment, and that includes the comments during the last few days about the film. The establishment is that body which decided to keep these people incarcerated for some 90 odd days. It is not the minister; it is that overpowering establishment, without control.

I know the ministers and what they do. Analysing very clearly the duties they have, even if they work a 16 or 18 hour day, when a minister gets through with the interviews, cabinet meetings and the house—he must sit in the house—and the speeches he is expected to make, he has not got time to find his office, as the hon. gentleman who preceded me pointed out, let alone try to initiate the program of the government. Consequently this has now been transferred to the establishment.

Mr. Winkler: Would the hon. member permit a question. Would he explain what he refers to as the establishment. What does my hon. friend mean—and I may say I refer to him very truly and sincerely as my hon. friend.

Mr. Otto: I am just trying to point out that the establishment is difficult to define, but it is administration gone rampant—is that what you might call it? It is these people who have made the decisions, the administration with the powers they have assumed, and they have done this in the past, and not just with the present government. I do not think it has come about all of a sudden. It is a growing thing and it is going to be hard to straighten out.

The legislation should initiate here. This is a most able house. In private life I have had some experience in business, and I will say without hesitation that most of the members here would do credit to any enterprise that they choose or would have chosen in the business world. It is unfortunate that there is no means of expression in the house. The talents here are obvious, and I speak of every corner of the house, but they are now being used to split hairs, to debate rules of procedure, points of order, which party should sit closer to the Speaker, and whether one member was enticed from one party to another. These are the things in which the members have to interest themselves, because there is so little room for expression.

We have had a very good example of how the talents of all hon. gentlemen were used in the special committee on defence, a very good committee which has helped the minister. We all acknowledge the minister had very little trouble with the house, and that he had a great amount of help and assistance from members in all parties. Since we have had this good example I ask why the committee on rules and procedure could not consider this as another way of extending the work that is available, possibly with committees attached to every department from which the ministers can get advice in initiating legislation—not from the administration, not from the establishment, but from the members elected by the people of Canada.

I have the greatest respect for the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre who is heading the committee on procedures, but I sometimes wonder whether he truly agrees with me on what reform is. Consider, Mr. Chairman, the page boys just behind you, possibly a throwback from Nelson's flagship. These young boys walk right by our noses every single day, but have we stopped to consider that they get on their buses at 11.30 at night and do not get home until midnight? They have to go to school in the morning, at seven or eight o'clock, and they can only spend a half day at school.

How many of them drop out and what have we done for them? If we must have page boys let us see that they get an education, that possibly they be tutored. Have we become so callous, so hard that we do not even notice these things. My idea of reform is that the nation can no longer tolerate these lads going through life without an education.

I had this happen to me the other day. A page boy who was becoming too old to be a page boy came to me to see if I could get him a job in the Department of Public Works. But he had only received a grade VII education and the civil service would not take him. We have done this. We should consider carefully, if we are to have page boys, whether they are to be educated and whether they should be given the same opportunity as we would give to our own children. This, indeed, would amount to reform, and it is on this note that I would like to conclude.

An hon. Member: Carried.

Mr. Lambert: It is curious, but it always seems that when anyone on this side wishes to speak we are urged to go a little faster, but when someone else, over there, wants to speak it does not matter if time is taken up.

I have been extremely touched by the charges coming from the government side, especially from the Prime Minister, that the business of the house has slowed down to a crawl—that there is obstruction. Well, what hypocrisy. That is all I can call it. I sat on that side of the house for five years and watched the four horsemen at work, as well as those people behind him. They can still teach this side some lessons on how to slow things down to a crawl. There is no point in recrimination. I am not going to say "yes, you did" or "no, you didn't". But I will say that it lies ill in the mouth of the government at this time to say we are not getting on with the business of the house.

Let us look at the committees situation. This year committees were not called until April 10. They did not meet for organization until April 21. In the past, under previous governments, the estimates committee had at least one, if not two departments to get through. This administration has not referred one department to the estimates committee. It has not sat—oh yes, it did sit, for an organization meeting. Since then it has not done a thing. Oh, the hon. lady, who I see in her place, did come in at the last minute. I was a member of that estimates committee and I have gone over the estimates of many a department. Many departmental estimates could have been referred to other committees. Why, for instance, have not the estimates of the Department of Labour been referred to the committee on industrial relations? The committee on marine and fisheries could have handled the estimates of the Department of Fisheries. The estimates of the Department of Trade and Commerce could have gone to the estimates committee, as well as those of the Minister of Justice, the house leader himself. We could have done something. Instead, everything has been held back. The government cannot say that the departments have not been called. We have had four supply motions and the estimates are available. If hon. gentlemen opposite would listen to some of their own officials they would know that many senior officials welcome the opportunity to go before the estimates committee or a special committee because it gives them an opportunity of putting forward their opinions and reviewing their position, thus developing the administration of government. Instead, everything is kept in the enclave of the treasury bench.

Let us look where some of the faults lie. It is not so much in the legislation. We have not seen any legislation of any consequence. The representation bill has been hidden away since April 27. What legislation has been blocked? The government would like to get to the flag resolution. Well, I will read what John Meyer, financial editor of the Montreal Gazette has to say about the introduction of the flag resolution at this stage:

> Matters of present concern to the conduct of business have now been put aside in favour of what will be prolonged and acrimonious debate on the flag. This is a luxury the country is not yet in a position to afford.

I will tell those on the treasury benches this: They ought to see what their reputation is like abroad. I have come back after three weeks spent talking to Canadians and friends of Canada and they say: What on earth has gotten into your government, that they should go forward with this sort of proposition at this time? Hon. gentlemen opposite may frown. The Minister of Trade and Commerce may frown in disbelief. But if it were not a breach of confidence with the people who told me these things I would give him the names. I do not intend to go into the flag issue right now, but I will say this: Do not go crying on anybody's shoulder or shedding crocodile tears about the business of the country.

Student loans, the revision of the family allowance plan, the pension act, the legislation dealing with rail transportation—all these things are ahead of us. We remember on May 15 the Prime Minister reading that long list of parliamentary business. He impressed on the house and on the country at the time the importance of dealing with all these things before the summer recess. Then he put that little caveat at the end. And what did we get? We got the flag resolution. That will settle the country's affairs. This is the kind of priority we were given. It was nothing but a political sham to introduce it at this time. We could discuss a flag—and I am quite prepared to do so on a later occasion this year, when we have dealt with these other matters. Has it priority over the pension plan in the scheme of affairs of this country? Has it priority over the growing need for a change in our transportation set-up or any of those other matters which the Prime Minister impressed upon us as being highly important. They have been thrown in the ash can. Even so, does the Prime Minister think that when he proposes, we should dispose without question of a matter such as the flag issue? Did he or his advisers think for one moment that they would get away with a picayune debate in this chamber? If so, they are sadly mistaken. Certainly the Liberals have gotten much further away from the grass than they were in 1956 and 1957.

I suggest to the house leader that even now there is time to pick up some of these loose threads. Why does he not have estimates referred to the estimates committee? The members are prepared to work. I have here a list of what has been done by the various committees. The committee on agriculture and colonization, organized on April 21, has met to discuss tobacco research. The committee on banking and commerce organized on April 23 has dealt with some bills which came to it from the other place. The miscellaneous private bills committee has done the work assigned to it. The industrial relations committee was organized on April 23 and as far as I can see it remains organized. The veterans affairs committee was organized on April 21 and it has stood down. The committee on food and drugs, a special committee, is carrying on. The committee on procedure and organization, a special committee, is carrying on. The committee on marine and fisheries was organized on April 30 and is dealing with pieces of legislation. The public accounts committee was organized on April 30 and is working. The committee on mines, forests and waters was organized on April 30 and is standing by. The committee on privileges and elections has had its days in court. Next, railways, canals and telegraph lines. It has been dealing with the reports of the crown corporations connected with transportation.

Mr. Davis: What about external affairs?

Mr. Lambert: External affairs met earlier, and it has dealt with the Columbia river treaty. Yes, it worked. And it is dealing with the estimates.

Mr. Nesbitt: We are waiting for the estimates.

Mr. Lambert: My hon. friend from Oxford tells me they are waiting for the estimates. Why haven't they been meeting? Item 1 was discussed in the house and the debate was adjourned so that the estimates could go to the committee. Is this organization of the business of the house? You do not have to have any wide revision of the rules, just to bring in new rules to break or not observe. If we observed the rules that we have, we could do a good job. Half the speeches could be much more relevant, and that would cut down the time taken.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Lambert: Well, you can always hang a little bait and the suckers will bite. I will tell you who are the chief offenders.

An hon. Member: You are.

Mr. Lambert: The chief offenders are the ministers in their opening statements. They open the shop wide.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Lambert: I think I have a little experience in this regard and I will say this; I am not singling out the speeches from the opposition side or the government side as being particularly irrelevant. This is a criticism that applies to us all. I suppose this afternoon we have indulged in a little bit of confessing of one's soul, and therefore I would ask hon. members to look at their own speeches and see that they are relevant; that on second reading they are not making the speech they could not make at the resolution stage, or that on clause 1 in committee they are not making the speech that the whip did not allow them to make on second reading.

I can see that some of the younger members on the other side of the house seem to think that at the present time things are not all as they should be, and they feel gagged, frustrated. I ask them and those who have sat over here to just read the previous Hansards and they will see that some of their colleagues who are now silent—they are the proverbial mummies—when they were over here were the gadflies of Hansard. It all depends on what side of the house you sit as to how you look at it.

I am going to suggest, Mr. Chairman, that in regard to this question we should ourselves pay a little more attention to the rules and let the government organize its business. Let us see some of these estimates go to committees; let them have more estimates. We can have estimates for two days a week. I fully subscribe to the remarks of my colleague from Winnipeg South Centre, and I would say that the principal task of this house is to grant supply and to examine government administration and business. That is done in the consideration of the estimates.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I would like to pass on to one or two other matters. If the Minister of Justice is within earshot I would like to address to him a personal plea. In 1962 there was introduced in the other place Bill No. S-2, dealing with amendments to the Bankruptcy Act. It was passed in the Senate, given first reading in this house and then that parliament was dissolved. Last year the present administration brought forward the same legislation. It was amended in the Senate and brought here and given first reading, but has died. This is important legislation in certain provinces which are seeking these changes to the Bankruptcy Act. My prime concern is this. I do not know what happens in the minister's office. Has he a great big sack for correspondence that is almost bottomless, because I have written and written to his office but have received no reply. I think that I, as a member of this house, am entitled, just like any other member, to the courtesy of a reply. I am not putting the blame entirely on the minister; but surely to goodness somebody in that circle of assistants who have been hired is at fault. These letters of inquiry on government business should receive an immediate reply. I asked a very simple question: Is it the government's intention to reintroduce this legislation: and if so, when? Yet, Mr. Minister, two letters, the first dated May 6 and the second May 20, have gone unacknowledged. I regret that I have to say this publicly, but it is something that must be corrected.

There is another point I would like to raise with the Minister of Justice. This also dates back to 1962. I had correspondence with his predecessor in this regard and I have had correspondence with him. This is a very technical point from a lawyer's point of view, but I think it is a rank injustice that it continues to exist. I refer to the abrogation by judgment of the former president of the exchequer court of rule 264 of the rules of that court, dealing with the taxation of solicitor and client costs by the registrar. It has been in the rules for many years and solicitors have advised their clients on it; parties have acted on the strength of it. A right is established under this rule. We know in the common law provinces that we can do this: If a client is not satisfied with my solicitor's bill on a conveyance, that bill can be taxed before a taxing officer. There is thus some justice; he does not have to start a supreme court action or a district court action, nor do I have to start such an action to get my bill established.

In an unreported judgment back in 1961 this rule was declared to be ultra vires. I am not going to go into the merits of that judgment as to whether this should or should not be the case, but I think the procedure was wrong. First of all, I think it is wrong that the judgment should be unreported, and second I think it is wrong that no remedial action has been taken to amend the Exchequer Court Act to take care of this situation. The president of the exchequer court indicated that the act did not provide for this, and that therefore it was ultra vires. Correspondence with the ministers of justice has indicated that they are considering changes to the Exchequer Court Act. I would like to see the appropriate action taken. It is not a very complicated matter and action could be initiated in the other place. May I commend this to the Minister of Justice, because I think a grave injustice is being done to a great many clients, particularly those in the case on which this judgment was based.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I would like to turn my attention to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration in the few minutes that remain at my disposal. This question is concerned with the application of section 5(d) of the Immigration Act, the so-called statutory bar. We know that in the past there were many cases in Hong Kong where a wife took a false statutory declaration in the furthering of a scheme for the entry into this country of her husband. As a result of the investigations which were conducted, as a result of the amnesty that was granted to all persons of Chinese origin in this country who might have entered illegally—that is, if they had come forward, disclosed all the facts and had their status regularized—these people were told by the minister in a letter, which thanks them for their courtesy and co-operation in so coming forward, that they now enjoy full status as though they had arrived here legally in the first place. They then applied for their wives, and the answer was immediately given: "We regret that she cannot enter this country because she took a false statutory declaration and is therefore barred under section 5(d) of the Immigration Act". In other words, the minor partner or accomplice in a scheme, which is, it is admitted, an illegal scheme, is the one who is punished after the principal actor has entered the country and been forgiven. Or is there just a delayed penalty behind the minister's letter when he says to them: "Your status is as though you had entered this country legally and you have the same rights as anyone else, with the exception that you cannot bring your wife to Canada for five years after she had taken the statutory declaration"?

I have written to the minister in regard to a number of cases of this kind and I would urge upon him an immediate revision or review of the application of the statutory bar. I realize the necessity for regulation; but in view of the fact that this amnesty has been given, why visit a further penalty upon these people? After all, I should think in 99 per cent of such cases the wife has been a docile accomplice. She has been asked to take this statutory declaration in order to fit the scheme. Yet we are visiting an additional penalty upon her while her husband, who is here, has been forgiven and goes scot free. I would urge on the minister that this matter be reviewed immediately.

The last matter I should like to speak about, Mr. Chairman, concerns Canadians who travel abroad in Europe and our Canadian personnel in our embassies in Europe. Do you know, Mr. Chairman, what they have to read for news of Canada? They get, provided the Telex is not overcrowded, a sort of synthesis of a C.B.C. news release, a daily edition but necessarily compressed to perhaps one page or a page and a half foolscap size. Then they get the first four pages of Le Devoir, which are cut out and air mailed. Then the Ottawa Journal makes a special print of the four principal pages—the front page, the editorial page and a couple of other pages—and sends them over. Then there is available a sort of business overseas edition of the Globe and Mail. For the people in external affairs there may be certain confidential bulletins, but they are confidential. But beyond that they must depend upon the European edition of the New York Herald Tribune, the New York Times, or the continental edition of the London Daily Telegraph for news about Canada. I found all our personnel right from the top down, starved for news of Canada. The armed services do a little better. There are two Yukon passenger flights plus four freight flights a week, and they are able to obtain daily copies—sometimes a little delayed by reason of flight schedules—of the Globe and Mail. These arrive at Marville, France. So they have at least one newspaper.

I went into one Canadian embassy in Europe and the latest daily newspaper, outside of those I have mentioned, was an April edition of the Montreal Gazette. Other than that our personnel have to rely upon their own subscriptions.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I could raise a point here and put it in the form of a question to the hon. member. Important as is the matter he is discussing—and I recognize its importance—I am wondering whether he is satisfied that it is the type of problem which should be discussed on interim supply, which is a temporary measure asking for one month's supply for the government to carry on its business until the regular estimates come before the house. I am wondering whether it is not the type of subject, bearing in mind the practice on interim supply bills, which could not better be discussed on the estimates of the department when the minister is here.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, this is all very well on the part of the President of the Privy Council, but I would like to say that in the time the minister has taken I could have completed the point I wanted to make.

Mr. Grégoire: Carried.

Mr. Lambert: The estimates of the Department of External Affairs will come up in anno domini—some time, perhaps in the fall. I am interested in getting some action now in response to the suggestion I am going to make.

Mr. Grégoire: Carried.

Mr. Lambert: I think that what the government should do is to provide for a reasonable number of daily papers from across Canada to be sent to our embassies via the regular service flights which go to Europe.

Mr. Grégoire: Carried.

Mr. Lambert: Certainly these people are quite as entitled as anybody else to have news about Canada. Europe is crawling with Canadians right now who are hungry for news about Canada but cannot get it.

I suggest we also provide a litter to carry out the hon. gentleman who is hollering to be carried out.

I trust that the ministers concerned will take to heart the suggestions I have made.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a few remarks relating to a matter of great concern to a number of my constituents. I rise primarily on account of a telegram I have received from the president of the B.C. command of the Canadian Legion and the local branch to which I belong, as well as a result of resolutions passed by the zone council of the Royal Canadian Legion for Kootenay West. However, before doing so I want to say that while there has been considerable criticism as to the length of debate with respect to the historic "Mr. Pearson" film incident, I suggest this debate would have been considerably shortened had the Prime Minister made the speech he made yesterday some years ago.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Herridge: No, pardon me; it seems so long ago since it started. I should have said, had he made the speech some days ago, the debate would have been considerably shortened.

I return to the subject which I wish to speak on for a few minutes this evening. I do so because of the telegrams I have received and because I believe the federal government has a responsibility to the persons concerned, in view of statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs. During the discussions in the external affairs committee with respect to the Columbia river treaty, and later while the minister was speaking in the house he indicated that the government was quite assured that the persons who would be directly affected as a result of the flooding would be properly treated. In that respect I want to quote what the Secretary of State for External Affairs said in the house when dealing with this question. He said, as found on page 3903 of Hansard:

> The immense magnitude of the program is most apparent, as are the changes in the face of the land that are bound to take place.

That is no overstatement.

> It was known from the beginning that, regardless of what sequence of development was chosen, the changes would be of such magnitude that the face of the land in the Columbia basin would be altered, that immense areas would have to be flooded, that there would be dislocation and that new conditions of living would be imposed in that region. However, there had to be the assurance in the minds of the negotiators, both federal and provincial, that although these changes were necessary the benefits would be far greater and sufficiently great to justify the changes both in the land and in the lives of numbers of people. There had to be the assurance that no one would suffer loss, that there would be alternative programs of settlement and redevelopment on available lands, that there would be redevelopment of communities affected together with compensation to those who would suffer loss sufficient to provide them with a stake sufficient to re-establish themselves.

I re-emphasize those concluding words of the minister when speaking in the debate at the time the house ratified the treaty. Then I go to the minutes of the external affairs committee and I wish to quote what the famous Dr. Keenleyside had to say as found on page 405:

> Here we have said from the beginning, and in this we have had the full support of the British Columbia government, that we propose to treat these people fairly, sympathetically and generously?

Quite recently the famous Dr. Keenleyside attended public meetings at Edgewood and Nakusp on the Arrow lakes at the request of the local residents. In the first instance he intended to attend only dinner meetings of chambers of commerce, nice, cosy meetings where you do not meet the people. But the people sent him letters demanding public meetings. I give great credit to the women of my constituency who organized these public meetings. Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, that if you get the women in the constituency on your side you have already won. They organized a large public meeting and Dr. Keenleyside was subjected to a barrage of questions from the property owners in the district with respect to the clearing of the basin, with respect to the relocation of roads, the relocation of wharves, the relocation of schools and other community facilities, with respect to the compensation to be paid to the owners of properties to be flooded and with respect to the provisions for the restoration of fisheries which as a result of this flooding will be destroyed for a period of over 20 years.

As a result of the meeting the people were most dissatisfied. Dr. Keenleyside completely failed to answer the questions satisfactorily at this large public meeting in that district. As a result of one meeting one property owner wrote to the B.C. hydro and power authority with respect to the policy to be followed in connection with compensation and so on, and I am going to place the reply on the record:

> This is a copy of a letter received from R. W. Gross, manager, land division, B.C. hydro, in answer to the queries of a landowner in the district.
> "Dr. Keenleyside has asked me to acknowledge the receipt of and reply to your letter of 20th of April. I am afraid we cannot accept the principle that replacement value is to be paid for improvements affected by the Columbia developments. The basis on which compensation is paid in Canada for private property required for public purposes is clearly established on the value to the owners principle.
>
> Value to the owner is in almost all cases the same as market value. In addition to market value there would, in proper cases, be added an allowance to cover disturbance and moving expenses.
>
> You ask the question, "Why should anyone be forced to go into debt to replace what they now have"? It might help you to understand the situation if you appreciated that all privately owned property in Canada is held by its present owner subject to the right of any public body possessing power of expropriation to take it over for public purposes.

I want to bring those words to the attention of the great advocates of free enterprise.

> In these circumstances the public body is required to pay the owner what his property is worth, not what it may cost him to replace it.
> [Mr. Herridge.]
> The owner is entitled to be left in the same economic position in terms of cash or property after the taking as he was in before the taking. An owner is not entitled to profit from the taking, which would be the situation if replacement value rather than market value were paid."

I bring this to the attention of the house because it is a complete contradiction of the statements made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs and Mr. Keenleyside to the committee and also in numerous addresses throughout the country, that these people would be treated in a humane and generous manner. This has caused a great deal of concern to the 2,000 odd people who are going to be affected by this development.

As a result this question was considered by a recent zone council convention of the Royal Canadian Legion representing all branches in Kootenay West. I see the hon. member for Kamloops looking at me and I hope he will begin to stand up for these people and their rights. This matter has caused a great deal of concern, because to get the market value means in many cases, in view of the flooding that is to occur, to get a fraction of what will be required to relocate these people on farms similar to those they now occupy. I received a telegram from the zone council of the Royal Canadian Legion, representing all branches in Kootenay West, which telegram reads as follows:

> Sir: The following resolution was duly adopted at the west Kootenay zone convention of the Royal Canadian Legion on June 21st, 1964.
> "Whereas the veterans residing in the flood basins of the Columbia river, who are to be affected by the treaty, will be at a disadvantage negotiating with trained officials of the B.C. hydro authority and whereas experience has shown great variance in allowance for similar properties received from hydro authorities for similar areas for no apparent reason, and whereas these affected veterans are in fact negotiating for the interests of Veterans Land Act, National Housing Act, soldier settlement board and others as well as those of their own;
> Therefore be it resolved that the honourable minister of the Department of Veterans Affairs be asked to provide immediate professional assistance to veterans affected by the hydro developments of the Columbia river treaty projects."

In addition, Mr. Chairman, I received a telegram from the branch of which I happen to be a member and which I had the honour to organize in 1919. It contains a resolution passed at the zone convention on June 21, 1964.

> With regard to displacement to persons living in the area to be flooded by the Columbia development projects whereas it has been stated, in verbal and written form by Dr. H. L. Keenleyside, that market value will be the criterion used in the purchase of property of affected persons and whereas the use of market value can mean a very great hardship on people who cannot afford to pay the difference between market value and actual cost of replacement and whereas many veterans will be affected, and suffer hardship by the system of market value settlement; Therefore be it resolved that the Royal Canadian Legion support the principle as follows, when a person or persons are faced with the necessity of having to move, where a cash settlement is not suitable, that the hydro authority resettle such persons in accommodation not less favourable to them, at no cost to persons so resettled.

This telegram is signed, F. E. Sadd, secretary of the branch.

Now, Mr. Chairman, this matter is of serious concern to some of these veterans, owing to the circumstances of the district where up to the present time there are few paved highways, where most of the areas are served by country, gravel roads. Many of these people are isolated. The assessed values are somewhat low because they have not had the expensive government services. However, I know of one case where one of these ranchers ships $40,000 worth of cattle per year to the market. Just imagine what will happen to that man if he receives, say, twice the assessed value of the property plus 10 per cent for inconvenience. In that case, I know from personal experience, it would cost in the neighbourhood of $100,000 to buy a similar property.

I know several ranchers in the district, veterans particularly, where in some circumstances these persons have spent their life in this work, and in some cases their fathers have spent their lives, and they are entitled to most generous treatment when they are being displaced by a work for the benefit of the people of Canada. I object most strongly on their behalf to the suggestion made by Dr. Keenleyside of the B.C. hydro, as expressed in the letter that I have quoted. The people who attended this public meeting at Edgewood and Nakusp were very dissatisfied with the answers given by the co-chairman of B.C. hydro to the numerous questions they raised.

I have been asked to raise this question at the first opportunity. This is the reason I bring it to your attention tonight, Mr. Chairman, and to the attention of the house. I appeal to the Minister of Veterans Affairs to appoint some official to go to these veterans who live along this 150 miles of beautiful waterway, the Switzerland of North America, where there are 50 miles of beaches to be destroyed to provide a water tank for the United States, to give assistance and advice on their legal rights. I know the parliamentary secretary is a very humane sort of person. I trust he brings this situation to the attention of the minister and that the department does appoint someone to represent all these veterans, whether they hold property as a result of purchasing it from the Veterans Land Act administration, from any other agency of government, or whether they purchased their property outright.

In concluding, I say this, that men who have fought for Canada are entitled to be protected by the federal government in circumstances like these and not subjected to, shall I say, the legal, cold blooded treatment it appears they are going to receive from the B.C. power and hydro authority.

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Chairman, I did not plan on speaking tonight until I had to listen to a couple of speeches from the leaders of the minor parties accusing us of holding up legislation in this house. I shall come back to them later.

First, I should like to call the attention of this government, as I have attempted to do on several occasions, to what I refer to as the master agency plan. I believe this plan brings hardship and injustice to western Canada. I raised this problem with the former minister of transport, but did not get any reply from him. I went to the board of transport commissioners with regard to the closing of these stations. I could not get satisfaction from the board of transport commissioners. Many communities in western Canada have lost the services of the station agent, and this is bringing difficulty to the people. If I may give an example, about two weeks ago I sent a telegram from the city of Saskatoon to my home. I went 300 miles on the train and beat the telegram to Irma. In another instance, some people in Irma had friends coming to visit them. Those friends sent a telegram and they also beat the telegram to Irma. This is an example of what is happening. We can get no support whatever from the board of transport commissioners. They are just political appointees and are not serving the public. I think we might as well dispose of the board of transport commissioners, because the railways go ahead and do what they want anyway.

Now, the matter of this government and its policies was well covered by the hon. member for Edmonton West. I want to remind you, Mr. Chairman, however, that we have had a government of indecision for over a year now, a government that has been riding on the crest of the wave of prosperity, which resulted from legislation passed by the previous government. We have had too much irresponsibility and retracking. Now, at the end of it all, we have this flag resolution placed upon the order paper while more important legislation such as loans for students and help for the Quebec farmers is being delayed.

Mr. Grégoire: It has been said many times.

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Chairman, you have a little mouse in the corner. Could you put him in a cage for me?

I know, Mr. Chairman, that these Quebec farmers need help because I have been in their communities. I have found distressing conditions there, and I know these people need help. We had a minister of agriculture prepared to introduce legislation to help these farmers. Twenty years ago these small farmers could go out in the wintertime and cut pulpwood to help their finances, but today that source of revenue is gone.

What has this government done to help these people? They have set up the B. and B. commission which has been travelling across Canada spending millions of dollars. The government is spending millions of dollars to build an island at Montreal for the world fair and at the same time neglecting the small farmers of Quebec. I think legislation to help these people should be introduced before we spend all our time on the flag resolution.

Some hon. Members: Carried.

Mr. Smallwood: Now, Mr. Chairman, this afternoon at about ten minutes to five we heard the hon. member for Red Deer say, in a sanctimonious way, let us get on with the business of the country. He looked up at the press gallery and I suppose he hoped tomorrow he would see headlines, "Member for Red Deer wants to get on with legislation". I think the people of this country have caught up with him. Last fall he made a television broadcast. I can just see him on television, with his eyelids painted black to give him a sanctimonious look. He even fooled Dick Jackson of the Ottawa Journal. This is what Mr. Jackson wrote:

> Say what you will about Social Credit and the quality of the sincerity of leader Robert Thompson, the man surely has a way with words.
> Speaking of "Canadian disunity and the lack of national purpose," he saw strong leadership as the only way out, and to provide it, called for...
>
> "...men with clean minds, great hearts, true and ready hands.
>
> ...men whom the lust of office does not twist... men whom the spoils of power cannot buy...men who possess opinions and the will and wit to express them...men who have honour and will not lie...tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog in public duty and in private thinking..."

[Mr. Smallwood.]

An hon. Member: Amen.

Mr. Smallwood: My friend says amen. I agree. During that television show I was waiting for the hon. member to pass the collection plate.

I went back to my office and I picked up Liberty magazine, a magazine of religious freedom, printed in Washington, D.C., and at the back of it were these words:

> A time like this demands strong minds, great hearts, true faith and ready hands; men whom the lust of office does not kill; men whom the spoils of office cannot buy; men who possess opinions and a will; men who have honour; men who will not lie; men who can stand before a demagogue and damn his treacherous flatteries without winking; tall men, sun-crowned, who live above the fog in public duty and private thinking.
> These are the words of A. G. Holland, a United States author who died in 1881.

Here we have this man standing up and saying let us get on with the country's business but he will not give a man who died in 1881 the credit of his words.

We have heard of summit conferences. It has been said let us hold summit conferences. But we have had a summit conference at Rouyn, Quebec.

Mr. Caouette: Where is that?

Mr. Smallwood: This is a quotation from the Toronto Telegram.

Mr. Caouette: But where is it?

Mr. Smallwood: Would you pronounce that, my dear friend?

Mr. Pigeon: Rouyn.

Mr. Smallwood: This is from the Toronto Telegram dated June 22, 1962.

Mr. Caouette: Yes, but where from?

Mr. Smallwood: Rouyn.

Mr. Caouette: How do you spell it?

Mr. Smallwood: It reads:

> At a little summit meeting at a summer camp here yesterday the big two of Social Credit swore personal friendship and declared fealty to the party.

Both the hon. member for Red Deer and I can well remember the time back in 1935 when the Social Credit leader, the late William Aberhart, came out and said, "You vote for me and I will give you $25 a month." My hon. friend from Villeneuve did not want to be beaten by that, and so he went through Quebec during the election campaign and said, "I will give you $100." I would remind my hon. friend from Red Deer that over the years since 1935, on the basis of that promise, the provincial Social Credit government owes me $8,850 without interest. If the hon. member for Red Deer would see to it that I got paid that amount, I would jump up on my desk and holler hallelujah.

At that summit meeting the big two of Social Credit discussed wheat sales to China, and said the party would not approve of any new contract to sell grain to China. That is very interesting. I have another quotation from the Brandon daily Sun "Selling Grain To Reds Wrong—Socred Leader." Then there was another "No Sales to Reds Social Credit Warns." He was not satisfied with that and he went over to New Zealand, and according to the Ottawa Citizen of September 15, 1963, after the Russian wheat deal went through he said:

Canada has fallen into a communist trap with the sale of 228,000,000 bushels of wheat to the Soviet union.

I can tell the hon. member that the farmers of western Canada are happy to sell their wheat. The people of Canada are proud to sell their grain to those hungry people, regardless of what he thinks.

This is a man who talks about getting on with the business of the country. I will give another quotation, this one from the Ottawa Journal of June 23, 1962 "Socred's Thompson Raps Pearson's 'Dirty Politics' ". Oh, how he changes.

Robert N. Thompson, national Socred party leader said Friday that Liberal leader Lester Pearson is playing "dirty politics" in trying to force an early federal election.

Mr. Thompson said at a press conference, that "if there were an election now, Social Credit would win 80 seats, but we are responsible people—"

Look at them today. They are all split up.

The Chairman: Order. I have been listening to the hon. member with a great deal of interest but I have serious doubts as to whether his contribution to this debate is relevant. So far as I can judge he is referring to certain statements made by the leader of the Social Credit party, and I cannot see how this can be related to the resolution dealing with interim supply before the committee.

Mr. Caouette: He does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Smallwood: I am just replying to remarks made before the supper adjournment. The hon. member got up and suggested the house get on with the country's business, laying the blame on the official opposition for not doing so. I am trying to put the shoe on another foot for a change. This is an open debate to some extent and I believe I must bring this matter up. I have another quotation from the Edmonton Journal of November 9, 1963 which reads:

National Social Credit Leader Robert Thompson said Friday a number of Liberal members of parliament have signed a petition asking the government to institute Social Credit monetary reform.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Smallwood: This afternoon we heard the hon. member for Villeneuve speak about the former prime minister, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, with complete irresponsibility, and I am trying to place the record straight. When the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm accused him of being a Hitler or a Mussolini he got up on a point of order and complained about it, and I think I am perfectly right in placing these things on the record to back up my hon. friend from Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Caouette: He never knows what he is saying.

Mr. Pigeon: Heil Hitler.

The Chairman: Order. I do not think that because one hon. member used an epithet in the course of debate regarding another hon. member, this should lead a third hon. member to join in the fray. I would point out that we are considering interim supply and I feel the hon. member would be out of order if he continues in this vein.

Mr. Smallwood: Mr. Chairman, I shall be very brief in coming to the assistance of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and explaining to you why he made that remark, and let it go at that. I have many quotations here that I could read, but one will close the matter.

The Chairman: Order. I must say I definitely feel the hon. member is not being relevant to the resolution before the committee if he pursues this trend of thought.

Mr. Smallwood: Well, in those circumstances I will yield to your ruling since I wish to be co-operative. I would just say that here are clippings from the press which prove me right, because they say "Hitler, Duce, Political Heroes". I could read and read—

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

[Text]

The Chairman: On the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Villeneuve I must say I did not hear a statement made by the hon. member who was just speaking which imputed motives. If there was such a statement made, perhaps the hon. member would like to repeat it.

Some hon. Members: Oh.

Mr. Smallwood: I was just reading from the Toronto Globe and Mail of August 23, 1962. The headline reads: "Hitler, Duce, Political Heroes, Caouette Says". It goes on to say that in an interview published in Maclean's magazine, asked who his political heroes were, the hon. member replied: "Hitler and Mussolini".

The Chairman: The hon. member is certainly out of order but I do not think he has imputed motives. He is just out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: I object strenuously to the remarks uttered by the hon. member who now has the floor. I realize that he is being prompted by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, who has proved in the past that he is not more intelligent than required. But the hon. member is not entitled to impute any motive to any member here in this house.

Mr. Chairman, I would ask that you require the hon. member to withdraw the words he has just uttered.

[Text]

Mr. Pigeon: "Heil Hitler," Mr. Chairman.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member may not be imputing motives, but he mentioned or read from an article published in a Canadian magazine. At that time, as was stated tonight, I would have said about Hitler and Mussolini that long before the war, they gave their countries an economic impetus that enabled them to develop.

I stated in the same article what the hon. member does not want to read or refrains from reading now, namely that when they declared war, we were not happy at all, we did not agree with them at all.

The hon. member should be honest in his statements and then we will let him continue his remarks as he was doing a little earlier, but he should stop making charges. The same thing holds true for the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm who has been trying, since this afternoon, to impute motives and make charges right and left—I will not say through his hat, because he is not wearing one; I should say through his brains, but he is also deprived of that.

[Text]

The Chairman: I am sure the hon. member for Battle River-Camrose accepts the statement made by the hon. member for Villeneuve and we can let it go at that.

Mr. Smallwood: Thank you. I will do that. But I have great faith in the editorial writers and the newspapermen of this country and I was just putting a few of their opinions on record. However, I do not wish to take up more of the time of the committee. I just hope the people of Canada will realize that the time has now come to get back to the old two-party system.

Mr. McIlraith: Earlier this evening, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised the question of the appointment of ministerial staff. He raised two aspects of this matter. First, he reminded us that on June 11, the day before we first presented this resolution for the consideration of the house, I had undertaken in answer to some questions asked by his leader and by others to discuss this subject on interim supply. The other point he raised concerned the legality of certain aspects of appointments by order in council.

Perhaps I might dispose of the legal question first. The hon. member quoted section 71 of the Civil Service Act and sought to argue on this basis that the appointment or employment of any staff of a minister outside Ottawa was illegal. I would simply point out to the hon. member that he has misinterpreted the section he has read. If he would read the whole of the section he would realize, surely, that the word "office" as used in the section refers to the office of the minister, or the minister's establishment as separate from the administrative branch of the department. The Civil Service Act deals, of course, with both types of appointment or employment. That is the distinction which has to be drawn.

The word "office" as, I think, will be apparent to anyone, is used in two or three different contexts. It may mean the physical location of a room or set of rooms in which a person works. The other meaning has to do with a position to which certain duties are attached; a place of trust, authority or service, especially of a public kind. I would think that this latter definition of the meaning of the word "office" as taken from the Concise Oxford Dictionary is the obvious meaning of the word as used in the section.

Without developing this argument further I would, therefore, point out to the hon. member that his deduction as to the legality of the appointment is not the correct one. I might say that when he raised this point some days ago I immediately looked at the section myself—

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wonder whether the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) is giving at present a legal advice on a section of the act or the statutes of Canada. If this is what he is doing, I suggest that the President of the Privy Council will also have to tell us who has given him this legal advice and, if so, whether this legal advice comes from the Department of Justice in Ottawa.

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member for Lapointe is correct. I was making a legal argument concerning the interpretation of a section of the Civil Service Act. I have made the argument, and if the hon. member had contained himself for one minute longer, I would have answered the question he posed.

Having looked at the section myself, and having come to that conclusion, and having reinforced my view of it by turning to the Oxford dictionary as to the meaning of the word "office", I then asked my colleague, the Minister of Justice, for an opinion on the matter and he, as is his responsibility, or duty, did give me an opinion; and it was along the lines I have indicated.

Perhaps before I give the information I have undertaken to give to the committee, I should clear up one point concerning one of the persons whose name was mentioned several times in the house during the question period. I refer to Mr. Côté. I did not know this at the time, or I should have immediately brought it to the attention of the house, but on the day these questions were asked, Mr. Côté was present in the gallery along with other ministers' staff in the official place assigned to them. He performs the greater part of his duties in Ottawa, not at Baie des Sables. It is true that he does go to the constituency at various times, but not for the major part of the time during which he is employed. I merely make this clear out of fairness to the individual involved; he still does, on occasions, perform services outside Ottawa. I merely wanted to clear up that case.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the minister a question?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Douglas: If that is correct, why does the order in council state that Mr. Côté is located at Baie des Sables? Is it the intention of the minister to have the order in council changed?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Chairman. That is a very good question. When the man was appointed, his home address was Baie des Sables. That is where he came from, and they put that as his address in the order in council. In going through orders in council that go back for some years, I found, if you like to call it that, some inconsistencies in their wording. However, I make nothing of that point, other than to clarify the position of the particular man.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, would the minister allow me to ask him a question?

[Text]

Mr. McIlraith: I would very much prefer, Mr. Chairman, if the hon. member would allow me to put on the record the statement I promised the house several days ago. Then I would be glad to answer all the questions on the subject as fully as I can.

Mr. Caouette: But, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to know—

The Chairman: Order, please. The hon. minister has the floor, and if he does not want to reply to a question at this time, he should be allowed to complete his statement.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, this is the fifth day on which this interim supply resolution has been before the committee, and I have been ready and available to answer questions.

Mr. Churchill: It is the fourth day.

Mr. McIlraith: Well, I have been in the chamber during the whole of the time this interim supply resolution has been before the committee, and I am quite ready to answer all the questions I can. I did promise the house that I would answer some of the questions that were asked a few days ago on this whole subject, and I would like to do that now.

The stationing outside Ottawa of members of the staffs of ministers of the crown is consistent with past practice and has considerations of economy and efficiency to support it. From the records, it is clear that ministers have maintained members of their staffs at places outside Ottawa since 1935—and I do not know how far back the practice does go, but that was as far back as I was able to get the records—and possibly for many years before that. Ministers have traditionally maintained offices in federal public buildings in cities like Montreal, Quebec city, Toronto, Vancouver and Winnipeg.

Mr. Grégoire: And Matane.

Mr. McIlraith: In 1956-57, six members of ministers' staffs were employed in Vancouver, Windsor, Montreal and Lunenburg. Under the Conservative administration the number of members of ministers staffs working outside Ottawa was doubled. During the period 1958 to 1963, 12 persons were employed in Regina; Hamilton; Fredericton; St. Gilles, Quebec; Montreal; Middleton, Nova Scotia; Brandon and Mont Laurier.

Mr. Grégoire: And Matane.

Mr. McIlraith: At present there are 15 persons employed full time and one person part time at ministers' offices at Quebec city, Bathurst, Montreal, Toronto, Sorel, Niagara Falls, St. Boniface and Vancouver.

It is interesting to note that the Glassco commission has recently pointed out that only 24 per cent of the full time federal public service work in the Ottawa-Hull area. Three quarters of the public servants are dispersed throughout the rest of Canada, largely in 14 urban centres from St. John's to Victoria. As the Glassco commission observed, "How these scattered activities are organized and staffed, how their performance is appraised and their effectiveness ensured are matters of importance to the economy and efficiency of the federal administration and to quality of service received by the public". The commission asserted that "more systematic and energetic measures are needed to encourage the freer movement of public servants between headquarters and field establishments".

Since the Civil Service Act, 1961, the staffs of ministers of the crown are appointed in accordance with section 71(1) of the Civil Service Act. That section reads:

> A minister may appoint his executive assistant and his private secretary, and other persons to be employed in the office of a minister shall be appointed by the governor in council.

[Mr. McIlraith.]

The function of certain staff members who are provided for ministers of the crown, and for the leader of the opposition, is to relieve these ministers and the opposition leader from certain routine tasks and thus enable them to discharge more effectively their ministerial and public responsibilities. The posting of a member of the minister's staff to a centre outside Ottawa, whether in the minister's constituency or in some other area, has been found to improve the efficiency of service to the public and to reduce claims for travelling expenses. Under the present administration, no members of ministers' staffs stationed outside Ottawa are drawing an expense account.

To ensure that members of ministers' staffs fulfil their responsibilities of assisting the ministers and do not merely undertake routine political tasks on behalf of party or local organizations, the present government has already instituted the practice of requiring that proposed appointments be reviewed by treasury board before going forward to the governor in council for approval. In its review, treasury board ensures that the total size of a minister's staff, wherever located, remains within reasonable limits bearing in mind the size of the departmental organization.

It is not as simple a question as it may seem whether there should be a rule that all members of the staff of ministers should be obliged to live in Ottawa. This has not been the rule in the past. It may well be that ministers could be relieved of much of their obligation to deal with the manifold problems of their constituents by a secretary or a stenographer living in their constituency at a good deal smaller expense than would be the case if that employee were obliged to live in Ottawa.

I must add, Mr. Chairman, that the Prime Minister has instructed treasury board to examine into the whole question of ministerial assistants working outside Ottawa. He has asked treasury board to report on how this practice, as it has developed over the years, can be brought under strict control so that abuses, if any, can be prevented, and whether there are any advantages to the public service under the practice which should be retained under the control referred to.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, before the minister sits down could I ask him if he could have some information ready for us in the morning regarding the 15 full time persons and one part time person presently employed by ministers outside Ottawa. Perhaps he could tell us the locations and in how many cases these persons are actually located in the constituency of the minister.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Chairman, I would be very glad to give that information. I would point out that there are very, very few of them in the constituencies of the ministers; they are mainly in the major cities. But I will have that detailed information as soon as I can get it. I should point out, also, that there is a possibility of slight inaccuracies in some of the earlier information because I have had to reconstruct it as best I could from old orders in council, departmental records and things of that sort.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the house leader about the order of business for tomorrow, and perhaps for Monday.

Mr. Favreau: Tomorrow morning, Mr. Speaker, the government will call as its first item of business the motion concerning the extension of the hours of sitting. It will be a slightly modified version, on which I understand there will be agreement. Then we hope to complete the debate on interim supply, after which we will proceed with the debate on the flag resolution.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

FINANCE—SUGGESTED ELIMINATION OF SALES TAX ON BUILDING MATERIAL

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, during the question period I asked the leader of the Quebec Liberals, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) a question.

As the province of Quebec has about 38 per cent of all Canada unemployed, I asked him whether he would use his influence to obtain from the government that the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials be abolished, not only to help the economic recovery of the province of Quebec and favour the building industry, but to improve the Canadian economy in a general way.

Mr. Speaker, all hon. members are aware of the many protests the government received from municipalities, school boards, industries, labour unions, in short from all provincial governments about that 11 per cent tax, which jeopardizes Canadian economy to a great extent.

Mr. Speaker, we have to face not only winter unemployment but summer unemployment as well, and I may say that, so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, building activities have decreased by at least 60 per cent, in comparison to former years, and just because of that 11 per cent tax.

Mr. Speaker, we trust—and I trust—that the Minister of Justice will make his colleagues in the cabinet understand the importance of eliminating that tax as soon as possible, as it is most prejudicial to the Canadian economy. I therefore ask the minister to be firm. It is alright to belong to a political party and to be a member of the cabinet. But if the Minister of Justice would urge his party, and more particularly the members of the cabinet to eliminate that 11 per cent sales tax, I can tell him that he would be greatly admired by the Canadian population, and more particularly by the people of Quebec.

People in Canada are disappointed by this government's actions. The first 60 days of Liberal rule were to be miraculous; there was to be a remedy for all evil. But those first 60 days were rather prejudicial to the Canadian economy, because that 11 per cent tax brought about a slow-down in its development.

The housing contractors are roused and alarmed. Building is decreasing; the number of bankruptcies is constantly on the increase, more particularly in the building field, because the profit margin is very slim at this time, more particularly since the government imposed that famous 11 per cent tax, which runs counter to every economic principle. Indeed, I defy the Minister of Justice to name one organization in Canada supporting the 11 per cent tax.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I hear protests from government members, but if they are really aware of their responsibility, if they want to give priority to the interests of the country over that of their party, they should have been the first ones to protest when the present government levied that 11 per cent tax which proved to be disastrous to the Canadian economy.

The province of Quebec has the monopoly of unemployment. What is the co-operation between the Quebec Liberal government and the Liberal government in Ottawa? In view of the serious worsening of the unemployment situation in the province of Quebec, I pray the Minister of Justice, on behalf of the people of Quebec who suffer from unemployment, will use his influence, if he has any, in order that this 11 per cent tax be abolished so that the economy be boosted not only in the province of Quebec but throughout Canada.

[Text]

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I recognize and respect the hon. member's concern for unemployment. This government has been greatly concerned about the employment situation in Canada, and contrary to what was done by the previous government has indeed done a great deal about it. If he will reflect over the past year, there has been the extension of the winter works program, the extension of vocational training assistance, the $500 housing bonus paid for winter building, the program with regard to designated areas, including the three year tax holiday, the two year write-off on machinery, the five year write-off on buildings, along with double depreciation that has been granted on new equipment across the whole of Canada. I think the people agree that this government has done a good deal with respect to unemployment. Indeed, the success of our program is shown by the fact that unemployment in Canada is now lower than it has ever been since the last time that a Liberal government was in power.

The hon. member's attempt to relate unemployment to the sales tax extension is, I maintain, entirely unwarranted. There has been a great expansion of building in Quebec and in the whole of Canada. I challenge him to support the figure he just quoted of a 60 per cent reduction in construction in Quebec. I should like to refer the hon. member to my speech of February 25, 1964 in this respect and also to the Financial Post of February 22, 1964.

I should also like to refer him to the publication, National Accounts, Income and Expenditure, for the first quarter of 1964, published by the dominion bureau of statistics. I quote from page 3 thereof:

[Mr. Pigeon.]

—the value of residential construction put in place in the first quarter was about 25 per cent higher than in the preceding period.

I quote further from page 7:

Spending on fixed capital, including housing, provided the major impetus to production in the first quarter and the rise of 11 per cent carried total capital expenditures to an annual rate of $8.8 billion after discounting seasonal factors.

If the hon. member will recall, I stated in my speech on February 25, 1964 that such expenditures would amount to $8 billion this year and I am pleased that that figure is going to be surpassed and will reach $8.8 billion, almost the biggest construction year in Canada's history. I quote further from the same page of the report:

The demand for business fixed capital absorbed 19 per cent of gross national product compared with 17 per cent in the first quarter of 1963. The annual rate of housing completions rose to an unsurpassed level of 215.8 thousand in the first quarter as the final qualifying date for the government's winter housebuilding incentive bonus was approached.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must advise the hon. member that his time has expired.

TRANSPORT—GASPE—REQUEST FOR RECONSIDERATION OF RAILWAY CONSTRUCTION

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, during the question period, I also asked the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) whether the government intended to reconsider its decision, so that the railway between Ste Anne des Monts and Matane would be built.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to read a letter I received from the chamber of commerce of Gaspé-Nord Inc., on June 22, 1964:

Mr. Louis-Joseph Pigeon,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Dear Sir,

Please find herewith copy of a clarifying statement and a resolution of the chamber of commerce of Gaspé-Nord Inc. concerning the proposed building of a railway between Matane and Ste Anne des Monts.

The board of directors of the chamber of commerce has asked me to offer you their most sincere thanks for your support of that project. Those who want to see the development of our beautiful Gaspé peninsula have noted your firm and constant support for our project and they greatly appreciate it.

We hope that you will have a further opportunity to support that project which we believe to be essential to the development of our area.

Yours truly,

Gaspé-Nord Chamber of Commerce Inc.
Mr. Gaston Mainville, secretary.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): To whom was the letter addressed?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, the president of the chamber of commerce of Gaspé-Nord, Inc. sent me an excerpt of the minutes of the meeting of the board of directors held at Ste Anne des Monts, on Wednesday June 17, 1964.

The chamber of commerce of Gaspé-Nord Inc. wishes to rectify a statement recently published in various newspapers, including Le Soleil, to the effect that the chamber of commerce of Gaspé-Nord, Inc. had definitely abandoned the idea of a railroad being built between Matane and Ste Anne des Monts.

Mr. Caouette: To whom?

Mr. Pigeon:

The board of directors of the chamber of commerce of Gaspé-Nord never took that stand and there has never been any question of abandoning that project. On the contrary, the chamber of commerce continues to support the idea and is convinced that such a railroad is necessary for the development of that area. The chamber of commerce is in favour of the construction of roads and seaports, but it does not give up the idea of a railroad because roads and seaports are necessary with or without a railroad.

Mr. Caouette: To whom is it addressed?

Mr. Pigeon:

It is further moved by Claude Jourdain, supported by Maurice Lefrançois and unanimously carried that the chamber of commerce of Gaspé-Nord Inc. ask the federal government to extend by at least one year the expiration date of the bill which, at present, is set for December 31, 1964.

Mr. Caouette: To whom?

Mr. Pigeon:

That copy of this statement and resolution be sent to the Minister of Transport, the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada, Hon. René Tremblay, Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, Mr. Alexandre Cyr, M.P. for Gaspé, the newspaper Le Soleil—

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Pigeon:

—to the newspaper Le Soleil, to the newspaper Le Voyageur and to the chamber of commerce of the Gaspé peninsula.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Villeneuve rises on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, when somebody has the floor, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm always rises to interrupt him or prevent him from speaking. Now, we have been asking him for at least five minutes to whom this letter was addressed and he does not answer. According to the way he acts, it seems we are not entitled to know.

So I ask permission to put a question to the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. May I be granted this privilege?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I ask you to be kind enough to make allowance for the time taken by the hon. member for Villeneuve in order to put his question and for the time that will be needed for the answer I shall give him. In that case, I am prepared to give the hon. member an answer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I take the liberty of drawing the attention of the hon. member on the fact that if he replies to a question asked, the time he takes for that purpose will naturally be charged to him.

Mr. Pigeon: Well, I shall not answer that question, but I hope an allowance will be made for the time taken by the hon. member for Villeneuve.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, I ask you to please maintain some order in this house. After all, we are not at a Social Credit convention, but in the House of Commons.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm says he is not at a Social Credit convention; I should like to point out to him that a Social Credit convention is much more to the point than the behaviour of the hon. member for Joliette in this house. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is doing all he can to—

Mr. Pigeon: There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Caouette: —he is doing all he can—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. If the hon. member for Villeneuve has a question of privilege, he should state his question of privilege.

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Pigeon: Personal?

Mr. Choquette: And confidential.

Mr. Pigeon: Not confidential.

Mr. Caouette: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is making charges at random—

Mr. Pigeon: There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Caouette: —as usual. We are not concerned here with the Social Credit convention but with logical and comprehensible remarks—

Mr. Pigeon: The chamber of commerce said that not I.

Mr. Caouette: —something which the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is unable to do.

Mr. Pigeon: It is the chamber of commerce not I.

Mr. Caouette: To whom was this letter addressed?

Mr. Pigeon: You may read Hansard tomorrow morning, when you are less excited.

Mr. Speaker, this concludes the excerpt from the minutes of the meeting of the board of directors of Gaspé-Nord Inc., held at Ste Anne des Monts on Wednesday, June 17, 1964:

That copy of this clarifying statement and of this resolution—

Some hon. Members: Go on.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I ask for your co-operation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can assure the hon. member that he has the co-operation of the Chair. He only has to proceed with his remarks, I can hear him very well.

Mr. Pigeon: I do not agree with you on this point, Mr. Speaker. Members on that side of the house make comments all the time. I ask you to please apply the rules on both sides of the house. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Choquette) and the hon. member for Shawinigan are always making remarks.

Mr. Chrétien: On a point of order, I represent the riding of St. Maurice-Laflèche.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I can assure the hon. member that the rules are applied equitably and fairly on both sides of the house and I ask him to proceed with his remarks.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, on a question of privilege or a point of order. The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is simply unbearable. As soon as he hears someone say a word, he complains that he is interrupted.

Mr. Pigeon: There is no question of privilege or point of order.

Mr. Caouette: There is no other hon. member of the house so provoking and uncompromising—

Mr. Pigeon: No, Mr. Speaker.

[Mr. Caouette.]

Mr. Caouette: —as the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Caouette: And he is always the first to complain—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: May I have the co-operation of all hon. members, from both sides of the house, so that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm may finish his question?

Mr. Caouette: He should speak intelligently.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I ask again for your co-operation. I conclude my quotation:

That copy of this statement and this resolution be sent to the Minister of Transport, the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada, Hon. René Tremblay, Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, Mr. Alexandre Cyr, member for Gaspé, and to Le Soleil and Le Voyageur, and la chambre de commerce régionale de la Gaspésie.

Gaston Mainville, secretary.

Mr. Speaker, I quote from Hansard of the House of Commons for March 12, 1962, page 1703. This is what Mr. Chevrier said just before the bill was passed:

Once again, Mr. Speaker, the official opposition is in favour of this project—

If you refer to pages 1707 and 1708 of Hansard for the same date, you will see that at the time all Liberal members voted in favour of the construction of a branch line between Matane and Ste Anne des Monts. Why, after taking office, did the Liberals cancel that project which had practically received unanimous approval in the house?

This is a violation of freedom—

Mr. Caouette: What was the year?

Mr. Pigeon: This is violating everything which was done by the previous government. A government has no right to cancel an almost unanimous decision of the House of Commons—including the Liberal members—and to deprive the Gaspe peninsula of its railways.

The Gaspé-Nord chamber of commerce may be assured, that on this side of the house, we will fight each and every day to obtain a reversal of the government's decision and the implementation of the bill which was accepted by the house, when we were in power, in the sole interest of the Gaspé peninsula.

Mr. Caouette: You are better on this side of the house than when you were sitting opposite.

Mr. J. C. Cantin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Transport): On Thursday, April 23, 1964, at this same time, the same hon. member asked the same question, made the same statement and used the same arguments. Consequently, Mr. Speaker, the minister's reply is the same.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

STATEMENT ON MEETING OF JOINT U.S.-CANADIAN MINISTERIAL COMMITTEE

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yesterday the Prime Minister mentioned that I would report on the meeting of the Canada-United States ministerial committee on joint defence which took place in Washington yesterday. This was the fourth meeting since the committee was established in 1958 and the first meeting since 1960. The early convening of this committee had been agreed at meetings between the Prime Minister and Presidents Kennedy and Johnson last year and in January of this year. The United States was represented by Secretary of State Dean Rusk, the Secretary of the Treasury Douglas Dillon and Secretary of Defence Robert S. McNamara. My colleagues on the Canadian delegation were the Minister of National Defence, the Minister of Finance, the Associate Minister of National Defence and the Minister of Defence Production.

Among the subjects discussed were the changing nature of the threat to the North American continent and measures to meet that threat. There were no negotiations of any kind relating to nuclear weapons and no new commitments were entered into. We also took the opportunity to review developments in NATO which have taken place since The Hague meetings in May.

We discussed the interest of both governments in achieving an effective arms control and disarmament program and examined a number of proposals now before the disarmament committee in Geneva, including a "bonfire" of equal numbers of U.S. and Soviet medium bombers and the cut-off and cutback of the production of fissionable material. The United States expressed appreciation for the Canadian initiative in the field of international peace keeping activities. I described the conference which we hope to organize later this year among interested nations for an exchange of experience and views concerning training and preparations for peace keeping under UN auspices.

At this meeting there was a useful review of the defence production sharing program which Canada and the United States embarked upon in 1959. The agreed object of this program has been to maintain a rough balance in the purchases of defence equipment in each other's country; this has been reaffirmed. A special study is to be undertaken with a view to maintaining this balance over the next few years during which we will be making a number of new defence equipment purchases. My colleague the Minister of Defence Production will be able later to elaborate on this aspect of yesterday's meeting.

It was natural that the situation in southeast Asia should have been a matter of special attention at this meeting. There can be little doubt about the depth of the concern of the United States government about the manner in which communist China and North Viet Nam are attempting to extend their influence through intereference in the affairs of Laos and South Viet Nam. We came away with the clear impression that if the communist powers seek to continue their subversive activities in neighbouring states, a serious situation could develop.

We formed an equally clear impression that the United States objective is simply the proper execution of the Geneva accords of 1954 and 1962. The latter provided specifically for the neutrality of Laos, and the United States wants nothing more than to see this neutrality respected and effectively safeguarded. I am satisfied that if the communist powers for their part would observe those agreements, the United States, which seeks no permanent bases or special position in either Laos or South Viet Nam, would no longer find it necessary to take special measures to support the governments of those two countries.

For our part we pointed out the special position which Canada has in Indochina by virtue of its membership in the international supervisory commissions. The U.S. ministers fully understood the limitation which this fact places on our activities in this area and made no effort to press upon us an alteration of our current policies; and I may say, as the Prime Minister affirmed yesterday, there is no intention on the part of Canada to undertake any new military obligations in this area. Any action on our part could only arise pursuant to our obligations under the United Nations charter.

The ministerial committee on Canada-United States defence happened to coincide with the visits to the U.S.A. of Prime Minister Inonu of Turkey and Prime Minister Papandreou of Greece, who had been invited to Washington by President Johnson to discuss the Cyprus question. As Canada has a heavy stake in both men and money in the UN peace keeping operation in Cyprus, it was desirable that I should take advantage of their presence to see these two leaders of countries with whom we are allied in NATO and who are directly concerned with events in Cyprus.

I therefore took the opportunity to have meetings with both of them and to express again, as I had done at The Hague in May, my earnest hope that they would refrain from any action which might render more difficult the peace keeping task on the island or jeopardize the security of NATO. I also reaffirmed Canada's impartiality in this affair, emphasizing that our purpose in Cyprus is to assist in restoring order in a way which favours neither side in the difficult communal dispute on the island.

I am satisfied that both men are experienced statesmen who have no desire to see the relations between their countries deteriorate, but who are caught up in a vortex of pressures which are causing great difficulties for both countries. I am confident that both are men of peace who will do all they can to bring about a stabilization of the situation in Cyprus and an improvement in the relations between their two countries.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): No one would wish on an occasion such as this, without having reviewed the remarks of the hon. gentleman, to make any lengthy statement. However, I should like to refer to two of the matters to which he has alluded. The first he passed over very lightly. The discussions which have taken place revealed, he said, a change in the nature of the threat to North America. I wish he had carried on from there and told the house what apparently was said during the course of this discussion, namely that the bomber threat to North America is receding, and receding rapidly. This is something that we contended when we were in office and which contributed to the course of action we took relative to the necessary defences in Canada to assure co-operation with the United States in this regard.

Certainly it would have been very helpful if, instead of generalities, the hon. gentleman had frankly admitted this situation to exist; in other words, that it is now generally agreed that the bomber threat has diminished. It is very difficult to understand such an admission in the light of a statement made by the Minister of Finance outside the house in the last couple of days that the Bomarc missile sites will be retained, and that it is expected they will continue to be required for several years. This is a statement altogether out of keeping with the stand being taken by the United States with regard to Bomarc installations, necessary as these were at the time of their installation.

In respect to southeast Asia, the minister spoke with that care which a minister must always exercise regarding conditions in Viet Nam and Laos. I, of course, have no information, nor have I ever been provided with any information by the government respecting the situation there although one would have expected that such information would be made available to the Leader of the Opposition, as it is normally in the United Kingdom. The position in southeast Asia is very dangerous, dangerous to the peace not only of Asia but of world as a whole. We in this country, knowing that the United States has an international responsibility which covers the entire world, should not do anything which would have the effect of giving to the Chinese or other communists operating there the idea that we are not in unity with any action which the United States must take, short of war, to preserve and maintain the integrity of those countries. Declarations are made from time to time as to boundaries and the integrity of countries. These countries in southeast Asia today are in a perilous position; perilous to the preservation of their independence and perilous to world peace if there is any indication given that in the western world there is no unity regarding courses or stands that should be taken.

I think Canada—and I take this from the words of the minister—followed that course very carefully in the discussions that took place yesterday, because the minister has just pointed out that there were no undertakings given to increase or expand in any way Canada's contribution there. That being so, we ought to be careful not to do anything that would have the effect of arousing hope among communist nations in Asia of a divided opinion in the western world in this regard.

With regard to Cyprus, I would like to have had the minister give further detail in connection with the problem there. The withdrawal of so large a proportion of the British force must inevitably mean that other nations will have to contribute additional troops, for certainly the numbers that have been there have not been able to bring about the hopeful expectations of the minister at the time the Canadian force was first sent. We can only hope that there will be a recognition by both Greece and Turkey of the terrible danger to NATO in their conduct on internecine separation. It was because of this that yesterday I suggested to the Prime Minister, this being one of the matters that certainly will be discussed at the prime ministers' conference, that a day should be set aside to discuss these matters so the Prime Minister will have a consensus of the representatives of all the people and all parties in this house as he attends this important conference.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the Secretary of State for External Affairs has made a statement so soon after his return from Washington. He has dealt with three matters, and I would like to comment very briefly on each of them.

I would certainly have liked more detailed information regarding the minister's statement about the changing nature of the threat to North American defence, because one can only assume that if the threat is changing then the commitments which Canada will be called upon to make must also be changing. We would certainly like to know what changes in commitments are being made.

I would have liked to hear the minister state that the Canadian representatives at the conference yesterday had made it clear to the Americans that the Prime Minister of this country had committed himself and his government to a withdrawal from a nuclear role, in order that Canada might devote its resources to a role in international affairs more in keeping with its wealth and technological capacity. I do not think the government can keep on postponing this matter. The government have definitely gone on record as saying that the Bomarcs were taken as the result of what they considered to have been a previous commitment, but that Canada would phase out of this role as quickly as possible. I had hoped that the minister would state that this had been made clear to the United States, and that if there is a changing threat to North America, Canada's role would be changed and the nuclear role would be discontinued.

All hon. members will be interested in the defence sharing arrangements which have been agreed upon. I hope that at an early date the Minister of Defence Production will give a report to the house in order that we might have some idea what this rough balance between Canadian and United States purchases really amounts to and to what extent Canada will be favourably considered in such a division of defence purchases.

With reference to southeast Asia, the minister said that the United States is concerned about a situation which could become very serious. May I say that in my opinion the seriousness has been contributed to very substantially in recent days by some of the statements which have been made by United States military personnel and government officials to the effect that the United States is prepared, if necessary, to risk an all-out war with mainland China in order to carry out what it considers to be its commitments in southeast Asia, and there is open discussion by U.S. military leaders of an invasion of North Viet Nam.

The minister in making his report this morning said that the United States is seeking to enforce the Geneva agreements. As I recall them, I do not think the United States is a signatory to these agreements, and it is rather strange that a nation, not a signatory to these agreements, is now placing itself in the position of an enforcer of agreements it did not sign. I think this concept of the United States as the world policeman to interfere wherever it feels its interests are being jeopardized, on the excuse that it is enforcing somebody else's agreements, is completely fallacious.

I do not think it is enough for the government to come back to the House of Commons and to say they made no new commitments in southeast Asia. I would hope that the government of Canada makes it clear to the United States that we view with alarm unilateral action by the United States, and that we wish to dissociate ourselves from any repercussions which may arise from the policy which it has adopted.

I cannot agree with the statement made by the last speaker that we should support any action short of war. It seems to me that this is brinkmanship of the worst kind, because we cannot say what action will be short of war or which will result in war. If the situation in southeast Asia demands military action, then that military action ought to be taken by the United Nations, not by the United States unilaterally projecting itself into an area where it has no international obligations and where its action would seem to be predicated very largely upon its own vested interests. I trust that the Canadian government will make it clear to the United States that we are deeply concerned about the trend of events and the announcements which have been made by the United States with respect to southeast Asia.

I am sure all hon. members are glad the secretary of state was able to see representatives of the Greek and Turkish governments. I think he is quite right when he says these men are caught up in a vortex of pressures and hysteria which they find very difficult to control. I think the government are to be commended for their steadfastness in the Cyprus situation. I was glad to see that the Canadian government has indicated it is prepared to continue its commitment with regard to supplying forces for the peace keeping activities in Cyprus.

We may have to review our contribution in this regard, or ask the United Nations to review the contributions of the various nations. I notice that General Gyani, who is leaving his position as commander of the force, says that a minimum of 10,000 men is required. With Britain withdrawing some of her forces this means there will be a very great shortage of United Nations military personnel in Cyprus. This may mean that the United Nations will have to ask more nations to contribute, or ask some of the nations who are already contributing to make a larger contribution.

I hope that at a very early date the Prime Minister will arrange for a full debate on the Cyprus situation in order that members may have all the information the government can give us, and so that, at the same time, the world at large will know that the great bulk of the members of this house are solidly behind the government in giving wholehearted support to maintaining a United Nations police force in Cyprus in the hope that we can restore peace and order in that island and prevent the trouble there from spreading into a large scale war.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I am sure all members of the house are grateful to the Secretary of State for External Affairs for his statement this morning. While this is not the time for prolonged remarks, I too should like to add my brief comments.

I think the statement he made relating to his talks with the heads of state of Greece and Turkey contains the most encouraging words we have heard about Cyprus for several weeks. Certainly he is to be commended for taking the initiative in this regard and engaging in discussion of this very critical problem with these men as I think only a Canadian can at this particular time.

It is reassuring to me, as I am sure it is to all Canadians, that he found these men sensitive to their own responsibilities with regard to peace not only in that area but as it relates to the whole world. It is also reassuring to me to know that while we are in the midst of trouble in the Middle East and Far East, talks are still continuing relating to arms control and a disarmament program. Probably these topics seem very remote as crises continue to arise throughout the world, but certainly this is the only solution to the overall problem of peace if peace is ever to come to pass.

There is no question at all but that the situation in southeast Asia is one of the most critical in the world today, and when we talk about the necessity of reviewing our contributions to peace keeping projects such as Cyprus I think it is also necessary that we keep reviewing the international scene in the light of developments. While the United States may not have always followed correct policies and may have made many mistakes, there is no doubt that that nation is the only reason at this time why the whole of southeast Asia has not been taken over by the communists, which would have meant that parts of the commonwealth, not just on the Asian continent alone but also Australia and New Zealand, would have been facing much greater danger from the communist threat than they are today.

Therefore I think it is good that liaison and dialogue with the United States should continue. It is very easy to stand up and condemn the United States for what they are doing, to take what is too often interpreted as an anti-American attitude, and lose sight of the fact that if it was not for the Americans assuming some of these responsibilities the world would be in a much graver state than it is at the present time. Therefore talks such as have been held in the last several days with relation to the situation in various areas of the world, the subject of co-operation in the defence of this continent and the sharing of defence programs, are good. I think the government should be commended in this regard, and I hope these discussions continue on the same basis.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, meetings at the higher level between two countries like Canada and the United States are similar to a discussion between an average country and a colossus among nations, indeed the greatest country in the world with regard to wealth, natural resources and human potential. When discussions like that are launched, they give some food for thought.

First of all, it is obvious that we should not let ourselves be assimilated or wiped out by a giant like our neighbour country, when we have to face decisions. At such a time, we might know the sad fate of a pygmy confronted with a giant, and who is up against more than his match.

On the other hand, because we are not as big as our neighbours, we lack their financial power, as well as their resources. Under the circumstances we should not try to emulate their development, as we would be unable to keep up with them; we should not try to do as much as they do, because we would exceed the limit of our possibilities and then we would be on the verge of a catastrophe.

Canada must do its share as far as the North American defence is concerned, but not on a par with a colossal neighbour; Canada should not let itself be assimilated, but neither should we do more than our share.

As far as Indochina is concerned, Canada should keep away from that issue, more particularly with regard to the manner in which our southern neighbour is trying to settle it at this time.

The United States is trying to impose its ideas by force in Viet Nam, Laos and the whole Indochina region. There are a great number of people, throughout the world, who believe that the United States is going about it the wrong way in dealing with the problem of Indochina.

For our part, we prefer the suggestion advocated by General de Gaulle, that is, the neutralization of all of Indochina, in cooperation with the neighbouring countries, including communist China. In our opinion, that is the only solution which could put an end to the guerillas and war that are now going on in Indochina.

The French tried for a long time to dominate that country. The United States will not get off scot-free, so I cannot see what Canada would be doing in such a region, where the problems are internal ones, since they have to do with a people who wants to free itself from all foreign influence and domination.

With regard to Cyprus, I understand that the Prime Ministers of Turkey and Greece may have met the President of the United States, but we must keep in mind—and I think the Secretary of State for External Affairs should keep this in mind, especially when there are 1,100 Canadian soldiers in that country—that the problem of Cyprus is not the problem of the Prime Minister of Canada but the problem of the people of Cyprus.

The domestic problems of a country cannot be settled by external intervention. It is because too many Cypriots think as Greeks or as Turks and not enough as Cypriots first and foremost, that they are faced with those problems. It should not be the part of neighbouring countries to impose a solution on them, they should instead suggest to them means to get on well together.

Concerning the question of a debate on Cyprus in the house, I remember very well that we had an opportunity for such a debate once, and the government as well as the Leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) decided then that the debate should be carried on as quickly as possible—

[Text]

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Are we indulging now in a debate, or are we supposed to be having brief comments on the statement made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs?

Mr. Speaker: To answer the question directly, the comments are supposed to be brief.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, I do not believe my remarks are any longer than those of the Leader of the Opposition, and if the latter, as well as the member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, thought it appropriate to speak about a debate in the house on the Cyprus question, in my opinion, I may also speak on it.

We refuse to let ourselves be gagged like that. I do not think that a debate in the House of Commons on the Cyprus issue is imperative for we shall not settle the Cyprus problem in this house; the Cypriots themselves will eventually solve their own problem. To my mind, the house is faced with issues of sufficient importance without initiating a new debate on the Cyprus problem.

In any event, it is rather in showing friendship to the Cypriots, in furnishing the economic assistance they need to establish themselves as an independent nation, both from the industrial and the agricultural points of view, that we shall help solve the Cyprus problem, but not in supplying them with armaments.

INCOME TAX

NOTICE OF TERMINATION OF CANADA-UNITED KINGDOM AGREEMENT

Mr. E. J. Benson (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a brief statement on behalf of the Minister of Finance about the revision of the Canada-United Kingdom income tax agreement.

The minister stated in the house on June 11 that it is the intention of the government to seek the revision at an early date of the Canada-United Kingdom income tax agreement. He also thought it appropriate that the house be informed at this time that as part of these proceedings the government has followed the procedure contemplated in the agreement and has given the government of the United Kingdom notice of termination of the present agreement in accordance with the terms of article XVIII thereof. Under the terms of the agreement, notice must be given by one contracting government to the other before June 30 of any year if it wishes to bring to an end any feature of the agreement by the 1st of January of the following year.

As previously stated by the minister, it is proposed that meetings of officials be held as soon as possible with a view to concluding a revised agreement, and it is hoped that these can be concluded before the termination of the present agreement comes into effect in 1965.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): The announcement just made by the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance is important. The Minister of Finance did suggest that this procedure would be followed. As the parliamentary secretary has pointed out, and as I recall the treaty, we have to give notice before June 30 in any one year to be effective the following December 31, that this treaty is abrogated. I presume there have been several preliminary discussions because there are some difficult problems which have to be solved before a new treaty can be negotiated. We have to negotiate that treaty and have it approved before December 31; otherwise we will be in the unfortunate position of having no treaty whatever.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF STANDING COMMITTEE

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Brant-Haldimand) moved:

That the third report of the standing committee on banking and commerce, presented to this house on Tuesday, June 16, 1964, be now concurred in.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the indulgence of the house to offer an explanation of this report. The report contains the usual request that the committee be permitted to sit during the hours the house is sitting. In order to allay the fears and objections that have been voiced earlier in the house, I wish to give an undertaking that such a course will not be adopted without a prior meeting of, and approval by, the steering committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say just a few words on this matter. I am the one who asked, a few weeks ago, that this motion follow the ordinary course of procedure, that is that 48 hours' notice be given before it be brought forward, so as to point out that committees often ask to be permitted to meet while the house is sitting. We do not object to that; on the contrary, we believe that committees must carry out the very important work they are entrusted with.

However, something happened recently, which prompted us to open our eyes and to ask for some explanations. Such an opportunity is being afforded to us this morning.

Recently the very important question of a Canadian flag was before the house. And while the main speeches on that subject were delivered by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the hon. members for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), the very important committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines was hearing evidence by the president of the C.N.R., Mr. Donald Gordon, and the president of Air Canada, Mr. MacGregor.

In view of such a fact where many hon. members wishing to hear the Prime Minister's speech on that question had to attend the sittings of that committee, we feel that in the future committees, while being permitted to sit at the same time as the house, should not do so while debates on important problems are going on in the house and while the Leader of the Opposition and the Prime Minister are making important statements.

I think that the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Pennell) understands the situation. So, I feel that members of steering committees should obtain the approbation of the hon. members before holding meetings while the house is sitting, so that committees do not sit when there are important discussions in the house.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

EXTENSION OF SITTING HOURS—NO SITTING ON JULY 1

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, there is a motion on the order paper to extend the hours of sitting of the house. I am pleased to report that following a series of meetings between the house leaders and myself, all parties in this house have agreed to a modified version of that motion. The modifications are as follows; that instead of sitting on Friday evening it is proposed that the house sit continuously between 10.30 in the morning and 6 p.m., and on July 1, Canada day, there will be no sitting of this house.

I therefore move, seconded by the Solicitor General (Mr. MacNaught):

That, commencing on Monday, June 29, 1964 and thereafter until adjournment for a summer recess, the hours of sitting of the house shall be as follows:

Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays—from 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m. and from 8.00 p.m. to 10.30 p.m.

Wednesdays—from 2.00 p.m. to 6.00 p.m.

Fridays—from 10.30 a.m. to 6.00 p.m.

That proceedings on an adjournment motion, if any, on Mondays, Tuesdays or Thursdays, under provisional standing order 39A shall be deferred until 10.30 p.m.

That when this house adjourns at 6.00 p.m. on Tuesday, June 30, 1964, it shall stand adjourned until Thursday, July 2, 1964, at 2.00 p.m.

That in relation to the above, the provisions of standing orders 2 and 6 be suspended.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, as the minister has said there is agreement in this connection. In point of fact I feel that the extension of the hours of sitting that we have regularly followed for several years is something that might well receive the attention of the committee on procedure. I believe the hours we sit should be materially increased and be in keeping with those that are followed in the United Kingdom where, as you know, the house sits between 6 and 8, and during the dinner hour many opportunities are given to members to express views without being in danger or in fear of any division being called. I think the increase in hours that has been agreed to is a worthy step.

I would, however, suggest that as it is to apply until adjournment for the summer recess, some general indication be given by the government as to when it may hope that will take place. I know immediately it will be said "Well, get on with the business." I say get on with the business, and let it be business of priority rather than such things as the flag and anthem and the like, which could be held over at a time when serious economic conditions are already showing in our national position.

I would like to see the government make use of these increased hours to bring before the house, instead of such matters as I have already referred to, questions such as the loans for students and family allowances. In the economic field, what action will be taken to meet a situation that has already become apparent? In the month of May our exports increased by only 2.9 per cent, and if it were not for the wheat sales to the U.S.S.R. our exports in May would have been lower than they were a year ago.

