Question No. 1,167—Mr. Latulippe:

1. How much did the 1962 riot at St. Vincent de Paul cost the government and for what purposes was money spent?

2. How many inmates were transferred as a result of the riot?

3. What new security measures were taken as a result of the riot?

4. What new working conditions, recreational and vocational training facilities have been established?

5. How many guards have been dismissed or transferred to other positions as a result of the riot?

6. Did the municipality where the prison is located ask the government for special measures as a result of the riot?

Mr. Macdonald: 1. The 1962 riot at St. Vincent de Paul cost the government the sum of $2,357,043 spent for the following purposes:

(a) Direct costs
Demolition and construction	$989,185
Replacement of:
Equipment	117,954
Materials	70,501
Industrial revolving fund materials	51,140
Canteen revolving fund materials	5,077
Replacing officers' personal losses	280
Legal fees	13,659
Special office services	351
Payments to neighbouring municipalities for use of firefighting equipment	54,949
Ambulance services	824
Medical services, injured inmates	16,784	$1,320,704

Questions

(b) Indirect costs (consisting of new facilities and services designed to improve the institution's standard to an acceptable level and whose need was accentuated by the riot and fire)

New facilities	606,715
New services	429,624	1,036,339
*Grand total		$2,357,043

*Includes $643,000 submitted for construction in 1964-65.

2. One hundred and ninety one inmates were transferred as a result of the riot.

3. The new security measures taken as a result of the riot are as follows: (a) The construction of chain link fences to enclose outdoor exercise areas; (b) The construction of a cement block wall to enclose the segregation area; (c) The construction of chain link divisions on all elevated cell walkways; (d) The construction and manning of an additional watch tower; (e) The relocation of one watch tower; (f) The construction and manning of two additional watch cages in cell blocks No. 1 and 2; (g) The relocation and enlargement of the watch cage in the central dome; (h) The employment of 25 additional custodial officers; (i) The implementation of a refresher training program for all personnel with emphasis on discipline and security; (j) The reorganization and intensification of the custodial staff recruits training program; (k) The institutional staff has been reorganized in five sections, each of these sections placed under the supervision of senior keepers in charge of a sector of the penitentiary.

4. (a) Seven industrial shops have been reconstructed; (b) Sports and games have been reorganized in two different exercise areas; (c) The school has been rebuilt and a preemployment training shop has been added.

5. As a result of the report of the board of enquiry, there was not sufficient evidence justifying the dismissal of personnel. However, approximately ten custodial officers involved have resigned from the service after they had been made aware that their services were not satisfactory or that they did not possess the personal characteristics required for the efficient performance of their duties.

6. No request for special measures as a result of the riot was received from the municipality of St. Vincent de Paul, province of Quebec, where the penitentiary is located.

[Mr. Macdonald.]

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION IN UNIVERSITIES

Question No. 1,176—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Has the Minister of Justice received any representations to the effect that some Canadian universities directly or indirectly encourage racial discrimination?

2. Is the Department of Justice studying the possibility of requiring universities receiving federal assistance or loans to ensure that no student will be discriminated against in obtaining accommodation near universities?

Mr. Macdonald: 1. No.

2. This is not a matter coming under the Department of Justice.

JUSTICE DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES, COMPTON-FRONTENAC CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,189—Mr. Latulippe:

What are the names of all those working for the Department of Justice in Compton-Frontenac and, (a) how long has each worked for the department (b) what fees have been paid to each since June 18, 1962?

Mr. Macdonald:

	(a)	(b)
J. A. Drouin, Q.C.	May 6, 1963	$66
Lacourciere & Lacourciere	July 15, 1963	$95
Thomas W. Leonard	Oct. 9, 1963	$107
Paul Veilleux	March 1964	work not completed

R.C.M.P. TENDERS FOR VESSEL, JOLIETTE-L'ASSOMPTION-MONTCALM CONSTITUENCY

Question No. 1,248—Mr. Pigeon:

1. Did the Royal Canadian Mounted Police call for tenders in the constituency of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm for the purchase of a vessel and, if so, what are the names of the persons or firms who were invited to submit tenders?

2. What prices were submitted by the tenderers?

3. Does the government intend to accept the lowest tender?

Questions

Mr. Favreau: 1. Yes, from the following firms: A. Blais & Fils Enrg., Joliette, Quebec; Normand Roy, Joliette, Quebec; Roger Goulet, Joliette, Quebec.

In addition, tenders were called for from the following firm: Traveller Mfg. Co., Peterborough, Ontario.

2. A. Blais & Fils Enrg., $750; Normand Roy, $866; Roger Goulet, $934.58; Traveller Mfg. Co., $727.

3. The lowest tender has been accepted.

POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,261—Mr. Douglas:

1. What was the number of post office administrative personnel of all classes on January 1, 1959?

2. (a) What was the total staff in methods and standards personnel on January 1, 1959 (b) how is this staff broken down by classification and grade?

3. What was the number of operating staff in the post office on January 1, 1959 (a) full time (b) part time (c) casual?

4. What is the number of administrative staff today?

5. What is the number of non-operational staff today (a) full time (b) part time (c) casual?

6. What is the number of operating staff today (a) full time (b) part time (c) casual?

7. How many part time and casual employees are there today receiving the hourly rate of (a) $1.75 (b) $1.72 (c) $1.57 (d) $1.43 (e) $1.58 (f) $1.55 (g) $1.40 (h) $1.13?

8. What was the mail volume for the year 1958-59 (a) first class (b) second class (c) third class (d) fourth class?

Mr. Nicholson: The following answers include only the postal employees paid out of parliamentary appropriation, that is, headquarters, 14 district offices and 350 staff post offices. The answers exclude employees in semi-staff and revenue post offices, who are paid out of postal revenue.

The word "administrative" is interpreted as applicable to headquarters and the district offices, but excluding the railway mail clerks. Although there are classes in the larger post offices which might be regarded as administrative, it is difficult to draw a clear line and therefore all employees in staff post offices are treated in these answers as operational.

	January 1, 1959	March 31, 1964
Headquarters	1,041	932
District offices	739	856
Total	1,780	1,788

2. (a) 25; (b) 1, postal superintendent; 2, technical officers 5; 8, technical officers 4; 14, technical officers 3.

3 and 6. "Operating staff" is interpreted to refer to all employees in staff post offices plus the railway mail clerks.

	January 1, 1959	March 31, 1964
(a) Full time	20,630	23,392
(b) Part time	2,440	2,825
(c) Casual, see note following part 7.

5. In the post office department "non-operational" is considered synonymous with "administrative" and is covered in the answer to parts 1 and 4. The number of part timers and casuals in this group is negligible.

7. Regular part timers as at March 31, 1964:

Classification	Number	Wage Rates
Letter carrier	175	$1.75 per hour
Postal chauffeur	8	1.75 per hour
Postal helper	547	1.43 per hour
Postal clerk 2	1,729	1.57 and $1.72 per hour
Postal clerk 1	72	1.43 and 1.58 per hour
Mail handler	292	1.40 and 1.55 per hour
Typist 1	1	annual rate
Telephone operator	1	annual rate

Where two rates are shown, those who work during day hours receive the lower rate whereas night work calls for the higher rate.

Casuals: We have no breakdown by wages of the number of casual employees in the operating service since they are paid locally. The control by headquarters is primarily through the dollar cost of casuals rather than the number. The number fluctuates daily. In the 17 largest post offices there was a total of 508 casuals in 1959 and 988 on March 31, 1964. In addition there was a small number of casuals in the smaller post offices but no record of these is maintained at headquarters.

Questions

8. Volume of mail by classes (pieces): (a) First class, 1,983,942,753; (b) Second class, 546,748,782; (c) Third class, 1,182,512,698; (d) Fourth class, 89,158,912.

The above figures for staff show the actual number of employees in contrast to the hon. member's question on related subjects last November which dealt with the number of positions. Usually the number of positions is somewhat greater than the number of employees due to delays in replacements; the difference varies from time to time.

ASSISTANCE TO EASTERN FARMERS

Question No. 1,262—Mr. Matte:

What assistance is given directly or indirectly by the Department of Agriculture to the farmers of eastern Canada?

Mr. Hays: Department of Agriculture assistance to farmers in eastern Canada—1964-65: In addition to the functions of the Department of Agriculture in the fields of agricultural research, production, marketing, and animal and plant disease control, the following are items of assistance to farmers of eastern Canada involving direct and indirect support, assistance and subsidy programs.

Price support programs: creamery butter, cheddar cheese, skim milk powder, eggs, hogs, steers, sheep, lambs and wool, wheat, oats, barley, soya beans, sugar beets, flue cured tobacco.

Subsidy programs: butterfat, milk and cream, Canada first grade cheddar cheese, casein.

Assistance programs: quality premiums on hog and lamb carcasses, premiums on high quality cheese, assistance in construction and reconstruction of cheese factories, compensation for animals slaughtered under provisions of Animal Contagious Diseases Act, grants to agricultural fairs, exhibitions and museums, grants to agricultural organizations.

Federal-provincial shared cost programs: premiums on purebred sires, contributions for livestock improvement, agricultural lime assistance, assistance in construction of potato warehouses, contributions for barberry eradication, crop insurance, contributions for payment of rabies indemnity, purchase of vaccine for control of brucellosis, freight assistance on livestock shipments to and from royal agricultural winter fair, grants to 4-H clubs.

ASSISTANCE TO WESTERN FARMERS

Question No. 1,263—Mr. Matte:

What assistance is given directly or indirectly by the Department of Agriculture to the farmers of western Canada?

Mr. Hays: Department of Agriculture assistance to farmers in western Canada—1964-65: In addition to the functions of the Department of Agriculture in the fields of agricultural research, production, marketing, animal and plant disease control, and rehabilitation, the following are items of assistance to farmers of western Canada involving direct and indirect support, assistance, and subsidy programs.

Price support programs: creamery butter, cheddar cheese, skim milk powder, eggs, hogs, steers, sheep, lambs and wool, sugar beets.

Subsidy programs: butterfat, milk and cream, Canada first grade cheddar cheese, casein.

Assistance programs: prairie farm assistance, see note 1. Quality premiums on hog and lamb carcasses, premiums on high quality cheese, assistance in construction and reconstruction of cheese factories, compensation for animals slaughtered under provisions of Animal Contagious Diseases Act, grants to agricultural fairs, exhibitions and museums, grants to agricultural organizations.

Federal-provincial shared cost programs: premiums on purebred sires, contributions for livestock improvement, agricultural lime assistance (British Columbia only), assistance in construction of potato warehouses, crop insurance, purchase of vaccine for control of brucellosis, freight assistance on livestock shipments to and from royal agricultural winter fair, grants to 4-H clubs.

Note 1: Western grain producers contribute to the prairie farm emergency fund through a levy of 1 per cent on value of all grain marketed through licensed elevators.

COST OF TRANSPORT DEPARTMENT AIRCRAFT

Question No. 1,339—Mr. Mather:

What was the cost in dollars of the Jet Star transport aircraft purchased for use by Department of Transport officials?

Mr. Pickersgill: The Jet Star aircraft was not purchased for use by Department of Transport officials, but to provide the department with complete operational data and experience in civil jet aircraft, since these must be regulated by the department. Delivery of the aircraft was obtained in January 1962 and it is used for the evaluation and investigation of electronic aids to air navigation and associated landing systems. It is also used as available for the transportation of distinguished visitors to Canada and official flights of the Prime Minister and members of the government.

The cost of the aircraft was $1,136,000.

RENTAL CONTRACTS FOR BUILDINGS NOT COMPLETED

Question No. 1,347—Mr. Grafftey:

1. Since April 8, 1963, how many contracts for the rental of buildings have been let by the Department of Public Works when the buildings were not yet completed?
2. To whom was each contract awarded?
3. When was each contract awarded and at what price, per square foot?

Mr. Deschatelets: For the purpose of this question, it is considered that a contract exists when an officer of the Department of Public Works, being properly authorized to do so, advises the owner of the premises, in writing, that the department has accepted his proposal to rent a substantial portion of, or his complete building, to the government.

1. Thirteen.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION EXPROPRIATIONS, OTTAWA

Question No. 1,376—Mr. Thompson:

1. When were the properties on lots 13, 14, 15 and 16, concession 2, Ottawa front, expropriated by the N.C.C.?
2. Has settlement been made to the owners of these properties and, if not, what offers have been made to the owners of these properties?
3. How are fair values determined in making settlement with owners of property expropriated by the N.C.C.?

Questions

4. What is the policy of the N.C.C. in servicing and maintaining expropriated properties which the original owners have vacated?

5. Is service maintenance contracted out to private firms or individuals?

6. How many N.C.C. employees in each of the trades are engaged in service maintenance of expropriated N.C.C. properties?

Answer: 1 and 2. Please see table below.

3. In determining fair values of expropriated properties, the national capital commission secures data with respect to value from technical experts such as real estate appraisers, building contractors, soil experts, engineers with respect to machinery and equipment, and chartered accountants for business disturbance, cost of moving and other such claims.

Upon receipt of the foregoing information, the negotiators of the commission meet with the former owner or his agent to discuss elements of value peculiar to his property. This includes such things as loss of value of drapes, venetian blinds, broadloom rugs, disconnecting of stoves, dryers, etc., the cost of moving or other costs occasioned by the expropriation.

When agreement is reached as to the amount of the compensation, an option setting forth the terms is prepared by the commission and signed by the former owner. This option is then considered by the land committee of the commission, which after viewing the property, makes recommendations to the commission. The commission then may approve the option. If the amount exceeds $25,000, treasury board approval is also required.

4. Policy of servicing and maintaining properties which the original owners have vacated.

These fall into four classifications: (a) Economic properties; (b) Uneconomic properties; (c) Buildings unfit for human habitation because of fire and health hazards; (d) Properties which must be cleared of buildings in order to carry out projects of the commission.

Generally, the buildings on economic properties are serviced and maintained to the same standard as if they had continued in private ownership. However, the standard of maintenance on buildings which do have to be demolished because of the requirements of major national capital commission projects does vary, since this depends on the date when the demolition is likely to occur.

Uneconomic or substandard properties are offered for sale for demolition or occasionally for removal, by public tender.

5. Not entirely; a small amount is done by national capital commission staff.

6. One truck driver and one tractor operator plus part time use of park maintenance crews on weed control.

SILVER DOLLARS

Question No. 1,382—Mr. Peters:

1. What action is contemplated by the government to ensure an adequate supply of silver dollars in the current year?

2. How many silver dollars have been minted to date in 1964?

3. How many silver dollars is it anticipated will be minted for the year 1964?

4. How many silver dollars are in mint sets, how many as singles for currency?

5. How many ounces of silver have been consumed in the production of silver dollars to date during 1964?

Mr. Pennell: 1. From now until the end of the year, the Royal Canadian Mint expects to produce approximately three million silver dollars which will be issued to the Bank of Canada for circulation. This figure will be increased if the present demand for the smaller coin denominations moderates.

2. 4,137,937 silver dollars have been struck to June 26. Of these, 3,267,807 were issued to the Bank of Canada for circulation and 870,130 were sold to numismatists and general public.

3. 9,000,000.

4. During 1964 it is expected that 2,838,387 silver dollars will have been used in mint sets and separately for numismatic purposes; 6,161,613 will have been issued to the Bank of Canada for circulation.

5. 2,482,762 ounces fine silver to June 26, 1964.

ADJUSTMENT STATEMENTS FILED BY CHINESE, TORONTO

Question No. 1,383—Mr. Wahn:

1. How many persons of Chinese origin have filed adjustment statements, (i.e. statements to adjust their irregular or illegal status) at the Toronto immigration office during the 1960 calendar year and each subsequent calendar year to date?

2. If any of the adjustment statements above mentioned have been proved false, how many such false statements were there for each of the calendar years above mentioned?

Mr. Badanai: 1. The numbers of persons of Chinese origin who filed adjustment statements at the Toronto immigration office in the calendar years 1960 and 1961 was 62. Separate figures for 1960 and 1961 are not available. The figures for the number of such persons who filed these statements at the Toronto immigration office since 1961 are: 1962, 233; 1963, 434; 1964, 312 (first five months).

2. These statements are being accepted as veracious. None have so far been proven false.

*THREE RIVERS, QUE. AIRPORT

Question No. 1,388—Mr. Marcoux:

1. In what year was the Three Rivers airport built?

2. What did it cost to build the runway?

3. What did it cost to construct the terminal building?

4. In what year was the T.C.A. service established at Three Rivers?

5. What does it cost to maintain T.C.A. personnel at the Three Rivers airport?

6. What is the cost involved each time a T.C.A. plane stops at Three Rivers?

7. What is the daily average number of passengers making use of T.C.A. flights to or from Three Rivers?

[Translation]

Mr. Cantin: 1. Started in 1960, serviceable 1961.

2. Construction costs and materials and engineering, approximately $700,000.

3. The building was constructed by the city of Three Rivers.

Regarding parts 4, 5, 6 and 7, the management of Trans-Canada Air Lines advises as follows:

4. 1963.

5. $26,000 per annum.

6. Additional flying costs and landing fees incurred each time a Viscount aircraft stops at Three Rivers approximate $50.

7. (a) Average number of passengers boarded for Three Rivers, 3.2 per flight. (b) Average number of passengers boarded from Three Rivers, 2.4 per flight.

MINISTERS' OFFICE ASSISTANTS OUTSIDE OTTAWA

Question No. 1,394—Mr. Marcoux:

How many persons employed in the offices of ministers were stationed outside Ottawa; what are their names; where was each one stationed; and what salary did each receive (a) from 1956 to 1957 (b) from 1957 to 1963 (c) from 1963 to 1964?

Mr. McIlraith: No detailed records were maintained which make it possible to report with certainty the numbers of persons employed in offices of ministers and stationed outside Ottawa prior to 1963. Subject to this comment and so far as available records indicate the following is the information requested.

(a) During the years 1956 to 1957 or part of them, five persons employed in offices of ministers were stationed outside Ottawa. They were: L. P. Corkum at Lunenburg as clerk 4 to Minister of Public Works at $3,720; Mrs. A. Desmarais at Montreal as assistant private secretary to Postmaster General at $3,660;

Questions

Miss Mary Agnes O'Toole at Montreal as secretary to executive to Minister of Transport at $3,510; Miss L. Paul-Hus at Montreal as stenographer 3 to Secretary of State at $3,360; Mrs. I. M. Vrooman as stenographer 3 to Minister of National Health and Welfare at Windsor at $3,360. There is also a possibility that H. A. Munro, executive assistant to the Minister of Fisheries, may have worked for part of a two month period in 1957 at Vancouver, though it is doubtful whether he was "stationed" at Vancouver.

(b) During the years 1957 to 1963 or part of them, 11 persons employed in the offices of ministers were stationed outside Ottawa. They were: Mrs. L. Arnold at Hamilton as assistant private secretary to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration at $3,870; Norman A. Bolduc at St. Giles, P.Q. as clerk 4 to Minister of Defence Production at $4,020. It is believed that Mr. Bolduc normally was stationed three days each week in St. Giles and two days each week in Ottawa; Miss M. E. A. Chabot at Montreal as stenographer 3 (secretary) to Associate Minister of National Defence at $3,870; R. C. Gurr at Brandon, as principal clerk to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources at $4,620; Miss J. Lacroix at Montreal as clerk 3 to Postmaster General at $4,350; Mrs. F. Mann at Fredericton as stenographer 3 to Minister of Forestry at $3,660; Gerald Masse at Mont Laurier as assistant private secretary to Secretary of State at $4,000; L. H. Nickerson at Fredericton as associate private secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs at $4,680 and later as head clerk to Minister of Forestry at $5,940; H. L. Ritcey at Middleton, N.S., as assistant private secretary to Minister of National Revenue at $3,660; Nick Roth at Regina as assistant private secretary to Minister of Agriculture at $4,020; Solange Vezina at Montreal as assistant private secretary to Secretary of State at $3,150.

(c) At various times during the years 1963 to 1964 or part of them, 17 persons employed in the offices of ministers were stationed outside Ottawa. Of this group, 15 persons are at present employed full time and one person part time. The names of the 17 persons are: W. F. Armstrong at Vancouver as head clerk to Postmaster General at $6,030; Miss J. Austin at Vancouver as typist 2 to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources at $3,180; J. L. Bergeron at Montreal as clerk 4 to Minister of Justice at $4,260; Mrs. A. Canzanese at Toronto as stenographer 2 to Minister of National Defence at $3,150; J. A. E. Cournoyer-Morin at Montreal as assistant private secretary to Minister of Public Works at $4,710; P. Dequoy at Montreal as clerk 3 to Minister of Public Works at $4,200. Mr. Dequoy's resignation was effective June 2, 1964; J. L. Ferron at Sorel as stenographer 2 to Associate Minister of National Defence at $3,600; Mrs. Anna Frost at Niagara Falls as principal clerk to Minister of National Health and Welfare at $5,220; Ghislain Gravel at Quebec city as special assistant to Minister of Citizenship and Immigration at $10,000; Mrs. Alison Hinchey at Bathurst as stenographer 2 to Minister of Fisheries at $3,150; Mrs. Blanche Larose at Montreal as assistant private secretary to Secretary of State at $4,950; Miss E. Long at Vancouver as stenographer 2 to Postmaster General at $3,450; E. C. McCrory at Montreal as clerk 1 to Minister of Industry and Defence Production at $2,730; Mrs. Rose Pelletier at St. Boniface as part time secretary to Minister of Veterans Affairs at $2,000; Miss L. St. Jacques at Montreal as clerk 2 to Minister of Public Works at $3,120; Mrs. M. V. T. Therrien at Sorel as stenographer 2 to Associate Minister of National Defence at $3,150; Miss S. D. White at Vancouver as clerk 3 to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources at $4,200.

FISHING RIGHTS OF MEMBERS OF EUROPEAN COMMON MARKET

Question No. 1,397—Mr. Lambert:

1. What is the nature of the declaration made by the Minister of Fisheries with respect to the increased activities of European fishermen, as a result of the modernization of harbour and other facilities for fishermen on the islands of St. Pierre and Miquelon?

2. Have negotiations been entered into between Canada and the six nations of the common market with respect to fishing rights and/or the activities of fishermen of those nations?

3. Has the government of Canada received protests from any of the governments of the common market nations either on an informal or formal basis?

Answer: 1. The Minister of Fisheries stated in the standing committee on marine and fisheries that we have no specific information about the intentions of the French government with regard to the modernization of harbour and other facilities at St. Pierre and Miquelon islands, but that should there be any interference in Canadian waters, this would be a matter of negotiation between Canada and France.

2. The only two countries of the European common market with whom we are negotiating are France and Italy.

3. Seeing that we are negotiating with these two countries, the question of protest does not arise. We have had no communication with the other countries of the European common market.

CANADIAN COINAGE AND CURRENCY

Question No. 1,399—Mr. Mather:

What is the total amount of money, coinage and currency, in Canada?

Mr. Pennell: The following figures taken from the June 1964 edition of the Bank of Canada statistical summary were applicable as at May 27, 1964:

	(Millions of dollars)
Currency outside banks notes	1,788
coin	203
Chartered bank deposits	14,992.

ENLARGEMENT OF ROYAL CANADIAN MINT

Question No. 1,420—Mr. Rynard:

Is any consideration being given by the government to enlarging the premises of the Royal Canadian Mint to take care of greater demands for Canadian coins and also of requests for the manufacture of coins from other countries?

Mr. Pennell: Yes.

DREDGING PROGRAM, FLOWERPOT ISLAND, ONT.

Question No. 1,424—Mr. Loney:

Is it the intention of the Department of Public Works to proceed with a modified dredging program at the entrance to Flowerpot island, Ontario?

Mr. Deschatelets: A sounding survey of the harbour at Flowerpot island has recently been completed by the department at the request of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources. A dredging program is now under consideration.

OWNERSHIP OF TELEPHONE SYSTEM, WELLAND CANAL

Question No. 1,431—Mr. Danforth:

1. Who owns and operates the telephone system for interoffice and interstructure communication on the Welland ship canal?

2. Up to the present time, has the service work for same been done by employees of the St. Lawrence seaway authority?

3. Is a change in this regard now contemplated and, if so, for what reason?

Mr. Pickersgill: The St. Lawrence seaway authority advises as follows:

1. The St. Lawrence seaway authority.

2. Yes.

3. Yes; a contract is being negotiated with the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, for reasons of (1) efficiency and (2) economy.

IMMIGRATION AND EMIGRATION, 1958-1963

Question No. 1,438—Mr. Balcer:

How many immigrants came to Canada in 1958, 1959, 1960, 1961, 1962 and 1963 and how many of them emigrated to the United States or elsewhere after learning a trade in this country?

Mr. Badanai: The numbers of persons admitted to Canada as immigrants annually from 1958 to 1963, inclusive, are: 1958: 124,851; 1959: 106,928; 1960: 104,111; 1961: 71,689; 1962: 74,586; 1963: 93,151.

The number of these who emigrated to the United States or elsewhere after having learned a trade in this country is unknown.

TAX ON PRODUCTION MACHINERY AND BUILDING MATERIALS

Question No. 1,439—Mr. Stenson:

1. Since June 12, 1963, how much has the Department of National Revenue received from the (a) tax on production machinery (b) tax on building materials?

2. Is this tax collected monthly, quarterly or yearly?

3. How much of an increase in the department's staff was there when this tax was levied?

Mr. Benson: 1. Information not available. Sales tax returns are not filed nor recorded according to commodities.

2. Every person required to pay sales taxes is required to make each month a true return of his taxable sales for the last preceding month. In the case of taxable importations, the tax is payable at the time of entry.

3. There has been no increase in the establishment of customs and excise division as a result of the above taxes.

TAX EXEMPTION FOR MORTGAGE INTEREST AND MUNICIPAL TAXES

Question No. 1,458—Mrs. Jones:

Is there at present any contemplation on the part of the government to aid and encourage Canadian homeowners by exempting mortgage interest and municipal taxes from taxable income?

Mr. Pennell: Representations on this matter, as well as on a wide range of other tax subjects, will be studied during the preparation of the next budget.

REMOVAL OF TAX ON DRUGS

Question No. 1,459—Mrs. Jones:

Will the government consider the removal of the tax on drugs, which constitutes an additional burden for those who are ill?

Mr. Pennell: Representations on this matter, as well as on a wide range of other tax subjects, will be studied during the preparation of the next budget.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CYPRUS—REPORTED LOADING OF GREEK AND TURKISH TROOPS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and ask him whether he has noted that the figures now accepted in the United Kingdom in the Manchester Guardian, and in the United States in the weekend issue of the New York Times, are that some 4,000 Greek troops clandestinely landed in Cyprus. Is he now in a position to place before the house and the country the record in this regard, as shown to be confirmed in the United Kingdom and in the United States, under the circumstances and in the periodicals referred to? Will he also tell the house what transpired during the call on him by the Turkish ambassador on Friday afternoon, and was there on the part of the Turkish ambassador anything in the nature of a diplomatic protest?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the first part of the question there are, as I said last week, different assessments of the infiltrations, and these are now being examined by the United Nations. Until such time as the final assessment has been made I think it is not desirable that I should go beyond what I have already indicated in the house.

The Turkish ambassador came to see me on Friday. There was no protest. I do not believe it is desirable to reveal the nature of discussions between a foreign minister and an ambassador, but I can say that while this matter was generally discussed, no protest was made by him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, and I am keeping within limits that are fair and proper. Was there any suggestion by the Turkish ambassador that there was in fact no foundation for the view expressed by the minister in the house that Turkish troops have infiltrated?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I think it is fair to say that as far as the ambassador was aware the implication of the general observation I made on Friday was not known to him.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One other supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the situation in Cyprus, will the minister now inform the house whether an appointment will be made so that members of the house may discuss it, not in committee but actually as a matter of transcendent importance to Canadians as a whole?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I fully agree with the right hon. gentleman that this is a matter of transcendent importance. I assure him that the suggestion is one that is very much in my mind, and just as quickly as I believe it desirable I shall certainly advise my right hon. friend.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the landing of both Greek and Turkish troops on Cyprus is a violation of the security council resolution, has the United Nations made any representations to the governments of those two countries and has it secured from either or both an assurance that, first, there will be no further landing of troops and, second, that the troops who have landed will be withdrawn?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there already has been an appeal, made last Thursday, by the secretary general of both the allegedly involved countries, and the secretary general has made it known that he will report the results in that regard to the security council. I should say that we were advised this morning that the Turkish foreign office has denied the suggestion that was made. However, I believe I should wait until such time as the secretary general has spoken.

Mr. Douglas: A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it correct that the R.C.A.F. has been put on alert for a possible evacuation of the Canadian troops from Cyprus? Is this being done in conjunction with the United Nations, or is it merely an emergency provision against any unfortunate circumstance which may develop?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I will ask my colleague to reply.

Hon. Paul Hellyer (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as I have already indicated to the house, the department is fully aware of its responsibilities to the Canadian contingent and we have kept their interests in mind.

Mr. Douglas: The question I asked was directed to the Acting Prime Minister, and it was whether placing the R.C.A.F. on alert had been done in conjunction with the United Nations and if the latter was aware of this action. Is it being done because the situation has deteriorated or merely as stand-by insurance?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the words of the Minister of National Defence were, I think, words that deserved to be examined.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): They were made with a full sense of responsibility. But I might say that Canada is a member of the United Nations force, our troops are under the commander of the United Nations force and under the direction of the secretary general pursuant to a resolution of the security council. The participation of Canada was authorized by this house. Canada does not intend to take any action that is in any way going to lower the potential power of the United Nations. This does not mean to say that all sorts of contingencies are not borne in mind. We must recognize the fact that we are a member of the United Nations force called upon to do our best, pursuant to the charter, to see what contribution we can make toward peace on that troubled island.

Mr. Douglas: May I assist the minister in giving a more succinct answer by asking him if we can have the assurance there will be no withdrawal of Canadian forces without the agreement of the United Nations.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I think my hon. friend, who has been a student of international affairs for a long time, knows he could not, under the circumstances, expect a more succinct answer than the one I gave.

Mr. Diefenbaker: One might almost say that one could not, under any circumstances, expect a more succinct answer than has been received, but that would be unfair to the minister on occasion. I ask the minister this. Was there any foundation for the report in the afternoon press of Friday that an exceptionally well informed and always reputable source in the department of defence had stated that preparations had been completed so that if evacuation were required the R.C.A.F. would carry it out?

Mr. Hellyer: I have not seen the actual report, Mr. Speaker, but I understand that it was not factual in all respects. I think it is well known, however, that the R.C.A.F. does have a very considerable capability. It was used at the time the force was set up, and this force is always available for whatever purposes it may be directed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What does the hon. gentleman mean by that? Is it a fact or is it not, as stated by this source already described so fulsomely in the press, that arrangements have been made to guarantee that if there is an emergency the R.C.A.F. can and will act?

Mr. Hellyer: I think the facts as specifically set out in the article were not correct.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What particular facts were not correct? I should like to know what portions were not correct.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Upon what facts at this time, after many weeks in Cyprus, does the government now give the situation a different assessment, which now necessitates a stand-by alert for this transportation fleet? Why is it now being put on a stand-by alert?

Mr. Hellyer: I do not think I can add anything to what has been said already by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who set out the situation very fully and very succinctly for my hon. friend.

[Later:]

Mr. D. V. Pugh (Okanagan Boundary): Mr. Speaker, I have a question to put to the Minister of National Defence concerning intelligence reports from Cyprus. Are intelligence reports made directly to anyone in Canada or to the minister, other than those which come through the United Nations itself? Do we get them direct, or do we have to get them through the United Nations?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend will not mind if I answer this question by suggesting to him that, as this is a question involving security, he should not press it any further.

NATO—RUSSIAN PROPOSALS RESPECTING MULTILATERAL FORCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): I wish to address a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that Soviet authorities have contacted the representatives of most of the NATO countries in Moscow regarding NATO nuclear armament, can he tell the house whether there has been any contact with Canada on this subject either through our representative in Moscow or directly with himself?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): With regard to the nuclear force?

Mr. Thompson: The multilateral nuclear force.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Would the hon. member state the question again?

Mr. Thompson: During the last few days the Soviet authorities have been in contact with the Moscow representatives of most of the NATO countries regarding the multilateral nuclear force proposed by NATO. Can the hon. gentleman inform the house whether there has been any contact on this matter either through our representative in Moscow or directly?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): It may be that since the Soviet ambassador is out of the city this communication has not yet come to Canada. I have seen the statement of Chairman Khrushchev with regard to the implications, as he sees them, of the multilateral force. I would point out to the hon. gentleman that while a proposal for a multilateral force has been made by the United States, it does not represent at this stage a NATO problem as such.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): A supplementary question. Are negotiations still going on for Canada to contract out of nuclear weapons?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This question has been answered several times in the past.

Mr. Woolliams: Not very clearly, though.

VISIT TO POLAND BY PARLIAMENTARY SECRETARY TO MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Is he able to advise the house whether the visit of his parliamentary secretary, the hon. member for Parkdale, to Poland is official or otherwise? If it is official, what is the purpose of his visit?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my parliamentary secretary has gone to a conference in Geneva, and at the same time he will take advantage of his presence in Europe to visit Poland, as a Canadian citizen of Polish background. I am sure this will be welcomed by Canadian citizens generally, and particularly by those of Polish extraction who are part of the Canadian family. I hope that as the result of his visit —in fact I believe that as the result of his visit—there will be some exchanges that will be of value to this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REFUSAL TO ADMIT TO GALLERIES GIRLS WEARING SHORTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): I wish to direct a question to whom it may concern. I ask this question at the request of a number of young ladies who came to Ottawa to see their parliament in action but were denied admittance to the galleries because they were wearing shorts.

In view of the fact that many years ago it was considered improper for a lady to come into the gallery without a hat and the protective staff provided those ladies with temporary hats, and in view of the fact that in some places in the United States they provide ladies in shorts with wraparound or portable skirts, could some consideration be given to providing such wraparound or portable skirts that could be issued by the protective staff for a small fee?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Since the question has been directed to whom it may concern, might I suggest to the hon. gentleman that at six o'clock he and I should address ourselves to the officers of the house on this matter, after he and I discuss the merits of the question.

AGRICULTURE

WESTERN CANADA—REQUEST FOR PROVISION OF ACREAGE PAYMENTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. F. J. Bigg (Athabasca): In the absence of the Minister of Agriculture I will address my question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce. As there is a serious situation in many grain growing areas in western Canada amounting, in many cases, to complete crop failure, will the government give consideration to making acreage payments as was done by the former administration.

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The government's intention with respect to the drought stricken areas of Saskatchewan has been partly announced by the Minister of Agriculture, and any further measures will be announced when decisions are taken.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—SUGGESTED CONFERENCE RESPECTING PRIORITY

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): I wish to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government received a letter from Premier Roblin of Manitoba suggesting or recommending that a dominion-provincial conference be held prior to the introduction of the Canada pension plan in order that the priorities of the provinces may be assessed with respect to economic development, education and other matters? If so, has the letter been considered, and what is the attitude of the government with regard to this request?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I tabled letters from five provincial premiers a few moments ago, and I distributed copies of those letters to the leaders of the parties so they might have them for examination. Included among them is a letter from Premier Roblin with regard to the question of priorities. Of course the program of the Prime Minister, which we are now carrying out and which was drafted before he left for the prime ministers' conference, was prefaced by his own statement in the house concerning priorities. One of these was education, in connection with which he has acted, another was in connection with health and medical care—problems which had to be proceeded with on the basis of consultation with the provinces.

With regard to the Canada pension plan, if there is indeed a suggestion by Premier Roblin that this plan should be postponed, then I should say as the Prime Minister has already indicated, that it is not the intention of the government to postpone this particular measure.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is it not a fact that when the government of Manitoba agreed to the amendment of the British North America Act with respect to the Canada pension plan it did, by implication, agree to the Canada pension plan; and is the federal government therefore not justified in going ahead with its commitment to proceed with this legislation this session?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The Prime Minister has already dealt with that point and I sought to deal with it in the reply I gave to the hon. member for Edmonton West a few moments ago.

AIRPORTS

TORONTO—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF LIMOUSINE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Would the minister consider asking Air Terminal Transport Limited either to end its monopoly at Toronto international airport or to extend it so as to provide limousine service to the 300,000 people living in the east and north of Toronto who are currently receiving no consideration at all?

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if the hon. member would put this question on the order paper.

Mr. Moreau: I serve notice that I wish to debate this matter on the late, late show.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

PROPOSED EXPENDITURES ON STUDIOS IN MONTREAL AND TORONTO

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): In view of the fact that last week the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation applied to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation for the use of old federal buildings on property which the city of Vancouver needs for park purposes, how can the C.B.C. justify the expenditure of $105 million on studios in Montreal and Toronto while refusing to consider even a modest new building in downtown Vancouver?

Mr. Speaker: I doubt very much whether the phrasing of this question is in order. In any event, perhaps the hon. member would put it on the order paper.

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE USE OF FORMER R.C.A.F. BASE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Harold E. Winch (Vancouver East): I wish to address a question to the Minister of Industry in the light of the answers he gave to questions last week. This is of urgent public importance. May I ask the minister if this is the week when the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation will decide on the utilization of the R.C.A.F. lands at Kitsilano in Vancouver. If so, will consideration be given to protecting the last remaining open waterfront area for park and recreation purposes?

An hon. Member: Louder.

Mr. Winch: I wish I could say it louder, and I wish some of you would speak louder, too, on behalf of Vancouver.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): I hope it may be possible to reach conclusion this week. This does, however, depend to some extent on the availability of negotiators on behalf of those who are putting forward proposals. I can reassure the hon. gentleman that the needs of the city of Vancouver will be taken fully into consideration.

TRANSPORT

SASKATCHEWAN—REPORTED SHORTAGE OF BOX CARS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lawrence Watson (Assiniboia): I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport, having again received calls this morning from the Rouleau area stating there are 250,000 bushels of wheat still to be delivered. Can the minister assure the house that sufficient cars will be provided by the Canadian Pacific Railway to move this grain before July 31?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I think the hon. member knows that the government has no direct control over the C.P.R., but the hon. member for Red Deer brought this matter to my attention by telephone this morning, as well as to the attention of my colleague the Minister of Trade and Commerce. The matter is being taken up very actively with the wheat board, and I believe certain representations have also been made direct to the railway company. I am very hopeful—in fact I feel quite confident—that the railway, looking for business, will be anxious to do everything it can.

Mr. Watson (Assiniboia): Would the minister care to comment on a report in the Moose Jaw paper last week by the superintendent of the C.P.R. division there that there was no tie-up of grain shipments in the area under his jurisdiction? Could he possibly have the superintendent of the Regina subdivision explain why there is a tie-up on the latter line?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would be very glad to draw the matter to the attention of the head office of the railway to see whether they can give some explanation.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

MEETING OF HEALTH MINISTERS TO CONSIDER ROYAL COMMISSION REPORT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): I had a question to direct to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In her absence perhaps the parliamentary secretary might reply. Will there be a meeting in Ottawa in the next two weeks with the provincial health ministers with regard to the health commission report?

Mr. J. C. Munro (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Yes, there will be a meeting of the health ministers in Ottawa in the next couple of weeks, and one of the subjects for discussion will be the Hall commission report.

INDUSTRY

POSSIBLE BRITISH INVESTMENT IN QUEBEC STEEL COMPLEX

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance.

Could the minister tell the house whether it is true that a large British company is to invest $70 million in the steel complex to be established in Quebec?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Important as this question is, it is surely one for the order paper.

Mr. Pigeon: The minister is ready to answer, and I gave him notice.

Mr. Speaker: That still does not enable the question to qualify as being urgent and requiring an immediate answer.

Mr. Pigeon: After ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): The answer I was about to give was "No, Mr. Speaker".

Mr. Pigeon: I withdraw.

QUEBEC—POSSIBLE LOCATION OF NEW AUTOMOBILE INDUSTRIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry. Has the minister received any communication or request on the part of the city of Thetford Mines to the effect that they are interested in having the Renault or Peugeot car industry established in their locality?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker.

CANADIAN FLAG

REPORTED FLYING OF NEW DESIGN BY H.M.C.S. "YUKON"

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. Is he now in a position to reply to my question of last Friday with regard to the flying of the proposed new flag design on H.M.C.S. Yukon while at sea?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Associate Minister of National Defence is in a position to answer this question.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last the hon. member for Cumberland asked two questions. First he wanted to know under what authority the proposed new Canadian flag was flown on H.M.C.S. Yukon while at sea. His second question was whether instructions had gone forward from the government to the armed services requesting that they assist in the promotion of the new flag design.

I gave an answer in the negative to the second part of the question, and, as a result of the hon. member's inquiry, I obtained information relating to the first part of his question.

It appears that a flag was made on board H.M.C.S. Yukon resembling the proposed new Canadian flag, and was flown on the initiative of the ship's commanding officer. The flag was flown additional to and not in lieu of the normal flags authorized to be worn by Her Majesty's Canadian ships, and in a position inferior to them. The whole episode was at the initiative of the crew of H.M.C.S. Yukon, and there was no ulterior or sinister motive connected thereto. However, the action taken was not in strict conformity with regulations, and as a result the senior officer in command ordered that it be hauled down.

Mr. Coates: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is any further action contemplated, at the request of the government, to reprimand the individuals in question?

Mr. Cardin: The action, of course, was certainly not illegal, and in the minds of certain people it was really commendable. We have no further action to take against the commanding officer.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISMISSAL OF CANADIAN SAILORS BY IMPERIAL OIL CO.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, about a week ago I asked the Minister of Labour a question regarding the ship Imperial St. Lawrence, some of the crew of which were dismissed at Portland, Maine and left to find their way back to Canada because the Imperial Oil Company said they could pick up West Indian crew members at less than half the salary. The minister promised to look into the matter. I wonder whether he has any report to give to the house.

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the officers of the department have looked into this matter, and I will attempt to give my hon. friend a report tomorrow.

Mr. Douglas: Could I ask, at the same time, if the minister will find out whether any other ships have been similarly affected. I have some indication of similar complaints with regard to other ships.

Mr. MacEachen: I will be glad to do that, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY AS TO FEDERAL LABOUR CODE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of the fact that it is almost three months since the minister said the government's proposed labour code would be on the order paper as soon as possible, can he say whether this legislation will be introduced shortly?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the original statement still stands; it will come forward as soon as possible. The measure is being drafted, and as soon as that is completed we will get it on the order paper. I have not had a chance to check the situation this morning, but I think the measure ought to be on the order paper soon.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I realize the minister is just back from a very important meeting in Geneva, but I wonder if he would check on this and give an answer later this week, perhaps even without being prompted to do so.

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Raymond Langlois (Mégantic): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, one which I have asked many times, as have other hon. members. It concerns the study by this house in committee form of the Gill report. Has the minister any communication to give the house at this point?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

STATEMENT RESPECTING RACIAL EQUALITY—CANADIAN ATTITUDE RESPECTING RHODESIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Gene Rhéaume (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question has just arisen as a result of press reports of the Prime Minister's statement in London to the effect that the commonwealth must give leadership in allowing all persons of different racial and cultural groups in various countries the right to expect to develop equally as free citizens. My question is this. Will the government shortly introduce legislation in this house which will give the right to every resident of the Northwest Territories to vote in the territorial elections?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is not self evident that there is a logical relationship between these two important observations.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): But I would say that I am sure we all agree that the reported statement of the Prime Minister with regard to racial equality is one that every member of this house and most Canadians will applaud.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I would expect that as a result the suggestion of the hon. gentleman would not altogether fall on ground that is not fertile.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, at once I say I am glad to see that the Prime Minister is converted to the ideas that he criticized when I took the same stand in 1961. I would ask the Acting Prime Minister if he would now let us know—I refrained from asking this question until the Prime Minister had spoken in London—what is the official Canadian attitude respecting Rhodesia?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I am sure my right hon. friend would agree on reflection that the general attitude taken by the Prime Minister on this occasion was not basically different from the attitude that he and others in this house have taken. With regard to the question of Rhodesia, the prime ministers' conference is not over and I think it would be judicious and wise if we were to wait until the Prime Minister makes a report in this house, as he will do on Friday next, when I am sure my right hon. friend will agree we will be very glad indeed to welcome him back to this house.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is a generous generality, Mr. Speaker, but I ask the hon. gentleman this. Is he not in a position to say what the Canadian government decided with regard to the Rhodesian situation? Why should parliament have to wait on this matter, so important to the future of the commonwealth, until the return of the Prime Minister, in view of the fact that he has made this statement in London?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I hope my right hon. friend will not misunderstand me when I say that I think we should wait for the very reason that on one occasion questions put by me to my predecessor with regard to observations made by the right hon. gentleman elicited the very wise suggestion that I should wait until the right hon. gentleman returned.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I would point out, however, that the hon. gentleman did not accept that and said it was very unfair to parliament.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): If I did, that was one occasion when I was obviously wrong.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

APPROPRIATION BILL

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the third reading of Bill No.

C-109, for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending March 31, 1965.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as there is actually no principle to this bill I will not have the opportunity of discussing that aspect of it, but I do want to make a few observations because this item is of serious importance to a good many of the people I represent. Letters which I have received in the last day or two have urged me to continue to do the best I can to get the members of this house to realize what this item provides for.

The purpose of item L17a, which is included in the schedule to this bill, is to provide for the purchase of certain obligations with United States dollars paid to Canada pursuant to the treaty between Canada and the United States relating to development of the water resources of the Columbia river basin. In my opinion, Mr. Speaker, this is in direct opposition to the philosophy of the speeches and writings of the Minister of Finance prior to his appointment as minister. I am not going to criticize the minister directly, or to blame him for the defects in this whole question. I know the minister is a very well intentioned person. However, in this case I think he lacks information or has been misinformed. As one editor stated not long ago, by the passage of this item we will be handing control of one of Canada's greatest waterways to a foreign power for questionable short term monetary and political gains.

I wish to bring to the attention of the house that during the hearings of the committee my colleague the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands, when speaking of the costs to the government of Canada, as reported in the committee report said as follows:

> Mr. Cameron: I was not arguing that. I was simply expressing some concern over the position of the government of Canada, because I had already discovered that they were going to pick up part of the tab, and I wanted to be sure that they were not going to do it with this.
> Mr. Keenleyside: You said at the beginning that the government of Canada is paying the difference between the two sets of interest rates which, with great respect, is just not the case.

Then, Dr. Keenleyside went on to say:

> The situation is quite clear, but Mr. Cameron is not correct in this at all. In the agreement between British Columbia and Canada it is clearly stated that British Columbia will hold Canada harmless in relation to this whole provision.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's statement on Friday, when this debate is concluded—and I do not intend to prolong it at any great length—we should like an explanation of the apparent contradiction between the information given by Dr. Keenleyside to the committee as co-chairman of the British Columbia hydro and power authority, and the information given by the minister in his statement to the house on Friday last.

Perhaps I might point out here that this item in the bill proves that as far as I can judge the committee was misinformed on this question. Second, I believe this item provides water to irrigate a tremendous acreage of United States soil, water which should have been reserved to irrigate Canadian land and for other consumptive purposes in Canada. Third, this item, as I see it, provides for the sale of Canadian power to develop United States industries, which should be reserved to feed a national grid for the development of industry in Canada and provide a great surge of permanent employment for both this and for future generations.

In this connection, during the committee hearings we were informed that the sale of our surplus power in the United States would not affect the development of the aluminum industry of British Columbia, as owing to the development of atomic power, which would become cheaper from year to year, aluminum plants would soon be economically built on the east coast of the United States.

What has happened, Mr. Speaker, since that information was given to our committee? I read form a United Press International report from New York dated Thursday, July 9, 1964:

> The United States' ninth and newest primary aluminum company, Intalco Aluminum Corp., announced it will build its $60 million aluminum reduction plant near Bellingham, Washington.
> Intalco is a joint venture of American Metal Climax, Inc. (AMAX), Pechiney, a large French aluminum producer, and Howe Sound Co., in which Pechiney holds a substantial stock interest.
> Amax holds 50 per cent of the new company, with the balance shared evenly by Pechiney and Howe Sound.
> Engineering of the plant, which will have initial capacity of 73,000 tons annually, will be done by Pechiney and Bechtel Corp. The later will handle construction.
> Construction is to start immediately and first production is expected by the first half of 1966.

What is the reason for the establishment of this plant? It is to utilize future surplus Canadian power which is exported.

Then again, Mr. Speaker, I want to mention that this item provides for the destruction of Canadian natural resources in land, forests and 50 miles of sandy beaches, to which fact I have referred repeatedly and which the officials in British Columbia have said they could not find between Castlegar and Revelstoke. I have been in the country nearly 60 years and know every foot of this valley, as well as fish life and recreational facilities along the Arrow lakes for a distance from four miles north of Castlegar to Revelstoke. This item also makes possible the violation of civil and property rights of approximately 2,000 Canadians under the unprecedented and Duplessis-like powers granted to the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority by Bill No. 14, an act to establish the British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority, passed by the British Columbia legislature this last session. Section 53(1) of that act reads:

> Notwithstanding any specific provision in any act to the contrary, except as otherwise provided by or under this act, the authority is not bound by any statute or statutory provision of the province.

This act is an almost identical pattern of the Duplessis act passed in 1944 in Quebec. This act is now in operation in British Columbia. We all appreciate the fact that in Quebec, as a result of the protests of the Quebec trade unions, for which I give them credit, Premier Lesage is intending to amend the Quebec act so that public servants will have the opportunity to strike, with the exception of the police and firemen. I congratulate Premier Lesage for his forward looking attitude and his response to the trade unions. The British Columbia act is part of the development of the corporate state in British Columbia as a result of increasing control of our economy by United States corporations, and people with antidemocratic ideas.

My correspondence clearly indicates that the residents of Arrow lakes between Castlegar and Revelstoke are greatly alarmed at Dr. Keenleyside's statement of the policy of the B.C. hydro and power authority with respect to relocation and compensation of property owners who are directly or indirectly affected by the use of the funds provided by this item. I want to illustrate that by reading a letter addressed to the Prime Minister from the Burton and district farmers' institute of the Arrow lakes. I presume by this time the Acting Prime Minister has knowledge of this letter, and my speech from now on is an appeal to the government to do what it can to see that these people are treated in the same manner as people are treated by the national capital commission, as they were treated by the seaway authority and by all authorities in connection with the building of the Saskatchewan dam. The letter reads as follows:

[Mr. Herridge.]

Dear Mr. Pearson,

We are writing to you because we are very much disturbed about the trend of events in our Arrow lakes area regarding compensation and relocation of people to be affected by the flooding to be caused by the high Arrow dam. The federal government has voted for ratification of the Columbia treaty and we ask you to assume some responsibility before final ratification of the treaty to see that injustice and hardship do not occur to people who have already been upset and unsettled for many years because of the long uncertainty about the treaty.

Most of us do love our homes, and have put much into their making. Our properties have been artificially depressed in value because of these years of discussion about the treaty, and also by a lowering, several years ago, of most of the assessed values of property along the lake shore. Market value has, of course, been correspondingly depressed.

Following are some of the statements which have been made by the authorities in recent weeks which have so alarmed us that we feel we must write you and make this situation known to you. Needless to say, some of these statements are quite contrary to promises made by some politicians before the last federal and provincial elections.

R.W. Gross, manager, land division, B.C. hydro, in answer to the queries of a land owner in the district—

"I am afraid we cannot accept the principle that replacement value is to be paid for improvements affected by the Columbia developments.

The basis on which compensation is paid in Canada for private property required for public purposes is clearly established on the value to the owners principle.

Value to the owner is in almost all cases the same as market value. In addition to market value there would, in proper cases be added an allowance to cover disturbance and moving expenses...

In these circumstances, the public body is required to pay the owner what his property is worth, not what it may cost him to replace it.

The owner is entitled to be left in the same economic position in terms of cash or property after the taking as he was in before the taking.

An owner is not entitled to profit from the taking, which would be the situation if replacement value rather than market value were paid."

Dr. Keenleyside has repeated in public meetings these statements in substance. The statements were not well received by property holders. These statements of policy are far from reassuring to us, and it does not help to have Dr. Keenleyside say that of course the B.C. hydro would try to help us in getting financing for our new homes. Those of us who have good homes already paid for, or nearly so, can hardly be expected to welcome this opportunity to saddle ourselves with brand new mortgages along with our brand new homes. We are tired of hearing that our desperately hard won bottom lands are of little value when we know what a struggle it has been to get them, and how really priceless, in the world today, this land is. Those of us who are farmers know full well what we are losing.

We ask you to consider all this, Mr. Pearson, to watch and be informed on the situation, and not to forget the people in this valley.

Yours truly,

R. Oliver Buerge, secretary,
Burton and district farmers' institute.

I read that letter, Mr. Speaker, because the institute represents a number of farmers in the district. I also wish to quote one paragraph from a letter I received from a prominent Liberal who lives in Revelstoke, and I may say that on this question I have some good friends and supporters among Conservatives and Liberals who live in the Kootenays. The minister knows some of them. This letter reads:

> We hear, here, through a relative of the woman concerned, that the old Herb Fisher farm north of Sidmount on the west side of the river was purchased by hydro for $5,000, and that this included approximately 70 acres of land of which 30-40 are cleared, and the dwelling—probably worth at least $2,000. This being the case it seems to me that they don't intend to stop at anything short of outright robbery. We hear too that a farmer by name of Needham—

I know this farm.

> —located somewhere between here and 12 mile ferry has sold to hydro for a very low figure—he refused to divulge the price, saying that all his neighbours will be provoked for his having sold for a fraction of worth. Both of these people apparently wanted to get out for reasons of health and just took what they could get without question. Nice set-up.

I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, I have received a lot of correspondence on this issue, particularly since the treaty has been ratified by this house, and much of my correspondence is from older people.

Mr. L. Fotheringham of the Vancouver Sun recently visited the area and wrote an article in his paper from which I wish to quote briefly. This article was sent to me by Mr. W. T. Galt, the acting managing editor of the Vancouver Sun, who wanted to indicate to me his sympathy with the interests of these people along the lakes. I quote from the article:

> Perfect Retreat Will Vanish
> Renata lost its waterbound way of life. Now it will be swallowed by water.
> Its 100 residents are bitter, because they were sure they had found the perfect retreat from a world they didn't fancy.
> Renata is the only community for 50 miles on the west side of the lower Arrow lake. It is orchard land, famous for its cherries.
> Jake Reimer has been here since 1918. His home is the showplace of Renata, surrounded by a neat lawn and flowering shrubs. Rhododendrons in bloom contrast with the striped awnings. There are ten acres of carefully tended orchard out back.
> Words hardly express Jake Reimer's bitterness about the situation. "It's disgusting", he says, very quietly.
> Can't Pay For Peace
> Younger couples can be paid for their homes and can start over again elsewhere. But the older ones?
> How do you pay Jake Reimer and his wife for the 46 years of toil they have put into their home and orchard? How do you compensate Henry Epp, here since 1919, for the peace and quiet he will lose?
> Most of all, the older people fear being forced into becoming cave-dwellers in an apartment house in Castlegar or Nelson or some other centre that might as well be New York for any resident of Renata.
> The lake dwellers' resentment at the political wrangle that destroyed their bargaining power has been aggravated by some injudicious public hints that the affected people are just barefoot yokels anyway.
> One B.C. cabinet minister, in the heat of argument, dismissed the areas in question as muskrat patches. Renata would like to catch that cabinet minister and gorge him on their cherries.
> Dr. Hugh Keenleyside, the B.C. hydro co-chairman, was quoted as saying someone should go into these towns and bring the people out into the outside world so they could see what goes on.
> "That's the whole bloody point", fumes Peter Warkentin, a former Winnipeg school teacher who runs the store and post office here. "We're here because we don't like what we've seen in the so-called outside world."
> We Can't Start Again
> Tom Ryan is 89. He lives at Syringa Creek, on the east side of the lake, 20 miles up from Castlegar. He was on the way to San Diego from his job as bank guard in Lethbridge when he came upon this peaceful spot.
> That was 35 years ago. He hasn't budged since.
> "Where will I go?" says the old man in genuine bewilderment.
> "I don't like it. I don't like the whole business. No one has been to see me about moving. Where would I go?"

I mention these cases to introduce the human factor into this development and appeal to the Acting Prime Minister and the government to do what they can in this connection. The political chickens are already coming home to roost in the form of additional costs for the dams, costs in addition to the estimates we were given in committee, and in the government of British Columbia's uncertainty with respect to the sites, safety and cost of the dams, and in unhappiness and misery to the people directly affected.

Is there a single member of this house who would support these people being treated unjustly? Is there a single member of this house who does not think these people are entitled to be relocated in circumstances similar to what they now enjoy? Is there a single member of this house who does not think they should be relocated in entirety or if they prefer it, given compensation that is generous and just?

In conclusion I appeal to the government to use all its influence to make as certain as possible that the Canadians who will be directly or indirectly affected by the expenditure under this item will be satisfactorily relocated or receive adequate compensation in cash if they so desire. We can never recompense people for the loss of a way of life in a beautiful valley which is the garden of Eden of Canada, but we are morally bound to compensate to the full for the lost material values. I think it is up to the government and every member of the house to do what they can to see that these unfortunate people are fairly and properly treated.

Beyond all developments and programs the true conservation of human and natural resources is ultimately something of the mind, an ideal of people who cherish and revere their past and believe in the opportunities of the future. Our Canadian civilization will be judged by its fidelity to this ideal as surely as by its parliamentary institutions, its system of justice and its culture. One of the contrasts of our society is that while our material standard of living has continually improved, our environmental standard is steadily declining because of a lack of consideration of these great values. While we have improved housing, are better nourished and have more varied entertainment, the terms of this treaty and what it provides for indicate that we are not qualified to inherit this land to the advantage of this and future generations.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, because of the very great length of time that has elapsed between the time the subject matter of the Columbia river treaty first came before the house and its recent ratification, I think it is perhaps understandable that members of the house are generally inclined to say "Thank God that is over at last," and to hope that we are not going to hear anything more about it for a long time. But I think we should realize that the mere ratification of the treaty by the house by no means brings this matter to an end, that in fact the real business arising out of the Columbia river treaty is just now starting and that the actual work of physical development is shortly to begin after all these years.

I think it is for this reason that the hon. member for Kootenay West, whose constituents I think most of us realize by now are the people most directly and immediately affected by the physical developments, has spoken out at this time in order to draw to our attention the situation which these people are now actually going to have to face after all this lapse of time. There was some discussion of this matter when the particular item concerning the Columbia river financing was before the committee of supply, and I was somewhat astounded to see a Canadian Press dispatch in the Vancouver papers which suggested that the discussion we had the other day constituted a filibuster. Surely any reasonably minded reporter, any reasonably minded Canadian, should not object to the fact that some members of the house at least are concerned about what is going to happen to these people. I hope the government of Canada and members of parliament generally will not refuse to recognize the moral responsibility we have and will not seek to pass off this matter by suggesting that concern for these people lies only with the constitutional jurisdiction of the British Columbia authorities.

So I have no apology whatever to make for rising to support the plea just made by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I happen to represent a constituency in the same province as the constituency of the hon. member for Kootenay West, but in many ways the actual development of the Columbia river valley, particularly from the point of view of its immediate impact, is just as far removed from my constituency as it is from those of members from the prairie provinces, the province of Ontario or the Atlantic provinces. Therefore I feel I am quite qualified to seek the support of members from all parts of Canada for the plea of the hon. member for Kootenay West.

Inasmuch as this was a matter that had to be dealt with by parliament, I suggest that if the financing provided in this bill is not sufficient to re-establish these people properly, and if the British Columbia authorities fail to properly discharge their responsibility in this matter, we in this parliament should not hesitate to indicate that in addition to the other financing required for the development of the Columbia river project, we expect the government of Canada to see that additional funds are provided in one way or another to ensure that justice is done to these Canadian citizens.

We have had strong differences of opinion as to the value of this treaty to the Canadian economy and the nation. The members of the New Democratic party have seen nothing yet to cause them to change their minds in respect to the position they took with regard to ratification. Nevertheless we have to accept the decision made by the majority of the members of the house, and we assume that the works involved in the project are now going to proceed. But we do not intend to forget the responsibilities that we as members of the house have for the welfare of the people most directly involved. The hon. member for Kootenay West is quite right when he says there is no way of recompensing these people for some of the things they are going to lose. So far as it is financially possible to see that they are fully recompensed for the losses they are going to sustain, certainly not one of us should disagree with his contention that we should make it clear to them that we intend to see that they have at least that much.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to add my words to those of the hon. member for Kootenay West, who has been so interested in drawing to the attention of the house some of the faults that have already come to light with regard to this matter. The federal government is being asked to advance money for the commencement of the development of the Columbia river. We are now being asked to provide a sum of money in Bill No. C-109, and it seems to me there should be a schedule attached to the bill setting forth the conditions under which the government of British Columbia will have to operate so far as expropriation is concerned. I wonder how many members of parliament would like to call the hon. member for Kootenay West a liar. I doubt if there are many who would; yet they are really saying he is lying, or they would not ratify this bill at the present time without some assurance that the abuses he says have taken place in the Kootenay would not be repeated.

In my opinion we have had some very favourable experience in the matter of expropriation in recent years. Most of the members who represent rural areas will know that this question affects rural people on many occasions. One occasion on which it affected both rural and urban dwellers was the case of the St. Lawrence seaway. I have been very proud of the way in which expropriation was handled in that area, because consideration was given at that time to the many things the hon. member for Kootenay West is requesting now. If you go through the area now you will find homes which might better have been demolished and rebuilt. However, consideration was given to the fact that we were uprooting people who had lived for a lifetime in these houses to which a lot of sentiment was attached so the houses were moved, sometimes at greater expense than the cost of demolition and rebuilding. However, the federal government, through the seaway authority did move these buildings and did give consideration to the matters which are now concerning the people in Kootenay West, along the Arrow lakes and the Columbia river section.

Many times this consideration is not given, as I know from experience with the water resources commission of Ontario. That commission decided to build a sewage lagoon near the town where I live. A real estate operator knew this and obtained an option on a farm in the area, the purchase price being $30,000. A year went by and the option was dropped. The water commission expropriated the farm and paid the farmer $16,500. Was the real estate agent who went out and valued that farm crazy? I doubt it. He is in the business and makes a good living, so he must have known the value of the farm and that at one time it was being considered for that purpose by the commission. The farmer has been told that if he does not like it he can appeal from the decision of the water commission.

Many expropriations have been made in which the compensation has been unfair, unreasonable and unjust, and no consideration has been given to the factors mentioned by the hon. member for Kootenay West. I think the minister is being unfair. He is asking us to appropriate this money, yet he is not giving us any guarantee as to what the expropriation process will be.

It is a fact that expropriation is a must in a civilized community. Expropriation is used for the good of the community. Obviously it is necessary to obtain land to provide for developments for future generations in Canada. However, I believe this power carries with it an obligation to the individual, an obligation which is covered by the bill of rights, and I believe it should be honoured. I feel hon. members should think about this because what they are really saying is that they do not believe the hon. member for Kootenay West when he says that Dr. Keenleyside is doing these things in British Columbia. Members are saying that these representatives are wrong in asking for protection. I think the question is that simple. I am sure the hon. member for Kootenay West is expressing the opinion of the people who live there.

It may be that those who own the land may only see a few years ahead and may well accept a few thousand dollars for a property that may be worth a good deal more. You can easily understand the reason for this, because sometimes these people are browbeaten very badly. I should like to refer to the work done by some of the people connected with the trans-Canada pipe line when it went through my area. They told the people "You have to sign an easement or have to make these arrangements", and the people were paid a ridiculous amount for some of this property. After I advised the farmers not to sign or make arrangements because we would do this at public meetings, one of the agents said in a barber shop it had cost him $50,000 more for easements that week than it had the week before.

We have an obligation to represent our ridings and, in my opinion, we have an obligation to help other members represent their ridings properly. I strongly urge the minister, before this bill passes, to give us some assurance that the federal government is going to make some demands for co-operation in the setting of reasonable terms for expropriation of these lands along the Columbia river. I am in agreement with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, and I personally am willing to support a demand for reasonable settlements for the people who are being displaced as a result of the treaty we ratified here.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the house ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to on division and bill read the third time and passed.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

PROVISION FOR REVISION OF FISCAL ARRANGEMENTS AND TAXATION PROVISIONS

The house resumed, from Thursday, July 9, consideration in committee of the following resolution—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the revision of certain fiscal arrangements with the provinces and to provide adjustments of fiscal arrangements and taxation provisions consequential upon the provision of youth allowances to parents resident in certain provinces.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, last week, at the beginning of his statement on this resolution, the minister took the liberty of praising co-operative federalism. However, you noticed, Mr. Chairman, that his praises were brief and not very enthusiastic, and for a very good reason; indeed, the brand of co-operative federalism practised by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and this government has proven to be a dismal failure. I do not think that I exaggerate when I say that such is the case knowing that responsible associations, for instance, qualified this new formula of national suicide.

In addition, it is readily realized that under this government federal-provincial relations have surely not improved. There is, for example, the increase of separatist and extremist elements within confederation; this is surely not an indication of real success for the formula advocated by the Minister of Finance. We also hear recriminations and grumbling on the part of the provinces due to the pitiful state of the fiscal resources allotted to them and to the deep misunderstanding of the present federal government with regard to provincial rights, on the one hand, and to provincial priority needs, on the other hand.

Mr. Chairman, as a result, federal-provincial relations are going through a serious crisis and there are many instances in support of such an allegation. For instance, there was the case which gave rise to several interventions in this house: negotiations concerning the transfer of responsibilities of Eskimo affairs in northern Quebec. What happened in that case? We were faced with a real dilemma, so much so that negotiations had to be interrupted and then definitely broken up, and I even think that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) does no longer recognize his colleague from the province of Quebec, the minister of natural resources, and is not on speaking terms with him.

We also witnessed new interferences by the central government into fields of exclusive provincial jurisdiction such as education, social welfare, property and civil rights.

Just recently, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) announced that he had ordered an investigation or, if you wish, a pre-investigation into the matter of the interdependence of economic regions in Canada. But, as another indication of the incomprehension and of the indifference of the central government towards the provinces, the latter were consulted beforehand concerning that investigation which is under way and were not invited to take part in it, so that the premier of the province of Quebec, Mr. Lesage, stated that no investigation ignoring in such a way the interests of the provinces could be serious or give any result.

Mr. Chairman, those are only a few indications of the total and complete failure of that formula announced with much fanfare by the members of the administration, the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne), who is not here, the Minister of Finance and the Prime Minister himself.

But it is not enough to acknowledge the failure of a formula. We have to look for the causes of that failure. Why is the co-operative federalism formula not successful with this administration which is, in fact, backed by many provincial administrations professing the same political doctrine as this government? It is because this formula is not invigorated by a thoroughly autonomist attitude or view. In other words, those people preaching autonomy, decentralization and co-operation, are not imbued with the need for that co-operation.

As a matter of fact a good number of ministers are in favour of centralization and have been for a long time; they were high officials in the wartime and the following government, which certainly was, in the opinion of all observers, the most centralizing government this country has ever known. It is probably normal that those people should still follow the same direction and that, when they profess a conversion, it is only a surface confession or conversion. In short, those people who are full of that centralizing and monopolizing spirit would like to concentrate, in defiance and in violation of the constitution, the real powers here, in the central government, which would then be directed by a superstructure of permanent high officials not accountable to the people.

That is one reason for the failure, but there is also the obvious lack of co-ordination and common agreement which mars the government's efforts to settle the problem.

Another reason is the fact that many of those who sit on the government benches have a misconception of the principle of federalism. Numerous facts bear out that statement.

Our constitution, the B.N.A. Act, clearly defines federal and provincial jurisdictions and gives direct responsibilities to each level of government.

That is the constitution. Now, what did the government do? They decided that the constitution was not so important and they proceeded with what they would like to be a clever plan under which there would be an agreement to depart from, and do violence to, the constitution.

But is it really possible, through an understanding or an agreement, to transgress the letter of the constitution? I do not feel that this is sound federalism; neither is it co-operation along the lines intended by the government.

A meeting is called and it is decided to launch a large number of joint plans ostensibly because the Canadian people have to be provided with some services, and once the consent of the reluctant provinces has been obtained, thanks to promised subsidies, the program is launched, but a loophole is provided, in order to give compensation to the provinces that do not agree or do not deem it advisable to participate.

This is the new contracting out formula which enables a province to refuse to take part in a joint program, without incurring fiscal penalties.

Of course, the contracting out formula is certainly useful, as a last resort. I favour the use of this formula instead of merely penalizing a province which does not participate in a joint program; but would it not be better simply to sit together someday and discuss the limits of the various responsibilities and afterwards respect such divisions? Moreover, there would undoubtedly be less conflicts if there were such negotiations. There would not even be any reason for options.

That is why I think this option formula is a mistake and can only lead to greater difficulties because these shared programs thrusted on the provinces are likely to frustrate the priority of provincial needs, for, under the guise of a shared program, a province is forced to undertake certain projects which may not meet its immediate objectives; thus, subsidies which might be used for certain projects which that province considers as extremely more important, must be used for this shared program. And if it is not done, there is a penalty, a series of conflicts which entail consultations and conferences summoned hastily, which may be a makeshift but cannot provide a permanent settlement in that conflict concerning federal-provincial relations.

At the outset of the debate on this resolution, mention has been made of solutions that must be brought about concerning this jurisdictional conflict in order to put an end to the real uneasiness which might lead eventually to the end of our confederation. Some persons wondered, quite sincerely, whether the fact of claiming on the one hand the respect, the upholding of the constitution was compatible with that attitude, on the other hand, which consists in calling for complete revision of the constitution, in order to amend it and transform it into a tool really suitable to present needs.

In my opinion such an attitude is not unreasonable. Provisions of the B.N.A. Act specify certain rights that are inalienable. They set for instance the jurisdiction of the various authorities, and sections 91, 92, 133 and others recognize certain rights to the French language and to the French Canadians, an essential element and an equal partner in confederation.

Mr. Chairman, it is obvious that the rights granted by the constitution are inalienable, except with the unanimous consent of all parties. Everybody agrees on that point. Besides, it follows that the constitution, in its present state and as long as it exists, must be fully respected. In addition, it is not illogical to hope for a possible meeting in order to discuss the constitutional amendments which are deemed necessary, nowadays. That is why the stand taken, for instance, by my Conservative colleagues of the province of Quebec is logical and justifiable. We want to respect the constitution, we want the government to legislate within its fields of jurisdiction, as determined by the constitution. But it is our hope and our wish that some meeting will take place, that there will be a true dialogue in order to amend what should be changed, to eliminate the uneasiness which corrodes the constitution, as well as the whole country.

Mr. Chairman, we certainly ought to make an effort to obtain the unanimous agreement of the federal government and all the provinces in order to bring home the constitution, and then amend it to make the required adjustments between the expectations of 1867 and the realities of 1964.

Therefore, I think that the proposal of convening a federal-provincial conference, to discuss and try to obtain a favourable agreement in this matter, is a sound and well founded suggestion, and, moreover, I maintain that we should not hesitate to hold this conference, because I think the matter should be settled before the start of the centennial celebrations three years hence.

I even believe that the framework of this federal-provincial conference should be enlarged so as to represent a true constituent assembly which would not only have deliberating power but enough legislative authority to shape the new organization which is needed. Therefore, this conference should of necessity be attended by the elected representatives of the people, whether on the federal or the provincial level.

Yet, if such talks are to succeed, they should necessarily be preceded by lengthy preparations so that every detail may be ironed out.

To pave the way, I would suggest, for instance, that interprovincial conferences be held. Such action has already been taken, and provinces often meet to discuss their common problems. I think the time has come for the provinces to meet and discuss among themselves whether amendments to the constitution are possible and what they should be. Those conferences should also be preceded by the setting up of constitution committees in the various provinces. In that respect, the Quebec government has already taken the initiative. It has established a constitution committee which is seriously examining all aspects of the problem and it will certainly be soon in a position to submit a report that should prove most useful to the federal government and the provinces.

A thorough study should also be undertaken by high government officials in connection with that problem and all its ramifications. More frequent and more extensive consultations should be held between representatives of the federal government and those of the provinces. There again, I suggest that committees of constitutional experts be set up not on an ad hoc basis but permanently because the government which will be in power one, two or three years hence, will obviously have to tackle the problem if it wishes to solve it. It should then be able to call on such experts for advice.

Mr. Chairman, it has already been suggested—I think it was the hon. member for Three Rivers who mentioned it—that the Senate be transformed into a constitution committee. Here is also a most welcome proposal which, I feel should be implemented as soon as possible. In addition to the Senate constitution committee, I would suggest the establishment of a special committee of the House of Commons, which would work with the constitution committees of the Senate and of the provinces.

Of course, the members taking part in this federal-provincial conference ought to be the elected representatives of the people who should not be deprived of their real responsibility if the democratic system is to endure.

Mr. Chairman, the part played by this conference, this constituent assembly, would be to define the status of confederation when it enters into its second century.

Mr. Chairman, to criticize such a suggestion before ascertaining the enormous possibilities it may have is deplorable indeed. Should the conference, or those who take part in it, be really conscious of the seriousness of the problem they face, should they show willingness to solve it, I believe that such a conference could become the most important project of the centenary we intend to celebrate three years hence.

Mr. Chairman, before concluding, may I be allowed to make one or two observations. First, a warning: I do not believe that constitutional innovations in themselves will be able to solve the basic problems which this country is facing. Those are rather economic and social problems and, here, I would say that any solution that does not take into account certain factors would only be illusory and doomed to failure. The first of those factors which I have in mind is that the conference will have to acknowledge the French fact in Canada and recognize that any nation is entitled to self-determination. That conference and those who will be responsible for the settlement of the constitutional issue will have to be aware of the new face of Quebec and its reasonable aspirations.

Often we are asked what the province of Quebec really wants. Mr. Chairman, I could answer this question by asking another. What does any nation want, be it the French Canadian nation or the English Canadian nation? And the answer to the latter question is very easy: the French Canadian nation—or Quebec—simply wants to be itself. In my opinion, this is the true answer to the latter question, and I believe that in wishing to be itself, Quebec must take into account, and be aware of, the dual trend of ideas abroad in the world today.

On the one hand, we witness the surge of nationalism, with the emergence of a great number of nations, African and others, who are declaring their independence. On the other hand, it should not be forgotten that there is also a new awareness, within the French Canadian nation, of the universality of the human community of which it is a part, and it is on the universal and human front that the Quebec nation wants to play its part, while remaining what it is, and while evolving, according to the great tide of political universalism which is sweeping the world.

In conclusion, I say that if the constitutional and other innovations would once and for all recognize the aspirations of Quebec, I am convinced that, then and there the French Canadian nation would be ready to assume its full part as equal partner in the confederative achievement. In fact, in Quebec, some voices have already made themselves heard, speaking authoritatively and pointing the way.

The manifesto for functional policies, which appeared recently in Cité Libre of May 1964, shows that the most important task today is to open the frontiers of Canadian society. Needless to say, by that is meant the whole Canadian society. In that remarkable manifesto, which is not well enough known, it is said among other things:

> A plurality of ethnic groups have to learn to live together: modern challenge full of significance.
> To recognize one's inability to make the Canadian confederation work is, at this stage of history, to recognize one's indignity to take part in world politics.

Those are, Mr. Chairman, objectives worthy of the most serious attention of all hon. members and on that I will end my remarks.

Consequently, I ask the present government to get rid of its false cloak of co-operative federalism, to examine the problem closely.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Martineau: You can laugh at that but the uneasiness which is felt at the heart of our confederation does not warrant it.

I am asking this government, which up to now has shown too much evidence of incompetence and wavering, to settle the basic problem while it may not be too late by taking the true facts into account and by treating, at last, the Canadian nation, and Quebec, in particular, as a people composed of adults.

Mr. Drouin: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Martineau: Surely, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Drouin: Mr. Chairman, when the hon. member says that representatives of the people should be convened at a federal-provincial conference, would he tell the house if he is referring to the federal and provincial governments and all elected members, including members of the opposition, in this house as well as in the various provincial legislatures?

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, it is the duty of the hon. members forming the majority to take the initiative of convening such a conference and to invite members of all other parties, in an advisory capacity. I should like also to add that this conference should include an advisory committee composed of the best brains of our country, to give adequate assistance to the government in its difficult task.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, is the minister answering questions now?

The Chairman: We are in committee at the moment.

Mr. Pugh: Mr. Chairman, although the minister in his speech brought out most things fairly well, I am just wondering whether he would state in his closing remarks if—

Mr. Bell: No, he is not closing. We are in committee.

Mr. Pugh: Then would he tell us whether as a result of this conference all provinces were in agreement? The second point I want to bring out is this. According to the table at page 5184 of Hansard, if you look at the totals brought forward under the first heading, the total for 1964-65 is $87 million plus, of which Quebec receives a total of $42 million plus.

Then in 1965-66 the dominion is $171 million plus of which Quebec is $73 million plus. Again, in 1966-67 the total is $264 million plus of which Quebec is $107 million plus. These are changes which the tax is going to make, and I am wondering why there is such a large rise in the Quebec portion as against what I have marked off for Ontario and for British Columbia.

With regard to the natural resource abatement there is a note at the bottom of the page which reads:

> Calculated for Alberta and B.C. on assumption that there would be no equalization as a result of the natural resource revenue adjustment.

I was wondering how far ahead the minister was looking, and I was thinking about B.C. which is developing rapidly at present. If there is a tremendous increase in B.C.'s position in the future I was wondering whether the federal government could make an adjustment at that time.

The per capita totals which are derived from the natural resource are given in the minister's speech. B.C. shows a very reasonable amount. Alberta, of course, is the highest but then it comes away down, not to the have not provinces but to the provinces which, per capita, do not produce very much by way of natural resources. The question on this is, what about the future of a rapidly expanding province with rather large resources to be developed?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Chairman, I think it might be helpful if I said a word or two at this point and cleared up a few of the questions that have been raised. The committee will remember that on Thursday the right hon. Leader of the Opposition ranged rather widely over time and space. I was interested in his historical references, especially in those that pertained to the late 18th century and to the dispute between Fox and Burke, two cabinet colleagues. I understood the right hon. gentleman to say they had been bosom pals until they had a dispute about some matter of great importance.

Mr. Diefenbaker: They were not cabinet pals. If the hon. gentleman had read my speech he would know they did not belong to the same cabinet.

Mr. Gordon: Well, after that they never spoke again. I suppose this sort of thing has happened in the past; I dare say it has happened even in Canada, but I hope it will not happen here again.

In his speech the Leader of the Opposition referred to some of the problems facing Canada and to the desirability of clarifying and resolving federal-provincial responsibilities and tax sources. He suggested calling some sort of national conference at which all federal parties represented in this house would be present, together with all the provincial governments. Whether this would prove to be an effective method of resolving the problems we are faced with, or whether it would only resolve itself into another forum for making speeches is a matter of opinion. I am afraid that a conference at which both the federal and provincial governments were represented, together with all the parties in all the legislatures, and all the parties in this house, would be doomed to failure from the start. Even if the conference were held in camera I am sure there would be a lot of speeches, as sometimes there are leaks. With the greatest respect I feel it is not more speeches we need in this area but more thought and more action.

Mr. Diefenbaker: There can be no disagreement with the hon. gentleman on that.

Mr. Gordon: Let me remind hon. members of what the Prime Minister has suggested should be done in this connection. I think most hon. members will agree that the Prime Minister has indicated an instinctive understanding of the strains in our confederation, and especially of the changes that are going on in the province of Quebec.

At the federal-provincial conference on March 31, which continued until April 2, the Prime Minister proposed that a tax structure committee be established by the conference itself which, after study, would report back to a federal-provincial conference which would be called together for that purpose. Presumably this tax structure committee will consider a variety of fiscal matters, including trends in government responsibilities and expenditures, the sharing of expenditures by the two jurisdictions, the tax structure in Canada in both the federal and provincial jurisdictions, and the fiscal capacity and fiscal needs of the provinces. Not the least of these questions, of course, is the troublesome problem of an equitable fiscal adjustment, or equalization formula.

The committee will be assisted in its work by the reports of various royal commissions, federal and provincial, that are nearing the end of their labours. It is to be expected that the conclusions of the tax structure committee can be reported to the federal-provincial conference, or to a special federal-provincial conference, and implemented prior to the expiry on March 31, 1967 of the present fiscal arrangements with the provinces.

All of us who have been engaged in matters touching upon the responsibilities of both federal and provincial governments in recent years realize that we must take serious account of the views of one another in this field. We realize also that these views differ as between provinces and as between individuals; and that views have changed over the last 20 years.

The depression, the war and the post-war expansion all contributed to one of those historic waves in which the federal government could naturally assume a degree of leadership which extended beyond the fields of responsibility contemplated by those who created and interpreted our constitution a century ago. This broader initiative from the centre was in accordance with the mood prevailing throughout the world at that time and served, I submit, a very useful purpose in meeting many of the economic and social problems of the time and in bringing about substantial advances in these fields.

It was only natural, however, as the effects of the depression and the war were left behind and the normal processes of peacetime were resumed, that provincial governments should gradually regain a greater share of the initiative and the ideas that are shared by all progressive people in public life in this day and age. This reassertion of the provincial role has been helped in recent years by the assistance the provinces have received, both technical and financial, in building up the fiscal and technical capacity of their governments to carry their responsibilities in accordance with the more dynamic role people now expect their governments to play. This has been combined in the last several years with a renaissance in the province of Quebec which has naturally emphasized the role of the provincial government there not only in accelerating the retarded development of the resources and services of that province but also as the logical exponent of the views and aspirations of French speaking Canadians.

Given this historical and constitutional context, we must all recognize that some adjustments must be made in present relationships between the federal and provincial governments, adjustments that involve some flexibility and mutual understanding. This is the essence of the co-operative approach to federalism which the Prime Minister has been urging upon all of us.

Failure to recognize this need for flexibility in our approach to federal-provincial relations would contribute to discord in sections of the country where irresponsible groups are seeking, not to encourage an understanding between French and English speaking Canadians, but rather to make such understanding difficult. The adjustments needed should be reflected in arrangements such as those we have been discussing in connection with this resolution as well as in the more fundamental questions of sharing tax fields and the payment of equalization grants. I should add that this same subject, or if you will, this same problem, will come up again when the time comes to discuss the question of shared cost programs and the ways in which full responsibility for certain of them should be turned over to those provinces that are anxious to assume them.

In the last analysis, the best solution of some of our difficulties may be to turn over to the provinces full responsibility for certain well established programs which are now being administered by the provinces in any case. It may be that as a part of this best solution the provinces should levy their own taxes to finance these programs subject, of course, to the continuation of some form of equalization payments. Speaking as the federal Minister of Finance, it is a thankless task to levy federal taxes merely to provide the provinces with the funds they need to pay for the programs they administer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister allow a question? What particular programs has he in mind? He has generalized, but could he particularize for a moment?

Mr. Gordon: I think it would be premature to particularize. I am sure the right hon. gentleman is aware of all the shared cost programs. There is a great multiplicity of them and these will be the subject of pretty intensive discussions with the provinces in the months that lie ahead.

These are the kind of subjects, Mr. Chairman, that I hope the proposed tax structure committee, which is being constituted as a result of the agreement reached at the last federal-provincial conference, will grapple with. In doing so, we must take care that the federal government retains sufficient power in fiscal matters to enable it to influence the economy in one direction or the other when this is called for. But I see no reason why certain changes that are clearly needed in the light of present circumstances cannot be instituted in a way that will leave the central government strong enough to perform the functions that rightfully belong to it. Among other things the central government must continue to be in a position where it can take the initiative in fiscal policy, commercial policy, monetary policy and debt management. In other words, the central government's responsibility for the economic policies of the country as a whole must not be interfered with.

Quite obviously, Mr. Chairman, questions of this importance cannot be disposed of in a brief debate such as we are engaging in at present. I think, however, that in considering some of the more or less short term measures encompassed in this resolution hon. members should appreciate that the government is planning to seek more permanent solutions after full examination and discussion with the provinces.

In his remarks the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam—I am sorry he is not in the house—made some caustic comments, if I remember correctly, about the proposals being put forward to ease the financial position of the provinces. If I recollect correctly, in talking about the changes in the equalization formula announced after the November, 1963 conference he referred to "cooking the formula to get a specific result" and he also talked about "rigging". Speaking as a chartered accountant, I hope these expressions were not intended to cast aspersions on my professional purity.

Mr. Diefenbaker: What was that word?

An hon. Member: Perish the thought.

Mr. Gordon: The first word was "professional" and the second was "purity".

Mr. Winkler: We will go for one but not the other.

Mr. Gordon: I will confess, however, that I have never been one of those who put too much stock in technicalities or who believes that any formula necessarily will be appropriate forever. In listening to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam it seemed to me that those who have received their early training in theology approach things rather differently. There seems to be a sort of ingrained feeling that any change is heresy. I should like to suggest that this display of faith in a kind of arithmetic dogma is unsuitable in this connection.

Mr. Pigeon: Was the minister thinking about specialists in economics like the Secretary of State?

Mr. Gordon: I did not know that the Secretary of State had received early training in theology. I knew he had studied under some very well known and respected theologians.

Mr. Pigeon: He changed religions many times.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member knows more about him than I do. It was my responsibility over 20 years ago, Mr. Chairman, to assist the then minister of finance in negotiating the original wartime tax deals with the provinces, including the province of which very shortly afterwards the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam became the premier.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Was that the tax rental agreements?

Mr. Gordon: The right hon. gentleman asks me if it was the tax rental arrangements. It was not what are known as the tax rental arrangements. It was the one that came first. Even in those days it seemed to me there was at least something to be said for keeping an eye on the final results, as well as on the highly complex calculations which supported them. I submit that looked at in that way it must be obvious that the changes contemplated in the fiscal arrangements with the provinces, which are provided for in this resolution and will be incorporated in the bill to follow, will be highly beneficial to all of them. Every province will gain from the proposals. As I said a few minutes ago, it would be my hope that the tax structure committee of the federal-provincial conference will be able to devise an approach to this whole difficult and aggravating problem that will be a little easier to understand.

In the meantime, while I do not suggest the present formula for equalization is perfect by any means—I am not sure that any such formula could be devised that would be perfect in the full sense of that word—it is one which has been agreed to by the federal government and accepted by the provinces, albeit with some reservations.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister allow a question? When did the change take place on the part of the Liberal party which promised that equalization would be determined on the basis of the highest provinces? When did the change take place to have equalization based on the level of the two provinces, because in both elections the promise was that equalization would be determined on the basis of the top province?

Mr. Gordon: I am delighted to have the opportunity to answer that question and, I hope, to settle it in the minds of all hon. members of the committee for all time. The purpose and intention of the proposal by the Liberal party was to equalize up to the level of Ontario, which was generally understood, and which is, the number one in terms of per capita tax revenues. The reason for changing this to the top two, which at the present time are Ontario and British Columbia, is that if you make a careful study of the figures you will see that it could happen that in one year or another British Columbia or some other province might have higher per capita tax revenues than Ontario, in which case the whole calculation would be thrown out of kilter. I have not got all the calculations with me, but I shall be glad to get them and send them to my hon. friend. It was certainly clear that this would result or could result in wide fluctuations from one year to another, which were not contemplated and were never intended.

It seemed, therefore, better, after studying the detailed calculations and after considering the implications, to equalize on the basis of the top two which would presumably include Ontario, at least for a good many years to come, rather than the top one.

Mr. Diefenbaker: This still does not answer the question. When did the hon. gentleman, having advocated the other course and his leader having done the same—that the proper way was to level on the basis of the top province—finally adopt the course of reason and common sense which he says is now being followed?

Mr. Gordon: I was trying to make the point a little earlier, Mr. Chairman, that one can benefit from close and detailed study. It was for this reason I thought the right hon. gentleman's proposal for a massive study in which all governments would be represented and all political parties, was a rather woolly idea, if I may say that.

Mr. Winkler: Does that mean the Liberal party did not study the matter before putting forward the proposal?

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to get into a controversy with the hon. gentleman on woolliness, especially after the budget he produced. I ask him, when did his woolly idea of levelling up to the top province change to a basis of levelling to the two top provinces?

Mr. Gordon: First of all I should like to say, as an old sheep farmer, that when I said "woolly" I did not mean it in any offensive sense. It is a term of endearment amongst those who are in this business.

In answer to his particular question, we naturally approached this federal-provincial conference with an open mind and a desire to study and benefit from what we heard there. It was about that time, I think, that we decided this would be a much better approach.

Mr. Winkler: Does the minister's statement mean that the initial promise made by his party was made without any study by the Liberal party prior to the promise being made, which has become the usual thing rather than the exception?

Mr. Gordon: I think that is a presumption that would be a little far fetched, Mr. Chairman.

If I may continue—

Mr. Brewin: I wonder if the minister, in the course of his remarks, will answer a question put to him by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, as recorded on page 5257 of Hansard. The hon. member referred to the fact that natural resource revenue would be taken into account when computing equalization payments. As I recall it he pointed out that this was in effect penalizing the provinces which are making the maximum use of their natural resources. Will the minister answer that question for our benefit at some stage?

Mr. Gordon: I believe I have answered this question, Mr. Chairman, in more general terms. We were trying to find a formula that would be fair and equitable, and it seemed to us it would be unfair and inequitable if revenues from this particular source were left out completely from the calculations. I believe this is not a new idea. It may have been done in a different way, that is all.

As I said a few minutes ago, it will be one of the purposes of the tax structure committee to try to evolve a formula for equalization that will perhaps suit more people than the present one.

Mr. Leboe: May I ask the minister, is it not a fact that this attitude towards the development of resources is going to make it advantageous for some provinces to sit on their resources rather than to develop them, and reap the benefits in payments coming from those provinces that have developed their resources? This seems to me a very wrong approach.

Mr. Gordon: I would not think it would have that effect, no. I believe there is room for a difference of opinion on these matters. Certainly the present formulae are not perfect. I do not believe any will be devised that everyone will claim are perfect. I think it will be the purpose of the tax structure committee, as I have said, to study the point that my hon. friend has just raised and all the others that will be raised during the course of the deliberations of that committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Will the minister then say, if he is not certain now of the efficacy and propriety of what is being done, why he did not wait until this committee reported?

Mr. Gordon: I think that is a very simple question to answer, Mr. Chairman. In order to go into this matter in detail, the committee will take some time. The government believed it was important to meet the points that have been raised by the provinces now rather than in two or three years time.

There are just one or two other points that were raised in the course of the debate upon which I should like to touch. I am not going to try to deal with all of them, by any means. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam suggested there should be an annual meeting of federal-provincial finance ministers to discuss and co-ordinate economic and fiscal policies. I agree that this is a good idea. It is an idea that has been accepted by the provinces. The first meeting of the federal-provincial finance ministers was held last November during the course of the federal-provincial conference. It was agreed that they would meet annually. I am hoping that there will be a meeting with the provincial finance ministers some time in the late fall.

The hon. member for Red Deer raised a question about our whole financial system, and as he dealt with it in considerable depth I suggest it might better be discussed when the revisions of the Bank Act are before the banking and commerce committee.

Mr. Leboe: I wonder whether the minister would not admit that this is a very suitable time at which to answer these questions and that an answer should not be deferred until some time in the future. Surely the committee could be given answers to the simple questions which were asked. I think they are important to the consideration of the resolution which is before us and the bill which is to follow.

Mr. Gordon: With respect, it seems to me that since this whole question will be gone into in detail in the context of the revision of the Bank Act and the Bank of Canada Act, and in the light of the report of the royal commission on banking and finance, these more fundamental questions could be dealt with better at that time, as well as in a more orderly way.

Mr. Leboe: I do not like interrupting the minister, but in my opinion it is scarcely enough to say that these questions can be dealt with in a more orderly way on some future occasion. It should not be difficult for a department to provide answers to them, and I think the real point at issue is whether or not the minister wants to give the information. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that in all fairness to the committee these questions should be answered, and not put off until some future date.

Mr. Gordon: I am afraid I did not feel that some of the questions were related to the subject matter of the resolution. I was about to say that the hon. member for Red Deer had, for example, suggested there should be an entirely new system of taxation in Canada. Before commenting on that proposal I should like to have the benefit of the report of the royal commission on taxation which has been studying this very question in great detail for the past two years.

Several other members made interesting contributions to the debate, including the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue. I hope they will forgive me if I do not comment on their observations individually. I point out there will be another opportunity to deal with these matters on the second reading of the bill.

