A Nearer View.

I long for a nearer view to-day,

A nearer and clearer view.

Of the pearly gates and the jasper walls.

And the glory that shineth through.

Controlling absorbing things !-

That crieth aloud for wings.

I long to fly-for a while at least-

And follow me everywhere,

Afar from the thoughts of care,-

Those beautiful heights of blies,

Would darken the bue of this.

And everything smells of clay,

No power to think or pray; Sut if, on the forehead, a holy touch

Anoints with the holy chrism,

The wand'ring soul to its place returns

In the strength of a new baptism.

The forms and the tints of flesh.

I know that my spirit is overcome

And needs to be stayed afresh,

And dream that its rest is sure,

'Twill drift away on the ebbing tide

If the anchor be not secure.

I long for a nearer view-O God !

Yes, a nearer view to-day?

That render my sight so dim,

For I should be nearer Him.

A promise and hope afford.

" Thy daily work and thy daily cares

For the services rendered unto man

That I long for a nearer view of Christ-

I know I should walk with a firmer step,

If but from mine eyes these scales would fall

Is it sinful in me to say

And thus when I weary of earthly things,

Though close into shore the ship may ride,

down.

Those eagle-talons that seize my hopes,

Though I fain would sever the yeil that

I fear that a glimpse of a brighter world

For, oh ! there are times when the heart goe

In the first place, whatever of a young man may intend to do, he very seldom actually tries to ' make up ' for lost sleep. If a young man determines to dispense with up his mind to lose those three hours.

Every hour lost is a draft upon his physical and mental capital, his bodily vigor, his intellect. We simply protest against the idea that lost sleep can be 'made up,' and would remind our readers that however plausibly they may argue with themselves at eleven o'clock in the evening, figures will not lie for their accommodation in the morning.

The time at which temptation to keep late hours jusually meets a young man is the early part of the evening, when he is fresh and does ot realize the necessity of sleep. At 8 o'clock the theatres are opened. This is about the hour, too, that friends propose to ' make a night of Creatures of earth ! and trust alone in Him | it,' or to ' have a good time.' No need of sleep is felt, and nothing but memory suggests any disagreeable results of 'a little fun.' The question to be answered by the judgment of such a time is not so much a question of personal comfort as of health and vigor. -N. Y.

He uttered no word of remonstrance as his son placed a box of cigars with a number of shining decanters on the counter, saying,

" Come, Emmet, it is your treat you know .---What will you take ?" Emmet Woodbury was a farmer's son, but when he saw how eager his boy was to obtain kaowledge, and how well he improved his limited opportunities, he wisely resolved to give him a liberal education, and then if he chose to be a farmer, all right, if not, he would be prepared to enter whatever field of labor harmonized with his tastes, for Mr. Woodbury did not believe in spoiling a good lawyer to make a poor farmer. He would have been glad if he could have kept him at home and educated him, for he feared he might be ruined if sent away to school.