Our exports to the United Kingdom, to the United States and to commonwealth countries were down in the month of May as compared to what they were a year ago, and this is something which we should be looking into. Then there is the question of our balance of payments. The current account deficit increased in the latest quarter to $341 million, reversing the favourable trend since 1962. The non-merchandise deficit was up 25 per cent. United States long term investment in Canada was $58 million compared to $373 million in the first quarter of 1963, and there is an outflow of capital.

Mr. Winch: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious a person can introduce matters which he thinks should be discussed under the lengthening of the hours, but surely we are not going into a debate, and the Leader of the Opposition is entering into a debate on this question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am simply pointing out that these are matters of priority and pre-eminence. It is not a question of debate; it is a question of how these hours are going to be used. There has been an outflow of capital and security transactions. I could go on and on mentioning these economic portents, but even though they are apparent to everyone the government does not act but brings these comparative trivialities before parliament in the face of priorities that should be receiving attention. We accept the increase in hours, but let the government place before parliament things that will help Canada economically rather than play around with issues that divide the nation.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party are prepared to support the idea of the extended hours, but we are not too sanguine that by itself this is going to speed up the business of the house. We are willing to give it a try, but we maintain there are a number of things, as was suggested yesterday, which we ought to do, such as attempting to reach some common agreement about limiting the length of debates, putting up a limited number of speakers on certain legislation so that we can shorten the length of debate on various questions.

We are hopeful that the committee of which Your Honour is chairman, and which is working on this problem, will be able to present some useful suggestions to the house at an early date. The view of the members of this group regarding the priorities of business is already well known. We think there are a number of important items on the order paper, and other items which are not on it but which the government has said it is preparing to place on the order paper, which should have a higher priority than some of the matters we have been discussing.

One of the conditions on which we agreed to an increase in the length of sittings was a suggestion to the Minister of Justice, the house leader for the government, that we try to agree on a possible adjournment date for the summer recess. I recognize that if certain legislation has to be passed it is not possible to set a specific day, but if the parties could agree on a target date I think it would be very useful to members in planning their work in their constituencies, in planning the work of the committees of the house, and also in trying to reach some agreement about limiting debates. I hope the various parties will consider the possibility of setting a tentative date at which we could aim for the summer recess.

We trust the government will bring down some of the legislation which it has announced and put it on the order paper so we will have a chance to see it, and we trust that the government will not insist on leaving all these very important matters until after the flag debate has been disposed of. We have particular reference to the student loans legislation, the family allowances legislation, the Canada pension plan and the national labour code, in which we are extremely interested and which the government has expressed its intention of putting on the order paper at an early date. We hope these matters can be discussed and dealt with prior to a summer recess. In the meantime I think it would be useful to try to set a tentative date by which parliament could adjourn.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, the house leader for our party is the hon. member for Fraser Valley (Mr. Patterson). He was called by the government house leader and met with most of the house leaders of the different parties and made an arrangement—

Mr. Grégoire: With one exception.

Mr. Churchill: Not with me.

Mr. Thompson: —to lengthen the hours of sittings with the hope that this would be one measure to expedite the work of the house. During the progress of these discussions the hon. member for Fraser Valley talked to me about them and informed me what was being discussed, as I presume the house leaders of the other parties did with their leader. We agreed with the government house leader that we would support such recommendation; and we give our support to it now without anymore discussion.

I do not believe this is the only answer to speeding up the work of the house but it is one measure, at least of intent and good will on the part of the parties in this house to do something better than what we have been doing. Therefore, while we are all concerned about a summer recess, we are also concerned about priorities and about making more progress, so let us agree with the proposal that has been put before us by the government house leader.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, we support the motion presented by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) concerning the extension of the sitting hours in order that we can have a summer recess.

I heard a while ago the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) tell us that we should defer the debate on the flag issue to deal with exports, family allowances, the labour code, etc. It is true that exports, in short, any problem concerning the national economy is more important than the adoption of a flag. However, we do not object to accepting immediately a distinctive national flag. If the Leader of the Opposition were ready to vote today on the resolution for a distinctive national flag, this would settle the problem, because every Canadian wants one.

As for part (b) of the resolution, we could wait till next fall or the spring to discuss it. However, it is surely not the flag issue which prevents the government at present from legislating or from introducing its legislation. It is the opposition that wants to discuss the flag to submit its own design in an attempt to confuse the issue as much as possible.

Let us put a stop to our discussion and settle the matter of the flag right now. As I said yesterday, and I repeat it today, the cleavage between the two racial groups of Canada is getting even worse, and I hold the Leader of the Opposition responsible for this situation.

Mr. Speaker, we, in this part of the house, are ready to vote on the flag resolution immediately and to proceed afterwards with the legislation to see what can be done as soon as possible.

We strongly and fully support the motion of the Minister of Justice, leader of the house, to extend the hours so as to enable us to pass some pieces of legislation which will prove beneficial, we hope, to the Canadian people.

[Text]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I believe there was agreement, certainly in my party, to an extension of hours if that is going to accomplish something. But I wonder whether the general public is not asking itself what we are really concerned to pass, and whether there will be a recess or whether we intend to go on throughout the summer. The Prime Minister, in a genial, offhand way, said we might have a long week end some time in September. If that is the case I see no reason to consider any changes in the order covering our sitting hours. The public must wonder just what are the legislative preferences of the Prime Minister. I can only think of three things which need to be passed before a recess, if the Prime Minister wants a recess in July. They are, of course, family allowances, student loans and interim supply. If the government wanted interim supply for the next three months they should have asked for it, instead of asking for only one month's supply. The Prime Minister shrugs his shoulders. I am sure he is aware that if he gets interim supply now he has immediately to begin considering next month's supply. The right hon. gentleman can shrug his shoulders and laugh about it if he wants to, but he must be aware of these things, or if not he should be.

A great deal has been said about getting on with the business of the house, but how can one really arrange things when the leader of the government is not willing to say what he wants? The last time he spoke on this subject in the house he read a long list of items he wanted us to pass, a list containing some 35 or 37 items. Some of those things have been on the order paper for a couple of years. Surely he was not serious about that list. Some of these things have been around for a long time.

Mr. Pearson: Too long.

Mr. Peters: I think it is silly to tell the public we intend to accomplish something by extending our hours as an emergency measure. I am inclined to agree with the Leader of the Opposition when he says "Let us change the rules, lengthen the hours and make it a permanent arrangement". As for asking the house to make exceptions, to change the rules for the purpose of obtaining a summer recess, the Prime Minister will have to be more honest with the house than he has previously been.

I do not really care if we start the business of the house at nine o'clock in the morning and run it through to twelve o'clock at night. It does not matter to me, but let us adhere to it all the time. This is not an emergency; this situation has been cropping up throughout the seven years I have been in the house. It is not only the present Prime Minister who is concerned; the previous prime minister was in exactly the same position. We have no timetable here. We do not know what we are going to do at a certain time or when we are going to complete it.

The backbenchers in this house have some responsibility, too, and they should know what they are going to do. They should know what it is intended to place on the order paper and what is the government's preference for legislation. If the government wants to go on with the flag issue it may take a couple of months—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Peters: It will not be delayed so long because of me, I am simply guessing that it is not going to pass in a day or two. The government should be able to assess the position.

I see in the house today many hon. members who have children. I am sure most of them have. If we are to have a recess we do not want one in October or November; we should be able to arrange our business so as to have one in July and August. Again the Prime Minister laughs. Maybe he has no children of school age. Maybe he does not want a holiday in July and August. I do not really know what he wants.

Mr. Pearson: We want to get some business done.

Mr. Peters: I do know that he has not been very fair to the backbenchers of this house, and I do not think he has been fair with the other political parties. I say this because I believe he must have some time table and he must have some preference. I should like him to give us some assurance. He is not only playing with parliament, as things are now; he is playing with all the people who are writing to me and asking "Will my children be able to go to school this fall; are family allowances to be increased, because unless we know we shall not be able to send our children on to school?" The Prime Minister is not being fair to them. He is not being fair to those who are going to college this fall.

It seems to me that the country is concerned with this matter, and the government has a responsibility in this direction. We should be given a much clearer indication of what legislation the government intend to present, and I think they can count on my support as well as on the support of most hon. members in this house, if they are fair and honest with us. Before a motion of this kind is passed I think hon. members opposite should make their intentions clear, otherwise the country is going to take a hard look at the kind of irresponsibility which the Prime Minister represents.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I did not intend to say anything, and would not have risen had someone on the government side responded to the very reasonable request which has been put forward from this side of the house. The request is simply this: What is the meaning of the words "until adjournment for a summer recess"? Surely some date could be set so that people could make plans. If the phrase has no meaning, I suggest it be struck out.

There is a question of good faith here. The hon. member who spoke before me made a very reasonable plea for those in this house who have families. How in the world are they ever to have a chance to get to know their children unless they are given an opportunity during the summertime? It is a ridiculous situation that this house should sit throughout the summer without making provision for some of these matters. I agree with an extension of hours, but if this is to be a permanent feature, and if the government does not grant a summer recess, it may of course go on perhaps until December, and in those circumstances I would want to suggest a modification of the hours while still granting the same number of hours for the entire week because I am a firm believer in an extension of the hours of sitting of this house. Could we not have from the government a statement with regard to the meaning of "until adjournment for a summer recess"? I ask that question for this other reason. I heard the Prime Minister over the radio two or three days ago talking in very vigorous terms about what this house was going to do, and he said, with regard to some of the questions before us, "We are going to sit here until we are finished".

Mr. Woolliams: Oh, he is playing politics again.

Mr. Churchill: I would not suggest that. This is just a question of good faith. We reached an amicable arrangement yesterday in our various meetings and we are not disposed to debate this debatable motion today. We are quite prepared to put it through, but could we not have an answer from the government side; otherwise, if we do not get an answer, I am sure there will be other members who will want to press the point. So let us have the answer now and perhaps we could pass this motion immediately.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be very glad at the beginning of the week to make a detailed statement on the business which the government would like to see completed before we consider an Easter recess—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson:—a summer recess. I do not think we will go until Easter, but you never know. I also agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that if we can fix a target date, that would be a good thing to do.

But if we fix a target date that we are not able to keep, I hope the government will not be blamed for having misled the house; because we can put forward what we consider to be the most important legislation but that does not mean we will get that legislation through in a week, a month, two months or three months. This week we asked for one month's interim supply, because if we had asked for three months we would perhaps be here all summer debating three months' supply. We asked for one month's interim supply, which we have been debating all week. So what is the use of suggesting that we could finish what we have to do on a certain date when we have no idea how long the house will take on matters such as interim supply? We have decided to go ahead with the flag resolution, a matter which the right hon. Leader of the Opposition called a triviality but to which we attach the greatest possible importance.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: When we dispose of that resolution we will be able to introduce into the house other priority matters, which I will mention next week. But the country is told by hon. gentlemen opposite that they are going to debate the flag resolution all summer if necessary.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: If that is the situation, how can we fix a target date or any other kind of date?

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would permit a question.

Mr. Pearson: Of course.

Mr. Churchill: If he is still uncertain as to the subjects he wants discussed by this house during the course of the summer and cannot make that announcement until Monday, would it not be wise to hold this motion over until Monday so we can find out whether these words "adjournment for a summer recess" are put there in good faith?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: They are, of course, put there in good faith. If I make a statement now it cannot necessarily be detailed as to the order of priority from day to day and week to week regarding which measures should be brought forward, because obviously these situations change, which makes it necessary to change the business of the house. That is inevitable. What we have been doing this week shows that.

But there are certain measures—I said this in the house and I do not mind repeating it —that we consider should be dealt with before we consider the question of a summer recess. The flag resolution is one; the extension of children's allowances is another; loans for students is a third; fiscal relations with the provinces is an essential, including new arrangements for contracting out. It is very important to get this through the house and before the provinces for action. The National Defence Act amendment is another. The pension legislation, in so far as we can get that completed, is a very important matter. It may not be possible to do that before a summer recess. But these are priority matters, and there are others.

There is no use my giving a categorical statement that unless we cannot get all these matters through we cannot adjourn for the summer, because we have to make our time table correspond to the realities of parliamentary discussion, and those realities are determined more by hon. gentlemen opposite than by us on this side.

Perhaps I might add this, Mr. Speaker, because I think it is a very practical suggestion. While it is important to extend the hours of sitting at this time, and perhaps we should revise our hours of sitting for the future indefinitely, it is even more important to make arrangements as to the amount of time which should be devoted to any particular piece of legislation. If we can do that then indeed we can set a target date, because if we bring forward four or five pieces of legislation and can agree with hon. gentlemen opposite that we will have three days on one piece of legislation, four days on another, two days on another—

Mr. Churchill: One day for the flag.

Mr. Pearson: —then we would know where we are going and how long it would take us to get there.

Mr. Churchill: That is closure.

Mr. Pearson: We have been putting this suggestion forward for years. The hon. gentleman opposite just said that is closure. If they take that attitude to a constructive arrangement regarding the business to be put before the house which would mean we would know how much time would be taken on each piece of legislation, and call that closure, this explains why in the committee on procedure we cannot get anywhere on this matter.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Prime Minister a question before he sits down. With reference to the legislation he has mentioned, can we have some assurance that by at least the middle of next week all this legislation will be on the order paper, so we will have some opportunity to study it? The Prime Minister has already mentioned items which we have not seen and have had no opportunity to study.

Mr. Pearson: There is a resolution in Votes and Proceedings today regarding youths' allowances. We will get the resolution regarding student loans on the order paper as quickly as possible. The only reason it is being held up is the difficulties with the provinces; because we have to clear these matters with the provinces, particularly this matter. As soon as we can get the agreement of the provinces as to the actual terms of the resolution, it will go on the order paper at once; and that applies to the pension legislation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then it is not we who are holding it up.

Mr. Douglas: With reference to the Canada pension plan, if it cannot be dealt with until the fall there is perhaps no immediate hurry in this regard; but if the Prime Minister wants this matter dealt with before a summer recess we should certainly have a white paper and a bill put before us very soon.

Mr. Pearson: I agree that the house should have a white paper before the pension legislation is dealt with, and we will do our best to have that white paper in print and circulated within the next two or three weeks.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): I noticed that the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill) was concerned about the fathers of young families, who sit in the house. I can tell him that I have eight children whose ages range from 19 months to 15 years, but my wife and my children are prepared to give up their holidays so that we may give our country a distinctive flag as soon as possible.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister made a statement with regard to the importance which the government attached to the flag resolution. I do not want to enter into a discussion on that matter; there is a time and a place to debate that, which is when the resolution is before the house. But I do want to point out that it was with this in mind that on May 25 last I asked the right hon. gentleman this question:

> I wonder whether the Prime Minister could indicate whether the resolution on the flag, if there is to be one, when introduced will be one of the items to which he referred on May 15—

That was when he gave the long, detailed list of legislation to which the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre referred. I then gave in my question this particular citation. Then I asked the right hon. gentleman this supplementary question:

> Would the Prime Minister indicate whether it is his view that considering the importance the government attaches to this matter, when debate is once entered into it should continue without being interrupted by other government legislation, and that each member wishing to make a contribution should have ample opportunity to do so?

The right hon. gentleman said that he thought that was a very reasonable suggestion. I point this out, that when the government placed the resolution on the order paper, in the light of this answer they could only have anticipated that there would be a lengthy and undoubtedly acrimonious debate. Consequently that must be taken into consideration, having in mind the other items which the government has suggested they want completed before we have a summer recess. Putting this motion on the order paper at that particular time and under the circumstances could have led to nothing else than taking up the time that is apparently going to elapse before any recess will be available.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I heard several members of the opposition ask the Prime Minister to set a date for the summer recess.

A proverb says that the government ordinarily decides when the session will start but the opposition decides when it will end. The opposition, as we know, always has the possibility to discuss any piece of legislation as long as it pleases.

In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, to organize the business of the house in a satisfactory manner, the Prime Minister should first prepare a list of the most important measures he wants the house to pass; he should discuss them with representatives of the various opposition parties. It is at a round table that those representatives of the house will succeed in setting the date of the summer recess for those who want to spend the summer holidays with their families. The way things are going at the present time, that is rather difficult. If the Prime Minister gives us a list of measures and the opposition is not ready to accept it in full, further discussion or compromise between the party in office and the opposition parties is impossible.

I wonder why the Prime Minister does not, instead, make up a list which he would then submit to the representatives of each of the opposition parties. Then, the opposition parties could decide—as is normally the case, since it is the responsibility of the opposition to criticize the legislation put forward by the government—about the intersession period. I think that this would be the best procedure and it would be better than having the Prime Minister enumerate the bills he would like to have passed before the summer recess. By submitting such a list, there would be no possible compromise as to deciding on the date of a summer recess.

For instance, I can assure the Prime Minister that our party would be willing to pass resolution No. 44a as quickly as possible, but resolution No. 44b not so quickly. As a matter of fact, it is under such circumstances that a compromise can be arrived at, in order to expedite the business of the house.

That is the suggestion we are making to the Prime Minister and to the government house leader, so that the business of the house may be expedited.

[Text]

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has just stated once again that the flag issue must be settled before we recess for our summer holidays. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that a request has been made to call a plebiscite on this matter, but this request for a plebiscite was denied, the reason being that the Prime Minister was well aware of the outcome and the fate of this flag issue if the plebiscite were taken. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the Prime Minister is using this issue as a club over the opposition's head and trying to make them submit to his decision on the flag.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The matter under discussion is the hours of sitting. I wonder whether we could restrict ourselves to that.

Mr. Webb: Mr. Speaker, this is the item I am speaking to. The Prime Minister is using this issue as a club over the opposition's head; he is using loss of holidays and no summer recess as a means to force the opposition into submission on the flag issue, one which he knows will not carry in this Canada of ours.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister has indicated to the house on more than one occasion that he believes members of the house should have every possible opportunity to express their views as to how they feel about a flag design for Canada, whether it is his flag design or someone else's. He has also indicated that he wants a free and full discussion of the matter. I cannot see how he relates his feelings in this regard, in view of the fact that if each hon. member in the house were to indicate his views in a 15 minute speech the debate would extend almost through the summer holiday season, with his statement today that the flag issue must be settled before we have a summer holiday.

While I am sure we all agree that the flag issue is an important matter, it is one which the Prime Minister promised the Canadian people, he says, within two years of his taking office. The two years do not expire until April 1965. I am sure if he is fair to the members of the House of Commons—and at the same time April 1965 is well within the limits of his solemn pledge—he will agree to set this matter aside, as it is an emotional issue, and consider placing legislation before the house of immediate importance to the Canadian public.

I would ask him not to go forward with this flag debate with the great urgency which he now indicates, placing it before every possible piece of legislation on the order paper, as well as other legislation not yet on the order paper but which is to come. I would ask him to give hon. members the opportunity to be deliberate in their considerations; to give them an opportunity to benefit by the views of other members in the house so they can determine what should be their stand; and I ask him not to set any kind of time limit or to place any impediment on any hon. member with regard to when this matter should be debated and for how long. In view of the fact that we have until April 1965 I would hope that we could take the four immediate necessary steps which will be of benefit to the economy of the country and the Canadian people, rather than forcing this issue to the forefront and setting aside these other matters which were also promised and supposedly so urgent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Coates: I do not know why hon. members are interrupting me.

An hon. Member: We want you to sit down.

Mr. Coates: The Prime Minister has not brought forward legislation which he promised the Canadian people over a year ago, and I think he should take steps to do so rather than to force through something which he did not promise the people of Canada until 1965. That is the question in the minds of most people in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Speaker, I have asked the Prime Minister on many occasions—

Some hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Coates: —to proceed with other legislation which would be of greater benefit to the Canadian people and the Canadian nation than forcing this flag debate on this house.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I understand the hon. member has just finished.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, if there was any understanding in the house as to where we were going this morning it seems to me it has been completely obliterated by the remarks of the Prime Minister. I for one resent very much his suggestion that he keeps throwing out to the effect that the delay in the business of this house is in any way occasioned by the actions of opposition parties.

Let us just consider that suggestion for a moment. It was not too many weeks ago that the Prime Minister got up and gave the house a list of some 38 items which he wanted to have passed before a summer recess. Then suddenly out of the blue came the flag, about which we heard nothing. The Prime Minister objects to the official opposition registering their views on the flag, and his backbenchers call it a filibuster. I do not agree with the official opposition on the flag issue, but they hold their views seriously and they insist upon stating them. I say that when the Prime Minister brought in the flag resolution he knew he was sabotaging his own legislative program.

We all know the views that many members of the official opposition hold, and we know they intend to express them. The government knew that; the Prime Minister knew that. Yet he precipitated the issue of the flag; and when he persists in having it deal with before a summer recess he knows there is not going to be a recess and we might as well stop talking about it. I know that as far as I am concerned, and the other members of our party, I believe, I am sure we can forget all about a recess because if he is going to insist on the flag issue being dealt with in addition to these legislative items, if he is really sincere about dealing with them, there is not going to be a summer recess at all.

We want to deal with these matters, and we are prepared to sit here and deal with them. But it does not lie in the Prime Minister's mouth to come here and say that the fault lies with the official opposition, and then say that he cannot even bring in the family allowance legislation because he has not reached agreement with the provinces. This is his responsibility, and the fault lies on his head. Then he tells us this morning that we have to deal with financial arrangements with the provinces, something we had not heard about.

Mr. Pearson: It is on the order paper now.

Mr. Scott: It has suddenly appeared out of nowhere. We have been asking that the student loan legislation be brought before us. All I am trying to point out, and I think it should be made clear, is that this is certainly the most stupidly and illogically organized legislative program within our memory, and that the fault for this lies squarely on the heads of the government. There is really no point in passing this motion now because we are going to be here all summer, and we may as well make up our minds to that at this time.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support some of the comments of the previous speaker and to make a few of my own with regard to the motion. We in the official opposition agreed to the presentation of the motion. We will support it, and I hope it will pass before one o'clock. We have agreed to it simply because we feel there are legislative items that must come forward. This has been said before. But what bothers me is that there are quite a number of items on the order paper which have to be referred to committees if a reasonable amount of work is going to be done on them in committee. Surely these matters could be brought forward immediately and referred to committees.

We have talked about different items. The hon. member for Timiskaming mentioned three. I agree with him that they require immediate consideration, particularly the student loan legislation. Yesterday we tried to obtain a commitment to have that item brought forward, and today the Prime Minister has made an explanation involving the provinces. I brought up this matter yesterday on a non-political basis, and it was the Liberal members who laughed at my suggestion and tried to howl me down. I was extremely serious about the matter because I am closely associated with the problem. We want this legislation brought forward immediately.

With regard to the flag debate, I should like to say that following the invitation extended to us by the Prime Minister I have asked, not demanded, that anyone who has strong views in this regard should express them in the house on the basis of that invitation. We are now prepared to go forward on that basis. We have one amendment before us now. How many more amendments will there be? No one in the house knows, but there is no question but that if other legislative items are not brought forward before the flag debate continues there will be no summer recess.

This does not particularly concern me. I am one who believes I must express my views in regard to the flag question whether I want to or not because the people of my constituency have strong feelings on this matter. They are now asking what is the matter with parliament. I say, Mr. Speaker, that if we do not have some decent organization of our business the people of the country will have good reason to lose faith in this parliament.

Not only has the government made one horrible mess of the presentation of legislation but the situation in the house is, I must admit, equally as bad. That has been shown this morning, Mr. Speaker. But you cannot expect a responsible attitude on the part of members in the house if we do not have a responsible presentation of what the country really needs. There can be a lot done for the country if the Prime Minister will bring forward legislation that is good for the country. I know that is the opinion of the people of the country. He can certainly set back the flag debate and bring this legislation forward. This is what the people of Canada want.

We promised yesterday that we would co-operate in regard to student loans, something that we feel is very necessary, and the Prime Minister will receive equal co-operation on every other basically good piece of legislation he brings forward. But we do not want to be muzzled on the flag debate. Members can make their speeches on that subject at any time. When I have made my speech somebody else can rise and make his speech. I plead with the Prime Minister in the name of common sense not to mislead us where Canada's affairs and the flag question are concerned. We intend to support the motion.

Mr. Pearson: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question. He indicated in his very interesting remarks that there are certain things on the order paper that should go to committee where they could be given immediate consideration. Is he speaking on behalf of his party on this matter, and if we bring these matters forward at once will he give us his assurance that they will be referred to committee without any delay?

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Monteith: Without debate?

Mr. Diefenbaker: More muzzling.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Speaker, I will say for the party I have the honour to represent that if the Prime Minister will present these matters to the house, we will see that they are properly dealt with.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I have to support in essence what the hon. member for Danforth said a few moments ago. In addition, however, one or two very legitimate requests have been made to the Prime Minister which have not been answered properly yet. For example, in the resolution before us there is specific reference to a summer recess. During the course of the debate more than one member has asked the Prime Minister to give some indication of what the target date is for the summer recess. In my opinion he has given an unsatisfactory answer by saying there are X number of things that must be done, and that the government has no control over how long they will take.

I should like to remind the Prime Minister that last fall there was an enormous amount of work piled up, what might almost be called a backlog, before December 20, the target date for prorogation. If he will turn his mind back to those days he will recall that there was an enormous amount of work in the form of estimates and legislation which went through very quickly during the final week.

There are times when debates on legislation and estimates seem not to be making much progress and appear to be bogged down, but if we did have a target date for a summer recess some of these matters could probably be expedited very rapidly just before reaching that date. I think it is a little unreasonable on the part of the Prime Minister and the government that they will not give any indication of what date they have in mind for the summer recess, when in fact there is reference to summer recess in the motion they are asking us to pass.

I think these matters can be worked out. The flag debate is one that perhaps will not be concluded expeditiously. But if the Prime Minister would undertake to give us a list of those things that have to go through before a summer recess, and some kind of target date, I do not believe the members of the opposition would hold him to the order he set out, that there must be the flag debate first, then family allowances, student loans and so on. This is the prerogative of the government, to change the order as time progresses. The Prime Minister indicated today that things change; therefore the government has to have the right to change the order.

I believe we should consider some of the suggestions that have been made from this side of the house, and there would be co-operation to expedite many of the things the government wants to get through. If they would give us some indication of a target date probably they would get still more co-operation.

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, once again this year we are witnessing an attempt at blackmail about a summer recess. The Prime Minister and the government have decided to use that trick to force the hand of other opposition parties.

As far as I am concerned, I support a distinctive national flag. But I should have liked the government to use a normal procedure so that the members of the house could put their views forward on that matter. The present action followed by the government means that every day we have a little more blackmail. Every day, they try to exercise coercion through the promise of a summer recess as if we were school kids being told: "If you are good children you shall get a holiday."

I think that such a policy is lacking in elegance. I also think that the government has absolutely no sense of organization as regards the business of the house.

Reference is made to family allowances, which are excessively important, and on which legislation should be passed before the summer recess. We are told that the student loans legislation should be passed before the summer recess. Besides, as a representative from a rural riding, I think that that there is one thing we must do before the summer recess, and that is to pass an appropriate legislation to give assistance to Quebec farmers in order to remedy the high cost of feed grain.

I feel the government should take its responsibilities, stop its childish blackmail about the summer recess and deal with the economic problems of the country. Let it say simply and frankly that there will be no summer recess. However, if the Prime Minister is sincere and absolutely wants a summer recess, let him meet with the other party leaders in order to straighten out a situation which is becoming awful and which is turning this parliament into a laughingstock in the eyes of Canadians. If the government wants us to pass its legislation, let it set out a final program.

Yesterday, the Prime Minister mentioned two or three pieces of legislation which he wants to see passed before the summer recess. This morning again he added another one, of the utmost importance, concerning fiscal relations with the provinces. The house has never been able to pass such a matter in a few hours. I am convinced that when the Prime Minister arrives in the house next Monday, he will add two or three new measures to those he has already suggested and, if he speaks on Tuesday, he will add some more.

It is getting to be a joke which has lasted long enough. The Prime Minister should sit, think over the situation and stop his childish blackmail tricks.

[Text]

Mr. Pearson: So far as the remarks of the hon. member for Medicine Hat are concerned, I have already—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Order. How does the Prime Minister get the floor?

Mr. Pearson: I have been asked a question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What about a second speech? Are we all to have second speeches? Surely this question could have been answered by the mover of the resolution.

Mr. Pearson: Then may I ask the hon. gentleman who has just sat down a question. Would he agree that it would be desirable on Monday for the house leaders to get together and discuss the various suggestions that have been made in this debate this morning, the desirability of setting a target date, when that target date should be, a list of the legislation and other proposals which should be disposed of before the summer vacation? Will my hon. friend who has made these remarks agree that there should be a meeting of this kind where we can work out the program in detail, and will he give me the assurance that the house leader for his party will attend such a meeting?

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a case of the old excuse, the old alibi.

Mr. Peters: May I ask the Prime Minister a question. Would it be acceptable if the leaders of the parties discussed this matter, because we feel it is an important matter that should be considered at that level.

Mr. Pearson: That is a very useful suggestion; perhaps a meeting should take place between the leaders of the parties rather than the house leaders, because we have had great difficulty in getting full representation at the house leaders' meetings in the last two months.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The rules are the rules, and the Prime Minister had no business getting up and making a gratuitous statement like that. The responsibility for the difficulties of parliament rests on his shoulders and his inability to organize.

Mr. Pearson: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. The right hon. gentleman is quite right. The responsibility rests on my shoulders; that is why I am so discouraged when we have these meetings of house leaders. His house leader has not attended, and indicated yesterday he would not attend.

Mr. Churchill: I rise on a question of privilege to deal with this statement by the Prime Minister, who has crawled into the gutter again, as he said with regard to me just a few days ago.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder, in view of the fact that there are only ten minutes remaining, if we could not reach some conclusion this morning. The atmosphere seems to be heating up continuously. We have a motion to discuss, and surely we could dispose of it by one o'clock.

Mr. Churchill: I appreciate your desire, Mr. Speaker. Half an hour ago I suggested that there would be no debate on this issue if someone on the government side would tell us whether this phrase in the resolution was put there in good faith or just as a trap. Now we know that this was put in as a trap to conceal their intention.

The Prime Minister has gratutiously made an attack on me with regard to my objection to attend the meetings of house leaders. I desisted attending those meetings of house leaders, and for very good reasons; one, they were not confidential; two, there was a combination of people trying to put me and the party I represent in a false position—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Churchill: —three, a member of that house committee divulged items that had passed at those meetings and did not tell the true facts. I said never again would I attend a meeting of house leaders in the presence of that hon. member, and I have not. The Prime Minister has no right to inject these accusations into the debate this morning. It shows the level on which he operates, trying to gain some partisan political advantage out of the statement in the house.

Now he has caused the deterioration of this debate and its prolongation because of his complete incompetence in managing the business of the House of Commons. All he had to do, in response to a reasonable request by the Leader of the Opposition and by the leader of the New Democratic party, was to say he would postpone this motion as I suggested and we would see if we could not come to an agreement over the lunch hour. Let us support this, I suggested, and we will see if we cannot come to an agreement over the lunch hour. That is exactly what could have been done, but oh no, he has held the club over us. He has told us he is going to drive things through despite anything we may wish to do, and is attempting to trap us with an extension of hours so he can get on with something he has produced in the way of a flag and is insisting that this house pass. It is the act of a man who is becoming drunk with power and is showing signs of dictatorship. I ask him to withdraw the remarks he made with regard to me concerning meetings of house leaders.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, as one drunk with power I am a little worried about getting on my feet, but may I tell the hon. gentleman who just sat down that I stated a fact, that he did not attend house leaders' meetings for a long time, and he has admitted that himself. I made no allegation or accusation.

Mr. Churchill: An insinuation.

Mr. Pearson: It was explaining why I did not attend. May I ask the Leader of the Opposition this question. If we can arrange this kind of meeting I have been talking about, with the house leaders, to work out a program by agreement—

Mr. Diefenbaker: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, how does the Prime Minister get the floor? This is his third speech. The mover of the resolution can do this, but not the Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me we are at long last approaching some conclusion on this matter of time and subjects and hours, and surely we can reach some sort of agreement by one o'clock. Therefore in that context surely the Prime Minister has almost a duty to suggest to hon. members of the house anything which will assist the house in reaching a conclusion which will be of assistance to the house itself.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the mover of the motion has the right, but surely Your Honour is not making a statement to the effect that any time the Prime Minister wants to get up he can do so, having once spoken. It is for the mover of the resolution to do this.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, the very short question I was about to ask, with the permission of the house—

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—and I am very sorry to have to get up on a point of privilege when the right hon. Prime Minister is on his feet—I think it is time we made very clear for the benefit of hon. members like myself whether the house is meeting with the Speaker in the chair or whether we are meeting in committee of the whole. It is quite obvious that the procedure which has been going on for the past hour has been a procedure in committee of the whole, and I know there are a few hon. members like myself who want to have something to say when the Speaker is in the chair. Therefore, sir, with all deference to yourself, and although it is now five minutes to one o'clock, I want the right to speak with the Speaker in the chair and not with the house in committee of the whole, to enable me to make my point of view known.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Winch: All I want to say is that since we have been in the whole so long, can we not adjourn for lunch and come back with the Speaker in the chair, and hope at an agreed time to bring this matter to a satisfactory conclusion?

[Mr. Pearson.]

Mr. Speaker: I would just like to say that if the Minister of Justice speaks now he will close the debate.

Mr. Winch: In view of what I have just said I could not possibly agree to that. I think, Mr. Speaker, I am not being at all unfair in asking the opportunity to speak on this matter. This session I have not risen to speak very often in the House of Commons, one reason being that due to the way the session has been carried on I have found that more effective work can be done in committees.

We have before us now a most interesting and far reaching resolution. At the time it was moved this morning by the Minister of Justice as house leader I was prepared to accept and support it, but because of the statement made by the Prime Minister I am not certain at the moment as to whether it can or should be supported at this time, or whether it should be postponed for reconsideration after what I hope will be a meeting, between now and Monday, of the leaders of all parties represented in the house to go into a full discussion as to government business.

What has brought me to change my mind, in a period of approximately one hour, on a statement made by the Prime Minister? It is this, sir; that the Prime Minister, whether he leads a minority or majority government, has the responsibility and the authority, and I would hope the prestige, of leading this House of Commons. This morning has given us complete proof that the Prime Minister is not prepared to accept that prestige and responsibility.

I am going to ask the Prime Minister if he will not have the intestinal fortitude and courage to admit a mistake and make a withdrawal. Ninety per cent of our problem today, and for the past days and weeks, arises because of his personal view, opinion, pride and prestige on the flag issue. If the Prime Minister would accept the fact that a decision on the flag issue could be postponed until in November or December, we would be a lot closer to agreement; because, sir, the flag issue, emotional, sentimental and important as it is, is not a question on which a decision before a summer recess will fill one belly of one person in Canada.

May I call it one o'clock Mr. Speaker.

At one o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 2.30 p.m.

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): At the time of the adjournment at one o'clock

I had the privilege of addressing this honourable house for approximately five minutes. In that period of time, short as it was, I endeavoured to make clear my views as a parliamentarian and I put forward certain expressions of opinion to the Prime Minister.

Now that I have a few minutes left this afternoon, I should like in part to repeat what I said and then to follow through with certain recommendations. Although the Prime Minister is not here, I should like to say to him through you, Mr. Speaker, that I understand, or at least I hope I do, the responsibility which rests with that high office.

An hon. Member: He is here now.

Mr. Winch: Of course, I have never had the honour of occupying the position of Prime Minister or premier of a province, but for 12 years I did have the honour of being the leader of the loyal opposition in a province, so I think I know something about the meaning of the word "responsibility". In particular, I am familiar with situations where someone in high office thinks he has made a mistake. What I was trying to express, through you, sir, to the Prime Minister, was this: Never be afraid to admit a mistake or an error in tactics or strategy. If my experience over 31 years means anything it is that people honour a man who will admit a mistake, whether in policy, tactics or strategy. I am being a little impudent in what I am about to say now, but it is my personal belief that our Prime Minister today is not the man this country requires because of a strange mix-up in his personality.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Speaker: I think I get the import of some of the hon. members remarks, but the question before the house concerns the hours of sitting, and an analysis of the personality of some other member of the house, even if he is a high official, does not in my view come within the general orbit.

Mr. Winch: That is the basis of my introduction to this particular matter; it explains why we have a motion such as this before us, now. I am not in the least being disrespectful. As a matter of fact I am being one of the honest persons speaking on this measure. I am simply saying that this is one of the reasons we are faced with this problem—the personality of a prime minister who ties together being a professor, a civil servant, a secretary of state for external affairs and leader of a government.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Winch: Understanding that, is the basis for understanding the problem we are facing right now in the motion before us. You will surely not call me to order, Mr. Speaker, if I express this view and express the hope, as I did indirectly before one o'clock, that the Prime Minister will recognize this fact and exercise more authority and leadership in the conduct of this house and the presentation of government business. I am actually trying not only to be honest and sincere but to explain why I wish to bring in certain recommendations. Only on the basis of understanding the personality of the Prime Minister can I bring in what I wish to recommend. I am asking the Prime Minister if he will recognize the position in which we find ourselves—and I use the word "we" for the majority of members of this house who wish to get on with the people's business. The majority of members, having missed an Easter recess—if they did as I did, and stayed here—want a summer recess. But the Prime Minister has laid it down that there will not be a summer recess unless certain things are done and certain priorities dealt with. And the one factor which will hold up the recess is the flag issue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: I ask the Prime Minister again if he will not recognize that making this issue a priority matter to be decided while sitting additional hours, before a recess can be considered, proceeds from personal pride—it has to be done because he thinks he would otherwise lose something in the eyes of members of this house and the people of Canada.

When we discuss additional hours we also discuss the statement of the Prime Minister this morning as to the business. I am asking that the Prime Minister have the intestinal fortitude to state that public business comes before personal pride and decision and that the matter of the flag shall not be a deciding factor.

Mr. Speaker, I have to introduce it that way in order to come to my next point, namely that the Prime Minister cannot make that decision which I and, I think, other members request him to make, unless the official opposition will accept a sense of responsibility, decency, dignity and decorum in the House of Commons. Day after day and week after week during this session we have seen, not the getting on with the public business from the official opposition but the utilizing of parliament as a sounding board, hoping to get an election, in making campaign speeches in this house.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): What are you doing now?

Mr. Winch: I have run 11 times and I have been elected 11 times—and not one of you can make that statement.

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Are you boasting, or complaining?

Mr. Winch: My position is this. I ask the Prime Minister to give consideration—

Mr. Woolliams: This is humility at its greatest.

Mr. Winch: —to this proposal, that before a summer recess we shall deal with the business that affects the health, welfare, wealth and security of the people of Canada and postpone until after a recess, in the fall, a decision on the flag. I say we have not the right and I have not the right to ask the Prime Minister to consider this unless the leader of the official opposition and the Tories behind him will agree to it and will also agree not to throw out the continual challenge of "Retreat" and "Resign". In other words, Mr. Speaker, if the official opposition will accept responsibility along this line that I am proposing to the Prime Minister, I think there might be a basis of agreement, understanding, and a recess, I would hope, not later than the middle of August.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Winch: I say not later than the middle of August because if we are going to deal with student loans, family allowances, the Canada pension plan and those things that we should do before we leave here, this cannot be before the middle of August if it is done on a proper and efficient basis; whereas if the flag is to maintain its priority, if the official opposition are going to carry on, when that resolution is again before us, as they have in the past, there will be no recess whatsoever. So, Mr. Speaker, having given considerable thought to this question over the lunch hour I should like to try to consolidate my views in this way, which I offer for the consideration of Your Honour, the government and all members. I would like to ask for the consideration of the Prime Minister, the government, the leader of the official opposition and their supporters of the following five points:

1. That the present motion which we are now discussing stand, with the exception of a special amendment to grant employees in the House of Commons a holiday on July 1.

2. That the Prime Minister call a meeting of all party leaders and discuss government business, with the objective of reaching a unanimous or majority opinion.

3. That if the decision is not unanimous, with only one party abstaining from the agreement, the House of Commons be informed as to that party and their basis of disagreement.

An hon. Member: This is a new manifesto.

Mr. Winch: I just heard someone say this was a new manifesto, and by heavens I think it is a good one for the House of Commons to consider.

4. That the Prime Minister agree to drop the priority of the flag decision until the fall, and that if this is agreed to, the official opposition shall be asked not to practise political expediency by terming it a retreat or a call for a general election.

5. That every measure be taken to expedite the recommendations from the committee on house procedure relative to hours and method of conducting the House of Commons business and, if the same is stymied or stalemated in any way by any party representative at meetings, or refusal to attend, this should be immediately reported to the House of Commons and the House of Commons should be given the opportunity of voting upon, and thereby deciding, any majority report dealing with recommendations to expedite the business of the House of Commons whilst at the same time retaining a most reasonable opportunity for members to express their opinions as the elected representatives of their constituents.

An hon. Member: Amen.

Mr. Winch: My hon. friend says amen. I was waiting for somebody on my right to say hallelujah.

Mr. Nielsen: Hallelujah.

Mr. Winch: I say, Mr. Speaker, it will be amen and hallelujah if we in this House of Commons now, after the sittings we have held this session, can get down to carrying out the business of the people in a calm, efficient and proper manner. So. Mr. Speaker, I am now going to conclude—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Winch: I notice sir, that when I said I was going to conclude the applause came from those on my left, who apparently do not realize the importance of the matters which I am trying to draw to the attention of this house. I conclude, Mr. Speaker, after having made a special appeal, through you, to the Prime Minister, to the leader of the official opposition and to all hon. members to get on with the business of the people. I think we can do this and can reach conclusions on these matters. There may be a possibility of a recess at the latter part of August if we will remember those most famous words—and I love them and am going to give them to the House of Commons—of Henry Ward Beecher—

An hon. Member: Who?

Mr. Winch: Mr. Speaker, I am being interrupted by some imbecilic remark from the left.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Winch: May I ask all members of parliament to remember these words, in view of our discussion this morning and this afternoon on our procedures and what could forestall a recess. Henry Ward Beecher said this:

> A thoughtful mind sees not the flag alone but the nation itself—the principles, the truths, the history.

We should remind ourselves through you, Mr. Speaker, that if we can submerge pride, prejudice and political expediency and remember those words, then I say we will have been, and will be, worthy representatives of those who elected us and sent us to the House of Commons.

Mr. Terry Nugent (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I see that the house leader is very anxious to close the debate, but I am not sure he will be able to answer some of the criticisms or the logic of the perfectly understandable complaints which have been made about the handling of business by the government. Certainly when we are considering whether we should sit longer hours some of the questions we should ask ourselves are: Is this the best and only way we can run the business? What is necessary that should be done? What is the urgent business? How can we streamline the way in which we work? I submit that all these are legitimate factors to consider when discussing this resolution.

I was much impressed with the calmness and logical approach of the hon. member for Cumberland (Mr. Coates). He has been rather vehement in his feelings on the flag issue, but I thought he gave an example to hon. members of calm and logical discussion. The speech of the hon. member for Danforth (Mr. Scott) was, I thought, a model of logic very forcefully presented. If the government will look at what the speech contains they will find some very unanswerable reasons why the government should proceed with the legislation most necessary to the economic well being of the nation rather than that piece of legislation which is a sop to the vanity of the government, the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) and some of the members on that side.

I think most of us in this house regret that co-operation among house leaders has broken down; but I for one in this party will state frankly that I have advised my house leader that I could not condone his taking part in any consultation so long as those consultations were not confidential as they were in the past. Since the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made it so plain that he refuses to recognize this confidentiality it is impossible to carry on worth-while discussions, and so long as he represents the New Democratic party I advised our house leader that he should not conduct what would only be farcical negotiations.

I remember the events just before Easter very well. I remember what the Prime Minister said had to be completed. He knew interim supply had to be passed and he wanted the supplementary estimates passed. We had made requests that essential matters be brought in and he continued to dilly-dally. At last the suggestion was made: "If you want an Easter holiday, pass this now". In other words, they waste the time of the house with non-essentials, bring forward the essentials just before a holiday, and say to the members of the house that the only way we can get a holiday is by abandoning business worth discussing and passing it without comment. I had thought that if there was one thing the government should have learned it was that in this house they cannot get away with using a club. Members of the house are a little weary. We would all like a summer recess. But I doubt, Mr. Speaker, you would find very many who are willing to abandon their duty to examine government measures and legislation closely and will knuckle under to this sort of blackmail by the Prime Minister. I think the tactics are deplorable.

I hope the press will analyse exactly what the Prime Minister has been doing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nugent: I am glad that that remark has been met with enthusiasm. Perhaps the press friendly to the Liberal party will now know in advance that they will be forgiven if they are honest with the party for a change and paint it in its true colours. The Prime Minister has put himself in a position where, in response to questions in the house, he said he hoped that every hon. member interested in the flag would have a chance to speak. I am certain there is not one member in the house who cannot understand the duty of each hon. member on an issue like this. Each of us has to get up and express the view of the area he represents. Therefore it goes without saying that there will be a great many speeches on the flag.

Mr. Grégoire: Adoptée.

Mr. Nugent: We are almost 100 years from confederation and suddenly the Prime Minister brings in his pennant. This has to be passed and given top priority after nearly 100 years of confederation. This defies logic. I wonder whether we can look behind the government tactics—

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the house, any motion similar to the one under consideration is debatable.

However, the rules state that members who take part in the debate must talk to the principle of the motion and not about various subjects unrelated to it.

I am convinced that at the present time groups of fanatics and extremists in this house take advantage of the debate on the motion under consideration to try to forestall the flag resolution forever. I maintain that this is not in accordance with the motion under study but that fanatics are taking advantage of it—

[Text]

Mr. Woolliams: This is no point of order.

Mr. Speaker: One at a time, please. The hon. member for Lapointe.

Mr. Woolliams: On a point of privilege, this is no point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair will decide whether it is in order, but I propose to listen to it first.

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is consistent with the provisions of standing order 32, which lists the motions which are debatable. Besides, the same order states that those who take part in a debate of this kind must deal exclusively with the motion. What happens at the present time is that fanatics and the extremists take advantage of the debate on this motion to kill the resolution we were discussing earlier, namely the resolution concerning the adoption of a flag, and, in my opinion, this is against the rules.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The debate ranged this morning quite far and wide, and consequently, although the hon. member was beginning to range far and wide, nevertheless in my opinion he was still in order. I hope hon. members will remember that we are discussing the motion before the house, and should if possible restrict their remarks to the question of the hours of sitting of the house.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Speaker, we are considering the time of sitting and the extension of hours, and one of the moot questions is whether it is better to extend hours or to do the business of the house some other way. Is it a better way of doing things than passing this resolution; and I submit I did stick to that point. After that intervention by the hon. member for Lapointe the house can see the point I was making about the flag and its urgency now. After 100 years of confederation why does it have to be passed all of a sudden before a summer recess while at the same time so many important matters must of necessity be delayed? I suggest that the only reason the flag issue is regarded by the government with that much urgency is that there is that much pressure on the government from what I will call the lunatic fringe of politics in Canada today—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Nugent: —whose viewpoint is expressed so very well by the hon. member for Lapointe. I think it is clear that the order of business in the house is being arranged to make a good show, to make political propaganda and not to take care of business of the house that is important to the nation. I cannot understand how the government can pretend that they are anxious to bring in pension legislation and not give it priority over the flag debate. I cannot understand how they have the effrontery to say to the people of Canada that they are trying to do the business of the country and yet do it in this manner.

I submit that the Prime Minister has neglected to look very closely at this matter. If he will look at his answers to questions in the house with regard to the flag debate and the urgency of other matters, if he will reflect for one moment on the amount of time that must of necessity be taken by speeches on the flag, if he will reflect on how important the flag issue is, and that it is necessary for the country to have lots of time to consider the matter so that unanimity may perhaps be achieved throughout the nation in fact before the issue is disposed of, he will realize why it should not take precedence over other legislation.

I am perfectly willing to go along with longer hours of sitting, I am perfectly willing to sit all summer if we must, but I submit that no member of the house is going to be happy sitting longer hours all summer if the government refuses to bring the business of the country before the house in a sensible manner.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Berger (Montmagny-L'Islet): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say at the outset that the few remarks I am about to make are not intended to waste the time of the house, even though that seems to have become rather current practice recently. Nevertheless, with all due respect to the Chair, I should like to express as objectively as possible the views of a newcomer, of a backbencher, on the motion under consideration.

Members on both sides of the house often say that backbenchers are not always free to speak as they please in various circumstances. That is what I should like to do this afternoon as briefly as possible and without any partisanship.

We are now facing a problem and I regret, like everybody else, that we are not expediting the business of the house as we would like to. We are trying to find adequate means of presenting, at last, to the Canadian people the sound legislation to which they are entitled. I strongly support that policy.

However, we are told that backbenchers should, according to what has been the practice for a relatively long time, rather sit tight and listen to veterans in the house in order to learn a few things about procedure and that they should rely on the veterans' parliamentary experience. I was quite willing to do just that until today. I tried to learn as much as I could but I would like to forget as quickly as possible what I have unfortunately learned in the past few days.

When this so-called experience of the veterans of this house boils down to knowing how to meander around artfully and craftily in parliamentary procedure and politics which go back to the middle ages, I say it is high time we should find a cure.

Is it conceivable, Mr. Speaker, that, right in the middle of this twentieth century, where we have even gone beyond the atomic age, we should still have to rely on a parliamentary system which almost dates back to the time of the caveman? That is something which a backbencher finds hard to understand.

In my opinion, those self-styled veterans of the art of politics, who too often speak with their eyes turned towards the press gallery, so they can see their names in the newspapers the next day or in order to prove how expert they are in parliamentary procedure or else pursue their morbid ambitions, those people should refrain a bit from speaking often.

I think that the only practical advice we can give at this time, Mr. Speaker, is that, while we support the measure which is now before us, although, in my opinion, it does not go far enough, we recommend by common consent to the special parliamentary committee set up to that effect to get to work without delay.

The members of that committee should work 24 hours a day not to amend drastically but to redraft completely the archaic rules of the House of Commons, which often prevent us from going ahead.

With today's political experts, we have to use all kinds of manoeuvres and tactics and we are obliged, in this 20th century, to govern ourselves, to call on citations from Bourinot and Beauchesne, to go back to 1816, 1600, 1500 or even before Christ.

Mr. Speaker, to begin with, we should insist so as to give ourselves a legislation allowing the backbenchers as well as the front benchers and all the members without exception, the right to speak freely, with much clearer and fewer old-fashioned rules. Then we could go forward and submit legislation, discussing and approving it in the best interests of the Canadian people.

In conclusion I will say, Mr. Speaker, that if we, the backbenchers do not have the political maturity which seems to be so greatly appreciated at times, and rightly so, among the old timers on the political scene who sit in this chamber, we, the backbenchers of the House of Commons can offer, if not trickery and astuteness, at least honesty, frankness, sincerity and the will to work.

That is why, as far as I am concerned, I have already given up the holidays I was anticipating and I am prepared to keep on working steadily, provided we stop these empty discussions and take the necessary steps so that the house can abandon obsolete rules and start passing legislation in a more modern way.

Mr. Grégoire: That will be published in Le Soleil.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, when, some time ago, I mean this morning, on orders of the day, I introduced the motion now under discussion, I did so with some satisfaction. Indeed, we have often discussed some of the difficulties which may have existed, when house leaders have to meet, sometimes twice instead of once, and hold double meetings; but finally, we have succeeded, with the co-operation, I must admit, of all house leaders, whom I thought were speaking on behalf of their party, to reach an agreement on this motion. What I mean, and I think it is important that the house should know it, is that during our discussion, no mention was ever made—and I know all house leaders will bear me out—of reservations to the passing of this motion by the house.

The only discussions held dealt with the extended hours of sitting, and not with the conditions to impose on the motion.

We suggested at first, and I admit it might not have been the best procedure, that the house should sit on Friday evening, from 8 p.m. to 10 p.m.

The opposition suggested that it would be much better, instead of sitting in the evening, to extend our discussions during the lunch hour. I immediately complied with this request.

Another discussion was held to know whether the house would sit on July 1. We have agreed that the house would celebrate Canada day and that we would not sit on July 1.

I am therefore the first to be surprised at the discussion which took place today.

I hope that each party, trusting his house leader and confirming his word given in good faith, will now pass this motion.

I wish to add this, for the satisfaction of hon. members and to reassure those who were reluctant and who voiced their doubts about the progress of our work. I want to tell the house that on Monday, the right hon. Prime Minister asked me to convene a gathering, or a meeting, of all the house leaders, during which I was to communicate to them the final priority list with regard to bills or other measures which the government intends to introduce before the end of July. We are to suggest an order of distribution of the hours and days of sittings to allow discussion on all and each of those items, according to their respective importance and the time which each discussion should take.

When we speak of "allocation of time", i.e. the distribution of hours and days of sittings in the house, in order more particularly to discuss one piece of legislation, I think that we should make it clear that this is quite the opposite of the rule of closure.

The allocation or distribution of time to discuss some legislation is agreed upon by all parties in the house; it is opposite of closure, Mr. Speaker.

In this way, each party, considering the kind of legislation or measure to be discussed, would be able to choose among its members those who are particular conversant with the kind of legislation which is to be discussed at a given time or on a given day.

I therefore want to make it clear that this action is essentially connected with full and complete freedom for each party, which is quite the opposite to closure.

I also want to say to hon. members that the right hon. Prime Minister—if the first meeting unfortunately should fail to give definite result—proposes to convene the leaders of all parties in the house to start the procedure all over again and try to come to some conclusion which would help end or close the discussion of priority legislation before the end of July.

I could hardly, when asking the right hon. Leader of the Opposition—and this is a quite respectful, though very firm suggestion I am making—insist too much upon the necessity for him to see that, at the meeting of the house leaders next Monday, his party be definitely represented by someone with full authority, so that we may get on with the normal business of the house.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the house to adopt the said motion?

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the understanding of hon. members that the motion standing in the name of the Minister of Justice on the order paper be withdrawn?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

LABOUR RELATIONS

BRITISH COLUMBIA—ACTION OF OFFICIALS OF S.I.U.

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Yesterday I asked a question regarding the situation in British Columbia, with particular reference to the S.I.U., which is recorded at page 4697 of Hansard. If I may be allowed—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —I should like to amplify it so the Prime Minister will be in a position to give an answer. I should like to point out this fact, that the ship in question, the T.S.S. Alaska was compelled, when it left Florida, to take on an S.I.U. crew and give Paul Hall of the S.I.U. a letter of intent to negotiate with the S.I.U. in the hiring of masters, mates and engineers when the ship reached Vancouver. The result of this is, when an agreement was entered into as between these various groups, the masters, mates and engineers in Vancouver, Paul Hall threatened the owners of this particular ship.

My information is that he advised them that if they had other than S.I.U. workers within these classifications there would be—well, I don't know what the expression is—they would find themselves "hard-timed". I should like to know from the Prime Minister whether this complaint has been looked into since the questions were asked, and particularly whether the agreement made between the owners of the ship before it arrived in Vancouver and the S.I.U. was entered into with the knowledge and consent of the maritime trustees.

Furthermore, I should like to know whether as a result of what the Prime Minister has ascertained the S.I.U. has tried to affect the maritime trustees, or in what the S.I.U. has done has it been acting with the approval of these trustees?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when this matter was brought up yesterday, and I appreciate the importance and urgency of it, I said that the Acting Minister of Labour and I would look into the matter at once. We have done so. I secured a statement on the facts of the situation which does not coincide in every respect with the facts put forward by the right hon. gentleman, but I make no complaint about that. Particularly, we have been informed that allegations made against Mr. Paul Hall have been denied by him.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that this is a serious matter, perhaps even more serious in some of the implications that could arise out of it. The officers of the Department of Labour have been on the west coast trying to adjust this situation in a manner which would be equitable and the board of trustees have also—they have jurisdiction over this matter—been on the west coast. They are there now. The chairman of the board was on the west coast a few days ago and has remained there.

Only a few minutes ago I received a telegram, at least it was to the Department of Labour, concerning the negotiations that are taking place, and they are still going on, from the representative of the board of trustees. This telegram reads as follows:

> I have met with the parties to the dispute and feel hopeful that a settlement will be reached. The parties are presently considering a proposal of settlement.

I hope that this settlement will be reached today or tomorrow. At the moment, I cannot add anything to what I have already said.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I should like to ask one supplementary question. The Prime Minister said some of the implications of what I have stated differed from the information he has secured. I secured this information from the same source as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam did.

Will the Prime Minister answer this one question? Did Hall in any way, by the direction that he gave and the arrangements made as to personnel on this ship while it was still in Florida, endeavour to avoid the jurisdiction of the maritime trustees and push in the S.I.U. as the negotiating body, contrary to what had been the case throughout the years with regard to the three particular classifications I have mentioned?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, that has not been so stated in the information I have received but I will take up that specific question with the representatives of the maritime unions, the board of trustees, who are now in Vancouver, and endeavour to obtain a specific answer to that specific question.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): As a supplementary question, might I ask the Prime Minister whether it is true that the S.I.U. brought engineers from Montreal out to Vancouver to replace some of the engineers who were on the T.S.S. Alaska as a result of Mr. Paul Hall's insistence that all the licensed personnel, who usually have been handled by the maritime engineers local, should now be turned over to the S.I.U.?

Mr. Pearson: The information I have is that the vessel in question, which was formerly operated in southeast United States waters and belongs to the Alaska Trainship Corporation, and which it is hoped by the owners will operate between New Westminster and Alaska, was manned by the S.I.U. for unlicensed personnel and by the marine engineers beneficial association, for marine engineers, a union which does not operate in Canada and has no Canadian membership.

I am informed that when the vessel reached British Columbia to commence operations, its unlicensed personnel were represented by the seafarers international union; four of the vessel's engineer officers were represented by the M.E.B.A., and two marine engineer officers were apparently imported from eastern Canada to work on the vessel. The deck officers were represented by the licensed division of the S.I.U.

Mr. Douglas: As a further supplementary question, is the newspaper report correct that the maritime union trustees ordered the local marine engineers and the local longshoremen not to picket the Alaska while it was in New Westminster and, if so, what possible reason could they have had for preventing the local union from enforcing a right it has always had in that area?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether I can give my hon. friend all the information he would desire on that point, but I would be glad to add to what I have already given, in the light of his particular question. I am informed that the international longshoremen's and warehousemen's union is claiming the right to secure the box cars on this ship. It is said that the teamsters union, which represents employees of the company which performs the operation of putting railway cars on board the ship, does not question the jurisdiction of the longshoremen's union over this work, but it is also said that the employer concerned objects to the work being done by the I.L.W.U.

Various injunctions have been issued against picketing on the west coast but these injunctions have been circumvented by other pickets. I may add that I will try to get more information on this.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): As a supplementary question—and may I say this concerns my own constituency in Vancouver and I am glad to have the opportunity of asking a question—would it be possible to find out whether the Department of Labour received any telegrams from either the B.C. federation of labour or the Vancouver labour council, and would it be possible to have produced copies of telegrams which either of these bodies sent to the maritime trustees, relative to the S.S. Alaska?

Mr. Pearson: We will do our best to get those telegrams at once.

[Later:]

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I would like to go back to the subject matter raised by the Leader of the Opposition in connection with the Vancouver situation. I understand the Prime Minister is going to look into the matter and give a report to the house on Monday. Would he include in the subjects he looks into, the activities of one Norm Cunningham to see whether he has any part in this whole operation, whether he is an employee of Northland Shipping, and what connection he has with the S.I.U.? This would be very vital in the information which the Prime Minister might supply us with. Finally, would the Prime Minister consider seriously the question of sending somebody from Ottawa with power to call all those together who are concerned with this matter, not only the shipping companies, but all the labour unions concerned, to try and get their suggestions on how to meet this situation rather than just leave it as an isolated matter between labour and management?

Mr. Pearson: I will be glad to try to get information on those specific points. On the second point, I would draw to the attention of the house the fact that officials from the Department of Labour are already out there negotiating with those concerned, as well as members of the board of trustees, and I suggest we wait till we see what results from those negotiations before we decide that anything else is needed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Is it not a fact that under the terms of the maritime trusteeship no union can enter into an agreement with ship owners without the approval of the maritime trustees? This being so, I should like to ask the minister to say whether the trustees have approved of the agreement between the S.I.U. and the owner giving the S.I.U. the right to negotiate.

Mr. Pearson: I would be glad to look into that. I have not seen the terms of the alleged agreement. When I have had the chance to examine them I will be glad to follow up the latter part of the question.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the Prime Minister say whether Mr. Hall has had it made perfectly clear to him by the Department of Labour and by the trustees that his cavalier interference in this Canadian dispute is not going to be tolerated?

Mr. Pearson: Of course that interference, if it has taken place, should not be tolerated. I would point out, however, that the government has, I believe, received a statement to the effect that Mr. Hall has denied the allegations made. These allegations are being investigated by officials of the government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Labour unions in Vancouver say otherwise.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MALAYSIA—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RECENT DEVELOPMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Yesterday during his absence I asked the Prime Minister about the situation that has developed in the Far East between Indonesia and Malaysia as a result of the breakdown in discussions between the leaders of the two countries. My question is twofold. Does the minister have any word about recent developments today and, second, was the question of Indonesia and Malaysia discussed yesterday at the meeting of the international defence committee?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the matter was not discussed in Washington yesterday. I regret to say that the situation has deteriorated, but at this particular moment I do not believe it is desirable to say anything further except that we are deeply concerned about this development in so far as it concerns a commonwealth country. I can simply repeat what the Prime Minister said yesterday. We expect a visit from the Prime Minister of Malaysia after the commonwealth prime ministers' conference in London. Prior to that when in London the Prime Minister may be conferring with him about this and other matters.

Inquiries of the Ministry

VIET NAM—DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES SENATOR

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I have a brief question to direct to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the almost daily denunciation by Senator Wayne Morse of United States military activity in Viet Nam, did the hon. gentleman take advantage of his visit to Washington to discuss this situation with this very experienced senator?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I have great respect for the senator whom the hon. gentleman mentioned. However yesterday I was discussing Viet Nam with members of the government of the United States, and without making any invidious comparisons, I am sure the house will agree that this was the proper source from which to get information on this subject.

SOUTHEAST ASIA—CANADIAN MILITARY COMMITMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question. It arises out of the statement earlier today in connection with Canada's degree of involvement in the situation in southeast Asia. My question is this: Am I correct in assuming from the minister's statement that Canada has no military commitments in southeast Asia?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): That is what I endeavoured to say this morning, Mr. Speaker.

CYPRUS—POSSIBLE INCREASE IN CANADIAN FORCE

[Translation]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence.

Is it true that he and his department are considering the necessity of increasing the number of Canadian servicemen on Cyprus at the present time, due to the withdrawal of 500 British troops?

[Text]

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no connection whatsoever. I have said that government policy was not to increase the Canadian participation there, subject to the reservation of minor adjustments for military purposes only within the area to which we are already assigned.

[Translation]

Mr. Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the minister. Canada has received a request to increase its armed forces to make up for the withdrawal of the British troops. Has that request been passed on to the minister by UN authorities?

[Text]

Mr. Hellyer: To answer the question, Mr. Speaker, may I say that no such request has been received.

NEGOTIATIONS RESPECTING 12 MILE FISHING LIMIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Secretary of State for External Affairs arising out of his visit to Washington and his statement to the house at the opening of today's sitting which I may say seems to be quite a while ago. I am wondering whether, while the minister was in Washington, he was able to tidy up the matters which he has indicated have been outstanding between Canada and the United States in respect to the proposal to extend our fishing zones and our territorial seas.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, that matter was in my mind but there was no time to deal with it; nor had I intended to do so when I went to Washington.

Mr. Barnett: Could the minister give us some indication as to when he expects these discussions to conclude?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would think some time might elapse before we would reopen the negotiations; no date has been set.

Mr. Barnett: Mr. Speaker, that was not my question. I asked, not when the negotiations would reopen; I assumed they were going on. I asked the minister how soon he thought they would be finished.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would not like to draw any conclusions which I am not in a position to draw.

FORESTRY

NOVA SCOTIA—CONTINUATION OF IMPROVEMENT PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Maurice Sauvé (Minister of Forestry): Mr. Speaker, in answer to a question asked on June 22 by the hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir) I am pleased to inform the house that an agreement between the government of Canada and the province of Nova Scotia on forest stand improvement was approved yesterday, June 25. This agreement covers various forms of operation designed to improve the forests while providing employment for Cape Breton miners.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the minister very much for his kind reply. It is a little delayed but we appreciate it at this time.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR SUBSIDY ON MAPLE SYRUP

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pierre-André Boutin (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my question to the Minister of Agriculture, but in his absence, I shall direct it to the minister of rural development who is, in a way, the minister of agriculture for the province of Quebec.

Could the minister tell us whether his department has considered granting a substantial subsidy, by way of compensation, to maple syrup producers of the province of Quebec who suffered a very heavy loss of income owing to a complete crop failure?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this on the order paper.

TELEVISION

FILM ON PRIME MINISTER—OFFER BY INDEPENDENT NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Secretary of State arising out of his statement of yesterday. I ask whether the independent television organization who produce programs for private stations, the C.T.U., have offered the C.B.C. $30,000 for the famous film "Mr. Pearson"?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but I will make inquiries and answer on Monday.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary that arises out of the fact that Mr. Ouimet has wired Mr. Griffiths that the C.B.C. would not sell the film. Would the minister ask the C.B.C. to provide us with the explanation as to why the C.B.C. is not prepared to give someone else the opportunity to show this film which does not meet the C.B.C.'s very high standards?

Mr. Lamontagne: I will, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO RESIGNATIONS FROM PUBLIC AFFAIRS STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Is the Secretary of State prepared now to answer the question he undertook to answer, the question I asked him yesterday?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Yes, Mr. Speaker. The answer is in the negative.

Mr. Nielsen: As a further supplementary question, is the Secretary of State aware, now that he has received explanations from the C.B.C. management, whether any personnel in public affairs tendered their resignations to the management?

Mr. Lamontagne: I have received this information, the information I just gave the hon. member, this morning, and I have not been in communication with the C.B.C. since, but I will communicate with the C.B.C. and if an answer is needed I will give it on Monday.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

THETFORD MINES, QUE.—CONTRACT AWARDED TO HIGHER TENDER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): I have a question for the Postmaster General and in his absence I will direct it to the acting minister or to his parliamentary secretary. I may say I had intended placing this question on the order paper, Mr. Speaker, but since this is a matter of urgency—the contract to which it refers expires on June 30—there will not be time to do so and receive an answer before that date.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Could the house be told why, on the renewal of a postal delivery contract on July 1, 1964, for the city of Thetford Mines, Quebec, the contract had been extended to the highest bidder at nine cents per article for a period of four years when there was a tender at eight and three quarter cents per article by people who could do the job efficiently and at a saving to the taxpayers?

[Translation]

Mr. Alexis Caron (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I shall submit this question to the Postmaster General as soon as he returns.

Mr. Caouette: Before June 30?

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question to the parliamentary secretary to the minister. May I have the assurance that this question will be carefully considered before June 30?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly when the Postmaster General will return; I think he will return only on July 1, and I am unable to submit the question to him in the meantime.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Speaker, is the parliamentary secretary in a position to tell whether it is customary with the Post Office Department to award contracts without tender?

Mr. Caron: Mr. Speaker, this is a question I should submit to the Postmaster General.

FINANCE

TARIFF CONCESSIONS TO FOREIGN AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask the Minister of Industry a question of which I gave him notice. Is he able to tell the house whether he got in touch with Mr. Gérard Lévesque, minister of industry in the province of Quebec, to inform him that Ottawa is prepared to grant tariff concessions to the Peugeot and Renault automobile manufacturers, in order to induce them to come and open plants in the province of Quebec?

[Text]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Yesterday the Leader of the Opposition asked questions along similar lines. I am informed that the government of Quebec is engaged in an endeavour to establish in that province a facility to manufacture motor cars of a type not now made in Canada. This calls for extensive and delicate negotiations with the firms which have designed the cars in question—negotiations to which the government of Canada is not, and has not, been a party.

I would invoke the co-operation of members of the house in not seeking detailed information regarding these negotiations, in the interest of not prejudicing the chance of Canada's acquiring a new manufacturing industry.

In response to the specific queries raised, may I say that the government of Canada has communicated in general terms with the minister of industry and commerce of the province of Quebec concerning the possible manufacture in Canada of European-type cars. Representatives of the government of Quebec yesterday had exploratory discussions with officials of the departments of finance and industry looking to the setting up in Canada of facilities for manufacturing cars of French design.

The Leader of the Opposition also asked: "Is it a fact that officials of the firms in Quebec have been meeting with federal officials within recent weeks?" I would point out that the government of Quebec intends and hopes that the firm which will be manufacturing cars in Canada will be a Canadian controlled firm and will not be a subsidiary of foreign motorcar manufacturers. As a consequence, the negotiations with the federal government will be carried out by or on behalf of the government of Quebec, and not with us, by the foreign motorcar manufacturers.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Has there been any communication between the officials of the firms and federal officials?

Mr. Drury: Up until yesterday there had been no negotiations between officials of the federal government and representatives of these firms. It is expected that in the negotiations at some point officials of the firms would become involved, because of their technical competence and knowledge. But I would emphasize again that the discussions and negotiations as far as the federal government is concerned are being carried on between the government of Quebec or its representatives and the federal government, not between the government of Canada and the French companies or firms.

The Leader of the Opposition also asked whether the ambassador of France had been in consultation with officials of the Department of Industry or the Department of Finance on this matter. The reply to that question is that the ambassador of France did pay a visit to the Department of Finance to make some inquiries regarding tariff rules and regulations which might be applicable to the import of cars into this country. It was not the purpose of the ambassador, I am informed, to negotiate on this particular occasion, but merely to seek information.

The Leader of the Opposition also asked what was the policy of the government in relation to this transaction. I think the policy of the government has been fairly clearly enunciated. It is to foster the healthy economic growth of manufacturing industry in Canada. To this end the federal government is prepared to do, and will do, all it appropriately can to bring to Canada these additional manufacturing facilities.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for his reply and ask him whether or not there have been meetings between federal officials and officials of the firms concerned. That question has not been answered. The house was told there had been no negotiations between them. I should also like to ask the minister whether there is any foundation for information given today by the Canadian Press, quoting informed sources in Ottawa, that the federal government is prepared to offer the same concessions as given to Volvo, the Swedish firm which set up an assembling plant at Dartmouth. Is that so; or who are these informed sources?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, there have been no negotiations and no meetings, to the best of my knowledge, between representatives of Peugeot and Renault and officials of the federal government. In so far as who might be the informed sources, I regret to say that I do not know. I would hope that, as the federal government is now in the process of discussing with the provincial government what might be a basis for the entry into Canada of this new manufacturing operation, the Leader of the Opposition would not press the government to disclose its hand prior to and during the course of the negotiations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I would not press the government to give any more information than it gives to the press. Is it a fact that the minister sent a letter to Gérard Lévesque, minister of industry and commerce of the province of Quebec, setting forth the tariff concessions the federal government is prepared to make in the case of the French automobile manufacturers Peugeot and Renault? I am not asking what the concessions are to be, but was such a letter, giving the concessions that the government of Canada is prepared to make, sent to the Quebec minister?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I am glad that the Leader of the Opposition would not want to press for details as to what might be offered. It is correct, as I stated earlier, that a letter was sent outlining in general terms the willingness of the government of Canada to assist, through appropriate tariff concessions, the establishment of this new industry in Canada. I again repeat that I am very glad the Leader of the Opposition would not want to press for details now as to what those concessions might be.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That still leaves one thing unanswered. Did the letter to Mr. Lévesque set out what the concessions would be and those that would be acceptable to the government of Canada? The minister seems very carefully to avoid that question. I am not asking for the particulars; I am just asking, does the letter disclose that?

Mr. Drury: In detail, no, Mr. Speaker; in general terms, yes.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Well, it does not give the number of automobiles.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Industry and Minister of Defence Production. He admits that his letter to hon. Mr. Lévesque, of the province of Quebec contains no details but merely expresses in general terms the tariff concessions which would be granted to any French automobile company which would open a plant in Canada.

Is the minister giving serious consideration to the possibility of subsidizing the establishment in Canada of a strictly Canadian company which would produce typically Canadian automobiles?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as I stated a moment ago, that company would be strictly Canadian, would produce in Canada and and would be controlled by Canadians.

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Is the minister ready to produce the letter he sent to hon. Mr. Lévesque concerning these industries?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member would really want to push that question. In the first place, I think the leader of his party has agreed that it would not be helpful, in the purpose we are all seeking to achieve, to have at this point a premature disclosure of the negotiations or even the basis of negotiations.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, I should like to ask the Minister of Industry whether he has been in touch, directly or indirectly, with automobile manufacturers Peugeot and Renault, with regard to tariff concessions and other related problems?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, I have not been in touch with automobile manufacturers Peugeot and Renault.

Mr. Pigeon: And what about the French ambassador to Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Timiskaming.

SILVER DOLLARS—REQUEST FOR INCREASE IN SUPPLY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance what action the government is taking to alleviate the current shortage of silver dollars, and is this matter going to be resolved so that Canadians can obtain these souvenirs?

Mr. Speaker: Surely this is a question for the order paper.

TRADE

FLOUR—EFFECT OF CHANGE IN WHEAT PRICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question. Is the government contemplating any action to compensate for the unfavourable competitive position of our flour milling industry due to the change in the price of wheat announced by the Canadian wheat board the day before yesterday?

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, my understanding of the change that was made by the wheat board is that it does not in fact unfavourably affect the competitive position of Canadian flour.

Mr. Olson: I wonder whether the minister would give an undertaking to get an explanation of this for the house, because we were told that the price was raised 6⅞ cents per bushel.

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, when I answered this question yesterday I was careful to say that I would bring this to the attention of the wheat board to see whether the wheat board would feel it was in the interests of western farmers to have an explanation. This has now been brought to the attention of the Canadian wheat board, and I shall be governed by their advice in the answer that I give to the question, because I understand that there are certain competitive factors that you do not give away to your competitors.

Mr. Olson: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are there to be further discussions with the United States officials to reconsider their flour export subsidies?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is now getting into exactly the sort of line of questioning that I very strongly advise him against.

SHIPPING

EFFECT OF LOW WATER LEVEL IN GEORGIAN BAY AND LAKE HURON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Loney) asked me a question with respect to a letter received from the Georgian bay development association dated June 16. I might say to him that a letter has been prepared for the minister's signature in reply. The hon. member put a supplementary question in which he alleged that the Prime Minister had received a letter from the same association dated April 28 which was unanswered as of June 16. I took the trouble to check with the Prime Minister's office and can inform the house that the letter was acknowledged on May 7 by the Prime Minister's office, and was acknowledged personally by the Prime Minister in a subsequent letter of May 13.

[Mr. Olson.]

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STUDY OF EFFECT ON CANADA OF SEPARATION OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I asked the Prime Minister whether he would consider a study being made of the economic, social and political effects on the rest of Canada of separation, in view of the need for clarification of this subject. At that time he indicated that he would have hoped to give consideration to such a proposal. I am wondering whether he has given it consideration and whether the government has reached any decision on the matter.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been considering the matter. It is not a subject which lends itself to easy investigation and dogmatic conclusions, but officials of the government are making that kind of investigation now.

Mr. Scott: A supplementary question. I know it is hard to decide when this study would be available, but can the Prime Minister give us any indication of the likely length of time which would be involved?

Mr. Pearson: I should think it would not be possible to produce any results which would have any real significance in a matter of this kind before the autumn.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is a most interesting situation. The government of Canada has civil servants giving consideration to the effects of separatism, or the separation of our country. Would he let the house in on the secret as to what is the nature of the authority for this? What are these people supposed to investigate? This is a most unusual thing, for the government of Canada to engage in such a procedure.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, if it were unusual then it is surprising that the right hon. gentleman did not rise to express his surprise when the matter came up two or three weeks ago.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thought the answer you gave then was ridiculous.

Mr. Pearson: Now the right hon. gentleman is quite disturbed about this. What is being undertaken is an economic investigation of the interrelation between Quebec and the rest of the country, which is surely a very proper subject for an economic investigation.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That was not the answer given to the hon. member who asked the question. The answer given was that a study was being made of the problems arising out of separation, as I recall it. The Prime Minister says he is surprised that I am concerned about this. I am concerned that the government would be considering a proposal like that.