Mr. Lambert: Before the minister resumes his seat, may I remind him that I did raise a particular point. It had to do with natural resource revenue and what I felt was an unfair lumping together of capital moneys and annual revenues. It affects the province of Alberta more than any other.

I was at great pains the other night to set out the situation and I should like the minister to give me some explanation, since this is of great interest to the province of Alberta, and likely to Saskatchewan, depending on how that province handles its natural resource development. These capital moneys to which I referred result from what is in effect the alienation of a natural resource, and these once-for-all sales are in no way income revenue on a recurring basis.

Mr. Gordon: I wonder if the hon. member would allow me to give an answer to that particular question on second reading. I am having a calculation prepared but I am not quite ready to deal with it today.

Mr. Pugh: The question I have for the minister actually is in regard to the provinces on this point of resources. Did this financial suggestion come from British Columbia or Alberta or was it suggested to them? What was the discussion on it at the time of this conference. The hon. gentleman made mention of it at the beginning of his speech on July 7. He said, as reported on page 5181 of Hansard:

> In the past year or so the amount of federal-provincial consultation has been increased very considerably. ...We have had two federal-provincial conferences which have dealt with a range of matters including the important question of tax-sharing...
> As a result of these consultations and our consideration of the financial problems of the provinces the government has come to the conclusion that the fiscal relationship with the provinces was in need of modification...

What I am wondering about on this resource point is this: Other ways have been suggested by myself, but it does seem to me very important indeed that when we are about to embark on a tax sharing agreement that is less promising we should know where British Columbia stands in relation to an ever expanding national resource program. It has been pointed out that such a program is extractive. In making greater use of your resources, in the forestry industry you use up your resources; in the oil industry you use up your resources, and it seem a little unfair the government has taken those two provinces, Alberta and British Columbia. Was this the suggestion of the provinces or of this government, and if it was of this government did the provinces resist such an idea?

Mr. Gordon: I would first refer the hon. member to the table which was printed in Hansard on July 7 in which he will see that under these changes the province of British Columbia will receive more than $16 million more per annum in 1966-67 than it would have received if these various changes do not take place. By the same token he will see that Alberta will receive more than $9 million more than if these various changes do not take place. Obviously, as is shown by the table, if no adjustments were made on account of natural resources revenues the increased amount to be received by British Columbia and Alberta would be even greater. That is a fact. There is no question that various changes, various formulae, could be suggested which would produce larger additional revenues to British Columbia and Alberta, or to any of the provinces if these were thought necessary, or desirable, or responsible. However, as I have pointed out, these changes will mean that the provinces as a whole will receive some $265 million more each year and the federal government will receive some $265 million less each year than would have been the case had no adjustments been made. So, with respect, I do not favour any formula which would increase these amounts even more than they are as set out in the table.

I think it is perfectly obvious that neither of the provinces mentioned volunteered or recommended a formula which would reduce what otherwise would be coming to them, but I again refer to the fact that both these provinces will receive a substantial amount additional to what they would be receiving if no changes in these arrangements were made. I think anyone is entitled to say that a particular formula would be better than those outlined here. But these are the formulae to which the federal government was prepared to agree, and these are the formulae which will be encompassed in the bill to be presented in due course.

Mr. Pugh: If I might just go on with this in perhaps a piecemeal fashion, I take it we have dominion-provincial relationships and this has been stressed by the present government. I asked the question as to who suggested this portion of the formula stipulating the handing of 50 per cent of resource income over to the federal government? I asked the question, was it suggested by the provinces or was it suggested by the federal government? If I cannot get an answer to that—

Mr. Gordon: I will give you an answer.

Mr. Pugh: Then whatever the answer is, did the provinces agree to this arrangement? Also, to what extent did the federal government and the provinces explore this idea?

Mr. Gordon: In the first place, Mr. Chairman, I want to correct one remark of my hon. friend right away. There is no thought whatever, and it was never intended, that part of the resource revenues would be turned over to the federal government. All that has been suggested is that half the total of the resource revenues should be taken into account in the calculation of the equalization payments that would otherwise be payable to what we all recognize are two of the wealthier provinces of the nation.

The hon. member asked me where these proposals originated, Mr. Speaker. It is a responsibility of the federal government to make such proposals. These proposals were put forward by the federal government to the conference. It has never been the custom, in recent years anyway—it certainly has not been for some time—to ask for formal agreement on the part of the provinces. I am not sure that that idea would speed things up exactly. What is done in practice—as I am sure the Leader of the Opposition would agree if he were here—is that after discussion the federal government finally has to make a proposal, and if it is not considered to be too unreasonable or unfair, it is the proposal that is adopted. But nobody says, "Will you please sign on the dotted line and agree?" I suppose some measure of agreement is indicated when the provinces accept the cheques that are paid to them every quarter or every month.

Mr. Pugh: Getting down to what I want to find out, Mr. Chairman, would the minister answer this question. Did the province of British Columbia and the province of Alberta, on this proposition being put before them, agree with it, or were they against it? Did they express any dissatisfaction with the idea?

Mr. Gordon: I do not think it is customary, Mr. Chairman, to state what goes on in detail at these federal-provincial conferences. After all, they are held in camera and it is agreed ahead of time that any statements—certainly at the last two conferences this was agreed—shall be deferred until the end of the conference, and then a communique is issued. After that the individual premiers are free to comment as they so wish. I have not a record of what Mr. Bennett and Mr. Manning said after the conference. I remember Mr. Bennett being very pleased about one item in these calculations, and that was to make the additional 25 per cent of the estate duties or succession duties available to the provinces.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Chairman, throughout this debate I have heard reference after reference made to "the provinces", reference after reference made to "federal-provincial fiscal relations" and "federal-provincial conferences", but not one word have I heard with respect to the application of fiscal theories or formulas to fiscal problems in the Yukon Territory and in the Northwest Territories.

I think I could do no better than cite at the opening of my remarks a passage from a royal commission report with which I am sure the minister is familiar, that on Canada's economic prospects which the minister headed up some years ago. At page 413 of that report, in the chapter dealing with the development of the north there appears this passage:

> There is widespread recognition in Canada that the northern reaches of the country, including the northern sections of the provinces as well as the Yukon and Northwest Territories, constitute a new economic frontier. Northern Canada today and tomorrow may be what the west was in the earlier period of our history. It not only offers attraction to those in search of adventure and fortune but it has seen industry become interested in these areas as a long term source of basic materials.

I am sure the minister is aware that the Yukon has its shared cost programs, too, as does the Northwest Territories. While the forms of government are similar, there are some rather striking constitutional differences. In the first place, the Yukon has a wholly elected council and all matters concerning supply must be voted on by that council before a penny can be spent. I have asked in this house of the Prime Minister and of others on several occasions whether provision was made, in the procedural approach of the government, to the inclusion in these federal-provincial fiscal conferences of representation by the government of the Yukon territory either as a participant or by way of an observer to sit in, so that first hand advice could be given to those who have the responsibility of making decisions which affect shared cost programs.

One does not need to stop at one department, the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, when considering the fiscal problems besetting the north, and the Yukon particularly. You can run through all government departments that have anything to do with human development and industrial development in the territories. Health and welfare, for instance, with hospital insurance programs and Canada pension plans to which the Yukon taxpayer, and the northern taxpayer generally, pays by way of contribution; Indian affairs, where the Yukon taxpayer also bears a burden regarding the programs implemented; the Secretary of State and his responsibility to report to parliament on the activities of the B. and B. commission. That commission has not yet visited the north country, yet the people there have very distinct views on confederation and the problems besetting Canada today. There is the Department of Public Works, with a huge responsibility that affects our economy very decidedly in the Yukon since the transfer of the jurisdiction for the maintenance of the Alaska highway from the Department of National Defence.

In the field of veterans affairs, Legion organizations and other veterans in the Yukon have very decided views as to whether or not veterans hospitals in this country shall be transferred to various jurisdictions. In the field of labour, a national labour code affects every workingman in the Yukon. Unemployment insurance and other matters coming within the direct sphere of responsibility of the Minister of Labour affect very vitally the daily lives of the Yukon workmen. In regard to the field of agriculture, we listened the other evening to the Minister of Forestry, who carries a split responsibility with the Minister of Agriculture for agricultural affairs as they affect the application of ARDA. He said he had visited every province in Canada, wishing to leave the inference that that was all there was to Canada. But he had not visited the Yukon or the Northwest Territories, where there exists a very good potential in agricultural development. The lack of consultation by this government and by its ministers, with one single exception in the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, shows in turn a decided lack of appreciation of what this part of Canada has to offer to the over-all fabric of national development.

It seems to me that if the taxpayers in the north in the Yukon and Northwest Territories are expected to bear a portion of the cost of the implementation of these various federal-provincial territorial programs, the people of the north should have a voice in how they are to be constructed and applied. If a hospital insurance program is to be implemented—as it was—surely representation from the two northern governments should be had as to how this implementation is going to affect the over-all economy of these two territories. Similarly with the Canada pension plan; if this is going to be implemented in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, which I assume is the intention since these areas are part of Canada, we in the north should be consulted so that the government and their advisers can obtain first hand advise as to how the application of such a program is going to affect the over-all economic fabric of our country; and when I speak of our country I mean the northern portion of it.

The last fiscal arrangement which was made with the Yukon Territory, in 1962—and the Yukon signs the same type of federal agreement as do the provinces—provided the best possible arrangement that the Yukon had ever had. I wonder whether in 1967 this sort of approach is going to prevail. I am having my fears in this regard because I see the government on every hand pulling in its horns with regard to northern development projects. The only project in the way of construction of development roads in the Yukon which is now under way is a short section of the development road from Watson Lake to Ross river. That is the only one in the Yukon this year, contrasted with the tremendous upsurge of activity in road and bridge construction during the years 1957 to 1962.

I do not blame for one moment the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources for this lack of appreciation of the great potential of northern Canada. I blame his colleagues in the cabinet, because I am sure he has in all likelihood made just as strong representations to his cabinet colleagues for a continuation of this development program in the north as he undoubtedly made with regard to keeping the jurisdiction over Eskimo affairs in the federal sphere of administrative responsibility. He probably did not meet with the same success, otherwise we would be seeing more of this economic activity, economic activity to which the minister did not seem to give much credence in the royal commission of which he was the author a few years ago. The minister recognized the fact that one of the most serious problems besetting the development of the north was communications, and I am sure it was having some regard for the observations made in that report by the minister that that great development program was launched by the previous government, a program which has attracted private industry and capital into the Yukon—

Mr. Grégoire: That is out of order.

Mr. Nielsen: —and in the Northwest Territories private industry and private investment, which has lessened the burden on the federal treasury. And if that is out of order, Mr. Chairman, then I fail to appreciate what we are speaking of here. I thought it was federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. It is comments like that, sir, from the hon. member for Lapointe which points up his supreme ignorance of affairs northern. He should be one of the first to realize, as should his confrères from Quebec, how we in the north feel about these matters. We in the north are making a last stand. As we were prior to 1957, we are again now getting back to the idea that we should have some sort of Colombo plan in operation so that we can realize some sort of development similar to that which went on between 1957 and 1962. I would invite the hon. member for Lapointe and others who display the same sort of ignorance to visit the north, as I have Quebec, and get first hand information of which he speaks.

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Chairman, I think the hon. member for Yukon is trying to evade the issue. I would like to speak of his ignorance of the rules of the house because he was out of order. I know the situation up north. I have been up there, and the hon. member should not say it is ignorance on our part when we call him to order. First of all, he should learn the rules of the house.

Mr. Nielsen: What I have said, Mr. Chairman, must have touched a sore point with the hon. member, otherwise he would not so righteously rise to drag a red herring across the subject matter of this debate with which I was pointedly dealing at the time of his interruption. School programs and educational costs in the north are substantially higher than in southern Canada. We look to the federal government to bear a substantial portion of the cost of educating our youth. Twenty five per cent of the population of the Yukon are still at school, and I am sure that these statistics in the Northwest Territories are similar. Large numbers of Indian people and Eskimos, for whom the federal government is directly responsible, are concerned, and this is surely a matter upon which the governments of the two territories should be heard.

I suggested a moment ago that what we might be looking for there is the application of some sort of Canadian Colombo plan. I hope that the minister and some of his less enlightened colleagues will visit the Yukon and Northwest Territories so that they can see first hand the conditions which exist. They speak about underdeveloped areas and areas requiring the expenditure of federal tax dollars. These are some of the more needy areas of the world today with human beings living in what amounts to little more than hovels.

Before 1957 we in the Yukon said that perhaps one of the solutions we might implement in order to obtain some sort of relief was to declare a war on the state of Alaska, and then lose it and apply for foreign aid from the United States government. This is the way we are beginning to feel again, and I am sure that the Alaskans, who are northerners under the skin, would welcome us into their embrace.

Mr. Knowles: Is that not a bit risky? You might win.

Mr. Nielsen: With the spirit of the Yukoners such as it is, I have no doubt of the outcome, no matter how many are up against us in Alaska. But what I am trying to point out is that there is this feeling there because of the decline in government investment in the north.

I know it is the view of the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources, because he stated it often enough during his recent visit across the Yukon and Northwest Territories, that the primary responsibility for investment capital in the Yukon and Northwest Territories must come from private resource sources. This is wrong. I see the parliamentary secretary shake his head when I say that I feel this is wrong. I say the primary responsibility for development there is a federal responsibility. It is the federal government which has direct control over almost all natural resources above the 60th parallel, save exceptions in the provinces of Quebec and Newfoundland.

Therefore it is the federal government that must bear the prime responsibility for implementing programs and for investing risk capital in order to create the atmosphere which will bring about a partnership between government and private industry in order to achieve development programs. That was the philosophy of the previous government and that should be the philosophy today.

The construction of the development roads and bridges—I am sure the parliamentary secretary to the minister realizes this—that went on in the Yukon in those few short years have attracted more investment dollars from mineral exploration and development companies than ever before in the Yukon's history, save during the Klondike gold rush. Twenty billion tons, a huge deposit of iron ore, was discovered in 1962 by the Crest Exploration Company. If the program that was launched in 1957-58 had been commenced ten years earlier, we would be marketing that iron ore now instead of there being some doubt of it because of a concurrent discovery of iron ore in Australia, and the means would have been found to make it competitive.

I know that the minister's philosophy on this subject is to develop the resources from the northern portions of the provinces first and then, when we need this reserve which we have in northern Canada, to go in and get it. But where else in Canada, indeed where else in the world can you hold up the development of a 20 billion ton deposit of iron ore, which could have been sold on world markets ten years ago had that private investment capital been attracted by the adoption of proper development policies.

Mr. Francis: You had your chance.

Mr. Nielsen: The hon. member for Carleton says we had our chance. I am sure he will recognize the truth of this, that in those years between the beginning of 1958 to when his government took office we did more in developing Canada's north than had been done in any other time in Canada's history. He was not here then, but if he examines Hansard of 1961 or 1962 he will find I put on the record the differences of expenditures between the two decades prior to 1957 and the five short years subsequent to 1957.

I just have one set of figures at my disposal at the moment. In 1956-57 in northern administration $11,318,000 was spent by the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources, and in 1961-62 there was $36,536,000 spent, an increase of almost three and a half times.

Where there was literally no investment by the federal government in improving communications—and by that I mean roads, radio and land lines—in the northern part of Canada prior to 1957, there is now full coverage by the C.B.C. in almost every area of Canada's north. There are land lines extending all the way up to Dawson City, and there are presently land lines under construction to Inuvik in the Arctic. This is the type of thing that mining companies and private risk capital are looking for, so that the country is not so remote that it will place the risk dollar they want to put into it at such a disadvantage with risk dollars invested elsewhere.

I say that the minister's philosophy, as disclosed in the royal commission report of which he was the author, is wrong, that we should not wait for a market to develop before looking for resources and looking for sources of resources to develop, but that we should be developing all regions of Canada now. The part that the government plays in this partnership between government and private industry is to provide the atmosphere which will attract risk capital. That should be done in the north by the government, more so than elsewhere in Canada, because the federal government is directly responsible for resource development in the north, and if the pattern set in the years 1957-62 continues, then this capital of a private nature will be attracted.

Passing very quickly to the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources itself, one of the things I feel the minister should be urging, in as strong a voice as he can, is the paving of the Alaska highway. In urging this development prior to the change of government, the principle of paving was accepted and engineering studies commenced under the previous government. I understand these are continuing today. I know the hon. member for Cariboo will support me in my urging of the paving of the Alaska highway, since it passes through a great deal of his constituency, and the minister himself will be rewarded substantially in the tremendous number of tourist dollars that will be left through the provinces of B.C. and Alberta, to say nothing of the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

The minister has informed me that there are discussions going on between Canadian government officials and officials of the United States government for the paving of the Alaska highway on a joint cost sharing basis. Since we are speaking about joint cost sharing programs it would appear that in order to obtain development in the north we have to participate in joint programs with the United States, which is a good thing.

The United States government realizes the value of paving this sole continental link between the 48 states and the 49th, Alaska, and I am sure the Canadian government, when it examines the economics will find the cost of maintaining the highway, which borders on $11 million, will be more than repaid by savings effected if the highway were paved. At present two bills have been introduced, one in the United States senate and the other in the United States house of representatives, calling for the United States government to contribute up to 50 per cent of the cost of improving, reconstructing and paving the Alaska highway. If the Canadian government does not act now, and act decisively on this gesture by the United States legislators, then we may lose the opportunity of participating with them in a cost sharing program for the improvement and paving of the Alaska highway, a program which will benefit the whole of Canada.

In the last year in office of the previous government the tourist revenues to Canada came out of a deficit position for the first time. Again this year—and I am sure the same situation prevails in all parts of Canada—the Yukon is enjoying an increased inflow of tourists from the United States and from other parts of Canada. By paving the Alaska highway and thus improving that means of communication the tourist traffic could be doubled and trebled.

There are other means by which the federal government could act in order to improve the situation with regard to the fiscal burden it must bear in the light of the existence of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories and the development of those areas of Canada. One of these the minister mentioned in his report as chairman of the royal commission on Canada's economic prospects. I refer to the tax exempt period for new mines. As the minister knows, a new mine may now operate exempt from taxation for three years. The Canadian mining and metallurgical association, the B.C. and the Yukon chamber of mines, the Alberta and the northwest chamber of mines, the conference on northern resources held in Edmonton each fall—all of these organizations have endorsed the principle that the exempt period should be increased to five years. This will do a great deal to bring new mines into production and to provide impetus for accelerated mineral exploration and development in the northerly areas of Canada. In this regard I do not confine my remarks to the Yukon and the Northwest Territories but am referring to the northern portion of the provinces as well. This sort of policy would do more to develop resources of this type than any other fiscal proposal that the government might have. There is only one possible exception and that is participation by the government with private industry in the north in the locating of smelters.

I believe that the federal government should relent with regard to its policy of excluding the government of the Yukon and the government of the Northwest Territories from representation at federal-provincial conferences. The government of the Yukon in particular, through its wholly elected council, is requesting initially not even active participation in federal-provincial conferences dealing with fiscal matters but merely that its representatives be allowed to sit in as observers.

I know the immediate answer will be that the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources or somebody from that department attends these conferences on behalf of the two governments concerned. But this is surely a shallow reply because we have federal-provincial conferences dealing with fiscal affairs where a member of the federal government is in effect representing a government which is on all fours with a provincial government in respect of legislative powers and per capita responsibilities. I might inform the minister that in the Yukon there is rather deep feeling about this matter, and with some justification. The people there look to recent statistics published by the federal government which disclose that during the last decade the per capita income tax contribution to the federal coffers from the Yukon exceeded, save for one year, the per capita tax contribution by Prince Edward Island. With such comparative statistics it seems to me there is some justification for acceding to what the elected representatives of the people of the Yukon are requesting. It is not an unreasonable request at all.

I put a question to the Prime Minister with regard to a letter he had written to the premiers of the ten provinces, and their replies show that in large measure they are not against the type of representation requested. I do not have the letters before me but to the best of my recollection there were only one or two provincial premiers who had any direct objection to this sort of representation. Most of the other premiers said in their replies that they had no specific objection.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, if I have accomplished nothing more than to get through to the Minister of Finance with this proposal I will have succeeded indeed. The thought simply is that the governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories, particularly the Yukon because it has a wholly elected council as opposed to the partially appointed and partially elected council in the Northwest Territories, share the same programs as do the provinces. They pay the same per capita costs under these programs as do the provinces. They bear the same per capita tax burden in the implementation of these programs as do the provinces. Surely there should be some method for conveying the views of the elected representatives of the government of the Yukon to those who make the final decision as to what form these cost sharing programs will take. Surely we from the Yukon should be able to present our views as to how these cost sharing programs are going to affect the over-all economic fabric of the Yukon.

This is all we are asking. This is all that has been asked by the wholly elected council of the Yukon, a council which has the same legislative jurisdiction as any provincial legislature with three exceptions, in the fields of natural resources, justice—

The Deputy Chairman: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member for Yukon to advise him that the time allotted to him has expired.

Mr. Nielsen: —and the introduction of money bills. Thank you very much.

Mr. Grafftey: Mr. Chairman, in dealing with the particular question of federal-provincial financial arrangements I feel at the outset it is almost inevitable that we touch upon the general field of federal-provincial relations. I think most members in the house this afternoon will readily admit that the general subject of federal-provincial relations is perhaps one of the most, if not the most, important subjects confronting parliament and the nation at this time. I do not want to exaggerate but I think many of us would agree that to a very large extent national unity itself depends upon our resolve and determination to find solutions to the problems of federal-provincial financial or taxation arrangements and federal-provincial problems in general.

With this in mind, Mr. Chairman, I intend during my brief remarks this afternoon to treat the subject at hand under two headings. First of all, I should like to refer to some historical and contemporary background material pertaining to the subject and especially underlining the Progressive Conservative approach to the general field of federal-provincial relations and federal-provincial taxation arrangements in particular. Second, I should like to underline some basic problems involved in the whole question today before coming to what I hope will be considered some positive conclusions.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, allow me to read a few brief considerations which I deeply value about "unity within diversity."

The Canadian constitution is the first in the world to combine a federal government system with a parliamentary system.

I have always felt that a federal government system should try to conciliate a certain degree of unity with a certain degree of diversity.

In my opinion, Canada has never been and will never be united according to the principle of the melting pot.

As everybody knows, we have a vast and thinly inhabited country. Even if our population were to increase materially and our means of communication to become faster than ever, I would still believe that "unity in diversity" should remain the basic and essential factor governing our attitude towards Canada and its people.

Our federalism is based on a particular psychology in the variety of our peoples and provinces. Union is sought, but not unity in the matter of languages, cultures, religions, etc.

This attitude, based on "unity in diversity" should always be held as a positive and dynamic factor of our national character.

In a realistic perspective, that fundamental diversity of our national life raises many problems in the edification of a nation. We are facing some of those problems today. By merely paying lip service to the necessity of mutual respect and understanding, to the necessity of co-operation, we do not stress enough that attitude which advocates a policy of "live and let live". An all-embracing co-operation is undoubtedly essential, but the sooner we shall emphasize the positive glories of our diversity, the sooner the number of those who talk of a confederation crisis will diminish.

[Text]

I felt, Mr. Chairman, that as I entered into the substantive part of the remarks I intended to make this afternoon I would put what I might term as a few keynote phrases on the record in French. It has always been my impression that one of the basic tenets of Conservative principles lies within the idea of local self-agency. I have said this in our House of Commons before, that we on this side of the house feel that people on the local level often know what is best for themselves and how best to govern their own affairs. In other words, the diffusion of powers constitutes a fundamental idea in our approach to federal-provincial relations.

This has been said time and time again, Mr. Chairman. Of course, we must have a strong federal government which must always remain strong and activist—I underline the word "activist"—within its constitutional responsibilities. There are those who would argue that Macdonald and Cartier advocated a strong central government. Well of course they did: They had no other choice. Before 1867 the parts existed but there was no whole. It was the primary task of the fathers of confederation to create the whole and to defend it. At the same time Macdonald and the other fathers of confederation profited from the experience of the drafters of the United States constitution who had witnessed the breakdown of their original central government which had been given too few powers by the original articles of confederation.

Briefly, Mr. Chairman, Conservatives fight extremes wherever and whenever they exist. In the United Kingdom for example a Conservative administration defended strong central government in the last century. They defended it against privilege. Yet today a Conservative administration in England fights against the tendencies toward over-centralization, if you will, of the socialist state. In brief, Mr. Chairman, the Conservatives' respect for diffusion of powers dictates that we discourage any exaggeration toward centralizing tendencies.

When we say that our party was the party of confederation, this means much more; it has a much greater significance than the mere fact we were in power in 1867. The spirit of Macdonald and Cartier means much more than that, Mr. Chairman. It means you have two great languages and two great cultures forming the real glory and the real strength of Canada. Today the same spirit includes Canadians of many cultural and ethnic origins as we work together to build our country. This spirit of unity in diversity keynotes the fact that the melting pot theory is not applicable to the Canadian mosaic. We have noticed, sir—and the Minister of Finance made reference to this—we have noticed that during the war years and the immediate post-war years we had strong centralized governments in Ottawa. I think it is generally recognized that today the pendulum is now swinging towards the provinces at a time when the national government has been directed by a series of minority administrations.

I repeat, and probably will repeat again in my remarks, that I believe we should always have a strong and activist central government, but it should be strong and act only within its constitutional responsibilities. The suggestions and proposals I make this afternoon are not based on a defence of the centralist position; they are not based on a defence of provincial rights. They merely recognize, Mr. Chairman, the facts of life in Canada in 1964. Disraeli criticized the Whigs for overcentralization while they divided sections of the country against one another. In Canada, sir, the same can be said of successive Liberal administrations which have encouraged excessive centralization based on a divide and rule approach. Mr. Lesage recognized this, and today in the province of Quebec the Liberal forces are splitting in two. Liberalism in Quebec has never said the same thing as it has said in the rest of Canada—

Mr. Dupuis: Again?

Mr. Grafftey: The Minister without Portfolio says, "Again". I will keep saying it again and again, and it is becoming quite apparent these are the facts of life.

Mr. Dupuis: You are entirely wrong.

Mr. Grafftey: Then why are you splitting in two in the province of Quebec? You cannot answer that. Liberal forces are splitting in two in the province of Quebec, Canadians in general, and Quebeckers in particular are realizing it is bad for our country and for the province simultaneously to have Liberal governments in Ottawa and Quebec.

Since the present government has come to power in Ottawa Canadians have become appalled at its record in the field of federal-provincial relations. I have no reason to take any pleasure from this fact because this government, I regret, has unnecessarily hurt national unity at a time when all Canadians are preparing to celebrate their centenary. Conservatives believe that because a man is intensely loyal to his family and church there is no reason to hold that his love of country is diminished. In the province of Quebec our loyalty to provincial ways and customs and to the French fact in no way lessens our true spirit of Canadianism. That Quebeckers love their province does not diminish their love for Canada and the Canadian family. Quebec has always looked upon confederation as a pact under which the provinces have their rights—something which the Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues do not seem to realize. If Liberal sectionalism told—and tells—the rest of Canada that this is an extreme type of autonomy which means no co-operation with Ottawa and the other provinces, so much the worse; the story of Cartier, Macdonald and Diefenbaker is a different story.

The Minister without Portfolio, again speaking from his seat, jests. I know all about his smear campaign—

Mr. Dupuis: I am not listening to you. I am reading my paper; that is all.

Mr. Grafftey: I know the hon. gentleman reads many papers in this house. No one did more to smear our leader in the province of Quebec. But let me quote from two great men who understood Conservative principles—Salisbury and Burke. In my view these general observations illustrate the universality of Conservative principles even in Canada at the present time. The following is an excerpt from a speech by Lord Salisbury on Conservative policy at Newport on Monday, October 7, 1885. It illustrates the persistence of Conservative advocacy of a more equitable balance of initiative and authority between central and local governments.

He said:

> Now bear it mind what true reform in local government means. It does not only mean—what I quite admit—that the local authorities should be popularly elected; but it means that, when you have got at what you want, when you have provided the proper constitution of local authority, you must provide that the local authority has sufficient powers, and that it gets those powers by diminishing the excessive and exaggerated powers which have been heaped on the central authorities in London.

Now let me quote, pertinently I believe, from a speech by Edmund Burke, because it illustrates the traditional Conservative attitude toward the morbid concentration of power in the modern state:

> It is boasted that the geometrical policy has been adopted, that all local ideas should be sunk, and that the people should be no longer Gascons, Picards, Bretons, Normans; but Frenchmen, with one country, one heart, and one assembly. But instead of being all Frenchmen, the greater likelihood is that the inhabitants of that region will shortly have no country. No man ever was attached by a sense of pride, partiality, or real affection to a description of square measurements. He never will glory in belonging to the chequer number 71, or to any other badge-ticket. We begin our public affections in our families. No cold relation is a zealous citizen. We pass on to our neighbourhoods, and our habitual provincial connections. These are inns and resting-places. Such divisions of our country as have been formed by habit, and not by a sudden jerk of authority, were so many images of the great country in which the heart found something which it could fill. The love of the whole is not extinguished by this subordinate partiality. Perhaps it is a sort of elemental training to those higher and more large regards by which alone men come to be affected, as with their own concern, in the prosperity of a kingdom. To be attached to the subdivision, to love the little platoon we belong to in society, is the first principle (the germ, as it were) of public affections. It is the first link in the series by which we proceed towards a love of our country, and of mankind.

Sir, I feel these citations are very pertinent to my general opening remarks. Let me close this portion of my observations by saying that Conservative principle with its emphasis on local self agency and its attitude towards the provinces has a most valuable and distinctive contribution to make to the contemporary Canadian scene.

At this point, under the second heading of my remarks, I should like to emphasize a few basic problems in the field of federal-provincial relations. It is my opinion that a great disservice is done when the ordinary fiscal problems connected with federal-provincial relations are confused with the general question of bilingualism and biculturalism. I fully realize that many of the legitimate aspirations of my province are obviously linked with economic considerations. But currently too many people both inside and outside Quebec are confusing the normal demands for the tax dollar with the question of English-French relations. The results are harmful.

I believe there are two main factors militating against a solution to the question of satisfactory federal-provincial fiscal arrangements at the present time. The first, as I said, in my general remarks, is the tendency of the present Liberal administration toward increasing centralization at a time when decentralization is a "must". The second is the lack of consultation with the provinces and the woeful inadequacy of permanent consultative machinery in relation to the provinces. As to the first factor, we should not really be surprised by the current push toward overcentralization in Ottawa today. We in Canada are blessed with a fine civil service but the Prime Minister, a former senior civil servant himself, surrounded by the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Industry, the Minister of Trade and Commerce, the Minister of Justice and others, all former senior bureaucrats is, consciously or subconsciously, taking a centralist position which in my view is simply out of step with the times today.

I repeat, we must have a strong central government, but it must act within its constitutional responsibilities. The present government, however, is neither active nor strong. The Prime Minister rightfully gained a reputation as a wise negotiator. But now he is Prime Minister and he must lead. If he continues to negotiate, and if as well he continues to retain this slavish attachment to outmoded centralist doctrine, the resulting damage to national unity will be incalculable. No real agreement with the provinces on tax and financial matters will ever be attained in these circumstances.

The second factor aggravating the present situation relates to the woeful inadequacy of the permanent consultative machinery dealing with problems arising between Ottawa and the provinces, and the refusal of the present government to consult with the provinces on a genuine basis in the true spirit of co-operative federalism. This government has consulted only under pressure, often too late and, unfortunately for the country only when the damage has been done. The result has been an inability to implement the major part of its domestic program.

For example, the Prime Minister says he has already created a secretariat for federal-provincial relations. But when I made specific inquiries I found the only people in the office are a part time employee—the director—and an assistant. The part time director is also an assistant secretary to the cabinet. So this in fact is merely a sham. After this procedure was set up the Minister of Justice had the effrontery to go into Montreal and before the Canadian club say that this government had set up a federal-provincial secretariat in the Prime Minister's office. This is not the kind of secretariat I am thinking of; I am thinking of a federal-provincial secretariat based on the ARDA approach and based on the national resources approach which was implemented by the previous administration under the direction of the now right hon. Leader of the Opposition. What the Prime Minister has created in this regard and what he seems to intend to do is simply not enough.

[Mr. Grafftey.]

Unless permanent consultative machinery is immediately improved, let me cite just two examples of things that could happen. The President of the Privy Council, to whom the Prime Minister intends to delegate the work of planning priorities, will virtually be unable to do his job without close liaison with the provinces. Another result would be the central government's inability to exercise proper control and direction over monetary policy. For example, what is going to happen when the province of Quebec has such great control over a funded pension plan? Consultation must be a permanent thing; the machinery for consultation must be permanent. Consultation with the provinces must be improved immediately. I know that I seem repetitive on this subject, Mr. Chairman, and my friends have often asked when I am going to stop whipping a dead horse; but I am going to speak and speak on this subject until the administration opposite takes at least partial cognizance of my suggestions.

At this point I should like to conclude my remarks by making some specific suggestions and proposals. Before further tax agreements can really be concluded with the provinces the constitution must be modernized; we must have a fresh look at sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act and the question of overlapping jurisdictions. We in the opposition are calling for a conference of federal-provincial leaders. Let us put first things first. Before satisfactory agreement on tax matters can be reached, let the federal and provincial leaders meet in order to redefine federal and provincial constitutional powers and, amongst other things, as the right hon. Leader of the Opposition said, seek proper constitutional amendment procedures here in Canada. Let it not be a meeting just for a few days. Much preparation—and other hon. members have made reference to this fact—will be necessary. The meeting itself might take many days; but I for one feel sure that the results will be more than worth while.

We might find that apart from the equalization formula and related principles many will agree that generally speaking the government that spends the tax dollar should raise it. If a provincial government, for example, does not participate in a federally sponsored plan, is it not preferable for the provincial government in question to recapture compensatory taxation powers rather than receive an annual, lump sum payment from the federal treasury? I just throw this out as a suggestion, Mr. Chairman.

Certainly the federal government has its responsibilities for maintaining and encouraging minimum standards in the economic and social fields. In Quebec, for example, wage levels and farmers' incomes are far below national standards. Poverty in our cities in Quebec is far greater than the national average. These conditions must be remedied by strong provincial and federal governments acting within their constitutional responsibilities. But this must be done consequent upon the conference to which I have referred being called immediately. While the Ottawa and the Quebec governments wrangle, the economic position of our poor in the cities and in the countryside, of our farmers and workers in the province of Quebec, does not improve one little bit. Much of the contemporary problem—I will not say all of it—in my province today is of an economic nature.

The vast majority of the people in my province know that we shall work out these problems within the framework of our confederation. Terrorists and ultra-separatists spurred on by alien forces have already taken a toll. I do not say this in a sensationalist way, but one might truly believe that the classical Leninist doctrine approach has been employed to create national disunity. I say these things not in the spirit of McCarthyism.

Once there is agreement, after such a meeting, on the constitution as suggested by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition, and the meeting redefines the powers of and modernizes the constitution, federal-provincial tax problems and financial arrangements will be more easily arrived at. Then, and only then, an active central government will be able to take a strong federal position within the constitution. There will be no separation; there will be no opting out of confederation, just as a century ago there was no opting out of the United States union. But let us profit from many of the unhappy aspects of their experience. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, future tax and financial arrangements should only be concluded after such a federal-provincial constitutional conference is called. And it must be called immediately because from what the Minister of Finance said a few minutes ago, I am very much afraid that the present government, in going into these taxation conferences in the near future, are once again about to put the cart before the horse, which is something they seem to have a knack of doing—a penchant for doing, if you will, in federal-provincial problems.

My second suggestion relates to the immediate necessity for improving permanent consultative machinery; a real secretariat for federal-provincial affairs, based on the modern resources approach and the ARDA approach commenced by the last administration which I supported in this house, must be established. This type of permanent secretariat for federal-provincial affairs should be established on the prime minister's and premier's level.

It is my hope that these observations and proposals will be of some use at a time when all Canadians of good will are searching for avenues of understanding and moderation. Unity in diversity should be the keynote of this approach, at a time when, as I said before, the voices of extremism from all sides have long since received far more than their share of attention. Hard work and the willingness to listen and understand will be required. Yet realistic optimism dictates that good sense will prevail. I for one know that 1967 will be a great and happy celebration for Canada and all Canadians.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, I do not rise to oppose the resolution as presented by the Minister of Finance. I rise for the purpose of making some observations in connection with it. We have been reminded by the minister in his opening remarks in presenting the resolution to us that we should not be misled by the simple form of the resolution into thinking that it is not complicated and is not complex.

So with that in mind I approach the general substance of the resolution itself, and I say immediately that my experience and sympathy throughout my political life has been almost entirely—at least up to 1960 entirely—from the viewpoint of the provinces rather than the central government.

We now find that this subject which is before us is of tremendous importance. Federal-provincial relations in a country such as ours are always important; today I think they are more than ordinarily important. This has been brought about for a variety of reasons. We have heard the reasons referred to this afternoon in a good many most eloquent speeches. I listened with great interest and some benefit to the speech of my hon. friend and near neighbour, the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue. I also listened to the hon. member for Yukon advancing the general needs of and urge for consideration which he felt for that part of Canada which he represents. We have just listened to our great friend, the young member for Brome-Missisquoi, who gave the house in my opinion a very fine illustration of his intense conviction for the need for co-operative action in order that this great and dear country of ours shall continue to grow, flourish and prosper as an entity.

Consequently I find myself unable to talk of co-operative federalism. To me it is quite a difficult phrase to define. I might go to the dictionary but I would still find it difficult to define. I think there exists the general opinion, both inside and outside the chamber, in the hearts and minds of most Canadians that this is our country. It is Canada, and it is a Canada which is a whole rather than a series of parts. It is with that in mind that I confess I find myself changing my viewpoint to a certain extent; not that I do not want or think it necessary to advocate any further the needs of my native province, because I do. I would be derelict in my duty if I did not speak on behalf of my province and on behalf of the Atlantic provinces generally, because that was my training and that is my urge. But I do think we cannot get away from the general idea that we as Canadians must recognize the fact that we must view our country as a whole; that in discussing federal-provincial relations we shall consider nothing which should be done so far as the provinces are concerned at the expense of a strong central government.

I want to refer in general terms to some of the events in which I have been interested and of which I certainly have some knowledge with regard to dominion-provincial relations. During the period 1944 to 1952, as a member of the opposition in a provincial house I listened many times to the premier of the province making reports to the legislature concerning his success in conducting negotiations on behalf of the province, as one of a group attending a dominion-provincial conference. I remember many times his saying that the announced proposition was as good a proposition as was possible to make in light of the responsibilities of the federal administration at the time. We criticized as much as we could and to the extent that our intelligence and general knowledge permitted us. But generally speaking I was impressed by those words—that the province got as good a deal as it felt was justified in the light of the responsibilities of Canada as a nation. That was the sort of thing I listened to during that period of time. Then after 1952 I had some connection with provincial conferences.

[Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton).]

Then a day or two ago, last Thursday to be exact, I listened with great interest and admiration to the speech of my leader, the Leader of the Opposition. I thought it was one of the finest speeches which had ever been delivered in this house. Not only was it fine from the point of view of advancing his arguments with the maximum amount of impression and knowledge, but he also suggested the particular need of today for the government to take some leadership in sponsoring what might be considered a "fathers of continuing confederation conference", a sort of new fathers of confederation conference. I am sure that is what my hon. friend from Brome-Missisquoi had in mind a few moments ago—another fathers of confederation conference, but this time a fathers of continuing confederation conference.

In my opinion, it is just as important and so much easier to keep something going which is already going than it is to start something new. I was greatly impressed with the speech of my leader, and I feel that the government can well take his suggestions to heart, and I hope they will. I trust that from the seed which he planted, which seed has been watered by quite a few hon. members here this afternoon, will come something which will be of great benefit to our country as a continuing great nation.

May I call it six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, and continue my remarks at eight.

The Chairman: Order. It is my duty to announce that the questions to be raised at 10.30 this evening are as follows:

The hon. member for Kootenay West, federal participation in developing Fraser river; the hon. member for Port Arthur, federal participation in mining developments, Timmins, Ontario; the hon. member for York-Scarborough, provision of limousine service to Toronto international airport.

It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The committee resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Mr. Chairman, when the committee rose at six o'clock I was referring to the speech made by my right hon. leader and to the fact that in it he had referred to a speech made by the premier of Newfoundland in June, 1955. He quoted some extracts from that speech, and it just so happens that I listened to Premier Smallwood when he was making it. I was encouraged then because I felt that the government of the day would pay more attention to Premier Smallwood than to me. I am not complaining; this is just a statement of fact.

I want to quote some of the words Premier Smallwood used on that occasion, as I think they are most important. He said:

> Before we become second class citizens of Canada we will show the other maritime provinces how to get out of confederation.

This indicated that at that time the premier of Newfoundland felt very strongly about the deal the Atlantic provinces were getting from the government of the day. The Prime Minister was a member of that government and also the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am not so sure whether my hon. friend the Minister of Transport also was a member.

Mr. Pickersgill: What was the year?

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): 1955.

Mr. Pickersgill: Yes, I was a member of the government.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): So, the Minister of Transport pleads guilty also.

Mr. Pickersgill: No, I don't plead guilty.

Mr. Flemming (Victoria-Carleton): Whether he pleads guilty or not, the point is that the government of that day disregarded Premier Smallwood's words and paid no attention whatsoever to them.

I want to come to the question of the discriminatory features which existed prior to the advent of the Diefenbaker government in 1957, and I want to quote some of the words which I myself uttered at the conference of 1955, speaking on behalf of the province of New Brunswick. I said this:

> Yet, Mr. Chairman, most of us will admit that certain deficiencies and weaknesses in this course of national development have become very evident. It is true that Canada as a whole gained in prosperity and social security and all provinces have made considerable progress since 1945; yet, at the same time, the discriminatory features of our federal system have not been overcome and, in some respects, have tended to grow greater over the years.
> New Brunswick has derived considerable benefits from federal social security provisions and no doubt this is true in any province where the low income groups are relatively great in number and the per capita income tends to be low. Yet, although supplementary family income from social welfare sources is welcome and useful in raising regional standards of living, the fact remains that such matters still depend and must always depend upon the regional economy in the final analysis. It will be the submission on behalf of our province that this matter can only be dealt with by a national policy specifically designed to improve regional income through helping to increase the productive capacity of areas which fall below certain indices to be determined.

At that conference the second argument that was advanced was that future tax rental agreements should include a factor that would take into consideration the taxable capacity among the various provinces, and now, some years later, I say to the Minister of Finance that taxable capacity and ability must be taken into account in all considerations with the provinces at all times.

In 1955 we of the Atlantic provinces asked the government for special adjustment grants to make up our lack of taxable capacity or, in very plain language, our lack of ability to pay. However, there was no response and no action from the Liberal government of that day. We were told it was impossible to differentiate as between one part of Canada and another, and there was no response to that request until the government led by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition came into office.

I shall tell you, Mr. Chairman, where you can find the record of what took place at that time. As set out on page 5294 of Hansard for July 9 last you will see that the Atlantic provinces adjustment grants listed there as item No. 8, and you will see that from the year 1958-59 in which they were introduced they totalled $25 million for the succeeding four years, and at the beginning of 1962-63 they were raised to $35 million and have continued on that basis until the present time. I simply wish to point out that this government is taking the benefit of a good example set by the previous administration in recognizing what was done in dealing fairly with the Atlantic provinces.

I also want to call the attention of the committee to the table placed on the record by the Minister of Finance, as recorded at page 5184 of Hansard for July 7 last, and to his remarks with respect to it when he says it shows the difference between the November 1963 proposals and the proposals of April 1964. There he states that the government of which he is a distinguished member had a change of heart in the matter of a few months and decided to give our provinces more money, but he does not say why it refused to give the provinces more money in the first instance.

Since an increase is shown I, as a New Brunswicker, am pleased to see my province will benefit, but in the minister's speech he did not say where he proposed to get the funds that he is abating to the provinces. They amount to a considerable sum of money, an additional $87 million for the current year, an additional $171 million for next year, and an additional $246 million for 1966-67. I wonder whether the Minister of Finance has forgotten that expression, "a balanced budget" which he used many times in this chamber when he was over here in opposition. I wonder whether he would acknowledge that he favours deficit spending indefinitely and forevermore.

Does he favour deficit spending in a buoyant economy? It is my understanding of economics, to the extent that I may have some knowledge of that subject, that deficit spending is used when things are declining, when it is necessary to make provision for employment and when it is necessary to do something of an unusual nature to stimulate the economy. That is the time when, according to the economists, deficit spending is justified. We hear our friends opposite bragging day after day about the buoyant economy, while at the same time they do not say where the funds are going to come from to balance the budget. That expression has not been used by them since they were over here on this side of the house.

So as a Canadian I am wondering where the minister proposes to get the money which he is abating to the provinces. In my opinion there is only one place to get it and that is by additional taxation. I think he owes it to the house to say what he proposes to tax, on what items he is going to impose tax and on what items already taxed he is going to raise the tax. These are things which I think we in this house have a right to know and to which so far he has made absolutely no reference at all. It seems to me that he owes the house more explanation than he has given us up to now.

I find no fault with the extra money for the provinces. I find no fault with the expenditure of money itself. As a matter of fact, I am rather favourable to the spending of money by governments, but I do not think the spending of money by governments should go on at a time of a buoyant economy when presumably things are as good as they can be, and still make no attempt to balance the budget, but pass the increasing debt along to our children and our children's children to pay some time in the future. In my opinion such a policy is completely unjustified at the present time and the house certainly should ask the Minister of Finance and the government to explain what they are going to do about it.

I think the minister should also have some understanding with the provinces, and perhaps through them with the municipalities as well, relative to financing. I have in mind that we as a parliament consider that the control of the monetary system, control of inflation and in general the credit of the country are and should be in the hands of the federal government. I do not think there is any question about that in the minds of any of us. But when the provinces and the municipalities are allowed to budget for deficits year after year, then year after year the money stream must of necessity be increased by that amount. It seems to me that unless there is an element of control in some way, either by agreement or otherwise, we cannot help but be bound to get a degree of inflation, with all the evils that go with it. So I think from the standpoint of the general good of Canada there must be an understanding with the provinces so that the whole question of credit, money supply and the monetary system in itself can be determined in the light of the economics of the whole country.

The Leader of the Opposition has suggested a conference on the whole question of federal-provincial relations. This afternoon the minister had some advice as to certain machinery that had been set up at the last conference with the provinces, but in my opinion that is purely on an administrative level. We have to have something more than just a set-up of people who are charged with duties and responsibilities of administration in order to deal with this most important matter of the relationship between the federal government and the provinces, both economic and political.

As I said before the supper recess, in my opinion it has become necessary to set up a second fathers of confederation conference so that there may be a genuine attempt made at the highest level possible to meet the political and economic difficulties which exist in this country, and deal with them with perhaps about the same state of mind that existed 100 years ago. We have no way of knowing that the difficulties of the fathers of confederation then were not greater even than the difficulties facing us today. I do not think we have any particular reason to feel that the particular difficulties facing us today are insurmountable, not by any means; but I do think it is the duty of the government to furnish leadership to the country at the present time in this matter. They should set up a conference of this nature, and the mechanics thereof are a matter which they in their judgment might determine. I think something certainly should be done and in my view the suggestion put forward by my leader is one which deserves the greatest amount of consideration.

Such a conference should be a meeting of the representatives of the federal and provincial governments. It might take the form of a centennial celebration to a certain extent. We are getting close to the 100 years. I would hope that such a group would be just as dedicated as the fathers of confederation were 100 years ago and just as determined to succeed as they were then. I think they would be no less determined to keep Canada together than their predecessors were to establish this great nation.

There should be some knowledge available to the federal government relative to the budget position of all the provinces. As has been pointed out many times in this chamber by the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi, there should be the closest kind of co-operation. I see by the clock, Mr. Chairman, that my time has expired. I am pleased to have the opportunity of expressing the opinions I have voiced in the last 20 minutes and in the 10 minutes immediately before the supper recess. I trust the minister will take due note of all these words of wisdom which have fallen from my lips and I thank the house for listening.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, following the hon. member for Victoria-Carleton, a former premier, may create some difficulty for me. It was on July 9 that the motion really came up for debate following the statement the evening before by the minister. The resolution we are discussing this evening is in these words:

> That it is expedient to introduce a measure to provide for the revision of certain fiscal arrangements with the provinces and to provide adjustments of fiscal arrangements and taxation provisions consequential upon the provision of youth allowances to parents resident in certain provinces.

In dealing with the sharing of taxation between the federal government and the provinces, some of us who are not quite so eloquent as some of the orators we heard this afternoon may want to come to grips with the economics of the situation. I think that all members of parliament, no matter what government is in office, feel somewhat sympathetic toward the minister of finance. He is the minister in the cabinet who has to find the money for all expenditures. He is the minister who has to pay the bill resulting from any arrangements made between the federal government and the provinces.

All of us appreciate one fact, that every government at whatever level, the local level, provincial level or federal level, is struggling to meet the bills for certain programs today. We have heard a lot about the province of Quebec today, but whether it is western Canada, Ontario or the maritimes the local governments are involved in a great struggle to try to find the finances necessary to enable them to carry out the jobs they are supposed to perform.

The provincial governments are practically in the same boat. Some governments claim they have done a better job of financing than others. I saw my good freind, the hon. member for Red Deer, just recently talking to the Minister of Finance. He may have been discussing debt free money with the Minister of Finance. In the last few years I know the Minister of Finance would have been most interested in debt free money—at least, free of debt. The hon. member for Ontario suggests that the present minister voted for it. I can appreciate that.

Then, one comes to the point of local government. In any city, whether it is my home city of Calgary or any other city in Canada, property taxes have now reached such a height that the advantages that governments provided during the last ten years, whether they be Conservative governments or Liberal governments, through the National Housing Act in assisting the average worker to get a home, have been lost. The property taxes at the local level are so high that many workers are unable to live in these houses that we, in parliament, have tried to provide.

An hon. Member: And wait until next spring.

Mr. Woolliams: They will probably be higher. The provincial governments say they cannot give any more help to the municipalities because they are having trouble balancing their budgets. If you are great jugglers, such as the premier of British Columbia or the people in the debt free province of Alberta, you do not run into these problems because you have good bookkeepers. My good friends on my left clap. The fact is if you add up the municipal debt in Alberta and the provincial debt of Alberta you will find that on a per capita basis it is as high as that of the province of Manitoba or the province of Saskatchewan, if not higher.

I have never been too friendly with the socialist government. I have said some very unkind things about them. However they balanced their budget and they left their house in very good order when they turned it over to Mr. Thatcher.

The point I want to make is that all levels of government are struggling. We pass legislation to help people obtain houses, give them new houses or let them live in better apartment blocks. But property taxes are so high, provincial tax levels are so high—and so are federal levels—that we are all feeling the squeeze. The problem finally falls on the shoulders of the Minister of Finance. If he does not perform some miracle, everything goes wrong. I am not going to enter into a debate on the criticisms of a former minister of finance, Mr. Donald Fleming. There was a lot of abuse heaped on him. There has been a lot of abuse heaped on this Minister of Finance. When he goes, there will be a lot of abuse heaped on the next minister of finance. I am sure the former minister of finance, who is sitting here to my left, will corroborate the fact that you have got to find the money somewhere, and you cannot perform a miracle.

I am sure that if I were a mouse and wandered into a meeting of the Liberal cabinet or the Conservative cabinet, I would hear the minister of finance saying, "Just a minute; stop; where is the money coming from?"

An hon. Member: Are you the mouse that roared?

Mr. Woolliams: I would not know about that, but I would say that I would put up a good roar if I were a mouse.

Then we come to the second problem. These are problems we have to face at the economic level. We are talking about equalization payments across the board for all provinces. If we were to return to the old scheme whereby each province collected its own taxes, that is income taxes and succession duties, we would find this worked a hardship on some provinces, not because wealth was not produced in those provinces but because after the people built up wealth in a province they retired to some other province. For instance, in so far as the prairie provinces are concerned, people retire to British Columbia where the climate is a little better for them to spend their declining days.

When you look at succession duties you find that the duty on stocks and bonds is paid at the point where the company has its headquarters. As a result provinces like Saskatchewan, and even Alberta have suffered from this regulation. This was true, even before Alberta had this windfall—and whether that was the result of the government or oil, I have never been able to determine. My friends seem to indicate they think it resulted from oil. I still want to be fair and I say this provincial government in Alberta has done a pretty good job. Perhaps I am a little prejudiced.

The point I want to make is that this tax revenue falls to the province in which these stock certificates have their headquarters. Now we have got into a new kind of taxation, and some people call this centralization. I am not going to agree with one speaker from this side this afternoon who indicated we do not need a strong central government, because I think we do. I am going to have something more to say about that. The point is that in attempting to arrive at a system of taxation that would be equitable and fair for all Canadians we said, "All right, the federal government is going to collect these taxes. Then we will try to distribute them provincially throughout the land on an equitable basis." I am referring to succession duties and income taxes. This resulted from the fact that people would sell their capital or other assets at a certain price and retire to another province which would benefit from the succession duties.

First of all, over the land you had an equalization of the system of taxation. This was necessary. I think I can quote a very distinguished premier in a few minutes on this point. Everyone in the house, irrespective of where he sits, will admit that a Conservative government did a very fair job of setting up a new equalization system so far as the provinces are concerned. I have been sometimes critical of Premier Lesage. Sometimes you have to see what other people are saying and thinking. Sometimes the people are called fanatics and whom I call the insane people, sitting on the fringe, seem to get more publicity because the people who think logically forget to get their ideas across to the people in this land. Mr. Lesage paid quite a compliment to the former Conservative government, as will be seen when one reads page 28 of the brief he presented November 25, 1963. Perhaps I had better name this report. It is a statement by Hon. Jean Lesage, premier, minister of finance and of federal-provincial affairs, delivered to the federal-provincial conference in Ottawa, November 25, 1963. It is interesting to note that he admitted what had been done. This is what he said:

> From several vantage points, the results of the 1960-61 federal-provincial conference—

I pause there to say that certainly was a conference under a Conservative government.

> —showed progress as compared with the former situation.

Mr. Lesage said this when he met with the new government.

> We do not underestimate this progress.

In other words, he did not underestimate the progress made during a Conservative regime so far as establishing an equitable basis for sharing taxes was concerned. I hear one of my friends laugh. Well I guess he laughed at Mr. Lesage because he laughs at other Liberals. These are Mr. Lesage's words, not mine. I quote again from Mr. Lesage:

> On other points however we have several reservations which show why we are bringing these matters up again today.

I might say when you read the whole brief presented by Mr. Lesage you will find he says in effect "We have made these points before; we are not adding anything new on the record, but we have made progress under a Conservative government and we hope we are going to make as much progress under the new Liberal government." This is the compliment that was paid by the premier of Quebec. So there was a beginning so far as this matter is concerned, a very sound beginning.

We come back to this situation. The Conservative government did work in conjunction with some of the premiers to bring about more equitable taxation between the local level, the provincial level and the federal level. The provincial premiers admit this, and this was a sound beginning. I am going to say this: I should like to conduct a Gallup poll in the province of Quebec. We hear a lot from a certain premier, and I do not know whether or not there are fringe benefits, but there are fringes, anyhow, on the question.

I question whether the people of the province of Quebec think exactly the way these people who pump out their propaganda would seem to indicate. I think they are as good Canadians as the people of Ontario and western Canada. I believe they think of Canada first. I have never found fault with any premier who comes down to meet the prime minister of Canada, whether the prime minister was Conservative or Liberal, and stands up for his province.

Look at what Alberta has to say. I have paid a compliment to the premier of Alberta and I will pay him another. He presented his brief, and he said exactly the same as Premier Lesage—that a sound beginning had been made under the Conservative government and that it was naturally hoped that this good work would be carried on by the new administration. It is a strange thing that every time the Liberals come in there is some sensitivity in reference to confederation. I do not believe that sensitivity exists to such a degree as is made out. I think it comes from those who want to pump out propaganda and generate—"generate"; that's a good word; it is better than the one I would have used—a whole lot of trouble. If Premier Lesage says he is satisfied to the extent that he has made progress, I think he is satisfied, because I do not think there is anyone in Canada who will say that Premier Lesage is not an aggressive premier who speaks up for his province.

What does the premier of Alberta have to say? The Alberta brief is not as weighty. There is not so much raw material, perhaps. The Alberta program probably did not rate so big a brief. The former minister of finance said we had more oil and therefore did not need as much money. But I do not think Premier Manning would go along with that, because we are always looking for new revenue. What did he say? He said that among the specific matters to which the conference should give attention, the government of Alberta regarded the following as being of particular importance. Then three points are mentioned, and I would say this: These three points are practically identical with the requests contained in Mr. Lesage's brief. This is what he said:

> The necessity to evolve an arrangement under which each government will be assured sufficient financial resources to enable it to discharge its constitutional responsibilities without loss of its rightful sovereignty and without imposing oppressive burdens of taxation and debt upon its people.

Premier Manning said that. If Premier Lesage had said that, some of the French people would say: He wants to break away from confederation. I am sure Premier Manning does not want to break away from confederation. But I would say this: If we allow these fanatical people—fanatics I say, almost insane in their propaganda—to get away with it in Canada, then the rest of Canada is going to fall to the United States; and I believe there is not one thinking person in Quebec, from the premier downward, who does not believe that whatever the situation has been culturally, economically or constitutionally, the people have had a better deal under confederation in a country called Canada than they would get if this country was taken over by the United States—with the greatest respect to the United States, because I am Canadian first.

It is time we understood what is going on. The premiers of the west are not really saying much that is different from Premier Lesage. It is the interpretations which differ, particularly when they are irresponsible. On page 2 of the brief, Premier Manning said:

> The provision of effective incentives to stimulate more active economic growth and the forms such incentives should take and the means by which they can best be provided.

He, too, criticized in some degree—and I am not quarrelling with him—these shared programs, because they push a province into a position where it has to dip into its resources in order to find money to help carry out these projects. On page 40 of his brief Premier Lesage says exactly the same thing.

So these two provincial premiers are not very far apart, and if that is so it seems to me we are not in very much trouble as far as confederation is concerned, because all of us press for benefits for the part of the country we live in, wherever it may be—in Alberta, if we live in Alberta, or Saskatchewan if we live in Saskatchewan, or Quebec if we live in Quebec. That is Canadian; there is nothing wrong with it.

Further on he says this:

> Other joint programs have barely been started. This is more particularly the case in Quebec since 1960. Financial equivalence should therefore take into account the cost of these plans, had they been allowed to reach what might be called their "maturity". Briefly, if Quebec does not count on the abolition of conditional grants and on the financial equivalence which would result therefrom to obtain otherwise not expected revenues, there will be no question either of Quebec being satisfied with anything other than its fair share of federal funds.

Premier Manning has said practically the same thing. When the leader of the New Democratic party was premier of Saskatchewan I heard him present his brief on one occasion and, as is proper, he fought for his province. He should have fought for it; he was the premier of that province. But there is a disturbing factor. It might have been carelessness or it might have been overenthusiasm in the heat of an election campaign, but the Liberal party went out and promised certain programs without consulting the provinces. They said: We will bring them in within 60 days. This was so they could look like great men. Then they brought in this legislation later on in the absence of consultation and, as a result, we did get some sensitivity about confederation. And if Mr. Lesage stood up and said "Just a minute" to the Prime Minister of Canada, he was right. And if Mr. Manning stood up and said "Just a minute" to the Prime Minister of Canada, he was right, too; because we in the Conservative party believe that one must consult the provinces in this regard. Why? Because under confederation, according to the sections of the law which divide jurisdiction between the provinces and the federal government, certain powers go to the provinces and certain powers are retained by the federal government. That is the position according to the constitution. Therefore the Prime Minister and his government should have consulted with the premier of Quebec and with the premiers of the other provinces before they tried to thrust certain programs down people's throats. That is what happened. And when hon. gentlemen over there learn to be less arrogant, to be less overbearing and to have a greater sense of humility, there will be a strengthening of the fabric of confederation because then you will not have the sensitivity which now exists, although it has been blown up out of all proportion.

I move around this land. I talk to French Canadians and to people out in British Columbia. Essentially, every Canadian thinks the same. He wants to keep Canada Canadian and make sure that every Canadian lives with dignity with his family. Every government, irrespective of criticism which has been directed toward it, has tried to implement such a program, with the one exception of the new government which came in last April. The government which was led by Mr. St. Laurent did consult the provinces. But hon. gentlemen opposite failed to do so and this was because they were pledged to take some kind of action within 60 days.

So there is the situation. If there is any trouble with regard to confederation, responsibility lies on the shoulders of those who sit on the treasury benches—and those benches are vacant, so it does not weigh too heavily. We westerners are not very good diplomats. I think the Minister of Finance will agree with that. But if confederation is to proceed untroubled, there must be tolerance and there must be compromise. I do not mean the kind of wishy-washy compromise which would divide this country. It must be tolerance and compromise based on national responsibility. Any other kind becomes appeasement, and appeasement will destroy, never create. If we read through the pages of history, whether of national or international affairs, we find that wishy-washy appeasement always brings about disunity.

So I repeat, Mr. Chairman, that one thing we should certainly have is tolerance of one another. Certainly we must make compromises at all levels of government, but there must be the kind of tolerance and compromise that is responsible or this country will be destroyed. We have a lot of wishy-washy nonsense talked about expenditures, and how we are going to go it alone. No section of this country can go it alone, because if you look at the budget of this country you will appreciate that we spend $7 billion a year, and the greatest proportion of that expenditure is for defence. We know that today we get into local and parochial arguments and disputes and talk about dividing some parts of this country from the rest.

I tell you, Mr. Chairman, that we face a new situation in this world. We must keep our partnerships in the western world, whether we have the threat of the cold war or not, because there is a new kind of communism that even the old kind of communist fears; and we need all the strength we have in the western world, whether it is the strength of 19 million people in Canada or the strength of all the peoples in NATO and the defence of this continent in NORAD. When we talk about dividing this country we should start thinking about our grandchildren, because our grandchildren's chance of survival in the kind of life our forefathers came here to build will only remain and be perpetuated if we stay together as a nation and internationally.

This political nonsense—I do not want to single anyone out and I would not single out any one party; but I could single out a few individuals—that is spread in this country, the talk about Quebec leaving confederation or any other province leaving confederation, does nothing to help unity; because if they left it would only be on borrowed time and before long there would be some new threat in this world. With 19 million people we are still among the world leaders with the United States, because we lead the way with them. I believe our way of life is superior to that of the United States in regard to jurisprudence and even democracy. This is because we have not the problems they have had to face. We have not had to measure up to the responsibility of world leadership yet; but we should bear that responsibility with the United States to make certain that our world on this side of the iron curtain—and, let us hope, our ideas—will spread to make us safe against communism.

Perhaps some of us will be accused, because we have spoken up like this tonight, of filibustering. It may be said we have delayed the workings of the House of Commons. It might be better for some of us to face a little delay and do a little sound thinking with regard to keeping this country together, because this is most important economically. I now wish to put forward a practical approach to this problem, Mr. Chairman. Today is Monday, July 13. I would ask the press particularly to turn to page 11 of our Orders of the Day, where they will see what has been accomplished in this parliament since May 13. Compare this with any other parliament and you will realize we are doing a little better than we did in previous parliaments. This is most important. We have done very well this session. I say this with the greatest respect, but it may be just a coincidence that the Prime Minister has been out of the House of Commons and has been in London for the last few days. But whatever the reason, we have done a little better and the word is proceeding. Thirty eight items have been passed, and this is a little better than average. As far as I am concerned, as one who observes parliament from day to day, this parliament is going along normally. The sole reason for my raising this question is that I have been accused in the past when I have risen in my place—as have many other hon. members when making speeches—of holding up the business of the house. Let the government put the business on the order paper, and it will be done.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, the hon. member for Bow River does a lot of talking in this house. Sometimes what he says makes some sense. I must compliment him tonight on the fact that most of his remarks make quite a lot of sense. But some of them do not make so much sense sometimes. A short while ago he tried to point out that the municipal debt of Alberta was as high as or higher than that of most provinces in Canada. What he did not say was that more than $400 million of this debt is owed to the provincial government. Any time the provincial government wanted to do so, it could wipe out that debt and no one would have been the loser. It does not do so because it uses this money on a revolving fund basis to help the development of municipal capital projects.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. member would allow a question?

Mr. Thompson: I did not ask the hon. member any questions when he was speaking, Mr. Chairman, so I would prefer that he wait until I have finished.

Mr. Woolliams: I have just one question.

Mr. Thompson: You may ask me a question when I am through speaking. He does not really like to hear these comments, Mr. Chairman, but this is the basis upon which Alberta has developed its resources and municipal finance, so that today there are more towns and villages complete with sewage systems and water development, and more miles of paved roads simply because they have used their own resource capital for the development of their municipal and city areas. But this is not the question to argue about tonight, because even provinces such as Alberta or British Columbia, which have been able to balance their books and run things in rather an efficient way down through the last number of years, today face problems which even their administrations are going to find very difficult to overcome.

The reason is simply this. Under the policies of the federal government we are faced at the present time with a situation where the sum total of government expenditure, provincial and federal, tends to be much more than the sum total of government income. Last year—as I mentioned the other night—the federal and provincial governments of Canada spent well over $1 billion more than they took in. The situation is going to be worse this year, simply because under the limitations of the present system there is no other alternative; and unless something is done to change this situation we are really going to be in financial difficulties. It all comes back to the question of the provincial fiscal arrangements that are in existence at the present time. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance that it does not really matter so much how these provincial fiscal arrangements are juggled; it is the taxpayer who pays the tax dollar and it is he who is carrying this ever spiralling burden of tax load that is heaped upon his back.

Therefore I would suggest to the committee that unless we face up to this issue and get at the fundamental cause of the situation, merely doctoring it up as we are doing is not going to change anything or help the situation at all. After all, it is the taxpayer who pays the tax dollar. While we may talk in this house a great deal about how we are going to adjust the expenditure of the money that is collected from taxes or borrowed in the taxpayers' name, how we are going to change our basis of sharing this tax income does not matter because under our present system with regard to debt, it is bound to increase and the tax load will go up with it.

As I mentioned the other night, 15 per cent of all our federal income goes just in paying the service cost of our federal debt. Likewise there are similar difficulties in most of the provinces. Even more difficult than provincial or federal financing is the question of municipal financing. There are literally scores of municipal governments in this country today which have borrowed up to the hilt and cannot borrow any more. This is because the debt burden they carry is more than their normal tax load can manage. So I am absolutely convinced it is essential that in dealing with this subject we must face this thing at its very roots.

One of the ways in which our provincial and municipal governments could be helped so much more than they can be helped by juggling our provincial fiscal arrangements is to make available that capital which is necessary for capital development, and to make it available on an entirely different basis than what we are doing at the present time. We have talked a good deal about social capital, the term accepted today across the country to describe the money necessary for the development of our social capital needs. Rather than operate on a deficit basis as we are at the present time there is no reason at all why such social capital cannot be made available through the Bank of Canada, under a separate arm of the Bank of Canada such as is the industrial development bank. On such a basis we could really provide the assistance to the provinces which the provinces need so urgently, and will be able to help them a little out of the crisis they face because of the problems which are part of the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements about which we are talking tonight.

The other day in speaking to this resolution I referred to the remarks the minister had made when he presented the resolution to the house. The minister expressed concern about the continuing increase in deficits, and said there is a limit beyond which the federal government cannot go. To me this brought to mind a statement made previous to these remarks, in which he said that during this coming fiscal year he expected there would be a deficit of $455 million according to the traditional method of accounting. At that time I asked him a series of questions, and I referred to his reference to traditional methods of accounting. If we could have the answers to the questions which I posed to him, I believe we would have answers which would show that it is possible to provide social capital needed in this country without the tremendous debt load it carries today. I want to put these questions back on the record, and I do so because this afternoon—

Mr. Horner (Acadia): Would the hon. member permit a question?

The Chairman: Order. The hon. member for Red Deer has the floor and apparently does not wish to answer any questions.

Mr. Thompson: I mention them at this time because this afternoon the minister stated he did not think it was necessary to answer these questions at this time because they did not relate to the resolution before us. I disagree with him about this because these questions take their root in the very fiscal arrangements which we are discussing, fiscal arrangements which are so important to the provinces and which I do not think are being handled properly at the present time.

My first question is: To what extent has the Bank of Canada purchased government bonds? That is a simple question, very easy to answer, and it will take the right person only a few minutes to find the statistics to answer it. Second: What is the average length of time that these bonds are likely to be held before they are sold? Is there anything difficult about that question, Mr. Chairman? It is really very simple. The third question is: How many of these bonds are likely to be held until they mature? That can be very simply answered too if the minister has the available statistics to which I am referring. How much money is actually paid to the Bank of Canada in interest on these bonds which the Bank of Canada holds? I have reason to think there is a good deal of money going back into the consolidated revenue fund as the result of the interest paid on these bonds. My point is that if this can be done as far as our present financing is concerned, why cannot it be done to assist the provinces and the municipalities as well?

Another question I asked the other night was: What portion of these charges, this accrual of interest charges on government bonds, is returned to the consolidated revenue fund? I believe the minister owes it to the committee to answer these questions, because in the answers to these questions lie the solutions to some of the problems the provinces are facing. I would ask, Mr. Chairman, that the minister give the answers to these questions while we are still debating this resolution, or on the bill which follows.

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, I only want to take a few minutes of the time of the committee to comment on the minister's opening statement about the tremendous degree of amity which has been Canada's experience over the last year, ever since the Liberals came to power, in terms of federal-provincial relations. I cannot let his statement that there has been nothing but love go by unchallenged. Tonight I want to discuss this subject for a few minutes because in fact there has been absolutely no consultation, ever since the Liberal government came to power, between the federal government and the governments of the Yukon and Northwest Territories.

I realize, Mr. Chairman, that my hon. friend and colleague from the Yukon covered most of this in his remarks earlier today and I will not repeat what he said. Surely it will suffice to point out to the committee that I think there has been little respect shown for consultation and little indication of concern on the part of the minister or his colleagues for the people in the north. In fact, the Liberal government have been so concerned that they have allowed the government of the Northwest Territories to lapse and go out of being completely, so that for a period of four and a half months last winter, from December to March at any rate, we never had even a legislative council in the Northwest Territories. That is the extent to which this government is concerned about democracy in some 50 per cent of Canada.

Perhaps I may be permitted to point to another example. Ever since the twenty sixth parliament the hon. member for Yukon speaking for the Yukon, and I representing the Northwest Territories, have been asking the federal government to allow the governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories to sit in on federal-provincial conferences. It may come as a surprise to the members of this committee, indeed to the public at large, to learn that the territorial governments of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are not allowed to sit in on these federal-provincial conferences, not even as observers. When I look up the index for the first session of the twenty sixth parliament I find that on five different occasions I pleaded with the federal government to allow us representation at these conferences, and every time I was turned down. I find that the hon. member for Yukon made the same request six times. On looking at what has gone on since the second session commenced I find that the hon. member for Yukon and I have each on six different occasions begged this government to allow the Yukon and Northwest Territories to send an observer to these meetings, to this tremendous consultation which is going on, and we were refused every time.

Twenty four times in the last 15 months we have asked the government, "Would you give those of us who live in the north a chance to have a representative sit in at your meetings?", and the answer we have received is that we are to be represented at the federal-provincial conferences by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources who is going to negotiate for us in a hard-headed bargaining type of way. What kind of nonsense is this? To what extent is the minister going to get up on his hind legs and defend the interests of the north?

When the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration and the Minister of Justice got up and said to the minister of northern affairs, "We are going to sell the Eskimos, in order to make a little deal over here with the province of Quebec" to what extent did the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources stand up and say, "You shall not make a deal to sell these people." If it had not been for the official opposition the deal would have been made.

Mr. Francis: Relating to the remarks which the hon. member has made, has he discussed this subject with the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue today?

Mr. Rhéaume: Mr. Chairman, if I am allowed to have the floor now, I will continue. When the Minister of Finance said that everything was tremendously smooth I was interested in what he said as recorded at page 5,181 of Hansard for July 7 last:

I had to have some sort of introduction.

That is how he explained what he had been saying. So far as the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are concerned there has been no consultation since the government took office. The minister's statement is completely misleading in its application to what the truth is in the north, and I have no reason to accuse the minister of telling the truth in southern Canada either. As a northerner it seems to me that we are not to be allowed consultation in federal-provincial matters.

Do the federal ministers really understand the needs of the country? If we are not allowed to have our own people at these conferences we want to know to what extent the ministry knows about northern matters. I shall give two examples, and one is the fascinating statement made by the Minister of Agriculture as recorded at page 5239 of Hansard for July 9, when he was asked to what extent the government was going to implement its program of free milk for children in Canadian schools. The minister was fresh from a breakfast he had just thrown for some 3,000 people in Calgary where they cooked up 350 dozen eggs and this minister, with his hands spread across the fullness of his being, said that most Canadian children are so full of milk that they cannot possibly hold any more.

Let me read to the minister and his colleagues a little bit of what in fact is the truth of the situation among some thousands of children in the Canadian north, and I may say this is not just in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. I am quoting from page 224 of the Hall commission report—and I suggest to the fulsome Minister of Agriculture that he should read it before making these kinds of statements.

"Inhuman"—is the way a public health nurse described, in the course of a conversation, the living conditions of the Eskimos in her community. An apt description indeed. To realize this one has to shed the romantic ideas of Eskimo life, derived from children's books and movies, and walk through a settlement of Eskimo tents on a cold September night with the wind and rain lashing against the flimsy tents, babies crying and whimpering, and children and adults alike coughing inside. Outside is the stench of human and dog excretion and of rotten food scraps. The tent houses not only the family but all their belongings and implements—

Substantial beginnings have been made against the odds of northern logistics in the provision of health services, housing and some means of sanitation. Nevertheless, hundreds of families still live under conditions that would not be tolerated elsewhere even in a more moderate climate.

The members of the commission were so staggered by conditions that they made a recommendation saying:

> While it is beyond our terms of reference to make recommendations in these related fields, we suggest that considerations of humanity and economics make it imperative for governments to to take comprehensive and practical actions in these related fields because without them the serious health problems facing Canadians everywhere but particularly in the north cannot be adequately and effectively resolved.

I am using this merely as an example, but I suggest to the Minister of Agriculture that he go back into the next meeting of this multimillionaire cabinet that characterizes the government and tell his colleagues what is going on and ask them to reinstate this program for free milk for school children in the Canadian north, many of whom do without milk from the time they are weaned. If he has any doubt about what I say is true I defy him to go to the Minister of Transport and ask him if it is true that the children in Newfoundland are so stuffed with milk that they cannot possibly stand any more nutrition.

I shall give another example of the kind of thought and ignorance that characterizes the government in terms of northern needs. Today I asked the Acting Prime Minister if the government would consider giving everyone in the Northwest Territories the right to vote. I asked this because the Prime Minister is over in London telling the people of the world that the commonwealth must give leadership in seeing to it that people of all colours, creeds and levels have an equal chance of citizenship. The Acting Prime Minister got up and said he did not understand; that there was no logical connection between these two statements.

Surely the government is aware that there are 10,000 Canadian citizens in the north, mostly Eskimos, who are not allowed to vote for their councillors who make their laws on education, on health, on furs, trapping and liquor. Surely he must have answered facetiously. I have a couple of quotations here that I simply will not deny to the committee, relating to the visit of the Prime Minister of Frobisher Bay. He was on his way from the breakfast party for the 3,000 people in Calgary, this great breakfast orgy the Minister of Agriculture had. It was not like the Roman orgies; it could only be compared to the orgies the barbarians had after they sacked Rome. This is a press report from the Edmonton Journal of July 7 last:

> The Pearsons were surrounded by flag-waving children who giggled delightedly whenever Mr. Pearson gave them a friendly pat on the head. Eskimo women, with babies packed on their backs, puffed on cigarettes, smiling proudly with each prime ministerial greeting.
> "I am very happy to be with you tonight," Mr. Pearson said. "We are all Canadians—the only difference is that you were here before we were."

If the Prime Minister wanted to tell the truth to those Eskimo people he could have told them about a few other differences. For example, he could have told them, "You are not allowed to vote for your own territorial legislators who make your laws on fur, game, liquor and education." He did not say to the Eskimos, "Your men have a life expectancy of 26 years and your women of 21½ years, while ours in the south is 60 years." He did not say to them, "Your infant mortality rate, my fine Eskimo friends, is four times as high as that in the south, and 40 per cent of your grandchildren will never live to celebrate their first birthday." He did not tell them, "Death from infectious diseases among you is ten times as high as among us in the south and you will have ten times more deaths from tuberculosis." He did not tell them, "Ninety per cent of your men are unemployed,"—at a time when the Minister of Labour is saying that unemployment is now a seasonal thing in Canada. He did not say to them, although it amazed me, that they are so stuffed with milk they need nothing from now on but three maple leaves to be happy.

A new book has just come out, and before the Prime Minister or any of his multimillionaire cabinet visit Frobisher Bay again I suggest they read it. It is a book entitled "Eskimo Administration, Canada", and it is written by Dr. Diamond Jenness, a world renowned authority. It has just been published, and because the statistics I have already given on infant mortality are taken from this book I will do nothing more than read parts of the index: chapter 1, "Government Myopia", chapter 2, "Wards of the Police", chapter 3, "A Shackled Administration", chapter 4, "A Shackled Administration (continued)", chapter 5, "Bureaucracy in Inaction", chapter 10, "Steering Without a Compass". And so on. It is sickening. Yet the Minister of Agriculture, fresh from a breakfast of 350 dozen scrambled eggs, says that Canadian children are so full of milk we cannot get any more into them. Shame.

Mr. Watson (Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie): Can the hon. member tell me when Diamond Jenness gathered the facts that are in this book?

Mr. Rhéaume: The figures I gave on infant mortality, disease and so on are for 1963. In any event, before the Prime Minister decides to visit these benighted people of his and pat them on the head I suggest he find out what is going on in the country and that he and his cabinet be careful before they go around saying that everyone is so well fed.

Mr. Dupuis: It is 1962-63.

Mr. Rhéaume: The figures are 1963.

An hon. Member: Were they any different in 1962?

Mr. Rhéaume: Here we go, Mr. Chairman, with that great Grit argument that says that since things were not done before, they need do nothing more. I have said in the house before that the great belief of Liberalism is that you do nothing except take office and that by some strange osmosis, by some mysterious alchemy, everybody in Canada is better off. The Minister of Agriculture stands there and says: Why, we are drinking sillabub in Calgary, and everywhere else everybody is full of milk. I do not know what the minister is full of, but Canadians in my part of the country are not full of milk.

With respect to the whole matter of federal-provincial relations it is frightening to me when I see nothing being done in the Canadian north. In the last 15 months federal spending has in fact dried up. When I think of the projects which are now in the process of offering hope to the people, I realize that not a single one of them has been started in the last 15 months. They are all merely carry-overs. I do not mean they are not good. The Great Slave lake railway will penetrate the Northwest Territories. For the first time on August 10 steel will have crossed the 60th parallel. Every Liberal in the House of Commons voted against the Great Slave lake railway when the bill was before the house. Telecommunications are in fact being extended down to the Arctic ocean, but this is not a new program; it was started three years ago. The same is true of school construction.

What is frightening to me as a northener is that the tremendous effort put forward in the five years of Conservative administration was merely a beginning. When the hon. member for Châteauguay-Huntingdon-Laprairie asks whether these terrible conditions among the Eskimos existed in 1962, the truthful answer is yes, they did. Certainly they did. But the fact of the matter is that in 1962 some 60 per cent of the Eskimo children at least had access to schools compared with less than 15 per cent in 1957.

I am one who has never tried to suggest in the house since being elected that all the answers were provided by the Conservatives, but the groundwork of schools, nursing stations, hospitals, communications, airports and roads was laid. A good start had been made, against tremendous opposition by the members of the opposition of that day, the Liberal party of Canada. They said it was a nightmare. I am not going to repeat all the things they said. Let it be clearly understood that the facilities that were then being provided were nothing more than the groundwork. At no time did the previous administration ever say that everything was solved and that there was nothing but harmony, sweetness and light in the Canadian north.

The previous administration said many times—I used this at the time I was campaigning; it was true then and is still true—that the maddeningly slow job of counteracting the terrible human problems had begun. What frightens me and what I lay at the doorstep of the present administration is that they have cancelled this program, and I suggest that the things they have done are not worthy of respect.

One or two programs that perhaps did have a bit of imagination when applied in the south are completely stupid when viewed in a northern context. I think of the winter house construction program. I would love to read the Minister of Labour some of the letters I have received from northerners who are trying to qualify for the $500 bonus under a program that contained no special provision for transportation problems long after the rivers are frozen up and you cannot ship stuff in there. The program made no provision for climatic conditions. One of my constituents said to me: I am sure the Minister of Labour does not know whether he is talking about Hay River in the Northwest Territories or Florida.

I think of how the Minister of Labour said in the house that the government was going to lessen the number of months in which municipalities can qualify for the municipal winter works program. He said that winter in this country only extended from late November to early March. I do not know when winter ends in Inverness-Richmond or wherever he comes from but I can tell the house that I was at Cambridge Bay and Coppermine in the Northwest Territories about 10 days ago and the water is still frozen, with the result that the ships will not get in for a while yet.

Ever since the government took office there has been a complete absence of any reference to the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. Just a few weeks ago the hon. member for Yukon proposed a resolution that would have done something in terms of tax relief for the north. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George, who is a bit of a northern expert by virtue of having made two trips in a DC-3, talked out the resolution. He said: No, this is not a good thing for northerners; if there is anything that would harm them it would be an income tax reduction. His remarks were fascinating and not only in terms of their strange logic because it is usually that embryo leader of the Liberal party in Ontario, the hon. member for Renfrew South, who does these things. But here we had the parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources saying: No, no, from my vast and profound experience of the Canadian north the people do not need a tax reduction. It is a bit like the Minister of Agriculture saying that children do not need milk.

An hon. Member: How many trips did he make?

Mr. Rhéaume: He made two trips. Having made these remarks I am going to close with a plea to the government. I want them to be a bit like the Secretary of State for External Affairs when he said: Well, if I said that I was obviously wrong. I want them to admit their mistakes. I want them to resolve that in the interests of the poor, ragged and tattered people who frequent Canada's north they will depart from this policy of helping only those areas where the most federal seats are.

The charge has been made that the Liberal party has never really cared about equal opportunities for Canadians, that they only worry about those places where they can get the most federal seats. There are people who believe this is one reason why the change was so obvious under the previous administration, in that for the first time in Canada the maritimes, the west and the north received a fair share of the federal treasury. If this charge is not true, and I for one would like some evidence from the present cabinet that it is not true, then maybe some day in the future some prime minister of Canada can alight from an airplane at Frobisher Bay on Baffin island and honestly say to the people there, "We are all Canadians; the only difference between you and me is that you were here first."

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Rhéaume: Certainly.

Mr. Moreau: In view of his statement that the Liberal party do not believe in equalization of opportunity, I wonder how the hon. member justifies his party's position on family allowances which, I am sure he would agree with me, is one of the greatest equalization factors for the Eskimos in the north?

Mr. Rhéaume: It is difficult to answer this question in a few moments. I do not happen to be an expert on what went on in this house in 1944, as my hon. friend from York-Scarborough is. However, I do know this—the hon. member for Winnipeg North says the hon. member doesn't know even what is going on now. I do not believe that is quite true. I do know this, I will stand behind the record of the leader of the official opposition in so far as social justice in this country is concerned, if the hon. member for York-Scarborough will do the same.

Mr. Leboe: I have no intention of making extensive remarks tonight. However there are one or two things I should like to mention. There was a reference made this afternoon to succession duty taxes in British Columbia and to people moving out to British Columbia, thus enabling that province to benefit from the succession duties. I should like to remind the committee there is something else that takes place that is very important. As a result of climatic conditions, a good many people go to British Columbia looking for work and they become a charge on the municipalities and the province of British Columbia. When you are out of money and you have to go on welfare you might just as well live in a warm climate, so people go to British Columbia and bask in the beautiful climate.

An hon. Member: From the Yukon?

Mr. Leboe: I do not know whether or not they come down from the Yukon. Those people are generally wealthy, I believe, and that is the reason they are up there.

Now, the minister did say something about understanding in Canada. When he replies, I should like him to enlarge upon the statement he made that there were people in Canada who were making understanding between the various sections of Canada more difficult. I should like to know what the minister had in mind when he said that there were these people. If the charge is left as it is, it is a little difficult to know whether he is talking about one part of Canada, two parts, or six parts. I should like to have him deal with that.

Reference was made this afternoon, also, to the Alaska highway. I think this, along with the trans-Canada highway, is something that does enter into the fiscal arrangements between the province and the federal government. There is no secret where I stand on the subject of the Alaska highway. I believe that we should get along with the paving of those sections which fall in the alignment and which do not require a great deal of reconstruction before paving. British Columbia has offered to pay one half of the paving cost to the northern boundary of British Columbia. I believe the federal government should move immediately in this direction. I am sure the minister of northern affairs and the Minister of Public Works agree with me, but unfortunately they have deputy ministers who are perhaps a little more difficult to deal with than the ministers.

If this extra paving is undertaken throughout the whole length of the highway which falls within Canada, then the work should be done by Canadians under Canadian contracts. If this were done we would avoid the serious situations which evolve when you have United States contracts and Canadian contracts and the United States contractor may be paying $3.50 for a catskinner while the Canadian contractor may only pay $2.55. We would avoid this situation and we would also be able to collect from the United States after negotiations had been completed. We are not giving away all our trump cards because sooner or later the United States will want a railway to Alaska. When they do, if they have not settled the Alaskan highway question properly, then they are going to be in difficulty with their railway to Alaska.

I should like also to mention a situation in connection with the returns to the provinces from natural resources. I have not heard the minister answer this question as yet, and I have been here most of the time. Has consideration been given to the value of the returns to the provinces for the natural resources that have been alienated? I recall an article some years ago in the Toronto Telegram which pointed out that out of an equal number of units, shall we say, of the alienation of natural resources the province of Ontario had $4 million returned to the people whereas a like amount gave the province of Alberta $112 million. I am wondering whether or not this return to the people of the provinces from their natural resources is taken into account when the figure is used as a basis for taxation purposes under this new scheme.

The minister also mentioned that there were circumstances surrounding the provincial situation now that were not contemplated. I gathered from that he was referring to the fact that Ontario is not left alone as the basis, as it were, but several provinces are brought into the picture. I take it from his statement that is the accepted thing. If you are going to develop a province, you will have to create in that province an industrial climate, and this is exactly what has been done in the province of British Columbia to the extension of railway, and hydro facilities. Any province that will go into the business of earnestly developing power and transportation facilities is bound to get more development for that province.

The hon. member for the Yukon and the member for the Northwest Territories mentioned the development of their areas. I think they have a good point. Rather than try to penalize provinces that are developing their natural resources, why not pour a little money into the northern areas to help develop those areas? I think these hon. members have a good point which should be followed up vigorously. If the federal government did that, then perhaps in the future they could gather more taxation from that area. It might be a fertile area and well worth spending some very large sums of money.

We have been talking about the difficulties that we have in the provinces and municipalities. We know that today expenditures amounting to millions and millions of dollars are being wasted for national defence. I should like to pose this question for the Minister of Finance. Would he be able to tell us, if suddenly we were confronted with a situation in which this defence expenditure were put into the production of consumer goods, where the money would come from to buy those consumer goods which would be turned out instead of armaments? I think there is a dilemma facing the minister here which he would hate to contemplate. It has been said over and over again—and it is a difficult thing to say—but sometimes we wonder whether we can afford peace under our present financial structure. There is some sense attached to this. I can recall the period during the war when we in Canada were faced with great inflationary pressures because of the fact that huge sums of money had been pumped into the war effort. So we devised a scheme of victory bonds, war savings certificates, war savings stamps and compulsory savings so as to take money out of circulation and hide it away against the time when it could be filtered back into the economy after the war had ended. We know today that the Liberal government was able to balance its budget for nine years with money which was flowing back as a result of returns from savings certificates, war savings stamps, compulsory savings and so on.

When the situation is in reverse, as it is today in many parts of the country, should we not have the same financial process making sure that the purchasing power is in the hands of the people so as to buy back the things which they themselves produce by using the methods which were used during the war to prevent inflation, only in reverse? Should not the converse be brought into being so that we could put money into circulation at municipal level so as to establish a greater increase in the amount of goods and services which are taken home and actually used?

There was a program on television last night dealing with what they call cybernetics—automation and technological advances. Something which Mr. Aberhart said 30 years ago was said on that program last night as if it were a new idea. That is, the day is coming when people are going to receive cash money in their hands which they have never earned, but which is rightfully theirs because of the ability of society to produce goods and services in a modern machine age. This was put across on television as though it were a new concept. But if you look back into the record of history you will find that Mr. Aberhart pointed this out 30 years ago.

I say to the minister that if we were suddenly to find ourselves without any need for national defence capital spending, he would certainly have to revolutionize his present ideas. One alternative would be for him to answer the questions which were placed on the record today, for the second time, by my leader the hon. member for Red Deer. If he would answer those questions, perhaps he would have some idea how to extract himself from such a dilemma as I have just mentioned.

Mr. Willoughby: It is certainly not necessary for me to tell this committee that I am not a financial expert, and I am certainly no economist. But I am one of the representatives from the province of British Columbia and I am disturbed about some features of this resolution. I hope the Minister of Finance will make them a little more clear to us when he has the opportunity to do so. It seems to me the hon. gentleman has perhaps taken too literally the fact that British Columbia is supposed to be debt free. It looks as though British Columbia is in serious danger of coming out on the short end of this deal.

I am sure every one of us in this committee agrees that adjustment, or abatement, as long as it will create harmony in Canada and assist parts of Canada which up to the present have been less happy economically than some of the other provinces, is to be supported. On the other hand I think they would also agree that to create harmony in one part of Canada while at the same time creating disharmony elsewhere is not an answer to our national problem. I do not intend to go into detail on the subject of this resolution because I do not consider myself qualified to do so, but I do wish to bring up certain points for the minister's consideration in the hope that he will throw some light on them when he has the opportunity to reply.

The resolution before us changes the basis upon which equalization is to be paid from the national average to the average of the two top provinces. This being so, British Columbia and Ontario are caught in the squeeze again because they are the two top provinces and, obviously, the rest of Canada will benefit out of general revenue in some way so as to make up the difference. The raising of the succession duty rebate to 75 per cent will not make any difference to the province of British Columbia because we have been among the fortunate ones, to that extent, in the past.

What I am worried about is this: 50 per cent of the natural resource revenue of the province is to be deducted from any sums to be abated to the province. It is obvious from the table which the minister gave us last Tuesday evening that under this formula British Columbia will receive only a very small amount of the increased revenue which is to be distributed among the provinces. This to me seems unfair. I should like to ask if it is right that we should have to contribute toward the expenditures of this country under this abatement plan the amount of money which is received from expendable resources. We know that some of this resource income is derived from sources which are not permanent—they are bound to be a declining asset. I think the majority of us from British Columbia realize that the assets which are to be taxed under this new scheme will include our forests, our gas, our oil and perhaps some of our mining resources. These are expendable resources. They are provincial assets and I cannot see how we can possibly allow them to be taxed on such a basis as is now proposed. I hope the minister will make sure that these resources are at least maintained, so that we shall not be overpaying our share of taxation. I should also like to ask, particularly with regard to forestry, whether we are to be taxed on the gross profits of our forest resources or whether we are to be allowed to deduct the cost of maintaining such necessary services as protection against fire, reforestation and so on. I hope these matters will all be clarified when the minister brings in the bill. I hope he will tell us just what he means by natural resources in relation to forestry products.

There is one other question. Where does hydro power enter into this picture? Is that a natural resource? Does the minister contemplate that the sale of Columbia power to the United States means we have a resource which is taxable? These are things I want to know about; they are things the people of British Columbia are entitled to know about. I have no intention of speaking any longer, Mr. Chairman, except to say that I put these questions before the minister in the hope that he will give us a further explanation on the bill upon which this resolution is based, in order that we may have a better understanding of what we are faced with in British Columbia.

Mr. Nugent: Mr. Chairman, I thought the hon. member for Northwest Territories touched on one aspect of the problem that must always concern members of this house; that is, the question of the division of the taxation dollar available in Canada. I do not say this just because that territory does not have the same kind or form of government as the provinces; but it is a fact that this territory is a very vast land which is sparsely populated. It is new frontier. We know something of some of the wealth it contains, but we have very little conception yet of just how valuable those resources may be to the whole of Canada once they are tapped.

