ON SOAP, IN RELATION TO THE COMPLEXION.

FROM AN ARTICLE BY Dr. ANDREW WILSON, F.R.S.E., Lecturer on Physiology and Health under the "Combe Trust" Editor of "Health."

"One important caution should be given, and that is concerning the use of soaps. I would strongly advise all who care for their skin to eschew the use of common soap, which simply roughens and injures the skin, and if you will be advised by me, I would say never buy those artificially coloured and odorous soaps commonly sold under the name of 'Scented' or 'Fancy Soaps' which are the frequent cause of skin eruptions. If I am prepared to recommend any one soap to you, as a satisfactory and scientifically prepared article, I would certainly advise you to buy and use 'Pears' Soap. Not merely from personal use can I recommend this soap, but I am well content to shelter myself under the names and authority of the late Sir Erasmus Wilson, F.R.S., President of the Royal College of Surgeons; of Doctor Stevenson Macadam, or of Professors Redwood and Atfield, the eminent analytical and chemical lecturers at the Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain, who testify to its entire purity. Furthermore, I believe it to be very economical, for it contains no free water, and in this respect differs from all other soaps; hence a cake of 'Pears' is really all soap and not soap and water. I know cases of irritable skin which the whole tribe of much-vaunted 'Fancy Soaps' failed to allay, but which disappeared under the use of 'Pears' Soap, and for the nursery and for the delicate skin of infancy no better or more soothing soap can possibly be used. There can be no doubt that in respect of the care of children attention to the skin is specially required. If common soaps are irritating to the skin of the adult, (as they unquestionably are), they are doubly and trebly injurious to the delicate skin of the infant and young child. I can vouch that the soap I am recommending is not merely a safe but an advantageous one. It does not irritate the skin; but, while serving as a detergent and cleanser, also acts as an emollient."

WORKS LIKE A CHARM. It is very easy to restore painted walls and wood-work to their original freshness, if you will take a puff of warm water, two sponges or soft cloths and a little of "SUNLIGHT SOAP"; apply the soap and dirt with one sponge or cloth, and remove the dirt with the other sponge the other frequently and change the water often.

Ordinary soap contains too strong chemicals to use on painted walls or wood-work. SUNLIGHT SOAP is mild, it is very effective. It is the best soap for cleaning painted walls and wood-work.

ST. JOHN DYE WORKS IS THE PLACE TO GET Ladies' and Gents' Wear Cleaned or Dyed and Pressed. O. E. BRADKETT, -86 PRINCE ST.

"A LAGGARD IN LOVE."

BY JEANIE GWYNNE BETTANY, Author of "The House of Rimmon," etc.

Continued. Ah, he would never risk it. His past should be dead for both of them. What need could there be for confession? This came the uncomfortable thought, "Suppose Victoria had things she was keeping back too?" This thought made Cecil angry, not with himself, but with the imaginary delinquent Victoria. He drank his claret at a draught and went straight to the yellow drawing-room. Victoria looked curiously at him as he entered. He joined her at once. "I want a chat with you, Vic," he said. "Will you take a turn in the garden?" "That it is raining," she answered, smiling. "Then come into the conservatory." She went with him willingly, but wonderingly. "What could he mean by looking so tragic?" "Vic," he began, "do you remember telling me you might have things to regard like other people?" "I dare say I did tell you so," said Victoria, picking a spray of holly and smelling it complacently. "Well, not exactly," said Cecil, "if you think of anything you think you ought to tell me." "Cecil," began Victoria angrily, "are you the man who ought to put such questions to a woman? If you want to be free of me, you can do so." "Don't talk so," said Cecil, hastily and placing his arm about her. "There can be no question of that between us. We are as much bound as we shall be when we go to church together." "I am not so sure of that," rejoined Victoria. "I could never think of going to church with a suspicious husband. I should go away, I should—"

"You needn't say any more," interrupted Cecil, "only I have been thinking confidence ought to come before marriage." "So I think," said Victoria, "and I may say so, as I did once before. Is there nothing you ought to tell me?" "Again he hesitated. Then he confessed. "No, I have nothing to confess," he answered. "It was at this moment that a servant entered the blue drawing-room, and seeing Cecil and Victoria in the conservatory, came up to them. "There is a young man," said the girl to Cecil, "who says he has come from the Black Country, and says you will know his name."

"What did he say his name was?" inquired Cecil. "John Ford, sir." Cecil's face became ghastly in a moment. He tried to steady himself against the door-way. Victoria regarded him attentively. "The Mr. Ford to the library," said Cecil, with an effort. "Ask him if he will take some refreshment. I will be with him almost immediately. You may be turned to Victoria. You do not need to see this man," he said. "It is impossible that he can have anything to say to you."