Mr. Pearson: I am very surprised that the right hon. gentleman tried to draw political conclusions from this.

Mr. Diefenbaker: No, but this is the most surprising thing I have ever heard.

[Later:]

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): A supplementary question to the Prime Minister arising out of the question asked about the study being carried on of the effects of separation. My question is whether or not the Prime Minister and his government could utilize the results of the studies now being carried on by Premier Lesage, who has established a bipartisan committee to study that very question, instead of our federal civil servants using their time on the matter.

Mr. Speaker: I am not at all sure that this is a question. It seems to me more of a statement.

Mr. Mandziuk: On a point of order, I am asking whether the federal government could make use of the studies which are now being carried on.

Mr. Speaker: I did hear the hon. member but that is his opinion.

HOUSING

REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF CONSTRUCTION BONUS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour, but in his absence, I will put it to the Prime Minister.

Since the Montreal house builders association suggests that the high level of unemployment during the summer months can be assigned to the $500 bonus paid for the construction of houses in the winter, would the Prime Minister or his government consider the possibility of extending the payment of this $500 bonus to houses built during the summer.

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the Minister of Labour replied to that question the other day.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

QUEBEC—AGREEMENT RESPECTING STUDENT LOANS AND FAMILY ALLOWANCES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

Could he tell us whether an agreement has been concluded between the federal government and the government of the province of Quebec with regard to student loans and the extension of family allowances?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the family allowance resolution is on the order paper and agreement has been reached with all the provinces concerning it. The student loan question, which I hope will very shortly be on the order paper, will be brought forward after agreement with all the provinces, including Quebec.

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): A supplementary question. Can the Prime Minister tell us whether agreement has been reached with all the provinces except Quebec, or can he tell us with how many provinces he has reached agreement.

Mr. Pearson: No. There are one or two provinces which are anxious to have further information in this latter matter regarding some of the details of the administration of the scheme, but we hope this will all be cleared up within a few days.

SUPPLY

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house resumed, from Thursday, June 25, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. McIlraith—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $469,308,421.26, being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of all of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $329,299,209.25;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amount of agriculture item 5, privy council item 25 (schedule A) of the main estimates, $2,259,116.67;

(c) four twelfths of the total of all of the items in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $134,897,245.34;

(d) an additional seven twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L37a (schedule B) of the supplementary estimates (A), $2,625,000.00;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L12a, (schedule C), of the supplementary estimates (A), $227,850, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, the President of the Privy Council is going to give us some information with respect to the secretaries in ministers' offices outside the Ottawa-Hull area. I think he said yesterday that there were 15 full-time persons and one part-time person located outside Ottawa. I asked him last night to tell us where they are located and in how many instances they are located in the actual constituency of the minister in question.

Mr. McIlraith: I would be very glad to give that information, Mr. Chairman. Hon. members will appreciate that so far as the President of the Privy Council is concerned his whole department is located in Ottawa, and all his staff is located in his own constitutency. Therefore I will interpret the remarks as being related only to staff outside the immediate Ottawa-Hull area. There is some uncertainty in my mind as to which constituency the Vancouver office is in, so if I just give the Vancouver city office perhaps that will be sufficient, because I was not able to verify the physical location of the building within the constituency. Subject to that reservation and my remarks yesterday about Mr. Côté, the following is what I deem to be an accurate and precise list.

The Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, in the public immigration building at Quebec city, one employee; the Minister of Fisheries at Bathurst in a private place, not a public building, one employee.

Mr. Douglas: Where?

Mr. McIlraith: Bathurst, New Brunswick.

Mr. Douglas: Is that in the minister's constituency?

Mr. McIlraith: It is either in or very close to it. I will get the information for the hon. member.

Mr. Coates: It is in his riding.

Mr. McIlraith: I am told it is in his constituency. The Minister of Industry and Defence Production, one employee, clerk, grade 1, at Montreal in a public building.

An hon. Member: In the constituency?

Mr. McIlraith: No, I believe not. The Minister of Justice, one employee in Montreal, not in the constituency; the Minister of National Defence, one employee in a public building, not in the constituency.

Mr. Douglas: Where?

Mr. McIlraith: In Toronto. The Associate Minister of National Defence, two employees at Sorel in the constituency; the Minister of National Health and Welfare, one employee in the constituency; the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, two employees at Vancouver, not in the constituency.

An hon. Member: In the same city?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. The Postmaster General, two employees in Vancouver. I am not certain whether the actual office is in the constituency or outside it. I will try to verify that. The Minister of Public Works, two employees in Montreal, not in the constituency; the Secretary of State, one employee in Montreal, not in the constituency; the Minister of Veterans Affairs, one employee in the constituency. That employee is only a part time employee at a salary of $2,000 a year. In case anyone asks about the order in council, there is an assistant indicated in the order in council as being in the minister's constituency but I find on investigation that in fact he lives in the immediate Ottawa-Hull area and is in fact in Ottawa. I mention that in case someone reads the order in council. I believe that list to be full and precise.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask the minister this question? We have knowledge of two orders in council now and in the case of the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration the employee working in the office of the minister is described in the order in council as being at Baie des Sables. The minister says that he is actually in Ottawa most of the time. Now he tells us that another employee described in the order in council as working in the constituency is actually located here.

Mr. McIlraith: I do not know that it is fair to say that in the order in council they are described as working in the constituency. In any event, in the one case the man has never worked in the particular town or village of Baie des Sables although he has worked part-time in the constituency. That is the point I am making. The practice in drafting the orders in council has varied over the years. If you go back for 30 years checking through the orders in council, as I have tried to do to unearth information, it is obvious that they do not give the whole record, although they are perfectly effective and proper orders in council. There are changes in the form of setting them up which does make it quite difficult, and in fairness to hon. members I thought I should point out these two cases. In the case of the order in council referring to Baie des Sables, this man works here mostly, and also in the constituency, but never in the particular village referred to in the order in council.

With regard to the other case, if you read the order in council you will see that he is said to be working at a particular place in the constituency. In fact, he lives in the immediate Ottawa-Hull area and works in Ottawa. It is true that he does go to the constituency occasionally. Incidentally, I found no travelling expenses for him, which pleased me very much. I wanted to make these precautionary remarks in case the orders in council are subsequently turned up and appear to indicate that something I have said is not precisely accurate. I believe what I have said to be precise and accurate and it certainly represents an attempt to get at the problem in a very full way.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, to me the minister's statement is far from satisfactory. He says that the individual mentioned in the order in council, Mr. André Côté, is most of the time in Ottawa but he also does some work in the constituency and in that event is located at Baie des Sables.

Mr. McIlraith: No, not in that case. That is the point I am making. This is the third time I have made the point. He is never at Baie des Sables. There is no office at Baie des Sables. So far as I can find out he has never been at Baie des Sables in his working hours since he was appointed.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, this is a confusing situation. Here is the government passing an order in council which reads:

> The board, in accordance with the provisions of section 71, subsection 1, of the Civil Service Act, recommends the appointment of André Côté as special assistant in the office of Minister of Citizenship and Immigration at Baie des Sables, Quebec, with salary at the rate of $7,500 per annum, effective March 2, 1964.

This is the order in council which was passed and now the minister says that this man was never at Baie des Sables. Why on earth was it placed in the order in council? Now the minister says he is not located at this particular point but he is available for work in the constituency.

Mr. McIlraith: Precisely. That is the very point I was trying to make. Here is an order in council obviously prepared to cover a man who came from the village of Baie des Sables and somebody put his address in because they found out he was going to do some work in the constituency. I came forward frankly and told the house what the situation was. Baie des Sables, which unfortunately I have never seen, is a relatively small community. But it is the home of this man whence he came when he was employed by the minister. I have looked at the map to satisfy myself, and I am told that when he goes to the constituency he does not go to this smaller community or centre. He goes to the main centres of population in the constituency, such as Matane. Incidentally, he was in the gallery when these questions were asked some days ago and he is in the gallery today. He is based at Ottawa and operates in Ottawa, but he does go to the constituency from time to time.

Mr. Douglas: This is exactly the point. I am not concerned about what he does in the minister's office in Ottawa. I am concerned about the fact that apparently there are employees paid out of the public treasury who are located in the constituencies of ministers. In the case of André Côté apparently he is here part of the time and in the constituency part of the time. I want to know what he does in the constituency. Apparently the Minister of Fisheries has someone at Bathurst in his constituency. The Associate Minister of National Defence has two people at Sorel in his constituency. With respect to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the order in council I have only covers one person in her constituency although I thought the President of the Privy Council said there were two.

Mr. McIlraith: No, one.

Mr. Douglas: One in Niagara Falls, then, and it says in the order in council appointing this person that she is to be located at Niagara Falls. The Minister of Veterans Affairs has someone part-time in St. Boniface.

Now, Mr. Chairman, no one is contesting the minister's right to have someone in his office where he is doing government business. However, the whole defence put up by the President of the Privy Council yesterday was, first, that this thing has been done for many years, which seems to me to be no argument at all. He said, in fact, they have improved upon the practice of the past because now these orders in council appointing these persons who are in ministers' constituencies are subject to review from time to time by the treasury board.

Mr. McIlraith: No, that is not the way he put it.

Mr. Douglas: I believe the minister said the treasury board reviewed these from time to time.

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Douglas: Do I understand they are not reviewed at all?

Mr. McIlraith: No, you do not understand it.

Mr. Douglas: They are approved by the treasury board, then an order in council is passed and there is no review from time to time.

Mr. McIlraith: I did not say that. It seems that throughout the proceedings today the hon. member has rather lost track of what I did say yesterday. I had undertaken to get information for the hon. member and discuss this matter on interim supply. As I pointed out in the early part of my remarks, this was a practice going back many years. I indicated how far back, but I have not tried to check just how far back it goes. I know it goes back as far as 1935, but I have no idea how many years before that.

I said that the practice was the same as that which had been in existence under the former government. There was one slight change and that was that treasury board had to deal with the recommendations before they were brought forward under section 71 for appointment by the governor in council. It is a small change, but it does give treasury board a chance to get at this thing. I then gave a statement in general terms and concluded with these words, which I should like to quote from page 4742 of Hansard:

> I must add, Mr. Chairman, that the Prime Minister has instructed the treasury board to examine into the whole question of ministerial assistants working outside Ottawa. He has asked treasury board to report on how this practice, as it has developed over the years, can be brought under strict control so that abuses, if any, can be prevented, and whether there are any advantages to the public service under the practice which should be retained under the control referred to.

[Mr. Douglas.]

Now, it will be seen at a glance that if you take a country the size of ours the work will be spread out over a vast area. Perhaps I could pick out one city by way of illustration because I have had a chance to look a bit at the work being done in Vancouver. If the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam views the information I have given him he will find that there are three stenographers and one clerk in Vancouver. If you follow the practice of business people in that province, and their habit of communicating with the government or making appointments with ministers and that sort of thing, you will find you have to make a careful evaluation of the situation because it will be seen that keeping these stenographers there, at the regular stenographer's salary, undoubtedly saves a great deal of money to the public treasury. I must confess that when I see the size of the budget deficits, both past and present, that is a source of concern. It is a much better way of getting effective service for the population and the business people who will likely be communicating with the government than closing up the office and having all the staff here. Then, you would have to pay travelling expenses, and if you start travelling the vast mileages necessary in this country, the cost can be very high.

I have picked on Vancouver to illustrate a point. We have the same kind of situation to a limited extent in Winnipeg. There has been an office there for a great many years. In Montreal there has been a public works office in a public building, and I find that they probably do even more work than the minister's staff should be doing. It may well be that they are doing work for the departmental staff as well.

About all I can say that is really effective is that the Prime Minister has issued these instructions and the treasury board are doing precisely what is indicated. They are making a thorough examination of this whole matter to see what abuses, if any, exist. Of course it follows that appropriate action will be taken if any do exist. It will be seen this is not a simple matter of just having everybody work in Ottawa. This is no solution at all to the problem. When some questions were asked some time ago on orders of the day, the inference was—I must say I made a note of it very quickly—that these persons were doing other than ministerial work in the local constituencies at the constituency level. If that were the case it would, of course, be objectionable. I do not find that is so. We have a proposition here. The ministers are expected to produce results and I think I can say, in all modesty, that they are paid to look after the national business of the country. There is a good deal of work done for ministers to leave them free to deal with public business with which they might otherwise have to deal, or be expected to deal themselves. This matter requires careful evaluation and examination.

Mr. Douglas: The minister has a great capacity for muddying the waters. I started by saying that the minister's argument consisted of two parts: First, in saying that this practice had been going on for some time and that this government was trying to tighten it by having such appointments first of all reviewed by the treasury board prior to appointment. He also said the Prime Minister had asked for a further examination to see if there were any abuses. This really does not satisfy me. A review by the treasury board, a board made up by ministers themselves in the main, regarding the activities of other ministers of the same political party is not going to produce very much by way of careful scrutiny of these appointments.

Now, the other case made by the minister yesterday was that this section 71, subsection (1) of the Civil Service Act under which these appointments are made is being interpreted as meaning, when it says "persons to be employed in the office of the minister shall be appointed by the governor in council", not the place but the function of the minister. This means stretching one's credulity almost to the breaking point.

The President of the Privy Council said he had an opinion from the Minister of Justice on this. I keep wondering whether it was an off the cuff opinion which the minister gave one day after lunch or whether it was a written opinion from his department. I would certainly enjoy seeing it. But even if the minister's interpretation is right, and this office of the minister referred to in the act is not the actual office, the actual room or rooms where the minister's staff may be located, but is the function of the minister, then I still maintain that these appointments are only to assist the minister in carrying out his functions.

To what extent do the ministers' functions as a minister extend to having someone in Sorel, Baie des Sables and Niagara Falls? I am not talking about the minister's function as a member of parliament. The section does not give the governor in council the power to appoint staff to do their work as M.P.'s, but to do their work as ministers.

Last night when explaining this to the committee the President of the Privy Council said:

> It may well be that ministers could be relieved of much of their obligation to deal with the manifold problems of their constituents by a secretary or a stenographer living in their constituency—

Surely, Mr. Chairman, the function of the minister does not extend to looking after his constituents. That is his function as a member of parliament, and any staff which he requires to look after his constituents and his constituency business is his responsibility, just as it is that of any other member of parliament.

Miss LaMarsh: Do you pay your secretary?

Mr. Douglas: I pay any secretary I keep in my constituency.

Miss LaMarsh: Is it not a fact that every member of the house, whether on the treasury benches or otherwise, is provided with at least one secretary, paid from the public purse, whose responsibilities include looking after constituency matters, correspondence, and anything related to the individual member's constituency, and that those duties are performed with respect to the riding, here in Ottawa and could just as easily be performed in the constituencies?

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Chairman, every member is entitled to secretarial assistance, and the ministers in carrying out their constituency affairs are no different from any other members. When a minister is given the privilege of having a secretary in Niagara Falls—and I refer to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, since she has raised this matter—and the secretary is paid a salary of $5,220, which is much higher than any private member's secretary gets, not to work in Ottawa but to work in Niagara Falls then this is something which is not granted to any other member.

I want to know, is that secretary looking after the work of the department. If so, what public health department work is there in the city of Niagara Falls that this secretary is discharging? The fact is very clear that this person is not doing work for the department. This secretary is looking after the affairs of the minister, not in her capacity as a minister of the crown but in her capacity as a member of parliament. But if any of the rest of us need secretarial help in our constituencies we expect to supply it ourselves, and we do.

What I am quarrelling with is that an order in council, passed under a section which gives the government the right to appoint secretarial staff or other staff to work for a minister, is restricted to the minister in his or her function as a minister of the crown, and does not give the governor in council power to appoint persons to work in a minister's constituency to do tasks which are related to the minister's responsibility as a member of parliament.

Miss LaMarsh: Would the hon. member permit another question? Is it not a fact that work done in Ottawa, work done in Niagara Falls or Burnaby-Coquitlam, being of the same type and being done by an individual counting off against an establishment is exactly similar in kind? Is it not also a fact that the hon. member, who is concerned over this matter, has on his staff a number of individuals who are paid from the public purse, one in particular a Mr. Pope who frequently does work for his member outside of Ottawa, and yet his salary is paid at public expense?

Mr. Winch: May I ask a question of the minister? If what she says is correct then I take it there is no difference between her operation of the department in her own constituency and in my constituency in Vancouver. If so, does she intend to appoint somebody in my riding in Vancouver and, if not, why is it only in her constituency where this appointment is made?

Miss LaMarsh: I will be happy—

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam had the floor and when he has concluded we might continue with questions.

Mr. Douglas: The minister's question simply points up the whole problem so far as the government and the committee are concerned, that either the staff which the public pays for should be available in members' constituencies or should be restricted to Ottawa, and it should be the same for everybody. But if the ministers are going to have staff working in their constituencies they ought not to be appointed under section 71. They ought to be appointed in their capacity as members of parliament. This section however only gives the governor in council power to appoint persons to help a minister discharge his or her responsibility as a minister of the crown and not as a member of parliament, and I think that this can lead to a great deal of abuse.

If the government wants to adopt something of the system they have in England, of allowing members to have agents, and paying them to look after the business of the members in their constituencies, that is a policy which could well be considered; but the government has not followed that policy. What I and others are afraid of is that by a back door method, of appointing people under the pretext that they are helping a minister carry out his ministerial duties, this is actually being used to appoint people to carry out constituency duties, and this borders on political duties. This is a very serious matter and the fact that it has gone on some time does not excuse it at all. I hope we get some satisfactory explanation as to whether the government is going to continue this practice, is going to extend it, or is going to discontinue it.

For instance, the minister said that when a minister of the crown goes to a city it is useful to have someone to make appointments. I quite agree that when a minister goes back to Vancouver undoubtedly organizations and individuals will want to see him in his ministerial capacity, but I cannot believe that among all the civil servants a minister has in Vancouver, Toronto or Montreal, there is not someone who can look after his appointments without having a secretary located there full-time to deal with the one or two days a month that he may be in the city.

I hope the government will not allow this thing to drift into serious abuse. I for one am quite dissatisfied with the explanations that have been given. I am convinced that what is being done now improperly, under the guise of appointing staff to do ministerial duties, is actually appointing staff to carry on constituency work. If the government is going to give ministers constituency agents, and make ministers different from other members of parliament, then it should come out and say so. If it is going to give similar staff to all members of parliament, then it should announce that policy; but I do not think it should rely on the subterfuge of appointing people under section 71(1) and having them do constituency work.

Mr. McIlraith: I wish to answer one point raised by the hon. gentleman. He made reference to civil servants doing the type of work done by the staff in Vancouver—I refer to Vancouver because I had the opportunity of learning about the situation there. I would be the very first to object if we got into a position where civil servants were the ones who were telephoning to Ottawa for appointments to get ministers to go here, there, and everywhere in that province, making appointments for the people of that province to see ministers in that area, and passing on correspondence to them. I hope he did not mean to imply in the course of his remarks that civil servants should be all mixed up with the minister's staff, and vice-versa. I hope we are on common ground in this regard and that on reflection he will agree with me on this point, at least, because I do not think he could have realized the implications in his remarks.

There is one other point which the hon. gentleman raised—a general point which seems to be based on a wrong premise. It is a fact of geography in this country that our ministers come from most of the provinces of Canada. I regret I am compelled to say "most provinces" instead of "all provinces". In any event, the point I am making is that, though they represent the whole country as ministers in the cabinet, the fact of life is that they do come from a particular province and are looked on in those areas as the provincial minister, or the area minister, in the federal cabinet. Because in some cases a particular office is located in a town in the constituency of a minister, rather than in some other town in the region is, surely, no reason why the inference must be drawn from this fact alone that the person concerned is doing constituency work.

Mr. Douglas: What are they doing?

Mr. McIlraith: That is the point. We are checking right through, as I told the hon. member. And, as I was careful to say in the concluding part of my remarks, the Prime Minister has given instructions—

Mr. Douglas: Tell us what their duties are now.

Mr. McIlraith: I think I can do that. The hon. gentleman was premier of a province and I have a suspicion—in fact, I have more than a suspicion—that he used the minister's staff outside the city of Regina. He knows that.

Mr. Douglas: Would the minister be specific? Is that a statement or an hypothesis? Give us particulars.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. When I was solicitor for the province—I think I could check up the records; I will give them.

Mr. Douglas: The minister need not be coy. If he has any charge to make, I want him to make it. If not, he should withdraw it.

Mr. McIlraith: I have no charge to make whatever. The point I am making is this—

Mr. Douglas: The minister is dancing away from this and I will not allow it. The minister made a statement. He will either substantiate it or withdraw it. He dances away from almost everything he has been asked.

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I might be allowed to withdraw—

Mr. Douglas: I have the floor, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: My understanding is that the minister has the floor.

Mr. Douglas: I was rising on a question of privilege.

The Chairman: The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam is rising on a question of privilege.

Mr. Douglas: The minister has danced away from almost everything he has been asked, but he is not going to dance away from this. He will now either substantiate what he said, or withdraw it. Or he will tell me he is making a hypothesis, and if he does I will want confirmation of that.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member has taken the time to put on the record some further observations which are unnecessary. I did withdraw it. How many times does he want me to withdraw?

Mr. Douglas: I did not hear the minister withdraw it and I do not think anybody else did.

Mr. McIlraith: I realize the hon. gentleman did not hear what I said. I withdrew it in a loud voice and the hon. gentleman did not hear because he was busy talking when he might have been listening. I spoke in a loud voice and a direct voice. It was quite unequivocal because it was not my intention in any way to irritate the hon. gentleman.

An hon. Member: Slander.

Mr. McIlraith: No, I do not have the reputation around here of seeking to slander anyone. I have been here too long to take that from the hon. member. I have a reputation here of answering the questions put to me if I can, and the record will vouch for that. I told the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam some ten or 12 days ago on orders of the day that I would be willing to discuss this matter and give all the information I could on interim supply. This I am prepared to do, and I have been giving this information as fully as I can. The hon. member made what I thought were wrong arguments when he spoke a short while ago, and I was rising to correct what I considered were those wrong arguments. If there is more information required, I will be glad to give it to him.

Mr. Douglas: If the minister has withdrawn his remarks, I think it would be interesting to know why he made them in the first place. What was he trying to prove?

Mr. McIlraith: I will tell the hon. gentleman. I was trying to illustrate that it is perfectly obvious that any minister may have to send a member of his staff to one part of the country or another on a particular occasion. That is the point I was trying to illlustrate or prove. I thought it would be evident to anyone. For instance, I sent a member of my staff to Kingston some days ago to undertake certain work of a rather technical nature which I regard pretty much as my own concern. That is the point I was trying to make.

Mr. Winch: The matter before us now concerns an appointment to a minister's office in a constituency. I certainly heard an allegation made that the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, a former premier of a province, did the same thing.

Mr. McIlraith: No.

Mr. Winch: I am asking that that be withdrawn.

Mr. McIlraith: I never made any such statement.

The Chairman: I may say in any event, whether the statement was made or not, whatever statement was made by the minister, he withdrew it, and I suggest that this particular incident be forgotten. I should like to call on the hon. member for Medicine Hat who has been wanting to speak for a while.

Mr. Teillet: I think perhaps because the leader of the New Democratic party—

The Chairman: Order. I am wondering whether we should not give an opportunity now to other members who have been trying to get into this debate. They would like to say a word, and I suggest we recognize the hon. member for Medicine Hat.

Mr. Olson: There are one or two matters I should like to place before some of the ministers opposite. I wish to ask the ministers who have requested treasury board to make these appointments providing for people to work in their constituencies just what, in fact, these people are doing.

I think the argument advanced a few minutes ago by the Minister of National Health and Welfare is tantamount to an admission that they are in fact doing constituency business. The hon. lady tried to argue that all members have the privilege of hiring a secretary to take on their constituency business in Ottawa. I drew the inference that this was justification for her having an appointment made under this section of the act by treasury board of someone in her constituency to take on her constituency business. I want the President of the Privy Council and the ministers who have made these appointments to know that no member of this House of Commons, as far as I know, has the privilege of having a secretary to attend to his constituency business anywhere except in his office in Ottawa. We would like to know whether or not this is the case, because it just so happens that the secretary who is on the staff of the House of Commons here in Ottawa and is assigned to my office did in fact go to the constituency of Medicine Hat during the Christmas recess and was there until some time in February, and during that period she was not paid by the House of Commons. If there are members of this house, be they ministers or otherwise, who are enjoying the privilege of having secretaries paid to attend to constituency business in their constituencies, I think this practice should either be extended to all members or withdrawn.

The President of the Privy Council has attempted to muddy the waters, as has been pointed out, and stick-handle this question which has been put to him a number of times; but so far we have not received any clear explanation from the Minister of Veterans Affairs, the Minister of National Health and Welfare or the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration as to the exact duties these people are performing. We all know very well that the Minister of National Health and Welfare, for example, has an office in Ottawa. We know there is an office of this department in Toronto, in Winnipeg, in Regina, in Edmonton and in British Columbia; and we also know—

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I am sure the hon. member would not want to mislead the committee. There is no office of a minister in Winnipeg. There is only one office for the province of Manitoba, and that happens to be in St. Boniface, at the moment, in the public post office.

Mr. Olson: I said there was an office, or a branch of the Department of National Health and Welfare, in Winnipeg.

Mr. Teillet: And in St. Boniface.

Mr. Olson: And perhaps in St. Boniface. Anyway, Mr. Chairman, there are a number of them all across the country. Members of this house have no objection whatever to ministers using the staff of this house to assist them in their function as minister of whatever department it happens to be. But these three cases of appointments by treasury board of other staff in the constituency appear to me to have nothing to do with their function as ministers of the crown.

With regard to the argument advanced by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, to the effect that she is entitled to this kind of person on her staff in Niagara Falls because other members of the House of Commons have the right to hire a secretary to attend to constituency business, I think she is entirely wrong because the premise of that argument is false. Members of this house do not have that privilege, and I have personal experience to buttress that argument. Therefore I think if we are to get at the heart of this question, which is a very valid one, we should have an explanation from these three ministers at least as to just exactly what these three people do in their constituencies while they are being paid by the government.

Miss LaMarsh: Mr. Chairman, I am very happy to have the opportunity to speak on this matter; I have been waiting for it all afternoon. In the first place, I should like to say to the committee that I am not being defensive—I do not intend to be—and I deny any allegation that there is any subterfuge or anything wrong in what I have done I am speaking of what I myself have done as Minister of National Health and Welfare and I should like the committee to know this.

Within a day or so of my appointment to this portfolio I was advised of the size of the establishment of the minister's office. Some individuals had been employed by my predecessor, and remained; some left of their volition a few days before this government took office. Some of those individuals had been appointed by Mr. Martin, who was my predecessor's predecessor. They perform different jobs, and the establishment was set up, I presume, by the civil service commission. Some of them are what members of parliament would call regular civil servants; that is, they have come up through the civil service and have moved into the ministerial staff. Some of them have been appointed to the ministerial staff or have taken the civil service examination in the past and have come into the staff. We have everything from messengers up to the most qualified senior clerks in the ministerial offices.

Every member of the House of Commons has at least one individual appointed to his staff here in the house. Admittedly this is while the session is on. That individual is appointed and is paid from public funds for one purpose, obviously, namely to deal with the member's constituency work. A minister of the crown has no sessional staff over and above those individuals allotted to him or her as members of the ministerial staff.

Obviously the work which a minister carries on also involves that of a member of parliament, and he or she is as entitled to a staff member to carry out this work as any other member of parliament. It should be remembered that more than one half of the remuneration of a minister of the crown is paid for being a member of parliament. This work must be completed, but no individual is appointed to ministers' staffs for sessional purposes at all.

The discussion has not been heated today, but there has been a faint suggestion by hon. members of sticking one's fingers in the till. I deny such an allegation. The practice, rightly or wrongly, has been going on for 30 years. Civil servants have informed me of it and I imagine that the same thing has happened with my colleagues. Our senior civil servants informed us, when we took over the responsibilities of the department, of the way in which the minister's office was operated. There was absolutely no reason for any of us to inquire into whether there was anything wrong in it, just as there was no reason to inquire into any other information we were given.

We had information as to how our predecessors operated. In my particular case my predecessor did not establish an office in his own constituency; instead he had to appoint people whom he was entitled to have, namely an executive secretary and an executive assistant. This was done by a great many ministers. In particular I remember that it was done by Mr. Fulton as minister of justice. Those individuals, instead of appointing someone to their constituency office had a rather high priced man, in some cases with a salary of $9,000 a year or more, flying back and forth to the constituency. Their expense accounts were charged to the public purse.

They were doing the minister's work in and out of the constituency.

In my own view, to have someone who is a clerk, who is a contact not only for me as a member in my constituency but perhaps, more importantly, for me as the minister for southern Ontario, for something in excess of 5 million people, most of whom through their members or otherwise contact me in my constituency—presumably to save themselves the cost of long distance travel and long distance telephone calls—is a necessity.

Like the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and every other member in this house, I have great pride in being a good constituency man. I have always tried to take a great deal of care of my people. Since I have been appointed as a minister of the crown I have found, particularly because of pressures regarding pension legislation, that it has been virtually impossible to be in my constituency. Accordingly I have done what a great many other members do, and that is put on a telephone answering service 24 hours a day and run up long distance telephone bills at my own expense in telephoning back and forth to my constituents. But there has been no way of having personal contact with people, not just from the riding of Niagara Falls, which constitutes 80,000 people and for which I am paid $18,000 a year for being their member, but also all the people from southern Ontario who wish to get in touch with me as the minister for the area. Surely every member realizes that a minister does not just have the responsibility of an individual portfolio but has also the responsibility of a member of parliament representing these people.

In addition to that, because of my particular portfolio a great deal of work is generated regarding pensions, family allowances and matters of that kind by individuals all over the country. Many of these people are not literate in either the French or English language. Accordingly, I ask them to come to the office; I want that to be clear. This office is established in a public building. As far as I know there has never been one similar in my constituency, although my constituency was formerly represented by a minister of labour, Mr. Humphrey Mitchell. At this time his executive assistant was sent to the constituency. I remember his staying at a hotel for a week at a time at public expense arranging for people in that area to see the minister. Therefore I know from my own knowledge that this is a practice which has gone on for more than 30 years.

[Miss LaMarsh.]

Hon. members have said that they do not have this kind of privilege. It was not very long ago that I was a private member, and I am well aware that there are differences between the privileges and responsibilities of members of the privy council and those of individual private members. If there were not those difference I would not imagine that too many members on that side would want to get over to this side and sit on the front benches. But with parliament sitting eight to ten months a year now we who in this house are not only members of the executive branch but members of the legislative branch are incapable of looking after our primary responsibility for which purpose we were elected, and for which purpose we are paid, namely constituency work.

I should just like to put my position on record. Each of my colleagues may have a quite different position, but if I were to represent, as did my hon. friend opposite, the wonderful province of Manitoba, and had a constituency office in Brandon, or if I were to represent Nova Scotia—I am not certain whether the former minister of finance had one too, but I think he did—and I represented the whole province of Nova Scotia or Manitoba, I would be happy to have such an office and would feel that the people of that province would be better served by the minister from the province if there were such an office.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam suggested that this was political. I think too often members of parliament sneer at that word. But I can say on my honour as a member of the House of Commons that no piece of patronage work, no political work in that sense, has ever been performed in this office. Although I was informed about a year ago that I was able to open such an office I did not do so until this spring, when it became perfectly apparent that no matter how work was arranged here in Ottawa with reference to the individuals in southern Ontario, and more particularly in my constituency, their needs could not be attended to properly. Yet in setting up such an office my staff was advised never to ask the politics of anyone who came in the door. The sign on the door says: "Department of National Health and Welfare Minister's Office". The stationery used in that office is the stationery which is used in each of the several offices I have, also in Ottawa. When I am in my constituency I work physically in that office, and outside it sits the secretary at her desk, as the receptionist. I suspect that if there is a summer recess I will be working in that office every day. When I am in my constituency I expect that I will be handling not only constituency work but also departmental work as minister in Ottawa.

If this type of practice is improper and illegal I should like to know, because I have no desire to do anything which is improper and illegal. I would appeal to the hon. members of the house not to suggest that simply because this sort of thing has been done there is something underhanded, that subterfuge has been used. This practice has been carried on for quite a time, as I have pointed out, in different ways in different constituencies. There was no attempt to hide the fact in the order in council that this individual was going to work in Niagara Falls, and my constituency was in fact informed about it in speeches, by telephone calls and in every way possible, and the public invited to come to the office. Liaison has been arranged with the provincial welfare and the municipal welfare people, who move in and out of the office in an attempt to serve the people in the area.

If I have done wrong, if section 71 does not, as I believe it does, extend to appointing someone in the office of the minister to do the work of the minister, if this is improper I shall at once discharge her and close this office. I do not believe there is anything improper in that which I have done, and with respect, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe that the members of the committee will find anything improper or that there is any subterfuge involved.

Mr. Teillet: Mr. Chairman, I just want to take one moment, if I may, to try and explain the value of this kind of arrangement as far as Manitoba is concerned.

Mr. Winch: I do not know whether my hon. friend is making a maiden speech, but I have the floor.

The Chairman: I did call on the Minister of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Teillet: I simply wish to say that as far as Manitoba is concerned I have found it essential, and all my predecessors from that province have found it essential, that there be an office in that province available to the public, to all the citizens of the province, where they can talk to someone and find a means of getting information from the minister, from his department and from other departments of government.

Mr. Churchill: I did not have one. Why did you say all your predecessors had one? Let us be accurate about this.

Mr. Teillet: I beg the hon. member's pardon.

Mr. Churchill: You said all your predecessors maintained an office with a staff there. I did not and I was one of your predecessors in the Department of Veterans Affairs.

Mr. Teillet: Then I apologize to the hon. gentleman. My information was that one existed in the general post office building in Winnipeg, and instead of using that I opened one in the general post office in St. Boniface. I did this in order to serve the people of that area, because I feel it is important. Otherwise it would mean that someone from my office would occasionally have to travel to Manitoba, and the net cost involved here represents a saving. This office is open to serve the public. I would feel very badly if we had to make a change because I think it is useful to the public of Manitoba.

Mr. Scott: Would the hon. gentleman permit a question. I understand that there is a district office of the Department of Veterans Affairs in Winnipeg. Is that not so?

Mr. Teillet: Yes.

Mr. Scott: What do they do in the minister's personal office which cannot be handled by the federal office located in Winnipeg?

Mr. Teillet: This is a question of the office being located in St. Boniface rather than Winnipeg. I think there is a good reason for that office to be occasionally located there instead of on the other side of the river, otherwise it would not be accessible to the people there. There is a distinction in going to the Department of Veterans Affairs, where there is a considerable amount of traffic.

The Chairman: Shall I call it five o'clock?

Mr. Winch: I have the floor so I will call it five o'clock.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order, the item coming up at five o'clock is a bill standing in my name dealing with the elections act. Subject to the feelings of the house, this matter concerns such a serious misuse of the statute that if it could be cleared up within the hour I would be content to relinquish my right to speak on my bill, and have it listed for some day next week.

The Chairman: May I suggest that a decision on this point be made with the Speaker in the chair.

Progress reported.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Speaker, in view of the remarks of the hon. member for Danforth I wonder whether the house would grant permission to continue with interim supply from five to six?

Mr. Scott: I am quite agreeable to that, provided it is understood that my bill will be called in the first hour next week.

Mr. McIlraith: It will not lose its position, there having been no private members' hour.

Mr. Scott: I am agreeable to that.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we will suspend private members' hour?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUPPLY

INTERIM SUPPLY

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. McIlraith—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

Resolved, that a sum not exceeding $469,308,421.26, being the aggregate of—

(a) one twelfth of the total of all of the items set forth in the main estimates for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $329,299,209.25;

(b) an additional one twelfth of the amount of agriculture item 5, privy council item 25 (schedule A) of the main estimates, $2,259,116.67;

(c) four twelfths of the total of all of the items in the supplementary estimates (A), laid before the House of Commons at the present session of parliament, $134,897,245.34;

(d) an additional seven twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L37a (schedule B) of the supplementary estimates (A), $2,625,000.00;

(e) an additional two twelfths of the amount of loans, investments and advances item L12a (schedule C), of the supplementary estimates (A), $227,850, be granted to Her Majesty on account of the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the Minister of National Health and Welfare and the Minister of Veterans Affairs. May I say with all respect, or perhaps disrespect, that it is not possible to accept their statements. How can they hope to bamboozle members of the House of Commons and expect that we are so naïve as to accept what they have said?

[Mr. Scott.]

Miss LaMarsh: On a question of personal privilege, is the member saying he does not accept what I have said?

Mr. Winch: I said that you cannot expect us to be so naïve as to accept what you have said.

Miss LaMarsh: Is the member saying he does not accept my word as a member of the House of Commons?

Mr. Winch: I accept your word, but not what has happened. If one, two or three cabinet ministers have found it necessary to make special appointments by means of a recommendation by treasury board approved by the governor general in council in order for them to discharge their responsibilities as ministers holding the portfolios of health and welfare, immigration and veterans affairs, may I ask how it is that the other 17 cabinet ministers have not yet found it necessary to carry on their business in the same way? If, for example, such appointment is for immigration purposes, will we finally find out how many landed immigrants have been processed through the office in the minister's riding and how many immigration cases there are in the minister's constituency? I am getting on very well without the minister rising and I want to deal with this matter on this basis.

The Minister of National Health and Welfare comes from Niagara Falls, a particular area in Ontario. Why is it that it is not important for her to have a representative in the other 264 constituencies of Canada? May I ask why the Minister of Veterans Affairs requires a representative in his constituency? I am usually pretty honest and not naïve. These appointments by cabinet ministers are political appointments for party patronage purposes.

Mr. McIlraith: That is not true.

Mr. Winch: There cannot be any other answer. I was most interested in what the Minister of National Health and Welfare said a few minutes ago about her responsibilities and how she had to have somebody in her riding able to approach people and report to her. She said that we as members of the House of Commons have secretaries. Of course we have when the house is in session. I admit that as a minister she cannot get back to her riding very often. We all admit that. But I cannot go back the 3,000 miles to my riding of Vancouver East either. As a matter of fact I think my attendance in the house is close to a record. I have only lost three full days since February 18. My riding of Vancouver East is just as important to me as the Liberal riding of the minister is to her. She made a statement—I am sorry, I should say that the minister made a statement because you should not call a minister a she.

Mr. Scott: You would not call her a he.

Mr. Winch: I would not call her a he. As a matter of fact, I should like to know about the invitation to marriage because I read that she would like to become a mother.

Miss LaMarsh: Really, Mr. Chairman, I do not know to what my hon. friend refers. However, not only do I think that I deserve some respect as a woman from him but also my office deserves some respect. I have no idea what the reference he has just made means, but I do ask him to realize that he is speaking in the highest court in the land, that there are children in the galleries, and that the few reporters in the press gallery who understand English may occasionally read Hansard and produce reports for the public press. Therefore I ask him at least to pay attention to what he is saying.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, whether I am in the highest court of the land or the lowest court of the land I always honour women. My point is that the minister said that with all her staff she had no one to take care of her constituency business. That was the implication. Am I correct? The minister acknowledges that I am correct. If that is so, how does she think that members of the house take care of their constituency business when they do not have the authority to appoint anybody in their constituencies?

Let ministers as well as members be honest. These appointments were made by these cabinet ministers at government expense for strictly political purposes.

Mr. McIlraith: That is not so.

Mr. Winch: If not, then there should be an office of the department, not the political party, in the ridings where these appointments have been made. In the constituencies of each of the three cabinet ministers and in the towns that have been named, where is there an official office under the control of the cabinet minister for the carrying on of government business which requires the appointment of somebody representing the minister in that constituency with a salary ranging from $5,000 to $7,500 a year?

The cabinet ministers concerned can make all the explanations they like. This is still political patronage for the maintenance of party control in their own constituencies. There is no other basis for these appointments. There is no other reason for these appointments, and they are completely against the laws and regulations of parliament. I hope that the time will come when greater consideration will be given to the needs of members as well as cabinet ministers.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I do want to say this, that the real meaning of government is honesty; the real meaning of democracy is following the principle that what is right for one is right for all. The government is a minority. It can carry on if it conducts the business of the people. It can carry on also if it does not make a farce of the rules and regulations. All three ministers concerned are fairly close to their constituencies, but there are about 150 of us in this house who are a lot farther away from our ridings. There are a number of us who have not been back to our constituencies, except for three days or a week, since February 18.

If a cabinet minister can say that because of responsibilities he needs somebody in his own riding, appointed by subterfuge at government expense, then other members have that right and privilege, too. Until you are prepared to be absolutely honest and give rights to all members, to recognize the distances in Canada, then I say that the three appointments made, irrespective of everything said by the three ministers, are political, constituency appointments for political control of their own organizations in their ridings and not for the work covered by their positions as cabinet ministers.

Mr. Scott: I wanted to ask the minister if he could give me the duties of these people. I find it very strange, for example, that in the city of Toronto we have an assistant to the Minister of National Defence, yet the more important cabinet posts of trade and commerce and finance do not seem to require that type of assistance. I know the minister is a bit uncomfortable at this apparent misuse of the statute, but I want to say to him in the beginning that it is not particularly helpful to the discussion for him to make the type of innuendo against the leader of our party that he did a little while ago. I can understand the uncomfortable nature of his position, but I do not think it is helpful to make that kind of innuendo and then try to withdraw it, because the innuendo is in the record.

It is a rather unfortunate thing that he would try to sidetrack it in that way.

I do not want to go through the whole list of these appointments, but really we have had no satisfactory answer at all on this subject. We still do not know what these people are doing for their ministers in their capacity as ministers, over and above the duties of the minister as a private member. All of us have sympathy for the ministers. They have a great deal of work to do and they would like to have some assistance in their ridings, but you cannot do it in this back door method. You are misusing this statute. I would not go quite as far as saying the appointments are illegal, but certainly I should like to see the whole matter referred to the courts for an interpretation. I doubt very much if the wording of the statute, which is quite clear in its provision that these people are to work in the minister's office, can be stretched to appoint people in constituencies. By the admission of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, this assistant is dealing with business on a constituency basis.

It is really fatuous to suggest that the reason for the appointment is that the minister represents all of southern Ontario. I am sure every member of the house can say, as I can, that I receive correspondence from members of our party in various constituencies across the country. It is a ridiculous argument to say that because she is the minister for all of southern Ontario this is required. We are simply not satisfied with the explanation. We want to know what justification there is for this type of misuse of a public statute. We have not received any information at all from the President of the Privy Council or from the other ministers who have spoken that would in any way justify the conduct in this case. I suggest that until you do give us proper answers we want to sit here and talk about it. The alternatives are either, (a) refer this matter to the court for a ruling as to whether you can make use of a statute in this way or (b) rescind these appointments until such time as you can satisfy the House of Commons that the procedure you are adopting is legal and proper.

After all, it is our historic right to insist that public funds be spent in a constitutional and proper manner. Nothing you have said today has convinced us that you are following a proper course. It is not sufficient to tell us that this practice has been followed by previous administration. I understand that in the case of the present Leader of the Opposition, he stopped this practice when he was prime minister. The mere fact that this procedure has been used by previous Liberal administrations is not sufficient justification for pursuing it now.

I want to again ask the minister to go through this list of departments. For example, the associate minister of defence has two persons in his constituency. What are they doing for him as minister, over and above his capacity as a private member? The minister of northern affairs has two people in Vancouver. What are they doing there? What are their duties to him as a minister, in a city in which there are regional offices for his department? The Postmaster General has two in Vancouver. What are their duties? What are they doing for him in his capacity as a minister—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Checking to see that the mail arrives.

Mr. Scott: —as distinct from his capacity as a private member? The Minister of Public Works has two in Montreal, again in his own area. The Secretary of State has one in Montreal. It is just too coincidental, Mr. Chairman, that all these appointments happen to be either in the constituency of the minister involved or in such close proximity to the constituency that it does not really matter.

This is a very serious charge. I would not go quite as far as my colleague who just spoke. I am not suggesting that there is anything deliberately sinister in these appointments, but you simply have not satisfied us. I want to ask the minister again to get up and tell us, as he has not done, what these people are doing in these constituencies. I find it very interesting that the Minister of Trade and Commerce, handling one of the most complex and difficult departments, has not needed an assistant in his constituency. I find it a strange coincidence that the Minister of Finance, carrying perhaps the heaviest portfolio in the city of Toronto, has not seen fit to require such assistance. Again, we want to know, what is it all about? What are these people doing there, because from what has been said today the implication that will go out across the country is that these people are performing duties for ministers in their political capacity or in their capacity as a private member, and for that there is absolutely no legal justification under the section which you have used to make these appointments. I want to give the minister an opportunity to answer.

Mr. McIlraith: The hon. member has raised several points and I should like to deal very briefly with one, that is the interpretation of the section. I do not propose to develop the argument I made last night on that. I am convinced of the legality of the appointments, but that is not, I respectfully suggest—

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister read the section so we know what he is discussing?

Mr. McIlraith: I must warn the Leader of the Opposition that it is one page in length. This is section 71 of the Civil Service Act. After I satisfied myself, and because the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre had intimated a doubt about the legality, I took the precaution of asking the Minister of Justice for an opinion on it.

Mr. Scott: Would you table the opinion?

Mr. McIlraith: No, it is not proper to table such an opinion and it has never been the practice. I think that is elementary. I invite the hon. member for Danforth to read the remainder of subsection 1 of the authority for the appointment. I invite him to continue on reading this section and notice the interchangability of the use of the words "position" and "office", particularly as it appears in the first part of subsection 2.

Further, if he is familiar with the whole act, I invite him to notice the drawing of the distinction between departmental civil servants, what we would call regular civil servants, and these service sections that deal with publicly paid special employees, drawn from outside the general divisions of the regular civil service. If he does that he will be more satisfied on the legal question.

Now, I do not wish to put this thing on narrow legal grounds, though that is a very important point and I am not in any way underestimating it. But assuming I am right in that, there still remains the larger question on which to be satisfied concerning public funds. I am sorry I am not better able to satisfy the hon. member, but I assure him I had no intention of casting any aspersion on the leader of his party. I was seeking to illustrate the regional nature of the ministers' appointments, and the fact that they have been regarded as regional has gone on so far as I know since confederation.

I was solicitor to that province for a great number of years and, to allay the hon. member's fears a bit more, if I made a reference that was taken up in any way, I immediately withdrew it because I had no intention of casting any aspersion on the hon. member. I was trying to indicate what had not been appreciated, the regional nature of ministers' appointments in this country, and if the hon. member goes back over Hansard he will see that just before this I had spoken about Vancouver, to illustrate the fact that the provinces regard certain ministers as their ministers, and this is certainly true of the smaller provinces. I made indirect reference to the fact that the government has no minister from Saskatchewan—

Mr. Diefenbaker: The people decided that.

Mr. McIlraith: That was the sole point I was seeking to raise on that issue, so I hope the hon. member will accept my word on that point, and I think Hansard will bear me out if he looks at it more carefully in the light of what I have said.

Now, coming to the particular point I have made, where I said I would not justify the practice by saying it had been there as far back as I could check, I do not think that is a sufficient answer by itself, but I think if I had not given that information I would have been less than frank with the committee. I do not see how I could do otherwise than give it and that is the reason why I gave it. If hon. members will look at my answer carefully they will see I described it as a practice going on since 1935, and I had illustrated it throughout the years since, but I had certainly not meant that as a full justification of it.

I had then gone on to point out what apparently seems to have missed the attention of the hon. member for Danforth, precisely what we are doing now that this matter has been drawn to our attention; and this was contained in the very last part of my remarks last evening. I thought I made that point clear.

Now, as to the particular offices, I said I had gone through the Vancouver office quite carefully and I sought to illustrate that I was completely satisfied that, whether it is due to the Rocky mountains, or whatever it is, that province regards itself as far away —separated, if you like, in a physical sense, from Ottawa. It is a long distance away, from Ottawa. It is a long distance away, with difficult means of communication, expensive costs of telephone calls and a few things like that. In any event it is the practice of people all over that province to come to that office, which is staffed with relatively junior staff, to make appointments and get information about business at Ottawa, a great deal of it by way of information as to where this or that should be directed. I fully satisfied myself on that office because I had an opportunity of getting through it, and I had satisfied myself that there was no work of a local party nature in that office.

With respect to what has been said about the office in Winnipeg, I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that the province of Manitoba seems to feel some pride—and I share that pride—in the fact that it is a province of some considerable substance and there is, and always has been, a minister's office maintained in that province.

Mr. Churchill: But not a minister's assistant in that office.

Mr. McIlraith: I wonder if the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre would just mind checking that statement before he leaves it on Hansard. I would draw the attention of the hon. member for Danforth to the fact that this employee in the St. Boniface office is drawing the magnificent salary of $2,000 a year, with no travel expenses of any kind, and I invite—

Mr. Scott: What does that prove?

Mr. McIlraith: It proves I have some responsibility for financing this country's expenditures and if I am satisfied that employee is doing proper work in the minister's office relating to the minister's duties, I am not going to cut off that $2,000 to be replaced by an expenditure of many more thousands of dollars for travel expenses and that sort of thing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: The minister is giving a very full explanation, but he got out of Vancouver pretty fast. Am I correct that there are two in the office of northern affairs in Vancouver?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes.

Mr. Diefenbaker: And two in the post office?

Mr. McIlraith: That is right.

Mr. Diefenbaker: In the examination the minister made of the Vancouver post office sub-office, would he tell us what he found there among the records, and also the same with northern affairs, because it is most unusual to have such a large staff just looking after general matters?

Mr. McIlraith: I am tremendously surprised that the Leader of the Opposition raised that question because I thought of all the people in the committee he would not raise it. I must say I was surprised at finding the extent to which the B.C. people, including its business people, regard Ottawa as being—I do not want to use the term separated—a long piece away, and the extent to which they go there for all manner and type of government information.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Are there no federal government offices in Vancouver?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, there are. I may say that right here in Ottawa I have found myself somewhat amazed at the extent to which I have found myself being interviewed by business and professional people in the whole of eastern Ontario about what they regard as eastern ontario matters related to govenment business, and not of a political or party nature. This is a fact in this country. I have not yet gone over all the offices, but this is in the process of being done and if there are any abuses, action will be taken. I wish again to draw the attention of hon. members to that. I do not know what more I can say about this thing.

When I checked the one in Niagara Falls I began to wonder, in the light of some of the work there, what percentage of our total immigration had gone into that area. Frankly a lot of things rather surprised me. I was amazed to find the increased inquiries about immigration which were going into that office. I do not put this forward necessarily as a defence, but hon. members asked for information and I am giving them the information. I can only say this is being pursued right through. I did get around to the public works office in Montreal. I found that it has a smaller staff than is usual. The question raised there was whether these people were doing more than the minister's office work—whether they are doing work that should be done by the departmental staff, in which case we may have to add departmental staff there. There is a practice there of getting information about publicly called tenders, a practice which apparently has gone on in that province over a great number of years, no matter who is minister.

Mr. Bigg: I am wondering whether these people are not doing some of the work we ourselves are supposed to be doing. Take the postal department; I have not had a letter from the postal department in my constituency for a year. When I was on the other side, I used to have many letters about vacancies coming forward, and so on—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Bigg: It is no laughing matter. I am talking about legitimate business. When postal services are required in my area I think it is my duty to my constituents to see that those situations are adequately filled. It is not a question of patronage. I think the reaction from the government side of the house is very unpleasant. I want to know why I am no longer asked to help supply adequate postal services throughout my district. As I say, I have not had a letter for a year. Where are they going?

Mr. McIlraith: Perhaps I can help the hon. member by reminding him that I, like himself, was a private member supporting a government for some years, and I was a private member of the opposition for some years. And I am not surprised at what he says.

Mr. Bigg: I am.

Mr. McIlraith: That may be. What the hon. member says is undoubtedly true, but I do not know that it is germane to the point at issue here.

Mr. Bigg: I think so. If you are spending $2,000 in any place in Canada on work which could be done by members here, I think it is not money well spent. This is a legitimate job—

Mr. McIlraith: No, it is not part of a member's job to perform the duties required of ministers of the crown. It is the duty of the hon. member to discharge his obligations as a member of the House of Commons and of the parliament of Canada. What we are discussing here is whether or not these employees are performing the duties of a minister of the crown.

Mr. Baldwin: I did not get a list of all the various ministers who have representatives, ambassadors or assistants in their constituencies or other places.

An hon. Member: None in Alberta.

Mr. Baldwin: I was thinking in terms of one of the ministers, the Postmaster General who, before being offered that important portfolio, was minister of forestry. I would be interested to know what is the position in cases of this kind, where the duties of a minister are changed. What happens with regard to the assistants in these cases. For example, what happened to the assistants credited to the minister of forestry in Vancouver? Were any new orders in council passed to deal with the situation when the minister became Postmaster General? Did they become attached to him in his new capacity? I think this is a point of some interest.

Mr. McIlraith: I would want to check that before giving an answer because I do not know exactly what the procedure is. In any event, the two employees in question are on the minister's staff now, attached to the Postmaster General; they were on his staff formerly, when he was minister of forestry. However, I would want to check the technical aspect of the question.

Mr. Churchill: I did not wish to participate in the discussion this afternoon, but the President of the Privy Council I think suffered a lapse from his usual standard of veracity when, in answer to an interruption of mine, he cast doubt on my truthfulness. He was talking about ministerial assistants in the province of Manitoba, in the office there, and I said "But no ministerial assistants in the office". He said "When you check Hansard you may wish to revise that statement". I do not wish to do so at all. Never, when I was a minister of the crown, did I have a ministerial assistant appointed outside the city of Ottawa, and I hope the President of the Privy Council will, in fairness, correct the inference to the contrary which he left on the record.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, I am happy to correct it. The hon. member—and I think Hansard will support me in this—says "in that province". He said "no one in that province", and I looked directly at the minister concerned. There was an employee of the minister's staff, as he knows, in that province. The hon. gentleman is quite correct as far as I know. He did not have any employee of his minister's staff in the province.

Mr. Churchill: I wrote down what I said, and the words I used were "in that office". I hope that my correction when I interrupted the Minister of Veterans Affairs is correctly shown, too. He said that all his predecessors had personal assistants in the office in Winnipeg as he has at the present time in St. Boniface. I attempted to correct him because I did not have a ministerial assistant serving in the office which was available in the city of Winnipeg; I had nobody on my staff serving outside Ottawa.

May I say, with regard to the Minister of Veterans Affairs, that the department has in the city of Winnipeg a very large office to which I always referred the problems of veterans which arose in Winnipeg and in Manitoba when I happened to be in the city of Winnipeg. Veterans would call me at the hotel and I would make sure that they were immediately looked after by the officials of the Department of Veterans Affairs. That is precisely what should be going on at the present time.

Mr. Dinsdale: Perhaps I could throw a little light on this matter. It seems to me that the President of the Privy Council was looking in my direction when he referred to Manitoba. When I became a member of the treasury benches I was informed there was an office available in my constituency to which I was entitled to appoint a representative. This I did. However, it was not long until the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, who all the time that I was minister of northern affairs and national resources performed the function of being the controller of the conscience of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris, raised objections in the form of complaints, with the result that I decided it would be desirable, in the best interests of good administration to withdraw the representative from my local constituency office. I think the appointment was made in November, and it was withdrawn in February. From that point on the office was available. It was served by representatives of my staff here in Ottawa.

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. member what year that was?

Mr. Dinsdale: That was 1960-61.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, were the members of the hon. member's staff actually attending the office in Brandon?

Mr. Dinsdale: No, not on a continuous basis. The office was there. I was informed by the Department of Public Works that the office was available in the post office building. I used it myself when I was in the constituency, and it was used from time to time by the secretarial staff in my office here in Ottawa.

Mr. Winch: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question of the President of the Privy Council. If I heard correctly, the information given by the hon. member for Danforth was to the effect that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources has two appointees of a personal nature in Vancouver. Could I ask the President of the Privy Council to explain why there are appointees of northern affairs in that riding. I ask this question because I know the riding; Vancouver has been my home for 43 years. I would like to know if there are appointees of northern affairs in the riding of the minister; and if so, what is their job?

[Mr. Churchill.]

Mr. McIlraith: Mr. Chairman, I dealt with both those questions earlier. I am not sure whether or not they are in the constituency. The building is the federal building at 326 Howe street, Vancouver. I believe it is not in the minister's constituency, but in any event it is in the city of Vancouver.

Mr. Winch: Are they two private appointees of the minister who are doing constituency work there? I should like to ask this question at the same time. I understand, also, that the Postmaster General has two such members on his staff, and I presume they are in the same constituency. What are the responsibilities of these four appointees?

Mr. McIlraith: I dealt with that matter a few minutes ago, Mr. Chairman. They are not employed on constituency affairs; that was the very point I made about them. They were ones I happened to have an opportunity to check, and they are not working on constituency affairs.

Mr. Winch: What are their responsibilities?

Mr. Scott: The minister has told us what they do not do. What do they do?

Mr. Winch: What are their responsibilities outside the offices of the Postmaster General and the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources? These public buildings are in Vancouver Centre; there you have the complete staffs of northern affairs and national resources, and public works. What are the responsibilities of these four appointees over and above those of the normal staff?

Mr. McIlraith: They are on the ministers' staffs, as opposed to or distinct from departmental duties. That is a distinction I also tried to draw earlier in my remarks this afternoon. As a matter of fact, I differed a little with the leader of that party on that particular point, when he suggested that the duties in a minister's office should be performed by civil servants. I am sure he did not mean it to sound as it did, the way he put it.

Could I ask the hon. member, Mr. Chairman, whether he was in the chamber a few minutes ago when I gave this explanation?

Mr. Winch: Yes, I was. I think, Mr. Chairman, we have now come right down to it, in view of the statement of the President of the Privy Council, who has said that those four persons are not in these ministers' offices for departmental duties. Therefore, what are they? Are they party hacks?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Winch: The minister, in his statement of about 30 seconds ago, said they are not there for ministerial or departmental duties.

Mr. McIlraith: I did not say they were not carrying out ministerial duties, Mr. Chairman. Surely the hon. member does not wish to put words in my mouth. I drew the distinction between ministerial duties and departmental duties. They are regular civil servants. This is a distinction I have always drawn in this house and, as a matter of fact, have fought a good deal about over the years. They are doing work that comes within the category of ministerial office duties, as distinct from those of the civil service. I also said they were not doing local party organization work or work of a party nature.

Mr. Winch: This is becoming somewhat ridiculous, sir. Is the President of the Privy Council saying there is a difference between ministerial and departmental duties? Is there such a difference, when the minister has a complete staff?

Mr. McIlraith: Yes, Mr. Chairman; I am very firm in saying that.

Mr. Winkler: Mr. Chairman, I have one very brief question for the minister. Is there such an assistant in the constituency of the Minister of Transport, or is there just one for that whole province?

Mr. McIlraith: There is none in that province, or for the Minister of Transport.

Mr. Peters: Mr. Chairman, I have listened very diligently to the remarks made this afternoon, and I think they are very important. I was interested in the last statement in particular, when the President of the Privy Council suggested that there is a difference between ministerial and departmental duties. This is not what the hon. member for Niagara Falls said when she explained the situation. She said—and I think this is exactly right and I do not think there is any doubt in the minds of hon. members about it—that she has a person in her riding doing the work of a member. It may well be, she said, that she receives a letter relating to welfare, which is a provincial matter, and is doing something that is really not within a member's responsibility; but I am sure it falls within the duties of every member of the house to handle matters that are allied to our job. I think we all do this—and these are the duties of a member of parliament.

Miss LaMarsh: What about your secretaries?

Mr. Peters: We certainly do not have secretaries who are able to do this type of work in our ridings. We do this as members of parliament. I certainly do not ask my secretary to do the job I am supposed to do as a member of parliament. But really this is what the Minister of National Health and Welfare was saying; that in her area she has someone to do the work that she had not time to do because her duties as minister take her into another field. Yet the President of the Privy Council is suggesting this is not the field; that the field is a limited one. It may be I am not familiar with the difference between the duties of a minister as minister of the crown and the duties of a minister as head of a department of government. There may be some fine distinction there. But the argument does not hinge on that; it hinges on whether the Minister of National Health and Welfare is doing the job to which the President of the Privy Council has referred, namely in the field of ministerial responsibility. Has the President of the Privy Council looked into the matter as to whether or not the Minister of National Health and Welfare, or for that matter the ministers of veterans affairs, northern affairs, fisheries and many others, have ministerial offices legally in their own areas to handle matters which as members of parliament they must handle? This is a highly technical question, because the act specifies that these people can only be appointed to a minister's office. Frankly, I think the Minister of National Health and Welfare did this, because she said earlier today that she had a brass nameplate on the door indicating to all and sundry that it was the office of the minister.

Miss LaMarsh: Not brass.

Mr. Peters: Well, the material does not matter, but the implication is that this office is an extension of her Ottawa office and should therefore be handling matters which I doubt whether the person she has in her office is capable of handling. I do not say that in disrespect to the person concerned, but the problems which come to a minister's office I would presume often need the advice and co-operation of the deputy minister concerned, or the advice of various heads of the department, because people coming to that office would not be asking about welfare or compensation matters but about matters which can only be settled by the staff in Ottawa.

I submit we are talking of two different things. I think the minister of health told us forthrightly and honestly exactly what her office was. If this was out in the open in my area you would not need to pay persons who are defeated candidates—because this is a patronage machine. I think there may be a role yet in politics for this. It has not been eliminated so far. If it has, it comes in conflict with the decision of the President of the Privy Council. My experience with the office of the privy council is that the minister goes into great detail and examines the matter very carefully, and I would be happy to have him take the whole matter under advisement.

There are two legal problems. One is whether or not the minister has the right to move her office around the country, which is something like the situation with the president of the United States. Is the president of the United States a guy who goes out and lays a cornerstone, or is he the guy who acts in an executive function? Books have been written on the division of these two responsibilities. In this case we will have to look at the office of the minister and at the work of the office of the minister to see whether the duty is performed in that sense.

I did not get much of a story from the Minister of Veterans Affairs and I do not know what is the function of the person in his office. It appears that he would rather have his office in St. Boniface than in Winnipeg, which raises a different question entirely. The minister of health and welfare made it clear enough that the President of the Privy Council will have to decide whether or not this office can be moved around.

Second, what is the function of the persons concerned? The act says that the minister may appoint his executive assistant and private secretary. This is done in a non-civil service way, and they act as the persons directly responsible in a political way. These people are always political people; they must be politically oriented or they would make a real botch of the problems which come to all of us here. Then the act goes on:

—and other persons to be employed in the office of a minister shall be appointed by the governor in council.

I think it is these others we are concerned with.

The only reason we are concerned in this matter is that it completely changes the aspect of government. If I am a poor member and very stupid I may have to hire someone to do my business in my constituency. As one hon. member has said, give me $5,000 to stay at home and I will represent my riding better there than in Ottawa; and maybe that is true. But the question is whether or not we want to change the system which has existed for a long time and now put into ridings people who are paid a salary by the treasury board to look after our business. I think the President of the Privy Council will simply have to face up to the problem of whether I in Timiskaming, should have an executive assistant to handle the political business of Timiskaming, because I too have to be in Ottawa eight to ten months of the year. If such a person is supplied for a minister I suggest he should also be supplied for members. I think whether we should move the office of the minister from place to place is the crux of the problem, and that the President of the Privy Council should give us the legal opinion he receives on this. I suggest that he get the legal opinion, not necessarily from justice but from the law officers of the house, who have the right to make a report to parliament rather than just to a minister.

The Chairman: Shall the resolution carry?

Mr. Peters: I would only suggest, Mr. Chairman, that I would be quite happy to let it carry tonight if the minister will give me the assurance he will consider these matters, which will be important to members of parliament for many years to come.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes; I not only give that assurance but, as I have said, I am considering the matter now. In fact, the Prime Minister has instructed treasury board to do this, and that is on the record in Hansard.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, as far as I am concerned—and I speak now on behalf of the house leader—we are perfectly prepared to have the resolution carry now, on the undertaking that we will go ahead with the bill on Monday and with the committee stage of the bill. Frankly, I have some matters I want to comment on, as have other members. We will have the right on clause 1, as we do on any general bill, to have a general discussion in committee. If that undertaking is given and it is agreed we have a general discussion on the first clause, I think we could advance this resolution one stage tonight and carry on on Monday.

Mr. Favreau: We are, of course, ready to give that undertaking.

Mr. Scott: We are happy to have the resolution pass, but over the week end would the President of the Privy Council look up the legal opinion he received and table it in the house?

Mr. McIlraith: No, Mr. Chairman. As I indicated earlier I would not be prepared to table it. This has never been the practice in the House of Commons and there is a long argument on this which I will not enter into. But that has always been the position.

Mr. Peters: Is it not legal to get the legal officers of the House of Commons to give this kind of opinion?

Mr. McIlraith: I think the practice is to get it from the attorney general. As far as I know that is the practice, and I am going back over a number of years. That is the responsibility of the Department of Justice.

Mr. Nowlan: I am sure that the President of the Privy Council is right when he says there has never been the tabling of an opinion in this house; but if parliament requests it I think there is a practice we could follow, which has been followed on several occasions in the past. The Minister of Justice could write to the President of the Privy Council saying that he cannot give the ruling that parliament has requested, but advise him in general terms, which really comes to the same thing. You get away from the tabling of a written opinion which, because I had to go into this one time myself, has never been done under the rules of the house.

Mr. McIlraith: That is a correct statement of the practice and we are quite prepared to follow it.

Mr. Favreau: The reason for this, of course, is that only the Attorney General of Canada or Minister of Justice has the responsibility of advising the crown, and any opinion from an officer of the law department is a draft opinion with which the Minister of Justice, under his responsibility, will or will not agree. The minister is the only one who has final responsibility, for such advice.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

WAYS AND MEANS

The house in committee of ways and means, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

INTERIM SUPPLY

Mr. McIlraith moved:

Resolved, that towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty on account of certain expenses of the public service for the fiscal year ending 31st March, 1965, the sum of $469,308,421.26 be granted out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada.

Motion agreed to.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. McIlraith thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-105, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read the second time? Next sitting of the house?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: With regard to the business of the house I suppose we will be on interim supply on Monday, and if the President of the Privy Council has less support from his colleagues perhaps it may pass. What will we be doing on Tuesday?

Mr. Favreau: I hope we may dispose of interim supply on Monday. After interim supply the business of the house remains as announced. We will proceed with the flag resolution.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, June 29, 1964

The house met at 2 p.m.

THE LATE GORDON CHAPLIN

TRIBUTES TO DECEASED MEMBER FOR WATERLOO SOUTH

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that hon. members were greatly saddened to learn over the week end of the untimely death of the hon. member for Waterloo South, Mr. Gordon Chaplin. In the brief two years that he was in this house his thoughtful, wise and mature approach to his responsibilities as a member and to the subjects that came before us in this house won for him the respect and friendship of members of all parties from all parts of the country.

Those of us who were privileged to remember his father when he too served Canada in the House of Commons were prepared to find in our late colleague the same fine qualities of quiet ability, friendliness and devotion to duty, and we were certainly not disappointed. His premature passing is a very great loss to his country, to his province, and certainly to this house.

On behalf of the government I would like to extend to his widow and his two sons our deepest and most sincere sympathy in their bereavement.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): I think this is the fourth occasion during this parliament on which we have been called to pay respect to the memory of colleagues who have departed this life during this relatively short period. We appreciate the references the Prime Minister has made this afternoon to our colleague. Many of us here and on all sides of the house have lost a friend, in some cases a very close friend, and all have lost a colleague who had won the confidence of hon. members.

Quiet, unassuming, a man of integrity, trusted and respected by all those who had the privilege of sitting with him, he had inherited and developed a position of preeminence in the business world of this country. As the Prime Minister has said, he was the inheritor of a proud political tradition, his father having been a member of a former government in this country and he himself having been a member of the legislature of Ontario for some years before he finally came to this house. His time here was altogether too short, and during the time he was here he was dogged by ill health. But he did take part in debates; he did take part in some committee discussion, and all those who had the privilege of hearing him or sitting with him realize the contribution he could have made had he been given more time.

We on this side have lost a friend and colleague. We appreciate the sentiments which were expressed by the Prime Minister. This parliament and the country are the poorer for his untimely passing, and to his widow and to the family we express our most sincere and deep sympathy.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): The members of this party wish to join in expressing our profound regret at the passing of the late member for Waterloo South, Mr. Gordon Chaplin. Although he was here only a short time we all came to admire him for the sincere and conscientious discharge of his duties as a member of parliament. The members of this group wish to express our deep sympathy to his wife and his two sons, and to convey our regret to his colleagues in the Conservative party and to the people of the constituency of Waterloo South in the great loss they have sustained.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): The members of the Social Credit party would like to join in the expressions of regret on the passing of the late member for Waterloo South.

As has been brought to our attention, this is the fourth time during this parliament we have been called upon to pay tribute to members who have been taken from us, all of them men who were held in the highest esteem. Certainly the late member for Waterloo South was one of those. We often refer to the fact that this is the highest tribunal of the land, but times such as these bring to our attention the fact that eventually all of us will be called upon to stand before the highest tribunal of all. Perhaps we can re-echo the prayer of one of old: "Teach us to number our days so that we may apply our hearts to wisdom".

We join in expressing our sincere sympathy to Mrs. Chaplin and the two sons, and to the Progressive Conservative party which has lost a valued colleague.

[Translation]

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, the members of the Ralliement Créditistes join their voices to those of their colleagues of the other parties to express their sympathy to the family of the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Chaplin) who departed suddenly. It is a loss for the Conservative party, the house and the whole country.

We all knew the hon. member for Waterloo South as an honest, sincere, generous and hard-working man. Some people will perhaps even say that he was daring, but it must be remembered that temerity, in the case of a soldier, is a virtue.

At this time we can say of Mr. Chaplin that we express, with deep regret, to his family and friends, as well as to the Conservative party, our sincere sympathy.

This also reminds us that even though we are in charge of the nation's business there is always just a certain number of days ahead of us and, whatever happens, we will have to meet, some day, the supreme parliament.

Once more we express our sympathy to Mrs. Chaplin, her two sons and the Conservative party. The official opposition lost a colleague, and the house a representative of the Canadian people.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF FRENCH CULTURAL DELEGATION AND AMBASSADOR OF FRANCE

Mr. Speaker: I should like to call the attention of all hon. members to the presence in the Speaker's gallery of a cultural delegation from the French national assembly, along with His Excellency the ambassador of France.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

FOOD AND DRUGS

Third report of special committee on food and drugs—Mr. Harley.

[Mr. Patterson.]

THE MINISTRY

APPOINTMENT OF MINISTER OF NATIONAL REVENUE AND PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO FINANCE MINISTER

Mr. Speaker: The right hon. Leader of the Opposition—the Prime Minister.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: Another retreat.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): There are those who would think that would be an advance. Mr. Speaker, I would like to announce that at 12.30 today the hon. member for Kingston, Mr. E. J. Benson, was sworn in as Minister of National Revenue.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Pearson: I am sure all members wish him well. I would like also to announce that Mr. Benson will be succeeded as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance by the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand, Mr. Lawrence T. Pennell.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house has listened with a great deal of interest and approval to the announcement by the right hon. Prime Minister of the elevation of the former parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance to a position on the treasury benches as Minister of National Revenue. We noticed as we came in that his appointment had been made today, because we saw where he was sitting.

We on this side of the house want to congratulate him on this promotion, and possibly we should also congratulate him on the fact that he has perhaps escaped from the onerous task of being parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance and might find life, if not less arduous at least more interesting in the position in which he now finds himself. I think all departments of government have an impact upon individual Canadians, some more than others. For instance, citizenship and immigration, veterans affairs, health and welfare, all have a direct impact on many individuals; but speaking from some years of experience I think I can say that no department has a greater impact upon millions of Canadian than does the Department of National Revenue, to a greater or a lesser extent, sometimes to a very substantial extent, involving large sums of money. There are severe and heavy responsibilities placed on this minister. However, his professional training and experience as well as the experience he has gained since he came here will assist him in this portfolio.

In addition, he will have the assistance of a large group of able civil servants on both sides of the family, customs and excise on the one side and taxation on the other, whose advice he will receive and will have to consider. All I can say, Mr. Speaker, is that during the years I occupied that portfolio I enjoyed it tremendously, and I am sure the hon. member will have the same experience. We congratulate him on his appointment and wish him well in his new role.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I should like to associate the members of this party with the congratulations which have been extended to the new Minister of National Revenue, and to say that during the time he has been parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance he discharged his duties in a very able manner. We are sure he will bring to his new position the same ability and vigorous discharge of his responsibilities.

As one who took part in the Saskatoon by-election I feel that I may have made some small contribution to the hon. gentleman's elevation to his new post. We certainly wish him well, as we do the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand, who is now to be parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid I overlooked the announcement made by the Prime Minister as to the appointment of the new parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. I am sure we on this side of the house join in our congratulations to him, he having done so well as the chairman of one of the standing committees of this House of Commons.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend the very sincere congratulations of this party to the hon. member for Kingston on having been appointed to the post he now holds. I think all hon. members of the house will agree that he distinguished himself as parliamentary assistant to the Minister of Finance. In fact, more than once I have seen him answer for the sins of commission as well as the sins of omission of both the immediate past and the present ministers of finance in a way which was certainly a credit to him.

We also wish to extend our congratulations to the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand, who has been appointed parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. Many members of the house are members of the committee on privileges and elections as well as the committee on banking and commerce, and they appreciate the good work he did and the very sincere and non-partisan way in which as chairman he conducted these committees. Therefore we are satisfied and assured by his past performance that he is going to do a good job as parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance.

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaulé (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, we are pleased to support the appointment of the hon. member for Kingston (Mr. Benson) to the position of Minister of National Revenue. We know that department carries heavy responsibilities, but knowing the wide experience of the hon. member for Kingston and the way he discharged his duty as secretary to the Minister of Finance, we all know he will have no trouble in his new office.

I also wish to offer my sincere congratulations to the hon. member who was appointed parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Finance. Having taken part in the work of the committee on privileges and elections and knowing his vast experience in that field, I also know that he will also carry out his job with efficiency.

COAL PRODUCTION ASSISTANCE ACT

EXTENSION OF PERIOD FOR MAKING OF AGREEMENTS

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Coal Production Assistance Act to extend until the 31st day of October, 1969, the period during which agreements may be made under section 3 of the said act.

Motion agreed to.

YOUTH ALLOWANCES

PROVISION FOR PAYMENT BETWEEN AGES OF 16 AND 18

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the payment of allowances of $10 per month to parents in respect of dependant youths between the ages of 16 and 18 years who are maintained by such parents and are attending school or university or are precluded from so attending by reason of disability.

Motion agreed to.

*GRANTS TO SHIPPING COMPANIES, QUEBEC CITY

Question No. 1,249—Mr. Ricard:

What amounts did the Department of Transport grant the Polaris Shipping Company and the Compagnie de Navigation du Nord, both of Quebec city, in the years 1960-61-62-63-64?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: The Canadian maritime commission advises as follows: (a) The amount of subsidy paid to Geo. T. Davie & Sons on behalf of Polaris Shipping Company under the ship construction assistance regulations is as follows:—

1960, Nil; 1961, Nil; 1962, $181,468.80; 1963, $96,000.00; 1964, $288,000.00.

There is a balance outstanding of $96,000.00 in 1964.

(b) No subsidy or grants were made by the commission to La Compagnie de Navigation du Nord.

STAMP TO COMMEMORATE CHEDDAR CHEESE PRODUCTION

Question No. 1,267—Mr. Nesbitt:

Is the Post Office Department considering the issue of a stamp to commemorate the 100th anniversary of the commercial production of cheddar cheese in Canada, which industry was started by Mr. Harvey Farrington near the village of Norwich in the county of Oxford in 1864?

Mr. Nicholson: No. From time to time the Post Office Department issues postage stamps publicizing primary industries such as mining, forestry, fishing and agriculture, which are of major significance in the economic life of the nation as a whole. The number of such subjects and of others which contribute to an awareness of our traditions, accomplishments and history, or foster a spirit of international good will and understanding, is such that it is not possible to honour in addition the specific products of our primary industries or of the hundreds of branches of these industries. The program for special commemorative stamps for 1964 was completed some months ago and there are no openings for additional issues. Normally 18 months to two years are required to produce a postage stamp.