I think these are questions that have occurred to most of us when we have been considering the question of comparative wealth and the opportunities of each of the provincial governments when considering their own natural resources, their own markets, populations, etc. Certainly the first thought that occurs to my mind is that if there is a responsibility to develop an area of Canada so that its natural wealth may become available to our children and grandchildren, if we look forward to the day when those resources may be absolutely essential to Canada's needs at a future date, there must be a government that has the financial resources and is able, because of its constitutional power, to give leadership and make provision so that we can develop that part of the country.

Mr. Chairman, you will note that I referred not only to financial resources but to constitutional power. I think this is a question that has not bothered members of this house enough when we have been dealing with taxation possibilities in this country. Anyone who has looked over Canadian development during the last few years, certainly since the war; anyone who has been aware of the challenge to this nation to meet changing world conditions; anyone who has considered our position tradewise and industrywise, our trade patterns, and has considered tax concessions and trade agreements, must realize that the good of the whole country still depends upon the power and strength of the federal government.

I would like to illustrate this one point in my argument with reference to our trading program. I would like to remind members that the problem presented to Canada a few years ago, when we came out of the war, was that we were a country rich in natural resources; that we had developed only those resources primarily that supplied raw materials; that automation had displaced people from jobs in these industries, and we found that if we wanted our people to be gainfully employed, only in the manufacturing of our own raw materials could we provide that kind of employment. We therefore had to develop our secondary industries; we had to find the money for them; we had to find the trained personnel, and Canadians after the war were not well trained; they were not even well educated. We sometimes forget that in a land as rich as Canada, where for so many years there was so much opportunity for a man of ingenuity, strength and desire to carve himself out a very comfortable living, there was not the accent on the need for formal education to enable a person to make his way in this country. Canadians were, classically speaking quite an ignorant people at the end of the last war. We found our general standard of education to be very low. The European cities who were starting to build their new factories with the latest automation devices concentrated on manufacturing industries and had large pools of skilled labour to draw from; and we found we had none.

I suggest that anyone who looks at the crash program we undertook to provide money for vocational schools, to provide scholarships and bursaries, and the incentives we insisted upon so those schools could be built in order that Canadians could start to be educated and take the jobs we were beginning to provide in our new industries, cannot say that education is simply a provincial affair. I know I am treading on very dangerous ground when I suggest that the federal government has any responsibility or should have any say in this field; but I think I have illustrated the point, and our history illustrates the point, that whereas education was a provincial responsibility, it had become a federal responsibility to try and match the economy of this country with the demands of modern civilization. The provincial authorities, not having the responsibilities in this regard, had not looked far enough ahead and had therefore failed to meet the educational requirements of the changing situation.

I presume that those who preach the sanctity of provincial rights are going to say, "What should have been done was turn this money over to the provinces so they could have built these schools". But it was not just a case of turning the money over to the provinces; it had to be a case of achieving the desired objective of Canada as a whole. If we had given each provincial government a certain amount of money and had said, "Spend it on education", they would have said it was within their right to spend it as they saw fit and we would not have had nearly the effective results that were needed in this regard.

It is this aspect of the national problem of the sharing of the tax dollar that I think has not received enough consideration in this house. Today there are too many responsibilities that must be tackled on a national scale. The hon. member for Northwest Territories pointed out how the people in his area are neglected and what their standard of living is like. He drew attention to some of the difficulties they have to put up with. And they are all Canadians. I think those of us in this house would agree that if they are able and willing to work as hard and apply themselves as industriously as the rest of us in other parts of the country, there is nothing unfair in suggesting that they should be entitled to a fair standard of living. I suggest that in many of our negotiations with the provinces this question has bothered the provincial governments very little, if at all. As the hon. member for Bow River pointed out, certainly it is the job of each provincial premier to try to get the most for his province; and I can certainly understand the adversary system whereby you have everything best said by a person appearing on one side, and then the best said on the other side. The premiers come and defend their needs and the federal government must defend the needs of the federal government.

I suggest to hon. members that no matter what constituencies we represent we are all elected as members of parliament for Canada, and we cannot get too parochial in our views. I suggest we must be Canadians first and members of a province next. I am afraid we must look at some of the financial responsibilities under the British North America Act, and instead of saying that our only problem is to redistribute the tax dollar so as to allow the provinces to carry out those responsibilities which they are stuck with and which grow on them each day, we should perhaps take a close look at the powers which the provinces have and at the powers the federal government have and see whether more of the provincial responsibilities cannot be shared by the federal government. I am not suggesting that these powers necessarily have to be transferred, but I do think that if those problems which are important to all Canada are to be tackled in such a way as to give any sort of equality to the people in Canada, despite differences in the natural resources of the different provinces, there must be more uniformity in those projects which are so important to the trade and industry of each province.

I find it a little distressing to find signs of interprovincial strife in attracting industry. Certainly it sounds well and good for each province to do what it can to attract industry to its area, but we wonder how far we can go in making concessions to certain firms because they are located in a given province before we are penalizing other firms because they are not so located, and I mean other Canadian firms. I wonder how far we can go in this direction before it can honestly be said that interprovincially, so to speak, we are erecting trade barriers between provinces.

I suggest that wherever new industries or depressed areas come to the attention of the provincial governments, if we are going to put more financial power into the hands of the provinces, part of which money being used to develop their own resources, it may be necessary to force the provinces to co-operate a little better across the country so that there is more uniformity in the manner in which concessions to industry are made.

The hon. member for Bow River mentioned the taxing powers of some former governments. We have certainly heard mention of some of the efforts made by the previous government to equalize the tax benefits throughout the country. The province of Newfoundland is not very rich. The Northwest Territories has tremendous problems. The province of Prince Edward Island is very small, and probably overburdened because it has to bear a provincial government for such a small population. If all provinces are to be treated alike there cannot be equality of opportunity; there cannot be what I call a fair Canadian share of the wealth of this country, by any stretch of the imagination. I think that when we are considering taxation and concessions to one province or another, as soon as we start making an exception of one province and as soon as we bring in a federal plan which allows one province to opt out, we are opening the door to fragmentation. I think the pension plan as it was first envisaged was a particularly pointed example of that sort of thing. Any scheme which is to be so far reaching that it might in a few years build up such tremendous sums of money and which would be so important to so many people when it could not be called all-Canadian, which might in fact be competing with a scheme put forward by another province, to me presents one of the most ridiculous situations this country has had to face—one which I suspect the members of this house, from what I have heard so far, have not begun to dream of or are not very willing to look at. I suggest that this impact on the nature of the government, on the nature of democracy in Canada and on the nature of our federal-provincial relationship has not been seriously enough considered.

I think I have mentioned before in this house, and it will bear repeating, that once the provinces get their hands on the pension funds which will be built up, once each provincial government has the ability to put its hand on a large sum of money which it can direct toward aiding its own industry in its own way, when we consider that that has in some instances already taken the form of competition with other parts of the country, and when we realize that provinces always try to attract industry, I suggest that the ownership of that amount of money and the amount of influence it would have is bound to have a very far reaching effect on the type of government you will get in each of the provinces.

Carried not to its logical conclusion but just carried a step or two further, it is not hard to envisage provincial governments changing their policy or being kept in power because of the manner in which they have been able to use their money to attract more industry into the province. One of the ways to do this, of course, is by way of tax concessions within the provinces; tax concessions at the municipal level, making available special loan funds at special rates of interest, and so on. I suggest that once any of these devices fail to prove effective enough there is another simple step which can be taken if the province has the money. There is always money available for a provincial government to lend to some of its friends, or to set up business in competition with businessmen who will not co-operate. I fail to see how we can prevent such a natural course of affairs being carried on if we continue to regard taxation problems as though they were created for one province and by making special deals with another province. Every time there is a suggestion similar to that contained in this resolution, the question must be looked at on a dominion-wide basis. If one province for any reason is unwilling or unable to go along, if it feels this is an undue interference by the federal government in provincial affairs, then I suggest the alternative is not to surrender to the province and merely give them the money and aid in this fragmentation which is going to make life in Canada so much more difficult; the alternative I suggest is that the provinces themselves must co-operate. When they ask for special concessions, each and every province, having regard to the wish of each to obtain autonomy, must be able to co-operate one with another. I suggest that this is not impinging upon federal authority. It is paying regard to the responsibilities of the province, and this will enable co-operation to take place. I also suggest it would provide the machinery for the federal government to assist all provinces on a common basis and would bring about some uniform method of handling each change in responsibility as the need for new sources of revenue arises.

I am afraid most of us have not looked long enough and hard enough at deficits. Certainly when the Conservatives were the government the Liberals made enough noise about the deficits and how dangerous they were, but we have seen nothing to date which indicates that the danger has passed. The present trend of concessions to individual provinces has done nothing but make the problem more acute.

When we consider such fundamental responsibilities of the federal government as deficits and our need to help through external aid the less developed countries, there is no doubt that any time this government considers the changing demands of society there is no reason for us to believe there will be less demand than at present on the federal dollar. Therefore I suggest that we look with extreme suspicion on any further scheme by which federal funds may go to one province for a distinct purpose where that province is going to use its money differently than another.

I have never been too enthusiastic about a strong central government but it is only basic, facing the political facts of life, to realize that a strong central government is essential is we are to keep up as a modern nation state. Other nations have gone to great extremes. They have started trading cartels. They have formed great state trading companies and restrictions are placed on private manufacturers on the way in which they can compete in foreign markets. Many new devices and stratagems have been used by those governments to make sure that they get a fair share of the world market.

I suggest that we are going to be called on more and more for such things as export credits and export insurance, for more and more use of devices such as aid to depressed areas, and more tax concessions for industries, for new industries and expanding industries. There is going to be a greater and greater demand, and if that demand is to be met by individual provinces rather than the federal government, then the intraprovincial warfare resulting is going to cripple this nation even more than the fatal flag issue has done.

I suggest that every time we are going to consider a resolution of this type we must take a look at what it is going to do to the powers of government, what it is going to do to the relations of provincial governments one to another, as well as what it is going to do about crippling the federal government so that it can no longer meet all those responsibilities it already has, not to speak of those which will arise in the future.

Mr. Baldwin: Mr. Chairman, I am encouraged to make a brief intervention in this debate because of the alert and intelligent interest which the Minister of Finance is giving to the members on this side of the chamber. I am sure he is absorbing with great interest the remarkable flow of ideas which have come principally from the official opposition and I hope that the bill which the minister has ready—that is, assuming it is ready in case he has not anticipated the speedy passage of this resolution—will contain some of the very intelligent and fine suggestions which members of the official opposition have been making. I am glad to see the minister has the bill and I hope by the time it is presented some of these suggestions will have found their way between the four corners of it.

The real pith and substance of the resolution will, of course, be contained in the bill which the minister is going to bring forward, and at that time there will be room for an excellent debate. At this stage I want to deal with what I think is a by-product of this resolution because it is my view that behind the façade of the resolution there lies one of the real problems which is gnawing at the vitals of this nation, and that is the virtual stumbling position to which our federal system has now brought itself, and which is exhibited in the type of resolution such as this which the minister has introduced to the committee.

The natural tendency is to shrug our shoulders and accept the necessity of this resolution as simply being the most recent patch on the fabric of our country's constitutional system, a patch which probably covers numerous other patches. It is an attempt, as usual, to attack the consequences and to walk past the real root causes of the situation, which develop from time to time, compelling the federal government to provide these additional aids to the provinces. The trouble is like a hydra-headed monster, that every time we fix up a temporary solution of this kind unfortunately we find later that there are ten more problems which the federal and provincial governments have to deal with.

I think that is manifest when you just look at the order paper. Today there appeared under government notices of motions the bill dealing with the loans to students. A short time ago we passed the bill dealing with youth allowances. These are excellent programs. I am for them and I think they are going to do a great deal so far as the educational facilities of the country are concerned. But what are they going to do with the financial position of the provincial governments? There is going to be a tremendous amount of pressure exerted on them to provide the fiscal plant and facilities which the provinces are compelled to provide constitutionally, to take care of the increased number of students who, I hope as a result of these two measures, will be seeking to secure a better education. This means I suppose that in two or three years the minister will be met at the conference table with demands for more money to meet the requirements to provide these additional educational facilities.

There are other measures on the order paper, measures to provide for the old age pensions, in which the provinces have a direct financial concern. There is a measure to amend the Crop Insurance Act which is probably going to draw more provinces into the crop insurance field, and is going to place some financial burden on those provinces. There is a measure dealing with the department of forestry and rural development, which leads us to think of the ARDA program, which causes a financial burden on the provinces. Then there is this particular measure itself. These are just a few of them and my submission is that this simply means we are only trying to strike down the effects of our failure to deal with this matter as it should be dealt with, by going right to the root of it.

Parenthetically I think it is quite a tribute to the flexibility of our system that we have been able to adapt it, to mould it, to change it, so that when during periods of two great wars additional strength was required at the core or heart of the federal government, that strength flowed into the government at Ottawa. But conversely now, with a weak government far too sensitive and susceptible to public opinion, with strong, almost domineering provincial governments and leaders, we find the flow of strength away from the central government to the provincial governments.

I feel that if this tendency continues and increases, as it is bound to, in the not too distant future the stresses and strains upon our constitutional system will probably cause it to snap. There is no doubt that these movements are so strong and irresistible that thoughtful Canadians are beginning to wonder if the tide will leave the federal government stripped of the minimum and essential power to deal with matters of fiscal administration and trade policy. Once this happens, then we are in a rough way.

I recall not so very long ago that the minister of revenue of Quebec, who as far as I know seems to be a very reasonable man apart from his political affiliations, suggested apparently in perfect seriousness that the federal government should consult the provincial governments prior to the enactment of fiscal and monetary policies, which are the direct responsibility of the federal government. I asked the minister a question about this and Mr. Speaker stopped me, probably quite properly. I am not sure what the answer would have been, but this just indicates the extent to which the stripping away of the powers of the federal government has gone.

There is another aspect to this matter. In a democratic parliamentary system governments should be the boss within certain limitations between elections, helped of course by a hard working and intelligent opposition. But at election time the government must face its masters, the people, and at that time any government, whether provincial or federal, should be prepared to account, on the basis of the principle of constitutional responsibility, for the moneys which it has taken from the taxpayers and has spent. What becomes of that theory under this system? The provincial governments are securing an increasingly larger share of their revenue from the federal government. In the result, Mr. Chairman, there is a failure of responsibility. The provincial governments are even boasting of the fact that they have used pressure to squeeze more money out of the federal government. If this is carried on I greatly fear it will lead to a whittling away, an erosion, of the constitution and the proper democratic powers of the legislatures of this country.

I have more to say on this subject, Mr. Chairman, but I am going to leave it until the bill is before us. I do want to make one further suggestion and then I will sit down in plenty of time for the resolution to be passed, unless what the opposition has said has stimulated members on the government side to offer additional suggestions to the minister. I support what the Leader of the Opposition had to say when he proposed that there should be a procedure of dealing with this entire matter. I do not subscribe entirely to the methods he suggested, but this matter must be tackled right at the root of the difficulty. There should and must be an examination of the entire spectrum of the relationships between the federal and provincial governments.

This cannot be done through the medium of the B. and B. commission, which is simply a forum where violent and opposing philosophies and theories meet head on. It provides a good three ring circus at times but you do not come out with any useful suggestions. You do not do so either at federal-provincial conferences of the usual type which, as I said before, are simply a bargaining table where the provincial premiers come as to an auction sale to demand, like Oliver Twist, more and more and more.

I suggest that the answer lies in a meeting of representatives of the federal and provincial governments without this paraphernalia, in an atmosphere which is free from the harsh and rasping discordance that we have seen too much of in and out of this house in connection with debates as to national symbols, which are quite important but which I do not think are appropriate at this time.

Let me conclude on this note. I think there is a general reservoir or fund of good will in all parts of the country, throughout all the various provinces whether it be Quebec, Ontario or the Atlantic provinces, but because of the character of some of the debates which have been initiated by the government that bank account of good will has had cheques drawn against it. Before it is too late, before the fund is exhausted, I suggest to the government that they should act at once to call together a conference of the type envisaged by my leader to deal with the entire problem so that we will not have to follow this piecemeal approach of trying to deal with these problems one at a time, and by the time we get one solved we find there are 10 new ones. Only in this way will we be able to make a substantial contribution to the constitutional problems of this country and be able to do away with the type of resolution which we are being forced to discuss tonight.

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Gordon thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-111, to provide for the revision of certain fiscal arrangements with the provinces and to provide adjustments of fiscal arrangements and taxation provisions consequential upon the provision of youth allowances to parents resident in certain provinces.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

JUDGES ACT

PROVISION FOR SALARIES FOR ADDITIONAL JUDGES

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to amend the Judges Act to authorize the provision of salaries for seven additional judges as follows:

(a) three judges of the superior court of Quebec;

(b) one justice of appeal of the supreme court of Alberta;

(c) two Ontario county court judges; and

(d) one British Columbia county court judge.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

[Translation]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Chairman, the purpose of this resolution is to amend the Judges Act in order to provide for the salaries of seven additional judges in Canada, as follows: three new judges for the superior court of Quebec; one additional judge for the appellate division of the supreme court of Alberta; two additional Ontario county court judges; and one additional British Columbia county court judge.

Every hon. member knows that, under section 92 of the British North America Act, the province has jurisdiction to set up, organize and maintain the courts. On the other hand, under section 92 of the same act, the governor in council is responsible for appointing the judges of the superior court as well as those of the county courts. Consequently, each province, having set up a superior court or a county court, amends its legislation as need be, for the purposes of the administration of justice, to extend the membership of the court. Since the appointment of judges and the payment of their salaries come under federal jurisdiction, the federal Judges Act is amended accordingly.

I must say that in the case of Alberta, Ontario and British Columbia, the provincial acts have already been amended in order to provide for an increased number of judges as indicated in the resolution under study. As for the province of Quebec, the act has not yet been amended, but it will be before the end of the present session of the Quebec legislature. The request has been formally submitted by the attorney general of the province of Quebec, following representations made by the bar, the chief justice and the deputy chief justice of the province of Quebec.

The government is following the same policy as its predecessors and I feel it is the only one possible under the constitution.

Since the administration of justice comes under the provincial authorities or governments, one must presume that whenever provincial legislation concerning the courts is amended at the request of a provincial attorney general to enlarge the scope of a court, such action it taken only after consideration has been given to the matter, that it meets a real need in the province, and on the basis of the respective responsibilities of both the attorney general and the government of the province in matters pertaining to the administration of justice within the province.

Considering that eventually judges will have to be appointed, I feel the government must amend the Judges Act; obviously, additional precautions will have to be taken when, on the recommendation of the cabinet, the Governor General proceeds to appoint judges whose salary is now set by the law.

Consequently, I would suggest to the house that when it was passed the usual stages, the act be amended along the lines I have just indicated.

[Text]

Mr. Lambert: Mr. Chairman, there are just a few remarks I should like to make, first of all, on item (b) in the resolution. I am sure that, coming from the province of Alberta, I fully appreciate on behalf of the bar and all connected with the practice of law the necessity that has arisen during the past two or three years for a further expansion of the appellate division of the supreme court of that province. The population increase and the additional burdens on the court have made it absolutely essential that this be done. I am glad to see that it is being done. I am sure that the same thing applies to the appointments envisaged in the remainder of the resolution.

However there is one point about which I should like to inquire from the minister. It concerns something that his predecessor had agreed with me should be done and it involved an amendment to the Judges Act. I am referring to a sort of lapsus that occurred last year in amending the Judges Act dealing with changes in the pensions or salary levels of certain judges who had retired just before the passage of the legislation and actually going back, I think, to deal with those who had been compulsorily retired in 1961. Perhaps this would have been the cut-off date. There were some rather, shall we say, agonizing cases—I do not like to use the phrase "distressing cases"—but there were some hard cases. The changes in the judges' salaries had been envisaged for some considerable time. They had been seriously considered by the previous administration but they were so tied with other things they were not brought forward. I am wondering why, at this stage, the minister has not proposed or the government has not proposed we review this matter, because it has been my understanding both with his predecessor and with the government leader in the other place, that this likely would be attended to at the next opening up of the Judges Act.

I must regret this has not happened on this occasion. Of course, there is still an opportunity during this session to deal with the particular item of business and if the Minister of Justice, in his capacity as house leader, wishes to have another one of these fillers on the legislative side, we would certainly entertain an amendment to the act regarding the matter I have suggested.

Mr. Favreau: In reply to my hon. friend I may say that this is one question upon which I have received, and my predecessor as well, a relatively large amount of correspondence. It is a matter, of course, which entails so many ramifications it was quite difficult to deal with it in this bill. Furthermore, I must say that I have my views as to future amendments of the Judges Act. It is my intention to proceed in as organized a fashion as possible by asking the attorneys general of the various provinces to provide me, before a set date in any session, their representations as to the plans of their respective provinces concerning the judges.

To come back to the suggestion that has been made, I can only assure the hon. member that I have given very serious consideration to the matter. I must be very frank and advise also that because no solution has been arrived at as yet, we could not proceed with the matter in this bill.

Mr. Benidickson: Mr. Chairman, on Friday, July 10, as reported on page 5299 of Hansard, the hon. member for Port Arthur raised the question addressed to me, I think—

The Chairman: Order.

Mr. Benidickson: —I wonder whether it would be proper if this were raised tonight?

The Chairman: Well, perhaps it might be suggested to the minister that he raise the question with the Speaker in the chair. Shall the resolution carry?

Resolution reported and concurred in.

Mr. Favreau thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-112, to amend the Judges Act.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the leader of the house if we shall be considering the loans for students legislation tomorrow?

Mr. Favreau: Yes, it is our intention to proceed tomorrow with the second reading and committee stage of the students loans bill and, unless third reading is agreed to immediately, we shall proceed with the second reading and committee stage of the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements bill.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

POWER—FRASER RIVER—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Before proceeding with my question I should like the parliamentary secretary to extend my sincere congratulations to the minister on his success in connection with his prayers for rain. This is one of the most successful government policies to date.

On July 9 I asked the minister the following question:

Has the minister any information he can give the house with respect to the announcement of Premier Bennett of British Columbia that his government intends to proceed with the development of the hydro potential of the Fraser river and expects the federal government's financial assistance to this end?

That question was prompted by newspaper items headed: "Bennett Adds Fraser in River Development" and "Bennett Adds Fraser River to Power Plans". In particular, it was prompted by a news editorial broadcast on July 8, 1964, over radio station CHQM in Vancouver which reads as follows:

At his breakfast meeting this morning with B.C. investment dealers, Premier Bennett had what might be called a captive audience. Not only that—the audience couldn't have been more sold on Mr. Bennett's promotion. The promotion, of course, was B.C. hydro's latest issue of small denomination parity bonds to help finance the Peace river power development.

Mr. Bennett has had tremendous success in marketing these bonds ever since he started doing it in 1959. The public has snapped them up, and the financial community quickly became convinced that it was a good way to turn a dollar.

So when Mr. Bennett said this morning that—

And they are quoting Mr. Bennett.

—"these are B.C.'s greatest years," there was no word of dissent from the investment dealers. They knew a good thing when they saw it.

I quite agree with that.

The most interesting segment of the premier's remarks, however, did not concern parity bonds. It was when he dealt with development of flood control and power producing works on the upper reaches of the Fraser river that he perked up the ears of his listeners.

The proposed development was not new—it had been recommended earlier by the Fraser river development board, a federal-provincial agency.

What was new was the premier's decision to go ahead with it right away. He was careful, in his talk to the investment men, to assure the salmon fishing industry that the value of the Fraser as a spawning river would not be diminished by the development.

But flood control in the 100 mile long Fraser delta and valley was vitally essential. The development in the upper reaches would provide this—as well as two million horsepower of electrical energy—with B.C. and Ottawa sharing equally in the flood control costs.

To the investment men, this was good news, for it meant continued expansion of B.C. hydro, and B.C. hydro would have to go to the money market to finance a good part of it.

His request for support of the investment industry to his application for Ottawa participation in the financing, can be expected to be met without qualification.

It is not certain that the fishing industry will be so enthusiastic. For at a press conference following the breakfast, the premier seemed to downgrade the fishing interests. The first public interest, Mr. Bennett said, was the protection from floods of the Fraser valley and delta, with its tremendous investment in real estate.

Mr. Benidickson: Order.

Mr. Herridge:

To the investment industry, it was "Boomer" Bennett in his best promoting style. But to the salmon industry—and to others interested in the protection of the fishery—it may have been a sign that Mr. Bennett would love to get his hands on the mighty power potential of the Fraser.

That is a very interesting comment on the part of the radio station with respect to Premier Bennett's treatment of these investment dealers. Premier Bennett is fond of investment dealers. I should like to ask the parliamentary secretary if he can inform the house whether there have been any discussions with the government of British Columbia with respect to this development. Have any proposals been made? Have there been any discussions with respect to the possibility of damage to the fishing industry? Have there been any discussions with respect to the locations of dams, as to the cost of those dams and the cost of the total flood control? Has there been any agreement with respect to proceeding in the near future with this development outlined and announced by Premier Bennett? If so, has the government of Canada indicated its intention to share in the cost of this power development and flood control on the Fraser river, and what is the cost going to be?

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, the series of questions posed at the end of the remarks of the hon. member for Kootenay West is rather beyond a three minute reply. I am sure we are grateful to him for having read into the record in the late evening show the noon editorial from Vancouver. I would like to direct his attention to the answer the minister gave on July 9—which was the same day as the hon. member posed his question—to his colleague, the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Barnett). This answer is to be found at page 5245 of Hansard.

Mr. Herridge: I have read it. It did not tell all the story, though.

Mr. Turner: I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, that the answer the hon. member seeks this evening is found in fairly full measure there. First, upon receipt of the final report of the Fraser river board on flood control and hydroelectric power in the Fraser river basin, which was tabled in this house and which I am sure the hon. member, with his customary thoroughness, has already read from cover to cover, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) was in touch with Hon. Ray Williston of British Columbia and, pursuant to those original communications, the two ministers met together to discuss the consequences, in preliminary fashion, of this report. I might say that the first concrete measure undertaken will be the $4½ million strengthening of the Fraser river dike works, particularly along the lower reaches of the river. That proposal has been accepted by the federal government, and the work on the more dangerous spots along the river will be commenced in short order.

As for the response to Premier Bennett's proposal about the power development and flood control on the Fraser, the minister welcomed that announcement but at the moment we are awaiting an application from the province of British Columbia. We are also awaiting the facts and figures to be adduced by the premier as between flood control and power.

INDUSTRY—TIMMINS, ONT.—FEDERAL PARTICIPATION IN MINING DEVELOPMENTS

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, on Friday last I asked a question as follows:

What part, if any, did he—

That is referring to the Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys:

—or his officials play in the negotiations and discussions between the Ontario department of mines and Texas Gulf in connection with the prospective developments around Timmins?

The reason I put the question when I did is because there is a current interest in the developments in Timmins. I thought there was a smart analysis by the financial editor of the Toronto Star the other night when he made the point that all the hullabaloo that is being raised in the Timmins area about locating the smelter and refinery there tends to gum up the fact that straight economics will determine the location of the smelter or the refinery, and that it would be just as well probably if the concentrates were shipped, as the company seems to plan, to North Carolina for production. It seems to me that while this argument of Mr. McArthur in the Toronto Star may be true, and while it may be true that the mining industry in particular is not one which welcomes government intervention, except in the form of subsidies on occasion, there is a role that the federal department of mines should be playing or could have played in this particular argument, and this argument is going to go on.

I put this argument in this form. The department of mines is the oldest research organization in Canada, and in recent years it has been moving into the field of doing more and more economic analysis. I should like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that last year it published a report entitled "Lead and zinc in Canada, 1961" by D. B. Fraser and J. W. Patterson, a pamphlet consisting of some 90 pages which went into the whole pattern of the market for these two minerals. Then there was published in 1963 a paper by R. B. Elver, T. H. Janes and J. H. Walsh entitled "Technical and economic factors in the choice of steel plant location", which advises where industry should locate its steel plants. This year the mineral information bulletin included one entitled "Canadian minerals in national and international perspective", by R. B. Tooms. This study is designed to describe the growth and present status of the Canadian mineral industry and to measure its importance in the Canadian economy in the world mineral industry. I mention these particular publications to indicate that the department has an interest in the economics and location of various aspects or parts of the mining industry, and yet has done nothing substantial about what has been in recent years the booming part of the mines and metal markets, which is lead, copper and zinc, which I understand are the main metals discovered in the Timmins strike.

The other point I wanted to make about this is that we have had a most heterogeneous kind of discussion and the people of Timmins are getting up in arms because they want the smelter here and the refinery there. There is a pattern of information available and there are things the federal government can do in analysing and providing information which could clear up a great deal of this mystery. I remember a year or two ago in the railway committee when we were asked to approve the building of a railway which would lead to the location of a smelter for zinc at Valleyfield, near Montreal. A lot of people do not realize that there is a different approach required to the smelting of lead, of copper and of zinc. A lot of people do not realize that in eastern Canada at the present time there are no real facilities for refining lead or zinc; although there is for copper, particularly at Noranda. I understand this will be a kind of mixed production in the Timmins area.

In this sort of trouble situation where we are getting pleas to the Department of Industry and the provincial department of mines from a whole area, seeing its economic future beginning to brighten and wanting to get the most out of it, I suggest that the department of mines, federally the oldest research organization in Canada in this field, with all the material available to it, should be right in there building railways, building up studies for the placement of refineries or smelters in certain places, and also considering the whole question of tariff negotiations with the United States, which is the major market for these products.

One of the many reasons why the refining of lead and zinc is done in the United States hinges on a very complicated tariff policy. In copper everything hinges on world arrangement. As I say, in this complicated field surely we should expect our oldest mines organization, our oldest research organization and the minister who heads that organization, to be playing some kind of role in the largest, most exciting mineral discovery we have had in Canada for some years. It is for this reason that I placed this question.

I should like to know what part the federal department has been playing in this regard, and I think we deserve an answer.

If the minister could get his department working in this field in supplying information and suggestions it could do a great deal to clear up what I think is going to be a lot of misunderstanding. If the concentrates in toto that come out of the Timmins development are shipped to the United States or to Europe, in the main, for their further processing rather than being smelted or refined in Canada, the old cry is going to go up that we are selling our resources cheap, that we are not producing enough in this country. It may be legitimate, but my point is that up to now we do not know what role the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys can play in providing information and indicating where the smelters or refineries should go and what should be done, and I think it is a bit of a shame.

Hon. W. M. Benidickson (Minister of Mines and Technical Surveys): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Port Arthur (Mr. Fisher) has referred to some of the spectacular discoveries minewise that have developed near Timmins in a territory in which he is as interested as I am. His question on the order paper was what part, if any, did the minister and his officials play in the negotiations and discussions between the Ontario department of mines and this private company, and I want to tell him that so far as I was concerned the answer is none.

The reason is that our department is a department of research. I think that in the early stages we played a very great part through the new opportunities that are available, with helicopters, airplanes and other overhead means of getting the value of the ground underneath, but personally I had nothing to do with this. Afterwards our department plays a very big part in co-operating with industry, following a discovery of this kind.

We have here in Ottawa several of what are almost factories of a fabulous nature that would help them to utilize the ores that they might get out of their ground. The hon. member for Port Arthur has raised this question of co-operation with the provincial government. The staking was entirely through provincial agencies, and the federal minister heard nothing about this. There are some additional properties that have some potential—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the minister but his time has expired.

AIRPORTS—TORONTO—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF LIMOUSINE SERVICE

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I want to speak very briefly tonight about the problem of transportation from Toronto international airport. The hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) raised this problem on June 11 and spoke of the monopoly situation that exists. He pointed out that this contract, involving some $1,800,000 of gross revenue, was let without tender for a period of 10 years and was entered into by the previous government in 1960. On June 22 in reply to question No. 1,304 the Minister of Transport set out the justification for this monopoly and, as found on page 4541 of Hansard, the answer reads in part as follows:

> They are required to provide modern equipment, to carry public liability insurance, and provide uniformed employees. All of this requires a very heavy capital investment on the part of the company, and to maintain such an investment it is necessary that the company be given exclusive rights to the passenger traffic offerings at the airport. To permit unrestricted competition from taxis would make the whole operation economically unsound. Without granting the company exclusive rights, it would be impossible to provide the type of service required by the travelling public.

[Mr. Benidickson.]

I want to ask the minister if those are his words, his conclusions, or if they are the words of some official in his department because I should like to know on just what basis these conclusions were reached. What sort of survey or report resulted in this sort of conclusion and what are the facts behind such a conclusion? Personally I do not accept this answer in view of the size of the business today at Malton airport. It might have been true 10 or 15 years ago but certainly anyone who has spent any time at Toronto international airport, particularly since the new terminal building has been opened, would not accept that answer.

Mr. Fisher: We tried to tell the minister in the T.C.A. committee.

Mr. Moreau: If we are to accept this monopoly until the expiry of the contract in 1970, I want to ask the minister if he will at least treat Scarborough as a separate community outside of the present contract. I say this because the monopoly which was set up to give a service required by the travelling public, to use the words in the answer to the question, does nothing to give service to the 350,000 people who live in the east and north sections of Toronto.

The bus service now available travels down highway 27 and along the Gardiner expressway to the Royal York hotel—

Mr. Fisher: The good old C.P.R.

Mr. Moreau: —without any intervening stops. The hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Cowan) has told me about a constituent, Mr. Charles Ring, who lives in Mimico, which is on the route that the bus travels. He is required to travel to the Royal York and then struggle back home on the streetcar. This man is 88 years old. I suggest that what we have here is an exclusive franchise to operate a bus line between Toronto international airport and the Royal York hotel which enjoys the benefit of a captive public who are required to use the vehicles provided by Air Terminal Transport Limited.

I am one of those who live in the east end of Toronto and it costs me some $9.75 to travel to my home by means of this service to the travelling public. If I am to take the limousine service from the Royal York I am still a 40 minute drive away from that hotel which involves a $5.50 or $6 cab fare. On the other hand, I am only a 40 minute drive from the airport if it were possible to travel by highway 401.

I suggest to the minister that he ask Air Terminal Transport Limited to provide a bus service to the east end of Toronto. They could make a pick-up at the Cedarbrae shopping plaza at Markham road and Lawrence avenue, make an intervening stop at Don Mills shopping plaza at Lawrence and Don Mills road and then travel by highway 401 out to the airport. The trip could be made in 40 minutes and I am sure the fare would not have to be any more than $2. I suggest to the minister that, as I said, there are about 350,000 people who need this sort of service. There are 60,000 people who live inside the metropolitan Toronto boundary who are still living east of where I am. There are 60,000 people who live north of Lawrence avenue. I suggest that this is certainly a large enough public to require this kind of service.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think I will have to do what I think I have never failed to do when I have been a minister, and that is take responsibility for the answer I gave the other day and not attempt to identify anyone who may have advised me to give that answer. I think that the first thing of which we have to be sure is that there is going to be some form of transportation at the airport, whenever aircraft arrive, for those people who are not residents of Toronto but are coming to Toronto from some other place. They are entitled, as well as those living in Toronto who do not have their own motorcars, to be sure of some form of transportation at the airport.

I confess that I am an old fashioned Liberal and I do not like monopolies. If there were some way of avoiding a monopoly situation, I would be very happy to do it. I have listened to representations both in the house and out of the house. I even had a delegation come to me including two of my colleagues in the cabinet. This suggests to me that these people who are able to get elected in Toronto, and they happen to be mostly supporters of the government, I am happy to say, probably have a fair idea what the people of Toronto are thinking. I asked the head of the company to come to see me this week. I am going to go over some of these difficulties with him. I am very much impressed, particularly by the statement by the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Moreau) that there are as many people in the northeastern part of Toronto as there are in the city of Hamilton. It seems to me that they ought to be entitled to service, not superior to that given Hamilton, but equal to it. If there is any way of assuring that the service will be satisfactory to all parts of the area and that it will not be unduly costly, I shall be glad to do everything I can.

I can take no responsibility whatever, and I do a Pontius Pilate act in this matter, for the way in which this contract was renewed in 1960. This was someone else's responsibility, and he can take it. The contract was made and, as has been the custom of governments thus far in this country, it has been honoured even though made by a predecessor and even though we may not entirely agree with it. I hope we will not soon change that custom in this country. It is obvious that since hon. members on both sides of the house who are elected by the people make these suggestions, there must be some ground for some feeling that the service is not satisfactory. I am going to try my best to find out what the difficulty is and to help see it is removed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; the minister's time has expired.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 11 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Tuesday, July 14, 1964

The house met at 2 p.m.

PRIVILEGE

MR. MACEWAN—CONTRACT FOR PIER REPAIRS, PICTOU, N.S.

Mr. H. Russell MacEwan (Pictou): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege which I should like to put briefly before the house, which affects all members of the house and the rights of parliament. It is with regard to a press release, small as it may be, in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald for Friday, July 10, 1964, page 19, which reads as follows:

> Award of a $18,616 public works department contract to Colin R. MacDonald Limited of Antigonish for repairs to pier A at Pictou was announced from the office of labour minister Allan J. MacEachen here yesterday.

On July 3 I placed a question on the order paper, being question No. 1,423, which asked the number of tenderers and the amounts of the various tenders for harbour improvements and repairs to pier A at Pictou, and I also asked to whom the contract would be awarded. On checking Hansard it will be seen that this question was not answered. What has been done by the minister is to circumvent the rights of parliament. The order paper today is even more sacred following the changes in the rules, and although the minister may have been in Switzerland or perhaps visiting the Queen to right the wrongs of the Minister of Transport in the United Kingdom, this is not the first time this has come before parliament and the rights of parliament must be upheld. I think the government must take due notice of this.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RUSSIAN PROPOSAL RESPECTING PEACE KEEPING FORCE

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I wish to table, as I told the hon. member for Greenwood I would, the memorandum of the government of the Soviet union regarding certain proposals to strengthen the effectiveness of the United Nations in safeguarding international peace and security. I am tabling copies in French and in English.

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): In connection with matters arising out of the tabling of the document referred to a few moments ago by the Acting Prime Minister, I would ask him whether the apparent change of attitude on the part of the Soviet union in connection with peace keeping operations has been followed up by any action by the U.S.S.R. to place itself in a position of responsibility in the United Nations by arranging to pay its membership dues and its share of expenses in connection with peace keeping. Would the minister say whether there has been any consultation with the Soviet union in this regard, and does this recent action on the part of that country indicate that an arrangement has been made whereby the voting rights of the U.S.S.R. which would end in September through failure to pay arrears are not now likely to be affected?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): There has been no change, since the distribution of this proposal by the Soviet union for a permanent United Nations peace force, in the amount of money which the international court of justice, by way an advisory opinion, has said is owing by the Soviet union to the United Nations. There have been some discussions with the Soviet union with regard to the confrontation that will inevitably face that country at the next general assembly under article 19 of the charter, if some moneys have not been paid by the Soviet union to reduce its total indebtedness to a figure less than the assessment owing by the Soviet union to the United Nations for the previous two years. The secretary general himself is leaving tonight on a tour that will take him to a number of countries, including the Soviet union. I do not know what will be the nature of their discussions, but I would be surprised if this were not one of the subjects to be discussed at that time.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for his very full answer, and ask him this question. Have any representations been made by Canada directly to the U.S.S.R. pressing upon that country and other countries that are in default the necessity of respecting their undertakings and responsibilities under the charter, and in particular the payment of their share which, as the minister has stated, was declared to be a proper levy in an advisory judgment of the world court?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Yes, Mr. Speaker, there have been at least two occasions when I, on behalf of the government of Canada, have discussed this matter with spokesmen of that government.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the proposal of the Soviet union regarding peace keeping operations has now been received by the government of Canada, could I ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs what reply the Canadian government intends to give, whether it is favourably disposed to the proposal and whether in the minister's opinion this proposal would place peace keeping forces entirely under the jurisdiction of the security council and reduce the powers enjoyed by the assembly.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, the proposal of the Soviet union is not addressed to any country. It was generally distributed this morning to all delegations at the United Nations. I have already indicated in the external affairs committee last week some of my reactions to the proposal. I would simply say now that if it represents, as the right hon. gentleman suggested we should hope it might, a positive attempt on the part of the Soviet union to share in all the obligations having to do with United Nations peace keeping responsibilities, then it is certainly to be welcomed. It is in a spirit of constructive interpretation that Canada is examining this proposal.

TRADE

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF FURTHER SALE TO POLAND

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): The Canadian wheat board is announcing in Winnipeg today that it has negotiated a contract for the sale of approximately 200,000 metric tons of wheat for shipment to Poland. This sale, totalling about 7.4 million bushels, is for shipment during the period August to November, 1964. This is the second sale made to Poland under the provisions of the long term agreement signed on November 5, 1963 and completes the quantities Poland had agreed to buy during the first year of the three year agreement.

Payment for the wheat is to be made on the basis of 10 per cent at time of shipment with the remaining balance to be paid in equal instalments plus interest at two, two and a half and three years respectively. These credit arrangements were authorized by the government of Canada under the provisions of the Export Credits Insurance Act.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—INQUIRY AS TO TABLING OF WHITE PAPER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he say whether the government is yet ready to table the white paper on the latest version of the Canada pension plan, which was promised some weeks ago?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did mention this white paper. We are not disposed to distribute it at the moment, but I should not think there would be too long a delay.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has the government learned whether the parliament of Westminster has yet passed the amendment to our constitution that we prayed it to pass?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): No. We did receive an intimation yesterday that the matter will be dealt with not later than the 18th of July, I think, and it is already on the order paper now in the United Kingdom parliament.

Mr. Knowles: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When that amendment has been passed will the government be placing on our order paper the resolution preceding the new bill?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to prognosticate as to procedures, but my hon. friend knows there will be no delay that could in any way be regarded as irresponsible.

Mr. Knowles: What have we had thus far?

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): That definition is subject to ample expansion when irresponsible delay is spoken of by the minister. I should like to ask him this. Is it the intention of the government, as soon as possible after this amendment has been passed by the United Kingdom house, to have the pension bill brought forward as a matter of priority rather than placing it in a position secondary to some other matters that I think the general public feel deserve to be in a secondary position?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The government attaches the highest priority to this matter. As I indicated yesterday to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, the government did not accept a suggestion from one of the provincial premiers that this should have a lower rating than other important measures, and that being the case, my right hon. friend will be assured that consistent with what faces us in this parliament, there will be no protracted or unnecessary or irresponsible delay.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Since the constitutional amendment will be made so that parliament could go on to deal with this matter at an early time, will the Acting Prime Minister inform the house if we might expect it before any projected recess?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Will my hon. friend be good enough to understand that I have limitations—

Some hon. Members: Oh, none.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): —and I would prefer to answer each situation as it arises.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

QUEBEC—PAYMENT OF MOVING COSTS OF RADAR STATION PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

I should like to ask him whether any action is taken in order to reimburse for their moving expenses the families which will be displaced on account of the closing of the radar station at Parent.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly to what families my hon. friend is referring. However, if he would be kind enough to tell me what families he has in mind, whether those of civilian employees or those of temporary employees, I shall be glad to give him an answer.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please—this is a question for the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

BEAVERBANK, N.S.—REQUEST FOR UTILIZATION OF FACILITIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. F. Kennedy (Colchester-Hants): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Defence. Has the minister received a petition from the citizens committee of Beaverbank, Nova Scotia? If so, what action is being taken to utilize the defence facilities located there and preserve the economy of the area?

Mr. Speaker: This is a question which should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Kennedy: This is an urgent matter upon which we have been trying to get some answers for some time. May I ask the minister to make an early statement on it?

REQUIREMENT RESPECTING BILINGUALISM IN CONSIDERING PROMOTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence, in the absence of the minister, based on press and radio reports with respect to the armed forces. Can he say whether it is government policy that the armed forces promotional policy has been altered, requiring a knowledge of both languages before promotion proceeds in any of the three services?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, it has been obvious in recent years that there has been a greater requirement for bilingual officers, and it is a fact that there is an order which states that officers who are bilingual will be required in promotions. Now when we speak of bilingualism, it is a two way street; we speak of French speaking officers being required to know English, and English speaking officers being required to know French. This is in keeping with trying to promote bilingualism within the country.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question. Can the minister say whether a directive to this effect has left either his office or the office of the minister of defence to all three armed services, and whether that directive includes a provision that before any officers will be promoted in future the French speaking officers will be required to have a knowledge of English and the English speaking officers will be required to have a knowledge of French?

Mr. Cardin: That order did leave the department. As far as the rest of the question is concerned, it is quite complicated and I would prefer to read it in Hansard tomorrow.

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): A supplementary question to the Secretary of State. I wonder whether the minister could tell the house if it is the intention to have the same policy which has just been explained by the Associate Minister of National Defence applied all through the civil service.

[Translation]

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the interdepartmental committee responsible for this problem has asked the civil service commission to submit a report but, as yet, we have received no recommendations from the commission.

[Text]

Mr. Nielsen: A further supplementary question. I assume that the minister will read my question in Hansard and answer it tomorrow. When he does, will he make a statement as to whether a recommendation in this regard was made either to himself or to the minister of defence or to the government by the B and B commission suggesting that such a policy be adopted?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, the B and B commission has not yet made its report.

INDUSTRY

OWEN SOUND, ONT.—REQUEST FOR ASSISTANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): I should like to direct this question to the Minister of Industry. Will the minister look into the possibility of having his department extend some assistance to the city of Owen Sound which now has several empty factory buildings and more unemployment than existed last year?

Mr. Speaker: Would the hon. member put this question on the order paper.

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON WORK OF DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. V. Noble (Grey North): Mr. Speaker, I have another question for the Minister of Industry. Will the minister inform this house of the achievements of his department by way of a progress report?

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the orders of the day is the right time to make a progress report of the kind asked for.

TRANSPORT

INQUIRY AS TO PURCHASE OF JET STAR PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): I should like to address my question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the deficit which the government has for various reasons, why has the Minister of Transport bought a Jet Star plane at a cost of $1,200,000 to permit the minister to travel?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The Jet Star was purchased by the previous government headed by the right hon. gentleman opposite.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Pigeon: That is the second one the minister bought.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Chrétien (St. Maurice-Laflèche): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Transport?

Can the Minister of Transport tell the house why the previous government bought that plane?

Mr. Pigeon: I am speaking about the second plane.

[Text]

Mr. Pickersgill: I haven't the foggiest idea, Mr. Speaker, but I know the present government declined to buy another one.

ADDITIONAL FERRY SERVICE BETWEEN NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW ENGLAND

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (Queens-Lunenburg): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. In view of the urgent need by the tourist industry for a second ferry service between Nova Scotia and New England, as indicated by the increase in passengers of 1,282 and in passenger automobiles of 367 over the same month last year, will the minister inform the house whether any definite progress has been made toward establishing this much needed ferry between these two areas?

Mr. Speaker: This is also a question for the order paper.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY—POSSIBLE REMOVAL OF TOLLS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Could he tell the house whether he is considering the possibility of abolishing tolls on the St. Lawrence seaway, between Montreal and lake Ontario?

[Text]

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be very difficult and rather a waste of time to give consideration to this question, because this parliament made a law requiring tolls to be imposed.

FINANCE

REPORTED INCREASE IN NUMBER OF BANKRUPTCIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Finance. Is the minister aware that bankruptcies in Canada have reached an all time high—as a matter of fact the highest peak in the last 30 years—and, if so, what does he propose to do to stop this alarming trend?

Mr. Speaker: Well, under the orders given to me by the house, though this is a very interesting question it requires a detailed and long answer, and I think it should be on the order paper.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

STEPS TO MEET REPORTED INCREASE IN COST OF LIVING

On the orders of the day:

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I address my question to the Minister of Finance. What measures does the minister intend to take in order to stop the rise in the cost of living, since Montreal has already recorded the highest rise?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me this question has been asked at least once during the last three or four weeks.

Mr. Pigeon: I will ask it again at 10.30, Mr. Speaker.

Inquiries of the Ministry

CANADIAN COASTGUARD

ESTABLISHMENT OF NAVIGATIONAL TRAINING SCHOOL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of Transport and ask him whether any representations have been made to him regarding the setting up of a navigational training school at the Point Edward naval base, Cape Breton island.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think the first person who suggested this was myself, when I made a formal announcement in the house. The plans are proceeding.

Mr. Douglas: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Transport a question supplementary to the one I asked a few moments ago. Can he tell me when the navigational school planned for the Point Edward naval base will be operational?

Mr. Pickersgill: I would not like to say how soon it would become operational. It is going to be a pretty big undertaking to assemble a staff and get the classrooms and buildings ready. However, it is our hope that we will be able to give the first year of training of most of the candidates in already existing marine schools in various parts of the country, so that when the college is opened we will not be duplicating any services that are now available in other parts of the country.

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I wonder whether the minister could tell the house if this means that the Rimouski navigation school will be closed after the opening of this new school at the Point Edward naval base.

Mr. Pickersgill: Quite the contrary, Mr. Speaker. It is our hope that a good many of the candidates who will go on to this school, which is to be a training school for officers, will have their first year of training in the school at Rimouski. I have had correspondence with the present minister of education of Quebec, who I think at that time was minister of youth, on this very subject.

LABOUR RELATIONS

DISMISSAL OF CANADIAN SAILORS BY IMPERIAL OIL CO.

On the orders of the day:

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, yesterday I promised the hon.

member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that I would reply to a question he asked some time ago in connection with the action taken by the Imperial Oil Company in dismissing a crew of Canadians and replacing them with West Indians.

This matter has been gone into by the Department of Labour, and we find that the action of the company has given rise to no dispute which calls for mediation by our department. We are concerned, of course, with the employment of Canadian seamen and Canadians in general, but the action taken by the company does not seem to be in violation of any law administered by the Department of Labour. For that reason there is no appropriate action that we see that can be taken at the present time.

In reply to the additional question asked by the hon. member as to whether we have any information on recent cases of a similar nature, the answer is no; although I am sure my hon. friend is aware of the incident of some months ago involving the vessel called the Canuk Trader, the crew of which was replaced by a Chinese crew in Hong Kong.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. May I ask the Minister of Labour whether he intends to bring down any legislation to deal with situations like this, or whether the government intends to adopt any policy, particularly with reference to granting government contracts to ships which are not of Canadian registry and which are dismissing Canadian crews in order to obtain other crews for smaller wages?

Mr. MacEachen: No particular policy is under consideration at the present time. I think the development of such a policy would involve several departments, especially the Department of Transport.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DELAY IN ADOPTING REPORT OF PRIVILEGES AND ELECTIONS COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Robert Beaulé (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice.

Could he tell us why the submission of the second report of the committee on privileges and elections has been delayed and when he intends to submit it?

[Mr. MacEachen.]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to answer this question now but I will look into the matter.

[Text]

INQUIRY AS TO CONSIDERATION OF MAIN ESTIMATES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister a question. In view of his steadily increasing authority in the absence of the Prime Minister, would he use his influence now to have the main estimates brought before the house for examination. We would like to have a look at the spending program of the government, and we have had only seven days on main estimates, which is half the number of days normally allowed at this point in a session.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend was good enough and generous enough to pay me a left handed compliment, but he will not misunderstand if I say that the authority of whoever is presiding over this house as acting prime minister is of course second to that of the Prime Minister who is now engaged in very important business outside the country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I want to make it clear, Mr. Speaker, that his authority has been properly asserted and, I am sure, widely respected. With regard to the suggestion that my hon. friend has made, I understand that the next two Fridays have been set aside for the discussion of estimates and this is pursuant to a co-operative arrangement made, I believe, among the house leaders. If there is anything the leader of the house wishes to add, he will no doubt do so.

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I thank the Acting Prime Minister for his very lucid explanation—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Churchill: —after wandering so far afield. However, the custom in other years in July and August has been to spend up to 16 days in a month on main estimates, rather than just two days as allotted for this month.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

APPOINTMENT OF CONCILIATION OFFICER IN LABOUR DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Barry Mather (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I have a question I would like to ask either the Secretary of State or the Minister of Labour. Can either minister confirm the report that negotiations between the C.B.C. and its employees have broken down to the extent that the employees' union has now asked that a mediator take over?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, if my hon. friend is referring to a dispute between the C.B.C. and its employees in the radio and television news departments represented by the Canadian wire service guild, then the answer is yes. On July 10, at the request of the union, a conciliation officer was appointed to mediate this dispute, and it is hoped meetings will be resumed early next month.

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE USE OF FORMER R.C.A.F. BASE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Industry and ask him whether consultations are now going on between him or his department and the C.B.C. in order to secure the consent of the C.B.C. to taking property in Vancouver other than parkland on the Kitsilano reserve.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, consultations are going on with those who have made proposals to the Crown Assets Disposal Corporation regarding the disposition of the Kitsilano property.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Have alternative offers been made to the C.B.C. of property in downtown Vancouver, rather than the area that has been asked for in the Kitsilano reserve?

Mr. Drury: As the right hon. gentleman knows, perhaps, Crown Assets Disposal Corporation have no alternative property to offer.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does that answer mean, therefore, that the attitude of the minister is that the government intends to carry out what Mr. Ouimet said it would, namely turn over this Kitsilano acreage to the C.B.C.? Is that what that answer means?

Mr. Drury: A decision on this particular point has not yet been taken. As soon as it is, it will be announced.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, who is going to take that decision, if it is not the Minister of Industry? I would like to know who this uncertain entity is that is going to make the decision. Is it the minister or is it the cabinet?

Mr. Drury: It is the government of Canada, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Postmaster General, representing as he does a Vancouver constituency. Has he received a communication from the Young Liberal association of B.C. to the effect that they join with the parks board of the city of Vancouver in opposing the turnover of the 17 acres in the Kitsilano reserve to the C.B.C.? If so, what would be his answer thereto?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I have no recollection of any such request having been made to me by the Young Liberals of British Columbia.

Mr. Diefenbaker: If he did receive such a communication and has read—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —the editorial in the Young Liberals "Voice" demanding this, what is his attitude to it?

TRANS-CANADA AIR LINES

REPORTED FLIGHT DELAY THROUGH LACK OF ENGLISH SPEAKING STEWARDESS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): I have a supplementary question which is related to a question asked the Minister of Transport. Would the minister inquire into the circumstances which led a T.C.A. captain to refuse to take off when piloting a T.C.A. plane because there was no stewardess on the plane who could speak English? In view of the fact that most of the passengers were English speaking, for safety reasons he refused to take off?

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard this fantastic story, but I will look into it.

Loans to Students

EDUCATION

MEASURE TO FACILITATE MAKING OF LOANS TO STUDENTS

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. C-110, to facilitate the making of loans to students.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with considerable satisfaction that the government has placed before the house this legislation to launch the Canada student loans plan. From references already made to this subject in various quarters I know that, whatever may be said of the details, the purposes and principles of this bill command widespread support.

This is surely as it should be. It is a cliché to say that a country's future depends upon its young people. But clichés are often true, and the importance of the truth embodied in this one can scarcely be overstated. The need for financial assistance, such as the loan plan that we are now considering, can be established in economic terms, in statistical terms and, most important, in terms of human lives and human hopes.

In economic terms, Canada's future strength and prosperity depend not only on the quality of our natural resources, about which we so often remind ourselves, but even more on the quality of our human resources. This is particularly true if we are determined, as indeed we are, to be more than hewers of wood and drawers of water. We must make sure, in the complex and competitive world of today, that an ever growing proportion of our young men and women have ready access to the benefits of higher education. In this age where undereducation so often spells underemployment, we must put forward very special efforts to ensure that no competent student lacks the financial support to continue his education beyond high school.

In statistical terms the need for new and very substantial financial facilities is easy to demonstrate. As is well known, we are in the early stages of an unprecedented "bulge" in our population at the university entrance age. This results from an unprecedented rise in the Canadian birth rate in the late war and post-war years. Statistical estimates published by the Canadian universities foundation suggest that rates of increase in university attendance during the rest of this decade could exceed 10 per cent per year. As hon. members know, the government has recognized the need for the provinces to have a greater share of revenues and higher equalization grants to meet such educational requirements.

This growth in the number of students in itself would greatly overstrain existing arrangements for student financing. In addition, however, one must take into account that because these war babies and post-war babies were spaced unusually close together, families will now be faced with the cost of keeping not one but possibly two or three of their children in college at the same time. This will accentuate the need for financial support.

Moreover, because the population of post-high school age is and will continue to be unusually large, students will experience unusual difficulty in finding summer jobs. Actually the number of summer jobs will no doubt be increasing, but the increase of students may be expected to exceed them. This again constitutes a special need for setting up enlarged arrangements for student financing at this time.

Finally, and most importantly, the need, the great and growing need, exists not merely as an economic problem or as a statistical projection, but as a pressing problem for the young men and women of this country. It exists for them and it exists for their families, the older families that they grew up with and the younger families they are even now founding and forming. A university education or its vocational equivalent is the highest achievement of our educational system, and it should be within the financial grasp of every young Canadian who is capable of making good use of it.

There was a time when some people actually believe that the children of the well to do, those who could afford to buy a university education, were the only ones who should be entitled to profit from it, and that people in poorer circumstances should not aspire to it.

This belief has long since been proven false. If we do not provide the means whereby all children with the necessary abilities can share the privilege of higher education, we are doing them a grave injustice and we are denying to our country a source of economic and intellectual benefit which we can ill afford to sacrifice.

Higher education is an investment, an investment for the individual and an investment for the society in which he lives. Both will be the richer as a result. The student's earning power may be expected to increase substantially on the basis of such an investment. This is why it makes sense for him, and for his government, that he should borrow in order to make this investment. It also makes sense for the individual and his government to share the cost of this investment, and this is exactly what the Canada student loans plan sets out to do. In the early stages, while the student is not yet earning, the government bears the whole cost. Later, when the student has graduated and has had some time to settle down and start earning, he himself takes over the debt. But still the government stands behind him, guaranteeing his loan, moderating its cost to him and taking over in case of his death.

What, in practical terms, can the Canada student loan plan offer to a young student? It can offer him annual loans up to $1,000 a year and total loans up to $5,000. The actual amount and terms of the loans to any individual will, of course, be related to his individual requirements and prospective earning capacity. For example, a student living in a university residence or in a boarding house may well need more than a student living at home. Again, a student in a course such as medicine, which is very expensive, may require more than a student in nursing. Obviously the prospective doctor can afford to take on a larger debt than the prospective nurse.

To be eligible for a loan a student must have attained a satisfactory scholastic standard—a judgment that is naturally to be made, under our plan, by the educational authorities. He must also, as is required in other student loan plans and as is essential to prevent possible abuse and to protect the taxpayer, make it clear to the authorities that he actually needs the loan. Given eligibility on these grounds, a student will qualify for a loan if he is a Canadian citizen or if he has resided in Canada for at least a year and intends to continue to reside here.

The loans are to be made to full time students. One of the main purposes of this plan is to make it possible for students whose university education would otherwise drag on over many years of part time work or night courses to complete their college education more quickly and to reap its intellectual and financial benefits at an earlier age.

Students who are residents of other countries will not be eligible for loans under the Canada student loans plan. Students from the richer countries abroad who choose to study here will have their own sources of finance; with our universities already crowded we do not consider we should offer them special inducements to come here. Students from the less developed countries may, of course, obtain educational assistance under several Canadian programs.

Apart from this, both undergraduate and graduate students may qualify under our plan. Moreover, as I have already implied, it will not be limited to students proceeding to an academic degree. It can cover any form of post-secondary school education. In order to designate the institutions which qualify in this category, bearing in mind the differences across Canada in this regard, we have invited the help of the provincial governments. They, or authorities designated by them, are to specify the institutions which student borrowers may attend, whether at home or abroad. It is clear from our discussions with provincial representatives that the coverage will be as comprehensive as reasonable administrative and educational standards can permit.

In this connection it is relevant to record that all the provinces, with but one exception, already operate some sort of general student loan plan. In virtually every case the amounts which can be made available for the loan plan, and in some cases to individual students, are substantially less than are to be made available under the Canada student loans plan. Nevertheless we are anxious both to learn from their experience and, if they are agreeable, to make use of their administrative machinery including the machinery set up for establishing student eligibility.

We recognize that the provinces are better able than the federal government to determine which students require assistance for the pursuit of their education in provincial educational institutions. Consequently we are hopeful that provincial governments will be prepared to act as partners in the Canada student loans plan through making available their machinery for establishing the eligibility of students for loans. Not only would this simplify the administration of the Canada student loans plan—it would be very difficult for the federal government itself to duplicate provincial machinery—but it would also serve as a useful point of liaison between the actual educational institutions, which clearly fall in the provincial jurisdiction, and a plan for guaranteed bank loans to students provided by the federal government.

Accordingly it is our expectation that students seeking loans under the Canada plan will, in each province, file applications through familiar and established channels. I expect that in almost every case a student will file his application in the province where he lives, but in certain cases where he pursues his studies in another province it may transpire that his application should be filed there.

I should emphasize that it is not our purpose to supersede any existing plan or arrangement. Some may well be modified, a few may possibly be discontinued; but in the field of student assistance there is room for many and diverse arrangements. A big national plan can carry the main financial problem, but other bodies can allow themselves greater flexibility, greater adaptability to local conditions and personal needs of students.

In this respect I would like to pay tribute particularly to the existing provincial plans and university plans, and to private plans such as those of the chartered banks themselves and such imaginative and worth-while arrangements as the Canadian scholarship trust plan which was initiated a few years ago.

Once a student has received from the appropriate provincially designated educational body or its agent—perhaps a student loan board; perhaps a university or governmental body in the province where he resides—a certificate for a loan of a specified amount, he or she will go to a bank to arrange the loan. The student can go to any branch of any chartered bank, either near his home or near his university. While the banker is not under compulsion to make the loan—after all, he is lending the money that other people have deposited with him—it would only be in exceptional cases that he would find a reason to question the amount stated on the certificate. He will, of course, satisfy himself that the person who presents a Canada student loan plan certificate is indeed the student to whom it has been issued, but as long as there is no corner cutting or double dealing—and I am sure there will be none of this—the student may normally expect to get his loan.

The loan he obtains, however, will differ in very important respects from the loans the same banker is making to other people. The student, under the Canada plan, will be specially favoured in three ways. First, he will not have to pay any interest on his loan or repay any part of the capital until six months after he has completed his studies. In the meanwhile the government will pay the interest to the bank. Second, when the time comes for the student to begin to pay interest and repay his loan it will cost him less than an ordinary borrower who, on a personal loan, will normally pay his banker the maximum legal rate of 6 per cent and a service charge as well. Under the Canada plan the government which guarantees the loan will also establish from time to time the maximum interest rate that may be charged, and no additional service charges will be permissible.

Mr. Knowles: What is that rate going to be?

Mr. Gordon: Initially, this rate is expected to be 5¾ per cent. When you take service charges into account this is considerably less than the rate at which anybody can obtain a loan under other circumstances.

Mr. Douglas: Is that the rate to the Minister of Finance during the period he is responsible for paying the interest or the rate to the borrower when he becomes liable to pay the interest? Is it the same rate in both cases?

Mr. Gordon: That will be the rate the borrower will have to pay.

Mr. Douglas: What does the minister expect to pay?

Mr. Gordon: Something less than that, because there will be no charges or costs involved. The third advantage to the prospective borrower is that the government guarantee comes into operation automatically if the student dies. Therefore he need not fear that his young wife or his family will have to repay the loan for him; once again, Canada will bear this risk.

Mr. Rynard: Is the loan insured?

Mr. Gordon: The loan is guaranteed and it is insured in case of death.

The advantages of making use of the facilities of the chartered banks in connection with a student loan plan are in part clear from what I have said already. There are branch banks all across the country near people's homes and near educational institutions. If a student is not satisfied by one bank or one branch he can approach another. In addition, the branch banking system which facilitates the making of loans also facilitates the consolidation of a series of loans into a single total. Further, it facilitates loan repayments and collections.

The Canadian government is already operating four other systems of guaranteed loans with the chartered banks, for farmers, fishermen and small businesses, and for home improvements. Experience shows that the system is efficient and economical. The costs to the government in terms of administration and in meeting losses are very small—

Mr. Knowles: Will the minister permit a question? Perhaps I may be anticipating the next paragraph in his speech, but can he tell us how many arrangements there are under which the government lends money more directly, such as the Farm Credit Corporation, the industrial development bank and so on?

Mr. Gordon: I cannot give the number off the top of my head, but I do not think there is much doubt that this system of lending through the banks will be of much more assistance to students. After all, the Farm Credit Corporation, for example, has only a limited number of branches. It would be impracticable for the government to set up lending offices all across the country, and it would be very expensive.

Mr. Douglas: You do not need to do that.

Mr. Gordon: The hon. member says there is no need to do that, but somehow or other you have to get the money to the student, which is the main objective of this legislation. What we want to do is to make sure, as I have already said, that no student or prospective student is prevented from going to a vocational training school or to a university because of financial difficulties—

Mr. Martineau: May I ask the minister one question?

Mr. Gordon: May I finish this sentence—and I am satisfied that this scheme will accomplish that objective.

Mr. Martineau: I should like to know if the provisions will apply to students under 21 years of age?

Mr. Gordon: I wonder whether I might answer that question later. I am going to deal with that in my remarks. I know there are a number of lawyers in the house who will be greatly interested in this matter. I have said that the advantages of making use of the facilities of the chartered banks in connection with a student loan plan are in part clear from my previous remarks. I pointed out that there are branch banks all across the country, and that if a student has difficulty with any particular branch he can go to another. I have said that we are already operating these other plans and that the costs to the government in terms of administration and of meeting losses are very small, far less than 1 per cent of the total loans outstanding. Under the student loan plan there will be an additional cost to the government during the interest free period enjoyed by each student borrower, but even making allowance for this the costs will be substantially less than would be involved in any other arrangement. The Canadian government has a natural advantage in sponsoring this sort of system on a large scale, country-wide basis.

I turn now from the plan as it will look to the student to the plan as it will look to parliament in its traditional role of custodian of the national purse and defender of the national taxpayer. At the outset let me reassert what is probably clear from what I have already said. The government has not approached this plan in any penny pinching spirit. We have been anxious to avoid waste and duplication in administration, but we are not proposing to parliament financial limits that are expected or intended to be restrictive. On the contrary, they are expected to accommodate all reasonable needs; and if, perchance, actual needs should outrun our expectations we shall bring the matter back to parliament for amendment. We can envisage that under the system we have in mind the outstanding loans at the end of five years could well be of the order of $200 million. At the end of 10 years we would expect them to be of the order of half a billion dollars.

For the first year of the plan, beginning this fall, we propose that parliament should provide for guaranteed bank loans up to $40 million. This, we calculate, would provide for a loan exceeding $500 for one out of every three students enrolled, a proportion that is unlikely to be reached in the first year of the plan or, indeed, for several years. This is the judgment of all the people whom we have consulted in this matter who have been administering loan plans for some years.

We also provide in the draft legislation for year by year escalation in the total to be guaranteed. Beginning from $40 million, this escalation is calculated on the basis of the growth of the age group in our population that may be expected to take advantage of university education and vocational training facilities. For calculation purposes, this group is 18 to 24 inclusive. Lest there be any misunderstanding, let me stress that this age group is used solely for purposes of statistical estimates. The benefits of the plan are available to students of any age, below 18 or above 24 or within those limits.

I might mention also the fact that the bill before the house establishes that bank loans under this legislation are to be recoverable even though they may be made to minors. While under normal circumstances a student who is not of full age may be expected to have his loan endorsed by a parent or someone else whose guarantee would be acceptable to a bank, we feel that this is not necessary, nor even desirable, if Canada provides a guarantee along the lines provided in this bill. We would expect that normally the parent would be aware of the application, but we would not wish to stipulate that the loan would require approval of the parent. To our way of thinking, it is better for all concerned that the student should take full responsibility and should feel fully responsible from the start.

Not only does the annual total grow from year to year on the basis of the 18 to 24 age group, it is also divided, year by year, among the provinces on the basis of the distribution across the country of the same age group. Thus the $40 million available in the first year would be divided approximately in the following amounts, using 1963 population data. Of the total of $40 million, $1.14 million would be allocated for Newfoundland; Prince Edward Island, $0.23 million; Nova Scotia, $1.73 million; New Brunswick, $1.37 million; Quebec, $12.96 million; Ontario, $12.49 million; Manitoba, $1.98 million; Saskatchewan, $1.89 million; Alberta, $2.89 million; British Columbia, $3.24 million; Yukon and Northwest Territories together, $0.08 million.

We considered the possibility of a system which was based not on provincial allocations but on some sort of uniform educational standard which would be equally applicable in any part or portion of the country. However, it soon became clear that such a uniform standard was impossible to devise and, even if it could be devised, would be impossible to apply. We are satisfied that the provincial allocation arrangement is more fair and more defensible than any alternative. Moreover, while different criteria could be considered both for the escalation and for the division between provinces, the use of the age group 18 to 24 appears to be at once the simplest and the most generally acceptable. I might add that if over the years serious anomalies show up the matter would be brought back to parliament for revision.

I have already explained that this plan, while very substantial in its proportions and in its provisions for future growth, is nevertheless quite economical from the point of view of the public purse. Actually, costs in the first year, even if all provinces used all their quotas and the whole $40 million were used up, would not be likely to exceed $2 million. In later years, when the outstanding loans would accumulate and the interest burden therefore grow, and when the government was meeting its guarantees, the costs could rise appreciably. Nevertheless I believe they will always look reasonable and moderate by comparison with the size of the plan and the importance of its purpose.

When the Canadian student loan plan was discussed at the provincial conference in Quebec last March we made it clear that if a province decided to rely entirely on its own student loan plan instead of participating in the Canada plan, it would be able to receive equivalent compensation. The bill makes provision for this. As hon. members know, the province of Quebec has indicated that it intends to rely on its own plan. Some other provinces may decide to do the same thing. While I would be happy to see the Canada plan operating universally from coast to coast, I think all hon. members should be made aware that of all the provincial student loan plans, that which is at present operated by the province of Quebec is amongst the most generous in its terms and by all odds makes the largest number of loans.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Would the minister be willing to tell us what other provinces he has in mind that have given any indication they are going to operate on their own rather than come under this plan?

Mr. Gordon: Mr. Speaker, I would prefer not to mention the names of the other provinces. It was not indicated that these conversations would be made public. There were one or two provinces, one in particular, which suggested at the beginning of the conversations they would probably continue under their own plan. After considerable discussion, and after a full appreciation of this particular plan and its advantages, that province asked that it be given time to consider whether or not it would be in its own interests to come under this plan. Until I have a definite understanding one way or the other, it would be unfair to mention the name.

Mr. Douglas: May I ask a question which the bill does not make clear? In the event a province should decide to operate a student loan plan on its own, will the government pay them actual cash or simply guarantee the bank loans which they may make?

Mr. Gordon: I will come to that in my statement in just a moment.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Before the minister goes on, he mentioned one province and he does not want to indicate the name of that province; I am not going to argue with him on the basis of that refusal. Were there any other provinces in the same position of being uncertain, beyond Quebec and the province undesignated as yet?

Mr. Gordon: No province has formally stated whether or not it wishes to come under the Canada student loans plan as yet. In each case we have had very useful conversations, but understandably every province wished to see the bill in its present form after it had been passed by parliament, as I hope it will be, before making a definite statement one way or the other.

The option of receiving equivalent compensation is, of course, available to any province. To the extent that the growing demand for such loans now exceeds or may come to exceed the resources available under provincial student loan plans, I expect that the provinces will be inclined to contemplate the operation of federal and provincial plans side by side.

The formula for equivalent compensation, while it involves certain complications, is simple in essence. At the end of each year's operation we shall add up the cost of operating the plan in the other provinces and we shall then pay to any province qualified for equivalent compensation a proportion of those costs equal to the proportion that its age group 18 to 24 bears to the same age group in the provinces where the plan is in operation.

So, to amplify just a little bit and to answer the question, there would be no suggestion of guaranteed provincial bank loans. It would be up to a province that maintained its own plan to provide the funds that would be required, which might be a quite heavy drain on its credit, and all it would receive would be its proportion of the net costs to the federal government and the other provinces.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask the minister if he has made the calculation of what it would cost the federal government according to clause 12 of the bill, his own formula?

Mr. Gordon: According to what?

Mr. Grégoire: Have you made a calculation according to the formula expressed in clause 12 of the bill of what it would cost the federal government?

Mr. Gordon: It would be easier if I tried to answer some of these more detailed questions when we come to deal with the clauses of the bill. Naturally I have made those calculations, and I shall be glad to give the answer at that time.

Mr. Chatterton: This is not a question requiring detailed information, but can the minister say whether this equivalent payment to a non-participating province would include not only the interest but also the defaulted loans?

Mr. Leboe: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, we ought to deal with these things in committee. We should let the minister finish his statement and then when we get into committee we can ask these questions. We are acting as though we were in committee now.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think that is a very good suggestion. Possibly hon. members will want to withhold detailed questions until we have reached that stage.

Mr. Gordon: I appreciate the considerable interest of all hon. members in this piece of legislation, which I think we would all agree is a very important step forward in this field. Now I think it would be better if I were to finish my speech.

Apart from such a province, that is one that would be receiving this equivalent compensation, there is no doubt that the Canada plan will provide a very substantial element of support and relief in connection with the rapidly increasing financial burden of higher education. The resources of the federal government are greater than those of the provinces, and none of them can have the same access to a country-wide system of guaranteed bank loans.

In conclusion I would like to repeat that while other plans may be expected to continue, the Canada student loans plan will be the biggest and by far the most widespread of them all. Its launching is to me, and I am sure to hon. members of all parties, a matter of great personal satisfaction. As we consider this bill I hope we will all be able to recall the hopes and aspirations of our own early days. It is surely a good thing to take part in launching a plan that can give so much help and encouragement to so many young Canadians and, through them, to the country for whose future we in this house must bear a major responsibility.

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I say at once that the minister has set forth a summary of the concepts that led to this legislation, and some general ideas as to its application, in a way that is most commendable. I say that because he has covered the situation connected with the difficulties of young men and women in securing education beyond secondary school age in a way that makes this legislation a subject that I am sure will receive general support in the house.

However, in saying that I should add that it falls far short of the undertakings and promises that were made during two election campaigns, and even prior thereto. The promise of 10,000 scholarships, which had a tremendous appeal, apparently has been forgotten and joins what the minister has described as clichés which have served their purposes and ends and are no longer regarded as of such importance as they were one and a half, two and three years ago.

I am glad to see this legislation among others in the priorities that have been placed before us. The Postmaster General is not here at the moment, but I must say I am very much indebted to him for an article which appeared in the West Ender of Vancouver, a report from parliament hill in which the following appears:

> Although during the past few weeks the House of Commons has made significant inroads in the legislative program, there are still very important measures which must be adopted.
> To renew the progress of the past few weeks it is gratifying to report the following items have been dealt with:
> —The approval of the Columbia river treaty.
> —The national housing legislation.
> —The farm credit extension bill.
> —The constitutional amendment to provide for supplementary benefits in our pension legislation.

Then he goes on to say:

> Your government has reason to be pleased that these measures have passed as they are necessary and constructive measures. But it is equally important that other measures in the government's program for action be dealt with before members can leave Ottawa.
> The Prime Minister has proposed that the following urgent legislation be completed in July:
> —The national defence bill.

That has been passed by the House of Commons.

> The extension of family allowances to 16 and 17 year olds who continue their education.

That has received the consideration of the house.

> The bill providing for student loans.

We are now dealing with it.

> The federal-provincial fiscal arrangements bill.
> Third and final reading of the extension of the fishing zone to 12 miles.

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

The significant part of this is that parliament is away ahead of the government's expectations, because the next paragraph says:

> When these items are completed, hopefully by July 22 or 23, the house will return to the flag debate—

This is the first admission on the part of a member of the government that the progress made in the house is even much faster than their optimistic hopes could have expected or anticipated. Indeed, I am grateful that the Postmaster General saw fit, in a non-political report to his constituents, to pay tribute to the efficient manner in which those prior matters in legislation are being passed by parliament.

However, there is one other matter that is of interest, because after all this question has been delayed for months. Student loans have been expected ever since the speech from the throne gave promise of their being presented to parliament, and we in the opposition have continually pressed for this legislation to be brought before parliament. Apparently it belonged to the category of legislation that was promised; the program enunciated before there was consultation with the provinces, and then when consultation took place and threats of legal action were made against the federal government if it proceeded without regarding provincial jurisdiction, changes and alterations were made.

This legislation could have been introduced a long time ago. Indeed, it is now quite late, for everywhere across our country we find students in the position referred to by the minister, of being as it were in a state of suspended animation awaiting legislation while at the same time realizing that without the legislation they might very well be unable to carry on their education. The minister went back to the earlier days of his youth and spoke of the difficulties—

Mr. Gordon: That is a long way back.

Mr. Diefenbaker: —experienced by all who were not possessed of many worldly goods. Many in this house—I do not know whether he is in that category—have had the experience of having to endeavour in various fields of work to earn sufficient to carry them back to university for the next term. I had that experience for several years. I remember one year in particular when I worked in the summer as a hired man, lived on salt pork and ended up with a growth on the back of my neck that used up my entire savings of the summer. The Secretary of State for External Affairs belongs, I understand, to a group that found it necessary to do many things to provide for an education. As the minister has said, those days have changed and today there is in all parts of the free world legislation to provide assistance to students.

I mentioned a moment ago that this legislation enjoyed a position of priority. I would not want to interpolate anything of a political nature, with the Secretary of State for External Affairs sitting opposite me, but I was impressed a day or so ago by a statement made by the premier of Saskatchewan. There is another piece of legislation that should be before the house but has been forgotten, and that is the redistribution measure. It came; an amendment was suggested by the N.D.P., and it passed away. It was a shadow that came before parliament, darkened the house for a moment and then disappeared.

Now we begin to see, in view of a statement made the other day, the reason for that. I am beginning to wonder, sir, whether this priority legislation, followed as it is to be by the renewal of the flag debate, is not based on a determination of the government to have an early election, to which I referred the other day but did not have any supporting evidence. Now I have that of the premier of Saskatchewan, who last Thursday said:

> Premier Ross Thatcher said today he believed there would be no redistribution of seats in the House of Commons before the next federal election.
> Mr. Thatcher said he had discussed redistribution, under which Saskatchewan could lose four of her 17 federal seats, with Prime Minister Pearson.
> "He didn't flatly say there would be no redistribution before the next election, but he expressed doubt that there would be at the rate parliament is moving".

That is one of the most interesting revelations. Out of the mouths of babes comes wisdom. This legislation is part of that priority group that apparently is far more important than any question of redistribution. I would not want to exacerbate the sensibilities of the Acting Prime Minister by bringing in anything of a political nature, Your Honour, but I feel that Premier Thatcher's frank revelation of conversations with the Prime Minister indicates that that must be the purpose and the aim. That is the reason this legislation is brought in at this time, to be followed by the flag resolution; and then, in the event that there is not that submissiveness on the part of parliament to the Prime Minister's diagram, there is going to be an election before there is redistribution.

The particular subject for discussion today is one of these priority questions. I listened with interest to the minister as he said, as does the bill, that $40 million a year will be made available. I am all for this legislation, but I ask this question. What is the effect of this measure going to be on the universities and other institutions of higher learning, with regard to the numbers of students? What is going to be done on the part of the government of Canada to provide, following consultation with the provinces, the additional plant, laboratory, classroom facilities and so on to handle even a small part of the additional numbers that will enter universities, when facilities are now strained to capacity in every province? What plans are there in this regard?

When we were in office we faced this problem. The province of Quebec took strong objection to the acceptance of university grants. Indeed, the amount had piled up to some $25 million by 1960. The premier of Quebec at that time was the late Paul Sauvé. An arrangement was made between the government of which I had the honour to be the head and the government of Quebec whereby this matter was solved for the first time. It had remained unsolved, indeed untouched, for a period of years. During the period we were in office we increased the amount of grants, on a per capita basis, from $1 to $1.50, and in December, 1962 to $2 per capita.

The result of our interest in university education and assistance thereto was that compared with the year 1956-57, when under the then Liberal government Canadian universities received $16 million in per capita grants, by 1962-63 they received $26.3 million and in 1963-64 the amount which would have been expended was some $26.8 million. In other words we were doing something to achieve that objective which the Minister of Finance has described, giving to young men and young women the opportunity to secure education not only in quantity but also in quality.

This is a problem which must be faced. For the first time, during the days of our administration there was made available long term low interest loans to universities for the construction of student residences, which was a tremendous advance on behalf of university education in this country. We made available loans to Canadian universities to construct living accommodation for resident students, and those loans amounted in total to more than $41 million. We made possible the doubling of student residence capacity, with new residential accommodation for 10,000. We encouraged university students. For the first time we provided for the deduction of tuition fees for income tax purposes. We also provided special assistance to parents who were supporting their children at university by allowing exemptions even after the students had reached the age of 21. In addition we implemented legislation increasing the monthly education allowance for the children of war dead from $25 to $60 a month. All these things were done to reach the objective so necessary today of increasing opportunities for university education.

I am not going to put a large number of statistics on the record. I am going to suggest instead that hon. members who have not done so read the report entitled "University costs and sources of support" published in 1962 by the Canadian universities foundation. Also a further report by the same foundation and the same author, Dr. Edward Sheffield, concerning the projected student enrolment in Canada in 1976; and finally, to consult figures available from the higher education section of the dominion bureau of statistics.

Without going into detail I should like to summarize one or two projections for the future. There are today some 141,000 university students. That number will greatly increase. Indeed, by 1976 it will be more than three times what it is today. One of the reasons is not only the desire for education but, as the minister indicated, the increasing numbers in our population between the ages of 18 and 24 years. There has been a tremendous increase in this regard. The minister mentioned the birth rate. In 1951 there were only one and a half million in that age group. Today there are close to 1,900,000, and this figure will greatly increase.

Then there is the increase in the percentage of young men and women as well as older people who go to universities. In our day there was only a very small percentage of people who went beyond grade 12, but in recent years the increase in this number has been tremendous. If one goes back to 1951-52 one finds that 4.2 per cent of the population between 18 and 24 years of age were enrolled in university. By this year this figure has approximately doubled. It will continue to increase and will double again to about 16 per cent by 1976. That is why this is one of those problems—education within the jurisdiction of the province—which we must solve.

However, university education is becoming such a vast and tremendous problem that it requires national endeavour, and that national endeavour has to assist and correlate itself with provincial action by agreement. The number of graduates of universities gives some idea in this connection. The veterans' peak was in 1951-52; the number of graduates that year was about 15,000. In 1962-63 it was 28,913, and in 1963-64 it was 32,250. By 1976 the number will be 95,400.

Not only have the numbers and the percentages increased, but as well the operating cost per student in Canadian universities has mounted tremendously. In my day one's fees amounted to $35 or $40 per year. Today they are 10 to 12 times—I am not speaking about specialized professions—what they were then. The actual operating cost of the university student in Canada in 1956-57 was $1,200. Today it is close to $1,920. By 1965-66 it will be $2,200.

Those, Mr. Speaker, are challenging figures. The operating costs of universities in 1956-57 amounted to $85 million a year. In 1962-63 it was $225 million, and the projection for next year is $325 million. These statistics indicate the need for action. What is being done is beneficial, but it is just a start. It is just a stopgap, if we in Canada are to keep pace with the ever increasing need for university graduates, in particular those in science and engineering.

How are we to finance this? Where is the money to be found? Is free university tuition practical or practicable? Shall we continue to have university students pay increasing amounts in tuition fees to meet the rising cost of university education? I do not think so. Should universities control student enrolment by making entrance standards progressively tougher? Well, I know there are some very brilliant students in this house, men who were brilliant in their university days. But I also know that some of the ablest lawyers in this country found it impossible to pass their examinations and would not have any hope of admission on the basis of present day requirements. I know, too, that some of the most successful Canadians were anything but brilliant in the days when they attended university. For some reason, over the passing years they outdistanced those whose brilliance was apparent in their university days. I am glad to see the Postmaster General here, because he and I are in agreement on this.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Winston Churchill is a good example of that in another country.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Yes. The Acting Prime Minister, again free from all political considerations, has suggested Winston Churchill as an example and there are many more. I sometimes wonder, though, whether the fact that he was not a success as a student was due not to any lack of intellectual capacity but to the fact that he did not really like the place he was attending. It was too slow for him. He had other views. One has only to read his reports from the Malakand campaign in the 1890's, only a few years after he was unable to pass his scholastic examinations, to be confirmed in this view. He wrote reports of that campaign which in my opinion are equal, if not superior, to anything he ever wrote in later life.

But this is just an occasion when I have been diverted from my subject by a very pertinent observation. If I were to be personal about the matter, I would look over at the Acting Prime Minister and say that he is one of those outstanding examples of high scholarship who showed such promise during his student days.

This student loan plan is an attractive one. It must be recalled, however, that six months after graduation or after the expiry of five years there will be a $500 payment required plus $300 interest. I just mention this, though I am sure the minister has concluded that on the basis of the present day earnings of recent graduates this will really not be difficult to meet. But it deserves consideration. This plan is an emergency measure. It is to be supported generally, I think, by members of the house, but it does not meet the overwhelming problem of advanced education in Canada, a problem which will have to be faced if this nation is to be able to meet in the years ahead the destiny which lies before it.

I will not enter into any further particulars at this time. Various members of the opposition will deal in detail with certain aspects of the subject. I conclude by summarizing what I have said. This question of university education is in my opinion one of the greatest problems our nation faces. We, while in office, make great advances. As I have indicated, this is a further step. I think it would be the course of wisdom when we come back this fall for the second part of the session—if we do—for a committee of the house to be set up to consider this whole question of advanced education and postgraduate education, so that in a community of co-operation in a field which is above all political considerations the members of this house, and there are many who are interested in this subject, will be able to give a consensus of their views. This having been done, the government would be in a better position to present the question to the provinces in its national context.

This university problem and the necessity of assuring the widest and most soundly based university training to all who are qualified is not solved by makeshifts, however beneficial. This is a field in which we have fallen behind. We are 15 years, I think it is, behind the United States. My hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings has made a profound study of our position vis-à-vis that of the United States, and I believe that in the course of his remarks he will deal with this aspect of the question.

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Burnaby-Coquitlam): There can be no doubt as to the need for legislation to provide financial assistance to young people who are desirous of acquiring a university education or higher learning. There was a time when advanced education was thought of as being reserved to a comparatively small proportion of the population, particularly for those who were interested in entering the professions or the higher echelons of business.

That is no longer true. We have now moved into a technological era in which, in order to make a good living and in order to make a useful contribution to society, a very large percentage of our population needs advanced education. This has been shown by the steady increase in the number of students enrolled in universities in Canada. The number has gone up from 62,000 students in 1952-53 to 141,000 in 1962-63. It is estimated that it will double in the next six years and may reach 480,000 by the year 1976-77.

Not only is enrolment at universities steadily increasing but the cost is going up. While the number of students at universities is going up 11 to 12 per cent per year, operating costs of universities have been going up at the rate of 16 per cent per year. From the standpoint of the student, what is even more alarming is that since 1957 student tuition fees have risen by 22 per cent. There is no way by which the average student can make up that 22 per cent increase. No student's earnings from summer employment have gone up 22 per cent. There has been a very rapid increase in student fees and the amount of money it is necessary to have in order to get an advanced education has been climbing steadily.

The fact is that in Canada today lack of finances is denying a very large group of young people the opportunity to avail themselves of advanced education. Dominion bureau of statistics figures show that in 1960-61 there were over one million young Canadians between the ages of 18 and 21. It was estimated by educational authorities that of that number over 20 per cent had the mental and intellectual capacity to acquire a university education. But the fact is that only 11 per cent were able to attend centres of higher learning or about 114,000 young people. This means that about half the young people who could have acquired a university education were unable to do so and I think it would be a fair assumption that a fairly large percentage of them did not acquire a higher education because they lacked the necessary financial resources.

It is significant that the burden of finding the necessary money to attend a centre of higher learning is very naturally most prevalent among young people who come from homes that are in the middle or lower income brackets. The Financial Post of February 8 last carried a survey which looked into where most students get the funds to attend university. They came from a variety of sources, some from private scholarships, some from provincial scholarships, some from money lent to students by relatives and so on; but the two large items by which students financed were summer work, which accounted for 28.6 per cent of all revenue which students got, and funds supplied by parents, which accounted for 31.9 per cent. This means, of course, that where parents are not able to supply these funds students are unable to get an education.

The University of Toronto advisory committee on ex-service students made a survey. Their study revealed that whereas normally only 20 per cent of the university student population came from the homes of industrial workers, 32 per cent of the veterans came from such homes; and whereas 55 per cent of the normal student population came from the homes of professional, managerial and business people only 36 per cent of the veterans came from such homes. This helped to establish at the University of Toronto at least that the number of students suited for university education from low income groups was significantly larger than the pitifully small number who can ordinarily obtain such an education.

The Canadian union of university students has done a great deal of work on this matter. They hired a group to make a survey for them and tried to ascertain the effects on students in Canada of the lack of financial resources. I have here a table showing the number of students who over the years have had to interrupt their education because of a lack of money. It is interesting that the bulk of them, of course, fall in the category of those who come from homes of fairly modest incomes. I can sum up their whole survey by quoting from a speech which was made to members of parliament in room 112N by Mr. Patrick Kenniff of the Canadian union of students on June 25 last. He summed up the situation by saying:

> It is very significant that among students whose family income is less than $5,000 per annum, over 30 per cent are required to interrupt their university education to go out and earn the necessary money to continue. It is also interesting to note that this rate drops sharply as family income increases. At $6,000 the interruption rate is 15 per cent, while at $8,000 it is 3 per cent. Without increased student aid now, we are risking making financial means the chief criterion for a university education right across the country.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I certainly agree that legislation to assist needy students is long overdue in this country. I want to say, however, that the legislation now before us is, of course, a long way from the promises which were made by the Liberal party and by hon. members opposite not only before the election but even after the election. I have here a photostat copy of the Toronto Daily Star of May 1, 1963 with a great banner headline saying that Ottawa is going to make available 10,000 scholarships of $1,000 each for four years to students. This was announced by the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing). These scholarships were promised by Liberal speakers in every corner of the country. No scholarships have so far appeared. The student loan legislation now before us is a poor substitute for the 10,000 scholarships that were promised.

This legislation is really not going to cost the government very much money. Someone asked the minister how much a while ago and he said he had made estimates and that he would tell us when the bill is in committee of the whole. On the assumption the minister is going to pay 5 per cent interest on this $40 million, and assuming it is all lent out in any one year, it is estimated there will be a payment of somewhere in the neighbourhood of $2 million a year or slightly more if the minister has to pay a higher rate than 5 per cent. This is not a very heavy contribution toward removing the financial barriers or, to use the minister's phrase, to ensure that no competent student lacks financial support to go beyond high school.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, we are not really going to grapple with this problem until we make university education absolutely free to every young person in Canada who has the intelligence to acquire it. After all, education is no longer a luxury. Education is something which is absolutely essential to enable young people to make a living and, consequently, to enable them to make their contribution to modern society in this era of the scientific revolution. After all, tuition fees now account for at the most 28 per cent of the cost of operating a university. This means that society as a whole pays up to 72 per cent of the cost of the university education of those who are able to put up the other 28 per cent. If a student or his parent cannot put up that part which they must pay through tuition fees, then all the rest of the benefits of a university education which are provided by society as a whole are denied to that student.

Most of the modern countries in the world today are now providing free education to university students and to students going on in the fields of art, music and dramatics. In the United Kingdom, ever since the education act of 1948 and in the Scandinavian countries, even in a little country like Israel with all the economic problems which confront it, free higher education has been provided. In Israel special allowances are provided to enable a student to go to university, and there are special allowances for those who are married. Dr. Cyril James, a former president of McGill University, said this:

> A young Canadian from a family of modest circumstances has less chance of getting a university education today than a youth in any other country with which I am familiar.

This, Mr. Speaker, is the most damning indictment that has ever been levelled at this country. We are years behind most of the modern industrial nations of the world. We have a much larger drop-out of students between grade 1 and graduation from university than most of the countries in western Europe and larger, of course, than the United States.

I say that one of the first things we have to do in Canada is to abolish university tuition fees. The government of Canada could do this by increasing its per capita grant to universities on the condition that the universities, in turn, discontinued tuition fees. This would be a comparatively small contribution financially in terms of the vast need. It would be an advantage not only to the individuals concerned, but for the technological development of Canadian society which in the years ahead must compete with other countries that have highly trained personnel.