"In that case it is curious that he should ask to see me," replied Victoria. "Who is this John Ford, Cecil?" "Oh, he is a young man Uncle Lane is interested in," Cecil replied, evasively. "He has come from Handwick, does he?" said Victoria. "Yes," said Cecil. "But I prefer you not seeing him," insisted Cecil. "All the same I shall see him." "In spite of my wish that you should not," he acquiesced coldly. "Yes, if it comes to that," she made answer. And forthwith she left the conservatory and made her way into the hall.

Cecil's heart beat wildly. He rushed into the dining-room and poured out some neat brandy and drank it off. Then he followed his cousin to the library. John Ford must have come to shed Ruthanna's name. He must have heard somehow about the engagement to Victoria. What unheard-of lengths the working-class could go to on occasion! When Mr. Calverley entered the big, gloomy library he saw John Ford standing before Victoria. The shaded lamp did not allow his face to be distinctly seen, but Cecil noted a great and startling change in it even in the shadow. It looked ten years older. The cheeks and eyes were sunken as if after a long illness. The eyes were awfully lustrous. "He looked half dead," thought Cecil. But when John spoke to him it was with a calm dignity worthy of a gentleman born. He did not use his dialect, moreover.

"I have come, sir," he began, "to tell you something you ought to know." "Well, really," said Cecil, irritably, "couldn't you have written? You cannot have anything important to communicate." "Perhaps," to you, sir," said John, "but to some I know of, it means—everything." "At any rate, there can be no reason for your wishing to see Miss Laocelles," Cecil rejoined, hoily. "She must hear what I have to say," said John, still calmly. "It concerns her too." "Then out with your infernal news," cried Cecil, thoroughly losing his temper. Victoria looked at him with scorn in her eyes. "Are you not forgetting yourself?" she asked him. "I do not forget myself," said John, "but I will drop his news in the usual way."

"The parting of the ways," Wilkins and Watkins were college chums and close friends. They had been hand students and had taken their degree together. When they shook hands and said good-bye, each of them, as they parted, they were in impaired health. Both had dyspepsia, liver troubles and troublesome coughs. Both had decided to travel for their money, and decided to travel for their money. Wilkins was poor. "I must go to work about it," Robinson talks so much about it. Person's Golden Medical Discovery. In less than two years, Wilkins was rich and respected, and weighed 200 pounds. The Golden Medical Discovery had cured him. "Oh, if poor Wilkins had only tried this for early stages, it is an infallible cure," said Robinson, and was cured himself. "The Golden Medical Discovery had cured him."

FRIDAY. Potage au Profiterole. Spaghetti à l'Indienne. Fowl rôti aux Oignons. Langue de Boeuf au Safran. Pudding au Parmesan à la Sétou.

SATURDAY. Fume de Foie gras. Turbot. Saumon Hollandaise. Collettes de Mouton aux Oignons. Pudding au Chocolat. Canapes de laitances aux Campignons.

SUNDAY. Consomme celestin—Chop up the remains of cold fowls, put them on to boil with a little water and a seasoning of ham, add water, carrots, onions, celery, pepper and salt, when done, free from fat, clear, serve with small pieces of truffles in it.

ELITE DE SOLE—Wash and dry the filets, lay a small quantity of chopped mushrooms on each, add a squeeze of lemon juice, pepper and salt; roll and then place them in a buttered tin. Cover with buttered paper, and bake in moderate oven. When done, dish them with melted butter, and garnish with truffles.

GAZEAU DE MILLE FEUILLES—Make some very light puff paste, roll it out thinly, lay it into rounds about the size of a cheese plate, spread alternately with preserve—apricot marmalade or jam, with marmalade, and red currant jelly, place them one upon another, decorate with little heaps of preserves, or with cream, and serve with a little sauce. No one else should be allowed to see the work.

BOUCHÉE À LA MOELLE—Roll the marrow bones, drain and carefully remove the marrow, cut it in small pieces, mix with three parts of chopped mushrooms, salt and pepper, and some thick cream or good white sauce, fill the party cut, and bake in a moderate oven. When done, garnish with truffles.

Œufs À LA NEMES—Whisk the whites of four eggs to a very stiff froth with the addition of a little sugar, sweeten a pint of milk, and when boiling drop in when cold, with a tablespoon; when cooked—this takes about half a minute—remove from the fire and let them stand in a colander. Strain the milk off when cold, beat with the yolks of the eggs and mix with the meringue, stir in a saucen of boiling water over the fire till it thickens. When cold, place the "foam" on a deep plate, and cover with a layer of meringue. When done, garnish with truffles.

SAUVAN AU RHUM—Dissolve an ounce of German yeast in half a pint of tepid milk, work into it a pound of flour, then cover it with a clean cloth and leave the dough in a warm place till it has risen. Then work in three ounces of castor sugar, half a pound of fresh butter, a pinch of salt and seven or eight eggs. Beat the mixture, stir in the milk, and roll the dough into a rope. Cut the rope into small pieces, put them in a saucen with a good stock, a little butter, and a little salt. When done, garnish with truffles.