CONTRACT FOR ICEBREAKER

Question No. 1,268—Mr. Marcoux:

1. On what date was the contract granted for the construction of a Canadian icebreaker?
2. What firms submitted tenders and what were the amounts of these respective bids?
3. To what firm was the contract awarded and what was the amount of the company's bid?

[Translation]

Answer: 1, 2 and 3. One complete tender was received from Canadian Vickers Limited in Montreal in the adjusted amount of $18,719,075; treasury board has approved the placing of the contract with this firm for this amount.

MOVING OF NATIONAL DEFENCE PERSONNEL, PICTOU, N.S.

Question No. 1,275—Mr. MacEwan:

What moving and trucking firms are listed for the electoral district of Pictou, Nova Scotia, for the moving of personnel of the Department of National Defence?

Answer: The following moving and trucking firms have been invited to participate in the movement of servicemen's household furniture and personal effects in the electoral district of Pictou, N.S.: English Movers, New Glasgow; Vet's Transfer, New Glasgow; Dickson Brothers Transfer Ltd. Stellarton.

CONSERVATION OF AREAS AS ECOLOGICAL UNITS

Question No. 1,281—Mr. Irvine:

What is the policy or policies of the present administration toward the conservation of the unspoiled areas of the country as ecological units?

Mr. Sauvé: The forest research branch is sympathetic toward the preservation and conservation of unspoiled samples of the natural landscape, and natural areas have been set aside at a number of forest experiment stations. Natural areas are defined as tracts of the native landscape, dedicated to the preservation of the endemic flora, fauna and terrain features for their intrinsic scientific, educational, aesthetic and cultural values. Exploitive activities that would destroy the values of natural areas are prohibited, and an attempt is made to exclude all disturbances caused by man and his works.

At the Petawawa forest experiment station, Ont., 17 natural areas taking in an area of about 500 acres have been set aside. At the Acadia forest experiment station, N.B., 12 natural area totalling 270 acres have been set aside. On the Riding Mountain, Manitoba, about 1,000 acres have been reserved in nine natural areas. At the present time, arrangements for larger ecological reserves in southeastern Manitoba and in the Prince Albert national park are being made.

In Ottawa the Department of Forestry is supporting the national capital commission in acquiring the Mer Bleue, an area of swampland and forest that will form an eight to 12 square mile ecological reserve on the eastern side of the city.

The forest research branch has supported the acquisition of natural areas in the belief that they have two research uses: the study of specious and ecosystems as subjects of intrinsic scientific interest, and the study of how the twin goals of preservation and aesthetics in the native landscape can be attained and maintained.

WINTER HOUSE BUILDING APPLICATIONS, ASSINIBOIA CONSTITUENCY, SASK.

Question No. 1,283—Mr. Watson (Assiniboia):

1. How many applications under the winter house building incentive program were received from the electoral district of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan?

2. How many applications were approved for payment in the electoral district of Assiniboia under this plan?

Mr. MacEachen: 1. There were 57 applications for certification under the winter house building incentive program received from the electoral district of Assiniboia, Saskatchewan.

2. Of these applications three were cancelled by the applicants and two other houses were not started. Of the remainder, 46 qualified for the incentive payment.

FEDERAL GRANTS TO EXHIBITIONS

Question No. 1,288—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

Has the government given consideration to reinstating federal (building) grants to exhibitions and, if not, is consideration being given to the matter as requested by the Nova Scotia association of exhibitions?

Mr. Hays: Major capital grants, under the exhibition grants regulations, were suspended in June, 1962 and this suspension is still in effect. Annual grants including those for permanent improvements, judges' fees and junior activities are still available.

Consideration is being given to the reorientation of federal assistance to fairs and exhibitions from one essentially aimed at assistance for capital construction to one of augmenting the prize lists of fairs and exhibitions for certain classifications. In these classes, utility and efficiency will be emphasized.

A pilot project along these lines is being conducted this year. This pilot project will be used as a basis for assessing the direction that federal assistance to fairs and exhibitions should take.

PURCHASES OF BUILDING MATERIALS, FUNDY NATIONAL PARK

Question No. 1,294—Mr. Fairweather:

1. How much money was spent on building materials and supplies at Fundy national park, New Brunswick, in 1963?
2. What is expected to be spent in this category in 1964?
3. Who was the major supplier of (a) plywood (b) cement, and (c) wallboard, at this park in 1963 and 1964?
4. Are Cassidy Building Materials, Sussex, New Brunswick, given an opportunity to quote on building materials and supplies for Fundy national park?

Mr. Laing: 1. $12,647.00.

2. Approximately $7,000.00.

3. (a) Plywood, Moncton Lumber Co. Ltd., Moncton, N.B.; (b) cement, Maritime Cement Co. Ltd., Moncton, N.B.; (c) wallboard, none was purchased in 1963.

The companies listed in (a) and (b) submitted the lowest quotations on these materials.

4. Yes.

FARMS AND FARMERS IN QUEBEC

Question No. 1,301—Mr. Gauthier:

1. What is the total number of farms in the province of Quebec?
2. How many farmers in the province of Quebec have a gross revenue of more than $1200 per year?
3. What is (a) the address of the appeals office for the agricultural credit society in the province of Quebec (b) the number of sub-offices (c) the composition of the Quebec office?

[Translation]

Mr. Lamontagne: 1. and 2. In the 1961 census, a farm was defined as an agricultural holding of one acre or more with sales of agricultural products during the past 12 months of $50 or more. The number of 1961 census farms in the province of Quebec was 95,777 of which 62,497 had a gross revenue of more than $1,200 per year. However, a considerable number of farms are occupied by persons employed principally in occupations other than agriculture.

3. (a) The Farm Credit Corporation appeal board has not yet been established; (b) See (a); (c) See (a).

OTTAWA—LAND EXPROPRIATION BY CAPITAL COMMISSION

Question No. 1,307—Mr. Thompson:

1. Who are the members of the national capital commission's land committee, and what previous affiliations did they have with the national capital commission before being named to this committee?

Questions

2. Is market garden land acquired or leased by the national capital commission in the province of Quebec, dealt with differently than similar market garden land in the province of Ontario?
3. Did the national capital commission permit the erection of a $100,000 motel in the Gloucester township area of the green belt and, if so, was the property expropriated approximately 10 days after opening?
4. Has settlement been finalized on all properties expropriated since 1959 and, if not, on what properties are settlements outstanding?
5. Do the original owners of expropriated land have the same opportunity to lease their former land as do other people?

Answer: 1. Chairman: Lt. General S. F. Clark, also chairman of the national capital commission.

Members: Major General Howard Kennedy, former chairman of the national capital commission; Mr. P. S. Secord, no previous affiliation with national capital commission; Mr. M. M. MacLean, a former member of the national capital commission; Mr. J. N. Morin, a former member of the national capital commission; Mr. A. K. Hay, former chairman and general manager of the national capital commission.

2. No.

3. Prior to the expropriations carried out in June 1961, the commission had no authority to prevent the erection of buildings on lands in the green belt which it had not purchased up to that time. Although there was an agreement with the township of Gloucester to advise the commission when building permits were taken out for erection of buildings in the green belt, the fact that this motel was under construction was not brought to the attention of the commission until the building was substantially completed and the roof was on. The motel in question was started in the fall of 1960.

4. No. Attached as Appendix "A" is a list of owners located in the green belt whose properties have been expropriated and with whom settlement of compensation moneys have not been completed.

5. Yes. Preference is given former owners to lease back, after settlement of the expropriation, the property which they have owned.

The following expropriated properties in the green belt have not been settled as of June 19, 1964: James V. Sheehan, Independent Coal & Lumber Co. Ltd., T. Giles, G. J. Thiessen, Urbain Thiverge, O. R. Scharfe, N. E. Olmstead, F. E. McHugh, Garnett Munro, George Blair, Wilfred Cleroux, William Cleroux, Lois Kemp, Marion A. OTTAWA—EXPROPRIATION OF LAND FOR GREEN BELT

Question No. 1,308—Mr. Thompson:

1. Have the provisions of the National Capital Act in matters of expropriation of private property for green belt purposes ever been challenged in the courts and, if so, when and with what result?
2. What is the real purpose of the green belt?
3. What other uses does the national capital commission plan for expropriated green belt land?

[Mr. Thompson.]

Answer: 1. No.

2. To control the location of growth of the urban population; to provide sites for parks, beaches, golf courses and other public recreational areas; to reserve land for government use in the future; to prevent urban sprawl and ribbon development along the main access highways, thereby providing attractive approaches to the capital; to utilize marginal farm lands for reforestation and conservation of wildlife; to protect land for continuing use as general and specialized farming and market gardening.

3. Such other uses as may be approved by the governor in council from time to time.

OTTAWA—RESALE OF EXPROPRIATED LAND

Question No. 1,314—Mr. Thompson:

1. What was the price paid for land in lots 26 and 27, Ottawa front 2 expropriated by the national capital commission on March 31, 1964 under expropriation order 319750?
2. What profit was made by the national capital commission by subsequent resale of the major portion of this land?
3. What profit has the national capital commission made since its inception by expropriating land from private citizens and subsequently reselling it?
4. Is land expropriated from an individual and subsequently shown to have been expropriated unnecessarily, offered back first to the original owners at the price for which it was originally expropriated and, if not, for what reason?

Answer: 1. $8,750 plus $839.17 for assumption of liability to hydro, totalling $9,589 for 3.9 acres.

2. Some 3.2 acres of the property expropriated by instrument No. 319750 were sold to the Ottawa public school board on May 10, 1960 as part of a block of land comprising 18.2 acres which was sold for $72,800. Thus, the cost in 1954 was about $2,575 per acre and the selling price in 1960, averages $4,000 per acre indicating a profit of about $1,525 per acre or a total of $4,880.

3. Profits made by the national capital commission since February 8, 1959, for properties which have been expropriated and subsequently sold, amount to $310,272 for 48 parcels of land comprising 4,386 acres.

4. The national capital commission requires the authority of the governor in council to carry out expropriations. It does not expropriate unnecessarily, although occasionally after an expropriation, plans change which might require the disposal of property. Should this occur, immediately after expropriation, authority is sought for the government to return the property to the former owner by sale or abandonment, should the former owner wish to regain title to it. After it has held the property for a reasonable length of time adjacent urban developments generally preclude turning back the property to the former owners.

OTTAWA—EASTERN EXTENSION OF PARKWAY

Question No. 1,315—Mr. Thompson:

1. In view of the recent statement by the associate minister of defence that the R.C.A.F. will retain Rockcliffe airport, what plans does the government now have for the eastern extension of the Ottawa river parkway?
2. Had the national capital commission approached the R.C.A.F. authorities about the use of Rockcliffe airport for the proposed parkway before engaging in expropriation of homes to the east of the airport?
3. Has the national capital commission departed from the principles of the Gréber plan, in connection with the protection of the property rights of riverside owners in the development at Riverside Parkways?
4. Has the national capital commission expropriated private homes because "houses of different shapes and sizes and colours are not wanted along the driveway"?

Answer: 1. When the fiscal situation warrants, it is proposed to extend the Ottawa river parkway from Rockcliffe park easterly along the Ottawa river across Rockcliffe airport to the vicinity of Green's creek.

2. Yes, discussion with officials of Department of National Defence.

3. No.

4. No.

OTTAWA—EXPROPRIATION OF HOMES IN ROTHWELL HEIGHTS

Question No. 1,316—Mr. Thompson:

1. Has the national capital commission considered the routing of the eastern driveway along Duck island and, if so, was this consideration made prior to or after the expropriation of homes in Rothwell Heights?
2. Has this alternative been rejected and, if so, on what grounds?
3. Have the affected resident been allowed to make any technical submission on the matter as they requested and, if not, has their right of a fair hearing, as guaranteed under the bill of rights been protected?

Answer: 1. General consideration was given to the routing of the parkway along Duck island prior to the expropriation but detailed consideration to the proposal was not given until after the expropriation of the homes in Rothwell Heights.

2. The use of Duck island was rejected as being a much poorer location for the parkway since it would be traversing a comparatively narrow island, would be aesthetically less attractive and it would be more costly.

3. Yes.

ARDA—PROJECTS COMPLETED AND UNDER STUDY

Question No. 1,319—Mr. Gauthier:

With reference to ARDA, for the period ending 31 March, 1964 (a) how many projects have been completed in each of the provinces and in what amounts (b) how many projects have been forwarded to the federal government, by each of the provinces (c) how many projects are still under study for each of the provinces and, in what amounts (d) how many projects have been proposed to the federal government relating to Roberval constituency and, in what locality is each situated (e) how many projects were completed in Roberval constituency, in what amounts and, in what localities (f) how many projects in Roberval constituency are still under study, in what amounts and, in what localities?

AERIAL SURVEYS OF JAMES BAY DISTRICT

Question No. 1,320—Mr. Laprise:

1. For what purpose is the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys carrying out a series of aerial surveys of the James bay islands and territories?
2. Will these surveys be used in the realization of the Grand canal project?

Mr. Benidickson: 1. The surveys being carried out by the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys in the James bay area are required for completion of reconnaissance maps presently being compiled by the department and to provide more detailed maps of areas in Quebec and Ontario where geological, forestry inventory and water power investigations are under way.

2. These surveys and the resultant maps will be of value to the study of any project that might be proposed for these areas. The surveys had been requested and planned long before there was any suggestion of the so-called grand canal.

KEJIMKUJIK NATIONAL PARK, NOVA SCOTIA

Question No. 1,327—Mr. Crouse:

Will the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources advise on the progress being made on the development of the Kejimkujik national park in Queens county, Nova Scotia?

Mr. Laing: Until the land is transferred by the provincial government, development of the property cannot go beyond the planning stage. The boundary survey has been carried out by the provincial government and the acquisition of private properties by the province is about two thirds complete.

The national parks branch has in hand planning surveys, including ground surveys this summer, for use in preparing an overall development plan in anticipation of an early start on development of these lands after they are turned over to the federal government as a national park (see also my reply of May 25, 1964 to question No. 1,061—Hansard, page 3530).

*TERMINATION OF PRINTING OF BILL OF RIGHTS

Question No. 1,328—Mr. Loney:

Was any direction given since April, 1963, by any member of the government, either directly or indirectly, to the queen's printer to terminate the printing of further copies of the Canadian Bill of Rights in illuminated parchment form and, if so, by whom, and on what date?

Mr. Lamontagne: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

INFORMATION ON LIFE INSURANCE

Question No. 1,329—Mr. Fisher:

1. Was the superintendent of insurance ever asked by Professor J. J. Brown for figures concerning term or any other form of insurance as stated at page 136 of his publication "Life Insurance—Benefit or Fraud" and, if so, was such information provided?

2. Did the superintendent of insurance refuse to provide such information and, if so, on what grounds was such refusal made?

3. What was the percentage of term sold in Canada, by the Brown definition of it, in the last year for which the government has records?

Answer: 1. The department has no record and the superintendent of insurance has no recollection of ever having received such an inquiry from Professor J. J. Brown. If an inquiry was received, the information could not have been provided since it is not available from the department's records.

2. Answered by No. 1.

3. The data supplied by the annual statements of the companies deposited in the department do not show the amount of renewable and convertible term insurance separately from other term insurance; hence the information requested is not available from the department's records.

CONSUMERS ASSOCIATION REQUEST RESPECTING CANNED FISH

Question No. 1,341—Mr. Orlikow:

Is the government giving consideration to the request of the consumers association of Canada that the Department of Fisheries review government grades for canned fish sold in Canada, and to establish regulations to enforce the compulsory use of these grades?

[Mr. Laing.]

Answer: The department is aware of requests by the Canadian consumers association of Canada and will give close consideration to this matter.

RECOVERY OF CANADIAN PROPERTY IN POLAND

Question No. 1,350—Mr. Kennedy:

What action is the government taking to assist Canadian citizens to recover their property in Poland, which was lost to them due to action of the authorities of that country?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Representations have been made to the Polish government through diplomatic channels with a view to negotiations toward a settlement providing just compensation for claims of Canadian citizens in respect of nationalized properties. There is at present no agreement between Canada and Poland on the basis for such negotiations but the question is under active review and every effort is being made to achieve some progress on these claims.

OWEN SOUND, ONT.—HARBOUR LADDERS

Question No. 1,352—Mr. Noble:

1. Has the Minister of Public Works been informed that the ladders on the walls of the Owen Sound harbour are not out of reach of anyone falling into the water, and may have contributed to a drowning there last week?

2. If so, would the minister give prompt attention to having these ladders lengthened as well as installing more ladder accommodation?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. The department was informed of the condition of the ladders in a letter dated June 17, 1954, from the city clerk of Owen Sound.

2. Yes, the department has instructed the district engineer to take whatever remedial measures that are necessary.

*PROSPECTIVE LOSS OF ASSISTANT DEPUTY FINANCE MINISTER

Question No. 1,372—Mr. Fisher:

Has the Minister of Finance any indication that the government service is losing one of the assistant deputy ministers of the Department of Finance to private industry and, if so, has the minister any indication of the reasons for such a separation?

Mr. Benson: Mr. Speaker, the answer is no.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT LEGAL REPRESENTATIVES IN FEDERAL CONSTITUENCIES

Question No. 884—Mr. Pigeon:

For each federal electoral constituency, what is the name and address of each lawyer and notary who has acted on behalf of the Department of Justice since April 22, 1963?

Return tabled.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, question No. 884 was made an order for return. That question was asked by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon). I understand he feels the answer or the documents brought forward in reply cover substantially question No. 909 and, therefore, he is prepared to withdraw that question.

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): That is correct, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PRIVILEGE

MR. LANGLOIS—AWARD OF POSTAL CONTRACT TO DECEASED PERSON

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege in reference to the question I asked the Postmaster General last Friday about a contract that had been awarded to the original tenderer and has been extended, starting tomorrow, for another four years when there has been another bid this year at a lower price.

Last Friday the parliamentary secretary told me the minister would answer the question, and today I received a letter dated June 24 which reads:

[Translation]

This is in reply to your letter of June 12, to which was annexed a copy of a letter from Mr. Marcel Pinette, 524 Letourneau street, Thetford Mines, Quebec, who would like to tender for parcel delivery in Thetford Mines.

As mentioned in your letter, the present contract concerning this service expires on June 30. However, I must tell you that tenders will not be invited for the service, because we have authorized the contract renewal to the present contractor for a four year period commencing on July 1, 1964.

My question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, is to the effect that the minister has written in black and white that he has awarded the contract to the present contractor for a four year period, while this letter was written on June 24.

[Text]

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that the holder of this contract died a week ago last Friday. I do not know how the Postmaster General could award a contract to a person who has been deceased for a week and who, prior to that, was paralysed and in hospital for four months. Last Friday, Mr. Speaker, I said it would be cheaper to have a second tender called, but now I find that original holder of the contract was deceased at the time the minister wrote me this letter and at the time he granted a renewal of this contract for another four years.

In the light of the answer given to me by the minister I would ask him to clarify these points and inform the house as to the motive of the department in refusing to ask for new bids on this contract. At the moment I am under the impression—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Chair must make up its mind as to whether there is a prima facie case of privilege. It is obvious that there is a ground for complaint, but as to whether there is a prima facie case of privilege I very much doubt, especially in the circumstances. However, the hon. member has made his complaint. I am sure it has been noted, and I am sure that steps will be taken to correct any injustice.

Mr. Langlois: I agree, Mr. Speaker; the only thing I should like to get clear is that if the minister does not clarify the point he either lied to me or he is completely incompetent to do the job he is doing now.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON MEETING OF CABINET

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Does the Prime Minister have a statement to make to the house following the extraordinary cabinet meeting this morning to which he had convened all the ministers at nine a.m., including the Minister of Forestry who had to cut short his holiday in Italy?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was nothing extraordinary about the meeting of cabinet this morning, and not all the ministers were recalled. There were some who were absent who I asked to turn up because I thought they could cancel the engagements they had undertaken. The meeting was a normal meeting to discuss the situation with regard to a program for work in July arising out of the discussions in the house last Friday.

As a result of this cabinet meeting this morning, certain proposals were submitted by my hon. friend the house leader to the house leaders of the other parties. These proposals were, I believe, considered at noon today as a possible program of work during the month of July. I understand there is to be another meeting to continue these discussions tomorrow.

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): May I ask a supplementary question. Is it still the intention of the government to proceed with the flag debate before adjournment?

Mr. Pearson: Well, Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should not make a statement until the meetings have been completed. I understand they have been adjourned until tomorrow. I should not like to make any announcement until these meetings are completed, although an announcement will have to be made tonight, at the end of today's sitting, as to the business for tomorrow.

[Later:]

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Prime Minister. Can the Prime Minister tell us on what day or days the resolutions preceding the student loan legislation and the latest version of the Canada pension plan will be placed on the order paper?

Mr. Pearson: No, Mr. Speaker, I cannot tell the house the exact date. But this is also under consideration, as my hon. friend knows, in the timetable of priority legislation, and I can assure him that the legislation which it is agreed should be considered before the recess will be ready for such consideration.

INCOME TAX

QUEBEC—FEDERAL REFUNDS MADE TO PROVINCIAL MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): In order to celebrate the elevation of the Minister of National Revenue I wish to ask him a kindly question. Would the minister inform the house why the income tax branch forwards refunds due residents in Quebec to the provincial ministry of revenue direct, and would he inform the house as to the legal basis for such an unusual procedure?

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member this is a good question for the order paper.

BELLEVILLE, ONT.—QUARTERLY PAYMENTS BY PENSIONERS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Fred F. Stenson (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the new Minister of National Revenue and at the same time offer him my congratulations on his appointment. Would the minister look into the problem that has been created by the tax department at the Belleville office? Many pensioners who for the last ten years have been paying their income tax at the end of each year now find themselves assessed a penalty for not remitting their tax every three months, yet these people have never had any notice that they should pay this tax quarterly. Does the minister not feel these people should have been informed of this before being assessed such a penalty?

Mr. Speaker: Order. I wonder if the hon. member would put this question on the order paper.

LABOUR RELATIONS

NON-OPERATING RAILWAY EMPLOYEES—INQUIRY AS TO CONCILIATION BOARD REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to ask the Minister of Labour whether he has received any communication from the railways as to whether they reject or accept the majority report of the conciliation board in connection with the non-operating employees dispute.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): No, I have received no communication from the presidents of the railways.

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REPORTED SETTLEMENT OF SHIPPING DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Can the Minister of Labour tell the house the basis upon which the dispute regarding the ship in New Westminster, was settled last week end? The minister will recall that members were disturbed by a dispute which had arisen over a ship, the Alaska. Press reports said it had been settled, but no information has been given as to the basis upon which it was settled. I wonder if the minister could tell the house something about it.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): My hon. friend will be aware that a representative of the board of trustees announced on the west coast that the matter had been settled. Basing my information on the announcement of the settlement, I may say that apparently the S.I.U. has agreed to withhold negotiations pending efforts by the trustees to create a seamen's union representing ships' officers in Canada. Officials of the merchant service guild and the Canadian transport and general workers have agreed to withhold attempts to reach an agreement or attempt certification on behalf of the officers of the vessel. The statement does add that the unions have found no common ground for agreement on the issues involved or on the proposed single union for officers.

However, the unions, apparently acting in the public interest, have agreed to suspend, or at least settle the matter at this stage, in an effort to prevent any disruption of shipping. This is all the information I have with regard to the settlement, and presumably it was with the voluntary consent of all parties.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a supplementary question. In view of the fact that the matter has not really been settled and there has been merely a temporary armistice, may I ask the minister if the representative of the maritime trustees will continue to attempt to find some common ground so the matter can be permanently settled.

Mr. MacEachen: It would be my expectation that the trustees would continue their efforts to reach a long term settlement. It may be that the issue will hinge on a single union for officers. The trustees have already expressed their views on this matter. They have refused to recognize the establishment of S.I.U. jurisdiction over the officers on this particular ship.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the minister make inquiries concerning the story that the trustees ordered the unions concerned to stop picketing? If that is true, what right had they to do that? Will he also make inquiries as to whether the trustees approved the sending of engineers from Montreal to Vancouver to fill these positions, when there were unemployed engineers in Vancouver at the time?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I understand that the trustees did issue a warning against picketing in the interests of calming the situation on the west coast. It is obvious that the trustees would have no jurisdiction over the longshoremen in this situation, so that whatever statement was issued in their connection would be purely an admonition. With respect to the second part of the question, I shall be glad to ascertain whether in fact the trustees were aware or did approve of this particular movement of officers from Montreal to the west coast.

HOUSING

INQUIRY AS TO MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR C.M.H.C.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): May I ask the Minister of National Revenue, Mr. Speaker, if he will tell the house whether on the assumption of his new functions he is going to be responsible for C.M.H.C. in this house.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): No, Mr. Speaker.

[Later:]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of the reply of the Minister for National Revenue that he will not be responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. In view of the enormous amount of work which will be required to implement the far reaching changes we adopted recently with respect to the National Housing Act, would the Prime Minister consider the need to appoint a full time minister of housing in charge of a ministry of housing?

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): This would, of course, require legislation, and I cannot contemplate legislation of that kind, however important or desirable it might be, receiving the approval of the house in the immediate future. But I would be glad to give consideration to this request, because I appreciate the importance of the work.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Is the Postmaster General not responsible for the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation? Was it not transferred to him some time ago?

Mr. Pearson: That is right. The Postmaster General is now responsible.

Inquiries of the Ministry

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED INVESTIGATION RESPECTING HANDLING OF FUNDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Justice. Is an investigation respecting funds going on within the R.C.M.P. and, if so, will the minister undertake to give the House of Commons a report on this matter so the good name and high reputation of this distinguished force will not be besmirched by a lot of speculation that may be unfounded?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, as there are always a number of disciplinary matters being investigated within the R.C.M.P. under the act and the regulations, I believe it would not be in the public interest if, for the moment, I were to divulge any of the matters presently being considered. However, I may tell the hon. gentleman and the house that to the extent that a report on the outcome of any such matter as has been alluded to may be given to me, I shall be pleased to report to the house.

Mr. Olson: As a supplementary question I would like to draw to the minister's attention that reports have already appeared in the press to this effect. Therefore I would ask him does he not think in fairness to the R.C.M.P. that some kind of statement should be made to exonerate the R.C.M.P. from this kind of speculation?

Mr. Favreau: As is well known, Mr. Speaker, the R.C.M.P. deals with all disciplinary matters in a way which is independent from the minister, although eventually reports have to be made to the minister on them. There is a minimum of intervention on the part of the minister at a certain stage, and I repeat that it would not be in the public interest if I were to comment on this situation now. For that reason any report which may have been given in the press ought to be considered as at least speculative.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON REPORTED NEW POLICY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to direct to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. When will the minister take the members of this house into his confidence with respect to the government's proposed new policy on Indian affairs, as outlined by Mr. Walter Rudnicki, director of the welfare division of the department, in today's Globe and Mail?

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I have examined the statements made by Mr. Rudnicki which only deal with minor changes in the policy of the department concerning Indian affairs.

I hope very soon that I will be in a position to announce a comprehensive program on the community affairs of Indians.

[Text]

Mr. Southam: As a supplementary question, would the minister advise the house at that time whether he will be prepared to make a statement on the establishment of an Indian affairs claims commission?

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: Mr. Speaker, the department is considering at present the requests and recommendations made by various Indian groups in this country and I hope to submit very soon changes in the legislation concerning Indian claims.

[Text]

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister whether these statements, which he says were in relation to minor matters only, were policy changes.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay: No, Mr. Speaker, these are administrative changes only. As soon as a new general policy is established, I shall make an announcement to the house.

[Text]

FINANCE

TARIFF CONCESSIONS TO FOREIGN AUTOMOBILE MANUFACTURERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry.

Could the minister tell us if any progress was made in the negotiations concerning tariff concessions to the Peugeot and Renault enterprises designed to facilitate their establishing themselves in the province of Quebec?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I dealt with that matter the other day and I would ask the hon. member not to question me on it.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I merely wanted to know whether any progress had been achieved in the negotiations.

Mr. Drury: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Could the minister tell us if the Peugeot and Renault company has already taken an option on some land in the Thetford Mines region where survey operations are now being carried out?

Mr. Drury: No, Mr. Speaker, I could not say.

[Text]

IMMIGRATION

REPORTED ADVICE TO BRITISH DOCTORS NOT TO SETTLE IN MARITIMES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gerald A. Regan (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Is the Department of External Affairs carrying out any investigation into the claim of the Dartmouth chamber of commerce that officials of Canada house indicated to three British doctors that they should go to other parts of Canada to settle, rather than the maritime provinces, because of the depressed economy in that area?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have heard of this matter. I shall be glad to inquire into it.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STUDY OF EFFECT ON CANADA OF SEPARATION OF QUEBEC

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister arising out of an answer he gave me on Friday regarding an inquiry into the economic effects of separation. In view of the statements by the Leader of the Opposition over the week end, I wonder whether the Prime Minister would consider making a statement of clarification on motions so that other members might comment upon it, and perhaps in this way set at rest the quite unwarranted fears being raised by the irresponsible statements of the Leader of the Opposition.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I shall be very glad to make a statement on motions tomorrow on this matter.

TRANSPORT

REPORT ON PROPOSED CROSSING OF NORTHUMBERLAND STRAIT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works and ask him whether he plans to table a report, recently made available to the government, regarding studies on a proposed crossing of Northumberland strait by means of a bridge or tunnel?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I do not think it would be in order at this time to table the report. Phase 1 report is now under examination by consultants, but as soon as it is possible to make any announcement with respect to this project this will be done immediately.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POINT EDWARD NAVAL BASE—REQUEST FOR FURTHER REFITS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence. Would the minister be so kind as to give serious consideration to the possibility of having further naval refits allocated to Point Edward naval base to retard the weekly layoff of personnel now going on and assist in preventing the unemployment rolls from increasing?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I think I can inform the hon. member that although it would not be possible to have another frigate refitted at the Point Edward naval base, consideration is being given to having auxiliary vessels refitted there.

COMPLAINTS RESPECTING PROCEDURES FOLLOWED IN STAFF REDUCTION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. K. H. More (Regina City): May I address a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence, who I understand is the minister responsible. In the light of complaints about the procedures being followed or not being followed with regard to the reduction of defence staff, is the minister reviewing this situation, and will he be making an announcement in the house shortly so that the fears of many people in the defence forces who have mortgages and other payments to meet may be allayed? I am receiving information personally that a great many of these people are disturbed. Seniority is not being completely followed, and they feel there is discrimination. I know the minister has received complaints. I wonder if he would review these procedures and make a statement to the house in clarification of this situation.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): No complaints have been made to me personally. However, I would be happy to look into any complaints which the hon. member may have received.

ARMAMENT OF EUROPEAN AIR DIVISION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence when he is going to fulfil his obligation to make the Canadian air division in Europe an effective fighting force. I ask this in view of news reports that it has no armament, nuclear or conventional, at the present time.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): I must advise the hon. gentleman that he should not give so much credence to news reports. No. 3 wing and No. 4 wing in Europe have been operational for some time.

Mr. Churchill: Does that mean they are equipped with nuclear arms and that some of the planes are standing on quick action alert?

Mr. Hellyer: That is correct.

[Later:]

Mr. Churchill: I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence a further question concerning the air division in Europe. How many of the squadrons of the air division in Europe are armed with conventional weapons? If there are none, is it his intention that some of them shall be so armed?

Mr. Hellyer: The policy has been clearly stated a number of times. The primary role of squadrons in Nos. 3 and 4 wings will be a strike role and they will have a secondary non-nuclear attack role. The primary role of the squadrons stationed at No. 1 wing at Marville will be reconnaissance. They will have a secondary, non-nuclear support role.

[Mr. More.]

Mr. Churchill: Would the minister mind answering my question? Are any of the squadrons now equipped with conventional weapons?

Mr. Hellyer: All squadrons in No. 1 wing are being equipped with reconnaissance equipment. I do not know whether this qualifies in the hon. gentleman's terminology. If he means other non-nuclear weapons, the answer at this moment is no.

Mr. Churchill: Does a photographic camera come under the heading of conventional weapons?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not really know, after the hon. gentleman's opinion with respect to what small arms were; I am not sure how he uses this terminology.

AGRICULTURE

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INCREASED MILK SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clement Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Agriculture. I am sure he followed with great interest the march on the Quebec legislature of 12,000 or 15,000 farmers and that he noted that approximately 10,000 producers of fluid milk obtained an increase of 20c. per cwt. on the milk they sold $5 per cwt. This is my question. Does the minister intend to recommend an increase of 20c. per cwt. for the 60,000 Quebec dairy farmers who at present obtain from $2.80 to $3 per cwt. for their milk, before those farmers decide to march on parliament in Ottawa.

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): In answer to the hon. member's question, tomorrow I will prepare a report on the basis of figures from the Canadian bureau of statistics giving the exact price for milk. I believe he needs more information. The price is much better than he insinuates.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the minister to forward this information to the farmers who are now getting ready to come to Ottawa?

[Text]

CONSIDERATION OF PROPOSED CROP REINSURANCE LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. Would the minister tell the house whether it is his intention to proceed with the crop reinsurance legislation before the start of the summer recess?

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I suppose a lot would depend on how we progress with the present legislation.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Would the Minister of Agriculture consider extending these crop insurance provisions to cover eastern farmers, too?

Mr. Hays: The crop reinsurance bill will apply to all the provinces and all the farmers in Canada when it is passed.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, following the questions already asked, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister. In view of the urgent problem to be settled, is it the intention of the government to put on the order paper, before the summer recess, a measure concerning feed grain, so as to assist the eastern farmers?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): The program of work before any summer recess can be considered is now, as I have just said, under consideration by house leaders.

Mr. Muir (Lisgar): A supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. Would he inform the house whether the crop reinsurance legislation is on the priority list to be dealt with before the summer recess starts?

Mr. Hays: I do not think this will be dealt with before the recess.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

INQUIRY AS TO RESIGNATIONS FROM PUBLIC AFFAIRS STAFF

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Would the Secretary of State now answer a question, which I am sure he had time to inquire into over the week end; that is the question I asked him on Friday concerning whether resignations had been tendered by some C.B.C. staff over the Pearson film fiasco?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I am informed by the C.B.C. that the answer is still no.

TELEVISION

FILM ON PRIME MINISTER—OFFER BY INDEPENDENT NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I would like to reply at the same time to the question the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) asked me last week. I received the following information from the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation. The C.B.C. has already informed the house that its board of directors had decided not to show the said film. The board of directors feel that to sell the film would simply run counter to the decision already taken.

[Text]

WORLD FAIR

ARRANGEMENTS RESPECTING APPLICATION OF TAXES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question of which I gave him notice.

Following his interview in Ottawa with the representatives of the city of Montreal and the Quebec government, can the minister tell the house whether an agreement has been reached regarding the taxes which will be levied on the exhibitors at the world fair by the three governments?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): As a result of the meeting referred to by the hon. member, the federal government has announced to the public the way in which taxes will be applied to foreign governments, provincial governments and commercial exhibitors. My understanding is that the provincial government in so far as sales tax and income tax are concerned are applying similar rules, and the city of Montreal will probably do likewise. So I can say to the hon. gentleman that we have reached agreement as to the appropriate taxes to be paid, and we are trying to work them out in parallel.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, in his capacity as minister responsible for the world fair. Does he intend to grant the request made by public bodies and exempt exhibitors from the 11 per cent sales tax on building materials?

[Text]

Mr. Sharp: As far as foreign and provincial governments are concerned, the 11 per cent sales tax does not apply. It would only apply to commercial exhibitors, and there is no intention at the present time of exempting them.

SHIPPING

PARTICIPATION IN MICHIGAN CONFERENCE ON WATER LEVELS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. Knowing that meetings are now taking place and will take place in the next few days concerning the water level in the great lakes and in Montreal harbour, can the Prime Minister tell us whether the government of the state of Michigan has invited the Canadian government to attend the said meetings?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will look into it. I know of no invitation to any such meeting.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

ALASKA HIGHWAY—INQUIRY AS TO NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister inform the house whether the negotiations between Canada and the United States with respect to cost sharing of the Alaska highway improvement are yet concluded; and if not, is an early conclusion contemplated by the minister?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, there is no question of conclusion at the moment, because the discussions with the United States are just starting. In addition, the Department of Public Works is making a survey of the highway as it exists today, to get some estimate of the requirements which might be necessary in relocation and with regard to costs of improving and even paving those sections that can be paved or are ready for paving at this time.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

ERECTION OF SCAFFOLDING OUTSIDE PEACE TOWER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Public Works. Because it affects something that is happening right now, I hope Your Honour will allow me to ask the direct question at this time. All members coming into this house see the concrete work that is going on outside the peace tower, and I would like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether this contract was let on a time, material and profit basis. I think it is an important question, because every morning when I arrive at 8.30 I find they are rebuilding this tubular scaffolding, and they take it down at night. Why in the name of heavens, on a job like this, would you tear down the scaffolding every night and rebuild it the next morning?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I think I should take this question as notice and report to the house tomorrow.

APPROPRIATION BILL

PROVISION FOR INTERIM SUPPLY

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (for the Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-105, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending March 31, 1965.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Short title.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Chairman, pursuant to the understanding which we had late last Friday afternoon when we passed the resolution preceding this bill, when it was understood by the house that we would be able, on the first clause, to discuss matters of general importance in the same manner as we could had we the resolution before us, I shall speak for a very few moments—and I emphasize "a very few moments"—not because the matter to which I am going to draw the attention of the committee is unimportant but because I know there are other members of the committee who wish to speak on this matter. I do not want to take up too much time, so other members may be able to deal with this matter fairly quickly.

I am glad the Minister of Industry is in the chamber because I wish to refer particularly to the matter of industrial development, to which reference has been made from time to time, with particular reference to the province of Nova Scotia. This matter has been discussed at various times, and it was discussed particularly during the last election campaign. I am not going to take up the time of the committee by putting on the record lengthy statements which were made by hon. members opposite in connection with this matter, but I am going to give one or two short quotes. I hope that as a result we will have not only a discussion by hon. members on this side of the chamber but also by some on the other side including the Minister of Industry.

During the last election the then leader of the opposition, now the right hon. Prime Minister, said that a federal agency for the development of economically backward areas would be created by this government. He also said that these areas would prosper with the rest of Canada if Liberal policies were carried into effect. He went on to say that a few parts of Canada would benefit especially, such as the maritime provinces, if this legislation were enacted.

The present government took over the treasury benches and various steps were taken. The Minister of Finance brought in certain incentive legislation to provide an impetus to the establishment of industry in the maritime provinces and other areas of Canada. I am not sure of the value of those incentives. This has yet to be proven, because the incentives will depend upon the co-operation of the federal government, provincial governments and particularly private industry. It may be they will have some effect and purpose; it may be they will not.

We are now facing a situation in this committee where the minister who is responsible for the inauguration of these policies, the minister who is responsible for the development of these areas, made a statement in the house, or outside it, a short time ago with reference to certain contracts which were applicable to the maritime provinces and to Nova Scotia, saying that these would be terminated and the subject matter of the contracts would be transferred to other parts of Canada, and in one particular case to the province of Quebec. We have heard these ancient arguments—

Mr. Drury: Mr. Chairman, did I understand the hon. member to say that I had made a statement in the house to the effect that this was going to be done?

Mr. Nowlan: I am not sure whether the minister made the statement in the house, but he made a statement to the effect that certain contracts would not be renewed and that the basic work which had hitherto been carried out in this area would be transferred. In the case of one firm in Nova Scotia, Fairey Aviation, this work would hereafter be transferred to another part of Canada.

We in Nova Scotia have been rather surfeited with the ancient arguments as to why industry could not be established in the maritimes, and Nova Scotia in particular, to the effect that it was too far removed from the centre of Canada and that transportation costs are too high; therefore, unfortunately, it would be impossible to establish or maintain industries in the province because of the geographical factor.

This particular contract to which I have made reference has to do with equipment and material manufactured for anti-submarine work. It has to do with contracts which have heretofore been carried out by plants on the Atlantic seaboard, particularly the plant of Fairey Aviation Company on the Atlantic seaboard, which supply and furnish material for anti-submarine work on the Atlantic coast and in the Atlantic ocean. There is always the necessity for anti-submarine precautions on both coasts, but I think the members of this committee and the public generally would agree that there is a greater need for the development of anti-submarine projects on the Atlantic coast.

So there we have a plant which is efficient, which employs a large number of people, and which is producing material and equipment required at its very door. There can be no question of transportation costs there. There can be no question of being removed from the market. It seems to me very ironical, in fact it is the height of irony, that the minister responsible for the development of these great programs for these areas which they promised is the one who has stated that some of these contracts would be terminated.

It is true that since then he has said in the house that this decision would be reconsidered, and that gives us some ground for optimism and for hope. For we know from our experience of this government that when a certain matter is reconsidered the policy is usually reversed and something else is developed, so we have some reason to think that having said they will reconsider the matter we will have these contracts re-established on the Atlantic coast.

This is only one example of several which could be given, but I will not take the time of the committee by going into other areas. However, I should say by way of explanation that I am not suggesting for a moment that the province of Nova Scotia is necessarily one of the backward areas to which general references were made during the election campaign. When you read the record of what occurred last week in Nova Scotia and realize that the premier of the province took part in the inauguration of a huge refinery costing millions of dollars and in the opening of another fishery plant costing, I think, $10 million, you could hardly state that Nova Scotia was a backward area. But we do say that when this government was in opposition they promised the policy, a policy which appealed to the people, that they would inaugurate projects to assist that area. This particular industry—and this type of manufacturing has particular appeal—is centred in an area where all the advantages are in its favour, and we do not propose to have the old argument that it is away from the market and so on re-established or repeated.

In addition, we do not propose to have re-established in other parts of Canada industries which have been established in our part of the country; industries which are successful, efficient and economic, and which should have the support of the government. The government of which I had the honour to be a member saw that the company to which I have referred received contracts in that area for development of anti-submarine work because it was a company particularly fitted to do this type of work, one which, as I said, had the market at its very door.

We have succeeded in establishing various industries in this region. A question was asked this afternoon—indeed several questions have been directed to the minister in this connection—regarding the establishment of an automobile plant somewhere in Canada. We blazed the trail and established an automobile plant in Nova Scotia; a great international company set up a plant there. We hope the present government will be successful in establishing plants wherever they may deem advisable in other areas; but in this particular instance we are dealing, as I said, with an area which is particularly qualified to serve a particular industry, and we do not intend to stand idly by and see contracts which have been in Nova Scotia for some time and for which the firm concerned is especially fitted and suited transferred to other parts of the country, or to see the industrial life of Nova Scotia diminish at the expense of other parts of Canada.

That is why I am speaking briefly to this matter, and I speak briefly because I realize other hon. members have other matters with which they wish to deal. The minister may, if he likes, reply now, or he may wish to hear other references which will be made. With that I will leave this particular matter at this time because, as I said, there are other hon. members who may have something to say in connection with it.

Mr. Coates: Mr. Chairman, I have listened with close attention to the remarks of the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, and I can assure you that what he has said regarding Nova Scotia in particular and the maritime provinces in general has my full support and, I am sure, the support of all members of the House of Commons who come from that part of Canada.

My constituency of Cumberland finds itself in a position not dissimilar to the constituency of Halifax with regard to cut-backs in defence work. I would also say that the situation in my constituency is not dissimilar to that of many areas in the maritimes. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings made mention of the statements of visiting politicians during the 1963 election campaign, and to the pie in the sky atmosphere they endeavoured to create in our area of Canada regarding the great and wonderful things which would be done if only a Liberal government were elected to office. Well, Mr. Chairman, I think the people of the maritime provinces have now had a taste of a Liberal government after watching one in action for a year, and after having seen a Conservative government in action for six years prior thereto. I am sure if given the opportunity they would far rather have the pie in the sky which was offered and contributed to by the Conservative government than the type of pie which has been provided by the present government during its short stint in office to date.

Not only that, Mr. Chairman, but if we go back beyond 1957—I do not want to take a great deal of time in going back to the 22 years of Liberal government this country was forced to put up with—I am sure many will recall statements made by Liberal speakers of the day who told us that while they could not attract industry to our area, they would assist us by establishing national defence projects which would give stability to our economy. Even though we would not be allowed to have the type of living which might be available to other areas of Canada, we would be provided either with a lower standard of living which we would get used to or we would be provided with a one way ticket out.

Now, unfortunately, we find ourselves in the position where another Liberal government is cutting back on the very thing which they once told us would form the base of our economy, namely defence establishments. Over the years a great many defence establishments have been located in the maritime provinces, and certainly they have provided a great deal of employment for the people. In many instances defence establishments were located in areas where other types of employment were not available and in many cases still are not available to the people. All of a sudden the government finds it is not able to balance the budget as it told the people of Canada it was going to do. It is not able to do a great many of the things that it told the people of Canada it was going to do. As a matter of fact, it is so hard pressed for money that it has started to cut back on the commitments made by the former Conservative administration with regard to national defence. In making these cut-backs it has not shown the consideration it should have for the maritime provinces as a particular area of Canada where chronic unemployment is a factor that must be given special consideration. It has proceeded to cut back and slash defence contracts, and thus throw people out of work in areas where they cannot just walk down the street to another plant and secure the employment they desire.

At the same time the province of Nova Scotia, as the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has stated, has been pushing forward and doing a tremendous job locating new industries. But it would be difficult indeed for the province to keep pace with the cutbacks and lay-offs that have taken place in Nova Scotia since this government took office. There must be a change of attitude on the part of this government or Nova Scotia, even with the enlightened leadership it is receiving from Premier Stanfield and the great industrial growth it is experiencing at the present time under his leadership, will still encounter tremendous difficulties because of the slashes now being made in a very unorthodox way by the present government.

I should like to deal specifically with what has happened in my area since the government took office, and compare the situation with what took place during the period we held office. In this regard I should like to quote from Hansard for May 5, 1964 at page 2963 when, during the period between 10 and 10.30, I raised this matter. I brought to the attention of the Minister of Industry the problems that were being created at Enamel and Heating Products aircraft division at Amherst as a result of the lack of overhaul and repair work from the Department of Defence Production. At that time the minister had this to say among other things:

> Seeing this coming, the Department of Defence Production has encouraged aircraft overhaul organizations to seek production sharing work and has been prepared and has in fact provided considerable assistance to firms in securing contracts on a competitive basis with United States firms.
> As the hon. member for Cumberland has pointed out, Enamel and Heating Products Limited have been more than usually successful in this particular regard. In this field they are one of the more enterprising and more successful companies. The Department of Defence Production has been concerned to see that the base from which they make their competitive bids in the United States will continue in operation, this base being provided by contracts from the Department of Defence Production for overhaul and repair of R.C.A.F. aircraft.
> I am glad to be able to tell the hon. member that agreement has been reached with the company on what I think is a workable arrangement, a workable and practicable level of work which will enable them successfully to carry out the contracts in the United States.

I was very pleased with the statement made by the Minister of Industry in the house that evening. Indeed, I am not saying at this time that he is any less enthusiastic about keeping the word he gave me that evening than he was then. But I must say to him, and I am sure he will agree I am being fair, where is the work? Having had a good deal to do with the securing of contracts for this plant, I realize that you do not make a decision today and have it carried into effect tomorrow. That is not the way contracts of this nature develop. At the same time, however, that was May 5; we have almost reached the 1st of July, and the men who were laid off at that time are still unemployed. The company is still without the necessary work load to enable it to achieve the necessary production costs to honour its commitments so that the company will not face bankruptcy.

I do not know just where the matter stands now, but I do know that when I was home recently I found that the employees of that plant were in a great state of consternation as a result of the long lay-off which they had not anticipated once the minister's statement had been made. I found the union, which is endeavouring to negotiate a contract with the company at the present time, in a very difficult position with respect to its members. I have no doubt that the management of the company are in a most difficult position with regard to the union. How can the company negotiate a wage contract with its employees when it has no idea exactly where it is going to stand tomorrow or the next day or the day after? I also had my attention directed to a copy of a telegram which was sent to the minister and which reads as follows:

> Following your pronouncement in the House of Commons on May 5/64 we received advice from your department as well as Canadair that steps were being taken to restore our defence activity to a work level and we passed this information on to the union to maintain excellent labour relations, but as a result of the long delay they are becoming quite restless and losing confidence in our promises.
> Furthermore, acting on this promise we proceeded with negotiations with American contractors and have so far received additional American contracts for about a million dollars but due to the delay and the large loss we suffered in operations in May and so far this month we will have to take steps to abandon these contracts and lay off further men in order to husband our resources as well as effecting the economies in every direction including the cancellation of our participation in the Department of Trade and Commerce Glasgow fair and other foreign exhibitions. At the request of your department we have withheld giving information to newspapers and other government circles, but Fairey is evidently supplying newspapers with considerable inside information and in as much as Halifax is one of the most prosperous areas in the maritime provinces and receive the largest proportion of government expenditures we feel that the Halifax newspapers who advocate assistance to depressed areas are giving every good reason why the proposed contracts should be placed with us immediately even at the expense of Fairey because we are operating in a depressed area.

Certainly there is no good news for the minister in that telegram. There is certainly no good news for my area if this company should follow through with the allegations made in the telegram. It would be a dark day indeed for the county of Cumberland if the aircraft division of Enamel and Heating were to close down and throw out of work what remains of the usual work force of 265 people.

[Mr. Coates.]

At the same time this plant, which has a rolling mill division in my constituency, suffered a great misfortune through fire last Wednesday, June 24. The result will be that another 200 employees will be out of work in my constituency. I do not know for how long they will be out of work. Certainly this is a substantial operation and has been a very successful one. There are a tremendous number of contracts, as the minister is aware, waiting to be filled. The damage to the equipment by fire will delay the filling of these contracts, and I do not know how long we will have to wait before the operation will be revitalized.

I should like to make a few more comments about the aircraft division which I hope will give the committee an understanding of the aggressiveness that was displayed by the management of this firm during the period we were in office, and even today. If I may refer back to the telegram from which I just quoted, mention is made of the fact that the company recently secured another $1 million worth of work from United States firms under the defence production sharing arrangement. I should like to quote some figures to give an idea how this firm has procured progressively a greater amount of work from United States firms, and what the result has been from the defence production point of view with regard to the aggressiveness they have shown.

In 1961-62 government contracts coming from the Department of Defence Production amounted to $1,540,000. This was coupled with defence production sharing contracts amounting to $223,000, making a total of $1,763,000 worth of contracts in the plant in that year. In 1962-63 the Department of Defence Production provided $1,500,000 worth of contracts for the plant and the company secured $165,000 in production sharing contracts from firms in the United States, for a total amount of $1,665,000. This was the last full year we were in office.

In 1963-64 the amount of work secured from the Department of Defence Production was cut from $1,500,000 to $575,000, almost by two thirds. However, the company managed to secure contracts from the United States amounting to $1,243,000, which gave them a total of $1,818,000 for that year. In 1964-65 they suffered still another cut in the amount of work available from the Department of Defence Production. The amount they received directly from the defence production department amounted to $384,000, but they managed to secure $1,305,000 from United States firms, giving them a total of $1,689,000.

Now, if I may give the comparison of production sharing work on a percentage basis, I think we will have a still better indication of the aggressiveness displayed by the management. In 1961-62 it was about 13.5 per cent; in 1962-63 it was less than 10 per cent; in 1963-64, it was 68.5 per cent, and in 1964-65 it will be over 75 per cent. When you compare this with what is happening today you almost wonder if the plant management would not have been better to sit on their fannies and let the government feed them work rather than go out, as they have done, into the United States to obtain work so the plant could be kept in operation. In other words, every time the company secured a contract from the United States as a result of its own aggressiveness, work was taken away from it by the Department of Defence Production in Ottawa. This is not exactly the type of reward one would expect the plant management to receive for outstanding effort in securing work.

I noted in the Saturday edition of the Halifax Chronicle-Herald that one of the Halifax members indicated he was making application to the government in the hope that there might be a solution that would allow Fairey Aviation of Halifax to keep the Argus repair and maintenance contract and subcontract the work out to Enamel and Heating, thereby providing them with much needed work if they are not going to close their doors as a result of high production costs which would result in the cancelling of the contracts now on hand from the United States firms.

The hon. member is to be commended for coming forward with a solution that might provide employment both in his area and in mine. However, I should like to say this. I do not usually throw cold water on a suggestion of any hon. member which might benefit the economy of Nova Scotia. However, I found in my dealings with the Department of Defence Production during the time I was a supporter of the government that there was always a great deal of difficulty associated with subcontracts. Enamel and Heating have had subcontracts with Fairey Aviation in the past and they have not worked out so far as I am concerned. As a matter of fact, I took steps to try to have the work come forward from Ottawa as a firm contract rather than as a subcontract so that difficulties would not develop between the two firms.

My view is that we in the maritime provinces need all the defence work we can possibly get. Far be it for one firm in the maritimes to be fighting with another firm in the maritimes about how much work either one of them has. I believe this situation develops when you have subcontracts of the type that must be awarded to these firms when either firm might be able to do some of the work.

Then one firm says "I should be doing that work" and the other firm says "No, according to my contract it is quite justifiable for me to do this part of the work; therefore I am going to do it." That is the only concern I might have with the possible solution put forward by one of the members for Halifax.

There is a lot of merit in what he is endeavouring to do, and a solution must be found because both areas of Nova Scotia are going to suffer substantially unless we are able to secure a work load for our defence and aircraft plants that will allow those people presently employed in the plants to continue working. Certainly I think members from the Halifax area would be most concerned in view of the fact that only recently the Blandford radar base was closed and a great many people were thrown out of work.

If they are to be faced with another lay-off on top of the problems they already have with regard to the shipyards and unemployment related to shipbuilding, mainly as a result of the cancellation of the all purpose frigate program, they must appreciate, as I do, that the economy of our area cannot stand the knockout punch it is receiving from one cut-back after another.

I would like to make a special appeal to the Minister of Labour, who is our Nova Scotia representative in the cabinet, to endeavour to get construction of the penal institution at Springhill started as quickly as possible. A great deal of needless delay has been associated with this project, mainly resulting from patronage, something which should never have entered into the matter. We are now a year behind the scheduled construction of that institution and we are still without a firm date for the beginning of construction, and this in an area that must have the sympathy not only of the Minister of Labour but of people in all areas of the country. I refer to the hard luck town of Springhill which is so valiantly fighting back from almost complete disaster. I hope the minister will get together with his colleagues in the cabinet to see to it that tenders for this institution are called early in July and that work is undertaken as quickly as possible thereafter.

I know there are other hon. members from Nova Scotia who wish to take part in this debate. I hope they will emphasize as clearly as possible that Nova Scotia cannot continue to see a government effecting cut-backs in almost every area of defence. The province is only able to continue because of the very aggressive leadership it is receiving from Premier Stanfield.

Mr. Regan: Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words on the general subject mentioned this afternoon by the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings, and to touch on a few of the comments made by the hon. member for Cumberland.

There is no question but that because of the nature of scientific developments and the easing of tensions there have been some cut-backs in defence spending during the past two years. We in the Nova Scotia area, being adjacent to the sea, were in the position that a substantial portion of the amount of money spent on defence was expended in our area. A substantial portion continues to be spent there, and I was somewhat appalled to hear the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings suggest that the defence cut-backs were something new, something that had occurred only since the Liberals came into office.

I recall only too well that in years gone by, when the hon. gentleman sat on the treasury benches, he said that Camp Aldershot, located in his own constituency, would never close so long as he was in the government, but in time the only sound of marching feet in the Aldershot area was that of the army of the unemployed. The changing needs of scientific warfare and of our national security will always be such that military expenditures and military bases will come and go with the changing techniques.

I think all of us on this side of the chamber would agree that government defence funds should not be spent for the sole purpose of charity. While we in the Halifax area felt it was extremely unfortunate that the radar station at Beaverbank had to close, I think no one in Beaverbank would suggest that the base should be kept open at government expense if it were serving no useful purpose to the security of our nation. It is true that we have had some cut-backs in the field of defence expenditures in Nova Scotia, but if one looks at the national percentage of defence cuts that have occurred as a result of the easing of tensions one will find that we in Nova Scotia, percentagewise, had a very high allotment of defence spending in that area and we suffered a smaller percentage cut in expenditures than many other areas in Canada. Of course on the other hand, because so much of our economy is based on the defence industry it can be more severely affected by cuts.

One has to look at the over-all economic picture. Despite the defence cut-backs that may have occurred in the Nova Scotia area, today the unemployment level in the province of Nova Scotia is lower, and substantially lower, than it was at any time during the years of the Conservative government. That, I suggest, is an over-all test of the policies of the government. I think the area development agency and the Department of Industry in general have been looking very carefully at the needs of Nova Scotia, as well as those of other regions, and I have very high hopes for this department and believe it will result in great benefits to our area.

At the present time we do have an unusual situation in defence cuts, involving Fairey Aviation and Enamel Heating, and I am fully in sympathy with the aims of the hon. member for Cumberland in maintaining employment in the Amherst area as well as in the Halifax area. Enamel Heating, like Fairey Aviation, has been an efficient plant, a plant that greatly aided the economy of the province. Unfortunately the aircraft industry in Canada today is such that across the country bases dealing with the overhaul and repair of aircraft have had to make serious cuts in employment. Some of them have gone completely out of business, and I believe the over-all cut-back in the amount of work available has been in the vicinity of 45 per cent. Fortunately these cut-backs were not felt in Halifax prior to now, and I am confident that when the minister has ample and full opportunity to explore all the elements of the matter no cut-backs will occur at this time.

We are in this position; while we in Nova Scotia accept cuts in defence spending when they are necessary, that is when a program is being phased out or when a weapon is found to be obsolete, we feel it should be the policy of any government to spend as large a portion as possible of defence production funds in the maritime region, and that industries in the area connected with defence production should receive priority. Otherwise the whole idea of the program of the Atlantic development board and other such bodies would be meaningless. So, while we say we accept cut-backs in defence, we cannot accept proposals to transfer defence expenditure out of the maritime region to other regions. What we have we hold, in the field of defence expenditure. This must be the case if the economy of the maritime region is to have an opportunity to develop and become less and less dependant on government spending. This must surely be our policy in the maritime provinces because of the necessity of making cuts in other areas of the defence field.

With regard to Fairey Aviation, I wish to say that this industry was established in Halifax by the previous Liberal government. It is an efficient industry with a wonderful record. It has provided a great deal of employment, and today continues to provide more employment than all the industries set up by Industrial Estates in Halifax, Kings and Colchester counties put together. I do not say this in order to belittle in any way the efforts of Industrial Estates, because it is a fine organization—

Mr. Nowlan: Would the hon. member give us the figures of employment in Fairey Aviation as opposed to the industries which have been assisted by Industrial Estates? Let us have the figures.

Mr. Regan: The hon. gentleman is interested in figures, and that is good. But I was speaking of industries which were established. He referred to industries which were assisted. For instance, E. M. I. Cossor Ltd., in Dartmouth, was also established and brought into the constituency by the previous Liberal government. It was transferred from one plant site to another at a later time, but it was brought into the area by a Liberal government. It was in production in the Halifax area for some years.

Mr. Nowlan: Could I have an answer to my question?

Mr. Regan: The hon. gentleman would like to have the exact figures. I will tell him that employment at Fairey Aviation is now in the vicinity of 750. While I cannot give him the exact figure for each of the small industries which have been established in those three counties, I suggest that if he takes the trouble to take the whole group and add up the numbers employed, he will find the result will not come to a larger number than 750 in those three countries. I would be very happy to hear from the hon. gentleman when he has done that.

As I was saying, Fairey Aviation has been a very important part of our economy, and we feel it must receive special consideration from the government accordingly. The Enamel Heating plant has an enviable record in the maritime provinces, and I want to say here and now that I am in a position, from conversations I have had, to know that contrary to the words of the hon. member from Cumberland, who seems to be expressing concern about employment at Enamel Heating a little late in the game, the Minister of Industry and Defence Production has been particularly concerned for some time about the problems of Enamel Heating and has been making every effort to find contracts for this plant at Amherst.

I would also say on the question of the Argus program, which has been discussed here today as it affects Fairey Aviation, that the company has itself shown every interest and desire to be of assistance in helping Enamel Heating. It is, perhaps, the problem of Enamel Heating which brings this question to the fore.

I wished to say these few words on the subject because I think it is a matter of great interest to Nova Scotia. While over the years we in this area have received a great amount of defence expenditure because of our geographical position on the coast, at this time, when some programs have had to be phased out, it is extremely important to us that no contracts should be transferred out of the maritime region. The partial transfer to Enamel Heating of some work from Fairey Aviation may be considered in a different light entirely.

But even as the United States government has followed the policy of attempting to spend government funds on defence production and other government programs in areas of lagging development, I suggest the same policy must surely be followed here in Canada; and I am confident that this government, which has done so much already for the Atlantic region, as exemplified by funding the Atlantic development board with $100 million as well as by other similar provisions, will show the same concern in the matters now under consideration. I am sure the action of the Minister of Industry and Defence Production in carrying out a full and lengthy investigation into this whole problem shows his concern and his willingness to try to work out some policy which will be equitable for us and result in satisfaction for all.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like for a few minutes to take part in this debate. Undoubtedly the Prime Minister will classify this as obstruction—

Mr. McIlraith: Shame.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): There are those who take that view. I wish the silent member over there who never gets to his feet would not interrupt me. There are those who say we are obstructing business when we speak in this house. However, this is a subject of serious import, and those who are affected by it would not consider my intervention as obstruction. I might refer to the hon. member for Halifax—how am I to distinguish him; the one with the least hair?—who mentioned the closing of defence establishments and was shocked, he said, to hear that the member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings had had something to say about it. Camp Aldershot had closed, and so on; the former minister, my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings had said it would not close.

Well, for the information of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan), a former minister of national defence—I think his name was Campney; he went out of the house in 1957—announced the intention to close Aldershot, but it was continued for some time after that. This was when the great movement was on to Gagetown. I think the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan), was as far at sea with regard to that as he was with regard to some of the other matters he mentioned. He said, somewhat vehemently, "What we have, we hold". I understand that he is now, along with other members from Nova Scotia, making an attempt to hold some of the things which came to Nova Scotia during the period 1957-1963.

I should like to say something now about the ferry service at North Sydney. On March 14 there was a board of trade meeting at North Sydney, and an annual dinner. The chief entertainment for the evening was provided by the Minister of Transport, who was the guest speaker. Incidentally, I hope he is feeling much better. I regret he is not in his place today. I understand he is quite sick. I hope it will not be long before he is back again and in a position to read the remarks I am making now, and provide us with some sort of answer. At that annual dinner the food was good, but the entertainment was not very good. On that occasion the minister announced that there would be a ferry operating between Argentia and North Sydney. This was one of the projects for which money had been put in the estimates by the previous administration; it was also one that had been announced by the former minister of transport during the latter part of last year, before he was demoted. Then the Minister of Transport went to North Sydney and reannounced it. Plans for this project had been under way for many months. The unique part of his remarks are reported in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of March 16, the Monday edition, and I should like to quote from that newspaper:

> Mr. Pickersgill, now in Newfoundland, told the Chronicle-Herald after the meeting that the proposed third ferry would take on loaded box cars and have them unloaded at Port aux Basques.
> The announcement appeared to have caught off guard some 200 persons at the North Sydney board of trade meeting.
> Under the proposed new arrangement, trucks, as well as railway cars, will be unloaded at Port aux Basques, instead of at North Sydney. For shipment on the existing ferry, William Carson, goods are unloaded from the cars.

So under this program it would appear that the new ferry would take loaded railway freight cars aboard the vessel at North Sydney and they would be shipped loaded to Newfoundland. On March 23 I posed a question on this matter to the minister. As usual he was quite evasive; I have not been able to get any information from him. At that time he stated that freight was increasing every year through these ports and as a result there was increased work. This is quite true; freight is increasing annually and I hope it continues to increase. But should a system of this nature be put into effect, very little work will be available in North Sydney, as far as freight handling is concerned. To enlighten the committee a little more on this matter I would like to quote from the Cape Breton Post of March 16, in which there was a story as follows:

> While hon. Mr. Pickersgill did not elaborate on or outline details of the new ferry for the North Sydney-Port aux Basques run, it is understood here that it will be in the form of a car-freight ferry, one which would transport loaded freight cars from here to Port aux Basques.
> These cars, it is reported, are ones that would arrive here loaded, and then be placed aboard the ship as are.

So we go on, and we find that this situation has been causing a great deal of anxiety among many people in Cape Breton, boards of trade, members of town councils, unions, and so on. The Cape Breton Post of June 5 carried a report of a meeting of the board of trade at North Sydney. The article is entitled "Transshipping of freight hit", and it says:

> —in the event of transshipment handling of freight at Port aux Basques could "in time deal a pretty vital blow to the labour picture of North Sydney".

This was a statement made by the president of the board of trade. Then there was a meeting of the town council in Sydney Mines at which the secretary of the union, local 1259, I.L.A., appeared and presented his case. He asked for support. Then I understand the representative from the union approached the Minister of Labour on the subject, and the following appears in an article in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of June 12. The article is headed, "Some facts first—meeting later":

William Quirk, recording secretary of local 1259, I.L.A., sent a letter to Mr. MacEachen stating that the local's membership was "greatly disturbed" by the "persistence of strong rumours and some solid facts" that create a strong impression of impending disaster to the union and town of North Sydney.

The Minister of Labour reported to the newspaper concerned in Halifax that he felt this was one of the questions raised last fall when a delegation met with him and other ministers concerned with regard to the shipment of freight through the port of North Sydney. At that time he said the concern expressed was somewhat exaggerated and he would look into the situation as it then existed. In their letter to the minister the longshoremen said it was their understanding that a special tariff was issued to provide through rates to inland ports in Newfoundland that would make the service highly competitive with the C.N.R. This is a separate item altogether from the proposed new ferry. They went on to say that what was even more disturbing was an agreement that had been made between the C.N.R. and C.S.L.-Clarke Terra Nova services, giving the latter the privileges of transporting from Montreal all the freight shipments originating in Ontario and a large part of Quebec that were not specifically marked "via C.N.R.". The association asked the Minister of Labour for his assurance that their fears were groundless or that definite steps would be taken to provide an immediate equal opportunity for alternate employment for this group. Those are two very important items, Mr. Chairman, about which I wish some information, with regard to the construction of this ferry. We want to know whether any arrangement has been made whereby competition is provided with the help of government incentives which work to the detriment of the port of North Sydney.

Here again there is an article in the Cape Breton Post with regard to the joint meeting of the two town councils of North Sydney and Sydney Mines. Another item in the Cape Breton Post of June 13 is headed, "MacEachen optimistic". Since my very good colleague from Cape Breton is an eligible bachelor, I am glad he is still optimistic; but this would appear to refer to something else:

Mr. MacEachen said the elimination of freight handling jobs would depend on the growth of traffic business and, with the possibility of increased traffic, would mean increased employment through the years.

That is quite true, provided we are not going to have the type of ferry that has been suggested. All we want is an explanatory statement from the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Labour with regard to the type of ferry that will be operated on this service. On another occasion the Minister of Transport said, "The hon. member knows"—referring to myself—"that this is two or three years in the future, and there will be plenty of time to look into the matter of employment." I say that now is the time to look into the matter, not two or three years from now, because employment will have been eliminated in North Sydney by that time. The minister should investigate the situation immediately, make some statement on behalf of the government, and thereby alleviate all the worry that is being caused to the people of the port of North Sydney, the town of Sydney Mines and the surrounding areas from which men come to work at the port. In another article in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald of June 13 it is reported that the Minister of Labour said he felt the volume of freight traffic through North Sydney would increase in the future. We have heard this story all the time, that freight is going to increase. That is good; I like to hear it. But I do not like to hear that we are perhaps going to have a freight ferry that will take loaded railway freight cars from the port of North Sydney and they will be unloaded at Port aux Basques, in Newfoundland rather than in Nova Scotia, and the handling will be done in Newfoundland. At one time I asked the Minister of Transport whether this meant the standardization of the railway in Newfoundland, and he said, "Definitely not". I could not draw that conclusion; the only conclusion I can draw is that there will possibly be a yard set up at Port aux Basques with narrow gauge tracks and the freight will be transferred from the standard gauge to the narrow gauge tracks for distribution throughout Newfoundland at Port aux Basques.

Another meeting was called for the purpose of organizing a port commission, which all the interested parties of the area attended. According to the Cape Breton Post for June 16, 1964:

Mayor Hartigan in his opening remarks referred to the interest and concern of Sydney Mines in the local labour picture at the C.N.R.'s terminus, due to the fact that many Sydney Mines people were working here.

He also stressed the very great importance of a "united front and effort" if any move to combat possible setbacks are to be counteracted successfully. "We should not," he said, "under any consideration or circumstances make any kind of political issue or football out of this situation".

I can understand why the mayor would make a statement like that. He is a non-political person and does not take part in politics, although I must state he is past provincial president of the Nova Scotia Liberal association; but I am sure his heart is in the right place and that he is willing and anxious to do anything he can to assist in this problem.

A few days ago I posed another question to the minister about this matter and again got no reply. I see the Minister of Labour with us today and I should like to ask whether he is in a position to provide some clarification so as to clear up any misunderstanding about this. I trust that anything we have heard is only rumour and that freight will always be handled at North Sydney. Another point I should like clarified, one with which he is familiar because we met on several occasions in this regard, concerns the possibility of another steamship line receiving certain preferences, priorities or incentives to assist the taking of freight away from North Sydney, thus causing more unemployment and further competition for the C.N.R.

Another point concerns increased employment, and this question was mentioned by the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan). We are all pleased to hear about this increase, but may I quote to him a statement issued by the Minister of Labour on Monday, April 20, which appeared in the Cape Breton Post. The minister said at that time:

Since 1961, the labour market on Cape Breton island has improved, and there has been a consistent increase in employment in the service industries and in the manufacturing of steel, pulp and aluminum products.

That was in 1961, and if I recall correctly the present administration was not in office at that time.

Before going on to something else, Mr. Chairman, I should like to refer to certain areas facing cut-backs, reductions in force, and so on. This matter concerns a number of ministers. I am sorry the minister of northern affairs is not here. He was here a moment ago and perhaps he is behind the curtains and will hear me. There has been a very considerably reduced work program in the Cape Breton highlands national park, and much remains to be done. This park provides employment for the many people deserving of that employment. Incidentally, I suggest the works program at the park in the past year has been the lowest for quite a number of years. I am receiving representations from many people in the area who are looking for employment of some type. They are not in a very good way financially. I am pleased to say that I made representations to the Minister of Labour on their behalf and I hope and trust he is doing his best to find employment for them. I have received letters from the clergy in the area, who have advised me there are people in destitute circumstances in Victoria county. If more work were provided in the Cape Breton highlands park this would fill the bill somehow.

Another matter I should like to raise with the minister of northern affairs is this. I should like to know whether he can advise the committee whether the Liberal councillor at South Ingonish is the hiring agent now for the park. I am curious about this. The information I have received suggests that the Liberal councillor in South Ingonish beach provides the names of people who would like employment to the superintendent of the park, and the superintendent in turn telephones the national employment office and informs them whom he wants.

Mr. Regan: Did you appoint them before?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I hear an interjection from the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Regan), who asks whether I made the appointments. When we were in government I was pleased to play some part in placing men in work there. This was done with the assistance of clergy of all denominations in the area. It was done through representatives of the Legion and different public figures in the areas concerned. One other matter. We tried to distribute this work all through Victoria county from Bay St. Lawrence to Ingonish, where the headquarters of the park are, and to do it in an equitable and fair manner.

To get back to my main point, I should like the minister to find out whether it is correct—I suggest to him that it probably is —that the Liberal councillor in South Ingonish is the hiring agent, although it could be a coincidence that of the people employed in the park the greatest majority come from South Ingonish. This matter was also raised by the now Minister of Transport when he was in opposition, and it is all on the record. He asked how we handled this problem when we were in office. We were assisted by the clergy in the area, who I am sure were not political agents for any party. I see the Minister of Labour smiling, but that is the fact; and if he checks Hansard he will find letters quoted which reveal how we handled the problem.

This is an important matter and should be investigated at this time. In the years prior to 1957 if one's father or one's grandfather or one's relatives voted Conservative he could not get a job in the park. That was a known fact; but the position definitely changed after 1957. We are now back to the old system again. I do not care who are hired or what are their politics, but please distribute this work equally among all the areas, Dingwall, North Ingonish, Cape North, Neil's Harbour, Bay St. Lawrence and so on. This work should be shared around.

There have also been reductions in public works projects. Nothing of major importance is being constructed at the present time. Tenders have been awarded for the continuation of the Dingwall project, which we started and which had been written off by a former minister of transport by the name of Winters. He wrote it off and we re-established it and spent quite a bit of money when we were in government. It has been of much benefit to the fishermen in the area. At Baddeck there will be a small extension to the wharf. This is nothing new because plans were all ready for this when the present government came into office. In Ingonish some work is going to be done on the wharf, owing to storms of last fall and winter. I urge the government to look into this matter and to see whether major spending cannot be carried out by other departments. We are not asking for too much. We are asking only that the amount of spending be brought up to the level of that of the former government. We are always looking for more, of course, but if the level is restored to what it was previously, which was the highest level ever reached in public works and northern affairs and a number of other departments, we will be content.

When the Minister of Labour visited Cape Breton recently, according to the Halifax Chronicle-Herald for Saturday, May 30, he said:

"I have never been more confident of the future of Cape Breton than I am today," federal labour minister Allan MacEachen said Friday after he cut the ribbon at the formal opening of Cape Breton county vocational high school.

Incidentally, this is one of the schools initiated by the former minister of labour. The article continues:

"Real progress is being made with the immediate problems of this area and a good start has been made towards finding ways to its long term prosperity," he said.

"Cape Breton has served Canada well in the past."

I fully agree with that statement.

"Now, in turn the rest of Canada has a responsibility to Cape Breton to do what it can to see that it shares, as far as possible, in the benefit that technology is bringing. We recognize this responsibility in the federal government."

I am very glad to read that the minister has said that. He announced at that time that many departments were really investigating and digging into the records to try to see what type of work each department could carry out in Cape Breton in order to encourage spending in the area and provide employment. Let us know what projects are going forward, and how soon.

With regard to the naval base, every week a certain number of men are receiving their lay-off notices. That is why I posed a question today to the Associate Minister of National Defence, and I was very pleased to hear him reply that some steps are going to be taken to try to provide further refits of some type for the base. I must say I am very glad to hear that news. This will help to alleviate unemployment in the area and will maybe help to keep the men now working employed a little longer. I do hope that the work will be prolonged and carried on as long as possible.

An hon. Member: What about the satellite tracking station?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yes, I could mention the satellite tracking station. I have been trying to secure some information about it, and I think the Minister of Labour is familiar with the situation. There has been some hold-up, I believe due to technological changes, but I would think that by this time the point must have been reached where the progress that was made prior to this government taking power could be continued with regard to this tracking station, which is a project of the national aeronautics and space agency of the United States and the United States weather bureau, on the one hand, and the Department of Transport and the telecommunications branch of Canada on the other hand. I hope the Minister of Labour will be in a position to provide some information on that matter.

There are so many matters that could be brought to the attention of the government at this time, but I do not wish to prolong the committee any more than to say that I trust and hope that the Minister of Labour, who is here today, will be in a position to provide some information with regard to the ferry which I mentioned. If he is not able to do so, maybe the Minister of Transport will, when he returns. I hope his illness will not be too prolonged and I trust that when he returns to the house he will be in a position to give us further information on this matter, because it is most important.

Mr. Lloyd: Mr. Chairman, I believe that the two matters raised here today have been fairly well explored by the speakers who have taken part in the debate in the last half hour or so. I was pleased to note that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings brought to the attention of the minister matters of which he was aware. Certainly he was made aware of them by members of his department. He has been made aware of certain economic realities of the province of Nova Scotia by my colleague and myself, and by other members from the Atlantic provinces, in the last two or three weeks. I am delighted that the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings has added his words of wisdom and judgment to this debate. After all, his experience as a former minister of finance would certainly give him the capacity to observe economic realities. This is one thing we share in common.

I am fully satisfied that the minister is aware of the difficulties inherent in the particular problem of readjusting or rationalizing the expenditures of the government in the field of aircraft overhaul and repair. I am fully convinced that a strong and well documented case is now before the minister. That case, which has been made in written submissions and in oral observations in the house, is that there is every justification to try, if at all possible, to maintain the work load to the maximum possible degree at both Enamel and Heating Products Limited and the Fairey plant in Halifax.