I readily acknowledge, of course, Mr. Speaker, that neither scholarships nor student loans will meet the real problem of university education. The real problem of university education, over and above the things I have been mentioning, is the lack of educational facilities, equipment and trained staff. There is little value in enabling a young man to go to university if there is no classroom for him to sit in, if there are no professors to teach him and no laboratories in which to do his experiments. The crying need in Canada today is for capital to expand the university equipment and facilities. The universities have been struggling to cope with the demands. Their capital expenditures have risen faster than enrolments, because scientific courses require expensive laboratory equipment. For instance, in 1956-57, university capital costs were only $21 million. By 1961-62, they had gone up to $136 million. It is estimated that for the three-year period 1963-64 through 1965-66, some $800 million will be required.

Now, Mr. Speaker, it is a sad commentary on our society that we have no difficulty getting capital for supermarkets, filling stations and more hamburger stands, but we have not as Canadians been able to find the necessary capital to expand university facilities in order to train the young people who will supply the technical personnel that will decide whether or not Canada can compete in the scientific era of tomorrow.

We in this party have been arguing throughout the years that the federal government must provide social capital which is necessary to enable the universities to keep pace with the growing demands for space, equipment and trained personnel. The capital requirements are such that they are far beyond the financial capacities of the provinces. As a matter of fact, there is no reason why the provinces should be saddled with this capital cost of university expansion because the universities in the respective provinces train students from all over Canada as well as from outside of Canada. All the students trained in the province of Quebec do not come from Quebec. All the students trained in the province of Nova Scotia do not come from Nova Scotia. Therefore it would be demonstrably unfair to burden the people of a particular province with the capital cost of supplying university plant and equipment.

We say that one of the responsibilities of the federal government is to supply the social capital which is necessary. We have been starving the universities. If we continue to do so, we will of necessity have to limit the number of students who can attend university. If we limit the number of students in the manner we are doing now by raising these tuitions fees, the students who will be shut out of the universities will be the students who come from homes that are in the lower and middle income brackets. If there is anything that ought to be determined on the basis of individual ability and not on the basis of financial ability it is higher education. There are hundreds of thousands of young people in this country who can make a contribution to our society and can live full, useful and meaningful lives if the university facilities are available and if we make it financially possible for them to attend.

With reference to the bill before the house, in my opinion it is very largely window dressing because the ability to secure a loan under this legislation will not depend on the Minister of Finance. It will not depend on the provincial authority which grants the eligibility certificate. It will depend upon the whims of the local bank manager. It is all very well for the minister to say, as he said in his speech, that if a student is not satisfied by one bank he can approach another. Yes, he can keep on approaching banks. He can spend a week or two going from bank to bank, but what is the experience of the banks?

I do not say this in criticism, but what is happening is that every branch bank is allocated a certain amount of money per month and per quarter, which is available for making loans. It is not an unlimited amount and a bank manager is under the necessity of making the best showing he can. As the Porter commission points out, he can make commercial loans and, by charging the regular 6 per cent interest, not on the money due but on the total amount of the loans, he can make anywhere from 9½ to 11¼ per cent interest. I myself have seen loans that made as high as 12 and 14 per cent.

If a bank manager has to choose between lending money to a student at 5¾ per cent—as a matter of fact during the period that the Minister of Finance is going to pay the interest it will probably be less than 5¾ per cent—and making a loan to one of his commercial customers and getting a return of 9 to 11 per cent, it is not very difficult to see who is going to get the loan, because there are not unlimited funds. The bank manager has only a stipulated amount of money available for lending purposes and he is anxious to make the best possible showing he can.

If anyone doubts that that is what is going to happen I suggest he take a look at the Small Businesses Loans Act and what has transpired under its operation. That is an act which was passed by the previous government in 1960. Most of us approved of it and thought it would be helpful to small businessmen. But last fall the Minister of Finance admitted in the house that although that legislation makes available up to $300 millions in loans, in the years of its operation only $90 million has been lent out—less than one third of the money made available for loans to small businessmen.

During the Christmas recess I decided to make some inquiries as to why more use had not been made of this act. I talked to businessmen and chambers of commerce and they told me many people had made application but had not been able to get loans. I then talked to bank managers and they said to me very frankly, "If you were only allowed $200,000 to be lent out in the third quarter of the year, would you lend it out under this legislation at 5 per cent when you could lend it out otherwise and make a higher rate of interest and a better showing for your branch?" The answer is obvious.

Mr. Gordon: May I ask the hon. member a question? How does he explain the fact that the present amount available under the Farm Improvement Loans Act, $400 million, which was the amount for the current three year lending period, is expected to be used up prior to the end of the period? I think the hon. member knows there is a motion on the order paper to increase it to $500 million, and under that piece of legislation the rate allowed is only 5 per cent.

Mr. Douglas: The minister is talking about the family farm improvement loans. For one thing, Mr. Speaker, that scheme has been operating over a long period of time and I have some experience of it in rural communities where we made surveys on family farm improvement legislation. This applies largely in rural areas where the local bank managers do not have too much competition for the amount of money available to them for lending purposes. This is not true to the same extent in urban areas.

If the minister is going to give explanations, will he explain to me why small businessmen have received only $90 million in loans instead of the $300 million available, although that act has been in operation for six years?

Mr. Gordon: May I ask another question.

Mr. Douglas: Yes.

Mr. Gordon: Does my hon. friend not think there will be considerable competition on the part of the banks to establish commercial relations with these young men and women from whom will come the leaders of the future? I know in my experience banks have been very anxious to secure accounts early in people's business and commercial life, if they think they are going to develop into important customers. Does the hon. member not think there is something in this? I know the banks do.

Mr. Douglas: I hope there is, but I have had enough dealings with bankers to know this warm sentiment that the minister expresses is not likely to be very widespread.

Mr. Gordon: Please don't misunderstand. There is nothing warm about this sentiment; it is cold business acumen or judgment.

Mr. Douglas: Exactly, and it is because it is cold business acumen I am saying that when a bank manager has to choose between one commercial customer doing business with him every day, who wants to borrow $5,000 on which the bank manager can make from 9 to 11 per cent, the manager will probably find that a better loan to make than loans of $1,000 to five individual students, in the hope that some day those students will be back living in that community, and will be in business and be his customers in the future. I think the minister is stretching it pretty far.

As a matter of fact the minister is doing his best to put a good face on a pretty shabby piece of legislation. This legislation is like so much that the Liberal party brings into the house. Their whole principle seems to be, "How little can we get away with? What can we do that will look as though we are doing a great deal when actually we are doing very little?" This is like the 12 mile fishing limit. It is like so much of the Liberal legislation that pays lip service, to enable the minister to come into the house and say we are now going to reach the stage when no young person will be denied university education merely because he has not got the money.

He ought to say there will be no young person denied university education provided he can get a bank manager who will lend him the money. He did not say that. A moment ago the minister said he could not set up lending institutions all over the country. I said he did not need to do that, and of course he does not. He has a very simple remedy at his disposal and that would have been to have co-operated with the provinces in setting up a student loan fund in each province, administered by the province. Then the federal government could turn the money over to that student loan fund committee, which committee would then be in a position to allocate the money to students in the form of loans on the basis of the need of the students and on the basis of the students being able to show they have been conscientious and will make good use of the money being lent to them.

In that way there would be student loan committees whose primary interest would be in seeing that young people get an education, rather than having the loans screened by people whose primary interest will be safeguarding their money and making sure they get the best possible return for their employer, the banks for whom they are working. I do not think it is too late yet for the government to change its mind.

I have had some experience with this question of student loans. We found that the only way we could really make sure that students got the money they needed was to do as follows. I am talking in this case of a province. The province went out and borrowed the money, put the money into a fund, and set up a committee of representatives of the teaching profession, the universities, the student body and the department of education. They made the loans available out of this fund. The only test was, did a student need it, and was the student likely to make good use of it? Those are the only tests there ought to be. But when a student has to run the gamut of the gimlet eyed bank manager, the student who is going to get the loan is ofttimes going to be the student whose father has good security, or the student whose father has an account with the bank and the bank manager wants to keep on the good side of the family. But what happens to the boy whose father has no bank account, who may not even have a father, and who has to go to the bank manager with no security, with no prospects, just hoping that the bank manager will see fit to make him a loan? The minister says that if he does not get it from one bank, he can always go to another. He will certainly be doing that; he will know all the banks in the community before he is finished.

There are one or two minor things about the act that I just want to mention before I sit down, Mr. Speaker. I am surprised that the minister has not put in the act the interest rates, but I understand from his statement that he hopes, of course, they may drop from time to time so he is going to set the rate by regulation. I am a little at a loss to understand why there should be two interest rates, an interest rate which the borrower will pay when he becomes liable, which is six months after he graduates—that rate is 5¾ per cent—and a lower rate which the minister expects to pay during the period that the minister is responsible for the payment of interest. After all, the federal guarantee is behind the loan, and it seems to me that a rate of 5¾ per cent is very high under those circumstances.

I am wondering why no provision is made here for graduate students, because certainly $1,000 a year will not begin to meet the requirements of a graduate student; and these are increasingly necessary particularly in the fields of science, engineering and medicine. At the present time the student union estimate that an undergraduate, if he is staying at home, needs around $1,100 a year, and if he is staying away from home he needs some $1,550; but graduate students, particularly if they have to go to the United States to do Ph.D. work, need anywhere from $2,500 to $3,000. These are the kind of people we will have to train if we are going to have, in turn, professors to train the other students who are going to be coming to our universities in increasing numbers.

I am wondering why there is no provision in this legislation for loans to be made by credit unions with the same guarantee that is provided here for the banks. Hundreds of credit unions all across Canada have been lending money to students for years with the guarantee of the parents or members of the credit union, and I imagine these credit unions will continue to make those loans to needy students. Why should they not have the same guarantee in this legislation that the banks are going to enjoy? I hope that when the legislation gets into committee of the whole, the minister will be prepared to accept an amendment or introduce an amendment himself to include credit unions, because I am sure he is aware that there are vast areas of Canada now in which there are no chartered bank branches. I see my hon. friend for Humboldt-Melfort-Tisdale (Mr. Rapp), who I am sure will agree with me that there are great stretches in the rural parts of the prairies where there are no chartered banks; where the only banking in the small rural communities is being done by credit unions. My hon. friends from the province of Quebec know that the young people there have been trained from the time they start in public school to put their money in the caisse populaire.

Mr. Grégoire: Exactly.

Mr. Douglas: They are used to dealing with the credit union movement. I see no reason why, if the government of Canada is going to guarantee loans to students, it should not guarantee them to the credit unions and to the caisse populaire as well as to the chartered banks of Canada.

Mr. Grégoire: Hear, hear.

Mr. Douglas: There is one small matter I want to mention to the minister merely because I hope he will give some thought to it and will give us an explanation when we get into committee of the whole. I am not a lawyer, but it strikes me as very strange that in clause 2, paragraphs (b) and (k)—I know I cannot discuss the clauses of the bill—there is provision for certain things to be done by the lieutenant governor in council. Lieutenant governors in council may pass orders in council on the basis of a provincial statute. I do not know how they can pass orders in council on the authority of a federal statute. It seems to me that somebody either has a very good explanation which indeed is ingenious or somebody has not thought about it and we are liable to be in great difficulties.

Mr. Nowlan: It will have to be ingenious, but will it be constitutional?

Mr. Douglas: It can be got around, of course, by the provinces enacting legislation and passing orders in council under their own legislation; but they certainly cannot pass orders in council under this legislation. This is something which should be looked into.

Mr. Grafftey: It is the new centralist look.

Mr. Douglas: In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that this legislation will be of some value, and I hope the minister is right and that it will be of considerable value. It will allow loans to be made, when the whole $40 million is put out in any one year, to about 40,000 students. Since these students will be at university for three or four years, assuming it is four years only 10,000 new students a year can come on to the plan. If the average length of stay of the student is three years, we will be able to take on some 13,300 additional students per year. I suggest that this is totally inadequate. To be bringing 10,000 or 13,000 or even 15,000 additional students a year into university enrolment is completely inadequate in light of the fact that we have probably in excess of 100,000 students a year who are capable of making use of a university education or training at some higher centre of learning. If it is correct—and this figure seems to be general in other countries—that 20 per cent of the age group between 18 and 21 should be university material, then we should be increasing our university enrolment by something over 100,000.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, will not do it. This legislation is similar to giving one solitary peanut to a hungry elephant. It will help. But let the government not feel that it has dealt with the whole problem of advanced education. Let it not throw this legislation as a sop to the problem of how to remove the financial barrier to providing education to the young people of Canada. We just have not done that. This is a useful step, but the government still has to tackle the much more fundamental proposition of increasing operating grants to universities so that they can remove tuition fees. The government also has to start making capital grants to universities so that they can expand their facilities, if we are ever going really to tackle the problem of bringing Canada into line with other modern nations so that every young Canadian will be able to get a university education irrespective of the financial ability of the parents of that young person.

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure indeed, as one who belongs to the educational profession, to speak on this bill which is before us. Certainly the government deserves commendation for bringing it in. Certainly also the principle is sound, as far as it goes. But I do not think it can be counted as anything more than the first step toward meeting the tremendous educational needs which exist in Canada. I say the principle is sound because I believe it is well that we leave some of the responsibility for getting an education up to the student himself, who has the opportunity of going on to school.

I look back in my own experience and realize that I would not have been able to go beyond high school if a very kind, dear elderly lady who was a neighbour of ours had not done for me exactly what this bill is intending to do for many other Canadian students, namely provide the money to go on to school. I was not even asked to pay interest while I was going to school, because it was assumed I would repay it when I was at work, using the benefits of the education I had received. Therefore, this is a good piece of legislation and we are happy to support it, albeit that it is only the first step and that there are some basic weaknesses in it.

As the minister has already pointed out, a number of provinces in Canada have preceded the federal government in bringing in some similar type of legislation to assist students within their own boundaries. While some of this legislation may not provide as much money as will these loans, to an individual student, in other ways it is far superior in its operation than this legislation. I think it is encouraging—and I would pass this piece of information on to the minister—that in the province of Alberta, where a student loan fund has been operating now for a number of years, they have not had a single student default in his payments under the operations of the loan fund. I am sure that this speaks well for our young people. I think it also speaks well for the principle under which this legislation is being set up, because it places some responsibility on the individual, and very often that responsibility assists the individual in doing a better job and perhaps being more purposeful and understanding while he is in school.

An amount of $40 million in a student loan fund represents, if students use the maximum amount of loan available to them, 40,000 more young people going on to school who might not have been able to do so otherwise. However this figure, while it seems staggering, is not just as much of a windfall as it seems to indicate. Because what happens in the second and third years of this further education? Supposing 40,000 students are successful this year in receiving loans amounting to $1,000 a piece. Or let us say 50,000 students receive loans, because some of them may be asking for less than $1,000 each. When they wish to continue on at school for a second year they will require the same amount of money. Yet as I read this legislation, this amount will not double next year. This will certainly place a restriction on what at first sight seems to be a very optimistic picture.

Mr. Douglas: It is 15,000 students a year at the most.

Mr. Thompson: The hon. member says 15,000 students, but it is hardly that many. It seems to me that the government will have to reconsider this because I am sure that after the first year of operation of this loan fund more than 12,000 to 15,000 students will need help.

Mr. Gordon: Where do you get your 12,000 to 15,000?

Mr. Thompson: The minister asks where I get these figures. According to this legislation, the maximum loans each year will total $40 million. Does that mean that there will be $40 million next year in addition to the loans which are made this year?

Mr. Gordon: That is correct.

Mr. Thompson: Or does it mean that only 40,000 students who this year are going on to school will be able to continue next year, and that not until some of those students drop out will there be replacements?

Mr. Gordon: It will be $40 million the first year and then the amount will go up. It will escalate to about $200 million at the end of the fifth year, which will mean—

Mr. Douglas: In a single year?

Mr. Gordon: It will go up at the rate of about $40 million a year, we estimate, for the first five years, and after that it will go up at a faster rate. I thought the figure the hon. member mentioned of the number of students was not quite correct. I agree with him that the number is far too few, but we are not intending to limit it to those numbers at all.

Mr. Thompson: According to what the minister says, if this year 40,000 students applied for a $1,000 loan this sum will be required again next year, which means there will be no new students next year able to get these loans because the government will have to carry through next year the obligations made to the students this year. Certainly this limits the potential of the legislation unless the government intend to escalate each year. I think this is something which the minister must clarify and reconsider, because we have a greater obligation to students who want to go to university than just those who want loans this year and who intend to go on to finish their education.

The success of this legislation will not be known until it has been proven whether or not the students will be able to get loans from the banks; in other words, whether their credit is going to be acceptable to the banks so that the students will readily get these loans. As I read the legislation, I understand that the parents will not have to share in the responsibility of paying back these loans. If bank managers are going to operate as they do in normal commercial transactions, they will have a great problem when dealing with youngsters who are 18 years old in satisfying themselves as to the credit rating of a student.

However the need for this type of assistance is urgent in Canada. It is estimated that there are approximately 600,000 Canadians, and the figure is a conservative one, in Canada's work force today under the age of 19 years. I maintain that no young Canadian in this day and age is really fit to go out into the work force equipped to earn his own living before the age of 19. If we can assist 40,000 students a year, each year, to go on to these higher fields of education it will be a strong and substantial beginning in helping our young people to reach the standards of education they need. I do not think there is any doubt that a university education or its equivalent today is just as important in terms of job buying power as was a high school education in my day or a public school education in the days of our fathers and grandfathers. Therefore as has already been brought out very clearly by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), the greatest and most urgent need in our country at this time is to make available to our young people the education they need to carry their own load and earn their own living. I commend the government on this first step. In my opinion, something has been accomplished, albeit the principles upon which it is based are not as strong as they should be.

It was my privilege in my years overseas to assist in the development of an educational system right from the beginning in the country of Ethiopia. During the fascist occupation of that country between 1935 and 1942 no Ethiopian national was permitted to go to school, except to a political school. So we had to begin right from the beginning when we set up an educational system in 1942 and 1943. I would draw the attention of the minister concerned to the fact that even in a country such as Ethiopia which we might, from our position, consider primitive and which is certainly undeveloped by our standards, education at all levels is free, even to graduate level, as long as the student is able to obtain the necessary marks. This is the objective toward which we all must work. It is in this light that the present legislation represents only a small beginning. Other countries are far ahead of us in providing opportunities for education.

I was startled by several statements the minister made. In referring to the method by which this student loan fund would be administered he said the students themselves would have to go to their local bank managers after getting clearance or approval from some provincial authority. Subsequently he said there would be no compulsion on these bank managers to grant these loans. And then, as if to justify that statement, he said: "After all, they will be lending out their customers' money". Surely, the hon. gentleman is not so ignorant of banking practice as to believe what he said. Or did he merely think members of this house would believe him when he made that statement? Actually that is not what is done at all. That is not how banks operate. It was certainly an amazing statement to come from a man who is charged with the responsibility for looking after the finances of this country. Just to correct him I would refer to the evidence contained in the official report of the banking and commerce committee here in parliament. As reported at page 455 in 1939 a former governor of the Bank of Canada said: "The banks cannot, of course, lend the money of their depositors". Earlier at page 398 of the same record he said: "They do not lend their deposits, of course". To hear the Minister of Finance make a statement to the contrary is startling. The hon. gentleman went on to say something about the government being responsible for the national purse, and being the protector of the nation's taxpayers. I suggest that both the national purse and the taxpayers need a little more protection than they are getting today particularly when the Minister of Finance gives us such wrong information as he did this afternoon.

Mr. Herridge: And after he has voted for Social Credit principles, too.

Mr. Thompson: Some of us talk a great deal about social capital. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) referred to it this afternoon and said it was necessary for the federal government to make available the social capital required to meet the educational needs of our country. That statement is correct, because certainly if social capital is classified as being the capital necessary to develop our capital resources it is not limited only to physical resources; it extends to the capital development of our human resources also, and it is this category we are considering this afternoon. Student loans fit right into this class of capital. However as long as we are to operate under the present system which insists on taking our social capital needs out of taxes instead of from our own credit sources, our ability to meet the demand for both industrial and social capital will be very restricted. I suggest to the minister that we must mobilize our financial and credit resources to provide the capital which will be needed if the tremendous cost of interest which would otherwise fall upon the taxpayer is to be avoided. I have just made a calculation without working it out in detail and I am sure that by the time the fifth year arrives, when there will be approximately $200 million out on loan—I think, in fact, there will be much more because these loans cannot be restricted to the 40,000 students who are expected to apply initially—the taxpayers of this country will have to pay a very substantial amount in interest on this capital fund. Certainly, in ten years, when the fund will have reached half a billion dollars—and I believe it will be even more when that time arrives—interest charges will run into a couple of hundred million dollars. This is not something to be regarded lightly. Nor would it be necessary to pay interest charges if we were to use our own public bank to provide this public or social capital which we are considering. Certainly, this is one of the legitimate spheres where it ought to apply.

The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) has indicated the tremendous need to increase the number of our young people attending institutions of higher learning. One factor likely to limit the scope of this legislation is this. I doubt whether we shall be able to provide the physical facilities necessary to accommodate the tremendous increase in the number of students if an attempt is to be made to accommodate all those students who wish to take advantage of the legislation. The very fact that it will take time to develop these facilities will afford us an opportunity to bring in much more substantial legislation designed to meet our over-all academic needs. Again we return to the question of social capital. The cost of the physical equipment and accommodation which will go into the provision of these additional facilities will be tremendous. Under our present system we draw our social capital from the commercial or tax market, which means we, the taxpayer, are going to pay double the cost of this expansion as compared with what would be necessary if we were to raise the capital through our own public bank. This involves no small considerations, Mr. Speaker, because the status quo cannot be continued indefinitely. The pressures which are building up within our society will shortly demand that something altogether different be done.

Suppose our population in 10 years or in 1975, let us say, reaches a figure of 30 million people, as I am sure it will. Suppose that the percentage of our young people proceeding to a university education remains at approximately 1½ per cent, the figure now. This means that we are going to have 450,000 university students in school within 10 years or five times as many as we have now. How can we ever meet this need with this kind of legislation or with the rate of progress we are making in meeting the need for physical accommodation for these students?

The Canadian education association, meeting in convention last year, said that the greatest need in education today is financial. This is true. But it is also true that we cannot expect to continue meeting the financial need from the pockets of the taxpayers because they simply cannot continue to bear the load. In that regard it does not matter whether the federal government or the provincial governments collect the taxes because the people are the ones who have to pay in either case.

We are fortunate in Canada that we have a tremendously wealthy nation. We have the timber, the steel, the cement, the manpower and the know-how to put all these things together to build the finest educational facilities of any country in the world and make them available to every student who wants to go on to higher education and who at the same time has the initiative and ability to do so. This is the challenge that is facing us.

[Mr. Thompson.]

The question has been asked this afternoon: Where is the money to be found? If we are to continue to take money out of the same well from which we are taking it now, that well is about to run dry. Unless we bring in basic economic reforms there will be no possibility of our finding the money to do this job and we are going to be found guilty of robbing our own children of the opportunities they must have in order to take our places after we are gone.

Therefore I say that we must lay plans now to mobilize all our resources for the development of our nation as this nation must and deserves to be developed. The minister has said that the government, as the controller of the national purse and the protector of the national taxpayer, has these things at heart. I disagree with him very much. In a very particular way this responsibility falls on him as Minister of Finance at the present time. But I do not believe that the minister under present policies, to which he not only gives lip service but which he follows in application, is actually controlling the national purse as it should be or protecting the taxpayers' pockets either. Therefore I say that while we support this legislation in principle, while it is a first step toward meeting the needs now facing us, certainly it is only one very small step toward the ultimate goal which must be ours, that of making education available to our own children.

The suggestion of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam that the government should have co-operated with the provinces in setting up within each province a student loan fund operated and supervised by the provincial government is a sound one. I think it is one deserving of the consideration of every member of the house and particularly the government and the minister concerned with this legislation. We speak a great deal about the responsibility for education belonging to the provinces. The only reason the provinces are unable to meet their educational responsibilities at this time as they would like to, and as they should, is the financial limitations that are placed upon them primarily because of the inadequate federal-provincial fiscal arrangements now in existence. In my opinion it would have been a far better policy for the government to consult first with the provinces and obtain their advice on this matter because they have had far more experience than the federal government has had in this field. I believe they would have received this advice if the course suggested by the hon. member had been followed.

I would go even further than he did and say that these student loan funds within the provinces should have been set up with social capital from the Bank of Canada and not out of the taxpayers' pockets. A revolving fund could have been established and as students completed their education and repaid the money it would go back into the fund to be used over again. This is a very fundamental and basic principle in developing funds of this type intended to perform a similar function. The process is a continuous one. If the minister had set up this kind of fund to be administered by the provinces he would not be faced with the dilemma confronting him now in trying to figure out how he will be able to give a further 40,000 students next year the same opportunity he has made available to 40,000 students this year.

I do not intend to speak longer on the bill at the present time. We will support it because we believe it is a step in the right direction, but we would again emphasize that it certainly does not reach the goal that should be reached nor is it trying to do so by a method that would have been far more satisfactory not only to the federal government but to the provinces, and most of all to the students it is intended to assist.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, in a debate such as this one must begin by distinguishing between the objective to be reached and the means to reach that objective.

The objective to be reached here is, of course, to see to it that those who are able to benefit from education, that is, our young people, are given access to the best educational systems, so that they may be better prepared for life.

The legislation introduced today is only a method, of course, and can only be a means to attain that end. The goal to be attained is to develop the educational field, so that our young people may have access to the various schools, colleges and universities. In order to do this, the essential factors will be, first the schools, and then the colleges and universities. Moreover, there is a need for teachers, books, material, and finally, our young people must be able to reach all these educational stages.

There is no doubt that we favour the proposed objective and that we want our young people to have access, without any restriction, to the schools, colleges and universities throughout this country, and to avail themselves of the best educational system and the best teachers.

Today, one way of attaining that end is submitted to us. However, under the proposed legislation, there are no means of building more colleges or universities, developing laboratories or training a greater number of teachers.

This legislation is only supposed to be part of the general machinery of our educational system, which aims at giving our young people financial access to our educational institutions. And how do we go about it? Simply by saying: We shall lend you money up to $1,000 a year, for five years, and you will repay this loan at the end of your studies.

Education is said to mean a country's enrichment, but I wonder why, every time this country is to become wealthier in some way, either by developing natural resources or by allowing our young people to continue their studies, the only means that is found is to let them incur a debt. I find this surprising aspect in every piece of legislation submitted by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon). There is apparently no possibility of developing this country, of increasing its wealth and assets, without putting it in the red by incurring a considerable debt. A surprising fact, indeed. I cannot understand why this country could not be developed without getting further in the red.

I think we should launch an inquiry on the subject, in order to increase this country's prosperity, either by developing its natural resources or by using its human capital, without going further into debt.

And how are we treating our young people? At the end of five years, they will be graduated as doctors, dentists, lawyers or engineers, and they will have incurred a debt of $5,000, even before they start practising their profession. They will be 25 or 26 years of age and, in the case of a doctor or an engineer, perhaps even 30, if they specialize, and they will be burdened with a debt of $5,000 even before they start their career. This means that right in the first year when they will begin to practise their profession, after starting their studies at the age of four or five, and finishing them at 25 or 26, they will already have debts to pay off to the banks, as the result of loans made under this legislation.

Moreover, they will have to obtain further loans in order to buy the required equipment for their offices and, when getting on in years, they will owe fairly large sums.

In fact, in the case of a student in dentistry, he will probably have to borrow $7,000, $8,000 and even $10,000 in order to buy his chairs and all the required office equipment and, in some cases, his debts will be paid off only at his death when the insurance company will extinguish his debts with the premiums he will have paid all his life.

In my opinion, if the Minister of Finance is really eager to help young Canadians so that they might help in the development of this country, he should think of a system other than the debt system.

I note that the federal government has acquired the habit in recent years, of encouraging all classes of Canadians to get into debt. In fact, under the farm loans scheme, farmers are getting into debt. The same policy is followed in regard to rural development; again, the farmer is being involved in debt. Legislation concerning loans for industry and trade has already been passed; now we will have loans for students. The federal government has become a lending agency, which gets everybody into debt, from the cradle to the grave. And before long, there will be loans to enable Canadian citizens to borrow to pay the cost of their own funeral, because frequently families have not enough money for this purpose.

It is exactly the policy that this government seems to follow and, in order to make us forget what is behind all that, namely the continuous running into debt of the individuals, they gild the pill. In fact, the Minister of Finance did not mention any repayment. He merely said: Education must be developed. Then, in utter confusion he takes the objective for the method. As far as the objective is concerned, everybody is in favour. But with respect to the financial method, for instance, we do not agree.

Students should have access to institutions of higher learning, to colleges, universities and technological institutes. Very well. But why push them into debt? Why force those young people to start in life with a debt of thousands of dollars on their shoulders, even before earning one cent? That is what we cannot approve in the legislation before us.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

And how will those loans be granted? The chartered banks will create the money to enable our young people to continue in school. But those chartered banks enjoy an exceptional privilege. In fact, when a young man goes to the bank, the manager says: "Very well, my friend, we will lend you the money you need. The federal government will pay the interest and guarantee the loan. We will lend you $1,000." Then, all the bank manager has to do is to take his pen and a piece of paper and make an entry in the amount of $1,000 in the young student's ledger. He will have created $1,000 with no more trouble than that. Then, bankers will be getting rich at the expense of students as they are now getting rich at the expense of farmers, industrialists and businessmen for whom the federal government guarantees certain loans.

That is exactly what happens. And the almighty bank, not only will keep on doing like in the past, but will also develop education in our country.

It is really a shame to see that so much power is given to that organization which is getting richer on the pursuance of public works or the development of natural resources in this country and even today, that organization is called upon to push our young people into debt even before they start in life. Indeed, those young students will start school owing a debt to the most powerful banking institutions.

And when a young professional, a doctor, a lawyer or a dentist wishes to open an office, he will have to borrow again in order to purchase the necessary equipment, and maybe to pay the rent for the first few months. The credit of the young student will be practically exhausted by then. The banks will hesitate to allow him another credit margin to open an office, especially when we know that, in certain professions like medicine, science, dentistry or business all the necessary furniture and equipment cost a lot. Then, the young professional will have the greatest difficulty to start practising and the government will have to introduce other legislation to guarantee loans to young men who have completed their studies in order to help them open an office and practise their profession. In this manner, they will be indebted all their life.

Mr. Speaker, there is another point on which I would like to insist. The measure under consideration comes after many other measures by which the federal government interferes more and more in an exclusively provincial field as specified by the constitution, that is education.

There have been grants to universities, grants to technical schools and, not long ago, the act providing for an allowance of $10 to students was passed. Today, we are considering a measure providing for loans to students. We already have special scholarships. In fact, for a number of years, practically every session we have had before us new federal legislation increasing the intrusion of the Canadian government in the educational field.

In general, education gives rise to a number of problems which can only be settled by united action, not by piecemeal and inadequate expedients. At present, the federal government takes certain steps in the field of education and, a little later on, a province takes other steps, with the result that there is no uniformity within the educational system of the provinces. Why is this? Because too many governments have a finger in the pie.

Instead, why does the central government not transfer to the provinces part of its taxation powers with respect to individuals and corporations so that the provincial authorities may carry out on their own a responsibility which is given to them by the constitution, the development of education within their territory.

In the province of Quebec, we already have a loan scheme, a scholarship scheme. And knowing the present Quebec premier, we can imagine that this new federal intrusion in provincial affairs will enable Mr. Lesage, by accepting those new loans to students, to keep the money which used to provide loans and scholarships to students. Indeed, that is what he did when the federal government increased old age pensions and raised students' allowances by $10; he kept for himself what he used to give. It will be the same thing with those new loans.

Then, the provinces will be inclined to withdraw their scholarships and say: use the federal loans to students scheme.

There are replacement payments, but they are always controlled by the federal government.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot accept the principle of this bill. We agree with the objective of the program, but not with the method advocated, at the present time, for it amounts to another interference, on the part of the federal government, in a field over which the provinces have the exclusive jurisdiction, that of education.

After this, people are surprised to find there is dissatisfaction. Why? Because the federal government wants to interfere in fields not under its jurisdiction.

It would be much simpler, for the government, to return their sources of income to the various provinces which want them back so that these provinces could themselves develop the field of education.

But today, the opposite is taking place. It is the federal government which takes the larger part of the cake, that is, of the taxes, and which, in so doing, tries to enter fields which do not come under its responsibility. The federal government, on the contrary, should hand back to the provinces a larger part of income, in order that they may themselves meet their obligations.

In the province of Quebec, people wish to develop this field of education, but they lack revenues. Already, private property is taxed and overtaxed by school boards; the provincial government has again increased the sales tax, from 2 to 4 per cent in some cases, in order to meet the expenses for education. Despite all that, the federal government keeps the major part of the taxes and interferes in the field of education.

It would be better—and we are going to submit an amendment to that effect—if the federal government turned over to the provinces 2, 3 or 4 per cent of personal income tax and, with those amounts, the said provinces would look after student loans. The advantage would then be as follows: The provincial government, being the only one to look after education, could standardize its general programs in order to improve the educational system within the province; the provincial government could make all the decisions without having to deal with the federal government. But, at the present time, both governments are interested in the same field.

Mr. Speaker, there are several clauses in that bill which make us question its legality. Thus under section 15, even those under age can borrow as if they were of age at the time the loan is granted.

There is a civil code in the province of Quebec which comes exclusively under provincial jurisdiction. This clause is clearly inconsistent with the civil law of the province, because, once again, under the constitution, civil law comes under provincial jurisdiction. Has there been an amendment to the constitution allowing the insertion of such a clause which departs from the civil law of the province of Quebec?

There are many such clauses which are not consistent with the constitution.

For instance, under section 12, a provincial government may receive compensation payments if it does not want to take part in the over-all plan but, under that section, the ten payments will be paid to the province only six months after the fiscal year. This means that a province will be penalized for an 18-month period, that is the whole year plus another six months. In the meantime, the province will have to pay, meet costs, interest charges, and so on, during 18 months. Therefore, it will be at a disadvantage compared to the other provinces, if it wishes to get the compensation payments.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation contains things which are not necessarily acceptable. For instance, the federal government would like to have the right to determine what institutions the students wanting to secure a loan should approach. In section 13, the government would like to establish a set of rules which would be glaringly inconsistent with our Canadian constitution. It wants to reach agreements directly with the institutions the borrowers will approach. This is found in section 13.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is contrary to our Canadian constitution, on several points.

It is often said that students need those loans to continue their studies. Well, Mr. Speaker, I would like today to congratulate the students of the province of Quebec, that is the students' federation of Quebec, including the general students' association of the University of Montreal, the general students' association of Laval University and the general students' association of Sherbrooke University. They all stated categorically that they are opposed to the federal program of loans to students. Why? Because those students' associations, which are primarily concerned wanted to put the general interest before their own personal interest. They said: The federal government must not get into the field of education, even by passing such an act.

I have here an article, which was published in the July 9 issue of Montréal-Matin, on page 10:

> No loans for students: French Canadian students once again required from the federal government the return to the provincial government of the taxation powers which will enable the latter to fulfil the priority needs of the province of Quebec.

[Mr. Grégoire.]

> The Quebec general university students associations once more stated that they objected to any step that would promote the passage of the student loans bill, saying that such a measure, although commendable, runs counter to the aspirations of the students who are in favour of a greater provincial autonomy.

Although they need this assistance, the people primarily concerned in this are opposed to the federal government intruding further into the field of education by way of this bill.

If those most directly concerned object so much, the federal government should realize that it must find other means to reach its objective.

We readily accept the method suggested by the Quebec students and which is that the Minister of Finance should say: For the provinces which do not want this legislation, we will give them back a certain percentage of the income tax. It would be exactly the same thing as in the case of the $10 a month allowances to students of 16 and 17 years of age.

I do not see why the minister cannot provide for such an alternative in this legislation. He would thus respect the provinces' autonomy while avoiding more disputes. Why always try to make matters worse?

It seems to me that the situation is already tense enough and that nothing should be done that could make it worse. The Minister of Finance should realize that this is not the time to provoke further people who do not want any intrusion from the federal government in the field of education.

We do not want Ottawa meddling with education in the province of Quebec. We believe we are qualified to organize our own educational system; we know that we are at least as qualified as the federal government. So, why always try to provoke and arouse the anger and the opposition of the whole population of a province? That is what we cannot accept.

After that, they will complain, they will say that there are fanatics. The fanatics are not the ones you think, but those who are always trying to intrude into other people's affairs.

The constitution states clearly that education is exclusively of provincial jurisdiction. To pass such a bill is certainly to intrude into a field that is no concern of the federal government.

It would be so easy, since it is going to cost money to the banks, to draw these amounts from income sources or taxation rights and give them back to the provincial governments so that the latter could consolidate the development of their educational system. The provinces who would rather take advantage of the federal plan would be free to do so. We do not intend to force anything upon the other provinces. If they want to keep on letting the federal government interfere with the education field, we will not object to it, but so far as the province of Quebec is concerned, we object because that province will not have it and besides, the majority of the students in that province also objected to such an interference.

I also make it a point to protest against this new intrusion into the field of loans to students by the federal government. It has been suggested by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) that these loans should be made through the banks. I think the suggestion should be taken into consideration; loans could also be made available through credit unions or caisses populaires. Better still, since this is for the betterment of Canada, we should, and this is the suggestion we would like to make, allow every province to borrow from the Bank of Canada, without interest, so that every province may set up a students' loan fund.

But, what would be even better than loans would be to see to it that every province could draw from the Bank of Canada enough money so that it would have the necessary funds to improve the Canadian educational system: that is train teachers, build schools, colleges and universities, provide students with the means to live while they are studying. In short, the Bank of Canada should put at the disposal of the provinces the money they need for developing education.

The Bank of Canada must help to increase the wealth of our country, not only in the field of natural resources but also with regard to human capital. It should finance our needs through the provinces. The Bank of Canada is needed to develop our education system.

Those are our suggestions with regard to that bill. We are against it, first, because we see no point in getting students into debt before they can go out and earn a living. We feel they will have enough debts in their lifetime without being burdened with more while still in school. We much prefer a scholarship scheme, not a federal one, but one handled through the provincial governments. For that, the provinces must have the sources of income that will enable them to maintain a scholarship scheme which will help students to further their education without getting into debt.

In due course, we shall propose amendments to the act to allow those provinces wishing to do so to select another slice of income sources, either from personal or corporate income tax, so they can use those additional funds to grant scholarships to students.

That is what I wanted to say, Mr. Speaker. We will propose amendments in due course, but we are against the bill as it stands now. [Text]

Mr. John N. Turner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate the minister on his presentation this afternoon and on the moderate, balanced tone with which he presented this refreshing piece of legislation to the house.

Mr. Pugh: That is quite a change.

Mr. Turner: I rise, too, out of a personal interest. The riding I have the honour to represent is the home of two of Canada's leading universities. I speak of McGill University and Sir George Williams University. My riding is, as well, the site of an outstanding ladies' college, Marianopolis College. At these three institutions over 30,000 students pursue daily their studies toward a recognized degree. I would say on my part and on their behalf that the principle behind this legislation, the principle that talent and admission to university should not be denied by reason of financial straits, is one appropriate to justify the approbation of every member of this house. I would say, too, that it epitomizes what this government and this party is trying to achieve in the way of equality of opportunity; that any young man or woman who has the intellectual qualifications sufficient to gain admission and retain admission in a university should be able to pursue a university course of education; because as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) pointed out, a university education today is no longer the luxury it once was but is a necessity, a necessity not only for those who seek to make a contribution to this country later in life but a necessity for the country in that the skills of our young men and women are surely the prime asset this country has.

This legislation, therefore, is an investment, an investment in the intellectual capital of Canada in that it will achieve a bettering of the skills of our young people and thereby increase the spiritual and intellectual assets of the country. I would hope this would encourage more young men and women at an earlier stage in their lives to point toward a university education so they may help us build up a Canadian bank of brains. I would say to the minister that I would hope any inducements he has made toward encouraging research in Canada, toward encouraging those who have achieved university status and the status of a degree in Canada to remain in this country, will be continued; because the purpose of this legislation, which is to bring into the academic institutions of Canada more of our brains and develop more of our brains will not be fulfilled, not only if we do not have the physical plant to service this potential but if we do not retain in Canada the young men and women who are able to take advantage of this legislation.

I listened with great interest to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) making his constitutional argument. Coming as I do from the province of Quebec and representing, in so far as their university studies are concerned, about 30,000 students who pursue their studies in that province, I would like to deal briefly with the constitutional position a little later on. Before I begin that analysis I would say that I think the constitutional argument is now an academic question in that I am satisfied that the rights of the provinces have been adequately fulfilled and that Premier Lesage, who once threatened to take the proposed legislation to the courts, has now no reason to challenge the legislation. In fact I am going to suggest that in his own bursary and loan plan as developed under the department of education he has a wider, more generous plan than that offered under the present federal legislation. I would think that in view of the fact that the province of Quebec now devotes over one third of its annual budget to education, it will be the intention of his government and the intention of Mr. Gérin-Lajoie, the new minister of education, to maintain the standards of the bursary and loan plan and to increase the services, the eligibility and the amounts payable under that plan. Taking the academic argument for what I now think it is—that is to say, academic in the sense that it will not entail any practical problems for the legislation—I would think the Canadian government has a responsibility under the general welfare provisions of the British North America Act to the youth of the country to increase the skills of our youth. Just as the federal government has a responsibility in the area of manpower retraining so as to meet the threat of automation, so also have we a duty to see that our youth is skilled sufficiently to survive and prosper in an automated and complicated age.

It should be noted that the subsidy, if subsidy there is under this legislation, attaches not to any educational institution but to the individual. We are living in a mobile society where students tend to get their education often in provinces other than those from which they come. We are now dealing with a payment largely along the lines of the welfare payments which attach to individuals, and this surely would constitute a powerful argument in favour of a federal jurisdiction.

Indeed, we have the general banking power under the British North America Act. Clause 3 of this bill makes it clear that this enabling section authorizes a bank to assume responsibility for loans to students, such loans being guaranteed by the federal government. Clause 15 is a recovery provision authorizing the bank to recover the repayment of a loan. In passing, might I say I could not agree more with the hon. member for Red Deer in saying that we anticipate very little failure to honour loans under this legislation. The experience of those provinces and institutions which in the past have maintained provincial bursary or loan schemes is such that it is found the rate of repayment is almost 100 per cent. As to the legal ability of a bank to pursue its rights under this particular legislation, any discussion while proper is probably academic in view of the record of students in this country who have in the past honoured the repayment of their loans.

On the other hand, I recognize that the provinces have a strong constitutional argument on their side. But I repeat that my conclusion is that the argument has been satisfied and reconciled. The argument advanced at the federal-provincial conference by the province of Quebec when discussing this subject was that this item fell under the head of education within the meaning of section 93 of the British North America Act by virtue of the remission of the interest payments during the tenure of the loan. While a student is at any university, and until six months after his graduation or withdrawal from university, such remission of interest in effect constitutes a subsidy for the purpose of his continuing his education. This is made clear in clause 4 of the bill.

The second argument advanced by the province of Quebec was that that province, as indeed other provinces like Saskatchewan, Alberta and others, was already in the field. I believe that in the year 1963 over $18 million was advanced by the province of Quebec under its bursary and loan plan to students; and roughly 50 per cent of those moneys were advanced in the form of bursaries, the other 50 per cent being in the form of loans. According to the official brochure put out by the government of Quebec, 40 per cent of the bursaries are repayable and in effect might be treated as loans. Taking this mathematically, if 40 per cent of the bursaries are repayable and the bursaries constitute half of the money advanced, roughly 65 to 70 per cent of all moneys advanced by the province of Quebec to students is in effect in the form of loans.

Mr. Pigeon: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Turner: If I might continue first, and then I shall be glad to answer any questions.

Mr. Pigeon: Does he agree that the system of the province of Quebec is superior to this one?

Mr. Turner: I understand the usual ticklish impatience of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), but I said earlier that the plan of the province of Quebec is a remarkably fair and generous plan, and its terms of eligibility are wider in many respects than those of the present plan. Since 70 per cent of the moneys disbursed by Quebec is in the form of loans, it seems to me there should be no difficulty when it comes to working out the mechanics of making loans or distributing loans to students who travel from one province to another, in dovetailing these two plans.

I have mentioned two arguments in favour of provincial jurisdiction, namely that this matter falls under the head of education and that the province of Quebec was already in the field. A third argument underlying those two is the feeling that if an item falls under provincial jurisdiction, and if education is a crucial factor in maintaining a provincial autonomy, then there should be the constitutional power and the necessary resources to allow the provinces to fulfil that jurisdiction. To that opinion I subscribe.

Let me say, after posing the constitutional positions as I see them, Mr. Speaker, that this bill satisfies the constitution of this country. First of all, clause 10 allows any province to designate the appropriate authority for the issuance of a certificate of eligibility to a student. In other words, the province, as the minister has said, will act as a partner of the federal government. In the case of any province which decides to set up its own provincial student loan program, as Quebec already has, clause 12 of the bill makes it quite clear that that provincial right is maintained in its full sanctity. I rely too on the expression of intent of the minister when he said that the federal government has no intention of superseding any plan now in existence, and I interpret that to mean any provincial plan now in existence and certainly any plan privately endowed.

I have said that Quebec already has its own plan, and I understand that it is the intention of that province to maintain and continue its plan. On reading its terms of eligibility I feel confident that the students in the province will receive equal or better treatment than those in the rest of the country.

This massive attack designed to improve education standards in the province from which I come is succeeding to such an extent already that there are enrolled in universities in Quebec 10,000 more students than in the province of Ontario, and with this impetus I have no hesitation in saying that students who attend universities in my riding, and indeed in the province, will be well looked after.

Speaking to the bill itself, may I say I think it is a commendable and good beginning. I do not agree with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), if I may say so with respect, when he calls it a makeshift. I think it is an admirable inauguration of legislation which will I hope be improved over the years. I would have wished to see the term "student" defined more broadly. Under the terms of this bill a student must be a full time student at a post-secondary educational institution. This disqualifies part time students, and particularly night students. I hope that in future years eligibility will be widened. I hope that the precedent which was set in the recent amendment to the Income Tax Act whereby tuition fees paid by part time students were made deductible, just as those paid by full time students are, will be followed in this field. I hope we shall see the day soon when part time students and particularly students attending courses at night will be able to take advantage of this legislation. I might say that provision to this end is made in the law and regulations of the province of Quebec. This is an important area of education at university level. In every large city of this country a growing proportion of those attending university are not doing so full time in the day time but are doing so in their leisure time at their own cost at night. Of the 30,000 students who attend McGill and Sir George Williams Universities, more than 15,000, that is more than half, attend those institutions at night. I would imagine that similar figures apply to universities in the other major cities of this country. I realize the difficulty attached to making a beginning, but I would urge the government, in passing, to widen the eligibility under this measure.

I think there may be problems concerned with the mobility of our students and I hope the mechanics of arranging for students from one province who attend universities in another can be satisfactorily worked out. I do not wish to continue at any greater length. I congratulate the minister most heartily on his tremendous inauguration, a tremendous advance in the legislation of this country. I commend this bill to every member of the house hoping that we all recognize that it constitutes perhaps the first positive stimulus provided toward increasing the skills of our young people and encouraging them to advance to higher education.

The result of this legislation will be that young men and women having the necessary talent and qualifications regardless of their financial resources can now be assured of a university education. I interpret this as bringing us a step closer to a society in which equality of opportunity will be realized and this is of particular importance in a society in which success depends in such a great measure upon access to education. I hope too that this will be a stimulus, through true constitutional means, to any province which wishes to administer and manage its own plan. I think it satisfies the needs of a mobile society and the need for certain national educational standards. By this I do not mean national administration. I mean an equality of standards from province to province. I think it must also be a fulfilment of what we have called in this house cooperative federalism and I hope that members who enjoy debate will recognize that it preserves provincial autonomy and jurisdiction over education.

In closing may I say that I am sure the students of this country are immensely encouraged by what has been said today and by what is envisaged in this legislation.

Mr. Pigeon: I have one question to ask the hon. member. Does he agree to support the establishment of a department of education at the federal level?

[Translation]

Mr. Turner: Mr. Speaker, as soon as I came here, I was taught to answer only questions relevant to the bill under consideration. In those circumstances, I will abstain from answering the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon), but I can assure him that I will give him an answer on a more appropriate occasion.

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

EDUCATION

MEASURE TO FACILITATE MAKING OF LOANS TO STUDENTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for the second reading of Bill No. C-110, to facilitate the making of loans to students.

Hon. George C. Nowlan (Digby-Annapolis-Kings): Mr. Speaker, we have had an interesting debate this afternoon on the matter of loans to students and for a few moments I should like to discuss the matter further. I am not going to deal with any details of the bill itself. During the debate this afternoon there were references by a number of speakers to various matters of detail which I think are important but which in my opinion can be much better dealt with in committee than in the house.

There are problems of constitutionality. I am not speaking of the educational prerogatives of the provinces. I think there are one or two sections of the bill which might be questioned vis-à-vis constitutionality. There are one or two sections the legal implications of which I think are rather dubious. However, these matters can all be dealt with much more adequately at the committee stage and I do not propose to deal with them now, important though they may be and quite properly referred to by some hon. members who have preceded me.

We have been dealing primarily this afternoon with the problem of the individual student. Other than the speech of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker), who referred to the general problem, other speakers dealt primarily with the problem of the individual student. It is a real problem and one could spend a great deal of time in discussing it. One could spend a great deal of time discussing just what comprises a university and the place of the student in it. I think it was Aristotle who, we are told, taught under a tree, and that was a university. When I survey the problems with which our universities are confronted it seems to me that our problem is not only to find the tree under which we are going to teach but to find the teachers who are going to operate under the tree.

I think it was Stephen Leacock who once said that the way to establish a college is first to find a teacher, then to get a smoking room and then to find the students thereafter. That may be a rough paraphrase of what Leacock said but generally speaking I think that was an apt description in his humorous way of the founding of a university.

Our problem today is not to find students to enter the universities. Our problem is to find the universities which can accommodate the students. That is the primary problem and it is in that regard that I should like to speak for a very few moments tonight. The suggestion has been made today that in the past possibly universities were the prerogative of the sons of the rich, that this measure is going to solve that problem, and that there will now be an open sesame whereby the sons of those not so rich or those who are in relatively poor circumstances will be accommodated in the universities. Personally I do not accept that statement at all. I am sure there are numerous members in this chamber who were not sons of the rich but who entered university and graduated therefrom, although perhaps with some difficulty and some hardship. That has been the tradition of our educational system in the past.

I can think of someone I know who was lucky enough to get a job as housemaster at a school for the blind at $25 a month and free room. If one wants the privilege of eating with the blind day in and day out, when they are really blind, even a stomach which is attuned to overseas service may find it a little bit difficult when you first enter that environment. But that is part of the background of which I am sure many hon. members have had experience.

The bill before us has an impact upon the individual and to that extent all of us welcome it. We know that there is a need for increasing opportunities for education. We welcome the bill. As I said, there are details in it which we can criticize and which we will criticize when we go into committee. But certainly the party to which I belong and I am sure all members of the house welcome the bill as such and are glad to see this additional step toward the educational development of this nation.

Having said that, we cannot overlook the problems which are flowing in upon the universities of this country today. The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) referred this afternoon to his association with universities in his own riding and their great traditions. In a very small way I have been associated with a university as a member of the board of governors for 20 or more years, and I know something of the problems of a small university as well.

I think we can all appreciate the problems with which we are confronted. The truth of the matter is that there has been a phenomenal growth in the student bodies of our universities during the past few years, a growth which has taxed the universities to the utmost. Prior to the outbreak of the war the combined registration of the universities of Canada was approximately 35,000. That number had gradually built up during the years as Canada progressed. Immediately following the war, with the influx of veterans with the preferences they obtained from the government, the student bodies of the universities increased to a total of approximately 83,000. This was a really phenomenal increase and every university was taxed to the utmost. Basements were used. Every possible type of accommodation which could be found was made use of. But it was done.

Following the influx of the veterans registration dropped off fairly substantially, not to the pre-war level but down to about 67,000. This year registration at our universities is approximately 158,000 students, male and female. When you consider that growth in that short time, you can envisage the problems with which the universities are confronted today.

Projections perhaps can be inaccurate. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) will recall that when he was chairman of a royal commission quite a few years ago he projected the student registration for this year. His estimate was considerably less than that which has ensued. As a matter of fact, every estimate, every projection of student registrations for these years have been substantially lower than the actual registration. If the projection of the conference of Canadian universities for 1970 is accurate we will have a student registration of 312,000 as compared with 158,000 today. This, Mr. Speaker, is only six years from now. If history proves, as experience has in the past, that this projection of 312,000 students is an underestimate rather than an overestimate—and this is without any stimulus such as is proposed in the bill we have before us—and is based on the assumed growth in population of this country, then the problem is acute indeed. If we assume the regular gifts and contributions which universities have received, the scholarships and bursaries, the usual accommodation which students are receiving today, and if we are facing a student body of 312,000 in 1970 under existing circumstances, and if the figures of the Minister of Finance are correct as to the effect of this $40 million—I am certainly assuming they are—then, you can see the terrific strain that is going to be placed upon our educational facilities within the next few years.

As I said, we welcome the bill in so far as individuals are concerned. However I suggest this is not any solution to the problem of education in Canada. We have to go much farther because actually we are facing an increase in registration of approximately 12 per cent per year and at the moment we have not the facilities to accommodate the students which we have today. The growth is going to be very much greater. I am sure the Minister of Finance would not be surprised to hear that I saw a brief, a copy of which I am sure was distributed to all members, from the university conference suggesting that in three years from 1963-64, the capital demands on our universities for the normal expansion to which I referred will be over $800 million. It is assumed that the provinces will probably advance roughly $300 million; there will be gifts from corporations and individuals of roughly $100 million; there will be loans for construction purposes of another $100 million, which would make $500 million in all. This still leaves a shortage of $300 million to be raised to take care of the mere physical requirements of the universities.

Speaking of the loans, I should emphasize what the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) said this afternoon. These loans are, of course, under Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation for housing accommodations and provision was made for them by the government of which I had the honour to be a member. I referred a moment ago to the relatively small university with which I have been associated for many years. This university is now contemplating borrowing $900,000 just to increase its residential accommodation. I hope, and I expect as a member of the board, we will be able to get most of that money from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to provide the additional residential accommodation which is required. Tenders are to be called tomorrow or the day after tomorrow for a million dollar library. A great deal of that money has to be raised by loans.

This means that $1,900,000 will be required for a relatively small university which a few years ago was accommodating 400 or 500 students and now is accommodating 1,500. The demands are still growing. Applying that little yardstick with which I have intimate personal knowledge, and the same problems to a greater extent apply to all the universities of this country, you can see something of the demands on the physical capacities of universities. A Liberal government of a former year under Mr. St. Laurent, as I recall it, gave $50 million to the Canada Council on the condition that they would lend or give this to universities, provided there were matching grants of an equivalent amount. In that day, when demands were not nearly as great, this was a real bonanza, a tremendous help to the universities of this country.

As I said a moment ago, if this estimate is correct and $800 million has to be acquired within the next three years, and if there are $500 million available as suggested, this still leaves $300 million to be acquired. I suggest that possibly the Minister of Finance might consider following the same pattern followed by a preceding Liberal government, and make matching grants available so that this $300 million can be raised by dollar for dollar contributions from the federal treasury and from the grantors or donors to individual universities. I am speaking quite hastily, so this is a very rough outline of the physical demands, a minor pen sketch of the physical demands which are going to be required under existing circumstances, forgetting altogether the impact of this bill upon universities in the next few years.

I have been speaking of the physical demands. However as Aristotle exemplified, you get the tree and you get the teacher. Where are you going to get the professors and the teachers to meet the requirements of this burgeoning student body? The problem is not an easy one to solve. Perhaps in the field of arts, with increases in salaries, you can bring forward a certain number of teachers and professors to meet the demands. However in the field of science, with the competition from the United States, the competition from national defence laboratories where technicians, particularly physicists, are in the greatest demand, you have a great problem which is going to be very difficult to solve. Heretofore we have been fortunate; we have been bringing professors and teachers from Europe, emigres who wished to escape and who were well trained in the sciences. They were coming here, but that source of supply is pretty well finished. We now have to look for professors, teachers and instructors, to people trained in our own universities.

The province of Ontario I think is making a contribution towards this end. They are providing scholarships and loans to those who are prepared to enter the teaching profession, and as a condition of accepting these loans these people must enter the teaching profession. This would cover professors and instructors for universities. I think there, too, we can consider not only loans to students, desirable as they may be, but if we are going to solve this educational problem or make even an approach to it, we will have to do something to induce more and more graduate students to enter the teaching profession, because there are so many fields today which have their financial appeal that it is very difficult to meet the demands being made.

I read the other day that we are only graduating enough teachers—professors—that if they all stayed in this country they could only accommodate the present student body, without any possibility of meeting an increase in it in the future. If the figures I gave the house a moment ago are correct we shall have to double the teaching body during the next few years, and we are not going to do that by simply increasing the student body, desirable as that may be. Somebody, whether it is the government, private institutions, corporations or the provinces—and I suspect it is going to be a combination of all of them—will have to provide inducements for a terrific increase in our teaching body if we are going to attempt to deal with the demands for teachers.

Very hastily I have referred to the capital and to the problems of the teachers. What about the current problem, about the current demands and the deficits which every university is running up today? Despite the generous contributions, despite assistance from governments these demands and deficits are increasing. The government of Canada started to give assistance with grants based on 50 cents per head of the population of Canada, on a provincial basis. That ratio was raised under the aegis of the former government and under the aegis of the government preceding that, until today it is $2 per head for every person in Canada. But I suggest, Mr. Speaker, it is based on an entirely wrong principle. It is based on the population of the provinces, and the provincial population is not increasing anything like the increase in the student body. The student body is increasing at over 12 per cent per year, and we know the factors which have entered into this, such as the birth explosion, the post-war marriages and so on. It is because of these we have such a terrific increase in the student body, but still our grants remain based on population per province.

I think it was a wrong basis to start with, and perhaps I am a little selfish in saying that; but every province could give the same example. In Nova Scotia we have no provincial university, even though we have more universities per capita than any other province in Canada. There was a time when some consideration could have been given to amalgamating them but that time is long since past and now we have several, relatively small but very efficient and very good universities. Yet up until a year or so ago we had no provincial grant whatever from the province, and we were based on grants of 50 cents per head of the population, $1 per head, $1.50 per head and $2 per head, which is the present figure, and the universities have had to seek all the gifts they could obtain.

Because of the obvious high quality of those universities down there they have been getting students from Ontario, Quebec and all the other provinces of Canada. The law school to which I owe a little allegiance was recognized at one time, and possibly still is, as the best law school in Canada, attracting people from all over Canada to come down there as students. We have a large number of students from the West Indies. We have them from China, from Hong Kong and from various places throughout the world; but of course we get no credit for that whatever because we receive this payment on the basis of the population of the province, even though a large part of our student body may be coming from outside the province. If there is any unjustifiable system by which grants are made, this is certainly one which should be considered and revised in the immediate future. Because of that special problem of the maritime universities I draw the minister's attention to this fact, and I know he may well say to me, "Of course, you may have heard of that while you yourself were sitting over here." That is true, but there were factors which entered into the situation and the minister knows them well.

All universities in Canada are facing great demands; we recognize that. Yet the conference of university presidents unanimously recommended to the government of Canada, last year and again this year, that there should be a special increase in grants to the universities of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick because of the peculiar situation in which they find themselves. They recommend that pending a general revision of the basis to which I referred a moment ago, there should be an increase in the grants to Nova Scotia universities to $500,000 a year and an increase in the grants to New Brunswick universities to $300,000 a year.

When you get university presidents with all the justifiable demands made upon them, meeting in conference and coming to the government with requests to meet their own situations, and yet they unanimously join in a request for special consideration to the universities of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, then I suggest there must be some real merit in the proposition they put forward or else they would never have joined in that appeal.

I am not going to take any more time of the house except to suggest that these problems I have mentioned, the fiscal, the current and the teaching problems, all require special attention and there are none of the answers to those problems in this legislation. Desirable as it is, worthy as it is, if it is successful—and I am sure it will be—it will simply aggravate the problems because it will create a larger student body and therefore greater demands on the fiscal, personnel and current problems of the universities in Canada as a whole.

My hon. friend from Burnaby-Coquitlam suggested this afternoon that the time had come when all university tuition should be free, that this was only a pourboire and that we should give free college tuition to everyone. That is a question which might be debated, a question which may have merit, but I do not think we have reached that stage yet. We have too many pressing problems at the moment, problems which I have outlined very briefly and very hastily.

Over-all, this country has a problem in education. It is not only a government problem, it is one that concerns the provinces, individuals, corporations and the federal government. It is a problem too big to be dealt with without the active co-operation of and a greater degree of assistance from the federal government than we have had heretofore. Much as we may welcome this bill today we are simply skating over the surface of the problems of education facing this nation, and I think the time has come when we have to evaluate the demands being made upon us.

Only the other day we had the royal commission on health reporting to us, and incidentally when you read that royal commission report you can see just one of the problems. You cannot proceed with the health scheme it recommends until you build larger and better medical schools, until you find more medical professors and teachers, and a problem of 10 years duration is going to ensue before that facet of the educational problem is met, assuming we can start meeting it tomorrow morning. That is only one of the problems with which we have to deal, and that is one of the demands being made on us for a health scheme which will be very valuable, very helpful and of great assistance to everyone.

We have a pension scheme just coming over the horizon, as we know, which presumably is going to provide security for everyone in their old age. Then we have this educational problem, which is a very pressing one. I quite agree with what everyone said here this afternoon, that the greatest asset this nation could have is a well trained, well educated youth. Without that we cannot get ahead but, as I say, we have to evaluate the demands of these competing services.

Yesterday the Minister of Finance, dealing with another problem, said there should be conferences to cover taxation problems. The right hon. Leader of the Opposition advocated a general conference to deal with all the problems with which the nation is confronted. Whether we adopt the idea of one conference or a number of conferences the time has come when there must be a serious study given to the problems of education. It must be evaluated as against other demands made upon us. This bill we have before us tonight, which we will all support, is one step along the road; but the fact that we take that step creates other problems which must be dealt with in the near future.

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, very briefly I wish to recommend that the bill before us this evening should receive the unanimous and speedy approval of this parliament. To keep our nation strong we must encourage an ever larger percentage of our youth to attend institutions of higher learning. If we do not, we shall very soon lag far behind the nations of the western world. A university education is a prerequisite to an increasing number of positions in business and industry as well as in the professions and the public service.

The Canadian union of students maintain that only one half of the young people who are capable of higher education ever enrol in a Canadian university. They assert that such waste of human talent is indefensible. Few will disagree with this judgment. Student loans will not solve this problem, but they will help. This bill merits support only on the basis of half a loaf being better than no bread at all. In fact, compared to an adequate program of scholarships or the elimination of student fees entirely, it is a very poor half loaf indeed. During the immediate post-war period thousands of our best students would not have been able to go to university except for the grants they received through the Department of Veterans Affairs; and today many of the young people who need help are the sons and daughters of veterans who themselves were assisted by the federal government at the end of the war. I wish grants were available to them on the same basis as applied to their parents, but this is not so. There are very practical reasons why university attendance is beyond the reach of many good students in every Canadian community. Let me list some of them:

1. University fees are being increased year by year; living costs remain high. The minimum amount required for a girl or boy living away from home is approximately $1,500.

2. Good paying summer work is scarce in many parts of the country because of chronic unemployment; part time employment during the winter is difficult to find.

3. Hundreds of excellent students fail to qualify for the few scholarships that are available; they need help.

4. An increasing number of students are married and accordingly have family responsibilities.

5. Students are frequently required to travel to another province to secure specialized training or to pursue postgraduate work.

All these factors and others should be kept in mind in deciding whether or not students are in need of financial assistance. Another point that I should like to emphasize is that arrangements for negotiating loans should be directed by university administrators who have experience in dealing with students. Direct contact between students and banks should be kept to a minimum. Loans should not be hedged about with requirements and conditions that may be embarrassing and discouraging to many deserving young people I was glad to learn that no guarantor was needed, and not even the consent of parents.

Although loans are not a substitute for scholarships, let us make them as easily available as possible. Separate arrangements with those provinces which may prefer to expand their present programs is most commendable. In this way, delay can be avoided and benefits made available at once. This parliament should not withhold from any young person in this land the opportunity for the fullest possible education. With this thought in mind, let us not delay the passage of this bill in the hope that many students will be able to take full advantage of it this year.

Mr. Joseph Macaluso (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in this debate because of my interest in the student loan program and also my interest in education. Another reason is that in my own riding there is situated McMaster University, which is well known for its research laboratories in, I think, radioactive isotopes, for its engineering school and also for the great work done by its president, Dr. Thode, in the research field.

I do not wish to start my discourse in any political manner, but I do wish to comment on the fact that the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) mentioned the promise of the Canada scholarship program made by the Liberal government in the last election campaign and said it had been forgotten. I can tell the right hon. gentleman that there are many members on this side of the house and on the treasury benches who have not forgotten this scholarship program. I for one have not forgotten it; and it is our intention to come forward with it as soon as possible.

An hon. Member: What year?

Mr. Macaluso: We hear that our legislation is too late; it is too late already. The right hon. gentleman's words were that this legislation concerning the student loan program is too late also. But we should listen to the words of Mr. James G. Mitchell, president of the students council of the University of Waterloo and Mr. James D. Kraemer, chairman of the board of external relations of that university. They said this in a letter they sent to me:

> The Ontario legislature did not adequately meet the needs of her expanding universities and as a result there has been a widespread increase in tuition fees (a situation common throughout Canada). The increase in fees (which in our case amounts to more than $75) coupled with the growing scarcity of summer employment once again threatens to make "university" a "privilege of the wealthy".

Earlier in their letter they say:

> Our earnest hope is that the members of parliament will effectively expedite this priority legislation—

That is referring to the student loan program now before parliament:

> —which awaits the house, in order that a system of federal loans for students will be in effect for September, 1964.

Education today is one of the major public services in Canada and is absorbing an increasing share of the total revenues of all governments. Expenditure on education takes a very high proportion of provincial and municipal revenues, and this affects directly and vitally the public finances of the provinces and municipalities. The federal government's finances are also subject to strain as potential additions to federal revenues are reduced by increasing provincial and municipal levies and as the federal government is requested to assist increasingly in financing education.

It is generally felt that all have a right to obtain the level of education which they are able and willing to achieve. Education today is a door opening up opportunities for all individuals, but it is also a pathway, I suggest, to a nation's economic growth and development. It is becoming realized generally that education is an important factor inducing national economic growth as well as enhancing individual potentials. Universal education can be provided only by public authorities, and all levels of government, I suggest, need to co-operate in framing national education objectives and devising appropriate methods of financing the level of education which it is deemed we can afford in this country today.

In the modern society of today it has become essential to pay attention to the development of our human resources and skills. Failure to utilize these to capacity is a loss, not only to the individuals concerned but also to the economy of this country. One of the greatest challenges faced by modern society is to develop the full potential of its human resources, and virtually every country in the world shares this challenge.

The hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) earlier today commented upon the constitutionality of this program. As we all know, section 92 of the British North America Act sets forth those matters which are the sole responsibility of the provincial governments, and included among them is education. In the field of education the problem of intergovernmental division of responsibilities has grown rapidly since the turn of the century, when the total expenditure on education was about $10 million per year. Between 1951 and 1961 the expenditure on formal education increased from $516 million to nearly $1,800 million.

Expenditures on formal education are still increasing rapidly and in 1963 it was expected that this would exceed $2,300 million. By 1981 it is expected likely to exceed 7 per cent of the gross national product. This I submit includes not only the cost of students' education, but operational costs and capital costs to the universities themselves.

Everyone is aware of the rapidly increasing enrolment at universities and colleges. The number of persons of university age is rising at a high rate and is increasing proportionately every year. At this university age level, a greater proportion are going to universities and colleges today than ever before. It is becoming increasingly necessary for young people to take higher education in order to qualify for the top and middle ranks of positions in our society.

It is further to be noted that the number of students engaging in graduate studies is increasing at an even greater rate than the undergraduate enrolment levels. University enrolment increased from 86,800 in 1957 to over 141,400 in 1962. The sharpest increases are still to come as the population bulge resulting from the great increase in births in the immediate post-war years is beginning to reach university age level.

Many young people too are having difficulty obtaining employment because of lack of training. Vocational training has been provided by public school boards for many years. The federal and provincial governments have recently been providing vocational training, and very recently the federal government began a crash program in co-operation with the provinces to provide complex training facilities throughout the country.

Before the post-war period the main federal contributions to formal education in this country were in the field of Indian and Eskimo education, and some small grants to the provinces for vocational training. During the post-war period the federal government began to contribute to higher education—I mean by that university and college education—under a scheme to assist war veterans, and capital grants to universities were introduced in the 1950's. Many of us recall, certainly I do, that when we first attended university there were a large number of veterans who had returned from the war and were taking advantage of this grant to aid their education and to receive training at school.

At the university level students are charged an annual fee varying from $200 to $700, depending on the institution they are attending and the faculty they are entering. The cost of textbooks and students' supplies must be added to tuition fees, so that the total education cost imposed very considerable financial burden on many students and their families. Scholarships and fellowships and bursaries help, I submit, offset these costs for many students, but these are not sufficient, and insufficient students are able to take advantage of these scholarships, fellowships and bursaries.

Loans to Students

A survey was made of university and college students enrolled in selected faculties for the academic year 1961-62, which survey was to analyse expenditures and sources of income. This survey showed that for a single male undergraduate living at home the total expenditure during the college year ranged from $1,060 to $1,652 per year. Those not living at home spent between $1,406 and $2,321. Expenditures for single female undergraduates were slightly lower than those for males. Married undergraduate students spent on the average—and it is interesting to note this figure—from $2,758 to $2,929. Male unmarried students at graduate level, therefore, had an average expenditure of $1,598 for those living at home and $2,035 for those living away from home. This is quite a sum of money, Mr. Speaker, when you realize that most of these university undergraduates come from families of low income. Married male graduate students spent on the average $3,968 during the college year.

It is also interesting to observe that in a brief submitted by the Canadian school trustees' association to the royal commission on taxation the following passage appears at pages 30 and 31, with which I agree:

> With the high degree of division of labour and mobility of the labour force which characterizes our society there is a continuous pressure to have education expenditures covered to an increasing extent by the national government. What is required in a federation like Canada is much division of labour among the three levels of government in providing and financing different kinds of education.
> We suggest that the local governments be primarily responsible financially for elementary education, assisted wherever required by the provincial governments—
> The federal government could assume much of the responsibility for vocational and higher education, in co-operation with the provinces.

The brief further goes on to say:

> A suitable system of student loans or bursaries could be worked out in such a way that no individual with the required capacity would be unable to borrow funds for investing in his own education. The repayments would have to be stretched over a long period of time, perhaps over most of the working life of the individual as in the case of house mortgages. Such a scheme would be superior to the usual scholarship systems which are limited to the relatively few outstanding students and are largely financed from public funds. The loan scheme could be available to all students who could meet entrance and passing requirements and would provide substantial private sources of funds as repayments were made.

These conclusions were arrived at by the Canadian school trustees' association in their submission to the royal commission on taxation, and it would seem to support 100 per cent the type of student loan program which is now before the house.

This legislation, Mr. Speaker, is no give-away measure. It makes it incumbent on the student to repay money made available to help him and her pass through university or college. It should instil, I submit, a sense of responsibility and at the same time remove the unfair yardstick of making financial means the only criterion for education. Many students have to take jobs to help finance their way through college. Many of us in this house have had to do this, myself included. There is nothing wrong in this during the long summer vacation, but summer jobs today are harder and harder to find for university students. My own experience this past summer has given me evidence of that. Many university students willing to work are finding it more and more difficult to place themselves in jobs and it is becoming more and more difficult to find jobs open. When one speaks to personnel managers who previously set aside a certain number of jobs for university students, the answer he receives is: We have just so many jobs for them; we cannot open any more because we have to make room, and logically so, for these people who are displaced from our industries by automation and technological change. Therefore it is becoming much harder for a university or college student to obtain summer employment, and therefore the student loan program will assist him in this regard. Further, Mr. Speaker, students are forced to do part time work during their semester years, and this can seriously interfere with their studies. Because of this a student may be prevented from producing his or her best results.

I believe the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) mentioned the fact that more than 30 per cent of the college students from the lower income groups must interrupt their schooling for at least one year to earn tuition money. This is a waste of valuable time and energy. The federal government, with this legislation, can now take a great step forward to alter a state of affairs which has plagued students for so many years.

It is true, as has been said by many speakers on the other side, that this is not a program which will solve all the problems of the students and of the universities. Of course it will not. But it is one step forward toward a solution. We remember the heavy inflow of immigrants in the post-war years, the years immediately after the war. Today the families of these people are of university age; many of them are leaving secondary schools and are eligible for universities and colleges. In many cases their families are not able to put them through courses of higher learning. It is true they can borrow from the banks, and that some of these students will be able to win scholarships and bursaries. However, the great majority would not be able to continue their education, through lack of funds. This legislation will come as a special benefit to them. I know that many people in my own riding will be able to take advantage of this program and send their children to colleges and universities to get a higher level of education than they themselves were able to obtain.

This program is another forward step by the present government, implementing as it does the second of four promises to young Canadians in the field of educational opportunities. The youth allowance bill has been passed. That is one promise which was made and which was carried out. The student loan promise has been made, and we are now about to carry it out. The scholarships program is a promise which I submit will be carried out also. In addition there are the per capita grants to universities which are now being discussed.

Today machines and automated programs are performing an ever increasing number of routine, repetitive tasks, thus reducing job opportunities for untrained workers while at the same time opening up new fields for highly skilled personnel. Studies conducted by the national employment service have clearly demonstrated that there is a distinct relationship between lack of education and unemployment. I think no one with an awareness of the increasing complexity of our labour market and the distinct shift from the unskilled segment of the labour force to semi-skilled, skilled and technical workers as well as professional and managerial workers will question the value to the individual Canadian of a high level of education.

I, too, wish to support the argument put forward by my hon. friend for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) on behalf of part time students attending universities. In my own alma mater of McMaster University there are thousands of night time students taking extension courses. These people work during the day and the money they earn is set aside to pay for their education. I think it is proper that at some future date after this bill has been passed the government should give consideration to including among those who qualify under this measure these part time students who take these classes, often at considerable sacrifice, to advance their own education, and I suggest the welfare of this country. This principle was recognized in an amendment which was recently made to the Income Tax Act and I submit that these people, as well as full time students, well merit the advantages afforded by this type of student loan program.

Mr. Winkler: Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he not agree that had it not been for the efforts of the Canadian students union itself, goodness knows when we would have had this legislation? Will he not admit that, rather than try to heap glory on his own shoulders and on this incompetent government?

Mr. Macaluso: I am glad the hon. member has asked that question. He should look at the position of his own side. He says, now: We are willing to co-operate; put the legislation before us. But it is interesting to note that the opposition has only adopted this attitude after pressure by the students, by the universities and in the press. It is only now that they are co-operating in this matter. No, we promised this program; we put it forward and we have kept our promise. For four years hon. members opposite did nothing for the students.

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, since the last war, education, and more particularly secondary or higher education, has developed tremendously in this country. In the province of Quebec, there has been an extraordinary effort, especially since 1959-60.

It began with the famous Barrette bills, during the 1959-60 session, and the effort was maintained under the following administrations, so that today, for the first time in Canada's history, the province of Quebec has a larger budget than Ontario with regard to education. The fact is rather extraordinary, considering that the province of Ontario has a million more people than the province of Quebec.

Today, one only has to talk with the young Quebeckers in our respective ridings to discover the craze and enthusiasm of our young people for education, and more particularly for technical education. Everywhere in Quebec, our engineering schools, our technical schools, our institutions of higher learning, our high schools of commerce, and various other scientific schools, are doubling and even trebling their establishments over the years.

We often hear, Mr. Speaker, that there is, at present, a terrific atmosphere, and that all governments should encourage this trend among our young people.

Doubtlessly, such an effort requires considerable sacrifice, financial sacrifice on the part, not only of the provincial governments, but of the institutions themselves and, more particularly and directly, on the part of the parents, because our fellow citizens, whoever they be, all agree that it would be a great tragedy if it should happen, that, in 1964, a talented young man in Canada were financially unable to continue his studies at a university. I am convinced that all people of good will will see to it that such an eventuality does not take place, here, in 1964.

The aim of the legislation before us tonight is to enable some students in our universities to obtain the necessary loans for continuing their studies. To my mind, this legislation will not meet with much opposition on the part of hon. members from the other provinces, except Quebec. On the contrary, I even believe that it will be rather enthusiastically welcomed. But, in the case of the province of Quebec, the situation is somewhat more difficult, because there is a rather delicate constitutional problem involved.

As a matter of fact, the premier of the province of Quebec, Mr. Lesage, made a somewhat violent statement when this question was raised. He even threatened to resort to the courts in order to have the constitutional priority of the province acknowledged in that field.

More recently, we saw with a certain amazement that the students' associations of Laval, Montreal and Sherbrooke Universities, as well as the association of the students of classical colleges and teachers' colleges send to the Minister of Finance a resolution protesting against this intrusion of the federal government in the field of education, which is essentially provincial.

These students, as well as the provincial government, expressed an opinion which is not new and which is that such loans should come from the provincial government.

Loans to Students

I must admit it is with much hesitation I rise tonight to support the bill before us. I do so after having carefully studied the various sections of the bill, for, needless to say, before supporting it, I believe it is my duty to express serious doubts on the constitutional aspect of this document. On the other hand, I am not too surprised to see that this legislation was introduced by a Liberal administration. We have been used, in the past, to see Liberal governments always trying to interfere in the provincial fields: they never missed an opportunity to weigh down the scale in favour of the central government and to enter, with all kinds of flimsy excuses in a field which is not theirs.

No doubt, we all know that section 93 of the British North America Act, makes it crystal clear that education comes under provincial jurisdiction, and not only that education belongs to the provinces, but that they have an exclusive right in that respect.

What does an "exclusive right" mean? It is a right which is our own. An exclusive right is one that lies above an ordinary right and which even transcends a priority right or a relative right. In its own framework, an exclusive right becomes an absolute right.

But rights alone are not enough. There must be means to exercise them. This is undoubtedly where the federal government is keeping on centralizing, where it is following the line it laid down long ago, that is always try to intrude further into fields where it has no jurisdiction whatsoever. But since it holds the purse strings, it can use a little blackmail and reach its goals.

Many people will no doubt find this speech somewhat academic; they will find that these essays on the constitution are not practical enough. Personally, I see very practical applications here. That is why I have serious doubts about the legislation before us.

First of all, the federal government definitely lacks the organization to look after education. From time to time, the federal government introduces into the house enticing pieces of legislation concerning a particular field or a group of citizens; but since it has no department of education, no agency or crown corporation which might supply it with the required information so that it could decide whether or not such and such a step is necessary in a province in order to help education, one is entitled to ask why the government wants to intrude in this field. One is also entitled to wonder if this intrusion by the federal government will bring happy results for the population as a whole.

[Mr. Balcer.]

In brief, the federal government intrudes in this field on the excuse that it has the means to do it, that it is somewhat easier for it to control the field, because it controls the monetary system, and so on. It collects taxes for this purpose and uses its credit for a particular measure intended to help education. This is what it is doing through this bill.

Fortunately, this bill includes an alternative payment formula. I shall give my opinion later on that subject, but I revert to my argument to the effect that the federal government does not really have the organization to look after education, to lay the foundations of the various pieces of legislation concerning education.

Consider the position of the provincial government. There you have a department of education and all the required experts. It is there that budgets and programs are prepared. It is there that the balance sheets of the various institutions are reviewed. It is there that there are meetings with the authorities of the higher education institutions. In short, the provincial government is really equipped to know what are the priorities in the field of education in the province.

That is why one may have misgivings about this bill and wonder—and here I speak as a citizen of the province of Quebec—whether this is what we really need at the present time in the province of Quebec. Is it right for the federal government to pledge its credit to the amount of $40 million in order to offer loans to students? It may be that the most necessary need, the most urgent need is the construction of laboratories, the training of university professors, the establishment of new teachers' colleges, the setting up of new libraries, a change of program, and so forth.

How can we tell? Only the provincial government can. As I said, the federal government is really not in a position to decide. That is why I think the federal government is taking a chance in going into that field. As a matter of fact, the federal government which preceded us, had gone into university grants in an absolutely disastrous way, and it is the province of Quebec which was deprived, for several years, of those amounts of money, simply because the then federal government had no replacement payment formula to enable the provinces to accept university grants.

Fortunately, this legislation, because of the opposition from Quebec, I am sure, provides for a replacement payment formula. I hope that this formula will give the expected results. In short, I hope that this option system which certainly offers great difficulties from a constitutional point of view, will not place the province of Quebec in an inferiority position or will not completely upset the scholarship program of the provincial government and will not hinder the cause of education in that province.

The option system surely gives rise to great difficulties from a constitutional standpoint. It should not be used by the federal government as a roundabout way to keep on intruding slyly in matters where it has no jurisdiction.

However, as the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) explained yesterday, this option formula is not without merits and we should support it instead of simply penalizing a non-participating province.

Those options are conditional payments. They should merely be replaced by unconditional equalization payments. Then, we would not be trampling on the constitution but allowing the people of the various provinces to benefit from those surplus funds the federal government seems to have and the provinces could use that money to promote education.

There is no doubt, as always, that with such priority measures we are venturing into fields of activity where the needs are most pressing, in the education program of a given province, to achieve better results. For my part, I wanted to make that reservation about the constitutional aspect of the measure now before us and I must say that, because of the options provided for under section 12 concerning repayments, well, I shall support the bill while making a strong reservation from a constitutional standpoint.

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, the bill now under study is certainly a very important one, since it concerns our Canadian students. This afternoon, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) said very appropriately that the bill had a certain object in view and was advocating a certain method, and of course there is quite a difference between the methods used even if the aim to be attained is commendable.

When considering the contents of the bill, it is easy to realize that it does not at all fulfil the promises which the government made to Canadian students. In the first place, loans were to be interest free up to full repayment while the present bill provides just the opposite. A 20-year old student borrowing $1,000 per year during five years, when he will have reached 25, that is when his studies will be completed—or that part for which he will have borrowed up to $5,000—will be starting his career with a $5,000 debt. All the ministers and members will admit that it is quite shameful and discouraging for a 25-year old man to have a $5,000 debt.

Measures have been passed and suggestions have been made in the past to help our young students. Now, this legislation provides that a student who will have obtained a loan up to $5,000 will be compelled, six months after the end of his studies, to begin paying the interest on that loan, since the government will then stop paying it. On the other hand, if he takes five or ten years to repay this $5,000 loan—the minister has not even mentioned the interest rate. It is reported to be 5¾ per cent. Now 5¾ per cent over a ten-year period means that the student will have to repay $7,500 for the $5,000 be obtained.

Mr. Speaker, the essential point is this: let us suppose that the student is 25 when he completes his studies and is unable to find employment for a year or 18 months. Will the government then introduce a bill to help unemployed persons just out of university at the age of 25 and unable to repay those loans?

This afternoon, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) also stated that we shall have to resort to banks which only lend the deposits entrusted to them. I do not hesitate in the least to say that if the Minister of Finance really means what he asserted this afternoon, namely that banks only lend the depositor's money, he is not competent to hold his present office. The minister is lying not only to members of the house, but to the whole country.

The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson) recalled that the former governor of the Bank of Canada, Mr. Graham Towers, stated before the committee on banking and commerce in 1939, that banks cannot lend their depositors' money.

I shall give an example to the Minister of Finance, because being a chartered accountant, he should know all about accounting.

An industrialist goes to a bank to borrow $100,000. The manager asks him if he has any personal collaterals, such as insurance policies, redeemable securities and often asks him to produce his marriage contract, not to take away his wife, but to ascertain if she will become the owner of his properties after his death. In any case, the manager takes all necessary precautions and finally agrees to make a loan of $100,000. Immediately, he asks him to sign notes, papers, collaterals, etc., covering the amount of $100,000. Then he creates a credit in favour of the borrower for an amount of $100,000, and this is entered into the books. Before the industrialist came to the bank, this $100,000 did not exist in the books. And to prove it, if we add up all the bank accounts that existed before the industrialist went to the bank and add them all up again after he left, the Minister of Finance would see that the bank accounts total $100,000 more than they amounted to before the industrialist went to the bank to obtain a loan.

Where is this amount of $100,000 coming from? Let the Minister of Finance inquire from the Bank of Canada. Let him inquire from the chartered banks of Canada who are authorized to create credit, who not only have the right of creating credit but the exclusive control over credit for the whole Canadian people. Then, we are told that bankers lend the money of their depositors, the money deposited in private accounts. When the loan for $100,000 was made—I see that the Minister of Fisheries finds this very funny, he does not understand anything, but he still finds it funny. People often laugh at this, but they do not know why they are laughing.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance was not speaking the truth this afternoon when he stated that bankers were lending the money of their depositors. I should like to draw his attention—

An hon. Member: We need the banks.

Mr. Caouette: We are not against the banking system; we object to the faulty control of the bank. I am not, by far, the first to condemn that system. In fact, if my hon. friend, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. Robichaud) wants to read Pope Pius XI's encyclical Quadragesimo anno, he will see that it says that those controlling money and credit are the masters of our lives, including that of the Minister of Fisheries, that they control the economic life of the whole nation and that, without their permission, nobody has the right to breathe.

Mr. Boulanger: Including the Chrysler car dealers.

Mr. Caouette: Including my hon. friend from Mercier, who never shows more intelligence.

But when we criticize that system and when the Minister of Finance asks us to approve this measure, at the risk of getting the next generation into debt, the rising generation which, it seems, is being placed in the hands of a few people who control money and credit in Canada, I wonder whether the Minister of Finance, the members of cabinet and the members of parliament have the right to recommend or to support such a bill?

Why did the Minister of Finance not present Bill C-110 saying: We are going to use the credit of the Bank of Canada; we are going to grant $1,000 a year scholarships to Canadian students, because these young people will be an asset which will help further the development of our country and our natural resources, not by crippling them right from the start, dwarfing them right from the start, lowering them, but by giving them all the necessary leeway so that they may become prominent people and go on to other things rather than having to repay the debts which the Minister of Finance is prepared to let them get into at this time.

Mr. Speaker, I will meet with some opposition. That same thing happened in this house in 1941 and 1942, when two good Liberal members, Messrs. Arthur Slaght and "Gerry" McGeer, were sitting here. At that time those two men asked that the Bank of Canada be used and the then minister of finance, Mr. Ilsley, replied: "If we use the Bank of Canada to create any kind of credit, the chartered banks, under the federal act, have the right to increase immediately 10, 12, 15 and even 20 times the credit granted by the Bank of Canada."

Well, let us amend that act instead of getting generations to come into debt. Therefore, let us amend the Bank of Canada Act and use Canadian credit created by the Bank of Canada, debt and interest free credit, to develop normally our human and natural resources. Actually, it is only a matter of credit to allow students to continue their studies. It is the same thing in all fields but, since we are dealing with Bill No. C-110, we approve of the principle of aid to students but we reject and disapprove of the principle of getting into debt our students, our own children and, as I said a little earlier, the generations to come.

On the other hand, the former minister of transport, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), said that the federal government is interfering with education, that it controls its monetary system. In his opinion, the monetary system is the control of taxes. That is all it amounts to. Moreover, he is not too sure that the Canadian government is right in engaging its credits for $40 million. We do not know, he said, if technical schools, high schools or schools of higher learning are needed. He knew, he did not know; he knows, he does not know.

In short, one is not very well informed, but to be agreeable to the province of Quebec, the federal government must be pulled out of this mess whereas under such circumstances, these are not gifts from the government to Canadian students, but guaranteed loans. However the federal government—

Mr. Gauthier: They are becoming real estate agents.

Mr. Caouette: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague, the hon. member for Roberval rightly pointed out, the federal government is becoming a real state agent, a loan agency and this occurs nowadays in all spheres of the economic field.

Mr. Speaker, as far as education is concerned, the only conceivable solution, which would respect provincial rights as well as individual rights and more particularly the rights of our young people, of our students, would be to make available to provinces credits, established by the Bank of Canada, without interest of any kind, not a kind of education, an indebted education, a kind of education which, in 15 or 20 years hence, will be entirely controlled and dominated by the Canadian chartered banks.

According to the principle of the bill the problem would perhaps not be too thorny this year, but in five years hence we will have five times more students who will have taken advantage of this loan system.

And why will the students take advantage of this loan plan? Because at present, they cannot fulfil their obligations. Therefore, advantage is taken of this and a plan to directly socialize education is proposed which would be controlled by the Canadian government and Canadian finance.

Today, automobiles are finance controlled, furniture is finance controlled; nearly everything is finance controlled, and we will now have finance controlled education for our children. What a beautiful system the present government is setting up in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we are in favour of loans to students but, as the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) rightly said this afternoon, not to get our students further into debt, so that five or ten years from now, they will not be able to repay their debts. Then, the federal government would no longer pay the interest; the students would have to pay it six months after completion of their studies.

That is not what the Liberal party promised the students during the 1963 election campaign. Students were promised scholarships and loans without interest. The Liberals did not tell the students they would have to repay the loans six months after having completed their studies. They were then misleading the Canadian students, and particularly the Canadian electorate.

The Liberal government hopes to get out of it like that, but I am convinced it will not. We will not allow future generations to get into debt as the government is now advocating. It is time the Minister of Finance stops telling us that Canadian chartered banks are merely lending the money of depositors. He should get information about that; otherwise, I will have to conclude that he knows nothing about the Canadian monetary system. When we know something about it, we are aware of other means than the one he is suggesting to assist the Canadian students, as the provinces do. Let us use the Bank of Canada. Let the Minister of Finance be convinced and let him use the Bank of Canada to establish new credit for our children's studies. And when the time of the reimbursement, without interest, will come, then we will be able to tell the government of Canada that he has helped the future generations. But, in the meantime, these are still only poultices on wooden legs applied by the government under this Bill C-110 now under study.

Mr. Jean Chrétien (St. Maurice-Laflèche): Mr. Speaker, I should like, first of all, to pay tribute to Mr. J. A. Richard, a former member of parliament for St. Maurice-Laflèche, who died this morning.

Born in a poor section of the province, at St. Grégoire, and forced to leave school at an early age to earn a living, he built up, by dint of hard work, a going concern in Shawinigan and served his municipality as school trustee and alderman, and was active in charitable organizations.

At an age where most people think of retiring and living comfortably on their private income, Mr. Richard agreed, at 62 years, to run in the general election of 1949 and he remained in the public service until June 1962 as member for the constituency I am now representing.

His friends from St. Maurice-Laflèche and his colleagues in the House of Commons remember him as a hard working, honest, devoted and sincere person. May he get his well deserved reward.

During the present session of the legislature, the province of Quebec gave itself a department of education. A man decided to provide his fellow citizens with the instrument they most sorely needed to ensure the fulfilment of the French language, an adequate educational system. That man was Paul Gérin-Lajoie. He succeeded in convincing the people of Quebec that, as far as economic standards are concerned, the only way to catch up with their most important neighbours, the United States and Ontario, was to train competent people who could play their respective roles in the community. And now, I feel it is my duty to say to the whole of Canada that thanks to that dynamic action in the field of education, Quebec and French Canada are preparing themselves for the mission which is entrusted to them in this country. We no longer want to be silent partners in the economic expansion of Canada; we want to be in the van. At present, Quebec is investing more in its human resources than Ontario whose population is larger by one million. "Operation education" has been launched. Quebec is on the march and we are proud of it.

For us, Quebeckers, education is the field where we are most concerned about our prerogatives and, under no circumstances will we tolerate any intrusion in that sector. The survival and emancipation of French Canada depend on education, and we will fight for our rights in this regard to the last ditch. If we want to survive, we must be intolerant in this matter.

This being said, we must recognize that the bill concerning student loans brings into confrontation the jurisdictions of two different governments. The federal government is responsible for credit control, but education falls under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

I hope that nobody will deny that education is exclusively a provincial matter. Anyone questioning that would get one biting answer from all hon. members of the province of Quebec, regardless of their political affiliation.

In all fairness, we must also recognize that, in the past, the federal government enacted legislation in many fields to provide credit for citizens in all parts of Canada. I will mention just a few: small businesses loans; farm loans; Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation loans; loans to municipalities; loans to fishermen; university grants and assistance to technical training.