I am not as knowledgeable as I should be on all the things I ought to be knowledgeable about, but to the extent of my capacity to judge facts and relative aircraft plant capacities I am fully satisfied that a strong case exists not to transfer any work of the kind proposed from a plant in Nova Scotia to a plant in Montreal. Even if there was a small differential in terms of dollars in favour of a company in Montreal, Toronto or somewhere else in central Canada, the great advantage to all Canadians that would be derived from continuing industrial growth and additional work opportunities in the Atlantic provinces far exceeds any minor difference that may exist at the moment.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak briefly this afternoon on the situation of farmers in the province of Quebec.

You know that, last week, nearly 10,000 farmers marched on the capital of the province of Quebec.

This march was intended to force the population, and especially the provincial government, to realize the situation of the Quebec farmer faced with constantly rising land taxes in that province, to which farmers have to contribute more and more, and also to force the population to realize the fate of the farmer in that province.

When the Liberal government came into office in Ottawa we were entitled to expect, particularly after the great promises which had been made during the campaign, that this government, during its famous first 60 days, would find a magic formula to solve the problems of Quebec farmers. Unfortunately, during the 14 or 15 months the present government has been in power, not only has the position of the Quebec farmer not improved, but it has deteriorated from day to day, not only because of events, of trade in general, or of the market situation, but also because of the attitude taken by the present government.

It should be kept in mind that under the present government, the situation of the dairy industry in Quebec, far from improving, is worsening. Instead of meeting the wishes of our farmers, the government abolished the 30-cent subsidy per cwt. of milk delivered to cheese factories. It also abolished the 25-cent subsidy per cwt. of milk delivered to butter factories. It is reported that all this will save from $6 to $8 million.

I realize that the government must save money, but why must it always be at the expense of farmers? It is against this that we are protesting.

It must be borne in mind too that the government has also reduced the 12-cent subsidy on butter granted by the previous government in order to dispose of butter supplies and, at the same time, to maintain the subsidies paid to farmers, especially milk producers of the province of Quebec.

The government failed to appreciate the situation. It failed to realize that the expenses of our farmers increase constantly and that their income, instead of increasing proportionately, remains the same or is decreasing.

In this morning's issue of Le Devoir, there is an excellent editorial by Mr. Claude Ryan, in which he explains very clearly the situation of eastern farmers whose purchasing power is decreasing. According to Mr. Ryan:

> All surveys indicate that the purchasing power of the farmer has been constantly decreasing for 20 years. The farmer is now earning a few dollars more than previously, but this increase of the gross income is insufficient to meet the increase of the cost of necessary services and equipment.

The present government refused to face the facts. It is true that during the election campaign, we heard about the famous department of agriculture for eastern Canada which was supposed to solve all our problems. This department was a magic formula and worries were to disappear. This government has been in power for 15 months and we are still waiting for a department of agriculture for eastern Canada which is supposed to be a magic formula to remove every evil and smooth out the difficulties of our farmers.

There is of course the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) who is partly responsible for ARDA and the redevelopment of our rural areas. It is a long term plan but up to now, in view of the relations between the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Quebec and the Minister of Forestry, it is obvious that the efforts of the new minister are not particularly welcomed by the Quebec farmers, especially when one hears a Liberal minister, such as the hon. Mr. Courcy, who makes no bones about appearing on T.V. to give a good scolding to the federal minister responsible for rural development. It was an unusual sight, but there must be some grounds to warrant such a situation. Is it the reason why the minister of rural development has felt it necessary to go on holidays in Italy for a rest?

I do not know, but, in any case, when the minister is no longer contemplating long trips around the world, I hope he may find the time to consider the problems of the Quebec farmers.

One day, I was visiting the rural area of my constituency of Three Rivers, which has many farming communities, and I was talking to a farmer whose family had tilled the same land for nearly 200 years. He was an old gentleman, very much respected in the parish, and the owner of beautiful farm land which can be advantageously compared to any in the province of Quebec. This old gentleman said to me: Mr. Balcer, you, the politicians, will definitely have to do something. I asked him: Why? And he answered: Listen, my family has been on this farm for almost two centuries, and today, when everybody says that there is prosperity in the whole western world, when we are told that in Montreal, 50 storey skyscrapers have been built as well as tremendous speedways, at this very moment, for the first time in seven or eight generations on the same farm, my family will have to leave the land which has fed our forefathers for the last 200 years.

And he explained why. He told me that he had two sons working on his farm, who were excellent farmers, and laboured from daybreak to sunset; but unfortunately, all the father could give them for their petty expenses was $5 or $10 a week, while, just beside them, lived two boys who, though not exactly hard workers, had found positions in a Shawinigan Falls plant, where they earned a salary of $100 a week working from eight in the morning until five in the afternoon. They were coming back to the village with a shiny new car and dated the prettiest girls in the community, because they had a car, and so on.

Now, the old gentleman told me: Would you tell me, Mr. Balcer, why our two boys would want to remain on the farm and keep up an age old tradition?

This problem recurs throughout the province and throughout all eastern Canada. With that problem to face, the government does not assume its responsibilities, but takes the following attitude: The eastern farmers' problem will always remain a problem, let us be satisfied with the status quo.

Now, we are speaking about an important class of our society, which gives outstanding service to the country as a whole. This is a category of people with old traditions which have their roots in this country's history, and these people should not be abandoned and left to their fate.

At all costs, the government must come to a decision with regard to feed grains for the eastern farmers. This is a question the government must solve. It must build warehouses in the east, in our harbours on the St. Lawrence river; it must also pay for the transportation, from the west to the east, of such feed grain, and also for storage. In addition the government must establish a board which will look after the purchasing of feed grain and see to it that there is no undue speculation detrimental to our farmers. All that must be done.

A crop insurance scheme for our farmers must be initiated. Stabilization of farm prices must also be achieved. But mainly the government must find new markets. The government is not looking for any outlets for our eastern farmers. The problem must be tackled with vigour, because the situation is much more serious than we think.

When we consider that 10,000 farmers marched as a group to Quebec in order to lodge a protest with the government, I say to this government that, before long, those thousands of farmers will gather in front of the parliament in Ottawa, if the government continues its easy-going and forsaking policy regarding eastern farmers.

[Text]

Mr. Winch: May I ask a question of the hon. member? Admitting the problem, may I ask the hon. member what he did, 14 to 18 months ago, when he was a cabinet minister on the other side?

Mr. Balcer: We did quite a lot. We increased the subsidies on butter production. We brought forward the 12-cent subsidy to the consumer to increase the distribution of butter. We also brought forward a very good act to increase farm credit. We increased the subsidy on cheese, the subsidy on turkeys and the subsidy on poultry. Well, we Mr. Chairman, it might take me too long to enumerate everything we did, but at least we did something. We did a lot of things. The present government seems to be completely lacking in imagination in so far as trying to find any new program is concerned; but they will have to do something.

Mr. Winch: Are these subsidies still in effect?

Mr. Balcer: Many of them have been decreased by the government, saying it had to save $8 million. I do not mind if the government saves money, but it does not have to take that money out of the pockets of the poor farmer in eastern Canada.

The Deputy Chairman: The hon. member for Villeneuve.

[Translation]

Mr. Sauvé: Would the hon. member for Three Rivers allow me a question?

If the agricultural policy of the Conservative government was as efficient as he says it was, how is it that, when we came into office we found agriculture in eastern Canada in such a deplorable state?

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Chairman, I have just explained that. We did all those things and little by little the present government is destroying what we did; it shows no imagination at all and is incapable of introducing a single measure to help the eastern farmers.

Mr. Sauvé: That does not answer my question. The hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton), in a remarkable speech, deplored the state of agriculture in eastern Canada, and I think that the Conservatives had just lost power then. There is no reason to believe that the situation is worse because the Conservatives no longer administer the country. Everyone knows that the present government—

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Sauvé: —made some changes with regard to the agricultural policy, but it did nothing that could have worsened the situation.

Mr. Balcer: I do not want to keep the debate going forever, but I just want to give an example. We had on the order paper, when the government was defeated, a measure that made it possible for farmers to get feed grain at a reasonable and stable price.

The present government has been in office for 14 months and has not yet found its way clear to introduce in the house a single measure to continue what we had done. Not only has the government not introduced any legislation, but when we have suggestions to make concerning feed grains, it defers the matter to a committee where it is discussed for months and months while farmers are waiting.

Mr. Sauvé: Would the hon. member permit a question concerning feed grains?

Mr. Pigeon: Make your speech instead of going to Italy.

Mr. Sauvé: Does the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm know that I was in the house at the adjournment, Friday night, and that I was present this afternoon? What I did during the week end is none of his business.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, may I put a question? Has the minister read Le Devoir of this morning which comments on his trip to Italy? Would the minister visit farmers during the week end in order to know them better instead of journeying to Italy?

Mr. Sauvé: Does the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm know that I went to Lotbinière, Chicoutimi, Matane, St. Anne de la Pocatière and that next Saturday I will be in Mont Joli where I will meet hon. Mr. Courcy on the occasion of a visit to the eastern Quebec development office?

I have done more to gather information in these last months than many former ministers did in the same situation.

As the former minister of transport speaks about feed grain, would you authorize me, Mr. Chairman, to say a few words to him?

Mr. Pigeon: Is it in order?

Mr. Sauvé: On June 13—

[Text]

Mr. Olson: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Villeneuve was recognized by Your Honour several minutes ago, before the question was asked by the minister. Surely the minister does not think he should go into a speech now.

The Deputy Chairman: Order. If the Minister of Forestry has a question to ask I would recognize him again, as I did previously; but if there is a speech to be made I would recognize the hon. member for Villeneuve.

Mr. Caouette: Has the minister a question to ask—because he was not asking a question; he was making a statement. He was the finest, the nicest and most appropriate minister of the crown at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, we have just heard the former minister of transport in the Conservative government tell us about the 10,000 farmers who went to Quebec city last week to ask the provincial government to grant them certain benefits and to recognize their very existence in the province of Quebec.

At the same time, we heard the former minister of transport refer to feed grain and ask us what the present administration had done to enable farmers to buy feed grain at better rates than in the past.

Mr. Chairman, it is all very well to listen to the minister of transport in the Conservative government talk to us about feed grain and the benefits and assistance his party brought to eastern farmers. Only, when the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) was a minister in the Conservative cabinet, just 14 months ago as he said himself, what did the Conservatives do to allow eastern farmers to benefit from prices granted for feed grain? What did they do to help eastern farmers obtain western grain at better prices than in the past? It is nice to hear the former minister praise Canadian agriculture. It is also interesting to have him explain to us the grievances or the misunderstanding that might exist between the Quebec minister of agriculture and the Minister of Forestry who, under the circumstances, acts as minister of Canadian agriculture.

Next Wednesday, that is in two days, a convention will be held in Noranda in my riding, where all the agricultural experts of the province of Quebec will meet. This will be their annual convention. I hope that the hon. member for Three Rivers will be present, because I shall attend it.

I shall ask then the provincial and federal authorities which will be represented: What have agricultural experts been doing to promote, to establish an adequate agricultural program in Canada which would enable the small farmer to keep his family farm and to give his family a decent standard of living?

Mr. Chairman, in the past, when speaking of agronomists—and there are some in the house—either under the Conservative government or under the former Liberal government, we used to say that an agronomist was a guy who had completed his classical course, failed his law examinations and turned agronomist. As a matter of fact, I see my good friend, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and I am sure he agrees with what I have just said. And why is it so? Because at that time we did not grant due recognition to the schooling, the education and the training of an agronomist. As a matter of fact, that profession was not recognized in the province of Quebec and we thought that an agronomist was a citizen of second, third and even fifth class, or that he had to play second fiddle.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a question of privilege. I do not intend to delay the remarks of the hon. member for Villeneuve and even if I am an agronomist myself, I shall put my personal feelings aside to say, on behalf of Quebec agronomists, that they are not a group of failures or people who turned to agronomy because they had failed their law examinations. Indeed, I know that the hon. member for Villeneuve shares my views on that point.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I did not say that agronomists were failures. I merely stated that agronomists were represented to the people as a group of men who had failed to qualify for the bar and who had taken up agronomy because they had found nothing better to do. In that connection, I should like to point out that, in last Saturday's edition of Le Devoir, it was stressed that most Quebec agronomists are employees of the government who earn from $5,000 to $5,700 a year, which is absolutely illogical. It must also be remembered that 30 years ago, in 1934, people were advocating a return to the land in Quebec. Agronomists were right at the time, but no one listened to them. Personally, I feel that they can be of service to farmers of Quebec and of eastern Canada just like their professional colleagues helped farmers out west.

Mr. Chairman, I know that at a certain time politics entered into the picture and that western farmers were told that they did not have to produce and that they would be paid so much per acre for not seeding their land, for not reaping a crop. Yet, that policy never existed in the province of Quebec.

A few weeks ago, after having got in touch not only with agronomists, but also with political authorities of the province of Quebec, it was found that whole areas had been affected by drought, torrential rain or dust. Therefore, many Quebec farmers will have no crop next fall. Never have we seen in the province of Quebec federal authorities concerned with problems respecting our agriculture, whereas we were interested in those of western farmers. Never have we opposed the assistance the federal government might extend to western farmers.

However, not too long ago I heard the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) ask the help of the federal government for the farmers in northwestern Quebec, with lands, in some cases, on the border of Ontario, because they had just lost their lands, their properties, etc. following a terrible hurricane which had devastated that area. At that time, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Pearson) stated: We have received no request from the province of Quebec, we cannot help the farmers in northwestern Quebec. But barely a few months ago, when Alaska, which is not a Canadian province but an American state, was devastated by a tidal wave and Canadian citizens living south of Alaska had to face difficulties not greater than those the farmers in northwestern Quebec had to face, requested the help of the federal government, the Prime Minister informed us of the concern of the federal government and the help that it might give to farmers in western Canada who live in British Columbia and south of Alaska.

Mr. Chairman, we agree that we must help those citizens when their area is depressed or when they have difficulties. But why did farmers of La Sarre, Palmarol, Macamic and Authier not get help from the federal government when the hon. member for Chapleau spoke on behalf of his constituents? Did politics have something to do with it, or discrimination, as we have seen so often in the past?

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak further on that matter, because we will come back to it later and with evidence to show that the government does not take all its responsibilities.

That does not mean that the Conservative government, including the hon. member for Three Rivers, were assuming their responsibilities. They have this unfortunate habit of blaming the Liberals for things they themselves neglected to do when they were in office only 14 months ago. They have the habit of blaming everyone except themselves.

For instance, with regard to feed grain, I wonder why the hon. member for Three Rivers was not, in 1962 and in 1963, asking for help for the farmers of his own constituency in order to help them to get feed grain supplies at the price foreign countries could buy them in Canada?

Mr. Balcer: The measure was on the order paper.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, what was keeping the hon. member for Three Rivers, who was then minister in the federal cabinet and who is today deputy chief, who is not really a deputy chief and will never be, but who expects to become deputy chief, from asserting his voters' interests? This former minister tells us that his government could do nothing. He himself has never done anything for his own electors, and we have had enough of Conservative assertions telling us that the Liberals have done nothing, while they themselves have not done anything during the five years they were in office, when it would have been possible for them to settle the situation of Quebec farmers. Why did they not do so, when they ask us today to put the full blame on the present government? We are ready to blame the government to the same extent as does the hon. member for Three Rivers, but we are also ready to blame the member for Three Rivers who was not able to assume his responsibilities when he was a crown minister.

On both sides of the house, members are trying to indulge in petty politics and to play politics.

Mr. Ricard: You have never done anything else.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, that is exactly what the hon. member for Three Rivers just said. He has never done anything else in all his life; that is all that he has been doing, and what he is doing at present.

We shall keep on exposing and pillorying those who have failed to take their responsibilities, and we shall not put up with the virulent attacks of the official opposition which was in power barely a year ago. What we want for the eastern as well the western farmers is fairness, we want justice. We want our farmers to be able to settle and live in the province of Quebec and in the maritime provinces, in the same way the federal parliament permitted western farmers to live a decent life, in all fairness and justice, regardless of the administration. As long as justice is assured for each Canadian citizen, we shall support the government with all our might.

[Text]

The Deputy Chairman: I do not know whether or not the hon. member has completed his remarks, but there is no private members' hour this afternoon.

[Translation]

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for that information. I did not know that private members' business, that is private or public bills, would not be considered today. I just got back from Rouyn, and it is quite a distance from Three Rivers.

Mr. Chairman, we just heard the former minister of transport telling us the great admiration he has for the farmers in the province of Quebec. As I said and repeated, he was minister for over five years, precisely, for six years. He was sitting on the other side at the time; he was in office and us, we were asking for grain elevators in the province of Quebec, in Berthier, Quebec city and Montreal. At that time, this minister from the province of Quebec did not know what solution to adopt—

Mr. Balcer: Will the hon. member for Villeneuve allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. Caouette: Certainly.

Mr. Balcer: Does not the hon. member know that we built close to $12 million of grain elevators in Montreal, $3 million, in Quebec city and that, besides, during our term of office, huge grain elevators were built in Baie Comeau? Some were built in Three Rivers, where the elevator capacity was doubled.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Chairman, I would like to learn from the former minister of transport whether this amount of $12 million plus $3 million and $5 million, making a total of $18 or $20 million, did not benefit the contractor rather than the farmers of the province of Quebec? Let the former minister tell us—

An hon. Member: Now, you are making sense.

Mr. Caouette: I always make sense. Let the former minister tell us who benefited by grain elevators under the Conservative administration and then I shall resume my seat. But I am convinced, Mr. Chairman, that grain elevators built in the province of Quebec were built for exportation and not at all to assist the farmers in the province.

As recently as half an hour ago I received a telephone call from a prominent member of the catholic farmers' union of the province of Quebec who told me: We held a demonstration in front of the Quebec parliament and we will hold another one in front of the Ottawa parliament, on behalf of eastern Canada agriculture.

Mr. Chairman, we do not wish to add insult to injury, as they say, but we want agriculture in eastern Canada to be treated on an equal footing with western agriculture.

To come back to what I was saying a while ago, the former minister of transport talked about the great solicitude and love he felt for farmers in his own riding and in the whole province of Quebec. But I shall reply to him what I have said before: Farmers in eastern Canada get up at four o'clock in the morning to milk their cows while some people, like my good friend the hon. member for Three Rivers, gets up at ten to milk farmers.

Mr. Chairman, the flamboyant and wonderful observations we heard a while ago concerning the farmer in French Canada or in the province of Quebec have already been heard during every election campaign. We heard the Liberals just like the Conservatives tell us their love for the farmers. That matter has been discussed for 25, 20, 15, five years, and now for one year, and it is discussed again today. It is not with words, with rhetorics nor with philosophy, and even less with high-sounding speeches that we will save agriculture in the province of Quebec and in eastern Canada. It is with action, and such action was lacking when the Conservatives were in power. It is still lacking now that the Liberals are in office.

I heard a while ago my good friend, the hon. member for Îles-de-la-Madeleine and the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé), tell us how well he knew the farmers in eastern Canada and what a high opinion he had of them. He could not get along a few days ago with the Quebec minister of agriculture, Hon. Alcide Courcy—an agronomist, mind you—with whom I will be in Noranda Wednesday night.

A few hours ago I was on a plane with the Quebec minister of lands and forests, Hon. Lucien Cliche: he was going to Quebec city and I was coming to Ottawa—we are of the same area. Hon. Lucien Cliche is anxious to develop his area, his province and Canada as a whole. He told me that my friend, the Minister of Forestry, is a man with whom it is very easy to get along. I believe so, but we have in the province of Quebec, as in the rest of this country, people who are afraid and think that everything we do here in parliament can be in the interest of the province of Quebec.

Now, Mr. Chairman, such is not the case. Perhaps no group is more Canadian than the group I represent. I recognize for western Canada the same rights we must have in the province of Quebec, but at the same time I recognize that we must not have lesser rights than those the other provinces have obtained up to the present. It is not a matter of discrimination, it is a matter of mutual understanding and co-operation. I am convinced that the Minister of Forestry will admit that when he met the Quebec minister of agriculture and colonization, he realized that he had something to learn, just as the Quebec minister had something to learn from the federal Minister of Forestry, who actually is responsible for ARDA.

Mr. Chairman, there is a possibility of agreement, understanding and co-operation between eastern and western Canada. But as long as we are looking in one direction only, where our personal interest lies, we will never come to an agreement in any part of the country. But this possibility exists, provided we are men of goodwill.

[Mr. Caouette.]

In fact, Mr. Chairman, there are in Canada three categories of people only, as anywhere else in the world: men of goodwill, men of ill-will and men without will. Let us be men of goodwill, instead of men of ill-will or no will at all. We will then save, not only Canada and confederation, but the human being who works for the development of his country.

Mr. Rapp: Mr. Chairman, I would like to take this opportunity to make some brief remarks on the interim supply bill that is before us, but I wish to speak on a different subject. It arises from a question I directed to the Minister of Labour asking whether the Gill report on unemployment insurance would be debated during this session. He replied that if parliamentary time permitted this was one of the matters which might be dealt with during the session. Mr. Chairman, the Gill report was presented to parliament in November 1962. A couple of months later there was an election, following which there was a change in government. During the time the present government has been in office there has been ample opportunity to bring in the Gill report on unemployment insurance, but nothing has been done. Not only that, but we have still not had word from the Minister of Labour as to when the matter will be debated in the house.

My interest in the report and the recommendations is well known to the house, particularly that part of it which deals with unemployment insurance for the farm labourer. Not very long ago I presented a bill to the house which was talked out, which does not mean that there is no justification for bringing farm labour under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

I should like to put on record a report from the national employment service, which reads as follows:

> The present shortage of good farm labour on the prairies appears to be more serious now than at any time in the past 10 years, says the April monthly report of the national employment service.
> The N.E.S. also said the number of transient workers available in 1964 is much lower than it was at the same time one year ago. The number of these workers has been seriously depleted through heavy recruiting of workers for jobs in various mining operations on the prairies.
>
> In Manitoba, the N.E.S. offices report they cannot keep up with the demand for good farm workers. There is a serious shortage of couples for dairy farms and farm machinery operators anticipated, the report said.
> A number of farm organizations have suggested that training programs be established to educate prospective farm labourers in handling and maintaining farm machinery.

Not so long ago there took place a meeting in Winnipeg, as a result of which the unemployment insurance fund will be asked to include farm hands under the benefits of the Unemployment Insurance Act. According to the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix this recommendation was made:

> Winding up a two-day meeting in Winnipeg Wednesday, the prairie regional employment committee recommended that unemployment insurance coverage be extended to include farm labourers. "Farm labourers should be entitled to the same benefits as city construction workers", F. C. Cronkite of Saskatoon, chairman of the 15-man committee said, commenting on the resolution.

The reason I have placed bills and motions on the order paper in the past is due to the serious situation which has developed in the agriculture industry of this country. The Gill report says that insurance for farm labourers is not easily provided, but I submit that the report should be presented and the recommendations discussed. What annoys me most is this, that in the dying days of 1957 the then Liberal government provided unemployment insurance for self-employed fishermen. I am not going to stand up here and say that these self-employed fishermen should not receive assistance; but the point I do make is that if the former minister of fisheries, Mr. Sinclair, who represented a constituency on the west coast, as well, I am sure, as the hon. member for Bonavista-Twillingate, were instrumental in bringing about this change in the Unemployment Insurance Act, I am puzzled why the ministers in the cabinet who come from the prairies have not demanded that farm labour should also be included under the Unemployment Insurance Act. As a result of this omission the farmers both in the east and west have suffered and lost money because they cannot get insurance coverage for farm labour. If the Unemployment Insurance Act can be applied to self-employed fishermen it is certainly much easier to apply it to farm labour.

I should like to read what was said in the Gill report about implementing unemployment insurance for fishermen. I refer to paragraph 26, page 110:

> One area of existing coverage where an employer-employee relationship does not in fact exist is that relating to the coverage of self-employed fishermen. This question is discussed subsequently in this chapter; consequently it will be sufficient here to state our view that this group should not be covered by the unemployment insurance plan that we are recommending. We recognize that there are many economic and social problems in connection with fishermen and the fishing industry in general—

I do not dispute that, but insurance should also be extended to farm labour—

> —but they are not being satisfactorily solved, in our view, by the attempt to make the existing unemployment insurance plan apply. Indeed, this attempt is leading to difficulties and distortions within the fishing industry and in the application of the plan to other groups.

So apparently they felt the plan was not satisfactorily workable as far as farm labour was concerned.

In 1956 some coverage was extended to those in agriculture who were concerned with the raising of poultry and egg grading, and the raising of race horses, saddle horses or light harness horses; but according to the Gill report the commission found it difficult to administer unemployment insurance for farm labour. According to paragraph 20 on page 108 they state:

> We recommend that the general principle be followed of extending coverage as broadly as possible so long as the necessary administrative procedures may be carried out to see to it that the rules of the plan are adhered to in a satisfactory fashion.

If unemployment insurance can be administered in the case of self-employed fishermen, I cannot see that there should be any difficulty in extending unemployment insurance to farm labourers.

The Gill report has been before parliament for the last two years and nothing has been done. I remember well that at the time the commission was appointed it was said: All we need is the Gill report and as soon as the Gill commission's recommendations are made steps will be taken. How long do we have to wait before the Gill report comes before the house for debate and discussion? The report contains valuable information as well as valuable recommendations. Although in some areas the recommendations as far as farm labour is concerned may not be to my satisfaction, nevertheless ways and means can be found whereby unemployment insurance can be made to apply to farm labour.

I took this opportunity to speak on interim supply. As I said, I have brought several bills before the house on this matter but they have been talked out. One reason for opposing them that has been put forward is that the Gill recommendations have never been presented to the house and that until the report is debated and discussed in the house no steps can be undertaken.

I think there is an urgent necessity for this report to be debated. As I indicated, there is a big shortage of farm labour on the prairies at the present time. When our farm organizations recommended that training programs should be implemented to teach men how to operate machinery, I think it is time for the government to take this matter into its hands and see that unemployment insurance for farm labourers is provided in order to help to deal with this problem.

I have met many farm labourers, and these men prefer farm work, but they have to try to get other types of work because if they work on farms they cannot receive unemployment insurance when the work ends. I am sure that if unemployment insurance were extended to them the problem not only of the west but all over Canada will be solved, to the extent that some of these labourers will be available to work on the farms all year round.

As I have done on many other occasions, once again I urge the Minister of Labour to give serious consideration to having the Gill report on unemployment insurance brought before the house for discussion, so that steps can be taken in this regard because, as I have said, the problem is a serious one and the longer it continues the worse it will get.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, having had the privilege of living in an area where, with the possible exception of the St. Hyacinthe area, the most generous farm land in the province is to be found, I feel it my duty to say a few words, this afternoon, on interim supply and especially on the farm situation in eastern Canada, particularly in the province of Quebec.

This last week end I had the opportunity to meet many farmers in my constituency, some which took part in this march to the Quebec parliament, a march that gave the directors of the catholic farmers' union occasion to get over 10,000 farmers together so they could tell the Quebec government about the really difficult situation of Quebec agriculture. I asked some of them: Why did you go to Quebec when you know very well that the stabilization of agricultural prices comes under the federal government? They all told me: It is useless to go to Ottawa because we will never get help from the Pearson government.

I was not surprised, Mr. Chairman, because the facts are there. If you consider the actions of the present Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays), you find in him an auctioneer; on the other hand, you have a student minister who seems to want to promote ARDA in Canada, especially in the province of Quebec.

I would not dream of underestimating the knowledge of my hon. friend from Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Sauvé), but since he has lived in our country's great metropolis, I do not think that he had the advantage of coming in contact with farm people and becoming acquainted with their needs. I realize that the minister has studied a great deal apparently, since he was asked to represent the interests of eastern farmers, but he should not remain a student all his life. Even more important, his studies should not weary him so much that he has to go way out of the country only to be called back to a cabinet meeting on Monday morning. I know he is trying to familiarize himself with the problems of agriculture in Quebec and to secure all the information he can from hon. Mr. Courcy, but whether it is because the latter is too impetuous or because the Minister of Forestry does not understand anything, the fact remains that their relations are quite strained. There again, unfortunately, this is detrimental to Quebec farmers. At the time of the 1963 general election, Quebec farmers thought at last that the new government would bring them heaven on earth.

Mr. Béchard: That is right.

Mr. Paul: I hear the hon. member for Bonaventure say: That is right. It is realized that it is a far cry from promises to facts, and there is many a slip 'twixt the cup and the lip. I would suggest to my hon. friend to ask farmers about the situation of the farming people in the province of Quebec, and the obvious difference between a Conservative administration and the present government.

You can go and ask farmers the difference between the income they are now getting, following the removal of the 30 cents subsidy per 100 pounds of milk, and what they used to get.

My hon. friend from Bonaventure (Mr. Béchard) will go and explain all that to the farmers of the underdeveloped Gaspé peninsula, and I hope also that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) will see his way clear to develop that region, so that it too may benefit from the economic expansion of the province of Quebec. I am not saying agricultural expansion, for never have the Quebec farmers been so ill-treated and neglected as under those two Liberal governments, the Pearson government and the Lesage government.

Mr. Chairman, the income of the farmers of my region has been considerably reduced because of the farm policy of this government. The farmers had been promised that a minister of agriculture would be appointed to look after eastern Canada. We thought that, at last, the federal government, either Tory or Grit, would understand the real farm problems facing eastern Canada. There was promise of such a minister of agriculture for eastern Canada. I understand, however, that the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) should speak of all the other problems, because he is not very interested in agriculture. But the farmers had placed their confidence in this government.

Well, I say to the Liberals, go before the people and ask, for the second time, for the confidence of the farmers. They will be weighed and found wanting.

[Text]

The Minister of National Health and Welfare seems to be making some remark. She has so many problems with her pension plan that I hope she will take part in this debate. I hope she will be able to explain to the house what plans the government has to save agriculture in the rest of the country.

[Translation]

I hope the other members of the province of Quebec are going to rise and support the present endeavours of the Minister of Forestry. I pay him tribute for the commendable efforts he is making to save agriculture. But the minister is alone, and he is to be pitied because there is not another member in the cabinet who really intends to do any planning in order to save our eastern agriculture.

I heard this afternoon the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) during his weekly attendance in this house, blame the former minister of transport, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer) for certain measures—

Mr. Bélanger: Where is John?

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I wonder who is yapping in the corner?

Mr. Bélanger: Where is John?

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I hear the hon. member for Charlevoix (Mr. Bélanger) asking "Where is John" and I must tell him, for his information, if he does not know already, that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) had to attend this afternoon the funeral of one of our colleagues, the hon. member for Waterloo South (Mr. Chaplin).

Mr. Bélanger: He went and preached separatism in the west.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, once again you just heard the parrot.

Mr. Bélanger: We are listening to one right now.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, during the last general election we heard members of a certain party promise pie in the sky and just this afternoon, the hon. member for Villeneuve blamed the seeming inaction of the hon. member for Three Rivers and the former Conservative government, as far as assistance to eastern farmers is concerned.

Mr. Boutin: What have they done?

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, I wish to say to the hon. member for Dorchester (Mr. Boutin) that he can take part in the debate later on, and I believe that he should take that opportunity because, after the next election, we may not have the privilege of seeing him again.

Mr. Boutin: What have you done?

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, it is not surprising to hear these hon. members speak in that way, particularly after we heard their leader declare: Mr. Chairman, it is five o'clock. However, the hon. member for Villeneuve has been sitting in the house for two years. If he does not know the rules of the house, how can the disciples be superior to the master? They want to know what we have done. Well, when the Conservative government was defeated on February 5, 1963, there was on the order paper legislation providing for the establishment of a wheat board for the east, which would really have been efficient to help the farmers obtain feed grain under very favourable conditions.

The Conservative government had also increased from $5 to $7 per ton the subsidy on transport of western grain toward eastern Canada. They had the ARDA legislation passed. Also, the Farm Credit Act was improved and the agricultural stabilization board was established. Moreover, the Conservative government included a minister who really understood eastern agriculture and who wanted to consider the problems and the needs of agriculture in eastern Canada. But, the very people who yelp the loudest today contributed to defeat the government of that day, for they were anxious to go again to the people in order to try, once more, to exploit human misery and stupidity, and also in the hope of forming a government able to better apply an unexplainable, illogical and unrealizable monetary theory—

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, may I direct a question to the hon. member?

Mr. Paul: Certainly.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, can the hon. member explain the present monetary system, if he understands it?

Mr. Paul: Mr. Chairman, the present monetary system is based on common sense, and not on theories which Social Credit members themselves do not understand.

During the last election we heard members belonging to the group on the far left promise $100 per month per capita in the province of Quebec, until the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson)—who was head of the party at that time and who certainly showed more intelligence than those who are interjecting at the present time—warned the Canadian people that such a theory was impracticable and that it was not the monetary policy of the Social Credit party.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think that those individuals have much to their credit to help eastern agriculture and I feel that we can legislate without their help.

I am happy to see the interest with which the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) is following the debate. I ask him to believe that the suggestion I want to make is free from any political consideration and free from any criticism.

Mr. Chairman, I am wondering if the Minister of Justice could not consider the possibility of setting up a commission to find the reasons why feed manufacturers are always exploiting the farmers. As a matter of fact, when the price of pork, eggs and chicken goes up, the feed manufacturers never fail to increase the price of their products; therefore, the farmer is in their power to such an extent that he is no longer master in his own house.

Mr. Chairman, I must say to the Minister of Justice that this problem is very serious and deserves to be studied. I think that all eastern farmers would benefit from an investigation which, in my humble opinion, would prove very clearly that there is an understanding between the feed manufacturers who combine their efforts to enslave the farmers while they unfortunately do not have the income they need to meet their obligations.

When that committee is instituted, I wonder if it should not inquire also about the ever increasing prices of farm machinery which the farmers cannot do without to work their farms competitively because, in that field also, there are abuses and scandals.

I know that the Minister of Justice, although well-meaning, lacks experience. That is easy to understand, because there is not a single farmer among the Liberal members from Quebec.

The minister should consult experts in agriculture. He should have the problem explained to him as it is. He should ask the government to bring in a legislation that will really give an income to our farmers. It is very fine to amend and improve the Farm Credit Act, but here again this does not provide farmers with the income they need to operate their farm. As a matter of fact, farmers do not lack borrowing facilities, but they lack the income which would enable them to face their obligations.

I wonder if we should not give serious consideration to the points made many times in this house and which were so well taken again this afternoon by the hon. member for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp). I refer to the urgent need of implementing that part of the Gill report which would have unemployment insurance apply to farm workers, because farmers are also faced with a serious problem today. Some of them are unable to operate their farm adequately and have to hire helpers, but a few of these, unfortunately, do not want to work there since they are not protected by unemployment insurance.

I am sure the government will realize that those farm workers need to be protected just the same as it was realized that professional fishermen had to be.

Mr. Chairman, I should also like to ask the Minister of Forestry to try and convince the Quebec minister of agriculture of the need for the provincial government, to pass legislation which would parallel that which we have in our statutes concerning crop insurance. We have federal legislation in this field and the provinces have to legislate on the same matter in order to receive the support and assistance of the federal government. I know such a measure is also required to save eastern agriculture. I cannot overlook the many problems facing tobacco growers in the constituencies of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm and Berthier who, often enough, have tremendous losses inflicted upon them by the destructive elements of nature.

I hope that the Minister of Forestry will find a way of convincing Hon. Alcide Courcy, if relations improve. I trust that the hon. minister will suggest to the government of the province of Quebec to legislate in this matter. More particularly, I hope that the government will find a way to help agriculture indirectly introducing some legislation to remedy the problems of unemployment.

In the former parliament, we had an expert in matters of unemployment, that is the present Secretary of State for External Affairs who, at that time, had a solution for every economic ill in this country.

I know that the Secretary of State for External Affairs has no time to examine the problems of domestic policy, but the farmers as well as the industrial workers and employees hope and wish that this government will find some tonic, some remedy which will give work to the 112,000 unemployed still to be found in the province of Quebec at this time, without speaking of the others who have no job and are not registered as claimants at the unemployment insurance office.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the government will find the way to create that paradise on earth it offered to the population of Quebec, and the whole of Canada, during the last election. I am sure that the President of the Privy Council (Mr. McIlraith) will offer some advice and suggestions, so that Canada may really know the economic prosperity which all citizens hope for, not only for the welfare of eastern farmers, but of every farmer and everybody else in Canada.

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, I had no intention to speak about this matter, because I thought that enough time had already been wasted by the Conservatives. Now, I notice that they spent the whole afternoon in politicking, criticism and filibustering, trying to refurbish their political coat of arms. Judging by all I have heard, it does need a good deal of refurbishing in the province of Quebec.

I just heard the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul) say earlier today, that the group sitting on the extreme left was the one which had promised a pie in the sky to everybody in the last general election. But I only notice one thing, that the Social Credit bread we offered in the province of Quebec has not yet been digested by the Conservatives. If it lacked yeast for the Conservatives there was enough of it for the electors at the time.

The Conservatives dare to say that the province of Quebec has no chance in the House of Commons when it supports Social Credit. Now, in 1958, they held 208 seats, and after the clean sweep of 1962, they lost 92 seats. That was the loss sustained by the Conservative party. In 1963, it did not fare better, since they again lost some seats and only kept 94. That is how the people are going about getting rid of the Conservative party.

The Conservatives should have put into practice the advertisement so often heard on radio and T.V., on a program sponsored by a well-known tooth paste. If they had done so they would have reduced cavities in their cabinet by some 49 per cent.

Mr. Paul: Could the hon. member for Mégantic tell me how is it that he is so familiar with the cabinet?

Mr. Langlois: It is because I have been sitting in the House of Commons for two sessions, the longer of which is still to come. It was very easy to get familiar with the first government, no mistake about that.

Besides, a great number moved out before the second election, and it is not because they were too well organized. With bad organization, things do not go too well, of course, and if the people do not throw them out, they move out themselves.

As for the cabinet, I think the public saw about moving quite a few of them at the last general election.

I now come to the references made a while ago by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière about the member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). He seemed to suggest that the hon. member for Villeneuve might not be the appropriate leader. I think we could take a look at the other side of the medal and consider the official opposition. We can see to what extent the leader of the Conservative party has kept the confidence of his followers since he is now walking on a tight-rope, not knowing whether he can pass the next national convention. We should, Mr. Chairman—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I venture to remind the hon. member to whom I have been listening attentively for a few minutes, that he must limit his observations to the bill now before the house.

Before the beginning of these discussions, we agreed that hon. members would be entitled to discuss general matters, but despite that latitude, which is recognized to hon. members, they must, just the same, limit their observations to the matter now under discussion, that is interim supply.

I do not think that strictly political matters, such as the one just discussed have anything to do with government business.

In other words, what we must discuss and consider at the moment is government administration as it is affected by interim supply.

I must therefore suggest to the hon. member that he should relate to the bill now before us the observations he wishes to make.

Mr. Langlois: I thank you, Mr. Chairman. I was referring to the remote causes of our problems but I was just coming back to the point under discussion. If the estimates now under study have not been passed yet, it is due to the research of the Conservative party. One must stick to the facts. Although we have been discussing these estimates for a week, they have still to be passed.

We too will be blamed, being in the opposition, for not voting supply, when it is well known that this is due to the official opposition's obstinacy.

It may be a good thing not to grant supply in a hurry, but in the speeches made in the house this last week by the members of the official opposition—they have spoken 95 to 96 per cent of the time—they did not suggest very many solutions nor did they make any constructive criticisms likely to help the government with regard to this supply.

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: On a point of order. I think it is very clear that the statement we occupy 96 per cent of the time is not in accordance with the facts.

[Translation]

Mr. Langlois: Mr. Chairman, I will take off 2 per cent. I have given approximate figures. There may have been an error. I should perhaps have said 98 per cent. At all events, I will not persist. I said 96 per cent. There may be a margin of 2 over or 2 under.

Coming back to the question raised by the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul) who was speaking a moment ago—

[Text]

Mr. Nasserden: I rise on a question of privilege. The hon. member is now saying that 98 per cent of the time might have been occupied by us. I think that is a misleading statement to place on record, considering the contribution made by each of the opposition parties to this debate.

Mr. McIlraith: I think I have been reasonably patient but I wonder whether we cannot get back to the clause of the bill before the committee and see whether we can make some progress.

[The Deputy Chairman.]

Mr. Langlois: I will get back to the clause, because as far as I am concerned we would like to get these grants through. I agree with the minister that as long as we are talking about the Conservative party we are wasting our time, either here in the house or outside it.

Mr. Nasserden: I have only a few remarks to make and I will make them brief, since I understand it is desired to get through before six o'clock. First, I should like to impress on hon. gentlemen opposite the desirability of bringing forward amendments to the Farm Improvement Loans Act before the recess. This legislation is urgently required by farmers who wish to purchase harvesting machinery in western Canada. Those who are familiar with the situation there know of the need in this regard.

I should like to say a word about the Agricultural Stabilization Act. This act is a good one, but throughout the years it has been in operation certain deficiencies have become apparent. This is especially true with regard to price support of both eggs and hogs. The situation with regard to eggs has been serious in the province of Saskatchewan and, to a lesser extent, in Manitoba during the last several months, and I should like the men on the treasury benches to give this question some consideration.

Earlier in the session I asked the Minister of Agriculture and the government if they would place this whole matter before the agriculture committee for consideration. The minister and the government have played around with this request and we have not been able to take the matter under review. This act has been in operation for approximately seven years and the time has come when the committee should be able to take a good look at it to see whether some improvement could not be made. Surely, over such a period of time the need for certain improvements becomes evident, and surely hon. members of the treasury benches would like an opportunity to deal with this problem. I believe farmers will be asking a number of questions about the neglect which has been shown in this regard.

I wish to congratulate my hon. friend from Three Rivers and those other members who have spoken about the agriculture problem in the province of Quebec. We on this side know something about conditions in that province. At the time we were swept from office we were about to embark on a total onslaught upon the agricultural problems in that province. Members on the other side ridiculed the stand taken by our members and by my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle in this regard. I remember the Prime Minister going up and down in Quebec and the maritimes during the last campaign saying: We will do for you what John Diefenbaker did for the prairies. He got his representation, especially from Quebec, and what has he done? Fourteen months have passed since the last general election and not a piece of legislation worth its while has been placed on the statute books. This situation has culminated in a march on the capital of Quebec, an event which indicates that this matter has not been dealt with in a proper way.

I should like also to congratulate my hon. friend from Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale for bringing forward again his measure urging unemployment insurance for farm labourers. This question has been brought to my attention more than any other in my riding during the last two or three years. I remember that when we appointed the Gill commission to study this problem we were accused of delaying, although we merely wanted to get the facts with regard to this situation. Now the government has had the facts for 14 months but has still not come forward with legislation. I ask hon. gentleman opposite to give this matter, too, their serious consideration.

I think that in view of the hour I will forgo the rest of my remarks I had intended to make to the committee.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Chairman—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Knowles: Just a word. I am sorry the Minister of Industry is not here to reply to a number of requests made by members from Nova Scotia. It seems to me we could let the bill pass, but I would hope that within two or three days the minister might answer the point which has been raised about work at Fairey Aviation. I take it this request is being assented to by the President of the Privy Council.

Mr. McIlraith: Yes. The Minister of Industry was trying to get an opportunity to reply, but unfortunately he had to leave.

Mr. Knowles: I am sure we would all agree to give him an opportunity to make a statement within the next two or three days on orders of the day.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive, agreed to.

Schedules A, B and C agreed to.

Preamble agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McIlraith moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): By consent, before the house adjourns until later this evening, I must point out that there has been a mistake made in the motion proposed on Friday with respect to the extension of the hours of sitting which appears on page 4755 of Hansard for June 26, 1964.

We read in the fourth paragraph the words: "That when this house adjourns at 6.00 p.m. on Tuesday, June 30, 1964..." That was a mistake. It should have read: "When this house adjourns on Tuesday, June 30, 1964...", and so on.

I understand the house leaders agree that this has been a mistake and there was never any discussion or understanding among the parties not to sit until 10.30 tomorrow evening. By simply deleting the words "at 6.00 p.m." the motion will agree with the understanding reached between the parties.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A to inform the house that the question to be raised at ten o'clock this evening is as follows:

The hon. member for Kootenay West: Quebec refunds made to provincial ministry.

NATIONAL DEFENCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING REPLACEMENT OF CHIEFS OF STAFF COMMITTEE

The house in committee on Bill No. C-90, to amend the National Defence Act—Mr. Hellyer—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

An hon. Member: Six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

The Chairman: Order. The house in committee of the whole on Bill No. C-90, to amend the National Defence Act. Shall clause 1 carry?

On clause 1—Duties of chief of the defence staff.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Chairman, surely we are to have a word from the minister. We had second reading of this bill some considerable time ago; it was referred to the special committee on defence, it was discussed there, expert witnesses were called, and the minister is now coming back to the house asking the house to approve the bill. But he does not want us to be just rubber stamps, surely. Can we not hear from him as to the type of evidence that was given at that committee and the general criticisms, if any, of the bill as it was presented? Let the minister outline for us now what has been the decision of the defence committee. We surely should have a report before we proceed any further.

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Chairman, Bill No. C-90 was discussed at some length on second reading in the house on May 8, 11 and 12. Debate at that time included many aspects of defence policy not directly related to the bill, but on May 12 second reading was given and the bill was referred to the special committee on defence. This committee started its deliberations on May 26 and the associate minister and I appeared before the committee at this and subsequent meetings. The committee also heard a number of outside witnesses, including the deputy minister and three former serving officers. Finally, the committee agreed to refer the bill back to the house unamended.

I might say that this committee, under the able chairmanship of the hon. member for Broadview, continues to set an outstanding example of how a committee of this house should conduct its affairs. In view of the lengthy and detailed discussion which has already taken place, I do not think it is necessary at this time for me to add anything further. Bill No. C-90 calls for an amendment to the National Defence Act, substituting one defence chief of staff for the chairman of the chiefs of staff committee and the three chiefs of the individual services. This bill implements government policy set out in a white paper on defence and is the necessary first step to bringing about integration of the three headquarters leading, we hope, to increased efficiency and a reduction in overhead expenditures. I would suggest, Mr. Chairman, that we might now proceed with clause by clause discussion of the bill and then to third reading.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Taking part in the debate, I have no intention of pretending to be an expert on defence matters but I would like to make a few remarks. First of all, as it is the first time I am dealing with defence, I would like to congratulate the minister for having been chosen to preside over the discussions aimed at ensuring our country's defence.

I would like to have forgotten the remarks made by the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin) when a few years ago I had had a promotion, and offer him my congratulations and convey to him my best wishes for success in his duties.

This being said, Mr. Chairman, I would like to recall to my friends on the opposite side, and particularly to those of the province of Quebec, that there was a time, on account of the name that had been made for the Conservatives, when it was more or less prudent to profess to be a Conservative in the province of Quebec. You will recall that after the war of 1914-18—

An hon. Member: We remember.

Mr. Ricard: —under a union government led by Right Hon. Robert Borden, conscription had been enacted for overseas service. At the time the Liberals had promised, as they have continued to do, that conscription would never be enacted under a Liberal government. It was a union government and, during the years that followed the war of 1914-18, as my friends from the province of Quebec remember, because they benefited from it many times and even took advantage of the situation to turn into ridicule those of the Conservative party and to present them as being enemies, and this more particularly of the French Canadian nation. They were accused of having sent the best of our sons from French Canada to be slaughtered.

That happened because the Liberals of that time had not wanted to take the responsibility that was theirs as much as that of the Conservatives.

The Chairman: Order. May I interrupt the hon. member in order to remind him that under the rules, the discussion at the committee stage must be strictly pertinent to the measure under study. I admit that on the first section of a bill, hon. members can embark on a general discussion, but it must be pertinent to the measure under study. Now, if the hon. member reads the explanatory notes, he will see that the purpose of the bill is to make some appointments or changes in the general organization of the Department of National Defence, and I suggest to the hon. member that he should restrict his remarks to the bill now before the house.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I thank you for your remarks; this proves that I was right when I stated at the beginning of my remarks that I did not intend to pose as an expert on national defence matters.

I merely wanted to use these few remarks as a preamble to other observations I want to make, for I intend to recall for a few moments memories which are perhaps a little bitter to my friends from the province of Quebec, by speaking of nuclear weapons. As a matter of fact, our friends from the province of Quebec especially committed themselves during the last election campaign, particularly during the 1963 campaign, to prevent the use of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil, and everybody knows the various phases of the negotiations which finally resulted in the storage of nuclear weapons on Canadian soil.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Ricard: Mr. Chairman, I appreciate that our friends opposite do not like us to remind them—

The Chairman: Order. Once more, I take the liberty of calling the hon. member to order. I will not repeat the remarks I made earlier, and I ask him to limit his comments to the bill before us. Moreover, I do not believe that the nuclear arms issue is included in the subject under discussion.

Mr. Ricard: Thank you again, Mr. Chairman, but in view of the fact that I had but a few moments to prepare my remarks, I, like you, am not surprised to find out that I wander a little, but you must acknowledge the fact that I was still speaking on the matter under consideration, the purpose of which is this country's defence.

In view of the fact that this new measure has to do with the integration of the defence facilities, I would suggest to the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) to take full advantage of the advice of his associate minister. And I would suggest to the latter that he consider his responsibilities as being different from what they were at the time he used to speak to the former associate minister of national defence. I am convinced that he has realized the necessity of those functions and we shall await with eagerness the results of his efforts for the common good.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Chairman, my remarks on the committee stage of this bill can be very brief.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Brewin: If I get that much applause I may be encouraged to prolong my remarks. We explained the views of this party on second reading of the bill. We explained that in our view the bill was a useful piece of machinery in that it led toward the idea of integration at the top level, which we thought was a good thing. Since then our representatives have sat on the committee on defence which spent several sessions going in great detail into the provisions of the bill, as explained by the minister and others. I just want to say that perhaps it is a rather extraordinary circumstance that the committee unanimously agreed to report the bill back without changing one comma or one word in the bill. This is probably a fairly unique record, as far as the house is concerned.

However, I should just like to point out to this committee that that does not mean that we have reached the millenium and arrived at a completely non-partisan view in all matters relating to defence. It just so happens that this particular piece of machinery is one that the minister has succeeded in persuading us is necessary and advisable. We thought so before, and we have not been persuaded otherwise. While on the subject of defence much is to be said about nuclear weapons and integration, this particular bill, which only deals with one aspect of the matter, namely substituting a chief of the defence staff for a committee of the general staff chiefs, we believe will be helpful. We look forward with a great deal of interest to seeing how it works out and we will avail ourselves of later opportunities to discuss the wider issues of defence.

I may say to the minister that I have grave doubts, as he knows about the policy announced by the government in the white paper, and our willingness to accept this bill readily and with the minimum of debate is not to be taken by him or by anyone else as any indication that we will not be vigorous in our attacks on defence policy generally, which we thought, despite the plaudits received by the minister from many quarters, is subject to serious doubt and question in our minds. But this does not seem to be the right opportunity to go into that matter. There is nothing about this bill to complain of, so I think the most sensible thing for us to do, when we have nothing to say, is to say nothing. Therefore I will resume my seat.

Mr. MacRae: Mr. Chairman, I have two or three questions I should like to ask the Minister of National Defence or the associate minister. Perhaps they would make a note of them and either answer them when I finish or when the minister closes the debate.

Would the minister advise whether, in the drafting and preparation of the bill by him and his officials, he had the benefit of the experience of other nations of comparable size or greater size than Canada who have attempted integration of their forces in the past decade or two. If he has had the benefit of that experience, would he advise what that experience showed. I understand that in the forces today there has been a certain amount of unification in the chaplaincy corps, the medical corps, and in the dental corps. It is my understanding that even though these services have been unified there has been no real saving in the final analysis. I think in the case of the chaplaincy corps, it resulted in more senior officers in the corps than before unification took place. I should like the minister to give us his advice about this matter.

Finally, a question which disturbed me in the committee. We have a deputy minister of national defence and an associate deputy minister, and in talking to these officials it seemed to me that the duties of associate deputy minister were rather light and sketchy. There seems to be a waste of talent here, if the associate deputy minister is not given more duties than he has been up to the present. Perhaps the Associate Minister of National Defence would care to comment on that particular matter later.

From what I have seen of the forces in the last few months there seems to be a considerable loss of morale, especially in the air force. I think a great many of the men are uncertain about what will happen to them. The announcement that some four or five hundred officers are to be discharged has had a disquieting effect, so perhaps the minister will report on what he has found in his travels among the forces with regard to the suggestion of integration.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to take too long, but I am interested in the terms of the bill and the provision concerning the appointment of a chief of defence staff. I presume he will be chief adviser to the government. We all remember that during the election the Prime Minister said that he considered Canada had made a commitment in respect of nuclear weapons but that he would do his best afterward to commence to negotiate out of the nuclear role on behalf of Canada. When the minister replies to the various questions I should like him to inform the house if the chief of the defence staff as the chief military adviser to the government will be asked to consider this question, and to make proposals that will assist the Prime Minister in his negotiations with other countries in order to escape from the present nuclear role that we occupy.

Mr. Patterson: Mr. Chairman, I rise to make a few brief observations on this measure. In the course of the debate on May 8 I stated that I thought the minister should be commended for taking a step that was long overdue, because I am fully convinced that in matters of national defence as in so many other fields a streamlining of organization and operation is absolutely essential. I think we are more or less in agreement that is what is needed in parliament, and if we go right across the whole field of endeavour I think we have to bring our organization and operations up to date. That means streamlining in order to make them more effective and more efficient in this modern age.

Therefore I believe that in establishing this one particular post in preference to the several we have had before we are moving in a direction that is absolutely essential and I would suggest that possibly it accentuates the importance of maintaining complete civilian control. One military man will now head up the organization and, as I have said, it seems to me that this should impress upon us the necessity of seeing to it that strong, civilian control is maintained over our whole defence establishment. We believe that the bill as it is now before us is a good measure. The principle is a good one. Therefore we support the bill and we reserve other observations for the various clauses.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Chairman, from the remarks that have been made by the hon. member for Greenwood and other hon. members who have spoken on this very important bill the impression seems to have been left that the committee on defence approved of the bill completely. It is true that technically it was passed without any amendment, but to draw from that the conclusion that the committee thought it was perfect or even a good idea is not a correct assumption. As a matter of fact the bill, although it is a short one and seems innocuous—because in effect all it does is to replace the three chiefs of staff with one chief of the defence forces, together with some consequential amendments—is a most important one. One might get the impression that because of the brevity of the bill it is not one of very great importance. Nothing could be further from the fact, because in the bill we are embarking on two principles as far as national defence is concerned, or we are perhaps embarking on one trend and continuing another which already exists in the National Defence Act.

The fact of the matter is that some members of the committee and numerous witnesses who appeared before the committee, such as Brigadier Malone and, speaking from memory, Air Marshall Curtis and some others, had very grave doubts about the wisdom of proceeding in this manner. In listening to the minister give evidence from time to time before the committee I could not help but get the feeling, and I do not say this in a critical sense, that there was a frightening naïveté in that there seemed to be a subscription to the principle that progress is automatic, that all you have to do to achieve progress is to change things and if you change them it is progress. This, of course, is a very dangerous principle on which to proceed. We have to recognize that changes can be retrogressive as well as progressive, and that you do not just go blundering around changing things for the novelty of it, like some neurotic woman who is always changing the furniture in a room because it gives her a sense of relief or something. I have a feeling that there is a bit of this in the planning of the Department of National Defence.

As far as integration is concerned—and presumably this is the first step in this important matter—I think there is a lot that can be said in favour of it, although not for the replacement of the three armed services by one. I would violently oppose such a program. If we scrap our traditional three forces entirely and substitute therefore one force, perhaps with a green uniform or something of that sort, if we do away with all the traditions that have grown up over the years in the army, navy and air force, especially those army traditions that have grown up within the various units, if this first step we are now taking leads eventually to a program which will have that result, I think it will be a very unfortunate result.

However, the bill does not go that far. It only substitutes one chief of defence forces for the present three chiefs. But in this regard it can be looked upon as the first step in the direction of amalgamation of the three forces, or the replacement of the three forces with a new superforce, or perhaps just the co-ordination of the three forces, a knitting together more closely of the three forces by means of task forces made up of elements and personnel from all three of our forces for a particular duty. If the objective is the last name, I would support this trend fully; but if by starting on this road we end up by having one defence force, one uniform, no traditions and a complete obliteration of the marks of difference between the three forces that exist now, I would have very grave doubts about the wisdom of proceeding that way.

As I said when I commenced my remarks, the bill seems to be brief and to the casual observer a rather innocent sort of thing. It simply seeks to have one man replace three, which seems to be a good idea. But I was rather amazed at the minister's reasoning when he introduced the bill on second reading. He paid tribute to the Associate Minister of National Defence and said something to this effect, that if it had not been for the associate minister and all the work he had done in this connection it would have been impossible for the department to proceed as far as it had in certain directions. Then the minister proceeded to introduce a bill to replace three men with one. Following the same logic, the chief of the defence staff will be able to accomplish only one third as much as the three present chiefs of staff and half as much as the two national defence ministers.

He is going to have quite a job. From now on, we are going to have one chairman of the defence staff reporting to two ministers, whereas up to now we had at least three defence chiefs to keep two ministers occupied. One wonders, if this principle is followed, why it would not apply to the ministry itself. Why should we not combine the two portfolios into one, or perhaps even three portfolios? If you are combining the three chiefs of staff, why not combine the three ministers —the minister, the associate minister and the Minister of Defence Production—into one portfolio, or something of this sort, to eliminate waste and duplication? Presumably, this is the sort of thing we are doing in connection with the armed forces.

Then of course this procedure might run afoul of another government policy which was to divide some departments, such as the Department of Agriculture which, at one time, was to have a minister for the east and a minister for the west. Northern affairs might want to have a minister for the north and one for the south. We have a Department of National Defence with two ministers. I am not complaining about that fact. My remarks in this connection might sound a little facetious, but they are not intended to be. They are simply a test of this theory that by replacing three men with one you are going to effect economies. I do not believe it necessarily follows, because this one man may need far more men to help him in his immediate job than the three men put together required. The savings may not be as great as anticipated.

However, there is another and more important concept, so far as national defence is concerned, in relation to this bill. I want to talk about it for just a few minutes, Mr. Chairman. If one peruses statutes of Canada, he finds that there are fairly extensive acts setting up the various departments of government. Parliament has been quite specific in these acts in outlining the responsibilities of these departments and the various acts that are to be administered by them. In the case of the Department of National Defence, the National Defence Act is very brief so far as setting up the framework of the department is concerned. Practically all it does, in essence, is to appoint the chiefs of the various defence forces and set out some other main points of this type. Then, there is a great deal of detail with regard to non-public funds and matters of that sort, which really are not involved in setting out the framework of the department. However, the putting of the flesh on the bones, as it were, of the Department of National Defence is all done by orders in council, regulations, directives of the chiefs of staffs, and by some other means. There are no details set out in the National Defence Act that correspond to what is done in the acts of parliament which establish the various other departments of government and which give to the departments the various acts for which they are responsible. This leads me to a very grave problem which we fear this bill seems to ignore.

The government is consciously embarking on this type of policy and therefore it is the responsibility of the government. You can argue both sides of the case, as many witnesses did before the committee. You cannot therefore prove categorically that one thing is right and the other is not so good, or one will work under certain circumstances and not under others. The main question is this, whether parliament shall have, in effect, one individual, in this case the chief of the defence staff, who is going to be answerable to the minister for the defences of the country, or whether you are going to have a council, each member of which is appointed as a result of legislation and whose duties are specified in that legislation, so that he can be held responsible if a particular phase of defence is not up to par. There have been times in the past in British history when they had the chief of staff concept, that is total responsibility of a single individual rather than the committee system. Back in the last century, they found that there was grave danger in this system because inefficiency in the defence forces could grow up without parliament being advised sufficiently of the situation or without parliament being able to pin the responsibility on a particular individual.

In this system, the minister finds himself, in the last analysis, completely dependant on the advice of one man. If that man has particular theories as to what defence should be, it is only natural he will gather around him other senior officers who think in the same way as he does. He will then be in a position to have unanimity in the planning of the defence forces. If someone disagrees with him, he is only an adviser and can be replaced by someone who is more amenable to the points of view of the commander in chief concept which we have in this bill—one chief of the defence forces. As various witnesses pointed out in the committee, it is absolutely essential in a theatre of war, under wartime conditions, that the commander of the forces should have absolute control as to what he should do and that his orders cannot be questioned by a committee, countermanded at will, and so on. This is not a military operation. We are talking about the administration of a department of government which is set up to safeguard the country as best it can by having defence forces and administering them efficiently.

Now, how they operate in the field is a question for the military experts. This is not a question for civilians who are not trained in that particular profession. But when it comes to the general question of administration, it seems to me the minister would be in a far sounder position if, as is the case in Britain, we had the committees system where the various members of the appropriate defence committee are responsible to the minister. I am using this term loosely, not in the technical sense. In Britain they have particular names for these committees, depending on whether they are for the navy, army or air force. There is the air force board, the army board and the admiralty board in the United Kingdom. In effect the members of a board are directly responsible to the minister and are not just in an advisory capacity to the chief of that particular branch of the armed services. In this way valid differences of opinion become known to the minister.

I want it clearly understood that it is not because of any lack of confidence in any particular individual that I have doubts about the system proposed. It is just because human nature being what it is nobody is perfect, and in my judgment when you have one man with total responsibility for large segments of the defence forces, and for policy, there is a certainty that, being human, he is going to make mistakes. Then there is a danger that these mistakes will not become known and recognized as quickly as they should be, because it is human nature to tend to defend one's position, whether it is right or not.

When you have this sort of set-up there is a danger that a bad decision will be defended for a long time, in fact until a great deal of damage has been done, and it will not become evident that there is a mistake until a lot of effort and possibly money has been wasted pursuing a particular course.

If we even had an inspector general of the defence forces, that would be an advantage, because then you would have the effectiveness of the forces under review by a technical expert who would be reporting directly to the minister on any flaws which his judgment told him existed in the armed forces. This would be a reasonable precaution. Otherwise the minister would be in the very difficult position in that his chief adviser on defence matters would be the man responsible for the shape, posture and condition of the defence forces. Under those circumstances weaknesses in the set-up would tend to be screened from the view of the minister, so long as it were possible to do so. In fact there might not even be a conscious screening of dangers from the minister. These dangers might be pointed out to the chief of the defence forces but, because in his own mind he sincerely believes the forces are the best possible under the circumstances, he would inform the minister of his own view and the minister would not be made fully aware of other points of view.

I do not want to prolong this discussion. I have spoken longer than I expected to, but I just wanted to point out that members of the defence committee and witnesses who appeared before it raised grave doubts as to whether this is an improvement or a retrogression. Such doubts could be cured by having a defence council. There should be some latitude as to who the members of that council should be, but their positions would be specified by a bill, similar to this one, amending the National Defence Act. In fact this could be done, whether we had separate defence forces with three chiefs of staff or just one chief of staff. This is something that should be carefully examined by the government.

I, and many others far more expert than I would ever hope to be, have misgivings about this proposal. In other words many of us are not sure whether certain aspects of the bill are advancement or retrogression, in so far as efficiency of defence work in peacetime and the administration of it by the department are concerned. However, presumably on the best advice it could get, the government has embarked on this program. It is the government's responsibility to do that. All I can say is, heaven help it if it is a blunder.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, the position of our party in this connection was set out by the hon. member for Calgary North, when he said during the course of the committee hearings:

> Mr. Chairman, I have really no further questions to put to the minister. I am not going to take up the time of the committee to repeat the points already made here, but I would like to say that I think that a lot of the points that Brigadier Malone brought up, which the minister has dealt with, chiefly in regard to the dangers of what amounts to a supreme commander, and particularly from the point of view of leaving the minister, whoever he may be, in the position of having only one military adviser, is a very dangerous precedent. It is a matter of going back, as Brigadier Malone pointed out, to a system which was tried for a long time in Great Britain and other countries and found wanting. I regret that the type of organization, more along the line of the one which exists in Great Britain or the type of thing which was suggested by Brigadier Malone, is not being put into effect.

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, I spoke at some length prior to this bill being sent to the special committee on defence, but there have been some points raised during the committee hearings that I feel I must underline once more.

As a member of the defence committee and on behalf of the official opposition I do say that while the principle of the unification of command is endorsed by us, yet we have some reservations about some of the consequences thereof. First I want to reiterate what my colleague, the hon. member for Queens, has said—and the minister knows my represensations and queries on this—that we are not satisfied the minister has the necessary framework of civilian advisers responsible to himself, rather than to the department.

Second, so long as we are talking about the unification of command, that is one thing; but there has been a great deal of loose talk about integration.

Frequently from the government we hear some odd predictions as to what may happen by July, 1967, without really thinking it out. I must warn the minister in this regard that there should be as full a disclosure as possible. Speed need not necessarily be the principal motive of the minister. I have had an opportunity during the last few weeks to talk to many of our servicemen and, let me assure the hon. gentlemen, there are a lot of questions in their minds. I do not know to whom in the armed services the minister has spoken. I know what happens when a minister visits a military establishment. He gets the official view, but no one dares to talk frankly from the lower levels. This is endemic in the system.

As a consequence of the reduction of personnel there were some 500 airmen selected for release recently. I believe we have seen headlines saying that 10 per cent of flight crews were to be released. This information may be reasonably accurate, or it may not. In any event I must say there is a great deal of dissatisfaction in the air force about what is happening in connection with these releases. I should like the minister to tell us what criteria were used to establish which men should be released. I have heard stories that young pilots whose careers were entirely ahead of them, men who had been trained at tremendous cost, are chiefly among those to be released. And where are they going? I am told many of them are going south of the border to obtain employment with United States air lines. I am informed that in training one unit where there were eight instructors, seven of them have been slated for release. I would wish that this information were inaccurate, because if it is true it represents a monumental blunder to take seven eighths of a unit's training instructors and release them. What sort of efficiency results from a decision of that kind? If it is intended to release personnel from the army and the air force there are hundreds of jobs where men are piloting desks—jobs being done by men who are approaching the end of the road and serving their time before drawing their pensions. Those should be the men to be released at this time, rather than young men who have been trained and from whom we have so far received little return.

The minister may not know this, but actions of this type are seriously affecting morale. It may be true that within the junior ranks the prospect of integration is popular in certain sectors. However, I am speaking about these present releases. Actions now being taken have really shaken morale. I should like the minister, as I say, to give us some indication of the criteria being used to select personnel for release. Is it being done by using an IBM machine—certain cards being put into the machine, and out they come for release, those with certain qualifications or characteristics? We need some clarification of all these things; otherwise we can only be critical of the action of the department in selecting the personnel who are being released at this time. If the operation is carried out in this way in the air force, what is going to happen in the army? Is it the intention to take young officers who have been trained at high cost and from who we have received little in return, and release them, first?

I can assure the minister there are many other sectors within each of the services where the administrative set-ups could be combined. The recruiting services are an example. The practice on some occasions has been to take a pilot from overseas and put him in a recruiting office. Surely the department can do better than that. Surely you do not need an officer from each of the services to man a recruiting office. Take movement control of personnel: Every service has its own way of doing things. Pay is also handled differently. These, I suggest, are the areas in which real economies of personnel could be secured without a reduction in efficiency. The armed services are still fighting a considerable paper war, and the men employed in the services are the people who will tell you they are doing this.

Since I have spoken before, and since other members on this side of the house have made some inquiries of the minister, I think I will end my discussion of this item and bring it to a close.

Mr. Churchill: I think we should examine this bill which has come back to us from committee very carefully.

I am not suggesting the committee did not do an effective piece of work in examining the measure, but on reading over the evidence taken before that committee I express some disappointment that the subject was not covered in more detail.

The committee heard a statement from the minister and then listened to certain expert witnesses including Air Marshal Curtis and Major General Macklin. Officials of the Department of National Defence gave evidence also, and the committee heard a considerable statement from Brigadier Malone. But I do think the committee might usefully have made a study of the Lord Esher report which has been referred to on several occasions, as well as a study of the system now operating in the United Kingdom, and incorporated its findings on these two matters in the report.

As a matter of fact, I asked for this on May 8 as reported at page 3091 of Hansard. My words at that time were:

> So I sound this cautionary note at this time for a consideration of the matters drawn to our attention by Brigadier Malone—

This refers to various articles he had written > —for a study of the Lord Esher report, for a study of the system operated at the present time in the United Kingdom, so that we do not, in the haste for reform, make what might become a very serious mistake.

That is the situation which faces us. Eagerness for reform should not lead the government or the House of Commons into an area of error, and I believe there is a chance for very serious error in the reform measure put before us in the present bill.

I realize that the minister has had a first class piece of public relations done on his efforts, and there has been the usual brainwashing with regard to his activities. People are led to believe that this is a major step forward and that something like this should have been done years ago. As my seatmate the hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean) has pointed out, it may turn out to be a major step backward because—and I said this on second reading of the bill—the minister is reverting to something which was in effect in Canada 60 years ago, something that was in effect in Britain 60 years ago, and it was changed in both places. Why is he reverting to something that was found faulty in those years. In the interval I do not doubt for one minute that certain discrepancies have crept in, not only here but in Great Britain, and adjustments have had to be made.

We have had the experience in Canada of the blunders that were made in the first world war, and they were numerous; and the blunders that were made in the second world war, and they were numerous. We also had a situation in Korea when we were not ready for that type of action and had to draw hastily from the militia units to throw up a force to dispatch to Korea; and when the 27th brigade was set up in Germany, we had to improvise and draw from various units in this country to provide a composite brigade for that operation. So I would say that although our experience in war has some worth-while aspects, we have committed as a country a great many blunders.

We should be very careful that we are not committing another blunder at the present time. That is why I think very careful consideration of the proposal of the minister is required. I would not be taking up the time of the house on this matter tonight were it not for the fact that I consider this step to be of very great seriousness. I do not profess to be an expert on warfare, but I have made a study of the conduct of war over the years and I am familiar with some of the problems that have faced governments in time of war, the difficulties of commanders in chief commanding in the field, and I have read quite a bit about the difficulties that have beset governments in dealing with the administration of defence departments in this country and in other countries.

So let us not just lightly rubber stamp this bill and say, "Oh, this is a very bright idea from a rising young star in the Liberal party", which is about what is said in the press releases which go out about the minister. He wants me to believe those press releases, but not the ones that pertain to the air division over in Europe, as he said today in the house. I am to believe the complimentary press releases. Let us not be in too great a haste about this matter.

What is the minister attempting to do? He talks, but has not explained this very clearly to the public and the services, about the unification or integration of the services. I think he should make clear in the house tonight exactly what is the situation in so far as the three services are concerned. I read in the committee report of Air Marshal

Curtis talking to scores of officers, and he finds that in the services there is uncertainty as to what is happening. Surely, therefore, it is incumbent upon the minister to make a clear statement right here in the House of Commons so that the people in the services will know where they are going and what is ahead of them. Let him tell us whether we are going to have everybody in one type of uniform, all integrated together; or are we going to keep the three distinct fighting services and unify them in combined operations as was done in war, and leave it at that? Is his unification going to apply only to the administrative services, and that level? These are things that should be said, and said by the minister so that the responsible word can go out.

We do not want to lose able young men from the services, or able older men, just because of a scheme of integration which is not well understood. Why should men who have put many years into the services be now considering getting out in a hurry before some unknown change happens? The minister should give reassurance to these people who for years have been performing commendable service on behalf of their country. These are some of the uncertainties that should be cleared up, and cleared up now when we are discussing this bill which will set the pattern for future activity in this connection.

I mentioned the fact that I hoped the minister would have given us tonight a full report on the examination that the defence committee conducted with regard to this bill. The minister continually disappoints me. He gives a very short statement; he attempts to lull us into sleep, and we are to pass things just because everything is all right in this best of all worlds. Why did he not give us an exact, clear and comprehensive account of what transpired in that committee? He did not even mention the names of the expert witnesses. I noticed that when he was dealing with some of the statements made by Brigadier Malone, he brushed them aside. Brigadier Malone had made his presentation earlier to the committee, on about June 3, and on June 9 the minister offered his rebuttal. There is this interesting paragraph in the proceedings of the committee:

> In commenting on what Brigadier Malone had to say, I think that in fairness to him I should point out that he himself admitted that, due to the fact that he had been out of the country recently, he had not been able to follow the proceedings of the committee prior to his appearance. Thus, he was not aware of the discussions that had previously taken place, including my statement to the committee on May 26.

The inference there is that Brigadier Malone, having missed the statement from on high on May 26, was of course, not apprized of what really had been going on and was not competent then to offer criticism. I have read the statement that was made on May 26, and I cannot say that I learned much more, if anything, from it than what the minister had said when we debated this subject in the house. So the minister attempts to brush aside Brigadier Malone.

Let me point this out to the house, because the house has to take the responsibility; we do not foist this off on the defence committee. The house must know what it is about. It is the house that passes this bill after study by the committee; it is the house that has to make the decision. I find that there were three points of view presented to the committee by these three distinguished gentlemen who appeared there. Air Marshal Curtis, as I take it, did not like the idea of abolishing the heads of the three services. Major General Macklin was all for that change, and in his usual forceful and forthright manner he expressed his opinion on quite a number of subjects pertaining to defence, and one of them had to do with that. I have the greatest respect for Major General Macklin and have followed his career with a great deal of interest. I had the pleasure of working with him for a short interval toward the close of the war; I have followed his writings over the years with intense interest and have agreed, I think, with about 99 per cent of them. But I note that Major General Macklin had this to say with regard to the appointment of one person as supreme commander. As reported at page 210 of the committee report he said:

> The whole thing depends upon the wisdom of the government in selecting the right chief. That means a man in whom they have confidence and who is qualified.

That is the nub of the matter, and this statement will apply to any government as the changes are made.

Now, what happens if the government selects the wrong chief? The system breaks down. This was the testimony that we got from Brigadier Malone, as he based it on the experience in England. I think from our knowledge of the first and second world wars we would say that that is where the danger lies. You do not always select the right man, and then trouble occurs between the minister of defence and the commander in chief. One or the other has to give ground. We were not free from that in the second world war, when the government, I judge, was in a bit of a quandary for quite a while with regard to its commander in chief in the field before we invaded Europe. There was quite a little trouble in the first world war with a minister of national defence who caused endless concern to the people serving under him, and even more concern to his cabinet colleagues. So that getting the right man for the job is not easy.

As Brigadier Malone pointed out from the experience in Britain, that is where the trouble arises. You may have a very strong minister and a weak supreme commander. Or vice-versa; you have a very strong supreme commander and a weak minister, and you get into trouble. One or the other has to give way.

I should like to put on the record what Brigadier Malone said about this in his submission to the committee, as reported at page 146 of the report; and I would hope that the committee of the whole house would weigh some of this evidence. He said:

> Assume for a moment that we could find a paragon of all the virtues to occupy the post of chief of the defence staff, in fact, a commander in chief. Look at the position in which he would be placed. All his professional associates would be junior to him, accepting his directions and orders and therefore not likely to challenge his decisions and no power to veto his projects. Above this one, top expert or professional soldier are the amateurs or civilians, in many cases not qualified or prepared to question his professional advice. It is hard to believe that such a top chief would not have some blind spots, some professional biases, some personal prides or fixations which would cause disaster. Surely the matter of national defence and the huge costs involved should not be subjected to such hazards. Certainly from an individual standpoint it is much easier to operate by yourself and be the complete boss and not have the problem worked through a committee, but it is not the individual interest we are thinking of here but the question of what is the right thing for the country.

The late Mr. Grant Dexter wrote on this subject back in 1942, and although Mr. Dexter and I disagreed on political matters I always respected the very able research that he put into any subject on which he wrote. This is what he wrote in 1942, and it is applicable to this particular case. He is speaking of the action taken in England in 1904:

> The commander-in-chief was abolished for reasons which the Esher committee regarded as decisive. They were expressed by Mr. Balfour in the British house of commons and they apply to any minister who tries to control the army without the aid of an army council. To retain the commander-in-chief, said Mr. Balfour, meant that he would advise the secretary of state—then minister in Canada—and thereby the secretary must be destroyed. He would inevitably become only the nominal head—the puppet of the commander-in-chief, the mouthpiece only. ...For a minister to deal directly with individual military experts is to place both minister and expert in a 'false position'. The minister must either confirm the expert's decision, in which case his position as superior authority is a mere form, or he must enter into the reasons for and against and decide afresh, in which case the expert becomes superfluous. It is bad organization to have two men (the minister and the expert), one over the other, to do the same business.

Brigadier Malone observed with regard to that:

> It is my own conviction that the defence forces of Canada will be much more effectively directed by a defence council of both military and civilian personnel, rather than by a single officer directly under the minister. I would further suggest that each member of the defence council should be specifically charged by statute with clearly defined responsibilities. In my own opinion areas of actual responsibility are far too vague under our present system. I am convinced that these senior service members of the defence council should take their orders from the council as a whole not from a single commander-in-chief—or chief of the defence staff—call him what you will.

That, Mr. Chairman, is the nub of the matter. Do you have one supreme commander, or do you have a defence council which gives instructions to that commander?

Mr. Hellyer: Would the hon. gentleman quote the source of the article to which he referred?

Mr. Churchill: That last statement was Brigadier Malone.

Mr. Hellyer: I thought that was Grant Dexter you were quoting.

Mr. Churchill: It was the submission of Brigadier Malone immediately after he had read the comment made by Grant Dexter.

The minister attempted to answer some of the questions which Brigadier Malone put in front of him when he made his submission to the committee on defence, and I should now like to bring the minister back into the picture again. As reported at page 212 he said:

> I would like, therefore, to take each of these questions in turn.

These are the questions put forward by Brigadier Malone.

> The first: "Will the proposed chief of defence staff be accepting orders, directions and decisions from the defence council, or will he, in fact, be imposing his decisions on this council?"

The ministers goes on as follows:

> The answer to this is that the chief of the defence staff will be accepting orders from the minister and associate minister. These orders will be based on decisions taken following full discussion within the defence council.

So here you have two men, the minister and the chief of the defence staff, and the chief takes his orders directly from the minister. The minister may not know anything about defence.

Mr. Mandziuk: Does this one?

Mr. Churchill: What position does this put the chief of the defence staff in? I continue quoting:

His second question was: "Will other members of the defence council be in a position to question him or overrule him or veto his decisions?"

The minister replied:

The defence council will be the senior policy making group within the Department of National Defence under the chairmanship of the minister and all members of the defence council will be perfectly free at all times to ask any questions they so desire and to express their opinions on any subject which is before the council.

He did not answer the question except in part. The question was: Will they be able to overrule him or veto his decisions? The minister simply says that they can express their opinions on any subject which is before the council. That is what he says to us here: You can express your opinions on any subject with regard to defence. I recall that when I asked him last year in the defence committee if he wanted the advice of that committee he said "no". We sat for week after week knowing that the minister did not really want our advice. He does not want mine tonight, but I am giving it to him.

The third question was: "Will other members of the defence council be junior and subordinate to him?"

To the chief of the defence staff. The minister replied:

The answer to this is...that the membership of the council will consist of the minister, the associate minister, the ministers' parliamentary secretaries, if applicable, the chief of the defence staff, the vice-chief of the defence staff, the deputy minister and the chairman of the defence research board. Of these, only the vice-chief of defence staff can be considered subordinate to the chief.

Then there are some other questions which I do not think I will go into at this time, with the exception of this one:

"Will the chief of the defence staff be the chief adviser to the minister? Officially, will other members of the defence council have to speak to the minister through him?"

This was the minister's answer:

The answer to the first part of the question is that the chief of the defence staff will be the senior military adviser to the minister. To the second part, other members of the defence council will speak in the defence council directly to the minister, if required, and...both the deputy minister and the chairman of the defence research board will have direct access to the minister at all times.

Another question asked by Brigadier Malone was:

"Will the actual authority for carrying out the government's policies as directed by the minister be vested in the council or in the chief of the defence staff?

This is the crux of the matter. The minister replied:

The answer to that is that the policies of the government will be carried out by several members of defence council in accordance with their responsibilities.

That is not very clear. I think what the minister is aiming at is having a supreme chief of the defence staff to whom he will give his orders, and that chief will give his orders down the line. The council that the minister talks about will just be an advisory council, free to express their opinions on any subject under the sun but having no authority to give instructions. In my opinion this is the point at which the mistake is being made.

According to the experience we had in this country many years ago and the experience in Great Britain, and both countries have had experience of war, there is an advantage in having a council which takes the responsibility and transmits its orders to the chief of staff rather than having him as a supreme commander. It is not only a question of limited aspects of the service. The council, if it had full authority, in addition to surveying all the aspects of military service would be able to give instructions so that there would be a proper balance in our services. The function of our armed services is to be ready for war in case of emergency and the council should be prepared to give the necessary instructions, with the minister being answerable to parliament for the activities of that council of which he would be a member. But if the bill of the minister is accepted we will have the minister still responsible to parliament for activities within defence, but there will be one man and one man only who will carry the responsibilities one step further. If there is a conflict of interest somebody will have to go, either the minister or the chief of the defence staff.

This is the danger inherent in the bill before us and it should be guarded against. Some may say: The man we have in mind for the chief of the defence staff right now is a very able man, and I express no doubt on that score whatsoever. Perhaps his successor will be too, and maybe his successor; but a bill of this nature is long term, long range planning. Ministers come and go and sometimes there will be an experienced minister and sometimes an inexperienced minister. If there is an inexperienced minister or a minister who during the course of his functions in that job is detracted by other pressing problems, or suffers temporary illness or something of that nature, the supreme commander gains even more power.

Therefore when we make such long range plans we should be extraordinarily careful about what we are doing. The minister has not yet pointed out to the house in what way his plan is superior to the one put before the house by some of us on this side, when we spoke earlier in the debate, and put before the committee on defence by Brigadier Malone. Let the minister tell us the weaknesses, if there are any, of Brigadier Malone's submission and the corresponding strength, if there is any, of his proposal because, as I say, this is a very serious matter indeed and it will have its effect in the future.

We have no idea, and in my lifetime we never have had in this country, when war will break out, or where, or the contribution that Canada will be called upon to make. We have fooled ourselves all through the 20th century. We are very peaceful people, we are not going to participate in war, and all of a sudden we do. Then we find ourselves unprepared for it. Let us profit from the mistakes of the past and make sure that in the proposed reform that is before us now we are doing the right thing. If this is the right thing to do, why was it discontinued in 1904 in Canada and in Great Britain? Why has it not been reverted to in Great Britain? These are the questions I should like the minister to answer.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, we have before us Bill No. C-90, an act to amend the National Defence Act. I have read the debates of May 8, 11 and 12 and I was in the house at the time. I have had an opportunity to examine the proceedings of the defence committee, and I feel that as a committee of the whole house we have a very definite duty to go into the bill most thoroughly and also into defence policy generally. There has been enough material brought before the house to show that there is a very strong difference of opinion. Many points were raised by the last two speakers and all of them were good. I would only add to them the speech made by the hon. member for Calgary North during the debate early in May.

A lot of questions were asked of the minister, I don't know, but he seems to see all and hear all, and he speaks damn all when he gets on his feet. I think this is something that he should take to heart. These questions are not put to him to put him on the spot. We are all interested in the defence of this country. We are interested in the defence policy of the present government. We are interested in expenditures. We are interested in how far we are going and not in an airy-fairy ten year plan without a fuller explanation.

The minister referred to his white paper and said that sometimes—I have not got his exact words here—there has been too much criticism; it is too detailed. I put it to him now that there is a happy medium. In other words, he can say something after hearing all and seeing all. I have no doubt the minister, in his capacity as minister and a member of the cabinet, has many things put to him. There are considerations and great ponderings going on, but some of these things must seep down. We are not getting it in this house. Naturally, this bill does not cover all these things, but I do think we are entitled to get at these things.

If I understood the associate minister today when he was asked if he had heard any complaints about the cutting down of the armed forces, he said, "Not to my knowledge." Perhaps the minister heard that statement. I ask the minister now, has he heard any complaints, general or specific, from specific people? Has he had any complaints from those who are under him in the armed services in the highest capacity, people upon whom he must rely? What have they told him? We heard the hon. member for Edmonton West ask about the reductions in the armed services. The questions he asked were good ones because I have heard them myself from members of the armed services. He mentioned air crew and members of the air force. I have heard this complaint myself. I should like the minister to tell us how he went about these reductions. The member for Edmonton West made a very excellent speech about these people.

We undertook a very heavy recruiting campaign on which we spent a lot of money to obtain these people. They received their university education along general lines, and then we find there is a terrific cutting off of these men who have come into Canada's armed forces with the intention of making it a career. Were these men cut off simply—I see the minister shaking his head, so I imagine now we are going to get the policy in connection with these cut-backs.

An hon. Member: He has no policy.

Mr. Pugh: I think he may have. We are entitled to know whether that is a good policy, and where he got it from. Was it a slide rule deal? Was it an ivory tower deal? How was it arrived at? Some of these young men are married and they have devoted their lives to the particular branch of the armed services to which they belong.

I was speaking about the air force. The training of air crew members, apart from their academic training, is fantastically detailed and very expensive to this country. The member for Edmonton West asked about these desk-bound boys. What was the proportion of these men amongst those who were discharged, or whose discharges are pending? Are we clipping off too many of these air force people who have that detailed knowledge? Are we retaining a great many ivory tower people who probably have greater seniority? I agree with the point made by the hon. member for Edmonton West. He said we had trained these men and they will be needed in our armed forces.

I have gone into this matter in considerable detail. Unless we do get answers from the minister, I think we are entitled to come back and back and back until we do get answers commensurate with reason. The minister gave a slight dissertation on May 12 which is reported in Hansard. I have read that speech several times and I ask myself, what did he say other than the broadest generalities? We have in this bill the big chief concept which has been gone into so thoroughly by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre. He is quite right. You put everything in one basket and things can happen. I think the remarks he made deserve a thorough answer from the minister. I should like to have an answer myself because I had notes on this subject. I wanted to know why we were going to this one chief idea, when so much criticism has been levelled against it down through the history of armed forces, not only here but elsewhere in the world.

There is no doubt that the Minister of National Defence has made a thorough study of this subject, but we do not have the benefit of his study. I think we are entitled to it. I like that point; who takes orders from whom? I can see the minister, if something did occur which would require his sterling advice on military matters, based on his long background as a military man, arguing with his one chief. Perhaps there would not be an argument because I know the minister fairly well. I can see him pointing his finger at that chief and saying, "You do this". He might be wrong. As one hon. member remarked in referring to the C.B.C., heads will roll. When you get into trouble, heads cannot roll. We have had troubles before. We had a build-up in the armed services on the basis of seniority, and in the last war we had tremendous trouble from policy to actuality. The minister knows that because I am sure, in his capacity as Minister of National Defence, he has studied that situation and studied it carefully.

Then, I am wondering about the Glassco commission and how far it has gone. If we take the minister's word, then I suppose it is part of the ten year plan. The hon. member for Calgary North referred to this and asked what the recommendations of the Glassco commission were. The minister said that, apart from the integration of the forces and increased responsibility to the deputy minister, as outlined in the white paper, many of these recommendations were, in fact, now being implemented. I believe this committee is entitled to know how far you are going to go. What is the policy? What is the objective? What are the total military objectives? How are you going to accomplish them, bearing in mind the questions of equipment, material, manpower and the amount of money we can spend on these things We have not had that. It is sort of like this flexible deal. You go back to it many times and you say, "keep her flexible". How flexible have you got to be?

I go back again to that one instance, the chopping of men and personnel in the armed forces, and the breakdown of morale. I cannot use any other word because that is exactly what has happened. We should know what is going on; we should know how far we are going.

The minister smiles, because I think he has thought of the answer. He is going to say, "Well, you know there are a lot of things I would love to tell you boys about, but I am sorry they are locked away in the secret files and they must remain there." But I do not think he has given us enough. In common sense, I don't think he has given us enough.

We read too much in the newspapers; too many little kites are being flown. We should have these things put before us in an orderly fashion, so that if there are any areas which the minister cannot delineate he should tell us about them and perhaps, within reason, we would say, "Well, all right."

I go back to the minister's reaction when he was in opposition, when he was a hard working, intermediate backbencher, though possibly on the front bench of the opposition. Now that we are in opposition we want to know more, and if there is an explanation which falls short of what is expected, then we should keep the ball rolling and say, "I don't understand that answer. We should know more." I know the minister knows exactly what I am referring to because these were supplementary estimates which galloped on for the longest time in history and a good deal of the verbiage in Hansard was produced by the clack of the present minister, who was the great defence man for the opposition at that time.

He was a critical critic. I think I have put my point across and I would repeat what I said at the outset, that this a committee of the whole house. The minister had his say in the defence committee. He may or may not have answered the questions to our satisfaction, but the hon. member for Edmonton West said there were reservations, and if that hon. member has reservations I am sure they are just. I think we should hear further. I do not think he is the type of man who wants to prod and pry and unleash vital information, like a regular Mata Hari deal. We are making a common sense demand and we are entitled to have the answers because this committee, in the final analysis, is going to pass not only Bill C-90, but also the minister's estimates and the various other productions which he is going to present from now until such time as he is elevated, removed or moved out. But so long as he is sitting there we are going to have these things put before us, and in a great deal more detail.

Mr. Martineau: I do not intend to say very much on this.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martineau: I am glad to see I have support from the other side because it helps the morale to find such enlightened people among others, as the hon. member for Vancouver Quandra, a distinguished member of the committee, approving in advance what I may say on this measure.

So far as integration is concerned, I think we on this side have amply manifested that we are in accord with the principle of integration of the forces, and that is the natural outcome of the vast changes which have taken place in military technology in the post-war years. The roles of the traditional services can no longer be clearly defined and they overlap one another. In view of that development it is only natural that we should use ways to bring the organization of the forces in line with it.

But I think this bill has been greatly overrated and promoted out of all proportion by the minister, his worthy associate and everyone else connected with it. I remember the minister telling the committee that Bill C-90 would make our armed forces the most modern anywhere in the world, but if you ask him how he substantiates such a sweeping statement all he says is, "We are bringing forth an act to amend national defence administration."

If you closely analyse this bill you find there is only one substantive disposition in all of it, clause No. 1, which relates to section 19 of the act, and which refers to the appointment of a chief of the defence staff who will be replacing the present three chiefs of service. There is nothing very revolutionary in such a proposal, and by integrating the chiefs of staff this does not mean we are creating, to use his own words, the most modern force in the world. I notice the minister laughing, and also his associate minister. They think this matter is very funny—and it may be; but in any event this measure in itself does not improve the effectiveness of the forces, nor does it effect any real economy in military spending.

I ask the minister if he can prove that this is not so?

Mr. Hellyer: It is not.

Mr. Martineau: The minister made an observation?

Mr. Hellyer: I just said it is not so.

Mr. Martineau: The minister says it is not so, but he did say in the committee that the purpose of the bill was twofold—one, to make the forces more effective and, second, to realize economies in military spending. With regard to making the forces more effective and modern, all we have here is a proposal to appoint this chief of the defence staff who will be reporting direct to the minister, and in the eyes of the minister this is performing a great revolutionary modification to our armed forces. He thinks our forces will be a lot more modern because they will be under one chief of general staff, instead of under three persons.

You might well have some kind of an armed force belonging to a very backward country east or west or south of Timbuktu, a newly emerging nation, but all it has are a couple of soldiers with bow and arrows, and these are all placed under one man. But from the fact that these people have been placed under one commander, instead of three, I ask: Does that make them any more modern? The minister may think this comparison has no application to the present case; but it has a direct application. All we are doing here is integration by the top instead of by the bottom, down below. Integration in such a way is simply integration on paper; that is all the minister has so far performed.

I know the minister has a good publicity staff. His public relations are excellent. No doubt they are warranted. He is an amiable man. He knows how to make friends and influence people. He has probably read all the right books on the subject and I think perhaps in this respect the minister is the most successful the country has ever had. In this respect, that is so, but in this respect only—on paper, and as far as spreading the aura of renovation across the country. I myself had the privilege of travelling with the minister a few weeks ago and I had an enjoyable trip. To give an example—I do not think he will hold it against me if I bring this up—to show how well he likes to have his colleagues and other people know in what high regard he is held—and I think he is held in high regard—he distributed in the plane some copies of the Armed Forces Management Review, a United States publication which is supposed to be directed to executives in military affairs, and on the front cover of that magazine was a splendid picture, not flattering at all—the minister is an impressive looking gentleman—and I went on to read the review because, naturally, I was attracted by the presentation. The minister was described as "the boy wonder of Canadian politics". I think that is really treating public relations in the proper fashion. I think some of us could learn a few things about the way these things are carried on.

But the crux of the matter is that the only reason for the minister being described as the boy wonder of Canadian politics, and doing things which have never been done before in western military history, is that he has introduced this bill to amend the National Defence Act. That is all very well, and I wish the minister a lot of success with this venture; but I think that we on this side of the house are genuinely concerned about the effectiveness of these changes. If integration is a good principle—and we agree it is a good principle—it should be carried on right down the line, and so far we have not had very much proof that what the minister is proposing is either going to increase effectiveness or realize economies.

For instance, this replacement of the chiefs of the services by one chief of a defence staff may appear to represent a reduction from three to one, but this is not necessarily so because the new chief will have a number of assistants. He will have an assistant from each of the services and there will be, of course, if this tendency toward empire building takes its usual course, a desire on the part of each of those senior staff, the top brass of the Canadian forces, to be surrounded by aides-de-camp and all the staff which surrounds senior brass in any armed service in any country in the world—a tendency from which Canada has shown no marked willingness to escape.

So it would seem that the second object will not be realized; and if, as I fear, the human tendency to empire building as exemplified in Parkinson's law applies, we will see just as much brass as we ever had in the armed forces of Canada. The minister may think that because only one person will be reporting to him it will be a significant change for the better, but I am not so sure. The hon. member for Queens (Mr. MacLean), the hon. member for Winnipeg South and a number of others mentioned that it is better to get information from a variety of sources, as the minister knows very well, so as to possess a broader picture of the real needs of Canadian defence.

Someone else has pointed out that this great project of the minister has stirred up a lot of talk among the people of this country and especially among service people. Members of the armed forces are entitled to get from the minister a clearcut picture of what is actually to happen to them. These men are fine, trained men and they have devoted their best years to the service of Canada. They have not yet received a clear picture of what the minister has in mind. They could not have received one because we in this committee have not yet received from the minister any clear picture apart from this one enactment.

So before this bill goes further I think the minister should answer a number of questions pertaining to the changes he may have in mind. How is this integration to be followed up by integration among the lower ranks of the armed services? I know the department intended to release at one stage some 50,000 men from the armed services. The next day it was 10,000. Then in committee several members questioned the minister and the associate minister very closely about the number of men who were to be released. The numbers seemed to get smaller and smaller until, in the end, I was not sure whether instead of decreasing the armed forces we were not planning to increase them. It was clear that only a puny operation was contemplated under the smokescreen of this vast renovation which was to produce for Canada a great force of armed might whose efficiency no other nation could approach. That is certainly a worthy objective to be pursued, but so far we have not seen the beginning of it, despite this barrage of publicity which accompanies the merest gesture the minister makes. I do not know what his secret is, but he is certainly in the foreground of public speculation and, perhaps, even of adulation; I do not know. But I think the armed services are a bit worried. They want to know what is likely to happen to them, and those who are to be released wish to be treated on a fair and equitable basis.

It is all right to provide for colonels or major generals up to $15,000 in cash benefits. That is fine. The associate minister said in the committee that the purpose of these benefits was simply to help in the rehabilitation of those who were released. Yet those who are in the greatest need of help for rehabilitation, that is to say the lower ranks, the private soldiers without any great influence or special skills, get very much less. This is a line of policy from which neither the minister nor the associate minister wanted to depart one iota.

I mentioned this in the committee, and afterwards I received a lot of letters from people in the armed services. They feel it is unfair—and I do, too, in a way. If the purpose is really to provide rehabilitation, I do not think the private should get five, six or ten times less than the major general. I just cannot accept the particular explanation given by the minister in this regard, and I do not think this practice is fair.

These are matters that are directly concerned with this bill, Mr. Chairman, and with regard to which we have not received the answers that we should receive from the minister. We asked in the committee what would be the role of this new, integrated force Canada will have, and the minister said, "Well, read the white paper". That is all he could tell us. I have read the white paper—and I have here a very good summary of the principal points contained in the white paper—but it only deals in generalities. These generalities, in order to be meaningful, must be accompanied by positive actions and statements by the minister. I would like the minister to tell the committee now what the next step in this integration will be; and let him tell us what the new role of the armed forces will be once this integration has been completed. If he can do that, I think the minister will finally deserve all the advance publicity, all the advance favourable notice he has received about the things he intends to do but has not yet done. I think it is about time this government found out there is a vast distinction between saying they are going to do something, and doing it.

The press have treated the minister and his work most favourably. I do not think there is a single minister of the present government, with the possible exception of the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who has been so well treated by the press. If this is so, it is because they expect many things from the minister—and so far he has not delivered. If his delivery is nothing but the very insignificant changes that are being wrought by this bill, I think it is about time he changed his tune and admitted that what he proposed to do is just a little bit too much for him, and that he will call upon other advisers if necessary to carry out this job. This is very important. The minister has started on a course, and for my part I am glad to see him start on that course and I want to congratulate him; but I want him to continue and I want him to be frank, and perfectly frank, with all the members of this committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I take the opportunity afforded me by the study of Bill No. C-90 to say a few words about the changes that the Department of National Defence intends to make within its personnel.

I obtained today from the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Hellyer) a reply to the following question I had asked him a few days ago:

What are the names of the people who, in the three armed services, have the rank of general, major general or brigadier, or an equivalent rank in the navy or air force, and what are their salaries?

Mr. Chairman, I was very surprised to learn that out of the 135 senior officers in the three armed services who get $20,000 and $25,000 a year, only nine French speaking Canadians. I wonder what the government intends to do in order to correct this abnormal situation, since the proportion of French Canadians and of bilingual Canadians holding higher positions in the three armed services is definitely inadequate. The height of ridicule is that no French speaking officer holds a high position in the air force and only one French speaking Canadian holds a high office in the navy.

That is why, Mr. Chairman, we on this side of the house, have asked the government on several occasions to extend to four years the course given at the St. John Royal Military College, so as to give French speaking Canadians the required training and enable them to hold higher positions in the three armed services.

It is with regret that we heard about the resignation of Major General Paul Emile Bernatchez—

The Chairman: Order. I have been listening to the hon. member with attention and interest for a few moments while studying the explanatory notes in Bill C-90, and I must say that it is not easy to relate the hon. member's remarks to the bill under consideration.

It may be that his remarks are related to it in fact, but I ask him to tell me in what way.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I thought that my remarks were in order since Bill C-90 deals with the appointment of the chief of the defence staff and that they are connected with a question I asked on orders of the day, as well as the reply I was given about senior officers in the three services.

That is the reason why I wanted to point this out to the house and mention that French Canadians will fill the higher ranks in the three armed forces only when—

The Chairman: Unless the hon. member is going to conclude his remarks, I feel that they would be more appropriate when the estimates of the Department of National Defence are under consideration.

I cannot say that his remarks are really related to the bill now under consideration.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I would ask you on what grounds you can say that my remarks are out of order, since I am discussing the appointment of a chief of staff and the number of highly paid positions—

[Mr. Pigeon.]

The Chairman: If the hon. member wishes to know which standing order I am referring to, I would suggest that he read standing order 59 (2). I would also point out that his remarks are not strictly related to the bill under consideration which is to replace the chairman of the chiefs of staff committee and chiefs of naval staff, general staff and air staff by an authority who will be known as the chief of defence staff. That is what we are discussing at present and I do not think that the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm can discuss the number of French Canadians in the armed forces at this time.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank you for allowing me to point out that weakness in the Canadian armed forces.

But, since we now have a Minister of National Defence and an Associate Minister of National Defence, I think it would be proper for the government to follow the same policy as far as the Canadian forces are concerned, that is if an English speaking chief of staff for defence is appointed, well, a French speaking deputy chief of staff for defence should be appointed.

Those are the few remarks I intended to make and I hope the Minister of National Defence will be able to answer that question along those lines, since there is at present a serious gap to be filled within the Canadian forces as very few bilingual or French Canadians hold senior positions.

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes, with pleasure, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm said earlier that the Canadian forces lacked French Canadian personnel. Could he tell us whether the number of French Canadians has gone down or up since the Liberal government took office? Does this mean that the number of French Canadians has decreased in our forces and that at the time of the Conservative government, it was higher?

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, it is with great pleasure that I shall answer this question. When the Conservative government—

The Chairman: Order. The fact that the hon. member for Dorchester asked a question does not make relevant the subject discussed by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm. I refer again to the provisions of section 59 (2) of standing orders, under which the hon. member's observations must be strictly relevant to the item under consideration, and I suggest that he should limit his observations in that direction.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, you authorized a question by the hon. member for Dorchester and I should simply like to tell him this, because I think I abide by your ruling—

The Chairman: Order. I ask the hon. member to co-operate with the Chair and other members of the committee. Even if the hon. member for Dorchester asked a question, that does not mean the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm is justified to answer. I had to hear the question before making a ruling as to whether or not it was in order. The matter raised by the hon. member for Dorchester cannot be discussed under section 1 of Bill C-90 now before the house.

Mr. Boutin: Mr. Chairman, as my question was out of order, I shall ask the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm not to answer it and to abide by standing orders, as you suggested.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I want to reiterate my question to the Minister of National Defence, if he wants us, on this side of the house, to pass this bill as soon as possible. I shall therefore ask him whether the government intends to appoint a French speaking Canadian as chief of staff for national defence? If he wants us to support the bill, he should give me an answer.

Mr. Paul: Does the hon. member allow a question?

[Text]

Mr. Hellyer: Mr. Speaker, we have already designated the proposed chief of defence staff and the vice chief of defence staff, but I can assure my hon. friend that there will be a very good proportion of French speaking gentlemen of both English and French origin in the defence staff. I am sure the hon. member will be very pleased with the group that are appointed.

I should like to answer immediately all the very interesting questions raised tonight, but I understand we have a little agreement. Consequently I should like to move that we rise, report progress, and ask leave to sit again at the next sitting of the house.

Mr. Pigeon: I ask the direct question of the minister: Is it the intention to appoint a bilingual officer as assistant to the chief?

The Chairman: Order. There is a motion before the committee on which there is no debate.

Progress reported.

EXPORT CREDITS INSURANCE ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING LIABILITY OF CORPORATION AND EXPORTERS, ETC.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-101, to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in view of the late hour I wish to try and summarize my remarks on this bill. As hon. members know, the Export Credits Insurance Act was originally approved in 1944. It has been amended from time to time over the years to enable the Export Credits Insurance Corporation to provide facilities in line with current demands. This bill marks another stage in the development of the corporation's activities.

One purpose of the present bill is to exempt the corporation from the obligation of paying income tax. No similar export credits insurer doing business in other countries along the same lines as the Export Credits Insurance Corporation pays income tax. In addition, there are no commercial enterprises in Canada providing services comparable to the facilities provided by the Export Credits Insurance Corporation. If this amendment is approved by parliament it is proposed that under the provisions of the Financial Administration Act the corporation will pay to the Receiver General the sum of $10 million in cash. This sum corresponds to the aggregate of the paid-up capital and the capital surplus of the corporation and will be credited to a special non-interest bearing account in the consolidated revenue fund in the name of the corporation.

Another main purpose of the bill relates to the corporation's authority to insure Canadian engineering and construction firms for services rendered overseas. In this field of export operation, particularly with respect to construction, certain equipment must be taken to the site and would normally be brought back to Canada on completion of the job. The purpose of the proposed amendment is to permit the corporation to insure the Canadian firm against the risk of losing the ownership or control of the equipment being employed by him in rendering technical services outside Canada. Such insurance is not at present available from commercial sources.

The bill would also give the corporation authority to reinsure risks with export credits insurers operating in other countries and to accept reinsurance from them, thus providing the corporation with the authority to take on additional insurable business of Canadian exporters. The corporation can now enter into a contract of insurance with a Canadian exporter to protect him against non-payment by a foreign buyer for goods or services exported from Canada pursuant to a contract of sale entered into between the Canadian exporter and the foreign buyer. With the proposed amendment it will be possible for the corporation to enter into a contract of insurance with an export credits insurance organization in another country.

The bill proposes to increase the amount of the liability of the corporation under contracts of insurance entered into under section 21 of the act from $400 million to $600 million. Under this section, the total current liability of the corporation as at April 30 this year under all policies issued and outstanding amounts to $235 million. Additional commitments have been made under the authority of orders in council totalling $236 million. So it will be quite clear to the house that we need this authority if we are going to continue doing business.

Section 21A of the Export Credits Insurance Act allows the corporation, when authorized by the governor in council by order in council, to provide financing to Canadian exporters for heavy capital equipment requiring terms of payment extending beyond five years, which is the normal cut-off term for insurance transactions. This bill proposes to increase the amount of this long term financing from the present limitation of $300 million to $400 million. As at April 30 of this year the corporation had entered into financial agreements under long term export financing contracts totalling $184 million. Additional financing and guarantees have been authorized by orders in council totalling $33 million. The corporation has applications from exporters for long term financing, the bulk of which has been approved in principle, totalling another $80 million. Accordingly, financial agreements already signed, guarantees currently outstanding, and additional financial agreements not yet signed total $297 million. It is therefore obvious that in order to continue this very important facility it is necessary to increase the present ceiling.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, the minister has referred to the various technical amendments which are included in this bill, all of which I am sure are important. I think the crux of the bill is contained in the last paragraphs of his statement with reference to sections 20, 21, and 21A, under which obviously unless this bill is passed, and passed in the immediate future, there would be a severe curtailment of the financing of exports which are necessary to maintain the development of this country.

I have always been interested in this matter first, as minister of national revenue and afterwards as minister of finance, and I felt sometimes that our act was not as generous as those of other countries. I am thinking of the excellent arrangements made in the United States. I am thinking of the way export credit insurance matters are dealt with in other nations. I realize the difficulties of the signatories to the Berne convention. I was reminded of that from time to time by the chairman of the corporation. I was trying to persuade him to accept some long term arrangements and he said: "We are a signatory to the Berne convention and we can do nothing about it".

I am glad to see that these amendments are being suggested and I am particularly happy to see the increase in the capital and the increase in the authorization under section 21A. This has been one of the keystones of our economic development. The government of which I was a member amended the act on two or three occasions, increasing the moneys which were available, and it is an indication of the development of the export trade of Canada that it is now necessary and advisable for the minister to come before us to ask for a further extension. As far as we in the official opposition are concerned, we are very glad to give our full support to the proposed amendments, and I hope they commend themselves to the favourable attention of the house because I am quite certain they are necessary now and in the immediate future.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, we are anxious to expedite the passage of this bill because we recognize the need for extending the capital and also the authorization which is made possible under sections 21 and 21A. We are in favour of the principle of the legislation. We would like some more information from the minister which he might be able to give us when he is closing the debate, or in committee of the whole.

I should like to know particularly to what extent this legislation has been used to facilitate wheat exports and long term sales of wheat to other countries, and what part of the total amount that has been guaranteed is attributable to wheat sales. I recognize that the minister cannot give us the names of firms or countries involved, but if he can give us a breakdown as to categories or classes of goods for which these guarantees have been given I think it would give the house some idea of the value of this legislation and what particular types of exports have benefited from it. We can probably secure this information from the minister later. In the meantime we are anxious that this legislation be passed quickly and therefore we will not take the time of the house to enter into any further discussion of it now.

Mr. H. A. Olson (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this party I should like to say that there is not time this evening even to comment, let alone either to agree or disagree, on the proposed amendments involving the technical points that the minister has raised. Very generally I should like to say that we agree with many of the changes that will allow a greater latitude to the corporation, so that it can in fact underwrite some of the construction firms that are doing business in many parts of the world. We both recognize and appreciate the fact that the expansion into this field is a non-competitive area.

However, as has been pointed out, the main feature of the amendments before us tonight is to increase the capital of the corporation from $400 million to $600 million. We also recognize that almost every area of the economy of Canada has benefited from the provisions of this act and so we give our support to passing these amendments as expeditiously as possible.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Exemption from income tax.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce a question, precisely because I have not had time to study the measure and I do not want to delay the passing thereof.

I only want to know if the Export Credits Insurance Corporation is the one that was taken over by the Chartered Banks Association a few years ago?

[Text]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the Export Credits Insurance Corporation is entirely a government institution. It does two kinds of business. It insures exporters against loss and it also provides direct financing of certain types of transactions. Where the corporation acts as insurer the financing is done by commercial institutions such as banks, but the corporation itself is entirely a government-owned corporation and is a direct government operation.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: In that case, will the income tax exemption which this corporation will enjoy be granted to chartered banks or to the government agency?

[Text]

Mr. Sharp: Yes, Mr. Chairman. As I explained when I made my statement on second reading, institutions like this which are operating throughout the world are not subject to income tax and it is proposed to bring the practice in Canada into line with the practice in other countries. I should perhaps tell the committee that recently when the corporation met it approved a reduction in rates because it did not wish to make any profits that would be subject to tax.

Mr. Pugh: May I ask the minister a couple of questions? Will the premiums on reinsurance approximate the exact premium that the exporter pays? Has the minister any knowledge in this regard?

Mr. Sharp: I regret that I am not very expert in this field. I should think, however, that where reinsurance is made with other foreign corporations doing business in the same field the exporter would just pay the cost. The corporation would not take any additional commission for handling the business in that way.

Mr. Pugh: Perhaps I could have a definite answer on that point later. Has the minister any idea of the ratio between exports of grain and manufactured and raw materials? In other words, are sales of grain the biggest draw on the Export Credits Insurance Corporation?

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam also asked me a question in detail about this matter. I regret I do not have the information now but I will be very happy to obtain it. Perhaps I ought to say that all the transactions in grain are done under section 21 of the act, with the approval of the governor in council. They are not done by the corporation in its own right risking its own capital. The proportion of business in grain done under section 21 is a large proportion of that kind of business, but in relation to all the business done by the corporation it does not predominate.

Mr. Douglas: On that point I take it that the financing of the exports of grain has been done under section 21 and they represent a very large part of the total, which I think the minister said was something over $230 million, if I remember correctly.

Mr. Sharp: Yes. Actually the total amount of business done since the corporation was formed is very much larger than that. I was speaking about the total amounts outstanding at the present time. Under section 21, which relates to risks assumed by the government itself, grain forms a very large proportion, but of the total business done by the corporation grain does not predominate.

Mr. Douglas: But it represents a fairly large part of the business done under section 21. Would the minister have any idea of the relative amounts?

Mr. Sharp: I am sorry, I shall have to get those figures.

Mr. Douglas: I will not press the point. Would the minister agree to give us this information on his estimates? If that would be suitable we could let the matter drop.

Mr. Sharp: I would be quite happy to.

Clause agreed to.

Clauses 2 to 5 inclusive agreed to.

Title agreed to.

Bill reported.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: When shall the said bill be read a third time, now?

Mr. Knowles: By leave.

Mr. Sharp moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to, and bill read the third time and passed.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader what non-controversial business he has for us tomorrow?

Mr. Favreau: One thing which I hope will be non-controversial is that I may be allowed to thank the leaders of the various parties for their co-operation in disposing of this urgent legislation tonight. The business of the house tomorrow will be the debate on the amendment to the flag resolution.

Mr. Pigeon: And the union jack will be next?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

INCOME TAX—QUEBEC—FEDERAL REFUNDS MADE TO PROVINCIAL MINISTRY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, first of all I wish to congratulate the minister upon his elevation to the cabinet. I think all of us will agree, although on occasion we do not agree with his philosophy on the principles of taxation, he has already demonstrated his ability to deal with exactitude with figures when he has been answering questions by the opposition about legislation or estimates. It is in that co-operative spirit, Mr. Speaker, that I provide this opportunity for the minister to get his initiation into the details of the administration of the Income Tax Act.

I should like to quote the question I asked him on orders of the day today. Would the minister inform the house why the income tax branch forwards refunds due residents of Quebec to the provincial ministry of revenue direct, and of the legal basis for such unusual procedure? My reason for asking that question follows a conversation I had yesterday with some Quebec residents. In one instance in particular—and the person had the document with him to prove it—the refund of something like $60 which this person fully expected to receive was sent to the provincial department of revenue. The taxpayer in question received a notice from the income tax branch that the refund payable to the taxpayer was being paid to the provincial department of revenue.

This procedure caused the taxpayer in question, and some others who had a similar experience, to consider it a very high-handed procedure, almost an invasion of the privacy of the individual. They were quite indignant. I should like, therefore, to fulfil my function as a member of parliament by raising this question at the first opportunity. I brought it up during the question period and was disappointed when the Speaker said I was not in order. I thought this was a question of fiscal policy that concerned the whole house and would concern the country.

I would like the minister to explain to the house the arrangements that have been made in this connection, and the procedure and legal basis for this type of action on the part of the income tax branch. Also, would he mind informing the house when this procedure was first adopted. Is it part of a recent fiscal arrangement with the province of Quebec, or has it lasted for some time?

We are all interested in not only, shall I say, the immediate question of what appears to be a very high-handed procedure in sending money coming to someone to another government, but also in the sort of behind-the-scenes events that may have transpired to produce this, what appears at the moment, somewhat unusual regulation and procedure.

Hon. E. J. Benson (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), I thought today during question period I could be an ideal Minister of National Revenue in that I was simply able to answer "no" to the two questions raised in the house, and I am sure over the period in which I occupy this portfolio I will have to answer "no" a good many more times.

However, to deal specifically with this question, under the reciprocal arrangements between the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec, a person who has been employed in Ontario during a year and was resident in Quebec on the last day of that year does not receive a refund from the federal government for the tax deductions made in Ontario, but he does receive credit for the amount of such deductions on his Quebec income tax return.

As everyone will recall, the province of Quebec collects its own provincial income tax. Similar arrangements apply where a person was employed in Quebec during the year and was resident in Ontario on the last day of the year. The authority for this procedure is found in the Ontario income tax act and the Quebec income tax act. The Department of National Revenue, taxation division, is acting in these cases as the agent of the province of Ontario to carry out these arrangements under the general authority of the tax collection agreement.

The hon. member asked me the exact date of the passing of the approval of this tax collection agreement. I do not happen to have this available at the moment, but I shall be pleased to tell him within the next day or so.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.40 p.m.

20220—309

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, June 30, 1964

The house met at 2 p.m.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

GOVERNMENT HOUSE

Ottawa, June 30, 1964

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Ronald Martland, puisne judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy of His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, June 30, at 5.45 p.m. for the purpose of giving the royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,
Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF MEMBERS OF STAFF BOARD

Mr. Speaker: I should like to make an announcement which will, I know, be of interest to all hon. members.

The house will recall that the sixth report of the special committee on procedure and organization tabled on May 20 outlined a complete reorganization of the staff and services of the House of Commons, as recommended by the Speaker and approved by the commissioners of internal economy. The reorganization provides for the establishment of a three man staff board under the chairmanship of a director of administration. In addition to the new post of director of administration, provision has been made for three other new positions; a director of legislative services, a secretary for parliamentary associations and a second deputy sergeant-at-arms, the latter to be employed on a sessional basis.

I am pleased to inform the house that appointments have now been made to all three new full time positions. The sessional deputy sergeant-at-arms will be selected in the near future.

The position of director of administration will be filled by Mr. Jean-Marc Hamel, who has been secretary of the civil service commission and, more recently, co-ordinator of language training in the civil service. Mr. Hamel, a native of Quebec city, holds the degrees of bachelor of commerce and master of commerce in business administration from Laval University, Quebec, as well as that of master of public administration from the Maxwell school at Syracuse university, New York. He has had extensive experience in personnel selection, position classification, and public administration generally. As director of administration he will relieve the Clerk of many of his routine signing and approval duties and will be responsible for the work of the various administrative service branches. Personnel and financial control will be among his major responsibilities. Initially Mr. Hamel will be on a one year loan from the commission.

For the position of director of legislative services Mr. Alex Small, the present chief of journals, was unanimously selected as the result of a competition. Mr. Small has had 12 years' experience on the House of Commons staff in three of its branches, committees, index and journals. During world war II Mr. Small served as a navigator in the R.C.A.F. with the rank of flight lieutenant on release. He was mentioned in dispatches and spent a year in a prisoner of war camp in Germany. Prior to joining the House of Commons staff Mr. Small had extensive administrative experience in the Department of National Health and Welfare.

In his new post Mr. Small will direct the work of the committees branch, English and French debates, English and French journals and the English and French index and reference branches. He will also serve as third clerk assistant and have some duties at the table.

The staff board, which will comprise the director of administration, the Sergeant-at-Arms and director of building services, and the director of legislative services, with the chief of personnel, Mr. Len Hill, as its secretary, will commence at once to deal with various outstanding personnel and administrative problems. These include personal grievances as to salary levels, unsatisfactory working conditions, vacation leave, hours of work, doubtful hiring practices and so on. Meanwhile a complete classification study of all positions on the House of Commons staff is already under way and should result in salary adjustments wherever warranted.

Provision is also being made for the establishment, for the first time, of a formal grievance procedure so that legitimate employee grievances will be dealt with in a prompt and orderly fashion. Grievances not settled by the immediate supervisor or the director concerned will be considered by the staff board and, if necessary, the Clerk of the house. It is hoped to eliminate the unsatisfactory practice of having employees take their grievances direct to the Speaker or to individual members of parliament.

The position of secretary for parliamentary associations will be filled by Mr. Ian Imrie, presently assistant chief of national historic sites in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Mr. Imrie is an honour graduate in arts of Trinity College, University of Toronto, and has had post-graduate training in Europe. He will devote his attention to co-ordinating the staff services for delegations to the various interparliamentary groups, for example the commonwealth parliamentary association, the Canada-U.S. interparliamentary group, the NATO parliamentary association, the interparliamentary union and special parliamentary visits and exchanges that may be arranged from time to time.

I might just add that while the reorganization also contemplates the appointment of an executive assistant to the Speaker, no action is necessary for the time being. Mr. George Carty, a senior civil servant loaned to me to act as secretary to the special committee on procedure and organization, has been carrying out extra duties on my behalf with the title of special assistant to the Speaker.

I should like to record our indebtedness to the organization division of the civil service commission for their assistance to me in working out this reorganization and, in particular, to Mr. H. L. Laframboise, who at my urgent request carried out a complete study of our organization structure. At my suggestion, and in full co-operation with the parliamentary librarian, Mr. Laframboise is now conducting a study of the library in the hope of improving its service to parliament.

At this time I should also like to express my appreciation of the full support and co-operation of the Clerk of the house in making these important changes. Mr. Raymond, the Sergeant-at-Arms and other senior officers of the house share my desire to bring our organization structure into line with the altered and vastly increased demands of the present day.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, following the statement you made a while ago and since the Secretary of State is absent, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether Mr. Alex Small, who has just been promoted to the position of director of legislative services is bilingual in the sense given to that word nowadays. Considering that his new position also includes French and English translation, is he sufficiently bilingual to look after the requests submitted by the various departments?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I will have to look into that, Mr. Speaker. I am not familiar with the linguistic attainments of this gentleman.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the Secretary of State is here now, I will put it to him or to the Prime Minister.

Could he inquire at the same time as to whether there were other bilingual candidates for the position whose creation was announced today?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will get the necessary information and give the hon. member a reply this week.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: I think I should inform hon. members that the last two questions should be asked in a private capacity. The Secretary of State, in effect, is the spokesman but has not the prime responsibility for answering. If hon. members would care to ask those questions in writing I am sure they will get a full and complete answer.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

STUDY OF EFFECT ON CANADA OF SEPARATION OF QUEBEC

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was asked yesterday by the hon. member for Danforth whether I would make a statement in regard to a reply which

I gave toward the end of last Friday's sitting to an oral question from him, which reply has caused some misunderstanding. The question repeated one made by the hon. member himself on May 20 asking for a study of the social, cultural and economic effects on the rest of Canada of separation by Quebec and, to quote him as he is reported at page 3401 of Hansard:

—so the fullest measure of information would be available to discuss this important subject.

I said at that time that I would give consideration to the proposal but that—and I quote from my reply—

—I would like to add that we are convinced any such study would be entirely academic, because no such separation is going to take place.

The hon. member at that time agreed, but he still thought—and I again quote from his remarks in Hansard— —that there are people in Canada who really think Canada can get along separately, and that it might be useful if this type of information were available.

Those were his words. My answer last Friday was given in the framework of that earlier reply—that a study along those lines would be academic but that the information might be useful. At that time, on May 20, no one took any exception to this exchange. Last Friday strong exception was taken to it. I said on Friday that that kind of investigation —they were my words—is being made; but I also indicated quite clearly that it is confined to the economic aspects rather than the broader range suggested by the hon. member for Danforth. I further indicated quite plainly, Mr. Speaker, that it would be a study not of separation but of the economic interrelations within Canada. It would be a study of the indivisibility of our economy, the indivisibility which would be created by the interrelation of the various parts. It will show, I hope and believe, how the parts of Canada need each other.

To say that we should not study the facts on which our unity is based as well as certain pressures on that unity is, I believe, to show unnecessary fear and lack of faith. To say that in making such a study we are contemplating the division of our country is like saying that we must be warmongers if we study the necessity for defence forces. Ours, Mr. Speaker, is an unusual economy. The vastness of its area and the diversity of its resources mean that regional differences are especially important, and therefore economic interrelations are of special significance.

Matters of this kind have already been examined. They were examined in a famous study, "The economic background of dominion-provincial relations" prepared for the Rowell-Sirois commission by one of Canada's most distinguished economists, Dr. W. A. Mackintosh. I do not think anyone would now dispute the value of this study, but it was made a generation ago. Much has changed since, but there has been no equivalent study made.

I believe it is time that the same economic examination is made again in the light of new conditions. It will be a study of our economic unity within confederation; but because that unity is built not on uniformity but on diversity we have continually to think of ways and means of maintaining and strengthening it. Our national economic policies have to be based on the facts as they exist today and on an understanding of our problems as they have changed.

The study will be of special value in showing the factors which should influence federal-provincial relationships in the economic and financial fields. In this respect it should be of service, and I believe will be of service, to the federal representatives on the tax structure committee which was planned at the Quebec conference and which, it is hoped, will soon begin its work.

Mr. Speaker, to fail to strengthen the forces of unity in our economy would be a dereliction of duty. The one thing which could bring about such disaster as disunity would be for a federal government to bury its head in the sand, to be afraid of the facts and to refuse to study problems; and we will not be guilty of that.

Since some questions have been asked outside the house, I should perhaps conclude with a word about the procedure that is being followed in this matter. It is a perfectly normal procedure. As hon. members know, studies of this kind are not launched suddenly out of the air. They have to be planned. I have therefore asked a few government officials, economic experts, to advise me on what would be involved in a study of the economic interrelations within our country and how such a study could best be made.

Considered answers to these questions involve quite a bit of preliminary work. When that preliminary work has been done, I will then be in a position to make a recommendation to cabinet as to what formal steps may be required to carry through this study in the light of conditions we now face in this country in the economic and financial fields of federal-provincial relations. When the cabinet has made its decision on this matter as a result of the report I hope to be able to make to it, that decision will be conveyed to the house.

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, we have just heard from the Prime Minister; as has happened in the past, a clarifying statement has had to be made as the result of a careless statement made by the government in connection with a policy announcement. I want to say at once that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition is ill with a heavy cold today. I am sure if he had been here he would have commented on the statement that has been made by the Prime Minister with far more emphasis than I can.

However, if we go back over the events that led to this statement of clarification today it will be seen, I am sure, that all of us who were present obtained an entirely different impression; as a matter of fact, even the members of the press did also, as will be seen from newspaper reports. On May 20 the hon. member for Danforth posed a lengthy question, reported on page 3401 of Hansard. Amongst other things he said:

> —would the government consider ordering a study of the economic, cultural and social effects upon the rest of Canada of separation by Quebec—

Now, it is quite clear what that question meant. The Prime Minister said in his reply, amongst other things, that any such study would be entirely academic because no such separation is going to take place. This was a good statement by the Prime Minister. However, last Friday the hon. member for Danforth, pursuing the same point, asked again whether the Prime Minister had given any consideration to his previous request of May 20. The Prime Minister replied in these words, as reported at page 4780 of Hansard:

> Yes, Mr. Speaker, we have been considering the matter. It is not a subject which lends itself to easy investigation and dogmatic conclusions, but officials of the government are making that kind of investigation now.

Anyone reading the original question would come to the conclusion, Mr. Speaker, that this committee of civil servants was making a study of the economic, cultural and social effects upon the rest of Canada of separation by Quebec. It was quite evident that there was a misunderstanding by everybody because the Prime Minister, some four hours later, felt impelled to make a statement of clarification as to what he actually meant by his reference to such a study. Anyone listening to the Prime Minister at that time would have come to the conclusion that this government was studying the effects of separation by Quebec from the rest of Canada. This was indeed a strange attitude to be taken by any government, since they should have been studying measures to bring about unity in Canada rather than separation.

Yesterday the hon. member for Danforth referred to what he called an irresponsible statement by the Leader of the Opposition which was issued to the press late Friday afternoon. I say, in view of this whole situation, the irresponsible statements that have been made prior to today have been made by the Prime Minister of this country and the government he represents.

Mr. Pearson: I rise on a question of personal privilege. Perhaps I may be permitted to quote the rest of the statement I made on Friday which the hon. gentleman inadvertently left out.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Pearson: It appears at page 4780 of Hansard, and is as follows:

> What is being undertaken is an economic investigation of the interrelation between Quebec and the rest of the country, which is surely a very proper subject for an economic investigation.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, the members of this party are fully in support of the type of study which the Prime Minister has outlined. To suggest that any such study is an endorsation of the idea of separatism seems to me politically irresponsible—

Mr. Lambert: Not in the original terms.

Mr. Douglas: —and can only pander to those parts of Canada which are seeking to exploit the differences that may exist between English speaking and French speaking Canada. The members of this house cannot bury their heads in the sand like ostriches. The fact is that talk of separatism is prevalent. I do not think there are many members in this house and I doubt that there are many people in Canada who are in favour of separatism. The fact is, however, that the idea is promulgated. Economic and constitutional arguments are being advanced as to the advisability of the province of Quebec becoming an associate state or even a state separate from the rest of Canada. Cognizance of this fact was taken by the Quebec legislature, which has set up a committee to study the whole question.

I have before me the terms of reference of that committee. They are fairly lengthy and

I will not read them, but in summary the committee was asked to study to what extent the province of Quebec could acquire greater constitutional authority without destroying its own economic viability. This study is to look into whether Quebec is putting more into confederation than it is getting out of it, and whether it would be to its advantage to seek a separate status from the rest of Canada.

I do not take this to mean that the legislature of Quebec is anxious to promote separatism. I take this to mean that they are seeking to gather the data upon which they can answer the arguments that are being advanced in some parts of Canada. When that study is completed it will certainly be used in the province of Quebec and elsewhere to argue for certain transfers of constitutional, monetary and fiscal authority from the federal government to the provinces.

It seems to me that in the light of that fact, Mr. Speaker, the government of Canada and the members of this house need to be armed with all the information they can get. We are not going to answer the arguments of the separatists by putting our heads in the sand or by thinking that if we keep quiet the problem will go away. Nor are we going to be able to answer by waving the flag and beating our breasts about confederation.

Mr. Grafftey: What flag?

Mr. Douglas: In the long run light will do more than heat in dealing with this problem, and the parliament of Canada and the government of Canada need to be armed with all the arguments, all the data and all the economic facts so they can present them to the people of Canada. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, when the government finally decides on the basis for this study I hope the commission will be a fairly strong one, that on it the government will put some able economists who will study not only the problem of separatism but will study also the extent to which the parliament of Canada can continue to strip the federal government of its constitutional powers without destroying the economic viability of Canada as a whole.

Under various pressures concessions have been made. Certain powers have been taken from the federal government and given to the provincial government. I am not going to argue now which of these were wise and which were unwise, but the one thing we do know is that if Canada is to continue as a viable economy there are powers which the government of Canada must retain in order that this country may operate economically and efficiently.

We will only get that kind of information if there is the fullest possible study, not only of the relations of English speaking Canada and French speaking Canada, but of the federal government's economic relations to all the provinces. We are in great danger in Canada of becoming regionalized to the point where the type of economic planning which has become part and parcel of the program of almost every industrial country in the world will be meaningless if we continue to go down a road that, while it might maintain a semblance of unity, would actually lead to the economic disintegration of this country.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker we support the idea of such a study. We hope the government will not leave this to busy government officials who have many other things to do, but that a commission of outstanding economists and constitutional experts will be given this task in order that we may have something similar to the Rowell-Sirois commission that will give Canada a blueprint which we can follow for the next quarter of a century.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, some people say that we should wait and consider the results of all the studies made, before undertaking some ourselves. I think that it is normal and appropriate for this parliament to start a personal investigation on all possible economic implications of a provincial secession, whether on the part of Quebec or another province, because we know that there are some other provinces which really need all their economic means, and are ready to go as far as separation to obtain or regain them.

Yet, I hope that this investigation will not be made in the spirit suggested by the hon. Minister of Finance, when, yesterday, he declared himself certain—as if he had given some instructions on the manner in which this investigation was to be made when it gets under way—that no investigation into the Canadian situation could end in favour of Quebec separatism.

And he added, as reported in Le Devoir:

> It could in no way favour a secession.

—when speaking of the inquiry.

Obviously, this remains to be proved. There is every reason to believe that the results of the inquiry might point that way, but I think it would be most unwise to anticipate the results of that investigation.

Various reliable persons throughout the country advanced very valid arguments, saying that there certainly were some economic advantages for the province of Quebec in being part of the confederation. Would there be adequate compensations? Quite possibly. The investigation will prove it. We should not anticipate the results.

I would like to say one last word. There was some mention of Canadian unity, and I am all for it. But if unity means loss of its personality for any one province, whether it be Quebec or another, but most particularly Quebec, and that unity also signifies the loss of the French Canadian character, we would not approve it. We agree that there should be a close and active co-operation between the two racial groups in Canada and between the various provinces.

If, however, unity means the loss of those personalities, we shall no longer agree. I am convinced beforehand the survey will show that Quebec would not remain within confederation if those considerations were disregarded.

I feel, however, that parliamentarians take a sufficiently general view of our national problems to understand this situation and to agree with the Prime Minister when he states that Quebec is not a province like the others and that it should not be treated like the other provinces.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I share the opinion expressed by the Prime Minister a while ago, when he said that if the government refused to consider the problems which arise from time to time, it would be proof of inefficiency and an indication that it does not have the required courage to face its obligations.

I feel that a thorough study of the problems which arise in the economic, social and cultural fields should be made from time to time, periodically, to see exactly what is going on and what has taken place in all the provinces of Canada, and that such a study has been imperative for a long time; but between that and saying, for instance, that the purpose of such a study is to prove that our economy cannot be divided there is quite a difference, because while government experts endeavour in all Canadian provinces to settle or study economic, social and cultural problems, in some other provinces, namely in the province of Quebec, experts and economists are now making studies to see how far Quebec could be self-sufficient.

[Mr. Marcoux.]

What is the use of making a secret of it? Everybody knows that such work has been going on in Quebec for many months; but this does not mean that Quebec will separate. This merely means—and this is a warning to the federal government—that it is time to have a sound national policy, to face facts and realize that the provinces must have more freedom, otherwise the time will come when we will live in a period of economic chaos which will please nobody in the country and no province.

Mr. Speaker, the province of Quebec can be different from the others, but all it asks of the federal government—just as the other provinces do at the federal-provincial conferences—is what it is entitled to and nothing else. It is not requested that another province be emptied to fill the province of Quebec. Such is not the case, but the province of Quebec should be allowed, like the others, to develop in a natural way, to accomplish its emancipation according to its aspirations, its life, its culture and its physical possibilities.

That is why the Ralliement Créditiste informed the federal government, several months ago, that we claim for Quebec: 1. The control of credit, which will solve the monetary question in our province, and also in the other provinces.

2. Decentralization to the point of letting the provinces deal with their immigration problem. That is that what we are asking for the province of Quebec.

I just heard an hon. member say that makes him laugh. Mark my words, he will not be laughing so much in his riding at the next election.

Mr. Speaker, the third point is the control of our imports and exports and the return of taxation rights to the provinces.

The government should seriously consider those points and, at federal-provincial conferences, act upon the economic, social and cultural study the experts are now making and which, I hope, will result in a better understanding between the provinces that will enable us to celebrate not, as will be the case tomorrow July 1, a confederation that is going down the river, but a revitalized, living renovated confederation, a confederation in which each province would be allowed to develop according to its aspirations and possibilities.

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Is the hon. member for Danforth rising on a point of order, of privilege or what?

Mr. Scott: Mr. Speaker, I was going to say a word, with your consent.

Mr. Speaker: It is customary on motions just to have the leaders of the different parties speak. Perhaps the hon. member will have an opportunity later.

TRANSPORT

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—CONTINUATION OF PRESENT TOLLS

Hon. G. J. McIlraith (Acting Minister of Transport): I should like to make a brief statement concerning the St. Lawrence seaway tolls review.

The governments of Canada and the United States have exchanged notes approving a supplemental agreement to the 1959 agreement between the St. Lawrence seaway authority and the Saint Lawrence Seaway Development Corporation with respect to the St. Lawrence seaway tariff of tolls. The supplemental agreement provides that:

(a) The date for the entities to report to their respective governments as to the sufficiency of seaway tolls will be deferred from July 1, 1964 to July 1, 1966, and the developmental period of the seaway will thereby be extended by two years and will be deemed to terminate at the end of the 1966 navigation season. Accordingly, no change in tolls will be proposed at the present time.

(b) The joint review will be continued and at the conclusion of this two year extension tolls proposals will be related as realistically as possible to the financial requirements of the seaway entities.

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): I think the house will be glad to hear the announcement made by the minister in the name of the Minister of Transport. This is a realistic move. The St. Lawrence seaway, one of the greatest undertakings ever built in Canada and one which means so much to the economic life of this country besides being the answer to a dream of the whole population, should not be judged by what has happened in so short a period. This is a good move because it extends the period of time during which various experts will have the opportunity to assess the situation as far as the shipping making use of this great waterway is concerned. Also it will give an opportunity to various shipping interests to continue to move a tremendous amount of goods and Canadian products through this great international seaway. Certainly it is to the advantage of all concerned that such a study be carried on for another two years.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

TABLING OF LETTER TO PROVINCES RESPECTING ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I should like to table in English and French a copy of a letter I have sent to the premiers of the provinces with regard to a recommendation of the royal commission on health services to the effect that there should be a federal-provincial conference within six months on the implementation of its recommendations.

In this letter I asked the premiers of the provinces to give me their views about the proper form and timing of this consultation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that the Prime Minister has just tabled copies of his letters to the provincial premiers to ascertain their views with respect to a conference on health services, it seems to me it would be extremely useful to the provinces if they knew the federal government's stand with regard to the recommendations of the Hall commission. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would be prepared to make a statement saying that the federal government accepts in principle the proposals of the Hall commission regarding the establishment of a universal health insurance program administered by the provinces and financed in part by the federal government.

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to announce the policy in due course. It is far too important a matter, I think, to announce the policy on the orders of the day. I would also remind my hon. friend that there will be a meeting of the provincial ministers of health and the federal Minister of National Health and Welfare in a few weeks, when we will have an opportunity of exchanging views on this royal commission report.

Mr. Douglas: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Prime Minister be making such a statement in the house fairly soon, in addition to any statement he may make to the provincial representatives?

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it is a very important report, as my hon. friend knows. It is a voluminous document, and it contains a great many recommendations. It is going to take a little time to give all the recommendations the consideration they deserve. As soon as these recommendations are considered we will make an announcement in the house as to our policy.

BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING ROYAL ASSENT, DISALLOWANCE, ETC.

Mr. Auguste Choquette (Lotbinière) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-106, to amend the British North America Act, 1867 (royal assent, reservation and disallowance).

[Translation]

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, as I expected to be asked to do that, I prepared myself accordingly.

Mr. Grégoire: Do not make it too long.

Mr. Choquette: I thank the hon. members for asking me to explain.

We all agree that there are many archaisms, not only in parliamentary procedure but also in the constitution. I feel that the best means to ward off what everyone dreads, separatism, is to strengthen our Canadian purpose which, unfortunately is not prevalent enough in Canada.

To strengthen this purpose, this ideal, our constitution must be modernized. The purpose of this bill is to remove from the text of the constitution theoretical rights which have not been exercised for many decades such as the federal parliament right of disallowance on provincial statutes.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is consistent with the resolutions passed at the 1926 and 1930 imperial conferences. I urge the hon. members to consult Mr. Maurice Ollivier's book on "Colonial and Imperial Conferences".

Mr. Speaker, if the resolution is passed it will allow the supreme court to become the only agency able to exercise a jurisdiction in a federal-provincial conflict. In the province of Quebec, I am sorry to say, the supreme court is held in suspicion concerning federal-provincial matters.

Mr. Lambert: Order.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

[Mr. Pearson.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NEGOTIATIONS WITH U.S. ON USE OF CANADIAN AIR SPACE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): I should like to address a question to the Minister of National Defence. In view of reports that negotiations are now under way with the United States regarding the use of Canadian air space in case of emergency, would the minister advise the house whether any changes have been made in this connection?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): To my knowledge there are no negotiations going on at the present time with respect to the use of Canadian air space by the United States, and there have been no recent changes.

Mr. Starr: Are any arrangements being made to have such negotiations in the near future?

Mr. Hellyer: Not that I know of. There have been arrangements in existence for some time, as the hon. member no doubt knows, and these have worked quite satisfactorily.

ARMING OF INTERCEPTOR PLANES IN CANADA WITH NUCLEAR WEAPONS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Minister of National Defence. Are Royal Canadian Air Force interceptor squadrons in Canada now armed with both nuclear and conventional weapons?

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Not yet, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Churchill: Is it the intention to provide nuclear weapons for these interceptor squadrons?

Mr. Hellyer: Yes it is, Mr. Speaker.

NEGOTIATIONS TO WITHDRAW FROM NUCLEAR STRIKE ROLE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs a question. Now that Canada has undertaken a nuclear role in both Europe and Canada, is the Secretary of State for External Affairs in charge of the negotiations now going on for Canada to withdraw from that nuclear role?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs naturally shares with his colleagues all matters arising out of government policy.

Mr. Churchill: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Could I have an answer to the question? Is the minister in charge of those negotiations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can give a more adequate reply.

AGRICULTURE

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED CRITICAL SITUATION RESPECTING LIVESTOCK FODDER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): I have a question for the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the critical situation with regard to fodder for cattle in the area north of the Saskatchewan and Qu'Appelle rivers in the province of Saskatchewan and in view of the depressing effect on prices if there should be a run on cattle markets, I should like to ask if the new minister of agriculture in Saskatchewan has made contact with the federal Department of Agriculture about a joint program to meet this critical situation.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan has not yet been in touch with the federal government, but if and when he does, the federal government will be most anxious to co-operate with him in every way.

Mr. Hamilton: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the tremendous importance to the whole country of maintaining the livestock industry in a healthy condition, would not the minister consider taking the initiative on the part of the federal government, as was done in June of 1961?

Mr. Hays: I am sure we will do all that is expected of us if and when the minister of agriculture of Saskatchewan cares to contact the federal government. I might say that at this time the livestock industry, for the most part, is in a healthy condition, healthier than any other livestock industry in the Americas. But we are very concerned about this particular problem.

QUEBEC—POSITION OF VEGETABLE AND TOBACCO GROWERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. Is he aware that the spokesman for 650 farmers specialized in the growing of vegetables and apples, in the Quebec heavy soil lands, stated that 50 per cent of these farmers are facing bankruptcy following the dust storms which caused damages evaluated at about $2 million? Moreover, could the minister tell the house whether he intends to give assistance to those farmers in Châteauguay county, near Montreal, which incurred losses likely to drive them to bankruptcy?

Mr. Pigeon: Including the tobacco growers in Joliette.

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): In so far as this is concerned, Mr. Speaker, we are conscious of the problem these farmers are having. There is no legislation set up at the moment to take care of these situations in so far as the federal government is concerned. Our position is that when the provinces approach us, we consider the problem along with them and it is a sharing program. I might say that in this regard we are hoping the province of Quebec will take advantage of the crop insurance program which we now have on the order paper, which we think will take care of these situations in the future.

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I wish to put a supplementary question to the Minister of Agriculture. Can he tell us whether the Quebec authorities submitted a request to the federal government, under the disaster legislation, in order to help these farmers?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: No, Mr. Speaker; so far they have not approached the federal government in this connection.

QUEBEC—REQUEST FOR INCREASED MILK SUBSIDY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the hon. member for Nicolet-Yamaska asked me about the price of milk in Quebec and I suggested that I would get the d.b.s. figures for milk for 1963-64. We do not have the figures for May or June, but the April figures indicate that the average price of all sales of milk was $3.20 per hundred—this is for April, 1964—and in 1963 it was $3.09.

INCLUSION OF MAPLE SUGAR PRODUCERS UNDER CROP INSURANCE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Henri Latulippe (Compton-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture?

Could the minister tell us whether he intends to apply to maple sugar producers the benefits provided by crop insurance?

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if the provinces participate in crop insurance the sugar beet growers in those areas come under the program as well.

PARLIAMENT HILL

FLYING OF RED ENSIGN FLAG FOR JULY 1 HOLIDAY

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question of vital importance to the Minister of Public Works. Could he tell us who gave instructions to fly, on parliament hill, on the occasion of the 1st of July celebrations, three times more red ensigns than last year?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I must tell the hon. member that every year a special committee is responsible for the organization of the 1st of July celebrations on parliament hill. Last fall that committee suggested that in the future, on the occasion of certain celebrations or on the visit of distinguished guests coming here, there be more flags than in the past. It is for that reason that we can see now 66 flags instead of 22 on parliament hill. In view of the fact that a copy of the hon. member's question was handed to me only when I came into the house, I cannot give him the exact day when the committee made that suggestion, nor tell him whether those additional flags were purchased recently or came out of the stocks of the Department of Public Works. But I shall give an answer to those two supplementary questions within a few days.

[Mr. Hays.]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a supplementary question. Could he tell us who are the members of that committee?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I think there is the chief of the protocol division, Department of External Affairs, a high official of the Department of Public Works, a representative from the C.B.C., a representative from the R.C.M.P., an official from the Department of Citizenship and Immigration who is in charge of the afternoon celebration, and a representative from the Department of National Defence, in charge of the evening festivities.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Could he tell us whether the committee does not include also a member of the Canadian Legion from Winnipeg?

Mr. Deschatelets: Mr. Speaker, I shall give all that information to the house when I make a statement within a few days.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Could the Prime Minister tell us whether, in the event of the new Canadian distinctive flag with three maple leaves being adopted today, the government has taken the necessary steps to replace all the red ensigns floating on parliament hill by this new flag?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This question is obviously out of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. Could he tell the house whether or not this is a good enough occasion to fly our future national flag? We could show a sample of our future flag tomorrow.

Mr. Gérard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Public Works. Can he tell us how many French Canadians are members of the committee concerned?

Mr. Deschatelets: I do not have this information, but I shall answer that question within a few days.

[Text]

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Public Works whether he will inquire which is the proper ensign, the one flying over the house or the one flying on the lawn. One has red leaves and the other green leaves. That is just a point of information.

Mr. George Muir (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether the Minister of Public Works would convey to the members of this committee the appreciation of the house for flying all those beautiful Canadian red ensigns.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

THETFORD MINES, QUE.—STATEMENT ON AWARD OF POSTAL CONTRACT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I wish to refer to a question asked in the house yesterday by the hon. member for Mégantic concerning the renewal of a mail contract for delivery of parcel post at Thetford Mines, Quebec. I refer particularly to the hon. member's statement that the present contractor died on June 19. Actually the party who died was Mr. Napoléon Huard, the father of the present contractor. Mr. Napoléon Huard, the father now deceased, had held the contract for several years, but on November 4 of last year he submitted a request to transfer this contract to his son. This was completed under the provisions of the Post Office Act and authorization for the transfer of this contract was issued on December 23, 1963, the transfer becoming effective in February.

A contract renewal would have been authorized without tender as the rates were reasonable. I submit, Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of facts I have just made, that the hon. member should withdraw without question the remark which appears at page 4813 of Hansard, where he is reported as saying:

> I agree, Mr. Speaker; the only thing I should like to get clear is that if the minister does not clarify the point he either lied to me or he is completely incompetent to do the job he is doing now.

I have given the hon. member the facts and I think his remarks should be withdrawn.

Some hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: The Clerk will draw these remarks of the Postmaster General to the attention of the hon. member in due course.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Nicholson: May I also say in this connection, Mr. Speaker, that information has since been received that another tenderer is interested in tendering at a lower rate, so we propose to call for tenders in this matter. We will be calling for tenders within a matter of days.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONGO—SAFETY OF CANADIANS FOLLOWING UN FORCE WITHDRAWAL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the withdrawal of United Nations military forces in the Congo today and the resignation of the Congolese government, with the attendant unstable political situation, can the government give us some assurance as to the safety of Canadians remaining in the Congo, particularly some 40 civilian personnel who are attached to the United Nations?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable, of course, that the United Nations has had to withdraw from the Congo at this time before the establishment of internal stability, but this is due to circumstances related to the reluctance of certain member states of the United Nations to bear their proper responsibility in the financing of peace keeping operations. Every step is being taken in collaboration with missions in the Congo to look after the safety of Canadians. I regret to say, however, that information has come that some of them may be missing.

Mr. Nesbitt: A supplementary question. Has the government consulted with the United States regarding the safety of civilians in the Congo?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

CYPRUS—REPORTED ISSUE OF ULTIMATUM BY TURKEY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he can advise this house whether Turkey has issued a new ultimatum in regard to Cyprus, and whether he can give us any clarification in this regard.

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as the house knows I saw the prime minister of Turkey last Wednesday and the prime minister of Greece last Thursday. These two heads of government have since conferred with the secretary general of the United Nations and with the government of the United Kingdom. I would hope that as a result of discussions through the United Nations, no such step would be taken.

DISCUSSIONS RESPECTING CANADIAN SOVEREIGNTY OVER ARCTIC ISLANDS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Have there been any discussions recently between representatives of the government of Canada and representatives of the government of the United States with regard to Canada's sovereign rights over the islands north of the mainland in the Arctic?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would want to make sure that I fully understand the question asked by the hon. gentleman. Perhaps I would be allowed to answer the question later.

NATO—TABLING OF AGREEMENT REGARDING ATOMIC INFORMATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): May I, with the consent of the house, revert to motions, Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of tabling a document signed by the members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization today, being an agreement among the parties to the North Atlantic treaty for co-operation regarding the exchange of atomic information.

SHIPPING

REFERENCE OF WATER LEVEL PROBLEM TO INTERNATIONAL JOINT COMMISSION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Temiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. On May 22 last the Prime Minister stated that the government would be making certain recommendations to the international joint commission regarding water levels on the great lakes. Yesterday the international conference convened by Premier Robarts urged a new and stronger role for the I.J.C. in this regard. Can the Prime Minister state whether the government has forwarded recommendations to the commission and, if so, what they embodied?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer this question, some time ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs wrote to the governments of the provinces of Ontario and Quebec because, so far as the watershed is concerned, it is their waters which feed the lakes. A reply has already been received from the province of Ontario agreeing to turn over an increasing amount of authority to I.J.C., but as yet no reply has been received from the province of Quebec.

I think the conference yesterday dealt not with remedial matters but only with a statement of the problem as it existed. It was attended by some 60 delegates in all, and I believe the publicity and the statement of facts in respect to the problem is a very fine thing for us. I think we are moving in a direction where an increasing amount of responsibility will be assumed by I.J.C., supported of course by technical people, principally from my own department. In the very difficult situation in which competitive demands are being made upon a relatively small amount of water at the present time for power, for the floating of ships in Montreal harbour, and for a great variety of uses, I want to pay a compliment to the specialists who are in charge of this work and who are visiting the minimum amount of damage upon each interested section of the economy.

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): A supplementary question. Could the minister inform the house who is representing the government at the conference held at Montreal today, on the water level problem, and can he say whether that representative is offering the good offices of the government in co-ordinating research efforts on this problem?

Mr. Laing: Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary secretary is present in Montreal today and is accompanied by one or two officers of the water resources branch of my department. Complete co-operation will, of course, be proffered. I think he is suggesting that an increasing measure of responsibility be assumed by I.J.C., with our technical men making their contribution.

CANADIAN CONSTITUTION

SUGGESTED STUDY OF REVISION BY SPECIAL COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Prime Minister.

Could he tell the house whether the government intends to set up a special committee to revise the Canadian constitution and adapt it to conditions prevailing in 1964?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government has been studying for some years now the repatriation of the constitution, and that matter is on the agenda for the next federal-provincial meeting.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Justice, Mr. Speaker. Does he himself intend to call such a conference in the near future?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I think the Prime Minister answered that question when he spoke just now of the next federal-provincial conference.

WORLD FAIR

CONGRATULATIONS TO MONTREAL ON COMPLETION OF SITE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I would like to ask him whether as a minister responsible for the world fair he intends to congratulate publicly the mayor of Montreal and his council, as well as all his employees, for having carried out that fantastic project of creating two magnificent islands which will be used as the site of the world fair to be held in Montreal in 1967?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I am very happy to say, Mr. Speaker, that I shall be participating this evening in this memorable ceremony. I should like to join with the hon. member in congratulating Mayor Drapeau and all those responsible. May I also say that preparations for Expo 67 are proceeding well. I know this carries the support of all members of this house, since the exhibition was started under the previous government and is being continued under the present government.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce in connection with the formal handing over of the St. Helen's and Notre Dame islands to be held this evening whether some security arrangements have been taken to avoid deplorable accidents as those witnessed Friday last on St. John the Baptist feast-day?

[Text]

Mr. Sharp: Mr. Speaker, since this is a celebration which is being put on by the mayor of Montreal to turn over the site of the exposition to the corporation, all arrangements are in the hands of the mayor. I am sure he is doing his very best to see that we are all very comfortable and safe.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISMISSAL OF CANADIAN SAILORS BY IMPERIAL OIL CO.

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

Without interfering in the private business of companies, could the government not make representations or recommendations to the Imperial Oil Company, which is now laying off several Canadian sailors, who earn $300 a month, to hire sailors from South Africa or the West Indies, when that company, in my opinion, is not that poor yet and derives benefits from Canadian natural resources?

[Text]

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): I think the only thing I could do would be to bring the hon. member's words to the attention of the company.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

BRITISH COLUMBIA—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF COUNTY COURT JUDGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): I have a question for the Minister of Justice.

When will a county court judge be appointed in and for the county of Yale, British Columbia, to fill the vacancy created by the retirement of Judge M. M. Colquhoun? Actually this judge should have been appointed some time ago, because the law lists are all cluttered up and it is almost impossible to make a chambers application. The question therefore is urgent.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): This matter is presently under active consideration. I must add that I have received no notice from the provincial authorities complaining of any such situation.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, who answers for the C.B.C. In view of the successful and non-controversial production by the C.B.C. of a program on the Leader of the Opposition, and the less than successful production regarding the Prime Minister, is the C.B.C. now planning a further program featuring the Prime Minister?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question surely is not in order.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

REQUIREMENT THAT APPLICANTS POSSESS SOCIAL SECURITY CARDS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): I have a question for the Minister of Labour. Will the minister investigate reports that claimants for unemployment insurance are being denied benefits unless they have applied for and received their social security cards?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I have already investigated the situation. I find it is simply a continuation of a system that has long prevailed, under which applicants must have a number. They formerly had to have an unemployment insurance number. Now they must have a social insurance number. Only in cases where the applicant refuses to secure a number after being informed would any disqualification apply. The applicant will be given every opportunity to apply and determine his number before any disqualification would take place.

[Mr. Pugh.]

Mr. S. J. Enns (Portage-Neepawa): May I ask a supplementary question. Will the Minister of Labour say whether the voluntary registration for social security numbers is proceeding to his satisfaction?

Mr. MacEachen: I am happy to advise the hon. gentleman that the registration has been successful beyond all expectations. More than five million Canadians have registered to date.