Now, the government is well aware of the problem that comes up in this legislation, that is the possible conflict between two different jurisdictions. Having understood that difficulty, it has prepared its bill so as to remedy that problem.

In the past, when the federal government grappled with any legislative problem, it did so without any or with very little regard for the opinion of the provinces in a given field. The central government used to take a rather lofty attitude which was likely to set public opinion against it.

Now, with reference to Bill No. C-110, the government first wanted to know the views of the provinces at the last federal-provincial conference, and the Minister of Finance pointed out this afternoon that several provinces—and I say several, because too many people think only of Quebec—informed the federal government that this came within their jurisdiction and they would not tolerate any unwarranted intrusion by the federal government. However, the federal government obviously had to enact legislation on behalf of those provinces which were anxious to provide their students with the necessary funds to continue their studies but which were unable to do so because of the large size of their population, their financial position or various other reasons. Once the provinces had expressed their views on the project submitted by the federal government, the Minister of Finance prepared a bill in accordance with the two following principles which are of the utmost importance:

(a) education comes under the provinces while credit is a matter of federal jurisdiction;

(b) the recognition of the contracting out formula under which a province may withdraw from the scheme without sustaining any financial loss.

The first principle—provincial jurisdiction in matters pertaining to education—is clearly recognized in section 10 of the bill which states:

—the appropriate authority for a province may issue or cause to be issued a certificate of eligibility.

In addition, paragraph (b) of section 2 gives the following definition:

"Appropriate authority" for a province means such person, body or authority as may be designated by the lieutenant governor in council of that province as the appropriate authority for that province for the purposes of this act.

Accordingly, it will always be the provinces which will designate the students eligible under this legislation. Consequently, it is quite clear that the federal government does not infringe upon the field of education since control of the scheme will rest in the hands of the body chosen by the province and the latter will always be free to entrust its department of education with the administration of the program. Furthermore, in order to cover any province which is not convinced that it is in its interest to take part in this plan, the government has included in the resolution a second principle, mentioned above, namely: the possibility for a province to contract out and to receive in return an equalization payment; this illustrates the new philosophy of co-operative federalism.

As a matter of fact, section 12 of Bill No. C-110 specifies that a province that will not participate in the program will get an amount per student equal to the cost the federal government pays in all the other provinces.

I think this is a major change in the attitude of federal legislators to such an extent as to improve understanding in this country.

That being said, what must Quebec do in view of this situation? First of all, it is important to state that the effort made by Quebec in the field of education must be continued without faltering. But you must not forget a principle brought forward by the party I represent which, at the provincial level, was saying in 1960 that not one student in Quebec should abandon his studies because of financial difficulties.

That is why I would urge the province of Quebec to give serious consideration to this bill, so that it can benefit thereby to the fullest extent possible.

However, there is a point which I find important and which I consider to be a victory for a group of members of my party who have been advocating this for months. I refer to the fact that it is entirely up to the province to decide whether or not to take part in this program. That decision is left to the province. No province is obliged to participate. I think such a change of attitude should make my fellow citizens in the province of Quebec very happy.

Only two years ago, such a provision in federal legislation would not even have been considered possible.

It is by putting up a positive and intelligent fight that Quebec will succeed, and not by resorting to demagogy and irresponsibility.

At the federal-provincial conference other provinces raised objections to the bill now before us. However, I was glad to learn this afternoon, from the Minister of Finance himself, that, now that they have been informed of the formulas advocated by the present government, some provinces would be ready to reconsider their positions.

If my province, after having considered the bill in every detail, does not consider it constitutionally objectionable as an impingement on exclusive provincial jurisdiction in matters of education, I hope that the students of my province, like other students in this country, will be able to benefit by this formula.

I think, if our governments could agree on this project, that Canadian unity would immediately benefit. If there were uniform opportunities, while maintaining the unquestionable prerogatives of the provinces, some English speaking students who do not reside in the province of Quebec would be able to go there to study and get a better knowledge of the French element in Canada. I think there would be a considerable advantage in uniformity, as there would be an advantage to French speaking students who would want to study in another province to acquire a culture which suits them.

I submit that this bill is something new. It is a historic bill, because, for the first time we have a piece of legislation containing all the provisions needed to help the provinces fully avail themselves of their autonomy, while permitting the application throughout Canada of a policy which would be of great service to the people.

I am not afraid to say that there is no political impingement in the educational field by the federal government at this time, because the final decision, according to the provisions of this bill, is not in the hands of the federal, but of the provincial governments.

I hope that the Canadian provinces will try to make use of this plan as we must not indulge in vain constitutional conflicts either on poverty or on education.

What we want is to give Canadian citizens the greatest opportunities we can so that our country will be a united country where every citizen will be in a position to achieve the objective he has in mind without being deprived of education.

[Text]

Mr. Reg Cantelon (Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, I should like at the outset to express my basic approval for the principle of this bill. However I do not entirely agree with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) that this is an absolutely perfect bill, as I hope to point out. I do not feel that this bill interferes with provincial rights in education. In this respect I agree with the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner), who feels the same way. Consequently I am rather disappointed that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) calls this legislation an invasion of the rights of the provinces. His highly coloured and emotional remarks are hardly conducive to a rational solution of the constitutional problem, if there is one and, what to me and many more is more important, to a solution of the pressing monetary needs of our students and of education generally. His comments were in marked contrast to the rational and informative address of the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), who is as interested in the problems of the province of Quebec as any member in this chamber. I could be influenced by his arguments though quite unmoved by those of the hon. member for Lapointe.

I should like to read a short portion of a report published in the Regina Star-Phoenix for July 11, 1964. The hon. member for Lapointe made reference to this article, of which the report in the Star-Pheonix is a translation in English:

> "The French Canadian students feel that such measure, although worthy of praise, is in complete opposition to their desires for a more autonomous provincial government", they said in a press release.
> The student groups are association générale des étudiants des universités de Laval, Montréal, Sherbrooke; fédération des normaliens du Québec, and fédération des associations générales des étudiants des collèges classiques du Québec.

All these organizations apparently feel that provincial rights have been invaded by this legislation. I must confess I find this impossible to believe, and impossible to feel either. I am quite sure also that most other student groups in the dominion would not support such objection.

The money which is provided by this bill will be given to the provinces that ask for it, rather than to the students. As an examination of the bill discloses, the provinces may continue their own scheme and get a rebate, one might call it; or they may introduce a scheme as proposed in the bill. So that a province has the right of choice, and not only a right of choice but complete control. If this is an invasion of provincial rights, I fail to see it.

It is thus difficult to see where interference with the constitutional rights of the provinces in regard to education occurs. If the provinces are already making loans to students, the provision of this aid will free those provinces from the demands they make on their own treasuries and enable them to use the amounts so saved for any other purpose they wish. If the province is not assisting high school graduates in this way to go on to university, then I feel it should be. I say this not only in light of the benefit this will provide to a student personally, because his income will be, on the average, several times what he would earn as a high school graduate, but because his contribution to the welfare of the state is also greatly enhanced. He will not be one of the unemployed in the future and will therefore not become a charge on his fellow citizens. He will undoubtedly pay higher taxes as a result of the increased income which he will be able to earn. He may even vote more intelligently. He will help to produce a high degree of industrialization, which characterizes the modern state with a high standard of living. Therefore we on our part are exhibiting an intelligent selfishness in introducing this legislation.

The tremendous increase in educational expenses which is occurring and which will continue to increase is placing very heavy strains on municipal and provincial finances. The Canadian school trustees have brought this matter to our attention and to the attention of the government in their submission to the royal commission on taxation. According to the Western Producer for November 7, 1963, the following statement was made in their submission:

> The trustees said "education currently takes 16 per cent of all government revenues, compared to 8 per cent 15 years ago."

This is remarkable when we consider what great increases there have been in all government revenue. Still, the increase has doubled. They went on to point out that it is very unlikely the mounting cost will abate. We are all coming to realize the tremendous value of a highly educated people and I think we are prepared to pay the costs. Unfortunately, the provinces and municipalities are finding that their sources of revenue based on direct taxation, especially land taxes, are not producing at the accelerated rate needed to keep up with their expenditures on education. This is the root of all the difficulty in taxation.

Again may I refer to the same article I quoted from a moment ago, the article in the Western Producer on November 7. It states:

> The trustees said that between 1951 and 1961 costs of formal education rose to $1,800 million—and accounted for 4.9 per cent of the nation's gross national product—from $561 million.

I suppose this refers to the 1951 cost although it does not say so in so many words. The article continues:

> Expenditure on formal education is still increasing rapidly and in 1963 it is expected to exceed $2,300 million, considerably above 5 per cent of the gross national product. By 1971 we expect the ratio to be well above 6 per cent of the gross national product and by 1981 it is likely to exceed 7 per cent.

They went on to point out that in their opinion the limits on taxation, from local sources had been reached and that the nation as a whole must find ways to assist the provinces to carry the load. Further on in the same article, it says:

> The trustees warned, however, that the limit has been reached. They suggested a local maximum taxation rate equivalent to 2.0 per cent of the gross national product and a provincial contribution not exceeding 2.5 per cent of the gross national product.
> They pointed out that if their projections are realized these two sources will not be sufficient. The federal government, which currently spends less than 0.5 per cent of the gross national product on education, would have to take up the slack.
> It would, in fact, have to contribute an amount equal to 2.1 per cent of the gross national product by 1981 if the forecast expenditures on education of 7.2 per cent of the gross national product are accurate.

It is thus clear to all of us that federal aid to education within the framework of the constitution is necessary and, I maintain, desirable. There was a time some years ago when I felt as did most teachers who were executive members of provincial organizations in the west that direct educational aid was necessary. I now question that position, but not the need for more money for education. The provinces and the municipalities cannot carry the load and the only way that seems fully to meet the need is for the federal treasury to provide more funds without any strings attached as to their use so as to escape from the constitutional straitjacket. If this is done, the provinces can do the job required.

Loans to Students

On Thursday, July 9, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) proposed a federal-provincial conference which would give extended and intensive study to fiscal problems. I am sure that if this were done and if more money were provided to the provinces most of our difficulties as to the financing of education would disappear. As the Leader of the Opposition put it today, this legislation for student loans is just a stopgap. The hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) gave an extremely comprehensive and detailed explanation to point out what university needs are today and what they were likely to be in the future. I hardly think it is worth while my continuing to stress this point.

As I mentioned earlier, there are provinces which have been assisting students to go on to universities. My previous comments are, I think, quite proper since the bill before us will relieve such provinces of a portion of their educational expenditure which they can then devote to other educational uses. My own province of Saskatchewan has had a student aid fund since 1953. Its government has provided a basic fund of $1 million from which loans were made to any student wishing to attend teachers' college, the school of nursing or the provincial university. Later on, in 1962, the fund had another $2 million added to it from the school land fund. I regret I do not have the regulations with me but if my memory is correct there is never any interest charged on loans until a student is in default, so he may never have to pay any interest on the loan. It is also noteworthy that the loan is handled by the province and is not, in fact, a bank loan. I am sure the students of Saskatchewan—and, I think the present government there—would prefer to see the provincial student aid fund continued, the province to be compensated from the federal treasury. In my view, assistance to the student is more generous under the provincial measure and practically as easy on the public purse. Other provinces, two of which I know, particularly Alberta, have student assistance loans acts. Alberta introduced one in 1959 and Quebec in the same year under the title: "An act to facilitate access to higher studies".

The minister said in his opening remarks that all the provinces with one exception had some scheme of student loans. In addition to these there are a number of private plans. To me, this is conclusive evidence of public appreciation of the need for assistance in this field. I feel I need say little about the advantages to the student of this loan fund.

The minister has detailed them very well. But I join with the leader of the New Democratic party (Mr. Douglas) in saying that the number of loans which the minister believes will be granted are almost certain to fall far short of the number which should be granted if our country is to educate all those who are capable of being educated.

Most of us on this side of the chamber are certain this legislation should not have preceded the granting of the 10,000 scholarships proposed by the minister of northern affairs (Mr. Laing) a year ago last March, but should have followed the introduction of legislation to implement that promise. We wonder whether this is just another cute trick to avoid carrying out an election promise. As a teacher friend of mine, a rather shrewd person, said—and he is not a Liberal—there is a fear that this new lending program may get in the way of an adequate bursary program. This would certainly be a most undesirable thing to happen.

This, then, is a desirable step but it is not perfect, as my hon. friend from Digby-Annapolis-Kings so ably demonstrated in his informative and constructive address. It is not the answer to the real problem of the doubling and redoubling of the university population. We should continue to search for solutions to this pressing problem—solutions which are made even more difficult to find by the need to avoid interference with provincial rights in the field of education.

Mr. M. J. Moreau (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I wish to make a few remarks on the bill now before us. First I should like to say how strongly I support this type of legislation. I am one of those who believe that the only limiting factors in an industrial society such as Canada's in furthering one's education should be the individual's own ability, capacity and application. This legislation seems to me to go a long way toward equalization of opportunity for our youth. I would expect it would receive ready support from all members of the house, particularly from the hon. member for Northwest Territories (Mr. Rhéaume) who spoke so strongly last night in favour of equalizing opportunities in Canada. I would hope the official opposition would not oppose such an equalization measure, as they did the Family Allowances Act.

I am also one of those who found it necessary to skimp, to save and to borrow in order to get through university. While worry and privation may possibly contribute to self-reliance, we should not delude ourselves into thinking that many students can be successful in this way. It only takes a very short illness, a month without a job or some other unforeseen circumstance to place the dream of a university education completely out of reach of the student who is trying to make it entirely on his own. With rising tuition fees and living costs, I doubt that it is possible to work one's way through college nowadays, particularly if the student is taking an engineering course, an applied science course or if he is in medical school or any of the many other fields that require 35 to 40 hours of lectures and laboratory work a week, in addition to studying and preparing the reports that the student is required to submit.

I believe that the students of Canada are only asking for an opportunity, not a subsidy, and in my view this plan will go a long way toward solving a growing national problem. I want to remind hon. members, however, that this loan plan is not an end in itself but should really be regarded as only a beginning, a first step, if you will. I want to urge the provincial authorities to give top priority to the provision of more university facilities for our growing student population. This legislation will make it possible for more students in our society to attend university, and we are already faced with the problem of overcrowded facilities in most provinces. In my opinion this is a problem which is reaching crisis proportions and I would urge the federal and provincial governments to give it top priority.

We also have a critical shortage of trained university staffs and we must deal with this urgent problem which threatens to limit all our efforts in this field. We are currently spending thousands of dollars to train young people, only to lose them to the United States because of the limited opportunities for research and the lower salaries which are paid in Canada. We provide our youth with free public and secondary school education. We support them through state supported universities. We support them through scholarships, and now we are going to support them through loans so that in many cases they can find better jobs and opportunities in the United States.

In view of the technological changes facing our North American society, the revolution in which we are now involved and the need for trained and skilled minds in such a changing society, in view of the shortage of staff and of facilities, the lack of research opportunities and the difference in pay scales between Canada and United States, I urge the government to convene a conference with the provincial authorities forthwith, or at least to place this matter very high on the agenda of the next federal-provincial conference in order to tackle what I consider to be a problem of national concern.

One aspect of this legislation is that it may help to solve another very serious and related need in our technological society. I refer to the low incidence of postgraduate students at Canadian universities. I should like to quote from an article which appeared in the Globe and Mail in early February of this year. It deals with a brief submitted by the Ontario council of university faculty associations to the provincial government outlining the seriousness of the problem. The article reads in part as follows:

> Of the many points of powerful argument made in the excellent brief of the Ontario council of university faculty associations presented to the government several weeks ago, not the least is the story of the deficiency of Ontario and, indeed, of Canadian universities in graduate education. University education has two facets which are not always recognized by the public—undergraduate study and postgraduate study.

Later the article goes on to state:

> It is from this latter group that professors and other university teachers are ordinarily obtained, and also the top scientists and research staff used in industry. University education is generally considered impossible without these highly qualified people—
> The ratio of graduate to undergraduate students in Canadian universities is ridiculously lower than in universities of similar national importance in the United States. For instance, Harvard has about 60 per cent of its students in graduate work—The university of Chicago has about 68 per cent; Columbia about 60 per cent; Yale and Princeton, 50 per cent; University of Michigan, 35 per cent; University of California, about 30 per cent.
> By comparison, (the latest figures from the dominion bureau of statistics are for 1961-62), the University of British Columbia has a ratio of about 6.8 per cent graduate students; Alberta, 6.3 per cent; Saskatchewan, 4.4 per cent; Queen's 9.1 per cent; McGill, 12.3 per cent; Western Ontario, 13 per cent; and the University of Toronto, about 9.3 per cent—

The article continues:

> We cannot hope for very much from the other provincial universities in Canada—the biggest outside Ontario, the University of British Columbia, had its provincial grant heavily cut by the Social Credit government last year—and it can be seen from the above figures that the production of university professor material is on a low level in the others.
> If we are to produce the staffs we are going to need for the universities in Ontario, which are expected to triple in size of enrolment in less than 10 years, we shall have to invest very heavily indeed in graduate schools of all kinds. This need is probably more urgent than any other phase of the university crisis.

Loans to Students

> The approach of this crisis was made known to the Ontario government 10 years ago, but it did nothing about it when there was still time. About a year ago, Premier John Robarts set up a scheme for fellowships for advanced study by graduates of Ontario universities, and provided a modest capital sum for planning further facilities. It is necessary to enlarge these funds substantially. The difficulties of the situation ought not to paralyse action.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this brief really points out a national problem, one which merits the attention of all levels of government and certainly of all members of this house. I believe this legislation is a significant step because it can be used not only by the student who needs assistance during his undergraduate years but the student who wishes to take postgraduate work. It can be used by the student who feels he has been a burden to his parents long enough and feels he should begin to pay his own way. He will now be able to apply for a loan under this plan to continue his education.

In my opinion, there is also perhaps the further need for an incentive to encourage the student to take postgraduate training after four years or more of toil with no income. Once having gotten him through a postgraduate course, either here in Canada or in a university in the United States, there must be some means also for encouraging him to return from the United States. It was with this in mind, Mr. Speaker, that I placed a motion on the order paper on February 27, motion No. 38 which calls for the granting of a tax free period to the successful student for each year spent in accredited postgraduate study. This would provide an incentive to our trained people by way of an opportunity to recapture the costs incurred in these studies.

A further result of this scheme, Mr. Speaker, would be to keep highly trained minds at home, or alternatively to bring back to Canada students who are Canadians and who are doing postgraduate work at universities in the United States. They would return to Canada in order to benefit from this tax concession. In support of this idea, I would remind hon. members that it has been estimated that it costs approximately $50,000 to train a Ph.D., and most of this money comes from public funds. I also feel that the period during which we are likely to suffer the greatest loss of trained minds is in the period immediately following graduation, when the student has not incurred any family obligations. He has not earned any seniority or pension benefits with a company. He has not earned any promotions with a Canadian company. He is therefore very susceptible to the higher starting salaries and to the higher grants given to research in the United States. I therefore urge that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) consider this suggestion of mine. I hope that we might see it in our next budget. I think it would play a very significant role in keeping these highly trained minds in which we have a tremendous investment of public funds here in Canada, in order that they may contribute what they can to our economic development.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the same factors apply in the academic world. Certainly, the need for university professors, the need for trained people in our universities, would also be helped by such a measure. I should like to place on the record some of the views regarding this very serious strain of our human resources which have been appearing in our newspapers in recent months. I have here an editorial which appeared in the Globe and Mail from which I should like to quote:

> A disturbingly large number of these Canadians who move to the states have obtained costly education and training here. The House of Commons was informed this week that in the 12 month period ending last June, a total of 1,583 highly trained persons—mainly engineers, but including scientists, university teachers, physicians and surgeons—left Canada for the United States. For the previous year, the figure was 1,295; and for the year before, 1,270.

I should like to quote from the Globe and Mail for Tuesday, April 21, 1964:

> The brain drain of Canadian university professors to the United States was blamed here yesterday for contributing to a shortage of specialized international study courses in Canadian universities.
> Dr. J. F. Leddy, a professor at the university of Saskatchewan, told a special meeting of the national conference of Canadian universities and colleges—

There is more in this article and I could go on, but I have already quoted from the brief of the Ontario council of faculties of Canadian universities, indicating the need for a threefold increase in university staffs in the next ten years.

I was interested also in reading an article in the New York Times commenting on the furore in Britain over this same problem, which by contrast with our own on a per capita basis is really very minimal. Mr. Wilson, the leader of the Labour party devoted a major political broadcast to this exodus of political scientists. He is reported as follows:

> He scored the "miserably inadequate provisions by the government of research facilities" and said that even when a British scientist scored a breakthrough "it is left to American or other business firms to build the industry that this British discovery made possible."
> Mr. Wilson said about 140 Ph.D.'s were leaving Britain every year permanently, a lot of them for the United States. He said this was nearly one in eight of Britain's yearly output of highly qualified scientists—
> Government officials, smarting under the criticism, are suggesting that Prime Minister Sir Alec Douglas-Home will raise the issue with President Lyndon Johnson when they meet in Washington.

I think the New York Times comment was indicative of the seriousness with which this problem is regarded in Britain. Certainly, the problem in Britain is really insignificant compared to the per capita problem we have here in Canada. I would strongly urge that the federal government and provincial governments take note of this serious problem which I feel is limiting Canada's ability to compete in this highly industrialized and complex world.

I would ask the Minister of Finance to look seriously at the notice of motion currently on the order paper in order to determine if it could not be used as a further means of attacking a problem of national significance.

I commend the government for moving quickly on this loan legislation. I suggest a further step could be taken, perhaps in the next budget, by the adoption of my motion. I strongly urge that a conference be held with the provinces concerning university facilities. This latter problem must be given priority, even ahead of student scholarships, of which the opposition has been making much. I feel this problem of the facilities which we are able to provide for the greater student population is a much more urgent one and one which requires the full attention of all levels of government. I would ask the Minister of Finance strongly to urge the cabinet that this be placed as one of the top priority items for the next federal-provincial conference. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this whole problem of advanced education is becoming such an urgent one that our next step must be planned very carefully indeed, and in my own mind I feel that the problems of the facilities and the staff are much more urgent than anything else.

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, considering the requirements of modern science and the need for higher education which our young people must have today, the government takes this pretext for introducing legislation which, at first sight, may have a great appeal, which may be understandable, for the majority of hon. members, but which, in my humble opinion, is quite unacceptable to the province of Quebec. And I propose to give hon. members the legal grounds.

The end does not justify the means. When introducing this legislation, the government cannot, ostensibly due to the magnitude and complexity of the problem, make a constitutional issue out of it, when education is under exclusive provincial jurisdiction under the British North America Act.

Today, federal-provincial relations are reaching a dramatic turning point in Canada, in the fields of taxation and of responsibilities. A conference should be held to decide whether we must come back to the federal system, with the sharing of powers and responsibilities, or whether we should continue, by all possible means, to realize a unitarian system which will assume all responsibilities, absorb the majority of the taxation fields and act as a distributing clearing house, whereas the provinces will become vassals or branches of this unitarian system, the policies of which will be dictated by the central government under the guise of national importance, national scale or national standardization.

It is interesting to hear discussions about co-operative federalism. Since our hon. friends came to power, they have been trying to find a camouflage for their centralizing feelings which always characterized Liberal administrations under the King and St. Laurent governments.

Later on, in my remarks, I intend to deal with that problem, referring especially to the problem of the setting up of assistance or grants to universities and legislation which was brought forward in 1951, while Hon. Mr. Cass, said: If we push assistance to universities too far, there will be a subsequent necessity for the federal government to go into the field of elementary and secondary education.

There is no doubt whatsoever that co-operative federalism is used as a smoke screen by our Liberal friends. It is a new formula, as during the last war, when the new phrase had been coined—people spoke no more of conscription, but of mobilization. Today, we speak no more of centralization, but of co-operative federalism.

Canadian federalism is a system of association between independent governments, that is the governments which practise it are co-ordinated but not subordinated to each other. However, under such a system of association, these governments co-operate in the common duties, such as mentioned in article 95 of the constitution, with respect to immigration and agriculture. These governments must respect each other's exclusive rights.

Under such an association system, the same governments know they cannot do indirectly what the constitution forbids them to do directly. As a matter of fact, the privy council in London gave a decision on that point, as well as the supreme court.

The federal government is now trying indirectly to intrude in a matter directly under provincial jurisdiction, that is, education. Through the legislation now before us it is trying to do indirectly what it is prevented directly by the constitution.

Indeed, that principle of Canadian federalism has been recognized and approved many times by judgments of the privy council in London. I am sure the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), the Liberal leader for Quebec, who has held high administrative posts, had the opportunity to read those judgments, and especially the Great West Saddlery case (1921), the Edwards case (1930), the Aeronautics case (1932) and also the unemployment insurance case (1937).

May I call it half past ten?

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: May I ask the house leader about the business for the rest of the week?

Mr. Favreau: As the first item of business tomorrow we will carry on with the debate on the second reading and with the committee stage of the student loans bill, and then we will take the second reading and committee stage of the bill relating to the federal-provincial fiscal arrangements. After that we will deal with the third readings of these two bills and we will spend Friday on main estimates. First we will discuss the estimates of the Post Office Department, after which the estimates of the Department of Public Works will be dealt with, followed by the estimates of the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, at the outset of today's sitting, I put a question—I regret that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) is leaving—but I am sure that his parliamentary secretary (Mr. Pennell) will give me an answer.

I directed a very significant question to the Minister of Finance as follows:

> What measures does the minister intend to take in order to stop the rise in the cost of living, since Montreal has already recorded the highest rise?

The city of Montreal is among the ten metropolitan areas covered by the dominion bureau of statistics the one which has recorded the highest increase in the cost of living from May to June 1964.

In fact, the increase in Montreal was 0.9, the index rising from 134.3 to 135.2 while in Toronto it was only 0.7; however, it must be pointed out that in the latter, the index is the highest one in Canada, that is 137.1 compared with 136.4 last May.

Mr. Speaker, the main Canadian cities, especially the city of Montreal, have to face a serious problem on account of the cost of living index which is constantly rising, especially since this government has assumed office. It must be borne in mind that from an economic point of view an emergency situation prevails in Montreal. It has 55,000 unemployed and 25 per cent of its workers do not earn enough to provide an adequate standard of living for their families.

How can heads of families in cities such as Montreal overcome their difficulties if the cost of living keeps on rising? And the same situation is true in every Canadian city.

I would be very happy to know what the Minister of Finance intends to do to stabilize the cost of living and check further increases because there will come a time when the situation will become unbearable for the Canadian worker. I should like to know what the government intends to do to remedy such a catastrophic situation.

[Text]

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I can quite understand the hon. member raising this very important question of the rising cost of living index. I notice that he brought to our attention the fact that the largest increase had occurred in the city of Montreal. Of course I should point out to him that this situation fluctuates from city to city, so that while in the period of May and June the city of Montreal may have been the city that had the largest increase, it does not necessarily follow, of course, that the cost of living index will be constantly rising at a higher rate in the city of Montreal than elsewhere.

The movement of consumer prices in Canada over the past year has been moderate and in line with the experience of the past few years. Over the past year, prices have risen about 2 per cent, about the same rate of increase that was experienced during the previous three or four years. Not all kinds of prices have risen at this rate. Services, particularly medical costs and automobile insurance, have risen more—by some 2.4 per cent. Prices of durable goods, such as appliances, are actually lower now than they were a year ago.

It is worth noting that the rise in prices in Canada has been only fractionally higher than it was in the United States. It is well below the price rises which have been occurring in most European countries and Japan. I noted that the hon. member quoted the Financial Times, I believe, as a source of his information, and I am sure he will agree that it is only proper that I should reply in kind. Only last week—that is, on July 13—the Financial Times of Canada had this to say:

> Routine monthly reporting of changes in Canada's consumer price index repeatedly brings newspaper headlines of "new record highs". But it does not follow that the cost of living is skyrocketing every time the index moves up—
> The longer-range trend of consumer prices remains remarkably stable. The June index was 1.9 per cent above June, 1963, but the increase in ten months since August has been only 1 per cent.
> This is well in line with the average annual increase of 2 per cent experienced in recent years. It is also significant that industrial wages and salaries have been increasing at a steadily faster rate than consumer prices. The industrial wage index stood at 200.8 at May 1, (1949=100), compared with 198.5 a month earlier and 194.4 a year earlier.
> The total wage index has thus risen 100 per cent since 1949, for an average annual gain of 6.6 per cent while the consumer price index has increased only 35 per cent, or just over 2 per cent per year.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that the rise was largely due to seasonal factors mainly in the food index. I think this fell rather heavily, of course, on—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the parliamentary secretary, but I must advise him that his time has expired.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 10.38 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, July 15, 1964

The house met at 2 p.m.

AGRICULTURE

PROPOSED NATION-WIDE TOUR BY HOUSE COMMITTEE

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a few weeks ago I announced plans for a coast to coast tour by the house committee on agriculture. We have worked out a tentative itinerary which will take the committee into every province over a two week period. We had hoped to be able to organize this tour for early August, but I wish to inform the house now that this has not been possible, for several reasons. In the first place, we have been unable to charter a suitable aircraft during August for the two week period we estimate the tour will take. Another obstacle to having the tour during August is the problem of booking accommodation for such a large group at the height of the tourist season. We also thought committee members might find the weather rather unpleasantly hot for the kind of intensive itinerary, including long bus rides through the countryside, at this time of year. For all these reasons we have decided to postpone the tour for a few weeks.

A suitable aircraft is available for late September and early October, and we now expect to take the committee on this tour of the country at that time to see our farm problems as they really are, the better, we hope, to deal with them in parliament in the future.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

COST OF PENSIONS AT 65 AND 70

Question No. 824—Mr. Caouette:

1. According to government actuaries, how many persons in Canada will have reached 65 years of age by January 1, 1965?
2. How many will have reached 70 years of age?
3. What amount would the government have to pay, on that same date, in order to give everyone a pension of $100 a month (a) at age 65 (b) at age 70?
4. What amount would the government have to pay, starting on January 1, 1965, in order to give everyone a pension of $150 a month (a) at age 65 (b) at age 70?
5. By what percentage would income tax and corporation taxes have to be increased in order to cover these expenditures each year?
6. What amount of income tax would a person earning $5,000 a year, married and with two children have to pay in order to cover expenditures under parts 3 and 4 above?

[Translation]

Answer: 1, 2, 3 and 4. Based on a set of projections of the 1961 census population developed last year in connection with actuarial studies on the Canada pension plan, as described in the actuarial report dated August 30, 1963, and tabled in parliament on October 15, 1963, the chief actuary of the department of insurance has estimated that on January 1, 1965, there would be in Canada 1,469,000 persons aged 65 or over and 960,000 persons aged 70 or over. He has also estimated that, for the calendar year 1965, it would cost $1,822 million to pay $100 per month to persons aged 65 or over in that year, $1,190 million to pay $100 per month to persons aged 70 or over, $2,733 million to pay $150 per month to persons aged 65 or over and $1,785 million to pay $150 per month to persons aged 70 or over. These costs, based on the aforementioned set of population projections, were adjusted to take account of past and anticipated future experience under the old age security program.

5. In order to raise an amount of revenue equal to the amount by which the above estimated costs exceed the expenditures forecast for the present old age security pensions the budgetary revenue from income tax on individuals and corporations combined would have to be increased by approximately the following percentages:

For pensions of $100 per month payable at age 65, 27 per cent; for pensions of $100 per month payable at age 70, 9 per cent; for pensions of $150 per month payable at age 65, 53 per cent; for pensions of $150 per month payable at age 70, 26 per cent.

Increases of this magnitude in present rates of tax would in some cases be impractical. For example, if the present top rate of personal income tax, which is 80 per cent before provincial abatement, were increased by 27 per cent it would become 101.6 per cent. If the present corporation income tax rate of 47 per cent before provincial abatement were increased by 27 per cent it would become 59.7 per cent and if increased by 53 per cent it would become 71.9 per cent.

6. If the personal income tax payable by a married taxpayer with income of $5,000, who had two dependant children qualified for family allowance (which is $237.79 at current rates after deducting a provincial abatement at 21 per cent) were increased by the percentages shown above the additional amounts of tax payable would be as follows:

Increases of 27 per cent, $64; increase of 9 per cent, $21; increase of 53 per cent, $126; increase of 26 per cent, $62.

However, because it would be impractical to increase the tax of all individuals by 53 per cent or even by 27 per cent, the amount of tax paid by individuals with lower or medium incomes would have to be increased by more than the percentages shown above in order to produce the revenue proposed. As a result the taxpayer described in this question would have to pay larger amounts of additional tax than shown above. An increase of 27 per cent or even 9 per cent would have a very appreciable effect on the tax of all individuals.

CYCLICAL REVIEW OF CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

Question No. 1,105—Mr. Nugent:

1. When is it expected that the next cyclical review of civil service salaries in each of the groups will be completed (a) by the civil service commission (b) by the government?

2. In respect of each group, what will be the operative date of salary adjustment?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. The second cyclical review of civil service salaries is now under way and final decision in respect of each of the groups has, or will be, taken as follows:

Group "A", professional and related classes —review completed and salary revisions approved on March 20 and April 9, 1964.

Group "B", administration and clerical classes. Group "C", hospital classes. Group "D", postal, customs, immigration, maintenance and service classes.

In each case the commission's submission is expected to reach the treasury board not later than seven months after the effective date of the increase. In the case of the "B" group, the treasury board has approved the extension of the time limitation to July 15, 1964, for the civil service commission to submit its recommendations. Once the commission's recommendations have been received, decisions are taken by the treasury board as soon as possible, subject to the requirement to consult with staff associations. Past experience indicates that there is an interval of eight to nine months between the effective date of the increase and the date of announcement.

2. Group "A", July 1, 1963; Group "B", October 1, 1963; Group "C", January 1, 1964; Group "D", October 1, 1964.

SALARY ADJUSTMENTS FOR GROUP "A" CIVIL SERVANTS

Question No. 1,106—Mr. Nugent:

1. On what date did the civil service commission make its last recommendations for salary adjustments for civil servants in group "A"?

2. On what date did the government take action in respect thereto?

3. Did the government accept all recommendations of the civil service commission and, if not, in what particulars, in detail, did the government refuse to accept the recommendations of the civil service commission; and, in each case, what was the specific reason for such refusal?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. Civil service commission recommendations for classes in the "A" group were received on March 5, March 19, and April 6, 1964.

2. Revised rates were approved by the treasury board on March 20 and April 9, 1964.

3. The treasury board, acting on behalf of the governor in council, has the responsibility in accordance with section 11 of the Civil Service Act, to establish rates of pay after considering the recommendations which the civil service commission is required, by section 10 of the same act, to make. In discharging this responsibility, the board exercises its own judgment, based on the facts and considerations which in its opinion are relevant. This may, and in fact, does result at times in the establishment of rates for certain classes which differ from those recommended by the commission.

CRITERIA FOR CIVIL SERVICE SALARY ADJUSTMENTS

Question No. 1,107—Mr. Nugent:

1. Have the civil service commission and the treasury board established common criteria or formulae for the determination of the basis of recommendations for the adjustment of salaries of civil servants and, if so, what are such criteria or formulae?

2. If not, in what particulars do the criteria or formulae applied by the civil service commission and the treasury board differ and for what reasons?

3. What attitude has each of the staff associations communicated to the government as its official position (a) in respect of criteria or formulae adopted by the civil service commission but not approved by treasury board (b) in respect of criteria or formulae used by treasury board without prior recommendation from the civil service commission (c) in respect of such criteria or formulae as may be agreed upon between the two bodies?

Mr. McIlraith: 1 and 2. The general criteria established for the commission are set forth in section 10 of the Civil Service Act, and the recommendations submitted by the commission are based on the commission's best judgment as to how these criteria should be applied. No similar criteria are prescribed in the act for the treasury board, acting on behalf of the governor in council; however, in considering the recommendations made by the commission the board takes full account of the criteria set out in section 10 of the act, and also of the policy statements made by successive governments in recent years in which the principles governing wage policies for the public service have been enunciated.

3. The government is not in a position to speak on behalf of the staff associations as to their official positions with respect to the matters referred to in this question. The views of the staff associations on a wide variety of formulae and methods of statistical measurement are communicated to the government, not only through formal correspondence with respect to individual questions at issue, but also through the consultations which take place, pursuant to section 7 of the Civil Service Act, on each occasion when salary revisions for groups "A", "B", "C" and "D" are being considered.

ADOPTION OF CYCLICAL REVIEW OF CIVIL SERVICE SALARIES

Question No. 1,109—Mr. Nugent:

1. When was the system of cyclical review of civil service salaries adopted?

2. Do Her Majesty's present ministers support and uphold this system of salary review instituted by Her Majesty's former ministers?

Mr. McIlraith: 1. The system of cyclical pay reviews was announced in December, 1961. The first cycle started on July 1, 1961, the date of revision for group "A" classes.

2. The present government is following the system of cyclical pay review announced in December, 1961, pending the completion of development and enactment of collective bargaining in the public service as announced by the Prime Minister.

Questions

DANISH PROTESTS REGARDING BUTTER SALES TO U.K.

Question No. 1,123—Mr. Latulippe:

1. Have any officials of the department of external affairs of Denmark protested to the government regarding Canada's plan to sell surplus butter to England on the grounds that such a measure would disturb the market and, if so (a) what was the nature of the protests (b) what was the federal government's reply to such protests?

2. Has Denmark made any concrete proposal to the government of Canada to the effect that the latter should endeavour to sell their surplus on other than traditional markets rather than in western Europe and, if so, what proposals were made and what was the Canadian government's reply?

3. Is there any agreement at the present time between Canada and Denmark regarding markets for butter and, if so, what is the agreement?

* C.B.C. FILM "THE GOOD LIFE"

Question No. 1,296—Mr. Fisher:

1. What was the chronology, with an explanation for each step, in the C.B.C.'s dealings with the production by R. Kelly entitled "The Good Life" from its genesis to the decision not to present it to television audiences?

2. What was the cost of the production?

3. Where is the film held at the present time?

4. Is any consideration being given to releasing this film as a documentary for the use of film societies?

Mr. Stewart: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that it has not been customary to require crown corporations to disclose information which is basically related to the corporation's administration and management. The C.B.C. is engaged in a competitive business and has customarily been left free to conduct its day to day business without being obliged to make public details of its production operations.

* TELEVISION FILM "MR. PEARSON"—RIGHT TO MAKE CHANGES

Question No. 1,325—Mr. Fairweather:

Was an agreement made or an undertaking in writing given on March 31, 1964, between the C.B.C. and Mr. Richard Ballentine regarding the film "Mr. Pearson", whereby the Prime Minister was given the right to make certain changes in the said film?

Mr. Stewart: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that a memorandum of settlement was concluded on March 31, 1964, between the C.B.C. and Intervideo Productions Limited with respect to a television film "Mr. Pearson". This agreement recognized the understanding upon which the Prime Minister consented to participate in the making of the program, as set out by Mr. R. Ballentine's letter to the Prime Minister and later modified by Mr. R. Haggan's letter of January 28, 1964.

*SCREENINGS OF FILM "MR. PEARSON"

Question No. 1,326—Mr. Fairweather:

1. How many screenings of the film, "Mr. Pearson", were made (a) in Ottawa (b) in Toronto, before the decision was made by the C.B.C. not to have it used over the facilities of the C.B.C.?
2. How many of said screenings were attended by (a) the Prime Minister (b) the Minister of Trade and Commerce (c) the Minister of Finance (d) the Secretary of State for External Affairs (e) the Minister of Labour?
3. What members of the Prime Minister's official staff were present at each of said screenings?
4. How many officials of the C.B.C. were present at each of said screenings?
5. How many persons other than those above-named were present at each of said screenings?

Mr. Stewart: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the completed film "Mr. Pearson" was screened on May 5 by a group of senior C.B.C. officials in Toronto and Ottawa. It was following this screening that the decision was made by the C.B.C. not to broadcast it. None of the persons referred to in parts 2, 3 and 5 of the question was present at this screening.

The C.B.C. further advises that in addition to the foregoing there were several screenings over a period of months at the production level in the process of developing the completed film that could be used as a television presentation.

As to the attendance at these earlier screenings of persons referred to in parts 2, 3 and 5 of the question the corporation notes that the matter has already been dealt with in the comments of the Prime Minister of June 24 to the house.

MEALS ON C.N.R. "OCEAN LIMITED"

Question No. 1,333—Mr. MacQuarrie:

1. What meals on the "Ocean Limited" are available to Montreal to Moncton sleeping car passengers under the red, white and blue passenger fare plan?
2. Prior to June 14, for how many days were such passengers entitled to breakfast only?
3. What reduction was made in the price of tickets for such passengers?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows:

1. Sleeping car passengers travelling on the "Ocean Limited" from Montreal to Moncton are entitled to two meals, namely dinner and breakfast.

[Mr. Stewart.]

2. Prior to June 14, sleeping car passengers travelling on the "Ocean Limited" from Montreal to Moncton were entitled to two meals, namely breakfast and lunch.

3. Not applicable.

C.N.R. STATION, MONCTON, N.B.

Question No. 1,334—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What is the total floor space in the C.N.R. depot at Moncton, New Brunswick?
2. What is the total floor space of public waiting rooms in this station?
3. What is the seating capacity in such waiting rooms?
4. What was the floor space and the seating capacity of the former station building?
5. What is the floor space and the seating capacity of the lunch counter of the present station building?
6. What was the floor space and the seating capacity of the lunch counter of the former station building?
7. How many trains make stopovers at Moncton?
8. Has there been an increase in passenger travel on trains passing through or originating from Moncton since 1961, and, if so, what is the rate of increase since 1961?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1. 9,852 square feet.
2. 3,173 square feet.
3. 134 seats.
4. 3,283 square feet and 100 seats.
5. 338 square feet. There are no seats.
6. 472 square feet. There were no seats.
7. Ten passenger trains either originate or terminate at Moncton daily. Also, there are four through passenger trains each weekday, and three times weekly there are two additional originating and terminating passenger trains.
8. As a result of the red, white and blue fare plan, there has been an increase in the number of passengers travelling within the maritime provinces. However, the number of persons passing through or originating from Moncton since 1961 is not readily available.

SPARE BRIDGE TENDER, GRAND NARROWS, N.S.

Question No. 1,358—Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria):

1. Who has filled the position of spare bridge tender at the C.N.R. bridge, Grand Narrows, N.S.?
2. What are the qualifications for such a position and was veteran's preference taken into consideration?
3. If this position has not yet been filled, how and when will the appointment be made and will veterans preference be taken into consideration?

Mr. Pickersgill: The management of Canadian National Railways advise as follows:

1, 2 and 3. The position is vacant and the filling thereof will be pursuant to the provisions of the agreement with the brotherhood of maintenance of way employees.

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR INCREASED RESEARCH EXPENDITURES

Question No. 1,366—Mr. Orlikow:

1. Is the government giving consideration to the recommendations made by the universities to the national research council committee headed by Dr. J. W. T. Spinks to the effect that government support for research done in Canadian universities be increased from $11.1 million allocated for the year 1963-64 to $38.5 million for the year 1964-65 and to $54.84 million for the year 1968-69?

2. Is the government giving consideration to the recommendation of the study committee appointed by the N.R.C. to investigate the problem of government aid to university research which recommended that the grants given by N.R.C. to aid research in universities be increased from $9.2 million in 1963-64 to $19.6 million in 1964-65, $27.9 million in 1965-66 and to $52.9 million in 1968-69?

Mr. Drury: In so far as the Minister of Industry and national research council are concerned:

1. See answer to 2.

2. Yes. The estimates submitted by universities, referred to in part 1 of the question, will be considered in the context of the recommendations of the study committee of the national research council, which took account of these estimates in preparing its report.

* RADAR STATION, ST. SYLVESTRE, QUE.

Question No. 1,391—Mr. Pigeon:

1. In what year was the radar station at St. Sylvestre, in the constituency of Lotbinière built, and how much did it cost to build?

2. How many persons were employed at this radar station in 1960-61-62?

3. In these same years, what was the total of salaries paid?

4. When did the government decide to terminate the operation of this station?

[Translation]

Mr. Cardin: 1. The radar station at St. Sylvestre was built in 1951 and 1954 under the 1951 Pine Tree agreement. The United States paid all capital expenditures for construction and materials, except for military quarters and other facilities not covered by regulations concerning the United States aviation for that type of bases. Total capital expenditures amounted to approximately $13,200,000.

2 and 3.

	Average number of employees	Salaries
1960-61	378	$1,600,000
1961-62	382	1,700,000
1962-63	362	1,600,000

4. The government announced the closing of the station on March 9, 1964.

*C.B.C.—TIME ALLOTMENT TO FLAG ISSUE

Question No. 1,402—Mr. Coates:

1. How much time has been allotted to the flag issue by the C.B.C. on both radio and television since January 1, 1964?

2. How much of this time was made available to independent commentators on this subject?

3. How much of the time allotted to independent commentators was used in support of the red ensign and how much in support of a new flag design?

4. How much of this time was made available on the English radio and television network and on the French radio and television network?

Mr. Stewart: The Canadian Broadcasting Corporation has informed me as follows:

1 and 2. The C.B.C. has not allotted any specific amount of time to the flag issue. It has dealt with it in its news bulletins in accordance with its normal news policy of reporting developments as they occur and in accordance with normal standards of newsworthiness. The issue has also been dealt with extensively by a number of independent commentators with different viewpoints in such programs as Preview Commentary, Commentaires, Capital Report, Viewpoint, Tour des Capitales, Trans Canada Matinee, Aujourd'hui, etc. There have also been a number of special programs such as Newsmagazine, Inquiry, Camera '64, Actualités Politiques.

3. No specific time was allotted; but a wide variety of points of view was expressed by a number of different independent commentators; and C.B.C. news reported different viewpoints as they were expressed in parliament or in other forms of public statement.

4. See 1 and 2.

NEW C.B.C. FILM ON PRIME MINISTER

Question No. 1,407—Mr. Coates:

Is the C.B.C. presently planning to produce a new program featuring Prime Minister Pearson?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the answer is no.

Questions

DEFENCE PRODUCTION CONTRACTS, ENAMEL AND HEATING CO.

Question No. 1,411—Mr. Macquarrie:

1. What contracts does the enamel and heating plant at Charlottetown currently hold from the Department of Defence Production?

2. How many aircraft are to be sent to this plant for repair and refit during the balance of the year 1964?

3. What new work is the department planning to send to this important establishment?

4. When did the department first send aircraft to this plant?

5. How many aircraft have been repaired and/or refitted at Charlottetown since that date?

Mr. Drury: 1. None. The company holds one subcontract from Canadair Limited for the reconditioning of 12 Sabre (F86) aircraft.

2. None. All Sabre aircraft scheduled by D.N.D. for reconditioning are now in work at the Charlottetown plant.

3. At the present time the requirements of the Department of National Defence do not include any further repair and overhaul or CAIR work on the F86 program. This plant was set up to handle the repair and overhaul of the F86 aircraft and, since the F86 is being phased out of the R.C.A.F. inventory, the F86 repair and overhaul work will be completed in July of this year.

4. March 1961.

5. 34 Sabre aircraft; 6 of which are still in work; 4 Lancaster aircraft; 2 of which were not repaired or refitted but were reduced to spares.

ENROLMENTS IN ARMED SERVICES

Question No. 1,419—Mr. Coates:

How many recruits have been enrolled in the three armed services for the months of January to May inclusive, of this year?

Answer:

Jan.	Feb.	Mar.	Apr.	May
728	754	696	697	780

HARBOUR IMPROVEMENTS AND BRIDGE REPAIRS, PICTOU, N.S.

Question No. 1,423—Mr. MacEwan:

1. What were the names of the tenderers and the amounts of the various tenders for harbour improvements and repairs to pier "A" at Pictou, Nova Scotia?

2. To whom will the contract be awarded?

Mr. Deschatelets: 1. Colin R. MacDonald Ltd., Antigonish, N.S., $18,616; R. A. Douglas Ltd., New Glasgow, N.S., $22,542.40; Joseph Almon, New Glasgow, N.S., $23,096.50.

[Mr. Lamontagne.]

2. Colin R. MacDonald Ltd. has been awarded the contract.

STUDY OF INFLATION

Question No. 1,426—Mr. Wahn:

1. What has been the percentage rate of inflation in Canada for each year from 1946 to date?

2. Is the government making or having made any specific study as to whether there are any methods whereby inflation can be controlled or eliminated without increasing unemployment?

3. If no such study is being made, does the government propose to initiate such a study?

Mr. Pennell: 1. There is no agreed definition of inflation, amongst economic experts, and there is no single statistical series that could measure it. Different indices of price movements have moved differently at different times, depending upon price and economic developments at home and abroad. The various price indices are published by the bureau of statistics.

2 and 3. Various departments and agencies as part of their normal responsibilities study possible means of alleviating unemployment while maintaining reasonable stability of prices, and the government from time to time directs them to consider particular measures to be placed before parliament.

C.B.C. FILMS ON PARTY LEADERS

Question No. 1,428—Mr. Mather:

Is consideration being given by the C.B.C. to making a film recording of the national leaders of other than Liberal and Conservative parties?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that there are no present plans for such filmings.

*LABOUR CONGRESS NOMINATION FOR UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE COMMISSION

Question No. 1,433—Mr. Nugent:

1. Did the Canadian Labour Congress recently recommend for appointment to a vacancy on the unemployment insurance commission, Neil Reimer and, if so, on what date?

2. On what date did this vacancy occur?

3. Has the Canadian Labour Congress more recently put forward as its recommendation, Tom Ward, a C.L.C. employee or official and, if so, on what date?

Mr. Byrne: 1, 2 and 3. A communication was received from the Canadian Labour Congress on June 16, recommending the names of Mr. C. Reimer, Edmonton, Alberta and Mr. T. B. Ward, Ottawa, to fill a vacancy on the unemployment insurance commission, which occurred on April 30, 1964.

AERIAL MAGNETOMETER SURVEY

Question No. 1,441—Mr. Dinsdale:

1. Is an aerial magnetometer survey underway in Canada?
2. When was the program launched?
3. What provinces are participating?
4. How much of the survey has been carried out in each of these provinces?
5. What area will be covered in the (a) Yukon Territory (b) Northwest Territories?
6. What is the total cost of the project to the federal treasury?

Mr. Benidickson: 1. Yes.

2. It was started on a small scale in 1947 by the geological survey of Canada using one aircraft until 1962 when the mines departments of all the provinces were invited to participate on a 50-50 cost sharing basis, at which time the rate of surveying was increased by a factor of about 10, with all the work being contracted out to private companies.

3. Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario and Quebec. The provinces of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and part of Newfoundland had been surveyed by the geological survey prior to the cost sharing agreement with the participating provinces. Because of the rugged terrain, British Columbia is not generally amenable to the standard techniques applied in the rest of the country although some of the flatter portions of the province have been surveyed on a cost sharing arrangement with the B.C. department of mines and petroleum resources.

4. Out of an approximate total of one million square miles, the provincial and territorial breakdown is approximately as follows: Yukon Territory, 33,000 square miles; District of Mackenzie, 152,000 square miles; District of Keewatin, 30,000 square miles; District of Franklin, 30,000 square miles; British Columbia, 27,000 square miles; Alberta, 71,000 square miles; Saskatchewan, 90,000 square miles; Manitoba, 140,000 square miles; Ontario, 191,000 square miles; Quebec, 167,000 square miles; New Brunswick, 24,000 square miles; Nova Scotia, 21,068 (whole province) square miles; Prince Edward Island, 2,148 (whole province) square miles; Newfoundland, 19,000 square miles. Total 997,216 square miles.

5. Three year contracts are being planned for 1965, 1966 and 1967 in: (a) the Yukon, 38,000 square miles; (b) District of Mackenzie, 38,000 square miles; District of Keewatin, 27,000 square miles; District of Franklin, 35,000 square miles.

Questions

About 15,000 square miles of Hudson bay are being planned for 1965 to be flown by the geological survey. When the project is completed in 1974, all the Yukon and Northwest Territories which can be surveyed will have been surveyed.

6. The total cost of the project to the federal treasury has to date been approximately $4,437,000.

It is expected that the total cost to the federal treasury when the project is completed in 1974 will have been about $12 million.

SHIPS ORDERED BY NORTHERN TRANSPORTATION CO.

Question No. 1,446—Mr. Nugent:

1. Does Northern Transportation Company have under order now or under construction a ship designed to do the job for which their L.S.M. was purchased or for a similar type of operation?
2. Does Northern Transportation Company have an order now or under construction any ships, barges or tugs and, if so, for what purpose is each planned to be used, in what area will they be licensed to operate and when is it anticipated that they will be put into use?

Answer: 1. No; but invitations have gone out for tenders on a vessel designed to operate in Arctic waters, commencing during the 1965 navigation season; propulsion machinery and other equipment from the L.S.M. previously purchased will be incorporated in the new vessel.

2. Northern Transportation does not have on order, or under construction, nor does it contemplate the construction of any ships, barges or tugs other than as indicated in 1 above.

TENDERS FOR FENCE DISPOSAL, SUNNYVALE, N.S.

Question No. 1,461—Mr. MacEwan:

1. What were the names of the tenderers and the amounts of the various tenders on the tender call for Crown Assets Disposal Corporation on 1,000 feet of fence at Sunnyvale, near Liverpool, Nova Scotia?
2. What person or company was the successful tenderer?

Mr. Drury: 1. Cecil Breen, Westville, N.S., $1,810; Antigonish Columbus Club, Antigonish, $995; Clyde L. Baltzer Ltd., Annapolis Royal, N.S., $459; Silver's Garage Limited, Bridgewater, N.S., $410; B. Garson & Son, Yarmouth Ltd., Yarmouth, N.S., $401.25; Sackville Downs Ltd., Halifax, N.S., $300; Fred Nickerson, Villagedale, Shelburne Co. N.S., $300; Zion United Church Cemeteries, Liverpool, N.S., $300; J.V. Scobey, Liverpool, N.S., $275; Pentecostal Holiness Church, Halifax, N.S., $200; MacArthur Demolition, Lewisville, N.B., $110.

2. Cecil Breen, Westville, N.S.

PENITENTIARY SITE, NORTHUMBERLAND COUNTY, ONT.

Question No. 1,462—Mr. Webb:

With respect to the federal penitentiary to be constructed in Northumberland county, Ontario (a) has a site been purchased by the government and, if so, what are the particulars of the location, acreage and purchase price (b) who was the owner from whom the property was purchased by the government (c) if a site has not yet been purchased, are negotiations in progress with the owner of any site in which the government is interested and, if so, what is his name and what are the particulars requested in (a) above with respect to this site?

Mr. Deschatelets: (a) A site has been purchased for a federal penitentiary in Northumberland county, Ontario. It is located approximately four miles east of the village of Warkworth and is in the northeasterly part of the township only a few miles west of the westerly shore of Percy reach and approximately one mile east of No. 30 provincial highway. It fronts on the county road between concessions 9 and 10 and contains 197.79 acres including a 6.69 acre unopened road allowance. The property was purchased for $55,000.

(b) The property was purchased from Mr. Owen C. Clark on January 6, 1964.

(c) Not applicable.

VISIT TO CUBA BY UNIVERSITY STUDENTS

Question No. 1,468—Mrs. Jones:

1. Have passports been issued to a group of young Canadians to enable each of them to spend the summer in Cuba?

2. If so, how many (a) English speaking, and (b) French speaking, university students have been granted such passports?

3. Is the sponsor of the project the fair play for Cuba committee?

4. Has the government any knowledge of the purpose of such project and, if so, is it to enable the students chosen to see and evaluate at first hand the communist Cuban experiment?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): 1. Canada has no regulations prohibiting the travel of Canadians to Cuba or to any other country, and Canadian passports are valid for all countries. Canadian passport application forms do not require applicants to specify the country or countries to which they intend to travel.

[Mr. Drury.]

2. For the reason stated in the previous answer with regard to passport application forms, this information is not available in the passport records.

3. Yes.

4. The fair play for Cuba committee has indicated in certain public announcements that such is a purpose of the project.

C.B.C. SITE IN VANCOUVER

Question No. 1,471—Mr. Prittie:

Has the council of the city of Vancouver, with a view to attracting the C.B.C. to the downtown area, offered the C.B.C. a site free of charge as they have offered to a professional hockey organization of Toronto?

Mr. Lamontagne: I am informed by the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the answer is no.

*ST. SYLVESTRE RADAR STATION—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC SOCIAL WELFARE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,478—Mr. Choquette:

With reference to the radar station at St. Sylvestre, Lotbinière county (a) has the government had discussions with the minister and officers of the family and social welfare department of Quebec (b) what was the nature of the discussions and what conclusion, if any, was reached?

Mr. Drury: (a) Yes.

(b) The discussions have had to do with the announced closing of the station and the possibilities of using it as a provincial rehabilitation centre. The government is not aware of any final decision in this regard on the part of the government of the province of Quebec.

*ST. SYLVESTRE RADAR STATION—DISCUSSIONS WITH QUEBEC HEALTH DEPARTMENT

Question No. 1,479—Mr. Choquette:

With reference to the radar station at St. Sylvestre, Lotbinière county (a) has the government had discussions with the minister and officers of the department of health of Quebec (b) what was the nature of the discussions and what conclusion, if any, was reached?

Mr. Drury: (a) No.

(b) Not applicable.

*ST. SYLVESTRE RADAR STATION—USE BY INDUSTRY

Question No. 1,480—Mr. Choquette:

1. Has the government made any particular effort to get industrialists interested in the site of the radar station at St. Sylvestre, Lotbinière county?

2. Does the government see any possibility of establishing a profitable industry in the abovementioned location?

Mr. Drury: 1. The area development agency has carried out a study to determine whether there might be any alternative uses for the radar station at St. Sylvestre for industrial purposes. The study was undertaken in co-operation with the government of the province of Quebec and with municipal authorities. The government has not, as yet been successful in interesting industrialists in the site.

2. Any such possibility is not foreseen at present.

*RENTAL OF STONE CRUSHER, ST. LEONARD, QUE.

Question No. 1,496—Mr. Ricard:

Has the Minister of Defence Production signed a contract with Payette Construction Limited, of St. Leonard, Quebec, for the rental of a portable stone crusher and, if so (a) what is the amount of the contract (b) in what construction project will the machine be used?

Mr. Drury: Yes. As a result of competitive tender call, on June 3, 1964, contract MON4-1079/1 for the hiring of a portable stone crusher plant was awarded to Payette Construction Limited, 8435 Langelier, St. Leonard, P.Q. by the Montreal regional office, Department of Defence Production. (a) Payment is to be made on the basis of $0.78 per cubic yard of crushed gravel produced. The contract has a financial limitation of $10,000. (b) The gravel is required for road repairs at Bouchard military camp, Ste. Thérèse de Blainville, P.Q.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to rise on a question of privilege. One of the questions which the parliamentary secretary to the Secretary of State asked to stand was question No. 1,265, which has been on the order paper since June 10, a matter of 35 days. In view of the nature of the question it seems to me it is one to which an appropriate official could find an answer within a matter of hours. The question is:

Are there in effect any regulations or orders in council, published or unpublished, respecting wire-tapping of telephone or telegraph communications and, if so, what are the numbers and dates thereof?

I wonder if the answer to that question could not be brought down very soon?

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): I shall ascertain if it will be possible to answer the question shortly.

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege relating to the failure of the C.B.C. to provide an answer for starred question No. 1,296. I want to bring to the attention of my colleagues in the house at least two points because I think the refusal of the C.B.C. should be considered in this house, and I want the minister to look into it.

First I suggest that the information we have been given in connection with the Pearson film includes such things as the costs and the release of the production to film societies and so on. In other words, it seems to me that in the Pearson film the C.B.C. has already breached the very rules it has drawn up against giving out any information on the second question.

The second point is that in the public accounts committee the Auditor General has drawn to our attention in the reports for two year samples of C.B.C. programs that have not been run, and giving the costs; and from the president of the C.B.C. we have had an explanation in that committee as to what happened with these particular programs. It seems just flying in the face of whatever privileges we may have as members of parliament that if when we wait two or three years we can get this information through the Auditor General, and through the president of the C.B.C. appearing before that committee, but we cannot have the information as the result of a direct question placed on the order paper.

For that reason I would like to ask the minister who reports to this house for the C.B.C. to consult with the C.B.C. and ask them if they would not look at this whole question again; I do not mean this single question, but the whole privilege that I believe is involved.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): I will look into it, Mr. Speaker.

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

Mr. J. B. Stewart (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, motion No. 140 is accepted. I ask that motions Nos. 133, 134 and 135 stand. Will Your Honour please call motion No. 139?

FLAG LETTER FROM MRS. J. LEVERIDGE

Motion No. 140—Mr. Millar:

That an order of the house do issue for a copy of a letter from Mrs. J. Leveridge, R.R. No. 2, Brighton, Ontario to the Prime Minister regarding the three maple leaf flag and the copy of the reply thereto.

Motion agreed to.

Motions for Papers

OFFER OF FINANCIAL HELP TO CYPRUS

Motion No. 139—Mr. Laprise:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency praying that he will cause to be laid before this house a copy of all letters, telegrams, or other correspondence exchanged between the Secretary of State for External Affairs or any official of his department and the government of Cyprus or its representatives, concerning the offer of financial help made by the Canadian government during the years 1963 and 1964.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to be good enough to withdraw this motion, because there is no correspondence.

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, as can be seen on page 4839 of Hansard, answer has been given by the minister to the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) who had directed the following question to him:

Since it is rumoured that Canada will renew its participation to the United Nations force in Cyprus, which will entail a supplementary expenditure of about $2 million, would the minister consider suggesting to the United Nations that this huge amount be distributed so as to help the economic conditions of the Cypriots instead of imposing this force upon them, because I believe this would pave the way for an agreement between the two communities in Cyprus.

To this, the minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, before the United Nations force was set up, the Canadian government had made the same suggestion as advanced by the hon. member; unfortunately, it was a long range proposal and it was not considered acceptable in February.

How can the minister explain that proposals have been made without there being any correspondence with the Cypriot government?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions between the government of Canada and those of other countries and also the United Nations. The motion asks for the production of letters exchanged between us and the government of Cyprus, and there have not been any.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Do I understand the motion is now withdrawn?

Mr. Laprise: Yes.

Order discharged and motion withdrawn.

[Mr. Millar.]

REQUEST FOR SETTING UP OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): I direct my inquiry to the Secretary of State. It arises out of the annual report of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in which it is stated that a public inquiry is most advisable at this time concerning the affairs of the C.B.C. The suggestion is that it would make possible the orderly and efficient development of the national services if they were given on a charter basis.

The question often arises whether or not parliament is efficient and whether its members have sufficient to do. Does not this report indicate that the request on the part of the opposition for a parliamentary committee on the C.B.C. is justified, and would the minister not consider recommending the setting up of such a committee? With many members available for the purpose, and knowledgeable on the subject, and parliament being responsible for the financing of the corporation, does the hon. gentleman not think it is a parliamentary inquiry which should be initiated in this connection?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): The house will recall that at the end of May I announced the establishment of a committee to study broadcasting in Canada and to review the present legislation. I think the matters raised in this report produced by the C.B.C. should first be reviewed and carefully studied by this committee. Later, as I have already said here, when this committee reports and makes recommendations to the government we shall introduce legislation in this house, and at the time this legislation is considered there will be a parliamentary committee.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the minister's answer mean that he does not think members of parliament, with the wide knowledge they have, are able to give full consideration to these matters, particularly when parliament is asked to put up some $80 million in this connection? Why should parliament be evaded in this way?

Mr. Lamontagne: Parliament will certainly not be evaded. It will have full opportunity to consider any change in the legislation and any change in the structure of the C.B.C.

PROVISION OF CAPITAL FUND FOR EXTENSION OF SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. D. M. Fisher (Port Arthur): Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Secretary of State a question dealing with the C.B.C. report. I want to ask him whether he has brought before his colleagues for consideration the proposal of the C.B.C. that a $15 million capital fund would enable it at one stride to cover all those Canadians who at the present time do not have television and radio service.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, this problem as well as other related problems is now being studied by the advisory committee on broadcasting and we hope to be able, as I said, to bring forward legislation next year to cover this aspect of C.B.C. financing as well as others.

VANCOUVER—POSSIBLE USE OF FORMER R.C.A.F. BASE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would direct a question to the Minister of Industry and ask him whether he has been advised that the city council of Vancouver yesterday passed a resolution to the effect that the authorities in Ottawa be asked for a 60 day deferment of any decision on the Kitsilano R.C.A.F. site, and that in the meantime the council investigate the possibility of locating the C.B.C. on another adequate site. Has he received such a resolution which has been passed by the city of Vancouver council, and if so will that request receive favourable consideration?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, I have not received a copy of the resolution but I do have a wire which is addressed to me, as well as to a number of other members of the government, in substantially the same terms as those read out by the Leader of the Opposition. The request of the city of Vancouver, which is seeking to implement a suggestion made some time ago by the Postmaster General to the city council, will get favourable consideration.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does that mean favourable consideration, and not that an abrupt decision will be made later this week without regard to the wishes of the council of the city of Vancouver?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I said that the request for a reasonable deferment would get favourable consideration.

Inquiries of the Ministry

AIR TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON CRASH OF T.C.A. PLANE

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport; I wish to assure him it has nothing to do with the Jet Star. I wonder if he could tell me if the inquiry into the DC-8 crash at Ste. Thérèse has now been completed and when we can expect the findings to be made public.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): The hon. gentleman has asked a question about a very grave matter about which there is a great deal of concern. He was good enough to give me notice in ample time for me to prepare a reply. I do not usually read a reply, but in view of the gravity of the circumstances and their tragic nature I would not wish to use any words which had not been carefully considered. Perhaps the house would permit me to read the answer instead of speaking extemporaneously.

The transport department's investigation of the T.C.A. DC-8 crash at Ste. Thérèse, Quebec last November is expected to be completed by mid-September. The investigators have recovered 105,000 pounds or 76 per cent of the aircraft structure, all of which has been minutely examined by technical specialists. Significant items have also been studied and dissected in laboratories together with scrap sized pieces of metal which it would be impracticable to retrieve but from which samples have been taken. An estimated 90 per cent of the structure can now be accounted for.

The investigation, which I am told is the largest in Canadian aviation history, has been carried out by six working groups under the general direction of the chief of accident investigation division of the Department of Transport. Each group is headed by a government employee either of the Department of Transport, the national research council or the R.C.A.F., and consists of experts drawn from the government, T.C.A., United Aircraft Corporation, Canadair and the Canadian air line pilots association. The investigation team is concerned only with the determination of facts, and it is not their responsibility to allocate blame.

At the moment reports from the laboratories and specialists are being analysed. When this is completed the findings will come to me as Minister of Transport. I will have the responsibility to decide whether a board of inquiry is to be convened at which the findings of the investigators would be presented at a public hearing. If such a board is convened it will consist of persons who are not employed in the Department of Transport or T.C.A.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. I wonder whether the minister could give us an approximate figure of the expenses which have so far been incurred in this inquiry.

Mr. Pickersgill: Mr. Speaker, I should not like to give a figure off the top of my head but I am afraid it is pretty large.

HOUSING

SUGGESTED CHANGE IN LOAN POLICY TO AID FALL CONSTRUCTION

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Postmaster General. Is the minister aware of the fact that next fall's "national housing parade" will be seriously jeopardized if C.M.H.C. does not change its lending policy concerning builders?

[Text]

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for having given me notice of his question. The matter is under active study and I hope to be able to make a definite announcement before the end of next week.

REPORTED ADVERSE EFFECT OF CONSTRUCTION BONUS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Labour. In view of a memorandum on the winter house building incentive program sent to the minister by the Montreal construction association, which states among other things that "the program did not stimulate housing demand above normal levels on an annual basis", is the minister giving any consideration to discontinuing this program?

Hon. A. J. MacEachen (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, naturally I do not accept as fact the allegations made in the memorandum, because I think the experience is exactly the opposite. Not only did the program shift construction from the high seasonal period of activity in the summer to the winter months, but in our view it also had a total effect on housing demand. There is no intention of discontinuing the program, although I assured the officers of the Montreal builders association yesterday that every consideration would be given to their point of view with regard to the effect of the program on the building industry but that we intended to continue the program.

Mr. Hales: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How does the minister substantiate his answer in view of the d.b.s. labour statistics release today which states that "the increase in construction employment between May and June was below average for the time of year"?

Mr. MacEachen: I conceded that particular point because this was one of the objectives of the winter house building program. There has been some decrease in house building activity at this particular time of the year, which we expected when the program was initiated.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—PROTESTS BY QUEBEC STUDENT ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the government received a letter of protest from Quebec's university student associations concerning the legislation introduced to facilitate student loans?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have received no such letter myself, but I will find out.

[Text]

TRADE

U.S. CONSIDERATION OF COUNTERVAILING DUTIES ON AUTOMOBILES AND PARTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Industry and ask whether he has received any word yet as to a decision by the United States government on the Canada remission tariff plan. This matter has been studied by the United States treasury department and by the commissioner of customs in that country. Has the minister received any word yet on their decision in respect to this Canadian plan?

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, in respect to the inquiry being conducted by the commissioner of customs in the United States, the last date for submitting briefs for consideration by the commissioner is August 3. Consequently the commissioner will not be in a position before August 3 even to consider the brief which has been submitted. Therefore, manifestly one cannot expect a decision until some time after that date.

Mr. Starr: My supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, I realize is hypothetical; none the less I wish to press it, and it is this. If the United States government finds that this is what they term a bounty under their law, what would be the position of the Canadian government at that time?

Mr. Drury: Mr. Speaker, I do not think I should give a hypothetical answer to a hypothetical question.

IMMIGRATION

REVISION OF ACT AND ADMISSION PROCEDURES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration. Could he tell the house whether the government is considering revising the Immigration Act and the procedures of admission into the country, in order to implement, as far as Canada is concerned, the wishes expressed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in London regarding equality of races within the commonwealth?

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the present Immigration Act makes no discrimination against any race. The only criteria on which selection of immigrants is based are the degree of education and possession of a trade. I do not think there is any need to amend the Immigration Act to remove any discrimination.

As for amending some other provisions of the Immigration Act, I hope to put amendments before the house any day now.

Mr. Martineau: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell us whether the officials of his department have made any progress with the revision of procedures of admission into this country, as promised by the minister some months ago?

Mr. Tremblay: Yes, Mr. Speaker, every day we endeavour to improve our immigrant admission procedures.

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

DISCUSSIONS WITH B.C. PREMIER DURING OTTAWA VISIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address a question to the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources. Has he made arrangements to discuss the co-operative development of the Fraser river between the federal and provincial governments with Premier Bennett when he visits Ottawa in the near future in connection with the British Columbia bank?

Hon. Arthur Laing (Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources): Mr. Speaker, there has been no communication from the premier of British Columbia to me along this line.

Mr. T. S. Barnett (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, I have a related question for the Minister of Public Works. Has he been asked by the premier of British Columbia to discuss the question of the extension of the trans-Canada highway to the northern end of Vancouver island when the premier visits Ottawa?

Hon. J. P. Deschatelets (Minister of Public Works): I will have to inquire, Mr. Speaker. I cannot recall whether I have received any letters in this respect.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION

CONTRACT TO QUEBEC FIRM FOR DESTROYER CONVERSION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, I have a very short question for the minister of Defence Production and Industry. May I ask the minister, is it correct that a $3½ million conversion contract for the destroyer Skeena has been designated to the Davie Shipbuilding Company of Lauzon, Quebec?

Mr. Speaker: Order. This question, although very important, surely could be put on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): With all due respect to you, sir, I should like to raise a point of order in view of the fact that a few moments ago a rather facetious question was posed by a member of the Liberal party to the Minister of Justice. If Your Honour would bear with me I would like to point out why this question is of the utmost importance.

No. 1. Because of the high employment rate on the west coast as a result of the large wheat sales and grain handling involved.

No. 2. Quebec yards have already recently received several large shipbuilding contracts.

No. 3. Cut-backs in defence contracts have resulted in substantial lay-offs in many areas of my province.

No. 4. —

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think this demonstrates very clearly that the question should be put on the order paper.

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): I should like to debate this question at the first opportunity, Mr. Speaker.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CONFINEMENT OF JUVENILES IN FEDERAL PENITENTIARIES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Bow River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice. On June 18 last I raised this question with the Minister of Justice following a question I put on the order paper. In raising the question, it is no criticism of his department or of the minister. However, I would bring to his attention the fact that Mr. J. C. A. LaFerriere, director of inmate training, says we are now putting twice as many children in the penitentiaries each year as we did ten years ago. This is contained in the report of the committee of 1962 on juvenile delinquency. In view of this fact, is there any thought of amending the Criminal Code in reference to putting in jail children over the age of seven; and is there any movement or plan to segregate juveniles from mature people in our penitentiaries?

Mr. Speaker: This surely is a question for the order paper also.

Mr. Woolliams: Then, Mr. Speaker, with the greatest respect, I serve notice that I would like to debate this question at 10.30. It is an important question, and the minister said he would answer it.

[Mr. Speaker.]

NATIONAL DEFENCE

INQUIRY AS TO COURSES AT COLLÈGE MILITAIRE DE ST. JEAN

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Is it his intention to establish a complete four year course at the Collège Militaire Royal de St. Jean at an early date?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, this question is still under study.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. I am surprised at that delay, but since during the last election campaign the hon. member for St. Jean-Iberville-Napierville (Mr. Dupuis) made a formal promise in this connection, how does he explain such a delay?

[Text]

REQUIREMENTS RESPECTING BILINGUALISM IN CONSIDERING PROMOTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Associate Minister of National Defence. He said yesterday that he would study carefully in Hansard the question I put to him at that time. I wonder whether he can reply now.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Yesterday the hon. member for Yukon asked a series of questions based, as he said on press and radio reports with regard to an order issued by the Canadian army concerning bilingual requirements in the promotion of officers. I gave an answer to one of his questions, but told the hon. member that I would prefer to read his subsequent inquiries in Hansard before attempting to give a detailed reply.

The report appearing in various news media has caused some concern, and I should like at this time not only to reply to those questions left unanswered but also to elaborate on the answer I did give.

First of all, contrary to the impression one might obtain from reading press reports, the order in question is not new. It was in fact issued in December of last year, and related to the commitments of the Canadian army both overseas and for training army personnel in Canada requiring bilingual service officers and men.

In so far as promotion is concerned, the order states that bilingualism would be one of many factors to be considered in career advancement. In that regard I should like to clarify the statement which I am reported to have made in Hansard yesterday. What I thought I had said, and what I should have said, was that bilingualism would be a requirement in certain promotions. Officers and men will continue to be promoted without such a requirement depending upon the positions to be filled; but where a knowledge of both languages is required, then those who have qualified will have an additional credit. In other words it will obviously be a determining factor where positions demand a bilingual capability, but the extent to which this factor would enhance careers in the army generally will depend on many other factors besides the bilingual one.

Mr. Nielsen: I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. First, I wonder whether the minister would be kind enough to table a copy of the order to which he referred, perhaps tomorrow. Can he say whether the order to which he referred as being directed to the army also applies to the navy and the air force; and could the minister also inform the house whether that order or any similar order has any bearing in determining which of the 16,000 personnel are to be released over the next few months?

Mr. Cardin: The order in question affects merely the army. As hon. members can well imagine, there is a greater requirement for bilingual officers in the army than there is in either the navy or the air force. However, I personally would like to see this type of order in both the other two services.

As far as the other part of the question is concerned, the matter of tabling the order, I have no objection to having it tabled immediately.

Mr. Nielsen: There was the other part of the question. Can the minister inform the house whether this order or any similar order has any bearing in determining which of the 16,000 armed forces personnel have been and are to be released

Mr. Cardin: No, it has not, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a supplementary question to the Secretary of State, following a promise made by his party during the last electoral campaign.

Does the minister intend to amend the Civil Service Act to provide for a bonus for bilingual employees, as promised by his party during the last election campaign? Yes or no?

[Text]

Yes or no? It is easy.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as I said yesterday, the government has asked an inter-departmental committee to consider the different aspects of bilingualism within the civil service and, as yet, we have received no report.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. How come that in spite of the 60 days of action of the Liberal government during which all problems were to be settled, there is all this delay? Is it done on purpose by the government?

Mr. Lamontagne: I can assure my hon. friend that it will not take six years.

[Text]

Hon. J. A. MacLean (Queens): I have a supplementary question for the Associate Minister of National Defence, Mr. Speaker. I would like to ask the minister whether the order to which he refers has reference only to the two official languages of Canada, or is it of any benefit to a member of the armed forces to be bilingual with regard to one of Canada's official languages plus a foreign language?

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): How about Gaelic?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, I would hardly think it could be claimed that there are foreign languages in Canada, but the order refers to the two official languages.

Mr. MacLean (Queens): Mr. Speaker, the Department of National Defence gives courses in foreign languages. There are some appointments with regard to which knowledge of a foreign language is listed as a requirement, or at least of very great benefit in the case of such persons as military attaches.

Mr. Cardin: If anyone has knowledge of a language other than French or English I would expect that his second language could possibly be used in other areas of the world, and would also be considered a factor in promotion.

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Mr. Speaker, may I say to the minister that I hope Gaelic will be considered to be an asset in the services. May I ask him if the present Minister of National Defence is bilingual?

Mr. Cardin: Yes, he is.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

FLAG DEBATE—INCLUSION IN RECORD OF WRITTEN SPEECHES

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérald Laniel (Beauharnois-Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, as leader of the house. Can he inform the house if the government, or himself, as regards the flag debate, has considered the possibility of having amendments made to the standing orders of the house in order to allow the members who so desire, to file their speeches with the Clerk of the house, and that these speeches be taken as read, as it is done in Washington, thus avoiding lengthy debates and continuous repetitions that only delay the vote?

Mr. Pigeon: Move to the United States.

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, this question can be interesting, and it could be deferred to the special committee on procedure.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. Would the minister make representations to that committee in order that this suggestion might be considered and applied also to other debates in the house?

Mr. Pigeon: Go to the United States.

[Text]

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, did the minister give a serious answer? Does he intend such a ridiculous proposition to be considered in a parliamentary system carried on in the British tradition?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, what I said exactly was that this was not a question for the house leader or the Minister of Justice, but a question rather for consideration by the special committee on procedure. Whether the committee would report favourably or unfavourably is something which would be left to the total freedom of consideration and report of that committee.

[Translation]

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question. Does the leader of the house think we have the right to form an opinion in this house, regardless of what the Leader of the Opposition thinks about it?

[Text]

REQUEST FOR FRENCH TRANSLATION OF REPORTS ISSUED

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Clément Vincent (Nicolet-Yamaska): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Agriculture, relating to the bilingualism spirit which now prevails.

Last Friday the Minister of Agriculture tabled the eastern Canada farm survey for 1963. Could the minister tell us whether it is his intention to table the French version of this survey or, if there is no French version, whether he intends to have the report translated so that it can be made available to hon. members and organizations interested in the agricultural situation in eastern Canada?

[Text]

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we will be glad to consider this. I think it probably should be in both languages, because it certainly is of a great deal of interest to many people in Quebec. I realize this.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent: Mr. Speaker I should like to put a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce?

Still in that bilingualism spirit, could the minister tell us whether the French version of the Canada Year Book, the English version of which has been at the disposal of the public for some months already, will soon be ready?

[Text]

Hon. Mitchell Sharp (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I will make inquiries. We are proceeding with this as rapidly as possible. We have our difficulties because so much government work is now being published in both languages.

COMMONWEALTH RELATIONS

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT IN OTTAWA OF PERMANENT SECRETARIAT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. N. Thompson (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I hesitate to ask it lest I should disturb his comparative peace today. In his capacity as Acting Prime Minister, or as Secretary of State for External Affairs has he had any communication with the Prime Minister regarding the possibility of Ottawa becoming the headquarters for a commonwealth secretariat?

Hon. Paul Martin (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been discussed but there is no decision, of course, because the question is now in the exploratory stage.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Under the rules given to the Chair by the house we have half an hour for questions today. We started at 2.27 and it is now after 2.59, which is a few minutes over the 30 minutes allowed.

EDUCATION

MEASURE TO FACILITATE MAKING LOANS TO STUDENTS

The house resumed, from Tuesday, July 14, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for the second reading of Bill No. C-110, to facilitate the making of loans to students.

[Translation]

Mr. Rémi Paul (Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière): Mr. Speaker, during the short time I spoke last night, I pointed out that federal-provincial relations today have reached a climax, since they tend more and more towards the establishment of a unitarian system rather than a federal one. So much so that the bill now before us constitutes a federal government intrusion in a field which, under section 93 of the British North America Act, is assigned exclusively to the provinces.

I also reminded the house that several judgments of the privy council had established that provinces could not do indirectly what they were not allowed to do directly. One can find in Hansard certain cases related to the study of this matter of constitutional jurisdiction.

I pointed out also that the co-operative federalism advocated by our hon. friends opposite is a disguised, hypocritical, camouflaged and diplomatic method of centralization, such as we knew it under the governments of prime ministers King and St. Laurent.

I pointed out that the bill under consideration is an interference of the federal government in the field of education.

Allow me to refer to a speech made before the house in 1958 by Hon. Donald Fleming, the then minister of finance, at a time when the matter of grants to universities was discussed. As reported at page 4726 of Hansard, he stated:

> We recognize and we respect the provinces' absolute jurisdiction in the field of education. The increased grants proposed by the government are merely a necessary aid to universities, without government infringement upon a single provincial responsibility. As long as this government is in power, it will never encroach upon education, which is a provincial matter.

My argument is based on this statement of the former minister of finance.

It is also based on a very important statement made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin) in March last, in Toronto. Here is what the parliamentary secretary of the present Minister of Trade and Commerce said, according to the report of the newspaper La Presse of Thursday, March 19, 1964, which I quote:

> As soon as they were announced, the federal loans to students were condemned by the provincial government and the Quebec students themselves. That was to be expected, for which autonomist can interpret such distribution of funds for education purposes otherwise than as a flagrant interference in a provincial field?
> Up to this week, however, no Liberal member, as far as we know, had publicly objected to such action.
> It was Mr. Jean-Luc Pepin, Drummond-Arthabaska, assistant to the Minister of Trade and Commerce, who took action in this respect in Toronto on Monday night.

And I quote:

> "The provinces, he said, would discharge this responsibility more efficiently." Yet, Ottawa might, he thinks, facilitate the development of universities by resorting to loans from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and continue to distribute postgraduate fellowships through the Canada council and the national research council. But when it comes to loans and scholarships to students in general, that is a "real provocation".

I wonder whether the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska will repeat the same ideas and argue in the same way when we discuss this legislation. I understand that the hon. member may have had some serious reasons for being absent yesterday, but we find that today he is still absent.

The author of the article, Mr. Larochelle, says further:

> Mr. Pepin considers all this as many others do (the English language dailies, for instance, among which the Montreal Gazette of February 24, 1964), but to proclaim it and sound the alarm as a government member, that is quite another thing.

And Mr. Larochelle adds:

Well done, Mr. Pepin. You might give some of your courage to your colleagues on the treasury benches.

The door is now open to you members from Quebec, who, like myself, come from the most autonomist province.

I do not see many who have the courage to denounce that centralizing legislation which this government has introduced. Anyway, Mr. Speaker, nobody need be shocked if I attack a measure which I consider to be anticonstitutional, since the students themselves, through the students' association of Quebec, recently expressed their views most vigorously and, in spite of their needs, in spite of the aid which student loans would represent, had the courage to sacrifice this mess of potage offered to them, because it was an intrusion into the field which the province of Quebec considers most sacred, that is the educational field.

Indeed—and this is a strange coincidence —a well known columnist, Mr. Paul Sauriol, just wrote in Le Devoir, which is generally quite sympathetic to our friends opposite, an editorial published today about the problem of student loans and co-operative federalism.

It is unfortunate that the Quebec leader, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau), should be referred to in this article, because these are not necessarily his views, especially on this matter of federal intrusion into the field of civil rights, as I intend to point out to him shortly. Mr. Sauriol, referring to the recent break between the two Quebec Liberal organizations in the federal and provincial fields, quoted a statement made by the Minister of Justice at the convention held recently in Quebec city:

In a sound provincial system, both levels of government fully respect the jurisdiction and responsibilities of either one.

What a wonderful theory. What a poor showing.

That is a clear and unqualified text on the requirements of federalism. In the Canadian constitution, education comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces; however, Mr. Favreau, as a minister in the Pearson government, proposes and commends those federal loans to students, which are an invasion of provincial jurisdiction.

Today, prominent jurists of the province of Quebec who sit on the other side—I can see my hon. friend from Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Drouin) and the member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner)—will analyse very carefully, I hope, the point concerning the constitutionality of this bill.

I proceed with Mr. Sauriol's article:

That is a clear and unqualified text on the requirements of federalism. But, in the Canadian constitution, education comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces; however, Mr. Favreau, as minister in the Pearson government, proposes and commends those federal loans to students, which are an invasion of provincial jurisdiction. According to Mr. Favreau's own definition, it can be said that the confederation is sick.

—That is what is called respecting the rights of the provinces.

The journalist comments upon a statement made by the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne), and Mr. Sauriol continues:

That system remains unacceptable because the central government is taking the initiative in matters which fall exclusively under provincial jurisdiction, collecting and using taxes in that way for provincial purposes, imposing controls and the terms of its program even to the provinces which would like to be kept out of it.

I know that my friends opposite will refer to that provision of the bill, in section 12 and the following clauses, which concerns alternative payments, but I do not believe that some of my friends opposite will favour such an evident breach of the Canadian constitution. I have a right to wonder, as they should themselves, why there is in Quebec a nationalism crisis?

We do not have to look further than the disrespect of the British North America Act. If the federal government had respected the text and the spirit of the confederation, the province of Quebec would not be facing that surge of nationalism which becomes necessary, under certain circumstances, to hold in check the centralizing efforts of bureaucrats who exercised their evil and autocratic influence in 1951, under the St. Laurent and King administrations. Some of them are now sitting on cabinet benches and they have only one objective, push down the throat of the nation a unitary system, at the expense of federalism which is so necessary to the development of the rights, the prerogatives and the very existence of the province of Quebec.

Mr. Laniel: Ask Mr. Diefenbaker.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wishes to ask a question, I suggest he should rise and do so.

Mr. Laniel: Mr. Speaker, could the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière tell us whether he is giving his personal opinion, that of his party or that of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker)?

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I am giving my personal opinion, and for the information of the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry, I must say that as a member from the province of Quebec, it is my sacred responsibility to defend the education system which was the very source of our progress, of our development in the province of Quebec, and my hon. friend has no right to be a traitor to the confederative act.

The hon. member may very well preach in favour of compulsory military enrolment, but that will not bring salvation to the province of Quebec which intends to go on living and developing under our system of confederation, provided, as I said earlier, that the spirit as well as the letter of the confederation pact is adhered to.

Mr. Speaker, as I said a moment ago, Bill No. C-110 constitutes a glaring intrusion by the federal government into an exclusively provincial field. Moreover, it constitutes an encroachment upon the most elementary principle of Quebec's civil code. I again ask the great legal minds sitting on the government side to assist me in considering section 15 of the bill before us, which reads as follows:

A guaranteed student loan made by a bank to a borrower not of full age, and interest thereon other than interest payable under section 6, is recoverable by a bank from the borrower as though the borrower had been of full age at the time the loan was made.

Shame, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Oh, oh.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, I hear the hon. member for Longueuil say: Oh, oh. It would have been better for him to spend a few months at the university in order to acquire a few legal notions, for he would have known that civil law comes exclusively under the provinces, that the question of majority is a civil law matter into which the federal government has no right to intervene, as it is now doing.

I would suggest that the hon. member for Longueuil ask his colleagues, the hon. member for Argenteuil-Deux-Montagnes (Mr. Drouin), the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner), the Associate Minister of National Defence (Mr. Cardin) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) whether the question of majority comes under the civil code of the province of Quebec, especially sections 242 and following.

This piece of federal legislation clearly goes against the provisions of the civil code. I am not familiar with the civil law of the other provinces, but I am speaking here as a Quebec member. What will happen when a minor is taken to court under this bill? The only way to get out of the lawsuit will be to have it thrown out of court on a technicality as provided in the code of civil procedure of the province of Quebec.

At that time, what should be the decision of the court? What legal obligation will this legislation impose on the counsel? The latter will have first of all to plead the unconstitutionality of this legislation, since civil law is the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces. And I challenge anybody among the members opposite to contradict the fact that the question of majority is one of civil right exclusively reserved to the provinces, as clearly and specifically established by section 242 and the following sections in the civil code of the province of Quebec, and accordingly, in the rules of procedure that may be found in section 164 and following of the code of civil procedure of the province of Quebec?

Mr. Speaker, other questions are also at stake. Let us therefore read the other sections of this bill. Let us see what is said in paragraph (a) of section 13:

The governor in council may make regulations (a) prescribing the forms of agreements—

The federal government will now interfere in a civil action taken by a citizen of another province. Another intrusion of the federal government in the field of civil liability. The governor in council will interfere to amend the provisions of the civil code concerning the amendment of an agreement between a borrower, on one hand, and a bank, on the other.

You might state that, in that instance, there is a federal legal provision, since the federal Bank Act is involved. I admit this point, but, then, we are concerned with an action of mixed character, from a legal point of view, an action of joint jurisdiction. What steps will the minister take concerning the wording of the bill, which once again, infringes on the civil code of the province of Quebec?

Paragraph d) of clause 13 reads as follows:

The governor in council may make regulations providing for the assignment or transfer—

This is another measure of civil law which can be found in section 1155 and the following sections of the code of civil law of the province of Quebec, while the question of subrogation is a matter of civil law in which the federal government cannot interfere. It is another interference of the federal government in a field of exclusive provincial jurisdiction.

There are other measures which affect civil law, property rights. And now the federal government interferes in another provincial field, by virtue of provisions of paragraph (k), section 13, which reads as follows:

> The governor in council may make regulations prescribing the maximum number of academic years—

Here is another direct and baneful interference of the federal government, which is to decide on the number of years during which a citizen of a province—and I speak of the province of Quebec—will have to go to school or college in order to be granted a certificate or a diploma. This is the exclusive jurisdiction of the minister of education in the province of Quebec and the federal government has no right to interfere in that field. I would like to hear some adverse comments from the legal minds.

Another matter, Mr. Speaker. Paragraph (n) of section 13 provides that:

> The governor in council may make regulations prescribing the method of determining when the student is or ceases to be a full time student.

If this is not complete interference of the federal government in the field of education —and I am speaking of the province of Quebec—what is it?

This legislation is further proof of the fact that we have another centralizing government in office but that was a characteristic attitude of all the Liberal administrations we have had in Canada since the second world war and especially since 1939.

That is not all. Paragraph (p) of section 13 provides:

> The governor in council may make regulations prescribing any other matter or thing that under this act is to be prescribed or prescribed by the regulations.

That leaves the door wide open for the worst abuses and intrusions on the part of the federal government concerning the regulations adopted by the various provincial departments of education.

I see my hon. friend, the member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) shaking his head in denial. But let him stand up and ask a legal question. We are not going to turn this into a political problem, because unfortunately we have too often been slaves to a political party. That is why today we must set aside partisanship when the respect of the Canadian constitution is at stake, a constitution which allows for the development and overlapping of two cultures, two races, two languages willing to work for the greatness and prosperity of Canada as a whole.

Mr. Speaker, there are other means of helping students. The provinces have also imperious needs in view of their present development, which is really going at a dizzy speed in Quebec, and I am proud to point it out.

But will this measure solve the educational problem in the province of Quebec? With all respect, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it will not, and I say that the federal government should, while complying with the constitution, make more generous concessions to the provinces, under the form of unconditional equalization payments. Provincial authorities could then enact legislation concerning education and pass measures which would meet the true regional needs of the various categories of students in the province of Quebec.

According to our hon. friends, there would be an escape clause in this bill. I admit that the option formula could be of some use in the present circumstances. I appreciate the fact that clause 12 of the bill provides for alternative payments, but it is precisely to this principle that I, as many others, am opposed. There is, of course, this way out which makes it possible to vote in favour of this bill, because it provides for alternative payments to the provinces.

But time has come to put a stop to the federal intrusion in areas of exclusive provincial jurisdiction.

In 1958-59, under the Conservative administration, we solved a disputable question, the one concerning university grants. Yesterday, the Leader of the Opposition pointed out the outstanding work accomplished to that effect by the late premier of the province of Quebec, Mr. Paul Sauvé.

But we have not solved this problem; we have solved it only on a temporary basis, in spite of one concession which I would not call pernicious, but generous; indeed, as I said a while ago and as is specifically defined in the British North America Act, education is under the exclusive control of the provinces, the federal government's interference being justified only in cases where the minority rights would be at stake.

It is a pity that the federal government, of whatever political colour, did not act more often to enforce the rights of the minorities in provinces other than the province of Quebec, so that these minorities would get fair treatment similar to that given the English minority in the province of Quebec. The federal government's intervention would have been justified in such a case, and it might have prevented this nationalism crisis which affects the whole of Canada today. This would have been the only possible condition for the federal government intervening in the education field, and not the introduction of this legislation which is bringing up again the matter of the minorities' privileges and rights.

No, Mr. Speaker. Since the last war we have been witnessing a continual intrusion in the provincial fields on the part of the federal government. On a pretext of war urgency, provinces have been asked to yield their rights. They agreed to do so because those rights were to be returned to them as soon as the war would be over, but since then, the federal government has refused to reconvey those rights to the provinces.

That is why we are forced to consider all sorts of compromise, liable to sharpen the nationalistic requirements of those who have had enough of being dealt with unfairly by the federal government, whatever party is in office.

Mr. Speaker, the principle of responsibility-sharing is not admissible and unfortunately, I cannot support the argument that a department of education should be established in Ottawa at the present time. I am against this principle because education comes within the provincial jurisdiction. I am not any more in favour of setting up a committee on education. The present government has enough responsibilities as it is. It must solve the unemployment problem, that of the constant rise of the cost of living, the various economic problems, not to mention eastern agriculture.

Why should they now want to legislate in a field which does not concern them?

I would say to my Liberal friends, look after your own problems. You have plenty. And if you really want to promote education in Canada, be more generous to the provinces, so they can carry out the education programs they have laid out.

I respect and share the opinion of my English speaking colleagues who, in the circumstances, can easily vote for this bill, because the nine other provinces do not have the education system ours has. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, those nine other provinces have the same culture, the same language, the same religion, while the language, culture and history of the province of Quebec are different.

We speak of respect for the constitution. When the fathers of confederation accepted the constitution in 1867, it was because they saw in it an opportunity to survive. Prior to that, there had been a separate system, which had not given good results and had not settled the problem of the two great races then facing one another. The Union Act was followed by the British North America Act, which the people of Quebec generously supported because they thought—as they still do—that it was their last hope. Indeed, the British North America Act does contain legislative provisions for the respect of the rights of minorities, of whatever race they may be.

Personally, Mr. Speaker, I will vote against that bill. It does not matter if I am the only one of my party to do so. I respect the ideas of my Conservative colleagues and I understand that they may vote in favour of that legislation, on account of the provisions for substitution payments. But basically this legislation is an intrusion into the educational field, and as long as this government does not respect education and educational freedom in the province of Quebec, I will consider it my duty to object to any legislation which it will introduce.

Mr. Maurice Côté (Chicoutimi): Mr. Speaker, after having heard the firm speech of the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul) who is an eminent expert in constitutional law, I find it extremely difficult to speak in favour of the bill concerning student loans.

However, I will try to bring to the debate the contribution of the head of a family whose three children are attending university. I met him yesterday morning and asked him what he thought of the joint statement made by university student groups. He replied: "Those children are unaware of the problems of the head of a family who is racking his brains to pay the university studies of his children."

Then, of course, a father does not see the problem in the same light as an expert in constitutional law. The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul) is, however, fully justified when he insists on the rights of Quebec in that field, and I heartily approve him.

I also know, however, that certain pedagogues disagree somewhat on educational matters with experts in constitutional law.

For instance, I remember reading not so long ago a speech delivered by Mr. Trefflé Boulanger, of Montreal, one of the most prominent pedagogues of the province of Quebec, where he advocated the establishment of a federal department of education, precisely for the following reason: "Because, he said, there are over 1.5 million French Canadians in other provinces, and such a department would help them to preserve their language." This is one of the major problems in Canada and it might be one of the basic reasons put forward by those who advocate the secession of Quebec, because they see that their fellow citizens in the other provinces are losing what they are the most attached to, namely their language and often their faith.

But today, as a member of the federal parliament, I must also think, without forgetting my Quebec fellow citizens, about that million and a half of my compatriots whom I visited on some occasions in the various provinces of Canada, and whom I want to support and assist.

I know that this legislation will certainly help them to become Canadians on an equal footing with our English speaking compatriots. I feel that those compatriots have the right to go to the university and to improve their minds, and this legislation will certainly benefit them. That is why if, in theory, I have reasons to be against that kind of violation of the constitutional rights of Quebec, all the same in practice I am in favour of this legislation which will enable thousands of my compatriots in other provinces—and I mean French speaking and English speaking Canadians—to continue their studies at the university.

About that matter, in particular, I would like to read to the house a statement made by Hon. Mr. Lesage. According to the Quebec city newspaper L'Événement, he said to the Prime Minister of Canada and the provincial premiers:

> —the only way to solve the problem was for the federal government to give back to Quebec fiscal compensation which will equal the amounts spent to reimburse the interest on student loans made by banks and other institutions, taking into account the relative proportion of the Quebec population.

In my opinion, the letter and the spirit of the legislation seem to be consistent with that statement at the present time.

Now, I should like to deal with a point which was raised yesterday by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) and stressed by other speakers who preceded me, but I want nevertheless to refer thereto, because it is a statement that surprised me enormously, coming from a financial expert. I heard the Minister of Finance say that banks lend only the money of their depositors.

I think that he made a slip, because certainly he would not have made such a statement. In my opinion, he is a very responsible man who is quite familiar with the chartered banks act. At all events, may I quote from page 1088 of the Canada Year Book for 1962, which says:

> —the central bank can determine within broad limits the total amount of chartered banks assets and deposits—

This is the important point.

> —but leaves the allocation of bank credit and other forms of credit to the private sector of the economy.

What does that mean? It means that any allocation of credit in Canada is made through chartered banks. On the other hand, I might also quote, for instance, one of the great economists that several members of the house certainly know, namely Mr. Paul Samuelson who, in his book entitled "Economics", says on page 204:

> Credit establishments or commercial banks are the only organizations able to supply bank money or script money that can conveniently be used as payment instruments. Such is their main role and function.

And on 221, the same great economist, Mr. Samuelson, goes on to say:

> The bankers say: We can only invest the money that our clients leave with us. We create nothing. We only put to work the savings of the community.

Mr. Samuelson declares that the bankers who support this argument are completely in error.

I think that Mr. Samuelson uses the words "are completely in error" because he is very polite, for there are other words to say that.

Perhaps, I could quote a hundred other utterances to prove to the Minister of Finance that bank credit is really created by the chartered banks, and that they do not simply loan their clients' savings. I could also quote economists, bankers, professors, financial analysts from various countries of the world to support this argument.

Of course, it is unthinkable that such a statement should have been made by the minister, but, as I have said a while ago, it is surely a slip of the tongue.

I noticed that in his opening remarks the minister congratulated certain organizations which have already granted loans to students throughout Canada. Here I want to point out that he may not be aware of what we succeeded in doing in the province of Quebec.

I would like to mention before all hon. members the wonderful work done by the St. Jean Baptiste society of Quebec which created, almost 15 years ago, what is called the student loan of honour. Several million dollars have already been loaned to students by that organization in the last 15 years. It all started in Montreal and then spread throughout the province of Quebec. I, myself, was the founder and administrator of one of those student loan funds, and I am very glad to take this opportunity to commend the St. Jean Baptiste society of the province of Quebec for their wonderful work in that field, which permitted thousands of students to continue their university studies.

Neither should we forget the work done by the Artisans society which also created special loan funds for students, and those loans of honour are without interest. That is much better than what we proposed to do under this bill. Loans without any interest at all. Students repay only the amounts loaned on their honour and, up to now, results have been wonderful, since there have been practically no losses.

I should also like to take this opportunity to mention the work done by the l'Assomption society in Moncton, New Brunswick, which, through the modest contribution received, made it possible to educate, in Acadia, a whole elite perhaps which was able to take advantage of scholarships given to students in this area of our country.

Another thing I note here is that obviously, in this bill, the minister, just as in the case of several other bills, will once more take money out of the national treasury or the consolidated revenue fund. It is wonderful, I think, to have this inexhaustible source where we can always get capital. It seems that it is always there. However, the taxpayers should not forget that they are the ones who are constantly called upon to replenish the federal treasury, because it is fed through the most odious means possible, that is tax increases.

There are other solutions and we have advocated them in this house on many occasions. The Minister of Finance, who is an extremely intelligent man, is familiar with those proposals, because the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson)) has asked him questions which have remained unanswered until now. For instance, he pointed out that certain financing operations are carried out through the Bank of Canada at present. Since that seems quite certain, I wish to congratulate the minister for having taken the initiative of allowing the Bank of Canada to finance certain government expenditures or outlays.

I should like to quote also a prominent economist, Mr. Samuelson, who said that certain American economists are asking for what we, in this group have been advocating for 30 or 40 years, as can be seen on page 211 of his book entitled "Economics":

> A substantial group of American economists are advocating nowadays a radical reform of the banking system which would bring back a system of 100 per cent liquid cover on all deposits at call. That would be the only honest system in which banks would not be creating new money for their profitable purposes, usurping at the same time the royal prerogatives reserved to the government under the constitution. Finally, that would be the only neutral system, in that the banks would not create money during boom periods, thus adding fuel to the fire of inflation and would not reduce the offer of money during panic or depression periods, thus increasing deflation, bankruptcies and unemployment.

I know that since we gave so many explanations, several hon. members sitting on the government side are in favour of taking over of the royal prerogatives by the federal government, and that is becoming increasingly necessary and urgent. I think that before long the government will recover the royal prerogatives which should never have been conceded in any way to chartered banks.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few observations I had to make on this bill which I think will relieve many family heads who are faced with the nightmare that is for them the financing of their son's education.

Now, this new legislation will enable our children to achieve a higher education.

[Text]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my good friend the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté) opened his remarks by saying that he was going to speak from the practical knowledge of a good friend of his who was the father of three students within the age group that might benefit by this legislation, and he contrasted himself in this respect with the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul) because he said that this hon. member had spoken as an expert on constitutional law. I am torn between the two roles, Mr. Speaker. I have three children of the age of university students, who may be in serious need; I do not know. The regulations have not been published yet, so I am not sure how needy you have to be. I do not intend to speak on that point of view, however practical it may be, but rather as one who has had some experience of constitutional law and is much concerned by what I believe to be very grave defects that may destroy the effectiveness of this particular legislation.

I do not propose to repeat the qualified approval of this bill that was expressed by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) and by the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mr. Webster). I agree with what they said, and I adopt what the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway said, that the bill merits support on the theory that half a loaf is better than no bread. But as I have said, I fear that the effectiveness of this bill is seriously jeopardized by certain technical and constitutional defects. The matter has already been referred to in the house by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan). Since they referred to this matter I have had the opportunity to give consideration to the constitutional problem involved in the bill as it is at present drafted, and I would like to give a warning to the government and to this house that I think there is a very great doubt whether the bill as at present drafted may not totally fail because of technical and constitutional defects.

I am not dealing with the argument that has been presented, that because the bill deals with education, the provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act bring its subject matter within the exclusive jurisdiction of the provincial legislatures. On that matter I may say that I found the arguments of the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) quite convincing and I do not propose to add to them or to discuss the matter further. But the real difficulty lies in the fact that the key provisions of this bill delegate to the lieutenant governors in council of the various provinces, under clause 2(b) and (k), the duty to designate appropriate authorities to issue certificates of eligibility for loans under the act and also to designate institutions of learning that are qualified to give courses in respect of which loans are to be made available.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, the key questions of what students are qualified by need and by satisfactory scholastic standing and what institutions of learning fall within the purview of the legislation are to be determined, not by this legislation itself but by such persons as are authorized by the provincial cabinets, the lieutenant governors in council.

Let me make it abundantly clear that I am not objecting to the substance of this division of responsibility. What I question is the legal power of this parliament to delegate such power to the lieutenant governors in council in the absence of provincial legislation vesting that power in the lieutenant governors in council. I will spare the house a lecture on the constitutional and legal questions involved. I have been counsel in some of the leading cases on this subject and I have a nodding acquaintance with the technical problems involved. It will perhaps suffice, in order that this matter may be fully looked into, to say that the Supreme Court of Canada decided in the Nova Scotia interdelegation case in 1951—anyone interested can find it in the 1951 Supreme Court Reports—that interdelegation between the dominion parliament and the provincial legislatures was unconstitutional. I agree that this case is not the same as the present case, in that here we have, not an attempt to delegate from the parliament of Canada to the legislatures of the provinces, but an attempt to delegate from the parliament of Canada to the provincial executives. But I think the same principle is applicable to both cases.

It is a well recognized fact that parliament can delegate powers to a subordinate agency, but the lieutenant governor in council is in no sense a subordinate agency of this parliament. His duties are defined by the British North America Act itself. I see the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Pennell) making notes. He might be interested to know that the duties of the lieutenant governor in council are defined in section 65 of the British North America Act. It would, as I say, be possible to delegate to a subordinate agency, but by no argument can the lieutenant governor in council, under the powers granted to him by the British North America Act which are quite independent of the powers of parliament, be considered a subordinate agency.

Another thing that I recognize as possible is for the parliament of Canada to delegate authority to a provincial board or body upon which power has been conferred by provincial statute. Once again I refer my hon. friend, who I think is particularly interested, to the Prince Edward Island potato reference case found in 1952 Supreme Court Reports, where it was made clear that this parliament had the right to give to a marketing board set up and authorized to receive powers by provincial legislation the power to administer federal legislation. That power is all right, but so far as I know no provincial statute is in existence authorizing the lieutenant governors in council to receive or exercise the powers and duties imposed upon them by the legislation we are now considering.

I have no doubt that the governments of the provinces would be very happy to invite the legislatures of their respective provinces, if they are going to avail themselves of this scheme, to pass the necessary enabling legislation, but that hardly seems practicable at the present time. I have no doubt that the minister and the house are anxious that clear and full authority should be given so that this scheme can go into effect in the next scholastic year. I do not suppose that the legislatures of the provinces are going to be in session before that time. Therefore they will not be able to confer this power, and without it I repeat that there is very grave doubt whether this parliament can impose a duty upon the lieutenant governors in council which has not been imposed by the legislatures of the provinces themselves.

I suggest that a solution might be to amend the present provisions of the bill and confer the power to designate authorized institutions of learning on the governor in council, upon nomination or recommendation of the lieutenant governors in council. In that case the actual appointment would be made by an agency subordinate to this parliament. I do not speak disrespectfully of the governor general in council when I say that agency is subordinate to this parliament. That I think is well recognized. While the actual appointment would be made by them the real choice, the decision, would be made by the provincial authorities, and the rights of the provinces with regard to education would be preserved and recognized in this way.

I hope the government will give serious consideration to the suggestion I have made. Personally I do not believe that the unsupported statement that the Department of Justice thinks it is all right is good enough authority for this house. This is not the occasion for me to express my views about the Department of Justice. I will have occasion to do that, I hope, before too long and my views may not be too kindly. However that may be, I say that this house deserves something more than an unsupported statement by the Department of Justice, if it is to be brought forward as justifying this particular legislation.

I say to the house that it would be a tragedy —worse than a tragedy, criminal negligence— if by reason of some technical or constitutional defect students who are anticipating these loans were deprived of the loans. I am not saying that this technicality cannot be overcome. I believe it can be; but I do say if it is not, if doubt is left on this score and as a result some students do not receive loans, it will be a tragedy and an unnecessary deception and arousing of expectations of the young people we are all, I am sure, seeking to aid by this legislation.

The government may well be able to bring forward a convincing argument to offset the opinion I have expressed. I claim no more infallibility than the Department of Justice, or perhaps much less. But I should like to see their answer to my opinion and if it is a convincing one perhaps we can proceed and deal with this legislation as it is. On the other hand, if the government is not assured that the difficulties I have raised are without substance, then I suggest it has a duty to consider seriously the amendment I have suggested and either bring it forward itself, or we will bring forward an amendment and the government can adopt it.

I should like to point out that our objective in bringing up this matter is not to slow down or discredit the legislation. It is exactly the contrary. We have stated that we think there are shortcomings in the legislation, but we are most anxious that the proposals of aid should be as effective as they possibly can be. It is usual, I have no doubt, for the government to look upon suggestions of this sort from members of the opposition with scepticism and a degree of suspicion, but I want to assure them that while, as I say, they may find the answer to the problem, they should give rather serious consideration to it in order that the students of this country shall not be deceived by the defects for which this parliament and this government would be responsible.

Mr. Pennell: Would the hon. member permit a question? Is he prepared to wait until the debate has progressed further? In the meantime, we will give very serious consideration to the proposal he has put forward. There might be further constitutional points raised and I ask the member if he would be content if we were to reply later in the debate?

Mr. Brewin: I am quite satisfied to do that. The reason I made the suggestion, and the reason I intervened fairly early in the debate, was for the very purpose the parliamentary secretary suggests, that there may be consideration given to the point, so that it may be dealt with. I am quite satisfied that that be done, and to learn that we shall hear at some time from the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Grant Deachman (Vancouver Quadra): The University of British Columbia lies within my constituency of Vancouver Quadra. Last fall 13,600 students registered there for the winter session. This is in addition to any who may have registered during the year for night sessions or summer sessions. This figure represents approximately 10 per cent of the winter enrolments of all Canadian students in this single institution. It is second only to the University of Toronto in the enrolment of English speaking students in Canada. The report of the president, Dr. John B. MacDonald for 1962-63 shows that 9,000 of these students come from homes in the lower Fraser valley and Howe sound sections of the greater Vancouver area. A minimum of 4,600 students therefore come from the outside area and must find accommodation at or near the university. Of course some students from the perimeter of the greater metropolitan area prefer to live on or near the campus, so it is safe to say about 5,000 or more students at the University of British Columbia must find board and room either on the campus or in private homes nearby.

It is anticipated the enrolment in British Columbia beyond grade 12 will more than double during the period of the sixties and will be 37,000 by 1971-72. While Victoria University and the junior colleges of the province will take an increasing number of students, the trend is toward 10,000 students rooming and boarding in the University of British Columbia area in my constituency by the end of the decade. It is for these reasons I want to speak today in this debate.

For the most part, these students come from modest circumstances. Some indeed are poor. They must find every dollar of their university education. Some fall out for a year to earn enough money to continue their education, and some of these never make it back. Some are under great pressure at home to abandon their studies in order to contribute to the meagre earnings of their families. These stories are common on every large campus throughout Canada.

The calendar of the University of British Columbia for the 1963-64 session gives us the basic figures for fees, room and board. From these we can construct the cost of going to university. The University of British Columbia compares with the level of other major campuses throughout Canada. The university has accommodation on campus for 1,256 male and 750 female students, or approximately 2,000. By doubling up, I think this is increased to about 2,500 students. They occupy quarters ranging from ancient and leaky army huts to fine new brick dormitory buildings with adjacent common rooms and cafeterias. They pay from $472.50 to $630 a session, which is approximately eight months, for board and lodging at the university. Off campus prices for board and room in the neighbouring community are approximately the same, ranging from $65 to $80 per month. Student fees vary with the courses from $346 for arts and science students up to $551 for medical students. In addition, each student pays a $24 alma mater fee and other small club fees. Books and equipment vary with the course and sometimes can be purchased second hand. But a sum of $50 is about rock bottom for books, with applied science and medical students paying two or three times as much each year.

Now, add these all together and we have board and lodging from $472.50 to $630; fees, including the alma mater society from $370 to $575; and books from $50 to $150, with totals ranging from $892.50 to $1,355. Add to this a sum for clothing, medical insurance, sports equipment, transportation and miscellaneous expenses and you will see that the most frugal student in the cheapest course, eating porridge for breakfast and beans for dinner, could hardly get by on $1,200 a session, while $1,800 would cover no more than the essentials for a medical student. To a student earning his or her own way, this means that $1,200 to $1,800 hard cash must be found each year for a minimum of four years. A working student must, therefore, save money at the rate of $300 per month or better in the summer months, often while living away from home, in order to return to university in the fall. In fact, this is an almost impossible assignment. Most students have some assistance from their parents or from bursary, scholarship or loan fund. Were it not for these, they would not be at university.

In 1959, a scholarship plan was introduced in British Columbia by the provincial government. It undertook to pay half the fees of the students with first class honours and one third of the fees of the top 2,000 students with second class honours. The province also authorized the University of British Columbia to borrow up to $2 million for a student loan fund. Special student funds were also set up to encourage teacher training. The total of provincial assistance was $360,554, exclusive of the university loan fund. It gave assistance to 2,972 students.

On the basis of total student enrolment this represented assistance at the rate of $22.91 per student in British Columbia. On that basis in the same year Newfoundland aided total students at the rate of $109.90. Alberta was next with $107.89 and Quebec with $105.90. Ontario was a poor show at $69.76, but still three times better than British Columbia. We stood in eighth place in that year, 1959. In all the comparative statistics which the Canadian universities foundation presents on this subject, three provinces lead all others by a mile in their efforts to aid students. They are Quebec, Newfoundland and Alberta.

If I may sum up, the province of British Columbia has aided about one quarter of its university students in recent years through scholarships and bursaries, or what are sometimes called money for marks programs. The average assistance per student under these provincial grants is about $126. Spread over the eight months of the university year, this amounts to about 50 cents a day for the bright student who is able to qualify, and that is not enough money to buy a pizza.

While the provinces have been increasing the amount of assistance they have given to students in recent years, it is still small potatoes and few to the hill. British Columbia which I cite because it is my home province, is no better or worse than other provinces. Support for universities and university students is not the favourite cause of provincial politicians. In British Columbia if you stand still they'll pave you; move and they'll award you a construction contract; study and they'll raise your fees.

We should clearly understand that Canadian university students are appealing to us for federal help because their provincial governments are only moderately interested in their welfare. However well the provinces may have met the challenge of educating Canadians through primary and secondary schools, they are a flop by North American standards in providing university education.

As proof of what I say, the Canadian universities foundation has provided me with some significant figures. In the state of Washington expenditure on higher education is 1.43 per cent of all personal income. In British Columbia it is 0.20 per cent, or one fifth of 1 per cent. In New York state 1.26 per cent of personal income is spent on higher education while in Ontario the figure is 0.17 per cent, or one seventh as much. Maine spends 1.21 per cent of personal income while New Brunswick spends 0.11 per cent, or one eleventh as much.

In his book, "Higher Education in British Columbia", written in the fall of 1962, President MacDonald of U.B.C. refers to our failure to keep pace in the field of higher education in a different way:

> The number of students registered in British Columbia in 1961-62 was 14,710 or 17.7 per cent of the college age population, that is the age group 18-21. This figure compares with 12.3 per cent in Canada as a whole and 39.5 per cent in the United States.

While we in British Columbia may take a small comfort in beating the Canadian average, we as a nation can take no pride at all in the fact that Americans send proportionately three times as many students to colleges and universities. Let it continue and we must become the intellectual inferiors of Americans. We are heading for Lower Slobovia.

Dr. MacDonald goes on to say:

> Professional people account for only 6.2 per cent of the Canadian labour force; the proportion in the United States is three times as high, that is 18.6 per cent. In proportion to the size of its population, Canada employs approximately half the number of scientists and engineers employed by the United States...Throughout Canada only one half of the matriculants with 70 per cent or better go to university ...Of 100 pupils entering grade II, only nine ultimately enter university and only 6 graduate.

Dr. MacDonald then compares United States education achievement with Russia, and notes that by the end of the decade they will have twice as many engineers as the United States. If we fall behind the United States and Russia, do we fall behind any other countries? To find this out I obtained some tables of figures from the Canadian universities foundation, published by UNESCO, on education at the third level, that is institutions which require completion of a secondary school education for admittance.

These international statistics show Canada in tenth place in the late 1950's in the production of graduates from scientific and technical facilities. Here is a table showing the number of scientific and technical graduates for the top dozen countries:

U.S.S.R.	114,600
United States	96,509
India	70,842
Japan	27,412
West Germany	15,555
United Kingdom	10,879
Poland	10,006
Philippines	6,492
Czechoslovakia	5,774
Canada	5,609
Italy	5,202
Korea	4,602

Comparisons in this field are difficult to make and we may argue, perhaps with some validity, that our graduates are better educated, than, let us say, the 6,492 scientific graduates from the Philippines. Let us make another comparison. Norway, Sweden and Belgium are a group of countries comparable to Canada in size and culture and free of the enormous involvement in the nuclear and aerospace industries which distorts comparisons with the United States and Russia.

These little countries have approximately 20 million total population. They enrolled about 82,000 university students compared with 106,000 for Canada in 1960. They had 13,160 students in engineering compared with 15,190 in Canada, and they graduated 4,043 scientific students against 5,609 for Canada. Our standards, then, seem comparable to and perhaps even better than European standards in these respects. But these are qualitative comparisons. We need some qualitative ones if we are to assess our true position.

While we need a steady flow of bachelor graduates from our universities to staff the industrial and highly technical economy in which we live, we must also have a steady flow of master and doctoral graduates, men and women with two or three degrees to teach the oncoming students and to advance our knowledge and technology.

In the United States in 1961-62, there were 420,000 graduated with a first degree, 85,000 graduated with a second or master degree, and 12,000 graduated with a doctorate degree. My figures come from a report by the United States department of health, education and welfare. In Canada in the same year we graduated 23,000 with a first degree, 2,800 with a second degree and only 321 with a third degree, according to Canadian universities foundation figures. On this basis the United States graduates 18 times as many bachelor degrees, 30 times as many master degrees and 38 times as many doctor degrees. Put another way, the United States is producing senior scholars and scientists at a rate comparable to four times our own.

One measure of the effectiveness of a nation's scientists in fields of peaceful research is the number of Nobel prizes its scientists have won. I have taken the figures from Whitaker's Almanack for 1964 and they do not include the literature and peace awards, but only those for physics, chemistry, physiology and medicine. Since these awards began in 1901 the United States has won 50, Germany 42, The United Kingdom 42, France 16, Netherlands 11, Sweden 8, Russia 7, Austria 7, Switzerland 7, Denmark 5, Italy 4, Hungary 3, China 2, Belgium 2 and Canada 2, who were Dr. Banting and Dr. MacLeod. The latter was dean of medicine at Toronto, under whom Banting worked.

Although he was born and educated in Scotland and returned there, his award is credited to Canada. Ten other nations drew one each of the Nobel awards in science. Thus, were it not for the fortuitous presence in Canada of Dr. MacLeod we would be at the bottom of this most distinguished roster of scientific achievement.

Whatever advantage we may once have held over other nations in the field of education, we are losing it now. We are losing it quantitatively and qualitatively. We no longer produce the numbers of science graduates, doctors and research fellows to remain competitive for very long in the world of modern technology.

United States achievement in higher education has been paid for at the state level at rates far in excess of anything we are prepared to pay at provincial levels in Canada. This means we must inevitably concede intellectual superiority of the Americans if we choose not to pay for education.

Whatever we do here at the federal level to help students through university must be matched by equivalent effort at the provincial level to improve and enlarge their universities. In support of Dr. MacDonald's stirring campaign to awaken our province to the needs and goals of higher education, University of British Columbia students covered the whole province in their "Back Mac" campaign and petitioned the B.C. government with 232,000 signatures. Many people thought "Mac" went too far. He was overdoing his zeal for an educated people.

If I were to dig into the records of other provinces, I would find the same story: overcrowded universities, not enough regional colleges, shortages in faculty and staff, inadequate equipment for teaching and research, underdeveloped postgraduate schools, insufficient funds to support our most brilliant and productive scholars. This student loan program parallels a similar program in the United States called the national defence student loan program. While it is a very general program providing $1,000 a year for five years to any needy student, it has one unique feature. Ten per cent of the value of the loan and accrued interest are cancelled for each year of full time public school teaching service rendered by a student borrower, up to 50 per cent of the value of the loan. The reason of course is to encourage a continuing supply of teachers throughout the nation.

The American preoccupation with universal education of a high level has been a major characteristic of that people throughout their history and the prime factor in their success. Thomas Jefferson said: "By far the most important bill in our whole code is that for the diffusion of knowledge among the people", and he meant it. Benjamin Franklin setting out his rules for success, Lincoln in his log cabin studying by candlelight, Kennedy going down to Harvard to raid the faculty for brain-trusters—all these leaders believed fervently in the power of education to lift the welfare of the people and to increase the power of the nation, and the people in turn believed them and provided for the fullest education of their children. It has made them a great people.

I hope that in this bill we have at last caught a glimpse of that spirit. Samuel Johnson said: "Much can be done with a Scotchman if you get him young enough." I believe this is true of Canadians.

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): May I at the outset say that I am in wholehearted agreement with the purpose this bill is trying to achieve. As I said last Monday when speaking on the federal-provincial fiscal bill for which the Minister of Finance is also responsible, any measure which will contribute to placing the student population of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories on a par with their brothers to the south is welcome indeed.

I may say I am happy to see the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) in his place because I intend to raise one or two points which throw some doubt on the applicability of this bill to the student population in the north. In this connection I was much impressed by the arguments advanced by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), since his approach in a general sense can be equated with the criticisms I have to offer in a specific sense.

Before I deal specifically with the points I have to make, may I observe that on Monday I spoke at some length with respect to the consultation, or rather the lack of consultation between federal authorities and territorial authorities both in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories, particularly with regard to this type of program. The very next day the minister, when he introduced this measure, said as reported on page 5443 of Hansard:

> Accordingly it is our expectation that students seeking loans under the Canada plan will, in each province, file applications through familiar and established channels.

He said, too, that he had invited the help of the provinces, and later that he had ascertained that all the provinces with one exception had come to agreement with him with respect to the provisions of the bill. I wonder what consultation the minister had with education authorities in the Yukon or in the Northwest Territories. I wonder how many explanations were made to those authorities by the government, as they were undoubtedly made to the governments of each of the ten provinces. I wonder if it is the minister's intention to ascertain specifically the views which pertain in those two territories. I notice that the Yukon and the Northwest Territories are lumped together in the calculation which was made when the minister presented this bill. That calculation appears on page 5446 of yesterday's Hansard and shows the amount as being $.08 million. It would be of assistance in my opinion if the minister were to break down this figure so as to show exactly the figure arrived at with respect to each of the territories.

The situation with regard to legislation in the territories is similar to that which arises from the operation of sections 91 and 92 of the British North America Act. There are constitutional divisions of function between the federal parliament and the legislative assemblies, or councils, if you will, of the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. This division of powers is laid down in the Yukon Act, as I am sure the minister knows, and section 16(r) of that act gives to the legislative council of the territory—a wholly elected council—exclusive jurisdiction to legislate with respect to matters pertaining to education in the territory. If we examine the bill before the house it will be seen that its provisions refer to the provinces. Reference is made to the lieutenant governors in council of the individual provinces. Reference is made to specified additional expenditures in the provinces, and the bill refers also to provincial allocations, appropriate authorities in the provinces, and so on.

In my view there is a serious defect in this measure which may prevent its application to the two territories with which I am concerned, particularly to the Yukon. Since the Yukon legislative council has exclusive jurisdiction in matters pertaining to education and since the minister, in the quotation to which I referred in his speech yesterday, calculated an allocation of a portion of the $40 million which will be required for the first year's operation of this plan as far as the Yukon is concerned, it would seem that it is the government's intention that the student loan fund provisions should apply to students in the Yukon and the Northwest Territories as well as in the ten provinces of Canada. I presume that is the intention of the legislation. If the bill is examined in detail it will be seen that reference is made in clause 2(b) to the appropriate authority. It is stipulated that the appropriate authority for a province means—> —such person, body or authority as may be designated by the lieutenant governor in council of that province as the appropriate authority for that province for the purposes of this act.

I realize that the usual argument might be advanced here that a "province" is defined in the Interpretation Act, and therefore it is applicable to the territory. For the purpose of the record I think I might read that definition from the Interpretation Act. Section 35(24) of the Interpretation Act sets forth that—> —"province" includes the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory;

To my mind, however, there is a distinction between "legislature, legislative council or legislative assembly" as defined in section 35(13) of the Interpretation Act, and "executive council", which phrase is used in section 35(15) of the Interpretation Act. The bill places certain delegated authority in the hands of the lieutenant governor of a province. The Yukon has no lieutenant governor, so we go to the Interpretation Act and find that "lieutenant governor in council" is defined by subsection (15) of section 35 as—> —the lieutenant governor, or person administering the government of the province indicated by the act, for the time being acting by and with the advice of, or by and with the advice and consent of, or in conjunction with the executive council of such province.

I may be wrong when I come to the conclusion that "executive council" means, in effect, the cabinet of a province. The Yukon has no cabinet because it has not developed to that stage of responsible government. So that when we attempt to conclude that the phrase "lieutenant governor in council" as used in Bill No. C-110, the measure before us, is the same thing as saying "the person responsible in the Yukon Territory for the administration and government of the territory", to paraphrase, we find we are unable to do so because of the existence of the phrase "executive council" in section 35(15) of the Interpretation Act. Because it would mean that the minister of northern affairs or his delegate, the commissioner of the Yukon, will have to act by and with the advice of, or by and with the advice and consent of, or in conjunction with the executive council. In fact, the only legislative authority that is passed to the Yukon Territory by the Yukon Act is the power of the elected council exclusively to pass laws with respect to education by the well understood device of the commissioner acting by and with the advice and consent of the legislative council of the territory.

My point here is that by using the phrase "lieutenant governor in council" in this bill, the bill excludes the operation of its provisions with respect to the Yukon Territory. I think this is a serious defect. I think that if the bill is to apply to the Yukon—and particularly the Yukon, because I have studied the situation there, whereas I have not particularly studied that of the Northwest Territories—then it must be clearly spelled out. As I have said, we have no lieutenant governor in council in the Yukon, and I submit we cannot by any stretch of the imagination apply the provisions of the Interpretation Act to cure it.

Another serious defect in the bill results from the fact that there are no institutions of higher learning in the Yukon Territory or in the Northwest Territories. The maximum degree to which education can be taken in the Yukon is up to grade 13. Many of our students on leaving high school with senior matriculation attend the University of Alaska.

Yet I am in some doubt whether the provisions of the measure before us include the University of Alaska, in one of the states of the United States of America. For instance in clause 2(k) "specified educational institution" is defined as meaning—

—an institution of learning, whether within or outside a province—

If those words "outside a province" can extend to mean "outside of Canada", then my point may be groundless. But I have some fears that the intention of the bill does not go that far.

Again in clause 10 of the bill, where it speaks of "a certificate of eligibility", the bill sets forth that——the appropriate authority for a province may issue or cause to be issued a certificate of eligibility to a qualifying student for an academic year.

It is my submission that, based on the constitutional defects which I submit exist, it may well be that in this case we arrive at the anomalous situation where the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources (Mr. Laing) must issue or cause to be issued a certificate of eligibility under clause 10 of the bill. Since there is no lieutenant governor in council in the Yukon, and since the provisions of the Interpretation Act do not apply, in my submission, in this instance because of the use of that phrase we must fall back on the minister of the federal government who is responsible for administering the affairs of the Yukon Territory, and I am sure that is not what is intended by the provisions of the bill.

Even if you arrive at that conclusion, Mr. Speaker, it would seem that the minister is precluded from acting. Indeed, I would submit the bill would go so far as to preclude his delegate, the commissioner of the Yukon, from acting under the provisions of the bill by the very terms of section 16(r) of the Yukon Act, which resides the exclusive jurisdiction to legislate on matters pertaining to education in the commissioner in council of the Yukon Territory. So whichever way you turn and look at this problem, you come back to the fact that the wholly elected legislative body in the Yukon has exclusive jurisdiction; and yet the use of the phrase "lieutenant governor in council" in the bill before us would purport to expand jurisdiction which does not exist so far as the Yukon is concerned.

When the minister replies to the remarks which have been made I would be grateful if he would clarify the points which I raise here and would reassure me that he has received advice that there is no constitutional problem in so far as the applicability of the provisions of this bill are concerned with respect to the Yukon and Northwest Territories. I should like to say that the hon. member for the Northwest Territories (Mr. Rhéaume) would have been here to speak on the measure himself had he not been called away to visit personally the Pine Point mine. He has now embarked on this rather long journey.

I think a worth-while point to be made here is that the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) who immediately preceded me in the debate, mentioned that British Columbia, Quebec and I believe Newfoundland had the most advanced provisions in all of Canada with regard to assisting students through institutions of higher learning. However the minister of northern affairs knows, if the Minister of Finance does not, that in the Northwest Territories there have been in existence for some time provisions whereby a student upon leaving secondary school can obtain a loan of up to $1,500 throughout the term of his or her attendance at university; and, subject only to the provision that such student in receipt of such loan shall return to the Northwest Territories and reside there for four years, the loan becomes an outright grant. It seems that this perhaps would have been a desirable objective in legislation of this kind, although I can just imagine the enormous cost that it would result in. But this legislation in the Northwest Territories is very far reaching indeed because it provides for a workable plan which stimulates an interest in obtaining higher education among the students in the Northwest Territories, and in addition provides an incentive to qualified university graduates to return to the Northwest Territories and assist in creating there a highly educated and permanent population.

One speaks of the drain of brainpower to the United States. Would not some sort of incentive—this, after all, is a federal creation in so far as the Northwest Territories are concerned; certainly the great proportion of the money to support the scheme comes from the federal treasury—if provided in a bill such as this, help to prevent that drain of brainpower? The loan of $1,500 per year for any student in the Northwest Territories wishing to attend university becomes an outright grant if the student, after graduating, returns to the territories and lives there for at least four years. A similar plan has existed for many years in the armed forces.

With those constitutional arguments and with the request to the minister to reassure me that my fears in this respect are unfounded, I do not intend to pursue the matter further. I would request that he put the points I have made to him to the law officers of his department or to the law officers of the Department of Justice, so they may assess them and assure the educational authorities and the legislative assembly in the Yukon, and the people of the territories generally, that the bill before us applies in the same manner and to the same extent to the territories as it does to the other ten provinces of Canada.

Mr. Ron Basford (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, most speakers in this debate have mentioned that they have within their riding a university. I am not in a position to claim that honour, not having any university located in my riding; but I think I can with some accuracy describe my riding as something of a bedroom for the University of British Columbia, in that a great many of the students there do live in my riding, particularly those students who are married, with children, and are going back to school later in life. These people, who are living in my riding in converted basement suites and upstairs rooms, will probably get the greatest benefit from this bill of any class of university student.

Perhaps one of the greatest upheavals, or greatest developments in education in Canada occurred after the second world war with the enactment by a former Liberal government of the veterans charter. Under the veterans charter thousands and thousands of returned veterans who had been deprived of the chance to continue their education by the depression and the oncoming of war were given the opportunity of entering civilian life by going back to school and university. I am sure there are many members in this house today who took advantage of the provisions of the veterans charter. We all know doctors, lawyers, accountants and school teachers who became such because of the veterans charter.

Today we are dealing with a new generation, one which fortunately, I am sure we all believe, has not had to put on the uniform of our country and go to war in defence of Canada; but a generation which nevertheless, in the interests of themselves and in the interests of the nation, needs to have the fullest opportunity of acquiring the best possible education they can get. In Canada we we have long recognized the value of free public education, and in fact required by law that everyone who is capable must be educated to a certain level. It seems to me tragic and illogical that at the very age when continued education and training would be of the greatest benefit, not only to the individual but to the nation, we abandon the concept of free education. Surely it is self-evident to everyone that to leave untrained and unlearned a mind that is capable of training, capable of learning, is the greatest possible waste that we can imagine. And there is waste. Of the over one million people in Canada between 18 and 25 years of age, as the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) pointed out the other day, it is estimated by educational authorities that approximately one fifth are capable of going to university and acquiring or absorbing a university education. However, at the present time approximately only 11 per cent of that group are registered in Canadian universities. Therefore the talents of at least half of our most capable young people are not being fully utilized or developed.

The bill that we have before us today provides, as hon. members know, that in the first year $40 million in loans shall be made available to students in amounts of not more than $1,000. These loans shall be interest free until seven months following graduation, or when the student is no longer a full time student, and are to be repayable on a five to ten year basis. This was described by the right hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) the other day as falling far short of what we had said we would do in the last election campaign. This, to me, is only the first step in what we intend to do and want to do in the field of education. It might fall far short at the moment of what we said we would do. I do know however that it goes $40 million beyond what his party did for five years while they formed the government.

This bill is assured, surely, of easy passage through this house. This easy passage has been assisted by the work of the officers of the Canadian union of students who, I think, have become familiar figures around parliament hill during the last few months in talking up the case for university loans. I was happy to make the acquaintance of their former president, David Jenkins and their executive assistant Paul Williamson. All I can say is that the students of Canada are well served by the officers of the Canadian union of students. While I was a student I often mildly objected to the fees we had to pay to what was then the national federation of Canadian university students, which is now the Canadian union of students. As a member of parliament I now see the value of those fees that students pay to their national association.

Because of the easy passage that I think this bill will receive, I do not want to fill the record with a great many figures; but I would like to put one or two on the record, simply to show the need and value of this type of loan program. It has already been said in this debate that the average undergraduate costs per year in Canada run between $1,196 and $1,550, with an average of somewhere around $1,400 per year for a student to go to university. While we in Canada have the phenomenon, which is not common in many other countries, of students working during the summer, the dominion bureau of statistics latest survey shows that the average annual summer savings of students is $507. It is therefore quite obvious that a student has to make up this large gap in order to afford his university education either from a scholarship or loan program, and by assistance from parents or family.

It is obvious to me from these figures that if we are going to provide to all Canadians the opportunity of acquiring a university education, we need this program very badly. If we are going to have equality of opportunity, we cannot leave it any longer simply to students to rely for a substantial part of their income upon their families and parents. If we are going to leave it as it was, many people in Canada are going to be deprived of an education and the opportunity to realize their talents to the full.

The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) mentioned yesterday—it seems that his speech writer and I read the same material—a survey made by the University of Toronto advisory committee on ex-service students entitled "The Veteran at Varsity", which survey shows that of the normal student population 20 per cent came from the homes of industrial workers, but in the veterans group after the war this figure rose to 32 per cent. In other words the veterans charter program brought about a 12 per cent increase in the number of students from that group of the population whose sons and daughters normally do not attend university. The loan program we are enacting today will have the very same effect as the veterans charter program did in encouraging the sons and daughters of industrial workers to go to university and complete their education.

Loans to Students

People generally often think of the doctor's son and the lawyer's son going to university, but if we are going to realize the talents of Canadians fully, if we are going to have full equality of opportunity we have got to start thinking of the carpenter's son and the plumber's son going to university. I suggest that this program will make this possible, as was demonstrated by the University of Toronto survey with regard to the veterans charter program. That program was implemented by a grateful nation in recognition of the service of those young people who went to war for Canada. I hope that this loan program is simply the first step in the implementation of a civilians charter, as the act of a wise and prudent nation realizing that it is in our own best national interest to see that everyone who is capable of acquiring training and knowledge has the fullest opportunity of doing so.

There is one important aspect of the bill to which I should like to make specific reference. You will note that in the bill there are no residence requirements, except for the fact that the student must be a Canadian citizen or be resident in Canada for one year with the intention of residing in Canada after he ceases to be a full time student.

I am sure there are probably smallminded people who think that there should be some provincial residence requirement and that if, for example, someone is going to borrow money in British Columbia from the provincial allotment of some $3 million he should be a resident of British Columbia. I could not disagree more with this sentiment. I would suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) that in drawing the regulations pursuant to the act he specifically forbid the implementation by provincial authorities of any provincial residential requirement.

I suggest that university education must be looked at nationally and there is no room for narrow provincialism in this field. In this regard a former president of the University of British Columbia, Dr. Norman A. M. Mackenzie, had this to say, and I want to put this quotation on record because I think it is a valuable one:

> The work of the universities does not end at the provincial boundaries either in its scope or significance. In each of the larger universities in Canada there are students from all the provinces. In some cases the students from other parts of Canada constitute as much as one third of the total enrolment. Similarly, the graduates of the universities are distributed over the entire country. Anywhere from one fifth to more than one half of the graduates of particular institutions live and work in provinces other than the one in which they received their education. University graduates are one of the most mobile elements in the working population and comprise a source of skilled and educated personnel which is available to the nation as a whole. It is well known that the university trained personnel which are needed by governments and by national businesses of all kinds are recruited from every part of the country.

Therefore I repeat to the Minister of Finance that in the regulations under this legislation the provinces must be forbidden from setting up any provincial residence requirement. If we are going to utilize our facilities in Canada, students, as former president Mackenzie said, must be free to move about the country and acquire the best possible education. It is silly to think that in Canada we can build in each province first class institutions of higher learning in every conceivable subject and technique. Students from British Columbia, for example, must be free to go to Montreal for advanced medical training. I would hope there would be students from other parts of Canada who would want to come to British Columbia to study certain specialized fields there.

One of the first acts of the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) was to assure the construction of a veterinary college in western Canada to serve the four western provinces. Students from Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia must be free to move about and able to apply for loans in order to go to that veterinary college.

I listened with great interest yesterday to the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam and some of the objections he raised to the bill. I realize that the leader of the New Democratic party is always in a difficult position when the government brings in good legislation. He wants to agree with it but he always has to find something wrong with it. He raised yesterday what I suggest is a red herring in saying that under the provisions of this legislation students would have to go to the banks in order to obtain a loan. This is simply an example of the leader of the New Democratic party desperately searching in an effort to find something wrong with the bill.

As the Minister of Finance pointed out at the time, he felt that the banks would want to establish commercial contact with students and would be anxious to comply with and participate under the provisions of the loan legislation. The hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam scoffed at this suggestion, but I suggest that the point made by the Minister of Finance was well taken. Surely the interest of the banks in establishing commercial relations with students is demonstrated by the fact that they try very hard to open branches on the university campuses across Canada. I know that at the university I attended they rented space on the campus direct from the university, and they were forever soliciting us to open accounts there in order to establish commercial contact with us.

Surely the interest of the banks is demonstrated by the fact that they advertise very widely in university newspapers and other publications by means of advertisements written in language to appeal to university students so they can get them as customers.

It seems to me there is another point the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam missed in dragging this red herring into the debate on the bill. In the budget speech on March 16 the Minister of Finance made it very clear that the provisions of the proposed student loan legislation would be such as to establish a system under which students would get loans from the banks which would be guaranteed by the government. I should like to repeat what the minister said at that time, as found on page 982 of Hansard:

I believe these loans to university students can be provided most conveniently and efficiently through the chartered banks with their widespread facilities all across the country. We want to enlist the co-operation not only of the banks but through them of the university authorities in order to ensure that all loans are made to full time students capable of proceeding to a degree and in need of financial assistance to carry on their studies. The government is prepared to guarantee these student loans; there are good precedents for such an approach in our other legislation. No interest would be payable by the student during his years of study.

I am sure that the Canadian union of university students, the organization that looks after the interests of Canada's university students, read the budget speech on March 16, are aware of that paragraph and have had notice of the fact for some months that this was the intention of the legislation.

They have not made a complaint. In fact, as all hon. members know, only a few weeks ago a few of us organized a meeting in the building here at which students could present their views to us. They made no objection to the fact that this legislation used the chartered banks as lending institutions. If they have no objection, I think that the objections of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) are really unfounded and, as I suggest, simply a red herring used by a man who wants to find some objection to what is good legislation.

I listened yesterday also with great interest to the arguments put forward by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) that this bill is unconstitutional. I simply want to say that I am unimpressed by these arguments. The people of my province want to see provided for their children the best possible educational opportunities, and to do this they are going to need help from the government of Canada and from the parliament of Canada. I personally, and I speak as an individual, am looking to this parliament to provide British Columbians and Canadians generally with the fullest opportunity for graduate and postgraduate schooling.

In order to do this, we must have a strong central government. I am becoming alarmed at the constant attempts we see here to whittle away the power of the central parliament. We are strong Canadians in British Columbia and being Canadians to us means being able to look to Ottawa, to a strong central government, to help us with our problems of education, of welfare and of development. We are not interested in a central government that can only raise taxes and run the post office or contribute to the United Nations. I do not want to see a central government that is solely the tax collector for ten provincial premiers, as seemed to be the suggestion of the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam yesterday, when he suggested that this legislation was wrong, that we should have ten provincial scholarship committees. I realize the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam has had years of service as a provincial premier and cannot forget this when he gets into the national parliament. If the forces within Canada are such as to succeed in leaving the central government weak and emasculated, then I suggest that an ever increasing number of people in my province are going to begin questioning their relationship with that weak central government.

The adequate provision of undergraduate and postgraduate opportunities in Canada is of national concern, requiring direct national action. The parliament of Canada must have the ability and the willingness to deal with education as a national affair. This bill is a good beginning. But if we are going to develop as a strong nation, we must provide everyone capable of acquiring an education with a maximum amount of facilities and opportunities. In order to provide proper educational opportunities for Canadians, the government of Canada and this parliament are going to have to involve themselves directly in the years ahead in providing facilities for that education.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I have examined the bill now before us with great care and I question its constitutionality. In my opinion, it is unacceptable, unless major amendments are brought to it.

There are so many ways in which the federal government could help education without having to intrude either directly or indirectly in a matter under provincial jurisdiction.

I feel that the bill, in its present form, is but a sly and underhanded way for the federal government to intrude in the field of education, even if it does provide an option formula for the province of Quebec. As a matter of fact, experience shows that when the federal government enters a field under provincial jurisdiction, things are finished and done with, because it never withdraws.

Instead, I would suggest to the federal government that it should mind its own business and look after it, and that it should try to solve the economic problems now facing the country, especially the low level of income of farmers in eastern Canada and British Columbia and the unemployment we now have.

Mr. Speaker, show me one word, one sentence in the British North America Act which allows Ottawa to intrude into the field of education, either directly or indirectly. Section 93 is abundantly clear, as the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul) explained perfectly.

Moreover, section 11 in Bill No. C-110 constitutes, in my opinion, a direct intrusion into the field of education, which is exclusively assigned to the provinces. In other words, the federal government is giving instructions to the provinces. In fact, here is what is stipulated in section 11 (1):

> The appropriate authority for a province shall not issue or cause to be issued any certificate of eligibility in a loan year—

Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether this is not an order given to the provinces, whether it is not a direct intrusion into education, a field under provincial jurisdiction? In other words, the federal government is imposing conditions to the provinces.

Loans to Students

Mr. Gérard Filion, of the daily newspaper Le Devoir, wrote on April 18, 1962:

A good point in favour of the Conservative party is its tax sharing policy. The provinces are rightly unsatisfied, but nevertheless, they have gained some ground during the past five years.

And Mr. Filion went on:

Under the logic of events and on the strength of precedents, the Liberal party is slowly but deliberately driving its wedge. A Liberal government in Ottawa would surely increase the intrusion of the central government in the educational field.

Mr. Speaker, the present Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson), the Secretary of State (Mr. Lamontagne) and the Minister of Justice (Mr. Favreau) want by all possible means to take under their control education, which is a provincial responsibility.

According to the Joliette Journal of March 13, 1963, the present Prime Minister stated in Manitoba:

It is necessary to increase assistance to all programs of higher education.

And the newspaper Le Devoir of February 10, 1964 published the following report from Sudbury:

Miss Pauline Jewett, Liberal member for Northumberland, suggested before some 350 teachers of the Ontario federation of high schools, the establishment of a federal department of education.

I would refer hon. members to page 5154 of Hansard, where, with regard to point of privilege I had just raised in the house the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto) is shown to have stated:

It is just on that point I would like to disagree. It is a curious thing that in this country with 19 million population we do not have in our federal government a minister of education or a department of education. We have one Minister of Agriculture, with another coming up, but no minister of education. It is not only curious but tragic.

If a man does not get a sound education, let us say in one of the maritime provinces, and becomes unemployable, who is going to be responsible for the maintenance of him and his family?

And the hon. member for York East, who is sitting on the government side, added:

I support this bill very strongly but it seems a devious way, an indirect way to accomplish what we know should be done, and that is for the federal government to be concerned with educational matters. I strongly suggest that all of us, and the government in particular, pay great attention in the contemplated amendments to the British North America Act to work out a scheme by which education will be a national concern and become the business of this government.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

At this point, the hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) said:

Mr. Speaker, I am sure the house listened with attention and interest to the remarks of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto). I am led to believe that he frequently is placed in a position of flying kites for the government, and I am waiting for further support on the other side of the house for this proposition that denies every principle of confederation, that an amendment be made to the British North America Act to provide for the control of education by the federal parliament.

I wonder what is the opinion of the other government members, especially those of the province of Quebec, following the statement made by the hon. member for York East. What is the opinion of the Minister of Justice concerning the eventuality of a federal department of education, as advocated by the hon. member for Northumberland (Miss Jewett), as well as the hon. member for York East?

We would be very happy to know about it. This bill, unless it is amended so as to make it conformable to provincial jurisdiction in educational matters, seems to me a first step by the government to establish a department of education with a view to taking over provincial responsibilities.

Hon. Donald Fleming, who was minister of finance said on September 6, 1958, as shown on page 4726 of Hansard:

—that this government will always scrupulously respect the terms of the Canadian constitution. It is plainly recognized that education is a field of jurisdiction exclusively assigned to the provinces...

And he went on to say:

As long as this government is in office there will never be any attempt made to trespass on that jurisdiction exclusively vested in the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, some opposition to this bill has been voiced. University students of the province of Quebec, student associations of the province of Quebec have made known their formal rejection of the federal offer of an interest free loan fund for needy students. Those are Quebec universities.

During an interview, Mr. Dave Jenkins, president of the Canadian union of students, stated that the federal government owes $10 million to students in view of its electoral promise, but that this amount could be reimbursed under the form of fiscal deductions allowed to students, students' parents and industries which grant scholarships. According to the president, direct loans to students from the central government are perhaps unconstitutional, because education falls under provincial jurisdiction.

Without infringing upon the provincial jurisdiction in the field of education, the federal government could assist the students by increasing, for instance, the number of positions available within the various departments in Ottawa, so that the students who have summer holidays may earn some money to pay a part of their studies. Those positions could also be distributed in proportion to the number of French speaking students from Quebec, so that they may have their fair share, just like English speaking students.

I am in a position to note the attitude of the Quebec government. We hear no protest from it, and yet, according to Le Devoir of February 20, 1964, at the time, Messrs. Lesage and Gérin-Lajoie were against a federal assistance program for students, because it was an infringement of the provincial field. Why this silence now?

Even on the government side, there is no unanimity; there are conflicting opinions. Is there any need to recall the statement made by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska (Mr. Pepin), parliamentary secretary to the Minister of Trade and Commerce:

> The provinces would be in a better position to carry out this task. However, Ottawa could promote the extension of universities by means of C.M.H.C. loans.

The hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska was speaking according to his conscience and I must commend him for it. I wonder whether the Minister of Justice agrees with the views expressed by the hon. member for Drummond-Arthabaska and whether he does not feel that this bill infringes, directly or indirectly, upon the provincial field?

I know that many members of the house, unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, prefer to submit to party policy. They would rather sacrifice the legitimate yearnings of the provinces to please their party, but they should have the courage to rise against a bill which affects the jurisdiction of the provinces.

That is the kind of co-operative federalism we have at the present time. It is a new form of centralization to hide the interference by the federal government and enable it to progress by infiltration into the fields which belong to the provinces.

May I advise you, Mr. Speaker, to read the book by Mr. Lamontagne on Canadian federalism. As early as 1944, this theorist explained how federalism should operate in Canada.

In fact, he wrote:

> It is therefore the participation of the government in the main functions of the state which must become the general rule (P. 248).

He also wrote this:

> The joint participation of all levels of governments in the functions of the state is perfectly consistent with the Canadian constitution (P. 249). The theory of separation of the functions leads either to the splitting up of federalism, by promoting separatism or legislative union, or to the coexistence of isolated governments within the
> The joint participation of all levels of government from carrying out properly its responsibilities (P. 246).

That should be told to the voters, because this text is fraught with consequences. I continue:

> The doctrine which gives a definition of federalism as being a form of political unification where sovereignty is divided between several governments having their own exclusive fields of jurisdiction is therefore unacceptable. That definition might satisfy the minds looking above all for clearcut formulas. It may have tallied with a factual situation in the past, but it can no longer fit the present realities. (P. 246)

And he added:

> Separation of government functions laid down as a general principle is inconsistent with the social and economic situation or with an efficient political regime.

That is what we have at the present time. I understand that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) engineered the scheme, that he acted as a go-between, sent to the government of Quebec to have them accept this bill.

I wonder if it is true that the Minister of Forestry (Mr. Sauvé) has been the genius who forced the province of Quebec to accept this bill.

Mr. Speaker, it will be noted that since coming into power, the Pearson government has given a perfect illustration of its thinking on co-operative federalism. It does not violate the constitution unilaterally; it proposes to the provinces to assist them in fulfilling their obligations (loans to municipalities, interest free loans to students) or it solicits their acceptance of a bill in a field of concurrent jurisdiction (pension fund).

But everyone knows what happens gradually to co-operation between unequal partners. The central government already has such powers and revenues that co-operation will shortly develop into an implicit centralization system: Ottawa will initiate, legislate and establish new institutions; the provinces will be entrusted with the execution and the distribution of funds.

Loans to Students

Twenty years, ten years of co-operative federalism and the provinces will, in fact, only be administrative and managing agencies.

That is why I contend that co-operative federalism is but another disguised formula for centralization, where the provinces would only be Ottawa subsidiaries whose functions would only be to apply the decisions made in Ottawa.

However, as a result of the federal-provincial conference which took place between the Canadian provinces and the central government, there was agreement on this particular point, namely that the matter of education came under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces, that it was the most urgent problem and that it should have priority in our present economic situation. It is recognized that the provinces have the priority in that field and must have the taxation powers they need to meet their obligations.

I wonder why the Quebec government has remained silent about that bill and I find its attitude very surprising.

Last night I listened to the speech made by the hon. member for St. Maurice-Laflèche (Mr. Chrétien). As reported on page 5482 of Hansard, he said:

> —the Minister of Finance prepared a bill in accordance with the two following principles which are of the utmost importance:
> (a) education comes under the provinces while credit is a matter of federal jurisdiction;

And yet credit is a field of joint jurisdiction, it comes under both the federal and provincial governments. If the hon. member wanted to talk about the provinces' taxation sources when he mentioned credit, he will admit that the provinces have the priority in the field of taxation.

The province of Quebec is well organized today as far as scholarships are concerned. The St. Jean Baptiste society has more than $1.5 million in funds and through the students' honour loan has organized subscription drives to enable students to get scholarships. Loans are made also by the Artisans society and the province of Quebec itself has an excellent system of scholarships. The banks, the credit unions as well as the private sector make loans to students. There is also the provincial arts council. In short, there are in Quebec more than 50 organizations which make loans to students to enable them to continue their studies.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

I am afraid that by infringing too much upon that field which does not come under its jurisdiction, the federal government will be the cause of certain abuses.

Mr. Speaker, if the government and the Minister of Finance were so anxious to assist education they could have done it much more simply. They did not have to introduce such a complicated bill which will require the establishment of a group of civil servants whose function it will be to inspect the provinces' bookkeeping in order to ensure compliance with the federal statute.

Since all the provinces have established a system of scholarships within their jurisdiction, the minister could have said for instance: "Starting tomorrow, the central government will pay directly to the provincial treasury the interest on loans granted by each province."

The provinces have the necessary funds to grant loans and the federal government could have assumed the interest costs by reimbursing the provincial ministers of finance for such expenses. Had he done so, there would have been no violation of provincial jurisdiction and the provinces would have been satisfied. Everybody would have been happy, including the students.

I am not surprised to see that Mr. Lesage neither protests nor says anything about this. In fact, an editorial which came to my attention reads as follows:

> The reason is that Mr. Jean Lesage is the originator of that scheme which was adopted by the Liberal party in 1958. Mr. Lesage has the dubious honour of having been the first Liberal to advocate the main plank of the platform which carried Mr. Lester B. Pearson to office.
> "Free education at all levels".
> Mr. Lesage was at that time federal member for Montmagny-L'Islet; he had been previously Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources.

Mr. Lesage was the first person to ask the Liberal party, at this convention, to introduce a bill enabling the federal government to find its way into the education field, which belongs exclusively to the provinces.

May I be allowed, Mr. Speaker, to pay a tribute to the Barrette government who, during the short time they were in power, adopted seven or eight important pieces of legislation to assist and stimulate education in the province of Quebec.

I do not agree with certain members who pass judgment on everything that was done in the educational field in the province of Quebec, before 1960.

Indeed, the province of Quebec has weak spots like all other provinces. Under its educational system before 1960 the province of Quebec has provided the church and the state with valuable men, men who have been sitting here as members of the federal government.

I do not think it logical for certain members to criticize what has been done in the educational field in the province of Quebec and to show such confidence in the new system. The new educational system in Quebec will certainly have some flaws; at the present time, the taxpayers are already complaining loudly.

May I be allowed, in concluding, to point out the financial needs of education in the province of Quebec.

Education has priority for all Canada, and Quebec is no exception. From now until 1967 we will have to find $500 million if we want to remain in the world competition for education, the goal being set for the year 1970.

I have a report here on a study prepared by the planning office of the department of education entitled: "Financial Needs of Education in Quebec, 1964-67". It comprises 81 pages of text where, through vital statistics and financial projections, an attempt is made to establish, first of all, the probable cost of education during the next three years, and to study the means that could be used to meet those costs or to reduce them.

Let me quote a few passages of this brief which is very revealing:

Overwhelming forecasts. This study contains important findings to the effect that:

1. From the year 1956-57 to the year 1966-67, the total cost of education in the province will increase fourfold, from $286 million to $1,203 million.

2. In 1966-67, if education had to be satisfied with present sources of revenue and at present rates, there would be a shortage of $245 million to meet the expenditures anticipated.

This applies only to the province of Quebec.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, it is so important for the federal government to make sacrifices and return to the provinces part of their taxing power. That would not mean that we would forget the poorer provinces, and I am sure that the rich provinces of Canada would agree that the federal government should give a certain amount to the other provinces, in order to make up for their financial deficiency.

Again, I quote:

3. Those increases are due not only to the inevitable increase in the number of students, but also to the increase of the average cost per student. On the other hand, this rise is due to two main factors:

Loans to Students

(a) More and more students take courses which are costly to establish—we will deal with this matter in a moment—

(b) For the same program, the unit costs are increasing and will continue to increase because salaries are improving—

Other facts are also worth mentioning. It states, for instance, that school boards will show deficits of $66 million this year. It also points out that, as far as school boards are concerned, the average cost per student increased last year, compared to the previous year, by $38 and that three quarters of that increase, or $27, are due to salary increases granted to the teaching staff. Finally, it states that the average cost per student will amount, this year, to $362 in educational institutions, to $461 in private institutions, to $1,031 in technical and trade schools and to $1,839 in universities.

Finally, it should be mentioned that the financial conditions revealed by this departmental survey are not favourable, since they are making our school system lag and, in many places, necessary solutions are more difficult to apply; let us remember the conclusion arrived at by the organization for economic co-operation and development: A real revolution in education is shaping up in the world under the combined pressure of economic expansion and the yearning for knowledge. It will reach its climax in 1970, when the whole world will be getting an education.

Then, Mr. Speaker, there are statistics concerning the rising cost of education in Quebec and the increasing number of students, but I will not impose on the house by reading them into the record.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, the people of Quebec are concerned when they see the federal government trying more and more to enter and control every field, even where it has no jurisdiction, because when the federal government sets foot in a field, it never gets out but stays there. We are therefore afraid, in the province of Quebec, that this intrusion in the educational field, which, anyhow, did not start today, will result in the creation of a federal department of education.

In some provinces, the French minorities have been fighting for years to obtain recognition of their school rights. That is why, Mr. Speaker, we do not want the majority of this country, which has neither our culture nor our language, to impose its views upon us in the educational field.

The people of the province of Quebec, therefore, want the directives in the educational field to come from the French speaking majority, and not from the English speaking majority. That is the problem. And that is why we have confederation. The province of Quebec has a very different concept of those issues.

There would be a way to correct the situation, but the government makes it more complicated, embittered and creates separatism in the province of Quebec, particularly by having no regard for its rights. If the other provinces are ready to give up their rights, it is up to them. But the people of Quebec are justified in opposing that.

If we want to have a strong confederation and stop separatism, let us return to the provinces, and particularly Quebec, their taxation powers, so that they can develop according to their mentality and conscience.

Mr. Speaker, this government through its constant encroachments on fields that are none of its business, is one of the main causes of the separatist wave that we have in Canada.

As I said earlier, if it is in the interest of English provinces to understand that, it is also in the interest of the federal government to understand that question. If Quebec is strong, Canada will also be strong. And if Quebec is strong, it will hold out better against the American domination. In Quebec we do not want American domination. In English provinces, 80 per cent of television programs originate from the United States and invade Canadian homes. It is impossible for us to accept that. Of course, it is possible, but we prefer to listen to C.B.C. programs, because they are broadcast in our own language.

[Text]

Mr. Cowan: Mr. Speaker, might I ask a question?

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I fail to see what objection the hon. member can bring forward—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the hon. member for York-Humber wanted to ask a question, if the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm would be good enough to answer it.

Mr. Pigeon: Surely, let the hon. member put his question.

[Text]

Mr. Cowan: Would the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm permit a question?

Mr. Pigeon: Yes.

Mr. Cowan: I heard him state just now that Quebec does not want United States domination. What objections were raised in Quebec when General Motors announced their tremendous new plant at St. Therese?

Mr. Grégoire: We did object.

[Mr. Pigeon.]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, it is easy for me to answer this question. Not only the province of Quebec, but all the other Canadian provinces suffer from foreign control, since practically 65 per cent of all investments in Canada come from outside. From the standpoint of the economy we are unfortunately an American subsidiary at the present time, and the danger is there.

I wonder what the Minister of Finance does to encourage and help Canadians to regain control of their economy. Our natural resources are developed by foreigners. I am not against foreign capital but foreigners should understand that there should be Canadians on the board of directors.

I would not want the Cuban experience and that of other South American countries to be repeated here in Canada.

With regard to the bill, Mr. Speaker, I am personally against it, in its present form, and I urge the Minister of Finance to amend it and fill in the gaps.

The hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière and other members proved to the house that this bill constitutes an intrusion into an exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

If the government refuses to accept the amendments which will be moved, or does not itself amend the bill, I will not be able to support it, because Quebeckers, and especially the population of Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, share my opinion.

Mr. Choquette: Mr. Speaker, I wish to rise on a question of privilege, because of the general content of the hon. member's speech.

Mr. Pigeon: There is no question of privilege.

Mr. Choquette: The hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm, claiming to be the spokesman of the population of Quebec, says that this province is very concerned about the intrusion of the federal government into fields where it is not concerned.

Mr. Grégoire: Order.

Mr. Choquette: My question of privilege is this. The province of Quebec is not at all concerned about an intrusion which does not exist. Indeed, there is no intrusion in provincial fields by virtue of this bill.

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, Bill No. C-110 is intended to help students of slender means. I admit that the purpose of the bill is most commendable, but I think that the ways are much less so. If it had not been for those special circumstances, this bill would even be a step toward an improvement in the condition most students had to face for so long.

Those who come from modest families, who succeeded in completing their studies and were able to cross the barrier of segregation at school, know how difficult it was for a lonely young man to reach the institute of technology, the university and even to complete high school. If we remember those sad years, it was the era of castes, of boys with wealthy fathers and of upstarts. It was either money, or academic and political pull which determined the degree of intelligence of the young student. I can tell you that several of the stars of that time would cut a sorry figure if they had to pass the intelligence tests used today. Progress is putting things right. We are confident that thanks to all the changes in education in general and all the facts known to future students, the next generation will find more justice.

Far from me to think that everything will be perfect. But the sole fact that we make efforts to reach perfection, gives hope to our young people. Therefore, it is our duty to remain careful at all times in order not to give up our birthright for a mess of potage, as an excuse to help students. Hence, it is important for us people from Quebec to make sure that our provincial rights in the field of education are not gobbled up once more by the federal ogre.

That is why we, the members of the Ralliement Créditiste, objected to the bill under study. At that time we had already discovered another intrusion, hidden as usual. We have always been pioneers in the protection and reconquest of the rights of the province of Quebec and we shall carry on the good work.

In Le Devoir of July 15, which for once, does justice to us, one can read on the editorial page, the following article by Mr. Paul Sauriol:

> It is almost unanimously that the House of Commons passed Monday, on first reading, the bill establishing loans for students. If the resolution was passed on division, it was at the request of the Ralliement Créditistes which objects to this new federal intrusion into the provincial jurisdiction. Three of the four groups in the opposition joined the Liberals to approve this measure. This vote throws some light on some recent speeches on co-operative federalism.

Mr. Speaker, the bill states clearly that the provinces remain free to set up their own students' loan scheme. Such a scheme has been in operation for a few years already in our own province. However, the possibilities in Quebec are too limited, precisely on account of the action of the federal government in Quebec.

I hope that bill will be one more opportunity for the federal government to make up for its unfairness in the field of education by giving back to Quebec its share of taxes collected in our province.

The best would be for the present government to give back to each province which so desires its taxation right. But as long as we have those two old finance parties, which have never been honest enough to give back what they borrowed, we will remain in the sad obligation of accepting the crumbs which will fall from the table of the champions of centralization.

We realize that such socialist penetrations please certain provinces and that explains why this government, in spite of their fine electoral promises, infringe more and more upon exclusive provincial fields.

Our greatest concern at this time is to know when that widening of powers will come to an end. Why, even at the last election the Liberals presented themselves as the champions of the return of taxation rights to provinces. It was the end of the famous joint plans.

What happened since? In all provincial exclusive fields, we have seen a succession of casual encroachments upon the jurisdiction of Quebec. The Ralliement Créditiste made every effort to delay, if not to check that take-over of the various strongholds of the province of Quebec, but the federal Liberals, implicitly supported by Quebec Liberals, have continued their advance under the camouflage of co-operative federalism, which should rightly be called compressive federalism.

Luring the people with alleged benefits they took advantage of the situation to crawl into the very foundation of our provincial structure.

Even today it is clear that our students, like our school boards, our municipalities and even our province itself need the assistance expected from their government. But do you really help people when you sentence them to bear the yoke of banks for the rest of their lives?

Yet that is what we are doing when we give chartered banks permission to finance the education of our young people. And we even go further, since this government guarantees to the chartered banks that they will be the only institutions to enjoy such a privilege.

Mr. Speaker, do you not think it would be much more logical to order the Bank of Canada to put the necessary funds at the disposal of the provinces, so as to allow them to act according to the aspirations and the thinking of their respective population? Several hon. members have asserted that the provincial rights were protected. But in order to pay interest on these loans, we all know very well that the federal government will again levy the necessary taxes in these same provinces.

It is therefore another door open to the federal government in the taxation fields reserved to the provinces.

It is precisely at that level that we are fighting against that interference tolerated by our provincial governments, not to say approved by them and the members who are supporting that bill now.

It is precisely at that stage that we can protect the fortress; it is not only a matter of preventing it from being overrun but also of preventing even arrows from hitting it. By what right, I ask you, does the federal government take it upon itself to tax the people of Quebec, giving them back too often only the third of what it collects from them and offering them small compensations such as free assistance which it considers a fabulous gift?

With Bill No. C-110, as with all other legislation concerning joint programs, it is false to say that the rights of the province of Quebec are protected by the contracting out formula, because the basic encroachment upon the field of taxation bears evidence to the fact that the federal government will again be in control and take the final decisions in this matter.

I should like to quote another extract of Mr. Paul Sauriol's article which was published in Le Devoir:

> —a provision under which the federal government will compensate any province which administers its own scheme of student loans.
> That is what is called respect for the provincial rights. Such a system remains unacceptable because the central government acts on its own in fields which come exclusively under the provincial jurisdiction, collecting and using taxes for provincial purposes, subjecting to its control and to its schemes even the provinces which would wish to break loose from them.

Let us, once and for all, return the rights to the provinces where they belong and the war of rights will come to an end. Thus, the federal government will stop being a mock Santa Claus.

We are longing for the day when the Quebec government will stop playing the game of totalitarian federalism, when we shall at last have in Quebec a government with sufficient courage to get rid of those old tax-mongers.

If each government would keep to its own field, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that in either field everything would be in order.

We firmly object also, throughout the province, to these being subjected to the will of bank managers. In order to get out of an abyss, we will be walking near the edge of a more dangerous precipice.

Let us imagine a student coming from a family in receipt of public welfare payments. What impression will he make on the bank manager when he answers the long list of questions asked by the chartered banks in the course of their investigations? If the father does not have a bank account or does not have his bank account in such and such a bank or, which is worse, if he never had a bank account, what will happen?

In these circumstances the degree of intelligence would be determined tomorrow by the chartered banks trust which would control in this way the whole direction of our future thinking.

After giving to chartered banks the power to create all our credit, the control of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation over our small home owners, the control of the Farm Credit Corporation over our agriculture, the control of our industrial life and and even the control of our vital index, today you ask them to control the training of our young people.

Mr. Choquette: You dramatize.

An hon. Member: We are realists.

Mr. Gauthier: A youth anxious to make his dreams come true will be tied to the worst trust which now controls us completely, and tomorrow will even control our thinking.

Mr. Choquette: This is a nice speech, but I should like to know who wrote it.

Mr. Gauthier: It is certainly not a demagogue like the hon. member for Lotbinière, for he always repeats the same nonsense and always practices the same demagogy. Why does he not try to become more responsible?

Therefore, we take exception, Mr. Speaker, not to the necessary assistance provided for students, but to the hypocritical manner in which the bill was introduced. Why is it that when Quebec needs something to survive, it has to come and get it from the central government which decides the quantity and quality?

The idea is repugnant to us. And that is why we denounce this federalist oppression.

In conclusion, I ask the minister to authorize the Bank of Canada to make available to the provinces the necessary amounts for educational grants, and I repeat, for educational grants. Students should not be given loans but grants, because a loan is not assistance, it is a trap.

The government should respect the terms of confederation and return taxation rights to Quebec and everybody will be happy.

Mr. Kindt: Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

Business of the House

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Starr: May I ask the acting house leader whether there are any changes in the business of the house for tomorrow or Friday, or will the order remain the same as the leader of the house announced last night?

Mr. MacNaught: Mr. Speaker, the business of the house for tomorrow and Friday will remain as outlined by the house leader last night, with the possible exception that if there is any time left tomorrow after concluding the student loans bill and the federal-provincial fiscal relations bill we will take second reading of Bill No. C-112, to amend the Judges Act.

At six o'clock the house adjourned without question put, pursuant to standing order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, July 16, 1964

The house met at 2 p.m.

TRADE

WHEAT—ANNOUNCEMENT OF SALE TO CZECHOSLOVAKIA

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform hon. members that the Canadian wheat board is announcing in Winnipeg today that it has negotiated a contract for the sale of approximately 500,000 metric tons of wheat for shipment to Czechoslovakia. This sale, totalling approximately 18.4 million bushels, is for shipment during the period August to November, 1964.

This is the second sale made to Czechoslovakia under the provisions of the long term agreement signed on October 29, 1963. Of the 500,000 metric tons purchased, 230,000 tons represent the completion of the quantity that Czechoslovakia had agreed to buy during the first year of the agreement, and the balance of 270,000 tons applies against the second agreement year which commences October 30, 1964.

Payment for the wheat is to be made on the basis of 10 per cent at time of shipment with the balance to be paid in equal instalments, plus interest, at two, two and a half and three years respectively. These credit arrangements were authorized by the government of Canada under the provisions of the Export Credits Insurance Act.

[Later:]

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Robert Simpson (Churchill): I have a question for the Minister of Trade and Commerce. In his absence perhaps I may direct it to the acting minister or the Minister of Agriculture. It relates to the grain sale which was announced today by the Minister of Agriculture. Could the house be informed whether it was made clear to those negotiating on behalf of Czechoslovakia what financial benefits could accrue both to Czechoslovakia and to western farmers by agreeing to the shipment of a considerable amount of this grain through the port of Churchill? If this was not made clear to them, will the minister assure the house that it will be made clear to them in future.

Hon. Harry W. Hays (Minister of Agriculture): I am sure this would have been done by the Canadian wheat board. The hon. member may like to know that last year we shipped a record amount of wheat through Churchill, and I suppose we may even exceed that record this year.

Mr. Simpson: That is always good news; we have always broken records since 1957. I should like to have an assurance that in these negotiations the possible savings to both the purchaser and to the western farmers are made clearly known to the negotiators for the other country concerned.

Mr. Hays: I would be glad to direct this request to the chairman of the wheat board.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question?

The Minister of Agriculture stated at the same time that Czechoslovakia would pay 10 per cent on shipment of the wheat. Could the minister tell us what rate of interest will apply to the balance Czechoslovakia is to pay Canada over a period of two and a half to three years?

[Text]

Mr. Hays: I cannot state the exact amount of interest, but I would be glad to look into it and let the hon. member know.

COMMUNICATIONS

CANADIAN PARTICIPATION IN INTERNATIONAL SATELLITE SYSTEMS

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister in connection with the international satellite communication system. What was the basis upon which Canada decided to make a contribution to this system; and is the minister in a position to give the reason why the United States defence department has withdrawn from the satellite communication consortia and what the effects of the withdrawal of the United States will be on probable costs?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I will ask the Minister of Transport to answer that question.

Hon. J. W. Pickersgill (Minister of Transport): I should not like, Mr. Speaker, to make a statement without very careful reference to the documents, but my impression is that it was not a sudden or precipitate withdrawal. The way in which the satellite communication system is being worked out is that it would provide for participation by any countries which wished to participate. I think hon. members will quickly appreciate that this might have certain consequences from the point of view of certain types of military communications. I do not think it was contemplated that even though the defence services of the United States or any other country did not participate directly in the satellite system itself, that would not mean that certain types of communications would not use that system in exactly the same way as the defence forces now use other communication systems than their own.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the minister has said it was not precipitate action on the part of the United States. However, the New York Times report indicates that this is another reversal of the Pentagon's on again-off again efforts in the development of a military communications satellite system.

I realize that it is difficult for the minister to answer without having the material before him, but I should like the minister to give the house a full answer in this regard and also to indicate what the expenditures will be on the part of Canada in this connection, as well as the reason Canada should be assuming a major responsibility in so far as the expenditure is concerned in this connection at a time when the United States, which is so necessarily interested in matters such as this, is withdrawing.

Mr. Pickersgill: In the first place, sir, I do not think it would be appropriate for me, with or without notice, to comment on the policies of the government of the United States. We are answerable in parliament for what we do and not for what other countries do. The only aspect of United States policy that would be of concern to us would be if the United States government decided not to participate in this system. Which agency of the United States government may participate is surely a matter for the United States.

I have no information that the United States government, which has a chosen agency which is partially privately owned and partially publicly owned, does not intend to participate as a major partner in this project. I am quite sure if there was any decision that the United States was not participating in that way, there would be no project at all and, therefore, there would be no problem of Canada's participation.

Assuming there has been no change so far as the United States government is concerned—I feel quite sure I would have heard about it more directly than through the New York Times if there had been—and assuming that negotiations are going to go on in Washington on the basis on which I understood they were going on, which involved no participation by the United States defence department at all, then the reason Canada is participating to the extent it is is that we believe this is a venture of great importance in the communications field. This was true of the telephone cable project in which we participated some years ago. We feel this is going to be a very important means of communication, and a profitable means of communication over a long period. Hon. members will have noted only yesterday the report of the C.O.T.C. which was gratifying in that it showed a large profit was being made on their operations.

Now, it is thought there is a very distinct probability that satellite communications will supplement to a very great extent cable telephonic communications, and that this, to a great degree at any rate, is the wave of the future in communications. We felt it was desirable that Canada should participate, for exactly the same reasons we are participating in the telephonic cables, and should have a sufficiently large interest in it to have a permanent say in its direction. We feel this will be the kind of investment that will pay dividends, and I do not mean just dividends in good will or anything of that sort but cash dividends in due course to the investors.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I thank the minister for his explanation. Of course everybody is in agreement that Canada should participate in intercommunications. When we were in office we participated in the commonwealth telephone system, so it is not anything new. It was during our administration that it was started.

Mr. Pickersgill: I am sure the right hon. gentleman does not want to misrepresent the facts. It was started by the St. Laurent government when I was a member of that government.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, they started a lot of things but did not go ahead, and this was one of those. Just a moment ago I was going to compliment the minister on the very good answer he gave, but now he has spoiled it all.

Does he say the United States defence department did not notify Canada as to its attitude in this regard? I must say I am surprised if there has been no communication.

Mr. Pickersgill: I said no such thing at all. I said it was my understanding even before we went to this conference that the United States defence department was not going to be participating in it. I believe that will be found to be the fact; but I think it is very wrong for members of the Canadian government to be interpreting the policies of the United States and the administration of the United States.

Since the right hon. gentleman has introduced the irrelevancy might I point out I was present at the cable laying at Clarenville, Newfoundland, as the representative of the government of Canada, and that was before the right hon. gentleman even became the leader of his party.

WEIGHTS AND MEASURES

PREPARATIONS FOR CHANGE TO METRIC SYSTEM

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Acting Minister of Trade and Commerce the following question. As 90 per cent of the world's population, including all of Europe, Russia, Japan, China and India, and all of South America, lives by the metric system, and as Canada stands alone among the remaining nations outside this system in not having made any preparation for such a necessary and inevitable change, would the acting minister be good enough to tell the house when the government is going to take its responsibility and set up a proper preparation for this event?

Mr. Speaker: I think I get the gist of the question. This is a very interesting question but I think it would be even more interesting if we saw it in print. Would the hon. member put it on the order paper.

Inquiries of the Ministry

FINANCE

REMOVAL OF TAX ON BUILDING MATERIALS AND EQUIPMENT

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Michael Starr (Ontario): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Finance. In view of the fact that the unemployment rate in June of this year was only four tenths of one per cent below that of last year and only one half of one per cent below that of 1962—in fact, some 22,000 below that of last year—will the minister now consider taking the 11 per cent sales tax burden off the construction industry?

Hon. Walter L. Gordon (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think we have dealt with that question on several occasions.

Mr. Starr: I wonder whether the Minister of Finance has now changed his mind in view of the present unemployment situation.

Mr. Gordon: No, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance has not changed his mind on this matter.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

ONTARIO—PREPARATION OF COURT CASE RESPECTING "HATE" LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. Is it true that the R.C.M.P. has not yet supplied any information to the Ontario attorney general to assist him in preparing a court case in connection with the widespread distribution of hate literature, as was promised by the minister in this house about two months ago?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I shall be discussing that matter with the authorities concerned on Monday, and I shall report to the house on it as early as possible.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF LEGISLATION TO ABOLISH CAPITAL PUNISHMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Minister of Justice. A week ago last Wednesday I asked him whether the government would consider providing government time for Bill No. C-12, in the name of the hon. member for Danforth, or bring in its own bill to abolish capital punishment in Canada. The minister's reply was that he would take the question as notice and give it consideration. Is he yet prepared to give an answer to the house?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, that matter is still under consideration.

LEGISLATION RESPECTING DISSEMINATION OF "HATE" LITERATURE

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, could the Minister of Justice say what has been done, since the last report he made to the house, by the committee set up or the designated group who were going to look into the whole question of hate literature and the degree to which, in their opinion, the present law is sufficient or whether changes are to be made? Have recommendations in that connection been made, and will they be brought in during the present session?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am not in a position to report on that in detail for the moment, except to state that the matter is still being pursued actively, and that I hope I shall be in a position to make a report to the house as early as possible.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question. Has not the department of defence drafted suggested amendments to the criminal law of today to cover the situation created by illegal and unlawful propaganda being spread in this country against racial groups?

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, with due deference to the right hon. gentleman I hardly think that last question can be deemed to be in order, because it deals with and concerns the responsibility of the Minister of Justice, or ministers and is a matter which, after all, will eventually have to be dealt with under the responsibility of the Minister of Justice. Any actual suggestions, excepting those made by people from outside, from within a department regarding any actual drafting is something which is in the nature of confidential information, and must remain the full responsibility eventually of the minister concerned.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Then I ask the minister this. Has he before him suggested amendments to deal with the hate literature which is being distributed, or is the matter still in that nebulous, uncertain state it was in four months ago?

[Mr. Knowles.]

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, subject to what I have said the answer to the last question is yes. I do have alternative drafts before me; but I must be frank with the house and say that as yet I have failed to give my final agreement to any of them or to make a recommendation to the government.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

INQUIRY AS TO CONTINUATION OF WINTER WORKS PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Labour a question?

Could he tell the house whether it is a fact that the officials of his department met with a group of government members on July 13, as reported in the Quebec Le Soleil, in order to study the winter works incentive municipal program and, if so, could the minister tell us whether he intends to change the present program, as suggested in the formula brought forward by that group of members?

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: It does seem to me that this is a question for the order paper.

EDUCATION

STUDENT LOANS—PROTESTS BY QUEBEC STUDENT ORGANIZATIONS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Acting Prime Minister?

Has the minister received a telegram from the president of l'Association générale des étudiants de l'Université de Montréal with regard to Bill No. C-110 concerning a student loans plan? Does the government intend to give serious consideration to the views and ideas expressed by the students of the province of Quebec?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did not receive that telegram yet, but I will inquire immediately.

[Text]

PRIVILEGE

MR. FAIRWEATHER—DISPLAY OF PORTION OF SPEECH IN OFFICE OF IMMIGRATION MINISTER

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. I have been reliably informed, and have no reason to doubt, that the Minister of Citizenship and Immigration, either on his own initiative or on the initiative of a member of his staff, has had printed and framed at public expense for hanging in one or both of his offices—because two copies were framed—one sentence of a speech I made in this house on June 22 as reported at page 4564 of Hansard, when I said:

> I like the type of man who will try to get into this country illegally.

While I have tried to keep under control any feelings I might have of pride and satisfaction at having words of mine grace the walls of the minister's office and publicized in this manner, I would like to think the minister would make sure that visitors to his office were supplied with copies of the full text of my speech. Thus the sentence to which the minister attaches such significance and has chosen to immortalize may be interpreted in its true light and with a sense of fair proportion.

May I, when I state this question of privilege, remind the house that in the early days of this country, before immigration procedures became formalized, many of our ancestors found haven and refuge here because of their daring and initiative. Then in a later period of our history I recall the Estonian refugees who landed in Saint John, New Brunswick, in the late 1940's after a hazardous journey across the north Atlantic in a sailboat. There are many such examples of courage and daring which were technically illegal but Canada, I submit, is a better place because these people are here. Also, Mr. Speaker, I have been reminded that the modern state of Israel owes a large portion of its population to such methods, and is proud of the fact.

I will be glad to arrange to send an adequate and generous supply of copies of my speech to the minister if he thinks it inappropriate to charge the public purse with copies for his own use.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

[Translation]

Hon. René Tremblay (Minister of Citizenship and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I shall be glad to give every possible publicity to the speech delivered in this house by the hon. member for Royal. I feel that most interesting suggestions were made to the minister of immigration by the hon. member and I should like to see his whole speech published, because I would be most pleased to distribute copies of it to all racial groups of Canada so that they might realize the significant contribution the hon. member for Royal wishes to make to the cause of immigration in Canada.

[Text]

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Will the minister undertake to do the same for other hon. members who have spoken in the house on the subject of immigration?

DOMINION-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

DISCUSSIONS WITH B.C. PREMIER DURING OTTAWA VISIT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, as the fishing season is in full swing I would like to address a question to the Acting Prime Minister. Has the Prime Minister received any communication from the premier of British Columbia suggesting the questions he would like to discuss with him when the premier visits Ottawa? If so, is the minister in a position to inform the house of the questions which the premier suggested should be discussed?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not heard of any communications from the premier of British Columbia, so in reply I can only say that notwithstanding my hon. friend's bold assertion that this is a good fishing period, my hon. friend in this question has not succeeded in his fishing endeavour.

HEALTH AND WELFARE

APPLICATION FOR USE OF ANABLAST SERUM

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the charming head of the Department of National Health and Welfare.

Could she tell the house whether, following the hope put in the anablast serum and the unfortunate results of the experience attempted on young Guynemer, the officials of her department intend to allow that biologist to carry on with his work in Canada?

Can the minister also tell us what stand the government intends to take with regard to the anablast serum?

[Text]

Hon. Judy V. LaMarsh (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I have explained once previously to the very charming member for Three Rivers that the gentleman in question was interviewed by my department before he was allowed to give the serum in question to the youngster who subsequently died. He has been in touch with the department, and he knows in some detail the responsibility which lies upon him to comply with the food and drug regulations before he might be permitted to manufacture the serum for use on other individuals. I am informed that the department holds itself ready to co-operate and to make clear to him what must be done; and also to make perfectly clear that like every other individual who wishes to manufacture drugs, he must comply with the food and drug regulations.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ATTACKS BY NEWS COMMENTATORS ON U.S. PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. B. Nesbitt (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Secretary of State, and I should also like to draw this question to the attention of the Secretary of State for External Affairs. Would the Secretary of State recommend to the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation that the disagreeable and indeed vicious personal attacks on United States presidential candidates by news commentators might in future be avoided? Most United States citizens believe that the C.B.C. is the official voice of Canada, and such commentaries are likely to be interpreted as a direct interference in United States elections, which could easily cause this country a great deal of damage in influential United States circles. Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, what the feeling in Canada would be should the situation be reversed.

Mr. Nielsen: It did.

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows I do not make recommendations to the C.B.C. with respect to programming. However, I would be very glad to transmit the views and concern of the hon. member to the management of the C.B.C.

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): A supplementary question. Does the minister know that comments on the B.B.C. can be considered lurid compared to anything on the C.B.C.?

HOUSING

DELAY IN IMPLEMENTING SALES AND RENTAL PROGRAM

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Arnold Webster (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Postmaster General whether he has received or knows of a telegram from the Fraserview veterans homeowners and tenants association taking strong objection to a refusal by himself to delay implementing a sales and rental program recently announced by Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. If so, will the minister reconsider his decision not to delay the implementation of the new policy because of the importance of this matter to veterans and their dependants?

Hon. J. R. Nicholson (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the answer to the first part of the question is yes, I did receive such a wire. With regard to the second part of the question, I am afraid I cannot offer my hon. friend any hope for further delay. This matter has been under careful study, been given careful consideration for the past several months by the officials of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, and by the directors of that corporation. Independent advice has been obtained, and it was carefully considered by the directors of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation in June, just last month. I concur in the recommendations they have made, and I see no reason for further delay.

AGRICULTURE

TRANSFER OF GRAIN COMMISSION TO TRADE DEPARTMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. R. R. Southam (Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Agriculture but in view of his temporary absence from the house I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary or to the acting minister. In view of continuing reports that pressure is being brought to bear to have the board of grain commissioners transferred from the Department of Agriculture to the Department of Trade and Commerce, is the minister considering yielding to this pressure?

NATIONAL DEFENCE

AVAILABILITY OF REPORT ON REORGANIZATION OF MILITIA

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I have a question for the Associate Minister of National Defence. Will the minister put members of parliament on an equality with the distinguished members of the press gallery by making available copies of the Suttie report on the reorganization of the militia, which were distributed to the press two days ago?

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): As the hon. member knows, members of the special committee on defence have been given a copy of the report to which he refers. One hundred copies in English and 50 copies in French have now been made available to members of the house.

Mr. Churchill: I am asking that all members of the house may have the privilege of seeing this document and having a copy delivered to them.

Mr. Cardin: I think copies are available to all members who are interested in this particular subject.

Mr. Churchill: On a point of order, it is not a question of who happens to be interested. Every member of the House of Commons is entitled to this report and to receive it at the same time as it is given public distribution.

Mr. Cardin: Very well; I will see that that is done.

Mr. A. D. Hales (Wellington South): A supplementary question to the associate minister. In view of the fact that the militia has dropped out of the civil defence role, with the exception of 1,500 men, could the minister advise the house under what department or whose supervision this work of civil defence will fall, and where these recruits will come from?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, it is not true that the militia has dropped out of the civil defence role. As hon. members know, all men, whether they are in the regular forces or in the militia, have training in a civil defence capacity. What was said was that in the reorganization of the militia 1,500 militiamen would be specially earmarked for this type of role in order to back up the regular forces that are actually engaged in the survival role.