TELEVISION

FILM ON PRIME MINISTER—OFFER BY INDEPENDENT NETWORK

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State arising out of the explanation he gave yesterday for the rejection by the C.B.C. of the Pearson film. I wonder if the hon. gentleman would ask the president of the C.B.C. if he would reconsider the offer I put to the minister to give to the C.B.C., in view of the fact it is apparent that a considerable element of C.B.C. shareholders are tending to believe the C.B.C., by its negative decision, may fear to expose its own standards and technical judgment to the public.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I have no objection to asking the C.B.C. management to reconsider its decision. However, I understand that the decision taken was submitted to the board of directors while they were meeting here last week and, under such conditions, I would doubt very much if the decision would be changed.

Mr. Fisher: May I ask a supplementary question. I just asked the minister to check and see if the board of directors' decision was not, in fact, about the showing of the film by the C.B.C., not the sale.

Mr. Lamontagne: I understand that the decision of the C.B.C. management was submitted to the board of directors.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Lessard (Lake St. John): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question?

In view of the C.B.C.'s decision, could the Secretary of State recommend to that crown corporation to hand that film over to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation so that it may be disposed of at the highest possible price in order that Canadian citizens may recover a part of the money spent on it?

FISHERIES

BRITISH COLUMBIA—CREATION OF FISHERY BEHIND PEACE RIVER DAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): I have a question for the Minister of Fisheries. Has the minister's department been advised by British Columbia hydro and power authorities of plans to establish a commercial as well as sports fishery in the huge inland lake to be created by the impounding of the waters behind the Peace river dam. If so, have they asked for the co-operation of the federal Department of Fisheries and the federal government in connection with this proposal.

Hon. H. J. Robichaud (Minister of Fisheries): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge no such request has been received by my department but if we do receive a request of this nature I can assure the British Columbia authorities of our co-operation.

URANIUM

BANCROFT, ONT.—NEGOTIATIONS BY FRENCH COMPANY FOR MINERAL RIGHTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. A. Webb (Hastings-Frontenac): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In view of the fact that the Mokta company of Paris, France, is now negotiating in the Bancroft area for the purchase of the mineral rights to properties with uranium deposits, can the minister advise the house if the government is aware of this and also if they are assisting this French company in these negotiations?

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for giving me this information. I was unaware of it. I will now follow up.

FLOODS

WATERTON LAKES PART—FEDERAL ACTION RESPECTING LOSSES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Can the minister now give an indication of the policy that will be followed in regard to losses suffered due to the flood damage in Waterton lakes national park?

Canadian Flag

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Not yet, Mr. Speaker. It had been my intention to visit the area last Monday, but unfortunately I was unable to do so. I have postponed my visit. I might say we have had three applications from lessees in respect of losses they have suffered. I am immediately confronted with the thought that if the government of Canada were to guarantee all uninsured losses against acts of God we would soon be in a difficult position. I think my hon. friend will agree with that. However, we have done our best to put the facilities of these lessees in an earning position again as quickly as possible. My hon. friend will be glad to know that attendance at the park exceeds that of last year. In the seven days ended June 28 we had some 14,000 visitors in 5,300 cars. That is very good indeed.

PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS

ERECTION OF SCAFFOLDING OUTSIDE PEACE TOWER

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver East (Mr. Winch) asked me a question yesterday concerning the exterior work being done at present on the peace tower.

I should like to say that the scaffolding which, in his opinion, mars the appearance of parliament will be removed this afternoon and the contractor will no longer have to use it.

The work will be completed in approximately six weeks. I have asked the contractor to expedite matters and to employ additional men if possible to work overtime.

CANADIAN FLAG

OFFICIAL ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DESIGN

The house resumed, from Wednesday, June 17, consideration of the motion by Mr. Pearson:

That the government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to establish officially as the flag of Canada a flag embodying the emblem proclaimed by His Majesty King George V on November 21, 1921—three maple leaves conjoined on one stem—in the colours red and white then designated for Canada, the red leaves occupying a field of white between vertical sections of blue on the edges of the flag.

And the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. John R. Matheson (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, tomorrow we celebrate another national birthday, our 97th, without a flag. "Canada does not have an official national flag—"

Some hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Matheson: Mr. Speaker, I hear interjections from the official opposition. Those are not my words, so perhaps I should read them very carefully:

> Canada does not have an official national flag, but flies several which are regulated by custom, parliamentary act and orders in council. The union flag or jack, as it is commonly called, and the Canadian red ensign are the two most frequently flown by private persons and by public as well as governmental bodies. The Canadian red ensign is frequently flown both at home and abroad when a distinctly Canadian flag is considered desirable. Much heat is engendered by discussions over what flag should be adopted; indeed, their design has become something of a recurrent national pastime. So far successive federal governments have considered it prudent to refrain from taking a definite line one way or another.

These are a few of the words carefully chosen by Dr. Conrad M. J. F. Swan, Rouge Dragon, College of Arms, London, the first Canadian to be appointed by a sovereign to the college. They are taken from his published paper entitled "The Canadian Arms of Dominion and Sovereignty" which was presented at the fifth international congress of geneological and heraldic science held in Stockholm, Sweden, in 1960. This study is painstaking in its review of relevant authorities. Dr. Swan was speaking to a world body of experts.

Of all commonwealth countries, Canada has been the most careless respecting her colours. Without any underlying reason we stumbled into the use of the sea flag to designate our nation, the sea flag of the British merchant marine recognized as such all over the world. This is a presumption that should not be permitted to continue, a practice that has added little to Canada's dignity in foreign eyes.

The Recorder and Times of Brockville published on its editorial page recently this remark by a British visitor:

> Why are some of your people determined to hang onto a flag which never really belonged to you?

The sad fact, Mr. Speaker, is that Canada has remained too ignorant or too stubborn to conform to established British flag usage as a colony while at the same time she has been unwilling to assume the badge of a nation. This state of affairs is unworthy of a country about to enter its second century.

Let us hope that out of this flag chaos, for chaos it is, there may come order and beauty. It is time we had a flag to represent our own, our native land; and what is better than this long established sprig of sugar maple to portray us to ourselves and to the world? If this resolution carries we will have a banner that sends the clean and clear message "Canada" in such winsome form as to merit, I believe, the gratitude of our children and the rectorship of judgment.

Sir Charles G. D. Roberts loved Britain but pledged his allegiance to his own country. In his poem "Canada" he wrote:

> How long the ignoble sloth, how long
> The trust in greatness not thine own?
> Surely the lion's brood is strong
> To front the world alone!
> How long the indolence, ere thou dare
> Achieve thy destiny, seize thy fame,
> Ere our proud eyes behold thee bear
> A nation's franchise, nation's name?

The purpose of a new flag is to bear our name, the name Canada, and a Canada extending from sea to sea. And what about this flag about to be born, about to flutter on our plains and on our mountains, as well as on the far places of the earth? "I am not the flag; not at all. I am but its shadow. I am whatever you make me, nothing more. I am your belief in yourself, your dream of what a people may become. I am the day's work of the weakest man, and the largest dream of the most daring. I am no more than you believe me to be and I am all that you believe I can be. I am whatever you make me, nothing more."

This new flag will be what our brave brothers of the Royal 22nd and the Royal Canadian Dragoons make it to be in Cyprus, the banner of the peacemaker in a dangerous and frightened world. This is a flag of which our young men shall see visions and our old men shall dream dreams. It is our reminder that notwithstanding the love we hold for the lands of our origins our allegiance must be to the land of our children. We are today witnessing a Canada come of age. Permit me, Mr. Speaker, to close in the words of Milton:

> Methinks I see in my mind a noble and puissant nation rousing herself like a strong man after sleep, and shaking her invincible locks.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, I am rising to speak on the amendment. I do not have any quarrel with those speakers who dwelt on the subject of the flag.

Because of the very nature of this moral and emotional issue it would be almost impossible for the Chair to try to limit this debate to the narrow terms of the amendment, but I think the time has come in this debate to put before the house, and I hope before the country, some sort of a logical reason why a plebiscite might be worth considering.

I personally do not support the concept of referendums or plebiscites taking the place of parliament. All the constitutional and common sense arguments that can be added up either on one side or the other do not destroy the essential responsibility of the House of Commons to speak its mind on issues before the country. However, Mr. Speaker, there are certain exceptions to this generalization and I suggest that on certain moral issues, on certain emotional issues, occasionally the House of Commons might consider in its wisdom the merits of using the device of the referendum or the plebiscite.

I am not a lawyer, Mr. Speaker. Therefore I will not attempt to present to the house any sort of legal or constitutional argument for this point of view. I hope to present what I trust will be a common sense case, because in this discussion across Canada I think many people would support me in the contention that a little common sense, to leaven the emotion that is arising on this issue, would serve the country well. So I want to read as an argument the precise words of the amendment and trust that many members of the house on both sides, in their own conscious thinking as to what their country will be in future, will consider the merits of a case for a plebiscite on the words of the amendment. The amendment reads:

> As the proposal to change Canada's national flag will affect the unity and destiny of Canada now and for years to come, the government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to conduct a plebiscite prior to any action being taken by the House of Commons, in order that all Canadians may be given their rightful opportunity to declare their choice concerning a national flag.

There are two main thoughts in this amendment. One deals with the question of the unity and destiny of Canada for years to come. Second is the question of giving to all Canadians a feeling that they have had a chance to declare their choice concerning a national flag. Let me make it very clear. The ever present paramount aim of all public men in Canada has always been unity. Because of the nature of our national make up it will always be the paramount aim of men of good will. This aim has been upheld by all political parties long before and ever since Canada became a federal state. I trust, Mr. Speaker, it will continue to be the case for many years to come.

Now, there is no question in my mind but that parliament has the constitutional right to decide which flag shall be flown at home and abroad as a distinctive national flag. That right is not challenged by this amendment. To keep the matter completely simple and clear, I wish to describe to the house a precedent which I believe in many ways is similar to the situation in which we now find ourselves.

I refer to the plebiscite on conscription in 1942. At that time Canada was at war. At that time the western allies were losing, and the cry for conscription was rising to a torrent in this country. There was a government in power with a large majority. It had the constitutional power to bring in conscription any time it wished and, like now, there was a furious debate in the house on this issue.

I would like to bring forward not the legal and constitutional arguments that are found in volume 1 of the 1942 debates. I do know that those legal and constitutional arguments make very clear that parliament has the power and the duty to make a decision on many matters before it, and it had that power and that duty in 1942 on the subject of conscription. Nor will I repeat the lengthy arguments used by the government in 1942 to support the idea of a plebiscite. The government of that day felt it had made a pledge at election time, and that to get off that pledge it had to have a plebiscite. What a change. Suffice it to say that in looking back on the events of 1942 and from the advantage of the historical perspective that we have now, we a nation in 1942 divided on an emotional issue. In fact many people of great sincerity believed it was a moral issue.

It was clear to anyone in 1942 that there was a large minority in Canada which had deep feelings against the use of conscription to obtain manpower to wage Canada's part in that war. My question is, did the government at that time, in the full knowledge that it had a majority in the house and the power to pass conscription legislation, decide that this matter should be determined in the House of Commons? The answer, of course, lies in the history of our country. The government of that day accepted the political realities of the situation as they existed in this nation known as Canada. They gave the minority a chance to express its views.

An hon. Member: And what happened?

Mr. Hamilton: I will read the words of Mr. Abbott, who was then a member of the government.

Mr. Knowles: In 1942?

Mr. Hamilton: In 1942.

Mr. Knowles: He was just a private member then.

Mr. Hamilton: I am corrected; he was just a member sitting on a government side. He said:

> It seems to me no useful purpose is going to be served by an interminable debate in this house or outside it as to the desirability or otherwise of this plebiscite. We are going to have it, and in spite of what some people may say it is a thoroughly democratic procedure. I spoke a moment ago about responsibility and I suggest that the people of the country as a whole now have an opportunity to assume their responsibility, to turn out and vote and show each other and the rest of the world, if you will, that democracy can be made to work even in wartime.

I use those words and repeat them today to illustrate the point that to give the people a chance to express themselves on that issue was a demonstration to Canadians and to the world that even in time of war Canada could face up to an issue in a democratic way. The people certainly did. The majority voted yes. The minority, with deep feelings, voted no. They had their chance to express their feelings in a universal ballot. When conscription was brought about there was aquiescence and in most cases loyal support for the decision. What could have been a terribly divisive force capable of dividing Canada for generations was subdued because the government even in wartime took time out to let the people speak.

Hon. members might let their minds go back to the deep feelings which were expressed against conscription in 1942, not only in Quebec but all across this country. Had that parliament, with all the constitutional authority it possessed, imposed conscription on the people of Canada without holding a plebiscite, then today, more than 20 years later, this country would still be divided on that issue.

You cannot expect a large group of people in a democratic state to be forced into an action they do not like. But give that minority a chance to express itself in a democratic way and the result might well be different. When it was clear in 1942 to all those in every part of Canada who opposed conscription that the majority did not share their view, even those who had opposed it acquiesced. And, to their honour, when conscription was ultimately introduced many of them loyally supported the government and served this country at home and abroad in the uniform of His Majesty.

I have called attention to this precedent because we are faced now with another emotional issue. This time it is a different group which feels itself to be a minority. I should like to suggest to all those who want to ram this proposed flag down our throats immediately that they should consider the feelings of those groups in Canada which want to remember this country as being founded by French and English alike in a common purpose and sharing a common destiny. They want their symbols to show that common background. Their feelings on this subject of a flag are equally deep.

This is not a subject for great wisdom; it is not a subject for great lawyers and constitutional experts; it is not a subject for flag experts and those who deal with these things. It is a matter upon which the views of every individual, no matter how small he may be physically and mentally, are just as important as those of all the experts gathered together. This is an emotional issue. Large groups in Canada feel their deepest feelings have been assaulted; that the feelings which they and their fathers grew up with have been steamrollered, and I could use other expressions which only those close to the earth would understand. These are their feelings. They may be wrong, but I suggest they feel just as deeply as the people felt in 1942 on conscription. They want to express their opinions.

Read the words of the members who were opposed to conscription in that debate. Many of them supported a plebiscite. Some said "Yes, if the majority approves it, we will abide by it." Today I plead with the house and particularly with those on the government benches. Because you have 128 members over there and we have 95 or 96 over here, you do not have to trample us into the dust on this question. I would like to see it recognized in 1964 that there is a minority in Canada which feels deeply on this matter of the flag, and I suggest that if this flag is pushed through now without their say-so, this minority will grow and grow; it cannot help but grow. If this flag is forced on those who do not want it there will be an irreconcilable minority for decades to come, just as there would have been with regard to conscription in 1942 if parliament had forced through the house a measure to impose conscription on people across Canada who felt as deeply as they did against it, without giving them an opportunity to express their views. However, when they were given an opportunity to do so and when they saw, after a long period of discussion, that the majority did want conscription, to their honour they not only acquiesced but, in their thousands, loyally supported that decision.

It is the same situation today, only in reverse. The groups I have mentioned are loyal Canadians. They have called for a referendum so their views may be measured. They have said that if the referendum or plebiscite goes against them they will be loyal to the flag which the majority of Canadians choose. What more could you ask from them? The situation was just as it is today, when everyone of us is loyal to those flags which fly on parliament hill today because legally it is the only distinctive flag we have.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: Many thousands of men—not all of them—who fought in the last war believed they were proving to the world that it was their flag; and now we are told it is not. I simply suggest that the majority of the Canadian Legion have surely earned, by their sweat, their loneliness and their service, the right to have their views considered on this matter.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Hamilton: When they were stuck in those platoons on the fighting fronts of the world in 1942, 1943 and 1944 and waited for reinforcements, they saw their government delay and have a discussion over a plebiscite and a vote and then take a long time to put in conscription. Some of us are old enough to remember the bitter words that were said on those battlefields. But looking back at that situation today in retrospect we realize that if that plebiscite had not been given in 1942 there would have been a country divided against itself even today. Perhaps many a Canadian boy is not back here today because the government was slow; but looked at in retrospect, that move eased the pressure and subdued the deep feelings that were there, because they had a democratic chance to speak their piece by marking in the word "yes" or "no".

That is what this amendment asks for today. Surely considering the political realities, as they were considered in wartime, if you can take time out to bring in conscription in the middle of a war, and when there are deep feelings on this issue today—and these feelings will increase on a matter such as this—and we want to maintain unity, we should give consideration to holding a plebiscite on this question of the flag. I suggest that when you already have the promise of these organizations that if the vote goes against them they will accept the new flag and loyally serve under it wherever duty calls, with that pledge you should honour the wish of the Canadian Legion at this time.

I am not going to delve into the intricate problems of the wording of the plebiscite. In my own mind I have gone through this many times. I want to keep the force of the suggestion I am making, which I think is a common sense type of logic, so clear that the people can make up their minds whether a plebiscite should or should not be used on this occasion. I think if the people looked at this situation with all the political realities as they are—and the whole country both east and west wants this country more united—here is one way that I suggest would help. Whether there is going to be, if this plebiscite idea is accepted, a committee of intellectuals, a committee of this house, or even a committee representing the provincial governments, regardless of what type of group you get together to plan the bare terms of this plebiscite I think a plebiscite could be worked out whereby the great majority of these people who now feel they are a minority would feel they had a chance to express themselves.

My final point to the house is this. If this democratic procedure, in the face of the political realities in Canada today, is not followed, then this flag debate may well become the turning point in Canada's history. The issue, as I see it, is whether to reinforce division or reinforce unity. When you have the pledge of these loyal organizations that they will support a referendum or plebiscite and will honour any decision that is taken by the majority, surely that is the way of unity. If you force a flag on the country without a vote you will leave a non-reconciled group on an issue on which it is vital to Canada that there be maximum unity.

I would appeal to those who have felt for many years in Canada that they are a continuing minority. I refer to those who come from the province of Quebec. Surely if you wish us who do not live in the province of Quebec to be always considerate of your position as a minority on issues that affect you deeply, such as your language, your culture and your religion—and believe me, in this country long before confederation and since many of us have honoured those commitments—now that we have those with other loyalties in the maritimes, in the eastern townships, along the Ottawa river on the Quebec side, through many parts of Ontario—

An hon. Member: What about the prairies?

Mr. Hamilton: —yes, and through the parts settled by new Canadians on the prairies, and in that old province of British Columbia, you will give this opportunity to those who feel deeply about and adhere to the flag. Give this to those who look not on the union jack as their flag at the moment but on the red ensign; who are proud of the fact that it has religious significance to them, with the crosses of St. George, St. Andrew and St. Patrick on it; who are conscious of the fact that many of them left their lands in Europe to get the protection of the principles of law and justice which that flag has spread all over the world. Whether you live in Burma, India, Pakistan, New Zealand or Australia the principles of law and justice under that flag carry on regardless of what new type of government they have. These people should have the right to ask from the government a chance to use their democratic right to express their opinion; and this is all they do ask.

I have heard people say "They had a chance in the last election. They will get a chance in the next election". This argument does not hold, because such a great body of our country, when you are voting Liberal against Conservative, against N.D.P., against Social Credit and against Creditiste, consider that other issues are far more important and they will not vote precisely on the flag issue. This is why many people who are Liberal today do not want a change in the flag. If an election was fought on the issue—and many other issues would have to go along with that—they would vote for the Liberal party because they are more Liberal than they are interested in the flag. The result is that you will leave on the flag issue this unsatisfied minority which will be there for 10, 15 or 20 years—for as long as they live.

Now, you could use another choice. You could slap in this flag and then by propaganda try to convince the people of this country, even though it has no background—I think someone once said that if you cross a horse and a mule you get a jackass—no posterity and certainly no promise for the future.

Mr. Winkler: Don't bray so loud over there.

Mr. Hamilton: I should like to think that if you were going to win support for this new flag you should face the political realities. Those who support the red ensign today know that much of their battle was lost because they were betrayed by the ministers of education in the provincial governments. Hardly a province in Canada today which has complete constitutional power over its schools has regulation to the effect that the legal flag of this country, the red ensign, must be flown. We have hundreds of thousands of school children who think that the union jack is Canada's flag. It is not; it is the flag of a sister member of the commonwealth. It is a proud flag but it is not ours. Hundreds of thousands of school children have no knowledge of our flag because they never see the flag of their country when they walk to school in the morning and come out of it at night. If the government does bring in a new flag, what good is it to us? After a while the C.B.C. loses interest. After a while the news media lose interest. It is a five day or maybe a nine day wonder. Until our school children see that flag every day and are told what men have endured for that flag, it is a meaningless thing.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the government cannot sell this new flag until they have the support of the provincial governments. And what do we find in this regard? British Columbia is going to fly four flags, and the other provinces will reveal their intentions in due course. I am simply suggesting that when the government have learned so much from the mistakes they made last year in trying to do everything in 60 days, with 300 days to regret it, why do they not adopt on such an emotional issue what I think is a reasonably logical and common sense approach, and if they are thinking of the long range unity of this country and of all people being behind this new flag in the course of a few years they could give to the present minority the same rights as another minority got in 1942. It is not on many issues that referendums and plebiscites should be used to take over the responsibility of the House of Commons; but I certainly believe that history has supported the plebiscite of 1942 and I should hope that history would support a plebiscite on the flag issue in 1965.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the amendment moved by the leader of the official opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) that a plebiscite be held on this very important issue. Before proceeding I must in fairness say that in doing so I am expressing my personal opinion; but in expressing that opinion I am expressing the opinion of many of my constituents and, I am quite confident, of a large segment of the Canadian people. However, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I am very glad to belong to a party that protects the rights of the minorities which exist within it.

To indicate the views of many of my constituents on this question I wish to table a petition which was circulated by the young Progressive Conservatives association of Rossland and Trail in Kootenay West, which contains the signatures of something over 900 citizens of our district and which represents the views of members or supporters of all parties which exist in that constituency, the four major parties. As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have not the fifth party in Kootenay West. The petition reads as follows:

> We, the undersigned, believe Canada's heritage and future can be best symbolized only by the red ensign, bearing witness to her origins and the fundamental cultures from which will stem her future greatness. No twig of leaves alone can achieve this.

I wish to hand to the page boys this petition, which is 70 feet long and is signed by the good burghers of Kootenay West.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Drouin (Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes): Mr. Speaker, I object to the printing of this petition in Hansard. We heard that the petition included 18,000 names. You can imagine what would happen if it were printed in Hansard. We would have a 3 foot thick volume. Consequently, as far as I am concerned, I object to the publication of this petition in Hansard.

[Text]

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member misunderstands my intentions. I am not asking for the names to be printed, I am asking for the petition to be tabled.

[Translation]

Mr. Drouin: In that case, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection.

[Text]

Mr. Herridge: Then I am very glad we are in agreement on that question anyway, Mr. Speaker.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if you and the hon. members of the house will pardon a personal reference, I feel that my Norman, my English and my North American Indian ancestry provide me with a background that prompts me to respect all points of view and be able to deal with this question objectively, fairly and without undue emotion.

It is quite obvious that the flood of mail which members of the house are receiving on the flag issue indicates that many people's feelings are aroused to a far greater extent than they have been on some economic or social issues. That appears illogical on the surface but it is the fact. Something over 1,000 of my constituents have indicated to me their preference for the red ensign, and I think some six or eight have indicated their support for the proposed flag of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). I contrast that with receiving on a very important issue 10 postcards. It just means simply that people are human and that many take for granted that the other issues will be dealt with by parliament and proceeded with according to their wishes. But people do get concerned over an issue such as this, which indicates that support for symbols can stir people to action who otherwise are not in the habit of writing to members of parliament or expressing themselves in vigorous language. While on the surface this may appear to be illogical, in my opinion it is a healthy sign which demonstrates that multitudes of Canadians still consider ideals before dollars or material values. There is a good aspect to this, and I do not think we should underestimate it.

Now, fortunately, we live in a democracy where people can freely express their opinions and make a choice. Some people prefer abstract art to some of the great masters, others prefer Ezra Pound to the reading of Shakespeare; others prefer Elvis Presley to Beethoven. It is their right in a democracy to choose. In the same spirit of freedom; therefore, some will choose the Prime Minister's flag in preference to the red ensign.

Another interesting thing, Mr. Speaker, is that all parties are divided. We recognize that. It is obvious from the frequent remarks and interjections made by the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and some of his confreres from Quebec that the Progressive Conservative party is divided. There is nothing wrong with that on an issue of this type. The Liberal party is also divided on this issue. I have a very good indication of that. I see the hon. lady member for a Winnipeg constituency looking with some concern, but I shall have to inform her to that effect. Mr. H. M. Copp, of Vancouver, past president of the Vancouver-Burrard Liberal association, wrote a letter in which he said:

> Many Liberals, including myself, will never fly the proposed new flag unless the decision to replace the red ensign is made by all Canadians through a national plebiscite, which decision will be respected by all fair-minded persons.

There we have a supporter for our point of view from a very important person in the Liberal party in Vancouver. Then, Mr. Foster Isherwood, a Liberal candidate for four elections in Victoria accuses the Prime Minister of pettiness, arrogance and bungling and says he has no mandate to introduce a distinctive national flag. Prominent Liberals in my constituency have informed me of their opposition. I should like to quote from one telegram which I received from a very well known citizen in my riding. I quote:

> The way in which Pearson has handled the flag question stinks. Regret now of ever having supported a Liberal candidate in the Kaslo-Slocan. Ask you to support red ensign or if necessary a design different from Pearson's folly. Good luck.

Now, that is rather strong language, but it shows how people can get concerned. Here are these people either opposing their party's policy or leaving their party as Mr. Isherwood did. He has now joined the Progressive Conservative party as a result of the flag issue, which indicates how deeply some people feel about these symbols.

I wish to quote from a letter addressed to Right Hon. L. B. Pearson, dated May 27, 1964 which indicates that there are differences of opinion in our party, too. We admit it readily. I quote briefly from this letter:

> We applaud your decision to seek a distinctive national flag for Canada, and recognize your courage in doing so. We believe, as you do, that the flag should be a source of national unity, and that it should be unmistakably Canadian in character. However, we protest that the maple leaf flag is neither of these things. Its only advantage is that it is innocuous, that it produces tepid approval, mild disapproval or indifference, and that it can therefore be adopted without any display of strong feeling whatever. We have a despairing feeling that this insipid flag, instead of promoting national unity, will produce only an indifferent response, and in doing so will subtly undermine the Canadian will to survive. We believe profoundly that this negative approach to our national symbols erodes our national spirit.
> The very essence of this country's history, and the reason for our national distinctiveness, has been the long and often turbulent marriage of French and English heritages. We have faith that in their depths, Canadians pride themselves on this union, and on its parliamentary and non-revolutionary tradition. Canada has a continuous history of 300 years of union. The creative tension between the two founding peoples has been a guarantee to other racial groups of their continued identity, in contrast to the American concept of the melting pot. These are the positive facts of our history; we cannot change them; they give Canada its sinews. The nation is strong enough to face its own task proudly, and to assert it. Whatever may be said about the use of the maple leaf as a Canadian emblem in the past, it has never gained anyone's vigorous allegiance, and it involves no commitment to the human fact of Canada.
> We believe that Canada has a distinguished culture of its own. We believe that this is a positive culture. We believe that the basis of this positive culture is a frank acceptance of both the English Canadians and the French Canadian civilization. We believe that a distinctive Canadian flag should reflect this positive fact.

Now, I want to bring to the attention of members of the house the fact that included in the names of those signing this letter is Mr. Eugene Forsey, director of research, Canadian Labour Congress, Ottawa. He was a delegate to the founding convention of the New Democratic party. Then there was Mr. Walter Pitman, head of the history department, Kenner Collegiate, Peterborough, who was a former New party member of parliament, and many of you will remember the excellent contributions he made to this house. I might also say I have numerous letters from members of our party in my constituency, and it is very interesting to watch the division of opinion on an issue such as this.

Here is a letter from an old time socialist, a left wing socialist. What does he say? He used to tell me that he was an old time socialist from England. This is what he says:

> Dear Bert:
>
> Please do your best to retain our flag.
> Don't be "Pearson".

I have received other letters that state the writer prefers the red ensign because there is a bit of red in it; others because they believed the flag itself was a better flag so far as design is concerned and for flying as a national flag. These letters indicate a wide division of opinion, even within parties. I might say that to some extent the division of opinion has been occasioned by the fact that no single party that has placed in its program that it believes in a distinctive national flag has defined what it meant by "a distinctive national flag". To date, we have the members of all parties expressing various points of view. In one instance they believe that the red ensign is a distinctive national flag according to the order in council, and from the other side you get the sincere belief that it is not a distinctive national flag. This has added somewhat to the confusion and to the division even within parties in this country.

The division within this country, and within political parties, in my opinion clearly emphasizes the necessity for adopting somewhat unusual procedures for the nation to make a satisfactory decision that will be accepted by all the people in the nation. I was a member of the joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons in 1945-46, appointed to consider and report upon a suitable design for a national flag for Canada. This committee held a number of meetings at which the question was thoroughly discussed. We had representatives of the college of heralds before us, or persons informed about the procedures of the college of heralds. We had different groups give evidence, and after hearing all the contributions on the question, I think we were supplied with some 2,700 flags by various people throughout Canada. There was a great deal of interest in the question at that time. The committee recommended as follows:

That this committee recommend that the national flag of Canada should be the Canadian red ensign with a maple leaf in autumn golden colours in a bordered background of white replacing the coat of arms in the fly the whole design to be so proportioned that the size and position of the maple leaf in relation to the union jack in the canton will identify it as a symbol distinctive of Canada as a nation.

The chairman declared the motion carried by a vote of 23 to 1. I should explain to the house that on that occasion it was pointed out by the experts in heraldry that so long as the union jack was an exact quarter of the ensign it indicated that the union jack was dominant, but that if it was reduced to less than a quarter of the ensign the flag as a signal would read Canada and the ensign would represent membership in the British commonwealth. The white edging around the golden maple leaf was placed there at the request of our colleagues from the province of Quebec, and there was only one dissenting voice when the vote was taken. That was from a gentleman known as Mr. Lacroix who was considered, I think, a very independent minded member of the Liberal party.

Our leader has very ably expressed the views of this party with respect to the commitments made by the Prime Minister to the electorate during the last election, and he has clearly outlined our views as to the priority that should be given to these commitments and the legislation required to give effect to them. However, by the unfortunate introduction of this issue at this time the Prime Minister has diverted the attention of parliament and the people of Canada from issues which are of immediate concern and importance to the people. In my opinion the Prime Minister has committed a series of unfortunate blunders in dealing with this issue, and before concluding my remarks I wish to mention them.

I would say the first was in March, 1963, when he promised a Winnipeg audience of foreign language newspaper editors that a Liberal government would produce a distinctive Canadian flag within two years of assuming office. The Prime Minister had a perfect right to do that, but this has not produced the response from the groups in question that the Prime Minister expected. By doing so under these circumstances it was considered in other quarters as a somewhat partisan play for support of his flag from one very good section of the Canadian people. This has not been appreciated to the extent that the Prime Minister thought it would by these groups.

In my opinion the Prime Minister's second blunder was when he announced he would consider the House of Commons vote on his proposed flag as a vote of confidence. This means that if the house rejects his flag parliament will be dissolved and the Prime Minister will call an election with the flag issue as the major reason therefor. I think that would be a most unfortunate circumstance in Canada at this time in view of the pressing legislation that demands the attention of the house and which is required by the Canadian people.

In my opinion the Prime Minister's third blunder was when he informed us that there would be continuous debate on the flag, with this issue taking precedence over all other legislation on the agenda. That was what he said in the first instance. Since then the Prime Minister has had to gee and haw, has had to back and go ahead, and so on. He has been marching forward by tramping sideways. It was a most unfortunate suggestion on his part that this issue was going to be considered first by parliament, to the exclusion of urgent matters.

His fourth blunder was in announcing the policy of the government on the flag issue by means of the issuance of a stamp. What does this mean? Does this mean that we must watch our stamps as an indication of government policy in the future? So far as I know this is the first time in Canadian history that government policy has been announced by the use of the graphic arts. Just think where this could lead us. We are all watching every issue of stamps very carefully. For instance, suppose the Prime Minister causes a stamp to be issued with a picture of the Secretary of State on it for the purpose of announcing a change in C.B.C. policy and with a motto on it reading: Don't make a mountain out of a molehill. Just imagine. We would all be wondering what legislation was going to come before the house.

Suppose the Postmaster General issued a stamp showing the Postmaster General shooting down a stork in full flight. We would wonder whether he was going to adopt the bill that has been proposed by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie). It would keep us all on the alert. There are endless possibilities to the announcement of government policy by the issuing of stamps. We think that policy should be announced in the house and that members of the house and the people of Canada should not be kept in a highly nervous state from day to day trying to read the meaning of government policy from the stamps that are issued from time to time. We think that was a blunder.

Fifth, Mr. Speaker, in my opinion it was a blunder for the Prime Minister to address the opening ceremonies of the annual convention of the Royal Canadian Legion at Winnipeg on this issue. While some have lauded him for his courage, and you can look at it from both points of view, it appears to me that in view of the announced policy of the Legion and the very strongly held and expressed views on the part of the great majority of the membership of the Legion, his speaking on this issue at their annual convention was a venture similar in nature to the leader of the New Democratic party addressing a nominating convention of the Progressive Conservative party on the virtues of socialism.

Mr. Knowles: A good idea.

Mr. Herridge: I think that was a big mistake. It caused unnecessary misunderstanding and unnecessary heat to be generated over this important question. At this point I want to take the strongest exception to a cartoon that was published in the Citizen some two or three weeks ago with respect to the Royal Canadian Legion and which I thought portrayed veterans in a very undignified way. I think it was entirely uncalled for. None of us minds seeing a bit of wit and humour in a cartoon, and some sharp thrusts, but I think it is going a bit too far to depict aging veterans of this country sitting around a table drinking beer and content to remain as bloated windbags. I think this was a most unfortunate cartoon. It has been strongly resented by members of the Legion and their dependants and by many other Canadians. In my opinion it was in very poor taste indeed.

It is wonderful how news travels, Mr. Speaker, and I am wondering whether the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Martin) has tipped off some of his friends in the United States with regard to what he expects is going to happen. The new flag proposed by the Prime Minister is being flown over buildings in New York and Washington, not public buildings but over department stores and other buildings owned by corporations and companies.

Mr. Habel: Already?

Mr. Herridge: Yes. We have pictures of them. They have been told: It's all right, boys; go ahead. This is the free enterprise system. A sales pitch is already being made in the United States for the sale of the new Canadian flag. This is not being done because of any love for Canada. I am quite confident that behind this action are the usual mercenary instincts which prompt such persons to take advantage of any developing social situation, whether it be by increasing the price of land because of the building of new houses, or something else. They take advantage of the opportunity for their own profit. In any event, we know that the news has reached the United States.

I want to repeat that this is an important question. I respect any person's sincere view upon it, whatever his view is, but I agree with the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) that the issue is so important it can only be resolved to the satisfaction of the present and future generations by a plebiscite in which the Canadian people will have the opportunity to choose between the Prime Minister's proposed flag, the red ensign or some modification of the same, or some other flag.

I think this is necessary, and that the majority will accept the decision with good will. The Royal Canadian Legion has expressed its opinions strongly in that respect. So have a number of other well known organizations, and I have received a good many letters to that effect.

We should not get too alarmed because people become, as I said before, very concerned about this issue and a little bit worked up. I glory in the fact that Canadians are not altogether concerned with dollar issues. They are concerned with all of these issues related to ideals, related to history, and related to symbols which mean a great deal to all of us in western civilization, whatever those symbols may be.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I am of the opinion that in view of the nature of the issue, the emotional nature of the issue and the close involvement of the people on this account, and in view of the succession of blunders made by the Prime Minister in the handling of this issue, and in order to obtain a decision satisfactory to the majority of Canadians, it is necessary to support the amendment for the holding of a plebiscite throughout the country so that once and for all we can determine the wishes of the people with respect to a national flag.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I should like to make a comment about the petition which the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge) has presented to the house. I should like to refer the hon. member to standing order No. 70, on page 49 of the "Standing Orders of the House of Commons". Subsection 1 says this:

> A petition to the house may be presented by a member at any time during the sitting of the house by filing the same with the Clerk of the house.

My understanding is that the interpretation of that particular standing order is that it is to be filed with the Clerk of the house in the Clerk's office. I should also refer to section 2 of the same standing order which says:

> Any member desiring to present a petition in his place in the house must do so during routine proceedings and before introduction of bills.

I am sure the hon. member will recognize the meaning of that particular section and of the action which he has taken in tabling the petition after that period during the day. I might suggest to the hon. member that the better procedure would be for him to present the petition to the Clerk of the house in the Clerk's office.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for your explanation. As one who always tries to keep the rules I trust I will not be named for this violation of the rules, and at the first opportunity I shall take the petition and present it to the Clerk in his office.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, we are all stiff from straining our history muscles in preparation for this debate. It is rather like term essay time in college. Seldom have the librarians been hurled into the battle so early and in such force. I know they welcome the pause which the delays in the debate have given them to clear away the debris of flag books, photocopies, old orders in council and crumpled library slips. They have been struck by a hurricane of heraldry.

Our flag history in the west is somewhat different from that of the rest of Canada, because we are different. The Hudson's Bay Company was trading on the prairies before the American revolution, and long before United Empire Loyalists were heard of. They had their charter from Charles II in 1570, just three years after the birth of Champlain, the 400th anniversary of whose birth incidentally is celebrated in our centennial year. They also had permission to fly the red ensign with the letters H.B.C. in the fly as their company flag. This flag flew over trading posts and forts when John A. Macdonald was a child. It flies over our Hudson's Bay stores in the west today and will continue to fly over them after Canada has adopted the maple leaf flag. Thus, the government of Canada was not the first to fly the red ensign in British North America.

The Canadian red ensign is not a unique and distinctive flag within Canada. We have another and an older one in the west. I wish to extend to all members of this house who may feel an unbearable nostalgia for the red ensign, and particularly to my good friend the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan), who, unfortunately, is not here this afternoon, an invitation to visit the beautiful city of Vancouver and shop under the old H.B.C. red ensign, six days a week and to nine o'clock on Friday evenings.

Nor is the red ensign distinctive outside Canada. In a window in Toronto airport you may see today a display of world flags among which are seven British ensigns, blue and red, including our own. If you carried the red ensign across Texas, do you really believe that anyone would say, "Hello, Canada"?

Some hon. Members: They sure would.

Mr. Deachman: Like a woman wondering what to wear, Canada has never been able to make her mind up about a flag. John Bourinot, a clerk of the House of Commons, who sat in the very same chair which Mr. Raymond occupies with such distinction today, wrote a book in 1895 called: "How Canada is Governed". In it he said this about our flags:

> The union jack is flown from all fortresses and garrisons of Canada. The Dominion of Canada has also authority to display on all public occasions a national flag, viz., the red or blue ensign. The red ensign is displayed at the opening and closing of parliament, and on national occasions.

The custom of flying the red ensign in Canada appears to have originated before confederation. Sir Edmund Head, later to be governor of the Canadas, wrote to Lord Grey in 1851 saying: "Their flag should be a modification of our own with a difference of some kind." Thus, the idea of an ensign or modified union jack stems, not from Canadian minds, but from the colonial office.

Sir John A. Macdonald apparently encouraged this idea by flying the red ensign on parliament hill. As a Scot, he was probably no union jack lover. James VI had made the first union jack when he slapped England's cross of St. George on top of the cross of St. Andrew and told the fiercely protesting Scots to like it or lump it. Scottish loyalty to the flag today expresses more their increasing equity and proprietorship in England than their brotherly love of Englishmen.

An illustration in Canadian Illustrated News of February 26, 1870, shows the red ensign on the parliament buildings without any identifying crest or badge on the fly. I think I am historically correct in saying that the first red ensign flown on the House of Commons was the undefaced marine ensign, flown by Sir John A. Macdonald in the very first years of confederation. It appears to have flown there regularly until 1904 when a curious incident occurred. On St. Patrick's day, Mr. Henri Bourassa, the member for Labelle and the René Lévesque of his day, rose in the house and said:

"I noticed on the day of the opening of parliament as well as today, which is St. Patrick's day, that the Canadian flag which used to be put up on the tower of parliament buildings has been replaced by a union jack. I would like to know why the old flag that has been used in Canada ever since confederation should be laid aside".

I can think of no one less likely to champion the flag of Sir John A. Macdonald than Henri Bourassa, unless it were Louis Riel himself. Yet there he was calling upon Sir Wilfrid Laurier to explain what he had done with Sir John's flag.

Sir Wilfrid rose, and if he is remembered for his courtly manners and gracious speech he wasn't wasting any of them on his rival that day. He said:

I am sorry to say that I cannot satisfy today the rather fastidious curiosity of my hon. friend but I will make inquiry and try to give him an explanation upon another day.

Mr. Bourassa replied: "Perhaps the British empire league has something to do with it".

Then the Hon. James Sutherland, minister of public works, spilled the beans. He said:

I may explain to the hon. gentleman that the flag hitherto flown on the parliament buildings has been what is known as the Canadian merchant marine flag. It is not the national flag in any other sense. The national flag, as we understand it for this purpose, is the union jack. Many complaints have reached the department on previous occasions that the flag floating over the parliament buildings was not the authorized flag for that purpose, and when we were buying a new flag the one which was bought, in accordance with the custom of Canada and all portions of the empire throughout the world, was the one authorized for the purpose.

[Mr. Deachman.]

Quite a different story than the one given by Bourinot in 1895. Then Mr. Bourassa said:

I know that the red ensign is the merchant marine flag but I know it has always been used in this country as being the special colonial flag to which we have added the escutcheon of confederation. It has always been used on the building.

There the matter was dropped. Not a tear from a Tory as Sir Wilfrid pulled down the red ensign and stuffed it into the flag locker—only the plaintive protest of Henri Bourassa. Sir John A. Macdonald had introduced the red ensign to Canada simply by running it up the pole like the jolly roger, when he swarmed aboard the ship of state; and Laurier had struck it from the mast the same way.

Years later in May, 1931, Mr. Cameron McIntosh, then the member for North Battleford referred to the incident. He said:

Before 1904 we had the red ensign with the coat of arms of Canada in the fly, which flag was our flag from the days of Sir John A. Macdonald down to 1904. The flag was flown across this country from ocean to ocean; it was the national flag from Atlantic to Pacific. However, it was hauled down in 1904. Why? The circumstances surrounding the taking down of that flag have never been made known to the Canadian people but it was taken down and from 1904 to the present day the union jack has been flown in its place. In 1912 the union jack was made the official flag of Canada by the secretary of state for the colonies and from 1912 to 1931 as from 1904 to 1912 the union jack has been flown in Canada as our Canadian flag—something distinctly it can never be. The red ensign, differenced by the Canadian coat of arms, is flying outside of Canada, but it is not the official flag in Canada, it was hauled down and has never been put up.

The Conservatives were in power in 1931. They could have restored Sir John's red ensign to its place on top of the peace tower. The tower was there, but they chose not to. They left it for Mackenzie King to do that in 1945.

King, at heart a red ensign man, was always under suspicion of performing some jiggery-pokery with the flag. As long ago as May 31, 1929, Mr. Thomas Donnelly asked this hair-raising question:

I would like to ask the Prime Minister if a committee has been appointed, as stated, consisting of six or seven Roman Catholic priests to provide a new flag for Canada.

While I am debunking some history, I want to return to the prairies at the time of confederation. I have said that the flag which flew in the early west was the red ensign of the Hudson's Bay Company.

When Riel took Fort Garry in 1869 the Metis pulled down the company flag and ran up the flag of the provisional government, which bore the fleur-de-lis for their French origin, and shamrocks in honour of William O'Donaghue, Fenian and friend of Riel.

In the spring of 1870, Riel pulled this flag down and ran up the union jack as an indication of his provisional government's willingness to co-operate with Ottawa. When O'Donaghue tried to pull down the union jack, Riel called André Nault, the man who commanded the firing squad which shot Scott, and ordered him to shoot anyone who tried to pull down the union jack. The whole story is told in Davidson's life of Louis Riel.

Thus, Riel became a sort of Canadian Barbara Frietchie:

> Shoot if you must this old gray head,
> But spare your country's flag, she said.

Western flags do not end with the Metis flag, and the Hudson's Bay Company flag. We have a British Columbia flag which we acquired quite as casually as Canada acquired the red ensign from Sir John A. Macdonald. One day, about two years ago, Mr. Bennett came home from a visit to England and announced that he had found the flag of British Columbia in the catacombs of the college of heralds, where it had lain unseen by man for many years, like the body of Tutankhamen.

It consisted of a union jack, a series of wavy blue bands to represent the Pacific ocean and shooting up over the whole thing the rays of a big yellow setting sun. Harold Weir, a Vancouver Sun columnist, put on sun glasses against any possible injury and went out to see it. He described it as a "startling salmagundy of form and colour". I looked up "salmagundy" and found it was a meat salad of many ingredients. I see many B.C. flags around these days, and I will say this for them; they are certainly bright and cheerful.

Today this flag, along with the red ensign and union jack, are flown on poles all the same height—on the grounds of the legislature in Victoria. In a statement to Canadian Press, Mr. Bennett said:

> If parliament approves the proposed maple leaf flag it will be flown in front of the legislature but only in addition to the three flags being raised —the ensign, the union jack and the B.C. flag.

Although I am hesitant to break the news to him, for fear what it may do to his mind, I must tell the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) that in British Columbia we will have not two flags —not three flags—but four flags.

We do not need another flag in the west. We have plenty of them now and we are loyal to them all in our own fashion. Visiting American Rotarians are already confused by the several flags blazing behind the head table. They do not know which way to turn when the anthem is played. How can we explain another one to them?

If Canada were the west alone, I do not believe we would choose a new flag now. Some would agitate for one. Most would be content to keep our old banners. If the choice were ours we would not choose a maple leaf. The sugar maple is not a part of the west. The buffalo, the wheat sheaf and—on the totems of our coastal Indians—the thunderbird; these are the symbols of the west. Yes, even the old red ensign of the Hudson's Bay Company. How distant and how unreal the battle seems. We are 3,000 miles from the bicultural front. The aspirations of Quebec are interpreted to us by the Anglo-Saxons of Ontario, and sometimes I think they lose a little in translation. We hear the voice of Quebec on the second or third echo.

How easy it would be for western members in this debate to vote for a plebiscite. We could drop our parliamentary responsibilities with the easy abandon of Gypsy Rose Lee dropping her beads. We could leave it to the men in the wheat fields, the girls in the offices and the boys on the fish boats to vote for the flag—or to vote against it. Then, when barnyard patriots had won the day, we could come back and shout at our French Canadian brothers in the house: We have a mandate from our people and we are here to impose it on you.

Come, let us reason together. Is this what we in honesty believe we should do to Canada? Are we to go to the two million Europeans and Asians who live in the west and ask them for a mandate to shove a flag which flew at the masthead of Wolfe's ship down the throats of five and a half million of their fellow Canadians who live 3,000 miles away? Said Lord Durham, of the Canadas in 1839: "I found two nations warring ... the children lisped the hatred they would feel as men". Will it be any different if we fail in this debate to find the meaning of Canada?

In his address on the flag, the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) singled out the ridings of Victoria and Vancouver. I have singled out the city of Prince Albert, perhaps a more typical western city, to illustrate my case. These are the people who live there: 11,331 British, 3,560 French, 226 Austrians, 67 Czechs and Slovaks, 16 Finns, 1,764 Germans, 280 Hungarians, 46 Italians, 94 Jews, 551 Dutch, 1,063 Poles, 210 Russians, 1,891 Scandinavians 2,260 Ukrainians, 174 Chinese, 225 native Indians, and 410 from other countries. There are 24,168 people in Prince Albert. The minority are of British origin. I would sooner toss a skunk into a Sunday school picnic rather than set the good people of Prince Albert against each other on the subject of a distinctive Canadian flag versus a flag of British design and origin.

Mr. Skoreyko: What absolute nonsense.

Mr. Deachman: Kennedy said:

> With a good conscience our only sure reward, with history the final judge of our deeds, let us go forth to lead the land we love—

That is what we were asked to do when we were elected—to lead the land we love. We are sent here to participate in the political leadership of Canada. For my part, I willingly accept that responsibility for the people of Vancouver Quadra.

I believe a plebiscite would be a beast let loose on the land to tear at the guts of national unity.

Mr. Winkler: That is a very profound statement.

Mr. Deachman: I believe Canada needs not only a distinctive flag but a distinctive Canadian spirit. Wolfe and Montcalm were not Canadians; they were two lonely imperial soldiers fighting a battle thousands of miles from home. They had no personal links with Canada, no interest in her destiny, no Canadian spirit. The forgotten man whom Canadians should remember was Abraham Martin, a 17th century Scot who died exactly 400 years ago. He married a French girl, came to Quebec, and eventually acquired the lands on which the battle was fought a century later, the plains of Abraham. No Canadian traces his name to Wolfe and Montcalm, but hundreds, perhaps thousands, do to the Scottish-French couple who were among the first Canadians. We built a statue to the victor and vanquished and forgot the Canadian couple, Martin, who triumphed by doing what comes naturally.

I ask those who wrote to me to say Quebec should shove off, to read Vincent Massey's speech in Charlottetown on Monday, June 1, 1964, in which he said:

> If the maintenance of our east and west links is questioned as a national policy, the doubters are men who fail to understand the land in which they live...We have two founding races, French and English in origin, their languages and cultures having a special and permanent place in the national scene. That is an historical fact, not a political judgment.

I ask all those who sent me pictures of the red ensign, patriotic poems and prayers, to remember the words of Arthur Meighen which he spoke on the occasion of the planting of maples in the cemetery at Vimy Ridge in 1921:

> Above them are being planted the maples of Canada in the thought that her sons will rest the better in the shade of the trees they knew so well in life.

Do you believe, if they could speak, they would reject a maple leaf flag for Canada? Finally, I ask that under our new flag each of us, west and east, strives to make this nation such an example of unity at home and integrity abroad that people will recognize our flag, wherever in the world it is flown, and say with pleasure "Hello, Canada".

Mr. Skoreyko: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; it is obvious that the hon. member was reading from a document. I wonder if he would care to identify that document.

Mr. Deachman: I will be very glad to identify it, Mr. Speaker. The document was copious notes which I had prepared—

Mr. Smallwood: Notes. You read every word of it.

An hon. Member: Are you jealous?

Mr. Deachman: —from various books available in the library of parliament to every member of the house. I will be glad to identify to my hon. friend the sources of my information and make available my notes, if they are of value to him. I am sure he is really asking because he feels they would be of some value to him.

Mr. Charles Lamb (Victoria, Ont.): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with considerable interest and attention to what has been said by the hon. members who have participated in this debate. What I am about to say reflects the feelings of the Royal Canadian Legion, the Imperial Order of the Daughters of the Empire and a great number of other Canadians who have felt keenly enough about this issue to take the time to write letters—

[Translation]

Mr. Dupuis: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order. It has just been pointed out, on the Conservative side, that speeches should not be read in the house. Now, the hon. member who has just risen is beginning to read a text he has before him. I would like to call his attention on the point of order which was raised by his colleague, a few moments ago.

[Text]

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, on the point of order I wish to say that perhaps the minister is not aware of this, but in this House of Commons, ever since confederation I presume—at least, ever since I have been here—there has been such a thing as courtesy—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): —and it has been general for Speakers to ignore the fact that new members may be reading from copious notes in their early speeches in this house. I resent the advantage that the minister has taken of this situation to raise this sort of point of order.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

[Translation]

Mr. Dupuis: On that point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out to my hon. friend that we always allowed hon. members to read their texts. Objections have always been raised by members of his party. That is why I remind him that they always lacked courtesy, but we never did on this side of the house.

[Text]

Mr. MacLean (Queens): If I may continue, Mr. Speaker; I do not think the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) objected to having a little fun poked at him, and if the minister in question was not so thin skinned he would not have raised this question as a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Dupuis: You should listen carefully and you would learn that you are still in error.

[Text]

Mr. Douglas: On the point of order, Mr. Speaker, the previous member was not interrupted when he was making his speech. It is true that he was asked afterwards whether or not he had read from a manuscript, but he was not interrupted; and I think this member ought not to be interrupted. May I say to the minister that probably if he were to read some of his speeches inside and outside the house, he would not get his foot in his mouth so often.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The point of order that has just been raised by the minister is now developing into a discussion. This point of order has been raised on a number of occasions previously. It was raised while I was in the chair, and at that time I referred hon. members to citation 144 of Beauchesne. By virtue of what is said therein, I am sure there is no difficulty about the hon. member continuing to make reference to his notes.

The hon. member for Victoria (Ont.).

Mr. Lamb: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. The letters to which I have referred were expressing disappointment with the choice of a Canadian flag, and the hope that the outcome of this debate would be the retention of the red ensign as Canada's national flag. The Prime Minister and his government have made their position very clear. They have chosen what they call a truly distinctive Canadian flag. Now the Canadian Legion and the people across Canada are making their stand known to members of parliament in every party, and in the final analysis it will be the vote of the individual member and senator, whether he be Liberal, Conservative, N.D.P. or Social Credit, that will decide what has become a crucial issue.

The Legion's fervent desire for the retention of the red ensign as the national flag of this land is, I believe, shared by the majority of their fellow Canadians. Surely the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) realizes the bitter feeling and disunity which this proposed flag will create in all parts of the country, instead of the harmony and unity that all patriotic Canadians earnestly desire. But there are always those who are not content to let well enough alone. For the past few years scores of people have been working diligently to design what is in their opinion the perfect symbol of our national existence. Like all other hon. members I have received dozens of suggested designs. But Canada has a distinctive national flag which takes its status from an order in council dated September 5, 1945, its use authorized "wherever it is desirable to fly a distinctive Canadian flag." That is the law so long as the order in council remains in force, and it is a blunder to divide the people of Canada at this time when it is clear that the change will encounter bitter resentment from a large part of our population.

Approximately 100,000 Canadians died on the battle fields during world wars I and II and in Korea, and many thousands of war casualties lie in military and public hospitals throughout Canada still suffering from these conflicts. All these Canadians proudly served under the Canadian red ensign during time of war, and still wish to serve in time of peace under the same flag. Resistance to the idea of a new flag is based on the feeling that much of the sentiment in favour of a new design is a desire to weaken all signs of connection with the British empire, and all its traditions of freedom and peace.

The red ensign means something to Canadians that can never be wiped out. It is a symbol, and a nation's flag is full of meaning. We are told that the red ensign has no meaning for those ethnic groups who have emigrated to this country and become Canadians. I cannot accept that argument. Canadians comprise almost every race in the world today. These people came here from other lands by choice, knowing that the union jack and the red ensign were part of our history. In fact they were probably influenced by that very fact, because they are symbols of liberty, freedom and equality. Every Canadian, whether he be of English or French origin or an immigrant from Europe, owes much to British institutions and to British justice.

At this point, Mr. Speaker, I should like to quote from an article in the Lindsay Post for Friday, June 5, 1964. There is a picture of the Fenian raid medal which was issued back in 1870 and was presented to a gentleman in my home town of Lindsay. This article says:

"This undignified uproar regarding a Canadian flag is obnoxious, at least it is to me", said R. W. Pitts of 80 Cambridge street north. He added, "The ensign goes a long way back in Canadian history. I have in my possession a medal I am very proud of because it bears the name of my father, Sergeant R. E. Pitts, who was in the army in the days of the Fenian raid. It is dated 1870, and is made of silver with a fine likeness of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, who was known as 'Queen Victoria the good' ".

On the reverse side of the medal appears the red ensign. It is quite discernible although it is showing the minor ravage of old age. At the bottom appears the coat of arms and on the edge is the name of Sergeant R. E. Pitts, 56th B.N.

The historic emblem of the days of the Fenian raid is supported by a ribbon of red, white and blue.

Sergeant Pitts, who was of Irish extraction, was born in Cornwall and participated in the Fenian raid which reached its climax at Niagara Falls. Canadian soldiers were strewn along the long stretch of the St. Lawrence river.

R. W. Pitts, of Lindsay, Sergeant Pitt's son, is the proud possessor of his father's medal.

For the benefit of hon. members who have not seen this medal I should like to hold up this paper, which shows a picture of both sides of the medal. This medal goes back to 1866 in the days of the Fenian raid, which reached its climax at Niagara Falls with fighting along the banks of the St. Lawrence river; and the red ensign was flown in those days. The reason I mention this, Mr. Speaker, is because I want to show why we should still uphold the red ensign.

Our real attachment to British institutions and their symbols is not chiefly one of sentiment, but an admiration of British justice and fair play, for freedom to live our own lives and worship according to the dictates of our own conscience without hindrance from any man. This genuine patriotism we can ask and expect any Canadian, of whatever race or language, to share with us as a common inheritance. It has been said, and rightly so, that a country which does not honour its past has no future.

The advocates of a new national anthem seem to have accepted "O Canada" as such, and have had some success in inducing others to accept it. But "O Canada" is no more Canada's national anthem than the "Maple Leaf Forever" which is a good deal older and to my mind not noticeably inferior. Canada's national anthem is "God Save the Queen". It has by usage been accepted by all the subjects of the British crown to express their devotion, and is honoured by the majority of Canadians. "O Canada" is more of a lament than an anthem, but for the last few years it has been used by the people at public gatherings as Canada's national anthem. Not one person in 20 can recite the words, and I believe there is both a French and English version. Brass bands can do very nice things with it; but it is not an anthem, and until someone can come up with something more suitable, let us keep "God Save the Queen".

In my home county of Victoria, Mr. Speaker, there are 25 reeves and deputy reeves. Victoria county takes in a large portion of one of the finest agricultural areas of Canada. At their meeting on Monday last the county council passed a resolution calling for the red ensign to be flown above county buildings and wherever a flag should be flown in any part of the county of Victoria, which covers a large area. I was very pleased to hear this. In closing I want to say I am very much in favour of the red ensign, and I will do all I can in my power to see that this great flag is retained as the national flag of Canada.

Mr. Léo Cadieux (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, in the Montreal Star of June 16,

I read a dispatch from Paris where a correspondent indicated that Europeans did not know whether they should laugh or cry at the spectacle of a country such as Canada now being stirred by a debate on a flag.

At first, those people were amazed to learn that Canada did not have a flag. In certain quarters, it was understood that the Prime Minister's action, in his proposal for the choice of an emblem, was finally leading to the total emancipation of our country.

I am sure that such a reaction, which was noted in foreign countries, is also that of the great majority of the Canadian people.

Let us not complicate the matter ourselves. The people, great simplificators that they are, have understood for a long time. They know from instinct that if we do not have as yet a distinctive national emblem, the fault is imputable to their representatives. They have long judged the sterility of empty quibbling. They have confounded all sophisms. They wish and long for unity, and they always suspect that some instigators of dissension are craftily attempting to compromise that unity.

The people refuse to admit that, after 40 years of debates, the matter has made no progress in the minds of their representatives and that, even today, at this late hour, consideration is given to the possibility of unloading on them the responsibility of the choice to be made.

Those people, Mr. Speaker, who have every reason to be sceptical, have been waiting a long time for a definite commitment on the part of one of the national parties with regard to a flag of their own. Our people had lost their faith, so that, even faced with a categorical Liberal promise, they were still in doubt.

Today, the commitment has been kept, and the government is accomplishing what it promised to do, by submitting the design of a distinctive flag to the approval of the house.

I do not doubt for a single moment that the majority of hon. members will accept this design. I shall even go farther and say that the people are no more in doubt, and that they anticipated this assent in many areas by adopting the suggested flag of their own accord, the theme of which had immediately been recognized as a symbol which had been their own for a long time. They look upon it as distinctive, and the people now feel freer, prouder, more united; their country has suddenly become a more concrete fact, so that the various problems it has to face somehow seem less difficult to solve.

Each supporter of the new flag finds a brother everywhere between those blue stripes evoking the encircling oceans. He also knows that a giant stride forward has been made towards fulfilment. A flag which is truly his own will give the displaced person of yesterday, who is still pushed around today, a concrete sense of belonging, of living in his own context. It identifies his historic destiny, determines his ideal, gives a meaning to his life, while restoring a past which had been lost in the fog of history deprived of purpose.

With that flag, Mr. Speaker, a Canadian knows what he is. The emblem will crystallize his aspirations, toward unity first of all and toward his distinctive and initial career afterwards. The flag will do that, because it will make a number of other things possible.

That is why we must be careful that scandal does not come from us, in this house. The scandal would be to let this debate slowly turn into a circus. I am confident that will not happen. We all want to give our country the fundamental emblems essential to any sovereign country.

The choice of a distinctive flag is an act of sovereignty and maturity. It must be a compromise acceptable to all men of good faith. The flag must not divide but unite.

For decades unity has been the main theme of our speeches. This is the minute of truth. There is no escape through evasion or secret agreements. We must take a clear stand, say yes or no, and we members of parliament, must assume the responsibility for the choice to be made.

As for me, I would not want to be too finicky. The argument which justified the cabinet's choice seems reasonable to me. The proposed flag is distinctive. It reflects our political and military tradition. It pleases the eye and fulfils the standards of heraldry. Therefore, I shall be proud to pass it on to my descendants.

I shall be proud of having had the privilege to play a part in taking my country out of the no man's land of an anonymous, impersonal and spiritless humanity. And I shall have found at the same time, in my heart and reason, grounds to believe again that Canada is a viable country that can achieve a distinctive and fully satisfying destiny on this American continent.

[Text]

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in some difficulty in following such logical and eloquent addresses as those delivered by hon. members who have preceded me. The speech delivered by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton) was logical and any person, even with legal training, would be proud of it. It impressed us. I think the addresses of all members on all sides of this house have impressed those who have been here. I am going to take neither the legal angle nor the constitutional angle in this debate. I go along with those who have referred to this as an emotional issue and feelings are running high. There are two sides in this house, and I think there are two sides in the country.

There are those who would accept anything, a maple leaf, a rabbit or anything, just to get rid of that cursed union jack we have been carrying on our flag. There are others, Mr. Speaker, who are just as anxious to retain that union jack, whether in one quarter of our flag or one eighth of our flag, just as long as it is there. I believe that both groups are sincere; both groups have arguments and this is the only forum in which those arguments can be presented. My only regret is that the government is trying to hurry this measure through the house. I was not surprised when some of those Afro-Asian nations, without a history, without a culture, without any background, which found themselves free, rushed to create symbols by which they would be recognized by their neighbours. Theirs was a case of necessity. Many of them probably took less than the nine day period of gestation that the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) took to create his flag out of the thousands and thousands of designs that had been submitted to the government since a committee considered the matter in 1944 and 1945.

Macdonald, Cartier and the other fathers of confederation created what they thought was a nation, and why Canada on its 97th birthday should be fighting over the symbol of nationhood is hard for many people to understand. It must be hard for our allies in NATO to understand why we are fighting over our national symbol. It no doubt will be hard for the member nations of the United Nations to understand, because since we entered the field of international politics we have given them the impression that we had a flag.

I am one of those who feel that we have had and still have a flag, and I intend to quote authorities to show that I am not the only one who feels that way. There are thousands, in fact millions, who feel as I do. I am not going to be so bold as to say that a majority of the Canadian people are behind the red ensign, but I have just as much right to express my view as those who want a distinctive flag with three leaves or one leaf, or what have you. I have just as much right to express my view as they do. I am going to quote other authorities who think as I do.

Since I entered the House of Commons in 1957 I have expressed my support for the red ensign and have given reasons. Others, too, have reasons. My first quotation is taken from the Winnipeg Tribune, a prominent daily newspaper in Winnipeg. On December 9, 1963 the Tribune had an editorial headed, "Leave Our Flag Alone" in which they had this to say:

> We already have one. The red ensign under which Canada has lived in peace and war for three score and ten years is as distinctly Canadian as a flag could be.

Mr. Grégoire: No.

Mr. Mandziuk: I am only quoting authorities and the hon. member can do likewise when his turn comes.

The impatience of the Prime Minister to ram this new flag down the throats of Canadians received this reaction from Bruce West. Writing in the Globe and Mail of June 16, 1964 under the headline "Unhealthy Affair" he had this to say:

> I believe that the impatient efforts of many to discard a banner which symbolizes almost a century of our history may be a symptom of something gravely unhealthy in the affairs of Canada.

I also wish to refer to an open letter to the Prime Minister from six prominent Canadian citizens of Winnipeg. Most of them are of ethnic origin, one of them being Salome Holderson, a former member of the legislature of Manitoba and a prominent pedagogue. Among other things these six prominent citizens had this to say to the Prime Minister:

> No other country flies the red ensign and it has become known all over the world for half a century as Canada's distinctive flag.

That is another witness I bring forward to support my contention. Let us go further. A distinguished Canadian writer, Dr. Eugene Forsey, had this to say in a letter to the Ottawa Journal of June 13 last:

> Everything human, every vestige of our history, everything distinctly Canadian, except a piece of vegetation, has been carefully excluded.

In the same letter he also says:

> This government proposes a flag which contains not the slightest reference to any culture whatever, even agriculture.

One is led to ask: Why the hurry? We can surmise that the proponents or champions of the new flag either have no case, cannot make out a case and therefore would like to bridle discussion and put it through as fast as they can or else they are so sure of their grounds that they are certain the Canadian people will accept the new flag. Time alone will show. I am trying to be reasonable and look at both sides.

The Amherst Daily News of December 29, 1961 contains a report of an interview with the Prime Minister of Canada who was at that time leader of the opposition. He was asked certain questions. I quote:

> Question: You say the Liberals are working on a design?
>
> Answer: Oh, there are hundreds of designs, but it would be the responsibility of the government to make up its mind which design it would submit to parliament.
>
> Question: How would you poll the people on this?
> Answer: We would poll the people when we have a general election, and if they did not like the idea of a distinctive Canadian flag which cannot be mistaken for that of any other country, they will let us know in no uncertain terms.

That was a pledge made by the leader of the Liberal party who was then hoping to attain victory in an election. He has attained victory. Where is the pledge to poll the Canadian people? Has he forgotten it? In the 1962 and 1963 election campaigns both he and all Liberal candidates made the same pledge when the question came up, that they would give Canada a distinctive Canadian flag.

An hon. Member: Diefenbaker too.

Mr. Mandziuk: Certainly we did, but not the type of flag you are suggesting. But at no time, Mr. Speaker, have I heard it said, or read in any newspaper that the Prime Minister and the Liberal candidates told the Canadian people that when he produced this new distinctive Canadian flag the union jack would be completely eliminated. I should like to know where and when any such promise was made. They did not dare say to the Canadian people that they would eliminate the union jack. That is the reason they kept silent. They just talked about a distinctive Canadian flag. The Canadian people understood they had a distinctive Canadian flag, the red ensign, which had a quasi-legal status, and they interpreted the Liberal promises to mean that if the Liberals ever came into power they would give this distinctive Canadian flag, the red ensign, full and complete legal status in Canada. That is the way the Canadian people interpreted their promises.

Mr. Grégoire: No.

Mr. Mandziuk: I believe that the red ensign has been slandered and libelled in accordance with the same philosophy that Hitler had, that if you keep repeating a lie often enough there will be some people in the country who will eventually accept it as the truth. That is the case about the red ensign. There are two arguments I have heard against it, and I may repeat them. The first is that it is a foreign flag, a British marine flag. The second is that it is not distinctive enough and is not worthy of adoption because it could be mistaken as the flag of some other country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mandziuk: I am glad hon. gentlemen applaud. I want the truth from those who know, those who are the experts here, old politicians and young politicians. I want them to tell me, under what circumstances has the red ensign ever been mistaken as other than the flag of Canada on the field of battle—

Mr. Grégoire: Ask Pigeon.

Mr. Mandziuk: —in international politics, at the United Nations, at NATO, or anywhere here in Canada?

Mr. Dupuis: Pigeon will answer you.

Mr. Mandziuk: I do not mind interruptions but I do not like interrupting other people myself. I hope hon. members will give me a chance to speak.

Mr. Grégoire: You asked the question.

Mr. Mandziuk: Can somebody show me where there was an instance in history during the past 50 years when Canadians, whether on the battlefields of France, Africa or Asia were mistaken as some other force than Canadians? Canadians covered themselves with glory under this flag during the last two world wars.

We do not know the views of the majority of Canadians. Let us poll them; let us find out whether there is a majority in favour of a new flag. But I can assure the house that there are a lot of Canadians who feel the red ensign is their flag, the flag which Canadians have dyed an even deeper red in the bloodshed of battle.

The Winnipeg Tribune in an editorial on December 9, 1963 said:

> It has flown over decades of national joys and sorrows, triumphs and disappointments. It has become Canada's flag and a glowing part of Canada's heritage.

Is that a true statement? By opposing the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition, the government and those supporting it are denying the Canadian people the right to be asked their views, as was promised by the leader of the Liberal party during an interview at Amherst in 1961, an interview which I have already quoted. If election promises are made to be broken, then the highways and byways of Canada are strewn with political promises broken by the Liberal party. This is just one more of them.

Like a bolt from the blue, like an atom bomb, this flag has been placed before the people of Canada. It took nine days to draft it. It was a hurried job and now the people are confronted with it. What is their reaction?

Mr. Grégoire: I will tell you it is a nice reaction.

Mr. Mandziuk: Hon. members of this house have received protests from many people, both by letter, telegram and phone call. Whenever we meet with members of the public they express their views vigorously. At the Winnipeg convention the Royal Canadian Legion in no uncertain terms gave the Prime Minister an indication of its attitude towards anything but the red ensign. It is unfortunate that their behaviour was not too polite but, Mr. Speaker, that was the only means they had of showing their displeasure with the high-handed attitude of the government.

Mr. Grégoire: The Legion in my area is for a new flag.

Mr. Mandziuk: Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Legionnaires had only this method of showing what they wanted. The majority of them want the red ensign. They fought under that flag and it is for them, more than for anyone else in the country, that we owe the freedoms we enjoy today. Is their voice to be ignored? Are they to be derided, laughed and sneered at? That is the impression I am getting from some hon. gentlemen in this house. How can the government of Canada ignore the stand taken by these people?

I have here a petition from the Royal Canadian Legion in Russell in my own constituency, signed by 500 people. This is from Legion branch No. 159 in Russell, sent in by Mr. Loney, and the Canadians who sign it ask that the red ensign be retained. I know the Prime Minister tries to hide behind an alibi that it is the ethnic groups, who have asked for a distinctive Canadian flag. An hon. gentleman on the other side offered the opinion that it was these people who are just dying to get a new flag but, Mr. Speaker, if you had time to read the names on this petition you would find it includes the names of all nationalities living in Canada. I shall just read two or three of them. First, there is Thomas Jackson, and that is definitely an Anglo-Saxon name; but next to him is Lorne Todoruk, and that is a Ukrainian name. Then there is a A. J. Mushumanski. This gentleman is of Polish origin and I know him personally. He signed this petition in favour of the red ensign. Then we have R. S. Clement, which is definitely an Anglo-Saxon name, and then Marshall Johnson. Then we have S. M. Siwak, which is a Ukrainian name.

I know the boys who signed this; and so I ask, why try to produce a smokescreen saying it is the ethnic groups who want a new flag. I would like to know what groups, what organizations and what parts of Canada are pushing the government into this step. I may add that I intend to file this petition with the Clerk, according to the procedure which the Chair outlined to the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge).

I also received a resolution from the Royal Canadian Legion branch No. 66, from Crandall, sent in by Mr. Barnes, and another from Legion branch No. 229, Basswood, sent in by Mr. Graham, and a resolution from branch No. 40 Rossburn, sent in by Ed. Harris and Elmer Brown; and a resolution sent by wire from Legion branch No. 8, Virden, sent in by Mr. Nugent, asked that a plebiscite be held on this question.

Is this government the almighty Caesar? Caesar said "Veni, vidi, vici". I say to the government you "venied" and you "vidied" but it will be a long time before you "vici", before you conquer the opinions of the Canadian people. These men of the Canadian Legion are the men who fought for Canada, who figured Canada was worth fighting for.

I want to tell you this, Mr. Speaker. There is a section of the Royal Canadian Legion called the Ukrainian Royal Canadian Legion section. It has eight branches in Canada, with one branch in Winnipeg over 1,000 strong. It held a separate convention at the same time as the Royal Canadian Legion in Winnipeg, and it passed a unanimous resolution in support of the red ensign. They are what you call ethnic people, Ukrainian people, and most of them were volunteers for Canada.

What about the hundreds of other branches of the Legion? I know perfectly well that the supporters of the Liberal party, the hon. members sitting on the government side, have been receiving these protests. I just wonder how they are answering them. I just wonder how they are going to face these men, what they will tell them when they have deprived them of the opportunity of deciding what Canada should have as its flag. This is evidence I am presenting to the house. I am not relying on my personal feelings.

Everyone is familiar with I.O.D.E., a women's organization which has 29,000 members across Canada. They met at Fredericton a couple of weeks ago and they sent a telegram to the Prime Minister. I wonder what the right hon. gentleman had to say in reply. This is how it read:

> We deplore that in this democratic country our government would deprive individual citizens of the right to vote on an issue as vital as the Canadian flag.

Is the government so almighty, is the government so secure, that it intends to ignore this telegram? I go further. I think the Prime Minister or his staff would agree that they have also received a protest from an organization known as the Grand Orange lodge of British America. I am not an Orangeman; I do not agree with some of their views. But this is an organization you cannot sneeze at; you cannot ignore them when they have a membership in 250,000 homes across Canada. What did they ask? In the petition they sent to the Prime Minister they say they support the Canadian Legion on this issue in toto. In other words, they support the Legion's stand on this issue completely. They also say, in their petition:

> Be it further resolved that we hereby petition the government to cease further legislation on the flag question until and except the people of Canada by referendum indicate their wishes accordingly.

Some hon. gentlemen look only through the narrow windows of their own constituencies. Because in their own constituencies there is a majority which wants this particular flag, or some other flag, they think the majority of the Canadian people want it. I cannot say that. Nor can any member of this house say with authority or proof that the majority of the Canadian people want either one flag or another.

I have here from the Tribune an article called Viewpoint written by a prominent barrister Mr. Roy St. George Stubbs. He is not a Conservative. I honestly believe he is a supporter of the party which now forms the government. I do not know. I know he is not a Tory, so I cannot be accused of putting forward the opinions of Tories. He is talking about a book written in 1908, and dealing with the Ewart prophesy. I have not time to go into detail, but the article says:

> Time has not justified Ewart's prophesy. Were he alive today what would he say about the current proposal to throw 100 years of tradition into the dustbin of history? Can a doubtful gain in national solidarity balance the certain loss in national sentiment?

These are opinions. What about the letters we have all received? I have received them and I know other members have received them in large numbers. The Prime Minister has claimed, it is reported in the press, that he has received thousands and that most of them are in favour of the new design. But I have information that the Leader of the Opposition has received thousands of letters, too, and that most of those are against the new flag. I am glad we are to have a little time to spend on this debate. I hope the Prime Minister will take time to analyse these letters and let us know from what sections of the country they come. Do they all come from one area? I should also like to know from what sections of the country came the letters written to the Leader of the Opposition. We are entitled to know these things and express our opinions.

Bruce West, writing in the Globe and Mail of June 15, called this "an unhealthy affair". Is he correct? He feels, like many Canadians, that impatient efforts to discard the red ensign may be the symbol of an unhealthy state of affairs in Canada and that the day this ensign is discarded some very important threads will be removed from the fabric of this country. He, like so many of us, is afraid that other things which make up what we are will also be discarded. What will be the next to be discarded? Who can say that in five or six years there will not be a movement in Canada to discard this new symbol, too, and put something else in its place. As has been stated even by members on the other side with regard to the red ensign, we have become accustomed to it. Flags do not create unity, said one writer in the Globe and Mail, it is unity which creates flags. Let us have unity first. Let us show we have a nation.

In closing I say this: If anything, the flag resolution before us creates disunity. It has led to argument all over the country. I was in my constituency about a week ago and I would hate to repeat some of the things which were said about the Prime Minister because he had proposed this new flag. I hate to read some of the letters which refer to the Prime Minister and in which the writers attempt to say in not very polite terms what they think of him for proposing this new design. This is an important issue, but we are not to have a plebiscite. If members on the other side think they have a mandate, I should like to know from whom. If supporters of the government had told the Canadian people that the Canadian flag they intended to propose was going to eliminate the union jack then, I would say, they had a mandate. But who ever made that statement? Did the Prime Minister make it? Did any member of the Liberal cabinet make it? Did any of the others who are supporting this resolution, probably not through conviction—this resolution designed to get rid of the symbol we call the red ensign?