As my hon. friend may well appreciate, if there were a nuclear emergency then all the forces, whether they are regular or militia, would be engaged in the survival role, and these 1,500 men would have special training in order to be able to back up the regular forces in that role.

QUEBEC—PAYMENT OF MOVING COSTS OF RADAR STATION PERSONNEL

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday the hon. member for Chapleau (Mr. Laprise) asked me whether any action had been taken in order to reimburse for their moving expenses the families which have been forced to move on account of the closing of the radar station at Parent.

In answer I may tell him that there were 66 full time employees at the Parent air base at the time of its closing. Fifty two of them have now got other employment.

The Department of National Defence has secured from the treasury board a special authorization to reimburse the moving expenses up to $500 in the case of every surplus employee transferred to a position in the federal government somewhere else. However, this special authorization is restricted to employees coming under the Civil Service Act and who occupy a post above the normal admission level. Experience shows that most surplus employees who accept transfers involving a change of residence can take advantage of this special authorization.

In the case of Parent, three surplus employees were provided assistance for their moving costs.

REQUIREMENT RESPECTING BILINGUALISM IN CONSIDERING PROMOTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence based on sessional paper No. 93E which he tabled yesterday. I thought I had made my request clear, in that what I wished to have tabled was the order emanating from the minister's office or the office of the Minister of National Defence to the army with respect to the inclusion of bilingualism as a factor in the promotion of officers.

Inquiries of the Ministry

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the order was submitted to me for my signature some time ago, but in substance it is exactly the order that I tabled yesterday.

Mr. Nielsen: Can the minister table the order, either from his office or the office of the Minister of National Defence, that went to the army and which resulted in the order signed by Major General Anderson, adjutant general, which in effect is sessional paper 93E?

Mr. Cardin: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nielsen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Sessional paper 93E sets out that there is a bilingual program and that the purpose of the order is to assess the success of the bilingual program. Since this concerns a matter of government policy, can the minister give the house a clearer indication of what bilingual program is under way in the army that is not under way in the navy and air force?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, this would require a very lengthy answer and I would be happy to give it at some future time. I know the hon. member is aware that there are courses being given in French and English in the army and the other services and it is to these programs that the order refers.

Mr. Nielsen: I wonder whether—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Nielsen: Well, perhaps it might simplify things if I gave notice to debate the whole question at 10.30.

[Translation]

Mr. L. J. Pigeon (Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a supplementary question—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. I do think that type of question should be on the order paper. I assume the hon. member for Yukon is giving notice.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Does the government intend to set up a progressive system to promote the use of both official languages in the armed forces and, at the same time, to train ships' crews that would be entirely French speaking or English speaking, as is done in Belgium?

[Mr. Nielsen.]

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, efforts are already being made in the armed forces to promote bilingualism.

With regard to the second part of the question, the possibility of having naval units working in each of the two languages has not been considered yet.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. Is it also the intention of the minister to put bilingual signs on all buildings and properties of the three armed services?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, where it would be logical to do so.

[Later:]

Hon. Léon Balcer (Three Rivers): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Associate Minister of National Defence.

Can he tell the house where, in Canada, it is illogical to use French on official buildings of the Department of National Defence?

Mr. Cardin: Mr. Speaker, if we want to be practical and logical, it seems to me that, in an area like British Columbia, for example, where there are no French—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh.

Mr. Cardin: —it is illogical to put up signs in any language other than in English.

Mr. Balcer: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question to the Associate Minister of National Defence. Why does he not study his Canadian history a little, as well as the part played by the two great races and the two languages in this country, and see to it, in future, that some reasonable applications are found for those two languages, so both races in Canada may really feel at home?

Hon. Maurice Lamontagne (Secretary of State): What did you people do?

Mr. Pigeon: You have to get a new minister.

Mr. Cardin: I do not need my hon. friend's invitation to recognize Canada's two great races. I suggest the Liberal party, since it has been in office, has done more to promote unity between those two great races than any other party.

Mr. Girouard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. It seems to me we have had enough questions along this line, because we are getting into a debate, an argument. Surely we can get on with the business before the house.

Mr. Girouard: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: No, I do not think we should have any more supplementaries on this emotional and contentious subject at this time.

[Translation]

Mr. Réal Caouette (Villeneuve): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

The Associate Minister of National Defence has just stated that there are no French Canadians in British Columbia.

Some hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Caouette: He stated textually that there are no French in British Columbia. Now, there are thousands in that province and the use of the French language deserves the same consideration in British Columbia as in Ontario or the province of Quebec.

Mr. Girouard: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out—

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. The last question was not a question of privilege. It was a statement; it was argument. I allowed it in order to get this matter terminated and get on with the business before the house.

Mr. Girouard: A question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member surely realizes he cannot just jump on his feet and allege a question of privilege. If it is on the same subject surely we have had enough discussion along this line.

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Girouard (Labelle): On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker. I wish to tell the minister that there are places in the province of Quebec where any knowledge of the English language is unnecessary, because people speak only French.

[Text]

Mr. Speaker: Order. This is the type of incident that the Chair does its best to avoid. I cannot see how it helps the business of the house or the feeling in the house.

PENSIONS

CANADA PLAN—SUGGESTED CONFERENCE RESPECTING PRIORITY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the charming and urbane Acting Prime Minister. Has the government given consideration to the convening of a federal-provincial conference on spending priorities as urgently suggested by Premier Roblin? If so, what steps have been taken?

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered that question.

Mr. Knowles: Two or three times.

Mr. Martin (Essex East): I have answered at least once a question put to me by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, and in one of my replies I indicated clearly that, if Premier Roblin was suggesting there should be a delay in the Canada pension plan program, that was not the position being taken by the government.

CANADIAN FLAG

PARTICIPATION IN DEBATE BY GOVERNMENT AND OPPOSITION MEMBERS

On the orders of the day:

[Translation]

Mr. Gérard Girouard (Labelle): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice, as leader of the house.

In the same spirit as the hon. member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Laniel) who spoke yesterday about the continuous repetitions concerning the flag, I would like to know if it is true that up to now 15 Liberals have spoken on that issue against 19 Conservatives. If such is the case, does the leader of the house find the discrepancy extraordinary?

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): I think, Mr. Speaker, that the answer to that question can be readily found in Hansard.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

REPORTED ERRORS IN GOVERNMENT TELEPHONE DIRECTORY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. W. Herridge (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a substantial question of privilege that affects members of the house, the staff, the press and the general public. Since this government has been in power the government of Canada telephone directory has contained numerous errors which I think should be corrected because they cause confusion and inconvenience.

I will bring to the attention of the members of the house that I have just received the latest edition of this telephone directory and there is so much confusion, Mr. Speaker, that I find the Prime Minister's office telephone number listed on the cover as 232-4244, when actually it is 232-4211. I do ask that this be checked because there are numerous quite serious mistakes which could cause inconvenience and confusion.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NATO—AGREEMENT RESPECTING EXCHANGE OF ATOMIC INFORMATION

On the orders of the day:

Hon. Gordon Churchill (Winnipeg South Centre): I should like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he will have time next week to make the statement which he promised concerning the new agreement for the exchange of atomic information. Since he is about to relinquish tomorrow some of the heavy burdens of office which he has obviously relished, he may have time to deal with this matter.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I shall be glad to deal with it right now. The purpose of the agreement is to take advantage of the 1958 amendments to the United States atomic energy act. These amendments broadened the scope of the information which the United States agreed to transfer to its allies. In this instrument the United States has committed itself to the principle of continuing to exchange nuclear information with its allies for planning purposes.

As I mentioned the other day, this in no way relates to the dissemination of nuclear weapons. Paragraph 2 of article IV clearly specifies that no atomic weapons or components will be transferred under the agreement. There will also be no transfer of information about the manufacture of nuclear weapons.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask a supplementary question. Is it not true that article III deals with the development of defence plans, the training of personnel and the employment of methods of defence against atomic weapons, as well as matters affecting the delivery systems of atomic weapons?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): The agreement provides for giving to the NATO allies and parties to the agreement information of an atomic character, but it has nothing to do with nuclear weapons as such because the United States, under its laws, maintain control of these. This agreement concerns the exchange of atomic information for the use of members in scientific purposes.

Mr. Churchill: May I ask another supplementary question of the minister. What progress is he making in negotiating Canada out of a nuclear role?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): This is not a related question. It has been answered; I think it was answered last week.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): Perhaps my very important question of privilege will conclude the question period today, Mr. Speaker, and my inability to rise quickly in my place is related to my question of privilege. Following the contest that took place on the grounds of the parliament buildings last evening, I regret that a very doubtful report of the result was given to the Canadian public by the press gallery.

COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

INQUIRY AS TO REPORT BY PRIME MINISTER

On the orders of the day:

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Leader of the Opposition): For the benefit of hon. members, Mr. Speaker, will the Acting Prime Minister say if he is in a position to tell the house whether the Prime Minister, on his return from the prime ministers' conference, will report tomorrow or on Monday? It is very important that members know. Monday would be most satisfactory if that is agreeable to the government.

Hon. Paul Martin (Acting Prime Minister): I thank the right hon. gentleman for asking this question, because he will recall that two days ago I said the Prime Minister would be reporting on Friday. It is more likely than not that the Prime Minister will report on Monday. I cannot give a firm answer because when I was talking to the Prime Minister yesterday he indicated that he hoped to do it at the earliest possible moment, possibly Friday. The Prime Minister, however, is going to be arriving late tonight and I rather suspect that, for that reason, he may not be able to report until Monday. I am in the position of not being able to give a definite answer, which I am sure the right hon. gentleman will understand. If the Prime Minister can report tomorrow he will do so. If not, he will certainly do so on Monday. I shall be glad to try to advise my friend tonight about this. I hope that will be satisfactory.

Mr. Knowles: Might it not be a good idea to advise the whole house tonight at 10.30?

Mr. Martin (Essex East): We will try to do that The Prime Minister arrives tonight at nine o'clock. I am sure parliament and the whole country will be glad to have him back.

EDUCATION

MEASURE TO FACILITATE MAKING LOANS TO STUDENTS

The house resumed, from Wednesday, July 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for the second reading of Bill No. C-110, to facilitate the making of loans to students.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is a little bit of confusion at this moment which I believe we can settle very quickly. Last night the hon. member for Roberval was speaking, and he started his last paragraph with the words "In conclusion". Subsequently the hon. member for Macleod rose and asked if he could call it six o'clock. At that time the Deputy Speaker and the Clerk at the table felt that the hon. member for Roberval had not finished. In the circumstances I think that the floor should be given to the hon. member for Roberval.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Last night in the confusion and perhaps because of my inadequate knowledge of the standing orders, I thought I had to resume my seat at six o'clock, but someone else called it six o'clock, which I should have done myself.

I thank you for your fairness toward me, because I have something else to say before concluding my remarks on Bill No. C-110.

It must be realized that two very important and obvious points emerge from this bill. There is, first of all, the assistance to be given to students and, second, the granting of this aid with respect to the constitution.

All hon. members admit that our students need some assistance at the present time to pay their tuition fees. There is no doubt about that. It is admitted that they absolutely need some assistance. We have proof of this every day in the letters and telegrams from our constituents, asking us to pass legislation providing for some assistance to students throughout Canada.

On the other hand, this assistance must not be a burden. When we are anxious to help someone, we do it gratuitously. We do not put him under a yoke, as I said yesterday. If, in order to help someone, we must dedicate him, so to speak, to the service of the banks for ten, 15 or 20 years of his life, I maintain that we are helping him the wrong way. If, for instance, a man buys his son a car, knowing his son cannot drive, and he buys him one anyway and his son goes over a cliff, I feel that this father has acted foolishly and irresponsibly.

That is how the federal government intends to help students, by putting a rope around their necks.

My second point concerns respect for the constitution. If we must indeed help, we must do it within the constitution. All members of this house know that education comes exclusively under the jurisdiction of the provinces and that this is guaranteed by the constitution.

Yesterday I heard an hon. member claim that the rights of the province of Quebec were safeguarded, but I wonder to what degree, when the interests are to be paid by the federal government. The students are referred to the chartered banks, and if they agree to lend them money, the government guarantees to the chartered banks payment of interest for five years.

Now, I do not understand how the Liberal members can claim that the rights of the province of Quebec are safeguarded simply because the federal government pays the interest to the banks. It is precisely on this point that we object. Whether it is given directly or indirectly, the money is given anyway, and it will come out of the taxes levied in the province of Quebec. That is where we say that the federal government, through this legislation, is encroaching on the rights of the province of Quebec, as well as on the rights of the other provinces.

That is why, generally speaking, Mr. Speaker, we, in the Social Credit rally, want to introduce an amendment which will permit the government to respect the constitution and guarantee to the students the amounts of money they require to complete their education.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Quebec West (Mr. Plourde):

> That the Bill C-110 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should consider the opportunity to present new legislation which would authorize the Bank of Canada to supply to the provinces the necessary credits to permit them to fulfil completely their responsibilities in the field of education.

Mr. Speaker, we have received several telegrams from members of the teaching profession in support of our amendment. The students of the province of Quebec realize also that they need assistance, but they feel it should not be forthcoming as provided in Bill No. C-110; they want the responsible government, that of Quebec in the circumstances, to help them without any strings attached. That is why they object to this legislation. I have here a telegram which was sent by Montreal university students to the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), house leader of our party.

Mr. Grégoire, Ralliement Créditistes, M.P., Parliament Buildings, Ottawa.

Sir,

We are quite disappointed with the government's attitude with respect to Bill No. C-110 concerning a student loan program. In our opinion, it is inadmissible that the federal government should encroach on a field of exclusive provincial jurisdiction. Under the circumstances, you Quebec members cannot vote in favour of this optional policy. The true solution to the problem of general access to education is free tuition. As you know, passing Bill No. C-110 would make difficult any sort of education planning in the provinces. We feel that you must ask the government to return to the provinces their fields of taxation—

That is precisely the point I emphasized yesterday. The provinces should be given back, once and for all, their taxation rights. Then the federal government would not, like a collector, have to steal taxes in order to return to the provinces the amount it is willing to hand over.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Gauthier: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Béchard: Could the hon. member tell us the date of the telegram and also let us know who signed it? Moreover, can he tell us the date of the meeting during which the university students came to that decision?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the telegram is dated July 16, and signed by the president of the general student association of the University of Montreal, Mr. Michel Vaillancourt.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, can the hon. member tell us whether a general assembly of the students of the University of Montreal was held since the bill was introduced in the house?

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member for Bonaventure mean that the president of the student body is not authorized to send telegrams on behalf of the association members?

[Mr. Gauthier.]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member certainly knows that when telegrams are received, as in the case of the truckers' association the other day, nobody checks whether the organization concerned held a meeting. We take the word of the person who signed the telegram, particularly when it is the association's president. I think that the hon. member who just asked this question should be bright enough to understand this.

An hon. Member: The telegram was probably sent by a member of the Social Credit.

Mr. Gauthier: An hon. member just interjected the remark that it probably was sent by the Social Credit. For his information, I must tell him that the telegram was sent from the University of Montreal.

[Text]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Perhaps at this point I should put the proposed amendment to the house.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier, seconded by Mr. Plourde, moved:

That the Bill C-110 be not now read a second time, but that it be resolved that in the opinion of this house the government should consider the opportunity to present a new legislation which would authorize the Bank of Canada to supply to the provinces the necessary credits to permit them to fulfil completely their responsibilities in the field of education.

I must advise the house that I am not too sure the amendment is in order, and I would be ready to give a ruling, unless some hon. members wish to comment on the legality of the proposed amendment.

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, on that point, I would ask you to refer to Beauchesne's fourth edition, in English of course since we are still waiting for the French version, in particular to citation 382, page 277, which reads as follows:

[Text]

It is also competent to a member who desires to place on record any special reasons for not agreeing to the second reading of a bill, to move as an amendment to the question, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, policy, or provisions of the bill, or expressing opinions as to any circumstances connected with its introduction, or prosecution—

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, in my opinion, that is exactly what we are doing now by moving this amendment. We want to indicate that we disagree with this bill. As stated in Beauchesne's citation, we do not want the motion for second reading of the bill now before us to be agreed to, and that is why our amendment states "that the bill be not now read a second time". In so doing, we adhere strictly to the principle stated in Beauchesne's citation No. 382.

Our amendment is, in fact, a resolution declaratory of some principle adverse to the principle of the bill now under consideration. Instead of setting forth the principle stated in the legislation dealing with loans by the federal government, we are setting forth an adverse principle, one dealing with bursaries or assistance to students, through the provincial governments. This is in accordance with the provisions of citation No. 382, and I am of the opinion that it is the way suggested by Beauchesne's Parliamentary Rules and Forms to have the house consider an amendment like the one now being submitted to the house.

[Text]

Mr. Knowles: I wonder if I may say a word on a point of order. May I indicate, first of all, that as I see it the passing of this amendment would mean the defeat of Bill No. C-110. We have indicated that we give the bill qualified support; in other words, we are prepared to vote for it and see it brought into law. Therefore—though I have not had a chance to consult my colleagues and see what views they may have—it would be my view to vote against this amendment if it were allowed.

However, it seems to me serious consideration should be given to the question Your Honour has raised. It appears to me that the amendment is in order. First of all, an amendment of this kind cannot quibble; it must imply opposition to the motion before us. The hon. members to my left do not quibble. They are opposed to the bill in its present form, so the amendment is in order on that score. In the second place, an amendment of this type must offer some principle adverse to or different from the principle, policy or provisions of the bill. Certainly this is what the proposed amendment does; it submits for our consideration something which is quite different from what the government proposes.

I do not have at hand examples of this kind of resolution—perhaps, if I had a minute, I could find them—but I know there have been many in the past. Amendments similar to the one now proposed have been ruled out because they were worded in such a way as to try to say yes and no at the same time, but this resolution makes no attempt to do that. It says "no" to the bill as it is and puts forward an alternative proposition.

Therefore, though I do not agree with the substance of the amendment, it seems to me that it is within the four corners of citation 382, and unless Your Honour has some better reasons for taking a contrary course I think it should be allowed as being in order.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Marcoux (Quebec-Montmorency): Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to discuss the validity of the proposed amendment, because I am not in a position to determine the value of the arguments put forth in its favour.

However, I should like to deal briefly with the reasons given for introducing this amendment. First, I want to refer to an article written in Le Droit by Mr. Charpentier, who indicates that only the leader and the deputy leader of the Ralliement Créditiste—

Mr. Grégoire: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker. You will recognize that we are now discussing the validity of the amendment. Now, if the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency wants to speak against the amendment, he will have an opportunity to do so when we debate the matter before the vote.

The hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency will get his chance to speak to the amendment if he wishes, but, at the present time he is wandering from the question now before us, that is, whether or not the amendment is in order. Therefore, I think that you should ask the hon. member to follow the rules and to keep to the subject before us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course we are now on a point of order, and I presume that the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency should confine his remarks strictly to the question of whether or not the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Roberval is in order. I suggest that the hon. member confine his remarks to that particular point.

Mr. Marcoux: I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for accepting the opinion of the hon. member for Lapointe. I am sure that he was right.

My intended remarks were along the same line as those of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), who gave several reasons indicating why he would be opposed to the amendment, while still contending that the amendment was in order.

I merely wanted to invoke similar arguments as those put forward by the hon.

member for Winnipeg North Centre. But as I am most respectful of the rules of the house, I will continue my observations at some other appropriate time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Serious arguments have been put forward to the effect that the amendment moved by the hon. member for Roberval was in order, and I thank the hon. members.

With leave of the house, I would like for the next few minutes to consider the various aspects of the proposed amendment, and in the meantime, I would call on the next speaker, the hon. member for Macleod (Mr. Kindt), to go ahead with his remarks, after which I think I will be in a position to make a ruling on the proposed amendment.

[Text]

Mr. Lawrence E. Kindt (Macleod): I have learned a couple of things in the last half hour which I did not know before as a member of this house. I have learned how to make two speeches on one subject and how to get the Speaker to agree to an extension of the time allotted despite a clear statement that the hon. member for Roberval had reached a conclusion. Last evening, as reported in Hansard on page 5535, the hon. member for Roberval at the end of his remarks said "In conclusion, I ask the minister to authorize the Bank of Canada—" and so on. Then he sat down. After he had sat down I, being the next to speak, rose and said "Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?"

Since the adjournment yesterday the group in the far corner decided they wished to bring in an amendment. Today they came before this assembly and were successful in having the hon. member's time extended so he could make not just a few additional remarks but a 15 minute speech and, all in all, take up an additional hour or more of the time of this assembly.

Now who is taking up the time of this house? Who is preventing us from getting ahead? I did not want to let this opportunity pass without making some comment about it, because it grinds me to the core. This thing which has taken place right under our eyes is one of those damnable things which has slipped by the Speaker, who in all good faith—and I will back him up—thought the member in the far corner was genuine in wishing to make only a few additional remarks. What has transpired since, particularly the advancing of the motion which has just been put forward, shows that the whole thing was a planned intrigue. That kind of manoeuvre is not good practice.

Now we are back on the subject of student loans. I want to say to the Minister of Finance —and most of my remarks will be directed to him—that because we are all in favour of student loans no one will fault him for bringing in such a measure; in fact we are all in a position to compliment him in this regard. But I do think he ought to give further consideration to some of the machinery that he plans to set up in order to administer these loans.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, let us go back to the question of the interest rate which the minister mentioned yesterday. He said he understood that the interest rate charged by the banks would be around 5¾ per cent. I ask the house and the minister to consider this point. There is no risk to any lending institution; the loan made by a bank is fully guaranteed as to interest and principal, and if the borrower dies the minister pays the bill. Therefore the question of risk, which usually determines bank interest rates, in this case does not arise because the loan is fully guaranteed.

Let us look at the total value of the loans to be made. The minister said students may apply for loans in the period one to five years. Then when the student had graduated, or shortly thereafter, there would be a period of between two and ten years in which the student could repay the loan. The minister also said that about $40 million would be required yearly to operate the provisions of this bill.

If you do a little bit of mathematics and assume that during the first five years $200 million would be loaned to students under this program, and if the students are given from two to ten years in which to pay back the loans, it is conceivable that before this program levels out into something in the nature of a revolving fund, something in the neighbourhood of $800 million will have been lent to students and will be outstanding. The minister said yesterday the figure would be somewhere around $500 million; other hon. members have mentioned $800 million. In doing some figuring of my own I think perhaps $800 million in a matter of 10 or 12 years, when this levelling out process has taken place, would be about the figure that would be reached. If this is so, when you calculate the interest at 5¾ per cent on $800 million, this equals $46 million in interest each year that will be paid to the banks of Canada. This is a pretty big gravy train.

This is the amount of money which this legislation is going to place in the hands of the banks.

We all know that the banks are doing a great job, but what we want to do in this regard is set up a piece of machinery which will mean that something less than $46 million in interest will be paid out by the students and taxpayers of Canada; because, as the bill stipulates, the taxpayers of Canada will pay the shot until six months after the student graduates. The federal government and students will eventually pay the total interest on the loan as well as repay the principal.

I ask the Minister of Finance, what is going to happen when you lend $800 million through the banks of this country? That is going to act as a sponge and absorb a large proportion of the loanable funds. In other words it will have a tendency to raise interest rates. It will also have a tendency to make it more difficult for provincial governments, municipal governments and local governments to obtain loans; and when they do obtain such loans, in all probability as a result of this program they will have to pay higher interest rates.

I want to see the Minister of Finance evolve a plan which will overcome this difficulty. If the minister looks into the economics of the program he will be able to come up with a solution. So I say to him that the thing to do is take another look at the industrial development bank and its methods of financing. They issue bonds and debentures which are taken up by the Bank of Canada. We know how they operate with regard to expenses; after they have paid the expenses, including the cost of the funds obtained from the Bank of Canada, the net revenues go back to the general revenue of the Bank of Canada.

I want to see a similar plan developed in order that students and taxpayers of Canada will get the benefit. The way the Minister of Finance has this program set up, it will go to the banks and to Bay street. It depends upon the bias of the Minister of Finance as to whether he wants this program carried out so the students and taxpayers receive the benefit, or whether Bay street and the national banks receive the benefit.

There is no use in the minister laughing. If he does not know enough about economics to set up a plan that will work for the benefit of the students and taxpayers, a plan such as I have just described, then somebody else should be minister of finance; there is no question about that. The Secretary of State for External Affairs can walk out of the chamber; but let me say to those hon. gentlemen who sit on the treasury benches that they are asking the people of Canada and the students of Canada to pay $46 million in interest annually to the banks that may be involved in this program.

I think there are alternative ways in which this program can be set up. We have the precedent set by the industrial development bank. If the minister has made studies of monetary theories and banking he will know that this program should not be set up in the way he has proposed. I ask him to look into these matters and provide the students and taxpayers with the benefits that could be derived from this program which is now set up to cost $46 million per year in interest. The economics of such a scheme are sound, as I have already indicated, and if it is not put into effect it will be because of one of three things; either the bias of the Minister of Finance, his ignorance of monetary theories, or his inertia to undertake anything that is not quite orthodox.

I now want to deal with other phases of this program, Mr. Speaker. Who gets the loan? Now the hon. member who is sitting beside the Minister of Finance is laughing and having some fun; but let me tell the hon. gentleman opposite that when we get into the details of this measure we shall have more to say. I want to conclude, Mr. Speaker, because the Chair is going to make a ruling on some matters following my remarks. There are a lot of other problems in addition to the one I have already mentioned, but the interest rate is of paramount importance. No one will get off interest free under the plan I have advocated. I am not advocating social credit. I am advocating a plan similar to the industrial development bank which could be implemented by this government or by any other government in power and which would give both the taxpayer and the student the benefit. If the Minister of Finance or the Secretary of State has not thought through it they had better do so right away.

To finish the thought regarding who gets the loan and how this will be determined, under this bill the Minister of Finance has shifted that decision to the provinces. It is a situation which has qualifications, but we are not told how it is determined as to which student will succeed. In other words, one student who really needs the money might receive a loan. Another student may have money in his pocket and want to invest his own money and use interest free money provided by the government. So you can see there are a lot of problems in determining who gets a loan and how it is to be administered.

I am glad to see that these loans provided by the bill will be available not only to university students but to students of technical, vocational and even normal schools. I think there will need to be some extremely intricate population studies in order to determine who should be trained, where the need lies for training, and also to ensure the direction of students into fields where the need is greatest. For example, I have in mind dentistry, medicine, engineering etc. In other words, students should not be left to their own understanding of the problems but should be given some guidance through these population studies.

In addition to making these loans to students the facilities which are to be built at universities are extremely important. If we are going to get several thousand additional students in our universities it is necessary to increase the facilities of those various institutions. Unlike the hon. member for Lapointe I hope all provinces will enter into this scheme wholeheartedly so that our children may have the benefit of being sent to a school in Quebec or to some other institution in another part of the country. Any program of loans which encourages students to train and prepare themselves is, of course, in the interests of Canada. I have long advocated a measure to provide loans to students because I fully appreciate what a help such a measure would have been to me during my undergraduate and graduate days.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before recognizing the next speaker, it would probably be in order for me to comply with the wish of the house and give a ruling as to whether the amendment or proposal moved a moment ago by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) is in order.

As I said a moment ago, I was far from sure that the amendment was in order. At first sight, the hon. member's proposal seemed a new proposal, different from the one which is before the house. On the other hand, following the argument raised by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire), I admit that the amendment, if you can call it that, or the proposal is not adverse to the principle of the bill.

I feel I must give special attention to the arguments raised in favour of the legality of that amendment by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and by the hon. member for Lapointe.

As there are serious doubts about the proposal or amendment, I think it would be in order for the Chair to give the benefit of the doubt to the hon. member who made that proposal, while pointing out to the hon. members and the house that the proposal is accepted because it does not extend the scope of the proposal now under consideration and that it must not be considered as permission to extend the limits of the debate, which of course will have to deal with the bill now before the house.

Mr. Gérard Chapdelaine (Sherbrooke): Mr. Speaker, I feel it is my duty to take part in this debate as a representative from a region where is located the most flourishing university of the country and on the border of which is located a university recognized throughout Canada, that is the universities of Sherbrooke, and Bishop's at Lennoxville.

Another reason why I wish to speak on this issue is that I live in a province which is undergoing deep changes in all fields, but especially as far as education is concerned.

I should like to say that I am in favour of any form of assistance to students, even if that system should run students into debt, as the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) pointed out, because I feel it is better to be in debt at the end of one's studies than not to complete those studies.

I know what that means personally, because I had to get into debt to finish my studies. As everybody knows, that is a painful situation and it may be that the student who has to work because of his financial troubles will not benefit from his studies as much as he should. Our students must not, on account of a lack of funds, be placed in the situation where they will one day have to admit that they are not as competent as they would have been if they had had no worry besides their studies.

Even though it is incomplete and unconstitutional, as I will show later on, the proposal under consideration is worth while, and the government was well-intentioned in introducing this legislation.

As I said, I believe the bill is definitely incomplete, and particularly unconstitutional. I should like to go over it, step by step, starting with section 2 giving the definition of "bank":

"bank" means a bank to which the Bank Act applies.

Now, under the Bank Act, the caisses populaires will not be allowed to make loans to students under this legislation. Failure to authorize the caisses populaires to act as lending institutions under this act is a slight on the province of Quebec, for there are more than 1,300 branches of caisses populaires in the province of Quebec, all sound institutions which can, just as well as the banks, comply with the requirements of this bill.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, here is how section 2(e) defines "certificate of eligibility":

—a certificate in prescribed form issued or caused to be issued by an appropriate authority relating to a qualifying student—

I read the whole bill and I failed to find what is a "qualifying student", what are the requirements asked of a student to become eligible for those loans.

I think there should be a definition stipulating that any student who passes his examinations is eligible to apply for a loan. I think that should have been specified in the bill.

The bill provides that only full time university students may benefit from those loans.

There are in my riding, as in all university towns, a growing number of adults who wish to get a university education by taking evening courses, or who would like to go back for a year in order to get enough credits to obtain a B.A. or some other diploma they could show the boss and thereby get a promotion.

I feel it was a great mistake, in this bill, not to have adults also entitled to those loans so they could improve their education.

Now, there is another point I think was overlooked in the determination of the required qualifications to obtain such a loan. I refer to a student who spends two years in the same grade. Under this legislation, would he be eligible for the same loan the second year? Must the amount of $5,000 be spread over five consecutive successful years in university, or will the student who has failed one year still be entitled to the loan for that year?

Nothing in the bill covers the case where a student, after completing his university studies and obtained the amount of $5,000, should decide to specialize. Will he have to pay back his loan immediately, that is, after a six-month period, when he may still find himself taking courses following a five year period, according to the requirements of his studies, his specialty or doctorate?

In my opinion, this point should have been set out clearly in the bill.

Clause 9 also provides that:

The minister may pay to a bank a prescribed amount in respect of any sum collected by a bank on behalf of Her Majesty from a borrower after any payment is made by the minister to that bank pursuant to section 7, in respect of a guaranteed student loan made to that borrower.

I think that the amount in question should have been specified in this clause, and if the amounts claimed by the banks are too high and the government has to pay an unreasonable amount for the collection thereof, I feel that this will increase the rate of interest on each loan.

Now that I have raised some points and mentioned some deficiencies in this bill, I should like to deal with the constitutional part thereof.

I do not want to speak of federal intrusion in a provincial field because many others have dealt with that matter. As far as I am concerned, I do not think that the fact that student loans are provided by the federal government constitutes an intrusion in provincial affairs. In my opinion, this is strictly a business proposition and students are free to borrow or not to borrow the money, according to their own convictions. Besides, the sums to be borrowed under this legislation will not necessarily be used entirely to pay for their studies. The borrower is free to use his money as he sees fit.

I do not think that it is any intrusion in the field of education to offer money to someone with the idea that, later on the amount will be used to complete his studies, because the student can use the money for all sorts of things. In my opinion, this is purely and simply a business proposition.

But the constitutional aspect that I want to raise concerns section 15 of the bill, which says:

A guaranteed student loan made by a bank to a borrower not of full age, and interest thereon other than interest payable under section 6, is recoverable by a bank from the borrower as though the borrower had been of full age at the time the loan was made.

The point is, Mr. Speaker, that in the province of Quebec we have a civil code. We are governed by it and the legal capacity of people is determined by the civil code of the province of Quebec, while in the other provinces, the legal capacity is determined by the common law.

Under section 986 of the civil code of the province of Quebec, we see that:

Those legally incapable of contracting are:
Minors, in the cases and according to the provisions contained in this code;

Then there is a list of other persons unable to enter into contracts.

Cases where minors can enter into contracts are listed in the following section which gives exceptions and details. Section 1005 states the following:

A minor who is a banker, trader or mechanic is not relievable for cause of lesion from contracts made for the purposes of his business or trade.

There is no mention of students in that section since it mentions only bankers, traders or mechanics. Consequently, the minors in question, under that act, are neither bankers, traders nor mechanics.

There is also section 1011 which could alleviate suspicions. It says that the money paid during the minority cannot be exacted, unless it is proved that what has been so paid has turned to their profit.

This section might justify section 15 of the bill, but I think that this case does not apply either, because this section provides mostly for the cases where under age students involved sell or buy something for a price and try to obtain repayment of the money they would have paid, when they would come of age or even before when they were unable to enter into a contract.

Even though this section could remove in the minister's mind the suspicions that the government certainly has about those loans—because if it had no suspicions with regard to minors, this section would have been unnecessary—even though this section could lead them to believe it would be legal, I think that the fact alone that the federal government attempts to legislate on the legal capacity of the Quebec people makes the whole measure, and not only section 15, unconstitutional.

Consequently, section 15 proposes an amendment to the civil code of the province of Quebec, that only the Quebec legislature is entitled to make under the constitution.

If we allow this bill to be passed in this house, it will be a dangerous precedent, because then, it will be possible federal legislation, to amend the civil code of the province of Quebec and to insert in it sections such as section 15 of the present bill.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Chapdelaine: Certainly.

Mr. Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, is the hon. member aware of the fact that the province of Quebec does not intend to take advantage of this legislation?

Mr. Grégoire: The bill does not say so.

Mr. Chapdelaine: That may be, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, I have the impression that during the last federal-provincial conference Quebec stated its intention of setting up its own student loan system, however, that is no excuse for us, Quebec members, to let the federal government enact legislation concerning the civil code of our province, even if Quebec does not intend to take advantage of such legislation.

Once this legislation is passed, it will amend our civil code, thus creating a precedent in the legal annals of this country. I think this cannot be accepted by Quebec.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Chapdelaine: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Paul: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. member not think that this legislation, in its present wording, can also apply to other provinces, that is as far as other provinces are concerned, the matter comes under provincial jurisdiction, not exclusively in the case of the province of Quebec, since education comes under exclusive provincial jurisdiction? Besides, does the hon. member think that there can be encroachment by the federal government under the pretext that this might offer or constitute assistance for the other provinces?

Mr. Chapdelaine: Mr. Speaker, the matter I am now discussing is simply the legality of section 15 of this bill.

I think that common law is constituted by federal and provincial legislation passed by the other provinces, except Quebec, and if this section is accepted by Quebec, it is also accepted by the other provinces, because they are governed by common law. In the province of Quebec, it is different. In fact, we are not governed by common law, but we have our own laws, our civil code. Therefore, we cannot accept to have this section included in legislation which could, in future, be accepted in the province of Quebec.

In my opinion, the only legal and constitutional way to draw up such a clause would be to add the following at the end: As if the latter had been of age at the time the loan was granted, except in the province of Quebec where the legal capacity of citizens is determined by the civil code of the province of Quebec.

Then, if the province of Quebec wishes to establish its own system of loans to students, it could legislate and amend the civil code by stipulating in its bill: For the purposes of loans to students in the province of Quebec, those under age will be considered as being of age at the time of the loan.

But at the present time, a federal piece of legislation changes the legal capacity of those under age in Quebec and I feel that it is entirely unconstitutional and that the principle is unacceptable to the citizens of Quebec.

Those are, Mr. Speaker, the few remarks which I wanted to make about the bill under consideration. Before moving passage of this bill, I believe that the Minister of Finance, in consultation with the Minister of Justice, should find another formula to amend that clause. He should ask the advice of experts or others. In any case, the present provisions of section 15 are unacceptable and I do not think that a single Quebec citizen could vote in favour of that clause, because it would be to vote in favour of a very dangerous precedent.

Even in the good faith of students or of those covered by that bill can be accepted beforehand, I feel that we cannot, on that matter of principle, support such a bill, because it affects directly what, to my mind, is the most sacred right of the Quebec citizens, the right to draw up their own civil legislation.

Mr. H. C. Harley (Halton): I am pleased to be able to participate in this debate today and speak in support of the student loans bill for post-secondary school students. I wish to take a few minutes of the time of the house to make a suggestion which I hope the government will take into consideration in the near future. I am sure most members are aware that at the present time the armed services recruit people in their last years of higher education, then pay for their final years of schooling. In return the students serve either three, four or five years in the armed services.

I should like to suggest to the government that they consider this method of repayment of the loan instead of cash. We could possibly call it a time repayment. The recipient of the student loan would donate, if you want to use that word, his services for a period of time in his chosen profession to the government of Canada. This time would be in proportion to the investment that Canada had made in his career. During his period of service he could be sent anywhere overseas—I am thinking particularly of the backward countries of Asia and Africa—where his ability, skills and training would help others to help themselves. It would be the primary occupation of this person to teach these backward people so that they in turn could pass on this information—to others of their own race and their own land.

In this way, Mr. Speaker, we could help the underdeveloped and poorly educated peoples to progress with their own educational systems. This would then become part of Canada's external aid program. Canada would be doing this as part of a long range aid program to these countries, and at the same time would benefit her own Canadian citizens by providing them with needed help for their education via this student loans measure.

Once the person had served his time, whatever time was decided upon, he would then be free to undertake any employment he wished in any place. It is a well known fact, Mr. Speaker, that many of our Canadian people who are highly trained and educated migrate to the United States. This is one export, that of Canadian skills and brains, that we should endeavour to decrease. I feel the system I have suggested would encourage Canadians, after this period of service was up, to remain in this country and use their skills and their knowledge for the benefit of Canadians as a whole. If thought desirable, a further clause could be added to the bill requiring Canadian residence for a specific period of time as a condition of the granting of such loan.

So far as the amendment is concerned and the feeling of some members that this is unconstitutional, I am not a constitutional expert but I should like to point out that this bill does not create a precedent in the matter of federal aid for education. I would point members to the fact that after world war II thousands of veterans received their education under the auspices of the Department of Veterans Affairs. That department paid their fees, gave them a book allowance, and paid them a monthly allowance while they attended university. Many thousands of veterans used this federal aid to obtain their education and are now using their skills and their training to the benefit of Canada and Canadians. Without this aid that was provided by the federal government, many of these students would not have had the opportunity to continue their studies.

I promised the house I would only take a few minutes of its time, Mr. Speaker. In summary I would just like to say that the suggestion I have made to the government that the money be repaid by donating their time, in lieu of money, to Canada's external aid program would benefit many different people and many different areas. First, the student would receive his education under the auspices of the student loans act. Second, Canada's external aid program would be increased and we would offer greater aid to the backward countries. Third, Canada would have a continuing supply of well trained and educated men and women.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Queens): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have the opportunity to say a few words on this legislation, and like the hon. member who has just sat down I am utterly sincere when I say "a few words." I was impressed with his suggestion and I think it should receive favourable consideration.

I am going to be brief because essentially I agree with this legislation. Sometimes it is said that parliamentarians take an awful long time to say yes, but that is the essence of the parliamentary system. As I say, I am going to be brief because I am one of those who believe the House of Commons should not be sitting in July and August. If we have come to the stage that it takes the House of Commons ten months to transact the people's business, all I can say is that I have never been able to see anything sacrosanct about the months of July and August and why these should be included among those ten months devoted to our work in Ottawa. Also, since we are talking about youth it would be a good thing to allow some of us young if not young looking members to spend some time with the members of our families, and it is not easy to do that labouring in heat oppressed Ottawa.

I shall not, like some members, give a catalogue of universities. Much of my life has been spent in universities. I recall a former professor who used to say in high dudgeon when he was dissatisfied with administration policy, "I have been kicked out of better universities than this." I have never had that actually happen to me, but over the years I have come to know something about the tremendous needs of universities and I do have the honour to represent a constituency which has two fine educational institutions whose problems are similar, if not identical, to those facing every institution of higher learning in the country. St. Dunstan's University is an institution which for over a century has served the whole of Prince Edward Island, with students coming to it from beyond the province and indeed beyond the country. Prince of Wales college is a junior college maintained by the provincial government.

I am in agreement with those who have said heretofore that while this is important it is not sufficient, and in my opinion it is not so important as some of the other youth plans of the government. The youth plans which the Liberal party had when it was seeking to be the government were certainly impressive, and if I may give the government a bit of political advice—and I should not do this as a member of the opposition—one of the problems it is facing today is that our young people are becoming a bit disillusioned and disturbed by the non-fulfilment of some of the government's promises. The scholarship plan was an important one.

It has already been laid on the record and the story well told that universities today face great problems in the provision of buildings and facilities. I would not say that there were not some potential university students in the country who cannot finance their education, but I think all educators know this problem is not nearly as grievous as it once was. I would not suggest either that it is a good thing for young people to struggle and strive to take on all sorts of extra moonlighting jobs in order to complete their university training. Perhaps for a Calvinist I am a little weak-kneed in stating this point, but even though I did do it myself I would not prescribe it as a recipe for all aspiring students. Therefore I commend the government for what has been done. But the government must do more.

We have been talking about priority legislation. Sometimes we wonder whether this is more important than that, whether something is so important that we must do it before we can have an adjournment, and whether something else may be delayed. Let us not delude ourselves. There is nothing as important as the very subject with which we are coping today. Someone has said that references to the future of our country and its human potential are clichés. Of course they are but none the less true. We may want vast public works; we may want a lot of things, but if we do not have a highly trained group of young people to cope with the complexities of modern life in this highly advanced country, then we will have failed.

I know there are problems of jurisdiction. I know that education is, if I may say so, the sacred right of the provinces. I know too that in education, as in many other problems, the resources of some of our provinces are not sufficient to meet the needs. So what do we do under those circumstances?

In a publication which recently came to me, "Financing Higher Education in Canada" published by the Canadian universities foundation, I note that in the years 1958 to 1963 federal government support to universities totalled $245 million. We cannot say that the federal government is not involved in education. Many examples of this have been cited. Nor can we ever expect this country, composed as it is of provinces of such varying resources, so unequal in wealth, will ever see a situation where the demands upon the federal government through whatever agencies may be involved will not become greater and greater rather than diminish.

This is not the place to enter into the kind of argument which the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) made yesterday, although I believe it is a tremendously important field to which Canadians, and certainly Canadian legislators, must soon direct themselves. As a great Canadian scholar said the other day, so often we find that those in the dominion field of government approach the provinces with such timorous politeness, and it seems that very little is left on the dominion side of things.

As I was thinking of the importance of this subject, Mr. Speaker, hoping that I might join my voice with those of my colleagues who have supported the government, and not ignoring the very valid criticisms which have come from all parties in the house, my mind went back to a very important little story that I read some time ago about that wonderful part of the United States, Vermont, which, at its best, is very much like the maritime provinces. Dorothy Canfield Fisher in her book the "Vermont Tradition" tells a story which strikes me as being most germane to our discussion. In her home town there was a great problem about highways and an urgently pressing problem about a bridge, and in mountain communities bridges are tremendously important.

So this little town meeting, this very gem of democracy, was faced with this problem. But they were also faced with the problem of educating their local youth.

> In a mountain town with flash floods roaring over the banks of its watercourses after hard rains, bridges have an imperious priority. Our bridges needed reinforcement, not only from recurring high water, but against the great tonnage of modern traffic. It would be dangerous not to rebuild them. It would take all the resources of a poor mountain town to keep our bridges in repair. To add to that expense the enormous cost of a new school—insane.
> The tangible needs of the body and the impalpable needs of the mind and spirit stood up to see which was the stronger. The material needs outshouted the ideal. They sounded real and actual. The little flickering flame of responsibility for the future of the town's children died down to a faint glimmer in the hearts of the men and women whose votes would in a few moments make the decision.

Then up sprang Patrick Thompson, the son of an immigrant, and he said:

> "We are being told that our town cannot afford to keep its bridges safe and also to provide for its children a preparation for life that will give them a fair chance alongside other American children.
> That's what we are being told. Not one of us here really believes it. We just can't think what to say back. But suppose it were true—Then I say, if we have to choose, 'Let the bridges fall down.' What kind of a town would we rather have, 50 years from now—a place where nitwit folks go back and forth over good bridges? Or a town with brainy, well-educated people capable of holding their own in the modern way of life? You know which of those two is really wanted by every one of us here. I say, 'Let the bridges fall down.' "

That is also my scales of priorities. I support the government in this step and I hope it will be one of many which will follow, longer, more venturesome and more helpful in this important field of education.

Mr. R. W. Prittie (Burnaby-Richmond): This is the third day we have spent on this debate. I do not think we should apologize for that, because we are dealing with a subject which is of great importance. The subject is worthy of our time. I wish I could say the bill presently before us is worth the time we are giving it.

Inevitably, when the needs of higher education in Canada are discussed, one of the central points at issue, and one to which reference has been made frequently in the last three days, concerns the role of the federal government in the field of education having regard to the provisions of section 93 of the British North America Act, and I shall have something to say about that later.

I have followed the whole of this debate closely—I might say that I have been waiting for my own turn to speak—and I have not missed one of the speeches made in the last three days. During that time it has occurred to me—and this may be of interest—that though we have five parties represented in this house at the present time we really ought to have six. It is apparent from the speeches of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) the hon.

member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul) and some others that their opinions are completely at odds with those of their party on this question. I have watched these differences develop on the question of federal-provincial finances. Then there were serious divergencies of view on the flag issue. These disagreements came up again when the administration of the Eskimos was under discussion. They are becoming so sharp and so frequent that I suggest there is room for six parties.

Mr. Pigeon: We are not slaves in our party.

An hon. Member: Stick to the bill.

Mr. Prittie: I want to congratulate some of the backbench Liberal members—the younger members of that party—on the good work they have done in praising this bill before the house. I know it falls so far short of their expectations and of their promises during the election campaign that privately they must be very disappointed. Despite this they have done an excellent job of concealing their disappointment and praising the bill.

But to get to the bill itself. A number of speakers have referred to the plan for student veterans which was adopted after the second world war. That plan was administered by the Department of Veterans Affairs and I think it was the best student aid plan we have ever had in Canada. I emphasize the fact that it was a federal plan and that as far as I know there were no objections to it from any part of the country. It provided for the payment both of tuition fees and of a living allowance. As I say, it was a good plan though not an ideal plan. At the time of its introduction, the minister of veterans affairs said there had to be an element of struggle; the student should not be given too much money. And there certainly was an element of struggle. Many of us who received our education under that plan had to do a great deal of outside work in order to make ends meet. I agree with the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Moreau). I do not think this element of struggle is desirable. I believe students attending universities and other institutions of higher learning should attend classes, read in libraries and take part in discussion groups. I do not think they should spend their time working in service stations, digging ditches, cutting lumber and so on. These activities are supposed to be valuable in character building, but I have my doubts about it.

Mr. Fisher: I bet the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) did that.

Mr. Rapp: Do not disturb him.

Mr. Prittie: It seems to me that it is only in times of emergency that we do things really well. In 1939 we took a sluggish, feeble economy and built it into an efficient economic machine. In the years immediately after the war we introduced a plan for the education of veterans of which thousands of Canadians, some young and some not so young, were able to take advantage. I wonder where we would be today in the staffing of our professions if that plan had not been undertaken. There must be thousands of teachers, doctors, scientists, lawyers and accountants who, but for this scheme, would have been unable to receive an education qualifying them for those positions. Now, only a relatively few years later, the plan has virtually come to an end and we are back to the old way of doing things.

This situation means that students of high ability do not as a rule encounter much difficulty. They are equipped intellectually to benefit from all the best scholarships. Again, students who come from high income homes do not have very much trouble. But the vast majority of Canadian students are in neither of these categories; they are the ordinary people who staff our offices and classrooms, go into general medical practices and fill our professions, and for many of them getting through university represents a difficult struggle.

There are certain things which I think we should do on a national basis. Certain things are already done on a national basis, and they are done quite well. Unemployment insurance is handled on a national basis and I do not think anyone now would want it to be otherwise. Hospital planning is a subject of fairly successful joint federal-provincial arrangements. Family allowances are handled on a national basis and the proposed pension plan will be handled in this way except for some compromise about the allocation of funds which, I think, is unfortunate. We should consider doing other things on a national basis. We always run into a constitutional problem whenever education is discussed in this parliament. I do not know of any country which is so cursed with constitutional problems and arguments as is Canada. I know as well as anyone else that section 93 does give jurisdiction in this field to the provinces and I will express my own personal views at this point because I think my party, along with others, still believes in the principle of section 93. I am not advocating that all levels of education should be under the jurisdiction of the federal government. But I do think the level of higher or post-secondary education as mentioned in the bill could well be a federal responsibility. I say this because in the first place I believe most Canadians will accept it. Many spokesmen, particularly from Quebec, might tell me differently. They may be right; I am not sure. But I am quite sure of my opinion that in the English speaking provinces the majority would not object and might even favour federal jurisdiction over higher or university education, and perhaps over technical and vocational education as well. In the second place, the provinces do not do a particularly good job in this field. The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Deachman) put it bluntly yesterday. He said it was a big flop as far as the provinces are concerned and he quoted figures to show how poorly they supported university financing. I think the federal authority could do a better job.

Again, students travel widely among the provinces in the course of getting their education. Certain universities specialize in particular fields and I see nothing wrong about the movement which takes place both at graduate and undergraduate level. In addition, the federal government is already involved in the field of education at the present time. In the public accounts committee the other day the staff of treasury board presented us with a list of federal subsidies. It is entitled "Provision in estimates for grants, subsidies and special payments" and I shall refer only to those which deal with education. Under the heading of education and research, for the fiscal year 1964-65 the total amount of money to be expended by the federal government is $156,288,800. This is down, unfortunately, from 1963-64, when the figure was $204,948,290. The federal government now makes available, in direct grants to universities, $27,226,000; and grants to universities for research amount to $25,195,000. For other types of research the amount is $3,038,500; for scholarships, fellowships, etc., the amount is $74,700; and for vocational training and other types of training in that field the figure is $100,754,600. So the government is well into this field.

I realize that this question of federal participation in education is a touchy one and we hear many speeches against it; but I think that during this debate is the time for this view to be expressed, because many Canadians hold this view. Quite frankly, for the benefit of the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and some others, in this field I am a centralizer and I would like to see established a federal office of education.

A number of people have said recently that we should examine the priorities of this country. I believe the suggestion came from the premier of Manitoba—the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan) mentioned it the other day, and the Toronto Globe and Mail mentioned it this morning in their editorial—that there are many demands at the present time for higher education, pensions, medical care programs resulting from the recent report of the Hall commission, and that we should have a conference to examine which of these subjects should have priority. The suggestion implied there is that we cannot afford all these things. I should like to dispute that particular implication. Canada certainly can afford these things. I was recently checking over the budgets of the past ten years—that is for the years between 1954 and 1963—and I noted that, in round figures, during that period this country spent approximately $15 billion on the Department of National Defence budget. That is $15 billion in a ten year period—and that is a conservative estimate; the actual figures are higher. Of that $15 billion, $470 million were spent for the development of the CF-104 aircraft, and it was scrapped. There was some value out of that program because some people received wages and salaries cheques out of it, but it did not have very much more value. Approximately $40 million was spent on the development of the army vehicle called the Bobcat, and that was scrapped. Again, the only benefit to the country was derived from the wages certain people received. There was no lasting benefit.

I suggest that this country, which can spend $15 billion in a ten year period on defence of very doubtful value, can afford a program of higher education and provide assistance to students in regard to the tuition fees they are paying; we can afford to provide a living allowance; we can afford a medical care program. We in Canada can afford these things if we want to; and if we continue not doing these things, it must be an indication that we do not want to do them.

Mr. Jean-Pierre Côté (Longueuil): Mr. Speaker, in considering this bill respecting loans to students, and in listening to some speeches from other Quebec members in the house, I can only stop and think that the part played here by a member from the province of Quebec is far from being a sinecure, and that it becomes more and more difficult to take a decision in the present context. This is due, partly to the fact—and other members will agree with me—that the text of the constitution has been appreciably influenced by the presence of a concentration of French Canadians in Quebec. As a matter of fact, I doubt very much if the British North America Act would have been written in the same way, had it not been for the existence of the French fact in Quebec.

In the beginning of confederation it did not appear that there was overlapping in jurisdiction, but as Canada's progress developed and as a result of the two world wars, the British North America Act has become for some people a kind of barrier that hindered Canada's progress. That is when we saw, in almost every field, the central government skirt around this barrier in order to solve some problems. However, the provinces did just as much in the field of indirect taxation rights.

It was normal that following this change of attitude, the Quebec members became not only the law makers, but also the watchdogs of the constitution in the house, in the same way that it is normal for the members for Yukon and the Northwest Territories to champion the interests of the population of those areas.

Decentralization is more and more to the fore, and whenever the word "decentralization" is mentioned we obviously come up against certain political and economic theories. But I am sure that if we wish Canada to remain a federation, and if we want all the provinces to remain within such a federation, this is the course we must take. Besides, it has been proven that excessive centralization becomes ineffective.

Does this mean that in order to govern, the provinces must adhere to such a principle of decentralization in their education system? Not at all, Mr. Speaker; on the contrary, in the province of Quebec, for instance, the whole of the educational system is being more and more centralized. Results have shown that centralization to a certain extent may be good, but how hard it can be sometimes to reach a happy medium.

I remember an editorial by André Laurendeau, in Le Devoir, which gives us a good idea of the changes going on in the province of Quebec. I quote:

[Mr. Côté (Longueuil).]

Toward the end of the nineteenth century, when the authorities of the province of Quebec decided to vote $100,000 for the teaching of sciences in our universities, McGill took its share and took to sciences; Laval University saw fit to draw up a brief showing the dangers resulting from the intrusion of the state into the educational field and did not take up the teaching of sciences.

Today, in 1964, education in the province of Quebec is controlled by a minister of education. There is no more talk of the danger resulting from the intrusion of the state into the educational field. The importance of the school boards is gradually decreasing. Many of them were merged and must be grouped in regional schools to provide high school teaching. Why should we have this centralization of powers? Because only the government could finance an educational system that would be open to all Quebeckers.

Since the provinces really look after education, there is no doubt that the federal government will be less and less justified in interfering and, as a matter of fact, it will intervene less and less. Some provinces had no student loans plans, others already had such a plan, but there is no doubt that those loans were insufficient, judging from the enthusiasm which this legislation stirred up among the people.

Mr. Speaker, if today the government controls education in Quebec, it is because the government finances it.

If today Quebec fears the presence of the federal government in the field of education, it is for the same reasons. It is because it fears the federal government will succeed in controlling education in the Quebec territory.

Let us be quite frank about it, when you pay for something, you hope in return to control what you pay for.

On the other hand, if this causes no constitutional problems outside Quebec, has the province of Quebec the right to deprive the rest of Canada by sabotaging legislation which could be profitable? I think this would be ridiculous. The provinces which do not want the plan proposed by the central government should not be penalized because they refuse to adhere to it. On the contrary, after the usual consultations, a formula should be devised which would allow a province wishing to look after this herself to receive its share of the fund which the central government puts at the disposal of the country. That is what the present government did as regards municipal loans and that is what we are doing with student loans.

I do not think, constitutionally, Ottawa could be accused of using its credit power to put at the disposal of the provinces the funds they need to fulfil their constitutional obligations.

We have done so in the case of youth allowances by allowing the province of Quebec a further abatement of 3 per cent personal income tax.

In the present case, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon), on behalf of the federal government, agrees to make available to the provinces which will not adhere to the plan, the equivalent of the expenditures involved for the administration of the present act by the provinces.

In other words, the guarantee of the loans and the repayment of interests will be assumed by the federal government, but all decisions as well as control and administration will be left to the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, some members, including myself, would have preferred this legislation to be introduced in the framework of a redistribution of income between the central government and the provinces.

Today some hon. members would prefer that the central government should not interfere in this field already occupied by the provinces or the majority of them; nevertheless, nobody can say that the central government has not given the provinces complete freedom to adhere or not to this system, without, for that matter, being penalized.

By choosing this solution the province of Quebec, far from quitting confederation, as some have alleged, on the contrary, is enabled to remain within confederation and to benefit therefrom, while keeping the special status conferred upon her by the constitution.

This new formula, apparently acceptable to the majority, needs no doubt to be improved to allow the initiative for some future projects to be taken here by the provinces as much as by the federal government; otherwise, this formula will before long become another cause for dissatisfaction.

Mr. Speaker, yesterday when the hon. member for Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul) shouted the word "scandal" and I only said "Oh, oh", he remarked before the house that the member for Longueuil should have spent some months at a university. I may reply to the hon. member that being one of ten children, I might perhaps have had an opportunity to attend university if the present legislation concerning students' loans had been in effect when I was of school age. But no, I had to go to work when I was 15 and take evening classes in order to complete my education and so that my brothers could attend university.

Such cases are found every day in our country and that is why I tell those who are against the bill for certain principles, that the human factor must also be kept in mind when we are legislating.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I say that no one will deny that the people concerned, that is the young ones, who are trying in every possible way and who sometimes have to overcome great difficulties in order to get an education, are grateful for this initiative and I do not think we can oppose it. So long as there is one Canadian who does not have the financial means to complete his education, the governments will fall short of their responsibility.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Royal): Mr. Speaker, in his epilogue to a recent book called "Paths of American Thought", Arthur N. Schlesinger, Jr. quotes Professor J. K. Galbraith as having readily observed that a dollar or a rupee invested in the intellectual improvement of human beings will likely bring a greater increase in national income than a dollar or a rupee devoted to railways, dams, machine tools or other tangible capital goods. It seems to me that this statement is a reasonable context in which to discuss this bill for a minute or two. As I have observed from listening to the speeches of other hon. members in the house, it is a bill which will induce support from most. But I want to suggest—and I am sure the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) recognizes this fact —that this bill by no means solves the problems of higher education in Canada, and I am sure the minister or the government do not expect this to be the case.

I agree with the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) that I do not think we have any apology to make for the time we take over the bill. It has certainly been refreshing to me to hear that occasionally this house can discuss an issue in which in some cases fairly strong different points of view are expressed, and yet we can keep pretty close to the main philosophy behind the proposed measure. As some of us are interested in the image of parliament, I should like to say I think this improves our image and I should like to congratulate at least those who have participated in the debate up to now.

By coincidence, while we have been here in Ottawa discussing the student loan legislation the Canadian college of teachers has been meeting at Lac Beauport, Quebec—and they have been luckier there than we have been here, perhaps. I think one of the speeches reported in the Montreal Star of July 14 is pertinent. The speech was made by Dr. Floyd G. Robinson, director of the Canadian council for research in education. On the 13th of July he called Canada "the intellectual beggar among the educationally advanced countries of the world". In his speech he went on to say:

> —part of the solution to the void in research must come from increased centralization of educational matters. "Educational leadership in Canada will require that we cure our schizophrenic ambivalence on the matter of federal and provincial responsibilities in education...When functions which are properly central are decentralized, the result can only be confusion, inefficiency and a pretence of independence based upon a peculiar assumption that a decision made in ignorance is an independent decision."
> But Dr. Robinson hastened to add that he was "not advocating a federal system of education, but only that we do not sacrifice the possibilities of genuine Canadian leadership in education to an outdated theory of educational organization."
> He decried the fact that Canada spent less than one tenth of 1 per cent of its total educational budget for research.

I think that is an apt statement and it is interesting to me that it comes during the time we are discussing this bill.

One or two points have been made about the bill itself that I should like to emphasize. I think it was the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George (Mr. Turner) who hoped that the minister through the regulations would ensure that the policy of mobility of students is kept intact. "Intact" is a bad word to use when I have just referred to mobility, but in any event the principle of mobility of students should be remembered and encouraged. I underline this point as a member of parliament from the maritime provinces. If we can claim nothing else for the maritimes, I think we can claim to have contributed over the years to the higher education of a good many people in this country holding positions of leadership in many fields.

Mr. Prittie: Most of the judges of British Columbia.

Mr. Fairweather: Somebody says "most of the judges of British Columbia", and there are many other people, including the recently appointed deputy to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I do not want to catalogue these achievements. My modesty would prevent that. But we in the maritimes have always felt that our educational institutions have been very much enriched because of the number of students from other parts of Canada who have been able to come to the maritimes to get their higher education, and we hope that policy will be continued under this legislation.

The other point made by the hon. member for St. Lawrence-St. George that I thought worthy of note was that some formula must be worked out to take care of part time students, and that on the basis of the experience that will evolve from this legislation we must make provision eventually for night students and so on. Perhaps the minister has that in mind now. I should like to emphasize that point. There are a great many people who are getting their education at night in many of our institutions of higher learning.

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member permit a question on this very point? Would he not agree that the object of this legislation would be to get part time students to return to a full time students role?

Mr. Fairweather: I think that is a reasonable suggestion, but there are some who cannot do so because of their family or personal situations. I do not think $1,000 will permit a man with a family to leave his daily vocation and go to university, but I think the point is well worth considering.

I want to emphasize one other point that was made very forcibly by the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin). I suspect that by now the justice department or the advisers to the minister have reached some solution, or I assume they have, because in my modest opinion clauses 2 (b) and 2 (k) of the bill are completely ultra vires and their passage would seriously affect the usefulness of the legislation. I know I cannot ask the minister questions at this stage but I hope we will hear soon from the treasury benches of a satisfactory amendment to these now quite inoperative provisions.

As the hon. member for Greenwood has pointed out, section 65 of the British North America Act sets out the responsibilities of the lieutenant governor in council quite clearly and, if I may put it this way, to my knowledge there is really only one person, using the word "person" in a general sense, concerning whom this parliament cannot legislate or delegate legislation to, and that is the lieutenant governor in council. I must say I am surprised that the bill has reached this stage in this form. I hope we can be reassured on this matter soon. I would hope that nobody would challenge the constitutionality of the legislation because all that would do would be to delay the attainment of a desirable objective; but I cannot understand how the bill reached this stage in the unconstitutional form in which it now appears before us.

Because this is a debating forum and we are expected to learn from those who have intimate knowledge on various matters, I should like some guidance on clause 15 of the bill and why the government feels that clause 15 is constitutional. I presume they are going to rely on the banking provisions in section 91 of the B.N.A. Act, but I should like to be instructed how this jibes with the property and civil rights aspect, which is a provincial responsibility under the act. In any event, I will be glad to hear their views. If clause 15 raises a debatable point, and I concede it is debatable, I do not think for one minute that clauses 2 (b) and 2 (k) are debatable at all. Some work has to be done on them and an amendment proposed, or else the act will be in serious constitutional trouble.

There have been a few radical suggestions made and I suppose a backbench Tory can make a radical suggestion. I think it should be mandatory for the bank to make the loan, once a certificate of eligibility has been granted. I do not think the giving or denying of a loan can be properly left to bank managers, particularly in view of the fact that this statute will apply to people who have been in Canada only a short time as well as people who are citizens. I would hate to think that the fate of the borrower would always be in the hands of the bank manager. As somebody has said, there is no safer or better investment for a bank than a loan guaranteed as to principal and interest by the government of Canada, and which also is insured. Once a certificate of eligibility has been granted the choice of a bank should be left to the student, but after that point the bank should make the loan.

Otherwise there are going to be different classes of students, and the student who comes to this country from another country and stays here for a year, who has not in any way really established his credit under the magic formula that banks use for granting credit, is going to be in a less favourable position than one who has been in the community for generations or whose family has.

I, too, have been intrigued with the arguments concerning the constitutional position vis-à-vis the whole philosophy behind the bill. I am intrigued by this business of having one minute a bogeyman brought out about the constitution and the next minute having, with all respect to the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie), this false altar of centralization brought out. I like to go between these two, being a reasonably minded Conservative. I cannot understand for one minute how a loan granted by a bank which allows a student to pursue higher education in the university of his choice, in the language of his choice, if you like in the culture of his choice, and the discipline of his choice, can be considered to be an infringement of section 93 of the British North America Act. In my opinion, this bill reinforces the very independence that those who espouse another culture in this country are quite rightly trying to keep inviolate. The government is not telling them what they are going to study, how they are going to study or where they are going to study. All the government is doing is providing the money, by way of these loans, so that this can be done. With the greatest of respect to some of my own colleagues and to others who have pulled out the drums on this issue, I cannot see how it applies.

I believe some day we will have to—

Mr. Paul: A special province.

Mr. Fairweather: I recognize that—well, I am not going to start a debate here with my friend. I should like to remind the minister, if he needs reminding, of the submission made to him by the Canadian universities foundation in December, 1963, which was partly a resubmission of a brief this foundation submitted to the Prime Minister (Mr. Pearson) in May, 1963. I know this point has been made by others, but I think it is worth emphasizing. In the brief to the Prime Minister of Canada in May, 1963, the foundation says:

> —we pointed out that the total requirement of capital for universities and colleges, and for the creation of research facilities in university-affiliated teaching hospitals, for the three years 1963-64 to 1965-66, would be approximately $800 million. Estimates indicate that at the present rate of spending for these purposes, the governments of the provinces might be expected to contribute something less than $300 million towards this total and that $100 million might be expected as gifts and donations from corporations and individuals. If it may be assumed that the additional loan funds needed for university residential accommodation (about $100 million during that period) will be available from the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, the remaining need still totals more than $300 million for the three year period.

Loans to Students

The final paragraph of the part I propose quoting that has application to this part of my remarks is as follows:

> In that brief we suggested that the government of Canada establish a fund of $300 million for matching capital grants to universities and colleges. We wish to confirm the need and state that the urgency has now been compounded.

Well, if the need was compounded in December, 1963, by the inexorable laws of compounding it must be even worse today. This was emphasized again in the 1963-64 report of the Canada Council. In their introductory remarks the Canada Council gives a very useful recent history of the crisis conditions through which universities have been passing in the last few years. I quote from page 36:

> Most of the older faculties have expanded at a remarkable rate and new colleges and faculties have sprung up everywhere, filling old gaps in our educational establishment and meeting the demands of the newer disciplines. The rapid growth of our institutions, however, has brought many problems in its train. First, there is the difficulty of recruiting the many teachers so urgently required to meet the increasing demand. And there is, of course, the special problem of finding experts in some of the newer disciplines, who will be able to give form and leadership to departments and institutes that the country has begun to need.

We have the Canadian universities foundation, we have the Canada Council, and if we need any more witnesses we have the Canadian school trustees association. In their brief presented to the royal commission on taxation they have a proposal. I am not going to go through the figures because we have had them, but I think one of the proposals is of interest. They recommended that there be a division of responsibility for financing—I think the word "financing" should be underlined before we run into the constitutional wall—education among the three levels of government. Local governments would be responsible for elementary education; provincial governments for secondary education and the federal government for higher education and vocational education. I believe this suggestion is at least worthy of thought. I think probably in the final analysis it is a little too neat.

However I believe the proposal to have higher education a federal responsibility is one that is compelling to me. This is the last thing I want to say, that in a very interesting speech given on November 28, 1963, Dean J. F. McCreary, dean of the faculty of medicine of the University of British Columbia, spoke of the urgent need from the point of view of graduate schools for capital, particularly in view of the fact this problem is going to be accentuated if the recommendations of the royal commission on health services is implemented.

If I may sum up, I should like to say I will vote for this bill. I will vote for it in the knowledge it really does not meet the Liberal party platform, but that does not disturb me because very little legislation we have had so far does meet it. Second, we must remind ourselves when we boastfully congratulate ourselves about this wonderful legislation that it really does not meet the needs of higher education one bit. I hope that clause 2(b) and (k), which in my opinion are now quite badly drafted and in fact are unconstitutional, will be subject to the proper amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Batten): Order. It being five o'clock the house will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely private bills, notices of motions (papers), and public bills.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READING

Bill No. S-34, to incorporate Nova Scotia Savings and Loan Company.—Mr. Regan.

THE QUEBEC BOARD OF TRADE

The house in committee on Bill No. S-28, respecting The Quebec Board of Trade—Mr. Cantin—Mr. Batten in the chair.

On clause 1—Preamble.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcoux: Mr. Chairman, as I had to leave the sitting when this bill was submitted to the committee on banking and commerce, I had delegated the representation I might make to the hon. member for Portneuf (Mr. Frenette).

Later on I was told that it was believed in certain quarters that the members of the Quebec board of trade had succeeded in suppressing my arguments against this organization calling itself the board of trade of metropolitan Quebec.

That is why I feel, more particularly because various chambers of commerce gave me very definite instructions that I should give some explanations and justify my intended opposition to the bill.

We have now before us a bill which was amended by the committee on banking and commerce, so that the arguments which might be made for the term "metropolitan" are perhaps not exactly the same as those which might be advanced against the Quebec and district of Quebec board of trade using the new term of "district of Quebec".

Though I do not want to read them out, Mr. Chairman, I wish to say that I received letters and telegrams from the chambers of commerce of the Quebec-Montmorency and Quebec-Charlevoix areas, from Antoine Hamel, director of the Charlesbourg chamber of commerce, from Louis Warren, secretary, from Marcel Pageau, president of the chamber of commerce of Loretteville, from Camille Théberge, president of the chamber of commerce of Courville, from the chamber of commerce of Beauport, and from Robert Légaré, president of the chamber of commerce of the county of Portneuf.

Mr. Chairman, before this bill was referred to the committee on banking and commerce, all those chambers of commerce were against the board of trade of the city of Quebec, whose territory, field of activity and headquarters have always been limited to the city of Quebec, using the expression "metropolitan Quebec", which, according to the dictionary, could apply to an extension of jurisdiction on the part of the board of trade of Quebec.

When you consider that metropolitan Quebec extends on the south shore to Lévis, Lauzon, St. Romuald, etc., as well as, on the north shore, to various parishes or to the municipalities of Charlevoix, Quebec, Montmorency and the county of Portneuf, you realize that it amounts to quite a large extension of jurisdiction.

Despite this change in name, the board of trade says it has no intention of extending its jurisdiction over those various localities. It simply wants to enjoy the prestige of an enlarged board, covering a whole metropolitan area.

I feel that the arguments in favour of that change, if they do not hide anything special, are not worth much, because Quebec can be considered as the name of the province of Quebec, of the city of Quebec and also of the Quebec area.

I would like to point out something else, Mr. Chairman, while I think about it. The report and the minutes of proceedings of the committee on banking and commerce, which should contain the evidence given before that committee, have not yet been published. Usually, the English version is distributed immediately and the French version is available six or ten days later, and sometimes still later.

We do not even have the report of this committee available at present, so that it is difficult to refer to it, especially when I did not attend the sittings, so as to know what arguments were put forward in favour of this bill.

On the other hand, I obtained the minutes of the Senate committee on banking and commerce where Mr. Renault St-Laurent, barrister, appearing on behalf of the Quebec board of trade, had put forward several arguments in favour of the change in name. He pointed out, among other things that at least 5,000 persons write every year to the Quebec board of trade, which shows that this organization covers a much greater territory than that of Quebec city.

If the Quebec board of trade is so important and has so much influence, I fail to see why it seeks to have its name changed even if the latter makes no mention of metropolitan Quebec. According to Mr. Renault St-Laurent, barrister, it is merely to give legal recognition to a long standing situation and he gave several examples. He said that it was the Quebec board of trade which brought about the establishment of several companies, not only in the city of Quebec itself, but in the area also. I agree with him on that. He further stated that many of the board's members—in fact, a large number of them—come from outside Quebec city. I have no quarrel with that either, but it proves nothing.

I belong to the Montreal medical association and I am quite willing to pay my membership fee, because I feel it is advantageous for me to belong to that association. However, that does not mean I would be ready to give the Montreal medical association the right to represent the interests of Quebec doctors.

That is why the arguments invoked are very weak in my opinion, the more so since it is claimed:

[Text]

They have made several studies of reports on the port of Quebec. They have a jurisdiction over the office of the port warden which they have exercised practically since the port warden was appointed by Ottawa and they are responsible for recommending the person who is to be appointed port warden and any assistants.

[Translation]

Then, it seems that the board of trade has great influence in the Quebec harbour.

I should like to take this opportunity to say that the Quebec harbour, which should be a metropolitan harbour including much more than the city of Quebec, denies to every individual who does not live in the city of Quebec the right to be employed as longshoreman, because of the international longshoremen's association, local 1739. This is a very serious situation. I have pointed out that fact on a few occasions to the Minister of Labour, but he told me that he had no authority over a local union.

As I was saying, Quebec harbour should be considered as part of an area much larger than Quebec city. The minister added that the union was not allowed to accept members not residing in Quebec city. It is a fact that in an answer given by a union official mentioned the "city card". He said that an individual must have his "city card", in other words, be a resident of Quebec city. He also said that, if Montreal did not find it advisable to eliminate this requirement, he did not see why Quebec should.

Therefore, I believe this is a discriminatory requirement which the board of trade should have considered long ago, but which it apparently forgot.

It seems that this board of trade, like most of the others, is more interested in the large companies who are members paying membership fees and that the interests of those companies strangely converge towards the interests of the board of trade.

I heard that, following a meeting which took place when the committee on banking and commerce was sitting, every party was apparently satisfied with the amendment made. Therefore, I shall not be more demanding than the companies themselves. I will not go farther than those company officials agreed to go.

I simply want to protest, and I have supporting evidence, against the fact that the Quebec board of trade is enlarging upon its jurisdiction. Besides, I wonder why they want to have an enlarged jurisdiction, when it is only a question of promoting the interests of the city and district.

They go even further. In clause 3 of the bill, it is said:

—and of the province of Quebec and Canada in general—

Then, obviously, one cannot object to that. If that is the kind of jurisdiction they want, there is no objection. However, they go a little further. In clause 3 (c), the corporation wishes and shall be empowered to:

—to organize, if necessary, a stock exchange and to promote the centralization of the grain, produce, provision and other trades in the city and metropolitan area of Quebec.

[Mr. Marcoux.]

Paragraph (e) also states:

—to adjust, settle and determine disputes, controversies and misunderstandings arising between persons engaged in the same trade or business, or which may be submitted to arbitration as hereinafter provided;

This has already started. The board of trade, at the request or probably with the co-operation of the city of Quebec, decided to study the problem of closing hours for businesses in the Quebec area. One knows that the city of Quebec has very strict and very rigid regulations about closing hours. Many industries which come to the Quebec area or district, or to metropolitan Quebec, decide to open stores in areas where they do not have to abide by closing hours imposed by the city of Quebec.

Under the pretext that these stores are prejudicial to the city of Quebec, the new stores are to be prevented from opening at hours allowed in various municipalities. Of course, it is impossible to obtain unanimous consent.

I know that in my own city, like in many others, the boards of trade as well as the municipalities themselves are against such a move. The board of trade of Quebec district, which was previously the board of trade of metropolitan Quebec, wants to submit a study showing that all municipalities around Quebec including Levis, Lauzon and St. Romuald should be subject to identical closing hours.

You can see, Mr. Chairman, that this could be detrimental to the municipalities adjoining Quebec city. It may be that the city of Quebec was ill-administered for a number of years, but it is not up to the adjoining municipalities to replenish the municipality of Quebec if the latter was unable to attract industries in its area, within its own territory.

If the other municipalities have succeeded in attracting industries in their area—even though it would be on account of the Quebec board of trade—I fail to see why the local boards of trade would be prevented from expressing their opinion, for instance about closing time or about something else.

In my own constituency, there is, for instance, the problem related to sand bars on the Beaupré shore. Many municipalities all along this shore, and their boards of trade, are very much interested in that problem. I feel that the wish expressed by these boards of trade may not be the same as that expressed by the Quebec board of trade.

If these boards of trade ever make any representations to the government for the settlement of this question and in favour of the municipalities of the Beaupré coast, the city of Quebec, through the Quebec district board of trade, may make representations to the contrary, not only to the government but also to the various local boards of trade to determine the limits of the area.

Moreover, Mr. Chairman, as I was saying a while ago, the boards of trade federation of the counties of Charlevoix, Quebec, Montmorency and Portneuf represent a greater number of people than those served by the Quebec board of trade.

It is said that the Quebec board of trade does not want to encroach upon the powers of the local chambers of commerce and that it will let the latter look after the local problems. This is precisely another point which will make this difficult, for who will decide whether a problem is local, metropolitan, regional or a district problem. That question is hard to settle. It could be settled under the Quebec and Quebec district board of trade charter which perhaps will create some difficulties to local chambers of commerce. I wish to put on record that the president of the Quebec board of trade, Mr. Louis Dusseault, and also, Mr. Talbot, of the same body, assured me that the Quebec board of trade will in no way deal with problems pertaining to local boards and to the district board, such as the board of trades federation of the Quebec area.

In that case, Mr. Chairman, as I said earlier, the suggestions made by the various representatives who appeared before the committee on banking and commerce must be accepted. I should like to put on record, however, that if at any time the Quebec board of trade and the Quebec district board of trade attempt to infringe upon rights not belonging to them, when it is understood, of course, that it is not a matter of jurisdiction, but only a matter of trade and industrial promotion, so that local boards can say: Here, we see in Hansard of the House of Commons a promise made by Mr. Louis Dusseault, Mr. Talbot and others that this board of trade will not encroach on the rights of local boards. Then, it may give them a place to meet where they can really prepare an opposition to some possible intrusion by the Quebec board of trade.

Once again, Mr. Chairman, I am going to support the bill any way, on division, but I want to say that personally, I object, and for various reasons, and I could go into every detail of the many reasons which militate against the fact that the house accepted the name "Quebec district board of trade", while it is the Quebec city board of trade. And we specially protest against their method of going ahead which mostly looked like a hiding game when they said they wanted benefits they already had. I always wondered why they wanted benefits they already had, while things could be left as they were.

That explains my stand, but I do not want to delay the business of the house any longer.

Mr. Cantin: Mr. Chairman, to begin with I want to congratulate the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency for having refrained from submitting amendments to the bill. It is unfortunate that he could not sit on the committee which studied and debated this bill. He had good reasons for being absent because he was on duty somewhere else. Otherwise, he would have realized that the local chambers of commerce and the board of trade of Quebec agreed on a change of name. The main reason for that compromise, is that the name of the Montreal chamber of commerce was la chambre de commerce du district de Montréal and that of Quebec will be called la chambre de commerce du district de Québec.

I do not think the board of trade in Montreal or Quebec city violates any of the rights and powers of the local board of trade in the neighbouring cities.

A board of trade is not so much a territorial entity but an objective everyone must strive to attain. Therefore the question of territory is irrelevant in an act dealing with boards of trade.

I thank the hon. member for his action. I am sure the Quebec board of trade will read his remarks with interest.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I have the honour to inform the house that I have received the following communication:

Ottawa, July 16, 1964

Sir:

I have the honour to inform you that the Hon. Roland A. Ritchie, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, acting as Deputy to His Excellency the Governor General, will proceed to the Senate chamber today, the 16th July, at 5.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving royal assent to certain bills.

I have the honour to be,
sir,

Your obedient servant,
A. G. Cherrier
Assistant Secretary to the Governor General

PRIVATE BILLS

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANY OF CANADA

The house in committee on Bill No. S-27, respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada—Mr. Brown—Mr. Lamoureux in the chair.

On clause 1—Number of directors.

The Chairman: Shall clause 1 carry?

Mr. Hahn: Mr. Chairman, this bill gives authority to the Bell Telephone Company to augment its board of directors. Before the bill passes I have a few remarks I should like to make.

A telephone company of necessity operates in certain areas of the country a monopolistic business. This is a necessity with which I think no one would quarrel. It would obviously be completely impracticable to try and run competitive telephone companies over the same area. On the other hand monopolies are not looked on with favour in our form of competitive society.

Under these circumstances, where a company is operating a business which must be run in a monopolistic fashion there are generally three options which are open to deal with such a problem. In the first instance, the service could be provided by a government department. As an example, we have our postal service supplied by a department of the federal government. It could be operated as a crown corporation. Or it can be operated as a closely regulated private company. Personally, in this instance I favour a crown corporation, but I do not intend to argue the merits or demerits of this particular point.

It seems to me that if we are going to have a private company operating in a monopolistic fashion, it must be regulated, and it must be properly regulated. It must be regulated so that the shareholders, who in this instance are widely scattered and come from all walks of life in the country, have their interests protected. But in addition to the shareholders, the users of the service, the subscribers, the people who pay the telephone bills, must have their interests protected too. To me this is the paramount consideration. There was a statement made in the house when dealing with the administration of justice to the effect that not only must justice be done but it must appear to be done. I think the same principle is applicable in dealing with the problem of a company such as the Bell Telephone Company. When we think of the rates which you, Mr. Chairman, myself and others across the country pay for our telephone service, not only must the rates be fair but they must also appear to be fair.

Evidence was taken in regard to this bill before the standing committe on railways, canals and telegraph lines, and I have before me the minutes of proceedings and evidence, volume 4, of the sitting which was held on July 7, 1964. During the course of those hearings a number of questions and problems were raised which in turn raised doubts in my mind about the fairness of the rate structure and the operations of the company. I am not going to go into all of them, and I should like to make it completely clear that I am not saying or suggesting that there are inequities in the way in which the company is operating. What I am saying however is that doubts are raised in my mind in connection with some aspects of the operation of the company, and I think in view of the nature of their business these doubts should be cleared up.

As we do not have too much time, the doubts I want to deal with fall into only two areas. The first area relates to the question of rates charged by the telephone company. There were several facts brought out in the evidence. At page 427 of the proceedings the hon. member for Three Rivers, the former minister of transport, brought out the fact that those who are serviced by the Bell Telephone Company in the provinces of Quebec and Ontario pay more than those serviced by nationalized companies in western provinces such as Saskatchewan, Manitoba and Alberta.

It was stated by the president of the company that the cost to subscribers in large metropolitan areas was of necessity higher than the cost to those in smaller communities.

The reason was said to be that an individual subscriber in a community where there were more connections, could make more calls on a local basis, and would thus pay more for his calls as costs were higher. This may well be the fact, but as an engineer with a little background in manufacturing it has always been to me a principle that as volume increases cost reduces, and there are some economies of scale. Now, it may be that the argument presented by the president of the company is perfectly valid, I do not know, but it has raised a doubt in my mind.

At page 430 of the evidence, when reference was made to long distance rates, the president of the company stated that long distance charges in Canada were higher than those in the United States. The reason given was that the lines are strung over great areas of less densely populated country, and therefore the cost per subscriber for long distance calls was higher. A little further on, at page 433, the hon. member for Three Rivers, who as former minister of transport I think should be aware of these circumstances, said that long distance charges in the prairie provinces by those companies operated by the provinces are lower than charges in Ontario and Quebec. Now, surely we have fewer people in the prairies than we have in Ontario and Quebec, so this appears to be the exact opposite of the argument advanced by the president of the company in stating the reason for the charges being higher in Canada than in the United States. Again, there may be adequate explanation for this problem, I do not know; but it raises doubts in my mind.

The second area I should like to deal with which also causes doubts in my mind is the situation with respect to Northern Electric, which is a wholly owned subsidiary of the Bell Telephone Company. Northern Electric gained a charter under a section of their act of incorporation which, as reported at page 417 of the committee report, reads as follows:

> The company shall also have power to enter into any arrangement with any person or company possessing, as proprietor, any line of telegraphic or telephonic communication, or any power or right to use communication by means of the telephone upon such terms—

And so on and so forth. In effect then, Bell have been able to acquire Northern Electric under its charter because Northern operated, I gather, approximately four miles of telephone line.

Northern Electric has since that date been expanded to a manufacturing giant, a company which is doing some $300 million worth of business a year. Half of this business is sales of manufactured products to the Bell Telephone Company itself. The other half is outside, what I call commercial sales to the trade generally. I have absolutely no argument against Bell doing as much manufacturing as it wants to. It has its own "make or buy" decisions to reach based on economic considerations, which should properly be the responsibility of the management of that company. It is their job to ensure the lowest cost possible, and this sort of "make or buy" consideration is entirely a managerial responsibility. But it seems to me to be a perversion of the original intention of the legislation for Bell to take a company with four miles of telephone line and use that as the basis for acquiring it, and then to swing that company into a manufacturing enterprise doing $150 million worth of business each year on an open and competitive basis outside the field of telephone communication in this country. I am not questioning the legality of this operation; it is probably perfectly legal, but it does appear to me to be a perversion of the original intent of the legislation.

Apparently in investigating the rate structure of the Bell Telephone Company the board of transport commissioners investigated to some degree the relationship between Bell and Northern. Again, if I may refer to the evidence in the committee, page 426, it is stated by Mr. Scrivener of the company that the Northern Electric Company reports to the board of transport commissioners and he then outlines the basis on which they provide information, in these words:

> It has been based on financial considerations such as an examination of the records, the profits and the non-profits, during these applications. You will see it in the report of the Bell. Bell reports continuously to the board of transport commissioners, but Northern does not.

The question that is raised in my mind is, in what detail does Northern report to the board of transport commissioners? Northern has an annual report and I have a copy of that annual report here. The annual report indicates the profitability of Northern but it does not in any way indicate a breakdown between the business Northern does with Bell Telephone and the business Northern does in the open, competitive, commercial market. Does the board of transport commissioners, when it is examining rate applications by Bell Telephone, examine the relationship of these two parts of the business that Northern is doing? I do not know whether it does, but I think we should have some satisfaction on this point because to me the danger exists that an unfair situation could be created.

Again I want to emphasize the fact that I am not saying this situation does exist. I think we should be sure it does not, but I have had nothing to indicate that we are sure on that point. The danger lies in the fact that $150 million of the Bell Telephone Company's material supply comes form Northern. On the basis of the cost of this material Bell makes application for the telephone rates that you and I and every telephone subscriber have to pay. I do not say this happens but it is possible that Northern could sell its commercial products on the outside market at low prices to drive out competition, penetrate the market totally and possibly eliminate competition ultimately and could subsidize that operation by charging higher prices to the Bell Telephone Company. These prices would then be paid in effect through the telephone rates set by the board of transport commissioners as the result of Bell's rate applications and would be paid by you and I and every other telephone subscriber. In effect we would then be subsidizing Northern in their attempt to drive out competition in a certain segment of the market.

I do not say this is happening but if it did happen it is something that would be seriously wrong, and I think it is important enough that we should be absolutely sure that this does not and cannot occur. There is no guarantee that it does but again there is no guarantee that it does not.

In the evidence there were indications that there were cross-checks with the prices to outside purchasers on the basis of which Northern sold to Bell. Knowing the nature of the business I would doubt that purchasers other than Bell who buy telephone equipment from Northern would have any other sources to which they could go for their equipment. Therefore I wonder whether this is really an effective cross-check against the prices at which Bell buys its equipment from Northern. Again I do not know.

Mr. Pigeon: I know. I will prove it.

Mr. Hahn: We as members of parliament have allowed a monopoly to exist in this country and it may be that this monopoly in this situation is to the advantage of all concerned. But it is important to me that we make sure it is. The setting of the rates of the company and the rates that we pay must not only be fair, as I said earlier, but they must also appear to be fair. There must be no doubt about that.

I am not satisfied with the regulation of the Bell Telephone Company and particularly that the relationship between Bell and Northern is sufficiently rigid to ensure that this is the case. I do not like the interlock between these two companies. I think that at the least the accounting of Northern should be so segregated that one could see what is being charged on this outside commercial business and what is being charged on the business transacted with Bell. As a further step I should like to see, if possible, the two divisions of Northern completely segregated and divorced.

It seems to me we should do one thing if we are going to allow the present situation to continue. I think that we who have allowed this monopolistic situation to exist have a responsibility to make sure that it exists in the interests of all. I should like to see legislation passed which would cause the Bell Telephone Company to come regularly before a committee of parliament where various questions and doubts such as I have raised could be examined, and could be examined in depth.

We as parliamentarians have allowed this situation, which may be beneficial, to exist. I believe we have a responsibility as members of parliament to make sure that it exists in the best interests of all concerned. I think the company would probably welcome the opportunity to come before such a committee. There may be nothing in the doubts I have expressed. The situation may be in the best interests of all concerned. I think the company would welcome the opportunity to explain the situation and to make it clear so that people like myself would not raise these unanswered questions.

[Translation]

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, I have strong reservations to make about this bill. In my opinion, it would be important for the government to form a committee of both houses, not only to review the charter of the company, but also to call witnesses: The private telephone companies, including the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

As I have already said, Mr. Chairman, the Bell Telephone Company of Canada is, among companies of this type, the most powerful in the world. About 65 per cent of the equipment intended for this company is bought from the Northern Electric, which company is itself controlled by the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I have here the names of ten directors of Northern Electric Company. I note that the president of Northern Electric is at the same time director of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. Johnson, director of Northern Electric, is at the same time director of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada; Mr. Lank Herbert, who is director of the Northern Electric, is, at the same time, director of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada; Mr. Alex Lester, director of Northern Electric, is, at the same time, vice president of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

Mr. Chairman, 65 per cent of all purchases of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, as far as material is concerned, are made from its own company. It is the largest "family compact" now existing in Canada.

Mr. Chairman, I have the list of directors of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada. I would be very happy to have the unanimous consent of the house to table this list of directors of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada as well as of many other companies that these people control. You will see then, Mr. Chairman, the family compact that exists.

The Chairman: If he so wishes, the hon. member may table the list of names he referred to, so that hon. members may refer to it. But it is not an official paper and unfortunately it cannot be tabled formally.

Mr. Pigeon: Mr. Chairman, this will take some time but I am going to read it:

1. Mr. Eadie, Thomas W., chairman, director of the Bell Telephone Company of Canada, director of the Bank of Montreal, director of the Royal Trust Company, director of Northern Electric Company Limited.

2. Mr. Vincent, Marcel, president and chief executive officer.

3. Mr. Ralph, Edward A., executive vice president, director of Maritime Telegraph and Telephone Co. Ltd.

4. Lt. Col. Amyot, Louis J. A., director of the Bell Telephone Co. of Canada, president of Dominion Corset Co. Ltd., president of the National Battlefields Commission, vice president of the General Trust of Canada, director of Donohue Brothers Ltd., director of la Banque d'économie de Québec, director of Amyot Foundation for the chair in chemistry of Laval University, national director of the St. John Ambulance Association, member advisory council, Canadian Red Cross Society, Quebec division.

5. Mr. Borden, director of the Bell Telephone Co. of Canada, chairman of Brazilian Traction, Light & Power Co. Ltd., chairman of the Canadian Board of Norwich Union Life Insurance Society, chairman of the Norwich Fire Insurance Society, director of Rio Algom Mines Ltd., director of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, director of the Canadian Fund Inc., director of Canadian Investment Fund Ltd., director of the International Business Machines Co. Ltd., director of Massey-Ferguson Ltd., director of the British Newfoundland Corporation Ltd., member advisory board, Industrial Estates Ltd., vice chairman, board of governors, University of Toronto.

6. Mr. Cockshutt, C. Gordon, director of the Bell Telephone Co. of Canada, president of Cockshutt Securities Ltd., director of Dominion Tar & Chemical Co. Ltd., director of the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, director, Canada Permanent Trust Corp., director, Dominion Life Assurance Co., director of Gore Mutual Insurance Co., director of the Guarantee Co. of North America, director of Harding Carpets Ltd., director of Minnesota & Ontario Paper Co., director of Newlands & Co. Ltd., director of Newlands-Harding Yarns Ltd., director of Stauffer-Dobbie Ltd., director of York Mending Wool Co. Ltd., director of Dobbie Industries Ltd., director of Hardee Farms International Ltd.

7. Mr. Marcel Faribault, director of the Bell Telephone Co. of Canada, is the president and general manager of the General Trust of Canada.

This is to show you, Mr. Chairman, that I am objective in my remarks.

The Chairman: Order; since the house may have only a few minutes more to sit, shall I rise and report progress?

Progress reported.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED UNDER ADJOURNMENT MOTION

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of standing order 39A, it is my duty to inform the house that the questions to be raised at 10.30 are as follows:

The hon. member for Cape Breton North and Victoria (Mr. Muir), defence production, contract to Quebec firm for destroyer conversion; the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen), national defence, requirements respecting bilingualism in considering promotions.

Loans to Students

THE ROYAL ASSENT

A message was delivered by Major C. R. Lamoureux, Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable the Deputy Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable house in the chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the house went up to the Senate chamber.

And being returned:

Mr. Speaker informed the house that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the royal assent to the following bills:

An act respecting the territorial sea and fishing zones of Canada.

An act to amend the National Defence Act.

An act to provide for the payment of youth allowances.

An act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending the 31st March, 1965.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The house resumed at 8 p.m.

EDUCATION

MEASURE TO FACILITATE MAKING LOANS TO STUDENTS

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon for the second reading of Bill No. C-110, to facilitate the making of loans to students, and the amendment thereto of Mr. Gauthier.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, the house has been studying in the last few days Bill No. C-110 dealing with loans to students.

This afternoon the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier) moved an amendment.

When introducing that bill, the government undoubtedly had good intentions because for us and all the people of Canada, education is a very important matter since it concerns primarily a very high percentage of our young people, the future leaders of Canada. That is why the government is introducing that bill dealing with education, to enable students to continue their studies, in short to be better prepared to face life and its needs.

[Mr. Speaker.]

On the other hand, what strikes me most, a matter to which several members have drawn my attention, is that the government is intruding in a field which has nothing to do with the federal government.

It is not the first time that we in Quebec have heard about education. A few years ago the Quebec Liberals told us that our educational system was not perfect under the previous administration and that they wanted to amend it; they then promised free education.

A few years ago we were promised free education in the province of Quebec and now the federal government is discussing student loans.

On the one hand, the Liberals promise free schooling and here in Ottawa, future students, the future elite of the province of Quebec or Canada, are allowed to go into debt.

Free schooling was said to be a sheet anchor for our young people. It is realized today that it was a real deception and a measure is now being introduced in order to grant loans to Canadian students, including those of the province of Quebec, as a solution to their problems.

But if we look at what happened in other fields, for instance, when the federal government and the provincial governments have in the past made different types of loans available to the various social classes, one finds that those loans did not produce the expected results or achieve their purpose.

For instance, we remember quite well what happened as a result of the passing of measures on agricultural loans, industrial loans, loans to small industrial enterprises; today, we find that those measures have not solved the problems faced by the farmers or the manufacturers.

As far as free education is concerned, we were told that we would have nothing to pay. Today we realize that text books are more expensive than before, that the construction of our schools costs more than ever and that our school taxes are higher than ever, that the provincial sales taxes—which are mentioned in this bill have increased as well as school deficits.

What do we see in the meantime? The parents' autonomy does not exist any more, it disappeared a long time ago. We also see that the autonomy of the school boards does not exist any more; they are almost completely under the control of the provincial government.

What do we see now? The autonomy of the province of Quebec is threatened in a field which comes under its own and exclusive jurisdiction.

Some hon. members in this house went so far as to advocate a federal department of education. Well, if that principle of centralization is so good, why not advocate also an international department of education under the United Nations? If we want to be ridiculous, we might as well go the whole way.

Would it be possible for Canada to have the same system of education as certain member countries of the United Nations? Absolutely not, and I think all hon. members will agree with me on that point.

We do not deny the other provinces the right to have their own system of education, their own culture and their own language. In return, we want our rights to be respected in the province of Quebec. The British North America Act—forgive me, Mr. Speaker, but we are still British—respects provincial rights and that is why we, in Quebec, are against not the principle of this bill but against this intrusion of the federal government in a field which does not come under its jurisdiction but under that of the provinces.

A measure for free schooling in our province was submitted to us as a last hope, as regards the education problem. It has proven a failure. We have before us today, in Ottawa, legislation on loans to students; a few years hence, we will realize that it has not given the anticipated results.

In favour of whom do we want to get our students into debt? In favour of the banks, which are the sole and actual beneficiaries under this bill—get our students into debt in favour of the banks.

Up to now we have got everybody into debt. Where are the social classes that are not in debt?

The farmers are in debt, the workers are in debt, our industries are in debt and so are our school boards. We find that our provincial governments are in debt; we also see that our federal government is in the same situation and is getting deeper into debt to put others into debt. Everyone is in debt, and now we want our students to go into debt.

With regard to this bill, a member pointed out this afternoon, that only banks can loan money to students; no other serious and responsible organization in Canada can lend money to our students.

We had our industries incur debts in favour of the banks, we had our industrial resources encumbered in favour of our banks, and today, the intention is to involve in debt our future natural resources for the benefit of the banks, and no other solution is being found to the present system.

The present bill is greeted with enthusiasm. How ridiculous.

As for us, we do not want debts. Students have already too many debts, their parents have already too many debts; what the Canadian people need is an income system. Instead of making loans available to students, as is being done at the present time, why not make available to the students, during the holiday period, jobs which would make it possible for them to earn some money during the ten or 12 weeks of the summer holidays, or at least for eight or nine weeks of work?

Why should not the federal government organize some system to make employment available to the students, making it possible for them to earn $100 a week? Then they would earn during the holiday period the equivalent of the amount of $1,000 involved in the debt we want them to get into. They could this way earn money while acquiring an education, and they could then pay for their studies. But no, today, instead of offering employment to students in order that they may pay for their studies, they are allowed to study and to run into debt and, in the meantime, we also get the country into debt.

During their schooling they could work and contribute to the wealth of Canada. During their holidays they could produce something instead of doing nothing. They could also work their way through school.

We have no other system than to push them into debt. Get into debt students, farmers, industrialists, municipalities, school boards. It sounds like the system advocated by finance companies. "Travel now, pay later"; buy today, pay later; buy your house today; pay later; buy your farm today, pay later; buy your furniture today, pay later. "Consolidate your debts, re-finance them and pay later". In Bill No. C-110, our young people are being told: "study now and pay later."

Students are not begging for charity or privileges. Why not offer them jobs, giving them an opportunity to work during their holidays, instead of offering them as the only solution, debts and a mortgaged future.

Mr. Speaker, what amazes me most, is that when the problem is to develop Canada or give Canadians or our students a few amenities in peacetime, there is no money; we get debts and obligations; we have unemployment and insecurity. But come war or war preparation, everything becomes available. Why not make the same benefits available to our students.

I have here a pamphlet dealing with Canadian military colleges. Here is what it says concerning the military training of our youth. It is a lot more interesting than Bill No. C-110. I would even suggest to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) to get acquainted with that pamphlet designed for the army, air force and navy trainees, and to redraft his bill accordingly. First, the large headline:

Enthralling life for young Canadians.

It is a lot more enthralling than what is offered our youth. It is so enthralling to enroll in the air force. Here is what is says:

1. First class aeronautical training.
2. Very good pay.

Not a word about debts. They are paid; there is no signing of promissory notes.

3. Opportunity to increase your knowledge through numerous courses offered by the air force.

It is all about air force; there is no mention of interest.

4. Opportunity to travel in Canada and abroad.
5. Thirty days annual leave with pay.
6. Free medical and dental care.

It is free, Mr. Minister.

7. Work with a team sharing the same ideal.

This is interesting.

8. Security ensured by generous retirement plans.

There is no mention of debts. Nothing is said of a debt plan. And that is not all.

9. Attractive and comfortable rooms for single people.

Nothing is said of married people.

10. Organized recreation for everyone.
11. Agreeable working conditions.
12. Training for administrative and executive duties.

And that is not all they offer our youth headed for the air force, the army or the navy. But it is much better than what is offered by Bill No. C-110. Further, it says:

General courses leading to a diploma in arts, science and engineering are supplemented by military instruction and studies, including summer training in Canada or abroad. Tuition fees are paid by the government and cadet officers are also supplied with the required uniforms and receive pay and allowances, besides being entitled to annual leave and other privileges.

Here, one finds the amount of pay given to young students of the air force, army and navy, not for peace but for war:

Pay (all cadet officers), $63 a month.
Living allowance, $65 a month.

And if the student does flying time:

$75 a month.

The above figures do not comprise medical and dental care, which are free, nor clothing or other benefits. The cadet officers have 30 days of annual leave with pay (to which travelling time is added), which is generally awarded after the summer training period. Christmas leave is also provided.

I wanted to point out the merits of a military educational system with regard to the air force, the army and the navy.

What a difference from the terms of Bill No. C-110, which is offered to all our young people in Canada. All we have to offer are debts and loans.

When shall we rid ourselves of that system?

I listened to hon. members, whether Conservative or Liberal, and I found that whenever there was a question of taxes or loans, they were all in agreement.

Mr. Speaker, the weather is upon us; each summer, the flies appear with the heat. What do the farmers do? They get an insect killer, which is called d.d.t., to kill those flies.

As far as I am concerned, I say that the two old line parties represented in this chamber, the Liberals and the Conservatives, use exactly the same remedies, the same pattern to destroy our social classes: the d.d.t. system. In fact, since confederation, Canada never has had anything else than debts, deficits and taxes. That is, sirs, your d.d.t. financial system. Today, there is nothing else to offer our various social classes.

This afternoon the hon. member for Roberval proposed an amendment to the bill under consideration. Why? To allow students to achieve the same results, without incurring debts and mortgaging their future as their parents are presently doing.

We want the federal government to respect the British North America Act. The separatist movement in the province of Quebec is criticized, the French Canadians who want to safeguard the province's autonomy are blamed. But the federal ministers should start by respecting the British North America Act, which gave the provinces jurisdiction over education, instead of interfering in a field which comes under the exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces.

The amendment moved by the hon. member for Roberval would enable the Bank of Canada to loan the provinces, without interest, the money they need to do what they want in the field of education.

The British North America Act gave the provinces jurisdiction in the field of education but, on the other hand, jurisdiction in the field of finance was given to the federal government. The provinces were entrusted with responsibility in the field of education, but the means to carry out that responsibility were given to the central government.

Now, since finance and money come under the federal government and since education is a provincial responsibility, Ottawa should, through the Bank of Canada, put the required funds at the disposal of the provinces, so that the latter may look after educational needs as they see fit. If that were the case, we would hear less about separatism because provincial and minority rights would be respected. It is only on that condition that the Canadian confederation will be strong; otherwise, we will inevitably end up on the road on which Bill No. C-110 is but a milestone.

This separatism wave will unfortunately get worse in Quebec, not because of the separatists themselves, but because of those who are sitting on the government benches.

Mr. L. T. Pennell (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, my intervention will unfortunately be technical in nature but, fortunately, brief in character. The time has come when I feel that some observations ought to be made on the very difficult constitutional and legal aspects of the debate before the house. But before I do so may I be allowed to interpose a welcome to the principles of the bill. There is a rule that says that something is always lost in translation, but it seems to me that the very instructive and illuminating introductory explanation by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) proved to be the exception to the rule.

I confidently believe that any measure which has as its fundamental purpose to widen the opportunities for education will receive a sympathetic treatment at the hands of this house. Its aim is to wipe out the inequalities imposed by economic handicaps.

It may interest the house to know that in the recent report of the Robbins commission in Great Britain they found that they had to change their views regarding the relationship between heredity and intelligence. They found that the children of the lower class people did just as well as children of upper and middle class groups. May I suggest that a great resource of untapped ability in this nation will be found in the working class and lower income groups. I speak with some experience, Mr. Speaker, and, with deep feeling on this matter when I say that no young persons should have to be deprived of, or delayed the opportunity for, education at a university, and it is bitter tea to swallow when you have to undergo that experience. It is a trite observation to say that this nation must make the fullest possible use of its capital resources and in intelligence.

I now pass by natural transition to the very difficult constitutional points that probe deeply into the fabric of this bill. I know that a large number of the members of this house are not lawyers, and I suppose they will thank me for that testimonial. But none the less I believe there is a legitimate curiosity about these very fundamental legal problems.

I turn at once to deal in particular with the criticism contained in the speech of the hon. and learned member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin), to which the house listened with unbroken attention. If I understood him correctly, and I think I did, his argument was put in this way. He stated that the purport of this bill was to delegate the power of the parliament of Canada, a sovereign authority, to the lieutenant governor in council, who in turn would make a very important decision by designating persons or agencies who would select the student as qualifying and the institutions designated under the act.

The hon. and learned member went on to draw our attention to the case of the attorney general of Nova Scotia v. attorney general of Canada, which is reported in Supreme Court Reports, 1951. That case held that it was unconstitutional for the parliament of Canada to delegate its power to a provincial legislature.

It should be noted Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member then made a distinction and pointed out that the Nova Scotia case was different from the case now engaging the attention of the house because in the Nova Scotia case the delegation of power was from the parliament of Canada to the provincial legislature, while the purport of this bill delegates power from parliament to the lieutenant governor in council.

I do not think I do an injustice to the very forceful argument of the hon. member for Greenwood when I say that he did not cite any case that turned directly on the point, so far as the lieutenant governor in council is concerned. He bridged that difference, may I say, by stating that in his opinion the principle was applicable in both cases. It is at this point that I must part company, with great reluctance, from the hon. member. I might say that the answer to his argument is found in his own distinction. The bill now before the house is a delegation not from the parliament of Canada to the provincial legislature, but a delegation from parliament to the lieutenant governor in council. In any event—and this is a fundamental point—the bill does not purport to delegate any legislative authority but only delegate administrative authority, which the lieutenant governor in council can carry out without the consent of the provincial legislature.

May I put it another way, Mr. Speaker. The bill is not purporting to take any law-making powers away from the parliament of Canada to give to the lieutenant governor in council, because the parliament of Canada has already exercised its law-making powers which are contained in the bill itself. All we are doing is permitting the lieutenant governor in council to make an administrative act which, as I say, in no way affects the law-making power which remains with parliament.

Perhaps I may be allowed to cite an illustration in support of the contention I now put forward. If the house would bear with me I should like to invite its attention to the Canadian World Exhibition Corporation Act, section 10, which act is to be found in Statutes of Canada, 1962-63, chapter 12. Section 10 says, quoting the material words:

> The corporation shall...submit for the approval of the governor in council and the lieutenant governor in council its over-all plan—

This is an illustration of the parliament of Canada delegating authority to the lieutenant governor in council to approve a certain plan. May I say—I do not say this in any arrogant or offensive manner—that in this case the lieutenant governor in council was that of the province of Quebec. Without trying to make a political point, Mr. Speaker, being secure in the knowledge that a large number of members across the floor of the house will support the bill, may I say that perhaps they will secure further comfort from the knowledge that the legislation to which I have just referred was introduced, and properly introduced, by the previous administration.

But my illustrations do not stop there. I would ask the house to apply its mind to the Criminal Code, sections 523, 524, 526 and 527, in all of which sections, power of the parliament was delegated to the lieutenant governor in council to carry out administrative acts regarding people declared insane and held in detention.

I could, Mr. Speaker, refer to section 13 of the Prisons and Reformatories Act, which deals with powers conferred by parliament on the lieutenant governor to make regulations to prevent escape from jail. Section 20 of the Juvenile Delinquents Act deals with powers conferred by parliament on the lieutenant governor in council to approve an industrial school to which children who are judged to be juvenile delinquents may be committed.

I do not wish to pretend by the fact that I have cited a number of similar illustrations that I have entirely removed the arguments of my hon. friend from Greenwood. I have a profound respect for him. I knew him at the bar and his reputation preceded him into this house. Whenever he makes an assertion on constitutional law it ought to be listened to with attention. But may I also say that those of us who are concerned with the bill have made an honest and sincere effort to see that it stays within proper limits. We have given sustained consideration to the matter and I would ask the house, particularly the hon. member for Greenwood, to whom I make a personal appeal although he is not present, to accept the opinion that the bill does not contravene and is within the rule of constitutional purity and substance.

I should not ignore the fact that the learned member proposed an alternative method and in my very humble opinion that alternative was valid and did not affect the fabric of the bill. But I am sure he will understand our position. We have given this matter a great deal of attention, have turned it over in our minds a great number of times, and we have reached the conscientious and honest opinion that the bill does not in any way infringe on the rights of the provinces, or is unconstitutional.

Mr. Knowles: Mr. Speaker, before the hon. member leaves this subject, which he has discussed in a manner which is very interesting to all of us, will he permit a question? Does he recall that in another debate this session—it happened to be the debate on the electoral boundaries bill—the Minister of Transport (Mr. Pickersgill) said that the members of the government had racked their brains to try to find some way in which to appoint provincial people to do a certain job?

I do not want to get into the redistribution argument, but I am sure the hon. member will recall that in that situation the government apparently felt that the federal government could not delegate a function to provincial persons, that it had to remain with persons who were responsible to the federal government. How does the hon. member get around that argument which was used in this very session by a member of the cabinet?

Mr. Pennell: May I say to the hon. member that every case must turn on its own facts and must be dealt with accordingly. We move from field to field. I cannot make a definite general statement that will cover all powers of the federal government as related to those of the provincial governments. I am dealing here with one specific bill and I can only assume, knowing the usual searching examination that the Minister of Transport makes of all matters delegated to him, that he must have given the correct answer.

Mr. Winkler: Give us an instance.

Mr. Pigeon: May I address just one question to the hon. member. Can he quote a word or phrase from the B.N.A. Act which permits the federal government to interfere in education?

Mr. Pennell: May I say, and I say this with great respect to the hon. member, that he misapprehends the whole purpose of the bill, because we are not dealing with education, as I trust I will demonstrate to the satisfaction of the house in a few moments. I am now going to deal with that body of opinion expressed by some hon. members who took exception to the bill, but who I believe labour under a misapprehension. I do not say this in any arrogant manner. With great respect, in my view they are labouring under the misapprehension that this is a matter of education. It is my respectful submission that we are now dealing with a matter that comes properly under section 91(1) and section 91(15) of the British North America Act.

Mr. Pigeon: Section 93?

Mr. Pennell: I can see that a very precipitate and inadequate examination of the bill may tend to lead to the conclusion that we are dealing with the matter of education and property and civil rights. Let me say that there is nothing manifest in the bill that shows any intent to truncate or deprive the provinces of their real and special responsibilities in the field of education.

Mr. Pigeon: On division.

Mr. Pennell: May I say I know that the minds of a number of members are exercised about clause 15 of the bill, but in my respectful submission this comes under section 91 (15) of the British North America Act. I do not undermine my own position when I say that if you view this bill from different angles it takes on different forms, but if you hold it up to the light of examination and intensive study it will become clear and ought to lead inevitably and conclusively to the finding that this is a matter within section 91(15) of the B.N.A. Act.

Let me say to my hon. friend across the floor that those who have contended otherwise have not brought any cases forward to support their position. I now invite the attention of hon. members first of all to the definition of banking. I am now dealing with the question of loans to infants under clause 15.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask a question?

Mr. Pennell: Later.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Pennell: I will be pleased to answer questions subsequently.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask a question before you finish the subject?

Mr. Pigeon: Don't embarrass the hon. member.

Mr. Pennell: Under the leading case of Tenant v. Union Bank of Canada, 1894 Appeal Cases, 31, a privy council decision, it was laid down that "banking is an expression wide enough to embrace every transaction coming within the legitimate business of a banker". I say it is within the concept of banking to make loans, and if the bank makes loans surely it should have the right to recover the money due to it. Forgetting the question of law altogether, in my respectful submission it would be contrary to common sense to call something a loan if the man who paid out the money did not have the right to attempt to recover.

Therefore I submit that this question of loans properly comes under the category of banking as defined in section 91 (15) of the B.N.A. Act. I would also direct the attention of the house to the leading case of attorney general of Canada v. attorney general of Quebec, a 1947 judgment, also by the privy council, in which it was held that a depositor had a right to recover his deposit from the bank and that this was a matter of banking and not a contractual matter relating to property and civil rights. I notice that the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire) shakes his head, but all I can do is give the authority. The privy council decision in the case of attorney general of Canada and attorney general of Quebec.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask a question?

Mr. Pennell: I should like to move on now to look at section 95 of the Bank Act, and I might say that this section has never been challenged to my knowledge. Section 95 (1) reads as follows:

> The bank may...without the authority, aid, assistance or intervention of any other person or official being required,
> (a) receive deposits from any person whomsoever, whatever his age, status or condition in life, and whether such person is qualified by law to enter into ordinary contracts or not.

This section implies a right in the depositor to claim payment from the bank and it sets up a bank-customer relationship in which each party has equal rights. Therefore I submit that clause 15 is properly included as a part of banking.

Mr. Grégoire: You are far away from the question.

Mr. Pennell: My hon. friend says I am far away from the question, but I would point out that there is nothing novel in this question of dealing with infants, which seems to exercise the minds of those who are opposing the bill. I would ask them now to look at the Financial Administration Act passed in 1953. I am now referring to chapter 116 of the Revised Statutes of Canada, section 56. Perhaps the hon. member would care to listen. It reads as follows:

> The governor in council may make such regulations...
> (b) (ii) prescribing the conditions upon which the transfer, transmission, exchange and redemption of securities registered in the names of infants, minors or other persons not of full capacity to enter into ordinary contracts, may be made.

So, I would say, Mr. Speaker, that we are not embarking into a novel field. We are properly exercising the rights given to this parliament under the British North America Act.

Before I conclude, Mr. Speaker, I ought to make a reference to the point raised by the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen). While within our own minds we are satisfied that the bill as it stands would cover the Northwest Territories and the Yukon, none the less if it is not grossly impertinent on my part, I am prepared to recommend to my minister when we get into the committee that he give the consideration and study to the amendment that I respectfully think it deserves. I trust that my remarks have not been too tedious to those who do not have a professional interest in the law. I am unwilling to inflict my opinions on the house any further. May I say in conclusion that whatever may be the imperfections of this bill, and I make no admissions on that score, in my humble opinion it has the makings of a valuable and useful act of parliament.

Mr. Pigeon: May I address a question to the hon. member? Is the hon. member ready to support the idea of having a federal minister of education?

Mr. Pennell: I am not ready for that. No one will find a stronger defender of the rights of the provinces in the field of education than I am.

Mr. Pigeon: What does the hon. member think of the ideas of the hon. member for York East (Mr. Otto)? You have a split in your party.

Mr. Grégoire: May I ask a question of the hon. member in French?

[Translation]

The hon. member mentioned the case of those who are under age and who deposit money in the bank. Is the member aware of a section of the Quebec civil code which states that when a person under age, without the consent of his father, tutor or mother, as the case may be, enters into a contract, the person under age cannot be forced, under the law, to make restitution, in a case like this, should the contract mean a loss to him; in other words, if a person under age borrows $1,000, the terms of the contract will not be against him but rather in his favour, and he will not have to reimburse his creditor.

[Text]

Mr. Pennell: May I say that not only do I understand there is such a regulation in the civil code of Quebec, but I understand also that the same broad principle applies in Ontario. I made my submission to the house partially aware of this regulation. It is my honest, sincere belief that we are not truncating or depriving the province of its powers in the field of education or civil and property rights.

Mr. Eric A. Winkler (Grey-Bruce): I am very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to follow the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. He knows that I have a very high regard for his opinions on this matter, which we have discussed intimately in different quarters. In the final portion of his remarks he referred to this bill as a valuable and useful one for parliament to pass. I readily agree with this statement. I am one of those who believe that this legislation, in consideration of all the problems that will develop, will be a very useful piece of legislation.

I am also one of those who believe that this legislation has been brought forward much too late. I regret that some of the statements made during the course of this debate have been somewhat contrary to what has actually happened during the course of this parliament. I should like to say initially, Mr. Speaker, that the point that aroused my interest in the bill was the intervention on July 14 of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso). I asked the hon. member a question at the conclusion of his remarks, and I should like to repeat a portion of that question in order to clarify my position this evening. I quote from page 5477 of Hansard:

> Will the hon. member permit a question? Does he not agree that had it not been for the efforts of the Canadian students union itself, goodness knows when we would have had this legislation?

I shall not quote the other portion of the question because that is the important part. The hon. member for Hamilton West said he was happy I had asked him the question. Then, he said:

> He should look at the position of his own side. He says, now: We are willing to co-operate; put the legislation before us. But it is interesting to note that the opposition has only adopted this attitude after pressure by the students, by he universities and in the press.

In my opinion, this is an extremely important inference. My predecessor on the floor this evening said he was making his contribution on a non-political basis, and I made it very clear at that time my presentation to the government, in order to impress them with the importance of this legislation, had been on a non-political basis as well. I assure you this evening that was the case, and it remains so this evening.

I should like to refer to some of the remarks made earlier in the debate by the same hon. member for Hamilton West. At page 5474 of Hansard he refers to the words of Mr. James G. Mitchell, president of the students council of the University of Waterloo and James D. Kraemer, chairman of the board of external relations of that university. This is what those men said in a letter to the hon. member:

> The Ontario legislature did not adequately meet the needs of her expanding universities and as a result there has been a widespread increase in tuition fees (a situation common throughout Canada). The increase in fees (which in our case amounts to more than $75) coupled with the growing scarcity of summer employment once again threatened to make "university" a "privilege of the wealthy".

Earlier in their letter they say:

> Our earnest hope is that the members of parliament will effectively expedite this priority legislation—

Then there is an interruption, and I continue to quote from the letter:

> —which awaits the house, in order that a system of federal loans for students will be in effect for September, 1964.

How ridiculous can a person be? I watched the activities of the hon. member for Hamilton West very carefully. I regret very much that he is not in the house this evening, nor has he been in the house all day today, nor was he at the meeting of university students held in room 112 north in this building when they made their presentation, nor do I find one instance of the hon. member putting that presentation before the government or requesting that this legislation be brought forward. This angers me more than a little, because he accused the opposition of not intervening until the Canadian students union made a presentation to the government.

Let me illustrate how untrue that statement is. I go back to Hansard, page 2599, April 27, 1964, to a contribution in which a request was made of the government by the hon. member for York-Sunbury (Mr. MacRae) that this legislation be brought forward. Goodness knows, I do not have all these references. Then, at page 3166 of Hansard for May 12, 1964, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas) made a similar request. Then on the same day a further request from the hon. member for Digby-Annapolis-Kings (Mr. Nowlan); again on page 3398, May 20, by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam (Mr. Douglas), and a similar request on page 3399 by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Grégoire). Then in volume 4, at page 4093, June 9, there is the hon. member for Victoria, Ont. (Mr. Lamb); page 4094, June 9, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam; page 4150, June 10, the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam, and page 4223, June 17 by a supporter of the government party, one of the Hamilton members. I do not have his constituency but I would ask you to make note of that. Then at page 4442, June 18, there is the hon. member for Ontario (Mr. Starr); page 4496, June 19, the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Muir); page 4547, June 22, the hon. member for Hamilton South (Mr. Howe); page 4698, June 25, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I think it is valuable that we have them all, certainly all I have found.

Mr. Knowles: Put all on the record.

Mr. Winkler: That is right, Stanley. Then on page 5139, July 7, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre again, and on page 5150, July 7, which happens to be myself, Mr. Speaker, and I will stop there; but there were other requests.

Let it not be said by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso) that we boarded the gravy train when the Canadian students union arrived. I am afraid the government did not become alive to the situation until that date.

Again my predecessor in speaking, the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand (Mr. Pennell), said that he was a learned member of the law profession and might be in a minority in this house. Sometimes I think there are too many of them here, Mr. Speaker, but I still tell you I have a very high regard for that member, and regardless of the constitutional arguments or involvements I am prepared to support every inch of this legislation, including the resultant problems that will be created.

When I say the resultant problems I refer to some of the references that have been made. I think of facility; I think of faculty as well as of the student. It does not matter too much to me in which order we take them. If this legislation creates the next problem, then I say well and good, because if there is one thing we need in this country right now it is a look at the educational system to improve it and to create greater opportunity.

It is a peculiar thing, when we look at the expenditures of the government and the manner in which they are made, the first thing supporters of the government say is, what did you do when your government was in office? That kind of thinking in this particular case, as in others, must be forgotten and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, if we look into the future we have to think of the tax dollars we are going to spend.

In this connection I am thinking of the unemployment insurance fund and am suggesting that we take a look at the drop-outs in secondary school and high school. Maybe we can do something in this area because to my way of thinking there is no sense in educating students through grades 11 and 12, particularly in the province of Ontario, and have them drop out only to see a diminishing supply of money in the unemployment insurance fund. That is poor business. We should think far enough on into the future about the way we are going to spend our tax dollars, and maybe we shall have to revise our entire thinking.

I think of the whiz kids the Minister of Finance brought in to assist him with his first budget. Maybe three or four of those unemployed people could have spent that money much more realistically than the whiz kids spent it. When you draw the common denominator of people who apply for unemployment insurance, as the hon. member for Brant-Haldimand has said, if we use the thinking power of these people we will be able to understand better their problems. All the brains of the country are not in parliament. As a matter of fact, it was not too long ago I thought most of the brains were outside parliament; but when we consider where the money is going to be best spent we should have a look at the whole picture.

Maybe we should bring in some of the presidents of our universities so that we can more readily understand exactly what the requirements are. Even though we have very valuable and high minded contributions during the course of this debate we will not find the solution to all the problems that exist. One criticism of this legislation which I heard was that put forward by the hon. member for Burnaby-Coquitlam in regard to the bank loan situation that has existed thus far concerning students.

It just so happens that this afternoon I had the president of the Waterloo Lutheran University in my office and he discussed this with me. He assured me that never once did they have a problem with a student who had a reasonable standing, in securing a loan. I asked him, "Will this legislation serve a very useful purpose in your institution?" and his reply was, "Yes, to a degree it will assist us in that our own bursary program will not have to be so great."

Without offering it as a vital criticism of this legislation, the question is, why was it not brought forward as it was promised? I do not ask this to indicate that I am opposed to it. I am not, as I have said; but when the Liberal party promises scholarships in an election campaign and turns around and converts them into a loan program, surely to goodness the people of Canada will wake up and have a look at what they are doing with the country and how they are putting their program forward. Is it truthful? I am not saying it is untruthful, but I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and members of the house, is it truthful if you are going to give scholarships and you turn around and make them loans?

The president of this university said to me this afternoon the one thing they were always careful of was the debt position into which a student placed himself. I replied, "Surely, when a student is going on for a professional career a debt of $3,000 or $4,000 is not too much to him". He replied that there are so many complications for a student going through university today. Some come in as married people; some of them are married immediately they graduate. "Now," he said, "it may be a minority of the group, but it creates a situation which must be looked at responsibly."

I have had some of the members of this house say to me that the provincial programs are inadequate. I do not know whether I am prepared to say they are inadequate. I have here before me the program as outlined by the department of education of the province of Ontario entitled "Ontario Student Aid Loans, 1964-65." It is a complete outline of that program. I am not prepared to read it out fully and put it on the record, but it does not look too bad to me in relation to what the president of this university had to say to me today. It does give the student who is eligible, who has the desire, and has the capability, the opportunity of going further along, with the money he might borrow from a chartered bank.

Contrary to what the hon. member for Hamilton West had to say, I deny that everything is political expediency. He seems to think no one has his eyes open until such time as legislation is brought forward or some pressure group comes into the picture. There is another thing I should like to point out in this regard. It was very interesting to me to note what happened the day we met the students union. I did not identify myself by name or by party and I stated at that meeting that my contribution, or questions, or presentation was on a non-political basis, whereupon all the Liberal members immediately howled me down. Of course we know what this is: It is the usual practice. But I think, now that the situation is somewhat different, and even at the cost of that trifling and usual Liberal embarrassment I stand here and say I intend to support this legislation; I think it is good and I hope it goes through at the earliest possible date.

Some time ago, as I was about to say to you, Mr. Speaker, early in May, being concerned that the legislation was not coming forward quickly enough—and I hope the excerpts I read to you and the house are sufficient to prove that at least we were sincere in what we were doing—I wrote to the minister of education in the province of Ontario, and he had this to say to me:

> You will notice that loans of $500 are available to Ontario residents taking courses in the institutions as listed for the current year. The appropriation for this fund is $3 million and we anticipate that all of it will be used.

Therefore I suggest again to the house that this is a valuable piece of legislation and I hope it is consummated in time for all the students who require it to make use of it.

With regard now to the student who puts himself in a debt position, I should like to say that I have before me a prospectus for the United States economy as put forward by a firm known as Vince, Saunders and Company, Inc., of Boston, Massachusetts. It is interesting to note that these statistics, which are dated June 15, 1964, indicate that by 1975 the gross national product of the United States will increase by more than 50 per cent to a record of $1 trillion per year. It is also estimated that there will be an increase of 40 per cent in today's average income and that the average family income in the United States will be $8,724 by 1975. There are a number of other statistics which I shall not bother to place on record, but I believe that this, together with the other quotations I have given, indicates that we must proceed, and proceed quickly in the direction we are now taking.

We all know, and it has been stated in the course of this debate, what the government has contributed to the universities on a per capita basis, and I hope—I do not know whether this has been mentioned; if not, I put it forward for what it is worth—that these contributions are made on a per capita basis of the student population of the universities rather than on the basis of the populations of the provinces of Canada concerned.

Some institutions are of course more progressive than others. We heard yesterday and last evening of the tremendous growth which will be experienced here in the capital city and I am sure a similar growth, if not a greater growth, will take place in the industrial centres of this country such as Montreal, Toronto, and so on. These areas surely can no longer be segregated on a provincial basis. In such cases, let us relate our contribution directly to the institution so as to enable them to do the job with which they have been entrusted. Let us not restrict them in any way. This would take care of universities in the maritime area where, as I understand it from the debate, they have a tremendous number of students attending from other parts of Canada. Then the other provinces can take advantage accordingly, and in this way there will be the proper distribution of the funds which are necessary.

I listened with great interest to some of the high minded speeches which have come from the government side of the house. I hesitate to say this again, because one becomes tarnished with a political approach in this house and outside. This is used for the purpose of showing something other than the sincerity with which a point is put forward. This evening I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the house, that some time ago I was involved in the possibility of the opening of a university at the Edgar radar site in Ontario, half way between Orillia and Barrie. I was intimately concerned with the progress of this particular proposal. The government came forward with suggestions. Members were working. Defeated candidates were working—and that is the important part of the question. Then all of a sudden there was a change. The government was not so vitally interested. They are now. And who pulled the rug from under the government? Their own defeated Liberal members. Yes, that is quite so.

I understand, some time in the future there is to be a university at Barrie, and I congratulate the people who are to take part in the establishment of that university. But if the government had had their sights set precisely in the first instance there would be an institution of learning at Edgar and maybe some time in the future they will regret not having established it. Let us not be so high minded about a piece of legislation here in the house in one instance and then play around with politics outside as seems to be a characteristic of this government—and it is regrettable that it must occur.

Mr. Moreau: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Winkler: With pleasure.

Mr. Moreau: I am not trying in any way to get into the debate. I should like to know whether the hon. member agrees with me that jurisdiction for setting up universities and their sites lies with the provinces.

Mr. Winkler: I agree very much with the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Moreau) but he must recognize that there is a tremendous capital plant in Edgar which somebody is going to get for peanuts, the way the Department of Defence Production is giving assets away; and if they had given it to the people of that area it would be properly used.

Mr. Moreau: Would it not be correct to assume that this site has been offered to the provincial government, for them to make use of it?

Mr. Winkler: If the hon. member will attach a price tag to it I would probably agree with him. It is offered on the one hand on a political basis for a very small figure, but when the provincial authority becomes involved the fee becomes a lot higher—and I know the details of what I am speaking about.

Somebody back there has said: "One of the members of the Interprovincial hotel committee". That is one thing I hold directly against the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso). When a meeting was held down here and he accused me of playing politics with this issue, we on this side, attended that meeting here, not in the Interprovincial hotel in Hull.

No doubt there will be a number of questions asked during the clause by clause study of this bill. But I want to reiterate that the contribution made the other evening angered me no end. I refer to the remarks made with regard to the promotion of this legislation. I say again, Mr. Speaker, in a little more controlled way, that had it not been for the government's—and may be just the Prime Minister's—desire to proceed with his own method of handling legislation—and I refer to the flag resolution—we would have had this bill before the house when it should have been before us, in time for the majority of students to take advantage of it. There are some universities now that have their doors closed to applicants. This must be understood across the country. Nevertheless, I will vote for this bill; I will stand behind it—and when any other legislation with regard to facilities, plant or the engaging of staff—that is, the university faculties—is introduced by the government, I will stand behind such legislation as well.

Mr. H. E. Gray (Essex West): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to be able to say a few words in support of this bill and in opposition of the amendment to it. I think that the hon. member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Winkler), before criticizing in any way the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Macaluso), should spend some time correcting his own colleagues who feel that this bill is unconstitutional and who do not seem prepared to support it. I say this in a rather non-political sense—I hope, in a more non-political sense than the hon. member—because I am quite pleased to note that he himself supports this legislation. If he wants to find very good authority from a leader of his own party on the attitude to take toward this matter, I have a quotation for him which reads as follows:

> The challenge of adventure into new fields of social welfare must not find us discouraged by the difficulties adherent in the British North America Act. We must go forth into new horizons of social justice...The state must guarantee and underwrite equal access to security, to education, to nutrition and to health for all.

These words were spoken by the then member for Lake Centre, the present Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Diefenbaker) during the debate on the family allowance bill in 1944, and can be found in volume VI of Hansard for that year at page 5460. I hope, therefore, the members of the official opposition who support this bill will bring this quotation to the attention of their colleagues who do not seem to share their views.

The University of Windsor, the Windsor teachers' college and the western Ontario institute of technology are all found in the riding of Essex West, and of course this helps indicate the basis for my interest in this bill.

The University of Windsor in the last few years has had a spectacular growth and development, much of which has come about under the inspired leadership of the Reverend Father E. C. Lebel. Father Lebel recently retired as president of the University of Windsor but will be continuing his work in the field of higher education as principal of St. Mark's college of the University of British Columbia. I know I speak for all the people of Windsor in adding further words of tribute to the many already expressed for his splendid service to the university and our community. The period of Father Lebel's work in Windsor reflects what has happened to higher education in Canada over the past several decades. When he came to Assumption college, a precursor of the university in 1941, to head its English department, three buildings were sufficient to provide both for housing and classrooms for some 100 college students and those of an affiliated high school. When he completed his last days as president at the end of June of this year the University of Windsor had grown to include some 11 buildings and some 3,965 students of which 1,816 were full time.

Yet the University of Windsor and the other universities in our country still have much to do to meet the demands that are being placed upon them. We are privileged in Windsor to have as Father Lebel's successor Dr. John Francis Leddy, former vice president of the University of Saskatchewan. Jerry Hames of the Windsor Star recently interviewed Dr. Leddy, and in a report in the Windsor Star of July 3, 1964, said that Dr. Leddy "showed concern for the large numbers of students who have attained university entrance standards, yet find themselves through either lack of accommodation or financial need unable to enrol in university".

Mr. Hames went on to quote Dr. Leddy as saying "there are more capable students who find themselves outside university than those who are actually enrolled in the university courses throughout Canada. It weighs very heavily upon me". Mr. Speaker, this is a matter that should weigh very heavily upon all Canadians, not only because of the injustice this situation has meant to the individuals concerned who up till now have not been able to obtain the higher education of which they are capable, but also because of the loss it has meant to our country of badly needed skills. I know that the majority of Canadians in all parts of our country will therefore welcome this legislation, which I think will do much to deal with the problem of financial need that has kept many young people from our universities and other institutions of higher learning.

I must say that in presenting this important legislation—and I say this in the same non-partisan, non-political sense as the hon. member for Grey-Bruce—within only a year and several months after taking office, this government has done something which the previous Conservative government was unable to do in six years of office, during four of which they had the biggest majority in Canadian history.

I think we should again take the opportunity to make absolutely clear that at least as far as I am aware this Canada student loan plan is definitely not being put forward in substitution for or in place of the 10,000 scholarships program which formed part of the platform on which we campaigned and gained office in 1963.

An hon. Member: Where are they?

Loans to Students

Mr. Gray: I might add, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Hamilton West has no need to stand in this house during the question period or otherwise to avow his support of this program, because it formed part of the program on which he went to the people of his riding and in which he defeated a former Conservative cabinet minister.

The student loan fund and the university scholarships program were both part of our program for creating greater opportunities for our youth, of which the extension of family allowances formed another important part. We have already implemented one such program, the youth allowances, which I am very happy to support and which has the effect of extending the family allowance program. In presenting to parliament this measure with regard to student loans we are now proceeding with a further stage and I am personally confident that this government will seek an early and appropriate opportunity to present to parliament the program for the 10,000 scholarships as a further stage of our program for creating greater opportunity for our youth.

Opposition speakers have suggested that the making available of student loans will increase the strain on the capacity of our universities. However, it should not be forgotten that a study published in February of this year by the Canadian universities foundation stated, "In spite of a general continued increase in university enrolment, the situation in the fall of 1963 shows that there are still places in university for those who meet the minimum requirements". Therefore, Mr. Speaker, in spite of the obvious desperate need for more buildings there is room at this time for those who can take advantage of this student loan fund.

Every once in a while we still hear people say that any student who wants to go out and do so can earn all the money needed for tuition fees, room and board and other expenses. Research shows that this is simply not the case. According to the recent Canadian union of students—Loyola university—survey on student summer employment, 82 per cent of students work in the summer months but only slightly more than 50 per cent earn between $300 and $1,000; yet the average undergraduate costs run between $1,196 and $1,550.

The possibility of students being able to earn the money needed for their education from part time work is getting smaller and smaller. Many of the part time, summer jobs available to students at one time simply do not exist any more due to changes in technology. It is also clear that existing bursary and scholarship programs available through the provinces or through private sources are simply not sufficient to meet the need. If this were not so, Mr. Speaker, over half of those capable of higher education would not be outside our universities. This is further demonstrated by an interesting table showing student retention from secondary school to university which is to be found in the 1963-64 Canada Year Book. This table shows that of those entering grade 2 only about 15 per cent enter the senior school leaving year, and about 9 per cent enter university. And of those, only about 5 per cent graduate from university with a first degree.

For anyone to talk at this time, for example, of tightening admission standards to hold down the number of those seeking entrance to university is to urge a cruel and unrealistic solution and one which is dangerous to the future of this country. This country has so great a need for the skills which can come from higher education that it simply cannot afford to permit anyone capable of benefitting from higher education to be deprived of it for financial reasons. Canada can no longer leave the filling of this need largely to chance in the manner followed up to now—the chance which gave a student prosperous parents, or which brought him a good summer or part time job, or even the chance which gave him the stamina to follow his studies and to work at the same time.

Conditions in the world and in this country now are such that it is as much in the interests of the Canadian community to enable the young person to obtain a university education as it was, and still is, to provide him with a primary and secondary education. About 100 years ago systems of primary and secondary education available to all and supported by the community were created because they benefited the entire community. Secondary education and even primary education at that time was sufficient to enable most of the people to fill most of the jobs available and to carry out their duties as citizens. But today our world has changed to such a degree that merely to meet the same requirements of having a population able to carry out needed tasks and duties as citizens, the community must also be willing to assume the cost of making available higher education. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that there is no logical reason today why the community through one of its governmental manifestations or another should pay the cost of primary and secondary schooling but stay away from university training and education at a similar level.

We have to eliminate the idea that still lingers that in providing aid to those seeking university training we are bestowing some type of favour mainly for the private benefit of the student. It is true that university graduates earn higher incomes, but these incomes arising out of the greater productivity which is brought about by their higher degree of skill will not only benefit the community but will enable us to bear the cost not only of comprehensive social welfare programs but also the aid to higher education itself.

Most important of all, measures of the nature of the student loan fund will help make sure that Canada has the skills it must have to move ahead in today's highly competitive trading world. Without these skills our products will not be able to compete with those of other nations with ever-advancing technology. The maintenance and development of our standard of living depends on this parliament passing measures of the type we are debating. We must look upon the cost of this student loan fund and other measures which will follow as a form of investment in what is surely our most valuable resource—our young people, and the return on this investment will far exceed the expense.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, this student loan fund is not of itself the complete answer to the needs involved in paying the cost of higher education both to the competent student and to the university he attends. But it is a significant and an important step forward toward the goal of ensuring that no one who has the desire and the ability will be deprived of higher education for financial reasons in Canada. In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, to paraphrase the words of Dr. Leddy, president of the University of Windsor, this problem must continue to weigh heavily upon all of us until this vital goal is reached.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe East): Mr. Speaker, I should like first of all to congratulate the minister upon bringing in this legislation, timid though it is. I wonder what happened, however, to those 10,000 scholarships.

Mr. Gordon: Just wait.

Mr. Rynard: The golden fleece which floated in and disappeared. And I wonder what happened to those headlines in the Toronto Star for May 1, 1962—"10,000 Scholarships for University Students". This is a poor substitute but it is a help.

Canada today badly needs university graduates. This principle we must accept. We have the second highest standard of living in the world, Mr. Speaker, and we boast about this. But when we compare our labour force, our university labour force, with that of the United States, for example, ours is 2 per cent while theirs is 6 per cent. In other words, Mr. Speaker, they have three times the number of university students per capita that we have. Further, let me say that in the scientific and technological fields we occupy somewhere between tenth and twelfth place in the countries of the world. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we have been living off our natural resources and failing to develop the greatest natural resource that we have—the brains of this country. We employ less than half per capita the scientists employed by the United States. I also want to remind you, Mr. Speaker, that Russia has boasted that in the year 1970 she will have twice the number of scientists that the United States has. Therefore I ask is it any wonder, when you look at this score, with the United States with three times the number of scientists that we have on its labour force, that we today have our industry largely controlled outside of this country? We owe our position today, as I have stated, to our good fortune in being blessed with some of the greatest natural resources that any country in the world can have, those natural resources which we have been exporting and not developing in our own country. We now need to develop the brains and the ability to handle, process and sell our manufactured goods in the markets of the world.

This year we had just over 180,000 students registered at universities. If my figures are correct, we had 142,000 university students taking full time courses and something like 45,000 were doing part time and postgraduate work. At our normal rate we will have doubled this in ten years. But this is not good enough. We are way behind other countries, as I have shown, and we will have to triple and quadruple the number of university students that we turn out, for our own survival. Out of every 100 children entering public school, 65 enter high school and eight of those enter university, six graduate with a degree. This waste of our greatest natural resource, Mr. Speaker, must stop. It is not good enough, in plain economics, for this situation to continue. Roughly speaking, a university graduate earns a salary of over $6,000 a year. A high school graduate earns over $4,000 and a public school student just over $3,000.

As a natural resource the normal working span averages about 40 years. If we take this figure and multiply it by $3,000 we come up with a figure of $120,000. If we take the average yearly salary of the high school graduate and multiply it by 40 we arrive at the figure of $160,000. But when we go to the university field what do we find? We find an asset of just under a quarter of a million dollars. Some people say that we cannot afford to spend more money in this field but I say, Mr. Speaker, that we are in the position that we cannot afford not to do so.

I will go further and say that this, our greatest resource, give us greater economic stability, and over and above that there is the fact that the government will take in a lot of money in income taxes that will be paid on the higher incomes of those in the higher brackets. We are going to need this money in view of the high expenditures we have undertaken.

Over and above the value of higher education to society, higher education increases the earning power of the individual and it also increases the contribution of the individual to society whether in the engineering field, some other scientific field, teaching or whatever the vocation may be. Their increased earning power will be of benefit to the state because a great proportion of the incomes of people earning higher salaries is funnelled off and comes back to the government in income taxes. Thus the government is very interested in having these young men complete their education as quickly as possible. It is a good idea for them, because of the contribution the individual will make to whatever field he enters and because of the income taxes he will pay to the government.

The minister states that under the legislation students will be picked by the provinces and that every student who has shown the ability to take the course he plans on taking can receive a guaranteed and insured loan. I am wondering whether all pass students should not be accepted in our universities. In my day students were accepted on the basis of a pass mark from high school. We were accepted on the recommendation of our minister and our high school principal, plus the pass mark. The thing that was most important in those days was dedication to whatever course you wanted to pursue. I recall many such people and the great contribution they have made to the life of Canada.

[Mr. Speaker.]

To substantiate what I have been saying I should like to put on the record an editorial from the Toronto Daily Star of November 29 last which reads in part as follows:

> The estimate of 90,000 claimants for college places in this province by 1970 is projected on a basis of 60 per cent standing on matriculation, as now—not 50 per cent. Unless university authorities move more determinedly than they have been doing, the only answer may be to raise admission requirements still further. If this happens, perhaps even some of our student critics would be nonplussed, were they trying to enter then.
> They write as if would be entrants with anything less than 60 per cent were some sort of scum that would contaminate the intellectual climate of a university. They seem to forget that for 100 years (up to about 1955) universities admitted all comers who had 50 per cent standing on matriculation papers. Yet they maintained respectable academic reputations, and there was intellectual curiosity on the campus and mental stimulation in the classes.
> Many students who squeezed in with standings in the low 50's went on to graduate and achieve great things in professional and civil life. Some professorial heads of departments in the University of Toronto now—

I want hon. members to listen to this.

> —would never have been allowed into university by today's 60 per cent barriers and other exclusive regulations. The present head of one college was permitted to enter university even though he did not pass the required matriculation papers.
> It's academic arrogance to deride 50 percenters as if they were mental slobs. The majority of school pupils never reach grade 13; those who do and obtain between 50 and 60 per cent on matric exams are better than average in ability. The opportunity for a college education is denied them at peril to the progress of our society.

I remember a brilliant university graduate whom I had for a teacher. He was the worst teacher I ever had, although he had the highest academic awards of any of my teachers. I also remember another chap who did a great deal for me. I owe a great deal to him. I was complimenting him one day in my own way on what a great teacher he was and he confided in me that he had a difficult time trying to get through school. It had taught him a great lesson because he could understand people and he could understand how difficult it was sometimes to grasp a point.

I want to go further and say that high school is often not a good mirror of what abilities a student may possess, because later on he may turn out to be quite brilliant. There are many classical examples, some of which were mentioned in the house the other day. Canada needs all the increased earning power she can get. She must not waste her greatest resource. A large number of Canadian boys and girls are capable of university education or vocational or technical training. To educate them we need more universities more equipment and more teachers.

I want to present some figures pertaining to the medical field because there is a real bottleneck there. First of all, we require five more medical schools in Canada to accommodate the students we need in medicine. Today we are short of doctors. Over the years this country has been graduating an insufficient number of medical men. I have only to cite figures for the last 10 years which show that in that period around 800 doctors per year have graduated from our 12 medical schools and during that same period some 600 immigrant doctors per year entered this country. That is the situation today and it has been the situation over the last 10 years, except the supply of immigrant doctors is drying up.

Over those years we should have been gradually building medical schools. I do not intend to blame anyone now because hindsight is a fine thing. But I go back more than 10 years and I remember a former prime minister of this country, Right Hon. Louis St. Laurent, speaking in the city of Kingston at Queen's University. At that time he said that grants were going to be given to the universities, without any strings attached to them. If my memory serves me correctly, that was in 1948. The government of that day should have known and did know that we were going to run into this problem. I say this the people will be the sufferers if we cannot provide the necessary medical care.

I believe the doctors are doing everything they can to give this service but we are faced with a tough problem in trying to get the medical schools constructed that we should have. Unfortunately it is also harder to get medical students than it was in 1947 and 1948. I remember then that medical schools were turning away 1,400 to 1,500 applicants a year because they could not accept them. Medical students or students who might consider medicine are taking a second look at the situation and are entering the fields of science where the rewards are probably a little richer. They are also a little perturbed about what might happen under medical care plans.

It takes seven to ten years to graduate a doctor, and this is after you have the buildings, the staff and the equipment. However our task is to provide the funds. Probably the per capita grant should be stepped up as well. In six years, Mr. Speaker, we doubled the per capita and I am wondering if it should not be doubled again. Classrooms must be built and equipped; teachers must be provided. The fees in universities range from $200 to $800 in medicine, and perhaps higher in some science courses.

According to the Hall report—listen to this, Mr. Speaker—we will need 7,100 more doctors than we have today, 42,000 nurses, 2,130 more dentists and five new medical schools, by 1973. This is less than ten years away. In other words, in 1973 we will be short of the number of doctors required by over 6,000. This is something of which we should have been well aware because we knew the population figures and the rate of increase. We were getting over 40 per cent of the number of doctors we were turning out by means of immigration. Two of the medical schools recommended will likely be built in the province of Ontario, one at McMaster and one at Sunnybrook.

I suggest to the minister that provision be made so that this $1,000 loan about which we are talking—I hope the minister is listening. I see he is in a discussion now, but I hope he will listen to this observation that a medical student goes to school more months per year than any other student. The fees for medical students, dentistry students and science students are higher than those of any other student, yet there is no provision for this in the bill. I ask the minister to take some provision because a medical student only has three months in which to earn money for his tuition.

Mr. Gordon: I should like to ask the hon. member a question. I think there is a lot in what he says, and I quite agree that the average medical student has to work very hard. I wonder if the hon. member would agree with me that the rewards perhaps are higher in financial terms, and in other terms, in medicine than in any of the other professions according to the statistics we have all been reading recently?

Mr. Rynard: I appreciate that question, and the minister is right. The only thing he did not mention is that he will drain most of it off in income taxes.

Then I should like to go on to say that the medical course is a long one. This loan scheme is set up on a four year basis, but the medical course runs for six years. I ask the minister to take this into consideration, in view of the fact that we are going to be thousands and thousands of doctors short in the days ahead. It may be that the life of some member of the house or someone else's life may depend upon the availability of a doctor. Unfortunately we have seen too many instances in which a doctor—this is not the fault of the doctors—has been called to attend a heart case or an emergency case and no doctor has been available.

Let us take a serious view of this problem. I would say to the university authorities, for goodness sakes let us use these medical schools all year round. These expensive buildings have been paid for by the taxpayers and they are left unoccupied. We did this in 1940 to 1945 and we graduated doctors in about four years. I hope the minister can make some provision that will enable the universities to move in this direction. I appreciate the difficulty. However many of these university professors, sometimes living in these big cities, do not always understand that there are districts to which it is difficult to get doctors to go. We are all Canadians. I know in my own town of Orillia, and I apologize for mentioning this personally, the doctors are working very hard. They try to cover all cases of sickness. However, here we are short of doctors and the medical schools are operating on a seasonal basis. This has been going on for ten years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this is simply not right. It is not good enough. I will say this, too, that all of our university buildings so far as possible should be used on a 12 month basis. We have capital invested in them, we are paying for them. The university people say to you, we have not got the personnel. Where in the world did we get the personnel from 1940 to 1945? We got them then and we could get them again. Canada has resources. Canadians have initiative. Let us do it. The cost of new buildings goes up and up. It is estimated that within the last ten years university costs have quadrupled.

This bill is a move in the right direction. I know that we can expect more from the minister. I am sure he realizes the position in which we are. It is a very serious position, particularly in the field of medicine and dentistry. I am wondering if we can afford to have any more places vacant during summer holidays. Let us provide more buildings, more equipment and more teachers. Let us start today. Let us review our whole economic structure. Let us review it, and let us see what the priorities are. Let us get going. By 1980, according to present estimates, we will have over 100,000 young people attending universities in Canada. Let us be ready to cash in on these resources.

Mr. Moreau: I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question? I did not want to interrupt during his speech. In view of the fact that the radar base at Edgar is in his riding, can he tell us if he has made any representations to the provincial government to have a university establish there?

Mr. Rynard: This is a very easy question to answer. I made representation after representation to this government to establish a grant of $1.2 million to Edgar university so we would have it going.

Mr. Moreau: What about the provincial government?

Mr. Rynard: That is all right; the federal government gives the grant to the provincial government. The hon. member may recall the vocational and technical schools that were built at a cost of over $2 million in east Simcoe, by grants to the provinces.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Like other members of this group who have already spoken, I intend to vote for this measure, although I do so with a great deal of hesitation and reservation. I disagree with my seatmate who said yesterday that half a loaf was better than none. This is not even half a loaf. This is a few crumbs compared to what is needed, and a few crumbs compared to what was promised by the government when they were in opposition. This is so typical of the Liberals. When they were in opposition promises were easy, but when they are in office what they do is very small.

The hon. member for Vancouver-Burrard (Mr. Basford) sought yesterday to create the impression that the government, as a result of this program, would be paying out some $40 million a year. Of course this is nonsense because the $40 million a year will be paid by the students. The maximum this government will pay will be about $2 million a year, and when you look at the needs you see how little this means.

What disturbs me is not that this is the only bill the government is bringing forth. What disturbs me is not just that the promises made before the election, for 10,000 scholarships of $1,000 each, have been forgotten. As a matter of fact, those promises were not made just before the election. A year ago, or little more than a year ago, the Minister of Northern Affairs and National Resources was making speeches saying the government was going to go ahead with this program. On May 2, 1963, the Toronto Star, which is certainly no opponent of the government, had an editorial headed "Over the Hump" and I just want to quote the first paragraph from it:

> The Liberal government is losing no time in honouring one of its most important campaign promises—a system of national scholarships for university students.

Where is this system of national scholarships? It is gone with the wind, and I guess we will not get it back until there is another election in which the Liberals have to seek fresh votes again. That is typical of this government.

A country cannot progress in this day and age if it does not meet the educational requirements of modern technology and automation. We have to look at the whole picture of universities, yet if one reads the minister's speech it appears he never even listened, let alone understood, the representations made to the government by the Canadian universities foundation, the Canadian association of university teachers or any of the other organizations interested in education.

Highly qualified and most expensively educated people are leaving Canada at an ever increasing rate. One can ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Sharp) how many bushels of wheat left Canada last year, and he can tell you to the exact bushel. If we ask the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Hays) how many head of cattle were shipped to the United States last year he can give us the exact number; but if we ask the government how many doctors, physicists, engineers and professors went to the United States, the government has to go to the Americans and ask them—which it did.

In the last three years this country has lost over 1,000 physicians to the United States, over 2,500 engineers, 96 physicists, 122 geologists and geophysicists, and 192 professors in the social sciences. We can go on down the list as provided to us by the Americans; but the question is, what does this cost? What will it cost us to replace these people? To replace those I have mentioned it will cost $62\frac{1}{2}$ million, according to calculations made by the dominion bureau of statistics. This grant in aid to the United States of $20 million annually is much too much for the Canadian people to be making.

Before we get on with this kind of program, before we really get on with helping the universities, we ought to give some real consideration to what is needed. The government has always refused to do this. It has taken the easy political way—what will be popular with the young people, what will be popular with the electors, what will be cheap, yet something which will look good and won't cost too much money, such as this loans program.

I recognize the fact that under the constitution education is a responsibility of the provinces. Each province has done a tremendous job, increasing the amount of money and effort devoted to education since the end of world war II. In the field of public education the provinces have done an excellent job. They have done a commendable job in the field of university education, but for a long time it has been obvious that the provinces by themselves simply cannot meet the needs of the universities.

The federal governments, Liberal and Conservative, have recognized their responsibilities to the universities and given support to them by per capita grants, by tax abatements to the province of Quebec, by grants for research to scholars in universities, by grants through the Canada Council, and the national research council, which have made grants for some types of buildings. We have also had loans for students' residences, but the support to date has been completely inadequate to meet the needs of universities.

A way must be found, and I believe it can be found in co-operation and in consultation with provinces and the universities, whereby the money can be realized in ways which are not objectionable to any province in the country. Our goal should be, through co-operation between the federal government and the provincial governments and private industry, to provide adequate financial support to enable the universities to fulfil their responsibilities and to provide the trained people we are going to need in the next 10 or 15 years.

To do this we have got to have, not the kind of haphazard program which is being proposed today but a comprehensive program designed to meet the needs of the universities and the students. What we have not had yet from government is a systematic approach of support for the universities. What we ought to have is a conference between the federal government, the provincial governments and the universities to evaluate what is required and to set goals for the next five or ten years, and to try to agree on how these goals can be achieved. A conference should be called immediately by the federal government, with the provinces and the universities, in which these goals could be worked out.

Present federal grants to universities, based on provincial population, are completely unrelated to needs and, Mr. Speaker, I say this, coming from a province which is not one of the poorest, that the universities in low income provinces, particularly in the Atlantic provinces, have been the most handicapped by the present grant structure, which has not given any consideration to their inferior financial resources compared with other provinces. This is a deficiency which should be corrected at once if these provinces are to meet the requirements of their universities and students.

I do not believe in second class citizens. I do not believe that the students in the Atlantic provinces should be second class students, but that is what they are and that is what they will be until the government evolves a program designed to meet the needs of those provinces. If it is not done, the Atlantic provinces universities are going to have more difficulty than they have already had in keeping their staff and in recruiting the kind of staff which is necessary.

I wonder if the Minister of Finance paid any attention to the representations made to him by the Canadian universities foundation. If he did, it certainly was not apparent in the speech he made when introducing this bill, or in any other speech he has made since he came to this house. In December of 1962 the Canadian universities foundation presented a brief to the Minister of Finance in which they made very clear what the needs of the universities were for the next two years. For buildings and research facilities alone for the next three years the Canadian universities will need $800 million. They have calculated they are going to get from the provinces and from private industry something in the neighbourhood of $500 million. In other words they are $300 million short for the next three years with regard to buildings and research facilities alone. They proposed to the minister that the government of Canada establish a fund of $300 million for matching capital grants to universities and colleges. We have not heard a word about this proposal and there has been no indication from the government whether or not they intend to consider it. There has been no indication whether they intend to meet, if not the whole request, then part of it. All we have had, as I have said earlier, is this cheap proposal for student loans which will really do nothing to meet the basic needs of our universities.

Universities operating costs are rising at the rate of more than 15 per cent a year because of the increase in the number of full time students, the increase in the number of staff required and the growing cost of maintenance. The Canadian universities foundation recommended that the per capita grants to universities be increased to $2.60 from its present rate, just to meet the needs as they were calculated when the present per capita grants were established. Nothing has been heard from the government with regard to this proposal.

The Canadian association of university teachers in a submission to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) of January, 1964 pointed out that the present full time enrolment at the universities, which was 114,000 in 1960-61, would rise to 312,000 by 1970-71. This would mean that the universities will require 23,000 new university teachers by that time. The annual rate of recruiting recently has amounted only to 1,300 new university teachers a year. By 1970 we shall need 3,500 a year and there is no indication when or how we shall get them, because this particular program will really do nothing to provide for what is probably the most important need in our universities, that is, graduate students; there is nothing in this program to encourage graduate students to continue their studies in Canada, or even to come back to Canada if they go to the United States as so many of them have done. Representatives of the universities have pointed out to the government that no university in Canada at the present time possesses a library which meets the needs of graduate scholarship or research programs. Yet there has been no proposal by the government to meet this need. We have heard from others in this debate about the need for research. I wonder if the Minister of Finance has had a chance to see the report prepared for the national research council by a committee headed by Dr. Spinks, president of the University of Saskatchewan in which the need for increased aid to scientific research in the universities was dealt with. In a speech which Dr. Spinks made to the royal society at Charlottetown in June of this year he pointed out that the amount for scientific research which the national research council gave to the universities in the year 1963-64 was $9.2 million. The committee recommends that next year this should be increased to $19.6 million and that by 1968-69 it should go up to $52.9 million. There is no indication that the government is prepared to move on this recommendation.

So far, all we have been offered is this student loans program which is a very small part of what is needed. Dr. Spinks pointed out that while scientific research in the universities has grown it has not kept pace with the need. I should like to quote a couple of paragraphs from his speech. He said:

> It is imperative that Canadian scientists be provided with a few major installations. While it is not contemplated that every university should be equipped with very expensive installations in the various disciplines, it is essential that a limited number of such facilities be available in the country to serve university science.
> It is of the utmost importance that the recommended minimum support be provided. In the past few years, during which the developments in world science have been spectacular, the first class research ability of Canadian scientists has been seriously handicapped by lack of modern research equipment, and Canadian science has been steadily losing ground. Canada's scientific competence, which is essential to the realization of our national aspirations, is declining seriously through lack of tools.

I could read into the record what experts appointed by responsible agencies of the government itself have recommended. But the minister ought to know these things and we certainly should have had from him by now some idea of what priorities, what plans, the government has in this field. Yet up to now we have been told virtually nothing. In December of 1963 an influential group of medical researchers and doctors made representations to the minister on this subject and I should like to read a couple of paragraphs from the representations they made:

> It has been clearly evident during the last decade that the support which is available for medical and biological research in Canada in the universities falls far short of that necessary to maintain the highest standards of scientific accomplishment. Although the medical research council of Canada, and other granting bodies in Canada, have steadily increased their budgets in the last few years, the sums available have not kept pace with the increasing costs of research, and with the requirements of an expanding number of research workers. As a consequence of this situation many of the most gifted young investigators, unable to find the means to carry out their research in Canada, have to find their opportunities for work elsewhere, mainly in the United States. This loss is felt not only in the organization of existing research groups but also in the education of future scientists, who are deprived of the contact with many of the best creative minds of Canada. It can be foreseen that the continuous process of depletion of the nation's talented personnel will have an adverse effect on the quality of research training and of teaching provided in the coming years when an expansion of the size of universities will be necessitated by the increased influx of students.

It seems to me that if we pass this bill—and I presume we will, because the overwhelming majority of members have indicated their intention to support it—we shall have made only a minor beginning in our efforts to overcome these difficulties, and a minimum beginning in the implementation of the promises made by this government to the people of Canada. I hope the promises made with regard to university education by this government when it was in opposition will not take as long to come to fruition as the promises made during the Liberal convention of 1919 which elected Mr. Mackenzie King to be leader of the party. The people of Canada have heard a great many promises made by the Liberals in years gone by, and I hope and expect they will keep a close watch on the government to see that it carries out the promises which were made in the field of education a great deal quicker than is indicated by this legislation.

Mr. Joseph Slogan (Springfield): Like many who have spoken before me I would like to say that I will support this measure to extend interest free loans to university students. I am happy that the government has finally seen fit to bring in this legislation, after so much urging on the part of the opposition. I hope it might be passed in sufficient time to make this assistance available to university students this fall.

Like many in this house who have very modest backgrounds, I had to depend in my university days on scholarships and bursaries. I can appreciate the sacrifices made by my parents to give me an education, something which they themselves did not have the privilege of acquiring. As one who was one of the first from my district to gain a university education, I appreciate the hardships which have kept many of our brighter young people from acquiring a higher education. Thus, this measure of loans is welcomed. It will assist substantially thousands of young people to carry out their university education uninterrupted.

Education today is a key that opens many doors. It moulds personality; it makes for opportunity; it erases prejudice and broadens our horizons. But just opening doors to universities does not solve all the problems which an individual must meet. They say you can lead a boy to college but you cannot make him think. The placing of certain minimum standards of qualifications in the act I think are justified.

The former government recognized the needs of universities and, as has already been stated in this house, we doubled the per capita grants to universities, made available long term, low interest loans for the construction of student residences, provided for certain income tax deductions of university tuition fees and various other things that could be mentioned. I think the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond (Mr. Prittie) elaborated on the financial assistance that is being given to education and research this year, and I am not going to enumerate this assistance. But I did jot down the amounts and I think they total something like $156 million. That is certainly a substantial amount of federal money to be going toward education.

I think it is readily recognized that the costs of education have skyrocketed. One has only to look at one's real estate tax these days to realize the extremely heavy burden borne by municipal taxpayers to meet the costs of education at the elementary and secondary levels. In my own province of Manitoba there has been a resolution in education by the establishment of larger school divisions and the provision of school transportation, with the attendant added expense on roads. The small, eight grade, one-room schoolhouse is now disappearing along with unqualified teachers. Educational opportunities in rural areas are being equalized. All this is for the good of our young people and our country. Therefore, the heavy burden of local taxes has not been complained about as much as some people would expect, because I believe the taxpayers see it as their duty to provide these opportunities for our young people. We hope the young people will justify our faith in them.

With the onslaught on our universities now by the new generation, provincial government coffers are becoming strained. Therefore there is adequate justification for municipalities appealing to the provinces for higher grants, and in turn the provinces are calling for more federal participation. Thus, I think this measure and the measures already mentioned of assistance to education are well justified. I do not for one moment underestimate the need or impact of federal help to higher education; but I do question, as I have in the past, the approach of the federal government to these provincial and fundamental educational problems.

[Mr. Slogan.]

In the first place, I think our action in again entering the field of provincial jurisdiction emphasizes the need for reassessment of our position vis-à-vis the provinces. One of the fundamental laws of democracy should be, I think, that the government that spends the money should levy the taxes. This comes back to the suggestion I made in the budget debate, that it is imperative to hold a constitutional conference to do two things; one is to reallocate jurisdiction among the three levels of government, municipal, provincial and federal; and second, to reallocate taxing powers to be commensurate with the jurisdiction of each level of government. In other words, give the respective governments the tax base to meet their needs. Following this, an agreement on priorities of spending must be had.

This has already been proposed by Premier Roblin and I know it has won the support of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Gordon) as reported in the Gazette editorial of yesterday. I think the system of priorities is very urgent and this is one of the reasons I asked the question of the Acting Prime Minister (Mr. Martin) today. However, from his answer I cannot see that this government is going to take any action in that direction, and I am sorry this is the case.

I think we have to be realistic. We have to realize that there is only one source of revenue for governments, and that is ultimately the taxpayer. I think we have to recognize, too, that the taxpayer has a limit to his resources and only so much money can be extratced from him. Realizing this, the various levels of government must plan ahead on a schedule of priorities in at least the three or four major spending fields, such as education and health and welfare, where jurisdictions overlap.

I think if we did this we would be heading for that Canada charter of which I spoke in the budget debate. To paraphrase the late President Kennedy's words, "The constitution would make us not rivals for power, but partners for progress".

To reach such an agreement will mean co-operation and compromise, but the results of success will ensure the future of Canada in the twentieth century. Failure to establish these priorities will, I think, face us with catastrophe and a breakup of confederation. The success or failure, of course, of this conference will depend in large measure on the province of Quebec. I believe that the province of Quebec must display a more positive attitude to remove the label, "They don't know what they want and are willing to fight for it". But money itself will not solve all the problems of education. I have some personal views and opinions on education, and I must stress that these opinions are my own. My feeling is that our educational system is outmoded, archaic and ineffectual. I feel it has failed to keep in step with the general advance in technology and the times.

There are several factors in our educational system which I criticize. One is the failure of the educational system to recognize the influence of mass media communication on the maturing process of children. As our society has become more complex, more years have been added on to educational courses. At the same time, I observe that our children are maturing much faster. The result has been that our young people are ready for marriage at an earlier age, but for practical reasons their educational pursuits place obstacles in their path. As a result, we have a higher percentage of students marrying before they graduate, some of whom fail to complete their education for the reason of the added economic burdens after marriage. I think these scholarships and bursaries might do something to alleviate this position. Second, we must recognize the change in the moral behaviour of our young people in the teen age group. Some of this breakdown has to do with the educational system, and I do not need to elaborate on that aspect. First, I think the educational system has failed to offer the moral leadership that should be expected in our schools. In this respect the school curriculum has fallen behind in social adaptation.

Associated with the curriculum is the method of teaching. Here we have failed to keep up with technological progress. As one who carried on some mental testing programs during my university years, I found a close relationship between a child's mental age and his success in his grade, more so perhaps than between his physical age and success. Instead of placing students together on the basis of their chronological age, perhaps a grading on the basis of their mental age would be more suitable and enable a class to advance more evenly.

I think a great deal of research should be carried on into the capacities of children to absorb knowledge at the various ages, and a great deal of research must be carried on regarding the best methods of projecting that knowledge so that it is most easily absorbed. Closed circuit television, audio visual aids, etc., are essential. What will this mean? A scientifically construed curriculum scientifically projected means the faster absorption of knowledge with a consequent shortening of the educational period. This revamping of the curriculum and methods of teaching should take place from the earliest grades.

At the university level basic facts must be recognized. Crowding of our universities does not allow us the luxury of allowing our university buildings to lie idle for several months of the year. The hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Rynard) has already made out a concrete and well presented case for the need to utilize university facilities, buildings, etc., the whole year round.

The increase in bursaries, scholarships and loans should enable students to attend classes with the exception of only minimal holidays during the year. This should allow for the shortening of many professional and university courses, such as medicine, dentistry, and those courses which now take a substantial time out of a student's life.

At the same time, we must recognize that with the rapidly increasing university population it is becoming more and more difficult for these young people to find summer jobs. In keeping with my earlier plea, I say let us plan to allow our young people out of university sooner so that they can marry and take their place as more useful citizens in our society.

In conclusion, let me repeat some of my earlier observations. I welcome this measure and the other measures the federal government has undertaken to ease the strain of educational costs on the provinces. Coming back to my earlier thesis on the reallocation of jurisdiction, may I say this. If the strains of education tend to continue at crisis proportions within the provinces it may be wise for the provinces to ask the federal government to assume jurisdiction over university education. This is something which I think we should not ask for, but I think that if it is offered to us we should not shirk our responsibility towards it. I say this because I think there is a great deal to be said for more uniformity of education, which would take place at the federal level. Especially in the technical and professional fields many provinces have been unable to offer training facilities. Taking over the higher education field would mean more equality of opportunity for students to gain entrance, because at the present time, especially in many professional colleges, preference is given to the local students. There would be more uniformity in training across Canada, and larger institutions would allow for better facilities and staff which I think make for a better education for our professional people. Thus we would be enabled to establish a higher quality of education and larger establishments of learning, and supply them with the staff and facilities which are needed. This is just a suggestion of my own, but I know it is shared by many in this house.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in order that I might not be accused of holding up this legislation I am willing to sit down so that a vote might be taken on the amendment.

Mr. A. B. Patterson (Fraser Valley): Mr. Speaker, I think this is just the third speaker from this group in the three days of debate but it is not my intention tonight to speak on the bill itself. I only desire to make a very brief reference to the amendment. The leader of our party, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Thompson), has already indicated that we intend to support Bill No. C-110, although there are a number of very obvious weaknesses in it. I am sure we all agree that the need for such legislation exists, so therefore we are prepared to support it. However, the amendment now before us is that Bill No. C-110 be not now read a second time, and for the reasons which are given.

We agree in principle with the objectives to which this proposal is directed, but we are opposed to the delay which the adoption of the amendment would occasion. Because of that fact it is not our intention to support the amendment which is currently before us.

I had intended to call attention to a number of statements made by the leader of our party but I do not propose to do that at this time. However in speaking briefly on this amendment I want to emphasize that we believe that the facilities of the Bank of Canada should be used for this purpose. This was stressed by the hon. member for Red Deer and also by the hon. member for Chicoutimi (Mr. Côté). We support that proposal but we also realize that if this amendment were to carry it would delay implementation of the legislation and deprive many young people of the opportunity of securing loans which are needed for this coming school year. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, because of that consideration we are going to vote against the amendment, but we will of course support the legislation.

[Translation]

Hon. Paul Martineau (Pontiac-Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I see that it is pretty near 10.30 p.m. and since my remarks would take me beyond regulation time, I wish to propose the adjournment of the debate. As a matter of fact, I beg to remind you that it is now 10.30.

[Mr. Slogan.]

Hon. Guy Favreau (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, perhaps the house would agree to sit a few minutes more—if we could thus dispose of this amendment—in order to listen to the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue whose speeches are always interesting.

Mr. Martineau: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry, but I cannot accept the suggestion just made by the Minister of Justice.

[Text]

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair must call it 10.30 unless we have unanimous consent to continue.

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: If we have unanimous agreement I am prepared to submit the question.

[Translation]

Mr. Martineau: This being the case, Mr. Speaker, I shall accept what looks to be the unanimous opinion of the house and my comments will be quite brief.

I did not propose to speak at this stage of our discussion, but since it appears that the intention is to end this evening the debate on the amendment, I must express certain views and explain why we, on this side of the house, or at least the Conservative members from Quebec, have to oppose the amendment brought forward by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier).

It is a well known fact that we, on this side of the house, are not very happy with the provisions of the bill, and for very good reasons, which have been eloquently, masterfully, clearly and fully stated by members as competent as my colleague from Berthier-Maskinongé-Delanaudière (Mr. Paul), as well as by our provincial leader, the hon. member for Three Rivers (Mr. Balcer), the hon. member for Joliette-L'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Pigeon) and many others who have dealt with this bill.

It is quite clear that this bill violates the spirit of the constitution, because it affects the clear and exclusive jurisdiction of the provinces in the educational field.

But this bill has a more serious defect which appears when reading clause 15, among others. Indeed, the bill, and more particularly that clause, is contrary to the whole economy of common, or civil, law in the province of Quebec, attacking its very roots. According to the provisions of the civil code concerning the minority, it is anticonstitutional.

The federal government impinges upon one of the main provisions of the civil code of the province of Quebec.

I say that no federal legislation whose purpose is to provide for capacity to enter into a contract, as clause 15 of this bill provides, can possibly be constitutional.

When we examine the various clauses of this bill in committee, we, on this side of the house, will oppose those specific provisions. We, therefore, implore the Minister of Justice, who is an expert on constitutional law, immediately to consider some called for amendments to the bill.

However, we are interested at the present time in knowing whether the amendment put forward by the member for Roberval is acceptable. I submit that we should oppose it since it is precisely contrary to the theories which the people at the extreme left of the house try to put into circulation.

Mr. Speaker, let us examine this bill somewhat. I have not got it before me, but I know it proposes a six month's hoist in order to allow the government to pass legislation required to allow the Bank of Canada to pay to the provinces the money they need to discharge their responsibilities in the field of education.

Mr. Speaker, let us consider somewhat the implications of this amendment; it tends to reduce the provinces to the rank of vassals. They are to be servants in the pay of the federal government.

As a matter of fact, through this amendment, the provinces become beggars before the central power, for the money required to discharge their obligations under the constitution, whereas you know very well that according to the British North American Act, according to our constitutional history, the provinces are sovereign in the fields bestowed upon them by the constitution and under the British North America Act.

And here, instead of taking the necessary measures to recognize this legitimate sovereignty of the provinces in the fields under their jurisdiction, we would substitute a retrograde, centralizing, incomprehensible attitude, and, above all, an attitude which is contrary to the theory often times expressed in this house by those who have precisely proposed this amendment.

Mr. Speaker, the amendment in question definitely contravenes the functions of the Bank of Canada. Let us rather assume our responsibilities and ask the federal government to withdraw further from certain taxation fields, so that the provinces be allowed to levy the funds they need to fulfil their responsibilities, especially in the field of education.

I do not understand how the hon. member for Lapointe, for instance, supports such a proposal. Indeed, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Grégoire: May I put a question?

Mr. Martineau: When I have concluded my remarks.

Mr. Grégoire: I can see that you understand nothing at all about that. You do not know much about the banking system. It is easy to see when a person knows nothing about that.

Mr. Martineau: I think I have the floor, Mr. Speaker. I shall be glad to answer all the hon. member's questions in a few moments.

In my opinion, the hon. member for Lapointe is the one who did not examine thoroughly the proposal he is now so strongly advocating and I feel his stand shows what an opportunist he can be. It especially indicates that the hon. member for Lapointe never really understood the cause he claims to stand for.

Sheer nonsense, that is what it amounts to. Just imagine, for a moment, how ridiculous a situation can be where you have the hon. member for Lapointe who, after having proposed to this house that the province of Quebec be granted the rank of an associate state, comes and tells us today: We, in the province of Quebec, are no longer capable of raising the funds we need to legislate according to the constitution and we shall come to Ottawa to beg for the required money. If the Bank of Canada is good enough to give us what we ask for, then we can take our responsibilities.

Well, it is obvious that this amendment has been put forward without having been considered seriously: it is outdated, ridiculous, contradictory in its conclusions and contrary to any sound constitutional principle. That is why, in spite of all the flaws contained in the bill, with which we shall deal on another occasion, we will oppose the amendment.

Division

Mr. Gilles Grégoire (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words on the amendment. I think I have a right to do that. We have been listening to the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue—

If no one has called it 10.30 yet, I would like to speak on the amendment. Could you not refrain from calling it 10.30, Mr. Speaker, so that I may speak on this amendment—

An hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

[Text]

If any one of the members wants to call it 10.30, of course we will not be in a position to continue. We are continuing after 10.30 only because we have the unanimous agreement of all members to continue this procedure. If an individual member wishes at this time to call it 10.30, we will adjourn this debate.

Mr. Barnett: Was it not implicit, in the unanimous consent that the house continue to sit for a few minutes, that there would be the vote taken as soon as the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue (Mr. Martineau) had concluded his remarks?

[Translation]

Mr. Grégoire: Mr. Speaker, we are all set to vote. A little later on, we shall have an opportunity to reply to the silly remarks of the hon. member for Pontiac-Témiscamingue.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Churchill: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask about the business for tomorrow and Monday.

Mr. Favreau: Mr. Speaker, at the opening of the sitting tomorrow the Prime Minister will report on the conference of commonwealth prime ministers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Favreau: The remainder of the day will be taken up with estimates. We will begin with the estimates of the Post Office Department; the Department of Northern Affairs and National Resources will follow, with the Department of Public Works after that, if there is time left in the day. On Monday we will take the second reading and the committee stage of the student loans bill, which will be followed by the—

Mr. Bigg: Recess.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Favreau: I hope it will be only a dinner recess. This will be followed by the second reading and committee stage of the measure respecting federal-provincial fiscal arrangements.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the house under provisional standing order 39A deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REQUIREMENTS RESPECTING BILINGUALISM IN CONSIDERING PROMOTIONS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I think it would simplify matters if I raised a series of questions with respect to sessional paper 93e relating to the so-called bilingual order that was issued to the army, and by the army, and tabled during the orders of the day. In reading the order carefully there are several questions which arise. For instance, section 1 of the order sets forth the following:

> For the purpose of this instruction the expression "bilingual" will be taken to mean the ability to use the English and the French language.

Not only this section but other sections of the order raise in my mind the question as to what force will be given to promotional factors if staff officers, as the order describes them, are able to speak other languages which are required of them in the course of their duties. For example, I know there is a service course in the Russian language as well as in other languages, and these additional qualifications must surely have a bearing on the promotional aspirations of staff officers.

Another question which arises in my mind is, what service commitments, as the expression is in the order, require that both the English and the French languages be spoken? I know of only two service commitments, although there may be more, where a language other than French or English is required to be spoken; but it would be interesting to learn how extensive a requirement exists in the army as opposed to the navy and air force, where both French and English have to be spoken.

This expression is used in section 2 of the order; and in section 3, the one which disturbs me most, appears this sentence:

> All ranks must be made aware of the fact that these symbols—

—that is, referring to the symbol which is attached to an officer's name if he speaks both languages either moderately or fluently well—

> —are of real significance, and that the possession of them would be a factor in determining suitability for employment and hence career advancement.

Does that mean that we are going to reach the stage where staff officers must be bilingual before they are employed, and must be fluently or moderately bilingual before they are eligible for promotion? Or does it mean that an officer of the rank of lieutenant who is French speaking will remain in that rank until he learns English? Does it mean that an officer of the rank of lieutenant who is English speaking will remain in that rank until he learns to speak French? I am sure that members of the forces, and especially the army, will be interested to learn the answer to this question.

Again it is set forth in this order, although I cannot lay my finger at the moment on the particular section, that the result of these tests which are going to be conducted once a year will be included in the annual report. In the air force the nomenclature of this report is R.2/11. I do not know what it is in the army; but what significance has the inclusion in the report of the testing results with respect to future promotion of army personnel?

Then the overriding question is: Why is such an instruction not applicable to all three armed forces equally? Why is it exclusive to the army? Are there commitments in the army which require bilingual staff officers, whereas there are no such requirements in the navy and air force? I think that is a question which should be answered.

I also think we should know who are going to be the members of the board. If the order has been in existence since November of last year and testing is done in January of each year, there must already be in existence a board. Who are the two permanent members of this board? Is this board one that travels throughout Canada and to overseas posts, for instance, where staff officers are on staff for the purpose of administering these tests? I should like to know what the percentages are in this regard. How many English speaking officers have learned to speak French to date, and has it had a bearing on promotion; and how many French speaking officers have learned to speak English? What will be the balance in the future? Are we going to have officers primarily of French speaking origin commanding other ranks primarily of English speaking origin, and vice-versa? This will affect the whole morale structure in the army, as I am sure it would in the other two services. The minister will realize this.

Certainly in my background of service life I know how it would affect me if I were still a member of the air force and if this sort of order were introduced. The morale of the forces in the other ranks will be very definitely affected since this directive is aimed at staff officers and it is aimed at command. It is not aimed at the lower ranks and other ranks in the forces.

You might come up with a predominance of officers from one particular province commanding other ranks from another province. I think this sort of thing should be explained and the minds of army personnel of all ranks, and of all ranks in the other two services, set at ease because there are several questions that I think will be arising in their minds. The minister has very kindly told me that the terms of the order which issued from the minister's office are substantially—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I must interrupt the hon. member as his time has expired.

Hon. Lucien Cardin (Associate Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I will be able to answer in three minutes all the questions the hon. member for Yukon (Mr. Nielsen) has asked. Perhaps I might start off with a question he did not ask concerning the terms of reference. He asked me earlier today to table the instructions that were issued to the forces and I can say that what I could have tabled is exactly the same order, except for my signature of approval on it. This was really the authority to go ahead with this particular order.

The way this came about was that in discussions with the chief of the general staff it was felt that we wanted to find out what the proficiency in languages was among the members of our forces, and particularly in the army. The whole instruction has to do with being able to test proficiency in bilingualism and to arrive at some form of standards whereby we would be able to detect in the records of different members of the forces just how proficient they may be in languages.

As the hon. member knows, we have schools and programs for teaching English and French. For instance, at the Citadel we have four month programs under which the French are instructed in English and vice-versa. We also have a program of exchange of officers between the Royal 22nd Regiment and other regiments in order to be able to facilitate bilingualism. But we wanted to have a means of finding out just how proficient they were.

The reason for doing this is that there is a requirement in the army more particularly than in the other two services for bilingual officers. This is obvious, I think, from the commitments we have had to carry out in the Congo and Indochina, and there are several French speaking countries in Africa which have asked for French speaking officers and soldiers. The matter of submitting to tests for language proficiency is on a voluntary basis. However, it is true that once there is a marking of B, or B bracketed, as the hon. member has read in the instruction, this does mean something and it will be considered in promotions to certain positions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; the hon. minister's time has expired.

DEFENCE PRODUCTION—CONTRACT TO QUEBEC FIRM FOR DESTROYER CONVERSION

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): Yesterday, Mr. Speaker, I posed a question to the Minister of Defence Production as follows:

May I ask the minister, is it correct that a $3½ million conversion contract for the destroyer

Skeena has been designated to the Davie Shipbuilding Company of Lauzon, Quebec?

According to Mr. Speaker, this question should have been put on the order paper. I felt otherwise. I felt it was really urgent to the people concerned. I tried to point out to Mr. Speaker that it should be allowed on this occasion because it was so serious. The reasons I gave were, the high employment rate on the west coast as a result of the large wheat sale, and the grain handling involved—I will come to that a little later. Then I pointed out that the Quebec yards have already received recently several large shipbuilding contracts; that cut-backs in defence contracts have resulted in substantial layoffs in many areas of my province of Nova Scotia and our shipyards have suffered greatly from cancellation of the general purpose frigate program.

I was not successful in putting my original question, but had I been I would have liked to pose a supplementary to the minister in this manner. In view of the fact that four of the five conversion contracts have been designated to west coast shipyards and the fifth to a Quebec shipyard, would the minister assure the house that the remaining two jobs would be designated for shipyards in the Atlantic provinces? As I understand it, seven ships in all are going to have conversion jobs, or I should say the balance of five. I understand that two, the Assiniboia and the St. Laurent have been converted on the west coast. The Saguenay and the Ottawa are now undergoing conversion in Pacific coast yards.

It has been suggested in a newspaper item within the last few days that the Margaree is scheduled also to go to Pacific coast yards. What prompted my question was a newspaper item that the Skeena was probably going to the Davie Shipbuilding yard in Quebec. This would leave one, the Fraser, which as I understand it, has not been allocated anywhere as yet.

I should like to point out to the minister how important these contracts are to the shipyards and to our economy on the east coast at the moment. We have not had any of these jobs to do. As I have just pointed out, the other yards have been quite busy.

We should like to get a share of the work that is going. These cutbacks have been most serious, not only in this field about which I am talking at the moment, but we have had cut-backs at H.M.C.S. Cornwallis; cut-backs at Fairey Aviation Limited, Dartmouth; cutbacks at Enamel and Heating at Amherst; cut-backs at Enamel and Heating, Charlottetown and in my own constituency lay-offs are occurring weekly at Point Edward naval base, and apparently this base will close completely before this government is finished; cut-backs at the Beaverbank radar base in Nova Scotia; cut-backs at the Greenwood air base. Then, of course, there has been the general frigate program cancellation. The result of a lot of these naval cut-backs, for instance, has been a lack of work for the North Sydney and Marine Railway and the Sydney Engineering and Drydock. They have not been able to get any refit contracts.

Then, I should like to refer to a few of the headlines that have appeared only today in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald. We see headlines like these, "Plane Phase-Out Ends Defence Job for P.E.I."; another one reads, "No Hope for Defence Work". This relates to information given in reply to a question by the hon. member for Queens (Mr. Macquarrie) by the defence production minister. Another headline reads, "Neptune Refits Dropped; Bitter Blow for Fairey". I quote part of the article:

> Fairey Canada Ltd., the Dartmouth aviation company has suffered what one employee called "another bitter blow".

Since this government has taken office, Mr. Speaker, we have suffered a series of cutbacks, lay-offs, obliterations, annihilations, abortive methods, cancellations, postponements, and slashes in defence spending, particularly in the last number of months. Where is it going to stop? It is a very serious situation economically, and we must have something to replace this lack of employment.

According to a Canadian Press item appearing in the Cape Breton Post on July 10, there is a report of a meeting of the Halifax-Dartmouth and district labour council in which it is stated that one delegate said at this meeting:

> "If Drury and Hellyer have their way there will be no defence contracts left in Nova Scotia."

Is it any wonder that a statement of that nature has been made? I understand strong protests have been sent to the minister and I would hope he would try to assist in this situation. I would plead with him and the government to get cracking and do something on behalf of the Halifax shipyards and the Saint John drydock, so that one of these remaining conversion jobs may be directed to each of these yards, through negotiations or whatever means are necessary.

When he replies I hope the minister will be able to give us some encouragement because the cancellation of any of these projects means so much to the economy of the Atlantic provinces. I would ask him to again seek the co-operation of his colleagues in the cabinet in having one of these destroyer escort conversion jobs placed at the Halifax shipyards and the Saint John drydock.

Hon. C. M. Drury (Minister of Industry): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has dwelt at some length on the cut-backs in contracts in respect of defence operations. I have tried to make clear, inside the house and outside it, the nature of the reduction in the work load in respect of aircraft. This is the direct and inevitable consequence of technical change in the air industry and among aircraft users in Canada. This is not part of a deliberate policy to reduce; it is a consequence of technological change; and the simple fact is that aircraft are becoming fewer in the numbers required to do a major over-all job. They are becoming more efficient individually and more costly, and as a consequence fewer are required and fewer can be afforded. Because there will be fewer aircraft in the total pool there will be fewer to be overhauled and repaired.

While the government, and particularly myself, have every sympathy with those aircraft repair firms, and especially their employees, who are suffering as a consequence of this, the government, and in particular the Department of Defence Production, have been at pains to endeavour to find alternative types of work for these aircraft plants, principally through the production sharing program with the United States, and I would point out that such contracts are obtained in a price competition with United States firms and call for efficiency, energy and capability on the part of the firms seeking replacement contracts.

There is no serious possibility of hoping that the Royal Canadian Air Force will substantially increase the number of aircraft in its inventory in order to meet particular needs of aircraft firms which have not as much overhaul and repair business as they have had in previous years.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The minister's time has expired—

Mr. Muir (Cape Breton North and Victoria): On a point of order, the minister has replied to aircraft production but has not replied on the basic matter I raised, dealing with destroyer escort jobs.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would suggest to the hon. member that he ask another question and have another opportunity of discussing it on the adjournment debate.

Motion agreed to and the house adjourned at 11.17 p.m.

[Answer to question No. 1,123 referred to on page 5495 of July 15 issue.]

Answer: 1. Last May 14, a communication received from the ambassador of Denmark indicated his government's concern about the possible sale, on the British market, of Canadian butter which has been in storage since 1960-61. (a) The ambassador pointed out that butter production in Europe was on the increase and expressed the view that exports of Canadian butter to traditional markets below market price should be avoided. (b) The Canadian reply pointed to a shortage, on the British market, of butter which the traditional purveyors could not meet in the required amounts and within the time limits provided. Butter imports in Great Britain are subject to quotas, and the British government issued additional permits for import from North America only under the threat of increased prices; such permits were meant to supplement rather than to displace purchases from other supplying countries. Under the circumstances, the sale of Canadian butter was not likely to be prejudicial to the commercial interests of those other countries.

2. No. See answer to part 1 above.

3. There is no special agreement in this regard between Canada and Denmark, but the government of Canada has given assurances, on the international level, that in disposing of its farm surpluses, it would avoid any prejudice to the commercial interests of other supplying countries.