If this legislation is important, why rush it through? Why must the Prime Minister say we will not get a summer recess before we finish this debate? Everything else must stop but he intends to continue this debate. Does he wish to wear us out? If this is important legislation we should be given time to debate it. I should like to hear members opposite tell us who is backing them on this issue? Don't give us history about Sir John Macdonald. Don't read us something out of books 150 years old. Tell us what organizations are supporting you. I will listen carefully to the speeches hon. members opposite have to make on this subject and I know the Canadian people will be listening, too. I am giving the house evidence. I have referred to petitions. If all those organizations are added together they amount to more than a million people.

An hon. Member: How?

Mr. Mandziuk: Well, there are a quarter of a million Legion members. There are a quarter of a million Orangemen. Then there are the members of I.O.D.E. and the ethnic groups.

We want to know why there should be this rush. If the government has a good case for introducing this new symbol they need not be afraid of stepping out and telling the house and the country why. They need not be afraid of protracted debate. Are you taking it for granted just because the government think they can muster up a majority in the house, and knowing that the Canadian people, once an enactment passes the house—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Would the hon. member desist for a moment.

[Mr. Mandziuk.]

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

An act to incorporate Evangeline Savings and Mortgage Company.

An act respecting the Montreal Board of Trade.

An act respecting the commission established to administer the Roosevelt Campbello International Park.

An act to incorporate Seicho-No-Ie.

An act respecting The Dominion of Canada General Insurance Company.

An act respecting The Casualty Company of Canada.

An act to amend the Export Credits Insurance Act.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to provisional standing order 39A to inform the house that the question to be raised at ten o'clock this evening is as follows:

The hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Herridge), Post Office Department, Trail, B.C., request for investigation into overtime mail delivery.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

CANADIAN FLAG

OFFICIAL ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DESIGN

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pearson:

That the government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to establish officially as the flag of Canada a flag embodying the emblem proclaimed by His Majesty King George V on November 21, 1921—three maple leaves conjoined on one stem—in the colours red and white then designated for Canada, the red leaves occupying a field of white between vertical sections of blue on the edges of the flag.

And of the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. Nicholas Mandziuk (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, there is some difficulty in resuming an interrupted speech, with eight or nine minutes more to go, in getting back into high gear and into the same mood. I could have completed my remarks in that time because I had only one other point to bring to the attention of the house, namely that the government must be uncertain whether the new flag with the three maple leaves represents truly just what we are, because there is another resolution on the order paper for the adoption of a second flag, namely the union jack. I am not against the union jack. I am in favour of it because the union jack is the flag of the United Kingdom and, I might add, not a flag established under any statute. It has become the flag of the United Kingdom by usage or custom and it is dear to that nation of the commonwealth. Whether the government is trying to borrow it or steal it I am unable to understand.

Let me point out that the union jack is the flag of the land of origin of a lot of people in this nation, while the red ensign is the flag that we are accustomed to. It has flown amongst us, it is a part of our heritage and it has on it the Canadian coat of arms. If parliament were to go so far as to adopt two flags I can well envisage that either one or the other might be flown in different parts of Canada. Just imagine the impression that would make on foreigners visiting this country if they saw one flag flown in one part of Canada and another flag flown in another part of Canada. Would they not come to the conclusion that we are a divided nation, that we are not one Canada but two Canadas or two nations? If that is what the government has in mind they might as well spell it out.

At the beginning of my speech I said that my views on this matter are known to all. I come from the old school, Mr. Speaker. I can still sing: There'll always be an England as long as Scotland stands. I can still sing: In days of yore from Britain's shore, and so on and so forth. But I am prepared to go along with the times, and if there are changes that we must make on the flag that is dear to many Canadians I for one would be prepared to make those changes, add something to the red ensign to give some indication of our second founding race and thus satisfy all in that way. But let us retain our heritage. Let us retain the symbols of the past.

Everyone, Mr. Speaker, whether a lawyer by profession or an ordinary individual, at one time or another has been in court and anyone who is a plaintiff or appellant must make out a case. In this instance the government is the appellant. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) is the main spokesman for those who appeal for a new distinctive flag. They must make out a case. Pointing to history or heraldic symbols is not going to satisfy Canadians. As I said before the dinner recess, the government must show that they have a mandate. They must show who are behind the new flag. They must show the reasons for it.

We are the respondents, Mr. Speaker, and as one of the respondents or defendants I have called witnesses. My witnesses have been the Legion, the I.O.D.E., the Orangemen, the ethnic groups and many others. I challenge the government to produce its witnesses. I challenge the government to submit this resolution to a special committee of the house and give people who have various ideas for or against the red ensign or the new flag the opportunity to make out a case. I feel that so far no member of the government, no supporter of the new design, has made out a case for the new flag.

I know that some eastern newspapers have been very critical of my stand with regard to the flag. But I want to say to all concerned that I, and those others of my race, were invited to come to this country. We came of our own free will. We came here not to ruin that which was built by the founding races but to continue the building of that great structure, one great Canada. We came here to put our shoulders together with the shoulders of the French and the British, and shoulder to shoulder to march forward to a unity of one Canada, not two Canadas, three Canadas or anything else.

We are just as proud of our heritage and love our language just as much as English or French Canadians love theirs, but at the same time we are prepared to give that which is necessary to make up one great Canadian nation such as was envisaged by the fathers of confederation.

I as a Ukrainian am proud of the fact that this year the Ukrainians in Canada and the United States, as you may have seen on television last week, unveiled another monument to Taras Shevchenko the freedom fighter of the Ukrainian race. We are proud of this man who gave so much in the cause of freedom. We are proud to celebrate the 150th anniversary of his birth. He fought for the freedom of all people, for the freedom of all Ukrainians. We are hurt that 40 million of our people are still behind the iron curtain but I, and those like me, are giving what we can here in Canada. We are passing this on to our children and we know that our children's children will do likewise.

I appeal for unity, but at the same time there is no use appealing for unity and not doing anything about it. We are happy to live in this nation. Let us make it great. If anyone has created a disturbance, if anyone has given rise to the emotional struggle that is going on in Canada today, it is the right hon. Prime Minister. If he thinks this flag is necessary above all, then he will be the one who will suffer the consequences when the people of Canada have a chance to make their wishes known.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask unanimous consent to revert to motions to make a statement on the business of the house.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Pearson: Mr. Speaker, it may be helpful if I review future business for the house as it appears to be after the meetings of the house leaders of the various parties yesterday and today. Those meetings did not accomplish everything that it was hoped they might do, but they were friendly and constructive meetings. I believe some progress was made, and I hope that progress is a happy augury for future progress. But as there was no agreement at this stage, at least on the order of business for July, I think it would be wise if I put the program of the government to the house in this way, especially as this might correct some inaccurate reports which have been circulating as to what the government might propose.

I would first, Mr. Speaker, like to remind the house that a detailed statement on business was laid before this chamber on June 3, nearly a month ago, and since that time we have been following the priorities given to parliament at that time. The first four items on that priority list of June 3 have now been dealt with: (1) the approval of the Columbia treaty; (2) the national housing legislation; (3) the farm credit extension bill and (4) the constitutional amendment to provide for supplementary benefits in our pension legislation.

Since that statement of June 3 we have introduced into the house a resolution which the house is now considering, the flag resolution. We interrupted that resolution, as on June 3 we told the house we might have to do, in order to secure agreement on the constitutional amendment which I have mentioned, and to ask for interim supply. These two items have now been completed.

The government has been urged to postpone the flag resolution, as it is obstructing other legislation and as it is, as we all admit, a measure which is controversial and arouses deep and genuine emotions. So far as obstructing other legislation is concerned, I think it is quite clear that there never will be a time when this flag issue, which is an issue of vital national importance, will not be controversial and will not interfere with other legislative proposals to which some hon. members would, for various reasons, wish to give priority over it. So, whenever this resolution would be introduced in the house there would be that difficulty.

Therefore the government feels that the flag issue should be proceeded with. It is our hope that, with three days debate having already taken place, the house might be in a position to make at least a decision on the amendment to the resolution by the end of this week. However I am not urging here any limit of any kind to a discussion of a matter of such importance. On the other hand, we do not wish a prolonged debate on this issue to postpone decisions on certain other matters which are ready for decision and which decision, I think, should be taken as early in July as possible, and at least certainly during the month of July, and the meetings that have been held and the consideration given to this matter have been influenced by the sincere desire to reconcile these two considerations.

In an effort to do that, I propose for the government the following program for action by the house before we take a summer recess. On Thursday we shall interrupt the flag resolution debate to introduce a resolution on the youth allowances bill, and I understand there has been unanimous consent among the house leaders that there should be no debate on that resolution and that it should go through. I appreciate that attitude. The bill would then be given first reading and circulated. Then on Thursday and Friday we would continue with the flag resolutions.

Then we propose that the national defence bill, which has already been given a great deal of attention, should be considered next Monday, July 6, and if the house comes to a decision on that bill we would proceed to the consideration of the youth allowances bill and continue with that legislation until it is completed. Perhaps I can express the hope that that would not take too long, because we are all in agreement on the principle of that bill.

Then we would go from the youth allowances bill to the fiscal arrangements bill which is very important, indeed as important to the provinces as it is to us. It is a matter of some urgency that we give consideration to it. That bill will be followed by the bill for the 12 mile jurisdictional zone, which I would hope would not take too long as it has already been discussed in the house and in committee. The house would then, after the 12 mile zone bill, be asked to consider the student loans bill. I understand there is agreement that the resolution covering that measure would be passed without discussion too, so that the bill could be circulated. Then provision will be made during the first half of July for further interim supply since we asked for, and received, only one month's supply at our last request. Then I think at least two Fridays during the month of July should be devoted to estimates.

If this legislative program can be completed by July 22 or 23—I do not know whether it can be or not, but if it could be, and I would hope that perhaps it could be—we would have the rest of the month, that is seven or eight days more, to deal with the flag resolutions. In any event, when the matters I have mentioned are dealt with, we shall return to the flag resolutions and the debate on those resolutions would be continued until a decision is reached on them.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pearson: We would not, however, ask the house before a summer recess to consider the resolution on the national anthem or the royal anthem.

It will be seen, Mr. Speaker, from the timetable I have suggested to the house, one which will no doubt be given further consideration by the house leaders, that it is not possible to predict with any certainty the date of a summer adjournment. I was asked to submit a target date. The target date I should like to submit is the end of July. If we meet that target date it would be our desire and, I think, the desire of all members of the house, for parliament to recess until the middle of September.

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): We have had an announcement by the Prime Minister with regard to the business of the house. I noticed that he indicated that the house has accomplished quite a lot during the month of June, as he listed the various items which he had spoken about on June 3 and which have already been passed. I noted that five items of legislation, most of which we have been asking the government to put forward, will be considered by the house next week and we think this is a sensible thing to do, because we believe the measures dealing with youth allowances and student loans in particular should have been brought up earlier than this.

As a party we are prepared to assist the government in passing these legislative items next week, and if the bills are carefully drawn and if, after subjecting them to careful scrutiny, they are found to be in order, I do not see any particular reason why there should be any great delay in passing those measures. If they are for the good of the country we will pass them. If there are items in any of these measures with which we are not in agreement we shall state our disagreement, as is our duty and obligation as an opposition.

I noted the Prime Minister said there would be two Fridays in July devoted to the consideration of the main estimates. I record a very strong objection to that limitation of time spent on main estimates. The main estimates constitute the spending program of the government and this spending program should be very carefully examined by the House of Commons. In sessions in the past it was normal for main estimates to be considered on Thursdays and Fridays of each week. That has not been the case this session and the main estimates are going to be piled up until the close of the session some time in the fall. I think that is not a good arrangement. I certainly would like to enter a very strong objection to the failure to deal with main estimates. This spending program of the government requires the same type of examination as the tax program of the government set out in the budget.

The Prime Minister went on to say that after the completion of the legislative items he mentioned we would consider interim supply, and if that were passed by July 22 or 23 we would have seven or eight days left for the flag debate. He then came to the crux of the matter. He said that the session would continue—he was referring to the flag resolutions—"until a decision is reached on them". That is very definite. That tells us exactly the position we are in. To speak of a target date of July 31 can be quite meaningless unless the opposition bows to the will of the government because, in effect, the Prime Minister is saying: You will get a summer recess only when you have reached a decision with regard to the flag.

So we know now exactly what our position is. It is quite clear that no summer recess was envisaged by the Prime Minister unless the opposition abdicated its position in this house. We are rather pleased that the situation has now been so clearly stated and that we know exactly what was in the Prime Minister's mind when the motion was put forward the other day to extend the hours of sitting. The situation is simply this, Mr. Speaker: As the official opposition we are prepared to co-operate to the fullest extent on this matter of legislation which has been brought to our attention and pass it without unusual delay, subject as I said to careful scrutiny. Having done that, then to have a club held over our heads—and this is what it amounts to—by the statement "no end to this particular session until a decision on the flag is reached", is a somewhat unusual position for a government to take. But now we know clearly the government's stand, and there will be no misunderstanding in this house as to the intention of the government because it has been clearly set before us: no summer recess unless the opposition bows to the government with regard to the flag.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we welcome the action of the Prime Minister in making this statement to the house as to the intention of the government with respect to business for the next few weeks. I think it is also fair to say that, now we have had a couple of meetings of the house leaders, it is well to have the results of our negotiations up to this point out in the open.

I want to say that we appreciate the position the government has taken in altering to some extent its stand of last week by agreeing to interrupt the debate on the flag to deal with these five or six important items. We think this is the position the government should have taken all along. At any rate, we commend the government for now having taken this position and we feel, as do members of other parties in the house, that perhaps we could best show our appreciation by expediting the passing of these five or six items when they come before us. The Prime Minister is perfectly correct in stating that the spokesmen for all parties agreed that there need be no debate whatsoever at the resolution stage of the youth allowance measure or on the resolution stage of the student loans legislation. I think there is also a disposition on the part of the house leaders to look at the other measures when we have the actual bills before us to ascertain whether there are steps we could take to shorten debate on these measures at various stages. I do think it does not hurt to take a moment or two to emphasize that we have made progress in the meetings which we had yesterday and today.

Before leaving this phase of my brief remarks may I say I have something in common with my hon. friend from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Churchill). I too have a protest which I want to lodge. It is not the same protest but it is one which I lodge even more vigorously than the one he has stated. I protest on behalf of the members of this party at the fact that the Canada pension plan is not included in the items to be dealt with before we return to the flag debate. It was always our understanding that the Canada pension plan debate could not be concluded in what might be called the first part of the session, but we understood that serious efforts would be made to get it past second reading and referred to the special committee which is to study the measure.

I want to say that I regard this further delay with respect to the Canada pension plan as ominous. All the members of the house are aware of the delays which have already taken place with respect to this matter since this parliament began. Each time the Canada pension plan has been proposed we have been assured that we were going through with it, but always there is a delay. I can now see that when we are meeting this fall trying to wind up the business before Christmas or whenever this session ends we will have some more of these bargaining sessions. Matters like redistribution, the Canada pension plan, the railway legislation and other matters will be before us and we will go through the same business that we have been through scores of times. We will have to agree that something has to be dropped. Again, my fear is that it will be the Canada pension plan which will be put aside; and if this goes on many more times there is no stating what might happen. I am delighted to see the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) shaking his head from right to left; I hope it was in response to what I have just said. I would remind him that the same kind of assurance has been given before, but at any rate for the moment, like the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, I register my protest that the Canada pension plan is not included among the items to be dealt with before we return to the debate on the flag.

Now, with respect to these five items on which we have reached agreement at the meetings of the house leaders, I should like to say that I think the suggested date of July 23 is a little too far off. I think we can do these five items several days ahead of July 23. Let us just look at them. There is the national defence bill which we almost finished last night. Surely another few hours will dispose of it. With regard to the youth allowance measure which extends family allowances to 16 and 17 year olds, we all agree with it and surely that should not take very long. The federal-provincial fiscal relations and arrangements legislation might take a little time; we will not know how long until we see the bill, but even so it should not take very long. The student loans legislation ought to go through as quick as a flash. The 12 mile fishing zone legislation is still before the committee on marine and fisheries, but if the committee reaches agreement on the terms of the bill it should not take very long in the house. So with respect to those five items—I have named them all but interim supply—I do not think it would be unreasonable to suggest they could be done in a week, leaving a few days if we need them for interim supply.

We all know the facts of life, and we all know when we get to interim supply that the length of time spent will depend on the strategy of the various parties in the house; it will depend on what might have happened in the meantime. All sorts of things can take place. But I am taking these few moments deliberately to emphasize the extent to which we reached agreement at the meetings of the house leaders. We have agreed that these five items of legislation are important, that we are satisfied with them subject to seeing the details of some of the legislation, and that we can get them through quickly.

The point I wish to make in setting this phase of our work off against the debate on the flag is this. I urge that we leave until we have got through the first five pieces of legislation any argument, discussion, dogfight or what-have-you over time to be spent discussing the flag. I think it would be good for parliament to have the accomplishment of passing five or six pieces of legislation in a week or so, and when that is done to continue to hold our meetings of house leaders when perhaps we can resolve what may be an impasse when the time comes. But let that anticipated impasse not interfere with our doing an effective piece of work now. I am not denying the fact that the impasse will be there when we reach it. The government is saying that it wants the flag resolution put through before there is a recess. The official opposition regards that as a club. We feel that there should be a recess, not because we want a holiday but because we think it would be good for parliament if we saw a little less of each other for a couple of weeks and came back here fresh. We think that we would do better service in this way to the people of Canada. But I suggest that this whole question of trying to resolve this impasse over the flag should not be one which is allowed to impede our work on student loans or on youth allowances or on these other pieces of legislation. Let us deal with them on their merits; let us do a good job; and maybe the practice of getting some pieces of legislation through in short order will have a contagious effect and we will go on doing it.

I have been delighted, Mr. Speaker, despite any differences which we have had, with the progress achieved at our meetings yesterday and today. I think it has been unfortunate that there have been reports about these meetings which were not entirely accurate. Therefore it was a good idea for the Prime Minister to make the statement he did tonight, and if we can emphasize the measure of agreement which we achieve and face up to the fact that the people of Canada want us to get some work done, I think we can move along. Therefore my plea is that we get along with these five pieces of legislation which are agreed upon and then see if we cannot go on and keep up the good work.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I intend to be very brief. I should like to suggest that in making his statement I think the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) minimized the results of the meetings which were held between the house leaders. I do not think that was intentional, but I do believe that we made a little greater progress than was indicated in the statement he made. I felt that there were very worth-while results and I think we are encouraged to keep working at the job of trying to expedite the business of the house. However, we do appreciate the statement the Prime Minister has made tonight to clarify the situation as far as the government is concerned.

Thinking back over these past weeks since the session started, I do not think we have anything to brag about as far as conducting the business of the nation is concerned. In spite of the fact that there has been a number of items passed I think we could have done a good deal more than we have done up to the present time. We also appreciate the fact that the government has moved to a certain degree as far as the controversial flag resolution is concerned and is providing an opportunity for the dispatch of a number of other items which are of vital interest to the country.

I am not going to enumerate them again because they have been enumerated several times tonight. As far as we are concerned, we feel it is a good thing that we give our attention specifically to these matters of business that are of vital concern and have some degree of urgency in them, so that those affected will be able to plan for future days. As I have said, we intend to give our complete support to the passage of these particular measures.

I just wish to say, however, that I am disappointed in the position the government is still taking—and the Prime Minister indicated this tonight—as far as the resolutions on the flag are concerned. We felt that with the passage of a number of other items, this was one that was not of such tremendous urgency that it would be used to decide whether or not there was going to be a recess of parliament for the summer. However, this has been made abundantly clear tonight, and the question that is in our minds is this: What is going to happen if and when an irresistible force meets an immovable object? Possibly we will have to wait until that time comes to see just what does happen. But I do think it is unfortunate that this adamant position is being maintained in the face of the present situation. I am not going to debate it now, because the debate on the flag is under way and we will have an opportunity then. As I have said, we want to get ahead with the business of the nation, and we will face these things as and when the situation arises.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few words to say on behalf of our group about the statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). We are quite satisfied with the order of business he announced, particularly as regard the family allowances legislation and student allowances.

People had already asked us for information on those allowances, but we reserved our answers, hoping from week to week that the government might bring forward a bill so that next year students would know where they stood. We are quite happy to learn that the discussion on that bill will begin this week.

We earnestly call for the support of all opposition parties so that this work can be completed within two days. In fact, most of us agree on those pieces of legislation.

It is said that most hon. members do not even wish to discuss those measures, but are ready to simply pass them.

However, there may still be some objections. I think they will result in an extension of debates, rather than an attack against the principle of those measures and this, in order to postpone that much longer resumption of the discussion on the flag issue.

We commend the government for having made concessions and we also praise the leaders who attended the meeting and who made use of all their talents and their goodwill to reach an agreement.

When all that urgent legislation has been passed, let us get on with the flag debate and settle the question once and for all.

We have been discussing this issue for 40 years and it is high time we are done with it. Let each member vote according to his own feelings so that the people of Canada may see that their parliament still has some sense of responsibility and that it no longer spends its time in futile discussions, as it did last week when members acted like 10-year olds.

Let us discuss each piece of legislation and then take the vote. Let us stop arguing for nothing and let us take the vote. Let us get on with our program so that we may finally examine the flag resolution.

Here I want to congratulate the Prime Minister for his steadfastness. To some people, this is the sword of Damocles or cloture, the French word for fence. But a fence along a road is a guide line, not a prison. What the Prime Minister gave this evening was an indication, a firm invitation.

I hope the official opposition will not hold up indefinitely the business of the house. It often resorts to systematic obstruction which I find unacceptable in parliamentary procedure and which should not exist. When everybody has expressed his views, let us vote once and for all. Those who favour the adoption of a distinctive flag will vote for it, and the question will be settled. If the distinctive flag is rejected by the majority of members, that will be just too bad. It does not matter, the majority will decide, because in democratic countries it is still up to the majority to decide.

I congratulate the government about the decision it has just taken and I can assure it of our full support both as regards this attitude and the adoption of the flag.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The house will now resume the business that was interrupted by reverting to motions.

CANADIAN FLAG

OFFICIAL ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW DESIGN

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Pearson:

That the government be authorized to take such steps as may be necessary to establish officially as the flag of Canada a flag embodying the emblem proclaimed by His Majesty King George V on November 21, 1921—three maple leaves conjoined on one stem—in the colours red and white then designated for Canada, the red leaves occupying a field of white between vertical sections of blue on the edges of the flag.

And of the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. Richard Cashin (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, the suggestion has been made during the course of this debate outside of the house itself that the course of action being advocated in the matter of national symbols represents our doing something new and rejecting something that is old. I do not subscribe to this interpretation of this course of action. The government, it seems to me, is asking that this parliament proclaim as the national flag a distinctive Canadian symbol that has in one form or another existed in this country for 100 years or so and has in fact been part of our heritage. In the same subject matter of national symbols we are also being asked to give recognition to those symbols of the commonwealth and our monarchical ties. We are, as it were, being asked to decide formally and once and for all that we recognize in this particular way Canada's status as an independent nation, but an independent nation within the British commonwealth.

Canada has become such a nation over the years, not by revolution, not by sudden change or sudden means but by a gradual, an evolutionary process. At each stage of this evolutionary development voices of resistance have raised themselves because it was feared that Canada was breaking its ties with the mother country and moving in a direction inconsistent with that of a former British possession. In actual fact I submit that the opposite is the case. This evolutionary development of ours toward nationhood was in fact, and is, done in a most British way. We might say that as a nation we have approached the problems of our nationhood more British than the British themselves. In all times and in all examples we have followed, as it were, due process of law. Great national debate preceded all these formal changes. I will not list them but I know they are familiar to all members. As these changes were wrought in Canada's march to nationhood, debate was the order of the day and the great forum for these debates was here in parliament, this parliament modelled after the mother of parliaments. The fathers of confederation, it seems to me, had as their goal a united and a strong nation on this North American continent, but a nation that would be governed according to those institutions, customs and traditions which were British, largely, in origin; a nation that would be monarchical rather than republican—but a nation, nevertheless, independent and united.

Were we not so cognizant of these British uses and traditions, perhaps we would have followed a different course on the road toward nationhood. Perhaps we would have attempted to settle our problems in what, to me, would have seemed to be a logical, clear cut way, but would have, in fact, represented our approach to these things in one fell swoop. In so doing, we would not be approaching them in the British way and in a way that would have been in keeping with our traditions; we would not be in keeping with our past.

We have moved into the future, not in bold steps that might have threatened our affection for the past, but instead we have moved slowly in a way characteristic, perhaps, of this nation; in compromise, in a pragmatic way. In doing so, in adopting compromise and pragmatism, we have paid a great tribute to the country to which so many of us owe so much. This pragmatism of which I speak is so much a part of our heritage; it is one of the gifts that England has given us. Not all or even a majority of the Canadian people today are of British origin, yet all Canada notes with pride the customs and traditions that are tied to this association. There is our system of government, parliamentary democracy, rather than republicanism. This is something which sets us apart from our neighbour to the south. It is something which is revered by all Canadians. It consists of something British and also something Canadian.

A few moments ago I referred to the existing Canadian personality as pragmatic, and compared it to being something British, because this is almost Britain's stock in trade in dealing with her own problems and world problems. Today we are asked to take one more step—true it is only a formal step—on the road to true and complete national sovereignty in form as well as in fact. I think that we should be asked to do this in a way most consistent with our Canadian heritage and tradition. We are now asked to declare a distinctive Canadian flag, not something new that is the design or the whim of some patriot. We are asked to declare as the flag of Canada a symbol which, as I suggested earlier, has been with us for 100 years or more. It is, you might say, in that sense a flag that is both old and new. We are being asked also for the first time to give recognition to certain commonwealth symbols which will be discussed, I presume at another time.

The suggestion has been made we should approach this problem of our national symbols in another way. The suggestion has been made that a plebiscite should be taken. If we are to follow that course of action we would be flying in the face of British parliamentary democracy. I am unaltered in my opposition to a government shirking its responsibilities and turning to republican innuendos in the form of government plebiscite. The mother of parliaments, in its wisdom throughout the years, has not seen fit to so degrade itself. However, I regret to say this parliament has not adopted at all times a similarly wise course.

However, as somebody has suggested, perhaps that was before Newfoundland entered confederation. While I am on that subject of Newfoundland and confederation for a moment, I was reminded before I got to my feet that almost 200 years ago, when Canada was in great peril, a little band of Newfoundlanders came up to Quebec and helped to turn back the Americans. Fifteen years ago Newfoundland was taken into Canada to help with her glorious future. We decided at that time we should insure that future, once and for all, so that we would not have to run back and forth.

After that slight diversion, I might say that deciding this matter of national symbols through debate in this House of Commons is the British way. It is consistent with our traditions. I am grateful, and I congratulate the government for not giving in to the temptation that we do something foreign to our traditions and adopt a republican course of action. I should like to congratulate all members who have taken part in this debate, particularly the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson). I believe he showed a true understanding of tradition, at least in the context of the realities of our present age. I think he showed the example of the beauty and virtue of tradition which does not, of itself, become our mistress but gives us a guide line for future action. I wish more people could have been in the house at that time to hear a very worthy address.

[Mr. Cashin.]

The province, part of which I have had the privilege of representing for some year or so in this house, is new to the sovereign nation of Canada. Our ties with Britain have been similar, but perhaps somewhat closer than those of Canada. I feel sure that Newfoundlanders who, some 15 years ago after considerably heated debate decided to tie their destiny with that of Canada, realized they would be called upon to make contributions to the future of this country. It seems to me, as a Newfoundlander and, in a sense a new Canadian, it would be a more important thing for Canada to produce truly distinctive symbols of its own, yet at the same time, in the truly Canadian tradition, retain those things of our past for which we have so much genuine affection and loyalty. The course of action in this regard followed by this government, I think is one that will be hailed in years to come as being the course of action advocated by neither one side nor the other, but one truly consistent with our traditions and our heritage; a course of action that will, I think, serve well the purpose of national unity.

Mr. D. R. Gundlock (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, there was a time when I thought there would not be very much discussion on the resolution before us at the moment. Now, however, I find that there has been much said and we probably can look forward to much more being said. In addition to that, a great deal of time of this house will be taken. The reason for this, I think, is apparent from the resolution itself which was brought before this house by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson). It refers to the fact that the government be authorized to take such steps as are necessary. The government should be authorized by whom? This is the question, not only in my mind, not only in the minds of many others in this house, but in the minds of many people across this country. I intend to deal with that later.

These are the questions being asked, Mr. Speaker. Why is this necessary? We in this house, indeed the people of Canada, were led to believe or my impression was that we were led to believe this question would not be that the government be authorized, but that parliament would have a free vote. I realize, Mr. Speaker, that many people are not aware what is involved in a free vote. When they hear the words "free vote" they take them literally as meaning that the members of the House of Commons and the other place may vote in the way their consciences direct, particularly in the case of an issue of conscience, an emotional issue, as the flag resolution has been described so many times. It is an issue of the type on which one could very well expect to have a free vote.

There are many reasons why this should be so, and with the indulgence of the house I shall bring some of them forward later. Why should I, not having any intention previously of speaking, be standing here taking the time of the house to put forward my own views and those of my constituents? Why is this necessary? In an emotional issue of this kind, an issue of conscience, I feel that I must express my views and the views of my constituents whereas if there had been going to be a free vote my position might have been different. It follows, therefore, that at this time I am delegated to bring forward the views of different factions, different groups, different individuals in my constituency. This is necessary because the Prime Minister, after having first given the strong impression indirectly, if not directly, that there would be a free vote on this highly contentious and emotional issue, said latterly that the government would stand or fall on the issue. Some people may have different ideas about the interpretation of statements like that, but to me it simply means that this issue has now become a political one.

An hon. Member: A political flag.

Mr. Gundlock: This is the unavoidable result now, no matter what flag is adopted. Certainly if the flag outlined in the resolution is adopted it will be a political flag as well. If that should happen we will then have a flag that is not identified as a distinctive Canadian flag. It will be identified then as a political flag, and this may be good, bad or indifferent. Someone else will have to judge. Not only will it be identified as a political flag but it will also be identified with a certain person and a certain political party.

I deplore this attitude, Mr. Speaker. I had genuinely and sincerely hoped that parliament would have a free vote, and I think there are many in this party who feel the same way. There may also be some in other parties. Certainly there would have been very little objection if a free vote had been allowed. There came a time, however, when the Prime Minister realized that this would not bring to culmination what he had in mind.

A lot has been said about certain types of training, and from many years of schooling and experience I have had the impression, and still have, that a democratic leader in the true sense is the servant of the wishes of the people in a democracy. This resolution is not one brought forward by a democratic leader or government. How can it be, Mr. Speaker, when we are told that this will be it? Many times in the last few weeks we have been told that this will be it, like it or not, even to the point of suspending consideration of other legislation. We were told this to all intents and purposes only 15 minutes ago in the house. All other legislation will be put aside after a certain point is reached.

An hon. Member: The same old gang.

Mr. Gundlock: I hear comments about the same old bunch. We were told by the Prime Minister that after a certain point nothing else would be done in this session of parliament until the flag resolution was disposed of. As I said before, this is not my idea of a democratic leader or a democratic government. It sounds much more like a dictatorship. I had another word on the tip of my tongue. We should not have to be subjected to this procedure, Mr. Speaker. As has been mentioned before, there is a great deal of evidence that the proposed design is not as popular as some people think it is. I, like every other member of the house, can quote many prayers and petitions, and read letters, but there is something I would like to read before my time runs out. It is a summary of what the constituency of Lethbridge expects me to bring forth to this house, and it is this: Canadians generally are agreed or may agree to having a distinctive Canadian flag. They may agree upon this by themselves, maybe even through parliament alone, but as I expressed a few moments earlier we have been given to understand very clearly and distinctly that this will not be possible.

It has now become a political issue and, when it becomes a political issue, then the flag adopted will become a political flag and will be associated politically with certain people and with a certain political party. I definitely want to leave this thought with the house, that I cannot agree that any flag which has this kind of association can be a distinctive Canadian flag regardless of the desire to have one.

The representations I have had from the constituency of Lethbridge point out to me that there is a great majority who strongly insist that the Canadian ensign be retained, or something very near to it. There are others who would go a little further but who would still retain much, if not all of the ensign.

This brings forth mention of a new design. I know how hopeless it is for me as a backbencher, as a member of the official opposition, to present the design of a flag, but later in my speech I would like to make a suggestion that has been prompted by all the representations I have received from those who have taken the trouble to make their wishes known to me.

There are some who would like the proposed flag, and there are more who would prefer a single maple leaf design. As I said earlier, Mr. Speaker, I am not able to summarize the representations I have received from my constituency, but I am delegated more or less to the House of Commons to present the wishes of my constituency, and this I am doing. I have pointed out that there is a great majority who strongly think we should have the ensign. I have pointed out another majority, slightly less, who would be willing to modify that flag but still retain certain parts of it. I have pointed out that there are those in my constituency who favour the flag described in the resolution, and I have pointed out that there are those who favour the design of a single maple leaf. This brings one to realize that the amendment to the resolution is very necessary. Frankly, Mr. Speaker, I support the amendment. When the Prime Minister and the government take the stand they do, then I see no other way by which the Canadian people can be satisfied on the design of a distinctive Canadian flag but through being given the opportunity to express their wishes.

My constituency may not coincide in its views with other constituencies, but it is a fairly average constituency. We talk about the wishes, the tendencies or the preferences of constituencies for a distinctive Canadian flag, but according to the cross-Canada newspaper poll, which I watched very closely, the Lethbridge Herald, a newspaper circulating in the general area from which I come, showed a greater percentage of voters in favour of the new design than did the newspaper circulating in Sherbrooke, Quebec.

There must be a significance in this. It shows that the flag design is not as popular in certain parts of the country as a lot of people would like to have us believe. According to the newspaper poll Lethbridge, Alberta, had a greater percentage of people in favour of the proposed flag than Sherbrooke, Quebec.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, I very seldom take up much time of the house, but there is something that has bothered me on this issue. I have thought it should not be allowed to pass unchallenged. I know that being a new and very inexperienced member I am treading on dangerous ground, but—

Mr. Chapdelaine: I rise on a point of order. I may be mistaken, but I think the hon. member mentioned my riding a moment ago. He said there were more people in his riding in favour of the new flag than there were in my riding, and I think that is not correct.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Would the hon. member kindly resume his seat. I can tell the hon. member that that is not a point of order. It is a matter of debate and the hon. member will have an opportunity to rectify the facts, if he thinks they are not correct, when he takes part in the debate.

Mr. Gundlock: Without referring directly to anything I mentioned a while ago I would have no objection whatsoever to repeating what I said. According to my knowledge of recent newspaper polls, they pointed out at a certain point that in my area percentagewise there were more people in favour of the flag design in this resolution before us than were reported as being in favour of it in Sherbrooke, Quebec. There is no insinuation there, whatsoever. I was only pointing out that probably some of us get carried away a little. I was surprised, as a matter of fact, though I do not put any credence in these polls. I mentioned them for whatever they are worth. President Truman has a very good description of polls, one which I do not think I can use here. He did not use it in his chamber and I am sure you would disallow it here, Mr. Speaker. That is all I said. There was certainly nothing personal about it.

But there is something to which I take exception, though it may not refer directly to either this resolution or the amendment. Certain members in particular of this house have made statements with which I cannot agree, and I would quote in this regard the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette). At page 4757 of Hansard he is reported as saying:

> Let us put a stop to our discussion and settle the matter of the flag right now.

I see the hon. member for Villeneuve is not in his seat. I wish he were. In one way I am glad he is not, though, because I realize he is a much more able debater than I am on the floor of this house. Nevertheless, this is what he said:

> Let us put a stop to our discussion and settle the matter of the flag right now.

Well, all hon. members, including the Prime Minister, know that this is not possible. He went on to say:

> The cleavage between these two racial groups of Canada is getting even worse.

This is a member of parliament speaking —a responsible man uttering words such as these. The hon. member used those very words:

> As I said yesterday, and I repeat it today, the cleavage between the two racial groups of Canada is getting even worse and I hold the Leader of the Opposition responsible for this situation.

As I said before, I take exception to this, and I challenge this statement. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, just where and how can one draw this line between two races in Canada? I have a colleague who usually sits here in front of me. This evening he is sitting just over there. Is he a man of a different race from mine? Is the hon. member I have just quoted, the hon. member for Villeneuve, a man from a different race? I say no, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gundlock: Statements such as that have gone unchallenged in this house so many times that I feel it is necessary to bring this point up, though I realize it may not be connected directly with ths resolution or with the amendment. But just for a moment I should like to remind some of my hon. friends—and if I may put it in the words of the hon. member for Villeneuve, those of the other race—that there are a lot of people concerned with their welfare, probably much more concerned than some of those who speak so much and so loudly in this place.

I mean this honestly and sincerely, Mr. Speaker. When I say we are concerned about this question, I can support my contention. As a matter of fact I can bring up my campaign material from my last campaign, from my previous campaign and from my first campaign. Throughout we campaigned on government policy. Particularly, we campaigned in the west on the basis of certain policies set out by the former minister of agriculture my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that is a purely selfish attitude for Canadians to take? Do you think that sort of thing is brought on by people of another race? I hope that when the hon. member is in his place he will bring my attention back to this at some future date. There is more I would like to say about this particular matter, Mr. Speaker, but I shall not do so at the moment.

There is another point along the same line. Ministers of the present government are often quoted in the press. I wish to refer to a statement made by a very respected minister—as a matter of fact, one for whom I personally have a great deal of respect—and I might say this remark is attributed to him in a press release. This newspaper article bears the heading "No answer for Quebec, Favreau says". I would like to read certain portions of it:

> An honest man cannot give a precise answer to the question: What does Quebec want? justice minister Guy Favreau told a Liberal party rally here on Saturday.
> Even if the man were a mind reader with the agility of a modern computer his answer would be long, tedious and inconclusive, Mr. Favreau said.

If I digress for a moment from the quotation, Mr. Speaker, as I was saying earlier, I do not think these things are all as bad as some people would like us to believe. If I may put it this way, we in the west do not consider ourselves a different race from those in Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gundlock: We in the west—perhaps I should say "I", but I will say "we"—do not consider Canada selfishly; we do not think we can get along without them. I wish I had more time, Mr. Speaker, to try to convince the people in the east, if we have to use these words—and I deplore using the words "east" and "west" except geographically; and I hope that very soon that will be the only basis for using these words—of our sincerity in this matter.

Perhaps I may now continue with the quotation from the newspaper. This is from the Toronto Globe and Mail of recent date, June 29. It says:

> "Quebeckers have no overriding authority to unify their thoughts; some may want one thing, while others something else", he said.

That is referring to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau). I said earlier that I had a great deal of respect for the minister who is credited with uttering these words; but believe me, Mr. Speaker, when we have hon. members in this house on their feet time and time again repeating remarks such as I quoted earlier, it must be hard for the people of Quebec to understand what they do want. I want to put this on the record: I think the people of Quebec are the same kind of Canadians that I think I am, and the same kind of Canadians that I think we in the west are. I say again that I deplore this statement, "Two racial groups".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gundlock: I want to conclude these remarks, Mr. Speaker, by referring to another matter.

Mr. Chapdelaine: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker; could we hear about the flag issue?

Mr. Gundlock: Mr. Speaker, I only raise this point because this expression was used by an hon. member when speaking on the flag issue, and I am quoting from Hansard.

An hon. Member: No; it was on the estimates.

Mr. Gundlock: If the hon. member will take the trouble to look it up, on page 4757 of Hansard he will see that the flag issue is referred to and this expression is used. The words used in Hansard are, "flag right now".

Before my time is concluded there are two other matters I want to bring to the attention of the house. At no time yet—and I hope there will come a time when we will hear more about this subject—have the wishes of a group of Canadians, who have never really been challenged as being real Canadians, been considered. I refer to the Indians, as we know them; treaty Indians, and some non-treaty Indians. I would like to pay tribute to them. I would also like to bring to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that probably my favourite constituent is a treaty Indian in the person of Senator James Gladstone of the other place.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gundlock: I know that I hardly have the right to refer to the hon. gentleman in that way, but I am not doing so lightly, because the senator does live in my constituency and I do sincerely consider him to be my favourite constituent. I do not think there is any doubt about the fact that there is certainly nothing about race or creed or anything else connected with the Indians, so far as their recognition of a flag is concerned. What have they done about the ties with the past? There is one group that, perhaps the same as others, thinks we might use the totem pole as a Canadian symbol. There are others who think we might use an Indian headdress. There are those who would like to see a plain feather. But just lately a view among the Indians has more or less culminated in the opinion that we should use the symbol of the peace pipe. This suggestion came originally from the Six Nations Indians, who are very close to Ottawa as a matter of fact, and who have a very proud heritage. They consider themselves, even today, as allies of the Queen, even to the point where they do not too strongly consider Canada as a nation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must interrupt the hon. gentleman to advise him that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Gundlock: I wonder if I could just have one more minute, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Does the house give unanimous consent to the hon. member for Lethbridge (Mr. Gundlock) completing his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Webb: He was interrupted twice.

Mr. Gundlock: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and hon. members. I will be very brief. I did want to bring to the attention of the house this one point about the Indians. The Six Nations Indians were probably the first league of nations in the whole world—

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Objections have been expressed. We said "no" but the hon. member still has the floor. He could talk all night long.

[Text]

Mr. Gundlock: I wanted to bring this matter to the attention of the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, there is objection from this part of the house.

[Text]

Mr. Webb: Like everything else, you do not want to listen to the truth.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: We object.

[Text]

Mr. Gundlock: I would like to conclude and say, if I may—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. I must tell the hon. member for Lethbridge that the house does not give unanimous consent to his continuing.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Eudes Dubé (Restigouche-Madawaska): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride and pleasure that I come to add my modest contribution to that of the hon. members who spoke before me in this debate on the Canadian flag.

I am convinced that history will not forget the present debate and that we are now paving the way for our country's ultimate phase. We have reached the stage where we, in this house, as representatives of the Canadian people, are called upon to decide whether we have to live in the past, divide the nation as regards the present or head towards the future side by side. Several members emphasize the fact that many other bills should hold our attention and that the flag issue should be postponed.

I admit that the Canadian people are impatiently waiting for a great number of very important measures already appearing on the order paper. But we have only ourselves to blame if we do not make more progress in our work. Many of those pieces of legislation would have been passed by now if parliament were less interested in extending the debates and more anxious to achieve results.

If members of the house were to decide to postpone the selection of a flag, I suggest that it would not provide a solution to the problem, because failure of parliament to assume its responsibilities would be a failure to carry out the mandate conferred on it by the Canadian people.

The amendment under consideration this evening aims at relieving us from our obligations and relying on a plebiscite. It is not a very courageous solution. The mover of that resolution is apparently more interested in dividing than in legislating.

Mr. Speaker, our parliamentary system does not lend itself very well to a plebiscite. The Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) has already pointed out, in his first speech on the flag, that there were only two plebiscites in Canadian history, one in 1898 on prohibition and the second in 1942 on conscription. And, as everyone knows, those two plebiscites have been failures.

Our parliamentary system is based, first, on the election of members whose duty it is to assume their own responsibilities. We have been entrusted with a mandate; we must act.

If a plebiscite were to be held on the flag issue, why should we not hold one with regard to pensions? Why not another one regarding franchise at 18? Why not another plebiscite on redistribution?

The suggestion of a plebiscite, in my opinion, is simply a putting-off, a smokescreen on the part of a leader who would like to cover up the divisions which rend his party as well as the indecisiveness which crippled him regarding the adoption of a flag.

Mr. Lambert: Nonsense.

Mr. Dubé: During the last two election campaigns, the party to which I am proud to belong promised to give Canada a distinctive flag within two years after taking office. We never pledged ourselves to hold a referendum on that question. Indeed, to my knowledge, no political party represented here stated during the election campaign that it would hold a referendum on the flag issue. In my opinion, that proposal is a last ditch effort, a desperate step to delay the adoption of a distinctive flag.

Yet, several hon. members claim that the red ensign which was given temporary approval in 1945, by virtue of an order in council, is a distinctive Canadian flag. I respect their opinion but I do not share it.

Everybody knows that the red ensign is the naval flag flown by all ships of the British merchant marine. It is the flag of various yachting clubs. It is the flag of many companies which have obtained their charters from the crown, such as perhaps the Hudson Bay Company. It also the flag of several colonies. In short, the red ensign is a respectable flag; it is also a respected flag. However, I do not think it a typical Canadian flag. It is a temporary flag which can be flown, as mentioned in the order in council of September 5, 1945:

—so long as parliament has not taken steps to adopt an official national flag.

Now, the time has come for parliament to adopt officially a typically distinctive flag.

If the history of the red ensign goes back officially to 1945 only, the three maple leaves on a single stem go back, as a heraldic symbol, to 1868. As a matter of fact, it is then that Queen Victoria gave as a symbol to Upper Canada—now Ontario—by royal decree, three gold maple leaves on a green field. That same 1868 decree gave as a symbol to Lower Canada—which is Quebec today—three green maple leaves on a gold field.

Finally, on November 21, 1921, His Majesty George V, at the request of the Canadian Conservative government, promulgated red and white as the national colours of Canada and decreed as a Canadian emblem three maple leaves on a single stem.

Therefore, it seems a well established fact that the flag proposed in the resolution, that is three red maple leaves on a white field, is quite appropriate from the heraldic point of view and deeply faithful from the historic point of view. But if fondness for the past is a great virtue, a realistic approach to the present situation is also essential, and I would even say that for legislators and leaders, it is the future, much more than the past, which is important.

Mr. Speaker, I think I am right when I say that Canada is now going through one of the most distressing periods of its history.

I do not want to point out any further the extremist and vocal movements which stir the people in various places in the country. They already receive too much publicity.

But if those movements indicate a great unrest, they also reflect a national awakening.

It is our duty to direct those energies towards a positive goal, towards the unity of the nation. And a distinctive national flag as well as a constructive debate on this subject might inspire the Canadian people in a new national awakening and a total effort in order to achieve our potential and our aspirations.

Personally, I am convinced that the great majority of Canadians wish to preserve the Canadian nation and take part in the complete development of our economic and cultural assets.

Our country has a great future, and a really Canadian national flag may become the emblem of a new national pride and at the same time the starting point of a collective march towards our destiny.

Mr. Mandziuk: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Dubé: Yes.

Mr. Mandziuk: Does the hon. member know that in 1961 his leader promised the Canadian people they would be told as to whether or not they wanted a certain distinctive national flag?

[Mr. Dubé.]

Mr. Dubé: This is not the case at all. During two elections, the Liberal party promised the Canadian people a distinctive national flag. At no time was a referendum or a plebiscite promised or even mentioned.

Mr. Mandziuk: May I ask another question? The hon. member was talking about a mandate. What was the mandate he received from constituents, or does this apply to all other constituencies? What was the mandate he received from his constituents?

Mr. Dubé: The mandate was to carry out our program, and the flag is part of our program which we have to carry out within two years.

Mr. Mandziuk: Did you tell them the program you were carrying out or the flag you were going to introduce?

Mr. J. N. Ormiston (Melville): Mr. Speaker, like many other members on all sides of the house I have been impressed, and considerably so, by the moderation which has been evident on the part of hon. members expressing their opinions during this debate. This bodes very well for the debate. It may seem unusual, but I should like to preface my remarks by a quotation from the leader of the New Democratic party, I might say a friend. I believe he has something the same background as I have. As I say, it may seem unusual that I would preface my remarks by quoting the remarks of that hon. member, but we have something in common, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) was raised in the industrial complex of the midlands of Scotland, while I was raised in the pastoral quietude of the borders. It stands to reason therefore that while we may have something in common, we may have our differences as well.

However, sir, if I may I should like to quote from the remarks of the hon. member which appear on page 4350 of Hansard:

> The third thing I want to say something about, Mr. Speaker, is the actual design of the flag itself. I have a good deal of sympathy for those who advocate selecting the red ensign, with some modifications, as the national flag of Canada. As one who was born in Scotland I have a deep attachment for British traditions and British institutions, I would be very happy, personally, with a flag in which there was the union jack in one corner and the fleur-de-lis in another, thus paying tribute to the two great founding races that came together to make up the partnership of confederation.

This, Mr. Speaker, shows that those of us who had our background in the old land respond to these appeals to reason which should typify all hon. members. I think in some respects the Prime Minister qualifies as one of those who have shown some restraint, because during the past month he has been appealing for moderation and a constructive approach to national unity. He says, of course, there are troublesome problems that must be solved and urges the peoples of the various cultures to show restraint. However, rather than restraint on the part of the government, there has been a certain amount of precipitate action to force an early decision on the flag issue, while matters of equal importance have been shelved for future consideration. Surely, sir, the Prime Minister could hardly intrude a more divisive issue into national debate at this time than the question of a new flag. Any attempt to erase ancient origins and traditions in the manner presently employed would inevitably touch off a situation that might split not only parliament but the nation as well.

A nation, even as young as Canada, can be proud of its Christian heritage, its honourable traditions which are presently embodied in our flag, and to fly a national emblem without those symbols of our historic background would be ignoring both the accomplishments of the past and the prospects for the future.

Flags may be as old as civilization, but they still retain much of their ancient power. Throughout history men have realized that they could express their feelings for their country and its people, their loyalty and sense of patriotic duty, by showing respect for their emblem, the national flag, and by understanding something of its meaning and its history. This helped them to be fellow citizens of a community instead of merely being people who happened to live together in one part of the earth. This is as true today as it ever was. We need not only respect our flags but protect them for posterity.

Over the years, designs on flags have not been picked at random or on the personal choice of one individual, but largely because of their meaning. Some have been deliberately selected in recent times, while others have been in use from time immemorial, their origins coming from ancient legends or being completely lost in the past. To interpret the meaning of a flag helps us to understand and appreciate something of the history and ideals of a country which flies it.

Obviously a flag of an innocuous pattern or an uninspiring design, such as is being presented for our consideration, fails to meet even the minimum standards which we should accept when judging it in comparison with that which we have cherished in the past. It is for some of the reasons mentioned and, I may as well admit, for personal and sentimental reasons that I have on two occasions presented to the house a private member's bill for the adoption of the red ensign as Canada's national flag.

Naturally I have been impressed by the reasoning of other members who have spoken so eloquently on the government's proposed flag design and particularly by the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Matheson), who I am sorry is not in the chamber tonight but who traced the use of the maple leaves as emblems and symbols as far back as 1862 and culminating, of course, in the extensive acceptance of the maple leaf insignia by our armed forces in world war II. However, in spite of the wide use of the maple leaf design the flag committee, which brought in its report in July of 1946, only saw fit to use the symbol as an integral part of the red ensign. This, of course, was in the days when we were spiritually uplifted, having made a great contribution to hostilities which were brought to a successful conclusion in 1945. Possibly in the report of the flag committee there was a projection of the public feeling which indicated a keener sense of the real values, exposed as our people had been to five years of war in which understanding, tolerance and sacrifice were present in greater measure than ever before as dominant features of human nature. I am not suggesting that those virtues are not present today, but in our present affluent and complacent society it does not seem that our vigour and determination are being properly applied if we accept this inadequate symbol as representing Canada's greatness today.

Should it happen that our present flag passes from the scene, there are those who will have deep and sincere misgivings as to what will be the next step in that path of retreat which will finally separate us from the commonwealth and the crown. If this is the view of only a small minority, then these apprehensions can only be dispelled by something more reassuring than the presentation of the present flag design. No action which will increase the divisions within the country at this time is justified, especially in view of the fact that those adversely affected have no way of making themselves heard except by representations through those who refuse to accept this form of dictation.

Like many other members I have had a great deal of correspondence regarding the flag issue over the past two years, possibly because of the action I have taken in that regard. At the present tme my correspondence runs 90 per cent in favour of the red ensign. Strangely enough, many of those who have taken exception to the new flag proposal are not of my own political persuasion and find it difficult to have their own party members accept their opinions. Possibly this is one of the best reasons why we should support the reasoned appeal to rationalism which was proposed by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle (Mr. Hamilton). Surely he proposed a reasonable idea which should be accepted. If the people of this country have an opportunity to voice their opinion, those who do not see eye to eye with the present proposal will gladly accept the will of the people of the rest of Canada. In conclusion may I say I am glad to support the amendment proposed by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker).

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Paul Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I am very happy to be able to take part for a few moments only, so as not to delay the proceedings, in the surely historical debate we are carrying on at present and to express my approval of resolution 44(A) introduced by this government.

Even though I must congratulate the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) on his courage, such an issue must rise above any political allegiance. That is why I hold nothing against anyone and I do not defend any cause other than the unification of my country. We, as Canadians, should have a common ideal, regardless of our origin.

A flag is but a piece of material attached to a pole, but the important point at the present time is that it serves as an emblem, as a symbol, as a rallying sign. Accumulating or multiplying symbols serves no useful purpose.

It is difficult for me to understand why some members object to the formal adoption of a real national distinctive flag. May I labour this point.

When, in 1945, a ministerial decree recognized a flag for Canada, it is only accidentally and casually that it was proposed, and this flag was to remain until a distinctive official flag was adopted. It means, Mr. Speaker, that this possibility had been considered even by those who adopted temporarily the red ensign. This flag was not a distinctive and permanent national flag, and there was some hint of the possibility, which, today, is a fact, of permanently adopting some day an official, distinctive, intrinsically Canadian flag, which no contingency could ever suppress.

I understand that this question requires sacrifices on both sides, especially for those who served so valiantly under such flag, since it is a highly emotional and sensitive question. It should not be forgotten that great things stemmed from sacrifice and self-denial; they were the more enduring if they required self-sacrifice. Let us work altogether in a gesture of harmony for the good of the country.

The time has come for us to produce a really distinctive flag, comprising no emblem belonging to another country. We have become an adult nation and we have to prove our maturity.

The essential thing should be now that this flag which is submitted to us receive official and absolute approval by statute, so as to be accepted in every part of this country and throughout our territory, without being left to local whims and prejudices. The approval of parliament which the Canadian people has been expecting for so long will, I trust, sanction a distinctive national flag, an official design consecrated by law. To us, it will be the exclusive symbol of Canada from sea to sea, and everywhere throughout the world.

I should not like to rehash all arguments in favour of the three maple leaves, and against a referendum which would only lead to as much confusion as if the 3,000 designs had been submitted to the house.

In closing my remarks, Mr. Speaker, I would like to state that I love my country, its people, of whatever origin and whatever political allegiance they may be. I have only one wish, and that is to see this country grow and prosper in harmony, in this diversity which can be held up as an example to the world, under a flag which would be truly and essentially Canadian for the benefit of Canada and all its citizens.

[Text]

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, if this catalogue of one's traditions is necessary, then I am going to indulge in it for a minute. It happens that in 1783 my paternal ancestors came from Connecticut to the part of Canada I happen to have the privilege of representing. Perhaps this labels me; it does according to some lights, anyway. My maternal ancestors came to Cape Breton from Scotland in the early part of the 19th century, but surely these facts in themselves —really they do not matter—do not make me British. Neither do they make me American; neither do they make me Scottish. I always look upon myself as a Canadian, and to quote the immortal words of another in this house, "I am for Canada".

Having said that, however, I happen to be one of these naïve people who believe in the universality of man. I would be delighted, for instance, if the United Nations flag could be adopted as the flag of Canada, and it might not be too bad a message for the world. Such a day is not now, I am realistic enough to know, but it must come I suggest in man's march toward a world order.

I also try to be realistic. I recognize and deeply appreciate the French fact in Canada. I sympathize with the aspirations of this co-founding race in its wish to take its rightful place in an evolving Canada. As a matter of fact, to show you how confused the whole issue is in Canada, and how careful a member of parliament must be in trying to articulate his beliefs, the other day when I made a comment in this house and used the phrase derisively about little Englanders in the sense that we in Canada, and any part of Canada, must not be isolationists, several of my constituents severely criticized me as being against England. So, a member of parliament is in great difficulty and has to take great care.

I happen to support a distinctive Canadian flag, but having said that I think it is fair to say that distinctive means different things to different people. The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Dubé), who has spoken and who represents a part of New Brunswick, felt that distinctive means the ignoring of our past, using the word in the sense that everything that went before in our land must be turned aside. But to me the word distinctive means something different from that. It means something unique, something special, something which stands by itself.

I happen to believe that a flag which embodies the union jack and the fleur-de-lis, or any other symbol acceptable to the French, or recognition of the French partnership in Canada's growth and development, would mean and be a distinctive Canadian flag. For weeks now, although this debate has only been going on for three days, I have been hearing derisive things said about those loyal Canadians whose entire background and tradition make it perfectly obvious they would wish to honour and revere the red ensign. These Canadians have been taught to do this in their schools. They have even been admonished to do so by those who in earlier days—and not so very long ago at that—sat in the seats now occupied by the Prime Minister and his colleagues and, as a matter of fact, led and supported the party which the Prime Minister now leads and supports. My allusion here is of course to Right Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King.

It seems fairly obvious that there should not be a grade or a degree of patriotism or, as some use the word, of Canadianism in our land. No one has a monopoly on patriotism or upon feelings of loyalty to this country and its institutions.

I am not here today to swear allegiance or to put my love of country to any test. Everything right and good and true does not repose in the breast of the Prime Minister or in the breasts of those who support him. Everything wrong and out of date and disloyal does not rest in the being of my leader and those of my colleagues who have taken strong positions on what I call this manufactured issue.

I have a formula—it is not new but I want to present it—for trying to resolve this so-called flag issue, and I propose to strip it of all complications and complexities. At least it has been stripped in my mind and, if I am any good at all, I will be able to present it to the house in a fairly clear way. My formula would give each Canadian eligible to vote a share in the determination of the distinctive Canadian flag.

I support the proposal of my leader for a referendum or plebiscite. I suggest that the people should share in this momentous decision we are about to take. Our flag, as has been said before, must not be allowed to become a Pearson flag. Our flag must not be allowed to become a Liberal flag—with the large L of that much maligned word. Our flag must not become—as it may be, unless we take a very close checkrein on our emotions—a partisan flag. Rather, it seems to me to be obvious that a flag should be one the final choice of which is shared by the greatest possible number of Canadians. Some members who have spoken from the other side talk about a mandate. It is obvious to the country and it is certainly obvious to anyone in this house that there is no such thing as a clear and decisive mandate on this issue. This is, in the immortal words of the leader of the Social Credit party, a house of minorities, and I do not see how in any house of minorities on an issue which transcends partisan aspects and goes to the roots of people's traditions and beliefs, the government can properly claim that it holds a mandate for making this change in the manner in which they propose to make it. I suggest the people should be allowed to decide and I think this simple, honest and practical act on the part of the Prime Minister would immediately dispel any suspicion, if there is any suspicion, of partisanship in the consideration of this issue. Let the people decide, and all division will wither away because a democratic process would have been followed. Let the people decide, and obviously we will have a flag which the majority have selected in the way I am about to indicate as being their preference.

The hon. member for Restigouche-Madawaska (Mr. Dubé) and no doubt others who have spoken, have referred to the two other plebiscites, the plebiscite on prohibition, which was a failure, and the plebiscite in 1942. I wonder where the blame should properly lie for the failure of those two plebiscites. The blame in 1942 seems to be reasonably obvious. History can tell us that. And if anybody is interested in the plebiscite on prohibition I suppose I could give a learned dissertation on it. But perhaps the following might be recommended to the people of Canada for a decision on the basis of a first, second, third, fourth and fifth choice, listed in whatever order the house would prefer. I happen to have listed them in the order I intend to give now:

1. Whether a distinctive Canadian flag should be the red ensign as presently constituted;

2. the three maple leaf design suggested in the resolution before us;

3. the single maple leaf design recommended by the New Democratic party;

4. the triangle design incorporating a single maple leaf, suggested I understand by the Saint Jean Baptiste society, or

5. an adaptation of the red ensign so as to include a fleur de lis or a maple leaf or any other symbol in the fly, rather than the great seal of Canada which is now in the red ensign.

This formula of choice would, it seems to me, present a fair series with a wide aspect of selection to the people of Canada. The people could indicate their preference in a democratic way by numbering their various choices in accordance with their wishes. By this formula, the final solution will be the result of the efforts of everybody in this country who took the trouble to make a choice at all.

While Canadians were making their choice and the results were being tabulated, it seems to me this parliament could go about its urgent business. We have had some indication from the Prime Minister in his statement this evening of the issues the government thinks —and I share this opinion—are urgent. But this is after all a mediocre list—a list of expediencies. It is a list which does not include in any way the fundamental and ongoing problems of this country. By this suggestion of mine Canadians would be given a choice according to their preferences and we would not be subjected here to the game of hide and seek caused by the government's other items to which, understandably, it wishes to give priority.

Another thing which could be dispelled by this formula of mine would be the overriding threat of a general election which seems to be put forward by the Prime Minister and other members of the government every time somebody wants to take a rightful share in the debates in this house. These threats are born of frustration because of bad organization, and I think they are to be repudiated by people who have tried to explain the proper function of a free and democratic parliament. We have had a new gimmick tonight in this faltering endeavour to bring some semblance of order to a perambulating parliament. I suggest that the Prime Minister has advanced the threat of closure on this issue in every aspect but that of the actual rules. I suggest his statement about the disposal of this flag resolution amounts to de facto closure.

Now I see it is 10.30 and everybody will wish to ponder my words over the next 48 hours.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: So that the record may be clear, after the one day holiday we are getting this summer, would the acting house leader be able to announce that we will be dealing with the spending program of the government by way of the main estimates on Thursday and Friday, or do we carry on with the debate on the flag resolution?

Mr. MacNaught: The first item to be called on Thursday would be the resolution preceding the bill to establish youth allowances. By agreement among the various house leaders, that will go through without any debate. Then we will go on with the flag debate.

Mr. Churchill: Friday as well?

Mr. MacNaught: Friday as well.

Mr. Churchill: No main estimates.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

(Subject matter of questions debated under adjournment motion).

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved:

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT—TRAIL, B.C.—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION INTO OVERTIME MAIL DELIVERY

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I apologize for appearing so frequently on this late night show, but duty impels me. A few days ago I received a telegram from Robert Keiver, president of local 480 of the Trail and district smelter workers union. I will read the telegram:

> This is to advise you that commencing at about 7 p.m. Monday June twenty second a special delivery of mail was made door to door to Trail members of our union. Normally no mail delivery is scheduled for this time of day. Our information is and can be attested to that postal employees at Trail were requested at about 2 p.m. to work overtime for four hours after 6 p.m. These postal employees were obliged to make a delivery over and above normal deliveries which consisted mainly of a communication from the employer Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company to each of its employees residing in the city of Trail in company envelopes and metered indicating four cent postage rate. This extraordinary privilege accorded by the Post Office Department to Cominco takes place on the eve of a referendum being conducted by the union representing the employees and the vote is a phase of a labour dispute between the company and its employees. We are not objecting to the content of the material distributed in this instance but seriously question the principle involved which appears designed to give an employer an advantage in a dispute with his employees. We respectfully request you to raise this matter and demand a full investigation by the responsible federal authorities.

That is signed, "R. Keiver, president, local 480, Trail and district smelter workers". Mr. Speaker, I have also received other telegrams and several 'phone calls from interested persons in the district. This has created quite a lot of comment in the district, because it is considered a somewhat unusual circumstance. I have been informed that some of the postmen at least were in uniform when they were delivering these special delivery letters. I have been reliably informed that only four cents postage was paid by Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company instead of the 29 cents that is normally required under the circumstances. I have been informed recently that the postmen are not certain, even at this date, whether they will be paid by Consolidated Mining and Smelting Company for this overtime or by the Post Office Department.

On that account, Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister the following question a few days ago:

> Has the minister any information to give the house with respect to his inquiries concerning an unconventional special delivery of mail in Trail, undertaken at the request of the Consolidated Mining and Smelting Co. Ltd. on the evening prior to a vote of the employees on an arbitration award?

We all know the minister has an excellent record as a good administrator and in wartime he rendered good service to his country in this respect; and he has an excellent record since in British Columbia in his association with the forestry industry. I am sure, therefore, he wants everything in his department to be run according to Hoyle and according to the regulations. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, because of the concern of the union men concerned and other patrons of the Trail post office, and in view of the apparent irregularities, I would appreciate it very much if the minister would give the house some information with respect to what appears to be a most unusual situation.

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having furnished me with a copy of the telegram in question and a subsequent telegram which he received. Within a matter of minutes of the time I received the first wire I gave instructions to look into this matter. We received a preliminary report by telephone. It was not complete. Because I was going to be in the west over the week end I assured my hon. friend that I would make inquiries while there and would let him and the house have a further report today.

I have little to add to what the hon. member has said. The letters in question, and there were many of them, were delivered at the post office in Trail in the late afternoon of the day in question. They were stamped, as the hon. member says, with a four-cent stamp, or rather they were metered with a four-cent stamp charge recorded. I do want to make perfectly clear that if there is any fault in the matter the fault is not that of the postmaster in Trail.

After the letters were delivered to the post office a request came from the company to deliver the letters during the evening; at least, an inquiry was made as to whether they could be delivered during the evening. The company said they were prepared to pay any reasonable charge for this extra work. A rate was suggested for the postmen who might be willing to deliver these letters during the evening. The postmaster then quite properly called his superior in Vancouver, the district director. By this time it was evening and the district director, thinking he had a precedent for so doing, because of the time factor, authorized the postmaster in Trail to put the proposition to the postmen and ask them whether or not they would be willing to deliver the letters that evening at the rate of so much per hour. It was not a request but an inquiry. All but one of them said they would take the advantage of the opportunity to make some overtime. They showed up in the early evening at the post office, some in uniform and some not, and they delivered the letters.

In the course of my conversation I asked the district director to produce the file on which he relied as a precedent. That file has not yet been supplied to me; he undertook to send it off by air mail either last night or today. I agree with the hon. member that there seems to have been an irregularity, to say the least. The district director gave me to understand they would have done the same thing for the union, although that does not excuse it if it is improper. When I receive the report, which I would expect to receive, not tomorrow because of the holiday but on Thursday, I will advise my hon. friend further. I also intend to have a legal opinion on the position and if disciplinary action is required in the case of the district director it will be taken. But until I see the documents on which he relied as a precedent I cannot definitely say that there has been a breach of the regulations.

It is certainly an extraordinary procedure, one which should not be encouraged, and I must say I commend the district director for saying frankly: "If anyone is responsible, I am; don't blame the postmaster". As I say, I will keep the hon. member informed, and if further action needs to be taken I can assure him it will be taken.

Mr. Herridge: Mr. Speaker, I should like to thank the minister for his frank and clear explanation of the circumstances and the information he has to date; and also for his kind compliment with respect to my being a learned person.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.42 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, July 2, 1964

The house met at 2 p.m.

NEW MEMBER

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that the Clerk of the house has received from the chief electoral officer a certificate of the election and return of Mrs. Eloise Jones, member for the electoral district of Saskatoon.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

NEW BROCHURE CONTAINING SEATING PLAN OF CHAMBER

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members will have noticed the new seating plan which is on each member's desk today. This is the publication mentioned in the ninth report of the special committee on procedure and organization tabled in the house on June 24. The copies on hon. members' desks are from an advance and very limited supply delivered to me yesterday, Canada's national holiday. It will be available in quantity for distribution to visitors and for the general use of members some time within the next two weeks or so. The brochure is being printed in one million copies. However, in order to keep the seating plan up to date, the coloured side only will be printed initially and the black and white portion will be run in smaller lots as required so as to reflect seating changes that occur from time to time.

May I acknowledge our appreciation to the queen's printer and those engaged by him to produce this handsome brochure for getting it out in record time. It represents the first step only in a long range program to make available a variety of attractively illustrated, well written publications, postcards and other material that will, I hope, give to Canadians and to our visitors from other countries a better appreciation of the significance of parliament.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CÔTÉ, CHICOUTIMI—PLAYING OF ROYAL ANTHEM AT WORLD FAIR CEREMONY

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. At the close of the impressive ceremony of "La nuit des îles" sponsored by the city of Montreal on the evening of June 30, 1964, to mark the taking over of St. Helen's island and the island of Notre Dame by the World Exhibition Corporation, the band played England's royal anthem, to the obvious displeasure of most spectators because only the national anthem "O Canada" appeared on the program.

In view of the fact that this awe-inspiring event was bound to have world-wide repercussions the time was very ill chosen to show that Canada is still a subject country. Under those circumstances when every trace of the red ensign had been removed from St. Helen's island, I feel that the playing of the English royal anthem was a truly provocative action. Whoever took that step had no right to do so, and I wish to protest most emphatically against such a gesture of colonialism.

MR. PAUL—REQUEST FOR COMMUTATION OF SENTENCE OF CONVICTED MURDERER

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege to get the house acquainted with an urgent problem involving the life of a man, Mr. Georges Marcotte, and the sound administration of justice in our country.

To begin with, I want to emphasize that I have no personal sympathy for Mr. Georges Marcotte and no relationship with him—

[Text]

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I believe the hon. gentleman is out of order in his representations at this time according to citation 160 of Beauchesne.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I understand the attitude of the Solicitor General but if he would kindly listen to the remarks I wish to make on the basis of the information I have here, he could perhaps rise on a question of privilege or a point of order afterwards.

As I was saying, I have no sympathy for nor relationship with Georges Marcotte who is to go to the scaffold at twelve o'clock tonight, or with any member of his family or any of his accomplices.

If I intervene, it is merely because I feel that as a practising lawyer I must call the attention of the house to certain events which occurred yesterday.

I have here a certified copy of a sworn statement made by the first eye-witness of the shooting which followed the armed robbery at the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, in December 1962, during which two men of the Ville St. Laurent police force, constables Denis Brabant and Claude Marineau were killed. Mrs. Ilona Szucs, wife of Zoltan Dallos, residing in the city of Hamilton, in Ontario, was not heard at the trial of Georges Marcotte while her testimony should have been considered essential and of such a nature as to identify the person who shot at the police officers.

Because of new developments in this case provided by Mrs. Dallos, I ask the government, in the name of justice under which, if justice is to be dispensed in full, an accused must have the benefit of any reasonable doubt, and so that Marcotte may not be hanged unless proof of his guilt is ascertained without any doubt, to follow either one of these alternatives:

(a) Postpone the execution of Georges Marcotte—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. My attention has been called to citation 160 of Beauchesne, which reads:

> Parliament does not appear to have any part to play in the matter of clemency which is a prerogative of the crown that should not be interfered with by proceedings of the House of Commons while the subject is under consideration by His Excellency and his advisers.

Due to the importance of the matter I thought it advisable to allow the hon. member to bring his suggestions or complaints or new evidence to the attention of the legal authorities of the house; but having done that, in view of those circumstances I think the hon. member should desist and not make any further comments. He has, of course, the full opportunity of bringing these matters personally to the attention of the Minister of Justice at the proper time later on this day.

Mr. Paul: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am well aware of that citation from Beauchesne which I carefully examined before coming into the house, but I still think that when the life of a man is at stake, the standing orders of the house should be by-passed.

I therefore submit to the government—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As I have pointed out, this is a matter of great concern to many people, and certainly to the hon. member, but it is not a question of privilege especially in view of the citations given, and I am sure the hon. member has full opportunity to present his evidence, if any, whether it is new or old, to the Minister of Justice.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, if I did not abide up to now by the provisions of Beauchesne's citation may I be allowed to complete my remarks, which include about five more lines. So far I have only stated facts, but I should now like to put my request to the government.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: If the hon. member could limit himself to five lines I think the members of the house might hear him. May I ask first, does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the house to speak about five lines?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I therefore ask the government to grant a stay of execution to Georges Marcotte for a determined period so as to order the necessary investigation, which might justify a further trial, or to commute the death penalty for a life term so that he many receive the same treatment as his accomplice, Jean-Paul Fournel.

[Text]

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General.

Can the minister tell us whether a decision has been taken in connection with Georges Marcotte following the meeting of almost two hours which he had this morning in his office with the crown attorneys, the counsel of the accused and officials of the Quebec provincial police and the federal Department of Justice?

[Text]

Hon. J. Watson MacNaught (Solicitor General): I understand that a press release was issued some time ago giving that information. For the information of the hon. member, a decision has been taken not to interfere.

[Later:]

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): A supplementary question to the one which the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul) has just asked. In view of the facts submitted to the house this afternoon, is it the intention of the government to take steps in order to postpone the execution of the sentence against Georges Marcotte?

[Text]

Mr. MacNaught: In view of what is contained in citation 160 of Beauchesne I think there is nothing further I can tell the house.

Mr. Martineau: With regard to the point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Order. This matter was raised as a question of privilege and a decision was given. The house has been referred to citation 160 of Beauchesne. The hon. member is now seeking to do indirectly what has been prohibited directly, and I think he will be out of order very shortly if he does not desist.

Mr. Martineau: Well, would Your Honour mind my making a very short observation because of the seriousness—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Has the hon. member a question to ask? If he has, let him pose his question.

Mr. Martineau: Yes, I do have a question to ask. Does the government or the Department of Justice intend to postpone for a few days at least the execution of that sentence against Georges Marcotte on account of the new facts which have been revealed today? As the Solicitor General has just stated, the decision not to commute the sentence was taken before these facts came to the attention of the proper authorities, and I think, Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Martineau: I have one more remark to make—

Mr. Speaker: That is just the point. The hon. member is making remarks, not asking questions. Again I would draw attention to the statement in Beauchesne that parliament does not appear to have any part to play in the matter of clemency. In view of the urgency of this matter, if the minister wishes to make a statement that is fine, but I do not think he is called upon to make any statement.

Mr. Martineau: The Solicitor General has raised a point of order, and I think I have the right to speak to that point of order.

Mr. Speaker: May I suggest to the hon. member that he listen to the remarks which the responsible minister is about to make.

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, for the information of the house I might say that all the information contained in the affidavit referred to by the hon. member who first raised this question was carefully considered by cabinet, and the decision was made not to interfere.

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

Could the Solicitor General tell us whether officials in charge of the investigation have been informed this morning of the evidence given by that person to the effect that police officials had not summoned her and that that witness had kept silent because she was afraid of being ill-used by the provincial police, and that is why she said nothing until yesterday—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The purpose of having authorities and rules is to prevent unlimited discussion, and we seem to be developing that type of discussion at the present time. The minister must assume his own responsibility. He has given a statement to the house, and I think the matter should be left there.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, may I ask another supplementary question?

I should like to ask the Solicitor General whether his department would consider taking the appropriate steps ordering a complete inquiry on the new developments and postponing Georges Marcotte's execution until this inquiry is completed?

Canadian Flag

[Text]

Mr. Reid Scott (Danforth): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the Prime Minister a supplementary question on this same line. Would he give consideration, so that we will not have to be constantly worrying about saving people's lives, to letting the house call a vote on order No. 44, in my name, to abolish capital punishment?

[Later:]

[Translation]

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Could he tell us whether it is true that, as far as he is concerned, the fact of not hanging Georges Marcotte would have the effect of establishing the principle of abolition of capital punishment in Canada?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: This question, I am sorry to say, is out of order.

CANADIAN FLAG

PETITION NOT IN ORDER AND NOT RECEIVED

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that the Clerk has laid upon the table the tenth report of the clerk of petitions.

With regard to the report of the clerk of petitions I must declare that the petition cannot be received for the following reasons: (1) It is not addressed to the House of Commons in parliament assembled; (2) it is not in the form required by standing order 70; (3) it does not conclude with a prayer; in this connection see Beauchesne's fourth edition, page 256, citation 332; (4) it is not endorsed by a member of the house—see Bourinot's fourth edition, page 233; and (5) it is not dated.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege I wish to congratulate the Clerk on unrolling a 75 foot petition and finding it is not in order. I shall bring it in in an amended form to see it is correct.

FOOD AND DRUGS

CONCURRENCE IN THIRD REPORT OF SPECIAL COMMITTEE

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton) moved that the third report of the special committee on food and drugs, presented to the house on Monday, June 29, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

TOBACCO RESTRAINT ACT

REPEAL OF LEGISLATION RESPECTING USE BY JUVENILES

Mr. Ralph Cowan (York-Humber) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-107, to repeal the Tobacco Restraint Act.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to repeal an act which has been on the statute books since 1908 and which makes it an offence for a person to be about to commit an act. I do not believe we should exercise thought control in that manner.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

FORESTRY AND RURAL DEVELOPMENT

PROVISION FOR CONSTITUTION OF NEW DEPARTMENT

Right Hon. L. B. Pearson (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution, which has been recommended to the house by His Excellency:
