House of Commons Debates

OFFICIAL REPORT

Wednesday, February 22, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Mr. R. C. MATTHEWS (Toronto East Centre) presented the first report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE FOR GOVERNMENT BUSINESS ON MONDAY AND WEDNESDAY

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That on and after Monday, the 27th instant. and all subsequent Mondays and Wednesdays till the end of the session, government notices of motion and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except questions and notices of motions for the production of papers and private bills on Mondays.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I do not rise to oppose the motion, but to ask my right hon. friend if he will allow it to stand until Friday? The reason I make the suggestion is that I know there are a number of hon. members who would like to speak on the resolution of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and who have not yet had opportunity so to do. It is possible that that opportunity may be accorded to-morrow, in which event, as far as the Liberal opposition is concerned, we will be quite agreeable to having this motion carried. But, if that opportunity should not present itself to-morrow I would ask my right hon. friend to permit us to have Monday of next week for that purpose.

Mr. BENNETT: I shall be glad to let the motion stand until Friday. The motion need not now be put, Mr. Speaker. But I point out that Monday would not be a day on which that motion could be further discussed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Would it not follow immediately after the private motions?

Mr. BENNETT: As it reads it is "on and after Monday the 27th instant." We would have to make an exception of next Monday.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On Friday, if necessary, I shall ask for the extension, otherwise not.

Motion stands.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the name of Mr. Munn be substituted for that of Mr. Vallance on the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Motion agreed to.

NEWFOUNDLAND

ROYAL COMMISSION TO INQUIRE INTO FINANCIAL SITUATION AND PROSPECTS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement with respect to Newfoundland. A similar statement is being made in the British House of Commons to-day, and in Newfoundland.

His Majesty has been pleased to appoint the following to be a royal commission for the purpose of examining into the future of Newfoundland, and in particular of reporting on the financial situation and prospects therein: The Right Hon. Lord Amulree, C.B.E., K.C., nominated by His Majesty's government in the United Kingdom, chairman; Mr. C. A. Magrath, LL.D., nominated by His Majesty's government in Canada; Sir William Stavert, K.B.E., nominated by His Majesty's government in Newfoundland. Mr. P. A. Clutterbuck, M.C., of the Dominions Office will act as secretary.

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough): May I say that the other day when my question came up with regard to the amount of bonds that Canada had guaranteed or paid for the Newfoundland government, I dropped it expecting that the Prime Minister would give a statement in answer to my question. His statement to-day does not refer at all to that matter.

Mr. BENNETT: Under questions I will make a reference to it.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Regarding the royal commission to which the Prime Minister has just made reference, does the commission issue from the British Government? It is not from our government?

Mr. BENNETT: I thought I had made it clear that it was issued by His Majesty in London.

WORLD ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): A few days ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) spoke of the desirability of members of the house being able to obtain a copy of the draft annotated agenda submitted by the preparatory commission of experts. I have looked into the matter since and with the consent of the house it is proposed to ask that copies be printed in English and French for distribution to members of the house. I have not made the motion to-day, in order that the leaders of the opposition might be able to determine what numbers they think should be printed both in English and French. I will make the motion on Friday in the light of the knowledge which by that time will have been received as to the number of copies thought desirable to print. Representations have been made that some hon. members would like to have a copy or two, rather than a single one, in order that they might be able to discuss matters with some of their constituents.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

RADIO COMMISSION—STATEMENTS

Mr. CASGRAIN:

Are the statements issued by the radio commission at Ottawa published in French?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Dropped.

Question dropped.

COLONEL W. H. CRAIG

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Has Colonel W. H. Craig, of Kingston, been appointed permanently or temporarily inspector of penitentiaries?

[Mr. Duff.]

2. If so, what are his particular qualifications for this position, and what experience has he in the management or administration of penitentiaries?

3. Has the position been advertised by the Civil Service Commission?

4. Has Colonel W. H. Craig applied for the position of warden of the Kingston penitentiary on the two last occasions when that position was advertised and was his application refused?

5. Did he receive any preference for overseas service or otherwise?

6. Who recommended him to the Minister of Justice?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. The Civil Service Commission has issued a temporary certificate at the request of the Department of Justice for the temporary employment not exceeding three months from the 16th January, of Lieut. Col. William H. Craig.

2. As the department has stated that it is necessary that the person filling this position should have some experience in auditing and accountancy, and as Colonel Craig is a chartered accountant, he was selected on the recommendation of the department to temporarily fill the vacancy. His application does not indicate that he has had any experience in the administration of penitentiaries.

3. Yes.

4. Yes, and he along with other applicants was considered.

5. Colonel Craig was entitled to the overseas active service preference.

6. No recommendation to the Minister of Justice.

GENERAL W. ST. PIERRE HUGHES

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. When was General W. St. Pierre Hughes retired as superintendent of the penitentiaries?

2. Did he retire voluntarily or was he asked to take his superannuation?

3. When was a successor appointed; were applications asked for by the Civil Service Commission and was a board appointed by that commission to examine the qualifications of the various candidates?

4. How many applicants were examined and was there a rating prepared by the board of examiners?

5. Who was the candidate recommended by the Civil Service Commission to the Department of Justice?

6. Was there a list prepared by the Civil Service Commission of the various candidates according to their qualifications and order of merit for the appointment?

7. What was the rank of General D. M. Ormond on that list?

8. Was he the candidate recommended as first choice by the Civil Service Commission, and if not, why was he selected in preference to the others?

9. Had General D. M. Ormond any experience in the administration of penitentiaries or prisons?
10. What were his special qualifications for the appointment?
11. By whom was he recommended to the Minister of Justice?

Mr. CAHAN:

1. August 1, 1932.
2. Retired under Civil Service Superannuation Act on account of age.
3. (a) A certificate of appointment was issued May 12, 1932. Appointee reported for duty August 1, 1932. (b) Yes.
4. Sixty, and a report was made by the Board of Examiners.
5. Brigadier-General Daniel Ormond, C.M.G., D.S.O. and bar, Croix de Guerre (French), Russian Order of St. Stanislas, third class, with swords.
6. The procedure was as follows: (a) All applications examined; (b) applicants not entitled to the returned soldier preference set aside (eleven); (c) particular examination of qualifications of forty-nine returned soldier applicants, eliminating those not considered qualified for any reason such as age, physical condition, education, experience, executive experience, administrative ability, and so forth. This resulted in all but five candidates being eliminated; (d) five outstanding candidates considered; (e) a list was prepared containing two names.
7. First.
8. Yes.
9. No.
10. Special executive and administrative experience in important commands in the Canadian Expeditionary Force and, since the war, in commanding military districts in Canada; his legal training (having practised as a barrister before the war) was also of considerable value in filling a position of superintendent of penitentiaries.
11. No recommendation made to Minister of Justice.

CRUISERS COLBOURNE AND CHOMEDY

Mr. HEENAN:

1. What is the total number of coloured cooks, stewards and firemen employed on the Vagabond cruisers, Colbourne and Chomedy, sailing between Canada and the West Indies?
2. What percentage of the above are coloured Canadian citizens?

Mr. MANION:

1. The coloured ratings on each of these vessels consist of three cooks, seven stewards, and eight firemen, a total of 36.
2. All are West Indians except the three cooks on the Chomedy, who are Canadians.

*NICKEL INDUSTRIES

Mr. SPENCER:

How much control has the federal government over the nickel industries in Canada?

Mr. BENNETT: I think this is hardly a proper question. It is well known, of course, that all the nickel is mined in provinces that have control of their resources, though of course it might be possible for the parliament of Canada to pass an export act. It might be answered that the jurisdiction and control of the federal government are set out in section 91 of the British North America Act, but that answer would not assist the hon. member very much. I suggest that the question be withdrawn, because it would merely be answered in the way I have indicated. I do not want to be unfair at all.

Mr. SPENCER: Dropped.

Question dropped.

QUEBEC, MONTREAL AND SOUTHERN RAILWAY

Mr. TETREAULT:

1. Was the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway purchased by the Canadian National Railways?
2. If so, how much money was paid for this railroad?
3. Who was it paid to?
4. Who were the owners?
5. How many miles of track were sold?
6. How long was this railway operated by the Canadian National?
7. Is this service discontinued on the whole of the railroad, and if not, on how many miles?
8. How much rolling stock was acquired with the purchase?

Mr. MANION:

1. Yes; in accordance with the provisions of chap. 15, 19-20 George V (Canada) 1929.
2. Six million dollars.
3. To the Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway Company.
4. The Quebec, Montreal and Southern Railway Company.
5. One hundred and ninety-one miles.
6. Since July 16, 1929.
7. Service has been discontinued between St. Hyacinthe and Noyan, a distance of 50·03 miles, and between Fortierville and Becquets, a distance of 4·7 miles, a total of 54·73 miles.

Locomotives	14
Freight car equipment	1,441
Passenger car equipment	17
Work equipment	18
Self-propelled passenger cars	3

RADIO COMMISSION—COMMUNICATIONS

Mr. CASGRAIN:

Are the communications, orders, directions and instructions issued by the radio commission to the various radio stations throughout the country, published in French?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The following information has been furnished by the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission:

Communications, orders, etc., addressed to French stations are sent in the French language. Official news is prepared in both languages for the press. No general regulations have been issued, pending the renewal of licences in a few weeks, but will be issued in both languages.

GRAIN APPEAL BOARD

Mr. COOTE:

Who are the members of the Grain Appeal Board at Calgary and on what date were said parties appointed?

Mr. STEVENS: G. Hill, (chairman), appointed August, 1925; C. W. Roenisch, J. A. Harris, W. McLeod, E. J. Munson, A. Pierson, appointed August, 1925; Willard Cumming, appointed October, 1925; F. T. Allison, appointed September, 1932; F. W. Mackenzie, (secretary), appointed October, 1930.

TIE CONTRACTS—ALBERTA

Mr. SPENCER:

1. How many tie contracts were given during the fall and winter of 1932-1933 in the province of Alberta from: (a) the Canadian National Railways; (b) the Northern Alberta Railways?
2. To whom were contracts awarded?
3. How many ties were supplied through each contract?
4. What price was paid in the case of each contract?

Mr. MANION: The Department of Railways and Canals has no information with respect to the tie contracts of either of these railroads. The Northern Alberta Railways are not owned by the government, but are jointly owned and operated by the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific railways.

The questions relate to the business administration of the Canadian National Railways, the management of which does not consider it in the interests of the railway, nor in the general public interest, to publish information the production of which is not required of privately-owned railways.

EASTERN CAR COMPANY, LIMITED

Mr. RALSTON:

1. Has the government participated in any financial arrangements respecting the recent purchase of 500 cars from the Eastern Car Company, Limited, for the use of the Canadian National Railways?
2. If so, what were the terms of such participation?

Mr. MANION:

1. The order in question was placed by the railway, with the approval of the government, as an unemployment relief measure.

2. It is subject to certain conditions such as rotation of labour and the spreading out of the period of employment by arranging that delivery shall not exceed eight cars per day. In addition, payment for the cars is required to be deferred until January 2, 1934, the company meanwhile to make its own financial arrangements.

*ADVANCES TO NEWFOUNDLAND

Mr. DUFF:

1. What amount, if any, was advanced by the government of Canada to the government of Newfoundland about January 2, 1933, to pay the interest on part of Newfoundland's bonded indebtedness?
2. What was the total amount of interest owing by Newfoundland on or about that date, and the rate of said interest?
3. What security has the Dominion of Canada for said loan?
4. What are the terms regarding payment of said amount loaned by Canada, and the interest rate?
5. What is the total amount of Newfoundland's bonded and other financial indebtedness?

Mr. BENNETT: The first of these questions was answered by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) on February 7, at page 1874 of Hansard. The answer to the second question is as follows: According to the information available the interest payable by the government of Newfoundland on January 1, 1933, amounted to $2,482,450, including $180,000 for exchange. The rate of interest on the various loans outstanding ranged from 3½ per cent to 6 per cent per annum. Questions 3 and 4 were answered by the answer to the first question. In reply to the last question, according to the information available the total external debt of the government of Newfoundland on January 1, 1933, was approximately $95,000,000.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

GRAIN ELEVATORS—OWNERSHIP AND MANAGEMENT

Mr. COWAN (Port Arthur):

Regarding ownership, management and control of grain elevators built at public expense: (a) where are such elevators located; (b) who owns the said elevators; (c) by whom are such elevators operated; (d) are such elevators operated as public elevators or as public terminal elevators; (e) which of these elevators are operated under control of the Department of Trade and Commerce and also under control of Department of Railways and Canals; (f) what elevators are managed by harbour commissions; (g) what was the cost of such elevators built at public expense and what is the capacity of each; (h) what was the cost of operation and the revenue for the last year that report is available for each elevator?

FISH DOCK—VANCOUVER

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. What was the estimated cost for the construction of the fish dock built by the Vancouver Harbour Commissioners at Vancouver, and was the original estimate approved by the Department of Marine?
2. What amount was included in the original estimate for property charges?
3. What was the total cost of the work when completed?
4. Was any amount allowed for extras; if so, how much?
5. Did the commission's engineering department make the original plans and specifications and what disposal was made of these, with charges made, and was the design radically altered for construction purposes?
6. What amounts were paid, and to whom, for any property damages, encroachment or otherwise, with description and cause, respectively?
7. What were the dates of employment, amounts paid to, and the name of each person, in connection with engineering distributed as for plans and supervision outside the commission's organization, and on what date was work completed?
8. Who comprised the commission when this work was inaugurated, and who when completed?

TRANS-CANADA HIGHWAY

Mr. MYERS:

1. Is the government proceeding with the construction of the trans-Canada highway?
2. What mileage of said highway has been completed since the present government took office?
3. When may we expect a beginning to be made in the Prince Edward Island section of this highway?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

CONSTRUCTION WORK—DETROIT RIVER

Mr. GOTT:

For a copy of all letters and documents in connection with the investigation of labour conditions and employment on the international channel construction work in progress in the lower Detroit river, including the full report of the immigration officer, or officers, of the Windsor immigration staff, or other officials of the department making the investigation.

QUEBEC MUNICIPAL ACT

Mr. LAURIN:

For a copy of all correspondence between the Department of Justice and the government of the province of Quebec relating to the power of the Quebec legislature to pass the Quebec Municipal Act.

MAISONNEUVE, QUE.—POST OFFICE

Mr. JEAN:

For a copy of all contracts, letters, and other correspondence exchanged between the government and the city of Montreal, respecting the purchase of the old city hall of the former city of Maisonneuve, and the establishment of a new post office in Maisonneuve ward.

GENERAL W. ST. PIERRE HUGHES

Mr. CASGRAIN:

For a copy of all documents, reports, letters, telegrams, applications, ratings, recommendations and all other papers on the files of the Civil Service Commission and the Department of Justice concerning the vacancy created by the retirement of General W. St. Pierre Hughes, superintendent of penitentiaries, and the appointment of his successor, General D. M. Ormond, of Calgary.

ST. GEDEON, QUE.—WHARF

Mr. DUGUAY:

For a copy of the original paysheets for the month of June and the period extending from April 1 to July 15, respecting work carried out at the wharf at St. Gedeon, Lake St. John, in 1930.

DOCTOR J. E. BLONDIN

Mr. ROBERGE (for Mr. Dubois):

For a copy of all telegrams, complaints, correspondence, petitions, reports, communications and other documents, respecting the dismissal of Doctor J. E. Blondin of Bécancour, county of Nicolet, as medical attendant to the Abenakis in that locality.

ST. ANGELE DE LAVAL, QUE.—WHARF

Mr. CHEVRIER (for Mr. Dubois):

For a copy of all telegrams, letters, petitions and other documents exchanged between the Department of Public Works and Mr. Maurice Carbonneau of St. Angele de Laval, county of Nicolet, respecting improvements and repairs carried out at the wharf in that locality during 1932.

J. E. LANDRY

Mr. FAFARD:

For a copy of all letters, requests, correspondence, complaints and other documents exchanged between the national revenue department and any individual, with respect to the dismissal of J. E. Landry, subcollector of national revenue at Matane, Quebec, in 1928.

C.G.S. ARRAS

Mr. MacLEAN:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams and other documents, which passed between the Department of Fisheries or any member of the government, or any department thereof, regarding the firing of a live shell by the C.G.S. Arras, at Cape Wolfe, Prince Edward Island, last summer; also a full report of the investigation held at Halifax, Nova Scotia, into this matter, giving a copy of all evidence taken, together with the names of all parties examined in connection with the said investigation.

PEACE RIVER RAILWAY OUTLET

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River) moved:

That, in the opinion of this house, the Peace River country should be connected by a direct railway outlet to the Pacific coast.

He said: I realize that the house may be somewhat impatient at the introduction once more of this subject, because I have spoken on it so many times in this chamber. Every time I rise now to discuss the subject I am reminded of the predicament of a Presbyterian minister in Scotland who preached the same sermon on two succeeding Sundays. Two of his elders were busy complaining about it when the beadle came up and asked them what the sermon was about. Neither of them knew, so the beadle said, "We shall have to ask the minister to preach that sermon again." That is the reason I am bringing up again this question of a direct outlet for the Peace River country, notwithstanding the fact that this is the tenth or twelfth debate on it; for it is still a matter that calls for action.

I do not want to take up much of the time of the house this afternoon dealing with statistics or in any unnecessary repetition because I think the subject is pretty well known to hon. members. The Peace River country was settled about 1910, and from 1910 to 1920 a population of 20,000 settlers became established in that district. We had another wave of settlement between 1927 and 1931. During those years about 1,000,000 acres of land were developed and intensely cultivated, and about another 5,000,000 acres were alienated from the crown to settlers. The population in 1920 stood around 20,000 and to-day it is 40,000.

A great many people ask why settlers went into that country. Well, they went chiefly because the Canadian Northern Railway in 1910 was surveying a route through to the Pacific coast, through the Peace River country, via Grande Prairie, and on westward to the Pacific. I remember being told in 1911 in Grande Prairie by some Canadian Northern Railway engineers that inside of three years we should have direct connection with the Pacific coast. However, the Canadian Northern story is familiar to the house. That railway was not built through, but later the Edmonton and Dunvegan railway was built from Edmonton to the Peace River country, and that is the railway that serves that country to-day.

We were promised an outlet in 1911. In 1922 Sir Henry Thornton made a statement regarding the conditions under which he as head of the Canadian National Railways would be willing to recommend an outlet. This statement of his has been abused and misrepresented. The statement was to the effect that when the Peace River country produced 10,000,000 bushels of wheat for three successive years, or the equivalent in tonnage for export, he would be willing to recommend the construction of a Peace River outlet. I shall not take up the time of the house going into details. Suffice it to say that we have reached the point not of 10,000,000 but of 12,000,000 bushels and if you take the equivalent tonnage in cattle, timber and so on you will find that we have had that 10,000,000 bushels or the equivalent in tonnage not for three years but for five or six.

The Peace River outlet has been promised by the leaders of the two great parties in every election since 1924—definitely in 1925 and 1926 as well as in 1930, and also in this house. We have had surveys made of every available route. I do not believe there was ever any piece of projected railway better planned or with regard to which there was fuller investigation than in connection with the Peace River outlet. We have had almost continuous surveys since 1922. A few years ago the Canadian Pacific Railway made an airplane survey of every pass north from Yellowhead pass to the boundary of Alaska; I believe that every tree, every mound and every possible route westward to the Pacific is well known. If there is any merit in the matter of planning, in planned economy with respect to railway construction, I do not think there was ever a railway that was planned with more knowledge of all the facts than is available in connection with the Peace River outlet.

The recommendations of the engineers who have investigated this matter have been rather discouraging, I will admit. I remember in 1926 they told us of the millions we should lose if we built the outlet—possibly a million a year. They implied at least that the Edmonton Dunvegan would never pay, and that if the outlet were built the Edmonton Dunvegan would be ruined. I do not know of a single solitary statement made by the engineers regarding the possibility of the Dunvegan paying, or regarding the possible development of the Peace River, that has not been proved wrong in the intervening years. The Dunvegan railway paid in 1927 and I will claim this—and it is true, as the figures will show—that notwithstanding the recession in railway earnings since 1927, the operating ratio of the railway serving the Peace River country shows a more favourable result than do the railways throughout the rest of Canada to-day.

We were told by the engineers in the committee in 1927 that there was land in Manitoba which had had railway service for forty years and which was not developed, and that there could be no possibility of developing the bush lands in Peace River. The fact is that the settlers have pushed back into this bush land in the last two or three years some sixty or seventy miles from the railway and they are in process of developing them and clearing them for farming to-day.

And what about these engineers? What were they doing in connection with the railways in Canada at that time? They were opposed to the Peace River outlet, while at the same time they were helping to spend from $30,000,000 to $60,000,000 in unnecessary duplication of services in Canada, in needless competition, if the reports of the newspapers can be relied on with regard to the railway investigation that has been going on during the last twelve months. They were recommending the expenditure of millions in unnecessary hotels all over the country, and yet they were desperately keen to save the country the expenditure, for permanent development of Peace River country, of a few millions, less than one-third of what they were losing in unnecessary duplication of services in Canada annually. I am therefore not at all impressed now any more than I was in 1927 with the recommendations that were made by the engineers, in view of the fact that, as I know, so many of their findings were altogether wrong.

Of course, the financial situation in Canada must be considered. There may be difficulty in the way, especially in view of the announced policies of the government with regard to sound money and so on, but in my judgment we cannot keep 800,000 people indefinitely on relief in Canada. How long can we continue to deal with direct relief in this manner? Can we afford to keep 800,000 people permanently or for an indefinite period? Can we afford to continue a situation where the time and energy of these people are being lost in the development of this country?

I should like to quote the Macmillan report upon the difficulties of again getting things going. This committee was dealing with the question of having abundantly cheap money and getting it out to work, and the following appears on page 136 of the report:

> It is for these reasons that central banks should favour a persistent and determined policy to maintain an abundance of cheap credit in their domestic money markets, sufficient both to satisfy the unusually large demands for liquid resources due to nervousness in the financial world and also to support any new productive enterprises coming forward.

And again:

> The greatest difficulty, however, which we foresee is the fulfilment of the second task, namely, to remedy the shortage of definitely sound borrowers for the purpose of new enterprise. The vicious circle is complete. The decline of new enterprise has reacted adversely on profits and prices, and the new level of profits and prices stand in the way of new enterprise. It is for this reason that some of us think that in the domestic field it may be necessary to invoke governmental enterprise to break the vicious circle.

I think the most common sense proposal that can be made for the breaking of the so-called business cycle, inflation and deflation, is that of planned public works. We should hold down public works during boom periods and increase them during depressed periods. I do not think anything more sensible could be proposed. If we had started this in 1925 or 1926 it might have been easier for us to-day, but we must start some time and it seems to me that it would be more sensible to utilize many of our unemployed in building a Peace River outlet than to continue to keep them on direct relief. Many of the settlers in the Peace River district who need work dislike being upon direct relief. I do not know of anything that has pleased me more during the years I have been in public life than the many expressions of regret I have heard from people in the Peace River district and elsewhere at having to be upon direct relief. Man after man has said to me: I do not want direct relief, I want to work. A great percentage of those on direct relief would prefer to be doing something and creating a permanent asset for themselves and for the Dominion of Canada.

This is one public work that could be undertaken with reasonable prospects of its being a real asset for the dominion, and it would also relieve to some extent the situation confronting the country. We have heard a great deal about the duplication in railways. If the newspaper reports of the investigations that have been going on in Canada are correct, one of our chief troubles is duplication of railways. But there would be no real duplication here. We have one fifth more economic acres of land to every mile of railway in the Peace River country than they have in general throughout the prairie provinces. The prairie provinces have 5,000 economic acres of land to every mile of railway, whereas, according to any of the surveys made, we would have 6,000 acres per mile of railway. Our yields per acre have been just a little better throughout the years than the average yield in the prairie provinces.

I want to advance another argument which I used before. Many people have left the older settled districts because of adverse weather conditions and have settled in this new country. These people have left the southern districts because of dry weather or because their land was blown out and they have endeavoured to establish themselves in this new country. I ask the government and the house: In view of the courage these people have shown in going out to start over again, can we say to them that we cannot afford to build the necessary railway? I do not think we can afford to say that, and I do not think we ought to say that to these new settlers.

I was reading the February number of the National Revenue Review a few days ago and I noticed the following on page 18:

A prairie farmer questioned by an income tax inspector regarding his income over a period of years, wrote as follows:—"You asked about my crops for the last five years; well I'll tell you. In 1924 I was dried out; in 1925 I was hailed out; in 1926 I was frozen out; in 1927 I was blown out, and in 1928 I just walked out and I'm still out."

There are many people in the Peace River country who went through similar experiences. They have settled in the park areas of the Peace River district in an effort to reestablish themselves, and I do not think that we should say to them that they must wait an indefinite time before they can get railway connection.

Many people will say that this will cost $10,000,000 and we cannot afford it. I ask the government to decide definitely what the outlet will be and then build it as rapidly as we can afford. There are many settlers sixty and seventy miles from a railroad and they have done everything humanly possible to prevent their becoming a charge upon the dominion, the provincial or the municipal authorities. In spite of all their efforts some of them have been forced to take relief, and I submit that if we had a plan, if we could decide upon an outlet and go at it gradually, we could give these people such relief as would permit them to become definitely established in this new country.

There may have been difficulty in the years gone by in bringing about railway development in the new districts of the north owing to the fact that because of weather conditions the settlers might leave the southern districts of Alberta and Saskatchewan where railways and roads were already established and go into the north. But I think the period of intensive development in the southern areas of Saskatchewan and Alberta is past and in the future will be in the sections of those provinces that are most like Ontario and Quebec where there are many trees and enough shelter so that the rain when it comes will stay there and do good, rather than be drawn off by the wind; at least this will be the case until such time as tree planting can so advance on the southern areas of those provinces that we may have some protection against the wind. Because of that additional fact I submit that we can reasonably expect this development will be justified.

It may be rather difficult for hon. members who live in the older sections, and who can hardly travel twenty miles in any direction without crossing two or three railway tracks, to realize the position of settlers who have gone out into a new district sixty or seventy miles from a railway. It may be easy enough to pass the matter off by saying: "It is no concern of ours," but as a national duty the time has come when we ought definitely to deal with the situation.

Some of the settlers in Peace River and a number of boards of trade have been passing resolutions calling for a bonus on grain for export out of Peace River. Possibly the fact that I was anxious for the continuation of the bonus on wheat caused some of them to think this was a good thing to ask for until such time as the outlet was built. They are asking that Edmonton and Peace River be put on the grain export freight basis. There is a difference of about ten cents a hundred in the grain freight rate from some portions of Peace River, for instance, Dawson Creek in the constituency of the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser), and a difference of about six cents in the central portion in my constituency. This would of course cost a few hundred thousand dollars a year, but I wish to bring to the attention of the government the fact that, pending the construction of the outlet, they are asking for this very thing. To-day the price of wheat in Peace River is twenty-four cents or less; it has been down below twenty cents. Before the adjournment last November I submitted to the house figures from government publications showing that on the best possible basis it cost about fifty cents to produce a bushel of wheat. Yet the farmers in Peace River are to-day getting about twenty to twenty-five cents a bushel even for No. 1 northern—and it is not all No. 1 northern, although I am pleased to say that a great proportion of it is. Even if Peace River were to be put on the same basis as Edmonton, this would not meet the situation in the newer districts. Therefore I want to bring the matter to the attention of the government again and to urge action with all the earnestness of which I am capable. I am not asking them to launch out on a huge program of expenditure. I want the route settled and sufficient of it built in the near future to meet the needs of the present settlers with completion of it as soon as possible; but it is necessary that sufficient be built to meet the requirements of the actual settlement areas where people have come from the rest of the prairie provinces where they have been dried out or hailed out, and are anxious to establish themselves in new homes and to keep themselves from being relief charges on the Dominion of Canada.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) I shall not take up much of the time of the house, although I assure him it is not my desire to give him a short answer. I should like very heartily to congratulate him on his activity in this regard. I have been in this house for a number of years and, indeed, for some years before he became a member, but since he has been in the house he has been persistent and consistent in his advocacy of the building of this railway. He deserves great credit for the active way in which he has worked for his great section of country, a new empire in the far northwest, and I say in all sincerity that I trust he will be long enough in the house to see his ambitions in that regard fulfilled.

Mr. HANBURY: Perhaps his own government can have that done.

Mr. MANION: That is quite possible, although I am afraid if he waits that long he will be a centenarian. I hope some day, possibly in the years to come, this government may be able to have this railway built, but at the present time, owing to the financial situation not only of the dominion but of the railways, this is not at all likely during the present year.

Last year, speaking on this question in reply to my hon. friend, I reviewed the situation pretty thoroughly, so that it is not necessary to go into it in detail to-day. I shall, however, just read the report which I put on Hansard of the three engineers who made the most recent investigation into the whole project. Their opinion is explicit; it is that of the Canadian Pacific engineer, the Canadian National engineer, and the third engineer who was appointed, I think, as chairman, so that it is authoritative. The three engineers were J. M. R. Fairbairn, chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway; C. S. Gzowski, chief engineer of construction of the Canadian National Railways, and C. R. Crysdale, consulting engineer of British Columbia, a man who apparently was acceptable to all parties to the question at the time. The final summing up of their report is as follows:

They had reviewed the whole situation.

—our conclusions are:

1. No western outlet is justified for the present, as the existing railway furnishes the most economical route. It will take many times the present traffic to justify another railway outlet.

2. The Obed route for western outlet is the most favourable from a railway economic standpoint, considering the present phase of the railway situation.

3. We recommend that the matter of a final route be decided when the question is a practical one, believing that by the time the volume of traffic has reached a point where a western outlet is justified, general and possible local conditions may have materially changed. When the decision is imperative, the whole situation should be reviewed, in order to appraise all the contributing factors, including the potential traffic which may accrue from the lands beyond the definite areas included in this report.

These are the final conclusions of the three engineers who made the investigation, late in 1931, and whose report was submitted to us and to the house early last year. May I add that Mr. Beatty and Sir Henry Thornton at the time endorsed the report as it was submitted to the government and to the house.

As to my hon. friend's suggestion that it might have been better to build the Peace River outlet than some of the hotels and other unnecessary structures that were undertaken in connection with the railways, I would entirely agree with him. The total amount of money that was spent unnecessarily on duplication of hotels, the purchase of lines that were losers from the beginning, and the building of unnecessary steamships and the like, probably would easily have built the Peace River railway outlet which would at least have been no greater a loser than have been these unnecessary capital exenditures for the railways. That, however, is water that has flowed under the bridge and we cannot change the situation. Therefore with both railways at the present time earning about half the amount they did during the peak year, it is obvious that they will not change their minds in regard to the report which their engineers and Mr. Crysdale submitted last year. The best I can say to my hon. friend—and I say it in all sincerity—is that the day may come in the near future when world and Canadian conditions will so improve that this matter may be given consideration. I am afraid that I cannot go even to the formal extent of promising consideration at the present moment of any proposal involving the expenditure of many millions of dollars upon a new railway, much as I should like to oblige one who has been a persistent advocate of what is from his standpoint at least a very worthy object. I appreciate, as I am sure the house does, his courage and persistence, but I am afraid that the best I can say in reply to his remarks to-day is that the matter will have to be given consideration when conditions improve; for the present, as I said last year, the question will have to stand in abeyance.

Mr. J. A. FRASER (Cariboo): I am sorry that the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) has been unable to give a more satisfactory answer to the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy). I quite understand the situation so far as the railways and the finances of the country are concerned, but I think a few words can be usefully added to what my hon. friend from Peace River has said with regard to the situation in the Peace River country.

I am speaking particularly of the British Columbia portion of the Peace River country, because after all it is a substantial part of the Peace River country containing the largest area of contiguous farm lands that there is in British Columbia, and the construction of a western outlet is very important to their development and the prosperity of our province.

I went through that area last fall, travelling a thousand miles in a motor car over roads where three years before there were no roads at all. The British Columbia government is entitled to a great deal of credit for the construction of the roads which they have built in that area, and of course that is their responsibility. I found scattered over the area through which these roads had been built a population in the British Columbia portion of the Peace River area of some 10,000 people, where in the year 1915 there were only about 1,000. They are settled on both sides of the river, and the difficulty in crossing it is certainly a very great one. North of the Peace river itself there are about 4,000 people, located sixty-five miles from the present end of steel, and they have to transport their wheat by trucks over that sixty-five miles to reach the end of steel at Dawson Creek. At the time I was there, for No. 1 Northern wheat they were receiving only 24½ cents a bushel. Since then the price has declined, so it can be easily imagined what the farmer on the north side of the Peace river, who has to haul his grain at least sixty-five miles, was receiving in return for his labour in planting and harvesting his crop.

[Mr. Manion.]

I found in that area on the north side of the Peace river a class of people such as have been described by the hon. member for Peace River, farmers who had been dried out or hailed out in the prairie provinces and had moved in there. A great many of them had taken in what effects they had left, and you will find settlers there now with a couple of cows, some chickens and hogs,, and implements of one kind and another to carry on their operations. They are men who have been accustomed to all kinds of railway construction work, and as the hon. member has mentioned they are anxious to get work instead of relief. They have not been in the country long enough to bring their farms into production, and practically all of them are at present on relief, and there is no better prospect than that they will remain on relief unless work of some kind is provided for them.

As I said, these men are accustomed to construction work of all kinds. I spoke to numbers of them who had done all kinds of railway construction work. They are capable of doing it, and are anxious to engage in that work. I think that there is in that country a sufficient number of men, or nearly sufficient, without bringing in any help from outside, to construct the western outlet. When you have that situation, with the men there able and anxious to do this work, and when you find the government under the necessity of providing them with relief for which the country gets nothing in return, it does seem peculiar that this railway construction work should not be provided during these times. I am speaking not only of this government but of all governments when I say that.

The engineers, as the Minister of Railways has stated, said that the question of the construction of a western outlet would be further reviewed when it was a practical one. Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know when it ever will be a practical question if it is not one at the present time. You have a population there who are capable of doing this work, people who are anxious to work and who at the present time are receiving relief. Then as to the cost of construction, I do not know a time in the history of this country when materials of all kinds were at lower prices than they are now. These people, I repeat, have to be provided with relief in order to keep them from starving to death, and in these circumstances it does seem to me that some government should be able to take some step towards starting the construction of a western outlet from the Peace River country.

It is not as if this construction has not been promised to these people. It has been promised many times by all parties in this house and by the whole country. It is a very necessary work and some day will have to be undertaken. Notwithstanding the fact that the engineers have reported to the government that it is not a practical question at the present time, in my opinion it is one of the most practical projects there is in the Dominion of Canada to-day.

I have not much more to add. I regret very much that the government cannot find a solution of this problem, that they cannot, under the conditions in that area which I have outlined, bend their energies to providing for the construction of a western outlet for the Peace River country.

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): This is the third time, Mr. Speaker, that I have had the honour of supporting a motion in favour of this worthy undertaking. I was sorry to hear the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) say that the construction of a western outlet for the Peace River country cannot be given consideration at this time. I fully concur in the description which the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser) has given of the population in that area, and of its possibilities and resources. Undoubtedly the work can be done, and most certainly it should be done. As the mover of the motion (Mr. Kennedy) said, I feel that the present time, when we are doling out good Canadian money to feed people who have no work to do, would be opportune to start a useful work of this kind, not by any means as a matter of charity, but to provide an asset for the Canadian nation at large. I therefore urge upon the government that most earnest consideration be given to this worthy undertaking and that if it is not possible to go ahead and complete the project at the present time, at least a start should be made and the work proceeded with as fast as possible. I know the resources of that country and its possibilities, and I do not think any part of this dominion has greater possibilities and more undeveloped natural resources than the Peace River district. We hear complaints at this time that people are rushing to the cities because they cannot find work. What we want is home builders. It has been explained by the hon. member for Peace River, and also by the hon. member for Cariboo, that many of the people there are people who met with misfortune in other parts of the country, and seeing the possibilities, established themselves in a new district, and I think every assistance should be given them. As the hon. member for Cariboo has explained, it is not a political matter, because these promises were made by both parties. I for one, representing a constituency that is interested, say that I will support any party that will give justice to these people, who have been promised consideration not by any one political party but by the Canadian people. This whole question has been so well outlined by the former speakers that I am not going to take up any more time, but I wish to associate myself again with the mover of the motion.

Mr. WILFRED HANBURY (Vancouver-Burrard): Like my hon. friend the member for Skeena (Mr. Hanson) who wishes to have the traffic from the Peace River country diverted to his constituency, the port of Prince Rupert, I must put in a word for Vancouver, because naturally we expect great benefit if and when this road is constructed. One thing on which I wish to congratulate the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) is in having at last acquired the courage to cease his dissimulation and the dissimulation of the government on this question. It is a peculiar thing that in respect to a policy on which all the people of the country agree so completely one of the ministers says that because of some peculiar condition that exists at the present time—which we admit, but which makes this particular object especially desirable—the government have decided definitely against the project. At any rate they are not camouflaging any further. It is almost useless to refer again to the many promises that have been made to these people. We all know they have been made, not by one party but by all; not only by the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) when he was Prime Minister, or when he hoped to be Prime Minister again, not only by the present leader of the government (Mr. Bennett) when he was leader of the opposition and hoping to be Prime Minister, but by all.

Now the people want work, and they want that outlet. There is only one conclusion that we can come to. It is not simply that the government do not want to spend money on constructing the railway, because the expenditure can be justified; the question is whether the government wish to discourage the growing of further quantities of grain. If the government would come out openly and say that is their policy, and that they do not want more people to go into that country, we might see more reason in what they say. But, as regards construction, we have to-day thousands of people on the dole, doing nothing to earn what it is costing the country to provide for them. We have manufacturing plants eager for work to supply the requirements for the construction of that road; everyone in the country is demanding expenditure of some kind, and if there ever was such a thing as a self-liquidating enterprise, this is one. Having all these considerations in mind, the minister is to be congratulated upon ceasing further dissimulation. I urge very strongly that the house should not take the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways as conclusive in this regard. I think it is a matter that we should seriously consider, and I hope the government will reconsider the decision which evidently they have reached.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Having entered the house some years ago at the same time as the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy), I have naturally heard him present his case a good many times in a good many successive years, but I have never heard him present it in a more masterly manner. I congratulate him sincerely upon his pertinacity, upon his determined activity on behalf of his people, and upon the logical and convincing arguments with which he supported his request. I do not live in that part of the country, nor are my people directly affected by the proposed railway, but as a matter of public policy it does seem to me that every argument is in favour of its construction; there is no sound argument against it.

Ten years ago this matter was considered. During the last ten years conditions have materially changed. At the time of the census before the last one there was a population of possibly 40,000 in that great area. To-day in considering redistribution we find that the population has practically doubled, that we have almost 80,000 people there. The conditions laid down ten years ago as being essential before the construction of this outlet should be undertaken have been more than fulfilled. The potential freight then suggested as essential before a railway should be considered has been reached and more than reached; the freight is now available. The people who have gone there, as has been said, thousands of them—yes, you might almost say tens of thousands of them—have made their last stand there. They were confronted with natural difficulties and handicaps year after year, and finally left the district in which they originally settled and moved out to a country where they know that as far as nature is concerned they will have their chance. They have made their last stand there, have driven in their last stake, pinned their last hope upon building their homes and developing their farms and doing their part to build up their country.

I am not going to speak at length; I simply suggest that there is only one objection which can be or has been offered to the building of this outlet. So far as decision regarding the route the line should follow is concerned, I can only say that if that has not been decided upon by now, it is a grave reflection upon the skill, the intelligence and wisdom of those concerned; because, as the hon. member for Peace River has said, never have I known of any piece of proposed railway construction being considered so long, surveyed so frequently, taken under consideration so definitely and so persistently as this one. Surely every relevant fact must be known, every consideration must have been given weight to; and if the engineers have not by this time made up their minds, then it is about time we had other engineers. The only real argument brought against it is the financial question: Can we at this time afford to do this thing? Mr. Speaker, although I stand for every reasonable economy—I say reasonable economy—I believe we have here an investment which is more than justified, not only for the sake of the people of that country, not only for the sake of its future development; we have a situation where governments are straining every nerve to provide sustenance for the people, with 800,000 to 1,000,000 on direct relief, and everyone agrees that from the point of view of morale as well as from the point of view of investment it is much better to provide work for these people than to give them direct relief. Here we have a project which would meet all these conditions, which would at once provide work and sustenance for the people, and a means of keeping up their morale, would develop the country, fulfil a promise, and enable tens of thousands of people to build their homes and realize their ambitions. It does seem to me that at no time and for no project would a further addition to our national debt be more completely justified than in accepting this proposal and placing that part of this great country upon a parity with the rest of the dominion.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Mr. Speaker, coming from a northern riding in Saskatchewan, I rise to support the resolution moved by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Kennedy) and spoken to by the hon. member for Cariboo (Mr. Fraser) and members on this side of the house. It would appear to me that this railway requirement for the Peace River country is important, because those supporting it desire a transportation outlet to the Pacific coast, and having in mind the development of northern Alberta and northern Saskatchewan during the last few years, I believe the importance of that outlet is assuming a value in a national way that it has not assumed previously.

I listened to the hon. members who have taken part in this discussion, and I also listened to the review of the situation by the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion). If I understood him correctly his policy is one of doing nothing for the present time, and he presented a very vague hope of action in the days to come. I do not know when something will be done with regard to an outlet from the Peace River district, but I should like to present very briefly the viewpoint of the people living in northwestern Saskatchewan who desire some line of communication into that great country. North Battleford, Prince Albert and Edmonton look upon themselves as gateways to that area, and any question that concerns the development of the transportation facilities of the Peace River country certainly concerns the future of those three cities and of the increasing population in the great area northwestward to the Pacific ocean.

In that regard I should like to direct the attention of the Minister of Railways and the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) to the pledge given by the Conservative party in 1930 when they appealed to the people of Canada, and I want to know why their transportation policy has not been carried out. I should like to read pledge No. 5 in their platform as it was presented to the people some three years ago:

> We pledge ourselves to the improvement of the whole scheme of Canadian transportation northward by the completion of the Hudson Bay route, and the construction of such branches as may be necessary to render it most readily available to every part of Canada; to the Pacific slope by a Peace river outlet, and east and west by the development of the St. Lawrence waterways, and we pledge ourselves to aid existing traffic channels, and to increase port facilities on the great lakes, Hudson bay and the Atlantic and Pacific oceans, and to the establishment of a national highway system.

That is the pledge, definite and clear as crystal, made by the Conservative party three years ago, and I should like to know where they stand to-day with regard to it.

Mr. MANION: Has my hon. friend heard of the pledge made by his own leader in 1924?

Mr. McINTOSH: I may deal with that a little later; I am dealing with your pledge now. If I did deal with the other pledge it would not save the Minister of Railways at all. Never mind the other fellow; get down to business yourself and do something. The question is what the Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways are going to do about it.

I should like to come now to a phase of the question which concerns, directly, the development of northwestern Saskatchewan. In the northern part of my riding we have the remains of a railway which was projected by the Liberal government in 1930, and sanctioned by this house, and which should have been finished in 1932. That railway has been practically scrapped by the present government. I refer to the line running from St. Walburg across the Beaver river. We have sixty-nine miles of a grade for which this country has paid and which is crumbling to pieces. For the last three years practically nothing has been done; not a mile of steel has been laid. That line passes through a country containing thousands of people who came from southern Alberta, southern Manitoba and southern Saskatchewan; they are farmers who are really farming, and last year there was at least 150,000 bushels of grain produced in that district, yet nothing has been done to finish that line. The ties are there, rotting; the grade is there, and as we have said it is falling to pieces. I maintain that this is one of the greatest pieces of railroad bungling perpetrated by this government. These people are left high and dry without railroad facilities. The argument cannot be advanced that the line would not pay; every mile of line in northwestern Saskatchewan will pay, and therefore I say something should be done immediately with regard to that road.

The grade from St. Walburg runs through a fine mixed farming area. It goes from St. Walburg to Red Cross; from Red Cross to Loon Lake; from Loon Lake it crosses the Beaver river to Plat Valley and from Plat Valley to Goodsoil. Before it reaches Goodsoil it crosses the Beaver river and runs northwest towards the Pacific ocean. This ought to be a very good time to have something done, while labour is cheap. The grade is there and the ties are lying beside the grade. All that we should have to do would be to purchase secondhand steel and lay it on that road; but even with this slight cost nothing has been done and thousands of farmers as well as hundreds of business men are without railway service into that country, notwithstanding the fact that they went there three or four years ago with the distinct promise of railway transportation for the purpose of bringing about the agricultural and business development of that part of the province.

The steel could have been put on this road a year or two ago very cheaply. There was relief camp after relief camp in the northern part of that country where men were sent to cut highways when in my estimation they would have been a great deal better employed had they been captained by two or three experts to lay the steel on the road. The steel could have been procured cheaply and that sixty-nine miles of road could have been completed. Instead of that they were sent to do highway work which in a year or two will be useless, because the second growth of timber will render the work that they have done of no effect.

The Minister of Railways, in my opinion, should give the house a statement with respect to his policy on this road. He has stated a do nothing policy regarding the Peace River outlet and I understand there is not to be a dollar this year of capital expenditure on Canadian National railway construction in northwestern Saskatchewan. This means that if the Minister of Railways does not find the money the road cannot be built, consequently there is no use "passing the buck" to the Canadian National. We might as well know now where we stand. I should like to know, before this session concludes, from the minister just what the attitude of the government and of his department is, and whether they intend to provide money for laying the steel on this road, which otherwise will very soon deteriorate and become absolutely useless. I am satisfied that a statement one way or the other would clear the air, and the people of that northern area would know exactly where they stand in this matter. What has the Minister of Railways to say about it?

Mr. A. E. MUNN (Vancouver North): I wish to say just a few words in support of the resolution. For many years I have been advocating a Pacific outlet from the Peace River country. At the special session of 1930 I suggested that a good deal of work could be done in the form of relief, and the same situation exists at the present time. In British Columbia alone there are several hundred men in camps on relief doing practically nothing, and there are, I am told, also men in this condition in the Peace River country and in Alberta. I do not suggest that the government should spend a great deal of money in the way of capital expenditure, but these men have to be taken care of and I do not see any reason why they could not be put to work in the way I propose. The average man would rather do a little work than sit around doing nothing and taking the dole. I leave that suggestion with the government.

The people in that country must have an outlet some day or other, and they have been promised it. The late Liberal government as well as the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) promised this outlet, and there are good reasons why the road has not been built. I suggest, however, that the government should take into consideration these hundreds of idle men who might be working on the road at no additional expense. The government must take care of them in any event, and I leave this practical suggestion with the government. A good deal of work which must be done some day could now be gone on with.

Mr. D. M. KENNEDY (Peace River): Usually we have been promised consideration of this question when it has come up, but on this occasion, if I understood the minister's words rightly, we are to receive no consideration.

Mr. MANION: I said that the matter would be considered when conditions changed and finances would permit it.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Well, possibly that is better, but I think that we shall have to undertake to change conditions; that is the point. I do not believe that the engineers are at all right when they say that the work will be proceeded with when it is practicable. I venture to say that no engineer has ever made a report that was not known beforehand to be acceptable to the government and to the two railways. I submit that the engineers have never in the last ten years taken a stand on this question which has been justified by subsequent events; not one that I know of. They have been right in certain details but they have never been right in a large way.

I know of no reason why the Peace River country should have to wait until there is a guarantee that from the outset this railway will be a profitable venture. No railways have been built in Canada on that basis. Under the circumstances, Mr. Speaker, I cannot see my way to withdraw the motion. If the government wants to bury it, let them bury it right, and let the Peace River people know it. But if you want to go ahead and do anything, then the time is ripe for action.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman will observe that the resolution does not fix any time.

Mr. KENNEDY (Peace River): Possibly the government will be able to accept it, then. There is no question about time; we want action this year. That is what we want. We have been promised action practically every year but we have had no real action with regard to the matter, and I think that we ought to know exactly where we stand.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Kennedy, Peace River), which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. GEARY: I was paired with the hon. member for Laurier-Outremont (Mr. Mercier). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. GERSHAW: I was paired with the hon. member for London (Mr. White). Had I voted, I would have voted for the motion.

Mr. MacLAREN: I was paired with the hon. member for Rimouski (Sir Eugene Fiset). Had I voted, I would have voted against the motion.

Mr. McINTOSH: I was paired with the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Kennedy). Had I voted, I would have voted for the resolution.

WESTERN FREIGHT RATES

REDUCTION OF DOMESTIC RATES ON GRAIN AND GRAIN PRODUCTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion). Is he now prepared to make a full statement regarding the reduction in freight rates? He stated the other day that negotiations were under way and that he was awaiting the results.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): The only thing I can say at the moment is that the four western provinces have agreed to the proposal and that arrangements are being made to deal with the question.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. H. E. SPENCER (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask a question of the government based upon the following Canadian Press dispatch:

> Bona fides satisfactory to the federal government have been established and the syndicate is now prepared to conduct the trade without financial guarantee from the Canadian government, according to a telegram from G. G. Serkau, syndicate head, read at a convention of the Western Live Stock Union at Calgary.

Is the government prepared to give an assurance that there will be no variation detrimental to soviet products made in the customs regulations during the life of this proposed agreement?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that any hon. member of this house should ask such a question is amazing. It is part of the constitutional practice of this parliament, and all other parliaments as well, that no government shall give any assurance with respect to customs matters to any person or persons, corporation or corporations. I recall an incident which was recited to me in my early days by an old member of the House of Commons. He asked the Minister of Finance of that day whether or not a certain change in tariff would take place and the minister replied: If I answered that question I would consider that I was unfit for this position, or words to that effect. No assurance can be given by any government to any person at any time as to how the administration of the country's affairs will be carried on in a given contingency which may or may not arise. The hon. gentleman who asked this question, undoubtedly with the best of motives, knows perfectly well, or at least he should know, that if I were to undertake to give an answer to such a question I would be derelict in my office and violating the duties of my position.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

REPORTED PURCHASE OF RAILWAY DOCK AT VANCOUVER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. WILFRED HANBURY (Vancouver-Burrard): Mr. Speaker, I should like to inquire of the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) if he has any information to give to the house in connection with the proposed purchase or negotiation for purchase of the Canadian National Railways dock at Vancouver?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): No, there is nothing to give to the house. The harbour commission of Vancouver is in touch with the whole situation and there have been consultations between them and the Canadian National Railways. Of course, this is a matter which will be dealt with by the railway officials and not by the government.

PREMIUM ON GOLD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. OLOF HANSON (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the government if it intends to continue during 1933 the payment of a premium to the gold producers of Canada.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The price paid for gold is the price which the producers can obtain elsewhere, and that is all. I assume the hon. gentleman thinks that because his products are being sold at a lesser price than they can be sold at elsewhere, a lesser price should be paid to the gold producers than they can obtain elsewhere. The government has commandeered gold in the sense that it cannot be exported without a licence and it is purchased at the price which the producer could obtain for his product in other markets.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): Is the government going to continue that policy?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I could not answer as to what may arise in the future. I have already indicated to the hon. gentleman that no government can say what is going to happen under present conditions in particular, but the government at present is purchasing gold on the basis I have mentioned and so far has no reason for believing it will change the price that has been paid.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

The house resumed, from February 21, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth for the second reading of Bill No. 24, to amend the criminal code (unlawful associations), and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Guthrie.

Mr. ARMAND R. LAVERGNE (Montmagny): Mr. Speaker, I feel I must ask the indulgence of the house in speaking on this bill at this late stage of the debate, but having spent a good deal of my life in addressing public meetings, I thought I should give the house the benefit of my general experience. I for one believe in freedom of speech and would certainly support the principle of any bill that would maintain or more clearly define and recognize such freedom. But the bill of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) goes rather far and I think we must come to a definition of what is freedom or liberty. Freedom, so far as I understand it, is not the right to choose between evil and good, between obeying the law and disobeying it, between supporting society and disorganizing it; it is the right to choose in favour of good and the power to renounce evil.

The bill of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre proposes not to amend what may be defective in section 98, but to do away with that section altogether. I would ask the house to look at the question in this way: Is there any hon. member or any citizen in Canada who is prevented by section 98 of the criminal code from expressing his ideas? I have spoken in this country for the last thirty years, sometimes on rather ticklish subjects, and I have not yet found myself in any jeopardy on account of this section. No man, whatever ideas he may have to express, whether they are the most conservative or the most advanced, is deprived of freedom of speech by section 98. This section has only one object and one we cannot avoid; it is to prevent the destruction of our institutions by force. You can go on the hustings, on the public platforms, just as you can do in Hyde park, London, under the protection of the police and express any opinion, and the law cannot touch you, but the moment you try to incite the people of this country by force, murder, arson, to overthrow our institutions, section 98 steps in. With the worldwide revolution organized to-day by Moscow, this section is one of the most important we have in our criminal code. There is absolutely nothing new in it; all the paragraphs of section 98 appear in spirit or in letter in the criminal code under different sections such as 47, 48, 130, 133 and so forth. I shall not take up the time of the house by quoting them.

The other day I heard the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) say that he was not a communist. I believe him. He stated that he had nothing to do with communism. I believe him. I believe him even more to-day when he is in Quebec fighting against the rights of the people and for the most trustridden government in Canada, the Taschereau administration. I would ask the hon. member for Quebec East, if he does me the honour of reading my remarks, to refer to the February issue of the Revue des Deux Mondes, which, in a report of an investigation carried on by Monseigneur Michel d'Herbigny into the most communistic organization in the world, states that the communist theory is this: Our best agents, those who do our work the best, are not those who are out and out communists, avowed reds, but those who say: Well, in Russia there is a sort of interesting experiment going on; let us watch it quietly and see what will come out of it. According to him, those are the best communist agents, and I am sure the hon. member for Quebec East, when he reads my remarks, will not be so keen to object to section 98, which does nothing to prevent freedom of speech in this country. Who can object to section 98? Not any members of this house who, like myself, have sometimes expressed theories which were not readily accepted by the people at large in the country. The other day I heard the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) saying that the communists and bolshevists hated the hon. members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. How could they, Mr. Speaker? How could they resist the hon. member, first of all? I have read—I do not know if I am correct, but I am sure that I shall be contradicted if I am wrong—that the hon. member for Southeast Grey not so very long ago spoke in Galveston, Texas, and being an advanced member with advanced ideas she spoke on the theory which goes back almost a century to Proudhon—property is theft; and using all that eloquence which we know her to possess she brought such conviction to her audience that that very night she was robbed of $70. I am told that the hon. lady member had a man arrested in consequence which was rather ungrateful on her part, because to my mind it seemed a splendid test whether the ideas she was propounding had carried conviction.

The hon. lady member from Southeast Grey says that the communists and bolshevists hate the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. How could they? How can they resist the hon. lady? Everywhere the world over we are faced with an agitation to prepare for the overthrowing of our civilization, and more than that, of Christianity, and these agitators have found their best friends in those who have said: Why not give them a chance to express their opinions? By word of mouth? No, by force, by organized revolution, forcing their opinions down our throats, not excepting even babies' throats deprived of milk.

But I go further. How could they hate the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation? If I understand aright, the organizer of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in Canada is Mr. George Williams of Saskatchewan, and I say before this house, without fear of contradiction, that Mr. George Williams is a paid agent of Moscow. I think I heard a murmur of dissent. I am going to give my authority. I read in La Revue des Deux Mondes, which is the most important magazine published on the European continent, an article under the signature of Michel D'Herbigny, who has been making, on the Pope's demand, an investigation of communist activities throughout the world. The article appears in the volume dated February 1, 1933, the 103rd year of the magazine, at page 600. I will read it in French, and then translate it as best I can afterwards:

En dehors des grandes capitales ils travaillent aussi dans les immenses plaines de l'Ouest canadien, principalement dans la Saskatchewan. L'organisateur du parti y fut Georges Williams, ancien président de l'Union des fermiers. Invité à un voyage en U.R.S.S., il en revint plein d'admiration pour le plan quinquennal. Dans le journal des petits fermiers. The Western Producer, tout en menant, surtout depuis le début de 1932, une campagne active pour prôner la révolution, Georges Williams évite et recommande d'éviter dans le langage tout ce qui amènerait une application du paragraphe 98 du Code criminel...

He praises municipal and state ownership, etc., and the suppression of "religious obstacles."

I will now translate it for the benefit of some of my colleagues:

Outside of the great capitals the communists work also in the immense prairies of the Canadian west, principally in Saskatchewan. The organizer of the party was Mr. George Williams, ex-president of the Farmers' Union. Invited on a little trip through the U.S.S.R., he came back thrilled with admiration for the quinquennial plan, and in the newspaper of the small farmers, the Western Producer, he has been advocating, especially since 1932, an active campaign to prepare for revolution. Mr. George Williams avoids and recommends the avoidance of the use of any language which may bring an application of section 98 of the criminal code.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. LAVERGNE: Certainly.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Has he any authority whatever for saying that Mr. George Williams is the organizer of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in Saskatchewan?

Mr. TURNBULL: You tell us what he is.

[Mr. LaVergne.]

Mr. LAVERGNE: It is a fair question, and I will give a fair answer. Personally I have no authority, but I have stated it twice to my hon. friend, about a week ago and again to-day, and he has not denied it before now.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Then I want to deny it now. He is on the executive. Further than that, may I say that I have again and again heard Mr. Williams denounce the communist party and say that we do not want Russia set up here.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I must accept my hon. friend's denial, but I am only sorry for himself and his party that he did not deny it a week ago.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not know whether the Deputy Speaker was in the chair at the time, but—

Mr. GUTHRIE: What about order, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member who has the floor resumes his seat and allows an interruption, I do not think the Speaker can prevent it.

Mr. LAVERGNE: I have no objection at all, Mr. Speaker. I want to be fair. I do not disguise my colours. I do not hide behind theories which have worked the world over in the same way—in Spain, in Mexico, in Russia, and in France. In France we had Danton, and before Danton, Mirabeau and Lafayette, and Les Girondins before Robespierre. In Russia there was Kerensky; in Spain, Maura. Always, the world over, there was somebody who half opened the door, and then the revolution rushed in.

In this country, and here perhaps I may be contradicting the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), I am sorry to say that there are some Anglo-Saxon names in the list of communists. The Minister of Justice had the pride, the honesty—how shall I call it?—the pudeur, not to give names in the house the other day, but as far as the province of Quebec is concerned, and I believe I can speak in the name of my fellow compatriots of the English speaking race also, we are not going to be tricked. A wink is as good as a nod; we know that there is an agitation on foot to destroy our institutions in this country by a revolution, and under those circumstances I say, Mr. Speaker, that we need section 98 of the criminal code more than we ever did.

I challenge hon. members to your extreme left, Mr. Speaker, to say where, when and how section 98 can prevent any honest man from expressing honest opinions. I have had some experience in criminal courts; I have perhaps pleaded for more communists than anybody else, and I know they have always had a fair trial, even those who were deported, because no man can be deported from this country without the benefit of habeas corpus if he wants it, and being brought before a judge. My experience as a lawyer is that they always want to avoid a judge. Examples have been quoted in this house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre of men who have been here for twenty years and without becoming naturalized, and were suddenly surprised to find themselves deported. I just wonder what they did during the twenty years in Canada when they did not have time to be naturalized. And I am very much surprised at the hatred they displayed of the idea of going back to their home country. If Russia is that perfect earthly paradise that it is represented to be, they should be delighted to go back—a free trip. But not at all. But it is said: "Oh, they cannot plead." Even in Halifax they or anybody can ask for habeas corpus. They can even be taken back and brought before a judge in Calgary or Winnipeg, but it is very curious how they always avoid that procedure. Not more than three months ago I was consulted by a young lawyer in Quebec who said: "It is extraordinary, but some of these men being deported have a huge amount of money; would you act as counsel?" I said: "I do not see why I should not; a man is entitled to a trial, to habeas corpus." "Oh," they say, "they do not want that; they are willing to pay anything as long as they do not go before a judge." "Well," I said, "I am afraid they are going to go back home." He said: "They are afraid of that also."

I repeat—I may be wrong—that Mr. George Williams of Saskatchewan is closely connected with the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation—

Some hon. MEMBERS: You are right.

Mr. LAVERGNE: If he is not the organizer he is one of the leaders. I say in this house without fear of contradiction that he is a bolshevist, a Moscow paid agent.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, it is quite easy to say "without fear of contradiction" when I am not permitted to contradict. Were I permitted I would say that I believe that is absolutely erroneous, and I know Mr. Williams quite well.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Well, I will say two things. My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre knows or he does not know. If he does not know, he should not speak about it; if he knows, his denial comes two weeks after I stated that in the house. I repeat—and it is public knowledge; the hon. member for Melville (Mr. Motherwell) knows it—that Mr. George Williams has been the organizer of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation party in this country. After all, Mr. Speaker, a wink is as good as a nod, sometimes it is better. And the hon. gentlemen are given forty winks. Either they are asleep at the switch or their eye is very much open.

Have we heard one earthly reason in law or common sense or otherwise for this section 98 disappearing from our criminal code? Who has suffered from it? Who is the Canadian born citizen or the not freshly imported citizen or the law abiding citizen or the one who is respectful of British institutions—I will go further, of Christian institutions—in this country, who has been worried or bothered by section 98 of the criminal code? My hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre said that according to this article a man can be arrested on suspicion, sentenced on suspicion. Never a man has been sentenced by British justice on suspicion. To my knowledge men always have been arrested on suspicion, but they were presumed to be innocent until they were proven guilty. And I know of no other way of arresting the guilty party than arresting him on suspicion. He cannot be arrested on certitude, he necessarily must be arrested on suspicion. All the items of section 98 are contained in the criminal code; search warrant, suspicion, being found in possession—of literature. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said a man might be arrested for being in possession of a Bible. Well, I know a good many of my own faith in this house, and a few of old Scotch Covenanter descent, who must have a Bible in their house, and for one hundred and seventy years, since this country has been British, I know of no one who has been arrested for having a Bible in his possession. But this is the kind of stuff which is given to the people of this country to work slowly in their minds and make them believe that there is something rotten in the state of Denmark. I am willing to admit, as anybody will, that capitalists in this country as well as in the rest of the world have not played the game. Everybody knows that. I think it is only to-day that we are beginning to realize what the Master of men meant two thousand years ago when he said: Woe unto the rich; not because it is a sin to possess wealth, but because it entails such great responsibilities. But should we preach hatred of the rich by the poor, or go back to the teaching of my childhood,

"blessed are the poor," recognizing that our reward is not in this world? Whether we like it or not, men are not born equal, shall not live equal, shall not die equal. We differ in possessions, talent, wealth, health, beauty, life. But by telling a man that because he has not got what his neighbour has, he must ask for his reward in this world, do you think, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. friends at your extreme left have settled the question? We have seen how that works in Russia. How has the question been settled there? Those who were rich yesterday are poor to-day, in absolute abject misery. The saviours of the people, the long sought fourth Messiah, the lady from Southeast Grey, saviours who brought the revolution so highly regarded by the hon. member have not brought an ounce of happiness to the people of Russia more than they had before.

As far as I am concerned I repeat that I am in favour of freedom of speech, and if I thought it necessary in order to permit freedom of speech that this section should be abolished I would favour its repeal. But it does not touch freedom of speech, it does not hurt for one moment the hon. members to your extreme left who have been tolerated in going around this country for the last four or five or ten years spreading exploded ideas like that expressed from Southeast Grey and Galveston, Texas, that property is theft, a theory which has been laughed at for the past seventy-five years in France. No better evidence of our freedom of speech can be found than in the speeches made by those hon. members. This section is necessary not to prevent people from speaking, but to save our institutions, to keep this country what we want it to remain. As far as I am concerned I believe I have expressed the desire of my French speaking compatriots, and I think of my English speaking compatriots also, that we may have a country loyal to its king, loyal to its traditions and loyal to its God.

Mr. ERRICK F. WILLIS (Souris): Mr. Speaker, for a few moments I desire to express my opposition to the repeal of section 98 of the criminal code. Briefly stated I believe that in this country communism can be controlled by no other section of the code, and I oppose the repeal of this section because in Canada at this time we have a condition of affairs which has not arisen previously and which we hope will not arise again.

In passing I desire for a moment to refer to some remarks made by certain hon. members of this house who have supported the repeal of this section. First I should like to refer to the hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Factor), who informed the house that he was getting tired of the accusations made against himself and others, that because they desired the repeal of section 98 they were communists. May I tell the hon. member that I also am tired of being called a czarist because I desire that section 98 remain in the criminal code. I am tired also of being called a stand-patter when I realize that I am much more of a radical than many of those who are speaking of it. We are tired of these things, but in this house gradually one gets used to them. I should dislike to think that, being young, I was not a radical.

The hon. member for Toronto West Centre referred to a situation which arose in the Jarvis collegiate institute in his city; he said certain students were unable to hold a meeting due, as he implied, to the fact that they wished to discuss social reform and could not do so because of section 98. May I say to the hon. member that this places on him a great responsibility. He is a member for Toronto; the school teachers and police of that city are being ridiculed throughout the country because of that situation, and therefore the hon. member must accept some responsibility in regard to those schoolmasters and police.

The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) fears that because of section 98 there may be a panic of fear spreading over the country due to the fact that something may be carried on underground instead of being allowed to explode in the open. May I say to the hon. member for New Westminster that some six months ago I was interviewed by a group of Mennonites in my constituency who feared a revolution in this country due to communism. They asked me to assure them that they would not lose their farms, that the buildings would not be burned and that they would not be subjected to those things they had experienced in Russia. I bring this fact to the attention of the house because there is a panic of fear in certain sections of the country in regard to communism and lest section 98 should be repealed. I think the hon. member for New Westminster made a very good point when he said that certain of these communists were led by Scotchmen. As an Irishman I desire to impress on him the great necessity of having Irish policemen to control the Scotchmen and of having section 98 to control the communists.

The hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) expressed the opinion that possibly this section was retained for political purposes.

I was rather surprised to hear the hon. member make such a statement, because usually he is quite canny in what he has to say. By implying that section 98 was retained for political purposes he naturally suggests that the communists are going to vote for his party. That is a frank admission which, had he thought it over, obviously he would not have made. The hon. member said the section is not British and is not Canadian, but let me assure him that actions not Canadian and not British will not be punished by section 98. The hon. member also said that the time to act was after the offence had been committed. Would that apply in case of a riot in this country? After that all we would need would be the undertaker. My hon. friend also said the communists were poorly fed, that they had nothing and therefore we had nothing to fear from them. Yet the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) stated that to his knowledge they had large amounts of money and a great deal of property throughout the country.

I thought the hon. member for North Winnipeg made a very mild and well considered address. First he admitted the great condition of unrest in this country. Then he stated that he was opposed to force. The only mistake he made was that he did not draw the correct conclusion. Granting that conditions are as he said, and presuming that the hon. member is opposed to force, naturally he would desire the retention of section 98, because that section only opposes the condition which may be brought about due to force and communism.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), who made the original address in regard to this measure, first quoted the United Church, which recently has taken a great political bent. Then he quoted Professor Scott of McGill, whose speeches have been read throughout the country with some alarm. Then the hon. gentleman quoted my good friend, Magistrate R. B. Graham, but I noticed that although Mr. Graham said that revolution had been necessary at other times, he did not come within a century of the present. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre seems to fear that in connection with section 98 the courts of this country may be prejudiced and that, being prejudiced, they may do those things which they ought not to do. If we are to assume that our courts will become prejudiced none of our laws are safe, let alone section 98. Again, the hon. gentleman took objection to the fact that where there were reasonable grounds for suspecting so-and-so, certain action might be taken, but many sections of the criminal code are based upon reasonable grounds for suspicion, and the courts of this country are based upon reason. Objection was taken also to the fact that the penalty stated in this section is not more than twenty years. Let me tell my hon. friend that if I were defending a man I should be very happy if the section stated not more than twenty years, but I would be in difficulty if the section said not less than three months. Where a section says not more than so many years it is left to the discretion of the court and the court, having that discretion, will decide that which is right. You can trust the courts of this country to interpret the law. If I were to give advice to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre it would be that he look over the criminal code and see how many sections provide for penalties of $100 or $200 or not less than three months. This does not give the poor man, the magistrate or the judge, a chance.

I am opposed to the repeal of section 98 because of the conditions existing at the present time. Recently I read the report in regard to the riots which took place at Kingston penitentiary. The reading of that report is sufficient for me to say that at this time section 98 is the most necessary section of the criminal code. Let me ask the house this question: What is the use of deporting communists if you are going to repeal section 98, which is intended to control them? Must we control communists only by means of deportation or must we retain section 98 which is for that special purpose?

The fears of hon. members who desire the repeal of the section are unfounded, because they all admit that they are opposed to force, and the only reason we have section 98 is that it also opposes any force that might be used by communists in this country. Those who wish to abide by the law, those who are of good behaviour need not worry about section 98; there are many sections of the criminal code much more rigorous in their application than that section.

I might say to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre that so far as subsection 3 of section 98 is concerned I think it is rather wide in its application and the section would be much better were it not included. But the present bill asks for the total repeal of section 98, which is impossible. For these reasons and particularly at this time I think it is impossible for us to consider the repeal of the section and therefore I shall support the amendment for the six months' hoist.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): When this bill was introduced it was not my intention to speak on it or in support of it. I felt that it was a matter which possibly some gentlemen of legal training could speak to much more effectively than I could. However, the debate has taken such a turn that I think it is most necessary that something should be said in connection with it. There was a further reason why I did not wish to discuss the bill; I felt that this government, notwithstanding that it professes to be opposed to force, is so wedded to force that nothing I might say would have any influence upon it in repealing this section. Furthermore, this government may not be the government forever; it is not very likely that it will be. If this is good law for this government it may be good law for us some day. They are going and we are coming, and in the not distant future we may have occasion to use it.

After hearing the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol) and the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) and this afternoon the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) I thought it was essential that I should say something. It seems that no matter what question we raise on this side of the house we are immediately met by these three gentlemen with shouts of Moscow, Russia, communist, third internationale and one or two other expressions which they have learned somewhere. I wonder whether these gentlemen have ever considered the background of the Russian revolution. I wonder whether they have ever heard of any government in Russia except the present one, or if they have ever realized what that previous government was. Let them remember that it is only within the last sixteen years or so that there has been a communist government in Russia, and whatever government there is in Russia to-day, be it good, bad or indifferent, it has arisen out of conditions brought about by the government that preceded it. It could not be anything else than what we find it. This is something my hon. friends have never realized and possibly do not wish to know.

Let me give one item to show what the people had to put up with in Russia before the present government came into power—and I believe that the authority for this is quite authentic. I shall state it later. I quote:

> In St. Petersburg strikes broke out among the employees of the factories and the government iron works. The leader of the movement was Father Gapon, a priest, who, with the consent of the government, had been organizing labour unions, in order to win away the working men from the influence of the revolutionary agitators. On January 21, 1905, Father Gapon addressed a letter to the czar informing him that on the following day the strikers would march in a body on the Winter palace in order to submit their grievances to him in person. On the following day crowds of men, women and children, led in part by Father Gapon, marched on the Winter palace.
> At different points in the city and in the palace square they were met by troops who opened fire on the unarmed multitude. The massacre lasted for some hours, and the victims of Red Sunday, as that 22nd of January came to be called, numbered several hundred killed, and at the most conservative estimate, several thousand injured.

This is from a conservative report of what happened that day. I have read reports that are very much stronger and which place the number of those massacred on that occasion at a much higher figure than is given here, but I selected this one because it appears in the New International Encyclopaedia, volume 20, page 255. These are the conditions from which the Russian revolution sprang, and let me say that unless we duplicate the same conditions in this country we need not fear anything approaching what took place in Russia in 1917. Give this government time, however, and they may be able to do anything. Even during this session we have had two bills for the purpose of more completely militarizing the police force of the country, though that object has been camouflaged. As I said before, whenever the hon. gentlemen whom I have mentioned get up here to oppose anything we bring forward they always try to connect this group with the communist party. Speaking on another subject a few days ago, I connected the communists very definitely with the Conservative party, and the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) did it very effectively when he spoke the other evening. On the same platform with him in 1930 the Conservative candidate urged his hearers, if they could not vote for him, to vote for the communist candidate. This has not been denied.

The hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol) comes from the city where The Worker, the communist organ, is published, and from his speeches he seems to be very familiar with communist literature. I wonder whether he ever saw The Worker. I have here the issue of January 28, 1933. There is this headline:

> Brownlee's "socialist" police terror angers workers.
> U.F.A.-C.C.F. government making ruthless application of Bennett's iron heel policy; tireless persecution of all militant workers and poor farmers.
> Glaring example of the "socialism" of Woodsworth and the Cooperative Commonwealth in practice. This is what to expect when he is Prime Minister.

Yet the hon. member for Toronto Northwest shouts, "communist" every time we take up any matter in the house. There is a cartoon upon the front page of this paper showing the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and Mr. Brownlee with their arms around each other, with Mr. Brownlee holding a good sized club. Under this cartoon we find:

Rev. Jimmie Woodsworth gives his blessing to the police bludgeonings of the Brownlee police. (The U.F.A. this week, officially affiliated with the C.C.F.)

It is such things as this that mainly compose The Worker and yet despite this fact the hon. member for Toronto Northwest who is so familiar with communist literature from Karl Marx up to the day before yesterday, has never seen this. I assume that he has not seen it because I hope that if he had, he would be honest enough, to bring the matter to the attention of the house. We go on a little further and on the same page we find:

Dworkin Arrested at C.C.F. Meeting

Calgary, January 16.—Ben Dworkin who just recently was released from Lethbridge jail was arrested yesterday at a mass meeting for the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. He was, as usual, selling working class literature. He is charged with sale of literature on Sunday and using profane language. Obviously this is only an excuse of the "socialist" who laid the charge in order to prevent sale of working class literature at the C.C.F. meetings.

I advise the hon. member for Toronto Northwest to subscribe to The Worker that he may keep informed on communistic activities.

There are two dangers which threaten the peace of this country. The one is the communist party and the other the Conservative party. These two parties always work together. The communists promote class hatred whenever an opportunity offers and the Conservative party—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Establishes it.

Mr. MacINNIS: —preaches class fear and class hatred. They teach the hatred of communism and the hatred of any progressive movement which they think will take away any of the privileges they have held for so long. This hatred breaks out every now and again. It broke out when the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) went down to Toronto and advocated the iron heel for everyone with whom he did not agree. It broke out a few weeks ago in the city of Ottawa when the leader of the Senate acted as chairman for an internationally known lecturer. We find it everywhere. I have attended and spoken at many meetings during the last few years and in nearly every case communists have been present. As soon as I sit down the first question I am asked is: Do you expect that the ruling class will let you take over the affairs of this country even though you have a majority in parliament? My answer is: Whether they do or do not is not germane to the present moment. At the present moment we are working and taking advantage of our constitutional rights and privileges and what the present ruling class may do is not our concern. When we reach that fence we will get over it as best we may.

Section 98 is supposed to be aimed at those who want to use force in the overthrow of constituted authority. But that is only a small part of the section. There are other clauses in the section which make this particular clause seem very innocent indeed. One clause makes every member of the postoffice a detective, and there are many other clauses equally undesirable.

As I said a moment ago, there are two dangers which threaten the peace of this country, the communist party and the Conservative party. Possibly I should not say "the Conservative party" but should say "conservative-minded people." All Conservatives are not conservative-minded. I have a letter which I received a few days ago from a young student in Vancouver. I should like to read it as it gives the expression of opinion of a young man of the society he sees around him. This young man is interested in an educational group known as the A.B.C. Society, a society starting its educational activities from fundamentals. He says:

The A.B.C. Society was formed last fall because we felt that although there were already a number of progressive thinking parties and societies, there was no organization which did not have a definite creed and platform, and which was therefore not inclined to be dogmatic.

The Conservative party has a creed and platform; the Liberal party has a creed and platform, as has the socialist party, and these people did not want to be connected with any of these parties.

An hon. MEMBER: And the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation.

Mr. MacINNIS: The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation also has one. The letter continues:

We felt that if any fundamental changes for the benefit of society are to take place without violence, a larger percentage of the average men and women of this country must be induced to become interested in fundamental actions than is now the case.

And he continues:

The A.B.C. Society is formed primarily for young people who do not feel satisfied with our present system (who is?) but who are not sure of their ground, and want to think the matter out. Going on a basis such as this, we have the whole population to draw from except the Conservatives and the communists, and there is always a faint hope that we may even be able to interest some of them who are thinking the thing out without prejudice. I admit that there is a faint hope that they may get some of them.

The Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) gave his reasons yesterday for being opposed to the rescinding of this section. He is reported on page 2335 of Hansard as follows:

It is because we do not want to give error a fair field, it is because we feel that error should not be given a fair chance, it is because we do not belong to the same school as the former Minister of Justice, that we ask for the maintenance of section 98.

The Solicitor General should have defined what he meant by error. We should not forget that down through history many things have been done which we to-day believe should not have been done. These things happened because certain people defined error in their own particular way. We had the Roman Catholics burning and hanging Protestants because they thought they were in error in their religion; we had the Protestants doing the same thing to the Roman Catholics. Do we believe that because the Roman Catholics thought the Protestants were in error they were justified in the hangings and slayings or, on the other hand, do we think that the Protestants were justified in what they did? Before we talk about error, let us define its meaning. Going back a little in history, we find that Galileo was tortured on the rack because he said that the world moves. Everyone to-day, even the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne) believes the world moves. Bruno was burned at the stake because he said that the earth was not the centre of the universe, but most people to-day believe the earth is not the centre. Possibly the hon. member for Toronto Northwest is an exception.

As regards those who talk about agitators. Let us not forget that Christ was crucified and the charge laid against him was that he was an agitator and stirred up the people. Let us remember further that the common people heard him gladly.

There is so much to be said in favour of repealing this section, so much to be said for freedom at all times, that I would much rather have someone with a more eloquent tongue than mine, deal with the question. But I should like to quote briefly from another authority, one who possibly was considered radical in his time but who would not be considered radical to-day, one for whose thoughts I at least have great regard. I wish to quote from Lord Macaulay, from his essay on Milton where he refers to freedom. He says:

In the same manner, the final and permanent fruits of liberty are wisdom, moderation and mercy. Its immediate effects are often atrocious crimes, conflicting errors, scepticism on points the most clear, dogmatism on points the most mysterious. It is just at this crisis that its enemies love to exhibit it. They pull down the scaffolding from the half-finished edifice; they point to the flying dust, the falling bricks, the comfortless rooms, the frightful irregularity of the whole appearance; and then ask in scorn where the promised splendour and comfort is to be found. If such miserable sophisms were to prevail, there would never be a good house or a good government in the world.

This is just what my hon. friends opposite do to-day in connection with Russia. They never take into consideration the material with which they had to build, or the difficulties they had to overcome. Let us give them as long a time as this country has had from confederation down and possibly they will then have just as much to boast about as we have to-day. Lord Macaulay continues:

Ariosto tells a pretty story of a fairy, who, by some mysterious law of her nature, was condemned to appear at certain seasons in the form of a foul and poisonous snake. Those who injured her during the period of her disguise were forever excluded from participation in the blessings which she bestowed. But to those who, in spite of her loathsome aspect, pitied and protected her, she afterwards revealed herself in the beautiful and celestial form which was natural to her, accompanied their steps, granted all their wishes, filled their houses with wealth, made them happy in love and victorious in war. Such a spirit is Liberty. At times she takes the form of a hateful reptile. She grovels, she hisses, she stings. But woe to those who in disgust shall venture to crush her! And happy are those who, having dared to receive her in her degraded and frightful shape, shall at length be rewarded by her in the time of her beauty and her glory!

There is only one cure for the evils which newly-acquired fredom produces; and that cure is freedom.

Many politicians of our time are in the habit of laying it down as a self-evident proposition, that no people ought to be free till they are fit to use their freedom. The maxim is worthy of the fool in the old story, who resolved not to go into the water until he had learned to swim. If men are to wait for liberty till they become wise and good in slavery, they may indeed wait forever.

The government in its attitude reminds me of a man who owned a garden and who went out and saw a noxious weed growing up in it. In order to get rid of the weed he took a stone and clapped it down on top of the weed. He thought it was done for. What was his surprise a few days after when he found sprouts of the weed growing up all over the stone. This government has outlawed the communist party, but the result has been that it has raised dozens of sprouts where there was one before. It seems to me that with the lessons of history before us we should pay heed to their experience and teaching in order to understand that the only way to meet force is to make conditions such that force cannot exist.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you call it six o'clock.

At six o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Thursday, February 23, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

MILK AND MILK PRODUCTS

REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE TO ASCERTAIN FACTS CONCERNING PRODUCTION AND DISTRIBUTION

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): In the absence of the Prime Minister I beg to move:

That the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization be instructed to ascertain the facts connected with the production, collection, manufacture, distribution and marketing of milk and milk products throughout the Dominion of Canada, with power to examine and inquire into all aspects of the said questions and report their findings to the house.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): I desire to lay on the table a number of orders in council passed pursuant to the relief legislation.

NATIONAL RAILWAYS AND SHIPPING

APPOINTMENT OF SELECT STANDING COMMITTEE TO CONSIDER ACCOUNTS AND ESTIMATES

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved:

That standing order 63 of the House of Commons, relating to the appointment of select standing committees of the house, be amended by adding to the select standing committees of the house for the present session a select standing committee on railways and shipping owned, operated and controlled by the government, to which will be referred the accounts and the estimates of the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Government Merchant Marine for the present session, for consideration and report to the house; provided, however, that nothing in this resolution shall be construed to curtail in any way the full right of discussion in committee of supply, and that the said committee consist of: Messrs. Beaubien, Bell (St. Antoine), Bothwell, Cantley, Chaplin, Duff, Euler, Fiset, Fraser (Cariboo), Geary, Gobeil, Gray, Hanson (York-Sunbury), Heaps, Kennedy (Peace River), McGibbon, MacMillan (Saskatoon), Manion, Hanbury, Power, Rogers, Stewart (Lethbridge).

Mr. DUFF: Should not the Canadian National Steamships be included in the motion as well as the Canadian Government Merchant Marine?

Mr. MANION: The Canadian National Steamships form part of the Canadian National Railways. They come in as part of the railways.

Mr. DUFF: I thought they formed a separate entity.

Mr. MANION: No.

Mr. POULIOT: I should like to ask the minister if the legislation now before the Senate will be referred to this committee, or whether it will be sent to the railway committee.

Mr. MANION: It will be referred to the railway committee.

Motion agreed to.

FISHING BOUNTY

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Acting Minister of Fisheries): I should like to say a word of explanation with respect to the question raised by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff) the other day concerning the bounty paid fishing vessels during the years 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932. Sessional paper 115A which was laid on the table did not give the information for the year 1932, to which my hon. friend objected.

I should like to explain that we have not completed the payments of those bounties for 1932. I am told that these payments will be concluded about March 15, and then I will be pleased to complete the information requested by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. WILLIAM DUFF (Antigonish-Guysborough): It is quite possible that the payments have not been made, but the information is in the department. The applications for bounty are supposed to reach the department by the end of November, I believe, and the department has had two and a half months in which to obtain complete information. It may be quite true that the money has not been paid, but there is no doubt that the department can furnish the information for which I asked.

Mr. DURANLEAU: My information is that these payments are never completed before March 15. During January and February we were still receiving applications from these fishing companies, so we must wait until the claims are all in before we can adjust and pay them, since we have only a certain amount appropriated for the payment of these bounties.

Mr. NEILL: Has the minister considered giving British Columbia and the Pacific coast its share of that fund?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The money will be divided according to the statute.

PRIVATE BILLS

FIRST READINGS—SENATE BILLS

Bill No. 31, for the relief of Margaret Borham Willson.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 32, for the relief of Clarence Eldon Durham.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 33, for the relief of Maurice Pashlink Simon, otherwise known as Maurice Simon Pashlinski.—Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury).

Bill No. 34, for the relief of Marjorie Elizabeth Rae Dixon.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 35, for the relief of Joseph Adrien Desmarteau.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 36, for the relief of Henry Norman Bethune.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

PUBLIC WORKS DEPARTMENT—DISMISSALS

Mr. FOURNIER:

1. How many persons, if any, residing in the city of Hull and employed in the Department of Public Works, in any capacity whatever, were dismissed since August 7, 1930?

2. What are the names of these persons?

3. Have these employees been replaced?

4. If so, who replaced them?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

Workshop Staff

1. Owing to reduction of appropriation the workshop staff at Ottawa was reduced March 31, 1932, by 82. The following are the names of employees from Hull who were retired:—J. Normand, J. Marion, L. Pucard, A. Roy, D. Joanisse, J. Patry, A. Magnon, L. Labelle, W. Meloche, D. Dube, P. Canuel, G. Rochon, J. Lapierre, Z. Baudry. None of these have been replaced.

E. Larocque of the elevator staff was dismissed May 15, 1931, on account of misconduct after repeated warnings. The Civil Service Commission appointed J. St. Amour to replace him.

2 to 4. Answered by No. 1.

Char Service

1. Five, who did not come under the regulations of the department as they had husbands to support them.

2. Mrs. Florida Madore, Mrs. Oliva Paquette, Mrs. Valorie Demers, Mrs. V. Fournier, Mrs. Alexina Dupuis.

3. Yes.

4. The next five appointees to the char service from Hull were: Mrs. Domina Hebert, Mrs. Cordelia Geick, Mrs. Laura Lebrun, Mrs. R. A. Maisonneuve, Mrs. M. Doran.

MONTREAL INCOME TAX DIVISION

Mr. TETREAULT:

1. What is the total number of employees on the staff of the income tax division in Montreal?

2. How many French-Canadians are employed?

3. How many employees are seventy years of age and over?

4. Does the government intend retiring any such employees who are seventy years of age and over in accordance with the established practice in the other departments?

Mr. RYCKMAN:

1. 238.

2. Information is not available from departmental records.

3. 2.

4. Matter is under consideration. There is statutory provision for an officer possessing peculiar fitness and efficiency for his position to be retained beyond the age of seventy.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—TOTAL WAGES

Mr. COOTE:

What was the total amount of wages paid by the Canadian National Railways during each of the years 1920 to 1932, inclusive?

Mr. MANION:

The Canadian National Railways as presently operated date from January 1, 1923. From 1923 to 1932, inclusive, the wages paid to Canadian National Railways employees have been as follows:

1924	149,818,428
1926	156,050,525
1927	163,712,099
1928	173,264,215
1929	177,037,682
1930	159,980,994
1931	139,784,630
1932	106,911,608

The foregoing wages include eastern lines, express, telegraphs and the Central Vermont Railway, but do not include hotels or separately operated properties.

PORTSMOUTH PENITENTIARY—PROSECUTION OF CONVICTS

Mr. MITCHELL:

1. Is the government retaining Colonel Keillor McKay to prosecute the convicts who are alleged to have been involved in the recent Kingston penitentiary riots?
2. If so, when did he commence his duties and who recommended his appointment?
3. What are the terms of his engagement?
4. Will the government provide counsel for the prisoners?

Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. Yes.
2. January 2, 1933—The Minister of Justice.
3. $50 per day and expenses.
4. No.

FISHERIES REGULATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Does the Acting Minister of Fisheries intend to refer to the committee on fisheries the orders in council that have been passed with regard to the regulations which have been put into force and against which some of us protested the other evening?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Acting Minister of Fisheries): The matter is now under consideration by the government.

CANADIAN MERCHANT MARINE

REPORTED SALE BY CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS OF SHIPS TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): May I ask the Minister of Marine whether there is any truth in the rumour that three or four vessels of the Canadian merchant marine have been transferred to Japanese interests and that these boats are on their way now to Japan with a cargo of scrap iron and other materials.

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): That question should be directed to the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion).

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): If I understood the question rightly it was as to whether certain ships were being sold to Japan by the Canadian National Railways. I do not think that any ships have been sold directly to Japan by the Canadian National Railways. Within the last few years the Canadian National Railways have been selling off a number of ships that were lying at the dock going to pieces and it is quite possible that the Japanese government may have bought some of these vessels from the purchasers; but there has been no direct sale to that government of any of these ships.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster) moved the second reading of Bill No. 18, to amend the Railway Act (rates on grain).

He said: I may explain that there is quite a little difference between the bill now before the house and that which I introduced last year. In the bill I introduced last year there were three clauses proposing amendments to the Railway Act, section 320. The first clause was by way of addition to subsection 3, giving power to the Board of Railway Commissioners to consider the question of tolls in the national interest. Section 2 of that bill sought to empower the board to put into existence such tolls as might have the effect of increasing traffic but which might not pay at that time. The third section in last year's bill had as its purpose the putting into effect of the provisions of the Crowsnest Pass agreement with respect to the rates of domestic grain to the province of British Columbia from points east, the same as has been in effect since 1897 and which were later reaffirmed, with some changes, in 1925.

In the bill which I am now introducing, sections 1 and 2 have been deleted and section 3 of last year's bill is now embodied in section 1, the only section in the bill at present before the house. This has been changed somewhat for the reason that when I introduced the bill last year objection was taken by the Minister of Railways and by some other members that if the bill passed the house in that form there was a retroactive clause which might have the effect of causing the railways to make back payments of rates right back to the year 1925. The present bill deletes that feature and asks that in respect of all grain and grain products moving westerly from Fort William and all eastern points into British Columbia particularly, the rates be the same as in the case of all grain and grain products moving from points east of Fort William to Fort William, such rates having been enjoyed by the people of the eastern provinces since as far back as 1897, and which were later reaffirmed with some changes in 1925.

I have delayed somewhat putting the bill before the house. Earlier in this session the Minister of Railways had some statement to make; he had been negotiating with the four provinces regarding a suggested change in the domestic rate, and for that reason I did not proceed with the bill until we had some idea of the proposed change. I wish now to deal for a few moments with that suggested change and to indicate why I have decided at this time to go ahead with the bill which is now before the house, asking this government to extend to British Columbia the same rates as those enjoyed by the eastern provinces.

The only definite information that has come to me is that the suggested change as intimated by the Minister of Railways is to be on feed grain only. No other intimation has been given regarding mill feeds or any other commodity in the grain line with the exception of No. 6 mill feed. That information I am also taking from a statement made by the premier of one of the four provinces, namely, British Columbia. He said that the average rate on domestic grains to the Pacific from the prairies was going to be reduced from 41½ to 31 cents, but there was a proviso that the reduction of 11·5 cents per hundred pounds would apply to Vancouver. Victoria would have the Vancouver rate plus 3 cents, with slight variations in connection with other points. The net rate to Vancouver would be thirty cents from Calgary and Edmonton instead of forty-one and a half cents from Medicine Hat. Before going into the matter I wish to voice one serious objection to this. It will be necessary for the consignees to surrender to the railway company a certificate from the deputy minister of agriculture to the effect that the grain is actually to be used for domestic purposes.

While we are pleased indeed to obtain any reduction in the rate on feed wheat we still think that this reduction is not even half a loaf, it is only a bite. It is to be granted only in connection with feed wheat No. 6. What about wheat No. 5 or No. 4? Both these wheats are recognized and are at times classified as tough wheat and used in the poultry industry. And what about bran, shorts, flour and the other commodities that are used? As is well known to many hon. members, including some lawyers of course, the poultryman or the dairy farmer could not carry on business without bran, shorts and middlings, the mill feeds which are a by-product in the manufacture of flour.

The bill now before the house asks that the Crowsnest pass rates shall apply. The Crowsnest pass rates cover not only wheat and flour but an extensive list of other articles as well. If this bill should pass we in British Columbia would enjoy not only the benefit of a cheap rate on feed wheat, bran and shorts and grains like that, but also on groats, oatmeal, pearl barley, wheat flour and barley sprouts. These commodities are all necessary in the operations of the poultryman, the dairyman and the stock breeder.

I would be very much surprised if the proposal offered by the Minister of Railways satisfied the people of British Columbia. I would be very much surprised if it satisfied the premier of that province. Undoubtedly we are all pleased to get reduction on feed wheat, but I have grave doubts that a reduction of fifty per cent of the export rate on feed wheat alone will please the people of my province, especially those engaged in the poultry, dairying and stock industries. If any reduction was warranted why did they not go the whole way and give us what we are asking for, namely, the same rate on both export and domestic grain? When grain leaves either Edmonton or Calgary for the east it has only one classification but when it goes west it is divided into export and domestic grain. The same train may be carrying wheat for export and wheat for use in British Columbia, but two different rates apply. I was informed the other day that the dairy farmers in Ontario could buy bran and shorts at around $14 per ton while those in British Columbia have to pay $28, just twice as much, and yet Ontario is farther removed from the grain fields than is British Columbia.

As I say, we are pleased at receiving any reduction but the injustice, the hardship and the burden placed upon the people of British Columbia because of the inequality of these rates are so striking and a reduction is so vitally needed that I feel I must press this bill. I know that the cry of sectionalism is sometimes raised, but if there ever was sectionalism it is contained in the acts of parliament concerning the provinces in the east. These provinces have received many more benefits than those granted to the Pacific coast. I sometimes wonder if British Columbia is not thought of by those in the eastern provinces as being peopled only with wild Indians and of course some wild Scotchmen.

Last year when a similar bill was before the house the Minister of Railways stated that the railways in the United States charged more for taking grain to the Pacific coast than did the railways in Canada. I should like to point out to the minister that the railways in the United States have and use only one classification for grain while the Canadian railways use two from the prairies to Vancouver and charge double for grain for domestic use. This is an injustice which should be righted. The minister should remember also that the railways in the states take the products of the farmer east to New York or other points at a cheaper rate than do the railways in Canada. I could mention many instances, but I shall refer to only one, the shipment of eggs. The rate on eggs from Vancouver to Montreal is $2.50 per hundred pounds while the rate from Seattle to New York, a longer distance, is $2.25. The farmer in the state of Washington has a further advantage over the poultryman in British Columbia.

I expect that the minister will oppose this bill upon the ground that the railways are in such a deplorable condition and that we should be satisfied to get any reduction. I have one or two questions I should like the minister to answer when he does speak. The first is: Are we in British Columbia entitled to the same treatment in freight rates mile for mile, provided the grades are similar, as is given to the rest of Canada? That question I also put to the house. If the minister thinks we are not entitled to the same treatment, he can give me his reasons. There is one undisputed fact which has been reiterated time and again in this house; I do not like to take up the time of the house in repeating it but, like some sermons, it has to be repeated again and again before it will permeate the brains of many hon. members. That is, that the grade from Alberta over the Canadian National railways is undisputedly the easiest and the finest in the whole of Canada. Many people believe, because there is a mountain to be traversed, the grade from Vancouver to Edmonton is very steep. It is not; it is the lowest grade in the whole dominion, and by the way, it cost less to build than did many sections in both the prairies and eastern Canada. Let me ask the minister again: Are we not entitled, mile for mile and grades considered, to the same or as good treatment as that received by the rest of Canada? I maintain that we are and I leave that to the minister to answer.

The grade to Vancouver, as I have pointed out, is one of the best and easiest in Canada. In 1925 or 1926 the Board of Railway Commissioners rendered a decision saying that Vancouver should have for export the same rate as the Crowsnest pass rate. Strange to say, that has not been carried out, because the rate from Calgary or Edmonton is twenty cents per 100 pounds for a computed distance of 642 miles. That is the distance that is computed, because from Calgary to Vancouver it is 642 miles and from Edmonton a greater distance. From Edmonton or Calgary going east, the distance is far greater, being over 1,200 miles and the rate is only some twenty-six cents. Thus the distance to Fort William is almost double that to Vancouver, but the cost is not double; it is only one-third more. Under such circumstances can we be blamed for being dissatisfied with getting only ten cents off the domestic rate, and that for feed wheat only, and which is still eleven cents higher than the export, the export rate, I might point out, being three or four cents higher than that on grain products going to eastern points? While naturally we are pleased with a reduction, we do not consider it sufficient.

There is another point I would draw to the attention of the minister, and perhaps he will also answer it. Last year more grain for export was shipped through Vancouver than through practically all the other Canadian ports. The quantity shipped through Vancouver for export was over 104,000,000 bushels, and I would ask the minister: Did the railways haul that at a loss? If they did, what about the grain going east? If they hauled 104,000,000 bushels going west at a loss, what must the loss have been when they were hauling grain east, because in some parts of Canada they are hauling grain twice the distance for a lower rate? I have under my hand some figures regarding haulage that were given to the house the other day. From Georgian bay ports to Halifax, a distance of 1,208 miles, the rate was only fifteen cents, whereas from Calgary to Vancouver, a distance of 642 miles, the rate is twenty cents. There is no comparison at all.

To go back however, if that quantity of 104,000,000 bushels going west was hauled at a loss, what must the loss be in hauling grain east? I doubt very much however whether that grain is hauled at a loss. But even if it were, are the people of British Columbia to be penalized to help make up any losses that may arise in that or any other way? I say that they should not be penalized. But I believe, Mr. Speaker, that grain was not hauled to Vancouver at a loss, and before any hon. member undertakes to say that it was, I can tell him that the railways, when they were on the mat and examined and the chief engineers also in sworn evidence before the railway board, said that they had no men in either the Canadian National or the Canadian Pacific who could tell just how much it cost to haul a ton of freight or a carload of wheat.

Last year the minister said that the government should not set rates. If there were no precedents for rate setting, that might be all right, but many precedents have been established for the setting of rates. For instance, a more favourable rate has been set to Churchill—and some say that was to help build up business—but in 1887 a rate was set and later confirmed by this parliament. If it was good business for parliament in its wisdom or otherwise to set a rate to eastern points, surely it could set a rate to British Columbia as well. I need hardly go into the question of the encouragement which would be given to trade by a reduction in freight rates. We all know what the railways require now is more trade and more traffic, but trade has been going down in British Columbia; poultry farmers and dairy farmers there have been going out of business by the dozen owing to the fact that they could not pay the prices of grain in its relation to the cost of egg production. If the grain and grain products were transported west cheaper than at present, encouragement would be given to both the dairy and poultry industries, and this would also help the railways. Poultry and dairy farmers have at present enough to put up with without being penalized as they now are. Speaking of British Columbia in comparison with Ontario they are able in that province to procure feed for cattle and poultry at about half or a little more than half the cost of that in British Columbia. If we are to be on an export basis and so have a chance to compete, production costs must and should be reduced substantially. If this were effected, encouragement would be given to the trade and industries of British Columbia, not only poultry, dairying and stock, but others as well. Why should we not have flour mills on the Pacific coast? Why should we not manufacture macaroni and other flour products on the western seaboard instead of having them produced in central Canada or at eastern points. We have wonderful ports on the Pacific coast and the Orient is a market just opening up.

Another point I wish to bring to the attention of the house is this. We have heard members from the maritimes speak about injustices done there and members from Quebec and other provinces talk about injustices done to them in respect of freight rates, but I want them to take note of this, because I am anxious for their support: If freight rates in Canada were equalized mile for mile, grade for grade, all being put on the same basis, the rates to points in those provinces would be considerably increased and just about double the rate to Vancouver, with its distance of 642 miles and the best grade in the whole of Canada. When I say the best grade, that is not just a mere statement or expression of my own personal view; it has been so stated since the railway transportation bill came before the Senate. Are we in British Columbia to be forever under the domination of the Canadian Pacific, because it is the one company which is preventing us in that province from receiving equal and just treatment as compared with the eastern provinces? If the matter were left to the Canadian National with its low grade, we would have had it satisfactorily settled long ago. That is why I fear the amalgamation, with the domination of the Canadian Pacific. Heaven help us in British Columbia if we do not get a reduction before the proposed amalgamation takes place!

Mr. MANION: What proposed amalgamation?

Mr. REID: The amalgamation proposed by some hon. senators.

I am not going to go into the extensive history of the Crowsnest pass rate. That has been discussed many times since I first came here as a new member. I shall not weary the house with all the details which have been presented many times. British Columbia, I claim, has justice on its side; it has suffered long. The railways simply set this rate; they say: We will put on as much as the public will stand. But we have stood for this too long in British Columbia and the people are not going to stand for it much longer because they are leaving the farms gradually. This is the time that encouragement and help should be given not only to stay on the land but also to enable them to compete at least on equal terms with the rest of the provinces.

That is all we are asking. We are not asking for any undue preference or for something which the other provinces have not got. We are not asking for a five cents a bushel bonus on wheat or for the grant of $890,000 to the railway companies of this country, as was done in 1931, to enable them to transport, at a cost of $6.98 a ton, coal that actually cost $13 or $14 to transport. Why should all these things be given to other sections of the country and denied to British Columbia when she asks for just and fair treatment in freight rates such as the other provinces have received and enjoy.

In closing, let me say that if amalgamation does take place, we cannot tell what may happen as to freight rates; and so at this particular time, with farming conditions as they are, I ask the house to give its wholehearted support to this bill on behalf of the people of British Columbia so that the people of that province may obtain just the same treatment as the other provinces have received.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to take up much of the time of the house on this question. Unfortunately I did not know that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Reid) had any intention of moving the second reading of this bill to-day, although the motion has been on the order paper for quite a long time. The fact is, however, that I had drawn to the hon. member's attention, not once, but a number of times, that a temporary arrangement had been made at the interprovincial conference which had been accepted as satisfactory for the time being at any rate by the four western provinces, in view of which I had hoped that the hon. gentleman would be at least patient enough to find out what the terms of that compromise agreement were before he decided to push his bill to a vote.

The hon. gentleman proposes by this bill that this House of Commons shall become a rate-making body. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that while the government is certainly not a rate-making body, the House of Commons, much more emphatically I submit, is not a rate-making body. We have had in this country for a great many years a Board of Railway Commissioners whose business it is to investigate and pass judgment on railway rates that are submitted to them in different portions of the country. That body was appointed for that very purpose, in order to take away from the government and parliament of Canada the need for going into such a technical question as rate-making, with which neither the government nor parliament is properly prepared to deal. On that ground alone I submit, without dealing with the merits of the question at all, this bill should not be accepted by the House of Commons.

The compromise agreement to which I have referred was accepted by telegram or letter to me by each of the four western provinces. When the agreement was made during the interprovincial conference there were present two representatives of each of the western provinces, with the exception of British Columbia, which was represented by its Minister of Finance, Mr. Jones. The representatives of these four provinces expressed themselves as entirely satisfied with that compromise agreement, but its formal acceptance was postponed until the proposal should be submitted in writing to the provinces. That proposal was ultimately put in writing and submitted to the provinces, and I repeat that I have now received from each of the four western provinces their acceptance of that agreement as a satisfactory compromise at the present time. I should like to ask you, Mr. Speaker, and the members of this house, whether I am to accept the opinions of the governing body in British Columbia and in the other western provinces, or the word of my hon. friend across the way. The hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) apparently has arrogated to himself the right to speak for the whole province of British Columbia. He is bringing up many very important questions and has apparently taken the position that his ipse dixit must be the last word on the subject and must be accepted by this government and by parliament and the country generally. Personally I refuse to accept it, and I do not think this house or the country is willing to accept his word as against that of the government in power in British Columbia and of the other governments of the three western provinces.

I should like also in this connection to point out to the hon. gentleman that the House of Commons has not been awaiting his arrival to see champions arise on behalf of British Columbia. I have been in this house seventeen years in the course of which at practically every session I have heard members on both sides of the house, notably my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) and other hon. gentlemen from British Columbia on this side of the house and the other, all of them outstandingly able men at least comparable with my hon. friend, and I say that without offence, men who have studied these questions for many years, champion the rights of British Columbia and frequently win recognition from this house and parliament of those rights long before the hon. gentleman ever arrived here.

The hon. gentleman from New Westminster also spoke of No. 4 and No. 5 grades of wheat. It simply illustrates the fact that he should have waited until the terms of the compromise agreement had been settled and tabled in this house before he pressed his bill, because the very grades of wheat which he complains are not in the compromise agreement happen to be in that agreement. One of the representatives of the western provinces, it matters not which, telegraphed to me accepting the agreement as proposed during the interprovincial conference, but pointed out that grades No. 4 and No. 5 of wheat and some higher grades of barley should also be included in the agreement because, he said, the grades already provided for in the agreement were not sufficient to cover the grades of feed grain at the present time. I immediately took the matter up with the railway companies, and within twenty-four hours those grades were included in the agreement as proposed by a minister of one of the four western provinces. I merely mention that to show that the hon. gentleman might well have exercised patience until he knew the terms of the compromise agreement before pressing his bill to a vote in this house, because in view of the principle which his bill challenges, and in view of the further fact that he does not understand the compromise agreement, his bill could not possibly be accepted at the present time.

I might also point out to him that the arrangement which has been made is not an arrangement that forever closes the door to British Columbia or any other western province, or any of the eastern provinces for that matter. It does not preclude any of them from appealing to the Board of Railway Commissioners or to the railways for further concessions in rates. There is nothing in the agreement which will in any way prejudice the rights of British Columbia, or Manitoba, or Saskatchewan or Alberta, or any of the eastern provinces, in going before the Board of Railway Commissioners and, as a last resort, appealing from the board to the government of Canada, with representations as to any other section of the whole rate structure. So I say, without meaning any offence, that the hon. gentleman's impatience is carrying him along a little too rapidly. We have heard the expression, an old man in a hurry, but I am afraid that my hon. friend is a young man in a hurry, and he might well stall his hurry just a little until he knows what has been done by his predecessors in this house and by the government of the day.

My hon. friend has asked me a number of questions in regard to rates. I do not intend to deal with the intricacies of the rate structure at the present time. Had he let me know the questions he was going to ask I should have come prepared with answers. Some of them I shall not attempt to answer here, because I do not choose to deal with the intricate question of rates. There is one rate, however, which he quoted, which I shall mention. He gave the rates on grain from Edmonton and Calgary to the head of the lakes, as compared with the rates from Edmonton and Calgary to Vancouver. I should like to point out to him what should be recognized by all members, and from western Canada particularly, that these two rates are on two entirely different and distinct bases inasmuch as the head of the lakes is an internal port and Vancouver is an ocean port. Once grain gets to the head of the lakes it has still a thousand miles further to travel to Montreal in the summer or to the maritime ports in winter before it is on the same basis as grain arriving at the port of Vancouver. The fact that the exports of wheat from Vancouver during the last two or three years have been rapidly gaining as compared with the exports from Montreal shows that Vancouver and British Columbia are not being too badly treated, or they would not be making these immense gains, upon which I heartily congratulate them.

I do not wish to delay the house, Mr. Speaker. In view of the points I have indicated, I must say on behalf of the government that this bill cannot be accepted at this time, at any rate.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, it is always considered ungracious to look a gift horse in the mouth. I do not wish to be put into that position. If it was the minister who negotiated this agreement, I wish to give him full credit for what he has done. Sometimes however we must ask ourselves whether or not the gift horse is, in fact, a gift horse, or is but a very meagre measure of justice for which we have been waiting too long. If that be the case we might ask the question: Why give us half a measure of justice? Why not give it all to us? It is all very well for the minister to say that the matter can be reopened. I picture to myself any hon. member bringing up this subject next year. On such an occasion what would be the reply? We would hear the statement, "This was settled by agreement last year, and it is quite out of place to bring it up a second time."

Quite properly and accurately the minister has stated that among British Columbia members for many years this has been a subject of agitation. My own association with it goes back to 1923, and on many occasions since that time I have spoken in the house concerning it. Instead of seeking to belittle the efforts of the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) by stating that the hon. member should be sitting in his seat waiting for older members to take action, I suggest that as in a political sense he is youthful, his enthusiasm and vigour are to his credit. We have rather to thank him for bringing the matter to the point where it has to be dealt with by the government. For that reason I believe he is entitled to credit. Another factor which I believe did a great deal towards persuading the railways to make the agreement, was that they realized that great basic truth of all railway rates, that you cannot charge more than the traffic will bear. That is what railways have been doing for years past. The records show that the number of carloads of eggs—and you can put a whale of a lot of eggs in a car—shipped out of British Columbia in 1929 was 389, and in 1931 only 221. That is a reduction of over 40 per cent, a 40 per cent drop. That means that there are 40 per cent less cars for the railway companies to handle, and 40 per cent less opportunity to take our lumber on the return trip. We people in British Columbia have lumber we are anxious to sell. The railways say they cannot take it at a cheap rate because they have no empty cars and no return traffic. Here is a chance to get some return traffic, and an opportunity for us to sell our cheap lumber to prairie points where it is needed, places where the people can afford to buy only cheap lumber.

As I have said, if it is right that we should have a reduction, now is the time to have it. So far as I can see it is a case of now or never. The minister has stated that the premier and government of British Columbia have approved the agreement. He asks who gave the hon. member for New Westminster the right or authority to differ from the government of British Columbia. I will change that question, and ask: Who gave the government of British Columbia authority to agree to it? Let us go back to the country in British Columbia, and learn the views of the people. The government has to go there very soon, anyway. They are teetering on the edge of a landslide right now. When they go back to the people perhaps we will learn who gave them authority to sign away our rights in this matter. We hear talk about bringing the matter up at another session. How can we do that, when the government of British Columbia has stated the agreement is all right, and has placed its imprimatur on it?

Mr. MANION: I tried to make it clear that there will be nothing in the agreement arrived at by the government which will interfere with British Columbia or any other part of the country bringing up any other portion of the appeal, with the exception of the rates on feed grain, at any other time. In fact, may I state that this very morning I took the matter up with the chairman of the Board of Railway Commissioners to make sure that in our decision we would do nothing in any way to prejudice the province of British Columbia.

Mr. NEILL: I am perfectly aware that there is no finality in the matter. Certainly it is open to us to bring the matter up another year. I was directing my remarks however to the mental or moral aspect of the situation. How would it be received? We would hear something like this, "The government agreed to it last year; here the British Columbia members are whining about it again; don't pay any attention." That would be the attitude. I do not say there would be any legal prohibition against us doing so; I am perfectly aware that there would not.

Now I approach the real crux of the situation, and that part of the subject which brought me to my feet. I rather think the bill might not have been pressed had we known what the deal is. We are getting a pig in a poke. We have never seen the pig, and have had but a very faint glimpse of the poke. What is the deal? The minister states that the hon. member for New Westminster is in too great a hurry, and that he should have waited until he learned about the deal. Yes, but why do we not know what the deal is? We want to know.

Mr. MANION: Until the deal is closed the hon. member cannot possibly know. The matter has to be closed before it is an agreement.

Mr. NEILL: The minister told us yesterday or the day before that all the provinces had agreed.

Mr. MANION: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: And that all that had to be done was to take steps to put it into effect. If he had stated what the agreement was, and had given us that information yesterday, so far as I am concerned, I might not be pressing the matter at this time because, at least, we would have known what it is. However we are asked to give up an opportunity to secure the whole loaf, and in return to get something about which we know nothing. The minister said that the hon. member for New Westminster talked about grades four and five, but that those grades had been included. However we do not know that.

Mr. MANION: The bill could have waited until later.

Mr. NEILL: There is such a thing as waiting too long.

Mr. MANION: The session is not yet over.

Mr. NEILL: This is probably the last time the bill will come before the house. If we went back to British Columbia and stated, "We got something, we do not know what, but will be told later; in the meantime we let the chance slip by to bring before the house the bill, which would have finally settled the matter"—I do not believe we would receive many thanks. I have not heard the minister say a word about milled products. Are they contained in the arrangement? They certainly ought to be. He has made reference to grades numbers four, five and six, of wheat and to barley, but he must not ignore the dairy industry which, in the province of British Columbia is very important. Taking the dairy and poultry industry together I would make the rough guess that they use more bran, shorts, middlings and ground barley than they do wheat. I have been in the feed business, and I know that in the poultry business they use more wheat than they do bran and shorts, although they use large quantities of the latter. Taking the two industries together I am safe in saying that the demand for bran, shorts, middlings and ground barley is much greater than it is for whole grains. If we omit milled feeds from the agreement the dairy industry will say we have betrayed them.

If we were informed as to the arrangement, certainly it would influence my mind as to whether I would be content. But we do not know. Then, is the bill unjust? If it is unjust, let us condemn it; let us reject it. But the minister has not said that. He has simply said, "We have not a precedent; we are not a rate making body." We have a precedent, because the bill alludes to the Crowsnest agreement which, even within my knowledge, was amended once, if not twice, in this house. So far as I can read the bill, we are only asking to be put on the same level as other people.

Mr. McGIBBON: That principle was absolutely wrong.

Mr. NEILL: The hon. member says the principle was wrong. Well, if it was wrong, let us have two wrongs and see if it will make a right. At any rate, we want to be on the same level of wrongness or iniquity, if it may be so termed, as our fellow members. Why should we be singled out. If the railways got an unfair deal in the Crowsnest agreement, let them move to change it. Meantime we are entitled to be treated as the other provinces are treated. It may seem ungracious not to accept the very sincere efforts made by the minister, but when you think that you can land wheat in Great Britain for not a little but a good deal less than you can land it in British Columbia for domestic use it does seem that some bill such as this is needed. And remember; the wheat taken to Great Britain is No. 1 wheat, or at least wheat of milling quality, of a value at least one-third greater than that of the cheaper grades used for poultry. We cannot deliver that low grade wheat in British Columbia even at this moment without paying substantially more than it costs to ship wheat to England.

I cannot see why the minister should not allow this bill to go through. As I said before, at least we were entitled to be fully advised as to the nature and extent of this agreement before being asked to withdraw or postpone consideration of this bill. It is not too late yet; I think the house would grant the minister the opportunity of telling us what is contained in this agreement. Does it cover mill feeds or does it not? What grades of barley does it include? Does it include C.W. oats, for instance? These are matters of vital importance. It is no use waiting until we find by bitter experience that the agreement is not what we thought it was; we should know what it is now, and until I do know certainly I will vote for the bill.

The house divided on the motion (Mr. Reid) which was negatived on the following division:

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT

The house resumed, from February 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth for the second reading of Bill No. 24, to amend the criminal code (unlawful associations), and the proposed amendment thereto of Mr. Guthrie.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Before the vote is taken I desire to state very briefly why I propose to vote for the motion and for the repeal of section 98 of the criminal code. In spite of what has been said by some hon. members in this house, I feel it is hardly necessary for me to say that I am in no way connected with Moscow or with the third international, and that I am not an emissary of the Soviet government. I think it is unnecessary because the majority of members in this house and the majority of the people of this country are prepared to extend to others the right of an honest and impartial opinion upon the various matters that come before this parliament, and to believe that other people express their own views as impartially and as honestly as are stated the views expressed by those who might criticize them.

It is true that I have not been twelve years in this house without knowing that there are to be found everywhere, although not in very large numbers, people who find it impossible to believe that those who differ from them on any matter can be actuated by any but foolish or sinister motives, and it is true that I have been accused of many things during those twelve years. For example, I have been accused, if you care to put it that way, of being pro-Liberal in the years I have endeavoured to cooperate with a Liberal administration and it has been asserted that I have Conservative leanings when I attempt to cooperate with the Conservative party in power; I have also been said to be radical when I have ventured to disagree with both of these parties and have suggested that there might be fundamental changes in a constitutional way to the advantage of all. It has been suggested at times that I might even be a clog on the wheel of progress. Notwithstanding all that however no one has so far accused me of being communist or anarchist, nor has it been said that I have advocated violence, bloodshed or unconstitutional methods in the obtaining of any end in this country, or that I have had any sympathy with those who do advocate such methods.

My reasons for opposing section 98 may briefly be summarized under three heads: That it is unsound in principle; that it is ineffective in its application; and that it is unnecessary for its purpose. As to its being unsound in principle, I have heard it suggested by speakers in this house, and particularly by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine), that it has the semblance more of a czarist form of legislation than British. I agree with him. Indeed, I would go further; it savours, in my opinion, more of a soviet than of a British form of legislation. In a word, it is the type of legislation that has been passed from time immemorial by governments who were not imbued to the full with that great British ideal of constitutional freedom and of freedom of speech. As a matter of fact, traces of that are seen throughout history. You will note that history records that in every civilized country at least there have been revolutions of one sort or another during the past centuries, but it remained for Great Britain to accomplish a revolution with the minimum of bloodshed and the minimum of disorder; while those countries that had the most repressive legislation, so far as speech was concerned, were the countries where changes were carried out and put into effect with the maximum of disorder, the maximum of bloodshed and the maximum of human suffering.

There is a principle involved. It is true I cannot boast that I am Canadian born; I am British born and have spent almost the whole of my lifetime in western Canada. And I have in my blood and in my instincts a reverence for British institutions, for constitutional freedom and for that orderly liberty which has been the greatest contribution made by the British people to the progress of this world; and nowhere do I find in British history, of late years at least, any legislation of this character. They have found by long experience that when error is mooted abroad, that when ideas that are foolish and destructive are discussed in the open light of day they are then branded and understood as the foolish and unnecessary proceedings which they are. Because of this, I oppose section 98.

Looking back over the past years I remember the discussions in the house and the votes cast time after time. The motion to repeal section 98 was carried by this house more than once either with a large majority on division or without opposition, but I am told that since that time great changes have occurred, that communism has become a menace and that poisonous doctrines have been spread throughout the land. What does this prove? It proves the absolute inadequacy of section 98 to repress the spread of opinions of any kind. Be it remembered that this development which has been referred to, this spreading of poisonous doctrines has taken place while the provisions of section 98 have been in full effect. It is quite obvious that this section has proved ineffective in preventing the spread of these doctrines. It might be said and it has been said: What would have happened had we not had section 98? That is an assumption and in answering it I will follow the position taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). He has denied the application of a hypothetical argument, he has stated that the mere assumption of what would be if something else had happened is no argument at all. I decline to accept this as an argument and in that respect I place myself beside the Prime Minister.

This section is unnecessary. In every part of the British commonwealth except in our own there are criminal laws which do not include a section such as we find here. In Great Britain and other parts of the empire the ordinary criminal code has proved itself wholly adequate to deal with any real menace to the public peace. I am not prepared to enter into any legal arguments as I know that you can obtain varying and conflicting legal opinions upon every piece of legislation, I intend to apply my own common sense, my own feeling of what is right and what is logical in considering the arguments which have been advanced. I find that the ordinary sections of the criminal code dealing with sedition and the breaking of the peace are such as would effectively meet and effectively punish any attack upon public order or any utterances of a seditious character. Because I believe that the greatest contributions made by the British race to the progress of humanity has been that concept of freedom, of constitutional progress and of orderly reform, I disbelieve in a section which, to my mind, contradicts those great principles.

What is the greatest strength and the greatest beauty of the British constitution? It lies in its elasticity, in the fact that under that constitution the greatest improvements and fundamental changes in our customs, in our political systems and in our economic systems can be carried out legally, peacefully and beneficially. They can be carried out only when everyone is able to advance those doctrines, those suggestions and those ideas which he or she thinks may be beneficial, leaving it to the common sense of the average man and woman to judge of their worth. I have sufficient confidence in the people of Canada to believe that given a clear picture and given a clear statement of the views and ideals of communism as opposed to orderly and constitutional progress, the ideals of communism will be buried so deep that they will never be resurrected. I believe that the people of Canada will follow that orderly and constitutional path to a better, a sounder and happier system than we have at this time.

Mr. F. R. MacMILLAN (Saskatoon): Mr. Speaker, I intend to take up the time of the house only for a moment or two. I have listened very patiently to the arguments brought forward in favour of the bill introduced by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). I was mayor of the city of Saskatoon in 1919 during the great Winnipeg strike. I was surprised at some of the statements made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre in an effort to disabuse the minds of the people of the belief that he is in favour of the use of force. I should like to read an extract from The Canadian Annual Review of 1919, at page 476, as follows:

> —on July 11 J. S. Woodsworth was reported as saying (Globe dispatch) that F. J. Dixon should be at Ottawa "because the federal authorities control the military and the courts, and labour is not going to get what it wants until it in some way gets control of the military and the courts";

That is how the hon. member is quoted by the Canadian Annual Review. I well recall what took place in my own city during that trying time. If hon. members will cast their memories back they will remember that that was the time the soldiers were returning from overseas and being demobilized. The minds of the people were a bit upset just as they are to-day and I believe that hon. members in the far corner of the house are simply capitalizing the people's adversity.

At that time there were no mails or telegraphs, the people were all out on strike largely because of the agitation and propaganda carried on by the O.B.U., and I might state that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre was one of the editorial writers on the Labour News at Winnipeg.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: My connection with The Labour News was in the fifth week of the strike, I had nothing to do with the agitation during the earlier period.

Mr. MacMILLAN: I will refer to that a little later.

Mr. IRVINE: What has all this got to do with the bill?

Mr. MacMILLAN: It has everything to do with the bill. We do not intend to find ourselves in the position where we will have a lot of propaganda artists like you fellows going up and down the country disturbing the people's minds.

Before I was interrupted I was about to recite our experiences in the city of Saskatoon during that strike brought about as a result of this propaganda.

Miss MACPHAIL: What about the 1930 propaganda?

Mr. MacMILLAN: The hon. member can answer that, she knows all about it. I am not in the habit of interrupting in the house and I would ask my hon. friends to possess themselves in patience.

I was about to say that the different organizations in my city took a strike vote. My people had no quarrel with our city; their wage schedules had all been settled. This was purely a sympathetic strike and was known as such. The popular phrase then was "collective bargaining." The various operators in the different city utilities had informed us that they were going out on strike the next morning, so I said to our commissioner that I thought it was our duty to call on those men at the change of shifts and just impress upon them the seriousness of the step they were taking. That we did. Might I say, however, at a council meeting prior to that, a suggestion was made that we should send labour representatives and aldermen as a delegation to Winnipeg to inquire into strike conditions there and report back. The first place we went to was our electrical works and some man among the number present asked whether a suggestion of that kind had been made. Let me say at this point that among the employing class you will find hotheaded people just as you will find them in every other class. We told this gentleman that the suggestion had been made. We told him further that if they would appoint delegates, we would see that a delegation left for Winnipeg in the morning. The next morning these different labour organizations, having appointed their delegates, came to the council, and the delegation left our city for Winnipeg at noon that day. We arrived in that city and for all practical purposes the place was simply upside down, wagons going up and down the streets carrying great cards "By permission of the central strike committee." The authority of the city was in the hands of the so-called One Big Union soviet in which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre took a leading part.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I say that that is absolutely erroneous and I ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. MacMILLAN: It was my hon. friend's agitation throughout western Canada, coupled with that of others, which brought about the condition in Winnipeg to which I have just referred.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That statement is untrue, and I ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: In the first place the language used by the hon. member is not parliamentary, but in any case he must rise on a point of order.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise on a point of order. I say that the statement made is not true and I ask that it be withdrawn.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: That is not a point of order.

Mr. MacMILLAN: If my hon. friend objects to the words I have used, I shall afford myself the opportunity of withdrawing them, but I shall read again from the Canadian Annual Review of 1919:

> The Winnipeg Strike: The O.B.U. Defeated
> This struggle was not an ordinary labour fight for better wages or improved conditions; it was a deliberate effort by an extremist element in the labour ranks to acquire control of labour organizations and capture the government of Winnipeg by means of a general strike, or series of sympathetic strikes, which would compel, by absolute force, the surrender of the city into their hands and set loose elements which, it was hoped, would do the same thing elsewhere and, eventually, overthrow the existing system of national government.

Then I shall read from page 462 of the same review.

Mr. IRVINE: From whom is the hon. gentleman quoting

Mr. MacMILLAN: If my hon. friend would just listen instead of interrupting, I think he could follow me all right; I believe I am speaking fairly loudly.

Mr. IRVINE: I want to know from whom the hon. member is quoting.

Mr. MacMILLAN: At page 462 of the Canadian Annual Review, I find the statement continues:

> The Winnipeg strike was to be preliminary to the general strike proposed by the Calgary convention for June 1st, but afterwards postponed to July 1st; any others which could be arranged would be so much the more helpful. The dominant figure in the metal trades and council at this time was R. B. Russell whom the Winnipeg Free Press described (June 13) as "an open, avowed and blatant revolutionist."

I was speaking of my experience as mayor of the city of Saskatoon and that of the delegation that we took to Winnipeg to look into the whole affair. We were anxious that our men should not go out on strike; that they should stay at work. As I said, they had no quarrel with our city. We went to Winnipeg. One or two of those labour men were, I may say, extremists; they arranged for us a meeting with the central strike committee and we finally reached the labour temple where that committee was holding forth. After going through a swirling mass of men, not knowing what they were talking about, because it was utterly impossible to understand the language spoken, we eventually came to the entrance of this great labour temple where the central strike committee were carrying on their work. We had the greatest difficulty in elbowing our way into the hall, but finally we got to the door of the sanctum sanctorum. There was a big fellow standing outside inquiring who everyone was that came up through the corridor. They opend the door about two inches and a big bruiser inside peeked through and inquired who was there. Eventually, when they were told who we were, they let us in. Here we found the friend of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre—Mr. Pritchard. I forget whether Mr. Ivens was there or not, but I could name the whole box and dice of them. Here they were, with their coats, vests and even collars off, and some of them with their shirts off, with telephones jangling. They were carrying on like crazy men who did not know what it was all about. We could not get very much information there because these men were not in any frame of mind to discuss anything.

We went from there to the citizens' committee which was an organization of ordinary citizens of Winnipeg who had banded together for the purpose of protecting themselves. Let it be remembered that there was no fire protection in that city at that time and I do not think there was any police protection either; the men were all called out on a sympathetic strike. We met at the citizens' committee old gentlemen who had retired from business for fifteen years. There these gentlemen were, with aprons on, serving meals to the fire brigade, police force and every other department composed of volunteers from all over the city. From there we went to the city hospital where we met the superintendent. We were told that the central strike committee had advised him that they were calling out the next morning all the union men connected with the hospital. If they had done that, no electric appliances could have been used in the hospital; there would have been no heat and none of the great services, such as elevator and the like, for an institution of that kind. The superintendent advised us that he had to go down himself to the central strike committee's office, get on his knees and beg of those people not to call out these men on strike, because if they did much suffering and even death would result to those who were sick and unable to take care of themselves.

We went over to the Winnipeg Free Press, with whose statements my hon. friends opposite will agree. There we were met by Mr. Macklin who, I believe, is and has been for many years manager of that great paper. When we arrived at the newspaper office we found it guarded by twelve men walking around outside with guns, picked men in the employ of the Winnipeg Free Press. We finally got our card in and Mr. Macklin had to come all the way down to the door to be sure it was not somebody coming in to blow up the building. However, we eventually got into Mr. Macklin's office, and there he told us that three days before three of his own employees had come down to his office and told him that they were going to take charge of the plant the next day. "Well," he said, "what are you going to do with me?" "Oh well," they said, "we will use you just as long as it takes to build up another man and educate him to the point in the operation of this business that you have reached now, and then you can go." "Well," he said, "aren't you going to consider at all the capital investment in this business? Aren't you going to give us anything at all for that?" "No," they said, "We are not going to do that at all. Out you go."

Now, Mr. Speaker, what I am getting at is this. That was in 1919, when I understand that this section of the criminal code was made law, and if it was required then, it is required twenty times more to-day having regard to the activities of some of my friends—

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Your friends, I should say so.

Mr. MacMILLAN:—in the corner to your left, Mr. Speaker. I am going to quote again from the Canadian Annual Review of 1919, at page 475:

> In the Commons Sir R. Borden on June 20 stated that the men were arrested under the criminal law of the country, upon the charge that they had engaged in a seditious conspiracy, and they were placed under detention upon that charge.
> In Calgary on the same day W. A. Pritchard of Vancouver was arrested on the same charge as the others. In Winnipeg on the twenty-third another O.B.U. leader, J. S. Woodsworth of Vancouver, a one-time Methodist minister who had taken Ivens' place on the Western Labour News, was also arrested and the journal itself suspended.

I think that confirms, Mr. Speaker, the statement I made a little while ago to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre objected. Again quoting the hon. gentleman from Winnipeg North Centre:

> J. S. Woodsworth spoke at Calgary, on October 29, and declared that: "Although the British flag flies over this country, most of it is owned by Wall street financiers."

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: If hon. members want to put a question, they must ask the permission of the speaker who has the floor.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would like to know from what source the hon. gentleman is quoting.

Mr. MacMILLAN: Each time that I have quoted from this Review I have named it. It is the Canadian Annual Review for 1919. I think my hon. friend should recognize it by its colour. I wish to quote again from the same book, the Canadian Annual Review for 1919:

> In Montreal on the same date J. S. Woodsworth denounced the verdict and sentence and described the O.B.U. as merely an industrial organization; stated that "the one compensation for being in gaol was that one acquired the trust of the labouring people."

[Mr. MacMillan.]

I want to disagree with that statement right here. It is a reflection on the labouring people of this country. I have employed hundreds of them during the greater part of my life, and there is not a man in this house who can ever say or who will say that I have ever been unfair to the labouring men. When my hon. friend utters words like that, I say it is a reflection on the good Canadian working people of this country.

In closing, I just wish to state what the delegation which I had the honour of accompanying to Winnipeg from the city of Saskatoon said when they got home and reported to our council and the citizens generally. The labour men put the final clause into the resolution, and these labour men, as I told the house a moment ago, were, some of them, distinctly red, if you want to use the word, when they left Saskatoon, but when they came back, after seeing what they saw and hearing what they heard in the city of Winnipeg, they put into our resolution a clause to this effect: They said that the Winnipeg strike was nothing more and nothing less than an attempt at the overthrow of constituted authority and the establishment of a soviet government.

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT: Mr. Speaker, the first thing we have to do in this matter is to read the criminal code which, before section 98 was passed, contained provisions regarding rioting and sedition. Unfortunately the criminal code has been very badly drafted and a lot of definitions are missing. If the house will allow me I shall quote from the Encyclopaedia Britannica a definition of the word "sedition":

> Sedition, in law, an attempt to disturb the tranquility of the state. In English law it is a very elastic term, including offences ranging from libel to treason. It is rarely used except in its adjectival form, e.g., seditious libel, seditious meeting or seditious conspiracy. Sedition is a common law indictable misdemeanour, and embraces everything whether by word, deed or writing which is calculated to disturb the tranquility of the state, and lead ignorant persons to endeavour to subvert the government and laws of the empire.

That is the spirit of the law, and it is in that sense that it has been interpreted by all the courts of the country. Section 98 was probably inspired by the fear which the Union government had of the present member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). We have heard so much about him from the previous speaker (Mr. MacMillan) that I might be allowed to say a few words about him, Mr. Speaker. I am sure that if the hon. member for Winnipeg North

Centre had been treated more fairly by the Union government during and after the war, he would not despise some laws as he does now and confound abuses of the law with the law itself.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Although the hon. member may be defending me for the moment, I think he has inadvertently suggested that I am guilty of something of which I am not guilty. I am not confounding any abuses with the law itself nor am I disregarding the law at all in my amendment.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think it is not a question of order but a question of privilege, and the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is entitled to make his statement. I do not think the hon. member for Témiscouata is allowed to impute motives to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. POULIOT: I have never imputed motives to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, Mr. Speaker. I have much respect for him, as much respect, in fact, as I have for the Prime Minister himself. Both are respectable citizens and law-abiding people, and both can be put in the same category as good members of parliament. I do not see why anyone should impute motives to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. We may differ from him at times.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): The hon member—

Mr. POULIOT: Oh, is it the loon from Long Lake? Mr. Chairman, the loon from Long Lake has answered.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member must be aware that the expression he is using is not parliamentary. Further, he must bear in mind that the House of Commons is a gentlemen's club.

Mr. POULIOT: I was speaking of birds. As I have been interrupted I shall have to begin the sentence again.

The DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the hon. member should withdraw, because his language was not parliamentary and should not be used in the House of Commons.

Mr. POULIOT: I will withdraw, and say that the hon. member for Long Lake is not any more an angel than a bird, because he has no wings. Now, beginning my sentence for the third time, may I repeat that I was not imputing any motives to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, because I respect him. I was trying to explain to the house the way I understood his views in the matter, and if I have been mistaken I must be pardoned. I have endeavoured to tell the house my personal views concerning the whole matter.

Let us now go back to past history. Hon. members who live in the province of Quebec cannot have forgotten what has been done by Tinoir Desjardins when another gentleman was Minister of Justice under the Union government. I do not place the blame upon the present Minister of Justice, but upon one of his predecessors. Hon. members must recall that the man Tinoir Desjardins was paid by the Department of Justice for a conspiracy against French-Canadians during and after the war, and that that same man was paid by the Department of Justice to blow up the house of Lord Atholstan in Cartierville. That is what the Union government did. Those people because they were afraid of the retaliation passed the legislation. Why? Was it directed against the hon. gentleman who is now member for Winnipeg North Centre? Was it directed towards any one who is now a member of this House of Commons? It was directed towards any one who at that time was frightening them. They were acting through fear; fear was their inspiration. Would that be a good way to deal with communists?

No one should be crushed under the iron heel of ruthlessness. The Prime Minister should wear moccasins; if he wore moccasins instead of an iron heel I would not be afraid of the way he would deal with that legislation. However, I am strongly against the iron heel of ruthlessness. There was enough legislation in the criminal code, before the enactment of the legislation now in question, to see to it that order be maintained in Canada. You, Mr. Speaker, are a lawyer, and you know the criminal code as well as any lawyer knows it. You know the meaning of seditious conspiracy. You know that in accordance with section 133 of Chapter 36—the Criminal Code—seditious conspiracy is "an agreement between two or more persons to carry into execution a seditious intention." Seditious intention has several times been defined by the courts. Every hon. member familiar with the law knows the meaning of the term. It is not necessary for him to be a king's counsel; any justice of the peace knows it. They know the interpretation which has been given by Canadian courts.

What is the punishment for sedition? Section 134 states:

> Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to imprisonment for a term of not more than twenty years who speaks any seditious words or publishes any seditious libel or is a party to any seditious conspiracy.

Then, section 135 states:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who, without lawful justification, publishes any libel tending to degrade, revile or expose to hatred and contempt in the estimation of the people of any foreign state, any prince or person exercising sovereign authority over such a state.

Then, section 136:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to one year's imprisonment who wilfully and knowingly publishes any false news or tale whereby injury or mischief is or is likely to be occasioned to any public interest.

Then, turning to section 131 we find the following:

Every one is guilty of an indictable offence and liable to seven year's imprisonment who—
(a) administers or is present at and consenting to the administration of an oath or engagement purporting to bind the person taking the same—
(i) to engage in any mutinous or seditious purpose;
(ii) to disturb the public peace or commit or endeavour to commit any offence;
(iii) not to inform and give evidence against any associate, confederate or other person;
(iv) not to reveal or discover any unlawful combination or confederacy, or any illegal act done or to be done, or any illegal oath or obligation or engagement which may have been administered or tendered to or taken by any person, or the import of any such oath or obligation or engagement;

And so on. That is sedition. The act states seditious conspiracy can be an agreement between two or more persons. Now let us see about unlawful assemblies and riots. In subsection one of section 87 there is a definition of the term "unlawful assemblies." It is as follows:

An unlawful assembly is an assembly of three or more persons who, with intent to carry out any common purpose, assemble in such a manner or so conduct themselves when assembled as to cause persons in the neighbourhood of such an assembly to fear, on reasonable grounds, that the persons so assembled will disturb the peace tumultuously, or will by such assembly needlessly and without any reasonable occasion provoke other persons to disturb the peace tumultuously.

It is not necessary that an assembly of three or more persons cause any tumult. All that is required is that people in the neighbourhood should have reasonable ground to complain that they fear certain persons will disturb the peace tumultuously. It is not necessary that there be any disturbance; fear of disturbance is all that is contemplated in the subsection. Subsection 2 of section 87 provides:

Persons lawfully assembled may become an unlawful assembly if they conduct themselves with a common purpose in such a manner as would have made their assembling unlawful if they had assembled in that manner for that purpose.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

There was enough protection in the criminal code as it was before section 98 was adopted, to maintain peace and order in the country, and I say section 98 is entirely unnecessary. The House of Commons more than once has voted for its repeal. I have nothing to complain about with regard to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. I do not support him very often, but here is a case where the drastic and useless legislation of 1919 is supported in this house by extracts read from the Canadian Annual Review having to do with speeches delivered at one time by the hon. member. The hon. gentleman moved the bill, as he had a right to do. I was rather surprised that the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan), who imputed motives to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre just as much as I did, was not called to order.

As a Canadian citizen who has nothing to do with the C.C.F., I am against any abuse of authority. I am free; I enjoy my freedom, and I want it to be untouched. Hon. gentlemen opposite may say that this legislation will be used only against the C.C.F. or against the communists, but it is not in the law. Even before this provision was included in the criminal code, the government of the day took advantage of the more ancient provisions of the law to abuse the people of my blood and race in my province by paying with public money a man who was hired to cause trouble, in order to cast a slur upon the whole French Canadian race. That was done by the Union government. I am not making a racial appeal now, but as a French Canadian I resented that action very much, and I know very well that if we had the same officials on duty to-day the same thing could happen again.

I will not discuss the matter further, Mr. Speaker, but before taking my seat let me repeat that we have enough legislation without section 98 to maintain social order in this country. That section is superfluous, and it may give to someone an opportunity to strike the spark which may lead to a huge conflagration in this country. I am against the use of force; I believe in reasoning things out. I am not impressed by loud speaking; any body of men meeting together can be reasoned with as man to man. It is not necessary to use force against anyone in this country, and for these reasons I support the bill.

eral (Mr. Dupré) the other evening render it necessary that at least I should emphatically deny the statements he made at that time. May I say that I agree with the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe) in all that he said as to his reasons for supporting the original motion and for opposing the amendment moved by my hon. friend who is at the moment leading the house (Mr. Guthrie). I will not, therefore, go into the question of why we of the Liberal party are supporting Bill No. 24, to amend the criminal code; the arguments have been made amply clear in the course of the debate. I do wish, however, most emphatically to deny what has been, not merely alleged, but actually stated as a matter of fact by the Solicitor General. I shall read that part of Hansard which contains the remarks to which I refer, so that I may reply to them in due order. I have in my hand Hansard for February 21, and I shall read from the remarks of the Solicitor General as reported at page 2334:

Section 98 was inserted in 1919 and up to 1926 there was no move on the part of my hon. friends, who were then in power, towards the repeal of that provision. Then came the elections of 1925 and both parties were returned with almost equal strength. Then followed the famous letter written by my hon. friends of the Labour party, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and the hon. member for Vancouver asking the then Prime Minister the price to be paid if he wanted the support of the two members.

Mr. Woodsworth: May I say that there is no member in this corner from Vancouver, and further that no letter such as described by the minister was signed by me. I ask that that statement be withdrawn.

Mr. Dupré: Instead of withdrawing, I will read the letter. It is quoted in Hansard of January 29, 1926, and reads:

Dear Mr. King:

As representatives of labour in the House of Commons, may we ask whether it is your intention to introduce at this session legislation with regard to—

(a) Provision for the unemployed;

(b) Old age pensions.

We are venturing to send a similar inquiry to the leader of the opposition.

Yours sincerely,

J. S. Woodsworth,
A. A. Heaps.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre then went on to say—

Mr. Casgrain: What about the letter?

Mr. Dupré: He said:

We sent a similar letter to the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Meighen) and to the leader of the Progressives. Mr. Mackenzie King was good enough to give us the opportunity to present our case in detail, and to-day I received from him the following letter, which I should like to place on Hansard.

Then follows the letter of the present leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). As my time is short, I shall read only a portion of this letter.

An hon. Member: Read it all.

Mr. Dupré: It appears in Hansard and any hon. member can read it. The second and third paragraphs read as follows:

You will observe that the statement made by Mr. Lapointe was in accordance with the intimation which I gave to Mr. Heaps and yourself at the time of our interview, following the receipt of the communication herein referred to.

With respect to amendments to: (a) the Immigration Act; (b) the Naturalization Act; and (c) the criminal code, which were referred to at the time of our interview, I would say that having since taken up the proposed amendments with the ministers concerned, I feel I am in a position to assure you that legislation on these matters will also be introduced in the course of the present session.

Yours sincerely,

W. L. Mackenzie King.

Mr. Casgrain: Nothing wrong with that.

Mr. Dupré: A few weeks after that letter the then Minister of Justice introduced a bill to repeal section 98 because he and his leader wanted to pay the price for the support of the two labour members.

Mr. Fafard: That is the minister's own conclusion.

Mr. Bell (Hamilton): They would have gone out of power if they had not had it.

Mr. Dupré: It was in the name of British justice and British procedure that they asked for the repeal of section 98. My question at the present time is this: Is the Liberal party having recourse to the same tactics in 1932 that it had recourse to in 1926?

An hon. Member: This is 1933.

Mr. Lapointe: You are a year late.

Mr. Dupré: Are they paying a second price? That is my question.

Had that statement been made somewhere on the hustings or by a member of the House of Commons occupying a seat on the back benches I think I should have ignored it altogether, but, when a minister of the crown, from his seat in the house, charges the leader of a former administration with having sold his party to a group of individuals in the house, it calls, when untrue, not only for an emphatic denial, but also for the withdrawal of the statement the moment that denial is given.

May I point out first of all, as will be seen from the text, that the Solicitor General was asked to read the entire letter. He did not do so, but read only a part of it. He gave the following as his reason:

As my time is short, I shall read only a portion of this letter.

I have looked to see how much time the Solicitor General occupied in the course of his remarks. He had forty minutes in which to address the house. I find that what I have read takes up in reading about half the entire time of his speech; so that quite clearly that reason for not having read the letter in its entirety is hardly one which will appeal to any fair-minded member of the house.

The first part of the communication, I submit to anyone who reads it, was left out because it rather served the purpose of the Solicitor General to conclude, after having read the latter part of the communication, with these words:

A few weeks after that letter the then Minister of Justice introduced a bill to repeal section 98 because he and his leader wanted to pay the price for the support of the two Labour members.

Without knowing what was in the first paragraphs, it might be thought by one reading only the latter part of the letter that they justified this kind of comment. I wish to point out first of all that the Labour members presented at the time a communication not only to the leader of the government of the day, but also to the leader of the opposition; it was an identical communication and, as was pointed out by the Solicitor General himself, having regard to the constitution of the house at that moment, neither one of the historic political parties was altogether sure of its position, and the labour leaders were seeking to obtain from each of them a statement of attitude with respect to certain legislation.

Now I think the Solicitor General should have read in its entirety the letter which was sent in reply by myself, and he should also have read the whole of the letter which was sent in reply to these gentlemen by the then leader of the opposition. I propose first of all to read the whole of the letter which was sent by me, so that hon. members may see for themselves what is referred to in the first paragraphs which were omitted by the Solicitor General:

Ottawa, January 28, 1926.

J. S. Woodsworth, Esq., M.P.,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Dear Mr. Woodsworth:

Replying to the letter received from Mr. Heaps and yourself, dated January 7, in which you ask whether it is the intention of the government to introduce at this session legislation with regard to: (a) provision for the unemployed; and (b) old age pensions, I would refer you, respecting provision for the unemployed, to the answer given in the House of Commons to-day by the Hon. Ernest Lapointe on behalf of the government in reply to a question by yourself, and which indicated the government's intention of carrying out with respect to emergency relief the practice adopted in cooperation with provinces and municipalities in the years immediately following the war. In answer to a question from Mr. Neill, Mr. Lapointe further intimated that it was the intention of the government to introduce at this session legislation with respect to old age pensions.

You will observe that the statement made by Mr. Lapointe was in accordance with the intimation—

I stop here to point out that the statement made by Mr. Lapointe had no reference to section 98 of the criminal code. It had reference to matters of old age pensions and unemployment relief. By omitting that part of my letter, the Solicitor General avoided making that particular point clear. I will repeat the words of the letter:

You will observe that the statement made by Mr. Lapointe was in accordance with the intimation which I gave to Mr. Heaps and yourself at the time of our interview, following the receipt of the communication herein referred to.

With respect to amendments to: (a) the Immigration Act; (b) the Naturalization Act; and (c) the Criminal Code, which were referred to at the time of our interview, I would say that having since taken up the proposed amendments with the ministers concerned, I feel I am in a position to assure you that legislation on these matters will also be introduced in the course of the present session.

Yours sincerely,
W. L. Mackenzie King.

You will observe, Mr. Speaker, with respect to these three matters, I pointed out that, before replying, I should wish to confer with my colleagues who were administering the particular departments to which these measures had reference, that I should be able to give an answer only after I had had an opportunity of consulting them. I mention that because it is rather significant in the light of the reply which the Right Hon. Mr. Meighen, who was leader of the opposition at the time, made to these same gentlemen. I would direct your attention to the fact that the same communication was apparently addressed to Mr. Meighen and myself. If the reply to that communication, indicating the respective attitudes of the parties they addressed, is to be regarded as a price that was paid for the political support of any group, that indictment should be directed as strongly against the then leader of the Conservative party as against the leader of the government which was in office. Mr. Meighen replied, on January 9, 1926, as follows:

Ottawa, January 9, 1926.

Dear Mr. Woodsworth:

Answering letter of yourself and Mr. Heaps of the 7th, if you will observe my remarks in the House of Commons in the first session of the last parliament you will find my views clearly expressed on the subject of relief for unemployment. The thing to do for the unemployed is to get them work, and I have been often very disappointed that I have never been able to secure your cooperation in the least degree in an effort to extend the area of employment in this country. Certainly, if after all efforts are made there should occur, owing to special circumstances, such a volume of unemployment at a particular place as could not be taken care of locally, then the federal government should help. We did so in the past and would be prepared in similar circumstances to do so again.

As to old age pensions, I stated my views to you on the date your letter was written. May I add that in a matter of this kind I would consult most carefully and in a spirit of the utmost sympathy with labour representatives and those most interested in labour questions. Senator Robertson, for example, has given this subject more attention than any single man I know of, and I would certainly receive most favourably any suggestion he would make thereon. As stated to you personally, while I feel there are other subjects demanding attention in more pressing form at the present time, I realize that this is one of importance and will always be regarded by me as such.

Yours very truly,

Arthur Meighen.

I submit that these two replies make it quite clear that the position which was being taken by the leaders of the two historic parties in the House of Commons at that time was to all intents and purposes precisely the same. In the first place, in regard to the question of unemployment, Mr. Meighen's reply as to federal aid was virtually the same as the reply which I gave. If anyone reads the statement made by the ex-Minister of Justice (Mr. Lapointe), referred to in my communication, it will be seen to be the same. It was that the first obligation in the matter of unemployment relief was on the municipalities, then on the provinces, but that if a situation arose which was of an emergent character and the provinces were not in a position to grapple with it, then the Dominion government ought to assist in meeting that situation.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): So long as they were not Conservative provinces.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I hope my hon. friend will allow me to make this statement without further interruption. What I am pointing out is that the leaders of the two political parties at that time gave, with respect to unemployment relief, which was a very important matter, almost exactly the same answer.

Now, with regard to the other question, Mr. Meighen said in his reply that he would wish to confer with certain of his colleagues before making a further statement; he would be guided in large measure by the advice which might be given to him by those who had the main responsibility in the matter. My reply was exactly the same—that until I had had an opportunity of conferring with the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Immigration or other ministers concerned in the particular matters referred to in the interview, I could not give an answer; but I would give the answer after I had had that opportunity. Replying to a communication of that character in the manner in which it was replied to was not different from answering a question upon the floor of the house as to the government's intention in the matter of legislation. As a matter of fact, the question was answered in the main upon the floor of the house before a formal answer was sent to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and his colleagues. I think this is perfectly clear from the correspondence itself.

I wish to say emphatically that at no time, while I was leader of the late Liberal government, did I enter into any kind of a bargain or agreement, either expressed or implied, direct or indirect with any group or with any member or members of this House of Commons in connection with support to be given on account of any legislation. I make this statement to-day because we still have in this house the two Labour members who were here at that time, and we have also several members of the then Progressive party. The Labour members are here to-day, and I say in their presence that at no time did they indicate to me that their support would be given if certain legislation was introduced nor did I at any time ask their support of any legislation or promise any legislation as a condition thereof. The only questions which they ever asked me while I was leader of the government and which, I believe, they ever asked any member of the government, were questions similar to those they might have asked upon the floor of the house as to whether or not particular legislation was going to be introduced. I say this in the presence of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre and his colleague from North Winnipeg and, if I am wrong in my statement, I hope they will correct me immediately. As a matter of fact, they made no proposal of any kind offering their support to me in any particular any more than, I believe, they made any such proposal to the then leader of the opposition.

May I say further that my remarks in these particulars apply equally to every member of the Progressive party as it was then or has since been constituted. If any member of the then Progressive party or of the party now in the corner of the chamber will say that at any time he approached me offering his support on condition that certain legislation be introduced or that I approached him for like purpose, I will be prepared to say that the statement I now make is wholly incorrect. I again assert that at no time did I ever consent to discuss such matters with any member either as an individual or as a representative of a group. There was no occasion to consent to discuss such matters because a proposal was never made as to any basis upon which support would be given.

In the parliament of 1921 to 1925, as hon. members who were here at the time will recall, the government of the day had an actual official majority of only one. If the votes and proceedings of the house are consulted it will be found that that parliament was really a parliament of large majorities. I believe the government of that day had the largest majorities of any government that has held office in this country since confederation. That fact is not by virtue of any support that was sought or bought from the Conservative party of the day, nor was it due to any support sought or purchased from the Progressive or Labour parties. It is due to the fact that the government of the day, in bringing forth the legislation it did, sought to adopt what it believed to be a reasonable and moderate course and to avoid extreme. As a consequence it received support for many of its measures from members of all parties in the house. When extreme measures were proposed by members of the Progressive party and opposed by the government of the day, the government received the support of Conservative members. Similarly, when measures which were regarded as reactionary were proposed from the Conservative side, the government of the day in opposing them received the support of members of the Progressive and Labour groups. Our policy was, as the policy of every government ought to be, to endeavour to introduce legislation which would appeal to the House of Commons as reasonable and necessary and which we believed would receive the support of the house. Our support was obtained in that way.

Evidently, the Solicitor General has been told that I was speaking of his remarks, because he has just entered the chamber. I ask him as an honourable gentleman and as a minister of the crown, unless he is prepared to substantiate the statements he made the other evening, to do what I believe he is expected to do in an assembly such as this, retract those particular statements. One of the statements to which I take exception is this:

> Then followed the famous letter written by my hon. friends of the Labour party, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and the hon. member for Vancouver asking the then Prime Minister the price to be paid if he wanted the support of the two members.

And more particularly the further statement:

> A few weeks after that letter the then Minister of Justice introduced a bill to repeal section 98 because he and his leader wanted to pay the price for the support of the two Labour members.

And the further statement:

> Are they paying a second price?

I repeat to my hon. friend the Solicitor General what I said before he came into the house. If he had made that statement, as he probably has, somewhere on the hustings in the back concessions before he came into the House of Commons, I should have taken no notice of it; if he had made it as a private newly elected member of this house, I should probably have allowed it to pass; but, when he speaks as a member of the government and makes a statement of the kind in this house, I tell him that it cannot be permitted to pass notice or to stand. I ask him as an honourable member to accept my word, as I have given it to this House of Commons this afternoon, that at no time did I make any bargain concerning legislation, or concerning political support with any party, group or individual in or outside this house while I was leader of the Liberal administration.

In order that this matter may be cleared up once and for all, I should like to refer to one other matter which possibly has a bearing upon this question, a matter which has been referred to in different public discussions. While the particular matter I have just been discussing refers to the time at which the Liberal government was continued in office in 1925, the incident to which I wish now to refer relates to the time immediately prior to the going out of office of the administration in 1926. It has been said by hon. gentlemen that the government of that day tendered its resignation because it was afraid of a vote of censure which was pending before this house. I remember distinctly—

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The hon. member must not wander too far from the question.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is not wandering.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I have allowed the leader of the opposition to answer the Solicitor General, but I do not think we should drift too far away from section 98.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am making the broad statement that at no time did I ever bargain for the support of any group in this house. I wish to make clear one incident which, while it is not capable of being so construed, I think ought to be known. At that time the house had before it a motion in the nature of a motion of censure. The government was contemplating moving an amendment to the effect that a royal commission, representative of all parties in the house, should be appointed to inquire into all customs matters in question.

Mr. BURY: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I submit that the matter into which the right hon. gentleman is now going is utterly out of order. He was speaking on a matter that arose out of the debate on the repeal of section 98, and that is the only matter in connection with which he has a right to address the house. He is now attempting to wander to a subject which has not the remotest connection with this debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I understand that the right hon. the leader of the opposition intends to make only a brief statement. As far as I am concerned, I think the point of order is well taken; we should not wander away from the bill now before the house. If the statement of the leader of the opposition is only a short one, I shall not stop him.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My statement is simply this: At that time I ascertained that an amendment of the kind would be acceptable to the Progressive party and that they would support it if it were brought into this house. For that reason members of the government of the day had cause to believe that if they desired to retain power, power was theirs by virtue of the fact that the amendment would have been accepted by this house and the original motion of censure would not have carried. My reason for making that point quite clear is this: That was not seeking to gain support of any group in the house for the sake of maintaining power, because, as a matter of fact, the government, though it had the knowledge that an amendment for a royal commission would carry, did not wait for the motion to be further considered or for the amendment to be proposed and passed; its request for a dissolution was made, and its advice in that particular not having been accepted its resignation was tendered prior to further consideration of the motion, for the simple reason that the government felt that with the parties balanced as they were, and an imperial conference scheduled for later in the fall, it was much better that a new house should be returned in the interval in order that whatever government might be in power it would be in a position to carry on the work of parliament in a satisfactory manner and represent Canada with authority at the conference.

May I again say to the Solicitor General that I deny there was any effort to secure the support of any individual or group in any way by the promise of any legislation. There was nothing that at any time could be construed as a price at which support was obtained by the previous Liberal administration in its eight and a half years of office. In view of that statement, I ask him to withdraw the statement he made that the legislation to which he has referred was a price paid for political support.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Do I understand that the leader of the opposition is rising to a point of order or a question of privilege? The Solicitor General has already spoken on this question and may not speak again unless the leader of the opposition raises a point of order or question of privilege.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have no desire to do other than permit the hon. member to put himself right in the eyes of his fellow members, if he so wishes.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: According to the rules of the house he may not speak again.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the house will agree, he may speak again. I am sure we on this side are prepared to allow him to do so.

Mr. DUPRE: I am quite willing to answer if I have the right to do so.

Mr. GUTHRIE: There is another point of order. Any comments that were made by the Solicitor General in regard to statements or actions or letters of my right hon. friend were made in regard to one who was not a member of the house at the time and I think such comments were quite open to the Solicitor General.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As a matter of privilege may I say that the Solicitor General, in the course of a debate that took place in the House of Commons two nights ago, made the statement that my colleague the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) and I as leader of the Liberal Party had sought to obtain the support of certain Labour members at a price, the price being the introduction of legislation repealing section 98 of the criminal code. The Solicitor General went further—

Mr. BURY: I rise to a point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: There is already a point of order being stated by the leader of the opposition.

Mr. BURY: I take the point of order on his raising the point of order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The leader of the opposition is speaking to a question of privilege.

Mr. BURY: I am raising a point of order on the question of privilege.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I should like to have an opportunity of saying something myself.

Mr. BURY: My point of order is on the question of privilege.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The leader of the opposition is speaking to a question of privilege, which is always in order. The hon. member for East Edmonton is rising to a point of order on the question of privilege. I think I must hear the point of order first.

Mr. BURY: My point of order is this, that the right hon. gentleman elected to make his statement to the house in the course of a debate on a motion for the repeal of section 98. He was allowed by your honour and the house to make his full, free statement on that debate and in that form. I am raising the point of order that he cannot now repeat on a question of privilege what he has already stated to the house in his speech in the course of the debate. He is trying to do again on a question of privilege exactly what he has already done in his speech during the debate.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. member. If I have to decide that members who repeat what they have already said are out of order, I shall not have much rest. As long as an hon. member has not spoken for forty minutes, he may use as much of that time as he wishes, but he will be stopped by the forty minute rule.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: My further point is that no hon. member is permitted to impute motives to another hon. member. I think your honour has already so ruled this afternoon. The following statement in the speech of the Solicitor General imputes motives and carries an implication which is not warranted. He said:

> My question at the present time is this: Is the Liberal party having recourse to the same tactics in 1932 that it had recourse to in 1926? Are they paying a second price? That is my question.

I ask the Solicitor General to withdraw that statement.

[Mr. Bury.]

Mr. DUPRE: I am quite willing to answer and I claim the right to answer.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The rule is clear that if an hon. member rises and says that some statement asserted against him by another hon. member is not correct, the other hon. member is bound to accept his word. The Solicitor General must accept the word of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. DUPRE: This is the interpretation that I had given and I still maintain as to the attitude taken by the Liberal party—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: In all fairness, I think the Solicitor General should be allowed to explain what he meant, but I have ruled that he is bound to accept the word of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. DUPRE: What I meant is very plain, and it is on Hansard. I do not think I have anything to withdraw. I have the right to put a question to the leader of the opposition or to any hon. member around him. I asked him to state whether this was the price or not. The leader of the opposition is quite at liberty to give whatever answer he wishes. May I draw his attention to page 2335 of Hansard?

Mr. CHEVRIER: I rise to a point of order. I submit that the hon. gentleman has no more right to ask a question which imputes motives than to impute motives in a direct assertion.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: This seems to be a tempest in a teapot. The hon. member from Ottawa is right: the leader of the opposition has answered the statement made by the Solicitor General by saying that the assertions made by the Solicitor General are not correct, so far as the leader of the opposition is concerned, and one member must accept the word of another. Therefore I think the Solicitor General should gracefully withdraw the imputation he has made.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. DUPRE: I do not think I should withdraw. I believe I have a right to say what I think and I am not obliged to withdraw what I think.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I do not think we should make a big question of this. One hon. member says that what another hon. member states about him is not correct. Such a statement of an hon. member has always been accepted. I think the Solicitor General is bound to accept the statement of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. DUPRE: I should like to know what it is the Chair wants me to withdraw.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The leader of the opposition said, if I am right—and I may be wrong: "The Solicitor General accuses me of offering a price to the labour members for their support, and I say that this is not correct; I ask the Solicitor General to withdraw it." According to parliamentary custom and usage, the Solicitor General must withdraw.

Mr. DUPRE: May I draw attention to what I said?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. DUPRE: This is what I said, at page 2500 of Hansard—

Mr. VALLANCE: The point of order has been settled.

Mr. DUPRE: It seems to me my hon. friends opposite do not want light; they only want me to withdraw.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The Solicitor General has only to say this: I accept the word of the leader of the opposition.

Mr. DUPRE: May I say, this Mr. Speaker?

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. HANBURY: There is a speaker in the chair, and he has given his ruling.

Mr. DUPRE: I do not like my right hon. friend to put words into my mouth that I did not use. This is the question I put, as it appears at page 2335 of Hansard:

> My question at the present time is this: Is the Liberal party having recourse to the same tactics in 1932 that it had recourse to in 1926?
> An hon. Member: This is 1933.
> Mr. Lapointe: You are a year late.
> Mr. Dupré: Are they paying a second price? That is my question.

That applies to the Liberal party.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: That is precisely the statement of which the right hon. leader of the opposition complains. He has said that that statement is not according to fact, and has asked the hon. Solicitor General to take his word. I think according to parliamentary rules the hon. member is bound to accept his word and take back his statement

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What my hon friend has just referred to is only one-third of what he said. If he will look at the earlier part of his speech, he will see that he used these words:

> A few weeks after that letter the then Minister of Justice introduced a bill to repeal section 98 because he and his leader wanted to pay the price for the support of the two labour members.

I say to the Solicitor General that we had no price to pay, that we had never negotiated in any shape or form, directly or indirectly, with respect to the support of the labour members, and I ask my hon. friend in view of that statement to withdraw his statement.

Mr. DUPRE: That was my interpretation, and it seems to me that I have a right to my own interpretation.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Not to prolong the discussion on the point of order, I have given my ruling, and it is this: that the hon. Solicitor General must acept the statement of the right hon. leader of the opposition.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. DUPRE: I suppose I am bound by the ruling of the Chair, but that does not prevent me from keeping my own opinion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Make him withdraw.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I submit, Mr. Speaker, that under the rules and usages of this house an hon. gentleman must retract as a gentleman of this house has to. His withdrawal must be unqualified.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I think the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier) is quite right.

Mr. DUPRE: May I ask you, Mr. Speaker, to repeat the last words you said? With all this noise I did not catch them.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I said that the hon. member for Ottawa was right, that when an hon. member accepts the statement of another he must do so unqualifiedly. It is done every day. The hon. Solicitor General must accept the word of the right hon. leader of the opposition, and I am sure that he can do it very gracefully.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Name him.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: I hope the hon. member will not force me to ask him to withdraw.

Mr. DUPRE: Mr. Speaker, I shall abide by the ruling of the Chair.

Some hon. MEMBERS: And withdraw.

Mr. DUPRE: And, Mr. Speaker, I shall not qualify my statement.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Withdraw.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: The decision of the Chair is this: The hon. member must recognize that he must rise in his seat and say that he accepts the statement of the right hon. leader of the opposition—that and nothing else, and he must do it.

Mr. DUPRE: Hon. gentlemen opposite certainly seem to enjoy it. At all events, Mr. Speaker, under your ruling I shall accept what you have said, and I accept also the statement and declaration made by the right hon. leader of the opposition.

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): I have two reasons, Mr. Speaker, for objecting to section 98 of the criminal code. The first is that it does not do what it purports to do, and the second is that the section might be used to prosecute and persecute the innocent. I was not particularly interested in whether the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupre) was going to withdraw his statement or not, but I was interested in the statement he made a few days ago, that communism was spreading throughout the length and breadth of this land, and that it was necessary to retain this section in order to prevent the dissemination of the pernicious and seditious doctrines of communism. But I wonder, Mr. Speaker, whether keeping this section on the statute books will do what the Solicitor General has suggested. It is my own opinion that nothing will keep extreme radicalism alive so much as the attempt forcibly to suppress it, and that is exactly what is being done by keeping this section on the statute books. I believe that communism thrives on hard times, and every club used and every man put in gaol under this section is simply making martyrs out of communists, which is exactly what they are looking for. Communism has become a religion amongst a certain class of people; like all religions it needs saints and martyrs, and the greater the number of martyrs, the greater becomes the number of adherents to join the ranks. I believe that to make communism illegal will simply result in driving the communists underground, into the catacombs of this country, as it were.

I have been informed by many men in the west and in the big cities that agitators are now going from house to house advocating communism, and that this section has absolutely failed to stop the spread of the doctrine. I have wondered whether we could not follow the custom in England where they allow people the greatest freedom of speech as a sort of safety valve. It allows people to get rid of a lot of excess steam. I visited England in 1931, and I heard people uttering in public many seditious things against the king and the queen. There were a lot of bobbies standing around when they were saying these things, but nobody seemed to pay any attention to the speeches, and anyone who has studied the election results in England a few years ago must come to the conclusion that after all the communists have not made much headway there, and why? Because, as I have already said, they have over there a safety valve which certainly has done much to prevent the spread of communism in that country. On the statute books in England there is no legislation such as that now under consideration identical with that on ours. I am of the opinion that Englishmen would look upon it as a source of weakness, not of strength, to have such laws on their statute books. Carl Axelson told me before he died that the reason he was so anxious to increase the number of communists among the foreign born was that he wished to follow the line of least resistance. They were the class that was the most discriminated against and would therefore listen to what he had to say.

I have heard a great deal said about foreigners in Canada. I should like to say that the spread of communism among them could easily be eradicated if they were met half way, given a helping hand and a square deal. A Czechoslovakian miner some time ago gave me the reasons why he had joined the communist party. His words were, "I joined the communist party because men of my type are the under dogs; the worst, least paid and most dangerous jobs are given to us. We are the goats of all the industrial trouble. That is the reason I have become a communist." I think we might do well to ponder the words of this so-called foreigner, because if we are to eradicate communism in Canada we will have to attack it at its source. I do not think it will be destroyed simply by having section 98 on the statute books.

I believe it was an Irishman who, speaking of the foreigner said, "Don't worry about the foreigner; he's all right. All you need to do is to give him a square deal and a helping hand, and as soon as he gets out of the skinned class into the skinners' class he will sing 'God save the King and heaven bless the maple leaf forever' as vociferously as do the rest of us."

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Hon. PETER HEENAN (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to say that I am in favour of the repeal of section 98 of the criminal code; in fact I never did think there was any necessity for it. I believe there is even less reason for having it now, because recently the government enacted a measure for the peace, order and good government of this country.

I regret, Mr. Speaker, that in the discussion of this measure we have drifted away from the merits of the case. I think we might very well decide whether or not section 98 should remain on the statute book without making personal attacks on the hon. member who introduced the measure. We must remember that bills similar to this passed the House of Commons on five different occasions, and at one time, if my memory serves me aright, a similar bill failed to pass the Senate by only two or three votes. Many statements have been made with respect to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth), all designed to make him appear more radical than other members of the house and attempting to connect him with some radical movement in this country. All I can say is that the hon. gentleman's constituents have answered such charges many times. They have shown the high esteem in which he is held in the city in which he resides, and I have personal knowledge of the great support he receives from many labouring people throughout Canada. Any attacks such as have been made during this debate will not detract in the least from the regard held by many people throughout Canada for the hon. member.

I feel sure, Mr. Speaker, that the citizens of Winnipeg would much rather have the incident of 1919 considered closed. I do not believe they are desirous of having that deplorable strike, which we all regret, discussed at every opportunity, especially when it leads to so many hon. members expressing views which are entirely erroneous, with many of them founded on rumour rather than on fact. To-day the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan) read some quotations from a red covered book, and apparently he was quite satisfied that the statements he made were correct. If hon. members of this house wish to obtain accurate information they can do so from the files of the government. I know there are a number of files in existence in the different departments; for instance, there is a very large file in the Department of Labour.

Reference has been made to the part played by the One Big Union in the Winnipeg strike. I think I know something about that strike; I happened to be running into Winnipeg at the time, and I used all my persuasive powers to keep the men whom I represented from going on strike. I was in close contact with the situation, and I know that the One Big Union was not in existence at the time the Winnipeg strike occurred. I know the strike was the result of a dispute between the metal workers of Winnipeg and their employers. The dispute started in the first instance just as every other strike starts; the metal workers were denied the right of collective bargaining. Then, after the strike started, it spread until, as has been said, it became practically uncontrollable. The strike committee have been blamed for many things with which they had nothing to do. Servants in the hotels; domestic servants; the T. Eaton staff, and even policemen and firemen went on strike. This was no fault of the strike committee, which was merely endeavouring to maintain the principle of collective bargaining, which principle had been advocated by the government of Canada in an order in council passed on May 1, 1919.

I think we should try to see the good points of hon. members of the house instead of trying to find out bad things about them. If hon. members look up the files they will find a telegram which was sent on June 21 by Mr. Andrews, who was representing the government in Winnipeg. That telegram was addressed to Mr. Meighen, then Minister of the Interior, and it stated that the strike committee did all they could to prevent the parade which led to the riot in which one man lost his life. The strike committee could not have been so very bad if the representative of the government could write such a eulogy as that. Hon. members will also find that the strike committee suggested terms of settlement which were regarded by the employers as very reasonable. These would have been accepted had it not been for a committee of citizens and representatives of the Dominion government who interfered because they did not want to see the strike settled; they wanted to see it broken. Everyone realizes why that was in their minds at the time.

Hon. members will find also that the government of the day managed to get along very well without section 98. A number of men were arrested, and when the then Minister of the Interior was acquainted with that fact he wired Winnipeg questioning the legality of their arrest. That was the cause of the famous telegram of which everyone has heard, which read:

> Notwithstanding any doubt I have as to the technical legality of the arrest and the detention at Stony Mountain, I feel that rapid deportation is the best course now that the arrests are made, and later we can consider ratification.

So that the government have every power in their hands if they wish to exercise it, without resorting to section 98.

I will not discuss the Winnipeg strike in detail; I do not see what good purpose that would serve. I placed myself on record fully in 1926 and I have since then held a position of responsibility in relation to matters of this sort, so that I know that all strikes, big or little, are subsequently distasteful to those who participated in them, leaving a feeling of resentment among all parties to the dispute. There is another reason why I do not want to enter into details at this time, whether members of the government will give me credit for it or not. It is that at least one hon. gentleman who was very active in the Winnipeg strike is in bad health to-day and I do not wish to add to his trouble or make it more difficult. The 1919 strike was to be deplored, as are all strikes, and I thought we had heard the last of it. I do not think it is right to bring it up at this particular time because there is no reason for it. We can discuss the merits or demerits of section 98 without going back to the Winnipeg strike. I recall that when I had a more responsible position than I occupy to-day we satisfied or partly satisfied the postal workers in Winnipeg, and I believe that we removed the bitterness from that aspect of the trouble. Then we eliminated the necessity for what was known as the slave pact in Winnipeg. The city council permits its employees under certain conditions to become members of a union, and altogether the bitterness that characterized the Winnipeg affair has fast faded away.

Mr. SPENCE: Why not let it die out then?

Mr. HEENAN: My hon. friend is one of those—

Mr. SPENCE: I say that in all sincerity; you are the only one who is talking about the Winnipeg strike.

Mr. HEENAN: It is dead now so far as I am concerned unless I am compelled to refer to the matter again. Let me say however that there is no Conservative in this house or in Canada who ought to raise his voice in connection with the Winnipeg strike without hanging his head in shame.

In my opinion, section 98 is not the real cause of resentment; my personal opinion is that it is the manner in which it was enacted in this house. That is what has caused the suspicion with regard to it. All labour organizations I know of in Canada, whether national or international, Conservative or anything else, have put themselves on record time and again in favour of the repeal of section 98. We could do without it before we enacted it and we can do without it now. So far as I can see there is no necessity for it. I hope we shall not enter into any further discussion of the Winnipeg strike. If we do—I am not issuing this as a threat—I shall take some other occasion to go into the subject from A to Z and clean it up once for all. In the meantime I am in favour of the repeal of section 98, because I think we should remove this last cause for the feeling that exists in that part of the country.

Mr. P. A. SEGUIN (L'Assomption-Montcalm) (Translation): May I, sir, express my views and set forth the reasons which will guide me in casting my vote. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) requests the repeal of section 98 of our Criminal Code, chapter 36 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. This section, in my opinion, aims at suppressing:

> "Any association, organization, society or corporation, whose professed purpose or one of whose purposes is to bring about any governmental, industrial or economic change within Canada by use of force, violence or physical injury to person or property, or by threats of such injury, or which teaches, advocates, advises or defends the use of force, violence, terrorism or physical injury to person or property, or threats of such injury, in order to accomplish such change, or for any other purpose, or which shall by any means prosecute or pursue such purpose or professed purpose, or shall so teach, advocate, advise or defend, shall be an unlawful association."

And the repeal of this section is requested by a member whose past record and principles laid down, on many occasions, lead us to believe that he might be associated with one of those societies which, perhaps, have not always in view peace and order in this country. That is my first apprehension. Moreover, it is undeniable that, at present, throughout the country, seditious doctrines are preached and might, perhaps, find adepts, seeing that the ground is well prepared as a result of the crisis that our governments seem unable to control.

I therefore have no hesitation in stating that, in my humble opinion, it mattered little whether, in 1919, section 98 was placed on our Statutes; or whether in 1926, 1927, 1928, 1929 and 1930 it could have been repealed without the slightest inconvenience, but, circumstances have changed, and I think that if to-day our Criminal Code did not include this provision, it would be necessary to provide for such a section, and a thousand reasons would prompt us to do so.

Mr. LAVERGNE (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): This is why I deem it necessary to vote against the bill of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and support the amendment of the hon. Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie).

Mr. ONESIME GAGNON (Dorchester): I will not detain the house very long. I rise to congratulate the hon. member who has just taken his seat (Mr. Seguin) on opposing the bill proposed by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). According to information I have recently received, his attitude will certainly be approved by the leader of his party in the province of Quebec, the Attorney General of that province, the Hon. Mr. Taschereau.

Last week I had the pleasure of a conversation with one of the most important officials in the department of the Attorney General of Quebec. He said that on this point he disapproved absolutely of the attitude taken in this chamber by the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) in approving of the legislation presented to this house by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. This gentleman said that had it not been for this legislation the Attorney General of Quebec would not have been able last year to arrest, bring to trial, convict and deport a great number of communists in Rouyn in Timiskaming county.

Mr. GIROUARD (Translation): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. GAGNON (Translation): Certainly.

Mr. GIROUARD (Translation): Does not the section which refers to seditious acts cover the case the hon. member mentions?

Mr. GAGNON: The hon. member has spoken in French, but with the permission of the house I shall continue my remarks in English. I say to the hon. member that it has been recognized by leading advocates at the bar in all the provinces of Canada that the article referred to by my hon. friend is not sufficient. It is the opinion of the Attorney General of Quebec that this section is absolutely essential for the preserving of order in his province.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where has he given that opinion?

Mr. GAGNON: It was given just eight days ago to an hon. member of this house in my presence. That was the statement made by Mr. Lanctot, Deputy Attorney General. The hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) is well known to the Hon. Mr. Taschereau, as they both represent the same county. The hon. member is also the official whip of the Liberal party and I challenge him to present a letter in this house from the Attorney General of Quebec showing approval of the stand taken by the hon. member for Quebec East.

This is all I have to say, because I do not think I could add anything to the eloquent words uttered by the hon. member for Montmagny who has so well expressed the views of the whole province of Quebec.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I regret that many of the hon. members who have participated in this debate have not seen fit to discuss the bill in question but have taken the opportunity either to denounce the communists or to direct a personal attack against myself. The hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan) had a good deal to say about the Winnipeg strike, and during the course of his remarks he quoted from the Canadian Annual Review. May I state that the article from which he quoted is a most grotesque misrepresentation of what took place in Winnipeg.

It has been said that this strike was carried on by the One Big Union, but the fact is that that organization did not come into existence until after the strike was over. The strike was called after a vote by the Trades and Labour Council of the city of Winnipeg which is composed almost entirely of the international unions. I could give complete details of the vote, but a partial list was given on May 13 and it showed some 8,667 in favour of and 645 opposed to the strike. The strike was called by what are generally known as the legitimate labour unions. It has been stated on the floor of this house that the O.B.U. is a communist organization, when as a matter of fact the O.B.U. and the communists are bitterly opposed to one another. This fact can be readily obtained from the files of The One Big Union Bulletin and The Worker, the organ of the communist party. Further, may I point out that so far as the citizens of Winnipeg are concerned, a very large number of them have expressed themselves again and again as wishing to let this incident in the life of our city be forgotten. I might point out that three of the men who were convicted because of the strike were elected to the provincial house while still in gaol. The day they left the gaol they took their places in the provincial house. My colleague, the late Mr. F. J. Dixon, member of the provincial house, was mentioned on the floor of this house. He was tried for sedition, was acquitted and then reelected to the provincial house with the largest majority Winnipeg has ever known. Upon our city council, our school boards and our university council are men who were closely connected with the Winnipeg strike. The last elections indicated fairly well the situation as it exists in Winnipeg. Mr. Webb was elected as mayor with 25,120 votes while Mr. Queen, M.L.A., who is one of the men convicted at the time of this strike, received 21,898 votes.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Does not the hon. member mean the recent civic elections?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, the civic elections: Mr. Penner, the communist candidate, received 3,526 votes. We have a system of proportional representation, and a very considerable number of the second choice votes for the communist candidate went to swell the majority of Mr. Webb.

An hon. MEMBER: How do you know that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Because some of our men were present at the counting of certain of the votes. The fact that Mayor Webb received 25,120 votes and Mr. Queen, 21,898 votes would seem to indicate that those who were connected with the Winnipeg strike are not the villains that in this house they are made out to be.

It has become a practice to quote extracts from newspapers which are not favourable to the labour and farmer members, and I want to take exception to this practice. I might very well charge the hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) with advocating polygamy. If he ventured to object I could quote from Hansard of only a few days ago when he said:

—the only solution that I can see is to allow every farmer three wives.

That is from the official record. As the hon. member for East Algoma (Mr. Nicholson) very well said in objecting to isolated quotations, you can quote parts of paragraphs of a book and give them any meaning you like. Again and again I have heard quoted isolated passages from newspaper accounts and, at that, from newspapers known to be hostile to the labour movement. This is not fair argument.

Since the matter has been taken up so definitely, let me for a moment, revert to the question of the Winnipeg strike and my connection with it. While on a lecture tour I arrived at Winnipeg in the third week of the strike. I had nothing whatever to do with the calling or the conduct of the strike, but when the editor of the labour paper was arrested I took charge of it and carried on for about a week, when I was arrested, charged with sedition, and the paper suppressed. The character of the prosecution may be judged from that of the charges brought against me. There were included three articles written by my friend, F. J. Dixon, who was afterwards acquitted when charged with sedition. With regard to my own three articles, one was conciliatory, published at the earnest request of some of the leading business men of Winnipeg whom I could easily have called as witnesses. The second article consisted very largely of quotations from the Right Hon. Arthur Henderson. The third consisted of two passages from the Book of Isaiah, put in at the bottom of an article to fill out the column. The other day the statement was made that no one had ever been arrested for having a Bible in his possession. Well, I do not know whether that may be true, but I, for one, was arrested for having quoted from the King James' version of the English Bible. I shall quote what I published, and any lawyer in the house knows each count stands by itself:

The jurors aforesaid do further present:

4. That J. S. Woodsworth, in or about the month of June, in the year of Our Lord 1919, at the city of Winnipeg, in the province of Manitoba, unlawfully and seditiously published seditious libels in the words and figures following:

Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that write grievousness which they have prescribed; to turn aside the needy from judgment, and to take away the right from the poor of my people, that widows may be their prey, and that they may rob the fatherless!

Isaiah (10: 1-2).

I understand from some of those engaged in the prosecution that the ground was to be taken that this was directed against Ottawa. The second quotation is:

> And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them. They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat: for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands.
> Isaiah II (65: 21-22).

Those passages were credited to Isaiah and published without comment. I understand again from some of those engaged in the prosecution, who were very good friends of mine, they intended to take the ground that the second quotation was a sure indication of bolshevism and, further, that what was quite correct to be read in churches, was too serious to be uttered at the time of an industrial dispute. I am not going to continue on that, but it will afford the house some indication of the methods adopted at the time of the Winnipeg strike. I am not in the slightest degree ashamed of any part that I took at that time.

A great deal has been said about the communists. I should like first of all to correct a slight misquotation which was made by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) of what I said. He stated:

> I was glad to hear my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre describe one organization, namely the Canadian Labour Defence League, as a subsidiary of the communist organization which has already been declared by the courts of Ontario to be an unlawful association under section 98.

As a matter of fact, I did not mention the name "Canadian Labour Defence League." I was trying to point out that under the section it was quite possible to charge subsidiary organizations with being illegal, and this is what I said:

> It is not merely one particular organization that is declared to be unlawful; this subsection covers any subsidiary association or branch or committee thereof. As is well known to hon. members of this house, there are what are really subsidiaries of the communist party.

That was my judgment in the matter.

> One branch devotes itself to the defence of its members who may be arrested, while another is engaged in the industrial fields in organizing the trades unions and so on.

That is what I said.

Mr. GUTHRIE: Did I misunderstand my hon. friend to-night? I thought he said, in speaking of a newspaper, that The Worker is an organ of the communist party. Am I correct in that?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think I did say that, although I would not like to be expected to prove that it is; I take it for granted it is. Perhaps I should qualify that by saying it is considered to be such; I have always thought of it as such. I wanted to make that slight correction of the statement of the minister in order to be clear, because I have no knowledge of the details of the communist organization, but I know that these organizations are popularly supposed to be closely connected. My point was to indicate that subsidiaries of a parent organization may also be declared illegal.

May I say with regard to the communist party, that I am not here to defend that party.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Some hon. members may laugh, but I want to repeat that. I am not here to defend the communist party; I am not here to advocate force. I have been opposed to force for years.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Why the bill?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Never mind the bill. The hon. member, of course, can make his inferences. The Deputy Speaker, who is now interrupting, took the ground to-day, while in the chair, that one hon. gentleman had to accept the statement of another hon. gentleman.

Mr. LAVERGNE: On facts, on his own declaration.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, and the fact is that I am not a member of the communist party; that I never have been. The fact is that I have never advocated force.

Mr. LAVERGNE: Then why the bill?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I shall refer to that, but the fact is that I have never advocated force.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Some hon. members may laugh in derision, but they know they dare not rise and make a contrary statement. I had not thought to go into this question, but as a matter of fact, at the time of the last war I changed my whole career because I could not bring myself to advocate force; I refused in any way to associate myself with force at that time. If any serious hon. member present wants the proof of that, he can find it in the statement of my resignation from the Christian ministry at that time. I have since then consistently maintained that attitude, and although I have been associated with labour organizations some of whose members advocate force, I opposed their position. In turn I have been definitely opposed again and again by the communist party.

Someone said the other day that we need not oppose this legislation, if we were not intending to advocate force, since then the section would not affect us. I have never made it a practice to advocate only the abolition of those things which might hurt me. I think this legislation is unjust, and even although the communists have opposed me and will continue to oppose me, I think it is right to advocate the repeal of the section.

If anyone here wants further proof of the attitude of the communist party towards us I have a long string of quotations here that I could give. Here is one dating as far back as July 1930:

> The Labour party is a third party of capitalism. It has gone completely over to the service of the capitalist class in deceiving the workers, in splitting the force of the workers, in attempting to suppress and break the struggles of the workers. In reality there is no difference between the platform of the labour parties and the other capitalist parties.

And so they go on. I think I heard someone say "at the present time." I will give a quotation dated February 4, 1933:

> Other similar incidents can be recorded such as J. S. Woodsworth's refusal to sign the amnesty list demanding the release of Tim Buck and his seven fellow prisoners. Woodsworth's refusal to sign the amnesty demand exposes the hollowness of his criticism of section 98. Instead of demanding the unconditional and full repeal of section 98, he proposed harmless "amendments" and "deletions" which do not weaken but rather strengthen the key stone of government reaction. Woodsworth's amendment to section 98 proposed specifying in the code the words "physical force and violence" instead of just "force and violence"—so making section 98 more watertight and a more dangerous weapon against the workers.
> These individuals are the bulwark of capitalist reaction. They are the first to disavow any revolutionary intentions and to dissociate themselves from militant workers attacked by police. They are the chief supporters of the R.C.M.P. terror against the working class. They must be guarded against and exposed.

That is the attitude taken by The Worker, which I have always regarded as the official organ of the communist party in Canada.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It sounds to me like a joke.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If you had the bitter opposition of these people in elections year after year, you would not think it was any joke.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Some of the speakers have taken up the question of the riots in Kingston penitentiary. Again I say I have nothing to do with those riots, nor has the bill; for the bill was introduced, or sought to be introduced, last year. I would say in passing, however, that the fact that we have had riots in Kingston and a number of other penitentiaries ought to indicate to us that we should have a thorough investigation into the conduct of all our penitentiaries and into the general question of the way in which we treat our prisoners.

May I go further and emphasize a point which was mentioned by my colleague from East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell), and that is the protest of the labour bodies against this section. As early as 1920 the Trades and Labour Congress protested against these sections. My colleague from East Hamilton read a part of the report which was made to the congress at that time, from which I quote:

> The attention of the Congress should be directed to the words "force," and "terrorism" in the above sections coupled as they are with the words "industrial or economic change."
> The use of these words leaves the door wide open for the prosecution of every trade union in Canada. If "force" is intended to mean "physical force" it should be so stated. The pressure or influence exerted by trade unions is the exercise of "force." That can be interpreted to come within the above section. Read the following extract from Judge Metcalfe's charge to the jury in the Russell case:
> "Mr. Russell gave us his idea of a sympathetic strike. He said, 'When a dispute originates between an employer and his employees, and when the Labour organizations see that organization being beat, they come to their assistance by calling a strike to force their employers to bring force to bear upon the original disputants to make settlement.' That is Russell's definition given in the box. . . . Force, force, force."
> Any dictionary will show that "force" has a very wide meaning, covering "influence," "pressure," and the like. If the statute meant "physical force" it would not go on to enumerate "violence" and "physical injury." It must, therefore, have a different meaning from "violence" and "physical injury." A court would be quite justified in interpreting the word in its natural or dictionary sense.
> As for the word "terrorism," some light can be thrown upon the interpretation of it by that given it in the Winnipeg case of Rex v. Russell. There Judge Metcalfe says:
> "To walk around about, for instance, to a place where people are employed in large numbers, and to 'boo,' gentlemen of the jury, as much terror may be inspired through that as by two or three fighting chaps coming along with bludgeons. Take it from me in strikes you can incite terror without hitting a man over the head. You can incite terror of starvation; you can incite terror of thirst. Is not that quite as effective as inciting by bodily violence? Your stomach will bring you quicker than a crack on the head sometimes. If it is possible that picketing can be done in this country, then the lawful method of picketing is so ineffective that it is a reasonable inference that in strikes of this class unlawful means would be intended to be applied. Sometimes it has a deterring effect upon people's minds by exposing them to have their motions watched, and to encounter black looks."

The last couple of lines show the possibilities of the word "terrorism."

The words "force" and "terrorism" should be struck out of the section.

That gives in brief form the basis of the objection of the trades union movement in this country.

May I call attention to one of the results of legislation of this character, and that is the panicky fear engendered in the minds of a good many of our officials placed in anything like a responsible position, and no doubt passed on to the general public. The hon. member for Toronto West Centre (Mr. Factor) the other night referred to an incident that occurred recently in Toronto in connection with one of the collegiate institutes, and in this connection I think it is worth while to read from a news item in the Toronto Star of February 17, 1933. It is headed:

Police end boys' meeting to discuss world crisis. Jarvis Collegiate Institute students tried to form group for economic study. Principal calls officers. Youths questioned on economic beliefs.

I give a few excerpts from the article:

For the second time in two weeks policemen have been pitted against school children. The latest victims of these tactics are Barney and John Meyers, 326 Queen St. E., pupils of Jarvis Collegiate, whose interest in current economic questions brought five plainclothesmen upon them when they attempted to organize a study group to discuss the subject of "The Student and His Importance in Solving the Economic Crisis."

The two brothers distributed circulars among their fellow students on Tuesday morning, inviting all those interested to attend an open forum the following night. For this purpose they had rented a hall at 177 Berkeley St.

"While I was handing out the cards," stated John Meyers to The Star, "Mr. Jeffries, who is principal of Jarvis Collegiate, came up to me, took one of the cards and said to me: 'You are treading on very dangerous ground.' But I couldn't see that I was doing wrong by getting together a bunch of young people to talk about the economic situation. Neither my brother nor I are communists, we are not affiliated with any party, but we are just interested in current events.

"I told the principal that I didn't think I was doing anything wrong and went on distributing the cards."

Called from Classroom

"He didn't say anything, but shortly after I was called out of class and ordered to the principal's office, where two big men who seemed to be plainclothes policemen started to question me. They asked me if I was a communist, or if I was connected with any political organization and I told them I wasn't." . . .

" . . . After I had talked for a while the men seemed convinced that everything was all right, and that there was nothing wrong with the meeting we wanted to call."

"After I went back to my room I thought the matter was closed and everything was all right for the meeting, because the men had seemed satisfied that we weren't intending to overthrow the government, by violent means."

"Nothing else happened after that until Wednesday night about eight o'clock. As we were arranging the hall at 177 Berkeley St., for the meeting we heard some men talking to the caretaker outside. We heard just enough to know that they were talking about the meeting, so we went outside to speak to them. There were three of them altogether—one of them, who did most of the talking, said he was from the attorney-general's department, and the other two said they were city police plainclothesmen.

"We asked them what they were doing there, so the man from the attorney-general's department said: 'We got a 'phone call to come down here to-night because trouble was expected.' My brother Barney told them we were not trying to make trouble, but that we merely wanted to organize a study group to talk about economic questions. Barney quoted to them part of section 98, which says that no one must advocate the overthrow of the government by force and explained to the policemen that we weren't breaking the law.

"Barney told them that there was no possible chance of trouble, that we were opposed to any form of revolution, and that we did not have communistic ideals. Finally the plainclothesmen decided to let the metting proceed, but by this time the people who own the hall heard that policemen were on the premises and they were so frightened of trouble that they wouldn't let us go on with the meeting. . . .

" . . . It's a pretty sad state of affairs when young people, 15, 16 and 17 are not permitted to come together to discuss something of vital importance to them and their parents, without being suspected of communism."

I believe nothing could better indicate the situation in which we find ourselves because of this kind of legislation.

May I point out again, as I did on the introduction of the bill, that the men in Kingston penitentiary are not convicted of having advocated force; they are not convicted of having used force. They are convicted of belonging to an organization affiliated with certain organizations in Russia, and it is alleged that these organizations in Russia, according to the thesis given, are in favour of the use of force. It is not fair, then, in presenting the case before the House of Commons, to say that these men have been convicted because they advocated force. They were convicted because of certain beliefs they held; that is all. I would not have had a word to say, had they been convicted of using force—not a word. They are convicted under section 98 of the criminal code, which has reference to persons belonging to an organization which advocates the use of force. But I say these men, as individuals, were not convicted either of using force themselves or of advocating the use of it. They were convicted simply of belonging to a party or organization affiliated with another organization in Russia which, according to the evidence, believed in the use of force.

Mr. MORAND: But they were prepared to use force.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I presume one could draw that inference, but certainly nothing of the kind is shown in the evidence; it is not proven, and it was not charged. The objection I have to the section is that essentially it prohibits certain beliefs and, as I said the other day, if those beliefs were held alone by communists I would not feel so strongly in the matter. I think, however, we must confess that all modern states are built upon and maintained by force.

An hon. MEMBER: Not Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Further, all down through history it has been generally admitted that under certain circumstances resort might be had to force. That being so, it seems to me it savours of persecution—

Mr. COTNAM: You are an awful tail twister.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —when one particular group of people holding a belief common to so many people in the country are sent to a penitentiary for holding it.

I believe it is quite the proper thing for anybody in Canada to protest against the extension of communism; that is quite proper. But I want it done through lawful means, through what I would term British means. If any man gets up in Canada and advocates the use of force he may be charged and convicted under certain sections of the criminal code. Certainly, if any man practices force he can be charged and convicted under some sections. What I am objecting to is simply this, that because the members of a certain organization have certain beliefs they can be singled out, charged with a crime and convicted.

Mr. LAVERGNE: No man can be convicted under section 98 for only a belief.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I must differ in that regard. It is because I believe those men in Portsmouth to-day have been convicted in that way that I take this stand.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It is impossible.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am sorry to differ.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It cannot be done.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But it has happened. I am not a lawyer, and perhaps I have misread the evidence. However, I have tried to read it, and after reading it I have formed the conclusion that these men were convicted because of their beliefs, and not because of their actions.

Mr. LAVERGNE: No, it could not be done.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): It was because of what they publicly advocated.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They are not charged with advocating force.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I would ask hon. members who are lawyers to read the evidence. I repeat the men convicted are not charged with advocating force; there is nothing in the charge against them about advocating force.

Mr. LAVERGNE: They are charged with belonging to an association which resorts to force; that is what they are charged with.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: But that is not the same as advocating force.

Mr. MORAND: If they are true disciples of their organization, it is.

Mr. COTNAM: You could fool the devil.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I think hon. members in this chamber who have legal training should surely see my point.

Mr. LAVERGNE: We do.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Surely they can see the distinction I am trying to draw.

Mr. LAVERGNE: It is far worse to use force—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: They have neither used nor advocated force, and yet they are convicted.

Mr. BURY: May I ask a question?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Certainly.

Mr. BURY: If a man believing in force as a means to overthrow lawful institutions and lawful authorities gives overt expression to that belief by joining an association which professes that doctrine, would the hon. member say he was not guilty of more than mere belief?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Let me point out that when there was trouble in Ireland a few years ago—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Answer the question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I point out that when there was trouble in Ireland a few years ago there were a good many members of Irish—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Answer.

Mr. COWAN (Long Lake): Answer the question.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I point out that a few years ago when there was trouble in Ireland, when there were certain organizations which were bound to overturn the government by force, and when there were certain people, even in high places, who were actually advocating the overthrow, and other people drilling troops in order to effect the overthrow, there were sympathetic organizations in this country. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. LAVERGNE: The Irish took their medicine.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In answer to the question I would say that there were people in this country who believed the Irish would have to resort to force in order to retain their rights.

Mr. BURY: The hon. member has not answered my question. It was this: If a man believed in force as a means of overthrowing lawful authority and institutions, and joined a society which held such beliefs as its professed and avowed object, would he not be doing more than merely believing in force? Would he not be committing on overt act by associating himself with these doctrines, and by his membership would he not be doing his best to advocate and propagate those beliefs?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Personally I do not think so, and at the same time I say that so far as I am concerned I am opposed to force. On the very days that we have been considering this section of the criminal code, we have been considering at other times our national defence estimates. Some of the very men who have been urging the retention of this section have been very intent on keeping up our defence forces and even training our boys and girls in the use of arms in order that they may be prepared to defend their country.

An hon. MEMBER: Who is training girls?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes, there is some training of girls going on along the same line even in this city. I think some of us may be permitted to take the other view, that after all trouble arises very largely because of certain maladjustments in our social structure, and that the way to deal with these things is not by repressive measures but rather by getting rid of the causes of the evils. Some of us honestly take that point of view. We take it in connection with international questions; we say that instead of maintaining standing armies we should adopt those methods that will bring about a larger measure of international amity and by removing those causes which everyone knows produce war.

Mr. MORAND: That is not contentious at all.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Very well. Some of us take that point of view in international affairs, and some of us take the same point of view in connection with the communists. There are certain injustices under our society to-day that so long as they continue inevitably will breed contempt of law. We take the ground that instead of trying to suppress these people in this way, by deporting those who are deportable and by putting the others in the penitentiary, we should be removing the causes of the injustice. In that way I think we will do away with the troubles we are experiencing at the present time. A good many hon. members seem to think that if they are only well enough guarded all this trouble will cease. I would point out to them that nearly all revolutions and civil wars of the past have been precipitated by those who have been closely associated with or trained by the military. It is doubtful whether we would have had the successful revolution in Russia, according to those who were there at the time, had it not been that a large number of soldiers were returning from the front, and they played a very prominent part at that time.

Mr. LAVERGNE: That is not very sound history.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Perhaps I might have just a moment more.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go ahead.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I was interrupted for nearly five minutes, so perhaps I might be given two or three minutes more. I was going to say that I have been in close contact with labour men, some of whom are very radical, and I believe there is a real danger if we allow force to be exerted along present lines. Perhaps I might take just one incident from the Winnipeg strike. I knew nothing of the details of the conduct of that strike until after I had acted as editor for a few days, when I was admitted to the committee. One day, I remember, a group of returned men came into the room and urged that the labour people should drop their policy of peace and "start something", as they put it. They said, "We are men of action. We have just got back from the front and we are tired of your policy of peace and inaction." I am very proud of the labour men who were present; they said, "No, that would be fatal to the conduct of our strike." The returned men grumbled and went out of the room. They said, "This is your strike and we will do as you say, but when the next trouble comes we will take the lead."

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I have not brought in this bill with the view of making it any easier for anyone to urge the use of force in this country. I will join with anyone in denouncing the use of force or the advocacy of force, but I do plead for the removal of this legislation, which is objected to by important sections of our community, and which readily lends itself to abuse.

Main motion (Mr. Woodsworth as amended agreed to on division.

COOPERATIVE COMMONWEALTH

The house resumed from Thursday, February 9, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

Whereas under our present economic arrangement large numbers of our people are unemployed and without the means of earning a livelihood for themselves and their dependents;

And whereas the prevalence of the present depression throughout the world indicates fundamental defects in the existing economic system;

Therefore be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this house, the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): When your honour called it eleven o'clock two weeks ago to-night, I was dealing with the structureless resolution moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) which in my opinion is clearly indicative of what we might term wild or unbridled socialism, a resolution that is destructive in design and subversive of those individual and political liberties to which we have been accustomed in Canada. On that occasion I presented three points of view.

One was that I refused to accept the statement made in certain quarters that the financial, economic and industrial order of Canada was crumbling to pieces about our feet. I repudiated that statement then and I repudiate it again to-night as a Canadian. I also refused to accept the point of view that we have been hearing here and there in regard to the competitive and capitalistic system built up in Canada during the last hundred years, to the effect that that system is actually falling to pieces, tumbling to destruction, and would be ultimately if not immediately destroyed if we did not do something. I do not believe that our economic and industrial order is perfect; it is not flawless; it has its weaknesses. But I do not believe we ought to scrap the present system and institute a socialist state in Canada at the present time. I say therefore that what is being done and will be done, making a survey of that structure, finding out its weaknesses, getting at the facts and adjusting ourselves to the facts, continuously and aggressively, will save us from any impending danger. I believe that the resourcefulness, the ability and the determination of Canadians, as manifested in various ways in the past, will be equal to any occasion in the future and will place Canada once more on the highway to development and prosperity.

Another point of view I tried to make plain when this subject was last under discussion was that in the dilemma in which we find ourselves to-day in this depression we ought to stand on the rock of individual liberty, and I stressed the point that by standing on that rock we could work out our economic and industrial salvation. The moment we move off that rock we shall find ourselves in difficulties. It was pointed out that if we took any other position than that we would find ourselves in the miry clay of socialism, which would land us absolutely nowhere. I tried to make plain that we did not need to ape Russia at the present time nor follow the policy either of Mussolini in Italy or of Hitler in Germany. We can cope with our own difficulties provided Canadian democracy takes the stand suggested. If we do that we shall win out in the long run.

[Mr. McIntosh.]

Thirdly, I tried to show that so far as the first part of the resolution was concerned it contained nothing new, and the second part of it was not in accordance with facts, while it was pointed out that the conclusion based upon these premises was untenable and should not be supported. In this connection I believe that the prayer of Canadians to-day ought to be for the deliverance of this dominion out of the fearful pit and muck of socialism, for the principle of the socialistic state is not and will not be acceptable to Canadians at all. It is unnecessary for us to have anything to do with it and Canadians need not put their faith in any form of socialism, because if we stand by our constitution and do our duty as Canadians we shall be able to emerge from our difficulties successfully.

May I say that in regard to socialism as a cult it falls far short of what it ought to be from the standpoint of three important principles of statesmanship. One important principle of statesmanship is to give security to possessors. Socialism will not do that; it will take away what the possessors have and give it to those who have not. That is not security and consquently socialism stands condemned from that point of view. Another aim of sound statesmanship is to afford facilities to those who have not to acquire. Socialism would not afford such facilities to those who have not because individuals under a socialist state would be simply chattels of the state and would own or control nothing. Socialism would also fall short of another recognized standard of statesmanship, namely, to give hope to all. It would give hope to none. Indeed as far as giving hope to the people of Canada is concerned, socialism would fail dismally.

I say therefore that although our social and business structure is not perfect, although we shall have to take recognition of its imperfections and remove them surely yet gradually, socialism is not the method whereby we can meet the grievances of our people at the present time or cure the national ills.

Let me traverse briefly the field of Canadian history. In years gone by when Canadians were fighting the battles of political liberty, there was no such thing as socialism. It was never heard of. They did not need any socialistic belief in order to win our political freedom in upper and lower Canada. The Liberals of that day courageously stood for political liberty, they won political liberty, and we have that liberty to-day. Further the Liberals of that day stood for the supremacy of parliament legislatively and commercially; they stood for a reformed coinage, for representation by population, for control of revenue, for efficiency in the administration of government, for responsible government and the breaking up of the family compact; they stood for political reform and brought about that reform years before confederation was launched —brought it about without the aid of socialism.

But that is not all. At the present time the Liberals of Canada stand for economic as well as political reform. They are now fighting the many economic battles required to be fought to put Canada on its feet. The Liberal party of the present day stands for social justice, the one great end of government and society. Liberalism of to-day stands for freedom of trade, for the greater control of banking, currency and credit, for the development of our primary industries, for personal and human liberty, for complete responsible government, for a balanced budget, for the lifting of debt and taxation from the shoulders of our people, for greater government economy and for certain reforms in an electoral way. In this great fight for economic reform—I would term it economic liberalism—we can get along very well without accepting the indefinite resolution moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre. We do not need it. Although we have difficulties to face, although our economic order is not perfect, it should not be scrapped and destroyed and something put in its place about which we know very little. Canada is not ready for anything like that. Although many people are willing to listen to a discussion of this "state over all" obsession, although in many places the meetings in its behalf are enthusiastic, I believe that upon reflection and through a test at the ballot box, socialism will land nowhere in Canada. As a member of this house and as a Canadian I am opposed to the resolution and I intend to vote against it.

If I understand the resolution correctly its purpose is to tear down and destroy. It states that a socialistic order must be set up, which means that our economic and political order must be torn to pieces, taken away and this socialistic order put in its place. May I say there are certain people in Canada and beyond our borders who stand for a policy of destruction. For instance, there are those who pin their faith to the social and political belief of nihilism. Nihilism is what? Nihilism believes in the tearing down and destroying of our social, our economic and political order. Nihilism was born in Russia as a reaction to czarist rule. It believes everything is bad and must be destroyed; there is no thought of political redemption or reform. The nihilist believes that everything should be destroyed but himself and when everything is destroyed but himself he will be free to go to work to build up a nihilist state—a nihilist state on the ruins he has helped to bring about.

Nihilism is a policy of destruction something like the policy indicated in this resolution. I would say that a policy of destruction, whether nihilist or socialist, is absolutely wrong and ought to be voted down in this House of Commons.

There is another belief, also born in Russia, that of anarchism. What is anarchism? Anarchism is closely related to nihilism, nihilism and anarchism are closely related to communism and they are all linked up to socialism. My reason for referring to these different beliefs is to show that they are nothing more or less than policies of destruction—not construction. Anarchism believes that all government and all law ought to be destroyed. The aim of anarchism is to set up the individual and make him supreme so that he will be able to ward off all opposition from government or law. Anarchism does not believe in law, moral, political or economic. The idea of the anarchist is to produce as he pleases and consume as he pleases; produce in accordance with his powers and receive in accordance with his needs. The policy of destruction is quite evident in anarchism and in that regard it is similar to the socialism being put forward by many people to-day throughout Canada. History has proven that there is no greater evil than anarchism, and history will prove too that there can be no greater evil forced upon the Canadian state or upon the free people of this country than socialism if we are foolish enough to accept it.

I am one who believes that the individual should be progressively restricted. I am quite willing to limit the liberty of the individual and to accept the policy of state control to a certain degree as long as that state control is compatible with the freedom of the individual who makes up the state. What about socialism? It stands for a superstate, a superstate represented by a highly organized and powerful central government. This central government will be made up of economic planners, economic dreamers, economic crusaders, and economic uplifters who are going to make Canada perfect under socialist rule. Now, what about this policy of socialism? It aims to control economic thought and the economic activity and collective effort of the individual, even cooperation itself. It means the control of the natural resources of the country, of the machinery of production, distribution and exchange. It means the control of the homes, the churches, the schools, the institutions, the property and the wealth of our nation. It can be readily understood that under any policy which sets out to tear down every institution in the country, the individual will be a mere chattel.

Under socialism we would have uppermost at all times state paternalism, state diffusion of prosperity: taxation would be taken over, and since taxation has about arrived at its climax so far as the distribution of the income of the nation is concerned, socialism would take control of banking, currency and credit—also the investment resources of the people. It would scrap individual and human liberty; it would develop a rigid uniformity; there would be a dead level similarity, there would be no equality, no freedom of contract; there would be an excess of undeveloped potential talent, and individual talent would be standardized and repressed. We can easily see that under a system of this kind there would be no individual liberty, the only real foundation of national sovereignty and greatness. On this account socialism which is known as nationalism, communism, collectivism, would be largely on a par with anarchism and nihilism, because they have as their common objective an ideal cooperative state. They all stand for that, but beyond that we have no definite details. The very ideal of democracy is that the people must be distrustful of any power irrespective of the hands in which it is placed, and before we accept any socialist state, before we throw away the individual and collective liberty of the Canadian people, we must be very careful to know what we are to receive in lieu thereof.

If we vote down this resolution—as it will be voted down—and do not accept the principle of the resolution in regard to setting up a socialist state in Canada, we would naturally favour perfecting our own social and economic order and, if it is not functioning correctly, we should make it so function. When we take that attitude, we must realize that we are standing for the full and free development of the individual as the unit in our democracy. The individual is equipped with an intellect, an intellect that gives him an objective in life. Added to intellect there is that fire or sentiment which engenders enthusiasm to attain high ideals in life. Lastly, he has executive power, the mainspring of individual and national development. While the individual possesses these qualities, by developing them harmoniously, he can become what we might term a pillar of state—the individual or nation in miniature. Only in this way can the Canadian people achieve sovereign power nationally and internationally. As regards the development of the ideal individual, we must stand for the preservation of individual initiative, enterprise, property, profit, rivalry, and competition between one individual and another, the right of inheritance, the right of bequeathment, the survival of the fittest and the building up of legislation that will reflect the power of the individual as a unit in the nation. Individual leadership is the very foundation of an ideal democratic state. In the words of the poet, may we say in this connection:

O, for a living man to lead!
That will not babble when we bleed;
O, for the silent doer of the deed!
One that is happy in his height,
And one that in a nation's night
Hath solitary certitude of life.

Or quoting Emerson:

'Tis man and only man can make
A nation great and strong
Men who for truth and honour's sake
Stand fast and suffer long.
Brave men who walk while others sleep
Who dare while others fly,
They build a nation's pillars deep
And lift them to the sky.

That is the only way in which we can build up a great democratic state, a great Dominion of Canada. If we sacrifice the individual; if we destroy him and build up a socialistic state, we can never expect to play the part we ought to play as a nation among the nations, not only of the British Commonwealth but of the world.

In concluding, may I say the aim of every Canadian ought to be to harmonize the development of individual life with national life. If we do that we need not be very much afraid of our future. The ideal state is simply the individual writ large—the people in their collective and corporate capacity. In the great work of nation building:

A thousand years scarce serve to form a state;
An hour may lay it in the dust, and when
Can man its shattered splendour renovate?

Again, what constitutes a state? A state is made up of:

Men, who their duties know,
But know their rights, and knowing, dare maintain.

If we in Canada will therefore follow along the line of sound individualism and build up a sound state based on that sound individualism, we can truthfully say of our dominion:

Thou, too, sail on, O Ship of State!
Sail on, O Union, strong and great!
Humanity with all its fears,
With all the hopes of future years,
Is hanging breathless on thy fate!

Mr. F. W. TURNBULL (Regina): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this motion in order that the voice of the conservative opinion in Saskatchewan may be heard, because Saskatchewan has been made the spearhead of the cooperative commonwealth attack.

Because that province has suffered three crop failures in recent years and has been struggling with that difficulty and because of the incidence of low prices, it was perhaps thought that misery and unrest might be capitalized better there than in any other part of Canada. The people of Saskatchewan realize the causes of their trouble and that they do not lie in the direction suggested by my hon. friends of the cooperative commonwealth.

For my part I am not concerned with the name of the organization; not half as much concerned with it as are those hon. gentlemen themselves. I find in the cities of Saskatchewan they call themselves the Independent Labour party and in the rural parts of my province they call themselves the United Farmers of Canada. This was the case until they had a convention in Saskatoon. At that convention someone wanted to call them by their true name of socialists and be honest with the world, but others said that they would not catch as many votes as if they called themselves Farmer-Labour, so Farmer-Labour was the name, and is yet, so far as Saskatchewan is concerned. Then they held a convention at Calgary at which there were gentlemen who wished to call the organization socialistic, but that suggestion was not carried out for the very same reason that obtained in Saskatchewan, namely that they hoped to deceive the people as to their true aim by calling it the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. I have under my hand what are reported to be the words of the leader of that party, as follows:

> And the name? Ah! that was a bit of a sticker. A conference less in earnest about fundamentals might have easily gone on the rocks over the name. "Socialist," suggested the Farmer-Labour group from Saskatchewan; "Socialist," urged the Labour group from B.C., which now calls itself the Socialist Party of Canada. But socialism is so vague, including Mr. MacDonald, Mr. Herriot and the Nazis and Fascists, as well as the bolshevists.

It includes the bolshevists as well, although we have been hearing these days that the bolshevists and communists are quite different from socialists; but these are the reported words of the leader of that party:

> Moreover, many people have been prejudiced against the word who might have otherwise accepted the idea.

Had I been a socialist I would have been quite content to use that name; I would not have tried to deceive the people as to the real object of my propaganda by adopting a name that was not true to the ideas I was endeavouring to inculcate.

I am not particularly concerned with whether this organization is Russian or otherwise, whether its aims and objects are the same as those of Russia, or whether they are successful there or not. What concerns me is whether it can be successful in Canada. If it would improve our conditions in this country to adopt socialism, and I thought it would, I would be a socialist to-morrow. The name has no terrors for me, although it seems to have had for the founders of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation. These men say that they are not communists, that the communists hate them and have nothing to do with them, that they oppose them, and my hon. friend from Winnipeg North Centre to-day attempted to tell us that communist second choices in the election in Winnipeg went to Mayor Webb; but he did not tell us what proportion of those second choices went to Mayor Webb and what proportion went to the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, or whatever name they give the party in Winnipeg.

Mr. HEAPS: None.

Mr. TURNBULL: My hon. friend says none. I will tell you what happened in Calgary, where we had an election not so very long ago. We had an independent running there representing the sane thought in that city, and the people evidently thought so because they elected him. We had several other candidates running in Calgary. We had a communist candidate running there as well, and although the electors had three or four other candidates to vote for, those who voted for the communist candidate gave their second choices to the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation candidate in Calgary to the ratio of 7½ to 1. That is the way the communists hate the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in that city.

Mr. GOTT: That ought to make an imprint.

Mr. COTNAM: Nothing registers.

Mr. TURNBULL: I am not particularly concerned with what economists say about this new party. The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said a few moments ago that anyone could quote a few sentences from a speech or writing and make them mean something entirely different from what the author intended. I will accept him as an authority on that. If the economists have been thus misquoted by anybody in this country, it is by the friends of the socialist party in Canada. They will quote Sir Josiah Stamp, Sir Arthur Salter and all the other economists you can name, but I defy the members of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation to put their whole program before any of the economists they quote and get anything but a horse laugh for it. Nor can they put it before the good people of the province of Saskatchewan or the people of this country either without getting very much the same kind of answer as soon as the public realize the game is on.

I am not concerned whether they call this a new party or an old party, whether it has new ideas or old ideas. As a matter of fact, its ideas are a hundred years old. There is nothing in all this babble that we hear from day to day that was not heard throughout the country seventy-five or a hundred years ago. I can quote the very catchwords one after another which have been in use as far back as the day of the first internationale, let alone the third. Here is the program of the Socialist Democratic Federation.

Mr. PERRAS: May I ask a question?

Mr. TURNBULL: Certainly.

Mr. PERRAS: I just want to ask if the leader of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation paid three-quarters of a million dollars for his party?

Mr. TURNBULL: I thought, Mr. Speaker, when I had the courtesy to give the hon. member the floor he would at least have the courtesy to ask a question relevant to the subject matter. When the question is relevant to the subject matter I shall be very happy to discuss it with him, and he will not be very happy over the result.

In 1884 the Socialist Democratic Federation established this formula as their theory of life, and see how the language compares with that of the resolutions we hear in this house:

> The establishment of the socialist commonwealth on a democratic basis; the common ownership of the means of production and distribution; the production of wealth for the use and enjoyment of all, instead of the production of commodities for the profit of the few.

You would almost think, Mr. Speaker, that it was my hon. friend's resolution I was reading, instead of a platform of years and years ago.

Mr. HEAPS: What date was it?

Mr. TURNBULL: August 4, 1884. We are asked to take the administration of this country not only out of the hands of the present government but out of the present form of government, and to establish something new. We have heard considerable argument about capitalistic countries and socialistic countries. Those arguments are not applicable to this country because this is not a capitalistic country. Nor do I know of any part of the world where there is a socialistic country in existence, not even in Russia. There is capitalism there, and there is socialism there, forced on the people by a dictatorship as ruthless as any exercised by any czar. There is also in this country capitalism and socialism, and a good mixture of it, and sometimes I think we have a little bit too much of it, and we might be better off with a little less. But certainly all the countries of the world that I know of are a mixture of capitalism and socialism. The difference is only a question of degree. So when you try to set the people of this country against one another as capitalists and socialists, you set each man against himself because each man is a capitalist in some things and a socialist in others.

Let us examine the organization of this body to which we are asked to entrust the affairs of state. The Independent Labour party is a part of it. They are the people who tell us that there is no difference of opinion between this body and organized labour. I have here the statement of the hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), as reported in the Regina Daily Star of October 13, 1931, in a speech he made in Montreal in the course of which he said in regard to trades unionism:

> Trade unionism to-day is just a lobbying machine that must appeal to city councils, provincial governments and the Dominion government for legislation to cover their demands.
> In the province of Quebec, labour unions had been more "backward" than anywhere else in Canada, Mr. Heaps said. He pictured Labour leaders waiting "cap-in-hand" upon parliamentary leaders to beg favours that they might well obtain for themselves if Labour controlled the governments.

That is his idea of the functions of organized labour in the community to-day.

We have also the United Farmers of Ontario, and we heard that they affiliated with the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in Toronto a few months ago, but we have not heard so much about the fact that they refused to be bound by the doctrines of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. They just affiliated for the form of it and out of courtesy, I suppose, to one who urged affiliation upon them so strongly.

We have heard of the United Farmers of Alberta. As I understand the reports, and I hope I shall be corrected if I am wrong, they did not accept the doctrines of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation when they affiliated with this new party at Calgary. Their attitude was: We are going to go along with you a little while and see what you have got.

As far as the United Farmers of Canada, Saskatchewan section, is concerned, they represent but a very small fraction of the farmers of Saskatchewan, and their affiliation with the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation does not matter very much as regards expressing the opinion of the organized farmers of that province.

With respect to their relations with the communists I am not particularly concerned, but this I do believe, that the object of the communists and of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation is the same. Both hope to obtain a cooperative commonwealth. Their methods I believe are different. The communist says: I am prepared to do an overt act if necessary in order to get what I want. The socialist says: I am prepared only to egg on an overt act, and I want the statutes changed so that I shall be at liberty to do that, so that as long as I do not do anything overt I shall not get punished. That is what happens in strikes. The men who egg the strikers on are always in the back row when the bricks begin to fly. Their objects, I say, are the same, and as Russia has placed its hallmark of approval on the communists it means that it has at the same time placed its hallmark of approval on the object of the socialists. And they may be right. Because Russia approves, it does not make them wrong at all. Some person in Russia appears to be taking an intelligent view of socialism and a very great interest in it, because the other day the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Reid) expressed the great surprise that Mr. Stalin felt over the results of the election in Great Britain, in which he said Great Britain was hopeless because in spite of unrest and unemployment it had not adopted the socialist policies. If hon. members do not want to be associated with communists, and if they do not want to be ascociated with Russia they ought to be a little more careful of the company they keep. How about these ten-day Cook's tours taken to Russia by gentlemen, some of whom are in this house and some outside? A few evenings ago the hon. member for Montmagny referred to Mr. George Williams who had taken a ten-day Cook's tour in Russia. He was sent by the agricultural institute to Rome. I hope this country did not pay his expenses. He came back with enough material for a book and a lecture tour, telling us about what he had seen.

If hon. members do not want to be confounded in the public mind with matters relating to Russia, they must come out from among them and be separate. Let us consider their attitude towards trade. We hear the continual cry that we should trade with Russia, whether she wants to trade with us or not. On the other hand there is the continual cry not to trade with Great Britain because we have to bind ourselves for a period of five years. Only a few days ago we were urged to finance trade with Russia, although Russia was not sufficiently interested in it to allow the Canadian delegate to use a code telegram. However, we were to put up the money. They sound the praises of what is going on over there, telling what wonderful things Stalin is doing for Russia. But Tolstoy's daughter is praying for her murdered fellow citizens in Russia, and asking the nations of the world if they cannot come to their rescue and stop the slaughter. Certainly it is no wonder there is no unemployment in Russia. So long as the munitions factories are turning out bullets, and the stone walls stand, they can take care of unemployment. As I say, if hon. members do not wish to be regarded as friends of communists they should cease being press agents for a revolution in which they do not wish to take part. If they had the courage of their convictions they should be willing to do anything that they—I shall not say urge—advertise so widely somebody else is going to do. Because talking of these things breeds familiarity, and after a while they have the state of mind indicated by the hon. member for Southeast Grey (Miss Macphail) when she is reported to have told her Toronto audience to say "revolution" a hundred times, until they got used to the idea.

The organization of hon. members opposite is a loosely flung together affiliation of bodies, none of whom will agree to accept the principles of this resolution; nevertheless their leader comes into this house and asks us to accept the principle rejected by his own followers. If there has been one thing more than another which has happened in the last three months which would lead me to oppose the establishment of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation it would be the speech made in this house to-night by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, wherein he told us that he could not recognize the difference between force used to maintain law and order, and force used to upset law and order. Further he argued that if the state had a right to use force to maintain law, other individuals surely had the right to use force to upset law.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker, I made no such statement.

Mr. TURNBULL: Surely we should have something in the nature of association of individuals who agree on a common policy before we ask the country to accept a common policy. But have these gentlemen a policy? What is their policy? What are the details of it? Let us draw this animal out of the bag and have a look at it, if we are asked to support and adopt it as our own. Let us have a chance to see what it is. The hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) has said:

> With a new social order as its goal the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation had not worked out a definite plan of action, but a committee was working on a program.

And, lo and behold, within a few days the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer) came into the house and told us what the program was, although the committee was still working on it.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): If the hon. member would investigate carefully he would find that the hon. member for Battle River spoke of what is termed a tentative program. Of course the hon. gentleman does not want to read correctly.

Mr. TURNBULL: The last part of the hon. member's remarks were unnecessary. Is it a tentative program? Are we asked tonight to adopt a tentative program? Are we to set up a tentative program in Canada, or are we to wait until these gentlemen hatch a real program before we are allowed to have a look at it?

Mr. IRVINE: Let us have a look at yours.

Mr. QUINN: We are not discussing that.

Mr. IRVINE: We are.

Mr. TURNBULL: What about the program? These are the words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre:

> Now about a program? That was the last thing to be considered, and really we had not time to consider carefully a manifesto.
> Purposely we have not defined closely the form that we expect the Cooperative Commonwealth will assume. It may involve a measure of state socialism; it may be based on cooperative producers' and consumers' organizations; it may be, probably will be, a combination of the two.

So long as it is a case of "may be" he can appeal to all people. No one will know whether it is right or wrong. Probably that is the object of leaving it in the vague condition in which we now find it.

We are told some things in Saskatchewan. In that province we are told that it means taking all the basic industries into public ownership. Certainly if I have heard anything from that corner of the house in days gone by, it is that agriculture is the basic industry of Canada. Therefore it would seem that their program involves the nationalization of agriculture. Along with that, we have again the declaration by the hon. member for Bow River that he will give a real, genuine, security of tenure to the home owner and farmer. Which of these things shall we have? Before we decide to adopt the platform we are entitled to know definitely from someone what the program is to be.

Mr. IRVINE: What have you got now?

Mr. TURNBULL: Too much noise.

Mr. COTNAM: Too much oil and gas.

Mr. TURNBULL: Another thing we are to have out in Saskatchewan—a wonderful thing to have—is a new money policy. We are going to have a money policy in Saskatchewan which will give industrialists all the money they need for the purpose of manufacturing, and still give the purchasers and consumers all the money they require for purposes of buying. That is a wonderful policy; they should certainly get a lot of votes. I would vote for that myself, if the money was any good when I got it. But fancy a party coming before the sensible people of this country with a proposition to give them all the money they want to carry around in their pockets whether they earn it or not! Fancy giving the industrialists all the money they want for manufacturing purposes, and allowing the consumers sufficient to buy all the goods they wanted from those industrialists. But they say that is the way we will get rid of unemployment.

Then, we had another state of affairs out in our part of the country. The leader of the party in Saskatchewan was asked one evening what he would do if the banks did not finance him when he had his socialist government in operation. "Why," he said, "we will demand that the banks meet our request, the same as they do in the other provinces". He would give only two and a half or three per cent, but would demand that they treat him the same as they did the other provinces. Then he was asked: "What if the banks will not do that?" "We will demand that the Dominion government give us the same privileges as they give the banks—take our bonds, and give us dominion currency in place of them." In the same breath he states they are going to nationalize the farms and pay off all the mortgages; then they will issue thirty-year bonds without interest to mortgage companies to meet these lialibilities. I suppose they will bring these thirty-year non-interest-bearing bonds to Ottawa and demand dominion currency for them. He was then asked, "What will you do if the Dominion government is not agreeable to that?" "We do not expect the Dominion government to do it, but if they do not, we will defy the Bank Act and print our own currency, and if the Dominion government tries to enforce the Bank Act and puts our premier in gaol"—and "our premier," of course, would be the leader of the socialist party by that time—"that is just what we want." It will call the public's attention to the condition—the new Mahatma Gandhi of Saskatchewan.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Who is that?

Mr. TURNBULL: The new Mahatma Gandhi, the first lieutenant of the cooperative commonwealth in the province of Saskatchewan.

Mr. IRVINE: Who is that?

Mr. TURNBULL: I am not advertising him; you can do that. It is no wonder hon. members think this is incredible, but it happens to be in accordance with the facts. Here are the people who expect the voters of Saskatchewan to support them. That province depends upon the rest of Canada for its groceries, for they do not produce them in Saskatchewan; it depends upon outside people for its clothes, for its building material and in part for its fuel. The four essentials for life are procured from outside the province, yet this man who is the first lieutenant for the cooperative commonwealth in Saskatchewan says we must declare a moratorium on external obligations and print our own currency.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I rise to a point of order, Mr. Speaker. For some time the hon. gentleman has been talking about some unknown person who he claims is a lieutenant of ours. This person may or may not be a lieutenant, but surely it is due this house that when the hon. gentleman quotes, as he says he is quoting, a gentleman in the province of Saskatchewan, the name of the person to whom he is referring should be given.

Mr. SPEAKER: The point of order is not a point of order at all. The hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull) is quite in order in his remarks.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): They may be quite imaginary.

Mr. TURNBULL: I almost overlooked another example of how the policy of some hon. gentlemen opposite conforms to the policy followed in Russia, but the hon. member for Bow River has recalled it to my mind. The other day the hon. member abandoned the idea of inflation, but members of the cooperative commonwealth are still preaching inflation in western Canada. Why do they not harmonize their views and preach the same thing once in a while? Inflation is only a palliative, says the hon. member for Bow River.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): Hear, hear.

Mr. TURNBULL: And the hon. gentleman says, "hear, hear." Everything is futile except the complete overthrow of the system, the hon. gentleman says. There is nothing new about that; it is not even original. Zinoviev, alias Apfelbaum, alias Radomisilsky, alias Aronovitch, wrote the I.W.W. in 1920 advising them that political campaigns provided an opportunity for revolutionists to speak to the working classes and show them the futility of reforms, and he pointed out to them why the entire capitalistic system must be overthrown.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): I have never used the word "overthrown" in my life in connection with capitalism. Quote me correctly, and I will be satisfied.

Mr. TURNBULL: I was quoting Mr. Zinoviev, but apparently it comes so close to my hon. friend that he takes it for his own.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): The hon. gentleman quoted Zinoviev later.

Mr. TURNBULL: After all, the whole question is this: Can such a change in our form of government cure our present ills? If it can I am for it; if it cannot I am against it. What are the causes of our ills? Hon. gentlemen in the southeast corner talk about our ills; they rave about them from every platform in the country. Why do they not come out and tell the people what are the causes of these ills?

Mr. SPENCER: The government.

Mr. TURNBULL: That is an intelligent answer. Those economists quoted so freely by my hon. friends are united on one thing at least; they say the cause of our present ills is the low prices of commodities.

Mr. IRVINE: Who caused that?

Mr. TURNBULL: If hon. members listen long enough they may get a liberal education. The low prices of commodities are said by those economists, who all agree on it, to be caused by the scarcity of gold in circulation, and the scarcity of gold in circulation is caused by the fact that for several years those countries which have been receiving gold in payment of obligations or in payment for goods have not been relending that gold to the world. They have been removing it from circulation just as much as though the gold had not been taken from the earth. So much is that the case that one of these economists, I think it was Sir Arthur Salter, has propounded the idea of printing $5,000,000,000 in gold certificates to take the place of the gold removed from circulation, but you could not keep those certificates from going where the gold has gone. You cannot do that until you change the outlook of those countries now receiving gold.

These, Mr. Speaker, are the underlying causes of our present ills, and if I had time I could show that these are the causes of the so-called tariff barriers that are interfering with trade. It is nothing new to say that tariff barriers interfere with trade; everyone knows that to be true. As far as we are concerned, however, we are not leading the hunt; we are following it, and following it as far behind as the safety of this country will permit. Can Canada remain alone and unprotected in a world constituted like that? That is the question. If she cannot, then the fact that tariffs are high does not alter the situation at all. It is necessary to lower those barriers in order to revive trade, but even a journal such as the Western Retailer says that cannot be done by any one country alone; it would be suicide. It must be done by all countries acting together, and if we can get it done by international action we will get somewhere. If I am correct in my proposition, as I think I am, that our troubles are caused by matters outside our own country, then they cannot be cured by any action taken within our country, other than whatever action a country of this size may take in assisting to remove and cure the ills of the world at large. We must do what we can to maintain our position until the change in world conditions takes place, and that is as far as we can go.

We hear the phrase "want in the midst of plenty." We in western Canada are producing wheat for a world that does not want that wheat; we cannot export it. It is practically the only thing we produce in large quantities for export, but France, Germany and Italy, our former markets, say they do not want our wheat. It piles up; we cannot sell it, and since we cannot sell it we do not have the purchasing power to buy other goods. The result is that other goods pile up, and we have this want in the midst of plenty of which we have heard. Surely that is not surprising; there is no mystery about it. The difficulty is to remedy that condition, and that cannot be done by setting up a cooperative commonwealth. We must either find a market for our surplus or cease producing the commodities that are piling up. It is said in the resolution that our economic system has gone out of gear, that there are fundamental defects in that system, indicated by the fact that people are out of employment and that there is hardship in the land. It is true that there is unemployment and hardship, but just because those two conditions exist it does not follow that the first thing you put your finger on will be the thing that caused that situation. If I go out to my tractor in the morning and find that someone has put a monkey wrench in the gears so that the tractor will not operate, I do not take a sledge hammer and smash the tractor and say I must get a new one. I take the monkey wrench out of the gears; that is all it is necessary to do. This system works all right under normal conditions and we have been getting along splendidly; but because of the abnormal condition created by the after-war situation, debts and reparation payments, we find that there is for the time being a monkey wrench in the gears, which eventually we shall have to remove. But that having been done, the machine will operate freely.

They say we should have cooperative farming, or national farming, or whatever they call it. Well, there is nothing in the world to prevent cooperative farming in Canada to-day; there are on the statute books all the laws that are necessary to bring about cooperative farming if people want to take advantage of those laws. It can be done without changing any law or upsetting any government or instituting any new system. You can also have cooperative banking if you want it. If my western friends will get out and persuade each farmer to take a cent a bushel less for his next year's crop they can get together $400,000 and start a bank and make all the money that the banks are making, loaning money for nothing if they can get away with it. They can enjoy all the advantages that the banks have to-day and get all the good that is going in the world. Why do they not do it? You can have cooperative selling if you want to have it. As a matter of fact we have had it in Saskatchewan before now. You can also have cooperative manufacturing. There is not a single thing in this dominion under our present laws which you cannot undertake cooperatively if you care to. You do not need to have any revolution; all you have to do is to persuade the hardheaded farmers of my province that they would be better off under a system of cooperative farming than they are to-day. But you cannot so persuade them; you cannot make the farmers believe for a moment that they would be better off under socialism. For that reason the cooperative commonwealth cannot be put over in that country. If by persuasion they will not do it themselves, then they will not by persuasion vote to have it done; and to all this noise and disturbance and shouting and fanfare and talk of revolution that has been going on during the past four or five years, a great many people have been listening and a great many more are now laughing.

Out in Saskatchewan farmers have been devoting forty or fifty years to individual farming, men like my good friend the ex-Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Motherwell). That hon. gentleman has gone through all the vicissitudes of life in western Canada. Catch him putting his farm into a cooperative institution or a nationalized farm and doning a pair of overhalls and working as a hired man for some sort of Stalin or somebody of that description. According to the census returns in Saskatchewan only 49 per cent of the farmers in that province have returned encumbrances on their land. There must be 25 per cent more whose heads are well above water, if not more than that. That is 75 per cent, and these men will stand for solid and sane thinking when election time comes around; they will not be led away by any talk of social ownership, social economics and things of that kind.

We have gone through the years and made our own way and we have pride of ownership. We love our own homes, we love freedom of action. We love the privileges of home ownership and we like to spend our own money in our own way—lots of it when we are prosperous and little when we have not so much; but we do not like to turn our money over to a common till and allow someone else to tell us how much to spend. And that is what the cooperative commonwealth means. That is why, so long as the individual Anglo Saxon stands in the west, so long as we have those pioneers from Europe, who left their native land because they were individualists and had the courage to start afresh in a new country, people who have learned our ways of doing things, the cooperative commonwealth will not be accepted there. If my hon friend thinks that that is fruitful soil in which to sow the seeds of socialism he is very badly mistaken.

I am here to-night to say that the province of Saskatchewan will not adopt the cooperative commonwealth. I should not be true to my own province if I did not stand up and give it a better bill of health than my hon. friends in the southeast corner of the house have given it. We are having hardships, it is true. Well, we have faced hardships before and we can face them again, and I have no doubt whatever that we shall come through this period with our property our own, with our own ways of doing things, with our established rights and privileges. We shall make money again when times are better and we shall spend it for ourselves in our own way.

Our present system has brought us a long distance, whether you call it capitalism or anything else. It is one of the admirable features of the British system that it is susceptible to change, and being susceptible to change it adapts itself to the changing conditions from day to day. Undoubtedly there will be changes—not upsets but changes, which is an entirely different thing. Look back over the history of Canada; look back over the history of Great Britain and compare the condition of the masses in England fifty years ago with the condition of the masses to-day under our present system of government. Having taken that backward look you can then look forward and visualize the progress that we shall make in the next fifty years, not by sudden upsets of governments and systems, not by revolution and warfare and a lot of talk about the humanities, but by each individual doing his individual duty to himself and his country, and by gradually adapting ourselves to changing conditions. But we shall not make any progress by changing the whole system of government over night and placing in power gentlemen who have no experience in business.

Mr. HARRY BUTCHER (Last Mountain): I have been somewhat reluctant to take part in this debate, for several reasons, three of which I now propose to enumerate. In the first place, I am one of that rapidly increasing number of persons who refuse to be frightened by the idea of a moderate socialism, and I firmly believe that we are approaching that kind of economic system by an evolutionary process, quite involuntarily on our own part. In the second place I am entirely at one with the hon. member who has moved this resolution (Mr. Woodsworth) and with his supporters in their desire for a more equitable distribution of wealth in this country, and in their wish to eliminate as far as possible poverty and distress from this favoured land. In the third place I am convinced of the sincerity of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, in which respect I am quite plainly at variance with many hon. members to your right, Mr. Speaker. I am also convinced of the hon. gentleman's deep interest in the welfare of the less fortunate of our fellow citizens, and I feel sure he has the utmost confidence in his plan, that he is assured that the plan if adopted would cure our economic ills. Therefore I dislike to appear to oppose him. But on the other hand I do not want to be regarded as content with our present system while in its existing chaotic condition, for I most certainly am not.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has presented his resolution for the consideration of this house. I have considered it long and earnestly and have decided that though the time may conceivably come when I might vote for a similar resolution, that time has not yet arrived. Having intimated that I propose to vote against the resolution, I feel it my duty to give my reasons for so doing.

In common with the hon. member who preceded me (Mr. Turnbull), I have long realized that the machinery of state has not for some time been functioning perfectly. There are many indications of economic sickness in the body politic and I have given much thought to possible remedies for this condition. This was my reason for giving the closest attention to the resolution brought before this house by the hon. member and also to his introductory speech and the speeches of his lieutenants. So far as those speeches recite existing conditions, I am entirely in agreement; so far as they proclaim the necessity of remedying those conditions as soon as possible, I am also in agreement, but when they say that socialism is the only or the best remedy, I must disagree. That there are many outstanding weaknesses and wrongs in our present system I think is undeniable. I also believe that these wrongs must be remedied at the first possible moment or the people themselves will step in and change the system, but I cannot admit that it is neither possible nor desirable to remedy them under the present system. Speaking to this resolution, the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) is reported on page 1740 of Hansard of February 2 as follows:

> It is no cause for fear when we say that capitalism cannot be reconstructed. The economic system known as capitalism is only one of a number of economic systems known to history. That known as slavery and that known as feudalism both preceded capitalism. They, like this system, made their contribution and passed out of human history, and out of their ashes grew the present system. It, too, is falling to pieces and cannot be resuscitated, cannot be repaired.

I cannot agree with the hon. member in those conclusions. I believe that the system can be repaired and made to function perfectly again. In introducing his resolution the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said:

> Great economists have pointed out that our present economic system could not last very long, but must give place to a different one. In more recent days we have the technicians pointing out not only the feasibility of fundamental changes in our social order, but the absolute necessity of such changes if our civilization is to persist.

No doubt that is true, but other equally great economists have denied that a change is necessary. There are as many economists who believe in the perpetuation of our present capitalist system as there are who believe in a change to a socialist system. Recently we have been hearing from a body of men known as technocrats who have made some most alarming predictions, but other men equally versed in technical knowledge say that the conclusions of the technocrats are absolutely wrong. They claim that to-day modernized machinery is so much needed that could business but revive it would take as many men to make the machines now needed to bring industry up to date as it took formerly to make the goods which would be made by the machines. It seems absurd to suggest that it would require as many men to make these machines as it formerly took to perform the labour to be done by the machines, but that is the statement they make. I must admit that personally I rather lean towards the economists quoted by my hon. friends in the southeast corner.

I had a rather amusing experience a few days before coming to Ottawa. I was in one of the smaller villages in my constituency and I came upon three of my constituents. One of them greeted me with this question: "What do you think of the money situation?" I responded by asking him: "What do you think about it?" He said: "Well, I read Mr. Young's speech in the House of Commons a while ago and I agreed entirely with him; then I read Mr. Coote's speech and I agreed with him." The second man said, "Well, I read Mr. McGeer's article in MacLean's magazine and I agreed with him, then I read Mr. Plumptre's article and I agreed with him." The third man said: "Well, when I find two professors of political economy who believe in the same thing I am going to agree with them." I think that is the true situation. I do not think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre added force to his argument by quoting these great economists or technicians.

I shall now direct my remarks to the resolution itself. The preamble reads:

> Whereas under our present economic arrangement large numbers of our people are unemployed and without the means of earning a livelihood for themselves and their dependents;

I am entirely in agreement with the conclusions in that paragraph. Notwithstanding all the relief that has been afforded to the people of Canada there is still in some cases stark hunger, undernourishment, lack of clothing, homelessness and despair. I do not think anyone can deny the truth enunciated in this first paragraph of the preamble of this resolution. The second paragraph reads:

> And whereas the prevalence of the present depression throughout the world indicates fundamental defects in the existing economic system;

I find myself largely but not wholly in agreement with the statement contained in that paragraph. I would amend it slightly to make it read as follows:

> And whereas the prevalence of the present depression throughout the world indicates defects in the existing economic system or in the management and administration of the same;

With that amendment, I would find myself in agreement with my hon. friend.

Hon. members say that conditions in our country are no worse than in others and that we should not advertise our woes. I firmly believe that until every hon. member of this house is filled with a sense of horror at the injustice of the conditions to which I have just referred; until we rise up as one man and say that they shall end; until we realize that there is within this land sufficient to supply the necessaries of life to every man, woman and child, and affirm that they shall be supplied; until we rise up and say that the material needs of our people shall be met so that they may enjoy healthy bodies and contented minds, the story cannot be told too often. I believe that the defects to which I have referred are possible of remedy. If the members of this House of Commons and the legislatures of our land fail to do their very utmost to remedy these conditions, they cannot have any cause of complaint if they are replaced by others who may undertake to cure them even though they may later fail to carry out their undertaking.

There are three or four evils which must be faced. One of them is the unequal distribution of the proceeds of labour. Another the unequal distribution of wealth. Yet another is our failure to restrain the activities of great financiers and financial interests who have loaded industry with capital structures that have no relation at all to the value of the assets of the industries they control. These interests now call upon the government to raise duties, and upon management to make profits, in order that they may pay dividends to shareholders whom they have already despoiled of their capital. The Premier of Quebec at a public meeting recently made the statement that the original capital invested in power, pulp and paper companies of eastern Canada did not exceed $30,000,000, but that this capital has been enlarged, watered, until to-day it amounts to $714,000,000, with assets worth less than $25,000,000. An hon. member in the house a few days ago referred to stock in a certain textile company which, he stated, originally cost $10 and had been inflated to a nominal value of $1,620. I am informed that stock in the Imperial Oil Company, originally worth $100, is now worth $1,200. It seems to me that this is one of the conditions that will have to be remedied. It will have to be made impossible for financiers to despoil the people to that extent.

Then there is the restraint that has been placed upon trade by high tariffs, resulting in each country endeavouring to constitute itself a self-sufficient economic unit, the impoverishing consequences of which are incalculable and finally we have a money system that is inadequate to the needs of the times, managed, and naturally so, under existing circumstances, with a view to profit for the shareholders instead of for the good of the people as a whole.

So far I find myself largely in agreement with the mover of the resolution and his lieutenants. This brings me to what the hon. member calls a "definite program." The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, after using the words I have just quoted, said:

> It is only the newer groups, however, that have had the courage to set this before the country in the form of a definite program.

Is it definite? It is definite to this extent and this only: that it proposes that the system which we now have shall be replaced by another which has not been clearly defined. I wish the hon. member were in his seat at present, because I should like to criticize—and I shall do so in any case—one of the remarks he made. It is a little unfortunate that some of our friends in the south-east corner—and I know they will take this criticism kindly—will persist in declaring their superiority over the rest of us. They rejoice in and constantly proclaim their independence, their courage, their patriotism, their freedom from party control. In this case the hon. gentleman neither broadened nor strengthened his influence by emulating the renowned gentleman who went up into the temple to pray and who became so conscious of his moral rectitude that he ended, not by praying, but by thanking the Lord that he was not as other men. I feel also that those of his followers who so frequently tell the world they are not even as the members of the two old parties, really have no reason to congratulate themselves upon their humility, or to preen themselves in the belief that all the world takes them at their own valuation. That is intended in the very kindliest spirit, and I hope they will accept it as such.

This resolution proposes a complete change of system, but it is not definite; it does not define the capitalism it proposes to displace, or the socialism it would give us as a substitute, and it does not define the methods by which the change should be effected. There are various kinds of capitalism. In Russia, to which so many references have been made, the poor farmer who had one horse, one cow and one acre of land was a capitalist, and he had to have those wordly possessions taken away from him. We in Canada probably regard the millionaire who lends his money in hundreds of thousands or who finances large industrial enterprises, as a capitalist. Between these two there is a vast range of capitalists. And it should be noted that our friends have not defined the kind of capitalism they propose to displace.

Moreover, they do not define the kind of socialism in which they believe. There is the state socialism again referred to as the socialism of Russia, and there is the parlour socialism we hear of that is so popular with some of the aristocrats in the old country. Between those two extremes there are many varieties of socialism.

They do not tell us by what steps they propose to bring about this change, but they do say:

> That, in the opinion of this house, the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative comomnwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

I admit that socialism is not mentioned in the resolution, and one of my friends who rather believes in the policy of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation said that I had no right to conclude that socialism was specially referred to in the resolution. Therefore I take the words of the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) who said, as will be found on page 1744 of Hansard of February 2:

> May I conclude by saying that the resolution moved by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre, clearly cuts the line between capitalism and socialism. There is no question about that. It places the issue where it ought to be placed. The next fight in Canada will be between socialism and capitalism, and if hon. gentlemen opposite and to my right do not defend capitalism better in that election than they have done in this debate,—

[Mr. Butcher.]

The hon. member was just a little previous. —then it is going to be too bad for hon. gentlemen opposite. I believe the issue is what I have said it is. In the place of private ownership, competition, debts and unemployment, we advance cooperation, social ownership and the use of commodities instead of holding them for profit.

If the resources and the machinery of the country are to be under state control, then the men who work those machines must also be under state control. The hon. gentleman, in introducing his resolution, said that his party did not advocate bureaucratic state socialism, but they do advocate a planned system. I do not know how they are going to enforce state planning unless they have a form of dictatorship. There will be state autocracy and the state, so-called, will be a committee of men who have assumed control of the state. This means the establishment, if not at first, then most assuredly later on, of a dictatorship in almost every walk of life.

Already this afternoon attention has been called to the diversity of views held by the various units that will compose the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. Farmers, labour, professional and business men, socialists of varying sorts, will all join together. As the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) said a few nights ago, all who are discontented will join together under this organization. What we are concerned with is which of these parties will control; whose views will prevail, in questions of the hours of labour, rates of wages, socialization of land. With regard to hours of labour a farmer member of this house recently pointed out that it was estimated that to-day a farmer had to do four days' work to receive one day's work from labour. The farmer is not interested in shortening the hours of labour; he is interested in the reduction of wages. On the other hand, labour is interested in shortening the hours of labour and increasing the rate of wages.

With regard to the socialization of land, a great variety of views is held by the various component parts of this federation. We were informed by the hon. member when introducing his resolution that the United Farmers of Alberta had passed a resolution calling for a community freed from the domination of irresponsible economic power in which all the social means of production and distribution, including land, are socially owned. In Manitoba last year I believe a similar resolution was introduced.

In the province of Saskatchewan we have a variety of opinions. The leader of the Farmer-Labour party in Saskatchewan first came out with a policy of the socialization of all land. That, I imagine, met with protests from certain men who owned their land and wished to continue to own it, and so he modified his policy and said that they would socialize the land of the farmer who was burdened with debt and wished to have his land socialized. This was the policy for a little while, but in process of time a few farmers who are burdened with debt and are anxious to have their debts paid by the state said: "When our debts are paid by the state what is going to happen to our land? Our debts will be paid, but we shall have lost our land." So the latest suggestion is that when the debts have been repaid, the land will be returned by the state to the former owner in fee simple.

Then as to the proposed change of system, I would ask, can it be said with certainty that it offers a remedy? Are there no better ways of meeting the situation? If there is a better way, what is it? It seems to me that there are many conditions in this land to-day which are inexcusable. I admit that, and I think the time has come when we should unite our efforts to remedy the conditions to which I have referred.

One hon. member referred to the condition in which we find ourselves as a result of the machinery not functioning perfectly, and said it would be better to remedy the defects rather than scrap the machinery. I agree with him entirely. Shall we not first try to make the system work? I believe that that can be done.

Another hon. member a few days ago said that the ship of state was not on an even keel. I think that is rather a good illustration. Or perhaps one of the propellers is not working well, and it looks as though it were time for an overhauling. But we do not propose that the ship should be taken out to sea, scuttled and sunk simply because at the present time it is not functioning perfectly. What we do say is: Let us scrape off the barnacles and put in a new propeller, and so improve conditions that the ship will once again be entirely seaworthy.

The hon. member for Wetaskiwin the other evening said, when he was asked for some details of the program of this new party: We will give you the details when we are called in; we are not on trial. I think he is mistaken. No political party ever was more on trial than this new party to-day. They are not proposing to make slight changes in our present system; they are proposing to make an entirely new system. Referring again to the illustration I used just now, of a ship not on an even keel, I would ask you, Mr. Speaker, to imagine for a moment the hon. member for Wetaskiwin, who made the statement I have just quoted, going to the owners of this ship of state which is not functioning perfectly and saying to the executive of the owners, "I represent an organization that wishes to go into the shipbuilding business. My organization considers that your ship has outlived its usefulness. We suggest to you that you scuttle it where it floats or take it out to sea and sink it. Further, we suggest, (a) that you engage my organization to build a new ship of an entirely new design to replace the present one, and (b) that you discharge your present crew and your spare crew also, and engage my organization to man your ship after we have built it." Perhaps it would not be very difficult to imagine the owners or their executive in reply saying something like this: "We admit that our ship is not now in first-class condition. We know that there are grave defects that should, and must be, remedied, but we believe that they are not irremediable. This ship which you hold in such contempt has weathered many a storm and has brought into port many a valuable cargo to the advantage of all the shareholders. We believe that the hull is sound, that the damaged and imperfect parts can be replaced, that the barnacles can be scraped off, and that then the boat will be as seaworthy as ever. Nevertheless, we would like to hear your proposition. We will ask you a few questions. You say that the ship you propose to build is of new design. Have you ever built one before?" The answer is: "No, but we have studied certain ideas promulgated by certain eminent theorists, and we have evolved some of our own also." Then the owners ask: "Do you know of anyone who has built a ship of the design you propose?" The reply is: "We do not know of any organization that has built and operated successfully a ship of the design we propose." The next question is, "What are the outstanding features of your proposed ship?" The answer is: "It will have an entirely new motive power. It will be motivated by 'use instead of profit.' Other outstanding features will be subsidiary to that."

Then another question: "Have you your plans and specifications with you? We should like to see them." The reply is: "We have not. It should be sufficient for you to know that the building will be planned. We will give you particulars, reveal the plans and specifications after you have given us the contract, first, to build the ship, and second, to man it; and the contract is to be irrevocable for five years." The owners then say: "But we need full particulars of your plans before we can entrust you with such an important task. You propose four things: (a) That we sink our present ship; (b) that we discharge our existing crews; (c) that we employ you to build another ship; (d) that we engage you to man the ship when it is built. Therefore we think it is only reasonable that you should give us fairly full particulars of your plan." The salesman haughtily replies: "I would have you know, gentlemen, that I and my organization are not in the dock. It is your old ship that is on trial. We refuse to make any further explanations until the contract is signed and sealed."

Would he or should he get the order? I think not. Imagine awarding a contract to build a new ship to a company that discloses no plans!.

I see it is eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, February 24, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): I desire to lay on the table report of work done and expenditures made during the year 1932, to August 31, and during the calendar year 1932, in connection with acts, chapters 18 to 22 inclusive and chapters 24 to 30 inclusive, respecting the construction of Canadian National Railway lines; also report of work performed and expenditures made to December 31, 1932, together with estimated expenditures for the year 1933, under chapter 12 of the statutes of Canada, 1929, respecting certain terminal facilities and other works at and in the vicinity of Montreal.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): I lay on the table four orders in council passed pursuant to relief legislation.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC BILL

Mr. SPEAKER: I have received a message from the Senate informing this house that the Senate has passed a bill intituled an act respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system, and for other purposes.

[Mr. Butcher.]

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

PRECEDENCE FOR GOVERNMENT BUSINESS ON MONDAY AND WEDNESDAY

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I apprehend, in view of what was said by the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) the other day, that as the debate on a motion before the house had not concluded, it would meet his views if the words "on and" in the following motion which I am about to move were omitted, so that the motion would become effective only on Wednesday. The motion as it stands reads:

That on and after Monday, the 27th instant, and all subsequent Mondays and Wednesdays till the end of the session, government notices of motion and government orders shall have precedence over all other business except questions and notices of motions for the production of papers and private bills on Mondays.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): If my right hon. friend would so amend the motion we should be obliged.

Mr. BENNETT: By leave of the house I move that the motion be adopted, deleting the words "on and," so that it shall become effective on Wednesday.

Motion as amended agreed to.

WORLD ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): A few days ago I mentioned the desirability of printing the draft annotated agenda of the monetary and economic conference, and I suggest that the house might consider the number of copies which it would be advisable to print. It will not be printed on expensive paper. Possibly some hon. members would like to send copies to their constituents, and, if it were acceptable, I was thinking of 700 copies in English and 350 in French. The motion can stand until Monday. If the leader of the opposition and those who sit to the left are of the opinion that the number should be increased we will wait until Monday before putting the motion.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Whatever number my right hon. friend decides upon will be acceptable to us.

SINO-JAPANESE DISPUTE

STATEMENT OF CANADA'S POSITION PRESENTED TO THE ASSEMBLY OF THE LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): In view of the widespread interest in connection with the meeting of the assembly of the League of Nations to-day, I think it well to indicate to the house what transpired this morning. The assembly met this morning and voted unanimously—Siam abstaining—to adopt the report of the committee of nineteen. The Japanese delegate spoke and voted against the adoption of the report and, after the vote was taken, withdrew from the assembly. He made no statement regarding the withdrawal of Japan from the league.

It is understood that the assembly will meet again this afternoon. In order that the information may be available, some hon. members having asked me questions as to the constitution of the committee of nineteen, I think it well to place that information on Hansard. The committee of nineteen has been following developments of the Sino-Japanese dispute on behalf of the special assembly. The special assembly were selected from the following countries: United Kingdom; France; Germany; Italy; Spain; Poland; Czechoslovakia; Mexico; Norway; Irish Free State; Guatemala; and Panama. These countries are all as a matter of fact members of the council, and representatives from the following countries were selected to complete the committee of nineteen: Switzerland; Turkey; Portugal; Colombia; Hungary; Sweden and Belgium.

On Saturday evening last the Canadian advisory officer was instructed by cable to make the following statement at the meeting of the assembly, which was then expected to meet on the 21st but which as a matter of fact did not meet until to-day:

His Majesty's government in Canada have learned with regret that the efforts to effect a settlement of the Sino-Japanese dispute carried on under paragraph 3 of article 15 of the covenant have not been successful. They recognize that with the exhaustion of its efforts for conciliation the committee of nineteen was bound to proceed to the preparation of a report in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 4 of article 15. The report, which is now before the assembly, represents the unanimous and considered judgment of an informed and impartial committee, jealous of preserving the peace of the world.

The Canadian government have, from the inception of the dispute, supported every effort to secure its solution by peaceful means; they have scrupulously refrained from word or deed that might have jeopardized the prospects of peaceful settlement, and they have withheld judgment on the facts and merits of the dispute, in the belief that premature or injudicious comment might have prejudiced the success of our collective efforts to restore that good understanding between China and Japan upon which peace in the Far East depends.

In accepting the report of the committee of nineteen, the Canadian government desire to express their appreciation of the loyal and patient perseverance with which the committee have pursued its anxious task. The public opinion of the world, in which they believe lies the final and effective sanction for the maintenance of the integrity of international agreements, has watched the committee's exploration of every possibility of a peaceful settlement between the parties to the dispute, and it has recognized reluctantly that its efforts have been unrewarded.

The Canadian government believe that in the recommendations of the report will be found a solid basis for the peaceful development of the Far East and they earnestly hope that the parties to the dispute may eventually accept a regime embodying such recommendations and thereby reconcile their conflicting claims and interests in so far as reconciliation is humanly possible.

It is not necessary to emphasize the gravity of the decision which the states members of the league must take to-day. The faith of the world in the possibility of peaceful settlement has been shaken; if it is destroyed, the structure of security slowly built up on the foundation of scrupulous respect for international covenants will be undermined. As that structure shows signs of strain, the prospects of reducing the world's burden of armaments are endangered and the task of achieving international economic cooperation is magnified.

For these reasons we must vote for the adoption of the report.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, while the statement read by the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) probably does not call for any expression of view at this stage, I deem it important to indicate at once to my right hon. friend that we on this side are in hearty accord with the tenor of the statement he has just read.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a word for the members in this corner. While some of us may have regretted that certain action was not taken earlier, nevertheless we heartily endorse the statement which has just been read.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

UNEMPLOYMENT CONDITIONS AT TRANSCONA, MAN.

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address an interrogation to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) concerning the town of Transcona. This is embodied in a brief telegram which, with your permission, I will read. It is as follows:

The unemployed of Transcona are desirous of bringing to your attention the deplorable conditions existing in Transcona for the unemployed scale of relief. Very inadequate clothing. No clothing for women, children and very little for men. Quality very poor for sub-zero weather. Medical attention practically nil.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should ask his question, not read a communication. The communication could have been sent to the minister in charge without it being necessary to read it in the house.

Mr. BENNETT: There is nothing to indicate that it is correct.

Mr. HOWDEN: Is the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) or the government aware of the conditions which exist in the town of Transcona and, if so, in view of the fact that the federal government is subscribing largely to the relief of these people are they in a position to take such steps as will ameliorate or relieve the conditions?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, the federal government has not in any way changed its attitude towards those in need throughout Canada. It has been said by myself on many occasions in this house that the federal government is ready and willing, and I trust will always be able, to make contributions from time to time towards the relief of those in need as the need arises. Serious difficulties have arisen in the province of Manitoba. For instance, in the city of Winnipeg our department is advised, and I have no reason to doubt the correctness of the advice, that in their relief operations the province of Manitoba have not subscribed any money whatever since last May to take care of the provincial share of relief. The dominion's contribution has been made with regularity as accounts have been presented and I believe the dominion's share has been turned over to the city. The city has been obliged to finance the province of Manitoba with respect to their share. I am afraid that the same condition probably exists in Transcona although I have no complete or detailed information in that regard. I am not going to criticize those administering the affairs of the province but they have a very distinct responsibility and I am just wondering whether they are putting forth every effort available to them to assume and discharge the responsibility which is theirs. I shall inquire into the matter referred to by the hon. member and if there is anything further that this government can do, they will do it.

PENSION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren). A short time ago a question was asked as to whether it was the intention of the government to introduce during this session legislation based upon the report of the committee which has just completed its labours in investigating the administration of the Pension Act. The answer then given was that the matter was under consideration and I should like to know whether a decision has been arrived at and, if so, if we can expect the introduction of pension legislation during this session?

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): The answer I gave a week or two ago was that I thought it was likely that legislation would be brought down. The position is still the same.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: A final decision has not been arrived at?

CANADIAN EXCHANGE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes) with reference to a statement which appeared in the Wall Street Journal of February 2. It reads:

> Montreal funds moved up to a high for the day of 15⅝ per cent discount, which compares with Wednesday's low in London of 20 per cent. It was rumoured throughout the market that one of the large Canadian banks was giving support to the exchange, but whether it was operating for the account of the Canadian government could not be ascertained.

I should like to know if this bank was operating on behalf of the Canadian government or whether the government has conducted any such operations in support of our exchange in New York?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): I have not seen the article in question but I have no hesitation in assuring my hon. friend and the house that a transaction of that character would be solely a banking transaction, it would have no reference to the government at all.

CHARTERED BANKS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): On November 17 an order was passed in connection with the returns made by the chartered banks. When may we expect this return to be brought down?

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): I will make immediate inquiry. I imagine that the return must be ready and I shall probably be able to bring it down on Monday.

SALARY DEDUCTION ACT

PROPOSED CONTINUATION OF DEDUCTION OF TEN PER CENT FROM INDEMNITIES AND SALARIES

The house resumed, from Tuesday, February 7, consideration in committee of the following proposed resolution—Mr. Rhodes—Mr. LaVergne in the chair:

That it is expedient to continue in force the provisions of the Salary Deduction Act 1932, until the 31st day of March, 1934, and to provide that the provisions of the said act shall apply to the indemnities of members of the Senate and House of Commons for the session of parliament which commenced on the 6th day of October, 1932.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I had not intended to say anything further on this resolution; I rather meant to say what I have to say when the bill comes up for second reading. The reason I speak now is that I want to refer to matters to which the Minister of Finance alluded to when the resolution was before the house over two weeks ago. In the first place, at page 1892 of Hansard, he is reported to have said:

There was no undertaking with respect to what might or might not have to be done in the future.

May I refer to what took place last year when the Prime Minister is reported in the Evening Citizen of February 26, as having said:

We must economize wherever we can and in seeking to save $8,000,000 in civil service salaries we seek the loyal, even the enthusiastic support of the civil servants with the government of your country and mine. We ask the sacrifice of one year's self-denial on your part not as civil servants but as fellow citizens who have with us a like responsibility to our country.

That applied not only to civil servants but to all of those who come within the four corners of the bill. I find lower down in the report the Prime Minister said:

That task requires every ounce of energy we all have and we think if we look to 60,000 of our fellow citizens to sacrifice for one year for Canada we feel we are not asking too much.

Then lower down, under heavy captions:

Help For A Year

We are asking those with a secure tenure of office to help us for a year, since the bill calls for a reduction in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1933, and we believe we are not unreasonable.

May I turn to Hansard of last year at page 812 where the Minister of Finance is reported as having said:

But what we are doing is this. We are asking that, while the country is in dire need—

Then I interrupted, saying:

You are not asking.

Then the minister continued:

—of a contribution from all its citizens, the civil service shall make a fair contribution for one year only. The bill will provide that it shall apply for one year only, and at the end of that year the salaries of civil servants will be precisely what they were but for the intervention of the bill.

As I said a moment ago, that applied not only to civil servants but to all of those who come within the four corners of the bill. There was an undertaking, a promise, that that would be for one year only. Nothing was said at the time as to what would happen if conditions were what they were last year or worse, but there was a solemn undertaking and promise that all of those who were mulcted to the extent of ten per cent last year would not have the same thing done to them this year. When I have finished the observations I wish to make at this time, I should like the Minister of Finance to answer this question: Will he make the same promise this year? Will he undertake in the same terms as he did last year, that this will be for only one year or for what period will it be? I fear much that as long as this administration is continued in office, every year they will trot down that old dead horse of the previous year, the old dead statute which was resuscitated the former year and which will be resuscitated next year and have the same force and effect again.

I want to refer to page 1876 of Hansard of this year. I do not know particularly why the Minister of Finance should have gone out of his way to say what he said, summing up conditions in Ottawa:

I know of no city in Canada where there is less distress and want than is to be found in this very city.

I am not here to make public to Canada the state of distress that exists in Ottawa and it would have been better had the minister, with his usual courtesy, not mentioned conditions at all. It seems to me that there is some reason, some motive in putting forward this idea, so that the city may be hit hard. There is in Ottawa suffering just as keen and deep as in any other Canadian city, but if those actual sufferings and miseries are not as obvious as they are in other cities, the credit is due to the city council, the welfare bureau, social organizations and other charitable institutions here which, without ostentation or glory to themselves, are doing so nobly and well the work for which they were constituted. Let me, however, tell the Minister of Finance that one-sixth of the population of this capital city, right within the shadow of the Peace tower, is on relief.

There are 4,200 families being cared for as regards food, rent, fuel and clothing. There are 21,000 people on relief. In December, 1932, it cost the city more than $143,000 in relief and during 1932 it cost Ottawa $1,000,000. Let me tell the minister that 6,000 unemployed are registered and that they are being looked after. But if this suffering and misery is not seen by him, this is because of the way in which the city council and the relief administration are looking after this work. In the city of Ottawa our citizens have always responded to the demands of charity. In 1931 the civil servants themselves gave $24,000 to city relief, and although they had received a cut in their salaries in 1932, when the city asked for $50,000, the total subscription of the city was $100,000, of which the civil servants, notwithstanding the cut, subscribed $29,000. So it ill becomes the Minister of Finance to say that this city is not hurt and that there is less suffering in Ottawa than in any other place in Canada.

It is not only the civil servants themselves who are hurt; I am not speaking for that particular class alone. I am speaking for the whole city of Ottawa. Here we have a population of 140,000 people, with about 10,000 civil servants. Ottawa is not a manufacturing or industrial centre. It is a city which has been built up along a special groove because for years the seat of government has been here and there has been a steady flow of money from the government to the citizens of Ottawa. The people of Ottawa, the merchants and professional men, the tradesmen and others have all become accustomed to the steady flow of money, and no worse blow could be dealt to the whole city than to hit at the very root of its purchasing power. It is quite true that in nearly every city of this Dominion people have to suffer these cuts, but in this city, because of the special flow of money in a special way, people have been in the habit of arranging their budgets and cutting their sails according to their cloth, making commitments according to their revenue, more so than is the case in other cities where the flow of money has not been so steady. In manufacturing and industrial centres, where it is true the wage-earners have to cut their sails according to their cloth, the same commitments were not made as were made here. That is why the city of Ottawa is being hurt to a greater extent than any other city.

The $2,500,000 which is cut, if there is a turnover of three or four or in some cases ten to one, represents a decrease in circulation in this particular city of over eight or nine million dollars. As I said last year, I shall not go into details, but I desire to say to the hon. Minister of Finance that he should not have singled out Ottawa for that particular reason. I desire to pay tribute to those who have so willingly looked after the misfortunes and sufferings of the people of Ottawa and have done it and are doing it so quietly and with so little ostentation that even the Minister of Finance has been unable to perceive it.

Mr. RHODES: I do not propose, Mr. Chairman, to reply at length to my hon. friend (Mr. Chevrier) because he has covered no new ground. I must, however, make reference to one or two of his observations.

In the first place, in quoting the respective statements of the Prime Minister and myself last year, he said that we were asking for a contribution for one year, and that there was an implied promise that the request would not ever be submitted again. We have covered that ground before, Mr. Chairman. The undertaking given by the Prime Minister and myself was given in absolute good faith and was in strict conformity with the facts. The bill in its terms spoke for itself in that respect. The request was made for one year. I have stated in the course of similar discussions upon this measure that no one would be more delighted than myself if the government did not feel called upon to ask for this sacrifice this year, and nobody would be more delighted than myself, and I am sure I speak for the government as a whole, if we were never called upon to ask for a similar sacrifice again. So I do not for one minute submit to the contention of my hon. friend that there has been the slightest suggestion of lack of good faith or any failure to implement any understanding which was made at that time.

When my hon. friend speaks of references of my own to the city of Ottawa, I must say to him in all deference that he put words into my mouth which I never uttered. He placed an interpretation upon my remarks which could not properly be placed upon them. I took down his very words. He said: It ill becomes the Minister of Finance to say that the city of Ottawa is not hurt. I not only did not use those words, but I did not use any language which could by any possibility be construed as meaning anything similar to what my hon. friend suggests. What I was doing was merely to indicate that relatively, as compared with other cities in Canada, Ottawa was in a more favourable position by reason of the fact that there was a larger proportion of its citizens in assured employment than was the case elsewhere in Canada. I was not for one moment suggesting that there was not suffering and distress and hardship in Ottawa in the case of individual families, and in the case of individuals not in the government service but who lack employment to-day because of conditions in the lumber industry, for instance, and other industries. I do not for one moment mean to suggest that there is not that type of individual suffering. My remarks had reference merely to the relatively favourable position of Ottawa as compared with other cities in this dominion.

I do not think that I need say anything further. I think I have replied to the two points upon which my hon. friend laid particular stress. I need only assure him that, as he knows, in the case of this bill we are asking for this sacrifice for this year. I sincerely hope that we shall not be called upon in another year to ask for a similar sacrifice. But if conditions in another year are similar to conditions to-day, it would not be at all unlikely that a similar contribution might be called for. But I sincerely trust that that will not be the case.

Mr. MacLEAN: There is one case that I should like to bring to the attention of the Minister of Finance in connection with this ten per cent deduction, and that is as it is applied to salaries of lighthouse keepers and others who are given living quarters in the lighthouse building. I do not know whether it was the intention last year that the act should be applied in the way in which it has been. For the sake of illustration let me give a concrete case, that of a lighthouse keeper receiving a salary from the Department of Marine of $400. A ten per cent deduction amounts to $40. But the lighthouse keeper may have his living quarters in the lighthouse building. He can live there if he wishes or he can have his own residence, but as he has to be on duty most of the time he generally lives in the building. The department values the living quarters at, say, $200 a year, and in making the deduction they take off, not ten per cent of $400, but ten per cent of $600. So they are actually taking fifteen per cent of his salary. They take ten per cent off $200 which he does not receive. I do not know whether that was the intention of the act last year, but I do know that that is the way in which it has worked in our part of the province at least. These men, as the minister well knows, are not receiving very high remuneration, and it is quite a hardship on them to be cut this additional amount. I should like to have an explanation from the minister.

Mr. RHODES: I shall be pleased to look into any individual case which my hon. friend cares to submit to me and I may be able to give a specific answer with respect to it when we are in committee on the bill. But I may say to him at once that the general rule which has been applied without exception is this, that where an allowance has been construed as constituting a portion of the salary, that allowance is subject to the deduction the same as is the salary proper. Where it is not, and there are numerous cases where that is so, the allowance is not subject to deduction. As my hon. friend realizes, in the case of a rule to be applied generally there will be instances here and there where individual injustices may arise. That is impossible in the application of any general rule. However if the hon. member will tell me of any particular instances I shall be glad to give them special attention.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Mr. Chairman, I assume that all hon. members regret the necessity which has actuated the government in bringing the present measure before the committee. It is unfortunate they feel that again this year the cut is necessary. Last year I supported the reduction because I believed it should be made. At the present time I do not intend to enter upon the reasons which some of us think have contributed to making cuts of this kind more necessary in the last year or two than they otherwise would have been. Upon looking at the paper this morning I find that the bank debits for the month which has just closed are much less than they were for the corresponding month a year ago. The trade returns for the year ending January 31, 1933, indicate that the trade of Canada has declined greatly.

There is no use beating about the bush. Money must come from somewhere, and I believe it is time the government took not only the measure now proposed but even more drastic measures in order to bring our budget to a point where it more nearly balances than it did last year. At that time I urged, and I repeat to-day, I do not think it is fair that those who are receiving small salaries should receive anything like the same percentage of cut as those who are receiving, say, $3,000 or more. Of course, some special consideration was given in connection with salaries under $1,200. As I pointed out to the Minister of Finance last year that consideration would seem to indicate that in the minister's view the smaller salaries should not be cut to the same extent as are the higher ones. I cannot, for the life of me, see why the same rule should not apply to salaries over $3,000 as compared with salaries under $3,000 and salaries over $2,000 as compared with salaries under $2,000. Surely people receiving higher salaries can better afford the cut than people receiving the lower salaries. I am not objecting to the cut on the lower salaries. There are many people in Canada to-day who, from present conditions, are suffering more than those people who have salaries. We know that there are many people without salaries, and out of work. In my view the people upon whom the burden of taxation comes most heavily are the agricultural class. Their returns have been cut not merely ten per cent or twenty per cent, but several times that.

At the present time I do not think it is necessary to enlarge upon the necessity for revenue. Whatever the cause may be, revenues are not coming in. I am satisfied that within a short time when the budget is presented by the Minister of Finance the people of Canada will be greatly disappointed. It is my view that the government are faced with the necessity of making an heroic effort to meet present difficulties. They must endeavour to see how nearly this year they can cut to the bone every expenditure which possibly can stand a cut, and also endeavour to make the increase in our public debt much less than it was last year.

So far as I am concerned, I am in favour of a graduated cut, ranging from five per cent on lower salaries to much more than ten per cent on salaries over $3,000. I believe such an arrangement would be fair, would produce more revenue and would do no injustice to the people involved. This is a serious time in our history. Sacrifices have to be made in many quarters. In my view the greatest sacrifices should be made by the people receiving the highest salaries.

Mr. HEENAN: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry I cannot endorse the views of the ex-Minister of Public Works, because in my opinion the reduction in purchasing power brought about by salary reductions only aggravates conditions now obtaining. Apart from that, during discussions on a similar measure introduced last year, I pointed out to the minister the many inequalities and unfair circumstances which would be created through the introduction of a general reduction in salaries and wages. I pointed out that a ten per cent reduction from the wages of government employees would be followed by a similar reduction in the wages of private employees doing similar kinds of work. That actually took place. As a result a general ten per cent cut has taken place as a result of the example set by the federal government.

First, on the Welland canal—I believe it was the Welland canal—the Minister of Railways and Canals reduced the wages of the men to the level obtaining under private employers. Following that the Minister of Finance introduced the bill of last year to reduce by ten per cent the wages of government employees. So that when the private employers found that government employees were receiving ten per cent less, they undertook to reduce the wages of their men by the same amount. So the reduction goes on, everlastingly. Last year when the former measure was under discussion I asked if the government, or any member of it, had investigated to ascertain what effect the ten per cent reduction would have on the whole country, if every employee had to take a ten per cent reduction. The Minister of Trade and Commerce replied that the government had not obtained sufficient information to reply to such a sweeping question. Since that time a year has elapsed, and I am wondering if the government is in a position now to tell the house how such a reduction would affect Canada. Surely it is about time we gave some thought to that phase of the matter. We have heard the slogans of "Canada for Canadians" and "Canada first, last and all the time." But, due to the policies of hon. members opposite we have reached the stage where we have nothing but Canada left for Canadians. Inasmuch as they have seen fit, through their trade policies, to shut out trade with practically all countries of the world, surely they ought to have considered the effect a reduction in the purchasing power of Canadians would have on Canada.

This morning I had occasion to refer to some figures, and I found that in the period from 1922 to 1929 the wages of men in manufacturing pursuits were increased by $302,000,000. I have not satisfied myself yet as to the reduction from 1929, but I am satisfied that we have lost the greater portion, if not all, of that $302,000,000 in wages in manufacturing industry. The wages of railroad men were reduced $74,000,000 last year as compared with 1929, and this year I am satisfied there will be a further reduction of $50,000,000 in railroad wages. Then we have about $35,000,000 less paid in wages in the mining industry of this country, and we have a reduction of $8,000,000, as the finance minister said, in the wages of civil servants. If we had this half billion, this $500,000,000, floating around, instead of trying to balance the budget, would it not have the good effect of restoring to this country a part of the prosperity which we have lost? It would to a large extent relieve the Minister of Labour of his worries, he would not have so many people on direct relief. We are saving it with one hand and paying it out with the other. In my opinion we are entirely on the wrong track in reducing the purchasing power of the people of this country. I am sorry that this government has seen fit to lead the way. The Prime Minister, boldly stated his position, when he introduced the measure; he said someone in this country had to lead the way in order to economize. And they surely did lead the way; practically every employer in Canada followed the example of this government. The railroad companies put in a ten per cent reduction in wages, and now they are asking for a further ten per cent reduction. I do not know where we are going in this regard, taking the purchasing power from people with one hand and putting as many on direct relief with the other. I am sorry this government cannot see their way to turn back. I remember hearing the present Prime Minister and the Minister of Railways, and I think the Minister of Justice and the Minister of Trade and Commerce, standing boldly here when they were on this side of the house, and telling the government that the wages paid to certain civil servants were not sufficient to keep them and their families in decency. If that was a fact then, how do they expect them to live in decency now, with this ten per cent reduction? I just bring this up to point out that there should be some end to these reductions in wages, in order that the purchasing power of this country may be maintained. I am going to reserve my remarks until we reach second reading, or get into committee on the bill, but I want to impress upon the Minister of Finance the unfairness of reducing prevailing rates, still further, because it is just an encouragement to private employers to follow the example of the government in that respect.

Mr. MITCHELL: I want to make just a few observations on this bill at the resolution stage. Frankly I am opposed to the proposal to extend the ten per cent reduction in wages. I am ready to admit that it is psychologically sound, but economically I think it is absolutely unsound. The government might at least comply with the conditions laid down by its economists in the Labour department as to what is considered an ample standard of living. Ninety per cent of the civil servants work for less than $1,200 a year; the Labour department through its publication The Labour Gazette lays it down that the budget for the average family of five should be $1,600 a year. Paul Douglas of the Labour Economist of the United States found in 1918 that when the family income was less than $1,400 a year the family did not get enough to eat. To-day we have this paradox, that while the wages of labour are being constantly reduced the wages of capital are being increased. It must be apparent to all members of this house that you cannot go on increasing the wages of money and at the same time reducing the wages of men and women engaged in industry and agriculture. I often wonder what would happen if a bill were brought down by the government having for its purpose a reduction of say ten per cent in interest rates to the bondholders of this country. If in the opinion of this government it is necessary that the living standards of the men and women of this great dominion should be lowered I think it is perfectly logical that the same argument should apply to the charges on money.

Last year we said that the government by adopting this policy would be setting a bad example to employers of labour. I want to show how this has worked out by reading some correspondence that has passed between the secretaries of some labour unions and the government of Canada. This is a letter from the Bricklayers', Masons' and Plasterers' International Union, Branch 17, Peterborough, Ontario, to the president of the union in Toronto:

December 30, 1932.

Dear Sir,

I wish to protest against the action of our government in paying off two of our members at 72½ cents per hour on a job for the Trent canal system at Burleigh Falls which is in our jurisdiction. The job lasted about fifteen days.

The president of the Toronto local got in touch with the Minister of Railways and Canals, and received the following reply:

January 23, 1933.

Dear Sir,

With further reference to your letter of the 14th instant, complaining that the rate of 72½ cents per hour was paid union members at Burleigh Falls when the regular, recognized rate is 80 cents, I have been looking into this and am informed that the arrangement made with (the men's names) for bricklaying work at Burleigh Falls stated that the department's rate was 80 cents per hour, less 10 per cent, and they accepted employment on this basis without objection. Eighty cents is the accepted and prevailing rate in that locality and is subject to the ten per cent reduction under the statute.

Then when we go further east we have a condition existing in Halifax. This is from a letter addressed to Mr. Tom Moore, president of the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada.

When the government's policy of the eight hour day in all government service was put into effect it resulted in the machinists employed in the naval dockyard in Halifax being paid at a 75 cents per hour rate, which I might say was in line with the prevailing rate at the time. Then, during the first part of 1932, a survey was taken of prevailing rates in Halifax which showed 70 cents as being the prevailing rate, following which survey the National Defence reduced the rates to 70 cents per hour for machinists on April 1, 1932. Then the ten per cent deduction was made effective. This reduced the machinists to 63 cents per hour. Now soon after this the Halifax firms employing machinists took advantage of this rate and reduced the rates in keeping with the dockyard, with the result that now, should a survey be taken of Halifax, I believe that the result would show quite a shrinkage in the prevailing rate, so should the National Defence again reduce to the prevailing rate and then the ten per cent deduction on top of that I hardly know just where it will all end. It just seems to be an endless chain with the government setting the pace.

You can see from the position taken by the Labour department that as soon as the ten per cent deduction is put into operation in connection with the prevailing rate the employers counter with a further reduction in wages. Assuming that this ten per cent reduction will again go into force, I submit that some amendment should be included in the bill to protect the men who are under agreement with contractors outside the Dominion service. You can readily see that the thing feeds on itself. I know of many organized trades that have taken reductions amounting to as much as thirty per cent since the depression started, and under the ruling of the government in relation to this bill they have to take another reduction of ten per cent in their pay. I would leave that thought with the minister with a view to having the government take action along the line I suggest. I would point out that a precedent has been set in the case of engineers and others employed by the Vancouver harbour board which should help us in getting a general order. Mr. Ward explained how the treasury department rescinded the ten per cent deduction when it was shown that the harbour employees had taken a ten per cent deduction effected by agreement, following the ten per cent wage deduction on railways.

Mr. FOURNIER: In July, 1930, the right hon. gentleman who now occupies the position of Prime Minister laid down his platform in so far as it affected the civil servants of Canada. This is what he said on that occasion, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen at the time:

> By personal investigation I have come to the conclusion that the fair way to deal with the civil service is, first, to appoint to the Civil Service Commission a member of the civil service; second, to maintain the merit system and rigidly adhere to it—something the present administration has not done; third, to hold a survey of all positions for reclassification and promotions; fourth, to amend the Superannuation Act and remedy its defects; and I will see that this is done at once and not nine years after taking office.

At that time conditions were perhaps not as bad as they are to-day, but in what I have quoted you can see what the Prime Minister's attitude to the civil service was, and two years later he has not made the modifications to the act as he proposed when he laid down the platform of his party. Instead, as Minister of Finance, he first introduced this resolution to deduct ten per cent from the salaries of all civil servants. The reasons he gave at the time were these. He said he believed that the deduction was essential to enable this country (a) to have a balanced budget; (b) to maintain the national credit; and (c) to meet the tremendous obligations of the country. Has the deduction in salaries met those conditions which the Prime Minister deemed essential? What is the answer to the first? Has it helped to balance the budget? I do not think it has succeeded very well. The amount secured from the deduction is around $8,000,000, and here I would quote from the Ottawa Journal of February 22, 1932, to show what that newspaper thought of the decision to impose upon the civil servants the obligation of balancing the budget:

> It must balance its budget. But isn't the answer to that simply that it is hardly fair to ask so much of sacrifice from one class—a moderately paid civil service class? The income tax exempts a married man up to $3,000. That being so, what is the justification of a demand that a civil servant getting $1,200 should contribute $60, which is what will be taken from him even with this superannuation deduction? We know what the answer will be. It will be that there are scores of thousands of persons without jobs, scores of thousands who would be glad to contribute $60 or more if they could get their hands on $1,200. It is no answer. The right comparison is not between a man with a job and a man without a job, but between two men who have jobs and who are getting the same salaries. Who have the same incomes, but whose contributions toward balancing the budget are unequal.

That is one of the reasons why we oppose this measure. Another reason is that family obligations are not taken into consideration. The flat deduction of ten per cent applies to salaries of $1,200 and up without making any distinction between single and married persons in the service. Our income tax act makes a difference in the taxation levied on fathers of families; there is a specified amount for each child under the age of twenty-one. To be just to the civil service, why not apply in this case the principle applied in the Income Tax Act and relieve fathers or heads of families to the extent of family charges and obligations? This would be far more equitable. Another reason for opposing the deduction is that twenty-five or thirty per cent of the civil servants reside in Ottawa and Hull, so that twenty-five per cent of the deduction is supported by a population of between 150,000 and 160,000 people. Other reasons have been given by hon. members—for example, that this reduction in salaries is setting a bad example to corporations and other employers who followed suit after the resolution was passed at the last session. I am still opposed to this legislation.

Mr. HOWDEN: I do not oppose this measure. Like the hon. member for West Middlesex, who spoke a little while ago, I believe that those in receipt of larger salaries should contribute a larger percentage of those salaries than those who are less able to afford it. I rise now however for a totally different reason. To-day it is not one-fifth or one-fourth or one-third of the citizens of this country but practically the whole Canadian citizenship who are suffering from the results of the present period of depression. There is no doubt about it that a very large percentage of the Canadian people are in decidedly restricted circumstances, some of them facing great privation and others in a great many instances facing starvation. I say that advisedly, and I bring to the support of my remarks some letters and telegrams I have here which I shall read to the house in a moment.

One letter I have is from the mayor of St. Boniface. I would point out that St. Boniface is a little city in the province of Manitoba, across the Red river from the city of Winnipeg. It is as old as Winnipeg but unlike that thrifty, enterprising city, St. Boniface did not make the same headway. Nevertheless it is a Canadian city, part of Canada, and is entitled to just as much consideration from this government and from Canada at large as any other city, since we are joined in a common confederation. In that city at the present time, as in many other cities in the west, the people are in abject want. Measures for relief have fallen down decidedly and I have made it my business during the last week or so to try to do everything in order to provide these people with the succor which they deserve. It would appear that they are all barren of relief. I have a letter from the mayor of the city of St. Boniface, along with other telegrams which I propose to read. The letter reads:

I have not up to this time, noon, received any reply to my telegram to you—

That was to me.

—of the fifteenth nor to that directed to the Minister of Finance on the same date, a copy of which I annex hereto for your information.

I may state that if something is not done in the course of a few days towards assisting us for relief purposes we shall have to call upon the Manitoba government for police protection as the merchants cannot possibly continue to advance further relief.

Since wiring you and the Minister of Finance, it is only through the cooperation of some of the wholesalers who have agreed to supply some of the retailers for a few days longer that we have been able to carry on.

As stated in my telegram to the Hon. Mr. Rhodes, we have exhausted every avenue to avoid the trouble that will surely arise immediately merchants discontinue to supply goods.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the hon. member is wandering away from the resolution which concerns the civil servants and the members of the House of Commons.

Mr. HOWDEN: I wish to say that although I am heartily in accord with this measure I do not think the measure is sufficient to meet the needs of this country.

The CHAIRMAN: We should adhere strictly to the resolution. There will be other resolutions which will cover this ground.

Mr. GUTHRIE: The next one.

Mr. MITCHELL: Has the government under advisement the making of some amendment to this bill to take care of those men and women under agreement and subject to the prevailing rate of wages as laid down by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon)?

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Heenan) as well as the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) base their arguments upon the assertion that the government has reduced the salaries of the civil servants by ten per cent. I do not propose to cover at length the ground I covered when we discussed this matter last year, but I should like to impress upon hon. members that this is in no sense a reduction of salary. We are asking for a deduction of ten per cent from the salaries of the civil servants because of the exigencies of the condition which faces Canada along with the rest of the world. The accuracy of my statement is borne out by this circumstance, that if this bill should pass, at the end of next year the salaries will be just exactly as they were before this bill was introduced. It is not a reduction in salary.

Mr. EULER: It is, temporarily.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friends might just as well advance the argument that because of the income tax, an individual's salary would be reduced. This is a taxation measure.

Mr. EULER: That is playing with words.

Mr. RHODES: I have gone over this ground time and time again and it seems to me that the proof of my assertions are in the circumstance, as I have already stated, that when this bill lapses next year the salary of every one of the civil servants will be in precisely the same position as it was at the time this bill was introduced.

Mr. EULER: What about this year?

Mr. HANBURY: What is the difference; what is the point involved?

Mr. RHODES: The difference is this: If it was a salary reduction the salaries would remain at ninety per cent of what they were originally, whereas, on the other hand, when this bill expires the salaries will be just exactly the way they were.

Mr. RALSTON: It is a salary deduction.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth (Mr. Ralston) with that refinement which is so characteristic of him wants to whittle words with me. He can call it deduction or reduction just as he likes, but it makes not a particle of difference to the argument I make, assuming that my argument is sound.

Mr. RALSTON: I am calling it what my hon. friend calls it, a deduction.

Mr. RHODES: I still repeat that it makes not the slightest difference what you call it. My argument may be either good or bad, but that would have no bearing upon its merits. In my judgment I think my argument is good but hon. gentlemen opposite may disagree.

The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River went out of his way—I do not think it was quite proper—to attempt to lay the blame for the present condition of world trade upon the policies of this government. That is a very wide question and one which might properly be discussed in this house upon another occasion and with respect to another measure, but I do not like the statement of my hon. friend that we had shut out all trade from Canada to go unchallenged. Let me say to him that relative to the trade of the world the trade of Canada is just as high as it ever was in the history of this country. That is all I wish to say with respect to that one statement.

The hon. member for East Hamilton desired to know whether an amendment will be considered in connection with this bill which would prevent contractors having contracts with the government from reducing salaries. Apart altogether from the constitutional question as to whether or not we would be able to do that, I would point out to my hon. friend that this bill has no bearing upon the case. This bill deals only with those who are civil servants.

Mr. MITCHELL: They are civil servants.

Mr. RHODES: If they are civil servants, then they will be subject to the deduction and if they are not, that would be a matter of contractual rights subject to the laws of the trade unions and of the province in question. In either case, I submit that my hon. friend's suggestion has no fitting reference to this bill.

There are many other things I could say but if I did so I would be only repeating what I said time after time last year when the matter was under discussion. I do not propose to take up the time of the committee any further, at all events at this stage.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I have no desire to embarrass the minister but I should like to have upon Hansard a correct statement of what was said at the last session. When we were discussing this matter before in committee I said to the Minister of Finance that at the last session he had certainly given the civil servants to understand that the deduction or reduction, which ever he wishes to call it, would be for one year only. My hon. friend said that no such undertaking was given by the government. I replied that I thought it had been given not only by himself but by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and I read at that time what I thought covered what had been said so far as the Prime Minister was concerned. I should like to read to my hon. friend the statement he made on February 7, which appears on page 1892 of Hansard. He said:

> In reply to my right hon. friend, the leader of the opposition, I cannot agree with him in his point of view that a promise was broken by our having brought this measure in this year. The deduction was made last year for a period of one year. There was no undertaking with respect to what might or might not have to be done in the future.

During the discussion in committee last year, the hon. minister is reported on page 812 of Hansard of March 4, 1932, as follows:

> We are asking that, while the country is in dire need of a contribution from all its citizens, the civil service shall make a fair contribution for one year only. The bill will provide that it shall apply for one year only, and at the end of that year the salaries of civil servants will be precisely what they were but for the intervention of the bill.

My hon. friend is only playing with words if he seeks to make out that that was not an undertaking that the deduction would be for one year only. Salaries of civil servants would be where they were two years ago, but for my hon. friend continuing his deduction which is equivalent to a reduction, or continuing his reduction which is equivalent to a deduction, whichever way you wish to put it. What the civil servant is concerned about and is finding out is that he is getting 10 per cent less than his salary was before last year's measure was introduced while he was told by my hon. friend last year that at the end of the fiscal year he would be exactly where he was the year before. I realize that the minister has been disappointed in his expectations; I believe he hoped and genuinely believed that, at the end of one year, conditions would have so improved that it would not be necessary to make this deduction for another year. I trust, however, he will not attempt to say that he did not leave the impression that the deduction would be for only one year. I think he has learned wisdom and is now taking the wiser course of giving no undertaking along that line, so that next year he will be free to deal with the matter as circumstances permit. But by his statement of last year he misled the public service into believing the deduction would be for one year only, and now he finds it necessary to continue it for another year.

Mr. RHODES: An old colleague and old associate of mine in the house once made the wise statement: There is a great deal in the point of view; much depends on which end of the gun you happen to be at. My right hon. friend in stating to the house that last year I was playing with words—

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Was playing with words this year.

Mr. RHODES: Let me say with all deference to my right hon. friend that he is playing with words when he suggests the impression arises from the statement that never again would a similar deduction be asked.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I did not say that.

Mr. RHODES: This year we are asking for a contribution for one year only; that is all. I have said in the house at this session as I did last year, that I hope conditions will not again call for a similar sacrifice. But I cannot predict what world conditions will be a year hence, and I do not believe any hon. member would venture for a moment to make any such prediction. We hope they will be vastly improved.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does the minister mean to say that what civil servants are receiving as salaries to-day are what they were receiving before this legislation was introduced?

Mr. RHODES: If we do not ask for a similar deduction next year, that is where the civil servants' salaries will be.

Mr. MacINNIS: Taking up again the point raised by the hon. member for East Hamilton of certain government employees who work on a day basis, let me say that their wages are paid according to the prevailing rate in the particular district in which they live. The government under this bill pays them not the prevailing rate, but that rate less 10 per cent. As the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River pointed out, these men have already accepted reductions of possibly 30 per cent, but despite that 30 per cent reduction, if they work for the government, they must accept an additional 10 per cent reduction.

The CHAIRMAN: I think the resolution covers only members of the civil service and of the House of Commons. Working men under contract with the government would not come under it.

Mr. MacINNIS: I am not referring to men working for contractors who have tendered on government work. I am dealing with men paid directly by the government and, for that reason, subject to that reduction. If next week the employers in that particular district, because of the government paying less than they are doing, make another 10 per cent reduction, these men, if they are still government employees, may be asked to accept another 10 per cent reduction, so that the point may be reached when these men will be working merely for their board and when the government employs them, they will have to pay to the government 10 per cent of the value of their board. When the Minister of Finance realizes this point, I believe he will take steps to correct it. It has already been rectified at Vancouver as regards locomotive engineers and so forth, working for the Vancouver harbour commission, who, because of the 10 per cent reduction last year in the same way as the other railway employees, were exempted from the 10 per cent deduction under the act passed last year. When the Minister of Finance sees the justice of this point, I am sure he will be willing to consider it and take steps to safeguard the wages of men working by the day.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I differ from the Minister of Finance in his statement that the salaries, after the 10 per cent deduction will have expired next year, will be at the same level as though the deduction had not taken place? I am absolutely in accord with him when he says that this is not a salary reduction but a deduction. Had I considered it to be a reduction, I should have approached it from a different angle last year as well as this. I was satisfied that it was a salary deduction. It does not reduce the classification, but it deducts from that classification the sum of 10 per cent. The minister, however, forgets that last year these civil servants were entitled to statutory increases.

Mr. RHODES: Some of them.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Well, those who were entitled to statutory increases, did not get them; and those who were entitled to promotions did not get them. Except for a few items which I shall point out in the estimates when the time comes, promotions were stopped. It is not a fair deal that only certain civil servants should receive promotions and increases in salary. As a general rule, however, all promotions and all statutory increases have been stopped, though some promotions may have been made without increases in salaries. The minister is aware that statutory increases are given provided the employees by their conduct are worthy of them. But the vicious principle of the 10 per cent deduction is this, that when the salaries do come back to their 100 per cent a year hence, the civil servant forever will be minus the statutory increases he should have had; and if the government continues this for one, two or three years longer as conditions may warrant, then that civil servant will in the long run lose the benefit of superannuation on the basis of the higher salary that he should have received. Therefore, with all deference to the minister, it is a fallacy to say that when this act expires this or next year, the civil servant will be placed, during the infinitesimal period between the moment when the act expires and the next instant when the new act starts to operate, in the position that his salary will be exactly what it was last year. He is minus his statutory increases and also his promotion, and as long as this is kept up, the longer the injury to the civil servant will last. When these salary deductions cease, that is one point that will have to be impressed upon the government, namely, that some kind of recompense or salary readjustment will have to be made so that these statutory increases will not be left off and when the civil servant, five or ten years hence, is superannuated, he will not then lose the benefit of what should have been his higher salary by reason of his statutory increases. The minister understands what I mean, and I do not believe I need labour the point. If he does not see it, all he has to do is to consult the civil servants who themselves feel it and know what they will suffer in the long run, but I believe the minister sees the point.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend from Ottawa is not bringing to my attention any new phase of the effects of this bill. That particular matter has been most carefully considered, and there is no doubt that those civil servants who would otherwise be receiving their statutory increases will be affected.

Mr. CHEVRIER: And by more than ten per cent.

Mr. RHODES: I do not wish to refine words with my hon. friend. I simply wish to assert that my original statement is correct. The salary of these civil servants remains the same. All that it does do is to prevent an increase in salary, which is an entirely different thing.

Mr. RALSTON: The salary is the same but the pay is different.

Mr. RHODES: It has reference to a comparatively limited part of the membership of the civil service. Let me say just one last word. I have just as much sympathy for the civil service as my hon. friend from Ottawa, and I think he will be prepared to admit that, but we must not overlook the fact that there must be more or less a common sacrifice in these days, and while we are asking for a contribution of ten per cent from the civil service, the cost of living to-day is down twenty per cent as compared with four or five years ago. Relatively the civil servant in the city of Ottawa has much to be thankful for as compared with the tens of thousands of those who hitherto have been regularly employed but who to-day are in want and seeking relief. We are dealing with an extraordinary situation because of extraordinary world conditions, and we must always bear that in mind in discussing a measure of this kind. I might add that it is just a question whether we might not have been wiser to have asked for a larger contribution. I have had just as much criticism for not having sought to take more than ten per cent as I have had over this measure.

Mr. EULER: Why call it a contribution at all? You are taking it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is no contribution.

Mr. RHODES: I am quite sincere when I say that I do not wish to quarrel over words or phraseology with my hon. friends. I am trying to deal as best I can with the general idea.

Mr. EULER: Why not call a spade a spade?

Mr. POULIOT: May I ask what is the reason for the cut?

Mr. RHODES: The reason for the cut is that the revenues of this country, in common with those of every other country in the world, have shrunk in far too rapid a proportion as compared with the inescapable obligations to which the country is committed.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the hon. gentleman for his explanation, and I would ask him if his remarks, as reported at page 1875 of Hansard of February 7, really reflect what was in his mind. He said:

> Well, I shall take the hon. member's remarks in their most restricted form. When my hon. friend gave utterance to that sentiment I was thinking of those conditions, when families in Canada who have hitherto known comfort and some of them luxury are to-day in distress and in receipt of public charity, but have accepted it only as a last resort. I have been wondering what they will think of the hon. member for Témiscouata when, from his remarks, they must readily realize that he begrudges making his contribution along with the contributions which must be made through the sacrifies of all the people of Canada, if we are to get over the period through which we are passing to-day.

Every one of us knows that the cut is not intended for charity but that it is being made on account of the difficulties of the hour, and we are ready to do our share by making a levy on our own indemnities as well as on the salaries of the civil service as a temporary measure. I gather from the spirit rather than the letter of what has been said by my hon. friend that he did not intend to give the idea that any of the members were begrudging making their contribution to charity. I do not believe that that was the minister's intention, because if so the cut would not be made because of the difficulties of the hour but would really be a disguised means of enforced charity.

Mr. RHODES: What I had in mind was this. We are expending this year somewhere in the neighbourhood of $35,000,000 as a result of existing conditions. The contribution which we are asking under this measure amounted last year to $8,300,000. With reference to my remarks which the hon. member has just quoted, I meant that this was a contribution towards meeting these extra and unusual expenditures. I did not use the word charity, and I do not wish it to be implied that this money is to be earmarked specifically for such a purpose. It is rather a contribution towards meeting the general situation.

Mr. POULIOT: It was to make both ends meet.

Mr. McLURE: I should like to draw the attention of the Minister of Finance to what seems to me to be a slight unintentional discrimination against those civil servants who have not yet reached their maximum salary. I have in mind several men in the railway postal service, one of whom, for example, is drawing a salary of $1,500. There is a deduction of ten per cent, or $150. Now in the natural course of events this man would be getting an increase of $120 to bring him up to his maximum, so actually he is receiving a cut of $150 plus $120, or $270 per annum, whereas the civil servant who has reached the maximum for that grade of $1,800, is cut by only $180. There may be similar cases. In this particular case it seems there is a little discrimination against those who have not reached their maximum salary, and I draw it to the attention of the Minister of Finance in the hope that some way may be found of correcting this discrimination at the present time or in the near future.

Mr. RHODES: The point raised by my hon. friend was raised last year, and it has been raised again this year. It has to do with the question of statutory increases, which are part and parcel of the whole consideration which arises out of this measure. It involves the sum of about $800,000 a year to the treasury, which is no inconsiderable sum. If we had a full treasury we would not be considering this bill at all, but the conditions are very unusual. We have slender and insufficient revenues, and we must ask for a contribution all around. This is the contribution which we must ask from the civil service.

Mr. GARLAND (Carleton): Last year the government assumed the five per cent superannuation deduction for the lower grades. I would ask if it is the intention of the government to do that again this year.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, the bill is precisely the same in its effect this year as was the bill last year, and applies in the same way to that five per cent.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like to ask this question of the minister: If a civil servant retires in 1934 or 1935, will his pension be based on full salary, plus statutory allowances for 1932, 1933 and 1934, or will it be based on salary minus ten per cent, and minus statutory increases to which he would be entitled if this law had not been passed? May I go just a little farther: If the answer is that it will be based on the salary minus ten per cent, then this bill gives no authority to the government to regulate a pension in that way, because the Superannuation Act would have to be changed.

Mr. RHODES: I can answer one half of the hon. member's question at once. The superannuation which would be received in the instance he cites would be on the full salary, as if ten per cent had never been deducted. With respect to the question as to whether he would have the statutory increase which he otherwise would have received, I would have to make a more complete inquiry and give an answer when we reach the second reading of the bill.

Mr. HEAPS: I should like to emphasize the point raised by the hon. member for East Hamilton in connection with the reduction of pay of those who are employed by the government, but who accept the prevailing rate of pay. I am not quite sure whether or not the Minister of Finance really grasped the significance of the point raised by the hon. member.

Mr. RHODES: I grasped it all right.

Mr. HEAPS: I am sure the minister would not want to do an injustice to anyone. It means where persons already have possibly one or two reductions the government comes along and through the policy they have adopted in connection with all people engaged on government work, force a third reduction. We must remember that that third reduction would affect people who have already suffered two. Then we come to the other point raised by the hon. member for East Hamilton, namely that where men are receiving the prevailing rate of pay they suffer the ten per cent reduction. Immediately that ten per cent cut is put into effect other employers of labour come along and accept the wage rate set by the government, as was the case in Halifax where the rate of pay of certain employees in the Halifax ship yards had been seventy cents per hour, and on account of the ten per cent reduction was reduced to sixty-three cents per hour. Immediately that wage rate was set by the government, other employers followed the example and sixty-three cents became the prevailing rate. Now the government may turn around and say that sixty-three cents is the prevailing rate, that they will have to take a ten per cent reduction at that rate, and the result is that we have an endless chain.

I want to impress upon the minister the fact that where there is a prevailing rate set by contract between employer and employee, those contracts should be respected by the government and the prevailing rates maintained. I think the minister must see the injustice of the government's action, when it forces a reduction below the prevailing rate in the district, and when other employers in that district take advantage of the government's action. I would like the minister to take this all into consideration; that is all I ask him to do. I am thinking of the men outside the government service; there are very few affected so far as the government is concerned, but there are a great many affected who are not employed by the government. I ask not merely that the minister take the matter into consideration, but that some favourable action may be taken.

Mr. RHODES: There is nothing new in the point raised by the hon. member. However, unless he is prepared to take the stand that a man who is getting the prevailing rate should not make a contribution and the man who is not should make it, there is no point in his argument.

Mr. HEAPS: It has happened.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member is making an assertion that because a reduction is made, therefore it is because of the action of this government. That does not follow at all. I do not purpose to discuss the question as to whether an individual has the right to reduce wages or not. The fact of the matter is that wages have been reduced all over the world.

Mr. HEAPS: I have something before me I should like to read to the house.

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member may read it if he wishes. It may be the opinion of the people of Halifax, but it would not affect us.

Mr. HEAPS: It is not an opinion; if it was I would not read it. It is a letter sent by one of the officials of the machinists union to the president of the Trades and Labour Congress.

The CHAIRMAN: It does not apply to this matter.

Mr. HEAPS: Yes, it is in connection with the government shipyards at Halifax.

Mr. RHODES: There are no government shipyards at Halifax.

Mr. HEAPS: I refer to the naval dockyards at that place. I should like to read it:

When the government's policy of the eight hour day in all government service was put into effect it resulted in the machinists employed in the naval dockyards in Halifax being paid at a 75 cent per hour rate, which I might say was in line with the prevailing rate at the time—

The CHAIRMAN: Order. The people to whom the hon. member is referring would be employed by the harbour commission.

Mr. HEAPS: I am referring to employees at the naval dockyard.

The CHAIRMAN: I do not believe they would come under the civil service.

Mr. HEAPS: Then, Mr. Chairman, if you make it a constitutional point, I should like to ask why they are affected by the reduction in pay?

The CHAIRMAN: I believe I am right in my assertion.

Mr. HEAPS: The letter continues:

—then during the first part of 1932 a survey was taken of prevailing rates in Halifax which showed 70 cents as being the prevailing rate, following which survey the national defence reduced the rate to 70 cents per hour for machinists on April 1, 1932; then the ten per cent reduction was made effective, this reduced the machinists to 63 cents per hour. Now soon after this the Halifax firms employing machinists took advantage of this rate and reduced the rates in keeping with the dockyard with the result that now should a survey be taken of Halifax I believe that the result would show quite a shrinkage in the prevailing rate.

I think it is obvious the action of the government has tended to reduce the rate of pay in the whole of the Halifax district.

Mr. RHODES: It is a matter of opinion whether the action of the government has resulted in a reduction of the prevailing rate. It may be or it may not be. But it by no means follows that because this deduction is asked for it should fix for all time the prevailing rate of wages in Halifax.

Mr. HEAPS: If the government were able to make an exception in the case of Vancouver, why could it not do so for other parts of Canada?

Mr. RHODES: I know of no exception in regard to Vancouver.

Mr. HEAPS: The hon. member for East Hamilton mentioned it.

Mr. MITCHELL: I quoted the following in my remarks:

A precedent has been set in the case of engineers and others employed by the Vancouver harbour board which should help us in getting a general order. Mr. Ward explained to me how the treasury department rescinded the ten per cent reduction when shown that the harbour employees had taken a ten per cent deduction effected by agreement, following the ten per cent wage deduction on railways.

If the treasury board would take the same stand in connection with other parts of Canada concerning the prevailing rate, we would be satisfied.

Mr. RHODES: I think the circumstances are not similar. The hon. member is confusing those who are under a prevailing rate with those who are under a contract.

Mr. STEVENS: He referred to a railwaymen's agreement.

Mr. RHODES: The prevailing rate may or may not be the proper rate, but whatever the rate may be if you have an agreement the agreement should be respected. My hon. friend is confusing two things.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I would ask the minister if he has given consideration to the question of having a graduated scale, as was suggested from this side of the house last year.

Mr. RHODES: Yes, that matter was considered most carefully. If my hon. friend would glance at Hansard of last year he will see that it was fully discussed. I agreed with my right hon. friend the leader of the opposition at that time that if this were a permanent thing, or even intended to carry over a period of years, we should approach it from some such scientific point of view in all probability, although the matter was debatable. But it was a temporary thing. I pointed out at that time that although under the present plan there may appear to be injustices, there would be far more with a graduated scale, because when you come to the border line you find innumerable instances of hardship at every stage with a graduated scale, to a much greater extent than is the case with a uniform cut all the way through of ten per cent. While I am not contending that there is not much to be said in favour of the graduated scale, I say that, having regard to the conditions, on balance the argument was in our judgment more in favour of the ten per cent cut than of the graduated scale.

Mr. ELLIOTT: No doubt I am very dense, but if in the opinion of the minister a graduated scale would be a good thing for a permanent arrangement, I fail utterly to see why it would not be equally good for an arrangement that has already lasted one year, is now certain to last at least two years, and may possibly, according to the minister's own statement this afternoon, last for a longer period. I quite fail to see how the minister argues that if it were a permanent matter it would be equitable to have a graduated scale, but it is not equitable for a temporary matter.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend is not quite correct. I said that the subject was open to argument, but on balance we were of the opinion that the ten per cent reduction was fair on the whole.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Assuming, although we all hope conditions next year will be better, they continue to get worse and last for three years, and the minister decides to make the cut for another year, surely that would be sufficiently permanent to justify the bringing into operation of a graduated scale.

Mr. RHODES: Of course my hon. friend knows full well that it is impossible to argue from the particular to the general. But I will point out that there are some very grave difficulties in connection with the graduated scale which would involve, let us say, a twenty per cent cut on salaries above $3,000. Just by way of illustration, I have in mind one particular case, by no means an isolated case, where even under the depressed conditions that exist to-day an official of the civil service was offered a salary increase of over $2,500 with a company which would guarantee him employment for the rest of his life. That man's services were too valuable to this country, we would not let him go, we had to increase his pay. There are other similar instances. We could not make a general cut of twenty per cent covering that man's case, it would be unfair. But he does submit in the circumstances to the ten per cent deduction. I do not say that perhaps the balance of judgment may not be in favour of a graduated reduction, but I mention it to show the difficulties and ramifications one encounters in trying to work it out in actual practice.

Mr. HEENAN: I would like to be clear as to what the intention of the minister is with respect to the statutory increases. He said this is only for one more year. I was wondering how it would affect those who are entitled to a statutory increase at the end of the time, when we hope there will be no further necessity for these reductions. For instance last year there would be some civil servants entitled to $60 statutory increase, this year they would be entitled to a further $60, that is $120. If there was no necessity for this measure now, would those civil servants' salaries be advanced $120 from what they were at the beginning of these reductions?

Mr. RHODES: He will be retarded for two years in his advance. He may go to his maximum, in all probability will, prior to the question of superannuation arising, but the fact remains that his increases will be retarded for two years, there is no doubt about that.

Mr. VALLANCE: I would like to draw the attention of the minister to a type of civil servant who in the discussion of this resolution to-day has not had much consideration. I refer to a civil servant who is paid on a commission basis, as in the Post Office Department. For instance, in Ottawa, or in any large city, the postmaster received a salary. He will receive a ten per cent cut. The business done by that post office, like that in most others throughout the country, is not as extensive as it was in 1930. Still he receives the same salary, less ten per cent. A postmaster paid on a commission basis, where post office has a revenue of $3,500, gets seventy per cent on the first $1,000 worth of stamps sold, thirty per cent on the rest, and his rental is determined on the volume of business done. The falling off in business is probably equal to that of the post office where the postmaster is paid on a straight salary basis. So at present those postmasters who are paid on commission have taken a cut of about twelve per cent because of the shrinkage in business. Now the government proposes to add a ten per cent cut on top of that. Has that yet been given consideration by the minister? Here is one type of postmaster who has a set salary no matter what the revenue of the office, and he takes a ten per cent cut on that salary. The other postmaster's salary is determined by the revenue taken in by the office, and because of the same conditions both offices are doing less business, but one will take probably twenty-one or twenty-two per cent reduction under this act and the other only ten per cent.

Mr. RHODES: I think that case has been fully considered. If my hon. friend will allow me I will look up his argument in Hansard and deal with it when we come to the committee stage on second reading.

Mr. ILSLEY: I would like to ask about a class of civil servants having a house allowance in addition to their pay.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend perhaps did not hear me when that question was submitted earlier, and I think last year. The measure is this, that the deduction is made only in those allowances which are deemed to be a portion of the salary of the office. In other words there are allowances of a special character which are not subject to deduction. I have in mind several instances of that character. Only in the case where it has been deemed as constituting a portion of the salary of the office is it subject to deduction.

Mr. ILSLEY: I wish to bring to the attention of the minister a case I had in mind and which may have been adjusted. It is the case of a janitor who was receiving $25 a month and was furnished with living quarters by the government, the valuation placed upon these quarters being $25 per month. When the ten per cent cut came into effect his salary was reduced by $5. I took the matter up with the department, submitting that this was entirely unjust. It was based upon the theory that he was really receiving $50, $25 in living allowances and $25 salary, and that therefore the salary was properly subject to a reduction of $5. The result was that he got $20 per month thereafter instead of $25. The matter may have been adjusted because I am not acquainted with the present status of the case, but I should like to find out whether that class of cases is still being so treated, because I submit that it is entirely unjust. A little reflection will show that the salary cut is based upon the theory that prices have gone down, that the cost of living has gone down approximately ten per cent. If that is the case it would be perfectly just, if he were receiving $25 by way of allowance for living quarters, to reduce the $25 to $22.50; but where the government is itself supplying the living quarters, their value by hypothesis is only $22.50; therefore he should receive a total of $45, and his salary should be $22.50.

Mr. RHODES: I understand the point. It may be that there has been an injustice to that individual, but whether it be so or not the fact remains that he comes within that class of cases where the living allowance has been deemed to constitute a portion of the salary, and in that case it is subject to deduction.

Mr. ILSLEY: But he is not actually getting any living allowance; he is supplied with quarters. I submit that this is an injustice that should be remedied. Can the minister tell me whether in a case such as I have put to him the man will get $20 or $22.50?

Mr. RHODES: I can only answer in general terms, but I will make specific inquiry and give the hon. gentleman an answer on the second reading.

Mr. HANBURY: I think the civil servants and even members of parliament who are taking the deduction would accept it with much better grace if they felt that the people who are really benefiting from it were also suffering the deduction. I refer to those who carry bonds of the dominion. We have yet to see any demonstration or hear any suggestion on the part of the government that the bondholders are to participate to any extent in the cut. The minister pointed out to the hon. member for Ottawa that the cost of living had been reduced by twenty per cent, but he has not stated to what extent he proposes to reduce the income of the bondholder. There is one other point I wish to raise. In the estimates we notice that civil servants who should be superannuated on account of age are being carried as civil servants. I do not think that under present conditions, when the government are asking members of parliament and civil servants to take a reduction, any member of the service should be carried one day past the time due for his retirement.

Mr. RHODES: I may say to my hon. friend that the government would welcome any opportunity of borrowing its money at a much lower rate of interest; that is obvious. But I have no hesitation in saying to him at once that this government certainly will, and I think the dominion always should honour its contractual obligations. There will be no question of repudiating the contract we entered into when we borrowed money from the public on the issue of bonds. With respect to the other point raised by my hon. friend, as a general principle I agree with him entirely that civil servants would be far better off and opportunities for promotion would be increased to a greater extent if there were automatic retirement as provided. No government in the history of Canada has complied generally with that principle to a greater degree than has this government. The exceptions can be counted on the fingers of one's two hands, if not on one hand, in the whole of the public service. It would be unjust for me to indicate individuals, but I have in mind men who have had exceptional experience, men who have been thirty and forty years in the public service and who are being continued solely because of special qualifications and because of their fitness for the particular posts they occupy. Not to continue them would be to do an injustice to the public service, but subject to these few exceptions I am in entire agreement with the latter part of the hon. gentleman's remarks.

Mr. HANBURY: With reference to the retiring of civil servants after they have reached the age of superannuation, I agree with the minister that there may be exceptions, but I think they should be very exceptional exceptions.

Mr. RHODES: They are.

Mr. HANBURY: With reference to the minister's remarks regarding those who hold bonds of Canada and who after all are the beneficiaries of this sacrifice or reduction we are making, the minister's answer was rather obvious, I think; I had hoped he would say something different. After all the minister is quite aware that everything is not right in Canada to-day. There are many people who feel that a large group of citizens are not sharing their full responsibility although they are beneficiaries from the condition that exists, and that is something that the minister should attempt to answer.

Mr. RHODES: Perhaps my hon. friend did not mean to impart to his remarks as much asperity as his tone would suggest. I thought I gave a very clear answer to his suggestion. It may be that bondholders are not making the sacrifice they should. That is an entirely different question, however; but confiscation is not in our mind. I do not think there is anything I can add to the previous statement I gave and which I assure my hon. friend I made in good faith.

Mr. HEAPS: Has the minister a list of the persons employed by the government affected by the salary deduction and also the amount of salaries received?

Mr. RHODES: I am sorry I have not at the moment the figures under my hand. I gave them last year. As to the amount of salaries, it is a little over $80,000,000, the saving of ten per cent last year having amounted to $8,300,000. I should not care offhand to hazard an estimate of the number of civil servants but I will give the hon. gentleman that information at a later stage.

Mr. HEAPS: I understand that a large number of civil servants, about ninety per cent, receive $100 per month or less. It was so stated this afternoon. The minister said in reply to the member for Ottawa that this reduction, or whatever you choose to call it, is being made in order that the persons employed by the government may in some way help to tide over the extraordinary conditions through which we are passing at the present time, and help to pay for the large amount of money the government is compelled to find to take care of the unemployment situation here in Canada.

Mr. RHODES: That is part of it.

Mr. HEAPS: It seems strange that we should ask people receiving $100 per month or less to make that sacrifice for the men and women who happen to be out of work. As the hon. gentleman who preceded me pointed out, it would be far more logical to tax those who are better able to bear the burden. I do not wish to advocate the confiscation of wealth, but the minister said that he found it difficult to devise ways and means of getting at all the bondholders of this country. Last year we saved a little over eight million dollars in salaries, while the interest charges increased by thirteen million dollars. I think the government should take into consideration the taxing of the interest paid upon these bonds.

Mr. RHODES: They are taxed.

The CHAIRMAN: I think this is all out of order. Hon. members should confine themselves to the resolution, which deals with the civil servants and the members of the House of Commons and the Senate.

Mr. HEAPS: I am suggesting to the minister where he can find sufficient money to make it unnecessary to reduce salaries. I am sure the minister will be grateful for any suggestions I have to make.

Mr. RHODES: Wait for the budget.

Mr. HEAPS: In the meantime this ten per cent deduction may be made effective.

Mr. RHODES: It will.

Mr. HEAPS: If a twenty per cent tax was put upon the interest of these bonds it would yield about $20,000,000 and the minister would not have to go out of his way to take $8,000,000 from people who are receiving an already too small salary. I do not think there is much more I have to say as I would be only repeating what I said last year. I do not believe that a reduction of salaries to the extent of five or ten per cent, as the government has done this year, will materially benefit the finances of the country. On the contrary, it has had a very bad effect upon employers in other parts of the dominion. They have followed the action taken by the government and have reduced the salaries of their employees. In times like these I think we ought to attempt to increase the purchasing power, keep it at the absolute maximum. Where there is wealth, that wealth ought to be taxed to the highest possible point.

Mr. MITCHELL: Will the members of the new tariff board come under the provisions of this resolution?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Resolution reported, read the second time and concurred in. Mr. Rhodes thereupon moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 38, to amend the Salary Deduction Act, 1932.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUATION FOR ONE YEAR OF PROVISIONS OF RELIEF ACT, 1932

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour) moved that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to continue in force the provisions of the Relief Act, 1932, until the 31st of March, 1934.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is the minister going to explain this resolution?

Mr. GORDON: I would prefer that the resolution be allowed to go into committee and then I shall give my explanation and make some observations.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A number of hon. members wish to speak to the resolution, and will expect to hear something from the minister. They will probably wish to say a good deal more when we are in committee.

Mr. GORDON: I am content. I think it is desirable that I outline, perhaps at some length, the proceedings and actions which have been taken under the various relief measures, and particularly under the 1932 legislation, in order that hon. members may have the general picture.

As hon. members know, the act contemplates that the detailed report is not required to be filed until March 15, following the end of the fiscal year. The reason for this is obvious; it is in order that the information in the final report shall be as complete as possible. Under the unemployment relief act of 1930, which came into force in September of that year, provision was made for the carrying out of public works and the extending of direct relief to relieve unemployment until August, 1931. I intend to direct my observations mainly to the distribution of moneys by the dominion, provincial and municipal authorities, because I feel that if that is made known to hon. members they will then be better prepared to discuss matters when the bill comes up.

Under the 1930 act the Dominion government contributed to public works a total of $14,396,976.81; to direct relief, $3,547,135.08, and the cost of dominion administration was, $43,061.97. The total expenditure by the Dominion government under that act was $17,987,173.86. This expenditure by the Dominion government represented the carrying out in the dominion of public and other works to the extent of approximately $69,000,000. This total includes the contributions made by the provinces and the municipalities. The direct relief expenditure by the dominion, provinces and municipalities under this legislation totalled approximately $11,000,000. The relief works carried out under the provisions of the act afforded work to 337,633 individuals for varying periods, the amount of work thus afforded being 7,481,449 man days.

In August, 1931, the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, became effective and continued in operation until the first day of March, 1932, and under the provisions of the continuance act of 1932, the operation of the 1931 act was continued until May 1, 1932. Under the 1931 act, by agreement with the various provinces of the dominion, the federal government agreed to contribute the sum of $34,008,878.29 towards the carrying on of works by the provinces, municipalities and federal departments, the total cost of such works being approximately $81,000,000. When the act expired on May 1, many works which had been undertaken thereunder, and many commitments which had been made with the provinces and which had not been completed by that time but which, in the opinion of the provinces, it was altogether desirable should be carried to completion, made it necessary that an extension of time be given for this purpose, the gross costs of works thus extended being approximately $14,778,000.

For direct relief, the expenditures of the Dominion government under the 1931 act to date amount to $11,668,783.79, which includes $5,288,085 to the Saskatchewan relief commission. Under the 1931 act the expenditures for public works gave employment to 583,492 individuals to the end of December, 1932, the total wages paid being $39,532,328.42, and afforded a total of 13,274,436 man days' work.

After a survey of employment conditions in the Canadian National railway shops, it was decided to maintain operations in them so as to permit of intermittent employment being given to as large a number of employees as possible, and employment was in fact given in the Canadian National railway shops. In the month of September, 1931, the Canadian Pacific railway was compelled to shut down its shops. Many applications for assistance were made to the government on behalf of the men thus thrown out of employment. Arrangements were made with the company to open its shops on the 17th day of November, 1931, and to keep them open until the 31st day of December of the same year, the government lending the company $1,447,222.71, to enable the wages of such employees to be paid. The total number of railway shop employees thus given employment was 8,455. The government felt that this was a proper thing to do under the circumstances with respect to the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. YOUNG: Was any money lent to the Canadian National to enable them to keep their shops open?

Mr. GORDON: Their shops were kept open with government assistance, I believe.

Mr. VENIOT: What amount was incurred in keeping the Canadian National shops open intermittently?

Mr. GORDON: I have not those figures before me, but I shall have them before me when the bill gets into committee.

In view of the practically unanimous recommendation of the provinces at the provincial conference held in April, 1932, that public works as relief measures be discontinued in view of their great cost, and that direct relief be adopted instead as the policy, public works have practically been discontinued as relief measures and direct relief has been adopted across the dominion. That matter was very thoroughly discussed by representatives of all the provinces and the dominion at that time. Much as we all would have liked to continue the construction of works on a wage basis with joint contributions from this government, the provinces and the municipalities, it was the unanimous opinion of the provincial representatives that this would be casting too great a burden upon the provinces and the municipalities, and unquestionably the federal government was also feeling the strain of that burden. Out of that conference developed the idea that the utmost the governments and the municipalities could do would be to afford direct relief. About this time, following a number of conferences with various organizations and with the provinces, the question came up of relieving in a measure the urban centres of some of their unemployed by way of assisting in having them settled on lands within the dominion, and after the conference I dispatched the following telegram to each of the provincial premiers:

Government has decided to apply unemployment relief expenditures towards assisting selected families earn subsistence on the land and put themselves on self-supporting basis. Have decided to contribute as non-recoverable relief expenditure a sum not exceeding $200 per family and not exceeding one-third cost relief settlement plan submitted by province and approved by Dominion. Provincial government responsible for administration of scheme including selection of families, location of farms and settlement families thereon. While this is essentially an unemployment relief measure government urges necessity careful selection of families and land location in order that substantial measure of permanent settlement will ensue. Province to set up qualified committee including representative federal land settlement department and colonization representatives of Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways to review matter as it concerns province. No part of relief expenditure to be applied to the acquiring or renting of land. The proposal contemplates utilization of crown lands and farms now owned by municipalities and private owners which may be acquired with no down payment and on favourable terms. Dominion expenditure will be made progressively as equal expenditure made by province and municipality concerned. Final arrangements to be reduced to agreement between Dominion and province. In view of advanced season request earliest possible intimation your views.

The house will remember that prior to this, in conjunction with the railways, an effort was made which met with considerable success in directing those who were in urban centres, who were then out of work and who had some money and farm experience, to become colonized within Canada. There may and probably will be criticism of that policy on the part of the government I am just as convinced as I was in November, 1930, that one of the avenues at least which may be resorted to with a degree of confidence, in order to that extent at least to relieve the industrial centres, is to try to correct what is now the decidedly disproportionate situation with respect to our urban and rural population. When one considers that in the last fifty years our population has changed from eighteen per cent urban to over fifty per cent urban, I think it is not debatable that our population is decidedly disproportionate as between urban and rural. With that in view a good deal of success was met with by the provinces, by the railways, and by this government acting in concert in having those who were out of work but in funds, and seeing their funds steadily decreasing, take up land locations, not with the primary object of putting in a crop this year and getting into the export market next year but rather of preserving their assets and becoming owners of their own locations in order that they would become self-sustaining with a degree of permanency.

Up to that time, of course, the government had not contributed towards the return to land locations of people then living in cities who were ready and willing and able to settle. It was considered by the government a desirable step to apply some of the relief money towards assisting those who were then on direct relief in establishing themselves on the land. The contribution from the Dominion government was made non-recoverable, and was paid and is being paid in progressive stages under the supervision of the committees set up throughout the Dominion of Canada. Those committees I believe are doing very fine work. They are entirely non-partisan, because, so far as this government and so far I believe as the members of this chamber, no matter what their political persuasion may be, are concerned, they have not approached this question from a political standpoint. I think there is a consciousness with every member that we must on the one hand devote any moneys that we can devote towards the object of relieving those in need, apart entirely from any considerations of a political character, and at the same time exercise such control as we can to see that the public treasury is not unnecessarily invaded by subtractions therefrom to take care of the present situation.

Arising out of the proposal incorporated in the telegram which I have read, agreements were entered into with all the provinces except Prince Edward Island for the settlement on farms of selected families who might be receiving direct relief, and who had previous farming experience. The government of Prince Edward Island did not consider that the scheme could be successfully carried out there owing to conditions peculiar to the province.

Briefly, the scheme is that to each family so taken from those receiving direct relief and placed on the land, where it is hoped they will soon become self-sustaining, the estimated cost of supporting them on direct relief is advanced to assist them in establishing themselves. This amount was set at a maximum of $600, to be contributed equally by the dominion, the province and municipality from which the family is taken, and is paid over a period of two years. Not more than $500 is to be paid the first year, $100 being reserved for the second year in case assistance towards subsistence may be necessary. The total contribution of $200 by the Dominion government is, as I have said, non-recoverable.

Mr VENIOT: The minister stated that all the provinces except Prince Edward Island entered into an agreement. May I ask if the province of New Brunswick, after entering into an agreement, carried out its terms? If the minister is not in a position to answer that at the moment, perhaps he will do so later.

Mr. GORDON: I will make a note of the question and give the information later. The total amount for which provision is made under these agreements, the federal proportion of each, and the total number of families in each province, are as follows—and wherever in this statement the figures are long, unless the house wishes me to read the exact amounts I shall give the round figures and ask permission that they be given in Hansard in full:

Province—	Total expenditure provided for	Dominion proportion	Number of families
Nova Scotia	$ 385,695	$ 128,565	642
New Brunswick	342,840	114,280	570
Quebec	642,855	214,285	1,070
Ontario	642,855	214,285	1,070
Manitoba	514,260	171,420	857
Saskatchewan	600,000	200,000	1,000
Alberta	514,260	171,420	857
British Columbia	514,260	171,420	857
Total	$ 4,157,025	$ 1,385,675	6,923

The total expenditure provided for this purpose is $4,157,025, the Dominion's proportion being $1,385,675, and the number of families which will be taken care of 6,923. The settlement this year represents only the beginning of the movement, as the agreements with the provinces cover a period of two years and do not expire until March 31, 1934. A recent report of progress received from the provinces indicates that a total of 1,651 families have been approved, these families having approximately 6,906 dependents.

Mr. HOWDEN: That is all over the country?

Mr. GORDON: Yes. Just at this juncture I may say that I have recently received from the chief colonization officer of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company a complete statement of what was done on merely the advice and direction of the officers of the railway over a comparatively short stretch of road in Ontario.

Mr. BRADETTE: Would the minister state how many settlers have been settled in the different provinces?

Mr. GORDON: I can provide that information. A little more than 1,500 families have gone from urban centres and are settled and are getting along very well along one branch of the Canadian Pacific in Ontario, according to a letter that I have received from the company.

As I said a few moments ago, I do not suggest that this is by any means a complete solution of the difficulties that confront us, but every ablebodied person who understands farming—and I am told that it requires much experience and skill, particularly under present conditions, to make things go—who is moved out of the industrial centres or taken off the unemployment shelves makes just that much more room for those who know nothing about farming but are industrialists and have to look for a revival in industry for their hope for the future.

The Dominion government has continued since May 1, 1932, to contribute to direct relief on the same basis as under the 1931 act, and has also agreed to contribute fifty per cent to the cost of operating board camps wherein the unemployed may be cared for and given useful work in return for subsistence and a small cash allowance. Later this was superseded in the western provinces by an agreement in respect to single, homeless unemployed persons. In order that the house may be apprised of what was done across Canada, I think I would do well to deal with each province in turn from the Atlantic to the Pacific.

First, let me refer to the province of Prince Edward Island, which we all know, is very small, with a population of only about 90,000 people. Relief has been carefully administered by the government of that province. I note that total federal disbursements towards direct relief in Prince Edward Island up to the fourteenth instant have amounted to $9,301.86. This figure, however, does not represent the total cost, inasmuch as accounts in many instances do not reach the department for several months after the contraction for or payment of the sum. In all figures which I shall give concerning direct relief, this fact must be borne in mind: accurate figures will not be obtainable until possibly some time after March 31, when the present legislation expires and the statutory report is tabled. At that time we shall know what the expenditures for direct relief for the present fiscal year have been. As a matter of fact, on the fifteenth of this month I signed recommendations to council for the payment of some accounts for direct relief for some of the municipalities of the province of Quebec, and may I explain that those liabilities were incurred under the 1930 legislation. It would appear that the people at that point were not pressed for money. The federal government contributed, further, in the province of Prince Edward Island to the cost of reconstructing the Falconwood hospital which had been destroyed by fire. In this instance the dominion's contribution amounted to $5,328.24, being fifty per cent of the total labour cost of $10,656.49. That is, with the direct relief disbursements, the total disbursements in Prince Edward Island to the fourteenth instant amount to $14,630.10. As I have explained, some accounts do not reach us until some months after the actual expenditures have been made by the province or municipality. However, we have kept in close touch with the relief activities across the dominion by arranging with the provinces to estimate as closely as possible at the end of each month the amount of relief which has been given during that month. Our experience has been that frequently these estimates are in excess of the actual expenditures. Nevertheless they give an approximate figure concerning relief actually dispensed.

Now we come to the province of Nova Scotia. Direct relief in Nova Scotia is carried on by a three way contribution, 33⅓ per cent being contributed by the dominion, the province, and the municipality respectively. The full disbursements to date for direct relief in Nova Scotia amount to $213,628.25. Some other projects were carried on in Nova Scotia which I shall briefly outline.

First, repatriation of miners to their native homes, involving a total expenditure of $19,893.53, to which the dominion contributed $7,957.41. The situation which arose was shortly this: After the last investigation and report by Sir Andrew Rae Duncan, and following recommendations made in that report, certain mine shafts and collieries were closed. Some miners had been induced to come to New Waterford on the understanding they would receive continuous work. By reason of the closing down of these works they were thrown out of employment. They knew nothing else but coal mining, and all expressed the desire to be returned to their country of origin. The Dominion government contributed as I have indicated.

Mr. SPENCER: What was their country of origin?

Mr. GORDON: I believe most of then were from central Europe, but if necessary I can get that information. Then, further referring to the projects I mentioned:

Second, provincial highway construction, involving a total expenditure of $80,000, the dominion paying $32,000. This work was done on a forty-sixty basis.

Third, trans-Canada highway construction, which was done on an equal basis between the province and the dominion. The amount involved was $133,647.90, the dominion contributing $66,823.96.

Fourth, payment of excess cost of Nova Scotia coal delivered to Toronto, involving an amunt of $6,087.22, of which the dominion's proportion is $3,043.61.

Disbursements by the dominion in respect of these projects amount to $77,282.54, making a total disbursement to date for the province of Nova Scotia of $290,910.79.

Mr. RALSTON: Is that from the extension of last year?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, from the time this law began to operate.

Turning now to the province of New Brunswick, I may say that the direct relief is on a basis of a contribution of 33⅓ per cent by the dominion, the province and the municipality respectively. The total disbursements by the federal government for direct relief in that province are, to date, $38,434.06.

In the province of Quebec direct relief is, in the main, conducted on a three way equal basis, being distributed between the dominion, the province and the municipality. In unorganized districts however, the cost is borne fifty per cent by the dominion and fifty per cent by the province. Provincial government authorities have represented, however, that many municipalities in the province of Quebec are totally unable to bear their full proportion of one-third, and in such cases, after the province has demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Dominion government that such is the case, the proportion has been varied, the province and the dominion making up the difference. To date, disbursements in the province of Quebec for direct relief amount to $1,389,368.33.

In the province of Ontario direct relief is provided on a three way basis, being divided among the dominion, the province and the municipality. The provincial government, however, established the fact that several municipalities were unable to bear their whole share of the cost of such relief. In this instance, as obtained with regard to the province of Quebec, investigations were made, and after reviewing the representations, reductions in the municipalities' shares were authorized, the dominion and the province assuming equally the amount of such reduction. In unorganized districts the cost is shared on an equal basis between the dominion and the province, as obtains in the province of Quebec. The total disbursements with regard to the dominion's share of direct relief in the province of Ontario to date—and when I use the term "to date" I mean to February 16, 1933—amounts to $2,633,427.18.

Some other expenditure was undertaken in the province of Ontario in order to complete two road projects undertaken under the 1931 legislation. The dominion approved of total expenditure on these projects, to complete them, of $85,000, of which the federal contribution was $30,000. Throughout the province certain board camps have been established on a subsistence basis, with a cash allowance each month of $10 per man. This at first was $5 per man per month, but in the early fall, owing to certain economies which the province was able to effect in the matter of board and by an additional expenditure on the part of province and the dominion of 75 cents each, it was possible to increase this gratuity to the men to $10 per man per month. The provincial authorities represented that it was desirable to take this action in order that those employed on the work could be able to provide themselves with clothing, the majority having reached the point where complete new outfits were necessary.

Mr. YOUNG: They got $10 and board, did they?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, and supplied their own clothing.

Wherever loans have been made under the authority of the legislation of a province, I am going to spread upon the record the facts with respect to them.

A loan was made to Ontario on January 14, 1932, of $2,500,000. This sum was promptly repaid, and it practically became a bookkeeping entry as far as the province of Ontario was concerned.

Mr. BRADETTE: Was that amount of over $2,000,000 given for direct relief to the province of Ontario, or any of it, earmarked for the building of the trans-Canada highway in that province?

Mr. GORDON: Not earmarked for the trans-Canada highway.

Mr. BRADETTE: Could the minister give any amount that was spent on the building of the trans-Canada highway?

Mr. GORDON: Not at the moment, but I will take note of the interrogation and I think I can give the information later.

Turning to Manitoba, direct relief there is borne, the same as it is in the other provinces, on the three way basis between the dominion, the province and the municipality; and fifty per cent between the province and the dominion in unorganized districts and indigent municipalities, after they have been so reported upon by the province and approved of by the dominion. The total disbursement in regard to the dominion's share of direct relief in the province of Manitoba to date amounts to $911,056.18. Then in Manitoba, by reason of the extension of public works which had been started under the legislation which preceded this act, work was carried on, and I will ask leave to read into Hansard the details of the number of individuals and the man days and wages paid during the time the work was in progress:

Month—	Individuals	Man Days	Wages paid
May	579	11,477	$ 59,561
June	719	21,393	104,788
July	795	43,288	261,008
August	782	32,274	249,236
September	561	24,339	206,171
October	561	16,235	94,725
November	37	11,946	93,577
December	80	3,610	14,453
January	45	3,477	5,209

Representations were made to the government, with respect to certain municipalities in western Canada, to the effect that they were unable to cope with the relief of many thousands of single homeless transients who, it was represented, were neither residents of the municipalities nor of the province itself. It arose, as hon. members know, largely through the rather rapid filling up of western Canada with people from other lands. I am not going to criticize the efforts of those who preceded me with respect to that situation. The results, however, which might have not arisen had conditions not become such as they are, was that many many people, single men and some women, found themselves without a home, without family ties of any kind, and were just drifting here and there; and it became apparent to this government that they could not be classed as residents of any municipality or any province. That being the case the federal government undertook to take care of this class of needy persons during the present winter. Early in October we were fortunate enough to secure the services of Doctor W. J. Black for a short period in order to assist the province and the federal government in organizing this relief, the management of the Canadian National Railways being good enough to let us have Doctor Black for this purpose. Early in October Doctor Black went to western Canada and, in conjunction with the municipal and provincial authorities, was instrumental in setting up commissions of public spirited men in each province who undertook to administer this relief. The commission was appointed by the provincial government in each instance. In Manitoba the committee is composed of W. H. Carter, chairman; G. W. Northwood; and A. MacNamara, who I believe is one of the assistant deputy ministers in the Manitoba government.

Mr. BROWN: May I ask the minister if the Dominion government is contributing any part of the money which is being paid to hired men on the farms? I understand the Manitoba government is sending out men on the farms and is paying them $5 per month. Is the Dominion government bearing any part of that expense?

Mr. GORDON: I had not heard that the Manitoba government was paying $5 a month to men on farms.

Mr. BROWN: Well, the money is being paid from some place.

Mr. GORDON: I have seen it stated in the press in some cases that the Manitoba government is paying and has paid $5 a month to men on the farm.

Mr. BROWN: That is a fact.

Mr. GORDON: It may be a fact—I do not know it to be a fact. But I do know that the Dominion government has paid it all up to date. The province may be doing it as well. That is the situation,—the Dominion government is paying all of that $5 a month.

In Saskatchewan the relief commission has assumed this responsibility in addition to its other duties. The relief commission is composed of Henry Black, chairman; C. B. Daniels, general manager; W. G. Yule, A. E. Whitmore, H. A. Munns, Mrs. Pearl Johnson; Oliver J. Dean, secretary.

The committee in Alberta is composed of A. A. Mackenzie, Edmonton, chairman; Colonel G. E. Sanders, Calgary, and Robert Livingstone, Lethbridge. I may say I received some critical communications after the appointment of the committee in Alberta, suggesting that I had appointed men to this commission to administer the relief who should not be appointed, that these jobs should go to the unemployed. But when I advised them that these men were doing it purely out of unselfishness, without hope of reward other than a lot of criticism and what recognition history may give them, I never got an answer to my letter.

The committee in British Columbia is composed of: Major J. G. Fordham, Vancouver, chairman; Colonel J. S. Dennis, Victoria; Professor W. A. Carrothers, Vancouver.

Agreements have been entered into with the four western provinces whereby the dominion pays one hundred per cent of the cost of providing food, fuel, clothing and shelter to single homeless unemployed persons at a cost not exceeding 40 cents per diem. The agreements also provide for the placement of single homeless persons on farms at $5 per month, payable by the dominion.

Mr. BROWN: I would like to ask where that money is coming from?

Mr. GORDON: It is covered by written agreements with the provinces and is paid by the dominion.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUATION FOR ONE YEAR OF PROVISIONS OF RELIEF ACT, 1932

The house resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Gordon that the house go into committee to consider the following proposed resolution:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to continue in force the provisions of the Relief Act, 1932, until the 31st of March, 1934.

Mr. GORDON: At the adjournment at six o'clock I was dealing with the province of Manitoba with respect to the Relief Act of 1932. As at December 31, 1932, the commissions administering relief to single homeless persons reported the following numbers being taken care of under the arrangement:

Manitoba	5,702
Saskatchewan	4,093
Alberta	6,509
British Columbia	14,870

Accounts have been received and paid for relief settlements amounting to $87,694.93. Under the relief settlement scheme there were settled on farms in the following months the numbers indicated:

Month—	Heads of families	Dependents
July	82	287
September	75	272
October	22	78
November	6	31
December	1	8

Under the farm placement scheme the provinces report the following unemployed persons placed on farms:

Month—	Number	Cost
November	952	$1,500
December	1,228	4,000
January	2,000	9,000

Mr. HOWDEN: What province is the minister dealing with?

Mr. GORDON: Manitoba. In passing I may say that about a month ago I was advised by the officer representing the Manitoba government, and also by our own representative, that we had places on farms in the province for something over 700 single men. At that time we were taking care of something over 3,000 men in the city of Winnipeg, but we could not prevail upon any of them to go to work; they all had their reasons or excuses.

Mr. YOUNG: What did you do with them?

Mr. GORDON: We have tried to prevail upon them to take work. Of course, some of them are not fit for farm work. Since that time we have been able to move a considerable number out of the city of Winnipeg.

Mr. YOUNG: What do you do with those who will not work?

Mr. GORDON: We just keep on feeding them.

In addition to the above relief, the dominion advanced to the province against its treasury bills loans in the following amounts and for the following purposes:

Loans and advances to Manitoba under relief legislation to February 14, 1933.

Purpose of Loan or Advance
Total loans, being advances of dominion's share of approved public works	$ 2,600,000 00
By credits applied	2,523,653 33
Balance to be liquidated	76,346 67
Total loans covering provinces' share of public works and/or to loan municipalities for their share	2,900,000 00
Less credits dominion's share public works	.....
Balance outstanding	2,900,000 00
Total loans covering New York commitments	3,133,315 85
Less repayments	.....
Balance outstanding	3,133,315 85
Total loans re direct relief expenditures	1,527,313 60
Total advances re single homeless unemployed	150,000 00
By credits applied	70,827 68
Balance outstanding	79,172 32
Total loans re assistance to farmers including purchase of seed grain	600,000 00
Less repayment	220,000 00
Balance outstanding	380,000 00
Total loans and advances as above	10,910,629 45
Less repayments and credits applied	2,814,481 01
Net amount outstanding	8,096,148 44

In the province of Manitoba to December 31 a bonus of $1,169,025.47 was paid on 23,380,509 bushels of wheat.

With respect to Saskatchewan the direct relief is administered by a three way contribution, municipality, province and dominion, and in the unorganized districts the province and the dominion divide the direct relief expenditure on an equal basis. Relief has been administered in the province of Saskatchewan through the province and the municipalities as well as through the agency of the Saskatchewan relief commission, which has functioned in the dried out areas. In addition, dominion relief has been administered to single homeless unemployed persons. Certain extensions of the 1931 works program was authorized and employment was furnished to the following number of men in the following months: the number of man days and the wages paid is set out in a schedule which I ask the permission of the house to have put on Hansard. It is as follows:

Extensions of 1931 works—Under extensions of time on works approved under the 1931 act work was furnished to the following number of men in the following months:

May—1,431 men worked 29,945 man-days and received $103,844 in wages.

June—1,027 men worked 23,956 man-days and received $73,347 in wages.

July—1,180 men worked 41,762 man-days and received $94,812 in wages.

August—727 men worked 21,863 man-days and received $59,589 in wages.

September—523 men worked 15,941 man-days and received $43,852 in wages.

October—523 men worked 15,496 man-days and received $58,989 in wages.

November—168 men worked 8,531 man-days and received $29,482 in wages.

December—6 men worked 69 man-days and received $433 in wages.

Total—157,563 man-days work was supplied and $464,348 was paid in wages.

Mr. RALSTON: Could the minister give the total in dollars?

Mr. GORDON: The total is $464,348 in wages.

In July, 92 families representing 318 dependents were settled on farms and 304 single homeless persons were placed with farmers.

In August, 289 single homeless persons were placed on farms and 517 single homeless men were employed 1,841 man days in sustenance camps at a cost of approximately $5,079.

In September, 274 families with 995 dependents were settled on farms and 418 single homeless men were employed in camps at an approximate cost of $5,057.

In October, 1,469 single homeless men were employed in camps at an approximate cost of $14,850.

In November, fourteen families with seventy-one dependents were settled on farms, also 532 single homeless men were cared for in camps at an approximate cost of $3,600.

In December, 2,192 single persons were placed in farm jobs and received $11,000 in wages and 1,966 single homeless men in camps were 36,069 man days at an approximate cost of $20,887.

In January, 5,497 single persons were placed in farm jobs and were paid $27,485 in wages.

Mr. YOUNG: Do those 5,000 include the number placed in December or are they in addition thereto?

Mr. GORDON: I am giving the figures for each month.

In January, 5,497 single men were placed in farm jobs.

Mr. YOUNG: But 2,000 were placed in December. Does that make 7,000?

Mr. GORDON: I have given each month from July.

Mr. RALSTON: The new placements?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Are there any repeaters—people sent out who stay for a few days and are subsequently sent out to a second job?

Mr. GORDON: There may be some. I have not the details of that, but generally speaking, most of these men are placed and continue to stay.

Disbursements in connection with relief settlement and other projects amount to date to $19,096.71 and direct relief disbursements amount to date to $136,602.99.

Expenditures made by the Saskatchewan relief commission in what is known as "A" area, with which I presume hon. members are familiar, amounted to $7,668,667.28 and in "B" area to $1,562,735.89.

For freight on moving settlers' effects in "A" and "B" areas, the expenditures were $77,676.72. This makes a total of $9,309,079.89, the dominion proportion being $8,448,304.78, and the provincial proportion being $860,-775.11.

In these areas to December 31, 1932, direct relief was given by the relief commission to families numbering 60,755, with dependents numbering 273,397. In addition aid was given to individual cases to the number of 305, the total number given relief being 334,457. Of course we all entertain the hope that this province will not again meet with the tragedy that overtook it with respect to crops.

Loans and advances to Saskatchewan to February 14, 1933, are as follows:

		Credits or Repayments	Balance Outstanding
Total loans being advanced in respect of Dominion share of approved works	$1,000,000 00	$1,000,000	Nil
Total loans covering province's share of public works and of loans to municipalities	1,673,212 04	Nil	$1,673,212 04

Advances re single homeless unemployed	100,000 00	Nil	100,000 00

Of course, as the Dominion government is assuring that amount, nothing will be returned.

Totals	$29,811,293 23	$9,907,371 57	$20,903,921 66

As regards wheat bonus, an amount of $5,669,919.78 was paid up to the 31st day of December in the province of Saskatchewan in respect of 113,398,395 bushels of wheat.

In the province of Alberta the direct relief is provided on a three way basis, the same as I have made reference to in other provinces: municipalities, province and dominion, and in unorganized districts on an equal basis between the province and the dominion. Again I would like to have inserted in Hansard a schedule showing the employment afforded, the farm settlement and placements. The table is as follows:

Employment afforded:

Month	Through extension of works approved under the 1931 Act		Single, homeless men in subsistence camps
	No. men	Wages	No. men	Approximate cost
May	1,278	$260,660	736	$15,410

Farm settlement and placement:

November—51 families with 249 dependents were placed on farms. Under the relief commission for single homeless men, 2,697 single, homeless persons were cared for in urban centres at an approximate cost of $23,130 (Dominion 100%).
December—6,146 single, homeless persons were cared for in urban centres at an approximate cost of $63,172.
January—350 single persons were placed in farm jobs and received from the Dominion $1,500 in wages. In addition the commission cared for 6,200 persons in urban centres at an approximate cost of $72,500.

The total disbursements to date in respect of direct relief and other projects in Alberta amount to $521,029.67.

Loans to Alberta as at February 14, 1933, are as follows:

Description	Loan or advance	Credits of repayments	Balance outstanding
1. Loans, being advances of dominion's share of approved works	$2,000,000 00	$1,953,954 00	$ 46,045 83
2. Loans, covering province's share and/or to loan to municipalities	2,200,000 00	Nil	2,200,000 00
3. Loans covering New York commitments	3,142,000 00	Nil	3,142,000 00
4. Loans for provincial purposes	500,000 00	Nil	500,000 00
5. Advances re single homeless unemployed	150,000 00	Nil	150,000 00
6. Loans re assistance to farmers, including purchase of seed grain	140,000 00	Nil	140,000 00
Totals	$8,132,000 00	$1,953,954 00	$6,178,045 83

Wheat bonus—$5,857,735.42 was paid up to the 31st of December in respect to 117,154,708 bushels of wheat.

The same observations would here apply with respect to the single homeless unemployed as I made with respect to the other western provinces.

In British Columbia direct relief is administered on the same basis as respects the dominion, the province and the municipalities, each contributing one-third, and in the unorganized districts there are contributions in in equal amounts by the province and the dominion.

By reason of the extension for completion of works which had been approved under the 1931 act but were not completed on May 1, employment was given to the following number of men in the following months:

Month	Number of men	Man days	Wages paid
May	254	5,353	$18,235
June	126	2,118	7,233
July	64	1,734	5,887
August	173	1,435	7,594
September	150	1,276	9,466
		11,916	$48,415

In addition, single men were cared for and given employment in subsistence camps on a fifty-fifty basis with the province to the following number of men in the following months:

Month	Number of men	Man days	Cost
May	7,896	98,293	$147,169
June	7,706	107,176	143,241
July	6,001	89,740	108,046
August	6,809	83,865	88,138
September	6,532	57,398	71,918
October	3,726	45,762	59,384
January	350	10,000	54,000
		492,234	$671,896

In the months of November, December and January, the federal government assumed one hundred per cent of the cost of single, homeless, unemployed persons, and during those months the following persons of this class were cared for in relief camps or in urban centres:

Month	Number of men	Approximate cost
November	12,854	$127,536
December	14,870	149,400
January	18,300	182,600

From May 1, 1932, to February 16, 1933, disbursements in respect to the federal contribution amounted to $1,383,347.27.

Loans and advances to British Columbia to February 14, 1933, are as follows:

Description	Total loan or advance	Credits or repayments	Balance outstanding
1. Loans, being advances of dominion's share of approved works	$2,800,000 00	$2,800,000 00	Nil
2. Loans covering province's share and/or to loan to municipalities	3,500,000 00	238,412 55	$3,261,587 45
3. Loans covering New York commitments	5,104,164 69	3,040,670 69	2,063,494 00
4. Loans re direct relief expenditures	262,500 00	Nil	262,500 00
5. Advances re direct relief expenditures	112,500 00	106,271 65	6,228 35
6. Advances re single homeless unemployed	280,000 00	Nil	280,000 00
Totals	$12,059,164 69	$6,185,354 89	$5,873,809 80

It will be observed with respect to British Columbia that the province has repaid a little over fifty per cent of the loans and advances made to them.

Mr. RALSTON: That repayment is only by reason of the fact that expenditures have been made to equal the dominion's share of the advance?

Mr. GORDON: Not in its entirety. The largest repayment that was made by British Columbia was a loan of $3,040,670.69, which is part of a loan of $5,104,164.69 advanced by the dominion for New York commitments.

Mr. RALSTON: But the other amount of $2,800,000 is really a cross entry.

Mr. GORDON: Extending the sum that was agreed upon for relief.

Mr. RALSTON: But it is really a cross entry.

Mr. GORDON: In British Columbia, with respect to the wheat bonus, the Dominion government paid out in the Peace river block in that province $23,440.40 with respect to 468,808 bushels of wheat. The total thus paid out in the four western provinces, Manitoba, Alberta, Saskatchewan, the Peace river block and British Columbia, to December 31 last amounted to $12,720,121.07 with respect to 254,402,420 bushels of wheat.

Other works were projected by the Dominion government which in the judgment of the government were desirable in different parts of Canada, under the supervision of different departmental officials, and the work was organized in such a way that it could with the least expense be supervised by these officials.

In Alberta there was the projection of the Banff-Jasper highway, the approximate cost of which was $235,294, or an average cost per day of $2.88, including materials. For the information of hon. members I think it is desirable that the accompanying schedule be put on Hansard so that hon. gentlemen will be able to review it before the bill is dealt with:

In other words to December in all parks last fall, 169,544 days' work was given to needy men at an approximate cost of $367,317 or approximately $2.17 per day.

In all works in the national parks to the amount of $563,800 were authorized and up to date $411,205.20 has been expended.

In Alberta, in connection with the Banff-Waterton lakes park, Elk island, and national parks there was expended $4,449, at an average cost of $2.42 per day, the work being carried on during the month of November, and 165 men being employed. This amount provided 1,843 man days' works.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is that $2.42 per man?

Mr. GORDON: That includes materials. In Saskatchewan in the Prince Albert national park in the month of November 295 men were employed, giving 4,730 man day's work at an approximate cost of $10,728. I am inclined to think that that is the exact figure. The average cost was $2.05 per day.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Can the minister tell us how much of this actually went to the men? He has said that material is included.

Mr. GORDON: I shall take note of the hon. member's request; I think I can get the information. In Riding Mountain park, Manitoba, there were in October 201 men employed, and in November 1,008; a total of 20,534 man days' work at a cost of $13,884, or an average cost of 52 cents. In all parks in December there were 2,958 men employed, giving 60,924 man days' work at a cost of $102,962 or an average cost of $1.67. In other words, in all the parks last fall, 169,544 days' work were given to needy men at an approximate cost of $367,317, or $2.17 per day. In all works in the national parks $563,800 was authorized for payment, and up to date $411,205.20 has been been expended. In addition to that, work has been done in Manitoba in connection with the dykes along the Assiniboine river, and in that work $5,092 was expended.

It became apparent last fall that every possible avenue should be explored in order to find some method to take care of single homeless men, in addition to the policy and program I have just outlined. In this respect the government decided that the organization of the Department of National Defence might well be utilized in the construction of airway landing fields in connection with the Trans-Canada Airway. This program of works the government believed to be for the general advantage of Canada, and the men being under control and under discipline and living in clean and comfortable quarters, the government considered it desirable to utilize this machinery of government to take care of as many of these men as the work warranted. The general conditions provided were that the men and supervisory staffs would receive no pay, but would be housed, clothed, fed and cared for and be given a small cash allowance varying from 20 cents a day in the case of labourers to $60 per month in the case of foremen. It is estimated that for the period of one year the average total cost per person per day given relief, including the purchase of tools and materials for construction, and in certain cases land required, would not exceed more than a dollar. Eight hours work per day for six days a week would be required, with the exception that statutory holidays would be observed and Saturday afternoons used for recreation purposes and for the general cleaning up of the camps. Clothing, cooking utensils, camp equipment, blankets and so on, all on hand in the department and surplus to ordinary requirements of the department, would be made available, and the existing nation-wide organization for administration, purchase and issue of supplies, and accounting, would be used. No military discipline would be instituted. The personnel would remain civilian, and so long as they behaved themselves and observed the few simple rules designed in the interests and comfort of the majority, they would continue to be cared for. The personnel could be discharged by the officer in charge of a project for cause. No compulsion would be exercised on them to remain any longer than they wished, and every endeavour made to assist them to fit themselves for and to obtain remunerative employment. This work is still being carried on, and it is proposed that the works to be undertaken by the department as a measure for the relief of unemployment should not include the current works which would be undertaken in any event, but should anticipate by some years the execution of construction which was necessary and which had been planned. Only works with a relatively low cost for material and low maintenance charges would be included.

I have already laid upon the table of the house order in council dated October 8, 1932, authorizing works which it was decided best lent themselves to the scheme. It provided for the authorization of (1) placing some 2,000 men at work on the construction of intermediate landing fields on the Trans-Canada Airways; (2) repairs to the fortifications at Halifax and Quebec, the preservation of which was so desirable as national historic monuments; (3) the construction of air stations at Trenton and Rockcliffe.

This program has been slightly enlarged since then, and I have here a statement which I shall ask to have included in Hansard showing in detail the various works which have been initiated and are being carried out at the present time, the number of men employed, and the approximate expenditures that have been necessitated thereby.

To summarize, I might say that in addition to the repairs to the fortifications at Halifax and Quebec there are eighteen camps at present in operation in the provinces of New Brunswick, Quebec, Ontario, Manitoba and British Columbia in connection with the landing fields on the Trans-Canada Airways. In the month of October thirty-eight men were employed to the extent of 55 man days; in November 807 men were employed to the extent of 12,581 man days; in December, 1,393 men were employed to a total of 30,306 man days; in January 1,982 men were employed to a total of 41,127 man days, or a total of 84,069 man days for the three months. The strength on the fifteenth of this month was 2,089.

The total expenditure to the end of January, covering the cost of materials, purchase of land where necessary, food, clothing, tools and equipment, equalled $93,196.49. These works necessitated an average expenditure per man of $1.10 per day. This figure per day does not include Sundays and half-holidays and days in hospital, precise figures of which are not available, but allowing for Sundays and a half day for Saturdays, the approximate total expenditure works out per man day of relief at 86 cents. The estimated total value of the work done to January 31, is $69,386.66, which does not include the costs incurred for temporary accommodation, purchase of land, and so on. As these charges are absorbed it is considered that the value of work done will considerably exceed the total cost.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: What is meant by these charges being absorbed?

Mr. GORDON: For instance, the total amount spent is $93,196.49. We estimate that the value of the work, as a work, is $69,000. The land we believe is worth a considerable sum of money, and probably will be worth more. Add to that the value of the work, and the whole value will equal or probably exceed the actual expenditure.

I have had occasion to visit some of these camps, and I do not think anyone need be at all concerned about the discipline, the cleanliness and the general atmosphere in the camps. The men, of course, are not getting very much in the way of cash, but they are getting fine shelter, good food, good clothing, and they are working, working splendidly and looking forward to the time when they can be absorbed in normal vocations. There has been very little in the way of sickness in any of these camps.

I should like shortly to summarize the activities under the 1932 act: First, a back to the land movement has been initiated and has met with encouraging cooperation on the part of the provinces and the larger municipalities. A very definite start has been made, 1,651 families with 6,906 dependents have already been approved and placed on farms. This in my judgment warrants the belief that the whole quota of 6,923 families for whose settlement provision has been made will be placed on farms before March 31, 1934, at which date our agreement with the provinces expires. The dominion has authorized a contribution of $1,383,675 as a non-recoverable grant to settlers, to which the provinces and municipalities make contributions in like amount, making a total of $4,151,025 available to finance the scheme. To date there has been expended by the dominion $478,126.47.

Second, the interior department have supervised works in the national parks and on the Banff-Jasper highway in Alberta and British Columbia through the summer and fall months when such work can be usefully done. This has resulted in 169,544 man days employment being supplied to needy men at a cost of roughly $367,317 to December 31st.

Third, the Department of Public Works in cooperation with the provincial government has completed a small work in flood prevention on the Assiniboine river in Manitoba, to which the federal government's contribution was $5,092.

Fourth, a small sum of $3,000 was expended through the Department of Agriculture in fitting up some boats to assist in better export facilities for live cattle to Great Britain.

Fifth, under the department of National Defence useful works which ordinarily would probably not be undertaken for a few years, but works which it is desirable in the public interest to have done without delay, have been commenced on the landing fields in the trans-Canada airway and elsewhere.

Sixth, direct relief. The total of accounts paid or amounts credited to advances is $7,851,192.59. The cost of direct relief has, in the main been, as hitherto, shared equally by the municipality, the province and the dominion. In a few cases where the province has established the fact that the municipality was unable to assume its full share of 33⅓ per cent this has been reduced to such a proportion as, in the judgment of the province and the dominion, the municipality could assume; the balance has been shared equally by the province and dominion. This principle applies also in unorganized districts where the province and the dominion divide the total cost equally between the two governments. In the four western provinces the dominion has, during the fall and winter, been assuming 100 per cent of the cost of direct relief to single homeless unemployed persons.

Administration of relief to those in need in a country such as Canada, whose constitution is a federal and not a legislative union, presents very many difficulties. Difficulties from other angles are encountered by the provinces and the municipalities, but it is gratifying to note that the expenses of providing for those in want have been rapidly decreasing, and that the amount spent by the dominion for relief purposes during the fiscal year 1931-32 amounted to the rather alarming figure of $41,500,000, and this figure may yet reach $45,600,000 if commitments which have been made regarding works are fulfilled. During the present fiscal year, by reason of the change of policy which took place after the conference with the provincial representatives in April last, and by reason of the better organization which resulted from experience obtained by municipalities and provinces during the two previous years' administration, we anticipate that the total federal expenditure for relief purposes will not exceed $25,000,000, and will probably be less. The total to date of accounts paid and of credits against advances amounts to $11,207,874.72. But, as previously explained, accounts are usually slow in reaching Ottawa, and this probably only represents expenditures up to a month or two ago.

I am firmly of the belief, and I believe the people of this country are steadily growing to believe, that the individual himself is learning that he must not rely too much upon the state; that in a country such as we have, individuals must be individualists, and take advantage of the opportunities that are theirs. I am well aware that for many reasons it is difficult for men engaged in certain vocations, who have their homes established in the urban centres, to take advantage of the opportunities that a great country like Canada affords. But I am confident, having regard to the experience in the administration of relief to the needy during the past twelve months, that the individual is becoming increasingly active to take advantage of such opportunities as there are to make himself self-sustaining. I sometimes wonder if one can draw the line between the responsibility of the state and the responsibility of the individual. Some people advocate destroying individualism, turning everything into system. They advocate mass men rather than individual men. I am not prepared to subscribe to that doctrine. And while in certain parts of Canada to-day things are not at all normal as far as the life of the Canadian people is concerned, and their ability to earn money, yet in many parts of Canada the business of the country is advancing—I could name parts of Canada where it is—and I am confident that the future holds for the people of this country the promise of better times and the opportunity to sustain themselves. Certainly when you find the direct relief to those who are needy and are practically indigent falling from $46,000,000 down to less than $25,000,000, even though the number receiving relief for the varying periods has increased, it is a hopeful sign which I think will be gratifying to the taxpayers of the country, notwithstanding that it may be said that the reduction is due largely to better organization, because no province and no municipality in the dominion, at the outset in 1930, was equipped or organized to take care of the situation which was then upon us. But each succeeding month I believe is teaching the lesson of economy with respect to the administration of the moneys which are being subscribed by the taxpayers to take care of their less fortunate fellow citizens, and I have myself a confident belief that with the gradual turn towards other vocations than those which have afforded a certain sense of security to our people in the past, and better business conditions, it will not be too long delayed when the granting of direct relief to our citizens will disappear.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: May I ask the number now on unemployment relief in Canada?

Mr. GORDON: The last month for which I have any return is January. I have the total number of men, women and children receiving relief, including all those who in normal times are given relief, because we can all feel assured that all these people are receiving relief, and that number,—it is for varying periods—is 1,357,562. That includes all those classes for varying periods of time. It is represented by 252,000 heads of families.

Mr. POULIOT: Does that include all unemployed?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: All such questions can be properly asked in committee.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I am pleased to see that in one particular at least the protests which in previous sessions have been made from this side of the house have had some effect. I must commend the minister for having brought in his proposed legislation at least before the end of the fiscal year, thereby affording the house an opportunity of discussing, at greater length than has been possible in any previous session of this parliament, the all important question of the relief of unemployment. In order that the house may not forget the importance of the question, which continues to be the most important in Canada, may I remind hon. members that this administration owes its present position in office to the fact that it undertook, if returned to power, to end unemployment, and to end it immediately. Hon. gentlemen opposite are in power to-day as a government which was pledged to end unemployment in Canada, and to do so expeditiously. That pledge was given nearly three years ago.

The Minister of Labour this evening has given us what at the outset he described as a picture of what is being done by the government of which he is a member and other governments in Canada in the relief of unemployment. It has been a long and comprehensive survey. I do not know what impression the picture has left in the minister's own mind, or on the minds of other hon. gentlemen who have listened to him, but I must confess that the impression it made on mine was much the same as one that might be derived from reading through the Canadian Almanac, going through the Auditor General's Report, or perusing the Statistical Year Book. I fail to see in all the minister said to-night anything suggestive of unity, any outstanding lines of clearly defined policy, or any central principle on which the government has proceeded in dealing with the great question of unemployment in Canada. As I listened to the minister detailing his verbal picture, it seemed to me as he mentioned one subject after another, that it resembled nothing quite so much as a jig-saw puzzle, the different parts of which it would require no little time to bring together.

Mr. GORDON: What is a jig-saw puzzle?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have just had one from the minister.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): The only thing the opposition has to work with.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister endeavoured to give us a comprehensive idea of what the government has been doing, but, as I have said, he mentioned so many individual parts and pieces wholly unrelated to any general scheme that hon. members themselves will have to piece them together in order to make, if that is possible at all, a coherent whole out of what has been said. May I recall what the minister himself disclosed. He spoke first of all of work that was being carried on under a policy of construction of public works. That was the policy with which the government set out in meeting the unemployment situation, a contribution to assist provinces and municipalities in construction work. But, before the minister had got very far along in his description, he told us that the government had abandoned the policy of contributing money towards work of construction, and was now contributing money only or mainly for purposes of direct relief. As he proceeded farther, he came back once more to where certain departments of the federal government were carrying on works of their own and where public moneys were being spent for construction as a means of affording work. But he had not dealt with that for more than a few moments when he began to speak of board camps where men were getting subsistence and a little cash, were being looked after by direct amounts out of the federal treasury not receiving wages but something in the nature of an allowance. Here the minister described the care of single homeless men by the federal government only, then the placement of unemployed families on lands, taking the unemployed away from the cities to the country, and repatriation schemes in which provinces and municipalities assisted. The point I wish to bring out is that one could not gather, in listening to the minister, any principle upon which the government has been proceeding in the matter of unemployment relief.

Let me illustrate further. The minister told us at one stage the Canadian Pacific railway shops had closed down and that the government had found it advisable to advance money to the Canadian Pacific to help the company to reopen its shops. I noticed in a newspaper of recent date that the Canadian Pacific Railway has been advancing money to railroads in the United States to help them in that country. I do not know whether they have been able to make advances to the roads in the United States allied to theirs, out of the advances this government has made to them, but it is perfectly plain that it is all part of the same scheme to help in the relief of unemployment.

The minister told us also that moneys had been paid to help meet the excess cost of shipment of Nova Scotia coal; something for bonuses upon wheat; some money had been paid out here and there on road projects and on bits of highways; something had been done in the parks and for landing stations and so on; but in no way have these different efforts been correlated. None of them is a part of a comprehensive correlated unified plan. He has told us that at one time and in one place the basis on which the government had proceeded was what he called a three way contribution. Then at another time or place it was a two way or equal contribution, and then again it was a one way contribution. Apparently there has been no principle upon which to determine which method was to be the governing one. The minister spoke also of some of these moneys having gone to the provinces as contributions, as direct payments, some as loans, some as advances and some in the form of bonuses. Some of these advances or loans had been made to provinces, others to select commissions, others to farmers. Some had been repaid, some might be repaid, some might never be repaid, again, no underlying governing principle with respect to the way in which public funds were being loaned or spent. The minister spoke also of the construction of dykes, of flood prevention works, of airway landing fields and numerous other projects. All of these may have been worthy enough undertakings, but, presented as they were by the minister, they left on one's mind an impression that what the government has done has been done in a haphazard spasmodic sort of fashion, that it has dealt with one project in one province at one particular time and with another project in another province at another particular time. There has been no basis which would be applicable equally to the different provinces. Everything has depended very much upon fortuitous circumstances, and upon just what presure may have been brought to bear upon the administration from place to place and time to time.

Mr. GORDON: That is not fair; it was dependent upon the need.

An hon. MEMBER: Expediency.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am simply giving the impression of the government's action which the minister's description has left upon my mind. If there ever was justification for believing that the policy urged by the opposition upon the administration at the outset was the right and only policy for dealing with the problem of unemployment relief, it will be found in what the minister has said to the house to-night. My hon. friend will recall that, when we met for the special session of 1930 which was called to deal with the question of unemployment, it was stated from this side of the house by myself as leader of my party that we felt that what should be done by the government in attempting to deal with the unemployment problem was to appoint a representative, non-partisan commission which would take in hand the question of unemployment relief as a great national question and deal with it in much the same fashion as the government of the day dealt with the question of caring for the families of the men who went overseas during the period of the war. At the time of the great war there was created by legislation at the instance of the government of the day what was known as the national patriotic fund, the national executive of which had its headquarters here at Ottawa. This was a federal body which had to do with the expenditure of moneys for the purpose of caring for the families of the men who were overseas. The federal government, the governments of provinces, of municipalities, individual societies and individual citizens contributed to that fund; all the money went into a common chest, so to speak, and the work was supervised and the accounts were properly audited and checked so that there was no overlapping or waste. That was a federal government plan to administer what was to all intents and purposes a work similar to the unemployment relief of the present time. We urged in 1930 that a similar course should be taken by the government. Had it been taken, we would not to-night have had the kind of picture the minister has given of spasmodic and sporadic relief with no central or guiding principle, at best a picture of a chaotic situation. We would have been given a careful statement from the executive of this national body as to how the public moneys from all sources had been expended in an endeavour to meet this great problem of unemployment and in carrying out the administration of unemployment relief.

A body of the kind I have described would have had some basic principles upon which it would have proceeded. For example, it would have sought first of all to provide work wherever possible, rather than simply to give direct relief. It would have endeavoured to correlate the activities of all agencies interested in unemployment relief. My hon. friend will recall that we suggested that there should be, upon such a commission, or board, representatives not only of the federal and provincial governments and the municipalities, but also of the great railway systems, representatives of such prominent organizations as the Red Cross, the Salvation Army, the National Council of Women, as well as representatives of the manufacturers' association, agricultural societies, the trade unions and the chambers of commerce. All of these bodies are vitally interested in the matter of preventing as well as relieving unemployment, and some of their members have very special knowledge of what would be necessary in connection with the work of an organization of this kind. Many of these organizations have attached to them experts who could advise upon the best methods of administering relief.

The minister stated this evening that, in connection with the western provinces, commissions had been formed composed of public spirited men and women who were carrying on the relief work. Cannot public spirited men and women be found in sufficient numbers to serve on a national commission? I think he said commissions had been appointed in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. These commissions have come into being quite recently. The government borrowed a doctor from the Canadian Pacific Railway, we were told, to help form the commissions. Had the plan suggested by the opposition at the outset been followed, there would have been one national commission under which could have been organized provincial commissions, not only in four provinces but in all provinces. These provincial commissions would have had under their direction bodies in the different municipalities which would have been responsible for the more immediate local organization. All agencies would have been knit together in one comprehensive, constructive and highly organized scheme of unemployment relief. The problem would have been tackled in a manner which would have avoided overlapping, and which would have resulted in the minister being able to present to parliament, not merely a story of the amounts of money that have been spent, but a very comprehensive story of what had been permanently achieved in the way of providing work, work of necessary construction of one kind and another. There would have been, too, a fund of information and knowledge, available for the present and future.

The policy of having a representative national committee is one which was urged by the opposition, not only at the outset, but one which has been urged each year and every session since. I still urge this policy upon the government. I think the government ought even yet to form such a commission. In his concluding remarks, the minister said that one of the things the government had discovered was that neither it nor the provinces nor the municipalities were organized for work of this kind; that is exactly what we said would be found. The minister added that little by little all had become more familiar with what was necessary and were now in better shape. I would suggest to the minister that he take out of these quasi-organized groups the best persons that can be found and bring them together on a national board which will have to do with the supervision of this vast expenditure of public moneys, and also for devising some comprehensive, correlated national scheme of unemployment relief. Let that board be responsible for submitting to this parliament a comprehensive statement of what is being done in Canada from coast to coast by all bodies having to do with relief; and what it recommends should be done; and let its recommendations be discussed in this parliament.

Unemployment to-day is worse than it has been at any time. At each session we have had our attention drawn to the fact that conditions, instead of getting any better, have been getting steadily worse and worse. They will continue to get worse unless the government adopts the most enlightened means possible to help to meet the situation. I repeat that there could be no stronger argument for a policy for the administration of relief such as we on this side have been urging right along than what we have just listened to from the minister himself.

I know that the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) has said on more than one occasion that the provinces have to administer relief, that it is not for the federal government to do this work. I have replied to that by stating what is the fact, namely, that the federal government has the right to adopt any plan it pleases, and attach any condition it pleases, to the expenditure of its own moneys. I am not asking that the federal government should administer provincial or municipal relief, but I am asking that the federal government, when it takes from the pockets of the people millions of dollars in order to make a contribution out of their taxes for relief purposes, should at least assume the responsibility of supervising the entire scheme, particularly when unemployment has reached the proportions it has, and should, if at all possible, seek to make its plan of relief coherent as well as comprehensive.

The minister has drawn his picture of what the government is doing. When we come to view it closely, it will be found to be largely the story of the amounts of public money being expended. In its most important features that is about all that it comes to, an orgy of public expenditure. As a matter of fact the minister, in giving the facts to parliament, rather stressed the largeness of the sums of public money that were being paid out in different directions, as though simple largeness of amounts were wholly commendable. I submit it might be commendable where every dollar can be satisfactorily accounted for, and where there is no danger or evidence of overlapping. However, the kind of thing which happened at Sturgeon Falls, and which the minister did not include in his picture, although it has been featured most prominently in the press in the last few months, does not seem to me to be a justification for governments administering public funds without rigid and careful supervision. The picture the minister has given is one of increasing expenditures. There is, however, something more unfortunate than that.

Mr. GORDON: It is not increasing; it is decreasing.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Well, any decrease is due to the fact that the government has stopped certain construction work, and thereby lessened employment, in other words, increased unemployment.

Mr. GORDON: The decrease my picture disclosed was the difference between $46,000,000 and less than $25,000,000, or a decrease of about fifty per cent.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: On public works.

Mr. GORDON: Not at all.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I draw attention to the fact that, in order to obtain a true picture of the situation, the figures given by the minister to-night must be studied in relation to the estimates placed upon the table of this house, as well as the estimates placed before different provincial bodies. Some estimates which ought to have been presented to parliament in the regular way under the estimates of the Department of Public Works, for example, and other departments, were not so presented, but moneys for the purpose of carrying on those works were spent out of the relief fund. Some works are now being paid for out of departmental appropriations that were formerly paid for out of relief moneys, or are not being undertaken at all. Therefore, I say that to study the whole picture it is necessary to see what now appears and what has previously appeared in the public estimates as well as what appears in the minister's statement.

But the all-important question is: Have the numbers of unemployed lessened in this country, have the policies of the ministry been of a nature to lessen unemployment? In order that the picture may be complete with respect to what is really taking place, may I read to the house what the Prime Minister said on September 10, 1930, in regard to the unemployment situation as it was then? That was shortly after the present government took office, and we were discussing the matter for the first time. The Prime Minister gave an estimate of the numbers of unemployed. I think my hon. friend the minister will agree that the Prime Minister did not minimize the numbers; he made them just as large as in the circumstances it was possible to do. This is what the Prime Minister said as reported at page 64 of Hansard of September 10, 1930:

> It will be observed that the present number is something over 117,000 and it is believed that that number will approximate 177,000 during the winter. If the measures which we submit to this house are productive of the good which we anticipate, we hope that that number will steadily decrease, rather than increase, and that the maximum anticipated number of 177,000 will not be reached.

The Prime Minister said:

> If the measures which we submit to the house are productive of the good which we anticipate.

Well, the ministry will hardly deny that they have had a perfectly free hand with respect to the measures which they wished to introduce; they have been allowed all the freedom which any ministry could possibly desire. What is the result? If we are to judge the fruits of their policies by the number of unemployed, the indictment against the government could hardly be stronger. What are the figures to-day? Are they 117,000? The minister has just given us a statement of the numbers that are receiving unemployment relief. He gave the figure as 1,357,262.

Mr. GORDON: Not unemployed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, but the numbers receiving relief. May I give the figures as to the number of unemployed as they have been given officially within the last month or two? A statement was given recently by the High Commissioner for Canada in London as to the number of unemployed in Canada. This statement was given out officially as representing the condition of unemployment in this country, and the figure given by the commissioner was that the total number of unemployed amounted to 800,000. That was the official count of the unemployed, and is I believe what the minister himself will give if he is asked for the number at the present unemployed. But that does not take account of many others who are unemployed, as the minister's figures do not give the total of those who are actually receiving direct relief. These 800,000 are men known to the government who are ready and willing to work but who to-day cannot get work. They have their families and others depending upon them. The minister says that, when you add the additional figures, the total amounts to a little over one and one-third million. But I venture to say that, if the whole story were told, one would find the number much larger than that, because there is an honest poverty which hides its head, as the minister well knows, and the last thing sensitive self-respecting people are willing to admit to anybody, let alone to a government official, is that they are in need of relief. Therefore, we may depend upon it that those figures are the lowest at which the ministry could possibly place them and give a statement at all.

Mr. GORDON: That is hardly fair.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I add further that these figures do not include the members of thousands of families on farms in this country who are trying to hold their own, but who, as a matter of fact, are running day after day more deeply into debt. If their circumstances were known, we would discover many of those even worse off than some who are altogether unemployed, because, working as hard as they can, they find to their great dismay that the burdens they are carrying in the form of mortgages, debts and the like, are only increasing month after month. I need not enlarge on the story; it is the saddest one in the record of our country, and everyone knows something of how serious the situation is. What I want to say to the minister is this, that knowing what I have said to be the case; knowing, for example, that in Toronto, as we have been told by the mayor of that city, one out of every five is on relief; knowing, as we have been told in this house this afternoon, that in this capital city one out of every six or seven is on relief in one way or another, that these instances are only typical, and that the situation as a whole at the present time is of the amazing proportions it is, does the minister think that the government is doing its duty by the country in leaving the whole administration of this great question in the hands of a single department presided over by a minister of the crown? I submit it is time the ministry realized that while there are some things they may be able to do, there are others they cannot do; that this question of unemployment has gone away beyond them, and that it is a duty which they owe to Canada to endeavour to surround themselves by experts who will be able to see that the situation is met in a way which will be more satisfactory than has been the case up to the present time.

What did the Prime Minister say as late as August, 1931, as to the policy which should govern? Speaking to the people of Canada, he did not hesitate to lay down a very definite policy. From Edmonton on August 26, 1931, he is reported in the Canadian press as follows:

> "There will be work for all who desire it," Mr. Bennett stated, and deplored the tendency of some to expect the state to provide them with a living in idleness.
> "It is the duty of every citizen to see that relief does not become dole, and that a dollar's worth of effort is received for every dollar spent," Mr. Bennett declared.

The ministry have completely repudiated that policy, if indeed they ever really held it. What my hon. friend is asking this house to do to-night is not to make provision for everyone to work, but to make provision for a still larger dole. That is the substance of the request he is making of this House of Commons to-night. There I say the ministry is quite wrong. The effort of the ministry should not be to encourage a system of doles, but to find work for those who are ready and willing to work.

The minister says that he does not know where to draw the line between the individual and the state. May I say that I think the place to draw the line is not so difficult to discover? Every man who is able to work should be willing to work. If he is not willing to work, he should not be entitled to consideration from any quarter. But, if a man is able and willing to work and cannot get work or find work, it seems to me that it is the state's business to endeavour to provide work for him and, if necessity demand it, to look after him until he does get work. Anything short of that signifies some mal-organization of the affairs of the state. You cannot admit for one minute that human society is fulfilling its obligations to its members if there are large numbers who are ready and willing to work and who are left to themselves to suffer when there is no work for them to do. It may not be possible to bring about the necessary change all at once. It may take time, but at least every effort should be made in that direction. The effort should not be in the direction of providing doles. It should be in the direction of seeking to provide work.

The statements in the minister's review were so given that I doubt if anyone could get very clearly in mind just what the total expenditures were amounting to, but may I give them as found in a statement by the ministry upon another occasion? The Secretary of State (Mr. Cahan) laid on the table of the house a few days ago a return in which was set forth the total moneys which had been paid out in direct relief and in unemployment schemes by the federal government since August 7, 1930. The total of the figures there given is $71,316,596. Those are moneys which have been spent out of the federal treasury once and for all. But they are only a part of the money which the federal treasury has paid out, because the minister himself has given a statement in which he said that, in addition to moneys which have gone on direct relief and on certain unemployment schemes, the government has been advancing money to the provinces, some of which possibly will be repaid but some of which may never be repaid. Paid or repaid it will all come out of the pockets of the people in the form of taxes. Speaking in this house on November 25 last—I go back as far as that because it is the last quotation I have from the minister; if he has anything further to give I shall be glad to get it—he gave the house the following:

> In the four western provinces, either by way of direct non-recoverable advances or in recoverable loans, the Dominion government has supplied the sum of $73,844,130.98.
> For all of Canada this government has provided the sum of $115,631,733.80 up to date for the purpose of tiding the provinces, the municipalities and the people generally over this trying period.

One hundred and fifteen millions—and it will be considerably more than that at the present time; $115,000,000 is what this government had paid out to November last—$115,000,000 in less than two and a half years. And that does not include what the provinces and municipalities have paid out in addition. I wonder if hon. members have any appreciation of what that amount of money is in relation to the administration of the affairs of Canada as a whole. Prior to the year of the great war, the total expenditures of Canada out of consolidated account never equalled the amount of $115,000,000. In the fiscal year 1912-13, the total expenditure for the administration of all the affairs of Canada did not reach $113,000,000, that was much the largest total expenditure of any year up to that time, and yet this government in a little over two years has spent out on account of unemployment relief alone over $115,000,000. And the amount up to the present is very much larger.

Mr. GORDON: That includes loans to provinces.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, but the minister says that many of them are not recoverable, and all of them relate to the general financial situation throughout Canada.

The point I wish to draw attention to is this, that all of that money has been obtained from this House of Commons by the ministry of the day, not as a result of estimates brought to parliament where the different projects on which it was proposed to expend public money could be carefully scrutinized, and where the entire scheme of expenditures could be reviewed by members coming from all parts of Canada with a view to seeing whether the proposed expenditures were justifiable or not, but, with the exception of the $20,000,000 which was appropriated in the first session of this parliament, all of this money has been obtained by blank cheque. In the first session, the ministry asked $20,000,000 from parliament to do with as they pleased in the matter of unemployment relief. They got that $20,000,000. The next session they came to parliament and asked, not for $20,000,000 or $50,000,00 or $100,000,000, or for an amount they were prepared to name, but for the right to spend by order in council whatever they wished to spend. From that time on, this parliament has been completely ignored, although the expenditures which the ministry has made out of the blank cheques they have secured have in a little over two years been the equivalent of the total expenditures of Canada in the year immediately preceding the great war. I say, Mr. Speaker, that that brings home, as perhaps nothing else could, the force of the argument which was urged so strenuously from this side of the house, that, in dealing with these great questions of public expenditure, no parliament, which cares a whit for the well-being of the people and for the taxation which the people are called upon to bear, can afford to part with its control over public expenditure; for, in so doing, it is parting with the control of parliament over taxation, which is parliament's supreme duty.

Hon. gentlemen opposite have compelled this House of Commons to surrender its right to control the expenditure of that vast sum of money, have compelled it, in fact, by use of the closure, and all that we have as a result is the picture, so called, which the minister has given us of the situation to-night. I say to the minister and to the government that they have in the most shameful way taken advantage of the very critical situation in this country to-day, to deprive parliament of its rights and of its duties and of its responsibilities. They have taken away the rights and responsibility of parliament, by taking unto themselves autocratic powers in dealing with public funds just in the way that most pleases themselves. I think the time has come again to call a halt to that sort of thing. The minister to-night is asking us to do what? He asks us to repeat for another year this same method of dealing with the expenditure of public moneys. He asks us again, in the measure he is introducing, to give to the government the right to make for this next year whatever expenditures they please in as many directions as they please so long as they are prepared to allege that the expenditures are for the purposes of unemployment relief. They are unwilling to give to parliament in advance any detailed statement of the objects on which the moneys are to be spent, or to permit us to exercise the same control over expenditures for unemployment relief purposes as we continue to exercise in regard to all other expenditures out of the public treasury. I say that that is wrong, and that in the face of a statement such as has been given by the minister to-night, which discloses the colossal amounts these expenditures have reached, the ministry cannot expect those of us who wish to see parliament exercise the control which it should exercise over the expenditure of public moneys, support any measure which gives to them that blank cheque power for another year.

It may be that the ministry have no other policy, and that they will insist on having their way, but I tell them that they are digging their own graves in proceeding in that fashion because they are destroying what is fundamental in the control of public expenditures, and in the carrying on of responsible government in this country. I am not going to repeat the arguments I have made in previous years. They have been presented so often and so forcibly that hon. members must know them by heart.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say that, if the "hear, hears" mean, as I assume they do, that what I am saying is perfectly true, they would seem to indicate how completely oblivious of their obligations to the people generally, and to the public welfare, hon. gentlemen opposite have become.

The measure the minister is introducing is but an effort on the part of the ministry to obtain another blank cheque from which to make expenditures in largest part for the purpose of the dole, and not for the purpose of providing work for the unemployed. The resolution before us is much broader than appears from its wording. In reality the measure asks us to give to the ministry power to make whatever agreements they please with the provinces. We are being asked to give that power without, in the first instance, having the agreements submitted to the house, and without knowing what their provisions contain. Then, it asks further that the ministry shall be free to use moneys as they please in connection with the national parks; in connection with the stricken areas of the different provinces; in defraying costs of the sale and distribution and production of the products of the field, farm, forest, sea, river and mine, and that the ministry shall be free to lend money to any province on such terms as may be agreed upon; to guarantee the repayment of moneys borrowed by such provinces; to assist any province in any way that may be deemed necessary or advisable in order to provide for the relief of distress and the support and maintenance of those requiring assistance; and to lend money to and guarantee the payment of money by any public corporation or undertaking. The minister has not told us very much to-night concerning the moneys spent to assist corporations. I hope however that, when we reach the committee stage on the bill, he will give us that information. I suggest to the minister that, when we reach the committee stage, he should have his deputies here, so that it will not be necessary for him to say that he will give us the information to-morrow or at some other time. We shall want full information before the bill is proceeded with. The minister has given us certain information, but he has not given us all we want. We should like to have full particulars.

I wish now to touch upon one other feature. The minister has made no allusion to any permanent measure to deal with future unemployment. The ministry has no policy with respect to unemployment as a national problem. Last session we were led to believe that the government might have something to offer by way of a policy of unemployment insurance. We have not had a word to-night from the minister concerning such a policy. For several days the following question has been standing on the order paper in the name of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill):

> Will the government be in a position at this session to bring down legislation dealing with unemployment insurance as referred to by the right honourable the premier, in debate in this house on November 22 last?

The government have not seen fit to answer that question. It was asked some time ago in the hope, I assume, we might have had the information when we came to discuss the resolution now before us. The fact that no answer has been given makes it clear that the government has no policy in respect of unemployment insurance. If current rumour is true—and I think in this respect it is true—when the last dominion-provincial conference was held the government, which had announced to parliament in the early portion of the present session that it would discuss unemployment problems with the provinces, did not place before the provinces any proposals in that regard. I understand they asked the provinces to state their views, although they had called the provinces together among other things for the purpose of laying before them—at least, so we were led to believe—something in the nature of a national scheme of unemployment insurance. If I am misinformed in this connection, I hope the minister will correct me, because I think this House of Commons ought to know whether the government of the day made any proposal at the dominion-provincial conference, and, if so, what the proposal was. Hon. members are entitled to have that information.

Dealing with the question of unemployment, there are two natural main divisions, one which concerns temporary unemployment due to an emergent situation, and measures necessary to meet it, and the other which concerns unemployment as an inevitable incident of industry and the permanent measures essential to meet a situation which unavoidably arises in connection with modern industrial organization. With respect to the first, the present government's policy is that of the dole, and, with respect to the second, they have no policy at all. Such policies as they have with respect to trade and the like, their fiscal policies, are all of a nature to strangle trade instead of encouraging it, and more than anything else are responsible for unemployment in Canada reaching the proportions it has to-day.

In the remarks I read a few moments ago, the Prime Minister said that, by its policies, the government hoped to reduce the number of unemployed. If we are to test their policies by the numbers of unemployed we have to-day we must see how completely those policies have failed. I believe we cannot hope for much improvement, because the government's policies up to the moment have had the effect, and unless changed will continue to have the effect, of making trade more and more difficult, not only externally but internally.

I wish to repeat that unemployment, in my opinion, is Canada's most urgent national problem; that as a temporary measure to deal with the present emergent conditions the government should immediately adopt the policy of appointing a representative national commission which will have power to supervise all expenditures of money voted by this parliament for relief purposes, and which would cooperate with the provinces and municipalities in the administration of unemployment relief, and in an endeavour to provide work for the unemployed. It should do all that could be expected of a body of that nature to coordinate the efforts of all agencies, and to provide parliament with information which will be of service to it in meeting future similar situations. In his statement to-night, the minister has said nothing about plans for dealing with similar problems at another time. If there had been a national commission working during the last two and a half years, it would long ere this have been familiar with the situation from coast to coast in all its phases, and this parliament to-night, instead of looking at a picture which it is impossible to describe, would be debating concrete measures based on recommendations made by a competent body. To meet the very emergent and grave situation which exists I say the government ought still to appoint such a body, and appoint it immediately.

Then, as a permanent measure, I think the government ought immediately to announce to parliament its intention of introducing a national system of unemployment insurance. I say to hon. gentlemen opposite that a national system of unemployment insurance is the policy which the Liberal party in Canada stands for, and the policy which we intend to put into effect if at any time in the future we are again entrusted with office. We would precede that policy by policies which will serve to provide employment by reviving industry and trade. Should unemployment continue to be as it has been in the past, or is at the present, we would deal with such a situation through a representative national commission through which we would seek a mobilization of all the forces and agencies which it would be possible to bring into cooperation to provide work for the unemployed in as many directions as possible by direct employment on the part of employers, and as the result of such assistance as might be necessary on the part of municipal, provincial and federal bodies.

Again may I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the necessity of the government exercising more in the way of supervision over moneys which are voted for unemployment relief, and of this House of Commons being given the right which parliament should have, and which has been taken from it, of controlling all expenditure on unemployment relief account as well as on all other accounts before other millions of dollars are spent in the fashion in which the millions for unemployment relief on blank cheque account have already been spent.

Mr. J. S. WOODSWORTH (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I find myself very largely in agreement with the position taken by the right hon. leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). There is one point that I wish to emphasize particularly, and that is the lack of any plan in the statement which the minister has made. We are asked to allow things to continue to drift just as they have been drifting in the past, simply meeting emergencies as they arise; there is no attempt to set forth any comprehensive scheme either for dealing with the unemployment that now exists or for lessening its volume. The volume of unemployment is beyond what any of us could conceive a very few years ago. The minister puts the number of unemployed under relief as 1,357,000.

Mr. GORDON: No, I do not put the unemployed at that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Those receiving unemployment relief.

Mr. GORDON: No, if I may interrupt; the number receiving relief from infants to old age—not unemployed. When you bring that term in it puts a different complexion on it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Well, those receiving relief. That means 13.5 per cent of our entire population, or 135 out of every 1,000. And I do not think that includes the relief given to pensioners, which is a very large amount and ought in all fairness to be given if we are to have a comprehensive picture of the situation. Large numbers of our pensioners are in receipt of relief. And may I point out that in a good many places there is quite a conflict of authority between the municipal authorities and the federal government with regard to the administration of this kind of relief. In some cases clothing is given, in others clothing is not given or not given in adequate amounts. In some cases fuel is given by the federal government, in some cases it is not given in adequate amounts. There is the case of children over sixteen, I think it is, who are living with their parents; no provision whatever is made by the federal government for those over-age children of pensioners receiving relief. My own city is so overburdened that it refuses to recognize them if they are living with their parents, so that there are large numbers in this category about which we have heard nothing to-night, who yet are in great distress. Then again very many are being assisted by private charity. In some provinces this rolls up to an enormous number. In addition we have those in private homes—large numbers of our young people who have never yet had a job, have had no opportunity of obtaining employment, but are simply living with their parents. In some cases these are young people who have married, and, unable to maintain their own homes, have come back and are living with their parents. We would have to add a very large number in order to get the real total.

Then again nothing has been said about the large numbers whom we have confessed ourselves unable to keep and have deported. People have been deported by the hundreds, by the thousands, for no other reason than that they had become public charges, were not able to make a living under the present circumstances; people who had been induced to come here from other countries and then when the depression came upon us found themselves, like so many Canadians, unable to make a living. I am not blaming the federal government entirely for their deportation, although it is officially responsible, but I would point out that the municipalities have very often found themselves heavily burdened in keeping these people and have urged their deportation. But we should take this very large class into consideration. We spent millions of dollars in inducing them to come here, and now we are doing ourselves millions of dollars of harm in deporting them to other countries, trying to get rid of the responsibility that really is ours. And if you are to give any real indication of the far reaching result of unemployment I think you will have to add a considerable number of those who to-day are in our goals and penitentiaries. Undoubtedly the crime wave has risen with increasing unemployment; people have not been able to withstand the temptation to steal or to get into some other kind of trouble, and so to-day are making it necessary for us to enlarge our gaols and penitentiaries. The number thus on relief is simply enormous. The problem is no doubt one of the greatest problems that faces Canada.

It may be thought by some that there is a little improvement, since the minister is telling us that the costs are being reduced. I suppose almost anything that will lighten the load of the taxpayer is a good thing, but we have to ask, how are these costs being reduced? The minister suggests that it is done partly by more efficient organization. So far so good. But I suggest that in a very great number of cases it is being brought about by reducing the schedules of relief. Case after case comes to me, as I have no doubt they do to other members, of complaints along this line. As a matter of fact, instead of the scales of relief being reduced they should be increased in these times; because two or three years ago almost every family had stocks of bedding and clothing and household utensils. Now these have been very largely depleted, and there is no way of renewing them; the ordinary scale of relief in most of our cities and throughout most of the provinces does not cover the items of this kind.

I think I am not going out of my way when I compare these reductions with other public expenditures. We are not reducing the interest on our bonded indebtedness; we are trying to pay that one hundred per cent, but we are cutting down the amounts being paid in relief, and we are forcing the poorest of the poor to bear the dead weight of the depression. It is not fair to that very large group of our citizens.

Another statement of the minister I confess rather perturbs me. Speaking of the management of some of these camps, he says that the real value of the work will equal or exceed the cost. I cannot think that that is just the right principle. As a taxpayer I am undoubtedly concerned in keeping the costs as low as possible. On the other hand I do not believe it is fair for us to take advantage of the hard times to force people to work at a ridiculously low rate and then have the whole community benefit by it. The minister was not able to tell me the amounts received by each individual man; the amounts he gave were those paid to the individual plus the cost of materials used. Even those figures are not large. But I would point out that the ordinary working man under relief is getting a very small amount in these camps. I think it is five dollars a month in most camps.

Mr. GORDON: In the airways it is 20 cents a day, plus shelter, clothing, food and all the necessities of life.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: That is a little higher than it is in the other camps. I think in some of the construction camps it is $5 a month.

Mr. HEENAN: Ten dollars.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In some cases there is an arrangement that when no clothing is included an allowance shall be made.

[Mr. Woodsworth.]

Mr. GORDON: In the camps where the man gets $10 he provides his own clothing.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Yes; and if he receives $5 he is supplied with clothing. But whether it is $5 with clothing or $10 without clothing it is a ridiculously small sum for men to receive even if they are on relief, and I do not like the idea of our exploiting these men and engaging them in these works at rates below the real value of their work to the community.

Some good work has been done, according to the report, in placing men on farms, but the number so placed is comparatively small and the alleviation of the problem in this respect is more or less temporary. I cannot think that it is any real solution or points the way to any real or general solution of the problem. As to the landing fields, I am not quite sure just when the policy of having landing fields across this country was decided upon. That is a policy that should come before parliament; for undoubtedly it looks in the direction of a new method of preparation for war in the years to come. Further than that, I want to protest against putting these men under anything like military discipline, even though it may be true that they are not drilled.

Mr. GORDON: So that the hon. member will not suffer so much, I would ask him to go to the Rockcliffe air field and see the conditions under which the men are working there. If he does, his mind will be disabused of any idea that preparations are being made for war.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I may be permitted to maintain my own opinions with regard to the reasons why the air service has been so bonused in the past. With regard to this matter there are certain sources of information that are open to almost all members and we all know something of the ideals which have been put forward by certain men in imperial councils with regard to the necessity of steadily maintaining an air force in case of contingency; and I would simply express my own belief that that is one step towards the general scheme of making more adequate preparation along that line for any war that might come in the future.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Ask the hon. member for Shelburne-Yarmouth what he thinks about that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not concerned with his opinion.

Mr. GOTT: Why is the hon. gentleman always thinking about war?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not like the fact that these men are placed under military discipline.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: They are not under military discipline.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): The hon. gentleman has more misinformation to the square mile than any man in Canada.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I do not suggest that the men are under drill but I do suggest, from the minister's own statement, that they are under the control of military officials and that one of the reasons for this is in order that discipline shall be maintained.

Mr. GORDON: That is not what I said at all.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Law and order—you don't believe in that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I don't—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): That's right; I agree with you.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Let me finish. I believe that the fact that civilians are in distress is no reason for either forcing them or inducing them to come under anything like military control.

Mr. GORDON: I made it very clear that there was no compulsion whatever with respect to these men, and I do again extend an invitation to the hon. member to go to any one of the airways camps, visit the men there and see for himself, and he will not feel so badly.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is clear from the minister's statement that this particular relief work is under the Department of National Defence, that officers are in charge, and that these men come under certain discipline while in camp.

Mr. BURY: May I ask the hon. gentleman a question?

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Don't make so many misstatements.

Mr. BURY: Suppose the military authorities in a certain camp employed direct relief labour to put a road through their camp. Would the hon. gentleman suggest that the workmen on the road were under military discipline in the sense that he implies?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman may decide that question for himself.

Mr. BURY: I am asking you to decide it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not deciding it. I am criticizing an arrangement of the minister.

Mr. BURY: An honest argument would force you to.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Don't be so solicitous of him over there. Peace, order and good government—he doesn't know the first thing about it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: If this is what we call parliamentary decorum then, even for a Friday evening, it is not such as is usually regarded by the public as very desirable.

Mr. MORAND: It shows the value of discipline.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister has suggested that costs are being reduced. May I point out that although that may be a saving immediately to the Dominion government it is not a solution of the problem of unemployment. There is no doubt whatever that a good many of our provinces are on the verge of bankruptcy. According to the statement made to-day my own province of Manitoba has not been keeping up its share of relief, and that has meant in a good many municipalities a very great deal of distress. It is only within the last few days that the city of Vancouver has been compelled to make the most rigid retrenchments, and that again has reflected itself in the treatment which is being accorded the unemployed in that city. I have had within the last few days from almost every part of Canada communications that indicate that there is still a very great deal of distress, notwithstanding the enormous amounts that are to-day being spent on relief. Let me go to the far east. Only within the last day or two I received a communication from the united steel workers' organization of Sydney, Nova Scotia, in which information is given that in a city of 23,000 over 2,000 families are on relief and about 200 single men, that the steel plant is entirely closed down and that the relief given in Sydney is as follows: A man or woman $1 a week; a family of two, $2; a family of three and four, $3; a family of five, $4; a family of six and seven, $5; a family of eight and nine, $6; a family of over nine, $7. These are the rates per week. It is further stated that the single men and women, besides being asked to live on one dollar a week, are forced to submit to the indignity of being compelled to carry this dollar's worth of groceries in a bag on their backs from the relief station through the streets to their homes.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): They should have free delivery.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The hon. gentleman may make light of this kind of thing but—

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Didn't you ever carry your groceries home? I have lots of times.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Some men may make light of the whole performance—

Mr. MORAND: Stick to the argument; don't broaden your base.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: In some cases, it is said, old men up to seventy-eight years of age are compelled to work for their relief and numerous cases have come under notice where men are compelled to work in cold weather without underwear or socks.

Mr. GOTT: They should be drawing old age pensions if they are over seventy.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The communication goes on to say that in some cases men in advanced stages of tuberculosis are being denied medical treatment and are being forced to work for their relief. I quote:

> Everyone in receipt of relief is compelled to work for the city at thirty-five cents an hour until the amount of their relief is worked out. The only necessities that are supplied on these relief orders are groceries and fuel and the amount of coal that is allowed for a family—

The communication continues:

> There has been no provision made whatever for the supplying of clothing, shoes, medicine, medical services, bedclothing, et cetera, and although we have continually pressed for these things to the city authorities, we have been told by them that the money allocated for relief by the government could not be used for the purchase of these things.

This organization made a partial survey of the district and the following conditions were found in connection with the first 209 families visited:

Total number receiving relief.. ..	1,260
Children going to school..	280
Children kept from school for lack of clothing..	100
Number in these homes badly in need of clothing..	207
Number of families badly in need of bedclothes..	188
Total amount of relief received by the above 209 families per week.	$832
Average per family, per week.. ..	3 84
Average per person, per week....	0 66
Average per person, per meal.. ..	0 3¼

I do not know whether some of the hon. gentlemen who laugh and talk have ever lived on three and one-seventh cents per meal. The letter continues:

> At the last meeting of the city council held on February 16, the council decided to suspend all relief work for the month of March.

Mr. YOUNG: Who makes that report?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It was sent to me by the united steelworkers' organization of Sydney, Nova Scotia.

Mr. HANSON York-Sunbury): Have you verified it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No.

Mr. HANSON York-Sunbury): But you put it out as the gospel truth.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is signed by M. A. MacKenzie, president, and Joseph Murphy, secretary.

An hon. MEMBER: Did you write and ask for it?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: No, I did not write and ask for it. Are there any more questions?

May I suggest that to a greater or lesser degree this is the position in which thousands of our fellow citizens find themselves to-day. Just before I left my own city to come to Ottawa I was asked to go down to the medical arts building to meet some of the doctors of the city who wished to emphasize the necessity of medical attention being given as a part of relief. There is no doubt that the medical men are giving an immense amount of free service; that is perhaps their duty and responsibility at this time, but this thing has increased to such a volume that it is now utterly impossible for them to cope with it. Many of the younger doctors are simply swamped with this kind of practice. We have admitted the necessity of giving to the people in distress a certain amount of food, clothing, fuel and shelter; it seems to me that it is necessary that we should go a little further and admit frankly the necessity of medical service.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: Medical service is given in the province of Ontario.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): My city gives medical service.

Mr. MacMILLAN: It is given in Saskatchewan.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It is given free in my city.

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: While an hon. member is still on his feet I do not think it is in order for hon. members to interrupt him,

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The hon. member is making an absolute misstatement when he says that the sick are not getting relief.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I did not make that statement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND: The province of Ontario is taking care of every person who is suffering.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I made no such statement as the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) is suggesting.

I am trying to say that the need for free medical attention is becoming so great that it is getting beyond the capacity of our local agencies. I am urging that it should be recognized as being just as much a charge as food, clothing, fuel or shelter.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): It is.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is not recognized by the Dominion government. This government gives approximately one-third of the cost of food, clothing and shelter, but makes no provision whatever for medical services. It may be that in the constituencies represented by some hon. members there is so little poverty that the local people are able to take care of it, but I know that in my own city such is not the case. We are more or less the distributing centre for the whole west and we have been very hard hit by this depression. Under the circumstances we have possibly an exceptional load to carry. I know of only one other city that is in anything like a similar position, that is the city of Vancouver. In these cities it is becoming next to impossible for the local agencies to carry the whole burden, and the point I am trying to make is that the Dominion government should assume a share of this kind of relief. As long as relief was thought to be a temporary matter, as long as it was hoped that prosperity was around the corner, the people could endure things for a little while and in some cases defer medical attention for a few weeks or months, but the situation has extended to such a length as to become very serious.

There is another question which has not been touched, the young people of this country. I am told that something like 100,000 young people are leaving our public and high schools and colleges each year to enter the industrial field. Very few can be absorbed, and it seems to me that if there is to be no general scheme under which unemployment may be lessened, then the least we can do is to adopt some plan such as we had during the war and provide for the continued education of these people. We should arrange for their attendance at night schools, at manual training schools, and so on, so that they will not be forced to drift on the streets. There are some here who will say that education is purely a provincial matter; others may say that in their localities the schools are looking after these young people. That may be, but I submit that right across this country there are many localities in which the schools are not able to take care of even their regular work, much less provide for the young people who have no opportunity of employment. I place this matter before the house not as a question of regular education which must be carried on but as a relief measure which should be adopted immediately so that instead of our boys becoming bandits, as we were told the other day was the case by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), and being forced into the penitentiaries, we could either provide them with steady work or make special provisions so that they may be saved from a life of complete idleness and possible criminality.

I should like to take exception to the closing words of the minister. He suggested that we must not rely too much upon the state, that the unemployed should take advantage of the opportunities open to them. Everyone will admit that people should take advantage of the opportunities open to them, but the fact is that hundreds of thousands of these people have no opportunities open to them. There is no doubt of that, there are no opportunities open. It is almost adding insult to injury to lecture these people and suggest to them that if they only had a little more initiative they would get out and find work.

Mr. GORDON: Mr. Speaker, I think I have a right—

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. GORDON: —to deny ever having said what the hon. gentleman has just stated I did say. I never lectured anybody.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Make him withdraw.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I have nothing to withdraw.

Mr. GORDON: I do not care whether the hon. member withdraws the statement or not; I never said it.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The minister said that we must not rely too much on the state, but that people should take advantage of the opportunities open to them.

Mr. GORDON: But I did not say what the hon. member added to that.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am not suggesting that the minister did. But what I do suggest is this, that there are hundreds of thousands who to-day have no opportunity to get work. I repeat: It strikes me as almost adding insult to injury when the minister proceeds to give vent to some pious phrases about its being too bad that people rely too much upon the state, the implication being that they would not thus develop their own private initiative.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Haywire.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Somebody says "haywire," and others say: "Do not let him get away with that sort of thing." I want to give some more "haywire" given by the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) at Calgary on June 12, 1930, nearly three years ago. At that time the right hon. gentleman, who is now Prime Minister and who was then seeking to become one, said:

This is a new country, and there is no excuse for unemployment in Canada if a government does it duty.

That is haywire now; it is haywire when it is uttered by a private member of the opposition, but I do not know whether it was haywire when it was given in Calgary by a gentleman who was seeking to attain office. I am inclined to think it is true that:

This is a new country, and there is no excuse for unemployment in Canada if a government does its duty.

Mr. MORAND: How about other countries?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: Never mind other countries; I shall come to that presently. The Prime Minister came to that. He went on to say:

Law and order must be maintained. Men and women must not starve. Mothers must have clothes.

There are thousands of them who have not.

Mr. GORDON: That is not correct.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: It is correct.

Mr. GORDON: No, it is not.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: The Prime Minister continues:

Children cannot be subjected to the rigours of this climate unless properly cared for.
Voice: "Thousands are starving now."
Mr. Bennett: I am sorry to hear any are starving, sorrier than I can tell. I am not for a single moment endeavouring to make political capital out of it, but I am bound as a public man who may have to accept great responsibilities with respect to government to say to the people of Canada that this is a blot worthy of the condemnation of any government responsible for it, and, men and women, I propose to remedy this.

Further on he said:

I realize that this country is now living in the month of June (1930)—

That is almost three years ago, may I interject.

—and unemployment in every part of the country is not decreasing as it should.

Is it decreasing to-day? It is increasing steadily.

There are men and women without food in Canada—

The Prime Minister said that. Haywire again!

There are men and women without food in Canada to properly sustain life and someone says it is just as bad in some other country.

An hon. gentleman across the floor suggested another country. The Prime Minister said this, and may I adopt his words:

My duty is to my native land, this dominion.

It is always a favourite practice to try to draw a red herring across the trail by referring to some other country. The present Prime Minister in those days refused to be diverted, and quite rightly so. He said:

My duty is to my native land, this dominion.

Even if there are people starving in China—

An hon. MEMBER: Russia.

Mr. WOODSWORTH: —in Russia, as there are, in Italy; even if they are starving over there, does that make it any easier for our people in Canada who are on the verge of starvation? I continue to quote the present Prime Minister:

They say the problem is a problem of the city, let the city look after it. Another says it is the province, and let the province look after them, and someone is saying the federal power should look after them, and I confess to you that this problem has given me more concern than any other single matter engaging my attention during the last few years. After all, no man who has a heart can see the mothers and children without clothes or food without emotion, however hardhearted he may be. What are we going to do about it? . . .

I say to you, my fellow citizens, my fellow Canadians, speaking to the larger audience, I am convinced this problem has now ceased to be local and provincial and has become national in its importance.

If it were national in its importance three years ago, it is still the same. It is appalling that year after year we continue to squabble about whether jurisdiction belongs to a provincial government or to a federal government, whether it is a municipal or a provincial responsibility, and quarrel as to whether clothing should be provided by the city or the provincial authorities, or whether, perchance, it should come from the dominion, while all this time thousands of people are suffering physically, mentally and through moral degeneration because of their anxiety and the dislocation in their lives which has come in this way. This is what the Prime Minister goes on to say—

An hon. MEMBER: From what is the hon gentleman reading?

Mr. WOODSWORTH: I am reading from a report of a speech given by the present Prime Minister in Calgary on June 12, 1930. He says:

> I propose that parliament shall formulate a definite plan for permanent relief, and that parliament, as representing the people, shall deal with this national problem and provide amelioration for the condition in order that next winter the Canadian people may not be facing the crisis that is upon us without having a remedy at hand.
> That I propose to do. I have delayed saying that until I have come to my own city, amongst my own people of this western country, and the western country applies equally to the east as to the west. This dominion must deal with the problem that is no longer local or provincial, but affects the life of the men and women of Canada and affects the civilization of this country.

I do not think I need add very much to that. The Prime Minister in his speech nearly three years ago laid down some general principles that are as applicable to-day as they were in 1930. It seems to me that it is the responsibility of the government to put those principles into practice.

I have nothing whatever to say in adverse criticism of many of the details as presented by the minister to-night, but I believe he should bring down to the house some very definite plan of relieving the distress of the people in a much more adequate way than it is being done to-day, and further, the government should not delay even beyond this session in providing some sort of plan which would prevent a great deal of the unemployment that is now affecting this country.

May I add just a word? As far as I see the situation, I doubt very much whether under the system that exists this is possible. I do not want to put up to the government an impossible proposition, but they have again and again said: It is quite possible that we may have prosperity under this system. Then it is their duty to see that the prosperity is worked out. They have taken the ground that there is something temporarily wrong with this system; that if they are given the opportunity they can arrange that the men, women and children have a decent opportunity in Canada. Then I say: Here is their opportunity; either they have to make good under this system and provide at least food, clothing and shelter adequate for the maintenance of a decent standard of living on the part of the people of this country, or they must recognize the fact that their system is failing under their very eyes.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): I feel, Mr. Speaker, that this is the time and the place to make some remarks on the general principles of the bill which we are now being asked to extend, and also to mention some facts bearing on the situation nationally or locally as viewed by a representative of this house.

When I spoke on this measure last year I said then that I was under the impression that it was simply a palliative measure and that it would not long remain the law in this country. I am therefore disappointed that this house is now being asked to renew the provisions of this bill for another year. This measure is not a very popular one so far as northern Ontario is concerned. In my section of the country the people want work, not charity or doles. They are out-and-out Canadians willing and able to work, and all they want is the chance.

The minister at the end of his remarks mentioned, rightly or wrongly, that one year's experience of direct relief administration had proven that it was the more economical method. Personally I believe in the principle of unemployment relief which this parliament inaugurated two years ago, of providing public works, the building of roads and so forth, as much the better plan, because it is work the people want. The minister also said that direct relief is now being administered more economically than when it was first inaugurated. However, I believe, and I think the majority of the people of northern Ontario believe, in the principle of providing work for the unemployed through the undertaking of public works throughout the length and breadth of this country. The present system does not go to the root of the trouble. Our settlers and miners and working men in northern Ontario do not want to become mendicants. They do not want to have to go before some organization, municipal, provincial or national, and beg for a subsistence. It is contrary to the Canadian spirit and to the British spirit. No true Canadian wants to do that.

I want to be fair in this discussion, just as the minister was fair this afternoon. The higher officials in my section of the country have tried to be fair, and I believe they are fair, but no doubt anomalies and injustices have resulted from some of the actions of the minor officials, which are understandable when one realizes the magnitude and complexity of the task performed. On the other hand, I could mention many instances where I believe the federal and provincial officials in our section of the country tried to be absolutely fair to all sections of the population.

Nevertheless last year I was greatly astonished when I read in the Kapuskasing Tribune this report under the heading. "Hands out $10,000":

C. R. Harrison, M.L.A. for Nipissing, this week completed a tour of the eastern part of the riding during which he distributed colonization grants totalling $10,000 to the settlers. His travels took him to Madawaska and Whitney and the townships of Cameron, Boulter, Lauder and East Ferris.

Mr. Harrison found considerable hardship in the Madawaska and Whitney sections due to a lack of employment, but noted that the settlers are courageous and optimistic.

That statement has never been denied; I do not believe it was ever denied by Mr. Harrison or by any newspaper. I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that no provincial or federal member has the right to hand out public moneys for relief work. Why did Mr. Harrison have $10,000 to distribute in his own section? I do not know, but I do know that he had no right whatever, nor had any other member, to have the distribution of even a red cent of public funds in his own riding. I am just as much opposed to Mr. Harrison doing that as I would be opposed to any other member of the local house or of this parliament. We have the officials and the proper machinery for the distribution of these funds, and no member should have the right to handle them at all.

I wish to quote from an editorial in the Northland Post of Cochrane, a weekly paper absolutely independent in politics. It is headed, "Direct Relief as a Political Weapon," and reads:

Of the many undesirable features of the direct relief plan, not the least obnoxious is its political aspect. It is not hard to envision party workers in the next election going about the country telling those who are on direct relief that unless the government is retured to power their relief will be cut off. The Porcupine Advance hints at this angle to the matter, when it says: "The only people among the ordinary citizens of Canada who are not bitterly opposed to direct relief are some politicians and communists." A clear indication of how it works out was given by the Hearst local of the N.O.S.A. recently, when the district locals were circularized in regard to direct relief versus the land clearing bonus. The president of the Hearst local would not put the matter to a vote, fearing that if he did so and the local voted in favour of the bonus, the direct relief now being received, would be cut off. In our columns last week we published the result of this circularizing which shows that a predominating majority of the settlers of this section favour the land clearing bonus in place of either road work or direct relief. The settlers quite evidently wish to be independent and should be given the opportunity through the bonus system.

It is not only in the north, however, that the direct relief system lends itself to political usage. Wherever men are directly dependent upon the government for sustenance, there will be undue pressure brought to bear at election time. And If there is anyone artless enough to think that politicians will forbear to take advantage of the situation, they do not know politics!

The practice of direct relief is wholly detestable, from whatever angle one may view it, and while it may be justifiable and necessary as a temporary expedient, as a solution of the unemployed problem it is a costly and burdensome failure. As the Advance has often remarked, there is only one solution of the unemployed problem and that is employment.

That is the consensus of opinion in every section of the country that I visited last year.

Mr. GORDON: Can the hon. member give me any instance in northern Ontario where relief has either been given or denied because of the person's political persuasion?

Mr. BRADETTE: I believe that question was answered a moment ago when I read the press dispatch.

Mr. GORDON: I am speaking of any incident within the hon. member's own knowledge. He is a member of a large riding in northern Ontario, and knows something of the district.

Mr. BRADETTE: Surely the hon. minister should distinguish between direct activities and the moral of the thing. I have already quoted to the house an article in which it was stated that a member of the provincial house in Ontario had the actual distribution of the sum of $10,000 in the riding of Nipissing. I have also said that as far as I knew the higher officials in my section have not played partisan politics in any way. I said that last year, and I repeat it now. I have also cited an editorial corroborating the viewpoint of the Porcupine Advance, and the same applies to the Northland Post. I am not mentioning any cases in my section because I believe the higher officials wanted to play the game. But no doubt the minister knows that, happily in few instances, some of the minor officials have played the political end of the game.

Mr. GORDON: I know nothing of it.

Mr. BRADETTE: I do know something of it, but I do not believe it would help this measure to bring the matter up here. I wish to go to the root of the question, to the moral of it. It is not necessary to bring up local matters which would not be at all beneficial to the bill or the problem before us. The point I want to make is that work is preferable under all conditions and circumstances to direct relief.

Mr. GORDON: Premier Taschereau does not think so, having regard to the expense.

Mr. BRADETTE: I do not know what he thinks about it, but I saw this article in yesterday's Montreal Gazette under the heading, "Hon. J. N. Francoeur deals with relief. Hope expressed Ottawa would forego direct aid in favour of public works":

> Hope that the Dominion government would adopt public works and forego direct relief as a means of lessening unemployment was voiced in the Quebec legislative assembly to-day by Hon. J. N. Francoeur, Minister of Public Works, when he continued the budget debate.
> Relief of unemployment by providing jobs was a better method than by providing clothes and shelter, Mr. Francoeur stated and he hoped the Dominion government would soon take that view of the matter as it would be better for the jobless themselves and brighten the general situation.

These words were uttered the day before yesterday in the Quebec legislative assembly, so if I have to take the word of the minister there can be no peace in the Quebec cabinet, because the Minister of Public Works for the province says that it would be better to provide work than direct relief. He must have been voicing the sentiments of the premier of the province of Quebec. I repeat what I said a few moments ago, that the people of Canada to-day want work and not charity.

There is one anomaly up in my section which I believe at this time should be mentioned. When the scrip system was inaugurated, which is the only practical one under present conditions, a man received a scrip carrying with it a guarantee by the provincial government to the effect that he was entitled to receive provisions at a store. The man was left to his own initiative to buy the goods where he could get them at the best price, which was the best system. But for that scrip he was supposed to work. I maintain that when a man works either at manual labour, at professional or clerical work he should be paid in Canadian dollars and not by scrip. If a man received $10 he was compelled to work five days on road construction at $2 a day. At the end of the five days they would receive not Canadian currency but scrip, which was good in itself, but to some extent limited. The holders could buy only certain lines of goods, commodities necessary for the sustenance of life. There was no provision for medicines and various other things of that type. The people who held the scrip, although they had done manual labour, were compelled to buy the goods stipulated by the government. I contend, after making a thorough inquiry, that if a man is compelled to do work for consideration he receives from the government, he should be paid in Canadian currency.

There is another matter which no doubt the Minister of Labour will remedy as soon as possible. Perhaps he is not aware of it, and I should like him to understand that my statements are not made in a spirit of criticism.

Mr. GORDON: I am quite aware of the situation; it obtains just the same in the province of Quebec, and I have no control over it whatever. The hon. member knows that, I am sure.

Mr. BRADETTE: I want to be fair; I want to bring these matters to his attention, because I know that through the bill to be introduced and by the powers given by this House of Commons he will have charge of direct relief. Surely the Minister of Labour must have some great power in dealing with these matters when in some instances he is paying 50 per cent and in other instances 33⅓ per cent for direct relief. The point I wish to bring to the minister's attention—and I know he will deal fairly with this—is the fact that to-day the retailer has to pay cash for his goods. Throughout the country when retailers receive scrip they are called upon to give goods for the amount appearing on the order. I do not wish the minister to think I am criticizing, but I am suggesting that there should be a remedy for a condition which is detrimental to the retail trade in general. Some of the scrip has not been paid, although the goods have been delivered for over three months. I believe that condition is not fair to the retailer. Probably it is only a matter of delay, but to the small man these delays are very important. In this House of Commons we hear a great deal about the farmers' problems and the problems of the working man, but we very seldom hear anything about the retailers. I believe they constitute a part of our population which during times of stress and depression have given great help in advancing goods. I have no doubt this condition will receive the attention of the Minister of Labour as soon as possible. The scrip is not transferable; if a man goes to his banker with it, due to the fact that he has to pay cash for his goods, the money he would raise would cost him eight per cent per annum. Therefore on that score alone I believe the Department of Labour should make a very thorough investigation of the matter. In these days it is unfortunate if a retail dealer has to hold papers for three or four months before obtaining cash; he cannot afford it. We know that dealers in northern Ontario have suffered because of that condition.

I say work should be given in my section of the country. There are undertakings being carried on which are not only local in their nature but are of a national character. In this connection I could refer to the trans-Canada highway. It is a great sight when one travels from here to North Bay, through the Ottawa Valley, to see many camps, where men are finding healthy and useful occupation. Perhaps salaries and wages on these works are not as high as they might be, but they would be of help in these times. This matter of the trans-Canada highway was dealt with at great length by the Minister of Labour and other Conservative candidates during the last general election. I am sorry to say, however, that outside of a few minor repairs made to the Ferguson highway from North Bay to Cochrane there has been no actual work done on the trans-Canada highway. Other sections, however, are receiving more benefits than we are. Of course we are glad they are receiving them, but we feel we are not being treated fairly so far as the trans-Canada highway is concerned. I was astonished to learn the other day that large sums of money have been spent on the trans-Canada highway from North Bay along the north shore of lake Superior. I have no quarrel with that section of the country. I am glad that those people are receiving the benefit, but I hope the minister will not tolerate one section of the country being left out of the picture.

Last week at a meeting in Ottawa Mr. James Sinton, chief engineer of the Ontario Department of Northern Development, spoke about the trans-Canada highway as follows:

> During the period November 1, 1931, to October 31, 1932, a total of 2,118,498 cubic yards of earth and 681,333 cubic yards of rock were excavated on Ontario's portion of the trans-Canada highway. In addition to the 96 miles of completed grading, partial grading on the highway extended over a distance of 550 miles.
> Ontario's contribution to the mileage of the trans-Canada highway, Mr. Sinton pointed out, is in the neighbourhood of one-third of the entire coast to coast mileage, or roughly 1,400 miles. The route has been designated from the Quebec boundary through the Ottawa valley to North Bay and from Schreiber, on the north shore of lake Superior to the Manitoba boundary. The remaining portion of the route will not be decided upon until such time as aerial and ground surveys have uncovered sufficient information in regard to the alternative route available.

The last part of that paragraph leaves a certain amount of hope for our section of the country. The provincial government has been working on the aerial survey for the last two years, and surely their report should be ready now. But, Mr. Speaker, I have never doubted the good will of the Minister of Labour in the present government, and his desire for fair play, and I have no doubt that our section of the country will be directly connected with the routing of the trans-Canada highway. At the present time thousands of young men could be usefully employed in the building of the road in our section, particularly west of Hearst, the same as they would be employed at the head of the lakes and the Ottawa valley. I believe the spring would be the time to start that work. We also have a road which would prove very useful for the provinces of Ontario and Quebec, joining the northern sections of those provinces, the Cochrane-LaReine highway. There are only about seventy-five to eighty miles to be constructed. Then you have a straight highway along the Canadian National railway to the Ontario border through the towns of Cochrane and Kapuskasing. In that section quite a number of men could be employed in useful work giving direct communication with the province of Quebec.

Another question with which the Minister of Labour is well acquainted at the present, and I believe has been for the last few years, is the building of a road between Timmins and Sudbury. All our local papers have been agitating for it, particularly the Porcupine Advance of Timmins. It would give direct communication to such great mining sections as Sudbury, Kirkland Lake, Elk Lake and Porcupine. Work on parts of this road has already been done, and I believe a few hundred men should be put to work there to give that needed communication. The opening of such a road would link up the mining camps of Sudbury, Shiningtree, Gowganda, Elk Lake, Matachewan and Porcupine.

I might say that the towns of Cochrane, Timmins and Haileybury at present are not giving direct relief; at least they do not give money without work. The authorities in Haileybury decided to clear the townsite to do away with the fire hazard. I believe that principle should apply to all municipalities.

In that work thousands of men could be given useful employment, beneficial to themselves and to the country as a whole. In Cochrane no direct relief was given to people who were not prevented from working by ill health; they were set to cut stove wood or to do road and street work. I believe the town of Timmins did the same. If the municipalities can carry out that principle, it can be applied even more readily by the central government. In this respect I am voicing the sentiments of my riding as expressed in the local press, regardless of political affiliations. With one voice they criticize what has been done under direct relief, and they are asking that as soon as possible the Canadian people in that section be given an opportunity to earn their living and not be mendicants.

The hon. minister mentioned the work that has been done on the trans-Canada airways. Last fall when this matter was mentioned during the preliminary session I praised the government for that work. Only a few days ago the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Sutherland) was kind enough to give me some information about that work. There again I believe the government is deserving of praise for the work done. But on our own section, the Hearst-Cochrane-Winnipeg division, we have not received the amount we expected, and for that reason many single men have not been able to find employment this winter. I realize that there are also almost insurmountable physical obstacles in proceeding with that undertaking, but I hope the work will be proceeded with early this year so that those single men in the urban and rural centres of northern Ontario will find useful occupation.

A few minutes ago the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said he knew some sections of the country where the people on direct relief were not receiving medical attention. Again I must praise the government for having last summer in our section of the country inaugurated a system of providing medical attention to those in need in the organized and unorganized districts. On that score I think the government should be complimented. Some farmer settlers were not receiving the medical attention that they required. To-day I am glad to say that there is a wonderful improvement as far as my own section of the country is concerned.

Another matter that I want to bring to the attention of the minister is this; before I left home after the Christmas holidays, the provincial government sent a circular letter to the municipalities and towns to the effect that the doctors should not receive more than $100 a month for medical attention and medicine. Of course in cities where they have a great number of doctors that might be reasonable. But the hon. minister knows well the situation in the north. Take for instance a doctor living in Kapuskasing, surrounded by a large number of unorganized municipalities where there is no doctor. If that doctor is limited to $100 a month, then the people who have suffered in these distressed times are not going to be benefited by this new legislation; they will not receive the required medical attention. Speaking for the doctors in the Porcupine, Cochrane, Kapuskasing and Hearst districts, I know that they do not charge more than thirty or forty per cent of the usual fees, but I believe with the $100 limit it is impossible for the doctors in those vast scattered and unorganized districts, where there live quite a number of people, to give the attention that the people need. Before leaving that subject I wish to say that the government merits praise in connection with that important matter of looking after the health of the people in these scattered districts in northern Ontario.

I listened with a great deal of attention to the statement of the hon. Minister of Labour regarding the back to the land movement. I am absolutely with him in the work that has been accomplished there.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, February 27, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

PRIVILEGE—MR. DUGUAY

Mr. J. L. DUGUAY (Lake St. John) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the following news item was published on Saturday last by the newspaper Le Canada:

Mr. Duguay went to St. Leon to meet a settler by the name of Jeffrey Levasseur—

I wish to state, sir, that I never met any settler, at St. Leon. Moreover, I have never been to St. Leon. The settler alluded to called to see me at my office. I wish to add that I am amazed at the statement made by the Hon. Mr. Laferté, Minister of Colonization of Quebec. He is entirely wrong in seeking to justify his agents by throwing the blame on me. Within the last ten days settlers from St. Leon—the latter is not in the county of Lake St. John but in that of Chicoutimi—have come regularly to my office with grievances against Mr. Maltais. I replied to Mr. Levasseur that he should first communicate with the Minister of Colonization at Quebec.

Mr. PARENT: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is out of order.

Mr. SPEAKER: No, he is not; he is speaking to a question of privilege.

(Translation): Mr. Levasseur stated that he had already written to the minister but had not received a satisfactory reply. I finally told him that if he wished to communicate with Ottawa, he was at liberty to do so. I, myself, wrote the dispatch, Mr. Levasseur signed and sent it. I am unaware who paid for this dispatch. The amount of $40 mentioned in the article was paid to Mr. Levasseur after the dispatch was forwarded. Mr. Jeffrey Levasseur admitted to me in the presence of a witness, in my office, that on his return to Chicoutimi they had made him sign a statement similar to the one which appeared in the newspaper article. I can therefore state, sir, that I acted within my rights, and that in the future, under similar circumstances, I shall act the same way. It matters little whether the Quebec Minister of Colonization approves of my conduct, I shall act as in the past.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. GORDON: I desire to lay on the table of the house certain orders in council passed pursuant to the relief legislation.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk).

RAYON INDUSTRIES

Mr. SPENCER:

1. Are the rayon industries in Canada subsidized by the government in any way?
2. If so, to what extent?
3. What profits or dividends have been declared by rayon or celanese products corporations from the years 1928 to 1932, inclusive?
4. What is the scale of wages paid to men and women employed in these industries?
5. How many hours constitute a worker's week in this industry?
6. What percentage of these products are used for military purposes?
7. How much did the Canadian government buy from these firms from 1928 to 1932, inclusive?
8. Can rayon factories be turned into munitions factories in case of war?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, I should like to point out that apparently there is an idea abroad in this house that questions may be asked which can be answered only by the government writing to the people concerned. This could be done just as well by the member as by the officials of the government. The fourth question concerns the scale of wages paid to men and women employed in these industries. This is a matter of provincial legislation as well as of contract between the employee and the company and all the government could do would be to write a letter and ascertain what the scale might be. The same could be said of the next question dealing with the worker's week in the industry. This is purely a provincial matter. The custom of asking the government to send out communications to various people in different parts of Canada in order to answer questions is not what is needed to take up the time of parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Speaker, I agree largely with the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) in what he has just said regarding questions which relate to private industries and the obtaining of information by the government when such information can be obtained just as easily by members of parliament, but I should like to know whether the right hon. gentleman's remarks extend to the giving of information with respect to matters related to bodies immediately under the control of the government. I refer particularly, for example, to harbour commissions and bodies of that sort which operate indirectly if not directly under a department of government.

Mr. BENNETT: As the leader of the opposition had occasion, I think, to indicate some years ago, the truth is that with respect to some of the operations of harbour commissions and other bodies of that character which receive money from the government, the government can exercise some control, being compelled to give approval of certain matters before contracts are entered into, but in what one might call the ordinary administrative side of the question, the government has not any more control of the matter than has someone on the street. I did not, however, in the observations I made a few moments ago dealing with the type of questions to which I referred, intend to deal with those bodies at all. The policy of the government has been immediately to send to the bodies affected the questions that have been asked and to seek from them replies which it tables in the house as indicating the best information available with respect to such questions, and we shall continue to do that.

Mr. SPENCER: It will be satisfactory to me if the government cannot give the information. I simply withdraw questions 3, 4 and 5.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: With regard to the reply which the Prime Minister has just made, I understand some questions have been asked with respect to harbour commissions, but they have been ruled out of order. I hope they will be reconsidered in view of the statement that has just been made by the Prime Minister, because I think they are covered by what he has said.

Mr. BENNETT: I do not want to take up time unnecessarily, but with respect to the sixth question:

What percentage of these products are used for military purposes?

How can the government answer the question How does it know what the product of any particular factory is and how can it compare what is used for military purposes with the total output? As regards the seventh question:

How much did the Canadian government buy from these firms from 1928 to 1932, inclusive?

This is a proper question, although it is very general. As regards the eighth question:

Can rayon factories be turned into munitions factories in case of war?

It might be said with respect to any factory in the world that it could be turned into a munitions factory in case of war.

I do not wish the right hon. gentleman to misunderstand me. There are questions which obviously the government would not think it fair to ask commissions to answer. For instance: Did John Smith work for the harbour commission and did he receive $2.50? You spend a dollar in time and energy in getting that question answered and the answer cannot be of any real value, nor is it the intention of the government to ask the commission for it. I do not, however, think my right hon. friend referred to questions of that character.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think the question might be permitted to appear on the order paper in case there should be any criticism of anyone for not allowing it so to appear.

Mr. BENNETT: At the risk of being tiresome, I might point out to the right hon. gentleman that on one occasion in the house during recent years it was indicated that some discretion must be exercised by the Speaker as to what should appear on the order paper. I fancy the incident to which he refers is one in which the Speaker, in the exercise of his discretion, thought the question should not appear on the order paper. That is as far, I understand, as the matter has gone; that is, the Speaker is responsible for what appears on the order paper.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The right hon. gentleman is quite correct, but I think if his honour the Speaker would reconsider the question in the light of the statement as made by the Prime Minister this afternoon, he would allow it to appear on the order paper.

Mr. SPEAKER: In view of the attitude of the government at this session regarding questions asked as to the internal management of harbour boards, certain questions along the same lines have not been put on the order paper, the government having announced its intention of not answering such questions. As to question 1 on to-day's order paper, the first question seems fair enough and depending on the answer to that, questions following might or might not be properly asked. I should say questions 1 and 7 might properly be asked, the others to be dropped.

Mr. CAHAN: I give the answer to this question so far as we have information. The answer is very meagre.

1. No.
2. Answered by No. 1.
3. No information.
4. Wages:

	Per hour Cents
Males—
Skilled	50-80
Semi-skilled	35-50
Labourers	25-35
Youths	15-20
Females—
Adults	18-30
Girls	15-21

5. Hours: Standard hours of labour: 50 to 55 per week.
6. Nil.
7. Nil.
8. No information.

RADIO COMMISSION

Mr. ILSLEY:

1. Has the position of assistant to the chairman of the radio commission been established?
2. If so: (a) what will his duties be; (b) what will his salary be; (c) will he be appointed by the Civil Service Commission; (d) will he be appointed after competitive written examination?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The following information has been furnished by the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission:—

1. No; no such position is contemplated.
2. Answered by No. 1.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. DUFF:

1. What is the total cost of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, in the province of Nova Scotia, for the calendar year 1932?

2. How many officers and how many men are employed on the force in that province?

Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. $461,129.78.

2.

Officers	10
Non-commissioned officers and constables	192
Special constables	99
	301

Note:— Of the above-mentioned special constables, 94 are members of the marine section, employed as crews on preventive service vessels.

*UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

Mr. NEILL:

Will the government be in a position at this session to bring down legislation dealing with unemployment insurance as referred to by the right honourable, the premier, in debate in this house on November 22nd last?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is no.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION—HULL LAND PURCHASE

Mr. FOURNIER:

1. Has the Federal District Commission acquired a piece of land on Laurier street in the city of Hull?
2. If so, from whom has the commission purchased such land?
3. For what purpose will it be used?
4. What price did the commission pay for such land?
5. If such land has not been acquired, does the commission intend acquiring same?

Mr. RHODES:

1. Yes.
2. From the Canadian International Paper Co., Ltd.
3. For park and playground purposes.
4. The price paid was $20,000—19 acres.
5. Answered by 1.

TOBACCO STATISTICS

Mr. HEPBURN:

1. How many pounds of raw and stemmed leaf tobacco were imported into Canada in the years 1929, 1930, 1931 and 1932?
2. How much duty was paid each year?
3. How much was paid in drawbacks?
4. How much imported leaf tobacco is held in bond without duty being paid?

Mr. RYCKMAN:

1.

Fiscal year—	Pounds
1928-29	18,726,618
1929-30	17,113,472
1930-31	16,580,394
1931-32	13,075,335

[Mr. Duff.]

No separate figures are kept for stemmed and unstemmed raw leaf tobacco.

2. Imported raw leaf tobacco for manufacturing purposes in Canada is transferred to excise bond without payment of customs duty, but when ex-warehoused for excise purposes 40 cents per pound standard weight is collected on unstemmed and 60 cents per pound standard weight collected on stemmed tobacco. The following statement gives the amount of these excise duties which are tantamount to customs duties on imported raw leaf tobacco:

Fiscal year	Unstemmed	Stemmed
1928-29	$6,852,402 60	$405,112 40
1929-30	6,596,128 35	410,960 75
1930-31	6,339,399 78	356,325 50
1931-32	5,460,943 38	210,241 80

3. There is no drawback payable on unmanufactured foreign raw leaf tobacco taken out of excise bond and exported. A refund is allowed, however, of excise duty paid on foreign raw leaf tobacco (less ten per cent allowance for moisture) contained in manufactured tobacco, cigars and cigarettes exported by licensed manufacturers. The following statement gives the amount of refunds paid under this heading:

Fiscal year
1928-29	$ 59,915 69
1929-30	21,087 53
1930-31	101,351 05

4. Raw leaf tobacco held in excise bond on the 31st of January, 1933:

	Standard weight Lbs.
Unstemmed	7,288,351
Stemmed	470,576

FUNDED DEBT

Mr. COOTE:

1. What was the total funded debt of Canada as of March 31, 1914?
2. What was the total amount borrowed under funded debt from March 31, 1914, to March 31, 1932?
3. What was the total amount of interest paid on funded debt from March 31, 1914, to March 31, 1932?
4. What was the total amount of Canada's funded debt as of March 31, 1932?

Mr. RHODES:

1. $294,415,943.42.
2. $4,411,604,300, including refunding loans.
3. $1,741,285,858.37.
4. $2,502,859,760.34.

J. A. BRIERE

Mr. MARCIL:

How much was paid to J. A. Briere by the Public Works Department for his services as overseer in the reconstruction of a wharf at St. Charles de Caplan, Bonaventure county, during the years 1932 and 1933?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): 1932, $409.50; 1933, nil.

DREDGE P.W.D. 128

Mr. MARCIL:

To whom was paid the sum of $393.22 out of the sum of $560 authorized by the Department of Public Works for the maintenance of Dredge P.W.D. 128?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): P. Cain, caretaker, $10.45; A. Langlois, captain, $69.53; O. Roussey, labourer, $30.24; J. L. Anglearte, labourer, $6.30; J. Roussy, labourer, $6.30; B. Duguay, labourer, $6.30; A. Huard, labourer, $6.30; V. Huard, labourer, $6.30; H. Duguay, labourer, $6.30; P. Dore, labourer, $6.30; L. Chedor, labourer, $7.56; E. Mallet, labourer, $7.56; D. Morin, labourer, $7.56; O. Duguay, labourer, $7.56; I. Langlois, labourer, $7.56; J. A. Allain, labourer, $7.56; B. Allain, labourer, $7.56; R. Chedor, labourer, $7.56; J. Allain, fils, labourer, $7.56; A. Roussy, labourer, $7.56; A. Morin, labourer, $7.56; J. B. Anglearte, labourer, $7.56; C. Morin, labourer, $7.56; W. Langlois, labourer, $5.04; Absolon Roussy, labourer, $5.04; A. Huard, labourer, $7.56; D. Morin, labourer, $5.04; Alcide Roussy, labourer, $5.04; M. Langlois, horse and cart, $3.60; O. Chedor, horse and cart, $9; O. Anglearte, watchman, $40.32; L. Vignet, repairing machinery, etc., $2.25; Robins, Jones & Whitman, Ltd., roofing, paint, hardware, etc., $42.26; S. A. Huard, paint and gasoline, $14.72; R. Roy, trip to deliver telegram, 75c.—$393.22.

CAP-DE-LA-MADELEINE UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. BARIBEAU:

What sum has the federal government contributed, since 1930, for works in the town of Cap-de-la-Madeleine, Quebec, under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act?

Mr. GORDON: Unemployment Relief Act, 1930, public works, $15,000; Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, public works, $33.927.79.

Mr. BARIBEAU:

What sum has the federal government contributed, since 1930, by way of direct relief, to the town of Cap-de-la-Madeleine, Champlain county?

Mr. GORDON: The following accounts have been received and paid: under the Unemployment Relief Act, 1930, direct relief, $6,655.62; under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931, direct relief, $11,423.46; under The Relief Act, 1932, direct relief, $7,841.31.

In addition to the above accounts for direct relief distributed under the provisions of the Relief Act, 1932, amounting to $7,194,88, have been received from the province. These accounts have been audited and a cheque covering same will be forwarded to the province within a day or two.

BATISCAN, QUE., UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. BARIBEAU:

What sum has the federal government contributed, since 1930, for works in the parish of Batiscan, Quebec, under the terms of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act?

Mr. GORDON: Under the provisions of the Unemployment Relief Act, 1930, the federal government contributed $1,250 towards the cost of public works carried out by the parish of Batiscan.

FARM IMPLEMENT REPAIR PARTS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): As the first of April is rapidly approaching, may I ask the Minister of Finance if he has received any communications from farm organizations or others interested in relation to repair parts for farm implements.

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance): I have received certain communications, but I am unable at the moment to indicate from just what sources. An announcement will be made in due course with respect to the subject matter in question.

PELEE ISLAND CABLE SERVICE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. ECCLES J. GOTT (South Essex): I would ask the Minister of Public Works if he has received any report as to the cable service between Pelee island and the mainland, and whether one or both of the cables are down, and whether there is no communication; and if so, what is being done to maintain the sevice.

Hon. H. A. STEWART (Minister of Public Works): In reply to the hon. gentleman I am able to inform him that unfortunately both these cables are out of commission. The one between Pelee island and Leamington went out of commission on February 20, and the one between Kingsville and Scudder went out of commission on the first of January. These cables are repaired and maintained under the provisions of a yearly contract for the service, and the repairs will be made as soon as possible.

INQUIRY INTO COAL PRICES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JEAN-FRANÇOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata): May I ask the Minister of Labour if the investigation into coal prices has been concluded, and if so when we shall have the report; and if not, when will the inquiry be concluded?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): So far as the coal investigation in eastern Canada is concerned, I believe that the evidence has all been taken and that the report of the registrar under the act is in course of preparation. I anticipate that it will be only a very short time before the report is concluded.

REPORTED SALE OF RAILS TO JAPAN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I would ask the Minister of Railways if he can inform the house whether the press report is true, that the Canadian National Railway is selling rails to Japan, and if so, may I ask whether they are old rails or new stock?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): I cannot give the hon. member any information as this is the first I have heard of the matter. I presume that the Canadian National Railways can sell rails to whomsoever they wish, but I know nothing whatever about the matter.

COOPERATIVE COMMONWEALTH

The house resumed from Thursday, February 23, consideration of the motion of Mr. Woodsworth:

Whereas under our present economic arrangement large numbers of our people are unemployed and without the means of earning a livelihood for themselves and their dependents;

And whereas the prevalence of the present depression throughout the world indicates fundamental defects in the existing economic system;

Therefore be it resolved, that, in the opinion of this house, the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

Mr. HARRY BUTCHER (Last Mountain): Mr. Speaker, a few minutes before the house rose on Thursday evening I had invited you to attend with me at an imaginary meeting to be held by the directors of the organization owning the ship of state to which I had formerly referred. At this interview we heard an imaginary salesman for an imaginary shipbuilding firm endeavouring to secure a contract to build a ship without giving any details or any plans and specifications. I had been prompted to use this illustration by certain statements made by the hon. member for Wetaskiwin (Mr. Irvine) who had said that he and his party might be asked for details of their plan and that his reply would be: We are not called upon to give details. We are not in the dock; it is the old system and the old political parties which are on trial.

I have since been charged, Mr. Speaker, by very candid friends, with endeavouring to pour ridicule on the resolution submitted by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). If that is the general impression, I much regret it. Nothing was further from my thought than a desire to ridicule a resolution sincerely proposed by any hon. member of this house. I simply wished by that illustration to point out how unreasonable it is to expect men who like to have at least some idea of the road they are invited to travel to accept so vague a proposition as that contained in the resolution.

It may be said that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has definite views on the subject and that he gave expression to them in the Walker theatre in Winnipeg on January 18. I have taken the trouble to read carefully the report of that meeting as it is found in the Western Producer of January 26, and I find myself very heartily in agreement with many of the statements made by the hon. member, but I find nothing whatsoever which in my opinion justifies either the assertion or the belief that an entirely new social order is necessary in order to remedy such evils as those to which the hon. gentleman referred. I am going to quote two or three of the statements that he made. He said specifically:

> Someone asks, tell us exactly what you would do if you were in power. I do not think it is really possible for anyone to answer such a question. Events are moving so rapidly both here and in other countries that no one can tell precisely what should be done at any given moment in the future.

Of course, everyone knows that the hon. member could not tell exactly what he would do, and it would be unreasonable to ask him to do so, but he could and he should tell the members of this house something of the methods that he would employ to effect the improvements he had in view. He might at least give us a broad outline and perhaps some of the major details of his scheme. Among other subjects I would suggest he should tell us how he would proceed with the public utilities at present owned and operated by private corporations. Would he expropriate them? If so, would he compensate the present owners or would he confiscate their interests? If he would compensate, on what basis would he make settlement.

What is his plan with regard to the principal and interest of the bonded indebtedness of Canada? What is his plan with regard to those bondholders resident without the Dominion of Canada as well as those domiciled within? Then, the hon. member proposes, among other things, to take over the ownership and control of natural resources; to guarantee security of tenure of land; in some way to provide for the adjustment of debts; to fix hours of labour and, if necessary, to limit them; to fix rates of wages to some extent, and to provide crop insurance. All of these matters are referred to in the speech made by the hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Spencer).

But, Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly the British North America Act all of those subjects, by virtue of that act, are under the jurisdiction of the provinces. The hon. member should tell us how he intends to implement his platform in these respects. Especially would we like to know how he would proceed if the provinces, having sole jurisdiction in these matters, decide to repudiate his right to interfere. Would he say, "We will in any event pass laws, and will proceed to enforce them." If he would enforce them, how would he proceed to do so? These are just a few matters in connection with which the house should have definite information, before hon. members are asked to approve of the resolution. A little later in his speech he stated:

> First of all there is the growing recognition that we cannot proceed along the old haphazard lines.

With this we must couple his former statement:

> Events are moving so rapidly both here and in other countries that no one could tell precisely what should be done at any given moment.

It would appear that under the new system we would merely proceed along new haphazard lines, instead of along old haphazard lines. From what I had heard, I thought the hon. member had proposed to mould and control events, instead of having events control and mould us. If I have read correctly the statements by hon. members we are under their plan to become the masters of our own destiny, not the victims of circumstances. Then the hon. member said:

> Before a doctor ventures to prescribe he makes a thorough study of the system and of the history of the case.

I am not a doctor, but I presume his statement is true, as far as it goes. I suggest however that it is not the whole truth. Before a doctor prescribes he very carefully studies remedies as well as diseases. He learns the effect of drugs. I imagine he does not prescribe the use of a new medicine until he has a precedent, that is the experience of others to guide him for so doing. In a prescription of his own compiling, he makes use of no drugs with the effect of which he is not familiar. Then, again, the hon. member said:

> Our wheat growing in the west has been built up on an export basis. We cannot possibly consume in Canada all the wheat that is produced. If we market abroad we must meet competition. Obviously the only possible solution is either to cut down the costs or to raise prices or both.

We are all agreed upon that. We must remember however and admit that prices are determined in purchasing countries and are based upon the law of supply and demand. Therefore we cannot control the price. We still have the possibility of affecting it by inflation, and I must state that the hon. member did refer to the possibility of a slight inflation. However, I understand that two of his lieutenants have repudiated the idea, and we are confronted with the question as to whether he or his lieutenants are going to have the right of way.

The only matter we have left is that concerning reduction of costs. What are the items which enter into the cost of production and marketing of wheat? There are taxes, and in many but not all cases, interest. How are taxes to be reduced? Obligations have been incurred. Services are required, but it may be possible to reduce taxes slightly. The farmer needs clothing for himself and his family; he has to purchase implements and parts therefor. He finds he must repair his machinery at home. He has to pay wages to farm employees, and finally has to pay freight on outgoing and incoming goods. But the hon. member says to the farmer, "We will help you to reduce costs." Then he turns to labour and states, "If there is not enough work to go around, the work shall be distributed and incomes maintained." I know it is the claim of labour that costs of labour do not figure largely in the costs of manufactured goods. However no one would suggest that raising wages would have the effect of reducing cost of goods.

A director of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation states that the wages paid to railway men must be maintained. He states, further, that if it is necessary to raise freight and passenger rates to accomplish this end, then, those freight and passenger rates must be raised. I do not know how this can be done if, at the same time, the promise to the farmers is fulfilled.

Recently some of the newspapers have been accusing Liberals and Conservatives of combining in order to trample on the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. In my view that is a most unfair statement. While on both sides of the house hon. members have criticized the new movement, I contend that the avenues of approach have been as far apart as the poles. The criticism of the Liberal party has been sympathetic while that of many hon. members opposite has been hostile and unsympathetic. It seems to me that the difference in viewpoint is clearly illustrated by quoting two statements made in the house, one by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) and the other by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest (Mr. MacNicol). The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre said this:

> It is the first duty of any administration adequately to feed, clothe and shelter its people.

The hon. member for Toronto Northwest said:

> What is our major business to-day? The major business of this house is to do something to encourage the investment of capital in factories, buildings and land.

There we have an illustration of the great diversity of opinion; I believe the Liberal party, in the main, finds itself much nearer the viewpoint of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre than that expressed by the hon. member for Toronto Northwest.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken forty minutes.

Mr. BUTCHER: I believe I had thirteen minutes remaining to me, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, and with the consent of the house I would like to state my conclusions. They are:

First—That a large number of our citizens are suffering from want and privation, principally because of unemployment or underemployment.

Second—That it is the duty of the state to adopt such policies as are best calculated to relieve that situation, in order, as far as is humanly possible, to afford to every man the opportunity of earning a good living for himself and his dependents.

Third—If for any good and sufficient reason any citizen is unable to obtain, or is physically incapable of doing, work, in order to obtain the necessaries of life for himself and his dependents, then it is the duty of the state to liberally provide those necessaries.

Fourth—Though there are grave defects in our present system I believe that those defects can be remedied without changing the system itself, and furthermore I contend that it is the imperative duty of the state to remedy them, and as rapidly as possible.

Fifth—That a sudden transition from the present system to a socialistic state would bring about a condition of chaos and suffering even worse than the present condition.

Sixth—That, whatever the future may bring, at present the majority of the citizens in Canada still want to have at least as much individual liberty as they now enjoy: they still want to own a home, lands and personal possessions, and do not want to substitute a system of state ownership, the like of which has hitherto only been briefly and spasmodically tried and as promptly discarded.

In view of these conclusions I shall vote against the resolution.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, it is important that we should have a clear conception of what the resolution before us means, and exactly what it proposes. For this reason I hope the house will permit me again to read the text of the resolution. Before doing so I wish to say that we should distinguish very carefully between the concrete proposition which the resolution embodies and proposes, and the preamble and other words by which it is accompanied. I would like hon. members to note in particular the preamble, and then the proposition itself. I submit that as respects the preamble it is one which any political party might apply to any other political party at almost any time. Indeed it is one which might be applied by parties other than political in commenting upon the failures or inadequacies of policies or principles which they oppose. The resolution reads:

> Whereas under our present economic arrangement large numbers of our people are unemployed and without the means of earning a livelihood for themselves and their dependents;
> And whereas the prevalence of the present depression throughout the world indicates fundamental defects in the existing economic system;
> Therefore be it resolved that, in the opinion of this house, the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not the benefit of the few.

The first two paragraphs find fault with the existing economic system. So far as hon. members in this house are concerned, I think we might as well declare at once that there is not an individual here who for one minute would say that the present economic system is perfect. Indeed, if it were perfect, it would be different from almost everything else in this world. Certainly the present economic system is very far from perfect. Evidence is abundant that it has failed in certain, possibly many particulars. But the point that is important for us to consider at the moment is whether that failure is due exclusively to what might be described as a social order based upon the institution of private property which has prevailed in the past, and which exists at the present time, and which is the one aimed against in the resolution, or whether it has failed as a result, in part at least, of some of the weaknesses and faults of human nature; weaknesses and faults which I submit will not be changed by a transition from one particular form of government or state control to another. Also, it is important to consider whether a change to the socialist state, which is what the resolution advocates, would not only serve to make present conditions worse than they are.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

The preamble, as I have said, might have been applied in past election contests by either of the historic political parties in reference to its opponents with as much force as it can be applied to either or both of these parties, by the group that is citing it with reference to existing conditions. I remember, at the time the Liberal party appealed for office and was returned to office in 1921, conditions were not unlike those at the present time. The depression then existing was not world wide as it is at the moment; conditions were not as bad; so far as Canada was concerned it was nevertheless a great depression. I need not remind the house that conditions were certainly very serious. For a year or so after the Liberal administration came into office we heard from one of the leading Conservative journals in Montreal of little else save "the whispers of death," as though the end of all things had come under the then existing economic conditions. We had pointed out in the campaign that we believed the then existing conditions were in part due to the policies which had been in force under hon. gentlemen opposite while they were in office. I think we drew attention to the fact that they were in part due to the war and the consequences of the war, but we also pointed out that they were due to mistaken policies, and we indicated that if returned to power we would change those policies and substitute others which we hoped would bring about a better condition of affairs.

And that is exactly what we did, and what happened. After we came into office we reversed in many particulars the policies of hon. gentlemen opposite. They had been raising tariffs, we immediately lowered tariffs. They had been introducing other measures which were restricting trade; we took steps to remove those restrictions, and in a short time, as hon. members know, instead of huge deficits and increased taxation and continued depression, this country had for seven years in succession surpluses instead of deficits, reductions in the public debt accompanied by reductions in taxation, and a great increase of trade and employment with consequent prosperity, throughout the dominion.

I might say that my right hon. friend in the last general election, in opposing the then Liberal administration, adopted very much the same course, only he went a great deal further in what he promised. We were then at the beginning of a part of the present world depression. My right hon. friend stated that it was due to the mistaken policies of the administration. He put it all down to the policies of the administration then in office, and he sought to win the support of the electors by stating that if returned to office he would alter those policies and put others into effect which would end unemployment. Indeed, he did immediately change those policies. At the time of making the statements he did in the general election, and again in this house, a year after having made the statements, he said that he expected his policies would have the effect of removing the depression and changing the distressing conditions. As a matter of fact up to the present his policies have not had that effect. His policies have been applied, trade has become more and more restricted, business has become more and more depressed, unemployment in the country has increased more and more. So much has this been the case that it would now appear that the policies of the right hon. gentleman, who leads the government, had been at fault rather than any particular economic system.

What then does the hon. member who proposes the present resolution offer as a remedy for existing conditions? Having said that economic conditions are not satisfactory, having by implication inferred that the policies of neither of the old historic parties are sufficient to meet the situation, he proposes a concrete remedy quite different from anything hitherto tried. It will be found in the following words:

—the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth . . .

That is the proposition that we in this parliament, that the country as a whole is called upon to consider, the setting up immediately of a cooperative commonwealth. Nothing else in this resolution is as significant as that particular portion of it, or indeed has any real significance in comparison. That is the concrete proposal, and if we oppose the resolution it is not because we are opposed to any wording of the preamble; much less is it in consequence of any opposition to the words which follow the substantive proposal; it is because we do not see, admitting that conditions may be bad at the moment, how they are going to be improved by immediately setting up a cooperative commonwealth as suggested.

Now notice the words that follow the proposal of my hon. friend, because they might seem to imply that there are different kinds of cooperative commonwealths. He says:

—the government should immediately take measures looking to the setting up of a cooperative commonwealth in which all natural resources and the socially necessary machinery of production will be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few.

Those words might be construed as qualifying words, but I submit that if they are to be used as qualifying words with respect to the cooperative commonwealth, they might equally be used as qualifying words with respect to any policies which might be introduced by any political party. My right hon. friend will claim for his policies, as I claim for ours, that they are intended to be used in the interests of the people and not for the benefit of the few. Simply attaching those particular words to a concrete proposal does not free the proposal itself from the significance that must be attached to it by those who understand its real import.

It might be said these words may be intended merely to express the hope that when a cooperative commonwealth is established matters will be so arranged as to be more in the interests of the people than for the benefit of the few. There again, as I say, is a hope of which no political party has the right to claim the monopoly. I believe my hon. friends are quite sincere in the hope they entertain, but I say of hon. gentlemen opposite, and I want to say it of my own party as well, that I believe with respect to our several policies we are all inspired by similar hopes. We may hope our policies are going to make things better for the many rather than for the few, but the fact that we are adding those qualifying words to our policies does not alter the effect those policies are likely to have once effect is given to them.

No, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that the only way those words can be properly interpreted, in connection with the proposal set forth, is as they are understood in the language of political philosophy and economics. They are words which are intended to mean that instead of society continuing on a basis of private property and competition, such as governs in the affairs of the world at large, the structure of society in Canada is to be completely changed and there is to be an end here to private property; it is to pass into the possession of the state. Hon. gentlemen may say that all property is a pretty large order. That really is what the socialist aims at in his advocacy of socialism, but if you wish to modify it to the extent to which hon. gentlemen to my left have modified it, it means, in the exact words of the resolution, all the natural resources and all the socially necessary machinery of production. What are all the natural resources? They are all the mines, all the forests, all the fisheries, all the fields, all agricultural and other resources. These are all to pass immediately into the possession of the state, in addition to all the so-called socially necessary machinery of production. This must include all that is needed in order to supply the food, the fuel, the clothing and the housing of a nation. Those certainly are all socially necessary requirements, and the suggestion that is being made by this new party, the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation, is that all these things, as well as all agencies of transportation and communication which are essential factors in production shall be immediately transferred to the ownership and active management of the state.

I submit that the simplest way to get a true perspective of that proposal is to ask ourselves at once how this parliament, this government or any government that may be in office in Canada at any time would ever conceivably carry out a proposal of that kind. At the present time we have before us a very considerable problem in the possession of only one great public service utility, that is, the national railway system, and it comprises but one-half the railways of this country. Under this proposal all the railways would come immediately into the possession of the state, and in addition all other agencies of transportation by land and by sea. We would have the state managing, of necessity, all the different agencies that are used for the transportation of the commodities necessary to supply human needs, for they are a part of the socially necessary machinery of production. According to this program all these are to be taken over and managed by the state.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I do not believe the thing is possible for one moment. I cannot conceive any intelligent man or woman in the country for a moment believing that the government of Canada could immediately—because that is what the resolution calls for—take over what is meant by the socially necessary means of production and administer them on the part of the state. Assume, however, that such a thing were possible. Would conditions thereafter be any better than they are now? If we had all the great industries of the country controlled by the state to-day, do hon. members believe that conditions would be better for the great masses of the people than is the case at the present time? We may admit that conditions are bad now; we must admit it. We cannot have the hundreds of thousands of unemployed there are, without knowing conditions are bad, but have we any guarantee that if the state were controlling everything conditions would not be infinitely worse? If state ownership and control is going to be the answer to our problems, why cannot the state at present make our national railways pay? Why cannot they fill up all the blanks in the railway field by taking on increasing numbers of unemployed and giving them employment? I need not elaborate the point. It must be apparent that an attempt to socialize the various industries of the country or to nationalize production and distribution as a whole will simply have the effect of drying up the lifeblood of industry itself.

May I ask this all-important question: Who is going to select the leaders of this new state which is to control everything? After all, there must be someone at the head of it, and if all industries are to be managed by the state, who is going to choose the different heads of the various industries? How are they to be selected? On what basis are they to be selected? We are to do away with the institution of private property—because that is the proposal; we are also to do away with the system of rewards for services rendered, as they have been made in the past and are being made at the present time. Indeed, that is the significance of the qualifying words the resolution contains. Stop for a moment and think what the method of production at present is. Necessarily there are different contributing factors, of which land is one, using the word in the broad sense to include all resources. Labour is another contributing factor; capital is another, and managerial ability is a fourth. These four factors, working together with and as a part of the community, produce the wealth of human society in the form of various products, and under the present system they get their rewards in different ways. Labour gets its reward in the form of wages, capital in the form of interest, and managerial ability in the form of salaries. The community at large gets its reward, I presume, in the supply of essential commodities and in some control of prices. These rewards are all by a process known as distribution, taken out of the proceeds of total production to which the original parties to production have contributed. Under the socialist plan, proposed by hon. members who support the resolution, these rewards will no longer be based on the present method of valuing service according to the nature of and the demand for it, but on some artificial standard which is to be invented by the state itself. There is to be no more interest under socialism; there is to be no more rent, and no more profits to managers. The only thing that is to remain is that everyone will get some remuneration from the state in the form of wages. But how are those wages to be determined? One assumption might be the basis of need, another the basis of service, or another the basis of efficiency. Who is going to determine the need, the efficiency or the sacrifice that has been involved, under a state controlled system of socialism as vast as it would have to be if it were to operate over the country as a whole? That is a point that has to be considered.

My hon. friends who have proposed this plan must not think that those of us who object to it are not sympathetic with the aims they may have in view, or with what they would like to see effected in the way of improved conditions. Above all, they must not think that we do not sympathize with what they may be saying as a protest against existing conditions; because, surely, protests are justifiable under conditions as they are. What we do object to is their seeming to take advantage of distressed conditions throughout the country, to play upon them, and, to use the language of socialism, to exploit this distress in order to further the interests of a political party.

Let there be no mistake about this proposal which my hon. friends have put forward being intended as the platform of a new political party. I say "friends" because it is not the resolution of one member only; there is a group supporting this proposal. The proposal they have put forward constitutes a new political platform, and it is a political platform aimed against the other political platforms in this country. It is directed openly and avowedly against the policies of the historic political parties in this country. I want to make that clear—if I am mistaken I should like hon. members of the group to correct me—their purpose is to establish a new political party to oppose both the existing parties in this country. If that is the case, then I say to my hon. friends who are responsible for the resolution that they cannot be surprised if all of us in this parliament excepting themselves vote against the resolution. How can we do anything else? We cannot, unless we are prepared to say that what they are suggesting is something better than what we stand for in our principles and policies. If there was virtue in the proposal which they are now making, I do not think it would have remained until 1932 before it was put forward. There is nothing new in it. It has been put forward here and there in different countries at different times, but there is one very significant fact, t has never been put forward in good times, it has always been brought forward in bad times. I have not the least doubt that the party which now bring it forward sincerely believes that it is in position by means of the proposals it is making to be able to effect a change which the other parties have not been able to effect in their efforts. In that, however, I think they are mistaken.

In order that there may be no possibility of any feeling that I am doing my friends an injustice by describing their program as the program of a political party, let me quote from one of the pamphlets which has been issued by those who are responsible for this party and which I hold in my hand. It is entitled, "A Call to the People. The Cooperative Commonwealth Federation. Farmer-Labour-Socialist." Another interesting heading to the pamphlet is in these words:

New national movement launched at Calgary conference on August 1: Challenge to existing social order.

There is no mistake about it, it is a challenge to the existing social order. It is not merely a challenge to the political parties, it is a challenge to the existing order, that is to say, the order of society based upon private property and competition. The pamphlet states that the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation is to establish an economic and social system based upon new principles and a new plan. That is what the people are being told. Here is a challenge to the existing social and economic order, a challenge based upon new principles and a new plan. We have not however, been told what these new principles are. So far as the new plan is concerned, I think I have correctly described it, ownership by the state of all socially necessary means of production and all natural resources, and administration of these by the state, whoever the state may happen to be. I submit that before this House of Commons is asked to change the whole existing social order, we ought to have, as the last speaker has just said, something more in the way of a concrete statement from those who are supporting the resolution. We should know how they are going to effect this change, and how they would administer affairs if they themselves came into office.

If it is a challenge to the existing social order and we are going to have everything turned over to the state, as has been said, the most pertinent point in regard to the proposal is: how is that transition to be effected? Is private property going to be taken away from everyone, simply expropriated without any reward or any compensation? We ought to be told that.

Mr. HEAPS: Are not people losing their properties to-day without receiving any compensation whatsoever?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Answering one question by asking another is not an answer. The question just asked would indicate there is to be no compensation. I am prepared to deal with our policies, and will have something to say about them before I get through this afternoon.

The point I wish to bring out at the moment is this: One of the essentials of what is proposed is a complete change in the social order by doing away with private property as already indicated. We ought at least to know how those whose property is to be taken away are going to be dealt with. If property is simply to be expropriated, if all the socially necessary means of production and the natural resources now in private hands are to be taken possession of by the state in virtue of power to be exercised by the government, which is to put this new plan into operation, then we should be told about it. The people should know what they are supporting when they are asked to support it. On the other hand, if it is not going to be expropriation by force and violence, because after all a proposal of this kind would involve power and force to see that it is brought about, if private property is not going to be expropriated by arbitrary means, then it must be assumed that those who are possessed of private property will be remunerated. If that is so, where is the money to come from to compensate those whose private property is to be taken over by the state? How is it to be raised? It is difficult enough to-day to raise money by loan or taxation to carry on the ordinary business of government, but if the business of government is to include all that is signified by the socially necessary means of production, and all natural resources that will mean a pretty large order to be filled. Before people can be expected to support a proposal of this kind, they have a right to demand an exact and full statement of how the change is to be brought about.

Let us ask ourselves: Exactly what is socialism as here proposed in contrast to or in comparison with some other things with which it is sometimes contrasted or confused. I hope I have made clear the nature of the change which it would involve. Something has been said about socialism as it is here proposed being in the nature of communism. I have listened to this debate from its beginning—what I have not heard, I have read—and I have been struck by the extent to which hon. gentlemen on the other side have contended that the proposals being made are the same as communism. I do not agree with them in that statement, I do not think that what is proposed in this resolution is communism. It may have certain features common to communism, but as socialism is known in economic parlance it has an entirely different significance. I do not think that the hon. member who has proposed this resolution intends to do away with the state much less to effect any change by violence. He intends to increase the functions of the state very materially. Communism would constitute an effort on the part of the workers themselves to take possession of everything, the state and all included, and to run things as they themselves might wish to organize them. Under a system of communism there need not be any organized state, and, moreover, communism proposes direct action involving violence as a part of its methods.

I believe the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre is wholly sincere when he says that he is as much opposed to violence and the use of it as is any other hon. member, and I think other hon. members in his group are equally sincere when they make similar statements. I do not believe anything will be gained by trying to make the situation out to be worse than it really is. As I understand the matter, hon. members in the far corner to my left are opposed to communism. Certainly all in the Liberal opposition are opposed to communism, and I am also sure all hon. gentlemen opposite are opposed to it. Why should we not say to the country that at least in their opposition to communism all parties in this House of Commons are at one? It is an asset, so far as the country as a whole is concerned, to be able to make such a declaration, and it is something of which Canadians may well boast that there is not seated in the Canadian House of Commons a single member who will rise and support communism as a system which for one moment ought to be countenanced. But while I disagree with hon. gentlemen opposite when they seek to make out that the change proposed by my hon. friend is one to communism,—

Mr. BENNETT: One was a delegate to the third internationale where the declaration was made.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —I agree with hon. gentlemen opposite when they say that if what this resolution proposes were carried into effect, it would involve a change in the constitution of this country. That is something which should be put before the people when the change is being advocated. It would be impossible for the federal parliament, without a change in the constitution, to control all the socially necessary means of production, all the natural resources of the country. It surely is well known that matters affecting property and civil rights are under the jurisdiction of the provinces; the provinces have to do with all questions affecting master and servant, employer and employee, the factory acts, the mining laws and similar matters. All of these would immediately have to be brought into the federal arena and the provinces, under our constitution, would have to be parties to the change. Is it conceivable that the various provincial administrations and the people in the different provinces will, at the instance of a new party that has been formed for less than a year, suddenly yield all their control over their natural assets and the powers and rights they exercise as provinces over property and civil rights in order that a federal socialistic state may be formed in Canada? That phase of the matter ought also to be made quite clear by those who are advocating this system. I heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre say that he did not wish to argue the question whether it was the crown in the right of the dominion or the crown in the right of the provinces, but if you are going to have a federal socialistic state, you must argue this question, and I submit there is no other form of socialistic state that would meet what my hon. friends have in mind.

May I point out another feature which I think is important? We should not confuse opposition to socialism as stated in the resolution as being at all indicative of opposition to public ownership as such. The hon. members who have had to do with introducing and supporting this resolution have felt that there is a strong sentiment throughout the country in favour of public ownership. I think they rather hope that their socialistic state will receive support from those who favour public ownership. But may I say that public ownership is not only wholly possible, but to-day is actually operating under the system of private property and the social order that at present exist and which they say must be changed. A change to a socialistic state is not required in order to further public ownership. The wisdom of public ownership depends entirely upon the particular need that it is sought to serve, and what in time and place may most effectively serve that need. It does not follow that because public ownership may be good in one field, it will be good in every field. It depends entirely on conditions as they exist at any time and place. Let me illustrate. Those supporting the resolution speak of the post office as a fine example of what industry generally would be like if it were under complete state ownership and control in a state of socialism. The post office, when one stops to think of it, is a great utility which can best serve, under state control, the interests of a community. The reasons are obvious. In the nature of things, the collection and distribution of mail matter, in order properly to serve the community, must become a monopoly; it would be intolerable to have fifty different operating postal agencies in a country. It is because any competitive arrangement would inconvenience not only the individual citizen but the entire community, that all postal agencies have been brought under one control. That, after all, is the real test whether there should be public ownership and operation with respect to any utility or anything. How is the greatest good for the greatest number likely to be brought about? There are some utilities that are very largely in the nature of natural monopolies. The public interest in such cases may best be served where there is an actual monopoly formed, not a monopoly left to operate as it pleases, but one that will be owned and controlled by the state or subject to state regulation as may best serve the purpose. Because there is a monopoly, it does not necessarily follow that those who own or control it will have everything their own way; they become subject to such control as the state places upon the monopoly. In the case of the post office there is a very special reason why the monopoly should be a state one; the postal service has to do with communications passing from country to country; it is an international organization, and being such, having dealings with governments of other countries, that particular monopoly and social service can in the nature of things best be performed by the state itself.

But the same is not equally true of everything else, true for example of the manufacture of boots and shoes, or of the clothes or of the construction of the houses or of the supply of the food necessary for the people of the country. Because a post office can best be managed by a state monopoly, it does not follow that all the great social services that are ministering to the needs of the people in the way of clothing, food, fuel, shelter, transportation and so forth, should also be made into monopolies and managed by the state. The same arguments do not apply; these services are not in themselves natural monopolies; it is believed that controlled competition serves the public need as a whole better than would a gigantic monopoly in the case of those particular services.

systems. Various states and municipalities sought to further that particular idea, but it came to be seen that the convenience of the public would be better served by having one system in a community; this meant creating a monopoly. In some cities, these utilities which have been made into monopolies, have remained in private hands or passed to the ownership, or to the ownership and control of the state or municipality, as the needs of the people generally could best be served. The point, however, I wish to bring out is this: where you have government ownership or control to-day, you have something that is being operated in accordance with the prevailing social order and economic system, not something being operated as it would be under the socialistic state that is proposed. Under public ownership as it is carried on to-day there remains the payment of interest to those who have invested their means and savings in particular industries; there remains the payment of salaries to managers according to the ability and availability of managers, and there remains the payment of wages under a competitive system whereby wages may differ in accordance with the quality and the amount of the service rendered. But if we had public ownership under a socialist state such as is proposed, public ownership would be changed in all of these particulars because, as I have already indicated, it is part of the doctrine of socialism to do away with the payment of any interest and the payment of any salaries and to bring everything down to a level of remuneration on a basis that those who control the state would themselves determine. I think it is important that that distinction should be made very clear.

Then there is another distinction which I think should be made clear. It is that opposition to socialism or a socialist state is not to be regarded as implying opposition to so-called social or humanitarian legislation. Neither is it to be inferred that because humanitarian legislation is a desirable thing, and because the state has gone a long way in enacting so-called social legislation with regard to such matters as workmen's compensation, unemployment invalidity or accident insurance, old age pensions, mothers' allowances and the like, that because one favours legislation of that kind which is not infrequently termed "socialistic," one necessarily favours a socialist state.

Social legislation of the kind I have mentioned is based on the assumption that individual initiative and enterprise will continue under the existing social order. These are developed under the system of private property with its reward for service which permits individuals to take great risks with the possibility of great reward or great failure. It is thought that on the whole human society is apt to progress more where that opportunity is given. The fact however, that this form of legislation has been enacted is evidence that society is wholly alive to the need of competition being controlled and alive also to the necessity at all times of seeking the greatest good for the greatest number. Unrestrained or unrestricted competition is no longer believed in anywhere. Freedom cannot exist, except where competition is in some manner controlled.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that if these facts are thoroughly understood, much of the support that many are inclined to give to this resolution will not be forthcoming. I think there are many well-meaning men and women throughout the country who to-day are supporting my hon. friends in their advocacy of state socialism in the belief that it will mean more in the way of social and humanitarian legislation and more in the way of public ownership. But I would point out that all that there is of public ownership up to the present, and all that there is of social legislation up to the present, has come about under the system of private property and competition and under a social order based thereon such as we have to-day. What I submit is necessary, and quite self-evidently necessary, is not that we should in order to remedy existing conditions seek to change the whole basis of our social and economic structure, but that we should go on with our social and humanitarian legislation, and go on with our public ownership and operation in the directions in which they may appear to be desirable and necessary, considering each proposed measure on its merits, in the light of conditions as they exist at the particular time.

May I say that that has been the method of Liberalism through the years. Most of the social legislation on the statute books of different countries throughout the world to-day is the result of great Liberal battles, great battles in which the particular interest has been subordinated to the general interest, great battles to give first place to the well being of the many, rather than to the privileges of the few. While it may be, and undoubtedly is true, that we have not yet reached the end of the need for legislation of that kind, I submit that we shall improve conditions infinitely more quickly and more effectively in the end by continuing in that way, a step at a time, as the opportunity presents itself, than by attempting instead thereof anything so revolutionary as a complete change of the existing social order.

There is another distinction which I think should be kept in mind, Mr. Speaker, and that is that socialism as set forth by its leaders, or as set forth in this resolution, is not to be regarded as being synonymous with cooperation as cooperation is generally understood. The cooperative movement, again, is an individualistic movement, not a socialist movement. The cooperative movement in the different countries has developed as it has done under the order of society as it exists at the present time. It has recognized that there is need to control greed. It has recognized that it is desirable for men to work together in as many ways as may be possible in order to serve their mutual interests, and that has been done by the formation in many countries of great cooperative societies of one kind or another. One example with which everyone I think is familiar, and perhaps the outstanding example of cooperation in the British Empire, at least, is the English and Scottish wholesale cooperative societies. May I point out that these wholesale cooperative societies and others continue to carry on their business on a basis similar to that which exists under a social order based on private property; that is, interest is paid on investments, managerial salaries are paid, and there are differences in the rate of wages according to the nature of service that is rendered. The one outstanding difference is that instead of leaving matters to competitive groups which are fiercely competing with each other, an effort is made to bring together into one vast association those who are consumers as well as those who are producers, so that when it comes to a question of distribution all may share in a more equitable way than would otherwise be possible.

Miss MACPHAIL: Would the speaker allow me one question?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Miss MACPHAIL: Has he read No. 6 in the eight points of the cooperative commonwealth, which says:

Encouragement of all cooperative enterprises which are steps to the attainment of the cooperative commonwealth.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, I have read that, and it bears out just the point I am seeking to make. My hon. friends speak of favouring cooperative enterprises, and by that they would have the people believe that anyone who is encouraging cooperative enterprises is encouraging the socialist state. I want to make perfectly clear that I stand here strongly in favour of cooperative enterprises. I would like to see them furthered as much as possible, but I favour them, not because I believe that they will lead to a socialist state, but because I believe that they will help to avoid the possibility of a socialist state. They are based on self help, not on reliance upon the state. They retain all the merits of individual initiative and individual enterprise which would be lost under a socialist state.

Miss MACPHAIL: May I say just a word?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order, order.

Miss MACPHAIL: If the speaker permits the question, I think the house should rest easy. May I point out that the words used are, "the cooperative commonwealth." While the leader of the opposition may say that we want everything owned by the state and all private property taken away, I am pointing out that No. 6 points out that that is not true. What we are looking for is voluntary cooperation which will lead to the cooperative commonwealth.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Again I want to make clear that I favour cooperative enterprises, not because they lead to a cooperative commonwealth at all, but rather because they lead away from the cooperative commonwealth as the term is used in this resolution, being synonymous with socialism, and that is where I think my hon. friends are mistaken in taking the course that they take. I support them in advocating cooperation for all they are worth, but when they say that cooperation is a monopoly of the socialist party, I claim they are quite wrong. I say cooperation has made the great headway that it has under the individualist system, as it has existed up to the present time. For evidence of that one has only to take a list of the cooperative organizations in the world, and he will realize that they are being maintained under a system of private property and competition.

Mr. BENNETT: Except in Russia.

Mr. HEAPS: Is it not a fact that in Great Britain cooperative societies are affiliated with the Labour party?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Some of them may be affiliated with the Labour party. But, affiliation with the Labour party does not necessarily mean that all their members would go the length of advocating a socialist state. Many of the best Liberals have been born of the cooperative movement. What I should like to make clear to hon. members is this—and if they are interested in the general good of human society, as I believe they are, they will admit it—that there are many places in which it is possible for all political parties to cooperate towards the improvement of conditions. At least there are some. There are many instances where, although members of one political party may not be prepared to support all the policies of another political party, nevertheless they can support some of them. The fact that one cannot support all the policies of another party is no reason why parties with certain policies in common should not work together towards their fulfilment. I submit that hon. members who are in favour of and believe in cooperation might much better spend their time working together to further the ends of cooperation, than in fighting each other by advocating cooperation as leading to a socialist state, and to serve the ends of another political party. There have been times when it has been possible—not many I admit—to work with hon. members opposite in respect of some of their policies. Personally, I have never ceased to welcome opportunities of the kind, although I confess they come but seldom. And there have been measures put forward by those of the cooperative commonwealth group which I have been perfectly prepared to support, because they were in accord with the principles in which I believe. What I want them to understand at the moment is that I am opposing what they are standing for to-day in advocating socialism under the name of a cooperative commonwealth because it is diametrically opposed to those policies for which I stand. May I say that their policy seeks to increase the power of the state, so that the state may serve the ends of a particular class. In my view, in that respect, it is on all fours, so far as my opposition is concerned, with the opposition I have against the program of hon. gentlemen opposite. They also, in their way, seek to have the state exercise more power, not so much in the interests of a particular class but in the interest of privileged groups or a privileged few. And in that particular with respect to their present programs the two parties to which I have referred are, in my view, more closely allied than are any other two political parties in the house. I say that because each of them, in order to carry out its policies, has to work towards the development of a bureaucratic state. Under socialism there must be a bureaucratic state, and there cannot be a bureaucratic state unaccompanied by force, and all the rest of it, to command control by the state. Hon. gentlemen opposite know very well the extent to which they have gone in the development of a bureaucracy. Our opposition to them is based in large part on the fact that at present in this country they are developing a bureaucratic system.

Mr. McINTOSH: They are all in the same boat.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think I have made clear, so far as the Liberal party is concerned, that we stand for many of the measures which might be included in a socialist program, and also that in so doing we are true to our past and our present, but that is vastly different from standing for the socialist slate.

With regard to the ownership of railways the Liberal party in Canada has stood consistently for government ownership and operation of the Canadian National system. We stand for the maintenance of the integrity of the Canadian National Railways publicly owned and publicly controlled service, not because we favour a socialist state, but because we believe that under existing conditions the interests of the Canadian people will be best served by having that one system owned and controlled by the state, paralleling as it does a system of almost equal size operating under private ownership. We feel very strongly that to create one monopoly out of the railways, especially a privately owned monopoly, would not be in the public interest, and we believe that the public interest at the present time will be better served by having some competition at least between these two great systems.

I believe I have clearly indicated what I see in the way of objections to the system of socialism as it is being proposed by the resolution before us. Let me repeat that "the socialization or nationalization of production and distribution, and the extinction of what is called capitalism—by whatever name the ideal, and the process for its attainment, is called—would starve the resources, and, in time, drain away the lifeblood of the great productive industries which depend for their efficiency on the free play of initiative and enterprise." That statement I have quoted in its exact words in order that I may bring to its support the name of its author, the late Right Hon. Earl of Oxford and Asquith who, I believe, has fought for Liberal principles and for the rights of the people as bravely as any man who ever sat in the British parliament. Liberals in the old country have had to contend against the advocates of socialism. The grounds of their opposition are set out in the quotation I have just read. Those reasons are just as pertinent and apply equally as much in this country as they do in the old country.

Let me say that I believe the chief aim of those who are supporting the socialist state is that of effecting a more equitable distribution of wealth. In my view a more equitable distribution of wealth is all-important. The Liberal party recognizes that the problem of distribution has become more important than that of production. It believes that personality is more sacred than property. In all its policies it has been guided by that principle, above everything else. It will continue to devote itself to finding ways and means of effecting a fair and just distribution of wealth with increasing regard to human need, to the furtherance of social justice and to the promotion of the common good. I submit that human need, social justice and the common good have been the constant aims of Liberalism with respect to the distribution of wealth. These ends are not necessarily attained under a socialist state.

While the problem of distribution may be a difficult one, we are very fortunate that it is the one major problem in connection with the matter we are considering, and that we do not have to consider as another major problem, that of production itself. Fortunately the problem of production in a large measure has been solved under the so-called and much berated capitalist system. To-day there is plenty. The hon. member might have added to his resolution the observation that one of the anomalies of the present situation is that there is distress and poverty in the midst of plenty. That plenty has been brought into existence not under a socialist state but under the system of private property and competition as it exists to-day.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): And it is choking the system.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The hon. member says it is choking the system. No, it is not. It is the men administering the system who are choking it. I thank the hon. member for reminding me to say a few words about the difference between a system and those who administer it. The point I wish first to bring out is, that under a socialist state your problem of distribution would be infinitely increased, because almost certainly you would fall down on production. Under a socialist state production would be very far from what it is under the present system; there would not be nearly so much to distribute. The fact that production is so great to-day, that there is more than enough for all if it were properly distributed, makes the problem that remains a very simple one relatively to what it would be if the problem of production were the great thing we had to face.

My hon. friend the member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) has just said something about clogging the system, and inferentially has been blaming the system for what has taken place. A very excellent address was delivered in the city of Toronto last week before the Empire Club by Professor Jackson of the University of Toronto. Professor Gilbert E. Jackson is Professor of Economics at the University of Toronto and a leading economist. In the course of that address he spoke as an economist with reference to the present economic system. The question Professor Jackson in a word asked his audience was this, and it is the one which I put before this house this afternoon: If the men administering the affairs of industry to-day were actuated by a different motive than that by which they are actuated, would there be any reason to find fault with the system? May I point out that motive is a matter of individual character; it is not a matter of external form of social or economic organization, it is what actuates the individual himself. The central point of Professor Jackson's address was this, and I think he is perfectly right, that the system that we have to-day has spoken for itself in what it has done in the way of producing the plenty that there now is, that it is men who have made this depression, men in their greed, seeking to monopolize for themselves the largest part of what has been produced by the existing system. Overcoming greed is not a question of economics, it is a question of morals. My hon. friends may debate this question from the point of view of an economic issue pure and simple, but that is where I take exception to their point of view. Throughout the generations and the ages the world has been looking for some better order of things, and there have been those who have sought to find it in a changed social or economic system, but those people have never been able to bring about the change, because no change in external structure will bring it about. Others have gone a little deeper, feeling that what is needed is not so much a changed social or economic system as a change of heart. They have pointed out that if the heart of man can be changed, and some of its selfishness and greed eradicated, we will not need to worry much about the particular form of organization which industry or the state may take. I believe that is a true analysis of the situation. And I must say that I think our friends of the cooperative commonwealth group owe it to themselves, because I know they all cherish that thought very deeply, to bring out that idea when they are expounding their views to the people. Nothing can be more misleading, it seems to me, than to try to have people who are not accustomed to thinking deeply on matters of this kind believe that by some change of an external character, by some economic adjustment, you are going to improve human and social relations. It may be brought about if you change with it at the same time the human heart, and the motives which actuate men in their relations with each other. As far as I can see it will not be brought about in any effective way short of that. That point is one I wish to stress, because I know that the socialist does put forth this argument, and it is an appealing one, that under a socialistic state men and women will be actuated by a different kind of motive. I must say that before you reach that ideal state you will have to go a long way in changing human nature itself. If you succeed in changing human nature to the extent that under a socialistic state we are all going to be happy, I venture to say you will have gone far enough to make us all happy under whatever condition may exist, because we will all be ready to work and share together.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: May I ask a question? Cannot man's natural acquisitiveness be subordinated to social motives?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I say to my hon. friend that I assume he is sitting in this parliament at this moment for the very reason that he himself is actuated by a motive of public service? But he has not had to be a member of a socialistic state in order to acquire that motive. May I point out to him that he came to this country as one who formerly had very little in the way of opportunity, and to-day he has risen to be one of the great men of Canada, able to exercise a vast influence for the benefit of the people. He has been able to do that under a system of private property, under the competitive system. And I venture to say that there are thousands of others to-day who similarly owe the positions which they occupy in this country not to the fact that Canada has been a great socialist community, but rather that it is a country founded on a recognition of principles that help to make for progress, and that as a consequence those who have had initiative and enterprise have been able to get their rightful place in political and other spheres.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. MacINNIS: I suppose the speaker would admit that the position of the unemployed is also due to the system?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The unemployment is due to defects in the system, certainly, to maladjustments of the system. But it is due more to the greed of individuals, to human selfishness and greed. The point that I should like to emphasize, and which was stressed by Professor Jackson in his address, is this, that if we get down to the root cause of the depression we shall find that it is a man-made depression; that it has its roots in human greed, that it has come about through the greed of men; first, through the greed of individuals in its various manifestations, second, through the greed of social groups within a nation, and third, through the greed of nations. Human greed is responsible for the condition that we have at the present time. What happened? When, under the system that was prevailing, prosperity was at its highest peak, how did the individual behave? Did he seek to share that prosperity with his fellow men, did he seek to put aside reserves to meet dark times ahead? Did he seek to become more humanitarian in his efforts, as he should have done if he had been actuated by high disinterested motives? On the contrary a very large number started to take the fruits of industry and gamble with them. They began to speculate in the stock market, they were not satisfied with being prosperous, or helping others to share their good fortune; they wanted to make more and more and more for themselves. With what result? With the result that money was taken away from industry; the stock markets were flooded with money and industry was drained of its very lifeblood; trade channels were denuded of necessary costs and credit, as Professor Jackson pointed out, and industry was left in a position that it no longer could continue to carry on as it had formerly done. That was not the fault of the system, that was the greed of individuals. And may I point out what took place similarly with regard to groups? None of us need go back very far to recall what the press has recorded from week to week of the doings of the groups associated with the largest industrial enterprises in the world, of what there has been in the way of high finance that has helped destroy the industrial, social and economic system of our day. That was all the greed of groups, not anything wrong with the system; it has been that the few men who got control of the system acted not as good citizens or patriots, but acted, I shall not say as scoundrels, but as criminals. I venture to submit that the time has come in dealing by way of reform with some of these social and economic matters, where what is required, in some directions, is not so much a change of the social or economic order as an increase in the application of the criminal code.

May I go a step further and speak of nations? What has been the behaviour of nations since the great war? What has been the behaviour of our own nation? How far have we of late sought to work in cooperation with other nations? What has accentuated the depression in our own country at the present time? Is it the economic system that has served to make production plentiful? Not at all. It is the fact that nations, in their selfishness, and our own country in particular, have put up tariff barriers to a point which has prevented anything in the nature of intercourse with other countries; they have not been allowing the economic system to operate as it should for the well-being of the people. Coming down to root causes, it is the selfishness of nations, of groups and of individuals that is responsible for this depression. How far selfishness can be eliminated or controlled by legislation is problematical, I believe we can go very far in restricting its operations, but until this attitude is changed there will be no solution of the present great industrial problem or of similar problems which may arise in the future.

There is one other point to which I should like to refer; it is an argument which has been advanced by some hon. members who have supported this resolution. They have suggested that we should have change simply for the sake of change. Of all the futile arguments in the world this perhaps is the greatest. We have been told by members of the group who have spoken on this resolution that they are the only ones who have suggested anything new. One hon. member even went so far as to say that the plan might be bad, it might be a step in the wrong direction, but after all it was different from anything that has been suggested by anyone else. May I ask why we have been given the faculty of reasoning and of judgment if they were not intended to help to guide us? What is the sense of jumping from the frying pan into the fire if one can avoid such a step? Why should we go headlong over a precipice into a condition that would be infinitely worse than the position we are in to-day, when we have the experience of at least a thousand years to warn us with respect to the dangers of some of the pitfalls from which we should keep away? I think little more need be said about changing for the sake of change, I hope it will not be advocated to any considerable extent hereafter.

Coming back to the economic system, so called, may I take the analogy of the human system, the human constitution or the human mechanism, whichever you wish to call it. Would my hon. friends say that because a man ate more than he should every day, or because he drank more than he should, or because he abused his health in other ways, the human constitution as such should be condemned? The truth of the matter is, as we can see by looking over the world to-day, that Providence has given us plenty for all. Providence has done its part, but men are not doing their part. They are abusing the system which has helped make everything plentiful. The remedy is not in destroying the system but in putting an end to the abuses that are undermining it.

Now I should like to say a word with respect to one other point which hon. members supporting the cooperative commonwealth resolution have put forward. It is that we should judge their political program by the aims they have in view, also that they alone of the political parties have a program. Here I come to a word as to Liberalism in its relation to socialism. I have already pointed out that their aims, so far as they are humanitarian, and so far as they seek to have regard for the interests of the many as against the privileges of the few, are aims which have been foremost in Liberal policy from the very beginning of political controversy. The Liberal party itself is founded on an effort to further the well being of the many as against the privileges of the few, founded upon continuous effort to subject the particular interest to the general interest. I perhaps cannot do better than to record statements by two or three outstanding Liberals as to what the principle of Liberalism is, and because some of these hon. members have said that we have not stood for any particular principle, show wherein that principle is the one to-day applied in all our policies. I should like them to see that the principle for which we stand is the one that right down through the ages has more than all else been responsible for the reforms that have come about. I want to make clear that with respect to existing conditions we are standing to-day for the application of very definite principles. Let me cite first the broad principle of Liberalism as it has been stated in a very concise way by perhaps the greatest of all Liberal leaders; I refer to the Right Hon.

William Ewart Gladstone. The statement helps to make clear the Liberal principle in contrast to the Conservative, by which it is opposed; it may not be wholly pleasing to some hon. gentlemen opposite, but nevertheless I think it is true. Gladstone said:

> The principle of Liberalism is trust in the people, qualified by prudence. The principle of Conservatism is mistrust of the people, qualified by fear.

There you have the dividing line between the old political parties. The Liberal party has consistently trusted the people; it has sought legislation in the general interests of the people, but it has qualified its course by prudence. That is what I am seeking to advocate should be done at the moment; while we are striving for improvements in our economic order let us trust the people but let us also be guided by prudence. Consider on the other hand the legislation that has been enacted and the course followed by hon. gentlemen opposite since this present parliament came into being; let me ask them if anything they have done contradicts Mr. Gladstone's statement that the principle of Conservatism is mistrust of the people qualified by fear. They have taken away, as they well know, from this House of Commons, which represents the people, all control of expenditures that have been made in connection with unemployment relief. They have dealt with these expenditures, as they also have with most matters affiecting the tariff, through an autocratic executive, thereby depriving this parliament of the control which parliament should have as the representatives of the people over taxation and all fiscal matters. I could mention numerous other instances of unwillingness to trust even the people's representatives in parliament, but perhaps the ones I have mentioned are sufficient to illustrate my point.

Let me quote from another great Liberal leader, the Right Hon. the Earl of Oxford and Asquith. I shall quote from the last address made by Lord Oxford as leader of the Liberal party. It was delivered at Greenock at the time Lord Oxford tendered his resignation of the leadership of the party. He chose as the theme of his farewell address to those who over many years had been his supporters and friends what in his opinion Liberalism in its essence stood for, and had stood for during the many years he had led his party. It was as it were a handing on of the torch. Having regard to the occasion, and having regard to the vast experience of Lord Oxford as Prime Minister of Great Britain for so many years, his words ought to carry very great weight in any popular assembly. In the course of his remarks Lord Oxford said:

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

> Both on its constructive and its defensive side, Liberalism means two things—the preservation and extension of liberty in every sphere of our national life, and the subordination of class interests to the interests of the community. Those two ideals were and are the life-breath of the Liberal faith. And liberty, in our understanding of it, means liberty in its positive as well as in its negative sense. . . .
> It is in the same large sense that you must understand our other root principle—the supremacy of the general interest over particular interests. It matters nothing for our purpose whether the class which is seeking for a privileged or paramount position is great or small; whether it relies upon birth, or wealth, or numbers and organization; whether its mouthpiece is, for the time being, the Duke of Northumberland or Mr. Cook. The good of all in our view is, in the long run, the good of each; we are all members of one another.

And a little further on:

> The Liberal party has this advantage, an advantage which I claim for it as against all competitive parties in the state, that it can point to the richest record of actual achievement in the removal of abuses and the extension of freedom, in securing step by step, that predominance of the general over the particular interest, which I have described as one of its great principles.

There is one other quotation I should like to give in setting out the principles of Liberalism which govern our party in Canada to-day as they governed Liberalism in the old land in its best days. This quotation comes also from an especially interesting source. As hon. members well know, there was a time when the late Right Hon. Joseph Chamberlain was an ardent Liberal, when Mr. Chamberlain stood and fought for the principles for which Liberalism stands. I want to give to the members of the house Mr. Chamberlain's definition of Liberalism as he understood it in those days:

> Progress is the law of the world; and Liberalism is the expression of this law in politics.
> Through its agency we have gained all that free men may justly prize in our existing institutions, and to it we look for the further changes that will bring them into complete harmony with the needs and aspirations of the people.
> True Liberalism seeks constantly the greatest happiness of the greatest number, and will attain its end through the wise cooperation of a self-governed commonwealth.

I have chosen that particular quotation because of the concluding words, "will attain its end through the wise cooperation of a self-governed commonwealth." Not a commonwealth where the state is going to govern everything, but a self-governed commonwealth where those who are members share each other's needs, rights and responsibilities.

May I add a few words which may further serve to indicate wherein I share some of the views which are held by those who are supporting the resolution. Though I do not agree for one moment with what they propose in the way of a remedy for existing conditions, I think they are right in believing that the great question of the present day is the social problem, the problem of how the masses of the people are to live. They have been stressing that point, and rightly so, but may I say to them that they are not the only ones who feel keenly about it. There are many men and women in this country who have not attached to themselves any particular label and who are not making any professions but who nevertheless are deeply exercised over the question of how the great body of men, women and children are to live under conditions as they are at the present time. All are under obligation to those who help to bring home to this House of Commons and to the country an appreciation of the fact that the social problem is the outstanding problem before Canada at the present time. How the masses of men and women who have very little in the way of means, some of them nothing at all, are to continue to live, is a tremendous problem. Anyone who helps to bring that question to the fore and to impress it upon the mind of parliament is rendering a distinct public service.

May I say that I agree also in their emphasis of the fact that the problem of industry is the central feature of the social problem. The social problem is above all else an industrial problem; its root causes and consequently its remedies are to be found very largely in industry and the organization of industry. I think they are right when they stress the condition in industry as being the all-important problem to which parliaments and public bodies generally should be turning their attention. What do we mean by industry? If I may be permitted, I would define industry as the process by which the great natural resources of the country are transformed through human effort, aided by tools and machines, in other words, by capital, into commodities and services available for human use. Production is the basis of this vast process and exchange and distribution are derivative and contributory factors. That being the nature of industry, it follows that the problems of industry have to do with those who are carrying on these operations.

The most significant thing of to-day, next to the unfortunate conditions under which so many are living, is the fact that so far as industry is concerned with production that part of the problem presents little in the way of difficulty. That part has already been largely solved. After all, that is an amazing fact because for many years we believed that population tended to outrun subsistence. This belief was the despair of economists and humanitarians. They failed to see how a solution of any social problems could be had because they believed that production could never keep up with population, that the one would outrun the other. To-day we have in the facts as known a direct denial of that condition; we have the knowledge that production is more than equal to the task. As I said a moment ago, Providence has done its part, and it is now for man to do his. If, under our present system we have been able to solve the major problem of production, surely the same calibre of minds and the same genius will be able to solve the less difficult problem of distribution. If there were scant production or inadequate production, the problem of distribution would be great indeed, but where production is plentiful, the problem of distribution simply comes down to a matter of the sufficient understanding of the forces at work and how to control them properly.

In trying to solve the problem of industry, in so far as the problem relates to an equitable distribution of the wealth produced, we fortunately have a key which gives us every reason to hope for a successful solution and which leaves no ground whatever for despair. The central problem of industry is the problem of the control of industry; the direction and control of industrial policy; it is essentially a problem of the government of industry. My hon. friends who support the resolution before us think that this problem can be solved by transferring the government of industry generally into the hands of the state and letting the state determine the whole policy of industry. I think they are right in believing that the control of industrial policy lies at the very heart of the solution of the whole situation, but I believe they are mistaken in their desire to transfer the determination of industrial policy to the state. May I say that in that particular the problem of government in industry is no different from the problem of government in the state itself. By following what has been done in solving the problem of government in the state we shall find out what should be done in solving the problem of government in industry.

Let me illustrate. To-day every man and every woman of twenty-one years of age and over, regardless altogether of the position that he or she may occupy in life, is part of the government of the country or has some right of control over the government. That control is exercised through the system of direct representation as we have it in this parliament at the present time, but control of the policies of a country by all its citizens was not always the case. When, in 1215, the Magna Charta was wrested from King John, absolute authority in the determination of state policy received its first blow. But it was succeeded by an authority almost as absolute on the part of a privileged group. A little later, in 1265, when Simon de Montfort called together his freemen, we had the first representative parliament. The parliament of Simon de Montfort was far from being the kind of parliament which succeeded the passing of the Reform Bill of 1832, and very different from the parliament we have to-day. All down the way there has been the effort to subject the interests of particular groups to the general interest, to cause the general interest to predominate over the particular. The result at the present time is that all classes, whether they be lords or ladies, whether they be landowners, or property owners or tenants, whether they have many possessions or few or none, so long as they are twenty-one years of age and are rational beings, they are entitled to take part in and to exert some measure of control over the government of the state. All have a share in government to-day.

If, mostly by the genius of British peoples, it has been possible to arrive at a solution of the problem of control of policy in the affairs of state, surely like qualities of mentality and ability should find it possible to work out a solution of the problems of the control of policy in industry. I submit that what is most needed to solve the industrial problem is to recognize that it is essentially a problem of government, and control of industrial policy. The reason industry to-day has become the battleground of rival contending economic interests, instead of being the common ground of cooperating human interests, is that the different groups contributing to production are each seeking for itself a monopoly of control of industrial policy instead of seeking to share a joint control in industrial policy.

How are the great industries for the most part run to-day under the present system? How is industrial policy determined? What do we find? We find that the capitalist investor exercises practically exclusive control. The capitalist investor is only one investor in industry; the worker invests not material wealth but human life itself. If material wealth is deserving of recognition because of its investment in industry, surely human life is entitled to equal recognition for its services. Similarly, take the great managers of industry, those who help to bring labour and capital together and adjust their relations with the community; they are more or less controlled by boards on which sit only the representatives of the capital investors, and their actions in large measure with respect to policy are controlled by what the board of representative capital investors say.

Then you have the other factor, the community itself, without which no industry could be carried on. The community organized as the state supplies all the agencies for maintaining peace, law and order. In the beginning, it provides the natural resources and through its members creates the demand that there is for the products of industry. It protects invention, promotes education and does innumerable other things to help to make industry possible. It has not, in connection with a large number of industrial enterprises, the control it should have. It does have a certain but not a sufficient control. What happens as a consequence? The capital investors having so largely a monopoly of control of industrial policy, the temptation to exercise it too exclusively to their own advantage has been irresistible. It is this monopoly of control by capital investors which is the essence of the capitalistic system. It is that which has occasioned the reactions. Not satisfied with the present order of things the other groups seek to remedy it, but in what way? They see that capital has the monopoly of control with respect to the direction of policy in industry and they try to remedy that by setting up another monopoly in its stead. They seek to wrest control of industrial policy from the capital investors and transfer it to themselves organized as the state, in some form of socialism or as workers in communistic groups. That is exactly what my hon. friends of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation are seeking to do. They say: We are not satisfied with this monopoly of control which capital has. We are going to get rid of that monopoly. We who represent a class movement will transfer that monopoly of control of industrial policy to the state and say that the state shall control everything, the whole policy of the direction of industry. What happens so far as the communist is concerned? He, in his turn, being a worker, at least to begin with belonging to the labour group, says: We are making our contribution to production; we are not satisfied with the way in which this monopoly of control of industrial policy is being exercised by the capital investor; we will take industry into our own hands and as labour we will control the whole thing. May I say, that capitalism, socialism and communism in so far as each seeks a monopoly of control of industrial policy, are all alike wrong; and I believe are all alike doomed. In that sense I do believe the capitalistic system is doomed, but equally doomed with it is any communistic, or socialistic system which seeks a monopoly of control of industrial policy.

What is the cure for monopoly? It is not substituting another monopoly in its stead but getting rid of monopoly altogether. It is substituting a joint control for a single control. It is bringing together in the control of industrial policy in industry representatives of the different groups that contribute to industry. In the shaping and control of policy, labour should be entitled to its voice at a common table with the capital investor or his representative. The community should also be entitled to have its representative there. To some extent this has already been indirectly effected, not in a way that is immediately noticeable, but nevertheless in a real way. The community is represented by many boards and commissions that make regulations for different purposes, also by the operation of laws which are passed by parliament itself. Labour is represented in agreements that are made, for example, between employers and employees as a result of the recognition of unions and the improved situation that has come about as a consequence. But while there is that kind of representation, it is not such as will ever satisfy those who are giving their lives to the service of industry. They will be satisfied only when they find the same kind of expression in the control of industrial policy that they find to-day in the control of the policies of the state. Members assembled in the House of Commons to-day are representative of all classes, of all who go to make up the nation. I believe the direction in which all industrial reform should aim is at bringing about within industry itself a form of democratization of the control of industrial policy similar to that which has been brought about by the state in political affairs. May I say in this regard that that policy is one that has been advocated by the Liberal party for many years.

Mr. SPENCE: And never practised.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, practised. If my hon. friend will remind me so that I may not forget, I shall give him an important instance in a moment. Let me first read to the house a brief statement of industrial policy as advocated by the Liberal party which I think all hon. members will be glad to hear and will deeply appreciate. It is a passage that I have taken from the last speech which was delivered by the Right Hon. Sir Wilfrid Laurier. The last time Sir Wilfrid Laurier addressed an audience was on January 14, 1919, when he spoke in this city before the Eastern Ontario Liberal Association. As hon. members will recall, within a month of that time the great Liberal leader had passed away. The words of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on that occasion come to us to-day with added force and emphasis. This is what Sir Wilfrid, referring to the problems of industry, said in the course of that address:

> The other question to which I wish to ask your attention is the new condition which ought to prevail in the industrial world. We live in an industrial age. Reading the history of the last sixty or eighty years, we are simply dumbfounded at the advances which have been made in industry. Great establishments reckon their employees not by the hundred, but by the thousand and ten thousand, and the output is not limited to hundreds or thousands, but runs into millions of articles every day. But while this growth has proceeded, conditions have developed which are very unsatisfactory, even dangerous. The relations between labour and capital have never been on a sound basis, and the two have been inimical rather than friendly. Labour has looked upon capital as a master, and capital has regarded labour as a servant. In such relations as these there should be neither master nor servant, but equality, equality of right and cooperation in administration. In this new country of Canada, and in this new order of society which we are starting to build up, we must have another and a better system. Instead of labour and capital being, as they have been, inimical, they must henceforth be friendly, seeing that labour needs capital and capital needs labour, and seeing that when one is injured the other suffers. How is that to be done? You have approached this subject to-day in your deliberations and have passed a resolution which seems to me to afford a key to the solution of this problem. Let me read it: I look upon it as the most important of all the resolutions you have adopted this day.

Then the resolution follows:

> The Eastern Ontario Liberal Association is of the opinion that the problem of the future is reconstruction, and that industrial reconstruction is the most important phase. To introduce into the government of industry the principle of representation whereby the interests of labour and of the community may be considered in industrial control and the shaping of policies is the natural work of Liberals. It is to liberalism that we owe the transition from autocratic to representative and responsible government in the affairs of the state. To democratize the government of industry so as to give to the workers and consumers a larger share in the government of industry is the task that lies ahead.

That is the end of the resolution. Sir Wilfrid continues:

> I call your attention to the last sentence, and I call the attention of the country to it, if my words can reach the people—"To democratize the government of industry so as to give to the workers and consumers a larger share in the government of industry is the task that lies ahead." Yes, that is the task to which Liberals must apply themselves.

Near the end of his speech, Sir Wilfrid added:

We do not look to the past, but to the future; only in that direction is the horizon for us as Liberals.

Perhaps I may be pardoned if I mention that, at the time, I had the honour of drafting the resolution on industrial policy of which Sir Wilfrid Laurier spoke as he did. I was not at that moment a member of the House of Commons, much less was I leader of my party, but, when I was again returned to parliament and ever since I have been leader of my party, whenever opportunity has offered, whether it has been through the agency of government itself, or by suggestions in other directions, I have done what I could to try to further the ideal underlying that resolution.

The hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Spence) has just said that we did not carry out our policy when in office. May I remind him of what was done with respect to the national railways, the largest industrial enterprise in Canada? It was a Liberal administration of which I had the honour to be the head which was the first to give labour a representative on its board of directors. Never before in Canada had labour had its seat on the board of directors of a great national enterprise, in this instance, along with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the largest industrial enterprise in the country. That was carrying out this very policy, and may I say to my right hon. friend the Prime Minister, having regard to legislation which is to come before us in the house this week, that I hope, when he comes to determine the personnel of the board of trustees which he proposes shall control the policy of the Canadian National Railways, he will be able to announce that one of the trustees on that board is a representative of labour. If the trustees of that board are simply chosen from the capitalist, investing class, it may well be said that instead of modifying it we are furthering the most objectionable feature of the capitalistic system. We shall have made no progress in the further democratizing of industry in the manner I have described, namely, the substitution of a joint for a single control. I make that suggestion at the moment in the hope that when that measure comes before the house we shall be able to get the assurance that the government of the day is alive to the necessity in industry, as in all else, of seeing that all the contributing factors so far as may be possible have a voice in the direction of policy and in the control of the industry itself.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

It has been said by some hon. members of the Progressive group that there should be a new motive in industry. May I say that I entirely agree with that? I believe that once the different groups in industry are represented in the control of industry we shall come to have a very different conception of industry generally. The conception that we have to-day is too largely that industry is primarily a source of revenue; the means whereby private gains may be reaped. There is not sufficient emphasis put upon industry being, what in fact it is, in the nature of social service. Care should be taken to emphasize more constantly that industry in its nature is essentially social service, that the man who works on the railways, the men and women who work in factories, those who have anything to do with any form of industry, are performing a great social service and merit our highest respect on that account. The man who puts his capital into industry is performing a social service, and the man who has to do with the management of industry is performing a social service, but I think we should give much more honour than we do to those who give their lives to industry, as persons performing the most necessary of social services. Too often the conception of social service is associated only with those who like ourselves are fortunate enough to be members of parliament, but ours is only one form of social service. Others in industry are equally performing social service in their every act. When this conception of industry as being in the nature of social service gains recognition, we will come to place greater emphasis on personality and relatively less emphasis on property. We will come to see that human life is more sacred than wealth, and that every policy in industry as well as in the state should be directed towards seeing that human life and personality are not in any way sacrificed to property or to wealth.

I have taken longer than I expected, Mr. Speaker, but I do not want to conclude what I have to say without recording just a few of the things for which, in seeking to meet some of the more immediate existing questions, the Liberal party stands at the present time. I am not speaking now of general principles merely, but of existing problems, and of the policies of the Liberal party with respect to them. I submit that an application of those principles and policies will go much further in helping to bring about a better condition of affairs in the country than any attempt to effect a complete revolution of the existing social order.

To emphasize what I wish to say in that regard, may I point out that up to the present I have dealt with the problems of industry largely from only one angle, the question of government in industry and the human side. But industry has a world aspect as well as a human aspect. Its problems should be viewed from all sides, from the economic and material as well as the human sides. If I might take the analogy of a coin, on one side you have the head of the sovereign, symbolical of the human interest in affairs of government and of the state, and on the other side you have the numerical denomination descriptive of value, quantity and the like. So, too, in dealing with industry. Industry is one and the same, but its problems have two sides, the human side which is concerned with matters of government, and the economic side, which relates to finance and trade, to tariffs, to questions of imports, exchange, banking, credit, currency and the like. The right policy with respect to all of these is just as vital and important in the control of industry and the well-being of those concerned with it, as a satisfactory solution of the problems of government in industry. We have to keep both of them in view. In passing may I say that in dealing with questions of trade, currency, taxation and the like, the motive that should underlie the policies of any political party in all these matters is, from the Liberal point of view, as in all else in the way of policy, how the rights of the many may be maintained as against the privileges of the few, how the particular may be made subordinate to the general interest; how human need can best be served, how social justice can best be furthered, how the good of all can best be promoted. Those are fundamental principles, and in this regard I wish to give just one further quotation in order to illustrate wherein such has been the aim of Liberalism right along. I have in my hand a quotation taken from Lord Morley's Life of Gladstone. In this passage which I shall read, Lord Morley stresses the importance that Mr. Gladstone placed upon sound economic policies in solving the great social questions of the day. It is important for us to keep in mind that sound economic policies on the part of the state, have under existing conditions more to do with human well-being than almost anything else. Lord Morley, speaking of Mr. Gladstone, says:

> It has often been said that he ignored the social question; did not even seem to know there was one. The truth is, that what marks him from other chancellors is exactly the dominating hold gained by the social question in all its depth and breadth upon his most susceptible imagination. Tariff reform, adjustment of burdens, invincible repugnance to waste or profusion, accurate keeping and continuous scrutiny of accounts, substitution of a few good taxes for many bad ones,—all these were not merely the love of a methodical and thrifty man for habits of business; they were directly associated in him with the amelioration of the hard lot of the toiling mass, and sprang from an ardent concern in improving human well-being, and raising the moral ideals of mankind. In his "musings for the good of man," Liberation of Intercourse, to borrow his own larger name for free trade, figured in his mind's eye as one of the promoting conditions of abundant employment. "If you want," he said in a pregnant proposition, "to benefit the labouring classes and to do the maximum of good, it is not enough to operate upon the articles consumed by them; you should rather operate on the articles that give them the maximum of employment." In other words, you should extend the area of trade by steadily removing restrictions. He recalled the days when our predecessors thought it must be for man's good to have "most of the avenues by which the mind, and also the hand of man conveyed and exchanged their respective products." blocked or narrowed by regulation and taxation. Dissemination of news, travelling, letters, transit of goods, were all made as costly and difficult as the legislator could make them. "I rank," he said, "the introduction of cheap postage for letters, documents, patterns, and printed matter, and the abolition of all taxes on printed matter, in the catalogue of free trade legislation. These great measures may well take their place beside the abolition of prohibitions and protective duties, the simplifying of revenue laws, and the repeal of the Navigation Act, as forming together the great code of industrial emancipation."

That quotation, Mr. Speaker, helps to make clear what I wish to emphasize in connection with the concluding portion of my remarks, namely, that if a political party wishes to serve its fellowcitizens it cannot hope to do so by concentrating on any single fetish or panacea, however laudable it may be, but must be prepared to deal in the most effective way with each question as it arises. That has been the method of Liberalism from the start. It is in that connection that we have taken throughout this parliament the strong stand that we have with respect to the relief of unemployment, seeking to urge upon the government the importance of that question above all others.

I shall run through—and I shall do it quickly to save time—a bare statement of the position of the Liberal party with respect to a few of the more immediate outstanding issues of the day. I do this to answer hon. members who say there is no alternative to the policy offered by them, and also to make clear to the house and country the exact position of the Liberal party with regard to these all-important questions. I have already referred to our policy with respect to a more equitable distribution of wealth, the safeguarding of the national railways, and the democratization of industry.

As unemployment is a matter of very great concern I shall give it first consideration. The Liberal party believes unemployment is Canada's most urgent national problem. It would deal with the present emergent conditions through a representative national commission which would cooperate with the provinces and municipalities in the administration of unemployment relief, and in an endeavour to provide work for the unemployed. As permanent measures the Liberal party is pledged to introduce policies which will serve to provide employment by reviving industry and trade, and to introduce a national system of unemployment insurance.

Then, as to the liberation of external trade: The Liberal party believes that trade is the basis of industrial and commercial development, and that Canada needs trade. It will abolish the extravagant increases in the tariff made by the present administration, which have had the effect of strangling trade, exploiting consumers and robbing railways of business. It will abolish all unwarranted extra taxes on imports, such as the exchange and dumping duties, as imposed by the present administration. It will end the making and altering of tariffs by executive action. It will substitute stability for uncertainty in the administration of customs laws. It will promote trade with all nations and negotiate trade agreements with any countries willing to trade with Canada on a reciprocal basis. It will continue the Liberal policy of British preference by a percentage reduction in existing tariffs rather than by a percentage increase against foreign countries in existing tariffs. It will grant to British imports a real preference. I may say, further, that it will aim, always, at fiscal freedom, and will help in world movements directed towards greater freedom of intercourse in trade. It will not further any policies which serve to unite groups into units against the rest of the world.

Then concerning the liberation of internal trade: The Liberal party will seek to end artificial price control and agreements in restraint of trade. Price fixing by agreements restrict and hamper trade internally. The internal trade of our country has become honeycombed and enmeshed by secret understandings and agreements. The protective tariffs, as they obtain in Canada to-day, have fostered the formation of combines, monopolies and trusts, and under these combines, monopolies and trusts there are no end of secret agreements by which prices are being held at artificial figures. I might remind the house that some years ago a Liberal administration passed the Combines Investigation Act which had for its purpose investigating combines and trusts. The history of this legislation may serve to illustrate the difference between the two larger parties in the house. After the Liberal administration went out of office the administration which followed abolished the Combines Investigation Act. As soon as we assumed power we restored that legislation to the statute book. But the Combines Investigation Act is but a mere beginning and does not meet the situation obtaining to-day. There should be more adequate facilities for investigations, and additional penalties should be imposed. Some conditions obtain which should be remedied by additional provisions in the criminal code. To-day we are seeking in vain to cope with these evils by milder methods.

The system of distribution of products needs overhauling. Distribution should be on a service at cost basis. The spread in prices is too great, as any comparison of prices paid to producers with prices consumers have to pay will make self-evident.

We believe that in connection with the liberation of trade there would be a great development of the primary industries of Canada. The Liberal party, by its policies, will continue to further the development of agriculture, lumbering, mining and fishing by effecting reductions in the costs of production of Canada's basic products, by obtaining wider markets therefor, by encouraging export trade, and by state assistance in the marketing of natural products.

Another important matter to which we would direct our attention is the control of investments in order to prevent exploitation of the public through the sale of unsound and worthless securities, namely, watered stocks. We believe an investment control board should be established, which would have supervision of issues of securities by companies incorporated under federal charters. That board should first control the incorporation of new companies, and carefully scrutinize the extent of their capitalization in relation to (a) the amount of stock authorized and to be issued, and (b) existing and anticipated assets. Secondly, it should pass upon supposed issues of additional stock by existing companies, with a view to safeguarding the interests of the industries so affected, as well as the interests of the investor. These measures would apply to companies incorporated under a dominion act. We believe the financial mismanagement of industry is one of the causes for dissatisfaction with the capitalist system, and is largely responsible for many conditions obtaining to-day. Industry has been adversely affected by the control exercised over industry, not by industrial managers so much as by promoters and financiers. We believe the interlocking of directorates is one of the factors which on the one hand enables bankers to control industries, and on the other hand enables industrialists to control the banks. It is our view that in that connection there is room for much in the way of reform.

I come next to the control of credit. Liberalism believes that credit is a public matter, not of interest to bankers only, but of direct concern to the average citizen. It stands for the immediate establishment of a properly constituted national central bank, to perform the functions of rediscount, and the control of currency issue, considered in terms of public need. A central bank is necessary to determine the supply of currency in relation to the domestic, social and industrial requirements of the Canadian people; and also to deal with the problems of international commerce and exchange.

Then, as regards our national finances we believe now, as we always have, in the necessity of a balanced budget. It is our view that the aim of every government should be the balancing of its budget. We would seek to effect that end, as we did in seven out of the eight and a half years we held office, by retrenchment of public expenditures, by reduction of principal and interest on the public debt and by increasing revenues through the encouragement of trade. We believe a reduction of the cost of government in Canada could be effected by a careful inquiry into the whole of the costs, federal, provincial and municipal. The whole structure should be overhauled and simplified. We believe further that there should be a reduction in the burden of interest and taxation. There is room for much to be done by way of refunding of the public debt and of lowering of interest rates which, at the present time, constitute a great burden upon the state.

The Liberal party believes that the present crisis has been made an excuse for the usurpation of the rights of parliament and the assumption of autocratic powers by the executive. Liberalism stands, as always, for the principle of a free parliament, and for the supremacy of parliament. To this end it would repeal the legislation enacted by the present administration, which deprives parliament of its control over expenditures, and taxation, and invests the executive with unwarranted arbitrary powers, as for example: legislation permitting the executive to enact measures by order in council for peace, order and good government, and legislation providing the executive with a blank cheque for expenditures of any kind.

In that connection may I remind the house of what was said only a few evenings ago. The statement was made that up to the present time, in its term of office the present administration had in one way or another spent over $115,000,000 for purposes of relief. Some of it has been for direct relief, some has been given as aid to provinces, and some loaned to provinces. With the exception of $20,000,000, every bit of the $115,000,000 has been spent by the executive under orders in council on blank cheque account. Parliament has had no control over those expenditures, has known nothing of them until after they had been made. This great sum of money, $115,000,000, is equal to the total moneys paid out of the consolidated fund of Canada to run the whole dominion for the year immediately preceding the war. That gives some idea of the extent to which we have had taken away from us in this parliament the rights of the people's representatives to control expenditure and taxation.

Liberalism believes that under the excuse of the present crisis the rights of the individual have been violated. Liberalism stands, as always, for the British principle of free speech and free association, and to this end we would repeal section 98 of the criminal code, and end the present practice of arbitrary deportation.

Finally Liberalism stands for electoral laws which will ensue a true parliamentary representation of the Canadian people, and such legislation as may help to reduce the cost of electoral compaigns.

I might have added in this connection a word as to our position with regard to interimperial and international relations, but I think the house is familiar with our policy in that regard, which aims, as hon. gentlemen well know, at seeking to further wherever possible those courses in international relations which will make for peace and goodwill among nations, and promote friendly intercourse between them. We would seek to further the League of Nations in its work.

There is one word I should like to say in conclusion. I feel that this is a time when men ought to speak their minds, particularly in regard to the problems with which the country is faced—and not only the country, but with which the world itself is faced; and that if there is anything in our belief which we regard as important it should be publicly stated. Much has been said this afternoon by myself in criticism of those who are supporting the present resolution; I have felt that they were relying far too much upon what a change in external conditions and structure might do as affecting the existing social order. I have indicated what I have in mind when I said I did not believe that some matters could be solved by economic readjustments, or by any complete transformation of the existing social and industrial order such as they have in mind, and that they would have to go very much deeper than that to find the real solution. May I say, in a word, that I believe there are some things which governments and parliaments can do, but there are other things which governments and parliaments cannot do, and it is wholly wrong that the citizens of a country generally should be led to look only to the state for the reforming or improvement of conditions. We have come to a time in the world's history when men will have to go deeper into their own hearts and ask themselves what in the final analysis it is which is preventing large numbers of human beings from being able to get the livelihood to which they are entitled, and which is accountable for the world's present distress.

If one goes back to the days of the ancient prophets and law givers one will find the spirit of the Hebrew in the writings of the sacred books. Its dominant idea is that of a divine law of righteousness, which in human affairs found its expression in social justice. I say that to my hon. friends who are supporting this resolution, because I should like them to realize that they are not the first or the only ones who have sought for social justice. It has been the great struggle through the ages. The dominant note throughout the Scriptures is that of the need to effect social justice in human relations. That was what was most emphasized in ancient times. When we come to the days of the birth of Christianity we find that Christ Himself gave to the world His views as to what it most needed to solve its social problems. They are set forth in the Sermon on the Mount. I believe there is nothing that will go so far to help solve this world's problems and remove its distress as adherence to the precepts, principles and teachings which are set forth in the Sermon on the Mount. Apart from their acceptance, there will be no permanent solution. Christ in that sermon said to mankind: Seek ye first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and all these things shall be added unto you. A moment before, He had said, "ye cannot serve God and Mammon." The things that were to be added were what ye shall eat, what ye shall drink, and wherewithal ye shall be clothed, the economic and material needs. His statement was that if men would go deep enough into their hearts and seek to root out the selfishness there, would care more for the well being of others than for their own advancement and position, very soon human society would take care of itself. A little later the apostle Paul, seeking to inculcate those precepts and principles, when addressing the Philippians, used the expression: "Let this mind be in you, which was also in Christ Jesus." In all reverence I say to my fellow countrymen, that I believe that that alone will solve the great social problems of to-day. When men and women in their relations with each other, whether social or business or political, will put first and foremost the desire to promote the well-being of their fellows in a spirit of service, and humility and sacrifice, rather than to advance their own individual interests by gain and by greed, then we shall have made a real advance toward a solution of the problems of the day. Parliament can do much to help to make it difficult if not impossible for the avaricious man to profit by his greed, and the mean man to profit from his meanness. All of us here will, I believe, irrespective of party, do what we can towards that end. We need in our work the assistance of all the helpful forces in this country, church and state must work together, but most of all the individual himself must play his part. Every man and woman must realize that if we have a world industrial depression to-day he or she is in a measure responsible for its alleviation, and that to each and to all we must look for the complete solution.

Mr. I. D. COTNAM (North Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the adjournment of the debate.

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

CURRENCY, NOTES AND BONDS

PROPOSAL FOR STAMPING OR PRINTING IN BOTH OFFICIAL LANGUAGES

The house resumed, from Monday, January 30, consideration of the motion of Mr. Boulanger:

Whereas French speaking Canadians constitute approximately one-third of the population and have always evinced their attachment to the throne and British institutions;

And whereas their language, one of the languages most commonly used in international relations, is coupled with their culture and traditions, one of the essential elements of Canadian nationality, and establishes a characteristic that differentiates and protects our country against the dangers of Americanization;

And whereas the fathers of confederation had in mind and the federal pact demand the equality of the two languages: English and French;

Therefore be it resolved that, in the opinion of this house, in order to more clearly establish the distinctive character of the Canadian pepole and to better ensure its preservation, all state currency, notes or bonds should be in both official languages.

[Mr. Cahan.]

Mr. SAMUEL GOBEIL (Compton): The mover of this resolution having spoken in French, I have come to the conclusion that I should reply to him in that language, but I must say that in my opinion, for all practical purposes, the resolution is one that should have been moved in English. For that reason it is to be regretted, I think, that the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) did not move it in English. He knew, I am sure, that there were no converts for him to make among the French speaking members of this house, when he asked for a bilingual currency—and I use the words bilingual currency advisedly—rather than the words set out in the motion, because I doubt whether, in the present state of affairs and under world conditions, it is wise on the part of this house to express an opinion to the effect that we should guard against the dangers of Americanization. That however is something which I leave to hon. members who have more experience than I have. But when the hon. gentleman suggests that we should have a bilingual currency in Canada, I think I can say that without a single exception we are in favour of his proposal. Every French Canadian, the humblest or the most distinguished, will take a greater pride in the fact that he is a Canadian when there is equal proficiency in the two languages and when bilingualism has become an established fact recognized throughout the country.

If there is any need for missionary or educational work in this matter, as I claim there is, and I say this without intending any offence, it is certainly among the English speaking members of the house. The large majority if not all of our colleagues who speak the other language are broadminded men willing to do their share towards bringing about greater unity between the races. To convince them that our case is just and fair, it is only proper that we should speak to them in their own tongue. I fancy I hear someone saying that bilingualism is official in this house and that they should learn French, but in my opinion that is a most illogical reply, as illogical as it would be for an English speaking Canadian who might go into one of our towns in Quebec, where he might not be fully understood, to insist on people trying to speak his own language. It is in the best interests of all to be able to speak both languages, but it should not be forgotten that the learning of our language presents to our colleagues the same difficulties that we encounter when we learn theirs.

(Translation): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take part in this debate. Although I do not endorse all that has been said by the hon.

member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger)—because I would not care to be credited with some of the expressions he used—may I, however, assure him that his Conservative French Canadian colleagues of Quebec, rejoice in hearing that, since 1930 at least, he has suddenly become an ardent champion of bilingualism. I also wish to extend my congratulations to the members of the press gallery for the publicity they gave to his speech. This shows that the press realizes that public opinion takes an interest in this question and want to be well informed. I therefore feel confident that I shall be dealt with as fairly and that the question of bilingualism will be better understood when this debate closes.

Since January 30, last, certain newspapers, perhaps, with the best of intentions—I am willing to give them the benefit of the doubt in this respect—have criticized me for having adjourned the debate, thus preventing further discussion on this resolution. I have, sir, no apology to make to my province or fellow citizens, because I am convinced that, by adjourning the debate, I have better served the cause of bilingualism than the mover of the resolution, by his speech.

We are living in a country where two-thirds of the population are of British extraction or at least different from ours. We, French Canadians, contend that we are entitled to have bilingualism in this country, first, as original possessors or settlers of the land, secondly, in virtue of the British North America Act. However, it must be acknowledged—I think it is so acknowledged by everyone—that the British North America Act is not very clear on the question of currency. The motion before the house is a proof of this. The hon. member for Bellechasse requests the house to decide this point and declare that our currency should bear bilingual inscription. Briefly, this means that part of section 133, by the request of the hon. member for Bellechasse, becomes a question for the house to decide. Then, sir, is it not reasonable to believe that if the hon. member for Bellechasse had really had at heart the success of this motion, he would not in the course of his remarks, insulted, as he did, a certain group of his colleagues. To my mind, that is a proof—there are others—that the hon. member's intention, in introducing this resolution, was to make it a political issue and endeavour to make political capital out of it.

Moreover, sir, the hon. member and his party were guided by past experience, because the house must remember that, for the last forty years, never did the liberal party assume power on an economic or political issue, but have always appealed to popular feelings. In 1896, the liberal party was hoisted to power on the Manitoba school question; in 1921 it resorted to the conscription issue. On the other hand, the liberal party was always put out of office on a question of policy and involving broad principles. They were put out, in 1911, on the reciprocity issue and, in 1930, on the question whether Canada would further allow foreign products to flood her markets.

Now, sir, if we agree on the principle of the resolution itself, the discussion of it will permit, however, to clear up certain aspects of the question which are not sufficiently known by the public and place the responsibility of certain acts where it should be.

First, it is not more a question of the hour than it was five or ten years ago. The hon. member for Bellechasse admitted it himself in his speech. He stated that numerous petitions had been forwarded to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Rhodes). Let me point out to him that most of these petitions were not sent to the present Minister of Finance but to his liberal predecessor and that, in the course of twelve months, between 1928 and 1929, more petitions of this kind were received by the then Minister of Finance than had ever been received since Confederation to this date. To inquiries made, at the last session, the government replied that, from May, 1928, to April 1929, 348 petitions had been received, requesting bilingual inscriptions on our currency, and that—a strange coincidence—on June 28, 1929, hardly two months after receiving all these petitions, the government under the leadership of the right hon. Mr. Mackenzie King, signed a five-year contract for the printing of our currency—a unilingual currency—dated April 1, 1930.

Last summer, I do not know why, when the hon. member for Bellechasse, in a letter addressed to the press, contended that I had conspired with the hon. Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) and a few members on this side of the house, in order to prevent the discussion of this motion, I inquired, in my reply to his letter, why he had not introduced his resolution previous to the contract made in 1929. In a letter dated July 30, 1932, published by l'Action Catholique on August 2, 1932, the hon. member for Bellechasse replied as follows:

> Mr. Gobeil wishes to know why I did not advocate bilingual currency under the Liberal regime. I shall frankly tell him. At the time to which he refers, I was opposing subsidized immigration. I thought that to struggle with that issue was enough work for a new member.

I wonder if the hon. member for Bellechasse satisfied a great number of people with such a reply; however, I regret to state that he neither impressed me by his zeal, at that period, nor by his sincerity, to-day. If the hon. member had then shown the great activity which he has displayed since his party has gone out of power, he certainly could have found the means to introduce his resolution, especially when he already had, in 1929, a parliamentary experience of three years, and particularly when he must have realized that his efforts to restrict immigration had no results. However, sir, were we to admit, for the sake of arguing, that the hon. member was right, if we accept his views, that a new member, in his first stage of parliamentary life, has an excuse perhaps, for not championing his race, his language or liberty when he believes them threatened, does the same excuse apply to the sixty other members of Quebec, in 1929? Does the same excuse apply to such veteran parliamentarians who sit on the front benches? For instance, to the hon. member for l'Assomption-Montcalm (Mr. Seguin), to the hon. member for Bonaventure (Mr. Marcil)? Is such an excuse valid on behalf of the hon. member for St. Denis (Mr. Denis), with his sonorous voice, who rises in the house, at every moment, and likes to be looked upon as the great patriot of this chamber? Is it valid on behalf of the hon. member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), so loquacious since 1930.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Had the government given me my station sooner, I could have taken up this matter.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): . . . the most expensive member in the house, considering the services he renders? Is it possible to imagine or believe that he did not rise in the house, in 1929, to protest before the contract was awarded by the government of which he was a follower? And, the hon. member for St. James (Mr. Rinfret) the great champion of the French Canadians, who, in 1925 and 1926, came to the county of Compton, at East Angus, to denounce the Conservatives and tell the people of my constituency how necessary and important it was for them to return a liberal so as to uphold the rights of the French Canadian race against the encroachments of these villainous Tories? Was such an excuse valid in the case of the hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin)? In brief was such an excuse valid in behalf of the solid phalanx?

All will remember—and the house will recall that at the time the famous solid phalanx was returned to power—the husting speeches of our hon. friends opposite, who stated that it was absolutely necessary for the honour of the French Canadian race and language to return the Quebec liberal phalanx "en bloc", and this Quebec solid phalanx, 61 strong, all members of my province, remained silent; not one rose in the house to request a bilingual currency, when, in 1929, it became necessary to renew the contract; I state, not one rose in the house!

The hon. member for Bellechasse made the other day, to my mind, a rather harsh statement. While listening to him, I could not help thinking that there was much spite infused in the remarks addressed to his colleagues of 1929. He made the following statement, page 1775 of Hansard:

I trust that no one will take the attitude of whipped dog that some of our public men have sometimes taken on national questions.

Where were the "whipped dogs" in 1919? Surely not on the left of the chair, because, as a result of the campaign of race prejudices carried on by our friends opposite, not a Conservative French Canadian of Quebec was elected. Therefore, there is no doubt that the whipped dogs to which the hon. member for Bellechasse referred were the 61 Liberal members of Quebec. Is this not a proof, sir, that the hon. member displayed harshness towards his friends?

I regret that the hon. member for Chicoutimi-Saguenay is not in the house; however, I hope he will appear before this debate closes. He should acquaint the house with his views, especially as whip of his party, he who since 1930, but particularly since the opening of this session, rises in his seat as if moved by a hidden spring each time some document or pamphlet is mentioned in the house, and inquires whether it has been printed in French—

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): There is no Chicoutimi-Saguenay county.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): When it has not been printed in French it is simply because it was not under the Liberal regime, however, each time the minister concerned replies: if such is the wish of the house, this pamphlet will be published in French. But the hon. member for Chicoutimi-Saguenay—

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): There is no Chicoutimi and Saguenay county.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): The hon. member for Charlevoix and Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) should inform the house whether in 1929 he made use of the whip, and, if so, how many strokes he gave each of our hon. friends to force them to adopt the humiliating position described by the hon. member for Bellechasse. I have much regard for my friends in the opposition and I cannot imagine that in 1929 out of 61 members from Quebec all sitting on your right, sir, not one expressed the wish to the leader of the government when the currency contract came up, that the country be given a bilingual currency. Since such was the case, the whip who is the executor of the high party orders, must have had his hands full to keep them in line, and I am sure that if the hon. member divulged to the house the means to which he resorted, we would have a very interesting page of the inner history of the Liberal party.

What about the hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe), the first lieutenant of the prime minister of that period, the leader of the French Canadian representation, the great champion of the rights of his race in Quebec? In 1925 and 1926, and even in 1930, he also was one of those who, on the hustings, addressed the French Canadians, and explained to them the necessity of electing a solid phalanx to safeguard their rights, language and liberties. Will the hon. member for Quebec East explain why this contract was awarded, in 1929, for a unilingual currency? I think, sir, that it behooves the hon. member to explain to the house this change in their policy, because this question was an issue in 1929 as it is to-day. It was even more an issue then, because of the 348 petitions received by the Minister of Finance of that day. It behooves the hon. member for Quebec East to inform the house and the Quebec representation why this question was not settled in 1929, when times were normal, when the question was easier to settle than to-day, because there existed less restlessness. I am certain that if the hon. member for Quebec East confided to the house why it was not done, it would make very interesting news. While awaiting his statement, may I divulge what, I think, was the main reason. It was, sir, that, in 1929, the Liberal party was in power, while to-day it is in the opposition.

If the Liberal party was in power, to-day, and a Conservative member moved a resolution similar to the one before the house, I have not the least doubt that the hon. member for Quebec East would quote the views that his late leader, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, expressed in the house, on February 25, 1907, on a similar resolution moved by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne). Let us examine the statement made, in 1907, by the leader of the Liberal party, Sir Wilfrid Laurier the idol of the province of Quebec. His words are quoted on page 3655 of Hansard, February 28, 1907:

> . . . but I must protest against the idea that because bank notes are not printed in French as well as in English, one can state that the French language is not on a footing of equality with the English.
> We have our rights and we should exercise them when it is our interest to do so, but I do not think we should be pedantic and insist that on every occasion the French language should be spoken.

Will any of our hon. friends, in the opposition, rise in the house this evening and contend that Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a traitor to his race when he made this statement. I invite our hon. friends opposite to rise in their seats and tell us what they think of the views expressed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, in 1907, with reference to the bilingual currency.

Mr. DORION (Translation): There must have been whipped dogs at that period!

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): There certainly were whipped dogs, I mentioned the fact a short while ago; there were some then as there were in 1929.

Mr. GIROUARD (Translation): There is very little sense shown in such a remark.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): If there is little sense shown the fault lies with the member for Bellechasse.

Such is the consistency of the upholders of Liberal principles.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Is it not a fact that the hon. Mr. Devlin, a Liberal member, moved a resolution to that effect?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I have been informed that according to the doctrine of integral Liberalism, so highly thought of by the hon. member for Quebec East, this is called "adapting oneself to circumstances." In our rural districts it is designated under another name. In this matter, the hon. member for Bellechasse, a legal luminary, conscious of his superiority over my humble self, thought he could, in the course of last summer, in his letters to the press, counter my thrust by displaying his contempt for me; and accordingly, in one of his letters, he could not find a more contemptible expression in speaking of me than that of "back country politician."

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): It was well deserved!

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I frankly state that I did not feel very much offended; however, in the back country to which the hon. member alludes and which he seems to so much despise, when a man says white one day and black the next day, as the Liberals did, in 1907 and 1933, on the question of bilingual currency, our "habitants", our country folk—I myself being one—do not say that such a man "adapts himself to circumstances," but that he is a double-faced fellow.

I have had sufficient experience with the liberal press to expect that I shall be charged with playing politics...

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): That is apparent.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): ...when making these remarks. Therefore, I wish to state why I have taken such a stand. If I occupy a seat on your right, sir, it is because I have full confidence in the government, and believe that the conservative policy is most appropriate, especially, under present circumstances; it is because I think that the conservative policy as applied by this government, under the leadership of one of the most outstanding men of the British Commonwealth, is the only sound policy to follow in the crisis we are passing through; it is because I feel confident that the conservative policy is the only one which will pull us through this crisis without too much upsetting things.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): I wanted to make it plain, that even from the viewpoint of the French language and bilinguism, the conservative party neither has had in the past nor has in the present, any lesson to take or excuses to offer, as far as the record of the liberal party is concerned.

There is, sir, another aspect of the question to which I want to refer before closing my remarks, it is in connection with the French Canadian minority of this country. As in all countries where there exists a duality of language or race, the minority needs an independent press to uphold its rights. In order that such a press may fulfil its part, I readily recognize that it must have elbow-room and the right to criticize those who are false to the rights of this minority; however, may I add that it must give proof of its impartiality. To clearly state my point, I shall quote a concrete case, an example of impartiality! A few days after I had adjourned this debate, I received a communication from a group of young men of Montreal—I have no hesitation in stating that it was the same group who organized the meeting at Gésu, last autumn. These young men expressed their amazement at my adjourning this debate and wanted to know the reason. To justify their request, they quoted the comments of a certain newspaper, supposed to be free from any political alliance, which stated that this adjournment had no other purpose than to shut out all discussion on the motion or give it the six months' hoist. I immediately communicated to them some of the reasons which I gave the house, and which seemed to satisfy them. I am confident that this debate will prove that the comments of the newspaper in question were baseless. Nothing pleased me as much as this letter because it showed a sense of sincerity and a desire of being fair. I wish to point out to my province and race the means to which the press, supposed to be independent of party politics resorted, on this occasion. I do not do so to complain because I really think that it did itself more harm than it did to me. However, sir, if I had an advice to give them, it would be the following: if it wants to fulfil its part which is, I repeat it, very useful, it must be impartial in its criticism, so as to, at least, retain the respect of those with whom it differs.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): This is the first time the Conservative party advocate a policy!

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): You never had any.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): It is unnecessary, sir, to repeat in French the remarks that I made in English, however, I wish to clearly state that I entirely approve of the principle embodied in the motion of the hon. member for Bellechasse. I shall vote for it because I have always been in favour of such a motion and I shall always be. I am convinced that even if Canadian currency becomes bilingual, nobody will suffer from it or be the worse off, no more so than we are by the fact of having bilingual postage stamps.

However, a contract was awarded for the stamping of a unilingual currency, for a period of five years, dated April 1, 1930. It was signed by the Liberal government which preceded this administration, when the whole French Canadian representation of Quebec sat on the government benches, yet, not one protested. To my mind, that was a mistake on their part. It behooved the leaders, the old parliamentarians, as I mentioned a short while ago, to rise in the house, as we do to-day, and request the government of the day to give the country a bilingual currency. If these hon. gentlemen failed in their duty, I state that they must bear the consequences and not lay the blame on this government. If I moved the adjournment of the debate—as I previously mentioned, I have no excuses to make and do not offer any—it was because this motion was the ninth on the order paper and no one expected it would be called so soon. Moreover, the first remarks of the hon. member for Bellechasse admitted this fact. As I stated at the outset of my remarks, I think I have better served the cause of bilingualism by my moving the adjournment of the debate than the hon. member for Bellechasse did by his speech. Although a large number of our colleagues in the house are not conversant with the French language, a sufficient number are to understand the insults and affronts directed against a group of members by the hon. member for Bellechasse, and, sir, it was not in the interest of bilingualism that this motion should be discussed immediately after such an incendiary speech. I do not think that the cause has been the loser by this adjournment, on the contrary, I think it has gained. However, should the stamping of bilingual currency be delayed—although I know it must and will be established some day—the hon. member for Bellechasse must bear the consequence, because, in requesting the house to settle the question, he made it a point to rouse the passions, prejudices and race feelings which are inborn in the human heart. No doubt, had the discussion followed immediately, bitter terms would have been used which, to-day, is not to be thought of.

In closing my remarks, sir, I beg to request the government, when a new contract is awarded or a new issue of currency is authorized, to see that our currency bears the two official languages of this country.

I feel certain that it will be a further step towards promoting the "bonne entente" between the two great races of this country.

Mr. E. R. E. CHEVRIER (Ottawa) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, on January 30 last, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) had the privilege of moving in the house the resolution under discussion.

In language most moderate, with a thorough knowledge of his subject enhanced by the genius of the French language which is at his command, the hon. member for Bellechasse moved his resolution in the house. After having accomplished his task in words which all those who are conversant with the beautiful French language could appreciate, the time came for some other member to continue the debate. The hon. member who has just taken his seat, unfortunately, resorting to means which the rules of the house do not permit me to impute to him, moved the adjournment of the debate, which is equivalent to giving it the six months' hoist. It would have been better for this gentleman had he never seen light, for the honour of his province and that of the French Canadians of Ontario, we who, on Ontario soil, have always fought to obtain the rights granted to us—

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): You represented Ottawa in 1929!

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): "Ne ultra crepidam." Cobbler, judge no higher than the sole!—and which the broadminded English people had always recognized. Therefore, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Gobeil) shoved forward, as we do to marionnettes, by some interested party, requested the adjournment of the debate; to-day he is repentant. Fortunately for him, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) being an experienced politician, realized the faux-pas of the hon. member for Compton, who had been ill-advised by some one who was ignorant of the rules of the house or had overlooked the danger of placing in his hands such an offensive or defensive weapon. Therefore, the right hon. Prime Minister moved that this day, Monday, be set aside for members' notices of motions, so that we might discuss the resolution of the hon. member for Bellechasse.

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): He himself suggested Monday.

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): Had it not been for this motion of the right hon. Prime Minister, I wonder what would have been, in Quebec, the result of the faux-pas made by the hon. member for Compton?

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): Are you sorry that the resolution is again being debated?

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): No, not for a French Canadian hailing from Ontario who has a high regard for his language and the rights which have been recognized by this old and noble province.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh! Oh!

The ACTING SPEAKER (Translation): I would request hon. members to show some deference for the rules and the subject matter under discussion.

Hon. Mr. LAPOINTE (Translation): Hear, hear!

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): I thank you, sir. I do not expect those who are not, perhaps, able to appreciate the deference due to their colleagues, to understand that due to the rules of the house.

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): We must not be insulted!

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): The hon. member for Compton wishes us now to discuss this question after he himself and all his colleagues who sit to your right, sir, endeavoured to bury it, because they had not sufficient courage, energy or respect for the French language to defend the language they learned on their mother's knees.

Mr. DUGUAY (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I would request the hon. member for Ottawa to withdraw the words he has just uttered. The rules of the house do not permit the hon. member to insinuate that; through lack of energy or pride or any of the reasons which he has just enumerated, we abstained from rising in the house to defend our rights. I ask the hon. member for Ottawa to withdraw such expressions.

The ACTING SPEAKER (Translation): I think the objection is well taken, inasmuch as the hon. member for Ottawa ascribes motives to the members on the right; he is bound to withdraw that part of his remark.

Mr. CHEVRIER (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I bow, with the best grace, to your decision, because I am aware of your impartiality.

Did any one, sir, rise on the Government benches to speak on this resolution? They were quite satisfied with accepting the motion for the adjournment of the debate, this will always be an indelible brand on the foreheads of those who, at present, are privileged, for a rather ephemeral time, to sit on your right, sir.

It may seem rather paradoxical to you, Mr. Speaker, that I whose mother tongue is French should express in the English language, and in this honourable house of all places, my views on the question now under consideration, and if I do it in that tongue it is because both the French and the English languages are the official languages of this bilingual country. It is because, under the terms of the federal pact, I am at liberty to use which ever one of those two languages I might prefer as the conditions and circumstances may warrant or as conditions and circumstances may guide me. But how much more pleased I should be, and how much better I could do justice to the cause which has been placed before you, Mr. Speaker, if only I were able, to use the language that I learned at my mother's knee.

With the spirit and with the purport of the resolution now before the house I have no quarrel; with that resolution I am in hearty accord. But I differ with my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) to this extent: The operative clause of the resolution reads:

> Therefore be it resolved that, in the opinion of this house, in order to more clearly establish the distinctive character of the Canadian people and to better ensure its preservation, all state currency, notes or bonds should be in both official languages.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

I say that the character and the preservation of the Canadian people already have been clearly established and preserved by the terms of the federal pact, and that from that pact there flows the obligation upon the federal power to treat the French language in the same manner at all times as they treat the English language, more particularly in connection with any matter that may originate from federal control.

I shall base my argument for bilingual money on the terms of section 133 of the British North America Act. Construed in its most limited and restricted sense, and reduced to its simplest form, section 133 of the British North America Act means that all acts or actions emanating from the federal power when reduced to writing may be—note, "may" be—in either of the two official languages. I repeat, section 133 says that they "may" be in either of the two official languages. That means that when the federal authority in the exercise of its powers makes use of the English language, the French language may be similarly used for the same purpose.

It may be objected, although I trust it will not be, that that section is not imperative in its terms. With that contention I have no quarrel. But what difference is there between using the French language in any pleading or process—I am now quoting the words of section 133—which obviously are written documents, issuing from any court of Canada, and using the French language in conjunction with the English language on any paper money or coin printed, stamped, coined or issued out of the Royal Mint? Both the process and the coin or a dollar bill are issued under the federal jurisdiction by federal authority, and if there is any difference between issuing the process and issuing a dollar bill, then it ought all to be an argument in favour of issuing bilingual money, because the mint is now under federal jurisdiction and under the control of the parliament of Canada.

Why should it not be so? Do you answer, simply because it was not so explicitly stated in the bond, and that therefore the fathers of confederation did not think of it? No. I am quite satisfied that the fathers of confederation never had under contemplation the issuing of bilingual money. But there were many other matters the fathers of confederation had not in their minds when they drafted and approved of sections 91 and 92. The proof of that is that during all these years His Majesty's Privy Council has been functioning in an endeavour satisfactorily to interpret those sections. What the fathers of confederation contemplated was a united, prosperous Canada, a place where these two great races, proud of their ancestors and heritage, could forever live in peace, mutual understanding and respect, where the rights, principles, prerogatives and freedoms of the one would never be less or greater than those of the other. That, in my view, was the prevision of those great men whose love of country so dominated their minds that they could not be guilty of narrow-mindedness and unfair tactics.

I find that at page 937 of the debates of confederation Mr. Parker is reported as having said this:

I believe difficulties and embarrassments will grow up under this new constitution. I hope it will not be considered a finality but capable of amendment as time goes on. I sincerely trust that so far as its future defects may have their origin in matters of law, they will be redressed by wise, legal, and enlightened means, and so far as they may have their foundation in matters of sentiment or opinion, that they will be redressed by the cultivation of better and more fraternal feeling between the people of the different provinces. I trust and believe that by such happy means, although it is not now such a constitution as we can all approve, it may in the future be so modified and administered as to meet the requirements and expectations of the country, and that under it all the residents of these nine provinces may become one united, firm, prosperous and happy people.

Such was the vision, such was the dream, such were the hopes of the framers of the constitution. Is it for us to-day to say that those hopes, those dreams are not to be respected? After all, what was the intention of those who, in mutual respect and confidence, produced section 133? That section is to be found in the debates of confederation, this ponderous volume which has no index, but through which one must labour—as I did labour—through which one must read if one desires to learn about the sentiments of the fathers of confederation. This volume one must read if he wishes to find out what they had in contemplation. In view of the events of recent times, upon going through this ponderous volume one might be inclined to wonder at the paucity of remarks with reference to the status and the effect of the use of the French language in Canada. But, to one who has gone through the volume, to one who has laboriously read the lives and biographies of those who brought about confederation, one does not wonder that neither French nor English lost time to learn what the effect of section 133 would be. As gentlemen, as they were in those days, they simply wrote down in the book that so and so would be such and such; the French believed in the English, and the English believed in the French, and the paucity, yet the clearness of the language simply meant that while heretofore they had been chivalrous foes, now they were friends who understood each other. Their minds were in tune with one thought—a confederation wherein both races should be equal as to rights and privileges.

May I quote the words of Sir Hector Langevin as they appear at page 368 of the reports:

Under confederation there will no longer be domination of one race over another, and if one section should be desirous of committing an act of injustice against another section, all the others would unite together to prevent it.

Then he goes on to say:

This measure, as I observed a short time ago, cannot last unless it protects the interests of all. . . . What we desire and wish is to defend the general interests of a great country, and of a powerful nation by means of a central power.

Then Sir Hector Langevin goes on to explain what benefits he expects will accrue to this new nation by reason of the mingling of the mentality of one with that of the other, a nation wherein one people respects the thoughts and the rights, and challenges none of whatever may have been the rights, privileges or principles of the other. Sir Hector Langevin continues:

The confederation, I am perfectly convinced will afford the best possible guarantee for our institutions, our languages, and all that we hold dearest in the world; under its protection we shall be strong against the common enemy;

Perhaps the Prime Minister will listen to this:

We shall be strong against the common enemy; we shall advance rapidly in the way of prosperity, and when we withdraw from the arena it will be with the consolation of leaving to our descendants an inheritance worthy of a free people.

Then, at page 833 Mr. Harwood is reported as follows:

As to us French-Canadians and Catholics, what have we to fear from confederation? Our language, our rights and our privileges are guaranteed to us.

Our language, our rights, our privileges, are guaranteed to us. Sir John A. Macdonald said:

. . . it was assented to by the deputation from each province that the use of the French language should form one of the principles upon which confederation should be established, and that its use as at present should be guaranteed by the Imperial Act.

This may seem far fetched. But if the use of the French language is guaranteed in all these processes of law that may emanate from a federal court, whether issued on birch bark or engraved upon steel, whether written upon parchment or upon paper, let us see what it means: Sir Hector Langevin says:

It was perfectly well understood at the conference of Quebec that the French language should not only be spoken in the courts of justice, in the federal parliament, and in the legislature of Lower Canada, but that precisely as is now the case, the Votes and Proceedings of the legislature, as well as all the federal laws and those of the legislature of Lower Canada, should be printed in both languages.

He continues:

These are the principles upon which the new constitution will be based, and I feel justified in going so far as to say that it was impossible to secure more effectually this essential privilege of our nationality and at the same time our civil and religious institutions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we come to this peculiar point, Mr. Geoffrion, who was then the member for Vercheres, had raised the point that the proposed section was not explicit enough. I am just now meeting my hon. friends on the other side. Here was a member of the assembly who said: No, that is not explicit enough, do not trust to those people. He said that stronger language should be used so that in later years—

. . . we should not be told when we exclaim against that injustice (the failure fully to recognize our rights) "you should have obtained more full and complete guarantees, and you should have seen that the constitution was made more explicit and more precise on that point.

Does anyone to-day desire to say Mr. Geoffrion was right, in the light of the spirit that guided those men who brought confederation to pass? Does anyone desire to argue that because it was not stated from A to Z in the bond, we are strictly limited to the letter of the law? Does anyone desire to argue against the loyalty, sincerity and chivalry of those who prepared and executed that bond? Does anyone on the other side of the house desire to argue that the parties to the bond should have looked on one another and treated one another as sharpers, villains, cut-throats? That would be doing a fearful injustice to those men of courage, vision and fairness who loyally and with mutual respect, frankly and without reservation, executed a bond wherein they honestly believed they were writing what was to be the magna charta of Canada, and which was to do justice to all, to respect the rights, liberties and privileges of all. I submit that if it is our right to have issued in both languages writs, mandamus, habeas corpus or any processes out of federal courts, why should it not be equally our right to have the one dollar bill or the gold piece stamped or engraved in the two languages, more particularly now that the mint is under federal control? Just because that section was not made to contain all the ramifications that go with the protected rights and privileges, shall it come to pass that we are denied them? That just because that section did not contain all the usual conveyancer's phrases by which we lawyers are wont to express our thoughts, therefore all that is not included is excluded? That just because that section was not drawn to the tune of whereas and wherefore, and "right, title, interest therein and thereout, under, over, through or above" —because all that verbiage was not used, should the spirit of the law not be recognized? Mr. Speaker, if the souls and the spirits of those great departed were here in this chamber I am sure they would say that what I now express was in their minds at the time, namely that bilingual money is included in the language rights of that section, just as the sheaf of grain is in the seed that is placed in the ground.

It is perfectly true that in section 133 nothing is said about coinage. But let me read section 137 of another constitutional act, that of South Africa, another bilingual country:

Both the English and the Dutch languages shall be official languages of the union, and shall be treated on a footing of equality and possess and enjoy equal freedom, rights and privileges; all records, journals and proceedings of parliament shall be kept in both languages, and all bills, acts and notices of general public importance or interest issued by the government of the union shall be in both languages.

Sir, the statutes of South Africa are published in both languages, issued concurrently one with the other, on the left side the English, and on the right side the Dutch. What difference is there in spirit between section 137 of the South African constitution and section 133 of the British North America Act? In that act there is nothing said about publishing or printing or coining money. But, sir, it was my great privilege when I was in South Africa in 1924 to visit the royal mint there, and it was my greater privilege to be presented with specimens of the first coinage turned out by the South African mint in 1923. I now hold in my hand specimens of the coinage under section 137, wherein there is nothing said about money, but wherefrom the spirit emanates and radiates throughout South Africa and finds its expression in the national life of that country. What do I find? I have in my hand a South African gold piece which has a Latin inscription on its face. When I come to the shilling, however, I find that it bears this inscription: "South Africa" and then "Zuid Afrika." On the other side of the coin I find: "Georgius V Rex Imperator." I go right down the line of the eight coins I have here and find that each one is inscribed in both English and Dutch, though section 137, to which I referred, makes no more and no less reference to the printing of coinage in both languages than I mentioned. I spent the last pound note I had in South Africa, and I spent it with pleasure, but even the paper money was printed in the English language on one side and in the Dutch language on the other.

I put this to you, Mr. Speaker: Is South Africa in any worse position to-day because, not only in theory but in practice, in mind and heart and soul it is a bilingual country? Is South Africa in any worse position because English and Dutch documents emanating from the central authority are printed in English and in the Dutch language? Is South Africa less loyal to the crown because it is a bilingual country? I have confidence in the descendants of those who were responsible for this great confederation; I am sure all of us in this parliament are imbued with the sentiments expressed at that time, of mutual respect, esteem and the desire for cooperation. Sir, may I say to you that no better gesture along that line could be made than the unanimous adoption of this measure, which in due time would result in our currency becoming bilingual.

Hon. MAURICE DUPRE (Solicitor General) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to express myself in the English language, because my friends on this side of the house, without exception, and all those from Quebec are well aware of my attitude on this question of bilingualism. In order that there be no misunderstanding, I wish to immediately state that I am in favour of bilingual currency such as advocated by my hon. friend for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger).

A motion similar to the one now before the house was moved by yourself, Mr. Speaker, on February 25, 1907, when as now you were the member for Montmorency, and I remember the two remarkable speeches delivered in this house on that occasion by yourself and by the distinguished member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa). It matters not to me that on that unique occasion Sir Wilfrid Laurier, who was then in power with a big majority, and his party did not favour the motion. It does not matter to me whether from 1907 to 1911, and from 1921 to 1930, our Liberal friends did not display the same zeal for the cause of bilingualism that they are showing now when they are sitting on the cold benches of the opposition. I presume it was an oversight on their part; but the question for me is simply this: Is the principle of bilingual state currency, notes and bonds, a sound principle? My answer is yes.

What is the status of the French language at the present time? To answer that question I must go back to 1840. At that time, during the third and fourth years of the reign of Her Majesty Queen Victoria, there was passed an act, which is 3 and 4 Victoria, chapter 35, to reunite the provinces of lower and upper Canada. By this act the French language was prohibited, but this prohibition was lifted on August 14, 1848, by 11 and 12 Victoria, chapter 56. I should like to direct the attention of the house to that chapter. It is entitled:

An act to repeal so much of an act of the third and fourth years of her present majesty, to reunite the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and for the government of Canada, as related to the use of the English language in instruments relating to the legislative council and legislative assembly of the province of Canada.

This is how the statute reads:

Whereas by an act passed in the session of parliament held in the third and fourth years of her present majesty, intituled an act to reunite the provinces of Upper and Lower Canada, and for the government of Canada, it is amongst other things enacted, that from and after the said reunion of the said two provinces, all writs, proclamations, instruments for summoning and calling together the legislative council and legislative assembly of the province of Canada, and for proroguing and dissolving the same, and all writs of summons and elections--

I should like to direct attention to the following words:

—and all writs and public instruments whatsover relating to the said legislative council and legislative assembly, or either of them, and all returns to such writs and instruments, and all journals—

I should like to direct particular attention to the next words:

—entries and written or printed proceedings of what nature soever, of the said legislative council and legislative assembly, and of each of them respectively, and all written and printed proceedings and reports of committees of the said legislative council and legislative assembly respectively, shall be in the English language only: Provided always, that the said enactment should not be construed to prevent translated copies of any such documents being made, but no such copy should be kept among the records of the legislative council or legislative assembly, or be deemed in any case to have the force of an original record:

And whereas it is expedient to alter the law in this respect, in order that the legislature of the province of Canada, or the said legislative council and legislative assembly respectively, may have power to make such regulations herein as to them may seem advisable; be it therefore enacted by the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Lords Spiritual and temporal, and commons, in this present parliament assembled, and by the authority of the same, that from and after the passing of this act so much of the said recited act as is hereinbefore recited shall be repealed.

I apologize for this long quotation. Summarizing, may I say that in the act of union the words, "all public instruments whatsoever relating to said legislative council and legislative assembly or either of them," embrace currency and the issue of bank notes; and the words, "all printed proceedings of what nature soever," also embrace currency and the issue of bank notes. Who, for instance, after the passing of 3 and 4 Victoria, would say that bilingual currency was not prohibited? If bilingual currency was prohibited by 3 and 4 Victoria, chapter 35, then did it not become non-prohibited, permissible, permitted, legal and constitutional when 3 and 4 Victoria was repealed? Would not the old Roman law maxim find its application here—"exclusio unius affirmatio alterius"—the exclusion of the one means the affirmation of the other.

In constitutional law does not the repeal of a prohibition render the thing prohibited permissible, permitted, legal and constitutional? Therefore may I not conclude that bilingual currency, having been prohibited by 3 and 4 Victoria, chapter 35, became permissible, permitted, legal and constitutional when 3 and 4 Victoria was repealed?

Thus stood matters before 1867. Then came the British North America Act, section 133 of which reads:

Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the houses of the parliament of Canada and of the houses of the legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this act, and in or from all or any of the courts of Quebec.

Paragraph 2 reads:

The acts of the parliament of Canada and of the legislature of Quebec shall be printed and published in both those languages.

So far as I know, 11 and 12 Victoria, chapter 56, repealing 3 and 4 Victoria, chapter 35 —and both are imperial statutes—was never abrogated; therefore the argument, I humbly submit, is this: that section 133 of the British North America Act simply enacted that thereafter English or French in certain circumstances should be optional, but that there should be an obligation to print in both English and French certain records, documents, acts, proceedings and so on. But what was already permissible, permitted, legal and constitutional, outside of article 133, remained as such. Not only were not 3 and 4 Victoria, chapter 35, and 11 and 12 Victoria, chapter 56, not abrogated by the imperial parliament, but I refer the house to article 12 of the British North America Act—I will not cite the whole article—where it will be seen that all powers, authorities and functions under any act of the parliament of Great Britain or the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and so forth——shall, as far as the same continue in existence and capable of being exercised after the union in relation to the government of Canada, be vested in and exercisable by the governor general . . .

In other words, if I put the right interpretation upon article 12 of the British North America Act, the statutes 3 and 4 Victoria and 11 and 12 Victoria were never abrogated. Then was enacted the British North America Act in 1867. Our forefathers intended then to take a step forward, not backwards, and Cartier and other representatives of lower Canada would never have given their consent to any pact which would have curtailed the rights of the French language.

Since 1867 the status of the French language has been as follows, I submit: first, obligatory as regards part of the enumeration contained in article 133 and optional as regards the rest of the enumeration; secondly, permissible, permitted, legal and constitutional outside the enumeration contained in article 133. But I would go so far as to say that very likely article 133 covers the case of bilingual currency and that bilingual currency is included in the enumeration of article 133. This is a matter for legal discussion; but speaking generally I do not think that the status, rights and use of the French language should be restricted rigidly to the letter of article 133 of the British North America Act. The use of the French language should be interpreted in the spirit of article 133. It should be encouraged and should be more widespread than the definition in article 133 seems to indicate.

Sir Robert Borden on one occasion, after citing this article 133, said, speaking of the French language:

I realize that in federal affairs both these languages occupy an official status.

These words will be found in Hansard of May 10, 1916, page 3692. May I then conclude that bank notes and state currency come within the definition of federal affairs, occupy an official status and therefore should be bilingual. I would refer the house to two acts of this federal parliament; one is entitled An Act Respecting Currency, being chapter 40 of the revised statutes of Canada. Article 20 therein gives the governor in council the right to determine the dimensions and designs of any coin. If hon. members will refer to chapter 41 of the revised statutes of Canada, entitled An Act Respecting Dominion Notes, it will be seen that article 4 enacts that:

> Dominion notes shall be of such denominational values as the governor in council determines, and shall be in such form, and signed by such persons, two in number, as the minister directs.

May we not infer that the form, denomination and design are within the power of the governor in council or the minister, and therefore may be made bilingual?

This principle of bilingualism has been strikingly put into practice in our Naturalization Act, which states that an alien, in order to be eligible for naturalization, must know either the French or the English language.

By reason of our present constitution, Canada is essentially a biracial country. All Canadians are equal before the king and in the eyes of the law; all enjoy equal rights, civil and religious, and the father of confederation, Sir John A. Macdonald, has truly stated: "There is no conquered race in Canada". Speaking in the house on February 17, 1890, Sir John A. Macdonald declared:

> I have no accord with the desire expressed in certain quarters that by any mode whatever there should be an attempt made to oppress the one language or to make it inferior to the other.
> I believe that would be impossible if it were tried, and it would be foolish and wicked if it were possible. The statement that has been made so often that this is a conquered country is "à propos de rien." Whether it was conquered or ceded, we have a constitution under which all British subjects are in a position of absolute equality, having equal rights of every kind, of language, of religion, of property, of person.
> There is no paramount race in this country. There is no conquered race in this country. We are all British subjects and those who are not English are none the less British subjects on that account.

Confederation is a partnership and this is a bilingual country.

May I be permitted to add that the French speaking population of Canada has always taken a large and decisive share in our constitutional evolution. In the 1867 elections the issue was the confederation act which is to-day our magna charta. Ontario gave a slight majority of ten in favour of the project; the maritimes rejected it by a majority of fourteen, so that the English speaking population, outside Quebec, rejected confederation by a majority of four. Our province strongly supported Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir George Etienne Cartier in giving confederation a majority of twenty-five. This important stand taken by the French speaking element in 1867 made confederation possible. We chose then to become partners.

This was the third time we chose to become partners. The first time was in 1760 when the colony was inhabited by 60,000 French Canadians. The treaty of Paris and the Articles of Capitulation clearly stated that these inhabitants were extended by the British crown the privilege, if they so desired, of returning to France, their mother country. Article 26 states:

> If by the Treaty of Peace, Canada remains to His Britannic Majesty, all the French, Canadians, Acadians, merchants and other persons who choose to retire to France, shall have leave to do so from the British general, who shall procure them a passage; and nevertheless, if, from this time to that decision, any French, or Canadian merchants or other persons, shall desire to go to France, they shall likewise have leave from the British general. Both the one and the other shall take with them their families, servants and baggage.

This privilege was conceded by the word "Granted". Guided by their advisers, the parish priests, the French Canadians, Acadians, decided to stay in Canada and to become, of their own free will, British subjects. They chose Canada as their country and His Majesty George III as their king. They did so because they were granted freedom of trade, the right of ownership and, above everything, the safeguarding of their faith and their language.

A few years afterwards our forefathers had a second opportunity of changing their allegiance when the New England states rebelled against the British crown. They took up arms to defend Quebec, the citadel and walls of which encircled the last few inches of ground over which ruled the British King on the North American continent. May I say at this point that Sir Robert Borden, that most distinguished and esteemed Canadian statesman, in his work Canada and the Commonwealth, has this to say at page 67:

> Thus it is apparent that if the habitants or a considerable majority of them had joined the American forces, Quebec would have fallen and Canada would probably have been lost to Great Britain.

Sir Guy Carleton, an ex-governor general, stated that without the French Canadians it would have been utterly impossible to keep this dominion under the British crown. Therefore, for the second time the French Canadians chose to become partners. The third time, as I pointed out a moment ago, was confederation. But this partnership will survive only if the rights and privileges of the two partners are interpreted in a broadminded way.

The reasons in favour of bilingual currency are the following:

1. We have in Canada the descendants of the principal pioneer races, the English and the French. This racial duality is at the basis of our constitutional evolution.

2. The French language has been recognized by the various political regimes from 1759 to 1867 and, by the constitution, is on a footing of equality with the English language.

3. Bilingualism properly accepted and applied will bring the two races more closely together and make for peace and harmony.

Many countries in the same position as Canada have bilingual currency; some have trilingual currency. I have in my hand different envelopes containing such currency. Belgium, for instance, has bilingual money, French and Flemish; that is envelope No. 1. France practices bilingualism in Tunisia, one side of the silver coins being in French and the other in Arabian; that is envelope No. 2. The same applies in Syria; envelope No. 3; and in Lebanon, envelope No. 4. At Hongkong the currency is in English and Chinese, envelope No. 5. In South Africa the currency is bilingual, English and Dutch, envelope No. 6. In Palestine, under the mandate of Great Britain, the currency is trilingual, English, Hebrew and Turkish, envelope No. 7. In Switzerland, the currency is trilingual, all currency and bank notes being in French, German and Italian, and this trilingualism in Switzerland does not prevent peace and harmony.

In Canada we have already had several bilingual bank notes. I have before me a photograph of the bank notes of La Banque du Peuple,—the Bank of the People,—issued in 1840. They are bilingual, being printed in French on one side and in English on the other. At the present time we have bilingual bank notes like the ten dollar and twenty dollar notes of La Banque Canadienne Nationale, and the Banque Provinciale du Canada, and I do not think any member of this house on either side would refuse a bilingual ten dollar note of either of those banks. Why should not Canada, one of the leading countries of the world, be broadminded? The further from civilization the more intolerance one finds, but the nearer to civilization, the more broadmindedness, moderation, fair play and tolerance.

Mr. IRVINE: May I ask my hon. friend a question?

[Mr. Dupré.]

Mr. DUPRE: Certainly.

Mr. IRVINE: Is there any law now which prohibits the banks from printing their notes in French?

Mr. DUPRE: No. Then at Geneva, the seat of international affairs, all the ambassadors, ministers, consuls and representatives of the various countries of the world understand, and speak or read, French in addition to their mother tongue. Yet because the British Empire and the United States of America represent one-quarter of the population of the globe it was decided that at the League of Nations there should be two official languages, English and French, although for centuries French has been the language of diplomacy and, if I may say so, the international language. Here in Canada we French speaking people are not one-quarter of the population but one-third, and besides we have in favour of the use of our mother tongue history, tradition and the written as well as the unwritten law. Should not Canada be just as broadminded as Geneva; and since Canada is bilingual and has already bilingual postage stamps and bilingual excise stamps, why should she not have bilingual money? And all the more so because she is one of the largest bilingual countries in the world.

A few years ago, Mr. Speaker, there was a big movement in favour of a bonne entente between the English and the French elements in Canada, and I remember perfectly well some remarkable speeches that were delivered in that connection in the city of Quebec. One of them described very eloquently the Montcalm and Wolfe monument as a lesson in forgetfulness, appeasement, cooperation and friendship. To our English speaking friends on both sides of this house, whether from the maritime provinces, from old Quebec or Ontario, or from the western provinces or British Columbia, I make this appeal: In the years to come Canada will always need Quebec. There in stormy days you will always find stability. Our language is part of our body and soul. We are attached to it just as we are attached to our faith. Let us unite and try to settle this question of bilingualism, keeping it above party lines and prejudices. Like the Wolfe and Montcalm column, let us make bilingualism a lasting monument of cooperation, friendship and practical bonne entente between the two pioneer races of Canada.

Hon. ERNEST LAPOINTE (Quebec East): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to listen to the address of my hon. friend the Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré). The subject under debate is too big, too great, too noble a question to be used as a pretext for the use of vituperative or offensive language against one's opponents. I am pleased indeed that no voice has been raised in this house in opposition to the resolution of my hon. friend from Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger). May I add that in my humble opinion no voice could be successfully raised against the resolution.

As my hon. friend the Solicitor General has said, both languages are official in Canada. Section 133 of the British North America Act certainly stipulates that certain documents must be printed in both languages, but that does not mean that the two languages are not official for other documents. For all these other documents either language is official, and all the leaders of Canada since confederation have always recognized that. Confederation, indeed, would have been impossible had this principle not been recognized, as was stated so many times by Sir John A. Macdonald, and by those who followed him as leaders of the government of this country.

I might quote the words of Sir Robert Borden and of Sir Wilfrid Laurier on bilingualism, but here is what I want to say. It is ten o'clock, and this is the last day on which this resolution can be discussed this session. If I indulge in a speech and am followed by other members who speak at any great length we would defeat the very purpose of the resolution. I and those who support this resolution desire that it be carried, and I shall therefore confine my remarks to asking the house now to recognize in a practical way that the two languages are official in Canada, and, by carrying and putting this resolution into effect, do an act of justice which, though it may have been delayed, will be acclaimed by the whole people of this country.

Mr. C. N. DORION (Quebec-Montmorency) (Translation): I very closely followed and read the speech delivered in the house by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger), in support of his resolution.

To conform with the traditions of his party, it was from the opposition benches that he moved his resolution. Did not one of its most prominent leaders—for numerous are the leaders on the opposite side—give him a striking example, in the past? Who has forgotten the famous Lapointe motion in connection with the teaching of French in Ontario? It was in 1917. A liberal Prime Minister, of that period, was blotting out the last traces of French teaching in Manitoba. However, the Lapointe motion was not directed against that government, but rather against the Conservative government of Ontario.

A few years later a Dominion election placed the hon. member for Quebec East in power. But, how cruelly forgetful is the memory of the Liberal party patriots; although conditions complained of in 1917 were still existing, the Lapointe motion had been entirely set aside or abandoned on the hustings of Quebec. Nothing further was heard in the house about it, yet a conservative Prime Minister in Ontario was removing from the statutes of his province the famous regulation which had caused so much apprehension and alarm among Canadians of French extraction in Ontario.

I do not wish to be too severe towards certain hon. friends opposite and deny them the title given to them or rather which they appropriated to themselves in certain quarters, that of champions of the rights of Canadians of French extraction. As our people say: if they espouse the French cause when they are in the opposition, it is to a certain extent a matter of chance. They also say, in Quebec, that this resolution is now moved by the hon. member for Bellechasse, as a matter of chance, a mere coincidence.

Mr. BOULANGER (Translation): What difference does it make?

Mr. LAFLECHE (Translation): Neither did it make any on previous occasions.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Call in the members!

Mr. DORION (Translation): They harbour no thoughts of political gain or electioneering. All, in Quebec, are satisfied as to this. Moreover, the Liberals have as a party leader in Quebec a champion of French thought and ideals, Mr. Taschereau who, on the one hand, begged, not long ago, for decorations from the French government, while on the other hand, he appealed to the most bigoted prejudices in order to prevent our sons from going overseas to fight on French soil. I repeat it, our friends opposite harbour no thoughts of political gain. One recalls, moreover, with what vehemence they protested against Mr. Taschereau who, at the Ottawa Economic Conference, undertook, without consulting any one, to send a delegate, the member for Quebec South to represent the French Canadian province; and what a cry of indignation they raised throughout Quebec when they heard that Mr. Taschereau had entirely forgotten the French language in drawing up the memorandum placed at the disposal of the delegates by his government.

I trust that the glowing patriotism of our friends will not cool down and that they will soon obtain from the Quebec government the printing in both languages, of trade certificates issued by the provincial treasury.

I must say, sir, even if my motives differ, that I perfectly agree with the hon. member for Bellechasse on the principle of his resolution, and, I wish to briefly state the reasons which prompt me to support his motion and request my English speaking colleagues to do likewise.

The resolution of the hon. member for Bellechasse expresses the wish that our currency, in the future, instead of being unilingual may be bilingual; namely, that it should bear, in Canada and abroad, the stamp of the dual civilization from which has sprung the Canadian entity. Canada, by its origin, being a bilingual country formed by the union freely assented to by two great races, its currency should therefore bear both French and English inscriptions.

The arguments in support of this wish are numerous; while the objections which, heretofore, have been made against it are, to my mind, not very sound. The hon. member for Bellechasse quoted, the other day, the reply made by Mr. Fielding, formerly Finance Minister, under the Liberal regime, to a similar motion introduced by the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. LaVergne)—a veteran of the French Canadian struggles, ever consistent in his stand.

The former Minister of Finance replied that such a reform did not seem to be sought by the people as a whole. What a strange way for a statesman to solve such an issue. Is it not the duty of a statesman to safeguard the interests of the people, solve automatically their problems and meet their wishes? When it is a question of balancing the budget, levying new imposts and taxing labour and wealth, do our statesmen wait until the people send in petitions?

If the Hon. Mr. Fielding came back to the house, perhaps, he would give the same excuse on being informed what is happening at the treasury office at Quebec. No, again I say, I do not think that any sound argument can be set up against such a resolution. The excuses given are worthless as compared with the advantages of moral and material order that our country would derive from such a reform.

What better advertisement in this country and abroad could we have than Canadian bilingual currency to emphasize the harmony which is supposed to exist here, to emphasize that treaties in this country have some value; signatures, an authority; the constitution, respect and loyalty.

The League of Nations, of which our country is a component part, has recently taken up the problems of Manchuria. Previously, the question of the Tyrol had been submitted to it. On some other occasion, minority questions will crop up, which it will have to study, just like the numerous other questions it has been called upon to deal with. Canada, itself may be called upon, one day or another to sit as judge and express its views. How absurd it would seem to other nations, if, here, in this country, we do not first begin by recognizing a minority, officially and legally acknowledged to be on an equal footing with the majority, by recognizing it not only in such an such a sphere but throughout all the activities of our national life.

But, one may object, on what statute do you base your contentions? Without, for the moment, referring back to the surrender of Quebec, in 1759, may I, sir, quote section 133 of the British North America Act, which the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) and the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Chevrier) also quoted:

> Either the English or the French language may be used by any person in the debates of the houses of the parliament of Canada and of the houses of the legislature of Quebec; and both those languages shall be used in the respective records and journals of those houses; and either of those languages may be used by any person or in any pleading or process in or issuing from any court of Canada established under this act, and in or from all or any of the courts of Quebec.
> The acts of the parliament of Canada and of the legislature of Quebec shall be printed and published in both those languages.

Truly, I admit that no special mention is made about currency in the provisions of the act; but does that signify that our currency must be stamped in the English language, that it be only unilingual? Where is it mentioned, in connection with currency, that the English language enjoys more extensive rights than the French language? Why should a text be made out in one language and not in the other? The act does not provide that the official language in this country will be English, except in certain spheres and specific cases, or that the French language will enjoy equal rights. Not at all. The act stipulates that the two languages have official rights. However, it goes further. It even prescribes the use of the two languages in certain cases. Does that mean that it is prohibited to use the two languages on currency, because the act makes no such mention? I repeat it, the two languages have official rights because it is clear that, in the minds of the Fathers of Confederation, the use of the two languages constitute one of the characteristic features of Canada.

To those who may be tempted to state: If we place French and English inscriptions on our currency, who assures us that, to-morrow, another nationality will not request us to add its language to the two others? We could, without any fear, show them the act to which I have just referred and which made Sir John A. Macdonald state, in 1890:

We have now a constitution which places all British subjects on an absolute equal footing, guaranteeing them the same rights as regards language, religion, property and individual rights.

One too often forgets that it was not the conquest which made of geographical Canada a political state; but that it was rather the wish of the two contracting parties, having nothing in common from the ethnical viewpoint, uniting, nevertheless, for a definite purpose, with the understanding that the characteristics, the national customs, of each race would be faithfully adhered to. The provinces existed before the dominion and it is with their co-operation that confederation was organized. Therefore, we may conclude that, even if the provisions of the act were silent in this respect, we would have to adhere entirely to the rights and privileges acquired at the time of the pact.

In 1867, all admitted that Canadians of French extraction had safeguarded their rights to the existence, the use and continuance of their language, and that it would be impossible in the future, either by deceit or force to blot them out as a distinct nationality or prohibit the use of their language.

The proof? You will find it not only throughout our rural districts, in the marvellous development of our schools and universities, faithful guardians and champions of our language, arts, literature, and our agricultural and industrial expansion, but you will especially find it in the recognition, without dispute, of the official acts of the British government in this country, since 1759.

Mr. ST-PERE (Translation): Let us vote!

Mr. DORION (Translation): "Superiority in arms and numbers does not entitle a nation to force its language on another people," was the statement by Mr. Etienne Lamy, in the city of Quebec, in 1912. The hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa)—to whom I wish to particularly express my gratitude for the battles he has waged in the defence of the rights of our language in this country—thus expressed himself in 1915:

At all periods of the world's history, most of the conquerors recognized the right of vanquished people to the use and preservation of their language.

Is it not the acknowledgment of this principle that we find in the act of the capitulation of Quebec, of which section 2 stipulated that the inhabitants are continued in the possession of their houses, property, chattels and "privileges." Moreover, section 42 of the capitulation of Montreal stipulates that the French and Canadians will continue to be governed according to the customs prevailing in this country. What other definition can be given to the word "privileges" if it is not the use and preservation of their national language?

Later, the Quebec Act of 1774 decreed that the Canadians could continue in possession and the enjoyment of their property, goods and chattels, and of their usages and customs as well as of their other civil rights.

The constitution of 1791, although creating two provinces, upper and lower Canada, makes no changes in the Act of 1774. It is, moreover, in keeping with that spirit—the spirit of the Quebec Act—that the instructions of Lord Grenville, Secretary to the Colonies, were given to Lord Dorchester, Governor General of Canada.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): Will the hon. member allow me a question?

Mr. DORION (Translation): Yes.

Mr. SEGUIN (Translation): Is it not a fact that the hon. member would render a greater service to bilingualism by allowing a vote to be taken than by continuing his speech.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): What a lot of jokers!

Mr. DORION (Translation): It is, therefore, undeniable that under all political regimes, since the conquest, the use of the French language has been recognized and its practice observed in all fields of national activities, even as regards our currency. If it be so recognized and if it should continue to be, the principle should apply all round, without exception. Is there anything which brings out more the ethical duality of this nation, the mutual respect of one race for another, the broadmindedness of the two, than the use of the two official languages on currency?

Our country, bilingual in the eyes of the law and the constitution, must equally be so in the eyes of a foreigner. It is, I repeat it, one of the fundamental principles on which confederation rests; this principle of equality between the two languages, establishes, therefore, not only its use in this parliament or before the courts, but also in all activities of our national life.

The French element in this country comprises about 30 per cent of the entire population. Almost one-fourth of Canada's wealth is located in Quebec.

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Call in the members!

Mr. DORION (Translation): Our great river travelled over each year by hundreds of ships bearing the flags of all the nations of the world, stretches across the old French province of Quebec and notwithstanding their active part in the national life and trade with the foreigner, the Canadian of French extraction, is forced to use a unilingual currency, on which nowhere is advertised the important part it plays, the great endeavours he has made during three centuries, to safeguard the welfare, happiness and vigour of his country.

Our currency represents the amount of wealth there is in this country. But currency also represents something else, it is the outward symbol of the soul and characteristics of a people. If, according to circumstances, it has an intrinsic value, it is more particularly a symbol of the nation's wealth. But is it not for Canada a great asset to be inhabited by the descendants of the two greatest races in the world? Is it not an asset for this country to be able to draw from these two distinct nationalities the qualities which are inherent to them? Is it not an asset for a country to be able to give to the world an example of liberty, mutual respect, peace and harmony? Is it not a great asset for Canada to possess a duality of formation and character protecting her against the invasion of foreign ideas? Then why not advertise this asset abroad and even here by a bilingual currency?

Providence whose designs are unfathomable, decreed, one day, that the descendants of two great races should unite to build up a young but vigorous nation.

The past cannot be effaced or even ignored.

Nations have an heredity, a genius which is their own, a turn of mind characteristic of them; currency should therefore bring out this heredity, genius and turn of mind by displaying dual inscriptions.

In the past, the great leaders of the Conservative party recognized the rights of the French Canadian minority. They are the ones who, at all periods, have given the most perfect examples, in our political history, of their broadmindedness and conciliating spirit, because they were aware that it was necessary to the welfare of this country; they knew of no friction or cause of dissension among the races which inhabit it.

Mr. FERLAND (Translation): Is the hon member referring to Sir Robert Borden and the right hon. Mr. Meighen?

[Mr. Dorion.]

Mr. DORION (Translation): Permit me sir, to quote what Sir John A. Macdonald stated, this excerpt has often been quoted:

> Whether the country was conquered or ceded we now have a constitution by which all British subjects enjoy absolute equality and possess absolute equal rights in all matters: language, religion, property or person. There is no dominating race here; there is no vanquished race in the country. We are all British subjects and those among us that are not English are not the less British subjects.

May I add to this testimonial that of one of the best friends of our race, the right hon. Mr. Meighen:

Some hon. MEMBERS (Translation): Oh! Oh!

Mr. DORION (Translation): . . . who stated on June 4, 1926:

> Experience has proved that the traditions of our two great races cannot die, that they can very well live side by side without fusing or losing their character, and that there can be no question of the assimilation of one by the other. It is the first article of Canadian policy that the traditions of both races be respected, jealously, scrupulously, to maintain in harmony the constitutional rights of minorities, to encourage as much as possible the study of the two languages by our people and to disseminate also, with the understanding of our laws, the mutual understanding which we should have one for the other,—and this is far the most important.

I further add that of the distinguished leader of the Conservative party, the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett):

> We have a difficult country to govern. It is immense; it is half a continent inhabited by a population numbering less than 10,000,000, descendants of two great races, and having different religions. Our constitution, let us not forget, is a federal union based on a contract entered into between two races and endorsed by the parliament at Westminster. This constitution grants to minorities certain fundamental rights. Whether these minorities inhabit provinces which are mainly Catholic or Protestant, matters little. These rights were granted unreservedly.

Let the statements of these eminent men serve as examples and a guide to the Canadian people, they will feel stronger and greater, when realizing that with them, liberty, tolerance and the spirit of respect for minorities are not vain words.

Mr. CHARLES BOURGEOIS (Three Rivers-St. Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I deem it my duty, not only as a Conservative but as a Canadian of French descent, to make a few comments concerning the motion of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger), which proposes that our coin shall be stamped in the French language as well as the English, and that a similar procedure be followed in connection with government bonds and paper money.

At the outset may I be allowed to express my amazement—and no doubt that of many other hon. members who feel as I do—concerning the present attitude of the hon. member for Bellechasse. It seems very strange that while the Liberal party was in power he did not deem it proper to make the motion we now have before us. Even had he been sure that his motion would have been rejected by the Liberal majority, he should have recalled to his mind the celebrated verse of the French poet, "L'effort est bien plus beau lorsqu'il est inutile"—the endeavour is much more beautiful when it is useless.

The words used by the hon. member in presenting his motion are such that they may arouse a hostile attitude in the minds of some English speaking members. I am well enough acquainted with the sense of justice and the spirit of fairness of English speaking members to know that they would readily vote in favour of any proposition which would be in accordance with our constitution and the vested rights of French Canadians. Moreover, I know they will take into account the part which in the past French Canadians have contributed to the national life and progress of Canada. I say however that we would not be wise to lead our English speaking fellow citizens to infer either from words or deeds that by that motion the French speaking Canadians intend to defy or disapprove any of their own beliefs.

Though I have definite views on this question, for reasons which I purpose laying before the house I must say I dissent from one of the reasons set forth by the hon. member for Bellechasse in support of his motion. I refer to his observations concerning the danger of Canadians becoming Americanized. At present we are on excellent terms of friendship with our neighbours, and it is necessary that our intercourse with them should remain cordial. In my humble view we should consider the legal aspect of the matter, and ascertain whether, keeping in mind not only the letter but also the spirit of the British North America Act this motion may be adopted.

In the first place I should like to draw the attention of the house to the fact that if the text of section 133 of the British North America Act relates to the use of both the French and the English language in the federal parliament and the Quebec legislature, one should not apply the old maxim of legal interpretation: "Inclusio unius fit exclusio alterius." In fact, the British North America Act does not contain any article or enactment concerning the stamping of our coins or the printing of our paper money or our government bonds. The only reference to our currency and coinage in the act is in subsection 14 of section 91, which states that the exclusive authority of the federal parliament includes the following matters, namely, "currency and coinage." No other words are added, and there is no statement to the effect that when exercising the powers contained in this section the federal parliament should use only the English language or both the French and English languages. Therefore if our colleagues of British descent are like their predecessors, and, in a most generous way, are ready to acknowledge the large contribution made by the French Canadian element to the birth, maintenance, safeguarding and development of Canada, our common and beloved fatherland, they have now once more an opportunity to show their natural broadmindedness. In other words, to use an expression with which they are more familiar, they have an opportunity to extend to us the principle of British fair play. No law forbids them to do so.

May I add that by so doing they would be acting in accordance with the spirit of the federal covenant of 1867, and would be following the example shown by the fathers of confederation. It may not be inappropriate at this point to quote the words of Joan of Arc, who said concerning her pennant: "It was where trouble was, so it is just that it should be where honour is." The same may be said of the French Canadians. They fought shoulder to shoulder and with equal bravery in the company of their English compatriots, and acquitted themselves honourably in the struggles and battles for the security of this land. May I be permitted to recall, following the hon. Solicitor General (Mr. Dupré) that during the American invasion of 1775 French Canadians as well as English Canadians victoriously repulsed the attacks of the armies commanded by Montgomery and Benedict Arnold? It was owing to the courage and skill of the French Canadians who escorted him that Governor Carleton succeeded in leaving Montreal, which the Americans had taken, and reaching Quebec, which was then the capital of Canada. In the war of 1812 our birth-right in liberty was preserved not only by General Brock but also by Colonel de Salaberry on the celebrated battlefield of Chateauguay, where with his well disciplined French Canadian voltigeurs about three hundred strong he defeated the Hampton American contingent of thousands. It was in consequence of this that Sir Etienne Pascal Taché rightly declared in the legislature that the last gun that will be fired for British supremacy in North America will be fired by a French Canadian.

It is fitting that when speaking of Colonel de Salaberry one should recall also the meritorious services rendered to the British Empire by another French Canadian, Sir Percy Girouard, serving under Lord Kitchener in the Soudan. He has been described as a great civil servant, and was commended by Lord Kitchener himself as an officer of brilliant ability. De Salaberry fought for Canada, Girouard fought for the empire. And I may mention also that numbers of French Canadian boatmen went voluntarily to Egypt and the Soudan, forming part of the military expedition that went to the relief of Gordon of Khartoum in 1885. I am proud that most of those voyageurs renowned for their skill with the canoe came from my own constituency of Three Rivers, and from the constituency of my good friend, the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Baribeau). Lastly everyone knows of the distinguished part taken by the French Canadians fighting under the British flag in the world war, at Ypres, Vimy, and especially at Courcelette. Therefore I say that the French Canadians, not only those of the province of Quebec but those of the whole Dominion of Canada, having shed their blood for this dominion and for the British Empire, are entitled, not as a favour but as a right, to public acknowledgment of their sacrifice by the use of their language upon the currency and coinage of the country, which was discovered and developed by their forefathers, which they helped to defend, and which they are still ready and will be ready to defend to the last ditch. Not only do they pay their share of the duties and the taxes necessary to the maintenance and progress of this country, but they have contributed their full quota of the blood required for its defence against the foreign invader and in order to keep it free under the British flag. I may add that there is no more incongruity in having French words on our currency and coinage than there is in having on the royal escutcheon of England since the days of Richard the Lionhearted, the French motto, Dieu et mon droit.

Moreover, let us hope that the part taken by the French in the obtaining of our parliamentary rights, and especially in the framing of our present constitution, shall never be forgotten. Anyone acquainted with our political history, if fairminded, will acknowledge that Sir George Etienne Cartier, a thoroughbred French Canadian, was a dyed in the wool Canuck, as much as his colleague and trusted friend, Sir John A. Macdonald, the promoter of our federal system. On this point I beg to quote Sir Joseph Pope, from his work The Day of Sir John Macdonald, at page 42:

Sir George Etienne Cartier was a man who devoted his whole life to the public service of the country. He was truthful, honest and sincere and commanded the respect and confidence of all with whom he came in contact. Had it not been for Sir George Cartier, it is doubtful whether the dominion would exist to-day. He it was who faced at its inception the not unnatural French Canadian distrust of the measure. It was his magnificent courage and resistless energy which triumphed over all opposition. Confederation was not the work of any one person, Macdonald, Brown, Tupper, each assuredly played the indispensable part; but assuredly not the least important share in the accomplishment of that great undertaking is to be ascribed to George Etienne Cartier.

Again, I beg to quote, from John Boyd's book on Sir George Etienne Cartier, the following statement which will be found at page 299:

The supreme merit of George Etienne Cartier is that from the time the question was first pressed to the fore as a practical issue in Canadian politics, he strongly and persistently advocated confederation, that as Prime Minister of United Canada, he was the first to make the question an administrative one and thus to bring it before the Imperial authorities, that thereafter he consistently advocated both in and out of parliament, and that through his alliance with George Brown, the practical realization of the project was made possible. By insisting upon a federal instead of a legislative union, he not only safeguarded the rights and interests of his compatriots, but assured the success of confederation as a whole. Without Cartier, it would undoubtedly have been impossible to secure the adhesion of Quebec to the union and without Quebec, confederation would have remained a splendid dream but nothing more. When confederation was decided upon by the delegates of the various provinces, Cartier in the face of the strongest and most determined opposition, never wavered in his support, but pursued his course until the great design was accomplished. It was with pardonable pride that on the first Dominion day George Etienne Cartier emphasized the fact it was he who as Prime Minister of United Canada first made confederation an administrative project to the foot of the throne.

And on the same topic, I hope our colleague, the hon. member for Labelle (Mr. Bourassa), will allow me to quote what he said in the speech he made at a Dominion Day banquet in London, July 1, 1914:

It should not be forgotten that if Cartier's cooperation made confederation possible, it was because Cartier was able to point out to those of his race and creed that the law which made it impossible for a worthy people to live on a footing of equality with the other nationalities and races of the British Empire was past; and confederation meant not only an agreement entered into between the representatives of three or four scattered colonies of British North America but something much more, it meant something of far greater consequence, not only in Canada but throughout the world. It meant that at last on the northern continent of America the descendants of two great nations and races which had disputed the power of trade and war all over the world had found a ground of agreement, of mutual respect and equality before the law and under the prestige of the British crown. No confederation could have endured unless the basic principle was acknowledged for all time to come, that in the Dominion of Canada there was not only an English speaking community, but primarily and before all, a community of Anglo-French preserving the traditions, the noble traditions, the illuminating thoughts and aspirations of those great nations who have done so much to make the world what it is.

All these quotations show that it was Sir George Etienne Cartier who most effectively contributed to finding the remedy for the violent strife which existed between parties before 1867. He found that remedy in the formation of a larger unity. It was largely owing to his endeavours that the four provinces effected a confederation which was soon to embrace half the continent from ocean to ocean.

A true pact could describe Canada's relation to Great Britain and the world in the following words of Rudyard Kipling:

> A nation spoke to a nation
> A throne sent word to a throne:
> Daughter am I in my mother's house
> But mistress in my own!
> The doors are mine to open
> As the doors are mine to close
> And I abide by my mother's house
> Said our Lady of the Snows.

During his visit to London Cartier attended the inaugural dinner of the Royal Colonial Institute, where he was the guest of honour. Replying to the toast "The Colonial Parliaments," he said:

> I had the honour to be presented to Her Majesty, when she graciously gave me an invitation, ten or twelve years ago, to go to Windsor, and Her Majesty was kind enough to interrogate me about the French Canadians. The shortest definition which I could give—because you must always be brief to royalty—was that the French Canadians, as well as myself, were Englishmen speaking French.

If that be true, why should not their language appear on Canadian currency, coins and bonds? If Sir George Etienne Cartier and his bosom friend, Sir John A. Macdonald, were here to-day, is there any doubt as to the position they would take on that question? It seems to me that they would cast their vote in favour of bilingual money. They always stood for right and justice; let us do the same. But our right to fair treatment, our right to equality, does not rest only on the important part taken by Cartier in the framing of confederation. Who may deny the deeds of our discoverers and our missionaries?

Someone has objected that if parliament should grant to the French Canadians what is claimed by this motion, the same right might be claimed by other ethnical groups, such as the Germans, Russians and Scandinavians who have settled in our western provinces. But none of these groups are either historically or otherwise in the position of the French speaking element, the men whose ancestors discovered this country, colonized it and fought in its defence.

The French Canadian has shown his courage and capacity not only as a soldier but also as a farmer. Being firmly attached to the soil, which he has fertilized by his work and his sweat, and a faithful upholder of Christianity, the French Canadian is a strong rampart to repulse the attacks of communism and socialism. I believe it is in the interests of the English speaking people of this country to strengthen the bonds between themselves and the French speaking community for the French Canadian is a great believer in religion and in property rights. I think I can say without fear of contradiction that the best bulwark against communism and socialism is the French Canadian population, because of its religious beliefs and its racial and family traditions.

Some may find fulsome this enumeration of the merits and glories of the French Canadian race; some may think I have endowed them with qualities too numerous and too resplendent, but I hope they will forgive the perhaps excessive admiration I feel for this land, mine and my forefathers' for ten generations. A child never tires of contemplating the ever young features of his beloved mother. This Canadian soil which we now claim as our common country was discovered and settled by our forebears, the French Canadians, whose astonished eyes were the first to gaze upon its primitive beauty and who were the first to admire its mantle of soft ermine or its robe of glorious verdure. It was a French Canadian, Hebert, who traced on its generous soil the first furrow and sowed the first seeds, the origin of our first wheat crop. They were Frenchmen who with sturdy hands swung the first axe and notched the Canadian maple tree from which flowed the sap, our maple syrup, a nectar comparable to the ambrosia of the gods. The banks of our rivers and the depths of our forests echoed for the first time the songs of our canoers and coureurs des bois,

A la Claire Fontaine, Alouette, A Saint-Malo, Beau Port de Mer, En Roulant ma Boule, and so many other charming refrains brought to our shores by our forefathers. The French were the first to offer to God from this land a prayer of thanks. In all the wars in which this country has been concerned the French Canadian has fought side by side with his English Canadian comrade. With him he suffered from cold and hunger in the dismal trenches of Flanders, Artois and Picardy, for the triumph of civilization and the defeat of German oppression. Together they strove to promote peace, to develop our industries, to encourage agriculture, to foster art, literature and science. From every angle he can rightfully say of Canada, "Here is my domicile, my abode and my home." Why then, Mr. Speaker, can there not be on the door of his domicile, at the very threshhold of his home, an indication, a card, a sign attesting that he shares this domicile with his fellow citizen and comrade, the English Canadian? How can this be better expressed and broadcast, both here and in foreign lands, than by a French inscription in conjunction with an English inscription on our currency, state notes and bonds? This is all we request: A simple act of justice.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. ONESIME GAGNON (Dorchester): Mr. Speaker, I am really bewildered and amazed to realize that hon. gentlemen opposite are now using all their efforts to prevent us from expressing our views on this national issue.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. SPEAKER: With the permission of the hon. member who has the floor a question may be asked; otherwise it may not.

Mr. CHEVRIER: May I ask the hon. member how we are trying to stop him from expressing his views?

Mr. SPEAKER: I would ask hon. members on my immediate left kindly to conform to the rules of the house and maintain order.

Mr. GAGNON: For the last four weeks we have heard our Liberal friends disseminating the propaganda both in and out of this house that the French Conservative members were going to betray their principles on this important question. Now that they have accused us of being deaf they want to prevent us from letting our people know our views, though hon. gentlemen opposite have expressed their own convictions. The hon. member for Quebec East (Mr. Lapointe) said he did not want to speak for very long because he wished a vote to be taken. No members on this side of the house will prevent the taking of a vote, but this afternoon hon. gentlemen opposite voted against adjourning a debate which was taking place because they thought they might prevent us from expressing our views on that question.

I desire only about five minutes of the time of the house, Mr. Speaker, in order to say that we are all in favour of the principle underlying the motion now under consideration. Since 1907 we have had in this country bilingual money orders, postal notes, postal cards and excise and postage stamps. This act of courtesy, justice and generosity from the English speaking majority has given a great deal of satisfaction to Canadians of French descent, and I feel sure that English speaking members of the house will admit that no prejudice has ever been caused the English majority of the country in permitting revenue stamps as well as stamps of the Postmaster General's department to bear legends or inscriptions printed in the respective languages of the two great races which have founded this great dominion. The bonne entente between the two great races is becoming more and more cordial. Some people may think that it is not a matter of importance that stamps and bank notes issued by the dominion should have their inscriptions printed in both French and English. May I say however that stamps and coins may be more or less the outward expression of the traditions and aspirations of a nation. Ought they not therefore in a certain way to reflect the soul of the people? If they are printed in one language only, will foreigners understand that there are in Canada three million French Canadians, people of French origin and civilization? Will not strangers be led to misjudge the true characteristics of the Canadian people if the legislators have not seen fit to embody in stamps and coins the legends and inscriptions in the languages spoken by the two great races which live in Canada? Who can prevent the work of four centuries of French civilization from having impressed its stamp upon Canada? The French civilization with its old historical background is impressed upon Canada by its old Norman houses, its churches with their lofty spires, its spirit of hospitality and fraternity, its rich language, its folklore, its poetry and literature and the charming smiles of our women. The four million French speaking people in Canada ask you, sir, not to be ashamed of letting the world at large recognize the dual civilization which enriches the Canadian life and makes it different from that of our neighbours to the south, and for that reason they ask you not to object to the printing of French inscriptions on our coins and bank notes.

When a bilingual stamp is affixed to a letter going abroad, to South Africa, India, China or Australia, this small square piece of paper bearing only two words, one in French and one in English, tells the whole world that here in Canada, this wonderful country of ours, French and English are living together side by side, imbued with the traditions and aspirations of their respective civilizations. This small square paper bears witness to the whole world that here French and English people understand one another, that they are real partners and brothers united in the achievement of the work begun by the fathers of confederation, and when this same small square piece of paper is affixed to a letter going from one province to another it is in one sense a message of peace and goodwill and harmony between the races of this dominion. May I ask this house to perform a further act of courtesy and generosity and justice in permitting that on all our mediums of exchange, gold, silver or bank notes, inscriptions be printed in French and English?

I will be as brief as possible, Mr. Speaker. In this time of depression, the legislators of the whole world, notwithstanding unalterable devotion to the public duty, cannot find a way to give in one way the necessary bread to all the needy; but, sir, how fruitful will be their efforts if at least they succeed in contenting their souls. The happiness of a country is not achieved only by the wealth of its population, but also by the moral satisfaction that the aspirations of all races living in this great dominion have been fully satisfied. In this spirit, Mr. Speaker, and extending to my English speaking colleagues of all parties a friendly hand, I ask that in the spirit of brotherhood they vote for the motion.

Mr. F. W. TURNBULL (Regina): So far as I am concerned personally, I have every respect for the desire of the French speaking people of Canada to use their own language. It is a language which in many ways is admirable, and I would be one of the last of those in this country to suggest of any member or person in this house that he should not be permitted to use the mother tongue of his original nationality. There are, however, differences of opinion as to whether or not it is wise to press a motion of this kind at the present time. In the first place, it is a motion calculated, whether intentionally or not, to arouse in this country certain sentiments which under present conditions should not be aroused. If there ever was a time in the history of Canada when we should abandon any questions which are liable to create racial friction among the people of the dominion, that time is now, when we should be united for the economic salvation of the country.

Mr. LAVERGNE: What sentiments?

Mr. TURNBULL: I might direct the attention of my hon. friends who have supported the motion to the fact that in 1841 in the legislatures of this country the French language had no standing. In 1844 however the right to use the French language was admitted in the parliament of the united colonies of upper and lower Canada. As a matter of contract among the then existing provinces in Canada, the rights and privileges of the French language in Canada were crystallized into a contract among the provinces, which was afterwards given statutory recognition by the British North America Act. May I remind my hon. friend that this country of Canada is founded on the British North America Act and that as well as conferring privileges, if I may call them so, on the people of the French speaking race, it also confers privileges on the English speaking race. The bed-rock of the rights of minorities, whether racial or religious, is in the British North America Act and its terms, and may I remind minorities in this country that when they start to sap the foundations of that act, which is the charter of their rights and liberties, they are treading on very dangerous ground because, if the British North America Act may be changed at any time to suit certain classes of people, it may be changed at other times to suit other classes. An extension of any rights that are given to minorities under that act, except by agreement among the provinces themselves who were parties to it, leaves it open to a majority at any time to make changes in that act or to extend the rights that are given under it. In making those statements I am not taking any new ground; I am simply adopting ground that was taken by gentlemen who occupied seats in this house long years before I did.

Mr. POULIOT: Two minutes left.

Mr. TURNBULL: This is not a new question in the parliament of Canada. Various matters of this kind have been before our people at many stages of our history. Back in 1890, if hon. gentlemen will consult Hansard, they will find records of very long and acrimonious debates on the subject of the rights of the French language in the Northwest Territories which are now the provinces of the west. They will find there motions to amend the Northwest Territories Act; they will find many amendments moved with respect to those particular motions and they will also find there a debate which I hope will never be repeated in the parliament of Canada because it was very acrimonious and bitter on both sides. That debate reached a point where something had to be done. At that stage, at the instance of Sir John A. Macdonald, Sir John Thompson for the Conservatives and the Hon. Edward Blake for the Liberals got together and drafted a resolution which was satisfactory to both. That resolution received the approval of Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Wilfred Laurier, who voted for the amendment proposed, which was to the effect that this parliament of Canada declares its adherence to the terms of the British North America Act.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Tuesday, February 28, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

UNPARLIAMENTARY LANGUAGE

Mr. SPEAKER: During the debate last evening on the resolution moved by him, the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) interjected the remark "Merci pour le baiser de Judas." I am of the opinion that the remark was not directed at the hon. member for Regina (Mr. Turnbull), who was about to rise to speak, nevertheless, it was unparliamentary and should not have been made. May says:

> A member should say nothing disrespectful to the house or the chair or personally opprobrious to other members, and the use of temperate and decorous language is never more desirable than when a member is canvassing the opinions and conduct of his opponents in debate.

The use of contemptuous or insulting language at any time is improper.

I should like to quote from Cushing, ninth edition, chapter 10, paragraph 1736, the following, which seems very appropriate:

> The offences against order in debate, which are the subjects of the rules embraced in this chapter, not only imply a great want of respect in the persons by whom they are committed, towards the body of which they are members, and are therefore virtual if not actual contempts, but they are also calculated to degrade > the legislature and its members, and the existing institutions of the country, in the estimation of the people. They are never necessary, for the most radical reform, in the power of the legislature, can be effected without resorting to such means; they tend as strongly as words of heat and anger towards individual members to produce altercation and recrimination; and they should be as promptly suppressed as any offences whatever against the peace, dignity, and harmony of the legislature.

I am to-day directing that the said remark of the hon. member for Bellechasse and all references to it be removed from the report.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Second report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce.—Mr. Matthews.

AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

Mr. M. C. SENN (Haldimand) presented the first report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

WORLD ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I beg leave to lay on the table copies in English and French of the draft annotated agenda submitted by the committee of experts on the Economic and Monetary conference and to move that 700 copies in the English language and 300 copies in the French language of the draft annotated agenda of the Economic and Monetary conference laid on the table of the house this day be printed forthwith and that standing order 64 in relation thereto be suspended.

Motion agreed to.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. GORDON: I desire to lay on the table of the house certain orders in council passed pursuant to the relief legislation.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 39 to amend the Railway Act (return tickets).

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. JACOBS: Mr. Speaker, this bill is similar to one which I have introduced into the house five or six times since 1917 when I had the honour to become a member of this house. The conditions under which this bill is being presented are somewhat different from what they were in the past, and I have hopes that the higher intelligence of this house may in its comprehensive wisdom enact the bill into legislation. It is all contained in one paragraph which reads as follows:

A return ticket issued by any railway company between any two points in Canada shall be accepted by any other railway company whose line runs between the same terminals.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

CANADIAN NATIONAL–CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the first reading of Bill No. 37 (from the Senate) respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system, and for other purposes.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Explain.

Mr. MANION: Mr. Speaker, the bill will require a very brief explanation. As has been stated, it is based on the report of the royal commission on transportation, commonly known as the Duff commission. It contains three parts: Part 1, A, the appointment of three trustees instead of the seventeen directors; B, control by the trustees of the annual budget; C, the appointment of auditors; D, the making of the annual report. Part 2 provides for cooperative arrangements between the Canadian National and the Canadian Pacific, and part 3 provides for arbitration before arbitral tribunals in the event of disputes arising between the two railways regarding cooperation.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Is that a government bill?

Mr. MANION: I should think so. I am still a member of the government.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

LUMBER EXPORTS TO BRITAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. W. HANBURY (Vancouver-Burrard): I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether he can tell the house what progress is being made with the government of Great Britain in connection with the marketing of Canadian lumber in that country.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was not in his place or he would have heard what was said on a previous occasion. The treaty arrangements covered by a protocol between Great Britain and Russia have been terminated by notice and expire in the month of April next, and until such termination the British government can take no action in the premises; that is, should there be need for further consideration by reason of unfair competition, the means are not available for action until after the expiration of the six months' notice in April next. Until that time it is obvious that no action can be taken other than that taken by those who have the product to sell and endeavour to sell it. If they succeed, well and good; if they do not, they have not sold their product.

BRITISH COAL IMPORTATIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): Can the Minister of Labour give us any information as to the steps that have been taken or the progress that has been made in checking the importation of British coal into British Columbia, where it is brought out by ballast to the detriment of our local mines?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): I believe some British coal has come into the city of Vancouver, but whether it is in ballast or not I do not know. The whole question is under review by my department, and at the moment I cannot express any view because the amount of the shipments, the conditions under which they come in, and the extent to which they come into competition, fairly or unfairly, with Canadian fuels is not yet apparent.

PENSION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): May I ask the Minister of Pensions and National Health if it is proposed in the near future to bring down legislation based on the report of the committee which was recently appointed to investigate pensions administration?

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): I gave the information a few days ago, and the hon. member will find it in Hansard. However, to save him the trouble of looking it up, I might say that it is likely that legislation will be introduced.

TADOUSSAC-BAIE ST. CATHERINES

On the orders of the day:

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): May I ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce if he is aware of the fact that the ferry service between Tadoussac and Baie St. Catherines is being operated only once a day instead of twice a day as stipulated in the contract, and if there is any reason for such curtailment of the service?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): I shall look into the matter.

SALARY DEDUCTION ACT

PROPOSED CONTINUATION OF DEDUCTION OF TEN PER CENT FROM INDEMNITIES AND SALARIES

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 38, to amend the Salary Deduction Act, 1932.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Sullivan in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Act to continue in force until March 31, 1934.

Mr. RHODES: When in committee on the resolution on February 24, the hon. member for Gloucester asked a question. I replied that when we reached committee stage on the bill I should be pleased to answer. Probably at this time the hon. member would be good enough to repeat his question.

Mr. VENIOT: My question was this: If a civil servant retires in 1934 or 1935 will his pension be based on full salary, plus statutory allowances for 1932, 1933 and 1934, or will it be based on salary minus ten per cent, and minus statutory increases to which he would be entitled if this law had not been passed?

Mr. RHODES: The hon. member will recall that on the former occasion I answered part of his question. The superannuation of a man such as he has described would be based upon the authorized salary he had received at the time of his retirement. As a matter of fact I find upon inquiry that in actual practice there are very few, if any, cases where civil servants retire before reaching the maximum of their classes.

Mr. VENIOT: Supposing a civil servant should retire through illness, but has not yet reached his maximum, how would the minister handle the case?

Mr. RHODES: I have no doubt the hon. member is labouring under the misapprehension that under the law a civil servant is entitled to his statutory increase, as a matter of course, That is not the case. There must be a recommendation from the department, and approval by the Civil Service Commission. There have been cases where statutory increases have been withheld not only from individuals but from the whole service. In the year 1896 the government of the day followed that practice. It passed a regulation to the effect that there should be no statutory increases for the year.

Mr. VENIOT: I am well aware of the fact that statutory increases cannot be granted except on recommendation. But in a case where there is a recommendation, and there is nothing against the individual, that individual is entitled to a statutory increase. In the present instance however statutory increases have ceased, and of course the minister is quite correct when he states there need be no recommendation to council to do away with them. However withholding the statutory increase is an arbitrary measure through which the man's salary is very much decreased. I should like to know this: Will the statutory increases which he did not receive for these years be considered when superannuation is under consideration?

Mr. RHODES: The answer is no. The hon. member for North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps) submitted a question concerning the number of employees affected. While in committee on the resolution I did not wish to give an offhand answer, but I can tell him now that the number is 60,000.

Mr. HEAPS: Has the minister the classifications?

Mr. RHODES: I have before me the classifications submitted to the Beatty commission. They are as follows:

$1,200 or less	16,408
From $1,201 up to $2,000	22,745
From $2,001 up to $3,000	6,123
From $3,001 up to $4,000	1,575
From $4,001 up to $5,000	461
Over $5,000	215
Salary not stated	34

To that total list must be added about 13,000 persons including revenue postmasters and casual employees.

Mr. ILSLEY: The minister was to give me some information about those employees who are paid partly in cash and partly in kind.

Mr. RHODES: I do not know that I have any information to add to that which I gave the hon. member when we were in committee on the resolution. I find the answer I gave on that occasion is correct. Where an allowance is regarded as a portion of salary and is so treated for purposes of superannuation, then that allowance, whether it be in kind or in money, is subject to reduction.

Mr. ILSLEY: I wish to repeat, as earnestly as I can, that that ruling by the treasury board violates, I submit, the most elementary principles of common justice. I do not know that I can add much to what I said the other day, but I must say that this is a matter affecting hundreds, perhaps thousands, of employees in Canada. It affects those employees who are getting paid partly in cash and partly by the furnishing of a house, by rations or something else other than cash.

Mr. VENIOT: It affects every country postmaster.

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes. Some hon. members will realize how little justification there is for this ruling. One of the grounds urged in justification of the Salary Deduction Act is that during the last few years the cost of living has gone down by at least ten per cent. If we take the case of a civil servant who is being paid partly in cash and partly by furnishing living quarters, we must realize that the value of the living quarters is less than it was. It has gone down at least ten per cent. Yet by the action of the treasury board in making a deduction of ten per cent of the value of the living quarters from the part paid in cash, the government is keeping the charge for the quarters up to the amount it was before the reduction.

Let me put the case in a way which will be understandable by every hon. member. Let us consider the car allowances to ministers. The amount received by ministers for sessional indemnities and as ministerial salaries totals $14,000 each. They receive a car allowance of $2,000. As I understand the circumstances, the salary deduction legislation makes a deduction in both instances. The minister will correct me if I am wrong.

Mr. RHODES: That is right.

Mr. ILSLEY: Instead of $2,000 for car allowance, under the salary deduction legislation ministers receive only $1,800, and everyone knows that is enough if $2,000 was enough, because it is the common experience of every member of this house that the charges for taxicabs and the like have gone down at least that much during the last two or three years. Now suppose that a change were made in the system, and the government, instead of paying a car allowance to the ministers, supplied them with cars, does anyone pretend that the deduction from the $14,000 should be $1,600? The deduction from the $14,000 should be $1,400. That would be the only just ten per cent deduction that could be made. The other $200 has already come off. The service that is supplied is worth $200 less than the service the government would have been supplying had they been supplying that service two or three years ago. The deduction has already been suffered on the part of the salary that is supplied in kind. Take for example a lighthouse keeper who gets paid $200 in cash and is supplied with quarters said to be worth $200. His deduction should be $20, it should not be $40, because the value of his quarters, on the very basis upon the act itself, has gone down $20. It is an absolute injustice to take 20 per cent from his salary.

Take the case of certain employees who, I understand, get paid no money at all, but get the whole of their remuneration in kind; do they owe the government something now? Certainly not. Yet that is the result of the ruling applied by the treasury board to this particular class of officials. Say a man gets no remuneration from the government except, for instance, the use of a house, which is supposed to be worth for superannuation purposes $1,000 a year. Under the Salary Deduction Act, according to the principle applied by the treasury board, he must pay back $100 a year, because he is being cut down by ten per cent. But anyone who thinks about it will see that he is being cut down ten per cent anyway by the change in conditions; his house is now worth only $900 a year. I submit that the minister should not answer this by saying: Well, that is the regulation of the treasury board, and let it go at that. The regulation of the treasury board should be changed, it is manifestly a violation of the ordinary principles of justice to cut down these people by 20 or 25 per cent or more when the Salary Deduction Act only provides for a reduction of ten per cent.

Mr. RHODES: Mr. Chairman, the instance given by the hon. member for Hants-Kings (Mr. Ilsley) in respect of a man who receives as his pay the right to occupy a house is purely imaginary.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am told not. I have made inquiry and found that some civil servants receive their total remuneration in kind.

Mr. RHODES: I have not had the point before, but I think it is imaginary. I would be glad to have an instance, and inquire into it. Let me say that I have not justified, or attempted to justify, the method of the application of the Salary Deduction Act upon the mere ipse dixit of the treasury board. As a matter of fact, unless the question were submitted to me I do not recall that I have even referred to the treasury board. What I have said is that the method has been to apply the deduction in each of these cases where the compensation received in kind is treated as a portion of the salary, and is so treated by the desire of the civil servant himself for the purpose of superannuation, because it has the effect of increasing the amount he would receive for superannuation. If that principle is applied in one case it is only fair that it should be applied in the other.

Let me cite an instance given to me in a brief memorandum on this very point by the official of the department who is charged with the conduct of these cases, and who would be with me to-day but for the fact that he was suddenly stricken with illness this morning and is therefore unable to be here. He says:

A department has two employees, each classified at a salary of $150 per month, plus an allowance for house, fuel, light and rations of $50 per month.

Making $200 in all.

Only one house is available, and this is occupied by one employee, who is paid in cash $150 per month. The other employee is paid in cash at the rate of $200 per month. Both contribute to the superannuation fund on the larger amount. It would be quite unfair, the real compensation being the same, to apply the terms of the Salary Deduction Act to $150 in one case and $200 in the other.

I think that puts the case very succinctly. We are merely applying in this case the same principle as is applied to the same civil servant when we are considering his salary for the the purpose of superannuation.

Mr. VENIOT: Take it the other way; how is it where there is no superannuation?

Mr. RHODES: The principle is the same. It has been ruled and it has been the custom that the extra remuneration, in whatever form it may come, has been deemed a portion of the salary. There are many cases and classes of cases where allowances and payments are not subject to the deduction because they are not deemed to be a portion of the salary.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: When the resolution preceding this bill was before the house the hon. member for South Battleford (Mr. Vallance) brought to the attention of the minister the case of the commission postmasters, that is those who derive their remuneration by a commission on the amount of business done. I think he pointed out that apparently at least some injustice has been done to that class of post office official. I have had complaints of the same nature. I have looked into the matter, and in my opinion those complaints are amply justified. The minister stated at the time that he would look into it; I trust he will. The position is this. Instead of receiving a set salary the postmasters in these offices receive a certain commission, varying in percentage, upon the amount of business of various kinds done through the office. Under the terms of the Salary Deduction Act the commission will be reduced by approximately ten per cent. But the fact is apparently overlooked that the amount of business done is greatly reduced as compared with former years, so that as a matter of fact, and in comparison with the remuneration they received two or three years ago, and in comparison with the salaries still paid to salaried postmasters, these officials are getting a reduction of anywhere from twenty to twenty-two or twenty-three per cent. This is somewhat involved of course, because they have rental allowances and various commissions. But as far as I can ascertain, and I have examined it as carefully as an outsider very well can, both through the department, and the complaints sent me by the officers themselves, the net result undoubtedly is, as stated by the hon. member for South Battleford, that they are getting a reduction, as compared with their former remuneration, of at least twenty to twenty-two per cent instead of the ten per cent contemplated by the act. I hope the minister will fulfil his promise and examine into that situation very carefully, because it affects a great many men who are performing very onerous duties, doing them very faithfully, and for what is now a very inadequate remuneration.

Mr. RHODES: I may say to my hon. friend from Red Deer (Mr. Speakman) that the matter in question has been very carefully considered, and it is difficult to see how one could avoid applying the general principle which I mentioned a moment ago in the case of a revenue postmaster. Now coming to the actual facts, it is true that in common with all who are doing business, the amount of business done by the individual has been lessened because of existing conditions. But there are certain compensating factors which also must be borne in mind. In the first place there is the circumstance that the cost of doing business is lessened owing to the reduced cost of living. There is the contributing factor that the cost of postage has increased and that, to a certain extent, the volume of business has been increased thereby. There is the further fact, which is very important in connection with many post offices, that the postmaster is permitted to sell postage stamps not only for use upon letters but for use upon cheques as well, which also tends to give him a very material return, since he receives a very substantial percentage upon the first thousand dollars worth of stamps sold. So taking the balance, having regard to all those circumstances and assuming that the principle I mentioned a moment ago is sound, its application should have the effect in the case of the postmasters in question. No doubt in the cases of many of these post offices it is to be regretted that the compensation which is so meagre should be still further whittled down, but it would be difficult to have a law of general application which would not perhaps result in hardship in individual cases. Taking it by and large, however, I think the general soundness of the principle is apparent.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I will admit the various forms of compensation mentioned by the minister; I will admit the truth of the other points he mentioned, but it is also true that the salaried postmasters have been reduced ten per cent as compared with their former incomes while commission postmasters have had an average actual and effective reduction of a little over twenty per cent. Every argument as to the lower cost of living and the lower cost of doing business which applies to the commission man applies to the salaried man also. It was estimated that the ten per cent reduction was fair in view of the lower cost of living and of doing business, so if that is a sound principle it must be admitted that a reduction of twenty per cent or twenty-two per cent is greater than is fair, and that is the net result in spite of the facts to which the minister referred.

Mr. CHEVRIER: I will detain the committee for only a few moments. I am absolutely opposed to the second reading of this bill for the reasons I mentioned last year, and which may be found in Hansard of April 4, 1932. I am absolutely opposed to the second reading of the bill, and experience has shown that my arguments last year were sound.

There is one further fact which I should like to place before the committee; it is this: By lowering salaries the government has affected one of the most essential factors in the reestablishment of economic conditions, that is, the purchasing power of the country. I find that in answer to a question put to him the Minister of Finance is reported at page 1897 of Hansard as having said that the saving thereby last year amounted to $8,300,000. In other words, from the purchasing power of the salaried employees of the government the government has put aside the sum of $8,300,000 which, instead of being used for productive purposes, has been turned into the sink hole. It was not used to pay off a part of the national debt but was used for some non-productive purpose. I understand that in banking and so on a dollar in trade is usually worth from $10 to $17 in returns. To suit the minister let us put it at a conservative estimate and say that a dollar in trade is actually worth $10 in returns. This would mean that the earning power of this country was reduced last year by $83,000,000. It would mean that in this city alone, which contributed $2,250,000 of the $8,300,000, there would be anywhere from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 less in trade. At this time everyone is trying to increase the purchasing power of the country, and everyone is trying to get at the root of our economic and financial difficulties, I do not think that we should take this step which will only increase our difficulties.

I do not suppose that anything I may add will affect the passage of this bill, but I should like to point out once more that this is a most unfair and unjust piece of legislation, and that some grading should have been done. I believe those earning less than $1,200 should not have been touched at all. I do not say that simply because of the ten thousand or twelve thousand people in Ottawa who are immediately affected; I say it because of the effect it has had and will have on the whole community. I believe this legislation has been a most pernicious example to corporations and business houses throughout the country, who have followed the lead of the government and cut wages. They have not turned over to the government the money they have saved by reducing wages; instead, they have simply taken that money in order to pay dividends to stockholders and shareholders. I do think it is most unpolitic—and I use the word in its proper sense—and a most arbitrary measure, and for these reasons I must oppose it.

Mr. RHODES: I should like to observe to my hon. friend from Ottawa that he has overlooked one simple fact. It is that the $8,300,000 which we saved last year would have had to be made up by taxes levied upon the people of the country. If there is any merit in his contention what he is saying now must mean that if we want to bring about prosperity we must tax the people. In other words, my hon. friend is advocating that we should tax ourselves into prosperity.

Mr. CHEVRIER: Then may I ask if the members of the civil service will be exempted to the extent of ten per cent in the taxes they must pay?

Mr. POULIOT: The senior member for Ottawa seldom forgets anything but this time he has been kind enough to leave one point for me. I am very glad to see the Minister of National Revenue here with his colleague the Minister of Finance. If I remember rightly the Minister of National Revenue told us some time ago that the decrease in the duty on spirits and cigarettes would amount to $8,000,000 or approximately that sum, while on the other hand the cut in salaries, we are told, will amount to about the same figure. So that civil servants in common with the rest of us have to suffer a reduction in order to give greater opportunity to other people to enjoy themselves as a result of the reduction in the prices of cigarettes and liquor. Am I right in my contention?

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend, with his fertile and ingenious mind, is always bringing up new and interesting aspects of the subject. In regard to the statement of the Minister of National Revenue, he had apparently in his mind the circumstance that the treasury would lose $8,000,000 as a result of the reduction in the duty on spirits. That was not the interpretation which could properly be placed on the remarks of my colleague. As my hon. friend knows, there is a law of diminishing returns, and he will recall that the late Mr. Fielding, when Minister of Finance,—I mention this because it is a matter of record—imposed a special heavy duty on cigarettes. He was warned at the time he imposed that duty that he would receive less revenue under the increased duty than under the duty as it had stood, and he found it so to such an extent that he had to change his tax during the actual session of parliament in which he proposed it. I may be wrong in this detail, but the fact is that he ultimately had to reduce the tax because he was receiving less revenue. We believe that, having regard to the encouragement which is given to smuggling, as well as other breaches of the law which occur when the excise impost on spirits is too heavy, we shall receive under the lesser impost, if not as large then substantially as large a return to the treasury ultimately because to the extent that you reduce taxation to that extent you limit the temptation to breaches of the law. When my hon. friend mentioned the figure he did, he had in mind that, assuming the receipts from liquor were $40,000,000, on the basis of a reduction of one-fifth it would mean $8,000,000. That would be the mathematical computation, but it by no means follows that over a period of time the actual loss to the treasury would be anything like that amount.

[Mr. Chevrier.]

Mr. POULIOT: But the amount is the same in each case.

Mr. RHODES: Quite so; $8,000,000 is $8,000,000.

Mr. POULIOT: But there is no relation between the two, if my understanding is correct.

Section 3 agreed to.

Bill reported, read the third time and passed.

INCOME WAR TAX ACT AMENDMENT

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved the second reading of Bill No. 20, to amend the Income War Tax Act (special tax).

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time, and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Bury in the chair.

On section 1—Special tax continued for one year.

Mr. COOTE: Can the minister give the committee an idea of the approximate amount collected under the tax last year?

Mr. RHODES: I am extremely sorry, but I have not the computation before me. I can get it of course.

Mr. COOTE: I suggest to the minister that before he brings down his budget he should seriously consider increasing the revenue of the country by a change in the Income War Tax Act so as to place a higher tax on the higher incomes in Canada. He might take as a model the bill introduced by his predecessor, the present Prime Minister, two years ago. That bill I believe was based on the principle of assessing income tax in relation to the income earned; that is to say, it was one per cent on the first thousand, two per cent on the second thousand, and so on, the rate being increased one per cent with each increase of one thousand in income, until it reached twenty-five per cent on the twenty-fifth thousand. During this emergency, which is the reason for the present bill, we might very well consider adopting that same principle but carrying it still further until we reach a levy of ninety-nine per cent on the ninety-ninth thousand. That would greatly increase the revenue of the country and I have no doubt the men in receipt of incomes of that amount would be glad to contribute more liberally than they are now doing, just as members of the Canadian Civil Service have been glad to contribute to the revenues. I trust the minister will take this into consideration before he brings down the budget. At this time, when it is so necessary to increase revenues, I suggest that this is the best possible way of securing an increase and I urge the minister to take the suggestion into consideration before he brings down the budget.

Mr. RHODES: I assure the hon. member for Macleod and the committee as well that I shall be happy to explore every possible avenue which might afford an increased return to the treasury. I would deem it a favour if any hon. member would suggest any method which has not already been put forward either in the house or among the hundreds I am receiving every day by post. Not only will the suggestion he has made receive careful consideration, but I shall be glad to consider diverse and sundry others which may come to my attention.

Mr. POULIOT: May I offer my humble contribution to the debate on this bill? First of all, may I be permitted to draw a distinction between judges who work and those who do not, those who now enjoy a rest after a few years of service on the bench? For instance, in my province I know of two judges who sat on the bench of the Supreme court and who did very well while they were fulfilling their duties, but who are now superannuated. Will the minister be kind enough to tell us whether this legislation applies to judges who are on superannuation?

Mr. RHODES: No; this would apply only to judges who are in receipt of salaries. Those who are in receipt of pensions are subject only to the ordinary income tax.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister for his explanation and I am delighted to see that we have the same views in that respect. I am glad he has consulted his colleagues, because we all share the same views in that regard; that is, we are agreed as to the fact that those who have to work pay and those who do not work any more and who are resting on their laurels, do not pay anything. Take, for instance, Mr. Justice Mignault, for whom I have the greatest regard and who did very well on the bench. He is now counsel in a big law firm in Montreal. I do not know how much he receives, but he must get a decent fee for that and he probably receives it on account of the fact that for a certain number of years he sat on the bench of the Supreme Court of Canada. Judge Malouin is not now connected with any firm in Quebec, but he is a former judge of the Supreme Court of Canada and he receives his pension untouched. Is this fair? The judges of the Supreme court here have a great deal of work to do, so much for instance, that I may mention that one judge who was appointed to a board, had to leave it because his duties on the bench were so onerous that they did not allow him to do any other work. The work of a judge is very hard and the salary is modest if we compare it with those received by judges in foreign countries. The Minister of Finance, who is one of the brightest and most excellent lawyers in this country, knows very well judges in England are highly paid; they are paid as much as £10,000, while in Canada they are not paid so much. But the discrimination lies in the fact that judges who have to work have to pay to the state more from their salaries than is paid by those who do not now work as judges. It would be only fair that when the minister takes the budget into consideration again, he should at least equalize matters and if a preference is to be given, it should be to the judges who work rather than to those who are no longer on the bench and so are in a position to earn money by other means.

Mr. RHODES: I think the same principle ought to apply in the case of pensions to judges as in the case of all other pensions. It would be very unjust to discriminate between a pension to a judge and the numerous other classes of pensions we have. The principle may be sound or it may not be, but no matter which it is, if it is to be applied it should be done generally. It would be very invidious and unjust to attempt to single out for special consideration of this character judges who are on pension from all other pensioners in Canada.

In the case of the individual whom my hon. friend mentioned and who is in receipt of a pension as a retired judge, but who augments his salary by additional earnings from acting as counsel for some firm—

Mr. POULIOT: The minister knows I did not criticize the gentleman at all.

Mr. RHODES: I beg my hon. friend's pardon; I thought he was pointing out there was an injustice there.

Mr. POULIOT: No; if the minister permits me, I am not criticizing the former judge on account of the fact that he has now taken up legal practice. What seems unfair to me is that a judge who is on the bench and who has no other source of income has to pay to the state while another judge who is superannuated, has nothing to pay from his superannuation allowance.

Mr. RHODES: I do not think my hon. friend and I misunderstand each other, I was going to point out that in the case he mentioned, to the extent that that individual had his salary augmented by additional earnings, to that extent he would move up in the bracket of income taxation and pay to the treasury an increasingly larger amount year by year. That would tend to indicate there is not that injustice which my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. POULIOT: Naturally, if he earns more, he would have to pay more.

Mr. RHODES: My hon. friend will recall this: in the case of pensioners who have no outside earnings and who have only their pensions to subsist on, their pensions of course are less than they formerly received by way of salary. I do not know that I need elaborate on that point, but that is why the distinction is made between salary in one case and pension in the other.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Do they pay income tax on the pensions they receive?

Mr. RHODES: Yes.

Section agreed to.

On section 2—Taxpayer may elect to be subject to Salary Deduction Act.

Mr. POULIOT: When the act with regard to superannuation at the age of seventy-five of judges of the Supreme court was passed, it was understood that judges who were then on the bench and who would retire at seventy-five would have the same salary as they had before. So a gentleman who does not sit on the bench any more and who receives the same amount of money as do his former colleagues who are still sitting, nevertheless pays nothing under this particular legislation. I shall not labour the point further, but I take this opportunity to submit this matter to the minister as it is serious. I say again I have the highest regard, without exception, for anyone who has sat on the bench of the Supreme court. My point is merely that all discrimination should be removed.

Section agreed to.

On the title.

Mr. COOTE: In regard to the proposal I made to the minister a few minutes ago, I take this opportunity of saying that I should not like anyone to think that I was suggesting that we take ninety-nine per cent of any man's income. I want to point out that the ninety-nine per cent would apply simply on the ninety-ninth thousand of his income. Under my proposal any man assessed for an income of the amount I suggested would still have an income left to him, after he had paid his tax, of at least $50,000 or thereabouts.

SUPPLY

ALLEGED MALADMINISTRATION IN DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

Hon. E. N. RHODES (Minister of Finance) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. A. W. NEILL (Comox-Alberni): I shall not detain the house more than ten or fifteen minutes at the outside, Mr. Speaker. I want to deal with a matter with which the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) dealt the other night when he was speaking in connection with the contract for the bridges on the trail between Pachena and Bamfield. He spoke at a time, as we all know, when it was impossible for me to make any reply, and I think the minister took full advantage of that fact. His remarks got considerable publicity in the press, and I hope that my reply will get the same degree of publicity.

The minister quoted figures which would suggest that I had very much exaggerated the profits which were made out of this contract, but I would point out that I was careful to qualify my remarks in that regard. I said:

> The best information I have—and I shall not be too definite on this point, but I believe it to be correct—

Then I went on to quote what I understood to be the wages paid.

However, I will check up on my information. I got mine as the minister got his, second-hand. I believed it to be correct, and I still believe it to be correct, and I shall check up on it before I shall admit that my statements were wrong. There are two reasons that animate me in taking that stand. One is that if the figures quoted by the minister had been taken from his departmental returns, from the office pay sheets, for example, I, of course, would have had to admit their correctness. But they were not. They were from statements furnished to him by the contractor in question, who, of course, was highly interested in making the best case he could.

The other reason why I hesitate to accept the figures which the minister gave is that there are considerable discrepancies in the minister's statement itself. For instance, he gave certain dates when the work began and ended, but those dates do not agree with the figures suplied to me by the department. Then the total of wages cited by the minister does not agree with the figures given by him as having been the number of days worked.

Then there was this statement, that the material for these bridges, small wooden bridges, cost $189.72, and that the labour cost $1,000. That is to say, from 84 to 85 per cent of the total cost went for labour. That is too much. Anybody with just the ordinary knowledge of that kind of work knows that the ratio for labour as compared with material on a work of that kind runs somewhere between 33 and 50 per cent, and when it runs to 85 per cent it certainly excites our attention, if not our suspicion.

I should like also to quote what the minister said about the engineer. He said:

> The works had been estimated by one official of my department to cost $1,300, and they were estimated by Colonel Wilby himself, who is an engineer, to cost $1,220.
> Mr. Neill: Was he on the ground?
> Mr. Duranleau: That is the information I received.

I do not think that the minister on consideration would support that statement. I think perhaps he spoke a little too quickly. He says that he had an estimate made by an official. Yes, and that official, as I admitted when I was first speaking, was a thoroughly estimable and competent man in his own line of work, which has nothing whatever to do with engineering work on bridges. The minister corroborates that and says, "one official of my department" made an estimate. Then he says that Colonel Wilby, who is the engineer in charge, the agent of the Department of Marine in Victoria, made an estimate. Does the minister suggest that it was necessary to have two estimates, and that they had two? That does not agree. If the engineer was there, there was no need to have this other official make an estimate. If Colonel Wilby made an estimate, it was on paper in his office at Victoria. Colonel Wilby I doubt not has seen these bridges at some time in his career, but my statement was that he had not within a reasonably recent time gone over the trail and inspected these bridges in such a way as to be able to form an estimate of what was required. If he had done so, they would not have sent this other man, who had no knowledge of the subject, to make an estimate of that kind. However, if the minister says that Colonel Wilby did, within a few weeks before the contract was let, go over the trail and make that estimate, I will accept his statement, but I shall be very much surprised. I do not think the language used by the minister as reported in Hansard is really what he intended to say.

Then we find another extraordinary statement, not as extraordinary as made by the minister, but extraordinary in the sense that such a statement should be furnished to him. The minister says that the contractor furnished material to the extent of $42. Well, I have the contract here, such as it is, drawn up by the contractor himself. It is just in the form of a bid, and he certainly specifies very distinctly that all of the material has to be supplied by the government. Are we really to believe that this contractor out of the fulness and the richness of his heart gave the government $42 worth of material on a contract which called for him to have the whole material delivered on the ground free by the government? That does not seem to make sense, and it certainly does not make sense to anyone who knows the contractor and his reputation.

I also find that there was a very liberal sum put in for the use of a launch, which I think would stand investigation.

I find another point, and I am only taking for my text the statement furnished by the minister which he got from Victoria. We find that the contractor paid wages of five and six dollars a day and board. Why, the man is a blooming philanthropist. He is an Andrew Carnegie; he is going around giving wages equal to $7 a day or $210 a month. That is not the reputation he possesses in his locality. His local reputation is that of a selfish job grabber. I shall check up these matters, and if I find my information is not correct I shall so inform the minister. However when I find these discrepancies in the statement I am bound to say, before going any farther, I think it is a subject for investigation.

But the minister failed to explain the other matters with which I dealt. I did not make one charge; I made five, and here they are: I said there was no inspection beforehand by a competent engineer; I said there were no specifications drawn up; I said there were no competitive bids called for; I said there was only one bid asked for, obtained and accepted, that the man who got the contract already had three jobs, and that in these days of unemployment he did not need this one very badly, and I said that the profit made had been excessive. The minister attempted to deal with the last point, but did not deal with any of the others. I hope when we go into committee he will do so.

But before going further into the matter I wish to apologize for the error I made as it is recorded at page 2092 of Hansard. I used this language: "I have been writing to the minister since October." I should have said, "I have been writing to the minister's department since October." The minister made the most of that statement.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Did you not receive a reply to each letter you sent? Did you not have a reply to all your letters?

Mr. NEILL: No, I did not receive a reply from the minister at all.

Mr. DURANLEAU: But from the department?

Mr. NEILL: Yes.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Your letters were answered by Mr. Hawken?

Mr. NEILL: Yes.

Mr. DURANLEAU: And you received a reply from him in connection with each letter, furnishing all details asked for?

Mr. NEILL: I received a reply to every letter I addressed to an officer of the department. I should have said I had been writing to the minister's department, not the minister. The minister made a great point of that, and I thought used it to cover up some other points he was not very sure about. I have no fault to find with that; he who liveth by the sword must expect occasionally to perish by it, and that was his opportunity. And so, with bowed head and averted countenance I apologize to the minister for the grievous error. But we all sin occasionally; to err is human, to forgive is divine. In mitigation of my grievous offence may I make these observations: I was interrupted four times, one after the other, during the course of my remarks—three times by the minister and once by another minister. Each interruption was strictly out of order, because my permission was not asked. Having been interrupted so much and being of a nervous disposition perhaps I became a little rattled on the fourth occasion. I replied rather hurriedly and left out a word I should have put in.

Then, again, I would plead in due humility, Mr. Speaker, another circumstance in mitigation of my offence. It is this: As we all know, we have the privilege of revising our speeches, the privilege of checking over the typewritten record before it is printed. We are allowed to put in a word or two, if by so doing we amplify or make the meaning clearer. As we all do, I checked over my remarks and observed the error I had made. I saw the possibility of attack in consequence of the error, and it would have been a very simple process and no one would have objected if I had inserted the word necessary to make my meaning correct. But I did not do that. I think that should be remembered in my favour when condemnation is being dealt out.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Forgiven.

Mr. NEILL: I shall not forget it, not while water runs and grass grows. Now, sir, having made this amende honorable, as the poet says, having bowed my haughty head and tamed my heart of fire, and having made this humble apology for the grievous error which, after all, was a very trivial slip of the tongue, I should like to ask the minister something: Has he any explanation to make or has he any apology to offer either to me or to the house the rules of which have been so grossly trampled in this connection. On the occasion to which I refer the minister spoke, as usual, from his seat. He spoke in clear tones, and could easily be heard. The reporter present was not more than ten feet from the minister. The reporter put his record on file in the usual way. But a whole paragraph of what appeared on the record is missing from the printed record of Hansard. Not a word or two but a whole sentence is missing—thirty-one words—thirty-one words. It was not a duplication which might reasonably have been cut out—nothing of that kind, but was a new statement containing a rather damaging admission and one which, to some extent, went to substantiate some of the charges I had made. I want to ask this question: At whose instigation and at whose request or for whose benefit was that deletion made or why did that deletion take place? Perhaps the minister will tell us when he rises to his feet. I left out one word; I did not put it in. The minister said perhaps more than he intended —thirty-one words more—and they were cut out.

Mr. BENNETT: Since the question of order is raised, may I raise one? When the house was moved into supply on the last occasion the hon. member spoke concerning this subject, and on that occasion he made statements such as he is making now.

Mr. NEILL: No.

Mr. BENNETT: On that occasion the debate closed on the subject when the Speaker left the chair and the chairman took his place. Secondly, the hon. member is transgressing the rules by twice discussing the same subject in the same session.

Mr. NEILL: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. BENNETT: And, the opportunity afforded in supply will be the third. I have mentioned at least two rules of the house, at any rate, which at this time are being transgressed.

Mr. NEILL: On the point of order, it seems to me the Prime Minister has raised only one point of order, because he states I am repeating an argument I used previously. I have not repeated anything I have used before. This is all entirely new. I am referring to a matter of a deletion from the record of the house, and on the last occasion I did not speak in that connection. I could not have, because the incident to which I now refer occurred since that time.

Mr. BENNETT: It is a question of privilege.

Mr. NEILL: And, speaking apart from the point of order, I might as well get what I have to say off my chest now as in committee, but in that connection, I am in the hands of the house. I state, however, the matter to which I now refer has not been decided. The question on the former occasion was: Shall we go into committee? The minister being allowed to make a definite statement, in all fairness I ought to be allowed to reply.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Go on.

Mr. BENNETT: The only reason I raised the question was that I happened to observe the hon. member's statement that the minister should offer an apology for a breach of the rules of the house.

Mr. NEILL: That is certainly something new.

Mr. BENNETT: I agree that is new.

Mr. NEILL: I hope it will never occur again. I should like to ask, however, what rule the Prime Minister is quoting.

Mr. BENNETT: The rule which says—

Mr. NEILL: Which one?

Mr. BENNETT: I do not carry the numbers in my head; I am not acccustomed to doing that. But the rule to which I referred states that a member cannot discuss the same matter twice in the same session. When, on the motion to go into supply, the matter was discussed, the discussion ended when the Speaker left the chair and the chairman took the chair. That is the rule to which I referred. I state, further, that the long explanation to which we have listened is only a repetition in other terms of that which has already taken place.

Mr. NEILL: Am I not discussing something new?

Mr. BENNETT: No—not upon that phase of the matter.

Mr. NEILL: I am discussing the rules of the house at the present time, because I claim they have been broken by a deletion of something from Hansard.

Mr. BENNETT: That is a question of privilege of the house.

Mr. NEILL: I shall call it a matter of privilege, then; I shall raise a question of privilege.

Mr. SPEAKER: I understand the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Neill) on the former motion that the Speaker do leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply brought up and discussed the matter of certain public works in his constituency. It was discussed then by him and by the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau), I think, and disposed of when the Speaker left the chair, and it would be a violation of the rules and customs of this house to discuss the matter again, which I understand the hon. member is now attempting to do.

Mr. NEILL: Which rule, sir?

Mr. BENNETT: The rules and practices of debate in this parliament.

Mr. SPEAKER: The rules and standing orders. It is the practice and custom of this house and of the British house not to discuss again the same question during the same session. The hon. member, I understand, has undertaken specifically to discuss certain bridges in his constituency.

Mr. NEILL: Not a bridge, sir, a breach.

Mr. SPEAKER: If the hon. member will contain himself for a moment. When he is attempting to discuss these public works he is out of order, and I ask him to desist.

Mr. NEILL: Will I be allowed to rise to a question of privilege to discuss this question?

Mr. BENNETT: What is the question of privilege?

Mr. NEILL: I will have to explain it of course.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Speaker, there is no reason why any hon. member should impose upon this house. The hon. gentleman has a habit of doing certain things, and it passes for wit. If he desires to discuss a question of privilege let him state what the question of privilege is. That can be done very shortly.

Mr. NEILL: I will if the honourable house will undertake not to interrupt me.

The question of privilege is that on February 14, in a debate in this house a certain statement was made of pregnant importance to the matter under discussion, and that thirty-one words of it, in the language of the Minister of Marine were deleted, did not appear in Hansard. That is a substantial question, I would like to prove it for one thing, I would like to read the words and to show that they were pregnant to the subject. Am I in order in doing that? I was going to say, sir—

Mr. BENNETT: That is the question of privilege now. That is the end of it.

Mr. NEILL: —that had the deletion only been a mere slip that the minister had made I would not have worried, but it goes far to establish one of the claims that I was making at the moment. I will quote the omitted words:

> Comparative prices were not obtained and in this regard I have to advise that Mr. Graham asked that if this work were put in hand that local men should be employed.

Now who is this Mr. Graham who was consulted and gives advice, but whose name, it appears, it is undesirable to have appear in Hansard?

Mr. BENNETT: If the rules of the house are to be observed at all we might as well face this matter now. The hon. member is merely defying this house and the chair. He is talking now about who Mr. Graham is. He is interjecting observations of that character. The question of privilege has been stated, he has a right to amplify what he has said to make it clear that there has been a deletion from the record of what he deems to be important words. That is a question of fact that your predecessor, sir, on a certain occasion said would make necessary an inquiry to ascertain and report to the house; there is no doubt about that. But to interlard his reading with statements respecting Mr. Graham or someone else is merely to cast contempt on the chair and treat this house with disrespect.

[Mr. Neill.]

Mr. POULIOT: On a point of order, might I suggest that the government avail itself of section 98 of the criminal code in this matter?

Mr. NEILL: Will Mr. Speaker, give his ruling on the question of privilege I have raised?

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member having stated his question of privilege, we will proceed with the debate, if debate is necessary, on the motion that the Speaker do leave the chair and the house resolve itself into committee of supply. Certainly the hon. member cannot revive a debate that took place on the former occasion when the question was before the house. I will quote from May for the information of the house the following comment on standing order 41:

> It is a wholesome restraint upon members to prevent them from reviving a debate already concluded; and it would be little use in preventing the same question from being offered twice in the same session if, without being offered, its merits might be discussed again and again.

The hon. member without doubt has undertaken to discuss again what he discussed formerly on the motion that the Speaker leave the chair for the house to go into committee of supply.

Mr. NEILL: I bow to your ruling. I will be allowed to discuss it when we are in committee, I take it?

Mr. BENNETT: The chairman of the committee will decide that.

Mr. SPEAKER: It is open to any hon. member to discuss a motion before the house, but not to revive a debate already concluded.

Mr. NEILL: I submit to your ruling, sir, but I ask; Will I be allowed to discuss it when we are in committee on the estimates?

Mr. SPEAKER: On a proper occasion, but not in the manner in which the hon. member is seeking to do it now.

Mr. NEILL: I beg pardon, sir?

Mr. SPEAKER: It can be discussed on a proper occasion, but this is not one.

Mr. NEILL: I thought you said the manner in which I was doing it. The manner is mine, I have a right to do it in any manner I choose.

Mr. BENNETT: No, the practice of parliament governs manner as well.

Mr. SPEAKER: Manner or method, whichever word may be preferred.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. NEILL: On division!

SUPPLY

DEPARTMENT OF MARINE

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Ross in the chair.

Ocean and river service—maintenance and repairs to dominion steamers and icebreakers, $1,460,000.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): How many icebreakers have we?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): Out of twenty-five boats we have five icebreakers.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Mr. Chairman, may I draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) to the fact that for some time past—I do not know whether this existed under the previous regime—some of the men employed on the icebreakers complain that they are obliged to work 12 and 14 hours per day. I am aware that the government wish to practice economy, however, on the other hand, I do not think that it is a sound policy to have men work 12 or 14 hours per day. I, therefore, wish to draw the attention of the minister of Marine to this matter and trust that he will find the means of remedying these complaints which come to us from the hands at work on the icebreakers.

Mr. GAGNON (Translation): Mr. Chairman, I entirely endorse the remarks made by my hon. friend from Quebec and Montmorency (Mr. Dorion). I do not think it fair to have the men work more than for what their wages call, namely 8 hours per day.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Mr. Chairman, may I inform my hon. friends that the men on icebreakers will start work in a few days and I can assure them that they will be fairly dealt with.

Mr. MERCIER (Saint Henri) (Translation): How many gangs are there on these icebreakers?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, if the employees work shorter hours, will the hon. minister appoint more men on the recommendation of the hon. members for Dorchester and Quebec Montmorency; if so, how many?

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous services relating to navigation and shipping, $37,000.

Mr. HEENAN: I would like to have some information from the minister with respect to the fair wage question in dispute in Halifax over the building of an icebreaker. The minister will recall that there was a dispute with respect to wages. The Department of Labour gave a certain decision, but later the question was allowed to go before a court or board of arbitration. Will the minister tell us whether or not a decision has been rendered in that case?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The judge in charge of the inquiry rendered a decision in favour of the employees, and under that decision they are receiving full wages.

Mr. HEENAN: Could the minister lay on the table the decision of the judge?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I see no objection to that.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Will the hon. minister of Marine inform the house what item in the estimates has reference to the dredging of the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. DORION (Translation): That is not included in the estimates of the department of marine but will be found in the estimates of the department of public works.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): No, the department of marine has something to do with the dredging. I recall that last year we discussed this question when the hon. minister of marine submitted his estimates to the house.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): No. 142.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): The question was discussed, last year, when the estimates of the hon. minister were before the house. I wonder if this item was transferred, in the meantime from the department of marine to that of public works.

I am very much interested. I am fond of Mr. Simard and Mr. Dufresne and I should like very much to find out what extraordinary work they are carrying out on the St. Lawrence.

Mr. DORION (Translation): The hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin) would also like to know?

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): At present, the question is what the minister is undertaking; there is no reference to his predecessor. I am alluding to Mr. Simard and Mr. Dufresne. If the hon. Minister of Marine has nothing to do with these gentlemen, I shall deal with them on another occasion.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The hon. member will have full opportunity to discuss this question when item No. 142 is reached.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Has the hon. Minister of Marine nothing to do with item No. 142?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The dredging of the St. Lawrence river is under the control of the Department of Marine, while all other dredging in the country comes under that of the Department of Public Works.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I am very pleased to find that we now understand one another.

Mr. NEILL: I think under this vote I might ask the minister a question. I understood him to state a few weeks ago that it was his intention to bring in a bill amending the Merchant Shipping Act, and I think he told me across the floor that it was his intention to send that bill to a committee of the house. I presume that would be the committee on marine and fisheries. Am I correct in that supposition?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The complete revision of the Shipping act is now in the hands of the printer, and I think half the bill has been printed. It may be that the act will be brought in first in the upper house, where full opportunity will be afforded to all interested parties to be heard before a committee. When the measure comes to this house, we will decide whether or not it should go to a committee here. I think it will go to such a committee, but if the bill is introduced in the upper house everyone will have an opportunity to appear before a committee and be heard.

Mr. NEILL: I thank the minister for the fullness of his explanation. I have been one of those agitating for the last ten years for the revision of this act; I would hesitate to do anything to delay it, but I do think the time would be well spent if the bill were not passed through this house for a year after it was printed. There are so many complex interests involved from the Atlantic to the Pacific and on the great lakes as well that it is impossible for those men who are not skilled in law and who have not strong organizations looking after their interests to be even apprised of how their interests are affected. I would suggest to the minister, as I suggested to his predecessor for several years, that he should introduce the bill in this house and even have it go to a committee, but then let it stand until another session in order that copies of the bill may be circulated to the people interested on the Atlantic, the Pacific and the great lakes, so that they may be able to get together and present such evidence to the committee as they may desire. Men out on the deep seas at this time may never know that the bill has been passed, and they will not have an opportunity to make such representations as they may desire. Of course the big shipping interests can be easily reached, but that does not apply to masters, mates and engineers and seamen or to a great many owners of small gasoline boats who are very much concerned with this measure. This is going to be a very difficult subject to deal with, and I suggest to the minister that he earnestly consider whether it would not be wise to delay it for another session. It has been delayed for so long now that another year will not matter very much, and then we will be able to get the real opinions of the people interested.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): May I inquire from the minister what are the winter services which are connected with navigation, and what amount is expended on each one of them.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): The discussion now is really on item 133. Shall item 132 carry?

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous services relating to navigation and shipping, $37,000.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Mr. Chairman, for a number of years past, the shipping federation as well as the "Union des Pilotes" of Quebec have requested the erection of a semaphore at St. Jean, island of Orleans. It is stated that such a measure would be very useful to navigators and prevent a number of accidents.

May I inquire from the Minister of Marine if, in No. 133 of his estimates, there is an amount set aside for providing at St-Jean, island of Orleans, a signal service absolutely necessary to the navigation of the St. Lawrence river?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the inquiry made by my hon. friend from Quebec Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) would come under item No. 148, Marine Signal Service. However, I am ready to answer his inquiry immediately. No amount in the estimates is specially affected to the erection of a semaphore at St-Jean, island of Orleans. There is a round sum which we request the house to vote and part of which might be used to erect a semaphore, if we find it possible. I must state that the question has already been submitted to the department and is, at present, under consideration.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Since the construction of the island of Orleans' bridge, has there not also been a question of the Quebec province providing a semaphore to enlighten and satisfy the member for Quebec-Montmorency?

Mr. DORION (Translation): It is evident that my hon. friend is ignorant of where the bridge of the island of Orleans is located. This bridge is located between the north shore and the island. The distance between these two localities is about 15 miles and navigation follows the south shore and not the north shore.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): In this case, I would suggest to the hon. Minister of Marine to first grant the request which my colleague, the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency, has just made, to erect a semaphore at St-Jean, island of Orleans, then, since the hon. member took such an interest in the building of the island of Orleans bridge, another semaphore should be erected on the bridge.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Since we are discussing this subject, may I inquire whether, the alignment lights for the service of signals which exists at Betchouan, below Havre St. Pierre, will be again maintained this year? I was informed by letter that the department intended to discontinue the maintenance of these signal-lights, and navigators around these parts inform me that it is most important for those who navigate in these waters to have lights to guide them.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I cannot at present give a definite answer to my hon. friend. This question is under the supervision of the committee on lights of the Department of Marine. I shall make the necessary inquiries and inform the hon. member.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I think it is petty thrift to economize a few hundred dollars and imperil the lives of fishermen and navigators of that locality. Although we must practice thrift, I think it would be money well invested if the Department of Marine maintained these signal-lights.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): It is a burning question!

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The Department of Marine has no intention of placing the life of fishermen or navigators in jeopardy by removing the signal-lights where they are absolutely required. I have full confidence in the committee on lights, however, if it is necessary to look into the matter, I shall do so personally.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): What are the duties of this committee on lights and who are the members of this committee?

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): There must also be dark spots.

Mr. DORION (Translation): Fortunately you are not included otherwise it would be total darkness.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The committee is composed of the heads of the various branches of the Marine department, including a representative of the Shipping Federation. The members of this committee hold meetings now and then and make recommendations after visiting the various localities to study the requirements of navigation.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Does this committee meet yearly? Has it meetings on fixed dates or do they meet when they please.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The committee does not hold regular meetings. When a sufficient number of requests have been addressed to the department, the committee meets, holds an inquiry and reports.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Can the minister inform the house as to the last date this committee met?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): According to my information, the last meeting took place in December.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Will a meeting be held in the near future when he can submit such requests as I have just mentioned.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): If there are important requests, as those mentioned by the hon. member, the committee will certainly meet before this spring.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Before the spring? I suppose you cannot give the approximative date?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): No, we shall fix a date when we have before us all requests relating to next year's navigation.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Is the Deputy Minister of Marine included in this committee?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The assistant deputy minister is.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The assistant?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): We have no deputy minister, at present.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): Will the assistant deputy minister be appointed deputy minister?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I was just going to put the same question. Can the minister inform the house when this appointment will be made? I inquired the other day, but the minister was unable to give me the information.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I have already informed my hon. friend that the appointment of heads of departments is the prerogative of the right hon. Prime Minister and I cannot answer for him.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The minister has a word to say in the matter.

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): Item No. 133 is somewhat vague. Would the hon. minister furnish the house with some details and say how this amount of $37,000 is distributed, so that we may have some idea of what these various services in connection with the navigation include? What is the intention of the department in this respect?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): It includes an amount of $15,000 for examinations navigators undergo; $5,799 for navigation schools; $2,000 for—

Mr. MERCIER (Translation): For certificates, I suppose?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): —to assist navigators in poor circumstances. An amount of $6,296 is included for inquiries in connection with wrecks or accidents; $2,000 for the registration of ships in Canadian ports; $2,000 to remove obstacles in the navigable routes of Canada. There is also an amount of $4,000 for inspection of cattle ships going overseas.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Are the first two items of $15,000 each?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): No, the first item amounts to $15,004, and the second to $5,700.

Mr. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont) (Translation): Where is this navigation school located?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): We have schools at Halifax, St. John, N.B., Yarmouth, Quebec, Kingston, Prince Rupert and at Collingwood.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): There is none in Montreal?

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I am informed that there is a private school in Montreal.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): A school under the supervision of Capt. Raymond?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Yes, under the direction of Capt. Raymond.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Who are the professors at this private school? Has the minister any information in connection with this private school?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): We have no information.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Is this school subsidized by the Department of Marine?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): No.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): The hon. minister stated, a moment ago, that this item included an amount for inquiries in connection with wrecks or accidents to ships. Does this come under the Wreck Commissioner, Capt. Demers, or is there is a special item to that purpose?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I mentioned, a moment ago, the amount of $6,296 for inquiries in connection with wrecks or accidents. That is the item which concerns the department of Capt. Demers.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Out of this $15,000, what are the salaries paid, per year, in these navigation schools?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I have not with me the list of salaries paid. I can, however, state that the salaries are proportionate to the services rendered by these professors.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): How many professors are there? I shall be satisfied with this information.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): We have a professor in each school. I can give their names, if the house wishes for that information.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Yes, give us their names.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): Also the date of their appointment.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Mr. O'Hara, at Halifax; Mr. Pollock, at Saint John, N.B.; Mr. Hilton, at Yarmouth; Mr. Lachance, at Quebec; Queen's University, at Kingston; Mr. Elfert, at Prince Rupert; and Mr. Coles, at Collingwood.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): In connection with these professors, will the hon. minister permit me to point out a fact? At present, things are abnormal. If the country is so depressed, it is, perhaps, because there are too many doctors. There are doctors not only in medicine, but in various occupations. There are people eminent like the Prime Minister and the leader of the Opposition who have received a number of university degrees, yet the name of Dr. Bennett is no more heard of than that of Dr. King. I wonder whether all these professors are doctors. There are gentlemen who sometimes receive the degree of doctor in law from universities who hold no chairs, yet these gentlemen are all along called doctors. I wonder if these professors are doctors and whether their names appear in the public accounts with this degree attached like that of certain individuals inscribed with the degree of doctor and followed by very numerous letters, in the documents relating to the House of Commons—doctors in bluff!

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Some time ago I inquired from the minister about an accident which took place last year, in August, on the St. Lawrence river, when the Empress of Britain collided with another ship at the mouth of the Saguenay river. I wanted to know whether an inquiry had been held under the supervision of the Wreck Commissioner. The minister answered that there had not been one. I then asked why an inquiry had not been held and the minister answered that in the opinion of the Marine department an inquiry was not necessary. I put similar questions, about the same date, in connection with another accident which took place at "ile Rouge," when a ship belonging to the Clark Co. was dashed on the island, and the answer was the same, that in the opinion of the Marine department, an inquiry was not necessary. If I am not mistaken, there is a provision in the Marine Act that, when a rather serious accident takes place, an inquiry must be held. In the first instance, the accident was serious enough since two boats came into collision, the Empress of Britain and another ship. In the second case, the ship had been dashed on the island and remained there for a few days. Certainly there was, in both cases, a casualty at sea and the act provides that in all such cases an inquiry must be held.

I have, as counsel, defended a pilot when it was a case of a ship which had slightly touched a rock, near Tadoussac, four or five years ago. When the inquiry started before Commissioner Demers, I contended that there was no necessity of proceeding with this case, because there had not been a sea casualty in the sense of the law, since there was no damage sustained, the ship having continued its course and arrived safely at Quebec, and later, at Montreal. I note that in both cases to which I referred, no inquiry was held, although a collision took place, and, in the other case, the ship remained on the rocks, I think, for a day. The reply of the hon. Minister of Marine was, in both cases, that in the opinion of the Marine department an inquiry was not necessary. I wish to inquire why the Minister of Marine, on his own initiative, decided, contrary to what the Act states in such cases, that no inquiry was necessary.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Mr. Chairman, in connection with inquiries, the rule which the Department of Marine has always followed, is that an unofficial inquiry is held by certain officers of the department. When, in the opinion of the department, there is not sufficient grounds to warrant an official inquiry, that such an inquiry would throw discredit on the St. Lawrence or our navigable routes, when the matter has no consequence, the department considers that it is better not to hold an inquiry first, on account of the outlay involved and then because no purpose would be served. In both cases quoted by my hon. friend, a moment ago, the officers of the department came to that conclusion which, moreover, I approved. I think that neither the good name of the St. Lawrence, nor the companies interested, nor the employees of these companies, nor the passengers and pilots suffered from the fact that an inquiry was not held. As to the Empress of Britain, it was but a bare contact, and after looking into the matter the department decided that an official enquiry was unnecessary.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Will the hon. minister state on what section of the Act he bases his decision?

Mr. MACDOUGALL: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like an answer from the minister.

Mr. MACDOUGALL: I happen to understand the French language and consequently can appreciate the altercations proceeding between my hon. friend and the minister. I think, in fairness to those who do not understand the French language, these items should be discussed in English as well as in French.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like to have an answer from the minister.

Mr. DURANLEAU: In English or in French?

Mr. CASGRAIN: In French or in English: either will satisfy me.

Mr. POULIOT: I would advise my hon. friend in the meantime to learn French on the bilingual currency.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): May I inform my hon. friend that there is no provision in the act which obliges the minister to hold an inquiry in case of an accident.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): There is a provision which states that each time a maritime wreck or accident takes place, an inquiry must be held.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Section 762 of the act is as follows:

> The minister may appoint any officer of the government of Canada, or any judge of any court of record, or any local judge in admiralty of the Exchequer Court of Canada, or any stipendiary or police magistrate, to be a commissioner to hold formal investigations, or any formal investigation, and a commissioner shall for that purpose be a court.

Therefore, it is not compulsory.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Is it by virtue of this section that Captain Demers acts as commissioner of inquiry?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): It is by virtue of this section that Captain Demers acts as Commissioner of Inquiry when the minister considers it necessary to hold such an inquiry.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): He is appointed each time, in each particular case, to hold an inquiry?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): No, he is officially appointed, but we instruct him to hold such and such an inquiry when we consider it necessary that an inquiry should be held.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I realize that in the cases quoted by the minister, there might be special reasons for not holding an inquiry; however, in the case to which I referred, a few moments ago, it was unnecessary, to my mind, to hold an inquiry, and the fact that the department ordered an inquiry put this pilot, at the time, to heavy costs. He was afterwards absolved of all blame, but nevertheless had to pay the costs of a protracted inquiry when there was really no reason to order an inquiry. Perhaps there are two weights and two measures in special cases.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): The crossing at St. Roch is known as one of the most dangerous spots to ships on the St. Lawrence river. At that point a float was built some years ago, but it is on the eve of disappearing. This place is known, in the language of navigators, under the name of "Rock Algernon." I wish to inquire from the Minister of Marine whether it would be possible to grant the request of pilots and the shipping federation and make considerable repairs to this float. It is a very dangerous spot. Last summer, I think that a few ships met with accidents there. I had occasion last year while travelling on a vessel, to view this float. Half of it has been washed away. The swiftness of the current at that point is 8 miles per hour. The material damages caused to ships within the last two years amounts to as much as it would have cost to repair that float. I think it would be more appropriate to make the necessary outlay to repair that float than to dredge the north channel of the St. Lawrence river. I am not opposed to the dredging of the north channel, however, with the present depression, when the government's financial situation is bad, I think that such works could be postponed, and that we could, as in the past, make use of the south channel.

I shall avail myself of this opportunity to request the hon. minister not to reduce this year the piloting rates. I think I read in some newspapers, these last days, that the shipping federation again insisted this year that the pilotage rates should be reduced. Pilots have certainly a right to our gratitude for the services they render, and by treating them rightly we could obtain from them a still better service.

Since I am on the subject of pilots may I refer to the apprentice pilots. At present, these young men who are obliged to do an apprenticeship of five or six years, cannot find work on the vessels of the Canadian merchant marine. I think they should be given the preference over all others, especially over foreigners, so that they can complete their apprenticeship and later become captains of ocean going ships or excellent pilots. I have no reproach to make against the Minister of Marine in connection with the apprentice pilots, he has but followed the routine established fifteen or twenty years ago, however, I think that the request I have just made should be granted.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I was unaware that the question of pilots could be discussed on this item of the estimates. I therefore seize the opportunity to put in a word. Pilots have certainly rights. I am aware that in the past, under all regimes, under this government as well as under previous governments, there has always been requests made, each year, by the shipping federation and other marine companies, to reduce pilot dues.

This class of citizens are highly respectable and have a right to our consideration. I think that the services they render to navigation are of the highest order and should be appreciated to their real value. No notice should be taken, of the requests to reduce, this year, their pay and privileges. The hon. minister, who hails from the province of Quebec will, I hope, keeps his ears and heart open; he is aware of what is said and done, and, I trust that like all his predecessors, whether they were from Quebec or elsewhere, he will extend his protection to this deserving class of people, in Quebec. Will the hon. minister, now, inform the House whether it would be possible to have access to the reports he referred to in connection with the collisions I referred to a short while ago. These reports were submitted to the minister himself by the officials of his department and they advised him that enquiries were unnecessary as regards the Empress of Britain and the Northern Voyageur? Would the hon. minister afford me an opportunity of examining these documents?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): To the last question made by my hon. friend, I may state that if there is a written report, I have no objection to let him see it.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): To whom shall I apply to see this document?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The hon. member may write to me and I shall be pleased to furnish him with the information required.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Are not these documents under the care of certain officials of the department?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): A minister may take the trouble of replying personally to a representative of the people.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I just as much like to deal with the minister, although I have no quarrel with his officers. I trust that the minister will take into serious consideration my remarks in connection with the pilots as well as those of my hon. friend from l'Islet and that he will extend his protection to this class of citizens.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, the minister is in a very pleasant mood to-day; he will allow me to point out certain things in connection with the pilot schools. There was, at one time, a great number of pilots in Quebec; a large number of people followed this calling. Unfortunately, for some time past, the young men have drifted in other directions. To my mind they should be encouraged. In pilot schools, a list is kept of apprentice-pilots who have been found eligible, they are supposed to obtain a position as soon as a vacancy arrises. However, I am informed that for a number of years—I do not blame the minister or his predecessors in this respect—the minister has discriminated in making appointments among the eligible pilots instead of following the order of merit or the list already set up. I wonder if the minister would mind giving a chance to all the young men whose names are on that list by showing no favour, and allowing those at the bottom of the list to rise gradually, so that they may receive fair treatment. This is a humble suggestion which I make to the hon. minister. It is the more sincere since I am very little acquainted with the apprentice-pilots whose names are on the list in his possession.

Would it be possible for the minister to find positions of apprentice-pilots or pilots for a number of young men who are at present without work? A large number of our young men after going through college are at a loss what to do. At that period of life young men have, to some extent, a craving for adventures. Among this class it seems to me that a number could follow this maritime career and become pilots. The occupation of pilot is sufficiently lucrative, but, at present, navigation is less active than in previous years. Let us hope for better days. I make a second suggestion to the hon. minister: that of finding an occupation for young men coming out of college, who are at a loss what to do, by allowing them to study pilotage on ships.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Mr. Chairman, replying to the remarks made by the hon. members for l'Islet, Temiscouata and Charlevoix-Saguenay, in connection with the pilots and their salaries, may I assure them that we shall, as much as it is in our power, do justice to all interested parties. I have much sympathy for pilots and apprentice-pilots and I always have given much consideration to their representations. May I inform the committee that, recently, the Quebec and Montreal pilots and apprentice-pilots, met at the Marine Department the heads of the Shipping Federation. I was pleased to pass half a day listening to the arguments of the interested parties; the latter requested a reduction while the former insisted that last year's cut of 5 per cent be not continued this year. We are studying the question and I hope that the decision we arrive at will be satisfactory to all parties concerned.

As to the apprentice-pilots, we have also heard their claims and no complaint was ever made that favour was shown in the appointments made from the eligible list. I do not think that my hon. friend from Temiscouata can point out one case where the apprentices, at the bottom of the list, were given preference over those who headed the list. I do not assert it, however, I would be pleased if such a case was brought to my attention.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): This was done in 1926 by Mr. Patenaude. I am delighted to hear the statement of the hon. minister however, I was aware that the thing had been done. I do not wish to further insist. I neither doubted the good faith of the hon. Minister of Marine.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): With reference to the other question broached by my hon. friend from l'Islet, I shall look into the question of the float to which he referred, and should we find it possible to carry out his suggestions, we shall do so at the beginning of the navigation season.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): I named Mr. Patenaude, I am not positive whether he was the minister, I was alluding to the Minister of Marine in the shadow government.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): I wish to thank the hon. minister for the way he listened to my request. I do not hide from him that this request will entail a considerable outlay. Some work has already been done and the government engineers are perfectly conversant with the outlay required. What I have in mind is the safety of the navigation on the St. Lawrence. Ships from all parts of the world travel on the St. Lawrence and the accidents which might occur would be disastrous not only from a material viewpoint but for the good name of the St. Lawrence waterway.

Mr. VENIOT: Perhaps when I was not in the house the item concerning lighthouses was considered. I should like to ask the minister however if under this item he could give me any information touching the dismissal of Beverly Stewart, lightkeeper at White's Cove, the reason for his dismissal, and the fact as to whether or not there was any investigation. If he has not the information now I shall be content to have it later.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I would be pleased to answer the hon. member under item 145.

Mr. VENIOT: It comes up later?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Item agreed to.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

To provide subsidies for wrecking plants—Quebec and British Columbia, $40,000.

Mr. POWER: May I ask what amounts are paid in subsidies under this item to Quebec and British Columbia?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is $30,000 paid yearly to the Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company Limited, and $10,000 to the Pacific Salvage Company under contracts.

Mr. POWER: It seems to me that the amount paid in connection with Quebec is paid to an American concern?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Mr. POWER: I believe the firm is called Merritt and Chaplin. Formerly the payment was $25,000; when was it raised to $30,000?

Mr. DURANLEAU: When the present government took office the amount paid was $60,000 a year, under contract. I am sure about that; the estimates and public accounts show that I am correct. Since last year we reduced the amount by $30,000; it was cut in half.

Mr. POWER: To whom is it paid?

Mr. DURANLEAU: To the Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company Limited; the Canadian Pacific Railway is the owner of more than one-half of the shares of the company.

Mr. POWER: Is it not a fact that an American firm of Merritt and Chaplin do the work?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No. We have an assurance from the Canadian Pacific Railway that they own over 51 per cent of the shares.

Mr. POWER: They may own fifty shares, and one extra to somebody else—but I doubt even that. I believe if the minister gets further information he will find the concern at Quebec is run almost exclusively from New York city. If they perform the service properly, I have no objection, but I believe the minister should make inquiries. I have not any definite information in my hand, but I do know that correspondence with respect to matters of policy must be referred to New York. Then, can the minister tell me how long the contract will be in existence, and when it was made?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Do you mean with the Quebec Salvage and Wrecking Company?

Mr. POWER: Yes.

Mr. DURANLEAU: For two years.

Mr. POWER: When was it made?

Mr. DURANLEAU: About the first of April last, for a period of two years. The contract is to run this year and next year.

Mr. POWER: Without putting a question on the order paper, would the minister undertake to let me have a copy of the contract at some time in the near future?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, I shall do that.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): For what time is the contract with the Pacific Salvage Company?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The contract with the Pacific Salvage Company will expire in 1935; I think it is a contract for ten years.

Mr. QUINN: Mr. Chairman, I protest again against this item in the estimates. The government is economizing in every branch of every department, and I consider this is an unnecessary expenditure. There are wrecking companies in the maritime provinces who, when they undertake to do any wrecking or salvaging, have to go out and take their chances. I do not see why wrecking companies in the provinces of Quebec and British Columbia should be subsidized when companies in the maritime provinces have to carry on without any government assistance. Every year when this item has been called I have protested, and I protest again to-day.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As I have already told this committee, the subsidies paid to these two companies were cut by $30,000 last year. But we felt that we had to pay those subsidies in order to maintain on the Pacific coast and in the St. Lawrence a first class service. We had proof that the companies were operating at a loss, and could not give further service if they had not been paid that subsidy. I think my hon. friend will admit that the St. Lawrence, which is navigable for nearly one thousand miles from the gulf to Montreal, is a difficult river to navigate, and we had to secure the best service possible.

Mr. NEILL: This vote ought to be supported by all British Columbia members. I do not know about the conditions on the Atlantic, but if we had not this vote on the Pacific we would have no wrecking plant at all. It is very necessary.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Do we understand that if we have a wrecking plant at Quebec it is because the accidents on the St. Lawrence river are so few that no private company could afford to operate there; and that in the maritimes accidents are so numerous that they justify the incorporation of private companies?

Mr. PLUNKETT: There is only one efficient company on the Pacific coast. If this subsidy is eliminated it will certainly curtail the service, and anyone who lives by British Columbia waters knows of the many dangers and the numerous wrecks occurring there every year. I think it would be a great mistake if this item should ever be eliminated. I am sorry it is not much larger.

Item agreed to.

Miscellaneous and unforeseen expenses, $9,000.

An hon. MEMBER: What are the unforeseen expenditures?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is to provide for miscellaneous items that cannot be anticipated or provided for elsewhere, such as criminal investigations, legal expenses, arbitration proceedings, advice and assistance of experts, damages, supplies for shipping masters, and other things of like nature. Take for instance the inquiry about the Cymbeline.

Mr. CASGRAIN: How much did that inquiry cost the government?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have not received the bills yet, except the stenographers' bills, if I remember correctly.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The solicitors' bills are not in?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not yet.

Mr. CASGRAIN: May I ask if there is any counsellor at law specially attached to the Department of Marine?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Not at the present time.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman—

An hon. MEMBER (Translation): Hear, hear! Speak French!

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Would the hon. minister be kind enough to furnish the house with details of the divers and contingent expenditures made in connection with this item last year.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I can furnish the expenditure from 1920 to 1930, if required.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): That would be very interesting.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have no objection, but it would be quite long.

Mr. POULIOT: I would like to have them.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is a full page.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Would the minister be kind enough to give us the main items of this expenditure? There is no need of going into details for every 25 or 10 cents; we wish to have some details as to the large amounts, those above $10.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): All amounts above $10 are considered large enough to-day.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Up to the 31st of January, 1933, the sum of $4,440.19 had been expended.

Mr. SULLIVAN: What is the largest item?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The largest item is $2,186.40 for travelling expenses, Ottawa and return, re investigation—

Mr. POULIOT: That is Sir Alexander Gibb?

Mr. DURANLEAU: That is for professional services in connection with the investigation regarding the loss of the Bright Fan.

Mr. POULIOT: Was Sir Alexander Gibb, the great expert, paid from that item?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Are there others as important, but less than $2,000 and on which we could be furnished with details.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is a sum of $951 for professional services in connection with the Halifax harbour inquiry, C. B. Smith, fees and expenses.

Mr. POULIOT: Who is he, a barrister? From where?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Halifax.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Are there other items beside this one?

Hon. Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I have a whole page.

Item agreed to.

Life-saving service, including rewards for saving life, $50,000.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Would the minister be kind enough to state what amount of this $50,000 was awarded for saving life? While the hon. minister is looking up the information, I shall make a suggestion to him and I shall make the same suggestion to all members of the government. . . . .

Mr. DURANLEAU: Answering my hon. friend from Temiscouata, I am told that the rewards paid under that item during last year do not amount to more than $250.

Mr. POULIOT: To how many people were they paid?

[Mr. Duranleau.]

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am told that the largest amount was over $200 paid to the crew of the Montcalm when they rescued the Reindeer last year.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Does this amount of $250 include the medals awarded for saving lives?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am told they did not get medals in the circumstances.

Mr. POWER: How many lives did you save with $250?

Mr. DURANLEAU: All the lives were saved.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): How many lives were saved, for $250?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I am unable to furnish the house with this information.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I beg your pardon?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): I cannot state the number of people who were on the boat.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): Mr. Chairman, before making the suggestion mentioned, a moment ago, will the hon. minister allow me to point out that we are examining an item of $50,000 for saving lives and those who did save lives were awarded but $250 of said amount. We have no knowledge of the number of lives saved, however, the hon. minister states that the crew of the Montcalm was awarded $250 for having saved the crew of the Reindeer. I made an inquiry as regards the medals awarded but received no answer. We must bear in mind that a person who, under similar circumstances saves the life of another human being, risks his own. Since this person risks his life, like the soldiers who sacrifice their lives on the battlefields, he is as much deserving as them.

While on this topic, sir, may I point out how ridiculous it seems to have certain decorations distributed here and there, while those who save human lives are awarded but $250. The vote amounts to $50,000, yet only $250 is awarded to those who save human lives, while decorations are scattered profusely among a crowd of nonentities because they happen to have money. To my mind this is absurd. I am glad of this opportunity to state that the only persons entitled to official decorations and medals are those who risk their lives to save that of others, such as soldiers on the battlefields or people who dive into the water to rescue a fellow being or again those who go to the rescue of people that are shipwrecked. It is not, at present, a question of titles but of medals offered for sacrifices made and which deserve the sincere gratitude of the nation.

May I make a suggestion to the hon. minister, this suggestion also applies to all his colleagues in the cabinet. I think that when a minister is appointed to a department he should interview all the officials of that department; his deputy minister—when the post is vacant, the assistant—the legal adviser, the secretary of the department, the heads of branches and clerks, and inquire from each of them what their occupation is. He should then visit all offices of the department and ascertain for himself how the work is being carried out. To my mind, this is simple common sense. The hon. minister evidenced common sense of that kind by visiting the lighthouses of Eastern Canada. May I congratulate him. A former Minister of National Revenue, the hon. Mr. Bureau acted likewise, he inspected all the customs houses of this country. That was the correct thing to do A minister should have full knowledge of the work being done in his department. For that reason, he should be continuously in touch with each of his head officials as well as those under them; he must know each one's duties and encourage them when it is necessary. I think the hon. minister has the right way of presenting his estimates, he is courteous and answers very satisfactorily the questions put to him.

However, for his personal guidance, he would feel better at ease if he was acquainted with all the officials of his department, and when information is required about Paul, Alfred or Louis, he could answer: So and so is performing such a task; such work is essential in such a branch or service of the department; I am acquainted with such a person who has rendered great services to the state. This is a suggestion to the hon. minister which I make to him through Hansard.

I notice the Prime Minister is not in his seat, I hope he is not indisposed. When he was absent from the house the other day, owing to illness, I was reproached for having mentioned his name. I trust that he is in excellent health this time. I would not mention the fact otherwise. I make the same suggestion to him which I also confide to Hansard; and if he is indisposed, I extend to him my sincere wishes for a prompt recovery.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Could the minister furnish the house with details in connection with this item of $50,000 for life saving service, and state where and how this amount is to be spent, beside the $250 which have just been discussed.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This item is for the upkeep of life saving stations all over Canada. I can give the list if it is required.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Where are they located?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are some in British Columbia, others in Ontario and others in Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Are there any in the province of Quebec?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not think there are any in the province of Quebec.

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): How many are there in British Columbia, and where are they located?

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are two in British Columbia, one at Bamfield and the other at Clayoquot.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): What is the outlay for each of these stations?

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): The amounts vary.

Mr. POULIOT (Translation): That makes it interesting.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): In British Columbia, an outlay of $21,500 was made; there are small stations in Ontario where $3,500 was expended; in New Brunswick, $6,900; Nova Scotia approximately $20,000; in Prince Edward Island, $300; the other small items amount to $2,400, which brings the total amount to $50,000.

Mr. BOUCHARD (Translation): There are none in Quebec?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): May I inquire from the minister whether he has received requests to establish some of these stations in Quebec? I know that in certain parts of the gulf of St. Lawrence, at various times during the year, especially in the autumn, a number of fishing vessels and others have been badly damaged, moreover, wrecks and accidents have occurred. I think that, while no requests have been made, the advisability of establishing such a station should be considered; for instance, at Anticosti or in the neighbourhood, so that in case of accident we might be given the same service as in other provinces.

Mr. GOBEIL (Translation): They would have to be bilingual stations.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): That remark does not reflect credit upon the hon. member.

Mr. DURANLEAU: My information is that there was no demand for the installation of any life saving stations in the province of Quebec, but I can look over the files and give the information to my hon. friend. I know that years ago there was a station at the Magdalen islands, but the station was doing nothing at all so it was dropped.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): If my memory serves me right an accident happened years ago when the boats which carried on the service to the island of Anticosti were obliged, at their own risk and peril, without being fitted out for salvage purposes, to go out at sea and rescue a ship in peril. If such accidents sometimes occur during the stormy season, I think it would be good policy for the hon. minister to look into this matter, in consultation with the officers of the department. The question is worth looking into by the government.

Mr. DURANLEAU (Translation): Has the hon. member any locality in view?

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): I mentioned the island of Anticosti which is situated in the middle of the gulf of St. Lawrence. I am aware that accidents and wrecks have occurred near this island.

Mr. FAFARD (Translation): The hon. minister stated that there existed a station at the Magdalen islands and that they were obliged to close it as there were no drowning accidents. If such are the conditions, I would not request a station, however, if it can be a safeguard to fishermen I would request the minister to establish one.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri) (Translation): I am glad to hear that all these amounts will be spent in the maritime provinces. This is a proof that our St. Lawrence is a navigable and safe route which can be relied upon, it helps the good name Canada has abroad. I trust that we shall continue to maintain on the St. Lawrence, not life saving stations—if they are not required so much the better—but buoys and that the deepening of the channel will be continued that all modern installations will be resorted to and that care will be particularly taken to light up the channel, at night.

The hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Macdougall) complained, a moment ago, that we had a garage or a repair-dock, at Quebec, for vessels and that there were none in the maritime provinces; his wishes, however, have been gratified.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I quite agree with my hon. friend that the St. Lawrence is the safest for navigation and I consider that the best thing we can do to save lives is to provide the most efficient aids to navigation such as lights, buoys, signals and so forth. I do not think that any country has better safeguards than we have in the aids to navigation which we supply.

Mr. POULIOT: As the minister says that the river St. Lawrence is the safest place for navigation, I think that would be the best place for the government to stay.

Mr. MacLEAN: Has the life saving station at Alberton, Prince Edward Island, been discontinued?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, it is closed. There is only one station, which is at Charlottetown.

Mr. McLURE: Is the Charlottetown station to be equipped and maintained this year by the Marine department?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The boat and equipment will be maintained during the season.

Mr. NEILL: During the spring of 1932 was a shore patrol maintained on the west coast of Vancouver island?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes. We spent last year on that patrol $2,500.

Mr. NEILL: Yes; but was it maintained during January, February and March?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, it was kept in operation.

Mr. NEILL: What rate was paid the men? I think it was $90 per month.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The salary is $75 plus board allowance of $25, less the ten per cent cut.

Mr. NEILL: That would make it $90. Was a Mr. W. J. McDonald employed on that patrol during those three months?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, during the winter months.

Mr. NEILL: Was he the same gentleman who afterwards got a contract to build bridges?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: Without competition. That contract ended on October 19. Did he go back again on the patrol on the first of November?

Mr. DURANLEAU: When?

Mr. NEILL: This last November. If the minister does not know, I know; he did.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Why ask, then?

Mr. NEILL: He was also a mail contractor and provincial road foreman. There was a good deal of local unemployment there and men were, I will not say glad, because no one is glad to work at such low rates, but at any rate compelled to be glad, if I might put it that way, to take $2.80 a day and work on relief on roads, without board. I protest against this fat contract being awarded a professional jobster without competition. That is not the way to help unemployment there or anywhere else; certainly it is not my way. It may be the government's way, or the way of Mr. Graham and his satellites, but every one of these actions is a cheque drawn on the bank of vengeance, a draft drawn on the account of retaliation, and they must all be paid with interest on election day. There is one thing else I want to say. Patronage is dynamite in anyone's hands but it is doubly fatal when it becomes a personal attribute, used not even for the benefit of the party, not for the weal of the public, but against all those principles of fairness as between man and man, which have governed men's relations with one another ever since we emerged from the stone age. Patronage, I say, is doubly fatal when used in that way, and that is the way it has been used in this and other instances. I understand that there were some leftovers, lumber, nails and other materials, from this contract, the materials having been supplied by the government. What disposition has been made of those leftovers, and would it be in order if they were given to the contractor?

Mr. DURANLEAU: This contractor employed local men and it was the desire of that locality that local men should be given the work. They employed one man at $5 a day for 27 days and four men at $4 a day for 27 days. That was why no tenders were called for for this small job, after the estimate had been made by the officials of my department. Mr. McDonald is a first class—

Mr. NEILL: Politician.

Mr. DURANLEAU: —builder of wooden bridges, and we wanted local men put on the job.

Mr. NEILL: You could have asked for competition.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As regards the materials, I cannot give information but I suppose that such materials as were not used should be returned to the department.

Mr. NEILL: They will be?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I suppose they will—

Mr. NEILL: They should be.

Mr. DURANLEAU: —but I am not sure. There is a distance of four thousand miles separating Ottawa from the Pacific coast and we have to rely on the agent, who has a first class reputation there.

Mr. NEILL: If there is anything left over it will be returned?

Mr. DURANLEAU: If any part of the material we supplied has not been used in the construction there is no doubt it will be returned to the department.

Mr. POULIOT: Will these estimates be taken up again to-night?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Are there not some private bills?

Mr. POULIOT: After the hour for private bills.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not know; I hope so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: The boss is not here.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): When the committee rose at six o'clock we were considering item No. 137 "Life saving service, including rewards for saving life, $50,000."

Item agreed to.

Hydrographic and tidal and current surveys, and to provide for the maintenance and repair of hydrographic steamers, $464,000.

Mr. CASGRAIN: How much was expended for hydrographic and tidal and current surveys and how much to provide for maintenance and repairs of hydrographic steamers? In this item there is a decrease of $4,000, but covering two distinct operations.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The expenses are not separated.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where were these surveys made last year and what is the program for this year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The Acadia, one of our hydrographic boats, was employed on the north shore of the gulf of the St. Lawrence; the Cartier was employed on the lower St Lawrence; she carried out investigations and completion of hydrographic survey of Magdalen islands. Then there was a survey in Hudson strait, where a schooner or launch and a shore party operated at the western end of the strait. There was also work done on the St. John river and lake Winnipeg.

Mr. VENIOT: What section of the St. John river?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Up to Fredericton.

Mr. VENIOT: Between St. John and Fredericton?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes. We had another survey on the Pacific coast where our steamship the Lillooet was employed under the direction of Captain Parizeau.

Mr. CASGRAIN: At what places were the hydrographic surveys made on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The survey was made between Natashquan, Cape Whittle and Point d'Amour.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where were the supplies for the Acadia purchased? Were they purchased in Quebec or in the eastern provinces, and were any supplies purchased on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence? If so, where and from whom?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot give definite details as to that. I know the Acadia was equipped at Halifax. She has her base there and some of the equipment and supplies are taken on at Halifax before she leaves for the season. The rest, I suppose, is purchased where the boat is operating.

Mr. CASGRAIN: But the minister has before him no information as to where on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence such supplies were purchased?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I could not say offhand.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Were there on board that vessel men hired from amongst the people of the north shore of the river St. Lawrence, or were the men for the vessel all selected at Halifax, or where did they come from?

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Mr. DURANLEAU: The main part of the crew is taken from Halifax, because they have to take the boat to where she has to perform her duties; the other men as a rule are taken on from where the boat is operating.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Has the minister any record of the men hired on the north shore of the river St. Lawrence?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not that here, but I can get it for the hon. member.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I should like the minister to give me a list of the men hired while the vessel was on the north shore. Who is in charge of the hydrographic survey on that vessel? I know there is a captain and the regular officials, but I wish to know the name of the engineer in charge, under the direction of the department, of the hydrographic survey.

Mr. DURANLEAU: We have an experienced officer on each of these boats. On the Acadia the engineer is J. U. Beauchemin, who has had years of experience in hydrographic work.

Mr. CASGRAIN: He is a very competent man. Who was in charge of the hydrographic survey work on the other vessel, the Cartier?

Mr. DURANLEAU: H. L. Leadman.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Where was the work performed by the Cartier?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The Cartier was working on the Gaspe coast, taking currents.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Who was in charge of operations on the Cartier as engineer?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The engineer Leadman, I think. I will ascertain, but I think it was he. He has been on that boat for years.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Can the minister give us an exact figure as to the cost of these operations on both these vessels, the Acadia and the Cartier, for the whole of last season?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot give the exact figures as to the cost last year, but the amount is about the same every year. I shall give my hon. friend the estimate for the coming year, if that is satisfactory to him.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Does that include food for the employees, fuel?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Will the minister give us amounts?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is estimated that during next season the expenses on the Acadia will amount to $87,536. This includes staff salaries, $13,176; wages, $24,000; supplies, $38,000; repairs, $7,800; travelling, $1,200 and miscellaneous, $3,360.

Mr. CASGRAIN: This item refers also to repairs to hydrographic steamers. Were repairs necessary on either of these two vessels last year, or are any repairs impending for the coming year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Just the running repairs have been effected.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Nothing special?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Mr. NEILL: I have had occasion to differ from the minister once or twice and perhaps on occasion mildly to criticize him. For that reason it gives me much pleasure to certify to the good work his department has done on the Pacific coast in connection with the item under discussion. There has been no political interference and the result has been excellent and always will be as long as the work is done under Mr. Parizeau, who is a first class man. Is it the intention to put into commission both the Wm. J. Stewart and the Lillooet during the coming year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The Stewart alone will be put into commission this year.

Mr. NEILL: But the Lillooet will be retained and possibly be used when times get better, I hope, because there is ample work for both steamers on the coast, as the minister doubtless knows.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, I know the work there is very important, and we will keep the other boat in case we need it.

Item agreed to.

Radio service, to provide for the construction and maintenance of radio ship to shore stations and the general administration of the provisions of the Radio Act and regulations throughout the dominion, $679,550.

Radio service, to provide for the general improvement of reception conditions to licensed broadcast listeners, $280,400.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Why are there two items for radio service instead of one?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The provisions of the Radio Act are carried out under the first item, and the second item is for the broadcasting service.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But that comes under the Radio Act just as much as the other. The issuing of broadcasting licences for instance, comes under the Radio Act. Are two items inserted so that the total amount will not look as big as if there were only one item?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No. If my hon. friend will look at the estimates of previous years, he will see that these two items have always been treated separately.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I know, but what is the reason?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am advised that one relates to broadcasting and the other to the ship-to-shore service.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Is there not the same general administration for the two services?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, but it is better to have the two items separate, I am informed.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Is that to avoid interference?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As much as possible, yes.

The CHAIRMAN: Is it the pleasure of the committee that these two items be taken together?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Yes.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I want to take advantage of this opportunity to call the attention of the committee to a certain matter which to me at least seems very strange. Last year the minister was attending the world radio conference at Madrid, and by the way he promised me to give the house a report of his activities at that conference. Two months ago he stated that he would give such a report in the course of a few days, but we have not yet received it. It would be interesting for the house and the country to know what my hon. friend has done at that conference, and what benefits the country has received from his attendance there.

But what I wish to speak about particularly is the issuing of a broadcasting licence to a newspaper in Montreal at the end of October last. Another queer thing about the issuing of this particular licence is that it has had the effect of making this paper a very good and faithful Conservative newspaper. I would not like to suggest that that was part of the bargain, but at all events that has been the effect. I remember very well during the year 1930, when my hon. friend the member for Richelieu was Minister of Marine and Fisheries, he told us that he and the department were refusing to issue any new broadcasting licences because a royal commission was then investigating radio matters and the country was preparing for a national policy on radio. Accordingly no new licences were issued in 1930, and no new licences were issued in 1931. During the session of 1931 this parliament enacted legislation which is known as the Radio Broadcasting Act, nationalizing radio. We unanimously supported the legislation which the government brought down, and under that legislation this new radio commission, which was supposed to be absolutely non-political, was to supervise the issuance of radio broadcasting licences. As a matter of fact, there is a clause in the act which authorizes the commission even to cancel existing licences and which provides that no new licences can be issued without the approval of that commission. I asked a question in the house the other day, and I was informed that that commission was appointed on the fifth of October, 1932. The committee may see at page 1915 of Hansard the answer that was given to my question. The commission was appointed on October 5, 1932, and sworn in on October 31, 1932. But on October 28, 1932, three days before the commssion was sworn in and twenty-three days after it had been appointed, the Minister of Marine issued the radio licence I have mentioned to La Patrie in Montreal. I say that that was an insult to parliament, a violation of the pledge given to parliament, and a violation of the law. It was an insult also to the members of the commission. Either they agreed to it, which they should not have done under the circumstances, or if they did not agree to it, they are not the men who should be members of that commission if they acquiesced in the issuance of the licence notwithstanding. The licence was issued between the time of their appointment and the time of their swearing in as members of the radio commission. I protest against this thing having been done obviously for political purposes—I do not hesitate to say that—after the unanimous stand which the House of Commons took last year on this radio broadcasting question.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I understand, Mr. Chairman, that we are considering items 139 and 140 together. Perhaps item 247 might be discussed at the same time.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That is not the same thing. That item has to do with the organization of the commission. The one we are now considering has to do with radio broadcasting.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I thought that the observations of my hon. friend from Quebec East might be considered as coming under item 247.

Mr. LAPOINTE: They come under item 139 as well.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Just a word in answer to the observations of my hon. friend from Quebec East in regard to the licence issued to La Patrie Publishing Company a few days before the radio commission was sworn in. Montreal is the largest city, the metropolis of Canada.

Mr. LAPOINTE: We all know that.

Mr. DURANLEAU: In the city of Montreal there were only two licensed broadcasting stations, while in other cities of Canada with smaller populations there were at least five stations with greater power than had those in Montreal. In my absence the acting minister of my department saw fit to grant a licence to the newspaper in question. There is nothing wrong in that; I can see nothing wrong in it. At the present time there are only three stations in the city of Montreal. In my view that is not too many, and I do not believe the commissioners would object to it. If they wish to object, it is their privilege to do so.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Were they consulted?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Of course they were not consulted, because they were not in office at the time. I want to say this, further, that even to-day licences are granted by the Minister of Marine.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Yes.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, they are granted by the Minister of Marine, so I am suggesting that there is nothing extraordinary in the matter.

Mr. LAPOINTE: But the granting of a licence has to be approved by the commission.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The hon. member says La Patrie is a Conservative paper, and that the licence was granted because of that fact. I do not believe the hon. member is sincere in that statement. I am not here to defend La Patrie and its attitude in politics, but I shall say there is another paper in Montreal which has a broadcasting licence.

Mr. LAPOINTE: And has had it for years.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Is it not fair that a French newspaper with a circulation as wide as has La Patrie should have at least a small station?

Mr. CASGRAIN: They could have waited one or two years.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not see anything wrong in the matter. Then, the hon. member mentioned the conference at Madrid. In reply may I say that the report of the head of the delegation is ready in both languages, and I can lay it before the house at any time.

Mr. LAPOINTE: All right.

Mr. DURANLEAU: But the annexed treaty or agreement, the protocols, regulations, and so on, have been prepared only in the French language because, as the committee is aware, French is the only official language used in printing the documents of the convention. However, if it is the wish of the committee I am ready to lay the report, which is printed in both French and English, before the house.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Either language will do.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The pile of documents to be annexed to the report is ready in the French language only, but at the present time we are working on a translation of those documents, so that they may be placed before the house in both official languages.

Mr. POULIOT: It would be the same thing as laying an egg without the white and the yolk.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I see it is the wish of hon. members that my report be tabled, even though the annexed material is ready in only one language. It will be tabled within a few days.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Let us have it in one or the other of the languages.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Either language suits me.

Mr. ERNST: Both languages.

Mr. LAPOINTE: I shall be pleased to have it in English, French, or both, but I want to have it. Further, I should like to be well understood concerning the licence issued to La Patrie. I do not object to the fact that La Patrie has obtained a licence, but I do object to the way it has been issued. No new licences had been issued for the last few years. We understand that the Minister of Marine may still issue broadcasting licences, but in spite of what he has said, parliament has enacted that no licences shall be issued by him unless they are approved by the board. Years having passed without any new licence being issued, this legislation having been put into effect, and the board having been appointed, does the minister believe it proper that three days before the board is sworn in, he or his acting minister, without consulting the board, should issue a licence? In that way the board is operating in the face of a fait accompli. I say it is not right; it is not fair to parliament and, if it was done without the consent of the board—which I do not doubt—it was not fair to them. In any case the practice was objectionable, and as a member of parliament I protest against this strange conduct of the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I do not wish to speak more strongly.

Mr. POWER: I believe the committee should be familiar with all the circumstances. If my memory serves me correctly, in 1930 a commission headed by Sir John Aird was appointed to inquire into the whole matter of radio. A great deal of money was spent; the commission travelled throughout Canada and I believe even went to Europe in order to lay down a definite radio policy for Canada. Not satisfied with that, this House of Commons appointed a committee to study the matter, and the report of that committee was accepted by hon. members on all sides of the house. I think we may safely say that since this government came into power we have never seen such good feeling in the house or such unanimity of opinion as on the day the radio bill was introduced.

Mr. RALSTON: Except on your report about the soldiers.

Mr. POWER: I am speaking of the feeling in the house since 1930. Member after member from all parts of the house stated that the whole operation of the radio system in Canada should be safely confined to a commission.

Mr. CASGRAIN: And that it should be non-political.

Mr. POWER: Yes, and that the commission should carry out the work the committee and the Aird commission had recommended. First of all, when the Aird commission was investigating, no radio licence was issued. The hon. member for Richelieu (Mr. Cardin), the then Minister of Marine and Fisheries, stated definitely he would not issue any new licences because he wished the national body which would be in control of radio to take that responsibility. If that was not expressly stated in the house—and I think it was—at least the house was given to understand that radio matters would be controlled by the new radio commission. Yet twenty odd days after its appointment, and three days before it was sworn in—not the minister, who was absent representing the country at a bull fight—I know he is not in the habit of fighting the bull; it would be unparliamentary to say what else he would do with it—

Mr. MANION: The bull fight is here.

Mr. POWER: In any case the minister was absent in the performance of his duty, and no doubt when the report comes down we will know that he represented Canada honourably and to the credit of the country. But while he was away, and behind his back someone issued a licence to a newspaper which is very prominent in the Conservative interest in the city of Montreal. It is said it is a small licence. True; but, Mr. Chairman, you remember very well Marryat's novels, you remember the case where it was pleaded that it was only a little one. But the crime is exactly the same whether it be a little one or a larger one. I submit, Mr. Chairman, that the committee require more explanation than that given by the hon. minister in which he tells us that Montreal is a great city. We agree that it is a great city, it is a wonderful city, and up to the time this government came into power it was progressing in a remarkable degree. And as to telling us that La Patrie is a big newspaper with a large circulation, and has as much right to have a radio broadcasting licence as La Presse, we agree with that too, but we submit that the issuance of a licence to La Patrie should have been done openly, frankly, and by the commission duly appointed by this house to issue such licences. Surely they could have waited two or three days more. If they had a right to have a licence—and I should be the first to say they have—the place to submit their claim was before the radio commission. It seems to me the minister is not really serious when he says that if the commission does not like it or does not approve of it they could cancel the licence. He knows very well that a large sum of money is involved in the obtaining of such a licence and in the putting into operation and maintaining of a proper broadcasting station and system. Even though this licence were issued without the proper procedure, issued injudiciously, wrongly, clandestinely, I do not think it should be cancelled, because it would involve too much financial sacrifice on the part of the people to whom it has been issued.

[Mr. Power.]

But I do believe we should have a better explanation from the minister or whoever was the acting minister in his absence.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Who was the acting minister?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not want to prolong the debate on this question. My hon. friends say that no other licences were issued since the Aird commission was appointed.

Mr. POWER: No.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think my hon. friends are wrong in that respect. My hon. predecessor in the department made a statement to the house that no licences would be issued pending the report of the Aird commission—and I think I have made similar statements myself—except in cases where we thought we should issue a licence.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, in cases of fairness and necessity. And as a matter of fact I think we issued in Ontario—

Mr. EULER: CKOK, Windsor.

Mr. DURANLEAU: —two or three licences last year, one in Windsor, because that part of the province had no reception whatever from Toronto, only from Detroit, and we thought it was advisable to grant the licence there. I think we granted a licence in another place in Ontario, I do not remember exactly where—I think Port Arthur.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is that a big city too?

Mr. MANION: No mean city.

Mr. DURANLEAU: So I do not think my hon. friends are fair when they say no licences were issued except the one to La Patrie. We have done so when the minister thought he should do it in fairness to those who were asking for the licence. That is my explanation. The licence to La Patrie was granted by the acting minister in my absence—

Mr. CASGRAIN: Who was he?

Mr. DURANLEAU: —and I do not see anything wrong in that move on his part.

Mr. LAPOINTE: That is terrible; that is the worst part of it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It was legal; the minister had the power to do it; there was no law at that time preventing the minister from acting as he did. It was his power—

Mr. POWER: And he abused it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: —and he must have received sound reasons.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, my mind is not satisfied. The hon. minister is a very able and prominent lawyer, and in that capacity he has evaded the question. I have listened with great interest to what my hon. friend from Quebec South (Mr. Power) has said, and my curiosity has been aroused even further. Since my hon. friend the Minister of Marine has spoken; I will tell you why, and tell you very candidly. The hon. member for Quebec South has shown great earnestness and great sincerity in praising the minister. He says: I do not complain about the fact that it has been given to La Patrie. We do not object to it; La Patrie may deserve it. It is not the fact that the licence was granted that we object to; it is the way in which it was granted. English is not my native tongue, and it is not the native tongue of the hon. Minister of Marine, but I express myself as well as I can; I could repeat the same thing in French or in Latin if you prefer. The point, the crucial point in this discussion, is this: Why on earth was it given under such circumstances?

Mr. DUFF: Not on earth; in the air.

Mr. POULIOT: No, it was given on earth to be used in the air. Let me quote the old Latin maxim so often memorized by members of the bar of such eminence as my hon. friend: Quis, quid, ubi, cur, quibus auxiliis, quomodo, quando? How was it given? Why? What was the raison d'être of granting it? What was the reason of the granting of that licence? That is the point. As the hon. minister of Marine smiles, I am sure he has understood the exposition of the facts.

There is another reason why I am very curious. My mouth watered when I listened to my hon. friend from Quebec South. Now I feel more eager after having listened to the minister, and why? The reason is very simple; it is that he said there was nothing wrong with the granting of the licence. If there was nothing wrong why does he not tell us the whole truth? Why does he conceal something, and leave something in the shade? If there was anything wrong he would be ashamed of what has been done, but if everything is all right he has no reason to be ashamed. He has done no wrong; he is like the king, who can do no wrong. Why then does he not tell us what happened? This is just as fascinating as a detective story.

Let me give the minister some pointers. The acting minister was the principal in granting the licence, while the present minister was an accessory, but now the minister is responsible; he is the principal. We do not doubt the motives that inspired the granting of that licence, but in order that we may have no reason to be suspicious let him speak openly, tell us the whole truth and hide nothing. Be fair with us; tell us everything about the granting of that licence and perhaps we will agree that everything has been all right. Until the minister does give us all the details, however, it will be impossible for us to agree that everything is in order.

Mr. CASGRAIN: In order that there may be no doubt as to what took place I think it would be well to read to the house the questions asked by my hon. friend from Quebec East and the answers given by the minister, which appear in Hansard for this session at page 1915. These were the questions and answers:

Mr. Lapointe:

1. Since the coming into force of the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Act, 1932, how many licences for broadcasting stations have been issued, to what persons or corporations were they issued, and where are those stations located?

2. Were any of such licences issued for new stations, and if so, to what persons or companies and on what dates?

3. When were the members of the radio board appointed and when were they sworn in as commissioners?

Mr. Duranleau:

1. One; issued to La Patrie Publishing Company, Ltd., of Montreal; station situated at 180 St. Catherine street east, Montreal.

2. Yes; licence issued to the La Patrie Publishing Company, Ltd., on the 28th October, 1932.

3. They were appointed October 5, 1932; the chairman and the vice-chairman were sworn in on October 31, 1932; the third member of commission sworn in on January 18, 1933.

To-night we have had the whole situation explained by the hon. member for Quebec East, the hon. member for Quebec South and the hon. member for Témiscouata; we understand exactly what took place in connection with the granting of the licence to La Patrie Publishing Company of Montreal. The commission had been appointed, but just before the commissioners took office this licence was issued. Why was that done? Clearly it was done for a political motive; evidently the government were not sure that the commission, after it came into existence and began to function regularly, would grant the licence under the conditions which existed. We know who is behind this newspaper in Montreal; everybody knows it. Everyone knows that this is a Tory newspaper in the broadest and largest sense of the word; there is no doubt about it. I think it is plain that this licence was given especially to please our Tory friends in Quebec and to give them a chance to broadcast whatever they wished. Perhaps that is the reason why the letters are CHLP—Camelien Houde, La Patrie. That is exactly what took place; the licence was given for Tory purposes and Tory propaganda.

Mr. HACKETT: Why not?

Mr. CASGRAIN: In common with other members who have spoken, I do not object so much to this licence having been given a Tory paper, but I do object to the way in which it was given. I object to the fact that parliament and the commission were overruled, as well as the act we brought into being. That is where we find fault. Why not act in broad daylight; why go behind the back of the minister, when he was away, and have the licence issued by the hon. gentleman who acted for him at the time? Why give it in the dark?

Mr. LAPOINTE: In the blue.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Or in the blue, as my hon. friend says. To-day we have that newspaper using the broadcasting station for its own purposes and for the spreading of the propaganda of its party.

Mr. HACKETT: Why not?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I am not complaining about that, but I do suggest that the licence was issued in this way because perhaps the commission would not have granted the licence. Hon. gentlemen opposite wanted to be sure a licence was issued before the commission came into being, but now the minister says, "Well, it was given before the commission took charge. I was not there and I do not know anything about it. The gentleman who took my place saw fit to issue the licence; he thought it was all right."

I do not wish to complain so much about what was done at that time. A favour was given, it is true, but it was given in the wrong way, and to-day we have many complaints with regard to the programs broadcast from that station. When I was in Montreal the other day I did not have occasion to listen to this station, but many prominent people of Montreal complained to me with regard to what was broadcast. I should like to know from the minister if the programs broadcast from this station are under the control either of his department or of the radio commission. Recently I heard that some organizations in Montreal known as the Federated Labour Clubs were broadcasting addresses which were greatly resented in certain quarters of that city. Many people told me there was a touch of bolshevism about those speeches, and that they were directed against the government and the duly constituted municipal authorities. I should like to know if the commission is functioning and if it is doing all that is necessary by way of regulating these programs. If the commission is not doing anything along this line I should like to know if the minister has anything to do with it. I should like to know if the hon. gentleman controls the programs which are broadcast by that station.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Could not section 98 be applied?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I was just going to suggest that perhaps that famous section 98, which hon. gentlemen opposite voted to retain on our statutes, might be applied in this case, and the whole Tory outfit be confiscated. As I say, I have been told that what has been said over that station was more bolshevistic than anything else. The addresses spoke against constituted government and the constituted authority of Montreal.

Mr. LAPOINTE: From a Tory station?

Mr. CASGRAIN: From a Tory station. Hon. gentlemen opposite are the people who last week were so keen to retain on our statutes that famous section 98 of the criminal code. I should like to have the minister tell us something more about this station and something more about the members of that company which had enough influence and power to go behind the back of the commission and of the government in order to secure this privilege. Who was in charge there? Who were so friendly to the government of the day that they could get almost anything to promote their own ends and the interests of the party?

Mr. POULIOT: As the hon. minister is about to rise, may I ask a question? Would it be indiscreet to ask if the acting minister before granting this licence communicated with the minister either by cable, by long distance telephone, by mail, by radio or by other means?

Mr. DURANLEAU: In answering my hon. friend I would say, no. I still maintain that what has been done was done according to law.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): We have been done well.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think in all fairness it must be said that the paper La Patrie was entitled to a licence.

Mr. HANBURY: Let us admit that.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Nothing wrong was done. The minister had the power to do it and he thought he should do it in all fairness. As I told the committee, there were only two licences in the metropolis of Canada when other cities smaller than Montreal had as many as five, more channels than even the province of Quebec has at the present time. I think my hon. friends from the province of Quebec are unfair to their province when they object to the granting of a licence to this paper in Montreal.

Mr. HANBURY: That is just a smoke screen.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This is a Conservative paper, but do my hon. friends want every paper in the country to be Liberal? I think the electors of the country are entitled to read both sides of the story and are entitled to hear over the radio every angle of politics. My hon. friend asked whether the minister had control over the speeches made from La Patrie station. My hon. friend knows that even though the minister has the power to grant a licence, these stations are under the control of the radio commission. I remember the premier of Quebec objected some time ago to certain speeches made over this station, but I contend that the people at the head of this particular movement were within the law and had the right to propound their own ideas on politics. I ask my hon. friend to read the speeches which were broadcast last Saturday evening, I think by one of the leaders of the labour clubs of Montreal. Mr. Desrosieres made a speech last Saturday evening over this station in which he outlined the work they were doing. I invite my hon. friend to read that speech in La Patrie.

Mr. HANBURY: Is it good?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think he will find it is absolutely within the law.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Do you agree with it?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not say that I agree with all the ideas propounded, but I do not think there is anything to be objected to. I hold that these gentlemen have the right to voice their views provided their statements are not against public order. They have the right to make speeches, and particularly the one made last Saturday evening. My attention had been called to the speeches made the week previous and I listened in last Saturday as well as reading the speech in La Patrie. If my hon. friend will look over this speech I think he will find it is absolutely in order.

Mr. POULIOT: Mr. Chairman, my disappointment is so great that I can hardly find words to give it voice. We have great respect for the Minister of Marine, but I was under the impression that he was a real fighter, a man who would stand up for his convictions. He leaves his native land for the land of the toreador, for the land of The Kid from Spain, to represent this country at an international radio conference. When a minister is away he still has in large degree the responsibility of his department. There may be an acting minister, but an acting minister is rather a dummy; he is there to look after the routine work. I have heard the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) say that no decision would be made before the return of a full minister—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

Mr. POULIOT: —of a department, even though the department was in charge of an acting minister. I am afraid that because of what the acting minister has done, the minister must be considered as a fooled minister. I am very sorry about this. There is also a constitutional point to be considered. After the full minister had been told of what had happened, he should have offered to resign from the cabinet because an important step had been taken and an important decision arrived at without authorization from him. This decision was made and what he should have done was to go to the Prime Minister and tell him that he had to choose between either the full or the acting minister, that one of them must resign. But the minister did not do this, and I cannot understand why. But as everything is all right, according to the hon. gentleman, as he wishes to hide nothing from us, will he be good enough to tell us how it is that La Patrie got that licence? May I tell him that I said nothing against La Patrie. They have their views. I respect even the views of the Minister of Marine; I respect the views of everybody. I do not complain of the fact that the licence was granted to La Patrie; I complain of the way in which it was given. Will the minister be kind enough not to say that I object to the licence being given to La Patrie? Would he tell us the inside story of the matter? Who recommended that the licence be granted? Was it Senator Webster, who travels around the world while people pay so dearly for coal in Montreal and other parts of Canada? Is it that powerful man who had that done in the absence of the minister? Was it done by the substitute of the minister while the latter was absent? Will the minister be kind enough to tell us that?

Mr. MITCHELL: Mr. Chairman—

Mr. POULIOT: The minister is just rising. It is the hour of the rising sun.

Mr. DURANLEAU: All I can say to my hon. friend is that an application was made and a licence was granted.

Mr. POULIOT: I thank the minister, but my mind is not yet satisfied. Who recommended the application to the department? I am sure the minister was not aware of the fact at the time the licence was granted, because he was not in Canada, but he must have learned since. His acting deputy, who is present, can tell him who recommended the granting of that licence. After I have learned this, I shall leave the minister alone on that point; my mind will be satisfied and I shall take his word. Was it Senator Webster?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot say that any recommendation was made by anybody in favour of La Patrie. I have not the record before me. It may be there was some recommendation, but I cannot say whether there was or from whom it came. But La Patrie Publishing Company was such a well known firm that I do not think it was necessary for the acting minister to ask for recommendations. Conditions in Montreal were well known; as I informed the committee, we had only two licences there. The acting minister was aware of that fact; he knew that in other cities a larger number of licences had been granted previously, and it was only fair to such a large city as Montreal that it should have three licences. I do not think he needed any recommendation.

Mr. POULIOT: Then would the minister be kind enough to tell us who made the application on behalf of La Patrie?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I suppose it was La Patrie itself; it is an incorporated company.

Mr. POULIOT: Who signed the application?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think the application was signed by the manager of La Patrie, Mr. Bender.

Mr. POULIOT: The manager had bien de l'air.

Mr. YOUNG: Was the application made before the minister left for Spain?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think so. I would not say yes or no definitely.

Mr. YOUNG: The minister did not see it, anyway?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am informed that the application was made on August 20.

[Mr. Pouliot.]

Mr. LAPOINTE: Was the minister surprised when he heard that that licence had been granted?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot say that. I had heard of it, but I know no regular application had been made before my departure.

Mr. MITCHELL: I want to make just this observation. In connection with radio broadcasting, an important principle has been established this evening. When this side of the house charged that this licence was granted because the newspaper was a Conservative one, members or supporters of the government said: Why not? Why shouldn't the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation or the Labour party, or, for that matter, any other party, be granted a licence for a radio station?

An hon. MEMBER: Why not?

Mr. MITCHELL: Somebody says: "Why not?" Possibly, because we have not the money to operate one. Someone suggests that that is a good reason, and it is a good reason for what I am going to say now. With the development of radio broadcasting, we have reached a stage in this country where there should be rigid control of broadcasting of a political nature.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. MITCHELL: The people who have the money say: "Oh, oh!" The people who are in a position to monopolize broadcasting facilities prior to an election say: "Oh, oh!" Now that we have set up a radio broadcasting commission along the same lines as the British Broadcasting Company, why not carry the matter to its logical conclusion and give every group that seeks the support of the electorate in an election equal opportunity of making its views known? I believe the government has created a dangerous precedent. The minister says: Why should both sides not be represented? Why shouldn't all three or, for that matter, all four sides, be represented? In my judgment, it is not an answer to the question for the minister to say: I left it to my deputy. That is ducking the responsibility of responsible government, and I believe it would be well if this house took the matter into consideration and even went so far as to recommend to the commission that rules be laid down governing the broadcasting of political matter, let us say, in the next general election.

I appreciate the fact that most progressive movements are composed of poor men. I am not unmindful of the power of money in an election, nor of the possibility and practicability of the people who have the money gaining almost a monopoly beforehand of the best facilities of broadcasting over the national chains or the various stations of the dominion. What chance have the progressive, I might say radical party, if you like, if the situation as enunciated by the minister himself this evening is permitted to be developed? The best thing that has come out of this debate on the radio commission is that we have a clear-cut issue: Who is to control the broadcasting of political matter in this country? It would be well if we followed the precedent established in Great Britain whereby all groups seeking the suffrage of the electorate should have equal and ample opportunity of making their views known over our broadcasting stations, rather than that, as under present conditions, the man who has the most money should have the best opportunity of making his views known to the people.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): Following the statement just made by the hon. gentleman opposite, I might inform the committee that so far as the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation in Saskatchewan is concerned, I do not think he has anything of which to complain.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am not complaining.

Mr. PERLEY (Qu'Appelle): They are on the air every Monday night, as western members can confirm. The hon. member speaks about the party that has the money having the power to broadcast. In Saskatchewan the wonder is where the C.C.F. are getting the money to be on the air every Monday night. The government are on the air, I might say, only about once in six weeks and I know the western members can verify what I have just said.

Mr. EULER: I should like to refer to some remarks I made last session with regard to a radio licence that was granted in the city of Windsor to the station known as CKOK. Preliminary to what I have to say, I should like to mention again certain principles which were laid down by the Prime Minister when he introduced the radio bill, namely, that two of the purposes of having a radio commission were to ensure that radio stations located should be under Canadian control, and also that programs broadcast in Canada should be of Canadian origin, using Canadian material and fostering a Canadian spirit, if I might put it in that way.

Mr. DURANLEAU: If my hon. friend will permit me, would he have any objection to postponing his remarks on this question until the hon. member for East Essex is present? He is away this evening, and he asked me to bring up this matter when he was here.

Mr. EULER: I may not be here when he is here. I have no particular objection to the minister's request, but last year when I made my statement the hon. member for East Essex was not in the house, and when he made his statement I was not in the house. However, I am quite willing to agree to the minister's suggestion, but I should like to know when the matter is coming up again because I want to speak on it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Any time my hon. friend wishes, except this evening if he will agree to postpone his remarks.

Mr. EULER: It is not particularly serious. My hon. friend from East Essex, for whom I have every regard and respect, can very readily answer my remarks to-morrow if I continue now. May I add that the member who should reply to what I have to say is the minister himself, and not the member for East Essex?

Last year when I brought this matter up I made the statement in the presence of the Prime Minister that the station at Windsor was controlled by Americans, not by Canadians, and that it was really created, in my opinion, for the use of the city of Detroit; that the United States people who are really behind the granting of that licence could not themselves obtain a licence in the city of Detroit, and therefore they sought a Canadian licence in order to serve that large territory, the city of Detroit. They got the licence. I made that statement, and on the following day, when I chanced not to be present in the house, the Minister of Marine made the following statement, at page 3432 of Hansard of May 25, 1932:

> As far as the department is aware, the company is a bona fide Canadian company and is under Canadian control.

The minister goes on to say with reference to the statement that had been made that the station was under the control of the Columbia Broadcasting Company, and that the Columbia Broadcasting Company had a similar arrangement with other Canadian stations. He cited the Rogers-Majestic and Gooderham and Worts in Toronto and the Canadian Marconi Company and La Presse in Montreal, and then he said:

> As far as the department is aware there is nothing happening as was stated by the hon. member for North Waterloo.

I must take that to be a direct denial, if you like, of the statement that the company was under United States control and that the greater portion of its programs was of United States origin. The minister further stated:

> If it was brought to the attention of the department that practically the whole time of this station was being leased to American companies for the advertising of American goods in Canada, the department would take the necessary steps to see that such a practice did not continue.

I have no desire to injure any Canadian investment, and it may be that now this company is more largely under Canadian control than it was last year. But I do want to submit for the information of the minister, if he does not know it, and certainly for the information of the committee, that this is a United States station, or was as late as last June, and controlled by United States people.

I have here a price list issued by the Columbia Broadcasting system. They have a list of twenty-two cities, the basic network it is called, and among these stations are listed Detroit, Windsor. It does not even pay the compliment to the Canadian station of naming Windsor first. There are twenty-two stations listed here, only one of which is Canadian. There are no Toronto or Montreal stations listed as being in the basic network of the Columbia Broadcasting system of the United States.

I can give a little more proof as to the ownership of the station itself. I have before me sworn evidence given before the Federal Radio Commission of the United States, sitting in Washington, and I shall quote just sufficient from the evidence to prove what I have said. The question was asked:

What part of the stock of the Essex Broadcasters—

Those are the owners of the station at Windsor:

—does the Fort Industry Oil Company own? Does it own a controlling interest in the Essex Broadcasters Limited?

A. I will answer that in this way, that the exact amount is not determined, but it is a controlling interest.

The question was repeated:

Q. Is it a controlling interest?
A. Yes.

That is from the sworn evidence given before the Federal Radio Commission of the United States.

Mr. HEAPS: What is the date of that?

Mr. EULER: June 18, 1932. The investigation was held at Washington. My remarks of last year were made prior to the taking of this evidence, so I submit that at that time my statement was absolutely correct. It may be, and I am so informed by some Canadians who are interested in this station, and whose investment I do not desire to injure, that some change has taken place. The statement was made to me a few days ago that now 51 per cent of the stock is held in Canada. Whether that is so or not, I have no means of knowing. This, however, is true, that the other principle which was supposed to be observed is being violated; that is, that the greater proportion, in fact ninety per cent or more, of all the broadcasting, advertising and otherwise, that is done over that station, comes from United States sources. It does seem to me, and I say this in all kindness so far as the Canadians who are interested in this station are concerned, that that is not in accordance with the spirit of the creation of the Canadian radio commission. I said that ninety per cent of the broadcasting was of United States origin. I will give a few figures. I have a detailed record of the broadcasting from June 1 to June 8, 1932. It shows that ninety-four per cent of the time that CKOK was on the air in that period was used either by Columbia or Detroit. Anything that is broadcast by Columbia emanates I think from the city of New York. There were 192 announcements—I am referring to advertising alone—for Detroit merchants and 57 announcements for Canadian merchants. I have here the record of another week of broadcasting and the proportion is just about the same.

I would like to know if the minister can tell me whether the conditions as outlined here and as stated by me last year, and as they apparently existed in July of last year, still obtain. I hesitate to say to him that if he finds the facts are as stated he should cancel that licence. I know it is given as a reason or an excuse why American capital is interested in this station, that Canadian capital could not have been obtained. It is stated as a reason that the station had to take American advertising and American programs because they could not obtain them in Canada. I believe that is the fact. There has been a very large sum of money expended in that Windsor station, upwards of $200,000, and naturally the men who have invested their money in it are trying to get a return on their investment.

It was stated to me the other day by one who is interested in that station that it was quite impossible to get Canadian advertisers to contract for the time, and for that reason they had to accept United States programs. It was also stated that when those contracts expire Canadians could get on the air and make contracts in place of the United States citizens. But I doubt very much if they will at any time find enough Canadian business in the city of Windsor, important as it is, to take up the majority of the time of that station. The point I wish particularly to make, is that we are not observing the principles laid down when the radio commission was formed, which stipulated not only that the companies should remain under Canadian control, but that that which they broadcast should be of Canadian origin and for the benefit of Canadian people. I should like, if possible, to have some information from the minister. This is one out of only thirteen Canadian channels. Last year we obtained more exclusive channels, and were very glad to get them. The channel in question is exclusively used by this concern, and it seems a pity to me that one of the channels so hard won by the Canadian people should be allocated almost entirely for the benefit of the people of another country. That is the point I wish to make, and if possible I should like to have some reassurance from the minister that the condition is better than that I outlined last year.

Mr. DURANLEAU: When the hon. member raised the same point last year the company in question was not in operation. The licence had been issued, but they were not operating. My information is that the company began operating on June 1, 1932.

Mr. EULER: I spoke in May.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, I believe that is correct. I do not know the exact conditions under which they operated last fall, but I can say to the house that to-day the management is entirely in the hands of Canadians. More than fifty-one per cent of the capital is owned by Canadians, and all the directors are Canadians.

Mr. EULER: That does not mean very much.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is one director from Sandwich, one from Windsor, one from Walkerville, one from Essex, one from Tecumseh and the remaining two from Windsor. There is no doubt that at the present time the management is in the hands of Canadians. Of course this broadcasting station, as all other Canadian stations, depends on advertising for its revenue, and as I said last year, so long as the stations operate on the present basis, one cannot readily see a reason why a Canadian station should not rent a certain amount of its time—

Mr. EULER: Yes, a certain amount of it.

Mr. DURANLEAU: —to United States advertisers, provided, of course, that no Canadian programs are offering.

Mr. EULER: Would the minister say that if a Canadian advertiser wanted to get time now he could get it?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, I think so.

Mr. EULER: If they are under contract with Americans?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think so.

Mr. EULER: Can the minister tell us how many purely Canadian programs ever issue from that station?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot give that information now, but I can say to the hon. member and the committee that for some time my department have been following the operations of that station, and I frankly admit that we are not altogether satisfied with it. We believe that the station is giving an undue proportion of its time to American programs. If the control of radio stations had remained under the jurisdiction of my department it was the intention of the minister and the department to exercise more control over the company at Windsor. We had even thought of putting some conditions into effect when we renewed the licence for this year.

Mr. GRAY: Is not the commission itself under the control and regulation of the minister?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Since the radio commission has been in operation the station has come under its control.

Mr. GRAY: But is the commission not under the control of the minister?

Mr. DURANLEAU: To some extent, yes; they have to report to me. I have to be their spokesman in this house. But the commission has control over stations. I can say that the station in Windsor is carefully looked after by the radio commission, and I think that within a short time it will see that the station is operating according to law.

Mr. POULIOT: Is there another station at Windsor?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, that is the only one.

Mr. POULIOT: May I suggest that the minister should give the station in Windsor to the Border Cities Star, a very good paper. The minister could do in Windsor what he has done in Montreal.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not think the hon. member can compare the city of Windsor with the city of Montreal.

Mr. POULIOT: No, but I can compare the Border Cities Star with La Patrie.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The hon. member for North Waterloo said a moment ago that the Windsor station, because of the small size of the city could not get sufficient Canadian programs to employ all its time in broadcasting. I believe one station is enough for that city. I think however the committee may rest assured that the radio commission will look into the matter and give satisfaction.

Mr. POULIOT: My point of comparison is that the Border Cities Star and La Patrie may both be newspapers, but the Border Cities Star is a prominent newspaper.

Mr. MITCHELL: I understand that the station in Detroit, to which we are referring, began operations in June.

An hon. MEMBER: Windsor.

Mr. MITCHELL: No, Detroit; why not be fair about it? That is where it is operated from. I am informed upon good authority that seventy-five per cent of the broadcasting from that station is done from a Detroit studio. I understand from an employee of the station that the Windsor station is looked upon merely as a blind.

An hon. MEMBER: A blind pig.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Bootlegging radio.

Mr. MITCHELL: No, there are lots of those in Detroit—or at least there were, anyway. In my opinion this should be a Canadian station. I do not believe we should be merely a convenience at a time when channels on the other side of the boundary line become crowded. We should not permit the very few channels at our disposal to be used for that extra advertising. Those channels should be used for the benefit of the Canadian people. In my view that was the fundamental principle underlying the appointment of the commission in Canada. I do not believe it was ever intended that licence should be granted to a station which had for its chief purpose the dissemination of American advertising. I am not unmindful of the fact that possibly there is more financial gain in the broadcasting of American advertising. However I do not believe there is a great deal of excuse for the conditions which have obtained at Windsor. The station commenced operations in June and the radio commission did not begin its work until October. From June until October they operated with 75 per cent of the material emanating from a studio in Detroit and 25 per cent from a studio in Windsor. If it is to be an American station why not change the call and be frank about it? If it is to be a Canadian station it should be Canadian. I have no sympathy with the people who invested money under those conditions.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

Mr. EULER: Has the commission arrived at the point of putting in force the regulation that only five per cent of the time shall be devoted to advertising? Because I am quite certain that this station is not observing that regulation. Perhaps others are not either.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As my hon. friend knows, it was only in January that the technical member of the radio commission returned from England, where he was studying broadcasting operations, and, as stated this evening, he was not sworn in until, I think, the 15th or 16th of January. I could not say exactly how far the commission is exercising control of Canadian stations as to the five per cent of the time mentioned by my hon. friend. But I know it is preparing to enforce the law. This committee will permit me to add that personally I am of the opinion—and I will discuss the matter with the radio commission, —that the foreign programs handled by any Canadian station should be limited to programs advertising goods actually manufactured in Canada and to non-advertising programs of high quality. That is the view of the minister and of the department, I hope the radio commission will accept and enforce that view even in connection with the broadcasting station at Windsor.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): I heard the Minister of Marine say he was not satisfied with the operation of that station. May I ask if he reported the case to the radio commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Oh yes, my information is that the case of that station is in the hands of and under consideration by the commission at the present time.

Mr. EULER: Has a new licence been issued?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The licence will not be renewed before the first of April; they come for renewal on that date. As I told the committee a minute ago, probably some restrictions or conditions will be imposed on that station before the licence is renewed.

An hon. MEMBER: The first of April? Make it the second.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I think the hon. member for East Hamilton put his finger on the important feature, that is the division of air channels as between the United States and Canada. After all, in spite of the enormous amount of air, the available air channels are limited, and in the division between the two countries I understand that the air channels which Canada may use are comparatively few. The arrangement between ourselves and the United States being what it is, the duty of our commission is to see to it that Canada does get her proper share of those channels. Undoubtedly, if the station at Windsor is being used as is stated, the effect is simply a detraction from the limited number of channels allotted to Canada, and an addition to those available to the United States.

I made a very interesting discovery the other day. I got a radio for the first time. I had always been under the impression that the tariffs of this country were sufficiently high to keep out anything American, or almost so. But to my amazement I found that at least three quarters of the programs sent out by a radio outfit in Alberta were American programs. I suggest to the minister that he confer with the Prime Minister and with the Minister of National Revenue and make certain whether or not there is a gap in their tariff wall.

Mr. EULER: May I, with some reluctance, but in the interest of my hon. friend the minister and his party, make one other suggestion? It is that since the president of this particular station at Windsor happens to be the president of the Conservative association, he be very particular to see that the regulations are carried out, lest he be accused of favoritism.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Well the radio commission is a non-political commission.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Is the minister smiling?

And hon. MEMBER: Yes he is.

Mr. SANDERSON: I would like to ask, for my own information and the information of the house, and perhaps of the country: Is the new radio commission under the control and jurisdiction of the Department of Marine?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As I have already stated, the radio commission has to report to the Minister of Marine.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): And vice versa?

Mr. SANDERSON: Mr. Chairman, that is an answer, but I do not think it means much. I should like to press my question, because I regard it as important. A great deal of money will be spent on this radio commission; what service will they render, and to whom will they be responsible? Does the minister consider that he is really the chief of that commission? Or does the chairman of the commission report to him? Are they under his control, or are they under their own control?

Mr. POULIOT: Or is the commission responsible to the people, or to the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation?

Mr. SANDERSON: I think perhaps this is an opportune time for the minister to make a frank admission in regard to the whole broadcasting situation.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There is no admission to be made on the part of the minister.

Mr. LAPOINTE: He never admits.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The act is there, and there are a number of great lawyers on the other side of the house—my hon. friend from Quebec East could say better than myself. The act is short; it comprises only five or six pages, and one has only to read it to see whether the commission is under the control of the minister or not.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is altogether too guileless.

Mr. DURANLEAU: To some extent I think I can say that the commission is under the control of the minister—if you can say, for instance, that the railway commission is under the control of the Minister of Railways. The radio commission is a commission that has certain powers.

Mr. GRAY: Is it a court?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, it is not a court.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): That is why it is different.

Mr. DURANLEAU: But the commission has administrative powers; the only requirement is that they report to the minister once a year.

Mr. SANDERSON: I am not yet through with my question. With all due deference to the minister I must say that I am not any wiser now than before I asked the question. I will put the question in another way. The minister says he does not really know whether he is in control or not—

Mr. DURANLEAU: No, I do not say that.

Mr. SANDERSON: He does not know whether the commission has to report to him or is responsible to him. May I ask this question: Is the chairman of the new radio commission in control of the minister? I think that is a fair question. The minister says he does not know. Who is head of the radio commission? Who is head of the broadcasting in this country? Is it the chairman of the commission or is it the minister?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is the minister in his capacity as minister, together with the radio commission under the powers conferred upon them by the act.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Are you satisfied?

Mr. SANDERSON: No, far from it; in fact I am rather perplexed. With all due deference I would suggest to the minister that he let this item stand and sleep on it, and tell us to-morrow who is in charge.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Perhaps in the meantime my hon. friend might read the act and become posted on the actual situation. There are some powers that are exercised by the commission, who report to the minister, and in other respects they may be under the control of the minister.

Mr. SANDERSON: Does the minister report to the chairman of the commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: My hon. friend is joking. The minister has no report to make to the commission. The commission reports to the minister, as I have already told the committee.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: May I ask the minister whether the actual relationship between the commission and the department is not somewhat similar to the relationship between the pension commission and the Department of Pensions and National Health?

Mr. NEILL: Once when I was at Sunday school—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. NEILL: I observe with pain the frivolous reception which greeted that remark; it indicates the low mentality of those responsible for it. As I was saying, once at Sunday school I read a beautiful little book, into the details of which I will not go now, which was called "Alone, Yet Not Alone." That seems to describe the relationship between the minister and the commission.

Now that I have a chance, Mr. Chairman—for which I have been waiting patiently for an hour and a half—I should like to ask several questions for the sake of information, which I will put together so that the minister can answer them all at once. Possibly they do not come under this item, though I think they do. I should like to know which branch of the service, that is, the radio commission or the departmental officials, is charged with the issuing of licences for radio receiving sets. Then I should like to know the system now in vogue in connection with those licences. I remember that once we went to some government office, but more recently we have gone to the radio agent who sold the machine and obtained our licence from him. Perhaps he received a little rake-off or commission on those licences, and if so I would like to know what it amounted to. Now it appears that they are going to have it thrown into politics, as usual, and there will be one man appointed through political influence, which has happened already in my district. He will be termed the inspector of radio licences. Pretty soon we will have an inspector of dog licences, I suppose. I must say, however, that in the district I represent a very worthy man has been selected as chief inspector, and if my memory is not wrong—and I speak subject to correction—he gets a commission of ten per cent.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Is that Mr. McDonald?

Mr. NEILL: For once Mr. McDonald seems to have missed a job, but I have no doubt he will get the local appointment; I have every confidence in my hon. friend seeing that Mr. McDonald will get it. I understand, as I say, that the inspector gets a commission of ten per cent. Then there is to be a local man appointed by the patronage committee in every little centre, who will have charge of the actual issuing of licences, and if I am not mistaken he will get a commission of 25 per cent. That is a total commission of 35 per cent, representing 70 cents out of the fee of $2. I do not know any tax in Canada the cost of collecting which amounts to 35 per cent.

Mr. ARTHURS: Better look up the facts.

Mr. NEILL: I asked the minister to correct me if I am wrong, and I must say perhaps I am wrong about the 25 per cent, because I do not know. But if that is so, that is a tremendous cost for collecting these amounts.

Then there is just one other point on which I should like to get information, and I hope the minister will reassure me. We know that under the old system of control we paid $1 for these licences, but as soon as there was any suggestion of government control the fee was immediately jumped to $2, an increase of one hundred per cent. To a great many people the difference between $1 and $2 does not amount to anything, but to a great many more people it does mean a great deal. Now I see some symptoms, having a mean and suspicious mind, which I interpret as a sort of kite flying to see whether the people will stand for a fee of $3. I saw a suggestion recently in the Press that no doubt when the thing was working satisfactorily the people would not grudge paying $3 for such a valuable service. As I say, in a great many cases $3 is a very substantial item, and to many poor people living in the country whose only communication with the outer world is the radio a $3 fee will mean that the radio will have to be done without. I hope the minister will reassure me and say that the government or the commission, whichever is dominant, has no intention for this year at least of increasing the license fee beyond $2.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The collection of radio licence fees was made last year just as it had been made previously except that on July 1, three months after the beginning of the fiscal year, we appointed inspectors to go from house to house and ascertain those who had radio licences and those who had not. These inspectors were authorized to issue licences to those who did not possess them, and they were paid a certain commission.

Mr. NEILL: How much?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Forty cents per licence; we did not pay a cent more than that. I am glad my hon. friend has brought up the matter so that I may give this information to the committee and to the house. As a matter of fact the net revenue collected by the department and turned over to the Receiver General on account of licences issued during the ten months ending January 31, 1933, amounted to $1,396,447.57. After estimating the number of unissued licences remaining in the hands of dealers these figures represent approximately 735,000 licences actually issued to January 31, 1933. The distribution and sale of licences for that ten months period was as follows: 69·9 per cent or 513,776 licences were sold by dealers, at a cost of 7½ per cent.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): What percentage is paid the dealer?

Mr. DURANLEAU: He is paid 15 cents per licence, which is at the rate of 7½ per cent, and of the 735,000 licences issued, 513,776 were sold by dealers at that commission.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): How much does that amount to?

Mr. DURANLEAU: 69·9 per cent of the total for the ten months. The licences issued by the post offices numbered 130,535, or 17 per cent, and the commission paid was 2½ per cent or 5 cents per licence.

Mr. COOTE: Why the difference in the commission paid to the post offices and to other people?

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What was the total commission paid out under these three schemes?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am just giving the figures. To answer my hon. friend in the far corner I would state that the commission paid to the post offices is less because these officials are already paid by the government. It is very convenient to the taxpayers to be able to obtain their licences at the post offices, and this service costs the department only 5 cents per licence.

Mr. VENIOT: How many radio licences were sold by the banks?

Mr. HANSON (Skeena): In our district the mounted police issue the licences.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The sexton does it in some places.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The number of licences issued by the banks was 18,391 at a commission of 15 cents.

Mr. VENIOT: Would a bank in a town be authorized to issue licences at a 15 cent commission when it is situated within a hundred yards of a post office?

Mr. CASGRAIN: Why pay more to a bank than to a post office?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We do this in order to provide every convenience for the taxpayer in buying his licence. When a citizen goes to a bank he is able to buy his licence.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Why pay more to a bank than to a post office?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have already given the reason; because the postmaster is already paid by the state.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The banks make more money than the post offices.

Mr. VENIOT: Why should a bank be authorized to issue licences at a 15 cent commission when it is situated within only fifty yards of a post office which receives only 5 cents? The minister says that the postmaster is already paid by the government, but the government would be saving money by taking this privilege away from the banks. God knows, they have enough privileges now.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): How much was paid out in commissions to these various collecting agencies?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I was giving the figures.

Mr. SPENCE: Give him a chance to answer.

Mr. DURANLEAU: In answer to the question asked by the hon. member for Gloucester (Mr. Veniot) I would say that four thousand small post offices are paid 15 cents per licence, the same as the banks. We do not allow all banks to issue licences; I am informed by the officials that this is done only when the bank is some distance away from the post office. I should like to know the place which my hon. friend has in mind.

Mr. VENIOT: It is Bathurst. The bank is situated within fifty yards of the post office and contains a notice "Radio licences sold here."

Mr. DURANLEAU: I will take note of that and we will see that some redress is made. From July 1 last the licences issued by our inspectors numbered 84,870 or 11 per cent. The Department of Marine received the fees direct for 15,083 licences or 2 per cent. The mounted police collected for 6,896 licences.

Mr. NEILL: What rake-off do they get?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am told that so far the mounted police have received no commission.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): They should all be collected by the mounted police.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am told that the same commission paid to the inspectors, 40 cents per licence, is paid into their retirement fund.

Mr. TOTZKE: Are they not paid by the state?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They have to go from house to house, sometimes travelling miles in their own cars, in order to issue licences.

Mr. TOTZKE: Are they not paid by the state the same as the postmasters? Why should they get a bigger percentage?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Because they have to go from house to house like the inspectors. This commission does not go to them personally, it goes to their retirement fund.

Mr. GRAY: Are they not being paid by the government while they are going from house to house? Why should the mounted police receive anything extra when they are being paid by the government?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I suppose the matter was weighed and it was thought advisable that it should be done.

Mr. GRAY: Who authorized this payment, the minister or the commission?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The payment would be authorized by order in council.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

Mr. NEILL: I am like the member for Temiscouata (Mr. Pouliot), I am disappointed. I do not think the minister was quite fair in the argument he put forth. I wanted to know what arrangements had been made for paying men in the future, and I instanced cases where political appointments had been made. The minister came back by entirely begging the question. He said that 69 per cent of the licences were issued by dealers, but does he think we are so simple that we do not know that for the most part radio licences are taken out in the spring? These political appointments were made as late as October and possibly November, and the minister tries to draw a red herring across the trail by saying that the dealers had issued 69 per cent of the licences. That may be true for the past year but apparently it is the intention of the government to concentrate the issuance of licences in the future in the hands of these politicians. If I were a politician I certainly would insist upon getting the whole of the business, and not having it whacked up between the post office, the banks and the mounted police. The minister said that the inspector goes around from door to door and gets a 20 per cent rake-off, but unless my information is out of kilter—I got it from the press—I understand that there is another man underneath the inspector. I have read in the local press that Mr. So and So has been appointed supervisor, I think that was the word used,—I will call it inspector, if that will make the minister any happier—or special issuer of licences for the district of Comox-Alberni. The gentleman to whom I refer lives in the town of Courtenay. In the same paper or the succeeding issue I read that Mr. Somebody Else, also a resident in the town of Courtenay, had been appointed an issuer of licences. The first man was a superman; he attended only to the inspectorship and got a rake-off of 10 or 20 per cent. But this other man does the spade work; he issues the licences and he was appointed for the town of Courtenay. If that is not correct, I should like to be informed. Are there not two men engaged, one for the whole electoral district as supervisor and one vendor resident in each place? One of the latter will, I am sure, as the minister foreshadowed, be filled by his friend Mr. McDonald of Bamfield.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The hon. member for Comox-Alberni is quite right when he says that there is a supervisor. The department did not want to deal with more than one man in each district. That man would be responsible for the work and would have somebody else to help him out, to go from house to house, do the work and report.

Mr. NEILL: What did they get?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think the man who has the responsibility for the whole district was supposed to keep for himself ten cents per licence.

Mr. NEILL: What does the other man get?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Thirty cents. The department had a regular price for every part of the country, namely, forty cents per licence. The supervisor keeps ten cents for himself and pays thirty cents to the vendor, the man who goes from house to house. That is forty cents, or 20 per cent of the license fee.

Mr. NEILL: Prior to that we used to have this done for seven and a half per cent.

An hon. MEMBER: Two and a half per cent.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Prior to last year no canvassing from house to house was done. This system was on trial last year. Before that the inspectors had no power to issue licences; they went from house to house finding out those who had not complied with the law and they had to report to the department. Last year we tried this system of giving power to these inspectors to issue licences.

Mr. NEILL: But in previous years the department used to issue them through the dealer or postmaster on a commission of two and a half per cent.

Mr. DURANLEAU: No. When the licence fee was only one dollar, we were paying 10 per cent, or ten cents a licence.

Mr. NEILL: Now the department is paying 20 per cent.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Now we are paying fifteen.

Mr. NEILL: Twenty per cent.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Fifteen cents per licence to the dealer, or seven and a half per cent, and two and a half per cent to the regular post offices; and we are paying seven and a half per cent to about 4,000 small post offices and seven and a half per cent to some banks.

Mr. NEILL: And 20 per cent to the inspectors?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. NEILL: That is 20 per cent to the inspectors who formerly used to get 10; that is my point.

Mr. DURANLEAU: This is because they have to go from house to house, to travel.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Will the minister answer the question I asked about half an hour ago?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have been asked so many questions I cannot remember it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): My question was: What was the total amount of commission paid last year under these various classifications?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It was $119,000.

Mr. ILSLEY: Is that for the ten months ending January 31 of this year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes. As I informed the committee, we collected $1,396,000 free of commissions.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): But the printing of the paper, the licence certificates, cost something?

Mr. DURANLEAU: That is included in the expenses of administration of the department.

Mr. POULIOT: How many licences were issued last year when the fee was $2, and how many the previous year when the fee was $1

Mr. DURANLEAU: In the previous year under the $1 licence fee we issued 598,358 licences, or nearly 600,000. This year for the ten months we have issued 735,000 licences at $2.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Why is it necessary to pay any commissions at all? At a time like this when we need plenty of revenue, to pay men forty cents on every licence issued seems exorbitant. Why cannot the man who sells the radio simply send in a form to the department stating that so and so has bought a radio, and let it go at that?

Mr. ARTHURS: Before the minister answers, I want to show the other side of the question. It is true that the minister or someone on his behalf organized a plan to collect licence fees where they had not been previously collected, that is from those who had radios and had not paid anything to the government, the compensation being ten cents per licence to a supervisor in each constituency and thirty cents to the inspector, or 20 per cent in all. These men were given large territories, otherwise they would not have taken the job. Many men went around, spent days and days of their time, paid their travelling expenses and in the end did not get one cent of compensation for their work. The lucky men, largely in the big centres, issued licences, as the minister has said, up to a value of about $100,000, where the government had previously obtained no licence fees. Those people had never before had licences issued to them. The suggestion of my hon. friend opposite that the vendor of a machine notify the government each time he sells one is all right to a certain extent; but it will be found that these machines are traded in and traded out; they pass privately from one party to another; there are many radio receivers throughout Canada that have not been in use for years and it would be very difficult to deal with the matter in that way. Some system of inspection is necessary, but where these men go into the back concessions in search of unlicensed machines, they should receive a decent fee, far more than the amount suggested by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni.

Mr. NEILL: Would that system not be done away with entirely if a rule were made that no radio expert could sell or repair a radio unless the owner produced his licence?

Mr. ARTHURS: But what about the following year?

Mr. NEILL: The radio would always need tubes or repairs.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is there in each district one man whom the minister calls a supervisor?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Except where in a constituency there are large cities.

Mr. SANDERSON: Does the supervisor appoint the inspectors?

Mr. DURANLEAU: He appoints the vendors or inspectors.

Mr. SANDERSON: Does he do that himself, or does he consult with the minister or the department or anyone else in connection with the appointment?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The supervisor attends to the appointments without any consultation with the department.

Mr. SANDERSON: How many inspectors would there be in each constituency?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It depends on the size of the constituency. We have nothing to do with that. We do not limit the number of inspectors. It is up to the supervisors to employ as many inspectors as they see fit.

Mr. SANDERSON: In my own constituency there is one supervisor, and there are very many inspectors. I know that in one town in my riding the inspectors work in pairs, going around two at a time, and I was wondering if one of them represented the minister and the other the chairman of the radio commission.

Mr. ARTHURS: Are they Liberals?

Mr. SANDERSON: They are not.

Mr. ARTHURS: They should be.

Mr. SANDERSON: Can the minister tell me how many inspectors he has in Ontario?

Mr. POULIOT: In the meantime might I suggest that each postmaster should sell his birthright to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police for a mess of pottage.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Was the question of my hon. friend from South Perth, how many vendors, dealers, banks, and so forth, there are?

Mr. SANDERSON: I am not interested in the banks or the postmasters at the moment, but only in the supervisors and the inspectors.

Mr. DURANLEAU: My information is that we have 47 supervisors in Ontario. I cannot answer as to the number of vendors.

Mr. SANDERSON: It is rather an important question. I think the committee has a right to know how many vendors, if you choose to call them such, or inspectors, there are in Ontario. I could not say offhand how many there are in my riding, but there are very many. Surely the minister can tell me how many there are in Ontario.

Mr. CASGRAIN: And in the other provinces too.

Mr. DURANLEAU: As we do not appoint the vendors my hon. friend can easily understand that I cannot give the number. We appoint in each constituency a responsible man called a supervisor who is responsible to the department, and we deal only with him. He can go around the constituency and canvass from house to house if he wants to, or he can appoint responsible men to work under him.

Mr. POULIOT: Is the supervisor responsible to the minister?

Mr. DURANLEAU: He is responsible to the department, and the only one who is responsible to the department. In order to see that everybody who has a radio obtains a licence we adopted a new system last year. We had ascertained that in the previous year at least 100,000 radio owners had not paid for a licence. We had tried to collect the fees in every way possible, by announcements over the radio, advertising, and so forth, and last year we tried another mode of collection. We began organizing in July and continued up to September, because it was a new organization and it took some time. Under that new system of canvassing from house to house, instead of taking legal proceedings, as we did previously, against those who had not complied with the law in the first three months of the fiscal year, we collected 84,000 licence fees more than we had collected the previous year. Those supervisors finished their work to-day, February 28.

My hon. friend from South Perth asked how many vendors there were under the department. To-morrow we shall have none. We have not yet decided whether this new system will be in force for another year or whether another mode of collection will be tried, but the aim of the department is that every owner of a radio set shall pay for a licence.

A question was asked by my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni, whether we intended to increase the licence fee this year. I do not think there will be any question as to that this year. I think the licence fee will remain at $2, but I repeat that it is the intention of the department to see that every radio owner pays his licence fee.

Mr. COOTE: I seems to me that the minister has shown great diligence in collecting the licence fees. I think the committee would be interested in learning just what use has been made of the fees paid by the licence holders. What service has been rendered by the department? How many engineers are working in the field to see that radio reception is just what it should be? I wish the minister would also tell the committee what the commission is now doing. I understand that it has been operating for some time. Is the commission exercising a censorship, and if so, on what grounds do they decide who shall not be allowed to use the air? Has the radio commission yet broadcast any national programs, and if so, what telephone or telegraph lines are they using for these national broadcasts?

Mr. MALCOLM: The discussion is on the item of fees for radio licences. I quite appreciate the difficulties which the minister has in collecting the fees, but I doubt very much if the system under which radios are licensed is productive of the revenue which should be produced. The collection is a very laborious process for the amount of money derived. I do not think any new invention of modern times has presented just the same difficulties that radio has in the way of collection of fees. I would suggest to the minister, if he wants to get a reasonable return from the users of radio receiving sets, and if he wants to avoid the present difficulties of collection, he could go about it in a very simple way by wiping out entirely the licence fee for the use of a radio set, and instead ask his Minister of Finance when he brings down his budget in a few days to put a direct tax of twenty-five cents each on all tubes used in radio receiving sets. There is no logical reason why the man with a crystal set or a one tube set should pay a licence fee of $2, but the owner of an eight tube set might very well be asked to pay a tax of twenty-five cents apiece on radio tubes. The minister would then have no difficulties in collection. The manufacturers would pay the tax just the same as they do the sales tax, and every cent of the revenue would come into the treasury. The cost of collection would be nil, and the tax would be distributed more evenly among those who use radio receiving sets with tubes.

Mr. SANDERSON: If I heard the minister aright, he said that there were 47 supervisors in Ontario, but he did not know how many vendors or inspectors there were. There might be one or five or ten thousand—any number. Surely the minister has some knowledge or information concerning the number of inspectors in Ontario under the control of his department. They draw revenues from the public exchequer; they are public servants. Surely the minister knows how many there are.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think I answered the hon. member's question. These vendors or inspectors were the employees not of the department but of the supervisors. We did not pay one cent to the vendors, but paid a commission to the supervisor. It is very easy to understand that since we had nothing to do with the vendors and dealt only with the supervisors, we cannot tell how many vendors there might be in each constituency. I should imagine the supervisor was a reasonable man—

Mr. SANDERSON: And a good supporter of the government.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I cannot say that; if they are reliable men we are satisfied. I should imagine the supervisor would give the jobs to three or four men; those men could not earn their living if there were too many in the constituency. The number of men required would of course depend on the size and importance of the constituency. I do not think the hon. member can insist upon an answer to his question concerning the number of vendors in his or any other constituency in the province.

An hon. MEMBER: Why not?

Mr. SANDERSON: Although I do not know how many vendors there are in my constituency, my rough guess would be that there are at least fifty or sixty and all are servants of the government. Surely the minister must have some knowledge of the duties these men perform and the person to whom they are responsible. Were they responsible only to the supervisor? Has the minister any check on the money they receive and return? I can quite understand that it is very pleasant for the government to give employment to fifty or sixty of the faithful, but surely the minister has some information to give to the committee. Is the minister responsible for the appointment of the supervisor?

Mr. DURANLEAU: My department takes the responsibility for the appointment of supervisors. May I add that the supervisor has to purchase the licences from the department. The department takes no risk.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Does he pay in advance?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes.

Mr. YOUNG: Can he peddle them out as he likes?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The department has no responsibility so far as vendors are concerned, because I suppose they have to purchase their licences from the supervisors.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Does the supervisor return the unsold licences and receive compensation for them?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, we have to make a refund in respect of unsold licences.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): How many radio inspectors have been appointed for the city of Montreal?

Mr. DURANLEAU: One supervisor for the city of Montreal.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Who is he?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Mr. L. J. Bigonesse.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): When was he appointed?

Mr. DURANLEAU: About the same time as the others.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Last year?

Mr. DURANLEAU: At the end of August or the beginning of September.

[Mr. Duranleau.]

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): How many licences were issued in the city of Montreal?

Mr. DURANLEAU: By inspectors?

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Yes, for the whole city of Montreal, under Mr. Bigonesse?

Mr. DURANLEAU: 11,245.

Mr. GRAY: Have supervisors complete control over the hiring and dismissal of the vendors who sell the licences?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As I said a minute ago, we deal only with the supervisors, and it is up to them to see that all people who own radios pay their licences. They may hire as many vendors as they like.

Mr. GRAY: Have they full power of dismissals?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Yes, of course.

Mr. GRAY: No one other than a supervisor has any power to interfere with the vendors of licences?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not believe anyone has.

Mr. GRAY: I am asking you.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Of course if my department had a complaint about a vendor we would place the matter before the supervisor and ask for an explanation.

Mr. GRAY: Have the sitting members, from the various constituencies through which these vendors are operating any control over the vendors?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not believe they have.

Mr. GOLDING: If the supervisors have full control after they have made an appointment, has the sitting member any right to tell the supervisor to discontinue the services of or to dismiss an appointee? I want to know, because I know of a definite case where that happened.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I say that no member has power to give instructions to the supervisor. Although I am not certain, in some instances a member receiving complaints concerning a vendor may have gone to the supervisor and without giving instructions, asked the supervisor to dismiss the man. I do not know if that has happened, but it would seem to be a very natural thing to do. I would do that myself; if I had a complaint I would go to the supervisor and say, "I should like you to look after this gentleman, because I do not believe he is playing the game fairly with my constituents."

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Intelligent cooperation.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It may be; but I say no member has any power over supervisors.

Mr. SANDERSON: The hon. member for South Huron asked a question about the authority of a sitting member to dismiss a vendor. I should like to ask if a defeated government candidate would have power of dismissal?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I would give the same answer to that question; he would have no more power than a member.

Mr. SANDERSON: Does the minister know of any instance where a defeated candidate has gone beyond his power and has had the supervisor dismiss an appointee? Has he knowledge of any such case?

Mr. DURANLEAU: No.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Under this government that happens every day.

Mr. CARMICHAEL: I must confess this discussion has developed into a sort of Chinese puzzle, except that I am quite sure the method of collecting radio licences has a political complexion. I understood the minister to say that the tenure of office of supervisors expires to-day, and that he is not sure whether or not the same system will be carried on for another year. I would like to point out to the minister that he can very well afford to change the system that has been in operation the last ten months. He has been paying two and a half per cent commission to the post offices, seven and a half percent to the banks and a similar amount to the dealers, but he has been paying twenty per cent commission to the supervisors. I am not saying that even the twenty per cent compensates them for the work they do; I do not believe it does. I have heard that they lost money through trying to collect radio licences even on the twenty per cent commission. But in view of the information given the committee that 69·9 per cent of radio licences have been sold by dealers and the fees collected in that way, and that the supervisors have collected fees in respect of receiving sets of which the department had no record, surely by this time there must be a complete record of all radio receiving sets in the country. It would seem unnecessary to have a long list of supervisors throughout the country, political appointees, who receive a twenty per cent commission on collections. This could, I submit, be very well handled through the post offices, the mounted police, and the radio distributors. Through these three sources, and with the information the department already has, it should be possible to maintain a complete record of all radio owners and collect all licence fees without employing the supervisors who seem to me to have a strong political complexion.

Mr. MALCOLM: I should like to ask the minister, having regard to information I have received from some of his officials, why he cannot adopt the suggestion I have made. I am informed that 3,297,000 radio tubes were made and sold in Canada last year. A tax of fifty cents per tube would give the department a revenue of over $1,600,000. Why not adopt that system and save all this trouble and expense?

Mr. DURANLEAU: That is a matter to be considered.

Mr. GRAY: Am I right in assuming that the supervisor is responsible to the minister only for the payment of $1.60 per licence?

Mr. DURANLEAU: That is correct.

Mr. GRAY: Am I right in assuming that he can then peddle these licences to whomever he wishes, and at whatever rate he wishes, allowing the vendor 20 cents in one case, 40 cents in another, or whatever rate he has a mind to make, and that the department has no supervision over what the supervisor may make on each licence?

Mr. DURANLEAU: As long as the supervisor charges no more than $2 to the radio owner for the licence, we have nothing to do with his vendors.

Mr. GRAY: Have I made myself clear? I am not concerned what he charges to the licensee, but I am concerned with the question whether you have any control over what the supervisor charges to the vendor.

Mr. DURANLEAU: In the instructions of the department to the supervisor we state that 10 cents goes to him and 30 cents to the vendor. But we do not exercise any control of the supervisors on that account.

Mr. MALCOLM: They may cut rates if they want to?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I think every vendor knows perfectly well he is entitled to 30 cents.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): But as long as you receive $1.60 you are satisfied?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Provided the radio owners are well treated.

Mr. MALCOLM: Can the minister inform me what rates are charged for radio receiving sets in hotel rooms?

Mr. DURANLEAU: The matter has not yet been settled.

Mr. MALCOLM: It is time it was, I should think.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Those who occupy a room in a hotel, having their own radio, pay the usual licence fee.

Mr. MALCOLM: No; I am referring to modern hotels which have radio equipment in every room. From a central receiving station the radio program is transmitted to every room in the hotel. What is paid by the hotel for having radio sets in a thousand rooms?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am informed that there is only one central radio set. The Royal York in Toronto, for instance, pays only one licence fee.

Mr. MALCOLM: I submit that that is the best proof in the world that there should be a tax on tubes, in which case you are paid for the service you render.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): Take the case of the Ford hotel in Montreal, which has 500 rooms.

Mr. FRASER (Northumberland): Who is the supervisor in the county of Northumberland, Ontario?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not the information here.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Who is the supervisor in the counties of Charlevoix-Saguenay?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have not the name of the supervisor. I know he has sold two hundred licences.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Will the minister give it the next time the estimates are before the committee?

Mr. ILSLEY: May I ask whether the order in council has been passed allowing the members of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police 40 cents per licence? I understood the minister to say that the Royal Canadian Mounted Police had not been paid anything but will be paid 40 cents per licence. The question occurs to me whether they are being dealt with on the same basis as the supervisors, to whom licences are sold at $1.60 each.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The order in council was passed about a month ago. It was already stated that they would get 40 cents per licence, which should go to their pension fund.

[Mr. Malcolm.]

Mr. ILSLEY: It is being paid to them as a direct payment out of the consolidated revenue fund?

Mr. DURANLEAU: It is paid out of the licence fee, and goes to their pension fund.

Mr. ILSLEY: Which is already in your possession.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not understand.

Mr. ILSLEY: Let me make it clear. To the supervisors, if I understood aright the minister's explanation, the government sells licences at $1.60 each. Forty cents per licence is kept by the supervisor, which I suppose he is obliged to divide with the vendors. Is some different arrangement made with the Royal Canadian Mounted Police? Do they remit the $2 per licence to the government, and are they now under the order in council to be paid back 40 cents?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am told that the system has not started yet, but I understand they will pay only $1.60 for the licence, and they have to remit to their pension fund 40 cents.

Mr. ILSLEY: What about those they have sold—six or seven thousand, according to the figures given.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The order in council is not retroactive.

Mr. ILSLEY: They get nothing for those?

Mr. DURANLEAU: They get nothing for those.

Mr. POULIOT: Whose idea was it to allow a different percentage to different people? Was it done under the instructions of the minister, or was it discovered by some official? There is discrimination in that.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There are not many different percentages of commissions. The dealers and the banks get 15 cents, about four thousand small post offices get 15 cents and the large post offices get 5 cents or 2½ per cent. The house to house collectors receive 40 cents.

Mr. POULIOT: They are like pedlers.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I would not call these men pedlers; their duty is to ascertain who have complied with the law and who have not, and they have power to issue licences.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What is the total number of supervisors for the entire dominion?

Mr. DURANLEAU: We had 140 supervisors.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I was under the impression that Canada had a national, non-political radio system, but now I find that practically all these appointments are political. How does the minister reconcile that fact with the former conception we all had? Are these 140 supervisors all Tories, or are some of them Liberals and some C.C.F.'ers?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not know; all that concerns me is whether the man is reliable. These collections do not come under the radio commission; they are still under the Department of Marine.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: From what I have heard, and I can hear fairly well, it appears to me that they are one hundred per cent political appointments. I think that is scandalous in a service such as this, and my hon. friend said they were naturally supporters of the government. Why?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I did not say that. I think my hon. friend heard that from someone else; I do not think the minister made that statement. If the man is reliable the department is satisfied.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Would they be recommended by the patronage committees in the various constituencies?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I do not know. Sometimes when we need information on a man naturally we go to the member or the defeated candidate. There is nothing new in that; that was done during the Liberal regime. When you needed some information you went to the Liberal member or the defeated Liberal candidate.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: What are the names of the supervisors in the constituency of Melville?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am sorry, but I have already stated to the committee that I have not with me the names of the supervisors.

Mr. HOWARD: May I suggest to the minister that when reconsidering his plan of operation for the collection of licence fees next year he look into the suggestion made by the hon. member for North Bruce. To me it appears to be a very sensible one. May I say that I do not particularly object to the political appointment made in my own constituency; I think that was a perfectly natural consequence. I do object very strongly to the system, however. No one in a city like Sherbrooke knows where radios are as well as the mail carrier, who knows what is going on in every house throughout his route. There is no person who could collect the licence fees as well as the mail carrier. According to the figures given by the minister, 2½ per cent was paid to the post office and 20 per cent to the collectors. In times like these, when we need every dollar of additional revenue and when we are facing real financial difficulties, this system is altogether wrong; we have no right to pay 20 per cent when we can make the collections for 2½ per cent. I will go further; I think there will be greater efficiency if the collecting is done by the Post Office Department, which also needs additional revenue. Then, if you could get around the difficulty of paying a man who already receives a salary from the government, you might give the mail carrier a small commission on his collections, and you would be sure to have a licence issued for every set.

So far as Sherbrooke is concerned there was a supervisor appointed, but with that I have no concern at all. Later the supervisor selected the men to work under him, but suddenly someone discovered that my constituency is seventy-five per cent French Canadian but that all the collectors were English speaking. As a result additional French speaking collectors had to be appointed. So I say I do not think this is the proper way to handle this proposition. I would suggest that next year the minister either adopt the suggestion of the hon. member for North Bruce or have these collections made by the Post Office Department at a commission of 2½ per cent.

Mr. DURANLEAU: I have only a word to say to my hon. friend from Sherbrooke. I agree with him when he says the Post Office Department should issue the licences to those who wish to go to the post office, but what are we to do with those who will not do so? I have positive proof that this year we issued over 100,000 licences which otherwise would not have been issued, and for each of those licences we are receiving $1.60. Some radio owners do not go to the post office, the bank or the dealer, so we had to find some way of ascertaining who had paid and who had not paid. I am quite frank to say to this committee that this was an experiment to see if we could have a licence issued for each receiving set, but I am glad to receive suggestions from hon. members opposite because at present we are considering what system we shall adopt next year. With regard to the suggestion of the hon. member for North Bruce that a tax should be imposed on radio tubes, I am told that in hotel rooms where there are radios there are no tubes used.

Mr. MALCOLM: But they have very large sets in those hotels.

Mr. DURANLEAU: There might be a different way of assessing the hotels, because they have large receiving sets but in the rooms they have only loud speakers.

Mr. HOWARD: I was not suggesting that everyone should go to the post office to get his licence. We have the mail carriers who go into every home and who know where every radio is located. If those carriers received a small commission you would get the finest collection system yet devised. I might go further and say to the minister that I do not believe the present system is good, speaking politically; I think it will cause more enemies than friends.

Mr. DURANLEAU: Our only aim has been to collect every licence fee, and I can tell my hon. friend that at the present time we are corresponding with the Post Office Department in order to see if collections cannot be made by carriers.

Mr. MALCOLM: Some years ago, before radio was invented, I was interested in the marketing of phonographs. When this device for reproducing music came into use I felt that the government was missing an opportunity to obtain revenue by placing a small and reasonable tax upon phonograph records. It was never necessary to have a licence to use a phonograph and, as the minister has pointed out, it would have been utterly impossible to follow all trades engaged in the production of musical instruments. I think the minister's explanation shows that he is running into the very same problem in connection with radio receiving sets. To-day the government needs money worse than it ever did, and this afternoon the Minister of Finance stated quite frankly that he would welcome suggestions for revenue. The government has gone to a great deal of expense and yet in my opinion $125,000 is being thrown away in collecting a tax which could be collected without a cent of cost. I suggest to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine that phonograph records could bear a fairly substantial tax. We pay 8 cents on a package of cigarettes; why should not phonograph records bear a fair tax? It would be a justifiable tax and would provide considerable revenue. A tax upon radio receiving sets is just as much a nuisance as a tax upon sewing machines would be; both are almost household necessities. The most equitable way of levying this tax would be to base the tax upon the use made of the machine. The man who buys an eight tube set in order to obtain better reception should pay more than the man who is satisfied with a four tube set. The man who uses his receiving set more than another should pay more in the way of taxation. A gasoline tax is based upon the amount of gasoline used, which represents the use made of our highways, and the same principle could be applied to this tax. By placing a 50 cent tax upon each radio tube, according to the figures for last year the government would receive a revenue of $1,600,000. There would be a great saving in the cost of collection, the whole matter would be simplified, and I believe the radio receiving set owner would be more satisfied with the general conditions. Many men occupy summer homes in which they have radio sets which are operated for probably only two months in the year. Some people take their sets back to their winter home, while others, having duplicate sets, pay for two licences. The man who does this buys two licences but he is not living in two houses at the same time. If the tubes were taxed a man would be justified in moving the tubes, but when the tubes were worn out he would have to buy new ones upon which a tax would be imposed. This tax could be collected by the manufacturers without any cost to the government, in the same way that sales tax is collected. I submit to the minister that he should take up this matter with his colleagues, because I think it would prove to be in the interest of revenue, of convenience, and of economy in collection.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: What is the average life of a tube?

Mr. MALCOLM: A certain number of hours' use—I do not know just how many.

Mr. COOTE: I asked the minister if he could give us some idea of the service rendered to the people of Canada for the licences they bought. I suppose he will say that he has not had time to give us this information, but I think he should give it before the item carries.

Mr. DURANLEAU: The present organization comprises twenty-three permanent establishments and thirty-two part time establishments located in different towns and cities throughout the dominion, with a personnel of 148 full time employees and 41 part time employees. The permanent establishments are equipped with special radio interference detecting cars.

Mr. COOTE: What is the total expenditure for radio services?

Mr. DURANLEAU: I am asking for $280,000.

Mr. COOTE: The minister said that he collected something over $1,000,000. I should like to know how much revenue the government will have from this.

Mr. BENNETT: It has only got started; the money goes to the commission.

Mr. DURANLEAU: It goes to the commission.

Mr. COOTE: How much will the commission have in its hands for this year's services?

Mr. DURANLEAU: Item 247 asks for $1,000,000. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise, report progress and ask leave to sit again.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Wednesday, March 1, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITIONS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to lay on the table a copy of the "Convention concernant les Expositions internationales, et le Protocole de Signature, Paris, 22 Novembre, 1928," and a copy of a translation thereof into English.

Mr. BENNETT moved:

That five hundred copies in English and three hundred copies in French of the convention relating to the International Exhibitions, Paris, November 22, 1928, and the protocol of signature tabled this day be printed forthwith, and that rule 64 be suspended in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

WATERLOO, QUE., POST OFFICE SITE

Mr. TETREAULT:

1. Did any buildings occupy the site of the post office constructed at Waterloo, Quebec, in 1929?

2. If so, were such buildings demolished?

3. Was a contract awarded for their demolition?

4. If so, to whom was the contract awarded, and upon whose recommendation?

5. What was the contract price?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Yes, brick building formerly used as a post office and which stood in front of the new post office.

2. A contract was awarded for grading and sodding of site and building sidewalks, concrete steps, driveway, etc. The specification of the contract included the removal of the old building, all material of the demolished building becoming the property of the contractor, and to be entirely removed from the site. This contract was awarded to Herve Boyer, the lowest tenderer, for $2,200 after the work had been advertised publicly and the following tenders received:

1. Herve Boyer	$2,200
2. Alphonse Beaumont	2,400
3. H. L. Roy	2,875
4. Alphonse Daris & Hormidas Forand	3,000

3 to 5. Answered by No. 2.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS—TAXATION

Mr. DUFF:

1. What amount of taxes was paid to the government of Nova Scotia by the Canadian National Railways each year from and including 1926 to 1930?

2. Was there a new agreement made in 1930?

3. What sums were paid in 1931 and 1932, respectively?

Mr. MANION:

1. Taxes paid to the government of Nova Scotia by the Canadian National Railways between 1926-1930, inclusive, were as follows:

Year	Railways	Express	Telegraphs
1926	$91,000	$13,750	–
1927	91,000	13,750	–
1928	91,000	13,750	–
1929	91,000	13,750	–
1930	91,000	13,750	$1,876

2. Authority was granted by order in council, P.C. 723, March 30, 1931, to continue arrangement then existing.

3. Taxes paid in 1931 and 1932 were as follows:

Year	Railways	Express	Telegraphs
1931	$91,000	$13,750	$2,934 74
1932	91,000	16,500	3,555 75

TADOUSSAC, QUE., WHARF REPAIRS

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. How many feet of lumber did the Department of Public Works purchase in connection with repairs carried out at the wharf at Tadoussac last year?

2. From whom did the government purchase such lumber?

3. What price was paid per thousand feet of lumber?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

Anse Tadoussac wharf—

1. Bought from Pierre Cid of Tadoussac:—27,024⅓ ft. B.M. of spruce dimension timber at $28 per M. ft. B.M.; 2,058 ft. B.M. of 3-inch spruce deals at $22 per M. ft. B.M.

Bought from A. Chevalier of Quebec:—3,108 ft. B.M. of rock elm at 18 cents per foot.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

Anse a l'Eau wharf—

1. Bought from Pierre Cid of Tadoussac:—10,001 ft. of spruce dimension timber at $29 per 1,000 ft. B.M.; 33,302½ ft. B.M. of 3-inch spruce deals at $22 per 1,000 ft. B.M.; 60 lineal feet of 5-inch by 6-inch spruce timber at 12 cents per lin. ft.

2 and 3. Answered by No. 1.

KILLAM'S MILLS, N.B., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. DUFF:

1. Was B. H. Lounsbury, postmaster at Killam's Mills, New Brunswick, dismissed from the office of postmaster?
2. If so, when, and who replaced him?
3. Why was his dismissal made and on whose recommendation?
4. Was a circular sent to B. H. Lounsbury suggesting that he resign if guilty of partisanship or that he sign and make affidavit if not guilty; if so, on what date was this circular sent?
5. Was investigation held prior to dismissal; if so, who was commissioner?
6. On whose request was inquiry held?

Mr. SAUVE:

1. Yes.
2. (a) 31st October, 1931; (b) Geo. Otty King.
3. Commissioner's report found Postmaster guilty of active political partisanship.
4. (a) Yes; (b) 5th February, 1931.
5. (a) Yes; (b) H. Lester Smith.
6. Dr. O. B. Price, M.P.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE—NEW BRUNSWICK

Mr. VENIOT:

1. What is the total cost of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police in the province of New Brunswick?
2. How many officers and how many men are employed on the force in that province?

Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. $183,961.23.

2. Officers	8
Non-commissioned officers and constables	102
3. Special constables	12
	122

Note.—Of the above mentioned special constables, 8 are members of the marine section, employed on preventive service vessels.

[Mr. Casgrain.]

BONAVENTURE COUNTY PUBLIC WORKS

Mr. MARCIL:

1. What was the sum total authorized by the Minister of Public Works for works done by day labour in Bonaventure county in 1932-33, and how much was expended?
2. Out of what appropriation were such sums authorized?
3. Was this expenditure incurred by way of relief for the unemployed?
4. If so, who selected the men employed?
5. Were these expenditures incurred on the plea of essential undertakings, and, if so, who so reported?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Authorized	$68,640.33
Expended	66,065.63

2. (a) $56,730.33 from Harbours & Rivers Generally, Quebec.

(b) $11,350 from Special Votes made up as follows:—

McInnis Cove, breakwater completion	$4,200
Bonaventure, extension to wharf protection	1,900
Gascons, wharf extension	3,700
		$ 9,800
St. Charles de Caplan, wharf reconstruction (Vote—$21,000)		1,550
Balance of vote for contract work.
		$11,350

(c) $560 from Dredging Ontario & Quebec.

3. The Department of Public Works has no special funds for the relief of the unemployed, but the expenditures on labour gave employment.

4. Foremen of Works.

5. (a) Yes. (b) District Engineer.

PASPEBIAC, QUE., WHARF

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Has J. T. Langlois completed his contract at the wharf at Paspebiac, Quebec, and how much has been paid him?
2. How much was paid J. Loiselle, the overseer?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. (a) Yes; (b) $6,748.74.
2. $279.

ST. CHARLES DE CAPLAN, QUE., WHARF

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Have Ludger Lemieux Limited completed their contract at the wharf at St. Charles de Caplan, Quebec, and how much has been paid them?

2. How much has been paid to the overseer J. A. Briere?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. (a) Yes; (b) $11,428.75.

2. $409.50.

STONE FOR PUBLIC WORKS—BONAVENTURE COUNTY

Mr. MARCIL:

1. What price did the Department of Public Works pay for stone at Anse à la Barbe, St. Godfrey, Port Daniel East, McInnes Cove, Bonaventure, St. Simeon de Bonaventure, Paspebiac, Maria, Carleton and St. Omer, respectively?

2. Was the price uniform; if not, why?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Anse à la Barbe, 40 cents per cubic yard; St. Godfroy, $1 per cubic yard; Port Daniel East, 80 cents per cubic yard; McInnes Cove, 65 cents per cubic yard; Bonaventure, 80 cents per cubic yard; St. Simeon de Bonaventure, none purchased; Paspebiac, none purchased; Maria, $1 per cubic yard; Carleton, none purchased; St. Omer, $1 per cubic yard.

2. Uniform price paid for each locality.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS—CANADIAN DELEGATIONS

Mr. LAVERGNE:

1. What are the names of the members and the persons constituting the Canadian delegations sent annually to the League of Nations from 1920-21 to 1931-32?

2. What are the items making up the total annual expenditures in connection with these trips?

Mr. BENNETT:

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

CAUGHNAWAGA RESERVE

Mr. DUPUIS:

1. What is the total number of Indians of the Chaughnawaga reservation in the province of Quebec: (a) according to the 1931 census; (b) according to the latest statistics?
2. How many among them are 21 years of age and over?
3. How many among them have the right to hold real estate?
4. Has the government received a request or petitions: (a) from the council of the said reservation; (b) from any of the Indians, individually or collectively, expressing a desire to be enfranchised?
5. By virtue of what agreement or treaty did the Indians of the said reservation secure from the Dominion government the rights and privileges which they enjoy in their reservation?
6. On what date or dates was this agreement or treaty concluded?
7. Does the government intend enfranchising the Indians of the Caughnawaga reservation?
8. Should the superintendent of Indian Affairs decide to enfranchise the Indians of the Caughnawaga reservation, either individually or collectively, will the Indians of the said reservation retain the rights and privileges which they now enjoy, or will the said Indians lose their rights by reason of this enfranchisement?
9. From whom have they obtained the rights which they exercise, through the agency of the Department of Indian Affairs, in the seigniory of Sault St. Louis?
10. Since what date have they held these rights?
11. What are the duties and obligations of the Department of Indian Affairs as seignior of the Seigniory of Sault St. Louis?

MOTIONS FOR PAPERS

G. NELPHAT PELLAND

Mr. JACOBS (for Mr. Casgrain):

For a copy of all correspondence, letters and documents exchanged between Mr. G. Nelphat Pelland, chief herdsman at the experimental farm of Sainte-Anne de la Pocatière, and the Minister of Agriculture at Ottawa, or any of the officials of his department at Ottawa or at Quebec, respecting the dismissal of the said G. Nelphat Pelland; also a copy of any petition or petitions forwarded to the hon. Minister of Agriculture in this connection, and a copy of the order in council dismissing the said G. Nelphat Pelland.

GRANDE-RIVIÈRE, QUE., POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. ROBERGE (for Mr. Brasset):

For a copy of all correspondence, affidavits, communications, and other documents, forwarded to the hon. Postmaster General or to the Post Office Department, during the year 1931-1932, respecting Wilfrid Sirois of Grande-Rivière, county of Gaspe, a candiate for the portsmastership at Grande-Rivière.

PUBLIC WORKS—CACOUNA

Mr. GIROUARD (for Mr. Pouliot):

For a copy of all correspondence and reports, respecting an investigation made by the Department of Public Works at Cacouna in 1933, in connection with repairs to the wharf in said locality.

SULLY, TÉMISCOUATA COUNTY, POSTMASTERSHIP

Mr. GIROUARD (for Mr. Pouliot):

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports and other documents in the possession of the Post Office Department, respecting the postmastership of Sully, county of Témiscouata, since October 22, 1932; also a copy of any claim submitted by Mr. Isidore Jean, of that locality.

SINO-JAPANESE DISPUTE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): Mr. Speaker, I wonder whether I am in order when I ask the Prime Minister if he intends to make an official statement with respect to the discussion now going on regarding the proposed embargo on arms and contraband of war shipped and to be shipped to the far east during the present difficulties between China and Japan.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, appropriate action is in process of being completed—I think that is a fair way of putting it—and the order in council when approved will be laid upon the table of the house.

TADOUSSAC-BAIE ST. CATHERINES

On the orders of the day:

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Yesterday the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) asked me a question regarding a subsidy contract between Baie St. Catherines and Tadoussac. This service is being carried on during the winter months on one trip a day. Upon investigation we considered that one trip a day was sufficient for that service.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): If I might say a word, Mr. Speaker, the reason I put the question to the minister was that if there is to be only one trip a day, either in the afternoon or at some other time, many will not be able to avail themselves of that particular trip and will have to pay $5 for a special trip across. It is for that reason I put the question before the house. I do not believe it is fair for the people to have to pay $5 each time they want to use the service.

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT

The house resumed from Tuesday, February 21, consideration in committee of Bill No. 21, to amend the Indian Act—Mr. Murphy—Mr. Ross in the chair.

Section 5 agreed to.

Hon. T. G. MURPHY (Superintendent General of Indian Affairs): We shall proceed with clause 7.

Mr. HEENAN: Have we passed clause 6?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): It was carried before.

Mr. HEENAN: Would the minister revert to clause 6 for a moment?

Mr. MURPHY: Clause 6 was passed at a former sitting.

Mr. HEENAN: That is right, but would the minister allow the committee to revert to clause 6?

Mr. MURPHY: I should like to proceed with clause 7, and then if the hon. member desires possibly we could deal with clause 6.

[Mr. Jacobs.]

On section 7 —Inquiry as to fitness for enfranchisement.

Mr. MURPHY: Before this clause is considered I have an amendment which I should like to have inserted in place of the one now appearing in the bill, and I shall ask my colleague to move it:

Mr. SUTHERLAND: I beg to move in amendment that:

In respect of an Indian of any band who has not made application for enfranchisement under this section or under section 114 of this act, the superintendent general may appoint a board to consist of two officers of the department and a member of the band to which the Indian or Indians under investigation belongs, to make inquiry and report as to the fitness of any Indian or Indians to be enfranchised, and such report shall have the same force and effect and shall be dealt with in the same manner as if the same had been made upon the application of an Indian under this section.

Mr. POWER: That makes it worse. What is the change?

Mr. MURPHY: When the clause was under discussion at a previous sitting the Minister of Justice suggested that as under the act as it is to-day an Indian has the right to apply, that section should be left in the act, and provision made by adding a further subsection whereby the department, in place of the Indian, may take the initial step.

Mr. POWER: The principle which was opposed on the last occasion still remains, namely that the department may, forcibly or by coercion or without the consent of the Indian, enfranchise Indians who are not prepared to make application for enfranchisement. Do I understand that that is still the situation?

Mr. MURPHY: I can hardly agree with the hon. member when he says the principle is to enforce enfranchisement or to coerce the Indians. The department does not wish to do that. The principle in this amendment is the same as it was before.

Mr. POWER: Either by coercion, or whatever term you wish to choose, the principle is that under the provisions of the act an Indian may be forced to accept enfranchisement, even if he does not wish it. If that is the principle I wish to state I am on this occasion as much opposed as I was on the last. In fact, my opposition is even greater since, in the interval, a number of Indians have come to Ottawa and have explained to members of the committee that in the most energetic fashion they are opposed to this action.

Mr. BRADETTE: I maintain that the amendment as it stands in the bill, and the proposed amendment, are absolutely wrong. As I said a few days ago, the measure is in conflict with our electoral legislation, and could very well be left out of the Indian Act. I am convinced that it enters into conflict with the law, and that there would be a conflict of jurisdiction. In my view the section should be taken away entirely from the Indian Act. This is the time and place to do it. Where there are anomalies of this kind the house should avail itself of the opportunity of striking them out. Regardless of what the Minister of Justice may have said on a former occasion, I am convinced that this matter is within the scope of the Dominion Elections Act. I maintain that the present amendment is just as vicious as it was in its previous form, and should be deleted from the Indian Act.

Mr. CASGRAIN: A few days ago, in a newspaper, I saw a memorandum which had been sent to the authorities in Ottawa with respect to this amendment. I believe it came from the band of Indians at Caughnawaga, and expressed dissatisfaction with the amendment before the committee. Has the minister received any such communication from these people?

Mr. MURPHY: I have received none.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Do I understand that through the clause in the bill the officials of the department will have the right to enfranchise the Indian on a reserve—

Mr. BENNETT: No.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: —without his consent or application? Is that right?

Mr. MURPHY: No, it is not right.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Without his application you have the power to enfranchise. Who decides whether he should be enfranchised or not under this new bill?

Mr. MURPHY: The amendment to the act reads as follows:

> In respect of an Indian of any band who has not made application for enfranchisement under this section—

That is, section 110.

> —or under section 114 of this act the superintendent general may appoint a board to consist of two officers of the department and a member of the band to which the Indian or Indians under investigation belongs, to make inquiry and report as to the fitness of any Indian or Indians to be enfranchised, and such report shall have the same force and effect and shall be dealt with in the same manner as if the same had been made upon the application of an Indian under this section.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: In other words, then, the minister has the right, after that report has been received, to enfranchise that Indian whether he wants it or not?

Mr. MURPHY: Subsection 3 of section 110 reads:

> In the course of such inquiry it shall be the duty of the board to take into consideration and report upon the attitude of any such Indian towards his enfranchisement, which attitude shall be a factor in determining the question of fitness.

After the report has been received, the recommendation of the board made, then the Superintendent General may make proper representation to His Excellency in council that such Indian should be enfranchised, and then the necessary action will no doubt be taken. But it does not rest with the Superintendent General to enfranchise him, that is done by His Excellency in council, the same as it is under the present system and has been for some time if not always.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does not the amendment introduced this afternoon, and the section as amended, give the officials of the department the power to enfranchise an Indian against his will or if he does not desire it at all?

Mr. MURPHY: It certainly does not give the officials of the department any such power.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Then I suppose under the old act the Indian made application for enfranchisement—am I right?

Mr. MURPHY: He could, yes.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Under the new act he does not make application.

Mr. MURPHY: He may.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But he does not have to. At the same time the officials of the department, if they think he should be enfranchised, investigate and report to the minister. What does the minister do with that report?

Mr. BENNETT: He reports it to council.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Has the council the power to enfranchise that Indian after the report has been presented?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Well I think, Mr. Chairman, that the ministry are taking too much power in their hands, and they are going to run into a lot of grief, and create a lot of dissatisfaction on the reserves.

Mr. BENNETT: How many cases would there be?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It does not matter if there is only one case. I have a reserve only a few miles from where I live—probably I should be on a reserve myself. Suppose the governor in council, after having received the report of the official, decides to enfranchise an Indian on that reserve without the Indian wishing to be enfranchised. Being enfranchised, he becomes a Canadian citizen to the full extent. He still remains on the reserve; he has privileges that the other Indians have not. Surely it is going to create a lot of conflict among the Indians themselves. And I might say to the minister that there is enough conflict among the Indians now without creating more. Many delegations come to me from that reserve with complaints of this and of that. I have not taken a great deal of notice of these complaints, I have tried to pacify the situation to the best of my ability, and tried to protect the officials, but with this power that the governor in council is taking the minister is going to run into a lot of grief. I do not think he should place himself, or the Indian either, in that position.

Mr. BROWN: Mr. Chairman, we must have failed absolutely the other day to impress upon the minister the grounds of our objection to this bill, if he thinks this new amendment would satisfy the point we raised. It does not touch the point we raised at all. Our objection was that the original amendment to section 110 placed it within the power of the department officials to enfranchise Indians wholesale without consideration of the wish of the Indians at all. I think we can easily see the possibilities of trouble that might arise should the officials undertake to exercise that power. The minister in reply to a question of the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Beaubien) quoted subsection 3, referring to the fact that the attitude of the Indian would be a factor in coming to a decision. How big a factor? That is what we want to know. How big a factor would the attitude of the Indian towards the question be when the department comes to decide the matter?

Mr. MURPHY: Hon. members take the position that it is the intention of the minister or the department or both to enfranchise Indians holus-bolus. There is no such intention. Rather it is to encourage the Indians —I put it that way—to take out the franchise. Section 110 as it is at present reads:

> Upon the application of an Indian of any band, or upon the application of a band on a vote of a majority of the male members of such band of the full age of twenty-one years at a meeting or council thereof summoned for that purpose, according to the rules of the band and held in the presence of the superintendent general or of an officer duly authorized to attend such council, by the governor in council or by the superintendent general, a board may be appointed by the superintendent general to consist of two officers of the department and a member of the band to which the Indian or Indians under investigation belongs, to make inquiry and report as to the fitness of any Indian or Indians to be enfranchised.

Under that section as it has stood for years applications for enfranchisement have not been made, but under section 114 Indians have been enfranchised during the last number of years. It has been preferred by Indians who did not live on the reserves. As I endeavoured to point out the other day, there are numbers of Indians to-day who are professional men, graduates of universities, in business, and who are competing with white men, who are not Indians in the ethnological sense, although they are Indians within the meaning of the act. Under the act they have certain immunities, and they take advantage of them. We claim, as it was claimed in 1920 when this same amendment was put into the act, that these individuals who have obtained that standing should accept their full responsibilities as citizens and be treated as such. But may I again say to the committee, in language as plain as I can make it, that there is no intention to enfranchise Indians holus-bolus, and the condition of affairs suggested to the hon. member for Provencher, I cannot conceive of as arising. It might arise, I do not argue that such a case might not arise, but I cannot conceive that it would. This same provision was on the statute books of this country for two years, and no action such as hon. members fear was taken.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Did the governor in council have power to enfranchise Indians previous to this amendment?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes, for two years, exactly in the way now proposed.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Why was that provision repealed?

Mr. MURPHY: It was repealed in 1922 for reasons of which I am not aware, as I was not here at the time. I do not know why such action was taken.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Is it not a fact that there was very serious objection from many Indians, as a result of which the provision was repealed in 1922? I should just like to say that the more I look into this and think it over the more I am convinced that this is very bad legislation and a great breach of faith with the treaty Indians. It is all very well for the minister to say that some Indians have become professional men and have taken high places in public life; that is not the point. This provision enables the department absolutely to break faith with the treaty Indians of this country.

Mr. MURPHY: No.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I am stating absolutely that that is the fact.

Mr. BENNETT: Might I ask the hon. member if it is not the other way about? Is it not a breach of faith with this country for men to claim immunity after having obtained every possible advantage by way of education and otherwise while still declining to accept responsibility?

Mr. ELLIOTT: I say it is quite the reverse. You enter into a treaty with an Indian or a white man, it matters not which—

Mr. MURPHY: I should like to ask my hon. friend a question. He suggests that there is a breach of faith, and I should like him to particularize that breach and show us wherein it lies.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If my hon. friend had not interrupted that was just what I was going to do. When the government enters into a treaty with the Indians and by that treaty undertakes that their land shall be held for them in trust and that they shall be wards of the government; that their property will not be liable to be taken under execution and that they will enjoy immunity from being contracted out of their property and their rights by white men, then I say for the government to take away those rights against the wishes of the Indians is a grave breach of the undertaking. The Prime Minister suggests that it is the other way around.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course it is.

Mr. ELLIOTT: And the Prime Minister says of course it is. That just shows how little attention has been given this legislation by the Prime Minister and the minister in charge.

Mr. BENNETT: Nothing of the sort; I imagine I know the act better than my hon. friend does, and this does not help it any.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Perhaps that is the reason we find ourselves considering legislation such as this. It is not to the discredit of the Indian that he becomes a good citizen and takes a high place in the community.

Mr. MURPHY: It is all to his credit.

Mr. ELLIOTT: It is all to his credit, but for each Indian who does that there are perhaps a thousand others who are not able to take care of themselves and protect themselves against the white men who live on the borders of the reserves and who are very keen to enter into contracts with the Indians.

Mr. BENNETT: They are not touched by this bill.

Mr. ELLIOTT: Who are not touched?

Mr. BENNETT: Those Indians my hon. friend mentioned are not touched by this bill.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I do not understand the Prime Minister when he says those Indians are not touched by this bill. Any Indian whom the department may choose to enfranchise under this act is touched by it.

Mr. BENNETT: Of course not.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: But the government has that power.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the power conferred. If the hon. gentleman would read the section he would understand it.

Mr. ELLIOTT: If instead of pronouncing such a judgment the right hon. Prime Minister would read the section himself he would see that it does give the government power to enfranchise Indians who otherwise would not be enfranchised. Surely there is no doubt about that. If you have the power to do that you have the power to force enfranchisement upon unwilling Indians, and it was because of that power that the objections were taken which brought about the repeal of the former measure. The Indians objected. It is just begging the question to suggest that the government will not take this action against the wishes of the Indians. Someone suggested the other day that a great many Indians were anxious to become enfranchised. If that is the case let them secure enfranchisement by their own application, not by force. That is just the situation. There is no use beating about the bush; this bill puts in the hands of the minister and of the government the power to take away from the Indians rights which they now have. It puts in the hands of the government the right to make the Indians liable to have their goods taken under execution; their lands which are now held under a location ticket may be taken under a judgment, which cannot be done now. Anyone who knows anything about the Indians knows that as a general rule they are very trusting individuals and that one of the greatest safeguards they have had in the past has been the fact that the white men living not far from the reserves, who as a general rule are anxious to make contracts with them, cannot by means of those contracts put themselves in a position to issue executions and thereby deprive the Indians of their property. That is the great injury that is being done now; that was the great evil that was sought to be avoided by giving the Indians the protection they have had in the past. They are wards of the government, and why? Does my hon. friend mean to suggest that the Indians are better able to care for and protect themselves against improvident contracts now than they were years ago?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I differ entirely.

Mr. BENNETT: We have spent many millions of dollars to make them so.

Mr. McINTOSH: They are not at the point of perfection yet.

Mr. ELLIOTT: I speak with some knowledge of the subject when I say that the Indians have not improved under the care of the government.

Mr. MURPHY: Do I understand the hon. member to say that the Indians have not improved under the system of education and other aids that have been given them for many years?

Mr. ELLIOTT: Not with regard to protecting themselves against contracting away rights which they should not be allowed to lose. That is the position, and even if the Indian has advanced to that stage is he not the best judge of whether or not those rights should be left with him or taken away? I cannot add anything to what I have said already. This legislation is highly objectionable and I believe that it will not be satisfactory to the Indians now any more than it was ten years ago. I do not think it is going to increase the confidence the Indians should have in the protection given them by the government if they are forced to accept legislation of this kind.

Mr. CASGRAIN: A few moments ago, Mr. Chairman, I mentioned that some Indians had protested against this legislation. I find at page 15 of the Montreal Star of February 28, the following dispatch:

Indians Protest Federal Measure
Caughnawaga Mayor and Councillors Now in Ottawa

This dispatch is dated Ottawa, February 28, and is sent by the Canadian Press.

A delegation of Caughnawaga Indians is in Ottawa to present a formal protest in the form of a resolution passed in council by the mayor and councillors against a bill introduced in the House of Commons—

Mr. BENNETT: The reading of this newspaper article is out or order, the hon. gentleman knows, because there is no evidence as to the authenticity of the facts.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It has often been done.

Mr. BENNETT: Then it is time the practice was stopped.

Mr. CASGRAIN: When it is a dispatch taken from the Canadian Press I think we should give some attention to it.

Mr. BENNETT: What has that to do with it?

Mr. CASGRAIN: And it is a paper friendly to the government.

Mr. BENNETT: What has that to do with it? The point is that it reflects—

Mr. CASGRAIN:
—for compulsory enfranchisement—

Mr. BENNETT: Just a moment; I am speaking to a point of order. The point is this. This is a reflection upon the administration of this act; it states that the government is doing so and so. Now, the fact that it is in a newspaper does not give it authenticity or value. The facts can be verified, but to place on record something that appears in a newspaper is merely taking up the time of the house.

Mr. RALSTON: It is in order.

Mr. BENNETT: No; it is a reflection upon the administration of the act.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It might be a reflection on the action of the government—

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member can criticize it, but not a newspaper.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Do you mean to say, Mr. Chairman, that we cannot read a newspaper article to show that certain citizens in the country are protesting against certain things that are being done? This is being done every day in the house. I have heard articles read from on the orders of the day, indicating that certain people have protested against certain things that have been done.

Mr. BENNETT: And the Speaker has ruled that it should stop.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I submit that this is not disrespectful. I think that people may protest against legislation that is being enacted—

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member can do the protesting, but not a newspaper.

Mr. CASGRAIN: The newspapers have a right to express their views, and a member can comment on what is being said. If the minister will permit me, I will go further than what is reported. My purpose in reading the article is to elicit information from the minister regarding certain treaties and acts whereby the Indians claim that they have the right not to be subjected to this legislation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): Just a moment—

Mr. McINTOSH: Will you not allow the hon. member to read the article?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): A point of order has been raised.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Will you give your ruling, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): The article, I understand, is a criticism of the house.

Mr. CASGRAIN: No, Mr. Chairman. I submit that there is no criticism of the house. A certain band of Indians, a certain section of the community, has the right to protest against certain legislation which is being enacted, and when a petition is reported in the newspapers indicating such a protest against the enactment of legislation proposed by the government, I submit that a member has the right to read and comment upon the article. Very often, when there is criticism in the country, it is reduced into the form of resolutions by boards of trade or other public bodies and such resolutions are published in the newspapers, and they are read in the house, sometimes in the course of debate on the budget.

Mr. BENNETT: In most of your speeches, I am bound to say.

Mr. CASGRAIN: My right hon. friend when he was himself in opposition read such protests made by different organizations.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): What the hon. member is reading is a criticism of proceedings now under way, and I do not think that that is in order.

Mr. CASGRAIN:

—for Indians, a bill sponsored and endorsed by the Minister of the Interior.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): The hon. member is not in order in reading the article.

Mr. RALSTON: I know, sir, you will be fair in the matter. May I ask that you read the rule? The rule, as I understand it, is that no member may read from newspapers comments reflecting on the proceedings of the house. It is in the nature of privilege, but it has nothing to do with criticism of the government.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): This is criticism of procedure—

Mr. CASGRAIN: No, Mr. Chairman; I submit that there is no such criticism.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): That is my ruling.

Mr. CASGRAIN: It is criticism of certain proposed legislation and as such we have a right to criticize it. Also, we have the right to show that certain public bodies or associations concerned with legislation are entitled to state in the press their criticism—

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. CASGRAIN: —and we have the right to explain what that criticism is. Now, we have here in a report of the Canadian Press a certain dispatch—

Mr. BENNETT: To my certain knowledge many of the reports sent out by the Canadian Press have been wholly inaccurate.

Mr. CASGRAIN: There is article 98 of the criminal code.

Mr. McINTOSH: Will you name some of the inaccurate reports?

Mr. BENNETT: I will name one that came to my attention this morning, a dispatch in connection with an international matter dealing with fisheries. I do not know whether the reports have a particular political tinge, but apparently they have in view of their authorship.

Mr. CASGRAIN:

—the deputation consists of—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): Order. I have given my ruling and I will stand by it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: What is the ruling?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): The ruling is that the hon. member may not proceed with the reading of that article.

Mr. CASGRAIN: But what is the ruling?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): I have given my ruling; you cannot do it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Do what? Then I appeal from your ruling, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): This is the submission: In the course of debate on an amendment to clause 7 of a bill to amend the Indian Act, Mr. Casgrain seeks to quote from an article in a newspaper commenting on proceedings now before committee of the whole. This is ruled out of order under rule 306.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I did not comment on the proceedings of the house; the newspaper article does not comment on the proceedings. It is a protest—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): That is the same thing. Is the committee satisfied now?

Mr. CASGRAIN: I wish you would read it.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): Rule 306 reads:

It is not in order to read articles in newspapers, letters or communications emanating from persons outside the house and referring to, or commenting on, or denying anything said by a member or expressing any opinion reflecting on proceedings within the house.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, with all deference I contend that you must submit to the Speaker what has actually been read. It is not for you to decide whether it is or is not in order; that is what the Speaker has to determine. We should have the writing in question in order that the Speaker can decide whether it comes within that rule.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): I am submitting this newspaper as to what took place.

Mr. RALSTON: With all deference I protest, because you must submit the thing which was being read, and not your own interpretation.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): An appeal has been made and it is not for me to decide anything.

[Mr. Casgrain.]

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman of the committee made the following report:

In the course of the debate on an amendment to clause 7 of Bill No. 21, to amend the Indian Act, Mr. Casgrain began to quote articles from newspapers commenting on the proceedings then before the committee of the whole. The chairman having ruled that to make such quotations is out of order, an appeal is made from the chairman's ruling.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Speaker, may we now discuss a point of order?

Mr. SPEAKER: It is not now debatable; it was debatable before the chairman.

Mr. RALSTON: There is no debate upon Your Honour's ruling?

Mr. SPEAKER: This is an appeal from a ruling of the chair.

Mr. RALSTON: There is no debate?

Mr. SPEAKER: The ruling of the chair is a matter for the house to decide. The Speaker merely has the duty of putting the question to the house.

Mr. McINTOSH: We know how it will turn out.

Mr. SPEAKER: The chairman having ruled that such quotations are out of order, the decision is appealed from.

Mr. RALSTON: Does Your Honour rule that there is no debate upon the motion?

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no debate.

Mr. RALSTON: No debate upon the motion Your Honour has put?

Mr. SPEAKER: There is no motion before the house.

Mr. RALSTON: Your Honour has put a motion as to whether the ruling—

Mr. SPEAKER: I am taking the sense of the house as to whether or not the ruling of the chairman shall be sustained; it is not debatable.

Mr. RALSTON: It is a question and Your Honour rules that the question is not debatable?

Mr. SPEAKER: I do.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Lo, the poor Indian.

Mr. MacINNIS: I should like to vote upon this matter without prejudice and I should like to know the rule under which the chairman has ruled this to be out of order.

The house divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

INDIAN ACT AMENDMENT

The house again in committee on Bill No. 21, to amend the Indian Act.—Mr. Murphy —Mr. Ross in the chair.

Mr. CASGRAIN: When I was prevented from quoting from the article to the effect that a delegation of these people had come to Ottawa, I was going on to say that their objections to the legislation now before us are on the following grounds: First, that there are treaties existing between the United States and Great Britain, in which both nations recognize the rights of the Indians as an independent people; secondly, there is another treaty which provides that the Indians shall not be denied their tribal rights; and thirdly, the Jay treaty of 1794 recognizes the tribes as being outside the circle of British subjects in relation to citizenship and sovereignty. I understand that those were the objections formulated in the resolution that was adopted by the council of the tribe at Caughnawaga, and that the council has delegated a certain number of representatives to present their representations to the government at Ottawa. I understand that the names of those who are at the head of the council and of the delegation which has the resolution in its hands are Mayor Joseph Lefebvre, and councillors Angus Diabo, Alex. K. Beauvais and Stephen W. Delisle. They have been entrusted by the Indians to present to the government their objections to this legislation which the government wants to force through the house in relation to the tribes.

I have asked the minister whether he has received any communication from the mayor or people of the Indian tribe of Caughnawaga, and he has replied that he has not received any communication from them or had any interview with them. But it may be that some of his officials have had some communication or interviews with these people, and so in fairness to the house and the country, and in fairness to these various Indian tribes who are much concerned in this matter, I think we should have from the minister, in view of the objections to this legislation by the Indians on the ground of the various treaties I have mentioned, a clean breast, and that the whole situation should be put before the house and the country. I think the minister should also state whether he does not consider worthy of consideration the objections which are being put forward by the Indians against this legislation, based upon the treaties I have mentioned. If those objections are to be considered, I do not think we should proceed further with this legislation until that has been done, but we should hear the representatives of these people and find out whether they want this legislation and what objections they have to it. That was the course taken when the Indian Act was amended in 1920. I remember that at that time a special committee of the house was set up, and the representatives of the various tribes all over the country came to Ottawa and made their representations, after which certain legislation was enacted to protect the Indians in view of the treaties which they had with Great Britain and with Canada. I believe the present legislation does away with these privileges. I think the minister ought to give all information possible to the house, in view of the treaties I have just mentioned.

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, in view of the observations made by the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Elliott) I venture to speak to the committee briefly with respect to this matter. This country has treaties with the Indians; those treaties confer rights and grant immunities. But that has not precluded parliament from legislating when dealing with Indian matters; neither has it precluded legislatures, in some instances, from dealing with similar matters. That is, parliament has enacted national laws by which Indians are bound. The whole criminal code applies to Indians, as we all know, and so do many other acts. We have also expended very large sums of money in the education of Indians, and it has been our boast—I think with some degree of fairness—that we have greatly improved their condition. The hon. member for West Middlesex does not think that, and possibly he has good grounds for his conclusions. I am not stating that his judgment in the matter is wrong; it is a matter of opinion. But I have lived for thirty years or more very near large Indian reserves, and I have been more or less familiar with their administration. There is a very large reserve east of Calgary, a Sarcee reserve not far away, a Stony reserve not far distant, and the Bloods have a large reserve near Macleod. I recall an occasion upon which a portion of land belonging to the Stonies was acquired by an enterprise in which I had an interest. I remember the Indians coming down here and putting their case before the department, speaking excellent English, and asking that a certain measure of compensation be given to them for the property they were willing to sell. I remember, further, taking the Indian chief up to the parliamentary restaurant where he had dinner with me, and I was struck with his wide knowledge not only of business but of everything touching the matter we were considering. It made a very definite impression upon my mind at the time, and was, in my view, evidence of the fact that the privileges which we had extended had not been in vain.

From time to time this parliament has exercised jurisdiction in enacting legislation which it was believed was in the interest of the nation as a whole and, incidentally, in the interest of the Indians whom it directly affected. It has been suggested, for instance that, the desire to enfranchise some of the Indians had political colour. Obviously any such assertion is negatived by the fact that if they were enfranchised against their will they would not vote for the government that did it. I believe that is a fair answer to make to that. On the first point, we have said that if an Indian desires the franchise, that right should be afforded to him. That right is afforded to him because he has by his education and by his position in the community indicated that he desires no longer to claim the immunities, but to claim the rights of citizenship, and he is enfranchised accordingly. That has been going on for some time.

I come now to the next point, the controversial point which has had so much consideration in this house in the last three or four days. Is it not desirable, and I put it on that ground, assuming that parliament has jurisdiction—which I do, for the purpose of all I have to say—is it not desirable that one possessed of education, one possessed of facilities for taking his position in the community, and one who practises a learned profession, should not be compelled to accept his rights? That is the question. That is all there is in it. If it is felt that this section confers upon the government too great a power, the minister in his statements to the house has made it abundantly clear that he has no desire to utilize any governmental machinery for the purpose of imposing any unfair obligations on the Indians. And if after inquiry by a county court judge, an officer of the department and a representative of the band, constituting a committee to determine whether or not in the light of all the circumstances, the money expended, the education secured and the profession he is practising, or whatever it may be, it is felt that a man should not longer claim the benefits and immunities under the act, but should assume the responsibilities and rights of citizenship, then that is all that is involved in the measure before us. If it is felt, as the hon. member for West Middlesex seemed to think, that the government had some purpose in the machinery suggested, I may say that this is purely an administrative matter which must be passed upon by the governor in council. In other words the minister himself has no power to do it, but when the report is made to him he submits it to council—that is, to all his colleagues—for their consideration. That means that a majority of the cabinet must, by appropriate action, determine what course shall be taken.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Is it not a fact that when a minister of the crown brings a recommendation before the governor in council, his recommendation is accepted as a matter of form?

Mr. BENNETT: I fancy we would have no difficulty in getting any ex-minister to give evidence on that point.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): It would be passed if we could get it passed.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member who has just spoken has answered the question. Under our institutions there is no obligation upon the council to do other than give the fairest possible consideration, in the light of the individual knowledge of each member of the council, the special matter submitted for its consideration.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: It would not be possible for the council to give special consideration, would it?

Mr. BENNETT: It is done. May I say that the Minister of Labour explained that under an order in council passed in 1930 there can, by order in council, be admitted into this country only certain people. Each one of those applications is accompanied by a report. Each individual case is considered, and members of parliament who make representation may be perfectly certain that upon the application as it comes before council there is a memorandum to the effect that a recommendation has been made by this or that particular member of parliament indicating whether or not action favourable or unfavourable should be taken. In the present and the last administrations it happens that the Prime Minister has been president of the council, which means that he presides. If he is there he signs the order in council. I can only say this, that my experience has been that every order in council has been looked upon with some degree of care, and sometimes in the opinion of the ministers with too much care, by the president of the council and his colleagues.

I have merely indicated to the committee the circumstances under which the minister has submitted this legislation to the house. There is no political object behind it. Obviously there can be none. There is only an effort to prevent, by any individual, abuse of his position. That is, there is an effort to prevent abuse by a person who has attained a position of considerable importance in a community. It has been my privilege to speak to many highly educated Indians. I recall a very learned disquisition made to me once by a medical man who came from one of the Indian tribes, and most of you will recall the fact that for many years the head of the Foresters organization was a very distinguished Indian from, I believe, the Six Nations. Under those circumstances perhaps the committee will realize that this is an effort to prevent abuses by reason of immunities. That is all. But I grasp the force of the argument that was made here this afternoon that possibly two members from the department might give too much of a governmental character to the inquiry. Therefore, as in the case of naturalization, where the county court judge makes inquiries, there might be an amendment drawn substituting as one of the three members of the board a county court judge, or a judge of the superior court having jurisdiction in the area affected. I think that might meet the difficulties that one hon. member urged so strongly this afternoon. With that in view I suggest that the other sections of the bill be discussed and that this section stand, and the minister will endeavour to submit to the committee an amendment that will not be offensive to their sense of justice or fair play in dealing with those who, as was properly said by the hon. member for West Middlesex, are the wards of the nation. But being the wards of the nation implies that we are endeavouring to secure for them a position whereby they reach their majority. Just as wards in court are under the jurisdiction and control of the court, and have no contractual or other legal responsibility until they are twenty-one, so in this case we have spent millions of money for the purpose of bringing these wards to that point of maturity of judgment and understanding that they may be able freely to contract for themselves. I admit, as said by the hon. member for Provencher, that it must be done with discretion and without regard to any considerations other than those mentioned by the minister. If the committee is agreed, the section can stand and we will proceed to the consideration of the other sections, and endeavour to submit another amendment along the lines I have indicated.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): May I suggest, as the matter is to stand, that when the clause is redrafted some attention be given to the fact that this is effective on reservations, and with respect to bands living on reservations. I have refrained from taking part in the discussion because I did not have a very clear grasp of what the department was endeavouring to do by this legislation. I believe that a good deal of progress has been made in Indian education, and I think that we are now seeing the results. I can quite appreciate the fact that if an Indian is not residing on a reserve, is not an accredited member of a band, it might be desirable that he be enfranchised, and that legislation necessary for that purpose be enacted. But take for example, the case cited by the minister the other evening when this proposed legislation was under discussion, that of an Indian who, taking advantage of the educational facilities furnished him, sets up in business and is in possession of considerable property on the reserve. I know of not one but perhaps hundreds of Indians who are in that happy position, who are taking advantage of the free land on the reserves, of the facilities they have under the provisions of the Indian Act, are making money and are creditable citizens. But here comes the point: Can you force that man to accept enfranchisement and become a Canadian citizen, and then, because you have done that, attempt to enforce all the laws of taxation which you think desirable and necessary against him as a resident of the band? Under the provisions of section 110 he left the band, was no longer a member of it, took his share of band funds and was created a citizen with full citizen's rights. That is where I see a good deal of difficulty. If you are going to apply it only to the Indians who have taken advantage of that, who have received their share of band funds, all well and good. That was all provided for before he made application for enfranchisement, when he was a member of the band; then his application in due course reached the Superintendent General. But all that is superseded under the proposed amendment; without that process you insist on his becoming enfranchised if the report of the committee is favourable. The suggestion of the Prime Minister of course will be helpful, that a larger protection will be offered him; but undoubtedly he will object. I never knew an Indian yet who, when you attempted to do something for him or with him that he was opposed to, did not object most strenuously and stir up a tremendous amount of trouble in the band. That is exactly the trouble we were encountering in 1922. I want to warn the minister and the department that by compulsory enfranchisement of Indians who are members of a band located on a reserve they face the possibility of considerable difficulty. You may surround it by safeguards to avoid that difficulty, but I point out that when you attempt to take that action it may lead to a great deal of trouble.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Before we pass from this I want to draw the attention of the committee to a point I raised the last time this measure was before us, namely, the position of the Indian who has never been a treaty Indian. I refer specifically to a very large number of people living in the section from which I come, hundreds of them who migrated from the shores of Hudson's bay just about the time the Canadian Pacific was projected through that country and the following decade, who never have been treaty Indians, and who from the time of their migration adapted themselves to the white man's mode of life. If I understood the minister correctly, and the interpretation given by the hon. Minister of Justice, it was to the effect that these people are still Indians, that they have not the rights of citizenship as other Canadians have, and are not entitled to the franchise. They are not entitled to any immunities under any treaty with the Canadian parliament. They are making their own way in the world, and measuring up splendidly, as many other Indians who have been treaty Indians are. But if the act now leaves them stranded, so to speak, neither Indians nor white men, something should be done while these amendments are being prepared to take care of them. I stated, and I restate here, that right in the town in which I live there are several hundred Indians of that class, free Indians, just as fine citizens as you find anywhere, and something should be done for them.

As to the principle of the bill itself, I support absolutely, after an experience of fifty years in the study of the Indian character, the effort being made by the department to enfranchise these men and women, when the Indian department, representing the Canadian people, through its efforts has raised their standard of life to a point where they are well able to stand up alongside of white people and to accept the responsibilities that go with that position. But I would like the minister to give a definite ruling as to the status of the Indians to whom I have particularly referred, and what is going to be done to take care of them. They are not treaty Indians; they just came down from the north and settled alongside of white men, hundreds and thousands of them over the whole country from the Manitoba boundary east.

Mr. DUPUIS: Before this section stands I should like to do my duty, as representing the county of Laprairie, to the Caughnawaga Indians, whose reserve is situated in my constituency. Those Indians sent a delegation to Ottawa, as the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay said, and I had the pleasure of meeting them. I do not know whether or not they saw the minister; I am under the impression that they told me so, but I would not say so definitely. At all events they had a resolution, of which they gave me a copy. This resolution reads as follows:

> We, the councillors of the Caughnawaga reserve, assembled in council this 25th day of February, A.D. 1933, do beg to approach you relative to the passing and adoption by the House of Commons making it compulsory for the Indians of Canada to be enfranchised.
> It would be severe calamity to our Indians at this present time should we be compelled to follow the laws of the white man in that we were not given the advantages of seriously studying and comprehending the difficult problems and laws of the British commonwealth.

In dealing with those treaties between Great Britain and the United States wherein the independence of the Indians of the Six Nations, both Great Britain and the United States have confessed that the Six Nations were an independent people. The supreme courts of both countries furthermore recognized those treaties as inviolable.

In the life of Sir Frederick Haldimand, Making Canada V. 3, page 356, the question of the sovereignty of the Indians was very embarrassing, in that it would have been impossible on any theory of the laws of the nations for Great Britain or the United States to establish a prerogative in themselves to enforce the laws of the white man upon owners of this country.

In dealing with the Jay Treaty of Amity, Mallory page 590 in 1794 the rights of the Indians was recognized. Moreover the language used there treated those tribes as being outside the circle of British subjects in relation to citizenship and sovereignty.

To make this admission still stronger that article was amplified by amendment of 1796 Mallory, page 607, which provides that no treaty made or to be made by either party with another nation or with any other Indian tribe should be construed to deny those tribal rights.

We therefore beg and pray that those treaties be maintained and recognized by Great Britain and her commonwealth and that the Superintendent General of Indian Affairs take into serious consideration our request that those laws dealing with the enfranchisement of the Six Nations Indians be not adopted and enforced upon them.

This petition is signed by Mayor Joe Lefebvre and Councillors A. K. Beauvais, John Lacombe, Andrew Delisle, Angus Diabo, and Jos. L. Beauvais.

I agree with the statement of the right hon. Prime Minister that the question of enfranchising those Indians who by education and mode of life have put themselves on the same level as other citizens, deserves consideration, and I am glad the Prime Minister made the suggestion that section 7 should be amended. It seems to me that this section puts in the hand of the government —any government that might be in power— the opportunity to bring about enfranchisement contrary to equity and fairness. Governments are only human; sometimes they are bound to fail and sometimes they are tempted. I am afraid that if section 110 is amended as suggested at present the government would be tempted to abuse its powers, so I am glad this jurisdiction is to lie with the courts. Of course I will wait until the amendment is brought forward before discussing its merits, but I was wondering who would decide what Indians should be brought before the courts. If this decision is to be left with the department it seems to me rather arbitrary.

[Mr. Dupuis.]

The Caughnawaga Indians have met five or six times in general assembly to protest against this legislation, and particularly against section 7. As I have said before, those Indians in general are well educated, and one would have difficulty in distinguishing them from other citizens, but it seems to me they should decide for themselves whether or not they wish to become enfranchised. They contend that this is a right which should be theirs alone. They also believe, and I think they are right, that this freedom is granted them by the treaties made between the Six Nations and Great Britain on the one hand and the Six Nations and the United States on the other. I took the trouble to look up the treaty of Ghent which was agreed to in 1814. Article IX of that treaty reads as follows:

> And His Britannic Majesty engages, on his part, to put an end immediately after the ratification of the present treaty, to hostilities with all the tribes or nations of Indians with whom he may be at war at the time of such ratification, and forthwith to restore to such tribes or nations respectively all the possessions, rights and privileges which they may have enjoyed or been entitled to in one thousand eight hundred and eleven, previous to such hostilities: Provided always that such tribes or nations shall agree to desist from all hostilities against His Britannic Majesty, and his subjects, upon the ratification of the present treaty being notified to such tribes or nations, and shall so desist accordingly.

If we give a rigid interpretation to this section I humbly submit that it guarantees the Indians their rights, privileges and possessions and states that no one has the power to take them away. Those who are conversant with the international laws, those who know these special laws, should study the matter to see whether their contentions are absolutely right when the claim is made that whatever we might do to take away these rights from the Indians would be anti-constitutional.

Mr. McINTOSH: Before we proceed to the consideration of another section, may I say a few words with regard to this bill which is intended to amend the Indian Act. I hope that by the time we are through with it the bill will really amend the act and not tend to destroy it. I want to say something for two reasons. One is that when the measure was before the house the other day I made certain constructive statements which I should like to supplement on the present occasion; and another reason why I think I should take part in this discussion is the fact that in the constituency of North Battleford we have quite a number of Indian reserves.

There are Indian reserves both south and north of the north Saskatchewan river. In northwestern Saskatchewan therefore, there are a considerable number of reserves. My experience with the Indians on these reserves extends over a period of some twenty-one years and I think I know something about the work that has been done to build up Indian character and to fit as many Indians as possible for the higher duties of Canadian citizenship.

The results that have followed the Indian legislation in this country up to the present time have been satisfactory, as the Prime Minister has said. I think the legislation on behalf of the Indians, passed under previous governments whether Liberal or Conservative, has been in the right direction. In my own riding of North Battleford there are two splendid Indian mission schools situated towards the west of the constituency, at the beautiful village of Onion Lake, one Anglican and the other Catholic. I am satisfied that both these mission schools have done excellent work, which has been largely instrumental in teaching the Indians progressive agriculture and fitting them for the duties of citizenship in that great western land.

I said I would supplement the remarks I made the other day with reference to this measure. At that time I endeavoured to make the point that the board which it is intended to set up by this legislation—or rather, the board which it was intended to set up until notice of the amendment was given this afternoon—was departmentally lopsided, and therefore I opposed it. I thought that since the board which the government then intended to set up was onesided it should be altered, and the proposition I put before the house then was that one man should represent the department. I think that is fundamentally sound. I may say I have every confidence in the departmental officials. In the second place I pointed out that the Indians ought to be represented, and that too is fundamentally sound. Thirdly, I endeavoured to define the status of the community under any new legislation that might be enacted, and I submitted that the community ought to be represented. With the remarks of the Prime Minister this afternoon, to the effect that the judge of the district court ought to be the third member of the tribunal, I heartily agree; I think he is on sound ground. The other day when I spoke that was the position I took; I held that the ground the government then occupied was unsound. I contended that what was then proposed did not show good judgment. Therefore, since the department is to have one representative and the band another, and if the district court judge is to be the third member, I think that fills the bill exactly, as far as this section of the measure goes. The suggestion I made to the committee last week was that the community ought to be represented, and if it is represented by the district court judge then I think we shall have a triangular board which will be quite acceptable and which ought to give satisfaction in any matter brought before it.

In giving power to any board one of the first things that should be considered by any responsible minister of the crown, by any department, by any government or any prime minister is the question as to just what power is being extended. What power are you giving away? As Canadians, whether Conservatives or Liberals or Commonwealthers —because apparently we have some of those people in Canada—and irrespective of politics, we should ask ourselves that question as to what power we are giving away and in whose hands we are placing it. That is the essence of liberalism and I am not afraid to put that question to the house. On that ground I stood the other day, and to-day, in view of the fact that the bill has been qualified, I heartily agree with the modification in the structure of the board. I do not think that any power we placed in the hands of the board as thus reconstructed will be detrimental to Canada, to the Indian tribes or to the community. I feel therefore inclined to support it.

In conclusion, may I say that there are Indians who in my opinion should be enfranchised. There are Indians who now have the right to vote; historically they have a perfect right to exercise the franchise. In many of the great movements in the west and in our national history the Indians have played a prominent part, and therefore we are only doing what is right when we seek to put them in that position in which they can be enfranchised. And, sir, I believe that the measure now before the committee, as modified, ought to fill the requirements so far as the Indians, the community affected, and the nation at large are concerned.

Mr. BRADETTE: The charge is frequently made against legislative bodies that there are too many laws, and I believe that this is one illustration. This section of the act, I would point out, is in conflict with the Dominion Elections Act. The Prime Minister, I know, said a few moments ago that so far as politics was concerned the application of this legislation or of the act as it has stood was absolutely negative. I believe he is right in that regard. But so far as the Dominion Elections Act is concerned, this parliament has given the right to a certain class of Indians to vote; returned soldiers, Indians who took part in the great war, and their wives, have the right to vote. That of course comes under the election act, but in the application of this section you widen the scope of that provision. I believe therefore that this would be the place to do away with the charge against legislative bodies, to which I have referred, and which has been proved in a great many instances, that legislatures are enacting more and more laws some of which are in conflict with existing legislation. Surely it should be possible for the Indian department to incorporate this section in the election Act. I should be glad if the minister would answer this question: How will the principle apply to my own section of the country where we have no treaty Indians? Under the election act only returned Indians, veterans of the great war, and their wives have the right to vote. Will any of the other Indians in my section of the country get the franchise?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I understand that section 7 is to stand for redrafting, and that section 110 will remain as it was?

Mr. MURPHY: I have no desire to prevent any hon. member from speaking, but these matters can be discussed when the proposed amendment is again before the committee. In order that progress may be made I would ask that this clause stand and that we proceed with the discussion of other sections of the bill.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Do I understand that section 110 will remain as it was?

Mr. MURPHY: There will be no change in the old section except that another clause will be added.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: That is the one which we have been assured will be redrafted?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: With the manoeuvring that has taken place on this simple enough question the minister can understand why the committee has been aroused and become suspicious as to his real intentions with regard to this bill. I have always looked upon the minister as being a very mild-mannered gentleman, one almost without guile, but I am wondering if I have misjudged him in that respect. From now on we are going to scrutinize this bill very carefully and especially any new amendments. I think it is a disgrace that the hon. member for Charlevoix-Saguenay (Mr. Casgrain) was prevented from reading the article which appeared in the Montreal Star with respect—

Mr. GUTHRIE: The hon. member cannot reflect upon the house in that way.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Am I not permitted to express my opinion on that?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): I must insist.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Very good, that makes it all the worse for the committee, not for me. You will correct me if I do not get everything dotted just right, but I think it should be noted that not only the member for Charlevoix but also another member on my left repeated the article and the Indian representations against these amendments.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): A different article altogether.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: He got the goods across anyhow. That is all I want to say at the present time.

Mr. NICHOLSON: I asked a question a few moments ago as to what action was to be taken with regard to Indians who are not treaty Indians and never have been. A confusion exists in the section of the country to which the hon. member for North Timiskaming (Mr. Bradette) referred because of the doubt which prevails in this regard. These Indians were born in Canada; they never have been treaty Indians and never have been in any sense wards of the state.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Are they members of a band?

Mr. NICHOLSON: They are not members of a band, as I understand the meaning of a band of Indians. They have no chief; they are simply following the white man's mode of life, but they are Indians so far as race is concerned.

Mr. MURPHY: I have no desire to delay the progress of my own bill, but I think this question could be answered when the proposed amendment to this section is again before the committee. The hon. member stated that he propounded his question a few moments ago, but because of the noise around me I could not hear him correctly. I intended to read his remarks in Hansard and answer his question when the bill was next before the committee.

Mr. NICHOLSON: If there is any doubt as to the position which these people occupy, I think the matter should be settled once and for all while the bill is being considered.

Mr. MURPHY: I will take the matter into consideration.

Section stands.

On section 8—Residing or hunting upon any reserve without authority.

Mr. ARTHURS: I should like to suggest an amendment to this section. This is a penal section intended to keep aliens or others who have no business thereon off the Indian reserves. In the past any actions taken against parties who have misconducted themselves in any way have been taken before the Indian agent, and to my mind that is a very unsatisfactory procedure. I would suggest that the section be amended by adding the words "before a justice of the peace or a magistrate having competent jurisdiction" after the word "conviction" in the thirty-ninth line. I think this amendment would improve the conduct of cases under this section.

Mr. NEILL: Does the hon. gentleman suggest that the Indian agents are not competent?

Mr. ARTHURS: There is always the impression that while they may be competent, they may be also somewhat biased. We have had the same experience in Ontario under our game act where certain cases are tried before the wardens. I do not think this amendment could do any possible harm.

Mr. CASGRAIN: I think the amendment proposed has some merit and ought to be considered.

Mr. MURPHY: The Indian agent is given the powers of a magistrate by order in council if such action is deemed desirable, and otherwise he has certain powers under the act. Section 152 reads:

> Every Indian agent shall for all the purposes of this act or of any other act respecting Indians, and with respect to—
> (a) any offence against the provisions of this act or any other act respecting Indians;
> (b) any offence against the provisions of the Criminal Code respecting the inciting of Indians to commit riotous acts; or > (c) any offence by any Indian or non-treaty Indian against any of the provisions of those parts of the Criminal Code relating to vagrancy and offences against morality; > be ex officio a justice of the peace and have the power and authority of two justices of the peace, anywhere within the territorial limits of his jurisdiction as a justice, as defined in his appointment or otherwise defined by the governor in council, whether the Indian or non-treaty Indian charged with or in any way concerned in or affected by the offence, matter or thing to be tried, investigated or dealt with, is or is not within his ordinary jurisdiction, charge or supervision as an Indian agent.

The hon. member asks that the proposed amendment be further amended to take away from the Indian agent the power to deal with certain offences which may be committed. There are certain sections of the country where the services of a justice of the peace or a magistrate are not available, and in such cases it is necessary that the Indian agent should have the powers given to him by the act as well as the additional powers granted in some cases by order in council. Since taking over the administration of the department I have issued instructions that where the services of a magistrate are available they shall be utilized rather than having the case tried by the agent himself. I agree with the hon. member that it is not advisable in some cases that the agent should sit on the case because it might well happen that he might also be the prosecutor. However, may I say that if we amended this section in the manner suggested by the hon. member, there are many other sections of the act which should be amended similarly.

Mr. CASGRAIN: That would not do any harm.

Mr. ARTHURS: The objection I raised was largely on that very ground, that it is absolutely unfair that the judge should also be the prosecutor. I am not speaking from any particular personal knowledge of this act. In my county, where there are several reserves, offences in all cases are tried before the magistrate, which I think is proper. I am just bringing up this point which I think must be plain to anybody who considers the matter, that in case of offences under this act the agent would be both judge and jury and prosecutor combined.

Mr. HEENAN: Perhaps the minister would answer the question I asked some time ago in connection with section 6, which we can probably discuss in conjunction with sections 7 and 8. It will be observed that under section 8 a penalty is provided for a person who is found on the reserve and is unable to prove that he is there for some legitimate purpose. Reading that in conjunction with section 6, would any hawker or peddler going on the reserve without permission be subjected to the penalties provided under section 115? The reason I ask that is this: In the part of the country which I represent there are some reserves on which there are no Indian merchants. The Indians in that part of the country do not remain on the reserve, but go out hunting and fishing and berry-picking, only returning to the reserve during treaty time, and the consequence is that they have to be grubstaked by some merchant to enable them to carry on until treaty time. Now under section 6, would one of these merchants, if he went on the reserve to sell goods to an Indian or collect a debt, be subject to the penalties of section 115? It would appear to me as if he would.

Mr. MURPHY: Section 6, which has been adopted by the committee, amends section 101 of the act, which reads as follows:

> The chief or chiefs of any band in council may likewise and subject to such confirmation, make rules and regulations as to—> (a) the care of the public health; and so forth. By section 6 of this bill we have added a new paragraph (k) to section 101, reading:

> Regulating the operations of hawkers, peddlers or others coming on the reserve to sell, or take orders for, wares or merchandise.

We are simply adding that paragraph to those already in the section by which the band itself regulates certain matters on the reserve.

Mr. HEENAN: In other words, the regulating of peddlers or hawkers comes under the jurisdiction of the band itself?

Mr. MURPHY: That is correct. Section 115 is designed for another purpose entirely, namely, to provide a penalty for loitering on the reserve when those so loitering cannot prove to the satisfaction of the court that they were on the reserve for some legitimate purpose.

Mr. HEENAN: Would the minister tell me how it is that, the Indian bands having given permission to a merchant, say, to go on a reserve, when the merchant arrives there he is met by the Indian agent who tells him that he has received a blanket order from the department at Ottawa prohibiting him from going on the reserve? To give a concrete case, last year some business men who had been doing business with the Indians went on the reserve to collect and sell and were told by the Indian agent that notwithstanding what the Indian band themselves desired, there was a blanket order from Ottawa under which the merchants were not permitted to go on the reserve. I want to point out to the minister that in my section of the country it had only this effect, that these business men went on to an island just a few yards away from the reserve, and the Indians went over to them, and in that way circumvented the order. I would ask the minister to clear up that point. If the band have full control, without any dictation from Ottawa, I am quite satisfied.

Mr. MURPHY: I think the hon. member has reference to a departmental order which was issued last year to all Indian agents in the dominion, which prohibited a transient trader from entering on the reserve for a period of thirty days at treaty time. The object of that order was to protect legitimate traders, so to speak, who carry on business on the reserve during twelve months of the year, and who in the past have been subjected on certain reserves, possibly not all, to competition from transient traders who come there at that particular time with merchandise and sell their goods to the Indians, and in many cases take practically all the treaty money which has been paid to the Indians. The trader who is licensed to be on the reserve during twelve months of the year in many cases has extended credit to the Indians in order to enable them to carry on, and it was felt that in fairness to these men they should receive the additional protection which was given by the departmental order referred to.

Section agreed to.

On section 9—Buying or selling contrary to the act.

Mr. POWER: By this amendment every Indian who sells any cattle or other animals or any grain, root crops or other produce, contrary to the provisions of the act, is liable on summary conviction to a fine. Is that the only change here?

Mr. MURPHY: Yes.

Mr. POWER: I suppose it is a matter of administration, and that the object of the amendment is to see that the Indian is not deprived of the proper profit or gain which he might make from his activities as a farmer or in some other line of endeavour. But I would point out to the minister that from the reference to "other animals" it would appear as if the Indian would now be obliged to sell the pelts or skins of animals, say, only to certain persons who have been designated by the department, and his market would therefore appear to be very much restricted. I am making this observation without any real knowledge of the Indian Act, but I would ask the minister if that would not be the effect?

Mr. MURPHY: When this bill was considered the other day we passed section 4 of the bill which involves section 41 of the act, and to that I draw the hon. member's attention. The section with which we are now dealing is merely a penal clause dealing with the same matter. The hon. member will observe that section 120 reads as follows:

Every person who buys or otherwise acquires from any Indian or band or irregular band of Indians in the province of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, or Alberta, or the territories—"

The Indian in those provinces and territories cannot sell his produce without first obtaining a permit from the Indian agent. He may sell to different people; he may sell to anyone, but before doing so he must obtain a permit from the Indian agent, the object being to prevent the Indian from disposing of his entire stock in trade. In other words it is to prevent him from being victimized. This clause is designed for the Indian's protection, and we are adding the clause to the act to make the Indian himself liable for any offence under the act. In some cases the party who purchased from the Indian was held liable and fined, whereas the Indian knowing full well he was contavening sections of the law, escaped free.

Mr. POWER: I do not wish to insist, but I repeat that the Indian is a ward of the government. Every person outside a band who purchases from him is liable to fine or imprisonment. That follows in pursuance of procedure laid down in the Indian Act. I think however we are going a long way when we make the Indian liable. It is my personal view that in parliament we are altogether too apt to create fines, and to place new penalties on our statute books. It seems to me that we could just as easily protect the Indian by enforcing some sort of discipline. As I understand the situation we make certain grants to him, we give him certain benefits under the Indian Act, and it seems to me that if he is in the position of our ward, or our child, we could withhold some of the benefits we confer upon him. I believe we would be going far if we were to lay down in our statutes a provision whereby any Indian who, without going through proper procedure laid down in the Indian Act sold some of the produce of his hunting, his fishing or his labour as a farmer, could be subject to summary conviction involving a $50 fine or imprisonment for thirty days. I do not wish to insist upon my views, but it seems to me that we could very easily find some other means to protect the Indians from being victimized, and that it should not be necessary to clap him in gaol for doing something which it is only natural he may attempt to do.

Mr. MURPHY: The amendment to the act was made on the recommendation of a former western commissioner who had had a very wide experience in dealing with Indians in the prairie provinces. It was found that in some cases Indians would go so far as to sell their seed grain supplied to them by the department. Those Indians knew they were doing wrong. It is not intended that the proposed provision shall become irksome upon the Indians, and I do not think it will be. As the system has been in effect for thirty or forty years, the Indian knows full well, when he sells his grain, cattle or other produce without obtaining a permit, that he is doing something he should not do. If the clause carries I believe no hardship will be worked upon the Indian. I feel certain the magistrates will take due notice of any extenuating circumstances, and that proper protection will be afforded the Indians.

Section agreed to.

On section 10—Restriction on Indian dances.

Mr. NEILL: I should like to know the purpose of this proposed amendment. In these days when Indians are becoming more and more civilized and educated, one would suppose we would be more inclined to withdraw restrictions. The explanations given on the opposite sheet of the bill throw no light on the subject. Indian agents do not live on every reserve—at least, they do not in the west. Many Indian schools are located near towns and at Christmas time they have concerts, for which they have to obtain permission from the Indian agent. Probably that would not be so difficult to get, because the people in charge would know some time ahead that the concert was going to be held. We will suppose, however, a condition such as this arises: A country fair is being held a long way from an Indian agent. Arrangements have been made that a team of Indians shall play a team of whites at lacrosse or football. Permission has been obtained—which, I must say is rather humiliating. We will suppose however that permission has been obtained. At the last minute one of the Indian boys cannot play, and it is impossible to replace him with another Indian without breaking the law, because permission could not be obtained from the Indian agent two hundred miles away. I should like the minister to explain what purpose lies behind the change in the act, what harm it is doing in its present state, and what harm would come if an Indian did take part in a pageant without having first obtained permission from the agent. There is a very heavy penalty involved too, I notice.

Mr. MURPHY: At present the act reads as follows—

Mr. NEILL: I am familiar with the act.

Mr. MURPHY: It is as follows:

> Any Indian in the province of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta or British Columbia, or in the territories, who participates in any Indian dance outside the bounds of his own reserve, or who participates in any show, exhibition, performance, stampede or pageant in aboriginal costume without the consent of the superintendent general, . . .

and so on, shall be penalized. The proposed amendment has for its purpose the striking out of the words "in aboriginal costume."

Mr. POWER: Is the term "aboriginal costume" anywhere defined?

Mr. MURPHY: I believe the hon. member would find the accepted definition in any standard dictionary. The proposed change would merely widen the authority given to the Superintendent General.

Mr. NEILL: I know that, but why?

Mr. MURPHY: The endeavour of the department, in carrying out the act, has been to teach the Indians and to familiarize them with the principles of agriculture, thereby enabling them to secure their living. It has been found that when certain pageants, shows or stampedes are being held the Indian with his wife and family, and all other Indians on the reserve, will get into his family wagon and go to the stampede, leaving his crops and cattle without any care whatsoever. These shows and pageants and stampedes are usually held at a time of year when the crops are either to be harvested or the summer fallow looked after, and it has been found very difficult to induce the Indians to remain on the reserves at these times and practise the arts of agriculture as they should. I do not know whether that is why this section was first put into the act or not, but that is the reason for striking out these words now, so that they must obtain permission to attend these shows in such cases.

Mr. NEILL: If I can get anyone to second me I propose to cut the whole section out. That is what is needed. It is absolutely a dead letter in British Columbia, in the western part where I was an Indian agent. I never made any attempt to prohibit them at Christmas time and the like having a dance in aboriginal costume. They have just as much right to do that as we have to have a fancy dress ball.

Mr. MURPHY: There is nothing to prevent that.

Mr. NEILL: I remember someone making a complaint about me in that capacity, that I did not interfere in such a matter, and it was reported to Ottawa and I was asked for an explanation. I went down and investigated and found that they had had a pageant, and had devised and constructed an object in the shape of a whale, which came ashore at a given point and broke asunder and a number of young men came out—

Mr. JACOBS: Jonahs!

Mr. NEILL: No, they were a better type than Jonahs, they were part of this pageant, and dressed in white. Someone had apparently taken photographs of it, and I sent these photographs in with this comment, that I had been down there and these were the facts as I had found them: that the day before I left home we had a fancy dress ball in the town where I lived, and the man who got the first prize for a fancy dress costume simulated a monkey. For the life of me I could not see much difference between representing a monkey and representing a whale; if it was right for the white man to impersonate a monkey I did not see much harm in Indians representing a whale. I also pointed out that this is an amusement for the Indians, that the Indian is as much entitled to amusement as we are; in fact, he needs it more because he does not read and so has not that opportunity of recreation. I said that no doubt the ideal condition would be for the Indians to sit around in white collars talking about the uplift of the Indians. But they do not. If they were not doing something like that they would, as is well known, be drinking or gambling, and I thought it much better not to interfere too much with their native customs and enjoyment. I am glad to say that the Indian department was not lacking a sense of humour on that occasion; they said that perhaps I had acted with reasonable discretion. I see no reason why if an Indian wants to deck himself out as an eagle and put feathers on his head, he is any more reprehensible than the ladies who go to the Governor General's reception and put feathers on their heads. And let me say I have never seen an Indian at any of these dances in the condition of decolleté that I have seen at receptions.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. NEILL: I move, sir, that the whole section be stricken out.

Mr. BOUCHARD: I second it.

Mr. POWER: May I point out that although at first I was quite willing to second the motion of my hon. friend from Comox-Alberni that this section 10 which is an amendment to section 140 of the act be struck out, if it be struck out we will have the clause as it now stands in the act, which prohibits Indians from participating in a performance in aboriginal costume.

Mr. NEILL: No, I wish to strike out the whole thing, not section 10.

Mr. POWER: Well, if permitted to do so I will second it.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: We ought to know a little about the Indian costumes and sun dances, and what the aim of the government has been for the last thirty or forty years, before we do anything like this. We have been trying to train the Indians to be self-supporting, and principally to be farmers. If they are going to be farmers, they cannot be showing up in all kinds of fantastic dress to amuse white people and visitors, very often in high positions in the country that I will not mention, so high that none of us are likely to attain to them. These Indians are paraded around to display themselves for the amusement of the white onlooker. That is not the way to make steady farmers of them. If they are going to run side shows, or prepare for the stage, then, that course may be all right, but I have known myself many Indians that have been settling down to domestic and farm life who were all upset by one visit to one of these stampedes. One sun dance will put them back in their advanced civilization for ten years. I think it has been well thought out by those in charge in former years that these old pagan dances are not good for them. It depends on what we want to have the Indians do, what is to be their ultimate destiny. Let them go out with such shows as the Marx Brothers or other travelling troupes if you want to keep them in that class of occupation. But if you are going to make farmers of them the sooner they are permitted to forget the old order the better. That is my experience, and it has been fairly extensive, because we live within a few miles of the most advanced Indian colony in the Canadian west, at File Hills. Even the little change the minister is making I do not like very much, although it is small; but to cut it all out would be decidedly a retrograde step if you want to make self-sustaining farmers of these boys who have been educated by the government and established on farms and have raised their families. When you seek to reintroduce the old heathen practices it is not merely a parade, it is the heathen sun dance that you are trying to bring back by this proposed amendment.

Mr. NEILL: Did the hon. member for Melville ever hear of the saying: All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy?

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Oh yes, I have often heard that, but it does not apply here.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Ross): Is clause 10 carried?

Mr. NEILL: No. I move, Mr. Chairman, that the section be amended to make it read as follows:

Subsection 3 of section 140 of the said act is hereby repealed.

Mr. BOUCHARD: As one who has always stood in this house and in this country for the old customs and costumes, I have very much pleasure in seconding this motion. I think we should not deprive our country of what little picturesque life is left. Why should we try to force standardization on everyone? Why should we try to induce the Indian to live as we live? I consider their mode of life a very picturesque one. I would even venture to say that from an artistic point of view some of our people have receded from the Indian standard. I would very much like to retain as much as we can of these old customs and old costumes.

Mr. MALCOLM: Can the minister inform the committee what privileges the Ontario and Quebec Indians have? Apparently this section does not apply to them.

Mr. POWER: They can laugh and play and have parties.

Mr. MURPHY: The question has not arisen in the eastern provinces to any extent, if at all. It more particularly applies to the western provinces. I am pleased, Mr. Chairman, to have the support of the hon. member for Melville, who has had much experience with Indians on his own reserves. He is aware, as I am, that if we are ever to make farmers out of our Indians—

Mr. BOUCHARD: Why should we?

Mr. MURPHY: —we should seek to keep them on the farms.

Mr. POWER: Why make them all farmers?

Mr. MURPHY: We are not attempting—

Mr. BOUCHARD: We are forcing.

Mr. MURPHY: —to make all Indians farmers, but this section particularly applies—

Mr. BOUCHARD: This is a back to the land movement.

Mr. MURPHY: —to those who are on agricultural reserves, who have attended certain pageants or stampedes in the west, and who at the present time are actually carrying on farming operations. When these stampedes occur every Indian on the reserve frequently leaves and consequently neglects his crops and his cattle.

Mr. NEILL: Does not the white man do the same?

Mr. MURPHY: The white man may, but the white man does not receive from the government appropriations to assist him in the work he is carrying on. The Indian is in a different category entirely. As has been well said this afternoon, we have spent millions of dollars in an endeavour to make these Indians self-supporting by teaching them the art of agriculture. There is nothing to prevent an Indian or Indians from taking part in a small local show in the aboriginal costumes with the consent of the agent. If they desire to take part in some pageant or to show off the reserve, and if it is considered proper by the Indian agent, it is very easy for them to obtain his permission, and I cannot conceive that the agent will refuse permission in justifiable cases. This provision is merely designed, as I have stated as clearly as I can, to keep those Indians from attending such pageants or shows as will militate against the performance of their duties as farmers.

Mr. NEILL: As far as experience goes I think I can compare with the hon. member for Melville, because for ten years I was an Indian agent and I learned how to handle them. I found that they got along much better and in a manner best calculated to promote their progress by not being too strict and by remembering that they were human beings who required recreation just as much as white men required it, and in fact more so for the reasons I have indicated.

Mr. MURPHY: There is nothing to prevent them from taking part in those shows if they get permission from the Indian agent.

Mr. NEILL: It is somewhat humiliating to be compelled to go to an agent who may be two hundred miles away, and it is not convenient. What if the agent is away or is not available? I suppose the best that can be said about this section is that to a large extent it is ignored.

[Mr. Bouchard.]

Mr. REID: I must support the amendment. Coming from a race which has perpetuated its aboriginal costumes for many years it would ill become me to help deprive the Indians of their costumes. Hundreds of years ago a measure of this kind was passed having reference to Scotchmen, and they have not recovered from that insult to this day. I think if the Indians want to parade in their costumes they should have the right to do so.

Amendment negatived on division.

SUPPLY

The house in committee of supply, Mr. Bury in the chair.

Miscellaneous—to provide for payments in connection with the movements of coal under conditions prescribed by the governor in council and for the cost of administration thereof, $2,000,000.

Mr. HEENAN: Could the minister tell us what amount of coal has been moved under this subsidy?

Mr. GORDON: Under what is known as the Alberta coal movement to Ontario, that is, order in council P.C. 439 dated March 16, 1928, amended by P.C. 2364 of December 3, 1929, extended by P.C. 1268 of June 5, 1930 to March 15, 1931, and further extended by P.C. 302 of February 9, 1932, authorizing a test freight rate of $6.75 per ton on movements of Alberta coal to the province of Ontario, the movements have been as follows:

	Tons	Amount paid
1928..	32,101	$ 47,509 50
1929..	45,381	100,745 82
1930..	25,287	56,137 14
1931..	22,634	50,247 48*
1932..	16,801	37,301 39*
	142,204	$291,941 33

* Estimated.

Then by order in council P.C. 1400, dated June 14, 1930, a reduction was authorized of one-eighth of one cent per ton mile from existing freight rates.

P.C. 1303 of May 30, 1931, became effective June 1, 1931, and will expire June 30, 1933. It authorizes a reduction of one-seventh of a cent per ton per mile from existing freight rates, but the amount of the assistance is not to exceed $1.50 per net ton, on coal for industrial and railway purposes shipped to points in Manitoba. By P.C. 827 of April 15, 1932, the limit of $1.50 per ton was reduced to $1.20 per ton, with the proviso that acceptances already granted at the previous rate could be filled at the old rate.

P.C. 1303 also authorized a reduction of one-third of a cent per ton per mile from the existing freight rates, but the amount of assistance is not to exceed $2 per ton, on coal shipped to points in Ontario west of Sioux Lookout and Fort Frances.

Saskatchewan coal to Manitoba and western Ontario:

P.C. 1399 dated June 14, 1930, was effective from June 1, 1930, to May 31, 1931. It authorized a reduction of fifty cents per ton from the existing freight rates on coal for industrial purposes shipped to points in Manitoba.

P.C. 1301 of May 30, 1931, became effective June 1, 1931, and will expire June 30, 1933. It authorizes a reduction of one-seventh of a cent per ton per mile from the existing freight rates but the amount of assistance is not to exceed $1 per net ton on coal for industrial purposes shipped to points in Manitoba and to points in Ontario west of Sioux Lookout and Fort Frances.

British Columbia export and bunker coals:

P.C. 1302 of May 30, 1931, and as amended by P.C. 2699 of October 27, 1931, authorizes assistance of fifty cents per gross ton on coal sold as fuel for ships' stores, and assistance of $1 per gross ton on coal sold for export to foreign countries other than the United States of America. The total annual payments to be made under the order in council and its amendment are limited to $100,000. It expires June 30, 1933.

Movements

	Net tons	Cost to government
1931, June to December.	55,678	$17,850 72
1932..	81,639	36,750 00

Nova Scotia and New Brunswick coals to Quebec and Ontario:

P.C. 539 of March 30, 1928, and its extension, P.C. 2256 of October 2, 1930, was in effect from April 1, 1928 to May 30, 1931.

Section "A" covered movements wholly by rail providing a maximum temporary rate of $3 per net ton on coal mined in Nova Scotia, and $2.10 per net ton on coal mined in New Brunswick, shipped by rail to points in Quebec during the season when navigation on the St. Lawrence was not practicable.

Section "B" covered movements by water and rail. It provided a temporary rate of one-fifth of one cent per ton less than the rail rate which otherwise would be applicable on coal mined in eastern Canada and carried by vessel to St. Lawrence ports and thence transshipped to points in Quebec and Ontario.

P.C. 539 was rescinded by P.C. 1299 and P.C. 1300 referred to hereunder, with the proviso that shipments would be continued on acceptances that were granted under authority of P.C. 539 until the tonnages authorized had been shipped.

P.C. 1299 for coal mined in New Brunswick became effective June 1, 1931, and will expire June 30, 1933. It authorizes a reduction of one-sixth of a cent per net ton per mile from the existing freight rates for coal for other than household purposes when shipped to points in Ontario or Quebec, but the amount of assistance is not to exceed $1.50 per net ton.

P.C. 1300 for coal mined in Nova Scotia, became effective June 1, 1931 and was in effect until May 9, 1932 when it was rescinded by P.C. 1048, referred to hereunder, with the proviso that shipments should be continued on acceptances that were granted under authority of P.C. 1300 until the tonnages authorized had been shipped.

P.C. 1300 authorized a reduction of one-fifth of a cent per ton per mile from the existing rail freight on coal mined in Nova Scotia and carried by vessel to St. Lawrence ports and thence transhipped by the railways to points in Quebec and to the town of Cornwall and the city of Ottawa in Ontario, with a limit of 75 cents per net ton. It also authorized a reduction of one-third of a cent per ton per mile (not exceeding $1.50 per net ton) from the existing rail freights on Nova Scotia coal waterborne to St. Lawrence ports and thence transhipped to points in Ontario other than the town of Cornwall and city of Ottawa. It also authorized a reduction of one-seventh of a cent per ton per mile (not exceeding $2 per net ton) on coal mined in Nova Scotia and shipped wholly by rail to points in Quebec and Ontario during the season from 15th November to 15th April in each year.

P.C. 1048 became effective May 9, 1932. Amended by P.C. 1676 of July 28, 1932. Further amended by P.C. 2563 of November 22, 1932. Will continue in force until rescinded, so long as parliament continues to vote the necessary funds.

P.C. 1048 authorizes assistance at the rate of one-fifth of a cent per net ton per mile from the existing rail freight rates on Nova Scotia coal waterborne to St. Lawrence ports, thence transhipped by the railways to points in Quebec for use by consumers other than the railways. Limit 75 cents per net ton.

It authorizes assistance at the rate of one-third of a cent per ton per mile on Nova Scotia coal shipped similarly to the above to points in Ontario. Limit $1.50 per net ton.

It authorizes assistance at the rate of one-seventh of a cent per net ton per mile on Nova Scotia coal transported wholly by rail to points in Ontario and Quebec for use by consumers other than the railways. Limit $2 per net ton. Originally available only from November 15 to April 15 each year, this was amended by P.C. 1676 of July 28, 1932, to be effective at all times.

It also authorizes assistance at the rate of $1 per net ton on maritime provinces coal carried by water to any point west of the island of Montreal.

It authorizes, for maritime provinces coal transported as in the preceding paragraph to points west of the island of Montreal, thence transhipped by the railways to points in Ontario west of Kingston for use by consumers other than the railways, assistance at the rate of one-third of a cent per ton per mile from the existing rail freight rates. Limit $1 per net ton.

Railway Coal: It authorizes payment to the coal mine operators or to distributors, in the case of coal purchased by the railways for their own use at points in Quebec and Ontario, of the difference in the laid-down cost to the railways of coal mined in the maritime provinces and the laid-down cost at the same point of imported coal that would otherwise be used, up to a maximum of $2 per net ton. It was provided that the difference in laid-down costs should be determined by the Dominion Fuel Board. It was also provided that assistance should only apply on that quantity of Canadian coal purchased in excess of the quantity of Canadian coal purchased in 1931. This limitation was removed by P.C. 2563 of November 22, 1932.

[Mr. Gordon.]

The movement under these orders in council was as follows—

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Is there an area limit upon the assistance given to the railways?

Mr. GORDON: Yes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): How far west does it extend?

Mr. GORDON: I think it comes up to Montreal and it may come as far as Kingston, although I am not sure. I will obtain the information for my hon. friend. The movement under these orders in council was as follows:

From Nova Scotia, Rail and Water

Year—	Net tons	Cost to government
1928	88,334	$ 15,734 40
1929	225,444	51,544 05

LEAGUE OF NATIONS

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I draw attention to a mistake which appears in Hansard. Although I imagine it is a typographical error I should like, if possible, to have it corrected. In answering a question yesterday regarding travelling and living expenses of persons attending meetings of the League of Nations, the Prime Minister in the statement given is reported to have indicated the expenses of myself and other members of the Prime Minister's office as follows:

1928-29, Fiftieth Council meeting, $9,317.37.

May I say I did not attend the fiftieth council meeting at all, so that obviously in that particular there is an error. However, a little farther down mention is made of the fifty-first and fifty-second council meetings and of the ninth assembly. The names following that item are, I believe, of persons who did not attend either the fifty-first or fifty-second council meetings. Personally I did attend both, and I also attended the ninth assembly. Therefore I believe the words "ninth assembly, fifty-first and fifty-second council meeting" ought to precede the statement relating to the expenses charged to my office. I may say those expenses include also some expenditures which were incidental to business connected with the Prime Minister's office as I was Prime Minister at the time.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the information which I laid upon the table of the house in answer to the questions which had been asked, was furnished to me by the continuing official who has been in charge of these matters in the Department of External Affairs for many years, and it is just possible in indicating the council meetings, in brackets—as I noticed it was on the return—that the Hansard printers have made a mistake in putting in "fiftieth" where it should have been "fifty-first" or vice versa. That may be so. But, so far as the figures are concerned I only inquired if they had been checked over and if they were accurate, and I was informed they were. The information was filed as I received it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am not taking exception to the figures, so long as they are properly allocated to the fifty-first and fifty-second council meetings and to the ninth assembly of the League of Nations, and not put down simply as expenses arising out of the fiftieth council meeting, which I did not attend.

AGRICULTURE COMMITTEE

Mr. M. C. SENN (Haldimand) presented the second report of the select standing committee on agriculture and colonization, and moved that the report be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

MISCELLANEOUS PRIVATE BILLS

Second report of the select standing committee on miscellaneous private bills.—Mr. Stinson.

PETITION

Miss A. C. MACPHAIL (Southeast Grey): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present a petition signed by 6,696 farmers in the different counties of Ontario asking for government action which will result in the raising of the prices of farm produce.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I suppose the petition will be referred to the proper committee, but it is obvious from the prayer of the document that it seeks relief which only provincial legislatures can grant.

Mr. McINTOSH: Out of court!

Mr. SPEAKER: I direct the Hansard reporter not to report the reading of the petition; I did not realize at the time what was being read. This petition must receive the same treatment as other petitions filed in the house and be referred to the clerk of petitions. Therefore Hansard will not report the reading of it.

VISITING COMMONWEALTH FORCES

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. 40, respecting visiting forces of His Majesty and the exercise of command, discipline and attachments of commonwealth forces when serving together.

He said: In consequence of the passing of the Statute of Westminster it becomes essential that questions arising out of visiting of forces from one of His Majesty's dominions to another, or questions of command, discipline and attachments of commonwealth forces when serving together, should be dealt with by separate legislation, that is legislation passed by the parliaments of each of the dominions and of the United Kingdom. Such legislation was agreed to and has been passed —I am not sure whether by all the other dominions and the United Kingdom or not. I will be able to furnish the house with that information in due course, but this legislation is similar to the legislation enacted by the other parts of the empire.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): What is meant exactly by the expression "commonwealth forces"?

Mr. BENNETT: That will be explained by the bill itself. The British commonwealth of nations—it means the forces belonging to the nations of the commonwealth.

Motion agreed to and bill read the first time.

QUESTIONS

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

GENERAL D. M. ORMOND—PENSION

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Is General D. M. Ormond, superintendent of penitentiaries, in receipt of a pension?
2. If so, what is the amount of such pension?
3. For what reason does he receive such pension?

Mr. GUTHRIE:

1. Yes.
2. $2,890.80 per annum; of which $1,540.93 is paid to General Ormond at the present time in order to make his annual salary as Superintendent of Penitentiaries equal to the rate of pay and allowances of which he was in receipt at the time of his appointment as superintendent as provided by subsection 13 of section 4 of the Militia Pension Act.
3. Long service.

ARMAMENT EXPORTS

Mr. MacINNIS:

1. Are any arms or armament material (munitions of war) manufactured in Canada for export?
2. If so, what was the value of such arms or armament material exported from Canada for the year 1932, or if the figures for 1932 are not available, for the last year for which figures are available?
3. If No. 1 is in the affirmative what was the name or names of the firm or firms exporting such arms or armament material, and the country or countries to which such arms or armament materials were exported?
4. Is it necessary for firms exporting arms or armaments to have a permit from the government?

Mr. BENNETT: I think the question in that form should be dropped. When it is asked "are any arms or armament material—munitions of war—manufactured in Canada for export" one cannot say with any degree of certainty to what use any country importing certain materials may put them. What might be used for purposes of war in one country might not be in another. Unless there is something much more specific, the question could not be answered.

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

Mr. MacINNIS: Is it understood that the whole of the question be dropped, or only the first part?

Mr. SPEAKER: The question is not debatable. The question will be dropped for the time being, for revision. As pointed out by the Prime Minister it is not specific enough to be answered.

GREAT LAKES LEVELS

Mr. ARTHURS:

1. What is the lowest monthly mean level for each of the great lakes, Ontario, Erie, Huron and Superior, since records have been kept?
2. What were the same levels for January, 1933?
3. What were the average levels for each ten years ending January, 1873 to 1933?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. The lowest monthly mean level of the great lakes since records have been kept are:

Superior (April, 1926)	599·99
Huron (February, 1926)	577·44
Erie (February, 1926)	569·73
Ontario (November, 1895)	243·34

2. The levels for January, 1933, were:

Superior	601·95
Huron	577·70
Erie	570·86
Ontario	244·21

3. The average levels for each ten years ending January, 1873, to 1933, were:

Jan. Dec.	Superior	Huron	Erie	Ontario
1863—1872	602·23	581·37	572·97	246·35
1873—1882	602·27	581·90	572·99	246·01
1883—1892	601·94	581·87	573·00	246·47
1893—1902	602·51	580·25	571·87	245·01
1903—1912	602·28	580·53	572·28	246·05
1913—1922	602·31	580·46	572·16	245·99
1923—1932	601·84	579·28	571·66	245·50

Elevations are in feet above mean sea level.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—ASBESTOS, QUE.

Mr. LAFLECHE:

What amount has the federal government contributed by way of direct relief since 1930, to the town of Asbestos, Richmond county?

Mr. GORDON: The following accounts have been received and paid:

Under the Unemployment Relief Act, 1930—public works, $4,500; direct relief, $2,649.07.

Under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931—public works, $8,400.

Under The Relief Act, 1932—direct relief, $408.09

In addition to the above accounts for direct relief distributed under the provisions of the Relief Act, 1932, amounting to $421.52 have been received from the province. These accounts have been audited and a cheque covering same will be forwarded to the province within a day or two.

PORT DANIEL EAST, QUEBEC—WHARF REPAIRS

Mr. MARCIL:

1. What amount was authorized in 1932-33 for repairs to the wharf at Port Daniel East, Bonaventure county, and how much has been paid to date?
2. Out of what appropriation was this expenditure authorized?
3. Were tenders called for; if not, why?

Mr. DURANLEAU:

1. (a) $13,820.53; (b) $13,110.13.
2. Harbours and rivers generally, Quebec.
3. (a) No; (b) To avoid delay which the calling of tenders and preparation of plans would entail before a very urgent work could be undertaken, and also because the work could be done more expeditiously and economically by day labour than by contract.

BONAVENTURE COUNTY RELIEF WORK

Mr. MARCIL:

1. Did the Minister of Public Works receive any request from Bonaventure county to alternate men employed so as to give the unemployed a chance to secure some work?
2. If so, what answer was given to such request?

Mr. STEWART (Leeds):

1. Requests have been received from persons applying for employment on works being carried out by the department. These applications were referred for consideration to the district engineer, who is under instructions to secure the best help available, giving preference to the heads of families or those with dependents.
2. Answered by No. 1.

DISMISSAL OF G. N. PELLAND

Mr. CASGRAIN:

1. Has Mr. G. N. Pelland, chief herdsman at the experimental farm of Sainte-Anne de la Pocatiere, been dismissed?
2. If so, what were the nature of the complaints lodged against him, and who lodged such complaints?
3. Have these complaints been investigated?
4. If not, why?

Mr. SPEAKER: Dropped.

GASPE—FEDERAL RELIEF GRANT

Mr. DUGUAY:

1. Did the federal government contribute to the $60,000 grant given to the needy people of Gaspe in December, 1932?
2. If so, to what extent?

Mr. GORDON:

1 and 2. On February 27, 1933, a cheque was forwarded to the provincial authorities at Quebec in which was included an amount of $103.10 being payment of accounts received for direct relief distributed by the municipality of Grande Riviere Ouest, Gaspe county, during the month of December, 1932. The total expenditure in this connection amounted to $309.30, the dominion proportion being 33⅓ per cent, the balance being divided equally between the province and the municipality.

In addition accounts were received from the province of Quebec on February 20, 1933, for direct relief distributed by the provincial authorities from October 1st, 1932, to January 30th, 1933, in the districts of Grand Pabos and Cannes des Roches, Gaspe county. The total expenditure in this regard amounts to $1,204.79 the dominion proportion being 50 per cent or $602.39. These accounts are now being audited and a cheque in payment thereof will be forwarded to the province within a few days.

QUESTIONS PASSED AS ORDERS FOR RETURNS

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF REFUNDS—QUEBEC

Mr. DUGUAY:

1. Has the federal government called upon the provincial government of Quebec to refund certain contributions for unemployment relief?
2. If so, in what cases?
3. For what reasons were such refunds requested?

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF—GASPE

Mr. DUGUAY:

Has the Quebec government requested the federal government to grant relief to the needy people of Gaspe?

ABANDONMENT OF DIRECT RELIEF

Mr. DUGUAY:

Has the Quebec government made any representations in favour of the abandonment of the system of direct relief and the reestablishment of the system of public works?

GERMAN SITUATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. FACTOR (Toronto West Centre): May I ask the Prime Minister if the government has received any information concerning the very serious situation in Germany, and if so, whether the Prime Minister would make a statement to enlighten the house.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The answer is in the negative.

Mr. FACTOR: May I follow with another question? There are Canadian citizens residing in Germany or interested in property in Germany. I would like to know from the Prime Minister if the government is taking any steps to secure their safety and security?

Mr. BENNETT: The answer is, the government has no knowledge of the matter. The government has no representative in Germany. Any information received by the Canadian government would be through the British authorities. No such information has been received.

TRADE RELATIONS WITH RUSSIA

On the orders of the day:

Mr. A. F. TOTZKE (Humboldt): I would like to ask a question based on an article appearing in the Toronto Star of February 28, to the effect that western Conservative members of parliament have been told that an entirely new proposition has been made by the Serkau syndicate in connection with the proposed Russian barter deal. My question is: Has there been a new proposition, and if so will the Prime Minister make a statement in this regard?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am not responsible for gossip appearing in the Toronto Star newspaper. Neither is the government.

Mr. EULER: But is it true?

Mr. BENNETT: As far as I know it is not true. All I can say is that the hon. gentleman and his friends know perhaps far better than I what is taking place in connection with Mr. Serkau.

CATTLE SHIPMENTS TO BRITAIN

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): I wonder if I will have any better luck than the hon. member for Humboldt (Mr. Totzke). I notice that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Weir) is not in his place. I would like to ask the acting Minister of Agriculture, whoever he is, whether the statement that appeared in the press yesterday that in a recent shipment of cattle from Canada to the United Kingdom only forty head of them were fit for the Birkenhead or London market?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): There is no acting Minister of Agriculture, owing to the fact that the minister's absence is not expected to be for any length of time; he is in the hospital in consequence of an infection of his eye. I have no knowledge of the matter to which the hon. gentleman refers, but so far as I know it has not been brought to the attention of the government.

[Mr. Factor.]

I will see that any information available is furnished. Of course, when questions of this kind are asked without notice obviously they cannot be expected to be answered.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I should like to ask the Minister of Railways and Canals (Mr. Manion) when the second reading of Bill No. 37 will be proceeded with.

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals): At the moment it is intended that it will be proceeded with on Monday next.

NEW ZEALAND BUTTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens): Have any representations been made to him by any dairymen's associations or other interests in British Columbia in connection with the increased sale of New Zealand butter at prices which it is claimed will be disastrous to the farmers of British Columbia? If so, what steps have been taken to protect the dairymen?

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce) : I will take this as a notice of the question.

SOLDIER SETTLEMENT

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): Shortly after parliament convened the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) stated that he would make a statement to parliament in connection with the soldier settlement policy of the government. I should like to ask the minister the approximate date when that statement will be forthcoming.

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): At the moment I cannot give the hon. member the exact day when any statement will be made, but the government has now under review legislation with respect to soldier settlers which will be introduced at this session of parliament, intended to give some assistance to those settlers.

TRADE TREATY WITH FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. J. A. MERCIER (Laurier-Outremont): I should like to ask the Secretary of State

(Mr. Cahan) when he will be in a position to report to the house in connection with the new treaty of commerce with France.

Hon. C. H. CAHAN (Secretary of State): I do not expect to be in a position to make any report to the house. I have reported to the government and the report is in the hands of the Prime Minister.

JUDGE RUTHERFORD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. VINCENT DUPUIS (Laprairie-Napierville): Some time ago the radio commission issued the following instruction:

> Speeches of one Judge Rutherford, foreign anti-social agitator, must not be broadcast by Canadian stations until the continuity or records of same are submitted to the Canadian Radio Broadcasting Commission for approval.

Later this gentleman circulated throughout the country millions of leaflets similar to the one I now hold in my hand.

Mr. SPEAKER: Does the hon. member wish to ask a question?

Mr. DUPUIS: Yes, I am just coming to that. This is very important, and I believe every member of the house will be interested.

Mr. SPEAKER: The matter must be brought properly before the house. If the hon. gentleman wishes to ask a question I would ask him to proceed to do so.

Mr. DUPUIS: It would be impossible for me to put the question right away.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Question.

Mr. SPEAKER: Order. If it is impossible the hon. member should not try to do it.

Mr. DUPUIS: After that very wise conclusion I will put my question. I should like to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) whether he has taken any steps to prevent such leaflets being distributed by the Post Office Department, because they contain a direct insult to the Anglican denomination, one of the most important in this country. In this leaflet—

Mr. SPEAKER: Order.

Hon. ARTHUR SAUVE (Postmaster General): We are doing what it is possible to do.

Mr. DUPUIS: I would be glad if the minister would say what it has been possible to do. I should like an answer.

Mr. SPEAKER: I would suggest that the hon. member put his question on the order paper.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUATION FOR ONE YEAR OF PROVISIONS OF RELIEF ACT, 1932

The house resumed from Friday, February 24, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Labour that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following resolution:

> Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to continue in force the provisions of the Relief Act, 1932, until the 31st of March, 1934.

Mr. J. A. BRADETTE (North Timiskaming): Before I proceed with my remarks, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the hon. members on this side of the house I should like to extend to the hon. member for South Winnipeg (Mr. Rogers) very many happy returns on his birthday.

When the debate adjourned last Friday I stated that so long as this government was spending public money on relief matters this was the time and place to bring to the notice of the government some of the results of the administration of these relief measures. I notice that my confrere, the provincial member for Cochrane North, Mr. A. V. Waters, put forward in the Ontario legislature two days ago some of the anomalies which I mentioned in this house last Friday evening. One of the matters I mentioned was the payment for medical services in our section of the country. I said at the time that the government responsible, whether provincial or federal, deserved to be complimented for the action they took, but I objected to the fact that medical men have been limited to the sum of $100 a month in all municipalities and towns. I am absolutely opposed to this limitation for the very good reason that in our section of the country at least the mining and industrial centres are surrounded by unorganized rural districts where it is impossible to maintain medical men. Take the doctor who practises at Cochrane or at Kapuskasing; he must look after the people in several adjoining localities, and when he is limited to the sum of $100 a month for medical services and any medicines he may supply it is absolutely impossible for the rural population to get the service they require.

I am bringing this matter particularly to the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) because he is well acquainted with the situation existing in northern Ontario, and I hope this anomaly will be remedied at once. It has been said in this house that the primary duty of any government is to look after the welfare and health of the people, and in times such as these I think we would be well advised to devote a good deal of money to public health work. This applies particularly to unorganized districts in the north.

Last Friday evening I was speaking of the back to the land movement, and I might say once more that I am absolutely in favour of any movement that will help bring back to the land those people who wish to engage in agriculture.

In the fall of 1930 a back to the land movement originated from the Department of Labour. At that time I offered certain criticism, not of the movement itself but of the fact that the government was priding itself on having placed tens of thousands of people on the land without the expenditure of any moneys. I maintained then, as I maintain now, that it was absolutely impossible to secure any measure of success, if the federal and provincial governments contemplated bringing people from the urban centres back to the land, without spending money. I may say to the minister and the house that there is not an individual to be found anywhere in Canada who would criticize such expenditures.

I fully agree with the minister in the statement that the movement is helping to place people once again on the land. As he has said, for the last fifteen or twenty years people from the rural centres have been finding their way to the cities, and that movement was quite noticeable until two or three years ago. Now however, owing to the economic and financial situation, there has been a stop to that process and we see the spectacle of hundreds of thousands of people, who originally were on farms and found their way to the larger centres, now anxious to return to farm life. The situation to-day is the reverse of what it has been during the last twenty years, and more and more people are expressing a wish to return from the urban to the rural centres.

That situation did not come about overnight; it has been the result of extreme mechanization and overproduction, and to-day in the urban centres skilled, semi-skilled and unskilled labour find it impossible to obtain remunerative employment such as was available a few years ago. The result is that those people who to-day in the large centres of population are unable to obtain the means of subsistence and are being forced to accept public charity are looking over the walls of the city limits, ready to return to the land. I believe this government has taken a step in the right direction in accelerating that movement, and that brings us to the root of the present economic situation. If it is possible for the government to discover what is wrong with agriculture the problems of the present depression will be solved at once, and that applies not only to this country but to the world at large. The moment we make it possible for the primary producers and the primary industry of this country to receive a reasonable return for their efforts we shall reach the root of the present problem.

If there is an anomaly in the industrial life of the world to-day, there is also an anomaly in agriculture, and we have the sad spectacle of the primary producer being in the same position as the unskilled and semi-skilled labourer in the larger centres. This condition of things is going to demand of the government, whether provincial or federal, considerable study, as well as the expenditure of large sums of money. I have no time to enter into a history of the economic life of the country during the last twenty years, but I think we all fully appreciate the fact that we have applied artificial aids to industry, in the way of higher tariffs, exemption from certain forms of taxation, more and more use of machinery and in other directions; and while we have been building up our factories and our industrial centres we have left agriculture to take care of itself. I think the government takes a step in the right direction when it goes into the urban centres and endeavours to encourage the surplus population there to find its way back to the land. But if we have applied artificial assistance to industry, to keep industry going, I contend that we should at least extend some governmental assistance to maintain our population on the land.

I think that before the session is over, in dealing with this all-important question of unemployment, we shall find that the placing of a certain proportion of the urban population permanently on the land will have solved to a large extent the unemployment problem in the larger centres if the people can remain in that occupation. I am not going to single out individual cases in the back to the land movement and hold them up as examples of failure. The movement as a whole has been I believe a success, and the class of people chosen by the government, whether provncial or federal, is, I think, the proper class. There are in the urban centres tens of thousands of people who were brought up on farms, who know a good deal about agriculture, and who now find themselves without employment, and these people are ready to make the necessary sacrifice to go back to the land. I say sacrifice because in a good many instances the return to the land does involve sacrifice; these people are suddenly uprooted from their environment and transplanted to newer sections of the country where they do not have the facilities to be found in the older and more settled parts —such as good roads, places of amusement, bright lights and so on. I repeat, we have in Canada to-day tens of thousands of people with a knowledge of agriculture who are ready to make the necessary sacrifice to start life anew in the rural centres. I suggest however that the minister must follow up more closely the fortunes of the men who are placed on the land. In northern Ontario we are doing a wonderful work and the government has tried to place the people as closely together as possible. That has been done in the Algoma, Cochrane and Kapuskasing districts. I do not think the population now being settled should be spread over any very considerable territory; they should be concentrated so that they may cultivate the community spirit. If you isolate them in the new sections, where a man has no friends near him, the people are likely to lose the pioneering spirit. I would urge on the government that this principle be given proper recognition. I have in mind new centres in the Hearst section of people coming from the Waterloo and Kitchener district. Here the people seem to be satisfied with their lot because they have all come from the same locality and they have now a proper community spirit.

I would ask the government to inaugurate the movement early in the spring, making it possible for the people to go on the land not later than the end of August. It is utterly unfair for men taken from industrial centres to be placed on the land in the fall or winter, because they are bound to be discouraged. So far as northern Ontario and the western prairies are concerned, most of the available land lies in the northern section of the country, where the climatic conditions are far more severe than in the sections from which the new population is coming. I know that the government realizes the importance of this, and I trust that the people will be placed not later than the end of August. The best time of year to place prospective settlers on the land is during the months of March, April and May, because in those months they can remodel their buildings and put some land under cultivation, and they can also have a garden; in a word, if they are placed during those months, they can be to a large extent self-supporting. If they are put on the land late in the year however they are almost bound to lose heart, because, in northern Ontario at any rate, there is no use putting grain in the sod expecting it to mature unless it is planted before the middle of June; so that—

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member has spoken for forty minutes.

Mr. A. A. HEAPS (North Winnipeg): Mr. Speaker, the seriousness of the present unemployment situation was indicated last week when the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) gave to the house some figures concerning those affected by the conditions now prevailing. In answer to a question he stated that there were over 1,300,000 men, women and children at present in receipt of relief from the Dominion of Canada. In addition it was also pointed out that there were approximately 800,000 people out of work. This number represents about one-third of the total employable population of Canada. Almost one out of seven of this country's population is in receipt of relief. This is not taking into consideration the vast number who are not in receipt of public relief but who are being maintained by their friends, relatives or other means. In my opinion, the unemployment problem should be considered from two angles. First, we have the care of those who require immediate relief and, second, we have the problem of unemployment which must be faced not only for the immediate future but for the years to come.

In rising this afternoon, I do so more particularly to answer some criticisms which have been levelled at the group in this corner by the right hon. the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). While other opportunities of dealing with this unemployment question from our own point of view will no doubt present themselves, I intend to take advantage of the first opportunity to deal with some of the criticisms levelled at us by the leader of the Liberal party. The right hon. gentleman stated that as far as the Liberal party was concerned unemployment was one of the main problems which parliament has to face. He then went on to enunciate fourteen points by means of which the Liberal party was going to lead us out of the wilderness into the land of prosperity.

Of the fourteen points, seven might be classified as dealing with tariffs. The next five dealt with finance, such as the creation of a central bank, the establishment of an investment control board, the reduction of the burden of interest and taxation and the reduction of the cost of government. Another point deals with the abolition of section 98 of the criminal code and then we have the fourteenth point dealing with unemployment and unemployment insurance. Although I have mentioned this point last, it appeared first in the new platform of the Liberal party.

So far as tariffs as a means of relieving the unemployment situation are concerned, whilst I am in favour of a reduction in tariffs, whilst

I have always voted against the imposition of high tariffs, I must again reiterate that in my opinion tariffs are not the cause of unemployment either here or in other parts of the world. If tariffs really affected unemployment we would not have been faced with the conditions which followed subsequent to the debacle of 1929. In other parts of the world where low tariffs or practically free trade is in effect we find exactly the same conditions prevailing as are now prevailing in the Dominion of Canada. If we are going to deal with the problem of unemployment we must get beyond tariffs and consider it in a more fundamental way.

I should like the leader of the opposition to have stated a little more fully just what he meant by a central bank. It was very difficult for me to follow his meaning because in one part of his speech he condemned public ownership and in another part he came out in favour of public ownership. When he refers to a central bank I am just wondering whether he means a central bank owned and controlled by the government or a central bank owned and controlled by the other banks in Canada. With a banking institution owned and controlled by the existing banks I am afraid we would be no better off and perhaps a little worse off than we are at the present time. An investment control board is of very little interest to the 800,000 unemployed and in dealing with the question of interest and taxation the leader of the opposition was not very explicit in stating how he was going to bring these things about. In criticizing the programs of those who sit in this corner of the house the right hon. gentleman always wants to know how things are going to be done and who is going to do them.

The right hon. gentleman nailed the flag of Gladstonian liberalism to the mast of the Liberal party of Canada, but I am just wondering whether the Liberal party of 1933 will care to fly the flag of Gladstonian liberalism of the last century. They may not be aware of the fact, but a great many things have happened during the past sixty or seventy years. No doubt liberalism has performed many important functions in history. It fought for liberty, for free speech and for freedom of assembly, all of which is to the credit of the Liberal party. But there are other factors in the life of this party which are not quite as creditable. During the development of the industrial life of Great Britain we find that such great leaders as Cobden and Bright fought many remedial measures brought forward to relieve the great masses of the people. I am just wondering whether that era of free competition and of the absolute liberty of the individual to be exploited to the very limit is to be considered as one of the ideals which the Liberal party is holding out to the people of Canada in the year 1933?

[Mr. Heaps.]

The leader of the opposition quoted extensively from Lord Morley's Life of Gladstone, and he even went so far as to quote from the Earl of Oxford. When the right hon. gentleman spoke of the change of heart that was needed and coupled his remarks with the Earl of Oxford, I felt he was almost inclined to join the Oxford group. I should like to quote briefly from the history of liberalism, so far as Great Britain is concerned, and how it dealt with certain economic conditions. Perhaps I may be pardoned for making a brief quotation because it is very rarely that I quote the statements of anyone else. The following is from a book entitled "The Industrial Revolution of the Eighteenth Century in England" by Arnold Toynbee. I quote from a speech he made at Newcastle in 1882, as follows:

> The new poor law was based upon a recognition of the principle that the poor had a right to relief from the state, a doctrine attacked by the radicals, but which others say has saved England from revolution; and our factory acts are also socialism. They interfere to protect the weak, and not only women and children but also men, regulating not only the sanitary conditions of factories but also the working hours.
> Now, who really initiated these movements, and who opposed them? Robert Owen was the founder of cooperation, and let us be candid and confess that the radicals of that time derided it. The same was the fact as regards trades unions. The radicals had an exclusive belief in individual enterprise, and these movements they considered as infringements upon individual right. As an instance, Richard Cobden spoke very strongly against trades unions as likely to become tyrannous. These are his words: "Depend upon it, nothing can be got by fraternizing with trade unions."

I wonder if there is any difference in the liberalism of to-day? He continues:

> "They are founded upon principles of brutal tyranny and monopoly. I would rather live under a Dey of Algiers than a trades committee!"
> Doctor Arnold called them "gangs of conspirators"; but while some at home have thus condemned them as agents of revolution, foreign writers, like Lange and Brentano, have hailed them as averters of revolution.

I am pointing this out, so that when one is taking credit for past achievements, we may not forget that there is another side to the story, and that when the Liberal party here do follow liberal principles, they will be the best and not the worst.

The fifth clause in the fourteen points of the leader of the opposition dealt with finding markets as a means of alleviating unemployment. It is the easiest thing in the world to speak of finding markets as an outlet for our exportable surplus. But since the days of Gladstonian liberalism, a great change has come over the world. Every country in the world instead of being on an importing basis is practically on an exporting basis, and instead of encouraging importations, is creating trade barriers against other countries. So we find that we have reached more or less of a deadlock in world export trade, not so much on account of tariffs as on account of our ever-increasing productivity resulting from machine production and other methods of speeding up the industrial life of the community.

In order that we may get rid of our exportable surplus we must take into account not only the possibility of increasing our export trade, but the fact that we have in this country 800,000 people who are out of work, a vast potential consuming element in our community which has not at present the opportunity of consuming the goods which we now produce. As I have often before said in the house, if China, Japan, Germany, France or any other country in the world is unable to purchase the surplus commodities that we have in abundance, that is no excuse why our own people should have to go without the essentials of life. There can be no real flow of commerce between nation and nation until we can establish the purchasing power of the great masses of our people.

May I deal with the reference made by the leader of the opposition to the reward of industry? In that connection he put industry into four categories: first, capital; second, labour; third, managerial ability, and, fourth, the community. I do not know whether I am putting them in exactly the order in which they were mentioned, but that is not important. There is a little confusion in the use of the terms: labour community and managerial ability; they are all part of the same thing. Is labour not part of the community and is managerial ability not also part of it? But capital is in an entirely different category from either labour, managerial ability or the community, because capital extracts something from the community, which I believe it has not the right to do, especially in the manner in which it is doing it at the present time. We are told of course that the rewards should go to those four elements that are part and parcel of the industrial life of the community. In what proportion we have not been told, whether capital should have the major portion or labour or managerial ability or the community should have it. In our industrial life there are really only two elements: first, capital, and second labour, and labour represents the major proportion of the community. But when the leader of the opposition propounds the theory that those four elements must be maintained and particularly that capital must be upheld in all its present sacredness, then I am bound to take issue with him, because, under our existing economic conditions, there is to-day no security for either the individual or the community. The man who works has no security in life and even the man who owns capital has no security with regard to it. While the leader of the opposition was speaking the other day, I interjected that even to-day capital is disappearing. We find at present not through any agitation carried on by any particular individual or group, in this house or outside, capital is rapidly disappearing. When we observe the drop in the value of shares and stocks and when we further see that large blocks of property of one kind or another have ceased almost to have an exchange value, we realize how rapidly capital is at this time disappearing.

Then we were told about the reward of service. We are told that we can reward service only by dangling some kind of bait in front of the individual. If he will perform a useful function or work a little harder, he is to have a reward in the way of a little more money for his services. I have dealt with that on more than one occasion in the house. It is the old story of climbing to the top of the ladder where one obtains the reward, forgetting there may be a few hundred others suffering on the lower rungs. We were told in school the story of Napoleon, how every private carried a filed marshal's baton in his knapsack. I wonder, if everybody became a field marshal, where would be the privates to do the fighting?

But perhaps one of the most remarkable parts of the address, a very able one, by the way, of the leader of the opposition, was in regard to the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation taking advantage of the present unrest in this country. The right hon. gentleman is a student of history; I am sure he has read a great deal along that line and he must know as well as does any other hon. member that in times of unrest, and change, new movements come into being. The C.C.F. is no more responsible for present conditions in Canada than for the Chartist movement which came into being in Great Britain about a hundred years ago. A new movement has come into being in Canada not because the movement created the unrest, but because the unrest created the movement. It was conditions in Great Britain that created the Chartist movement and the Chartist movement did not create the conditions. I can go back into British history and quote dozens and dozens of similar instances. It might be interesting if at this moment I referred to what the Chartists requested just about one hundred years ago in Great Britain. They requested: first, universal suffrage; second, equal electoral districts; third, vote by ballot; fourth, annual parliaments; fifth, no other qualification for member of parliament than choice of electors, and sixth, members of parliament to be paid for their services. A hundred years ago men were actually thrust into gaol for daring to demand or even request those conditions which I have just enumerated, and I presume fifty years from now the platform of the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation will be quite as antiquated as that of the Chartist movement of one hundred years ago.

In the course of the remarks of the leader of the opposition in regard to the new liberalism in Canada, we were told that it stands for a more equal distribution of the wealth of the country. I am quite in accord with that sentiment.

Mr. GARLAND (Bow River): What about the constitution?

Mr. HEAPS: The hon. member for Bow River wants to know what about the constitution? I have not posed as a constitutional expert, but I presume we shall find ways and means, when the time arrives and people demand changes, of overcoming these constitutional difficulties.

But I should like to speak not of liberalism in the abstract as enunciated by some hon. members, but of its actual practice in Canada, and to see what it did in 1927, 1928 and 1929, when it had an opportunity of bringing about a more equal distribution of wealth. In the years 1927 and 1928, when there were surpluses of revenue in Canada, what did hon. members to the right of me do? The first thing they did was to reduce the taxes of those who least required the reduction. In other words, in the years 1927, 1928 and 1929, when there was a large surplus revenue, and when we in this corner of the house along with other hon. members were requesting a minimum of $100 a month for able bodied men employed by the government, the income tax in Canada was reduced to a considerable extent. But when we asked for the minimum of $100 a month we were told that the government could not possibly see its way clear to accept our suggestion. I should like to have seen that more equal distribution of wealth, about which we hear so much talk, brought about in the years 1927, 1928 and 1929, when there were surpluses in the dominion exchequer. I should like to know, further, how the Liberal party intends to bring a more equal distribution into being. I say, Mr. Speaker, that it cannot be done unless wealth is taken away from the people who have it. Unless we are prepared to take away part of the wealth which flows to the possession of the few in order to effect a more equal distribution, I do not see how it can possibly be done.

But the Liberal party still maintains that profits have to be made and dividends have to be paid in connection with all kinds of enterprises, good and bad. If that is to be the case, I do not see how we will be able to bring about a better distribution of the wealth we produce. My right hon. friend was heartily in favour of cooperation; he believed it was a good thing. Yet he believes that private enterprises are worthy projects. I do not believe the two can go hand in hand; we have to accept either one or the other. As Lincoln said during the time of the Civil war, when there was an attempt to free the coloured population from chattel slavery, the United States could not exist half slave and half free. So at the present time we in Canada, or people in any other part of the world, cannot exist under a system half cooperative and half competitive. Ultimately we have to accept either one or the other.

I am in favour of cooperation, because I believe ultimately it will bring into being in Canada a cooperative commonwealth. There seems to be in the Liberal party a strong feeling in favour of unemployment insurance as one of the remedies to deal with unemployment. Mr. Speaker, nobody in this house has spoken more often than I have concerning unemployment insurance, and no hon. member has brought forward more resolutions dealing with this important matter. In 1926 the matter was dealt with; in 1927 I had a resolution on the order paper, again in 1928 and again in 1929. Even since the present government took office I have asked that a scheme of unemployment insurance be made part of the constitution of our dominion. And the Liberal party is again telling the people of Canada that they are in favour of an unemployment insurance plan.

Mr. Speaker, for the first time I put this claim before the house, although on other occasions and in other places, I have made similar statements, that at the present time within the confines of the existing capitalistic structure we cannot take care of our unemployed by a scheme of unemployment insurance. I believe it would be well for us to face the facts. An unemployment insurance scheme to take care of 750,000 people out of work, on a basis of benefits for forty weeks in a year, at $7.50 a week, would cost $225,000,000 per year. While I wish to see the unemployed cared for, at this particular moment I have no desire to hold out any false hope that within the confines of the existing system we could possibly have a system of unemployment insurance which could take care of the three-quarters of a million people who are out of work at the present time.

I am anxious to see the beginning of a system of unemployment insurance; I am anxious to see one inaugurated. The question arises however, that if our present army of unemployed in Canada remains permanent, we must look beyond a scheme of unemployment insurance to take care of the situation. As I have said in this house on many previous occasions, one way effectively to deal with the unemployment problem is by effecting a more equal distribution of wealth produced, and in my view that distribution of wealth can be brought about in many ways. First of all I believe we ought to have a considerable reduction in the number of working hours. I believe there is sufficient labour obtainable in this country to maintain all its population at a fairly high standard of living, and if every able-bodied person were usefully employed all our requirements could be more than satisfied with, at the most, a thirty-hour week.

In order to solve our unemployment difficulties we must not be content with a dole of $7 or $8 a week. On the contrary we must provide work for the men out of employment, and to provide that work we must operate on a scientific basis. If we do it on a scientific basis, the only way we can act, so that we will not glut our market, is to provide each man with a five or six-hour day, and have all our population able to work, usefully and gainfully employed to satisfy the needs of our people. Then, secondly, there has to be some relation between what a man receives as a result of his labour and that which he produces. For, if to-day a man is working and receives only about twenty per cent of that which he produces, the balance, in one form of profits or another, goes somewhere else. Therefore we must have a reasonable balance between production and consumption. In order to have that we must have some form of regulated planning in the industrial life of the community which to-day we have not. To-day the industrial life of Canada is more or less stagnant. If we are to bring about the conditions I have outlined it means that to a much greater extent than it is now doing the state must regulate or control our industrial life.

It would appear that hon. members on both sides of the house are not so much afraid of such regulation, because within the past few days there has been introduced some legislation unique in its character. We are about to regulate one of the largest industries in the Dominion of Canada, representing an investment of about two billion dollars. In this instance we have the state stepping in and saying to the railways, "We will legislate in the interests of the railway situation of the Dominion of Canada." I am not for a moment stating that such legislation is of the right and proper kind—far be it from me to say so. What I am saying is, that parliament is stepping in and considering matters affecting one of the largest industrial establishments in Canada, and is saying, "You cannot run your business in a proper way; we have to step in in order to save your industry." If in the case of railways we can do that, is there any logical reason why the same action could not be taken with regard to any other portion of our industrial life?

I know that only a few days ago hon. members in this corner of the house were asked who was going to do the regulating, and who was going to run the industries. Of course I did not attach a great deal of importance to the question. I remember a somewhat similar question in 1930; we were asked who was going to the Imperial conference. To-day we are asked who would run the industrial life of the country, if those who advocate the policies of the group in this corner came into power. I would say that the very same men and women running the industries to-day would continue to run them, if we assumed control. The men would still go down in the mines and bring out the coal and other valuable mineral deposits, they would still be working on the farms, the cars would still run and the industrial life of the country would still go on, perhaps even better than at present, because the rewards for industry would be completely different. The men would be interested in industry, not only for what they put into it but also for what they got out of it as well. At present they get only a mere pittance. A man may have been working in a workshop or factory or mine for five or ten or twenty years, at the end what has he obtained? The results speak for themselves. At the present time we find some 800,000 men who have given valuable service to the community, walking the streets unable to find employment. And I can safely say that a fairly large percentage of those men will never be reabsorbed into industry or their former vocations. What are we going to do about it?

The answer I must say is not to be found in any of the fourteen points enunciated here on Monday last. It is not be found even in the policies of the government. We have to go much deeper to find a remedy for the existing conditions. Parliament has a very great responsibility. It is of no use for any hon. member to tell the people that they have got to undergo a change of heart before we can do anything. That is not much of a solution to offer to men and women out of work. That will not satisfy the 1,300,000 who to-day are on public relief. A change of heart is very good, is a fine sentiment, but I think in dealing with this question we have also to use our heads. We were sent to parliament to remedy these conditions. In 1930 the people sent the members back to this house because unemployment at that time was the most important question facing them. Since then it has greatly increased, I believe it is four times as serious to-day as it was in 1930. What are we doing about it? I observe the lack of interest shown by a great many hon. members, but when I think of the hundreds of thousands who to-day are looking to this parliament as a means of alleviating the prevailing conditions, I say we have a great responsibility resting upon us. We are here representing, each in our own way, our particular constituencies. To say that we can do nothing, that we have to wait until prosperity comes back is no way to deal with this great and very serious question. In my opinion there is only one body competent to deal with the unemployment problem in Canada in a comprehensive way, that is this Dominion parliament. I know that constitutional questions and difficulties arise, but I am satisfied that these difficulties can be overcome if there is the will to overcome them. As we overcame constitutional difficulties in regard to old age pensions in 1926 so we can overcome the constitutional difficulties in regard to unemployment.

If we are going to deal with this problem in a fundamental way there are two avenues of attack: first there has to be a radical reduction in hours of labour, we must get away from the eight hour day to a day of six or five hours; secondly a much larger share of the product of labour must go to those who toil. At present far too large a proportion of the wealth produced goes to those who neither toil nor spin, while the men and women who are performing useful service in the community have barely sufficient to eke out an ordinary existence. Therefore if I may in conclusion speak directly to the Minister of Labour on this question, while I appreciate the efforts the government have made in dealing with direct relief, while I understand the difficulties they are bound to encounter in attempting to feed the vast numbers of people who to-day unfortunately are dependent on public relief, I would far rather see the government attempt to deal with the unemployment situation not only as a matter of alleviating immediate distress but from the point of view of getting rid of this canker in our midst so that we shall not have to come here another year and still have a million or a million and a half obtaining relief from the government. There is nothing more demoralizing to the individual, after a time, than for him to become the recipient of public relief. I hate to think that one out of seven of our population at present is unfortunately bound to accept such relief. If we are going to maintain the moral fibre of our people and build up a strong manhood and womanhood, we have got to do away with this relief situation and put men and women to work in useful capacities so that they may become self-supporting and useful citizens of this dominion.

[Mr. Heaps.]

Mr. J. P. HOWDEN (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, the debate on this resolution has pretty well resolved itself into a debate on unemployment. There is no topic before the people of this country or of the American continent to-day which is of such absorbing interest as that of unemployment, and the various measures adopted for its relief. The present government was returned to office on the undertaking of its leader to cure unemployment and thereby remove the evil which requires these extensive relief measures. I have not risen on this occasion to criticize the government. I would merely point out certain conditions with respect to the community which has honoured me with its confidence. One might say in passing, however, that so far from unemployment having been relieved, the evil has increased in this country so that from having a little over 100,000 unemployed in 1930 we now have more than 1,000,000. At the last session it was my privilege to make a speech on unemployment, and since my ideas have not changed in the interim I have no desire to repeat the remarks I made on that occasion. I only say that the measures instituted by the government to relieve unemployment have failed. In the last federal campaign the present government accepted responsibility for the cure of unemployment. On accepting office they instituted a three way responsibility, with the provinces and the various municipalities, for the relief of the unemployed. Whether or not the provinces and municipalities were consulted they viewed this measure with a good deal of dismay, and have now fallen down in some instances. I believe that the western provinces are not able to carry the burden of relief, and certainly the municipalities are in a much poorer condition. For this reason I have risen to point out the conditions which obtain in the municipality from which I come, that is the municipality of St. Boniface. It is not a very big city, but it dates back in its origin to the same time as the city of Winnipeg. Early in the last century about 1817, I think, a priest who afterwards became Monseigneur Provencher arrived on the east side of the Red river opposite Fort Garry. The city of St. Boniface, which is the centre of the constituency of St. Boniface, dates from that time.

The people of this little city are in rather a bad situation at this time. Recently I have had several communications from them, and on their part I desire to place these communications on Hansard so that certainly they will be before the government and the house. I have in my hand a letter from the mayor of St. Boniface, Mr. F. H. Dowse. He says:

Dear Doctor:

I have not up to this time, noon, received any reply to my telegram to you of the 15th nor to that directed to the Minister of Finance on the same date, a copy of which I annex hereto for your information.

I may state that if something is not done in the course of a few days towards assisting us for relief purposes we shall have to call upon the Manitoba government for police protection, as the merchants cannot possibly continue to advance further relief.

Since wiring you and the Minister of Finance, it is only through the cooperation of some of the wholesalers who have agreed to supply some of the retailers for a few days longer that we have been able to carry on.

As stated in my telegram to the Hon. Mr. Rhodes, we have exhausted every avenue to avoid the trouble that will surely arise immediately merchants discontinue to supply goods. I understand that the same situation exists in Transcona, where trouble is expected any time now, but you will no doubt agree with me that it will be much more serious and difficult of control if it started here, by reason of our close proximity to Winnipeg. I, therefore, cannot too strongly urge you and, through you, the authorities in Ottawa to take cognizance of the very serious situation which confronts us and which in no time might develop and become beyond control even with the assistance of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

Will you kindly, therefore, use your best endeavours to impress the authorities with the seriousness and urgency of our situation and wire result.

The telegram sent to the Minister of Finance reads as follows:

Hon. E. N. Rhodes,
Minister of Finance,
House of Commons,
Ottawa.

Following telegram from Hon. Mr. Gordon stating referred matter of relief loans to you have been in consultation with Banque Canadienne Nationale and provincial government. Require twenty-four thousand dollars over amounts due from Dominion government. Provincial government state necessary to pass enabling legislation and sell bonds before amount available. Bank will not advance funds unless Dominion government guarantee to pay same in case provincial government do not pay amount within two months. Only one merchant willing to supply goods for relief without cash payment and only for limited period. Have every reason to expect trouble unless relief can be continued. City council have done everything possible to postpone this. If Dominion government will give undertaking asked for by bank would ask you to advise me by wire and advise general manager of bank in Montreal.

F. H. Dowse,
Mayor of St. Boniface.

About the next day I received from Transcona, the only other community of any size in the constituency of St. Boniface, this telegram:

The unemployed of Transcona are desirous of bringing to your attention the deplorable conditions existing in Transcona for the unemployed scale of relief. Very inadequate clothing. No clothing for women, children, and very little for men. Quality very poor for sub-zero weather. Medical attention practically nil. Fuel poplar wood of very poor quality. Very unsuitable for winter use in Manitoba. We are drawing your attention to these conditions to bring before federal house if you deem it advisable.

I have been among these people within the last few months and to be honest I must say that I do not believe conditions are quite as bad as they are reported. I do believe, however, that they are far from good and that there is a great deal of suffering and destitution in those two localities as well as a great many others in the province of Manitoba. The point I want to make, however, and I think it is perfectly fair to state it in this way, it this: The Dominion government has assumed responsibility for the cure of unemployment. I think the Dominion government has made a very generous arrangement, but unfortunately it is not reaching the people; it is not getting home to them. I believe that the responsibility of this government is not fulfilled until it sees to it that these measures become fully effective. Steps should be taken to ascertain who is falling down on the job, and the matter should be taken in hand immediately. This situation should be cleared up so that relief measures may reach the people they are intended to help.

I need not labour that point at greater length. There has been some mention made of medical services, and some contradictory remarks have been advanced in this regard. I might say that the Lieutenant Governor of Ontario approved an order in council dated September 19, 1932, clause 9 of which reads:

> The expression "direct relief" in this order in council means food, fuel, clothing including footwear, shelter, medical services and medical supplies.

That is to say, in their measures for relief the province of Ontario have included medical relief and medical supplies. Clause 11 of the order in council reads:

> Payment for medical services shall not exceed one-half of the standard medical charges existing in the municipality or locality.

I mention this merely to show that the province of Ontario has included medical relief in its general relief measures.

Mr. COTNAM: Is the hon. member aware that the province of Ontario assumes full responsibility for this medical attention? I understand that it pays the entire cost.

Mr. HOWDEN: I was not aware of that fact, but clause 8 of this order in council reads:

> In territory where no municipal government exists the minister may provide for the payment by the province of fifty per cent of the expenditures to be made by the province for direct relief, in addition to fifty per cent thereof to be paid by the dominion.

Mr. GORDON: Would the hon. member permit me an interjection? What the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. Cotnam) says is quite correct with respect to Ontario and the other provinces. Undoubtedly the province of Ontario did pass the order in council just referred to, but the province asumes the total cost of medical relief, and the dominion as yet has not taken any steps.

Mr. HOWDEN: I take it that the government of Ontario has assumed the entire burden of the relief measures in that province, because they have now seen fit to include medical relief among their other measures. However, I am not particularly concerned with what they have done in Ontario; I think it is very excellent action on their part. What I do rise to say is that the province of Manitoba has apparently not been able to go so far in its relief measures. May I here make this observation. For the last three sessions in this house there has been brought up a resolution with respect to medical relief for the people. It was my privilege to initiate two of these resolutions, and I may tell you quite frankly that on those occasions I was really thinking about the people who needed relief throughout the length and breadth of the country. It was then and still is my opinion that the people in the outlying districts have not been supplied with that medical attention to which they are entitled as citizens. I realized that so far as the cities were concerned the people in a good many instances were over-supplied with medical relief and that those who went to hospitals and what not received the best attention regularly. But there was another class, the middle class, who did not wish to accept ordinary ward hospital attention, charity if you like, and such people found the cost of medical service very heavy indeed, so much so that it was almost intolerable. That was the gist of my remarks on those former occasions.

To-day, however, I am not thinking quite so much about the people in the back districts or about the people generally; I am thinking about the medical men. I stand here and say without hesitation that a great many medical men in Manitoba—I cannot speak for the rest of Canada but I can for a great many of the medical men in that province—are in desperate straits. I say that without any hesitation at all. Perhaps I may be permitted to follow the course of events in Winnipeg and in that adjacent country with regard to this matter. In 1931 the medical men of Winnipeg, realizing that they were receiving very little in the way of fees and that times were getting quite bad, met and appointed a medical relief committee to consider this matter, the lack of fees and the smallness of revenue from their work. After a thorough discussion of the matter it was decided that they would not do anything for a few months or for a year or so and the matter was left in abeyance until 1932. In 1932, with the knowledge that the hon. the Minister of the Interior was going to be in Manitoba in December, the relief committee met and asked for permission to interview him. He gave them an audience on that occasion and they then presented their views.

There is nothing special about the claims they made. They pointed out that medical attendance had to be given; when a patient is sick and calls a medical man, that doctor is in honour and in duty bound to render attendance. May I just read one or two remarks in this connection:

Dr. Gunn pointed out that the province of Ontario had voluntarily brought forward a scheme which had been accepted by the profession on a fee basis of fifty per cent of normal.

Dr. MacKenzie realized that health was the responsibility of the municipality, the city or the province, but the municipality having no money, the city having no money, and the provincial government having no money, to what authority were we to turn?

And so they were turning to the Dominion government. The minister on that occasion replied to them in these words:

The medical profession have taken a just pride in the noble traditions handed down by their profession from generation to generation, that the sick poor shall always be taken care of. At a time like this, when the country is in financial stress, when the country needs your help, is it too much to ask you gentlemen to each undertake three visits per day to the sick on relief, and would this not take care of the whole problem?

I may say that the Minister of the Interior had a very limited idea of the demands that are being made on medical men in that part of the country, if their work can be compared in the least to my own when I am at home, because I can assure you that I am called upon to make, not three relief calls a day but sometimes nearly twenty.

Mr. COTNAM: Medical men are working all day on relief.

Mr. HOWDEN: The hon. member has put it correctly. There are not many fees going these days, I can assure you of that. An hon. member near me says that they will have to put the physicians on direct relief. Well, I have no doubt at all that they will have to put a good many physicians on direct relief in Manitoba before very long, if some way is not found to come to their assistance in a reasonable and honourable manner.

I might further state that the profession met the premier of Manitoba in regard to this matter. I will not delay the house with the various aspects of the subject put forward; I will just recite what has to do with the premier of that province:

Mr. Bracken, having suggested he might divide his government's surplus this year with the doctors, proceeded to compliment the speakers. He pointed out that the general policy followed in the last two or three years was that no one should make any profits from money spent by the government on relief. He instanced the central clothing depot. The state however should not expect any class of the community to contribute to its services. "Theoretically," he said, "you have a good case. Practically, we do not know where we get off at. The government is spending $2,000,000 per annum more than it is receiving, and if the province is to contribute the added million, the deficit is going to be $3,000,000. (The added million referred to is the difference in the amount of free work done by the profession in 1929 and the estimated figure for 1933.) This however does not absolve the government from the responsibility of facing the problem. You are advocating state medicine. Have you a specific proposal?"

Dr. Moorhead answered that we had not, that we were endeavouring at this time to have the principle accepted, and, that accomplished, it should not be difficult to plan an acceptable scheme in detail.

The reason I bring this matter before the house at the present time is that these men have asked me to present it to the federal authorities because, as an hon. member to my right has said, if something is not done in the way of providing some reasonable compensation for the medical men of the city of Winnipeg and the province of Manitoba, they will be upon direct relief before very long. It would seem that this government has made a generous enough arrangement with the provinces and the municipalities but I do not know whether it has taken into consideration the fact that the provinces and the municipalities are very limited in their ability and right to collect taxes. With a population gradually being absorbed into the ranks of the unemployed, the possible revenue for the municipalities and the provinces is disappearing very rapidly. Since this government in the last federal campaign accepted the entire responsibility for curing unemployment, I submit it is up to them to see that measures are initiated by which relief will be provided to these various citizens whom I have mentioned this afternoon.

Mr. EUSEBE ROBERGE (Megantic) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, I have already, in the past, protested against the principle of granting to the government a blank cheque to spend the amounts it pleased where it thought proper and the way it judged best. Experience has taught us that such funds were not distributed equitably among the various provinces and still less among our people. I shall prove to the house how true is my contention.

On November 4, 1932, I had the following questions placed on the order paper:

What amount has the federal government disbursed as direct relief without the provinces or municipalities making any contribution, during the years 1930, 1931, 1932, in: (a) Ontario; (b) Manitoba; (c) Saskatchewan; (d) Alberta; (e) the Yukon Territory; (f) New Brunswick; (g) Nova Scotia; (h) Prince Edward Island; (i) Quebec?

Three days later, on November 7, 1932, I received the following reply from the Minister of Labour:

(a) Ontario—$600 in 1931; (b) Manitoba—nil; (c) Saskatchewan—$3,451,408.19, from September 24, 1931 to June 30, 1932 for sections affected by drought in Saskatchewan; (d) Alberta—nil; (e) Yukon Territory—nil; (f) New Brunswick—nil; (g) Nova Scotia—nil; (h) Prince Edward Island—nil; (i) Quebec—nil.

As you see, sir, the funds expended as direct assistance without the assistance given by the provinces and municipalities was distributed unfairly and in a very provoking way for the provinces which were neglected. Because the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) hails from the west, he has no right to give everything to Saskatchewan to the detriment of the others. I am not opposed to helping destitute families of Saskatchewan, providing that Quebec and the other provinces receive their quota.

But, sir, in all provinces there are, to-day, towns and villages where destitute people are as much in need of direct assistance as the people of Saskatchewan.

According to the figures which I have just given the house, the government has distributed in direct assistance throughout Canada the sum of $4,051,408.48. Out of this amount $3,451,408.10 was expended in Saskatchewan; $600 in Ontario and nothing in Quebec. Moreover, the government granted a bonus of 5 cents per bushel of wheat exported, this means that the western provinces received a bonus for their wheat of $12,720,121, in addition to $3,451,408.10 as direct assistance taking no account of the assistance given by the provinces and municipalities, namely a total of $16,171,529.10 which one western province received.

The way direct assistance was given to Saskatchewan was unfair and very provoking to Manitoba and Alberta which are neighbouring provinces and must have had, at times, as many unemployed and farmers whose crops also failed.

Was the government more generous to this province in order to reward the Prime Minister of Saskatchewan for having suppressed French in a number of schools or again because it waged an unrelenting war upon the Catholic institutions teaching French in that province. The government did not distribute a cent as direct assistance in Quebec without the province or municipalities supplying their quota, as I have described.

A special grant was requested for maple sugar. You may rest assured, sir, that our farmers in Quebec had as much right to a bonus for their sugar as the people in the west for their wheat.

The western farmers can sell their wheat at the same price as the United States farmers can sell theirs, while our farmers cannot market their maple sugar at the same price as the United States farmers, because there is an 8 cents duty per pound, this means that the maple sugar makers in the United States are selling, this year, their sugar thrice the price of that of the Quebec sugar makers. This proves that had the government wished to be fair towards Quebec, it would have granted the bonus requested just as a similar bonus was granted to the west for their wheat.

Mr. Speaker, I think the house was wrong in not adopting the resolution moved recently by the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough (Mr. Duff), requesting a reciprocal treaty with the United States, as proves the following dispatch which appeared in the Soleil in Quebec, on February 28, 1933:

Tariff Against Canadian Maple Sugar and Syrup Products Appealed for in the House

Washington, Feb. 27 (A.P.).—An appeal for a higher tariff on maple syrup and sugar to protect Vermont farmers from competition from Canada has been made in the United States House by representative Gibson, Republican, Vermont.

The principal competition, Gibson said, comes from Canada where sugar is produced at a cost much lower than is possible in this country. Importation from Canada has increased from about 2,000,000 pounds in 1923 to over 10,000,000 pounds annually and this has resulted in driving many farmers out of sugar producing. Less than 60 per cent of our maple trees are now in use and many splendid orchards have been sacrificed to lumber. Gibson blamed tobacco growers for the difficulties of the maple sugar producers in his state.

Gibson said it cost $1.21 to produce a gallon of maple syrup in Vermont while a gallon produced in Canada, with the tariff added, can sell in the United States for 88 cents.

Through the Vermont Maple Co-operative Inc. financing by local banks and the Federal Intermediate Credit Bank, Gibson said, the Vermont producers had kept the business on a sound financial basis, but he urged a concerted effort by maple sugar producers to restore the duty on their product. Tobacco companies and other parties interested in lowering maple sugar rates can take care of themselves, he said. The farmers cannot. Help to these farmers means help to agricultural interests of over 20 states and to a crop value that ordinary runs into millions of dollars.

As you can see, sir, the United States farmers, at present, sell their maple sugar thrice the price of that of the Quebec farmers. I think it would have been a boon for our farming classes if the resolution of the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough had been adopted.

A bonus was also requested on butter, the answer was the same: No bonus for butter, no bonus for maple sugar. Yet, the government is always ready to grant to the west, at the expense of the east, direct assistance, without the quota of the provinces or municipalities.

We also have a working class in Quebec which, at times, needs direct assistance.

May I mention a small town in my county, Black Lake, which according to the last census, has still a population of 2,167 souls. In 1930, at the last election, Black Lake had a population of more than 3,000 people, out of that number 400 to 500 people worked in the mines. In July, 1930, during the campaign, the fine pledges of the Prime Minister were repeated there as well as elsewhere; that immediately after his party assumed power all workmen would be given work. What a disappointment for these honest people who, for the last 27 months have been without work.

All the mines in this beautiful little town have been closed since December, 1930. As it was the only industry there not a man has worked in the mines since that date.

Do you not think, sir, that these people had as much right to direct assistance, without the province or municipalities having to supply their quota, than the people in the west? The population of Black Lake had as much right to direct assistance as that of the west and this government did nothing for them. Moreover, the people of that town will be called upon to pay their quota of the money granted as direct assistance to the west, also their quota of taxes levied by the government. As Quebec, itself furnishes nearly one-third of our revenue, her quota for the direct help granted to the west amounts to more than $5,000,000. That is how we are treated in Quebec by the government.

I have, sir, just described, as an instance, the conditions prevailing in a small town of my constituency; you can find almost similar cases in every constituency of Quebec and also throughout the other provinces.

On behalf of the constituents whom I have the privilege of representing in the house, I request direct assistance, without the province or municipalities having to furnish their quota, not only for Black Lake but also for Thetford Mines. Since this government has assumed power work has decreased by 60 per cent and wages by 50 per cent. Consequently, the workmen draw about one-third the wages they earned under the Liberal regime.

As the dominion and provincial governments have encouraged the back to the land movement, in my county, a number of people have settled on new lands, but have not had any crop because they have not cleared sufficient land. If the western farmers have been granted direct assistance, without the help of the province or municipalities, because their crops have failed for a year or two, the new settlers have certainly as much right as them to direct assistance, because it takes three or four years to clear sufficient land to enable them to grow any kind of crop. On their behalf, I therefore request the government to grant them direct assistance just as it was given to the West when their crops failed.

If direct assistance, without the quota of the province or municipalities is fair for one province, why is it not for all the other provinces, who have need of it? The Canadian people would appreciate such a policy.

Because of this injustice to my province and constituency I cannot support this measure, unless the administration is entrusted to more competent men, who will solve the problem and be equally fair to all provinces.

This is, sir, the way the Megantic people have been dealt with, since the patronage was placed in the hands of J. T. Beaudoin, the defeated candidate at the last election, and, by the government since it has been in power.

We find in this morning's Ottawa Journal the following heading:

> Canada's Need is Unity Says McGill Head, National Government is Favoured by Sir Arthur Currie in Address

Such is the heading of a speech delivered—

The DEPUTY SPEAKER (Translation): It is contrary to the rules to read newspaper articles.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation): Another ruling!

Mr. ROBERGE (Translation): When the first rumours of a National government spread in 1931, I was against it, and, I am still against it.

Mr. JEAN FRANCOIS POULIOT (Témiscouata) (Translation): Mr. Speaker, the question of relief for the unemployed is certainly one of the most important, if not the most important, that has been submitted to the house. I am pleased to have an opportunity to express the views of my constituents in connection with the work carried out, up to this date, to relieve the unemployed in this country. I regret that the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr Gordon) was unable to submit his measure earlier in the session, because it is important that a decision be arrived at as soon as possible to improve the lot of the unemployed.

What strikes me, sir, in the blank cheque act, is the smoke screen with which the government has surrounded itself to conceal the ways and means to end the crisis. When we inquire from the government—I do not wish to seem more disrespectful towards the hon. minister who is piloting this measure than to his colleagues in the cabinet—we are struck with the fact that often the members of the government neglect to answer our questions, because they are themselves unaware of the policy they will adopt the next day.

For the last three years, the government has had no satisfactory results to show as regards their policy to relieve the unemployed. Within the last three years, the number of unemployed, instead of decreasing, has greatly increased. Why? Because, when the Prime Minister stated, at the last election, while he was leader of the opposition, that he would put an end to unemployment, he did not take himself seriously, because he was then speaking not as an ordinary mortal being, but as the Anti-Christ; or, if you wish, he was indulging in child's talk, and the people, to-day, regret of having been such dupes as to believe in his pledges.

Just imagine him, sir, proclaiming to the people that he would end unemployment, when the number of unemployed was then about 100,000, while to-day it amounts to 1,300,000, including men, women and children! These figures only refer to those who are receiving the dole. In fact, the number of unemployed is, to-day, in Canada, at least 3,000,000, one third of our population, a fantastic and fabulous figure. Who would have cast his vote in favour of the Conservative party, had he known that the one who promised, in 1930, to put an end to unemployment, has perhaps been indirectly responsible for the enormous increase in the number of unemployed, in such a short while?

May I, sir, for a third, fourth and fifth time, repeat to the hon. Minister of Labour a very simple and humble suggestion, which I made to him each year, and even many times each year: that of classifying the unemployed. How can we put an end to unemployment if we have no knowledege of the field of activities in which the unemployed of to-day previously worked? If we have no knowledge of the number of white shirt unemployed, of those who were railway men, farmers or employed in such and such an industry? As I then stated, it is important that such a classification be made not by federal or provincial government officials or even municipal employees, because each of these public bodies is taxed to relieve unemployment; it should be done by charitable societies such as the St. Vincent de Paul Society, the Salvation Army and the Red Cross. These societies, may at times, blunder, however, they are more impartial than many government employees, both federal and provincial, and even municipal employees.

I again sincerely request the Minister of Labour and beseech him to kindly have a complete classification made, as soon as possible, in order that we may know how many men, women and children there are in this fabulous number of 1,300,000, who depend at present on relief funds from the various governments. We must also know the number of unemployed who do not seek direct assistance from governments, but who are living on their small savings, which they were able to set aside during the years they were fortunate enough to work and earn their bread by the sweat of their brow.

The members would have to be furnished, each week during the session and every fortnight outside of session, with a complete statement of conditions prevailing. Such information is most important. Various interesting publications on agriculture and labour in general, are distributed in our midst, but they do not always contain enough precise and complete information. Members would have to be supplied, by the Labour department, at least every fortnight, with a complete and exact statement, indicating the number of unemployed in each class, whether they are married or not and the number of dependents. All this information is most important. At present, we are completely deprived of such information and were I to inquire from the minister of labour what the number of unemployed in white shirt is, he could no more answer this question this year than he did last year when I put that question to him and which was not impertinent but very pertinent. Were I to inquire from the hon. minister how many persons were employed, in previous years, as help on the farm and who, to-day, have no work could he give me the information? Were I to inquire, for instance, how many carpenters, plumbers and others engaged in the building trade who are, to-day, without work, could he supply the information? Were I to inquire how many clerks there are without work, could he supply the information? How many store, brokers, office clerks have been let out since the crisis began? He would find it very hard to give such information.

Previous to broaching the subject in which I am particularly interested, may I refer, for a moment, to a speech recently delivered by the Prime Minister, at Toronto, in connection with the trans-Canada highway. The project is absurd! It is another absurd dream which one wishes to revive. In fact, what is the necessity for Canada to construct a highway through 700 or 800 miles of rock, where not a soul lives, and to have these poor unemployed work like convicts? It would probably be better to transfer our penitentiaries to those regions, and these convicts would have to work so hard in those remote parts that their ideas of revolting would be knocked out of them. Moreover, I think it absurd to waste the country's money in building this highway covering a stretch of 700 or 800 miles where no one would travel.

Before continuing my speech in French, I wish to say a few words in English to the minister of Labour as regards the classification of the unemployed which I have just advocated.

Before continuing my remarks in French, may I say a few words in English to the Minister of Labour in regard to the classification of the unemployed? Last year I asked him to classify the unemployed in order that the house might be well posted on the matter and might see to it that something was done for their relief. It is elementary that if we do not know their trade before they became unemployed, we cannot do anything for them. May I again insist upon that? For instance, in the first part of the session we were given figures relating to unemployment not of last year, but of the year before, as of June or July, 1931. Those figures were given to us in the fall of 1932, or more than a year later. Is it possible to do anything for the relief of the unemployed when no one knows what their trade was before they lost their positions?

I shall continue in English for the benefit of the Minister of Labour who, I know, is sympathetically disposed, and I offer some very humble suggestions in order that he may take them into consideration and see to it, if he deems it wise, that something is done. Last fall I had the great honour to address an audience in the church of Rivière Bleue in my county. At that meeting were present His Lordship the Bishop of Rimouski and the Minister of Agriculture of the province of Quebec, Mr. Godbout. Agricultural policies were discussed by many speakers, one of the subjects being the back to the land movement. Is it back to the land? No, it is back to the paternal roof. Generally what happens is that many young men or women who have left the country to go to the city, return to the country in order to find shelter after they have lost their jobs in the city. Then the old father, the farmer, has to receive not only his children, but his daughters-in-law, his sons-in-law and his grandchildren. The country house is not large enough for all those people and, in addition, the father is not receiving a decent return for his farm products. This is why there is a very strong link between agriculture and unemployment; unemployment has an effect upon agriculture, because the agriculturist, the farmer, has to support his relatives and friends who have lost work in the cities.

Last year very little was done by way of direct relief to assist nearly 800,000 unemployed. Each one was fed during one day, each one having three meals from the direct relief source, and one-half of them, or about 400,000, were lodged during one night. The government did not do much for them. What was done for them was done by private charity and most of the people who are at present unemployed are supported, not by this government nor by the provincial governments, but by their own relatives in the rural districts or in the towns. The only good result of the back to the land policy is that it makes country people understand that they are better off living in rural centres than swelling the numbers of unemployed in the cities. That is the only practical result which this policy has brought about. At the Rivière Bleue meeting, in the presence of His Lordship the Bishop of Rimouski and the Minister of Agriculture for the province of Quebec, I submitted the following arguments:

First of all, lots should be classified. In the province of Quebec there are forestry reserves and farm lands. At times, and often, the farm lands are on forestry reserves. Since confederation the right classification between farm lands and forestry reserves has not been observed. Not only that, but some lumber merchants had the right to cut timber from undivided lots in the townships. Then, after the timber was cut a division was made. However, no timber, or very little of it, was left for the farmers who were going to settle at those points. Therefore my first argument is that before anything further is done by way of colonization the townships should be divided as to farm lands and forestry reserves. That division should be made by experts and reliable people.

Secondly, after that classification is made there should be a classification of the would-be settlers. Is it possible to take a man who has been a blacksmith all his life and make a farmer of him? Can we take a clerk from a store, or any other white-collar employee and make a successful farmer of him. Is it possible to do so? To be a farmer one must first have the natural inclination added to which there must be experience. Without that inclination and experience a farmer cannot be successful. Then the settlers receive a sum of money paid jointly by the federal, provincial and municipal governments. They spend that money, and no more is to be given to them. The idea behind the back to the land scheme is that people should remain on their lands, that those lands should become a national asset, and should be available for the settlers, their children and their grandchildren. Then, first of all after a classification of townships is made we must bring first class farmers with natural inclination and experience to work the farm lands.

What is necessary, besides that? You know, Mr. Chairman, because you represent a rural constituency. We know that roads are necessary. Is it fair to bring settlers to good lots when there are no decent roads leading to them? It is most absurd.

Mr. McINTOSH: There are no railways either.

Mr. POULIOT: Certainly there are no railways; those settlers are miles and miles from railways. They are there in the middle of the forests and have no roads to travel on. The scarcity of highways leads to exploitation of the timber. As the settlers have no good summer roads they make only winter roads, and on those winter roads they do not carry vegetables or products of the land but carry timber. As the price of timber has fallen, their receipts are very small.

In this connection I should like to outline an incident. Last December I was travelling from Quebec to Montreal by way of the Canadian Pacific railway. At Three Rivers I left the train to walk on the station platform. I saw a large crowd congregated. The station was jammed with people. I asked the conductor if there had been any trouble, and his reply was that there were two cars of settlers going to Abitibi or Timiskaming. On that occasion I spoke with those people. They seemed to be a pleasant type of people. Among them were old gentlemen, ladies and children, and I noticed because of their small means or poverty they were dressed in summer clothes. Other than that they seemed to be healthy, a good class of people. My interest was aroused, and I asked them where they were going. Their reply was they were going to Abitibi. I asked concerning their guide, and they told me where to find him. Meeting the guide I asked to what point he was taking the people. His reply was that he was taking them to such and such a township. I asked him if each one had a lot, and his reply was in the affirmative. I said, "Are their camps on those lots?" He said, "No." I said, "Are there roads leading to those lots?" His reply was in the negative. I said. "Do you not realize it is a crime to take those people to the middle of the forest when there are no roads leading to their lots?" He replied, "I admit it is a great mistake, but we expect to have roads by next spring." I told him in very plain French that in my view it was a shame—une honte—under the pretence of giving them lots, to take those poor people without work out to a wilderness where they would have no shelter except that afforded by an old shack. I was told afterwards that they were taken to what is called a hotel. Hon. members will probably realize the kind of hotel there would be in the middle of a forest.

Mr. MERCIER (St. Henri): They were taken to a hotel?

Mr. POULIOT: I am not joking; I am serious, and I am convinced this is a very sad case. This hotel to which I have referred is only a shack where large numbers of men women and children, most of whom are not related, must live together under crowded conditions which are extremely undesirable.

This morning I read a dispatch in a Montreal newspaper from someone who had come from that district telling about the camps. Sir, it is a shame. It is a shame that these people who go out as settlers, in good faith, who go to the wilderness and have to live crowded together in shacks cannot be sure of the fact that next spring there will be roads leading to their lots. I strongly protest. Although to-day, I am not giving to the house the name of the guide to whom I spoke, if within ten days time he does not resign I shall avail myself of another opportunity to give his name to the house, and tell more about him. I give this warning to whom it may concern. In this connection I have no personal motives, but I must say the people whom I met at the station made a very marked impression upon me. It was the first time I had met them, and I will probably never see them again but I think of them a great deal because they seemed to be good Canadians. For that reason I want them to be given proper protection by the authorities.

An investigation has been carried on by that great Quebec paper l'Action Catholique, under the title of "Faut-il ruraliser notre société." That particular publication has given much attention to the settlement problem. But what I found most astounding was that at the end of last year there was a meeting of l'Union Catholique des Cultivateurs at which many matters were discussed. At the time however they did not pay any attention to the great problem of colonization. I acquainted the secretary with the fact of that omission. I was very much surprised that this important body, l'Union Catholique des Cultivateurs, did not pay any attention at its last meeting to that great and important problem of colonization. Lately I read in Le Devoir an interesting article by the president, but it seems that no person has the courage to tell the truth, namely, that the back to the land scheme is a failure. It has failed because there has been no organization, no foresight and no forethought. The result is that herds of people are sent to colonization districts to live indiscriminately massed together in the wilderness with no help other than the $600 given by the federal, provincial and municipal governments.

Can we expect for one moment that the people will remain on their lands after the money is expended? They must live like animals; in my own county of Temiscouata some settlers during the past summer had to eat grass and roots. Those people must be looked after. We cannot cure the evil simply by changing the points to which the settlers are to be sent.

If I have spoken on this subject to-day it is because I feel my responsibility as a member of parliament, because these people are my fellow countrymen; I love them and I want them to be as happy as Canadians can be. We say the people should remain in the country, and that those who live in the rural districts are fortunate. That may be all very well for people who have no debts, but it does not apply to the farmer who has to pay an instalment of $500 for interest, but who receives only ten cents a pound for his butter and receives only a few cents per bushel for his potatoes. This is no joke; a real problem confronts us and it has to be settled. If my hon. friend the Minister of Labour wants suggestions I am ready to give him some; everyone on this side of the house is ready to offer suggestions. They probably will not all be good, perhaps mine are all wrong, but he needs suggestions. When the Prime Minister says: We rule this country; we have the power to govern; we will do this and we will do that, it is a shame. Why? Because he must take advantage of everything constructive that is said to him by anyone. I will do my duty here as a member of parliament, as anyone does, not more but as much. And if I speak this way to-day in the House of Commons of Canada it is because an evil has to be remedied, and at once. The country cannot be ruled by words. In fact I pay no attention to my language. Language is useful to convey ideas, I offer ideas. Sometimes they are very poorly clothed—not in metaphorical language, not in the king's English; they are plain ideas. I would like them not even to be clothed, I would like them to be naked, but it is a question of something that has to be done, and I offer them in all earnestness and sincerity.

The back to the land scheme is so important that, as I said, the great Quebec paper l'Action Catholique for over a month has published articles from the leading men of church and state in the province of Quebec about the matter. If you read the letter from His Lordship the Bishop of Gaspé, you will find he says that there is no system in the matter of colonization. I have not his exact words, but that is the meaning of what he said. There have been other articles, a very excellent one from the pen of my hon. friend the member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger); the hon. member for Quebec-Montmorency (Mr. Dorion) wrote an article, and people in every class of life have done the same. There was an article from Monseigneur Lapointe, former Vicar General of Chicoutimi. This is the important problem, with all its variations and changes in the different provinces, that has to be carefully studied with cooperation from all. If someone does something wrong, whoever he may be, he must be set back without any pity, without any consideration, without any compassion for the person, because one must act for the public interest and the public good.

Now, sir, may I suggest something else? It is that certain people who are advising the government in the province of Quebec have no qualification at all to do so. They have no experience whatever in colonization and agriculture. They are paid by the Quebec government or by some government to do something and they are not at all qualified to continue their work. As I have told you, I have the admission of one of the guides of those excursions that men and women and children were sent to camps remote in the wilderness, with no roads leading to them. He published a letter himself, after I interviewed him, saying that roads were badly needed for settlers, which is the plain truth. I wonder if those people will have more roads now. Mark you, Mr. Speaker, I do not put the blame for this on the Quebec government any more than I do on the Minister of Labour.

Mr. GORDON: I have nothing whatever to do with where these people go.

Mr. POULIOT: That is all right, but as the federal government subscribes $200 for the settler it is a matter of interest to the Canadian House of Commons and one that it should discuss. If the hon. gentleman says he has nothing to do with it—

Mr. GORDON: No, I said I had nothing whatever to do with the placing of these people on locations in the province of Quebec, or any other province. I have heretofore had a very high regard for those who are attending to the colonization work in the province of Quebec, and I am amazed at the statement being made.

Mr. LAPOINTE: Are you amazed?

Mr. POULIOT: Well the hon. minister is genial. I do not wish to be discourteous to him; I will tell him that in this matter we should all stick together in order to bring about some real relief. The minister cannot say he has nothing to do with that; if he has nothing to do with it as a minister his interest in it as a Canadian citizen should be equal to mine. I appeal more to the good Canadian citizen that is in him than to the minister. I do not wish to bewilder or amaze him, but I tell him plain fact and I do not put the responsibility upon anyone except those really responsible.

Now let me come back to what I have said already this session. In order to have a good settlement scheme in Quebec—I do not know how the other provinces might manage it—the matter should be left to the Trappist friars, the Clercs de Saint-Viateur and the Oblates. I am sure they would do very well. We are all agreed on the principle; people should go back to the land if they have the natural disposition and the agricultural experience, but they should not be placed on forest reserves; they should be given good farm land. They should not have to find their way through stumps and underbrush; they should be provided with decent roads which they can use to transport their products. A chance should be given the young boys, also. This point was stressed by my hon. friend from Bellechasse, in l'Action Catholique, and I am under the impression that he spoke of it in the house last year. This is a very important point. I do not wish to hurt anyone, but when I speak as I have spoken to-day I do so as a representative of the people. I speak in the public interest and for the sake of my fellow citizens at large, with the hope that my words will be understood in the spirit in which they have been uttered.

Mr. MICHAEL LUCHKOVICH (Vegreville): The point brought out by the last speaker, in connection with putting men from the city on farms, is of interest to me. I agree with him to a certain extent; if those men have had previous experience it is all right, but I do not believe men without experience should be placed on farms. If this is done they will be reduced in a short time to that "ideal" state which the hon. member mentioned, the garden of Eden, bereft of clothes and wearing apparel.

I did not rise, Mr. Speaker, to deal with the back to the land movement; I rose to put myself on record in connection with the unemployment problem. During the last two or three weeks I have received many letters not only from my own constituency but from other parts of Canada asking what is the policy of the present government with regard to farm relief and the unemployment situation. I have received just as many letters asking what is the policy of the new Cooperative Commonwealth Federation party with regard to these same problems. I think the efforts of the government by way of continuing the provisions of the present relief act are highly commendable, but if they expect to do this by a policy of drastic economy their efforts may meet with serious criticism. Last fall I was amazed when the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) told us that there were 800,000 men and women on relief, but just the other day he told us that at present we have 1,375,000 on relief. If this depression lasts much longer, at this rate the number of unemployed will be doubled, then trebled and finally quadrupled, and it will not be long until the great majority of Canadians are either receiving relief or applying for it.

With the situation as it now stands it will become increasingly difficult for the government to finance the relief, and the only solution we seem to have at present is that of drastic economy, in other words the laying off of more people, the reduction in salaries of civil servants and an increase in taxation, such as the sales tax, etc. Such a solution certainly has its limits, and in any case it does not get to the root of the present situation. What then is the remedy? For years this group has advocated substantial alterations in the Finance Act; they have advocated a bank of rediscount, monetary reform, planned economy and a managed currency. After all, the solution of the unemployment problem must be found in the solution of the financial problem, because men all over the world agree to-day that the present depression is due to the breakdown in our financial system.

For some days this house listened to a discussion of the pros and cons of the issue between capitalism and socialization, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) taking the side of capitalism as against that of socialism. He believes the capitalistic system is all right; that all it needs is to be purged of some of its defects to bring about prosperity and make everything bright again. He considers greed a cause of the depression.

These are very fine words, but they would have been more effective had not the Liberal party succumbed to the greed of Beauharnois and the multiplicity of abuses involved therein. I do not think there is much use talking about greed unless you eliminate the causes of greed, that is, practice what one preaches.

I have suggested that there are two methods which may be adopted in order to solve this problem. One method is that being utilized by the government at the present time; the other is the method this group would apply. In all my six years in this house, Mr. Speaker, I have not heard a debate that evoked such great interest and rapt attention as that which took place upon the resolution sponsored by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth). While at times the debate on that question smacked of blind hostility on the one hand and fawning adulation on the other, at no time could one detect a lull in the concentrated attention to that very important subject. Now I believe that if that debate had done nothing else than to waken the conscience of hon. members on both sides of the house to a realization that the resources of the country should be utilized for the benefit of the great majority and not for the benefit of the view, it would have done a great deal to alleviate the present situation in Canada. In all our proposals with regard to the depression and with regard to relief of unemployment this group has been likened by people outside to a bumble bee ensconced on the back of an ox, gloating over its performance in helping to plough the fields. I do not know whether that analogy is right or not, but if this group had done nothing else with their proposals than to prod the ox-like lethargy of government on to more action it would have done a great deal to alleviate the condition in Canada as it exists at the present time. If that analogy is true so far as this group is concerned, could not this group with equal justice say that the protagonists of the present system are very much like the polar bear perched on an iceberg that is gradually melting away as it approaches the equator? And possibly that is why many of the protagonists are so angry when reforms of the present system are mentioned, angry when that small piece of ice on which the polar bear is perched is in danger of disappearing beneath him.

I do not agree with members who say that we, in making these proposals, are trying to scuttle the ship. So far as I am concerned personally, I am not trying to scuttle the ship at all; all I am trying to do is to take part in the navigation policy of that ship. That is what I am doing now.

I agree with the remarks made by the hon. member for East Edmonton (Mr. Bury) when he said that a good deal of our troubles emanated from the last war. I believe he made the most effective speech on the other side of the house, so far as argument is concerned. I agree with him; I agree that a lot of our troubles are due to external causes. They are due to war debts, war reparations and the loss of equilibrium in regard to gold, and I also agree with him when he says that our troubles in Canada are due to external difficulties such as the intense economic nationalism that is so prevalent throughout Europe at the present time.

There is going to be an economic conference somewhere in Europe some time this year. I hope the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), if he goes there, or if he sends some delegate from Canada to Europe, will do everything in his power to bring about those proper relationships without which Europe cannot have a return to peace—and we cannot have prosperity until we have peace. The war no doubt is responsible for a good deal of the ills from which we suffer in Canada at the present time. But the question then naturally arises: Who started the war? And the inevitable answer no doubt is, trade competition which is an inseparable element of commercial and international capital. So that no matter which way we view the problem the causes can all be traced back to one source.

The hon. member for Weyburn (Mr. Young) mentioned technocracy with reference to this group; he said that we advocated a four hour day and an annual salary of $20,000. I do not know where he gets the authority for that remark but I can assure him that so far as the farmers in my district are concerned, all they want is the right to work, even if it is from sunrise to sunset. But they want this to be in conformity with a decent standard of living and a reasonable price for their products. As regards the three wives he mentioned, one for breakfast, one for dinner and one for supper, that may be his idea of an economic paradise, but I assure him that the farmers in my district are content to have one wife cook all three meals. I wonder how he gets that way.

Mr. YOUNG: From associating with you fellows.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Even the Moslem harems have been forced to reduce their personnel, and if things get worse they may be forced to give up their whole pulchritudinous concubinal flock, if not the three meals also.

Among some of the significant things said concerning this group have been objections on the part of hon. members in regard to the proposals put forward from this corner. We have been linked up with communists and socialists. Personally I believe in calling a spade a spade without any circuitous reference or allusions to instruments for purposes of excavating terra firma, or any other high-falutin rhetorics of that kind. I do not think it is necessary for me to-day to distinguish between communism on the one hand and on the other the proposition we have in mind. Enough has been said to prove that this group has absolutely nothing to do with the communistic movement. Even so strong a supporter of the present government as the Ottawa Journal has said that the leader of the C.C.F. group in this corner is not a communist but a socialist.

From the little study I have made of economics and history I have come to the conclusion that, judging from the trend of events and the comments of able minds throughout the world, the present harsh, avaricious, wasteful system that we are trying to employ at the present time to cure this cancer of unemployment must sooner or later give way to a more humane and constructive system of cooperation, without which I do not think we shall ever be able to solve either farm relief or the unemployment situation in Canada. I am quite right, I think, in my contention that what hon. members say on the floor of the house on grounds of political expediency and what they say outside in the lobbies are two different things. I have heard members speak about the dangers of competitive individualism, I have heard them speak about the dangers of socialism, but so far as I am concerned I believe that individualism and socialism will have to meet each other half way. If this depression is prolonged there is no doubt in my mind that within the next decade we will have a government or a system which will be neither capitalism or socialism, it will be some form of state socialism.

I hope hon. members will realize that everything I say upon this subject is said in all sincerity and comes from the depths of my heart. In referring to the lack of patriotism of some of the hon. members in this corner, another hon. gentleman a short time ago quoted some poetry. I believe in the sentiments of the poem he quoted, which was:

> Breathes there the man with soul so dead
> Who never to himself hath said,
> This is my own, my native land!

I have, however, heard those words repeated by the sons and daughters of rich men, the gilded youth of the land; I have heard them repeated by college professors and I have heard them recited in literary circles and by the smug, complacent self-satisfied citizen, but in times like this, when we are faced with the greatest depression in history, I doubt whether these words are uppermost in the minds of our youth of to-day. The lines that most likely run in the minds of the man on the street are as follows:

> Breathes there the workless with soul so dead
> Who never to themselves hath said,
> When do we eat?

It may be all right for the men with large earning power, for the men with great acquisitiveness and the men of ability to uphold a system as it exists to-day, and of which they are the beneficiaries, but when the vast majority of red-blooded boys and girls of Canada are forced upon relief, I wonder who among us will be the gentleman? It may be all right for us to claim that the so-called he-man who has got to the top of the heap, that so-called Tarzan of the north, the man who built our railroads and hewed our forests, that the man who started the wheels of industry humming, should advocate the present system, but in a world of vanishing credit and vanishing purchasing power, in a world of ever lengthening breadlines, I wonder how it is possible to do the things which they advocate. I believe that the extreme individualism with which we are trying to solve the problem of unemployment has within itself the germs of its own destruction. Extreme individualism is a product of the jungle, it is a case of dog eat dog, it is a process of mutual strangulation by means of which, as I have said already, the strongest remains on the top of the heap while the rest must wallow in the depths of degradation.

When we know that such is the case, why do we still continue to live in our fool's paradise, when we must realize how close many of us are to losing our rapidly vanishing pittance and swelling the ranks of the unemployed. I was much interested in the speech of the hon. member for Vancouver Centre (Mr. Mackenzie) and his reference to the banking system under which we in Canada not so many years ago had twenty-five different banks but, because of mergers, this number has now been reduced to nine or ten. In making that statement, either wittingly or unwittingly, he indicated the folly of the present system of individualism being utilized to solve unemployment. It was a virtual confession of failure on the part of those banks being merged, that is, the failure of competitive individualism.

Mr. SPEAKER: The hon. member should confine his remarks to the resolution before the house and should not refer to a debate of this session upon another subject.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Mr. Speaker, at the beginning of my speech I said that the method being used to solve the present unemployment problem is one of drastic economy and that unemployment could not be solved by such a method; I stated that in order to solve this problem we must get at the root cause. That is the reason I make a comparison between the system with which the two major parties are attempting to solve the problem and the system with which the group in this corner intends not only to solve unemployment but to bring about prosperity in this dominion. As we are speaking on the principle of the resolution, I think I am adhering to the subject.

I have before me a short article which I think is very pertinent. It involves our flag wavers, the loud patriots. It reads:

All Velvet

The truth is that the only people on this continent who are profiting from the discount off our dollar in New York are a limited number of Canadians themselves. Hundreds, probably tens of thousands, of Canadians hold bonds—the bonds of Canadian municipalities like Calgary—that are payable in either Montreal or Toronto or New York. It is a matter of choice. If these Canadians elected to take payment in either Montreal or Toronto they would be paid in Canadian funds, and the municipality concerned would escape paying a premium. That, however, is not what is happening. What is happening is that the Canadian holders of these bonds are taking either their interest coupons or their maturing bonds to Canadian banks and asking them to send them down to New York to be paid in United States funds. In other words, they are taking the profit of the premium on the American dollar.

At six o'clock the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: Mr. Speaker, before recess I was discussing the question of drastic economy as a method of approaching the problem of unemployment. I said that it did not go down to the root of the trouble and that it was therefore ineffective as a method of settling this cancerous growth with which we are to-day confronted in Canada. To settle this question we have to go down to root causes and to do something more fundamental than we are doing at present. Whilst my remarks may at times have bordered on irrelevancy, nevertheless I feel that to speak of unemployment without taking into consideration matters of currency, is impossible. The two go hand in hand; you cannot discuss the one without discussing the other.

I read to the house a quotation in which something was said about Canadians asking that interest on bonds be paid to them in New York funds. If we are to launch out on a policy of drastic economy, nothing of that sort should be allowed in Canada. I think it was Lincoln Steffens who asked Albert Einstein, scientist and philosopher, how he had ever been able to discover anything new, and Mr. Einstein retorted that it was by challenging an axiom. I therefore feel that unless we do a little challenging, so far as our currency system is concerned, we shall not go far in the direction of settling our present ever-growing unemployment problem.

I have heard members mention certain palliatives, such as social legislation, old age pensions, mothers' allowances, unemployment insurance and so forth. These are only palliatives that merely touch the surface; they do not go down to the root of the trouble; by applying them one is merely putting money into one's pocket with one hand and taking it out with the other. I believe, however, in a graduated income tax. If we intend to stick to this policy of drastic economy, a graduated income tax would do a great deal towards increasing the public revenue and would therefore enable us more effectively to carry on unemployment relief. The most fundamental question with which we are faced is that of harmonizing production with distribution, and as we all know, the question of distribution is tied up with that of currency and finance. Just before recess I referred to the remark that greed was largely responsible for the situation in which we now find ourselves and that unless that greed were eliminated from our system, it was not likely we would make any progress, especially in the direction of unemployment relief.

Most members predicate their opposition to the policy of this group with respect to unemployment relief, currency and other matters, on the ground that men's natural acquisitive motives cannot be subordinated to social motives, but I think they can by legislation. If it were not for the legislation we have on our statute books, men would be getting away with more murder and crimes. I see no reason why this house and the government cannot control a certain class of people better known as financial racketeers and make them pay their due share towards defraying the expense of the relief of unemployment and other measures. There is no reason why we cannot put on the statute books of this country legislation that will curb their activities. I have absolutely nothing against the industrialist,—he is a necessary person in Canada,—who by dint of perseverence, integrity and ability has built up an industry, but I certainly am opposed to a certain class of financial racketeers, who neither weave nor spin nor labour, who by their manipulation of stocks enrich themselves at the expense of industry, yes, in many cases at the cost of the actual bankruptcy thereof. There is no reason why we cannot by legislation curb these individuals and make them pay more than they are paying at the present time towards the cost of unemployment relief.

My time is somewhat limited. I stated at the outset that we in this corner of the house have certain policies which we think would be effective in relieving the present depression and solving the problem of unemployment which now confronts us. There are many who think that we, through lack of homogeneity, are unable to bring about the reforms necessary to the creation of that happy condition I have mentioned. In spite of what has been said about us, we have that homogeneity. It is true we have a leader, the so-called leader of the United Farmers of Alberta, and there is a leader in this group, the leader of the Labour party, but in all essential matters we have the necessary homogeneity, the necessary unity. In all non-essentials we have liberty of action, and we are certainly trying to have charity towards not only each other but other members of the House of Commons. It is possibly true that we are as was pointed out by the member for Comox Alberni (Mr. Neill) like David, that Hebrew of old, who went to the cave of Adullam to escape the wrath of Saul. In those days David was an armour bearer and also a musician. His doings were extolled beyond those of his master, and this made Saul jealous. To escape Saul's jealousy and wrath, David hied to this so-called cave of Adullam. All the oppressed and heavy laden went there, and he formed the nucleus of an army four hundred strong. This grew into a very large army, through the instrumentality of which David was enabled to build up the greatest of the Hebrew kingdoms. Pushing this analogy to its logical conclusion and comparing it with the so-called cave of Adullam on this side of the house, you will agree with me that if we have as much success as David had in his cave of Adullam, it will not be long before this group is leading the way not only in this house but throughout the country.

[Mr. Luchkovich.]

Mr. NEILL: It will be recalled that David was chosen of God. Is there any evidence that the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has a halo around him?

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: How can the hon. member say that he is not the chosen of God?

Mr. NEILL: I did not say that.

Mr. LUCHKOVICH: That is the only answer I have for that. It is very hard to visualize the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre with a saxaphone under one arm and a cannon under the other, but if the analogy is, as I have already said, pushed to its logical conclusion, it may be that some day this group may be performing a very useful function not only in this house but throughout the country.

The question, as I have already indicated, is a financial one; the unemployment problem is connected with that of currency. In order to solve the problem of unemployment we must first solve the currency problem, and that is the one that we in this corner are endeavouring with all the energy we possess to solve.

Mr. HUMPHREY MITCHELL (East Hamilton): Mr. Speaker, I want to make just a few observations on the resolution before the house. This parliament is not unmindful of the fact that we are at present in the third and entering the fourth year of the most intense industrial depression in the history of this dominion. That brings to my mind a news item of recent date I saw in the Toronto Mail and Empire. It is under the heading, Gloomy Picture by Chamberlain, followed by the expressions:

Says it will take ten years to appreciably reduce idle. Churchill shocked.

The text of the article is, in part, as follows:

Neville Chamberlain, Chancellor of the Exchequer, told the House of Commons to-night reduction of unemployment to comparatively small figures could not be anticipated within the next ten years . . . the Chancellor's remark that it would be ten years before unemployment would be reduced to any great extent drew from Winston Churchill, former Conservative Chancellor, a heated rejoinder that such a prospect was "ghastly" and that if this were the government's last word the outlook was very grave and lamentable.

I come from a city with a population of about 160,000. At the present time in that community there are 35,000 men, women and children on relief. I hold in my hand the report of the relief officer of that city for the week ending February 2, 1933, which reads as follows:

City Relief Department

Relief granted during week ending January 28, 1933

J. H. McMeneny,
Relief Officer.

Since the issue of this report the figures have increased so that instead of 7,940 families on relief there are at least 8,000 families on relief at the present time.

At this point I should like to draw to the attention of the house a report concerning unemployment relief in Ontario from 1929 to 1932. This report was prepared under the auspices of the honorary chairman W. F. Nickle, K.C., who was at one time a member of this house, chairman E. D. MacPhee and secretary and director of research H. M. Cassidy, B.A., Ph.D., assistant professor of social science at the university of Toronto. I recommend this report to the perusal of all members of parliament. In my view it is the most comprehensive study of unemployment relief and its effects on the population of the province that could be prepared. The report goes into many details. I think the most astounding feature of the report is that part which deals with the influence of unemployment upon the lives of men and women, and particularly children, in the province of Ontario.

After all is said and done, in my view there might be some excuse for the difficulties facing men and women, but there is no excuse for the very extreme difficulties facing the Canadians of to-morrow. These boys and girls will have to take their places in industry and commerce and on the farms of our country. I remember that during the war Lloyd George, then Prime Minister of Great Britain, made the observation that you could not make an A-1 army out of a C-3 nation. If the foundations for the report are true it is perfectly obvious to me that we cannot expect an A-1 Canada if at least we do not take some steps to ameliorate the conditions under which many boys and girls in the province of Ontario are living. The following concluding paragraph shows the effect of unemployment on the general life of the community:

Unemployment has also interfered with the normal mode of life of the unemployed in a dozen and one other ways. It has made for fewer marriages and fewer births, and probably for a greater proportion of illegitimate births; for a greater number of suicides, for wives working and husbands staying at home; for discontentment, unrest and the development of bad habits among boys and girls of the school-leaving age; for over crowding in the home, for family friction and disagreement; and for an increased number of deportations and the consequent disruption of the plans and aspirations of immigrant groups. It has induced attitudes of discontent, unrest and suspicion of established institutions in many people. The fact of drawing relief over long periods bids fair to develop in many an attitude of dependency. The effects of unemployment upon the unemployed and their families must be to make of them poorer citizens and poorer workers. Our most precious asset, the good quality of our population, is threatened with serious deterioration if unemployment continues.

May I make this observation: I am not unmindful of the onerous duties resting upon the shoulders of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon); indeed I believe they have reached such a proportion that the many portfolios under his charge might well be divided among a number of cabinet members. In my view the portfolio of immigration alone is of ample proportions to merit the direct supervision of one minister. Further, the general duties in connection with the Department of Labour and more particularly the direction of relief for the dominion are sufficient in themselves to occupy the whole time of one minister of the crown. Then of course we have the portfolio of mines added to that. In the course of his remarks he said that hard times have changed both the official and the public attitude towards the responsibilities of government. I agree with that. I think we have made great strides towards a realization of the obligations of the state to those who through no fault of their own are unable to provide for themselves. But may I make another quotation in connection with that observation of the minister. This is from the report of the Ontario commission on unemployment in 1916, under the chairmanship of Sir John Willison. Referring to the need for vigorous public policy in regard to unemployment the commission said:

If the state wishes to secure the fullest loyalty and efficiency of its citizens, must it not assume a larger measure of leadership than in the past?

That was said in 1916, I believe it is equally true in 1933. This afternoon my colleague from North Winnipeg (Mr. Heaps), referring to unemployment insurance, said that possibly it is not practicable to introduce a scheme of unemployment insurance at this time. But I am of the opinion that steps should be taken immediately towards the introduction of a system of unemployment insurance in this dominion. Considerable preliminary study and investigation will have to be made with a view to developing a scheme to suit the peculiar needs of this country. I believe that a thorough study should be made of all systems of unemployment insurance now in existence in the world, and if necessary a committee or commission should go and meet the people charged with the administration of such systems, and who have made the necessary research for the introduction of such measures in the different countries. I believe that an unemployment insurance measure could be got under way even at the present time, though possibly it may have to be restricted in its coverage; but valuable information and experience could be gained through the necessary trial and error that would take place in its development. I leave that thought with the government, notwithstanding the fact that apparently no agreement could be reached on the matter at the recent interprovincial conference. We are going to have unemployment insurance in this country whether we like it or not. In my judgment it is a necessary part of the social machinery of any modern industrial state. We have deliberately set up an industrial structure alongside our agricultural structure. With the growth of industries it is the logical thing that we should meet the problems that other industrial nations have met. As twenty-nine other nations of the world have felt it absolutely necessary to have such insurance as part of their social machinery in connection with large scale industry, so in my judgment it is necessary that progress in that direction should be made here, and that at this time when the psychological conditions are favourable we should set ourselves to get such a system under way. We may pass out of this depression, have a few more years of, shall I say, normal times, and then enter into another period of depression without any machinery to meet the pressing problems of unemployment. However it may be in Great Britain, I question very much whether this country can stand ten years more of unemployment in its present proportions without the necessary machinery to deal with abnormal conditions.

[Mr. Mitchell.]

I come from a city where not only the industrial workers but the so-called middle classes are sorely tried by the effects of this depression. Our problem has been intensified by the lack of the necessary machinery to deal with it. With the individualistic attitude of the average man and woman in this country, the fact that they have had to go down to the relief office for relief has struck sorely at their pride—I mean genuine pride, pride that is necessary in any nation, notwithstanding opinions to the contrary. The recent imperial conference was to have brought about the millennium, and now the people of this country are to expect it from the world economic and monetary conference that is to meet in London during the coming summer. Make no mistake, that will not be the way out of the difficulty. You have already, I understand, the official statement of the United States government that at that conference tariffs will not be discussed. You have the attitude of France, so keenly conscious of the necessity for security, a country which has not adopted the idea of mass production to the extent that we in Canada have and also of Great Britain, Germany and the United States. The people of Great Britain, are free traders at heart, notwithstanding that they have recently adopted a different policy. Then we have our own position. My colleague from North Winnipeg spoke about free trade and protection. Well, if free trade were the solution, the United States would be the most prosperous nation in the world to-day. They have almost unlimited possibilities for the attainment of a self-supporting condition, yet notwithstanding that you have there the largest unemployment problem in the world. So far as Canada is concerned, who is going to reduce these tariffs? Which side of the house will do it?

Mr. LaVERGNE: Which side of the world?

Mr. MITCHELL: The tariff is like a suit of clothes; you do not need the same suit in Florida as in Canada. But we must have some form of protection for the men and women of this country. It is a practical question. I have been to India; I know that in Bombay, as long as they have enough sense to keep their fingers out of the machinery, they can operate the most complicated machines, as in the textile industry to-day. You see these machines being operated by men and women in Bombay as efficiently as they are operated in Canada. With their wage rates what chance would our people have under a system of perfectly free trade?

I did intend to analyse the growth of industrialism in the Dominion of Canada, but I do not think I will have time now to do so. The tariff is the logical outcome of mass production. I sincerely believe that we are in for a lengthy period of economic nationalism, notwithstanding opinions to the contrary, and that we shall have to work out our own destiny, and solve our own problems, largely within our own borders. I believe that applies to almost every country in the world with the possible exception of Great Britain.

Last week when the minister introduced this resolution he spoke of the back to the land movement and said that a very definite start had been made. His words were:

A very definite start has been made, 1,651 families with 6,906 dependents have already been approved and placed on farms. This in my judgment warrants the belief that the whole quota of 6,923 families for whose settlement provision has been made will be placed on farms before March 31, 1934, at which date our agreement with the provinces expires.

Then the minister goes on to give the cost of what has been done. One thing is sure; this will not even make a dent in the problem of unemployment—the hon. member for Bow River (Mr. Garland) says even if it is successful. It would not make much difference in the unemployment problem in the city from which I come, which has 8,000 families on relief and 35,000 individuals being cared for by the city. I am not unmindful of the fact that some little relief may be given by this policy, but last week I met a man who had been a newspaper reporter and who went to northern Ontario because of the unemployment condition in the city in which he lived. He has been there for years; lately he has been cutting pulpwood and trading it for food. Last week end he came to the city on one of the cheap excursions and said it was absolutely necessary for him to get work in the city for a couple of weeks in order to get his wife back among the surroundings to which she was accustomed or she would go insane with loneliness.

Mr. GORDON: Where was he?

Mr. MITCHELL: In northern Ontario, north of North Bay.

Mr. GORDON: And he was a newspaper reporter?

Mr. MITCHELL: Yes.

Mr. GORDON: He never should have gone up there.

Mr. MITCHELL: I quite agree.

Mr. LAVERGNE: What had his wife been?

Mr. MITCHELL: She was a human being. I should like to see the Deputy Speaker up in nothern Ontario cutting down trees; I wonder if he could stand the loneliness.

Mr. LAVERGNE: My ancestors have been there and so have I.

Mr. MITCHELL: I quote from the Hamilton Spectator of February 9, 1933. This article deals with a family who left northern Ontario and came back to the city; I believe they went north under one of the original schemes. The newspaper article contains these words:

The distressing situation arose from the fact that the family left the city for a few months last summer to try their hand at the land settlement scheme and when they returned this fall they found themselves not eligible for relief.

The article refers to another similar case as well. I know very well that the top six inches of the soil always has been the escape when progress has been stayed in this and almost every other country, and in making these observations I do not want to belittle the efforts that have been made by the government in this direction. Even if they are able to settle only a thousand families on the land it will be at least some progress in the right direction.

The minister spoke of the disproportion of the urban and rural populations, and said the matter was debatable. I agree with him. In my opinion there has been a good deal of misinformation in connection with the drift from the farms to the city, and unsound views have been expressed with regard to it. The present modern city is a product of the machine age; boys and girls have been driven from the farms largely by the introduction of machinery on those farms. It is one of those things that is inescapable if the present drive towards increased mass production in agriculture and industry continues. There is also some logic to it. After all is said and done, the human stomach is not very elastic; there is some limit to the ability of a human being to consume the products of agriculture. In my opinion, however, there is no limit to the ability of the human being to consume the output of industry. This movement from the cities back to the farms is nothing new, but it is not a genuine back to the land movement. It is a movement that has come into being though the force of economic circumstances, and should good times return, in my judgment the drift the other way will be far greater. I question also the soundness of a policy that uses land as the scrap heap for industry.

The policy has two very obvious weaknesses: It will not lessen the tax burden and, more important still, I believe it will increase the surplus of farm commodities. I believe this policy is economically unsound. It has up against it science as expressed in mechanized farming. Take the case of wheat; we have the binder which has done away with a great deal of human labour, and recently the Rockefeller institute carried on experiments on farms in Montana by which the time necessary to produce a bushel of wheat was reduced from three hours by hand labour to three minutes by the machine. The sooner the government makes up its mind that this is not a sound way to approach the problem the better it will be for the country and perhaps the quicker we may take steps to deal more adequately with unemployment.

I have analysed the work possibilities in the statement of the Minister of Labour. First we have the agricultural development which has found work for 1,651 heads of families. Then we have the Banff-Jasper highway in Alberta and British Columbia, which has resulted in 169,544 man days being worked. I should like to point out in that connection as well as in connection with the work being done with regard to landing fields that while perhaps under present conditions this is absolutely necessary I do not think it can be claimed that it is in any way a solution of the problem of unemployment. In the one case you have men working for twenty cents a day, while in the other they get only a few dollars a month. When these men leave the camps they will not have been able to save enough money to keep them from going on city relief almost as soon as they arrive home. Last week I had a communication from an organization in the city of Toronto, strongly objecting to some of these men in the camps who were taking away work from skilled mechanics. These men claim, and I think rightly, that these camps are operating in competition with free labour, and also that they have a tendency to lower the living standard of the district in which they are located.

Then the Department of Public Works, in cooperation with the provincial government, has completed a small work in connection with flood prevention on the Assiniboine river in Manitoba, to which the federal government contributed $592. I figure that these men got $3 a day. That undertaking would have provided 1,697 days' work. Under the Department of National Defence no figures have been given as to provision of days' work. The small sum of $3,000 was expended through the Department of Agriculture, which made provision for some boats to assist in the better export of live cattle to Great Britain. I thought that possibly these men would be skilled workmen and would receive an average of $4 a day. Under that scheme 975 days' work was provided. The total days' work provided under the schemes outlined by the minister was 172,216 days of eight hours a day. Expressed in weeks it would be 28,701 weeks on a basis of a six day week; so that you can see that all that was accomplished was steady employment for 28,701 weeks of one week for each man. When you figure out the steady employment which could be given individuals, you find that only 574 men could be employed during 50 weeks of the year, and that is the sole contribution of the Dominion government towards the relief of unemployment, as indicated by the minister in his speech the other evening.

Let me say this in conclusion. If you want the so-called capitalistic system to live you must try to get that system to function in such a way as to permit of the consumption of goods. That is a challenge which this government cannot ignore. I made this observation recently to some plant executives, and I think it is absolutely true with respect to the system: In the final analysis the existence of your system depends on the ability to provide men and women with work. It is a simple analysis, but in my judgment it is one that you cannot circumvent. Colonel Ayers of the Cleveland Trust Company recently made the statement that the only artificial stimulants that have been effective in the United States have been great wars. He might have added, new inventions. In my judgment the leadership will have to be taken over by the state. The state can do what neither individuals nor groups of individuals can do. It is master of its own affairs. It can expand or contract the supply of money. It is the creature of the men and women that constitute it and it reflects their point of view. It should also reflect their desires and their policies. It must therefore necessarily be responsible for their welfare.

Mr. G. G. COOTE (Macleod): It is very much to be regretted that in the third year of office of the present government the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) is not able to tell us in his annual speech on the question of unemployment that the government of which he is a member is taking definite steps to deal with the situation in a concrete way, namely, by creating employment in Canada. So far as I could gather from the speech made by the minister, the government has no intention of doing anything to create more employment for the people unless it is in connection with its scheme of putting more people on the land; and it is only by the greatest stretch of the imagination that I can call that a constructive proposal to create employment. It may create employment temporarily for those people, but the result I think will be very unfortunate for a great many of those who are being placed on the land. The majority of the farmers in Canada to-day are very hard put to it to make enough on their farms to provide for themselves and to pay taxes. That being the plight of the farmers already on the land, with equipment, what chance have these people who are being sent out now and placed on the land to take care of themselves with such equipment as will be purchased for them to the extent of $600? I think the move is doomed to failure. I hope the minister will be able to make it a success, but I do not see how it is possible.

Mr. GORDON: But it is a success; it is proving so now.

Mr. COOTE: We have been told ever since I came to this house that the soldier settlement scheme has been a success, but I cannot find very many returned soldiers who will admit that. The picture given to us by the minister was anything but a cheerful one. Last fall he told us that 800,000 people were in receipt of direct relief and in his speech the other day he said the number was 1,357,000. I would call the attention of the house to the fact that while the number in receipt of direct relief is increasing every month, the number of taxpayers in the municipalities is decreasing. How long can that process continue?

I consider, and I think it has been admitted in this house by the government themselves, that this is a national emergency, and a national emergency certainly demands national measures. In my opinion unemployment relief is, particularly at this time, a federal responsibility, from the very nature of the case, and in addition, because of the statements and promises made by the present Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) when he was carrying on his election campaign. All the economic policies in this country which determine whether men shall have employment or not are under the control of the federal government—banking, finance, currency, the issuing of money; in fact, money in all its forms is under the control of the federal government: tariffs, immigration, railway rates and all economic policies which determine how much employment there is going to be in Canada—these are all under federal control. The municipalities and provinces are, in the very nature of things, not responsible for unemployment, and I regret to say that in some cases they are not financially able to cope with it. Under the present policy by which the municipalities are required to take the initiative and pay one-third of the relief either directly or indirectly, many of our municipalities are practically bankrupt; they are unable to-day to find the necessary finance to carry on this work. As a result of this, relief is in many instances inadequate; another result is very often that men are drifting about from one municipality to another. The municipalities in an endeavour to protect themselves against the influx of the unemployed from other parts of the country, are very stringent in the regulations they make. A man or his family must have been in a municipality a certain length of time before he becomes eligible for relief. The result is that there are many people, particularly single men, transient labourers, who are still drifting around from one municipality to another. They cannot get relief in many municipalities because they are told that they have not been there long enough. They have to exist in a sort of no man's land and they drift from one municipality to another, obtaining a few meals here and there by begging. I think this condition has grown out of the present policy.

Mr. GORDON: To what part of Canada is the hon. member referring?

Mr. COOTE: I am referring to the province of Alberta, but I have been told that similar conditions exist in Ontario.

Mr. GORDON: Our official reports from there are exactly the opposite.

Mr. COOTE: When we get into committee I should like the minister to tell us whether any provision is being made to take care of the unemployed who have not been in any municipality for a certain specified time. I have heard of so many cases, both from transients and from the people who have fed them, that there must be many municipalities who will not take care of these men.

In order to show just how inadequate is the relief granted, I should like to quote the scale of relief in force in some towns in Alberta. I secured these figures from the secretary of a municipality. The allowance for a man and wife is $12 per month, work being provided for five days per month at $2.40 per eight hour day. A man and his wife are supposed to live on $12 per month. For each dependent child an additional allowance of $2.40 per month is made, or one day's work. I should like hon. members to consider how they would feed a child on $2.40 per month. A few years ago we spent several weeks in this house discussing the question whether or not we should allow the children of Canada to have oleomargarine placed in front of them. I am quite satisfied that in many homes to-day the children do not have butter or even oleomargarine. I think hon. members will agree also that on an allowance of $2.40 per month, or eight cents per day, it would not be possible to provide milk for a child.

A slight additional allowance of $2.40 per month for each adult and $1.20 per month for each dependent child is provided for clothing, but work must be given in return. I do not object to the fact that work must be given in return for relief granted. I think these people should be provided with work, but I do not think a mother should be expected to clothe her child on $1.20 per month. It will mean that many of these children will not have proper clothing in which to attend school. In many cases these people have to provide themselves with some sort of house as well as with fuel and light. These and many other things they cannot get under such an inadequate scale of relief.

I think the trouble arises out of the financial position of the provinces and the municipalities—I speak more particularly of the western provinces, but the same conditions may exist in the east. The provinces and the municipalities find it almost impossible to borrow, and, as I said before, the number of taxpayers is growing smaller and smaller. I was told by a man who has made a study of these matters that during last summer in one western city ten new families were coming on the city for relief every day and a large percentage of those families had previously been taxpayers. I am led to believe that the condition existing in some parts of the east is not much better.

I have before me a bulletin published by the committee on social and economic research of the Montreal Presbytery of the United Church of Canada, which contains a number of extracts from Montreal newspapers. The first extract I should like to quote is from the Montreal Star of January 26, reading as follows:

The urgent need for more accommodation for public patients was revealed when it was learned that upwards of 1,870 beds in public wards of seven of the biggest hospitals in Montreal are already filled and nearly every one of these institutions has a long waiting list.

The private wards in the Montreal general hospital are filled, but only fifty per cent of the beds in the private wards of the other hospitals are occupied.

"Due to hard times, the private wards are not very popular these days," one hospital official said. The result is overcrowding in the public wards.

The next extract is from the Montreal Star of January 26, which reads:

Garbage Cans Searched for Family Food
Man Tells Pitiful Story of Starving Children

Out of work for over two years, his wife and three small children piteously appealing to him for food, Albert Trottier, 5763 DesErables street, has been ransacking garbage cans in the residential sections of the city in a last desperate effort to provide the necessities of life for his starving family.

Emaciated and weak, his hollow cheeks mute witnesses of a semi-starving condition, Trottier told his pitiful story to Recorder Leblanc this morning after pleading guilty to a charge of foraging in garbage cans.

"I am going to let you go," Recorder Leblanc told Trottier. "Don't continue to take garbage. It is a very dangerous thing to do from a point of view of health."

The next is from the Montreal Gazette of February 1, and reads:

Eviction of Jobless Tenants

Montreal landlords are beginning eviction of jobless and rentless tenants. They are doing this to force upon the city administration their plight in being obliged to pay taxes, yet unable to secure from direct relief funds anything to bolster their falling, and in some cases, vanished rental revenues.

St. Edward ward witnessed four evictions Monday night; twenty more are in the offing, and some from night to night are threatened unless the public authorities make some arrangement whereby the landlord who shelters unemployed families shall receive a portion of direct relief allotments per family.

I want to protest again against the policy of the government in forcing municipalities to bear such a large share of the unemployment relief. I want to protest also against the policy of drifting and refusing to take some constructive action looking to bringing about the end of this terrible depression and the accompanying unemployment. We could create employment in Canada if we had the courage. I should like to quote one paragraph from the report of a committee of research experts appointed by President Hoover to study the significant contemporary social trends in the United States. It reads:

Unless there can be a more impressive integration of social skills and fusing of social purposes than is revealed by recent trends, there can be no assurance that these alternatives with their accomplishments of violent revolution, dark periods of serious repression of libertarian and democratic forms, the proscription and loss of many useful elements in the present productive system can be averted.

I know it is dangerous to use the word "revolution" in this house. I do not remember having used it before, but I know that hon. members who did use it were accused of being communists. I challenge any hon. member to accuse the gentleman whom I intend to quote of being a communist. I should like to quote the encyclical of Pope Pius XI with regard to civil power, as follows:

These ideas were not merely suggested, but stated in frank and open terms by our predecessor. We emphasize them with renewed insistence in this present encyclical; for unless serious attempts be made, with all energy and without delay to put them into practice, let nobody persuade himself that the peace and tranquility of human society can be effectively defended against the forces of revolution.

I wish I had time to quote more freely from this document, but at some future time I hope to have the opportunity of giving to the house more of the splendid things which Pope Pius has said in this encyclical.

I do not at present wish to deal at any great length with existing conditions except to suggest that we should take constructive steps to alleviate the distressed conditions from which we are suffering. The very worst feature of the present so-called depression is the condition of unemployment existing among our people, and their consequent poverty. There is one thing I would like this parliament to do—and I would like to see every parliament do it—and that is to abolish poverty. It is within the power of this House of Commons to abolish poverty, in the large sense, in Canada. We cannot deal with unemployment generally until we restore some purchasing power to agriculture. This is an agricultural country, and so long as the purchasing power of our agricultural population is as low as it is to-day, we are bound to have unemployment, falling revenues, increased expenditures for unemployment relief, and no government will be able to balance its budget. We cannot deal with the agricultural situation; we cannot restore its purchasing power without adopting a more sensible and sounder money policy than we have in Canada to-day. The present so-called "sound money" is bankrupting agriculture and ruining trade and commerce. Why under heaven anyone would call that sound money is more than I can understand; it is about as unsound as any money system could be. If we have the courage and wisdom to manage our money system so as to place our currency on a proper level with sterling, this would put $200,000,000 more purchasing power into the hands of our agriculturists and others who are producing export commodities. That amount circulated throughout this country would put a large part of our population at work. I quite freely admit that it would not put them all at work. We have waited much too long to expect to deal with the whole question of unemployment in that way; conditions have become too bad and we must take other and perhaps more direct means if we are going to give our people, or even a considerable percentage of them, employment.

Perhaps at this time, before proceeding further, I might quote just one sentence from the remarks of Lord Melchett when he spoke in the House of Lords in support of a resolution which he moved. As the resolution is very short, I might be permitted to read it. This is the motion moved by him on December 15, 1932:

That, since under modern scientific conditions productive capacity is unlimited, and since the existence of indigence and unemployment throughout a large portion of the population demonstrates the fact that the present monetary system is obsolete and a hindrance to the efficient production and distribution of goods, in the opinion of this house the government should bring forward immediate proposals for the economic reforms necessary to enable the subjects of this realm to enjoy the benefits to which their present productive capacity entitles them.

A splendid resolution, one which perhaps should be presented to the house and the government asked to act on it. In support of it he said:

We have to realize that it is no good going on in an economic world with a financial system which is so hopeless, as the Chancellor of the Exchequer admitted himself last night, that when America stops paying herself the whole system collapses. If you boil his speech down it comes to this, that the moment America stopped lending money to her debtors to repay her the whole system was in danger of, and did in fact, collapse. Why should we continue with these absurd follies? We have an infinite power of production in our hands. We have scientists with brains, and if we concentrated on almost any material problem in the world to-day it could probably be solved within ten or fifteen years. We have bountiful gifts at our disposal if we have only the courage to take them. We have to create a system which is capable of doing that.

We can deal with the problem in Canada just as easily as they can deal with it in Great Britain, perhaps more so, because we have no shortage of food. Canada is one of the greatest food producing countries in the world, and we have also immense natural resources such as Great Britain does not have within her own borders.

The time has come when we should adopt some definite measure to create employment for our people. Again I quote Lord Melchett, this time from memory. He said that discussing the question of unemployment without bringing in the question of currency was like discussing Hamlet without the Prince of Denmark. Undoubtedly the question of relief from unemployment is bound up with that of money, and, if you like, I shall go so far as to say that in Canada to-day it is bound up with the question of a moderate amount of inflation. Never in my life have I advocated anything like uncontrolled inflation; I want to make that very plain. I know the suggestion has been made in the house and out of it that some members in this corner advocate uncontrolled inflation. If any hon. member did advocate it, I never heard it and I have never done so myself. We may have uncontrolled inflation in the future, and if so, I do not want to be in any way blamed for it. I do want a certain degree of controlled inflation. Had we had a sensible money system, we would not have had the deflation, but now that we have it, there is no way of dealing with the unemployment situation which does not include controlled inflation or reflation—call it what you will, but we want it under definite control and for a definite purpose, that of giving employment and putting purchasing power into the hands of the people so as to take the unemployed off the hands of the various governments and to restore the confidence of the Canadian people in their own institutions.

It seems to me that there is no more direct way of putting purchasing power where it is needed than by financing unemployment relief. From the point of view of economics there may not be very much difference whether this is done in the form of a dole or in the form of public works, but there is certainly a very great social difference and the community might very well enjoy some benefit from the labour of those whom it is financing. The usual objection to a program of construction of public works is that somebody may make too much profit out of the material which must go into the creation of those works. May I say that my remarks on this particular point I have written out so that I may give them in the most concise manner possible. I do not think it is necessary to worry about such profits, if excess profits are properly restrained, and we can have that done through our system of taxation. Most of the money expended in the purchase of materials is paid out in wages and enables contractors, manufacturers of construction machinery and other employers to maintain or to increase their staffs. Most of the public work that needs doing is in urban centres. Housing projects are needed to clean up slum areas such as may be found, for instance, in this city of Ottawa. More of them can be found in Toronto and even more in Montreal. Surely it would be a good idea to clean up slum areas and to build decent apartment houses or dwellings for the great mass of the people, the working class. In many cities we also need street widening, clinics, improvements to hospital facilities, and in fact, work of this type is plentiful. The ideal method of coping with this situation would be, first, to establish an unemployment relief commission to cooperate with the municipalities and to lay down a code of practice, as to the type of work which should be undertaken and, second, to appoint inspectors to supervise the purchasing of supplies and material, according to the policy of the commission. Substantial appropriations of money for these purposes could be secured by borrowings from a central bank. Of course we have not such a bank, but there is nothing to hinder its early establishment. Hon. members in this corner of the house have advocated such a bank for the last ten years. It is unfortunate it was not created in 1923, 1924, 1928 or even 1931. Had that been done we would now have the machinery through which to finance the work such as I have described.

The borrowings could be from a central bank, or even from the commercial banks, on treasury bills at low interest rates. Last fall $35,000,000 was secured in this way, and there is nothing to hinder our securing more money in the same way provided the money is paid out for useful work. Arrangements could be made with the municipalities for the repayment of these advances, such repayments to be spread over a term of, say, ten years, at a rate of interest which would cover the cost of administering these funds and paying for their collection. That would be a very low rate of interest compared with the rates municipalities are compelled to pay at the present time. It seems to me that the provinces might very well join the municipalities in arranging guarantees for expenditures of this nature. A certain amount of unemployment relief will be necessary, but as far as possible I think we should give work rather than direct relief. As I said in the house some time ago, we are crazy to think we would bankrupt ourselves by putting unemployed people to work, because any unemployed man who is put to work will create real wealth. I believe it is Professor Soddy who says that the wealthiest nation is the nation which consumes most. In Canada we pride ourselves upon being a wealthy nation, and yet many of our people are living in poverty.

I have a suggestion to make to the Minister of Labour which I believe will meet with his private approval, whether or not he can get the cooperation of the cabinet. I have in mind a change in the Old Age Pensions Act which would extend pensions to men who have reached the age of sixty-five years. Let us retire some of those men who have worked faithfully to that time of their lives, and let some of the young men take their jobs.

Mr. GORDON: Has the hon. member worked out how much such a change would increase the burden of debt?

Mr. COOTE: No, I have not. I believe, however, that to do as I propose would be economically sound.

There is one other suggestion I should like to make to the minister. I do not remember this being advanced in the house before, although it may have been. My proposal is that he should consider measures to assist the establishment of unemployed cooperatives. A great deal of this work has been done in the United States, I learn from the press that in the state of California more than 200,000 unemployed are obtaining the necessities of life by trading days' work for goods. In Seattle the unemployed have organized themselves so as to perform for one another such services as tailoring, shoemaking, barbering and so on. They grow as much of their food as possible on vacant land, and exchange their labour on the farms for farm produce, the farmers being equally short of ready cash. A splendid account of the operation of this cooperative association in Seattle is given in Collier's magazine of a few months ago. I quote the following from Change:

One of the most ambitious and most successful of these self-help organizations has been formed in the city of Minneapolis under the direction of Doctor George Mecklenburg of the Wesley Methodist Church. The local unemployed are listed according to occupation at the headquarters office, and forty-five crafts have been organized into craft guilds, through which work is distributed. Scrip money—which is of course of value for local circulation only—is the medium of payment. This novel organization is described in Zion's Herald:

"Just inside the door on the Grant street side we find the bank; for the organization has printed its own money in denominations of five cents, ten cents, fifty cents, one dollar, five dollars and ten dollars. This scrip money is hand-signed, copyrighted, and stamped with the seal of the Incorporated Organized Unemployed. Expert unemployed accountants set up the books. Everything is accounted for.

Next to the bank we find the large commissary store. Here come 1,500 people a day to make purchases with scrip. What can they buy? Anything that the members of the organization produce cooperatively. They can buy clothes, old or new; old shoes and some new shoes and rubbers; all kinds of vegetables grown in Minnesota, sugar, bread, flour, sauerkraut, and all kinds of canned fruits and vegetables.

Across the hall from the store we run on to the 'white-collar' restaurant. Here is a cafeteria with $7,000 worth of restaurant equipment which had been loaned to the organization. It was found that Minneapolis not only had idle men, but had idle store equipment, idle bakeries, idle shoe machinery, idle sewing-machines, idle trucks, idle everything. This movement has put idle men and idle things to work.

In the big room back of the restaurant we come to the barter and exchange department. Anyone may bring anything to this place and sell it for scrip. Furniture, beds, automobile tires, silverware, cooking utensils, stoves, shoes, clothes—anything of value is bought for scrip.

In the headquarters building a clothing factory has been set up where twenty-four rapid-power sewing machines make new clothes, mackinaws, overcoats, blazers, and all kinds of warm clothing. On a nearby street is a storehouse filled with potatoes, carrots, parsnips, onions, squash, and other vegetables. All of this produce was bought by trading the work of the unemployed for surplus farm products.

Not the least important feature of this novel plan is the new spirit of hope and confidence that it has given to thousands of people who feel that they are taking part in a new experiment in cooperative living.

In one of the districts of New York city a somewhat similar scheme has been organized by a group of prominent economists, engineers, lawyers and industrial experts, known as the Emergency Exchange Association. As in Minneapolis, the basic idea is to bring into working relationship the idle machines, raw materials, dwellings and farms with the idle men and women who are anxious to work and who are desperately in need of the necessities that they could provide for one another if the facilities were given them. The New York Association also makes use of scrip money in order to make exchange of goods and services possible. The reason for using token money rather than the existing currency is to provide for the eventual expansion of the system beyond the elementary exchange of services, to include production plants and farms. Thus will be created a balanced economic system which a central exchange, to be established by the association, will finance and control, operating from raw materials to ultimate consumer by means of the scrip."

I know some members will not approve of the suggestion contained in this article, but it might interest some to know that in the monthly bulletin published by the National City bank, which, I believe, is the second largest bank in the city of New York, a study of a book recently written by Professor Graham on this very subject is suggested. The article is headed: Remedy for Unemployment, and I recommend it to some hon. members who have not read it.

Mr. MacMILLAN: Does the hon. member—

Mr. COOTE: I recommend it to the hon. member for Saskatoon (Mr. MacMillan), who is so ready—

Mr. MacMILLAN: Does the hon. member favour the banking system of the United States rather than our system?

Mr. COOTE: I am not discussing the banking system of the United States. I am suggesting to the minister, and to the hon. member for Saskatoon, that it would be a good idea to assist in the establishment of the unemployed in some of these cooperatives, so that they might take care of themselves, relieve the taxpayers, relieve the budget and, as the article I read stated, restore confidence to the unemployed themselves. I am also trying to tell him that even such a great institution as the National City bank of New York suggests in its monthly bulletin this book as one to study. The bulletin says regarding this suggestion:

> The author's reasoning leads him in search of a plan whereby in times like the present, when wages and prices in terms of money are out of adjustment, resort may be had to the principle of barter, as a temporary expedient by which the otherwise unemployed may supply their own needs.

Surely that is a good suggestion.

> His plan in brief is to have a National Emergency Corporation that would undertake production, presumably of goods for common consumption, by arrangements with owners of existing shop capacity and giving employment to workmen who would accept pay in "consumption certificates," which would represent proportionate shares in the product. The sole purpose would be to enable the unemployed to produce for themselves and each other during the period of derangement which has deprived them of regular jobs, and to thus mitigate the suffering of such periods.
> The consumption certificates would be transferable, and presumably have a money value, hence a recipient might convert a portion of his earnings into cash. Presumably the money value of the wage would be less than the union wage, for avowedly it is an emergency plan to provide employment at times when union wages cannot be had for many would-be workers, but there would be no profit on the labour.
>
> Obviously the problem would be to get such a variety of production and services into the system as would enable it to supply at once employment and the essentials of life to the workers who joined it. Practically the scheme seems to contemplate a cooperative, auxiliary, system in connection with the existing system, but operating with a currency of its own.

[Mr. Coote.]

I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that the minister seriously consider setting up an unemployment relief commission, and ask that commission to make a study of this very plan. I think it might be adopted in many of the larger municipalities, and if it were properly handled and given a little financial assistance at the start, it could be carried on by men who are now unemployed. Plenty of men who have held good executive positions, now unemployed, would be very glad to lend their services for the successful completion of a project of this kind.

Before I sit down I want again to urge that action be taken to see that the transients who have not been in a municipality long enough to comply with the residence requirements get relief from some source. I would again urge that the federal government assume a larger share of the cost of relief, so that our municipalities may be enabled to increase the scale of relief, in cases where it is now inadequate, to what would seem to be the amount necessary to sustain a decent standard of living for people who would work if they had an opportunity, but for whom there is no work available at present.

Mr. ALFRED SPEAKMAN (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, in considering this subject of unemployment and unemployment relief, perhaps one of the most important questions that we have to deal with at this time, it is vital, I think, that we should avoid confusion of thought and confusion of speech. The subject is of course, extremely complex in a superficial way, that is there are innumerable aspects from which it may be considered, and there are innumerable minor factors in the situation. But essentially there are two main approaches: the one temporary, the other fundamental. So I think it is of great importance to remember that unemployment, although undoubtedly an extremely complex problem, is not in itself a primary problem. That is it is an effect rather than a cause; a symptom rather than a disease. Any physician, confronted with a patient suffering from acute pain whose temperature has risen to an alarming height, would at once take measures to alleviate the pain and reduce the fever; but if he were a wise physician he would go further, he would endeavour to diagnose the disorder from which the patient is suffering and which had brought about the symptoms, and would prescribe such treatment as might remove the disorder and restore the patient to health. It is quite conceivable that part of that treatment might be a complete change of diet, and perhaps a complete change in the sufferer's occupation and mode of living.

As to the first or the more temporary aspect of the problem, there is after all little difference of opinion in this house. There is difference in degree, but in the main the house is conversant with the situation that exists, and I am not going to stress that to-night. We are conversant with the fact that in recent years unemployment has steadily increased, until to-day, although we do not know exactly how many there are, we do know that not far from three quarters of a million people are unemployed who ought to be working, and that those receiving relief from the state in one form or another have increased in number in the last few months from some 800,000 to over 1,300,000. I think we are all in accord as to this, that this condition cannot continue indefinitely without leading to ultimate disaster and bankruptcy. It is obvious that under the system as we have it, with our small population, we cannot carry indefinitely the burden of relief for such a large proportion of the population, nor can we stand the heavy drain upon our resources, the steady wastage which is implied, in seven or eight hundred thousand people living in idleness who ought to be wealthy producers. To that extent we are agreed.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, may I request that you ask these gentlemen—I emphasize the word "gentlemen"—to conduct their conversation in a lower tone or behind the curtains?

Mr. DEPUTY SPEAKER: Order. The hon. gentleman cannot hear himself speak.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: As I say, we are all in accord as to the nature and extent of the problem, and we are in agreement, that it is the responsibility of the state, of the people of the country, to provide for those who are in want the necessities of life which they are unable to earn by their own labour. Not only is that a matter of humanity; it is a matter of distinct responsibility, and a matter of wisdom, particularly in respect of the children. Not only, sir, is there an appeal to those humane instincts found in the heart of every man and woman, that instinctive urge to protect and care for the young and the weak and the helpless of our race, that instinct which is in fact responsible for the preservation of the race; not only that, but I believe it is nothing short of criminal, it is high treason against the state—and that is looked upon as one of the worst of crimes—a crime against the future of this country and a menace to our civilization, if we allow these children who will be the future citizens, who must carry on our future civilization and the business of this country, to enter upon their responsibilities with dwarfed or twisted bodies, physically incapable through malnutrition, or with minds undeveloped or misdeveloped, and with an outlook upon life distorted by suffering and lack of nourishment and wrong surroundings during their youthful and formative years. I look upon that, Mr. Speaker, as do we all, as being not only a tragedy, but a crime. On that point the only difference of opinion in any part of this house is as to what constitutes an adequate and decent standard of living. I doubt whether there is an hon. member in the house, including the minister, who believes that the amount provided at present will adequately care for any growing child.

Then we all agree, Mr. Speaker, that all other things being equal and if it were financially possible, it would be infinitely better both from the point of view of the morale of those concerned and as an investment for the state, to make provision for those requiring relief by way of work for which remuneration was given than to provide direct relief. There is a difference of opinion as to the work which might be done, and I am not going to dwell upon that because my colleague from Macleod (Mr. Coote), who immediately preceded me, gave very clearly and intelligently, I think, a long list of suggestions some of which might well be put in force. I am merely pointing out that we are all agreed on these questions and that the only factor which intervenes and the only reason direct relief is substituted for work is again the cost. Under the system as we have it that cost apparently is prohibitive.

I have said that we are all agreed as to the duty of the state, but a question arises as to what particular agency of state should take the primary and chief responsibility. I believe in facing facts, and among those facts of course is our constitution and the division of authority and of responsibility therein outlined. After all, however, a constitution is not a fundamental but a superficial fact; it is a matter of convenience, and to my mind so long as the people of this country must carry the burden and pay the cost it matters little through what agency that work is done so long as that agency is the most competent and effective for that purpose. I believe, and I think the belief is shared by many, that with the scope and magnitude of the present problem it has become more and more a national problem which must be dealt with by a centralized system of management. I do not say that provincial and municipal governments should not take their share of responsibility and contribute their share towards the solution of the problem, but I do say that I am at one with the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) who stated that we should have some centralized body which would lay the plans and co-ordinate the work as between the federal, provincial and municipal governments and see that the work was done equally so that all would share alike. Further, so long as the causes of unemployment are wholly beyond the control of municipalities, and while the provinces have little to do with them; to the extent that any Canadian government is responsible, then it is federal responsibility and the federal government or the federal agency should assume the greater part of that burden. After all, they control immigration, which is one of the contributing factors; they control our trade and financial policies. The federal parliament controls almost every factor which, so far as it is national, enters into this problem of unemployment, and for that reason I again emphasize my belief that the federal government should not only direct the general work itself but should carry the greater part of the burden.

Last year I know the minister strained every nerve to cope with this problem, and may I say at once that I believe he has done all that a man in his position can do to overcome this situation. He has given his thought, his time, his efforts and his health, and among the other things he tried was the back to the land movement. I am not one of those who deprecate unduly all experiments—and this was an experiment. I do hold that no back to the land movement, on a large or a small scale, can go any distance in meeting this problem. It is of no use for us to deplore the fact that the tendency is for more and more people to dwell in our large centres, with fewer and fewer remaining in the country. That is something we cannot control; that is in line with the steady march forward of civilization, and to attempt to fight that flow or turn it aside would be as useless as was the gesture of old King Canute, who ordered back the rising sea. As the hon. member for East Hamilton (Mr. Mitchell) has said, almost every day sees some new industry developed, always one that is industrial in its character and carried on in some factory in some city. The percentage of people required to produce the food of the world is becoming smaller and smaller, inevitably and inexorably. Every scientific discovery and every mechanical improvement lessens the number of people required to produce food, but it does not increase the need for food or the size of men's stomachs. It drives men more and more to the cities where the new industries are located and where every new invention not only has its birth but lives its life. I hardly need to mention the further fact that if a back to the land movement were carried on to such an extent as perceptibly to affect the problem of unemployment, it would simply increase the problem of agricultural distress which is now as great as the unemployment problem which is crushing this country.

I should like to pass for a little while now from the temporary phase of this question. I have said that in my opinion the minister and the government have been doing pretty well all they can do under the system as we have it. It comes to a question of dollars and cents, and again under the system as we have it those dollars and cents are limited. Perhaps the greatest indictment against the system as we have it is the fact that we have had in power, before 1930 and since 1930, able and sincere men who have done their best to meet the conditions that arose, and who shall say that they have failed so far as they could succeed? The fact that they have been unable to succeed; the fact that despite their utmost efforts unemployment and distress have increased and the number of people on relief has steadily grown and keeps on growing, is to my mind an indictment not of the members of the government but of a system which even those men, strong and capable though they may have been—and I will give them all the credit they may desire—have been unable to make it succeed.

I will turn to the question of causes, because after all the symptoms or the mere alleviation of suffering are not the important things. The important thing for us to consider to-day is what has brought about unemployment and what we can do to remove those causes. There is a great deal more difference of opinion on this point; here the views of members of this house diverge to a far greater extent than they do in respect of the more temporary and superficial phases of the problem. During a debate which took place a short time ago upon another subject, to which by the rules of this house I am not allowed to refer, a good deal was said as to systems old and new, and frequently we heard something said as to the folly, shall we say, of a small number of men in this corner of the house who held, according to others, that this system under which we live must be destroyed root and branch that it may serve as fertilizer for a new and better system. That at least was the inference I drew from what was said by some hon. members. Now, may I assure the house that in endeavouring to put forward some ideas held in this corner as to what might be done towards meeting conditions which bring about unemployment, I am not suggesting that we should tear down the building or uproot the tree, that we should make fertilizer out of all our cherished institutions. Not at all. I am suggesting merely this, that where we find an obvious weakness or an obvious flaw, that weakness should be eradicated and a newer and better piece of machinery installed to function where the existing piece failed to function. And although I will suggest that if this process is continued long enough, and each inadequate piece of machinery in turn is removed and replaced by a more efficient piece of machinery, in the long run you may have an entirely new machine, that is a very different thing from destroying and then erecting. It is a matter of gradual evolution from the less satisfactory to the more satisfactory, and so we hope at some future time to attain the perfect. That perfection will not come within my lifetime or yours, however.

What are the chief causes of unemployment? Of these I think, again, we have a very fair conception. There are two main causes, as I think we shall all agree. One of these we describe as technological, and the other is financial, and these two phases constitute the reason for almost all the unemployment which we see in this country and elsewhere—the technological and the financial causes. Let us take the technological first, because technology and technocrats and so on have become a popular subject of conversation, or at least they were until a short time ago.

What is technological unemployment? It is simply the replacement of human labour by machinery; that is all, and there is no reason for me to emphasize or to offer illustrations of that great truth. Every one of us, whether living on the farm or in the city; whether conversant chiefly with urban or with rural life; whether our principal contacts have been with the farmer or with the mechanic in the cotton mills, in the shoe factories, in Oshawa or Windsor or Ford City, where they make automobiles, every one of us, I say, is conversant with that situation. We know that in every industry machinery improving year by year is gradually replacing human labour. That process, beginning as it did when steam power was first applied to production, has gone on with accelerating speed year by year until the present time. You will perhaps ask, as I have asked: If this is true, why have we had no unemployment on a large scale until within recent years, when this process has been going on so long? Again, I think, the answer is obvious. To counteract that process we have seen within our own lifetime the emergence and development of new industries, beginning on a small scale, and producing luxuries almost unattainable except to the rich, until spreading and growing and rapidly developing, like the motor car, they have become at last necessities of life, demanded and if possible secured by every man in the community. The emergence into our industrial field of the motor car, the telephone, the gramophone, the radio, the flying machine and all these new industries, has meant that each in turn has been able to absorb the surplus labour thrown off from the basic industries. As they have replaced human labour with machinery, each new industry has in turn absorbed that discarded labour, thus putting off again and again the threatened time of widespread unemployment.

In 1914 the situation was growing acute and then the war broke out, and at once it took from the field of competitive labour 500,000 of our best men. This at once created an enormous artificial market for goods, and for a time the situation was saved from the point of view of employment. The war passed and again we were threatened with unemployment on a large scale, and again the sudden and widespread development of some of these machines of which I have spoken—the fact that numerous men were employed in building the very machines which eventually would displace them—was able to take up the slack. But remember that after each recurring era such as this we entered upon the next with a greatly increased load of debt, accumulating steadily, so that each time it would require a more powerful stimulant to take us forward another lap. There is the situation, and to-day apparently we have not in sight any new industry on a sufficiently wide scale to absorb the potential labour now idle.

I will not go into the estimates given time and again as to what the total production would be if we were to employ all our people. It has been estimated that a little over fifty per cent of the available working population, working eight hours a day, would to-day be able to supply all the needs of the country were we able to purchase all that was produced. Now, some people ask, why worry about technological unemployment? That is easily solved. Pass some law or statute and turn the eight hour day into a five hour, a four hour, a three hour, a two hour day; cut down the hours; divide and subdivide the work and you will have met the problem. Yes, if that were the end. But after all that is only the a, b, c of the matter, because behind that lies finance. The question will be immediately asked: Yes; divide labour; shorten the hours; but will you pay these men the full eight hour day wage for four hours of work or will you halve the wages to meet the half time occupied? If the latter, then none will have enough to live on and you will have to relieve all. If the former, then you double the labour cost of the goods produced, and under the system as we have it, neither could capital obtain a profit nor could the farmer and those other producers who do not come under the wage scale be able to buy the goods produced and you would find yourself faced with the ultimate problem, that which I verily believe, as stated again and again from this corner, and emphasized and amply demonstrated by my friend from Macleod (Mr. Coote), is the stumbling block, the root cause, namely, finance or money. How will you get it? Then we come to that problem. I think it is fair to say that that is the main problem.

May I come back again to the medical metaphor, and I do so with hesitation because there are so many medical men in the house. But I suggest this to you because I know something of medicine, not as a practitioner but as a victim. One of the practices of the skilled physician in dealing with a patient who has some obscure disorder is to apply the logical method of elimination in making his diagnosis. He will test organ after organ to see whether this or that organ is sound and functioning properly, and gradually he eliminates one after another from the field of conjecture until he comes finally to the organ that is giving the trouble. I believe that is an apt metaphor in this connection.

Now, no one will deny that our public patient is suffering from some obscure ailment. The symptoms are obvious, for we are all suffering from it; the temperature is high, the pain is acute, and we are analyzing organ after organ.

Look at agriculture. Agriculture is absolutely sound as a producing body. It can produce goods in ample quantity and of excellent quality. In other words, it functions one hundred per cent. I do not say that it cannot be improved; all methods can be improved but I think it is efficient in performing its proper functions, which is to produce agricultural goods.

We come now to industry. You can examine factory after factory and you will find almost without exception that it is functioning efficiently and doing its work as it should be done, producing as a productive organization should. As you pass from one to the other I venture to say that in these days of keen competition you would find very few that were not functioning to their height of efficiency in producing the goods for which they were created.

Then we come to distribution. When we examine our mechanical means of distribution such as our railways, our steamships, our trucks, our buses or other means of transportation, we find just as an efficient a system of transportation as any man could wish. Again, improvements are possible in economy and in efficiency but I venture to say that there is not an article produced in any part of this country that cannot be transported with speed, safety and celerity to any market on the globe.

Next we come to communication. Miracles are being performed with our systems of communication. In my home in Red Deer I am nearer to Washington, London, Peking, Moscow or, if you like, Ottawa, than I was to Calgary when I went west forty-three years ago. The moment a man speaks I am able to hear him over the radio. The Pope speaks in the ancient Vatican and followers by the millions throughout the world bow their heads when they hear his voice. The Prince of Wales launches a ship and the splash as it enters the Clyde resounds throughout the empire. The Prime Minister of Canada speaks and the listening multitudes raise their hats and shout "hurrah."

Some hon. MEMBERS: Hear, hear.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: If they don't. I assume they should. The system of communication is perfect.

We come now to that organism the function of which, stripped of all verbiage, stripped of all the accumulations of legend, tradition and precedent, is to make possible the exchange of goods and services between one industry and another—finance. I do not intend to go into the intricacies of finance but I am going to ask this question: Judged from the point of view of a medium of exchange, is finance functioning as it should? I do not think there is an hon. member who has looked at what is going on, who has seen the accumulated wealth—money is not wealth, it is goods—who has observed the suffering of the people; I do not think there is anyone with the intelligence worthy of a member who will say that finance is functioning when considered from that point of view. At the moment I do not intend to go into why it is not functioning, I simply state that to my own satisfaction, and following the logical processes of elimination to which I have alluded, finance is the weak spot in our economic circle.

That being the case, what are we going to do? Why are we in this corner called radicals? It is because, faced with these facts as is every hon. member in this house, with the little knowledge of which we are possessed—we have not all the wisdom in the world, but just that of an ordinary, average man—we are prepared to say that if this thing is not functioning, all these precedents, all these accumulations of debt, of interest and of interests will not prevent us from saying: Cut loose from it, remedy the weakness and have a financial system which will achieve the purpose for which it was born and created. I do not care how good it is for piling up debts; I do not care how efficiently it functions in providing interest for bond investors; I do not care how skilfully the bankers or the financiers are functioning as wholesalers and retailers of a commodity termed money; I do not care how much it means to them and what hardships will be involved to these few men, if the system cannot do that for which it was created, then it must be changed.

Much will have to be done; this is not the end, it is but the beginning. We will do first that thing which comes first to our hand and which every logic and all experience points to as being the right thing to do—we will create a central bank. From that point we will spread out until the nation controls the credit of the nation. Why do I say that? I am not making a statement simply for the fun of making one. I make it for this reason: It has been admitted by many hon. members in this house, including the Prime Minister, that the basis of all credit, no matter whether it functions through banks or industrial companies or otherwise, is the wealth of the nation, the productive power of all the people. That fact was admitted when the power was sought to place behind the tottering financial institutions of this country the financial credit of the nation itself, as was done a year ago. The true basis of all credit is in the nation and in the people of the country. If the people of the country create the basis of our credit, if credit itself is the lifeblood of our country rather than a money-making proposition, rather than an industry in itself in which profit is considered indispensable, then I say that from both points of view the nation itself that made the credit should control it, not for the good of the few people to whom we have given it and from whom we can take it away, but for the good of all the people in this country.

I am not unmindful of the fact that this country does not live within itself. I am not one of those who believe that we should live by ourselves. I think we could do it if we had to—we could cut down our production of wheat by four-fifths and produce only enough upon which to live—none of these things are impossible, but they are all extremely improbable and not very wise. We could live within ourselves, but it would be very foolish to do so. We would be attempting to sweep back the rising tide which is drawing the countries of the world together, and, I hope, gradually making of them a great commonwealth of nations. I am not unmindful of these facts; but surely a credit based upon the nation itself could be made just as available for intercourse with other countries as a credit based upon gold or upon the say so of a few financiers. Surely that is not impossible. It is an easy matter for those who disagree with us to say that it would be difficult. Of course it would be difficult, but nothing worth while in this world can be achieved without difficulty.

It will be difficult, but what is the alternative? What is the alternative to moving forward and attempting to tear out the roots of unemployment? Stay where we are. I am one of those who prefer to move forward, neither tolerating, on the one hand, turbulent violence and destructive anarchy, nor, on the other hand, accepting that passive inertia the end of which is death from dry rot. We cannot stay as we are; there is an inexorable law of nature which says that you must move forward or backward. At the moment we are steadily moving backward. Every additional unemployed, every additional man, woman or child that goes on relief, is a step backward, a step nearer disintegration. When we are told that the problem is difficult, we say: Yes, it is difficult, but not impossible, and surely it is better to go forward and meet and conquer difficulties than to stand still and die like a coward or a slave.

I am not in the habit of using strong language, but this is a serious subject and some of us feel rather strongly in regard to it. I am not one of those who say that we alone have seen what is going on around us or realize the suffering. All hon. members realize the suffering; I venture to say that every one of us feels as bitterly as I do about it. The only difference is that I am not bound—I am not talking about partyism now—by old precedent or to any ancient belief. I have been able with a tremendous effort to throw that off and am prepared to go forward as long as I am wholly certain that the road along which I am moving is a sound one and that the objective which I seek to attain is also sound. What objective do we seek to attain? The elimination of unemployment? Yes, partly that, but seek also to attain something else, something that we are bound to meet, something at which at some time we are bound to succeed. We are moving forward to the time when one simple thing will be accomplished, and that is when this world's wealth, which this system has enabled us to create, will be used for the benefit of those who created it. We have the key to unlock the door which opens into nature's great storehouse of plenty which science has made available to us.

Mr. ANGUS MacINNIS (Vancouver South): Mr. Speaker, of all the depressing things that have come to my attention since the beginning of this depression, the most depressing was the speech of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) in presenting this resolution to the house on Friday last. It was bereft of hope; it was without plan or policy and even, I believe, bereft of any understanding of the fundamental causes of unemployment. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Speakman), who has just preceded me, explained at some length the causes of unemployment, and though I may not entirely agree with him, yet I am in sufficient accord with him not to take any exception to what he has said. We can, however, put the causes of unemployment on a more simple and fundamental basis than the hon. member for Red Deer has done. Unemployment is really not something to be afraid of or that we should consider an evil. It is only when we have unemployment coupled with certain conditions that the fact of unemployment becomes undesirable.

Very early in my life I came across the fact that work was something that was given to man as a punishment. I noted that when Adam was driven out of the Garden of Eden, the punishment meted out to him because of his sin was that he would have to work. I notice also that when a judge wishes to be particularly nasty with anyone who comes before him, in rendering sentence he says: Five or ten years with hard labour. In my reading of history I have also noted that primitive man was not in the least afraid of being unemployed. When nature was kind to him and her fruits were plentiful and easy of attainment, he did not have to work so hard; he had more leisure and consequently was a great deal happier. In the next stage of human society, that is barbarism, the same thing occurred. When nature again was kind, man could get his living so much easier and consequently he had much leisure, or unemployment, if you like, and was much happier. It is only when we come to the present system, that of capitalism, under which the machinery of production is owned by one class in the community and operated by another, that unemployment is undesirable, and it is only undesirable for a certain section of the community. It is not undesirable for those who own the machinery. They do not worry about not having to work; in fact, they greatly enjoy their good fortune. Because they have not to work, they go to the West Indies or some other warm country in the winter; they go to the lakes in the north in the summer and they have a good time living at the best hotels and having all the best things of life. It is only the working class—who produce the goods of the world, who feed these people who live in idleness,—who are afraid of unemployment. That being so, we find that unemployment arises because of the social relationships that exist in human society. Unemployment will not be cured so long as those social relationships continue. There is the cause of unemployment, very briefly and very fundamentally too. Maybe hon. members will not agree with me, but it does not make any difference whether they do or not. That is the cause and it will have to be realized before a solution for unemployment can be brought about.

The only hope the minister has to offer us is economy, that it is costing less to-day to deal with the unemployment situation than it did two or three years ago. When this government came into office we had a special session of parliament to deal with the question of unemployment, and I should like to read from the records a short paragraph to show how the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) at that time thought the unemployment situation should be dealt with and how he pointed out that economy was not the way to deal with it. On page 91 of Hansard of September 11, 1930, the Prime Minister, in order to indicate what would be the effect of the $20,000,000 that he was asking from parliament, had this to say:

> That is, if a public work is undertaken in a community where there is considerable unemployment of one class, and that class thereby finds employment, then there will be a reaction of course, for the benefit of other classes who are also unemployed. By reason of the fact that employment is given to the workers in class A, the workers in other classes will benefit from the result of that employment. In other words, moneys will circulate through the productive effort of those who are paid for their services, and enure to the benefit of other classes in the community, both men and women, whether they be clerks, of whom more will be required in offices, stenographers, of whom more will be required in the counting rooms, or those who work in restaurants, or those who provide food or clothing. That has been the experience of the world, and no one knows it better than the right hon. gentleman himself.

He was referring to the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King). What I wish to point out is this: that if the Prime Minister were correct in saying that with the spending of money further activity would accrue than that directly created by the expenditure itself, that reactions in other ways would be caused, then the reverse is also true; that if we economize here by a reduction of wages, there by a reduction of unemployment relief, that economy will have reactions through curtailment of economic activities in spheres altogether apart from where the actual economy has been put into effect. So that the more the Minister of Labour or this government economizes, the more unemployment will increase. That is a fundamental economic fact from which there is no need to try to get away. No doubt he expects to get away from it by putting people back on the land. Because in the last fifty years the urban population has increased from eighteen per cent to something like fifty per cent of the whole, he is convinced that such increase in urban population has been the cause of our economic difficulties. I do not believe that has been the cause.

Mr. GORDON: I said it was only one of the causes.

Mr. MacINNIS: I do not wish to imply that the minister said it was the whole cause. If he states it is only one cause, I shall accept his word. I do not believe, however, that it is even one cause.

Mr. GORDON: Very few men in Canada would agree with you.

Mr. MacINNIS: Possibly the rest of them are wrong.

Mr. GORDON: Likely.

Mr. MacINNIS: Both city and farm workers to-day are engaged in agricultural production. The farmer who produces wheat for a world market is not alone in that production; he is merely taking part in its production. The man who lives in the city and helps to make a tractor, the man who lives in the city and helps to make a truck or a wagon, the trainmen, the seamen who transport the wheat—all are engaged in the production of wheat, as much as the farmer who does the work on the land. This is equally true of those who are engaged in the production of other agricultural products. If these products were consumed on the farm where they are produced, then the original producer would be alone responsible. But they are produced for a world market, and their production is not complete until the ultimate consumer is reached. Between the farmer in the field and the ultimate consumer there is a host of workers which takes as great a part in the production as does the farmer on the land.

I do not believe there is much use putting people back on the land when those who are there to-day cannot remain. They cannot make a living, and they cannot bring up their children. As a matter of fact, because of the difficulties they have to face, farmers are finding difficulty keeping their wives with them. In the Ottawa Citizen of February 14, there was a Canadian press item from Calgary wherein Charles Robertson, secretary of the Canadian Legion, Alberta division, declared that settlers who took up farms under settlement schemes were leaving the farms and coming into the cities because under present conditions they found it impossible to meet their obligations.

While I am on this point may I say that in my view a very serious principle is involved in the back to the land movement. The people being put on the land under these schemes go with the idea that they are to produce only for themselves, that they are to make only their own living, and at least at this time they will not come into competition with farmers already on the land. Such a movement, as a matter of fact, tends towards the creation of a peasantry in Canada, a peasantry which will eke out a precarious living from the land when there is nothing to be done in the city. That peasantry will form a labour reserve to be called upon at a time when working conditions in the cities improve. Such a condition will be dangerous to the people affected and dangerous to workers in the cities. Certainly Canadian people should look carefully into the movement before they give it the mark of approval. While we are dealing with unemployment—

Mr. GORDON: The Trades and Labour Congress of Canada approves of the idea of settling people on Canadian lands.

Mr. MacINNIS: That may be quite so, but it does not necessarily follow that everything of which the Trades and Labour Congress of Canada approves must be right. I take the liberty of differing from the congress any time I feel like doing so.

We should deal with the unemployment problem from two points of view. First of all, if it is a temporary problem and if it is only a matter of time until the workers will be back into industry, I would say that possibly the provisions the government are making would meet the situation. If a man knows he will be out of work only a few months or a year, but that at some certain time he will return to industry, then I believe the providing of assistance might meet the circumstances. But the abnormal situation has existed for so long that no one can say when, if ever, workers will return to industry. Not only can we say that, but everybody who has given intelligent consideration to the matter must realize that industry can never again absorb more than fifty per cent of workers now unemployed. With that fact we must remember that throughout the world there are 30,000,000 people in that unfortunate position.

In this connection I should like to quote the words of Ramsay MacDonald, the Prime Minister of Great Britain, as delivered recently in the House of Commons upon the occasion of the opening of the session. He said:

> Moreover, in the study of who the unemployed are, and what are the prospects of the unemployed in this country, even if normal trade were restored, we are faced with this fact and nobody can deny it.
> We are faced with the fact that a large number could be reabsorbed into industry. If the coal trade improved, through hydrogenation or any other expedient, more miners would be employed. If iron and steel revived more iron and steel workers would be employed, but we are going to have in the future a larger production by the use of scientific methods than we have ever had before, and a very substantially lessened body of working men and women engaged in production.
>
> What is to be done about the remainder? There is the problem, and this government is the first government to face the actual problem that when trade has become brisk, as anybody can naturally expect trade now to become for this country, we shall still have a residuum. We shall still have a population which, were they not human beings—

Note this—

> We shall still have a population which, were they not human beings, one would describe—merely for the sake of making quite clear what their position was—as scrap.

Hon. members will note that so far as the Prime Minister of Great Britain is concerned—and I shall quote other members of the British cabinet who hold a similar view—a great portion of the unemployed may be considered as mere scrap. The article continues:

> Are we going to allow, is this nation going to allow, great bodies of men and women, perhaps even amounting to a couple of million, to be to all intents and purposes in our society superfluous scrap? The government, so far as they are concerned, say No! Therefore the problem of unemployment is not one of temporary relief.

Sir, we have come to the stage where the problem of unemployment is not one of temporary relief. There you have the view of the leader of the British House of Commons, the leader of the national government. May I quote again briefly from the Chancellor of the Exchequer, Mr. Neville Chamberlain? He said:

> They must recognize that, while schemes they put forward might perhaps provide employment for a few thousands here and there, they could not expect that in the immediate future anything which they did would cut unemployment by, say, half. To deal with unemployment on a large scale, they have got to deal with the causes which brought it about and which were not confined to any one country but operated all over the world.

I do not wish to quote any more, but here are two gentlemen whose opinion I believe the Minister of Labour and other members on both sides of the house will consider to be of some value. Let me say again that our problem of unemployment is, like the problem of unemployment in the old country, like the problem of unemployment in every country of the world, not a temporary but a permanent problem.

The minister takes great credit for the reduction of relief costs from $46,000,000, I believe, in 1931, to something like $25,000,000 in the current year, although he said the number on relief has greatly increased in the past year. I quite agree with him that the number on relief has greatly increased. In May of last year the number who were receiving direct relief from the Dominion government was only 718,000. Every month from May until January the number has continued to increase—

Mr. GORDON: That is not correct.

Mr. MacINNIS: Every month except one. For September there was a reduction from August. I have the figures here, if the hon. gentleman would like me to read them. I got them from the Department of Labour.

Mr. GORDON: No, I have them here.

Mr. MacINNIS: I think the hon. gentleman will find I am correct. In so far as these savings that he speaks of have been effected by a lessening of political graft in the handling of unemployment relief, it is all to the good, even if the unemployed do not benefit. But all the saving that has been made, with that exception, has been made at the expense of the unemployed, made at the cost of ever lessening relief.

Mr. GORDON: That is not correct.

Mr. MacINNIS: It means a lower standard of living, more misery, slow starvation in the midst of plenty. And may I say in regard to this matter of cost that we are merely counting the cost in terms of money? Unemployed workers do not eat money, neither are they clothed in money. They eat food, the product of human labour, and if they are clothed at all they are clothed with the products of human labour. And this has only been brought into being by those who are working now, or perhaps by some of those who are now unemployed. The money phase is only a bookkeeping procedure for the owning class in this country in order that they may know what disposal was made of their share of production.

As to the question of clothing for the unemployed, I understand that single unemployed men working in the camps—or in the camps, whether working or not—are being provided with clothing. But there are a great many on direct relief in the cities who are receiving no clothing at all, or for whom there is no provision in the relief schedules for clothing.

Mr. NICHOLSON: What cities?

Mr. MacINNIS: In the city of Vancouver the number of families on relief on February 15 was 7,130, an increase of 306 in the preceding two weeks. For these 7,130 families there is no provision for clothing in the direct relief. I have here an item from the report of the Vancouver Welfare Federation, consisting of a number of societies formed for the purpose of looking after the needy. Mr. Willard Kitchen, one of the directors, reporting to their annual meeting on the question of clothing, said as follows:

> Regarding the problem of clothing for the needy which the federation attempted to meet, with indifferent success by inclusion of a special fund for this purpose in the 1933 campaign, Mr. Kitchen stated that the directors had reached the conclusion that private charity cannot indefinitely meet this need and that the problem must sooner or later be faced by the governments of the city and province in conjunction with the dominion government.

I think that is proof enough that the clothing problem is not being cared for now in direct relief.

I have here another statement, an editorial from the Vancouver Province, when the usual appeal was made for discarded clothing. At that time—this was last November—the number of families on relief was some 6,000. The Province said:

> They are drawing allowances for food, but nothing whatever for clothing, and as they are without work and without incomes they have no means of purchasing.

Then it goes on to say:

> The lack of clothing falls with particular severity on the children. Without adequate clothing the little folk cannot go to school in the winter weather, and missing school at this time means even more than missing a drilling in the three "R's." It means missing five or six hours a day in a warm and cheerful atmosphere. It means missing interesting contacts. It means extra hours in a home want-ridden and often gloomy.

And these were the homes that our friends opposite were afraid the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation might take away from people should they ever get into power!

> The great need is for clothing for the children. But something must be done for the grown-ups too. There is an old saying to the effect that the coat makes the man. It is equally true that the lack of the coat unmakes him. And every woman, even if she has had no such unhappy experiences herself, can imagine the black despair which poverty can breed in the breast of an unfortunate sister.

I presume she can also realize the great pleasure it gives her to go out wearing some other woman's hat.

The minister in his speech made some reference to the destruction of individualism, and said that the individual himself would have to do something in order to meet the situation he was confronted with through this world wide depression. It is rather strange that the minister should take that position. The Prime Minister, and I believe most others on the government side of the house, tell us that the economic condition is a world wide one and that nothing can be done except by international action, yet the Minister of Labour says it is up to the individual to do something. If the nation cannot do anything, surely it ought to be conceded that the individual cannot do anything that will be of any appreciable effect. The governments of the world, this country included, ought to realize that the world is facing a situation such as it has never faced before. Economic changes we have had before; economic systems have given way and others have taken their place, but now we have a breakdown of an economic and social system with the world on an industrial basis, something we never had before. All other changes came about when world economy was much more simple, that is, when world economy was on an agricultural basis. In that case the individual was in close contact with his means of life, but now we are living in a state where, with our huge industrialized cities, we have millions of workers divorced from every contact with their means of life and if they are to live and work for their living that work must be organized for them by some force outside of themselves. It is quite useless to tell the individual at the present time that he must do something for himself. As a matter of fact we must cooperate whether we like it or not, and let us not forget that every step that has been made in human progress has been accomplished through co-operation. Now cooperation is necessary on a scale greater than was ever known or even thought of before, or back to the jungle we go. That does not mean at all that individualism will disappear, but under these conditions the individual can give the greatest expression to that individualism only through cooperation.

I do not think it is necessary to say anything to impress upon this house the seriousness of the unemployment situation and the great increase in the number of unemployed that is taking place. When the census was taken in June, 1931, it showed that Canada's wage and salaried workers numbered 2,564,879, of whom 81·39 per cent were working. Those not at work numbered 471,668, or 18·6 per cent. In that month the index of employment stood at 103·6, while last December it stood at 83·2, a decline of 19·7. Thus the number of people employed in December would be 2,093,211, which, less 19·7 per cent, would be 1,680,849. With the population increasing at the rate of 1·8 per cent per year the number of employable salaried and wage earners in December would be 2,634,130. When the number employed in December is subtracted from this figure it will be seen that 957,281 were not at work, so we can see the enormous increase in unemployment, and there is no indication that in the near future there will be any let up. If we are going to deal with this question effectively we shall have to deal with it in a more comprehensive and fundamental way than we are doing at the present time. As as matter of fact now we are only adding to the depression instead of relieving it. Speaking on Friday evening last and referring to the lack of policy on the part of the government in respect to unemployment, the leader of the opposition (Mr. Mackenzie King) said:

> With respect to the first, the present government's policy is that of the dole, and, with respect to the second, they have no policy at all. Such policies as they have with respect to trade and the like, their fiscal policies are all of a nature to strangle trade instead of encouraging it, and more than anything else are responsible for unemployment in Canada reaching the proportions it has to-day.

It is rather strange how the Liberal party changes places with the Conservative party every once in a while. When the Prime Minister introduced his unemployment relief bill in 1930 he made the following statement:

> Many of us who sit on this side of the chamber believe that the policies of a government in a new country with practically untouched resources is responsible for unemployment. Those who sit to your left, Mr. Chairman, are of the other view and believe that world wide conditions have brought about this result.

Now we have the leader of the opposition taking the position that the policies of the government are causing unemployment, while on the other hand the government takes the stand that their policies have nothing to do with it, that it arises out of world conditions over which they have no control. However, whether world conditions are responsible or whether the policies of the government are to blame I believe we must have some policy in this country to deal with the unemployment situation regardless of what the rest of the world may do, either that or possibly go down to ruin with the rest of the world.

The leader of the opposition offers two proposals, one of a temporary nature and the other somewhat more permanent. The first is a national unemployment commission. I do not see that such a commision could accomplish a great deal. Possibly it could deal more effectively with what the government is doing at the present time, but certainly it could not initiate policies unless the government favoured that action being taken. The other proposition brought forward by the right hon. gentleman is unemployment insurance. While we in this corner of the house, particularly the labour members, always have been in favour of unemployment insurance, we never suggested it as a permanent cure for unemployment. It is a more scientific and better way to deal with the unemployment situation than anything we have at the present time, but where unemployment insurance is in effect the unemployment problem also exists and is just as crushing as it is here.

May I say in addition that while we would welcome unemployment insurance we quite realize that it is not the solution of the unemployment problem. Unemployment insurance, to have any particular effect, should have been put into operation some years ago. The time to take out an insurance policy on your life is not when you are on your death bed; the time to look after an insurance policy on your building is not when it is on fire, but that is what we are doing at present. There is practically no possibility of arriving at a satisfactory basis at the present time because with the increasing hazard a stable premium would be exceedingly hard to find. How can you make it contributory insurance when you have possibly 900,000 unemployed at the present time who cannot contribute and who have no employers to contribute for them? If these men are to participate, a fund will have to be created by the government. For these reasons we feel that while we shall welcome unemployment insurance and while we hope the government will bring down the bill very quickly, it is not a solution to the problem. We feel that something more fundamental will have to be found.

The minister closed his speech with an expression of confidence in the future. I notice that last year, some time in May, he concluded on the very same note. He said, on February 24 of this year:

> I have myself a confident belief that with the gradual turn towards other vocations than those which have afforded a certain sense of security to our people in the past, and better business conditions, it will not be too long delayed when the granting of direct relief to our citizens will disappear.

If the Minister of Labour has nothing to offer but a mere expression of confidence that something is going to happen at some time in the near future which will improve business conditions, then it is hardly worth mentioning. His prophecy in that direction last year was not fruitful of much result. All you have to do is to look at the trend of industry. The monthly index of Canadian business conditions, as worked out by McConnell & Ferguson Limited, shows the percentage of business at the lowest point it has reached since the beginning of this depression, and a falling off from a year ago which is very marked. Let us take the four basic factors, all of which have lost ground. In December, 1931, car loadings of revenue freight were 72·5 of normal; on the 1st of December, 1932, it was only 64·9. Construction contract awards, in December, 1931, showed the figure at 85·6, and in 1932 it was 65·1. As regards bank debits, on December 1, 1931, it was 88·6, and on December 1, 1932, 79·5. In electrical energy output, on December 1, 1931, the figure was 82·6, and on December 1, 1932, it was 76. Now, the unemployment figure given us shows the same thing—an ever-decreasing business and an ever-increasing unemployment, and I hope that before this session is over the government will bring forward something that will be of greater benefit to the unemployed than anything they have so far given us.

Mr. P. F. CASGRAIN (Charlevoix-Saguenay): We are asked by this resolution to endorse the principle that it is expedient to introduce a measure to continue in force the provisions of the Relief Act of 1932 until March 31, 1934. If I understand correctly, the purpose of the resolution is to revive and put into force for another year the same bill brought down last year over which there was so much contention regarding the large powers given the government to solve the unemployment problem. The complaint made at that time by members on this side and by other members as well was that powers which were by far too wide were given the government in dealing with this matter. It was then contended that it was a usurpation of the powers of this house in view of the fact that the government had the right to do almost anything, that they had a blank cheque given them, which would surely result in trouble. We have had this afternoon an admission from the minister that these very results have ensued.

The contention was also made last year that the parliament of Canada, which under that measure was giving large sums of money towards the relief of unemployment, was being deprived of the control of that money by the persons who were to spend it. We argued then on this side of the house, and rightly so, and our leader (Mr. Mackenzie King) in his brilliant speech a few days ago in this house once more referred to the same thing which he advocated last year and the year before, that in order to solve this problem properly it would have been far better at the very outset of the present situation to organize a national commission which would be dominion-wide, to deal with unemployment, having pretty much the powers given to the imperial purchasing commission during the war, and to other such bodies which were working under the direction of the federal government. That was the opinion of my right hon. leader, and it was shared by all those on this side of the house and by a considerable number of the people throughout the country. Had such a commission been appointed, the things that have occurred in the province of Quebec and in various other parts of the dominion would not have taken place—such things as were referred to in the house this afternoon by the hon. member for Témiscouata (Mr. Pouliot). I do not say that I would subscribe to everything that the hon. gentleman said but I do say that in what was put before the house this afternoon, when the situation was so clearly explained by that hon. member, we have in a nutshell the situation as it has existed not only in certain parts of the province of Quebec but elsewhere as well, under this very measure which we are now asked to enact again.

I was surprised to hear the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) say this afternoon that if there were reasons for complaint such as were indicated, and if the back to the land movement had not brought the results anticipated, it was not the fault of the government but the fault of those administering the legislation in the various provinces, in this instance the province of Quebec. The minister expressed great satisfaction with the organization in the province of Quebec, but he washed his hands so far as objections were concerned with regard to the working of the relief measure, and he did so on this ground. He said, "We have no control of the matter. We have nothing to say as to where people are to be located, in what districts they are to be settled, because it is all done through the organization." Well, that brings me to the point which we emphasized last year and which my right hon. leader touched upon the other day, when he said that it would have been far better if a commission had been appointed to deal with the whole matter, so that this parliament of Canada, which is supreme and which is playing the leading part in the settlement of this problem, would have been in a position to control expenditures not only in the province of Quebec but throughout the country, and we should not have had the spectacle of the minister standing up today and telling us—quite honestly, I say to his credit—that the government were not responsible for what had taken place because they had no control over these things. I submit that this is one good reason for complaining about this legislation, because it deprives parliament, the representatives of the Canadian people, of any say in the matter, although we have to vote the money. It deprives parliament of any voice in regard to the distribution of the money. I do not think we can stress that point too strongly, because it is a complete vindication of the position we took on this side of the house last year, the position stated by my right hon. leader then and in the previous year, and which he referred to once more in his speech on Monday last.

Last year when similar legislation was before the house we stated that there might be certain cases where the provincial government, without intending to evade the law or without intending to do anything wrong, might find itself in a position similar to that outlined to the house this afternoon by the hon. member for Témiscouata. I do not intend to traverse all the ground covered by the hon. member, but in view of what has been stated this afternoon I think the hon. minister owes it to himself, to this country, to his government and to his leader to see that in future we do not have such things as have been outlined to this house. In 1930 the government said that it would settle the question of unemployment, but it has not done so. As has been suggested from this side of the house, the government should take this matter in hand and deal with it in such a way as finally to settle the question.

After all, the question of unemployment rests with this parliament. I remember hearing the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett), when sitting on this side of the house, state that this was a national question, that it was too big for the provinces and the municipalities. He said that the federal government ought to step in and take charge of the matter, and that if he were called upon to prescribe, he would settle the question. I submit that now is the time for the right hon. gentleman and his Minister of Labour to redeem the pledges made in 1930. When that is done we will not have to listen to such complaints as have been made this afternoon by hon. members on this side.

If I wanted to make a long speech and weary the house for many hours I could read into Hansard many reports made by officers of various departments of the government. These reports were prepared as returns to questions I put both this and last session. Instances are cited in my own county where relief work which should have gone to those in need was given to those who had plenty. Such facts back up the argument we have been advancing for the last three years to the effect that a national commission should be appointed to deal with these matters. Just the other day the Minister of Public Works (Mr. Stewart), when told of an instance of this character, stated that an investigation would be made to ascertain the facts. It will be found that in many cases this relief money has not reached the people who were most in need of maintenance.

Up to the present time this legislation has not met the requirements of this situation. I am not opposed to the principle of the legislation, because I think a situation has developed where the government of the day must take the matter strongly in hand and deal with it in a proper way. We hear prominent people friendly to the administration saying that a national government is needed. When such a course is advocated it shows that there is dissatisfaction with the administration. This government has failed utterly to discharge its duties and implement the promises made in 1930. As has been said before, and as may be said now, we do not share the view that a national government is needed. We believe that what is needed is a change of government, because the present government instead of taking the country out of its distress is quickly piling it upon the rocks.

After three years in power all that the government has done, to quote the words of the Postmaster General (Mr. Sauvé) this afternoon, is to do the best it could. Its best has not been very much, because the situation has not been improved. It is worse than it ever was; it is surely worse than it was in 1930 when the government came into power. The situation will not right itself even with the assistance of this measure. Unless the government is willing to put its ear to the ground to hear what is going on, it cannot meet the wishes of the people. This legislation is simply a last resort because the government has nothing else to offer. The only thing the government seems able to do is to renew legislation which has utterly failed to meet the needs of the country and to implement the promises made in 1930.

Would Your Honour call it eleven o'clock?

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Friday, March 3, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

PETITION

The clerk of petitions reported that he had examined the following petition and found that it did not comply with the requirements of paragraphs 4 and 7 of standing order 68 and therefore should not be received:

Petition of Duncan A. Campbell, and 6,695 others; demanding that the government institute immediate control of the mechanism of foreign exchanges; also a stay of proceedings for the foreclosure of mortgages and collection by forced sale.—Miss Macphail.

RAILWAY COMMITTEE

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the name of Mr. Heenan be substituted for that of Mr. Dubuc on the select standing committee on railways, canals and telegraph lines.

Motion agreed to.

PENITENTIARY ACT AMENDMENT

PROPOSED APPOINTMENT OF OFFICIALS BY GOVERNOR IN COUNCIL

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice) moved that the house go into committee at the next sitting to consider the following resolution:

That it is expedient to amend the Penitentiary Act to provide that the governor in council may appoint a superintendent of penitentiaries; and may appoint such inspectors, wardens, deputy wardens and other administrative or executive officers as may be required, with such salaries as are approved by the governor in council; and that the superintendent, upon the recommendation of the warden, may appoint such guards, trade instructors and other subordinate officers and employees as are necessary, with such salaries as are approved by the governor in council; and to make further provisions in respect to gratuities paid to officers on retirement and the widows or dependents of officers who die in the service.

He said: His Excellency the Governor General, having been made acquainted with the subject matter of this resolution, recommends it to the favourable consideration of the house.

Motion agreed to.

RAILWAY WAGE REDUCTIONS

On the orders of the day:

Mr. HENRI BOURASSA (Labelle): May I call the attention of the Minister of Railways (Mr. Manion) to what seems to be a concerted direction given to employees of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I have received within the last few days five or six letters in which it is intimated that a further cut of ten per cent is going to be made by the company in wages, of which I know nothing; but besides, that the matter is to be dealt with by a committee of the house. I was rather surprised at the contents of those letters, but as the statement is contained in every one of them I presume some kind of intimation must have been given to these employees. Perhaps the minister could enlighten the house?

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways): The hon. member for Labelle was good enough to tell me he was going to ask this question. Perhaps it is as well to point out now as at any other time that there seems to be in this letter which he gave me, and in the other letters to which he draws attention, an entire misunderstanding of the whole question of wages on the railways. I have read in the press and been told informally by railway men that the managements of the two railways have proposed to the men a further decrease in the scale of wages. However it is obvious that this house could not appoint a committee to deal with the matter, because it is not directly within the power of the house, or the government to interfere with it in any way. It is a matter entirely between the managements of the two railway companies and the men's unions. So that I am not able to offer any other suggestion to my hon. friend except that he might explain to his correspondents that neither the house nor the government has any power to interfere in the matter.

SURVEY OF NATIONAL PORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. IAN MACKENZIE (Vancouver Centre): I would like to ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) if it is the intention of the government to introduce legislation to implement any of or all of the recommendations in the Gibb report?

Hon. ALFRED DURANLEAU (Minister of Marine): We have at the present time under study a bill concerning the management of the national harbours of Canada.

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUATION FOR ONE YEAR OF PROVISIONS OF RELIEF ACT, 1932

The house resumed from Thursday, March 2nd, consideration of the motion of the Minister of Labour that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair for the house to resolve itself into committee of the whole on the following resolution:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to continue in force the provisions of the Relief Act, 1932, until the 31st of March, 1934.

Mr. J. L. BROWN (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I am not going to delay the house by any long speech on this subject. We have already had a great many speeches dealing with the stress of unemployment in its various aspects and the question of relief for those in need, but I want to call the attention of the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) to a specific case which I think, in view of the action of the government, or at least the failure to take such action as was requested of them, calls for special consideration. I had occasion when we were meeting here in the fall to call the attention of the government to this matter, and to-day I wish to take the opportunity of calling it to their attention again. In the southern part of Manitoba, part of which lies in my constituency, the grasshopper plague has prevailed for two years. In one particular section the field and garden crops as well as the potato crop were destroyed by grasshoppers. Last fall when I brought the matter to the attention of the house, I stated that I had received word from some people in my constituency apprising me of the situation, telling me that potatoes were available across the line in the state of North Dakota at the price of ten cents a bushel, and asking me to take the matter up with the government. I did so, I communicated with the Prime Minister, with the Minister of Agriculture and the Minister of National Revenue. The Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture referred me to the Minister of National Revenue, who in course of time gave me an answer. His answer was a refusal to admit the potatoes free of duty. In his letter he asked me this question, which shows the attitude of mind of the minister towards these matters. The question was: Do you think ten cents a bushel is a fair market value? Well he did not need to ask me that, everyone knows that potatoes cannot be raised for ten cents a bushel. Nevertheless the fact remains that on the Dakota side of the boundary, where they grow large areas of potatoes, for which usually they have a good market, potatoes could be got at that price, because they were unable to sell them elsewhere. I communicated the decision of the minister to my people at home, but they came back at me with further letters and telegrams. By this time it was possible for them to get the potatoes for nothing; that is, they could have them for the digging. Again I approached the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) and the answer I got was that there were better ways to take care of the situation than by creating sectional tariffs.

I want to know what are those better ways; if the government has a better way of relieving those people I should like to know what it is. It was bad enough when they could not get potatoes for table use, but now the time is coming when they will need them for seed purposes. I think in view of the answer given me by the minister I have a right to ask of the government what that better way is. How do they propose to supply the needs of those people?

Mr. SMITH (Victoria-Carleton): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. BROWN: No. I do not propose at this time to go into any lengthy discussion of tariffs, but it does seem to me that it is carrying the theories and principles held by hon. gentlemen opposite to an extreme when they will not allow us to obtain goods from a foreign country if we can get them for nothing. That is the situation which confronts the people in my constituency.

Mr. HACKETT: What about wheat?

Mr. BROWN: For two years in succession our crops have been destroyed by grasshoppers, yet this government would not allow those people to get potatoes for nothing when they had not the money with which to buy them elsewhere. I think I have a right to ask the government to give consideration to this special case. They would not allow these people to get relief in a way that would have cost nothing, so now I want to know what is the better way to which the Minister of National Revenue referred.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the resolution carry?

Hon. P. J. VENIOT (Gloucester): Before this resolution carries I should like to direct the attention of the government to a situation which exists along our shores, particularly along the straits of Northumberland, the gulf of St. Lawrence and the bay of Chaleurs. Perhaps the provinces of Nova Scotia and Prince Edward island are affected as well.

I am the last one, Mr. Speaker, who would desire to countenance the violation of any of the laws we have established for the protection of game and the fisheries, but with the present conditions of distress, especially in the county which I have the honour to represent, I would ask if it would not be possible, as a relief measure, for the government to extend some of the seasons and not rigidly keep them as closed seasons. I well know that there is a treaty between Great Britain, including the Dominion of Canada, and other nations of the world for the protection of wild birds, and at certain periods during the year the season is closed. But you can readily understand, sir, that people with empty stomachs and with children at home wanting for food, know no respect for law. In order to prevent them from becoming criminals through the violation of the law as it now stands, I would ask the Minister of Marine (Mr. Duranleau) or the Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon), whoever is in charge, to consider the possibility of extending the season or declaring the season open for next year.

Conditions are not improving in northern New Brunswick nor, I believe, in other parts of the dominion. If this season could be left open next spring and fall it would contribute materially to the relief of the poor people along those shores. The officers of the government in charge of the enforcement of the law, especially the mounted police, are showing no mercy; the county gaol of Gloucester has had as many as fifteen or twenty heads of families imprisoned for violation of the game and fisheries laws. I have mentioned the act protecting game birds. These birds abound in northern New Brunswick, and it will be readily understood that when the father of a family, knowing that his children are suffering from lack of food, sees within gun shot of his residence thousands of brants and geese the temptation to violate the law in order to obtain food is very great. I think no great harm would come to wild bird life if these people were given an open season at least for one year.

The same arguments apply to the fisheries. Certain sections of northern New Brunswick have a closed season for lobsters, I think from June or July each year. Last year the lobster season, especially in the bays, was an absolute failure, while later in the fall, after the lobster had shed its shell and taken on a new coat, there was a great abundance. Yet if those people ventured out in order to obtain food for their families they were imprisoned. I have no fault to find with the officers. They are sent there to do their duty, and having received no contrary instructions from the department they have to carry out that duty according to the solemn oath they have taken. However, I would ask the Department of Fisheries seriously to consider granting a fall open season for at least one or two years in order to permit lobster fishing to be carried on in northern New Brunswick. If this is done it will relieve the federal, provincial and municipal governments of the necessity of spending a great deal of the money now necessary to relieve the distress which exists among the people along those shores. It is very hard indeed for them to conform to the law when they see that a few miles beyond an imaginary line lobster fishing is permitted, beyond Chockpish in the county of Kent, which is only perhaps eighty miles from the northern counties. I am referring to lobsters fished in the fall of the year from some time in September to the middle of October, down to Cape Tormentine. In the spring of the year, when the season is open in northern New Brunswick, the fishermen from that lower section come up and fish in our waters. Our people are too poor to go from their homes and fish beyond the imaginary line between Cape Tormentine and Ste. Anne de Chockpish in the county of Kent, because the only fishing they wish to have the liberty of engaging in at that time is to catch enough lobsters, not for public sale but for the nourishment of their families.

It may be said that they will violate the law, that they will abuse the privilege given them. I am free to admit that there will be some who will abuse that privilege, but it can be regulated under instructions from the department given to the officials or the mounted police in charge of that district, to see that no abuses shall take place. They are on the ground, they have their patrol boats, and they can visit these fishing grounds and issue permits to these people to lay traps and catch a certain quantity of lobsters each day.

Touching the rigid enforcement of the law, the same thing applies to the fishing of oysters in the county of Gloucester. I am thinking of a particular case in point where I think it would be well for the Minister of Fisheries to look into the matter. Under the present law the size of oysters to be caught was fixed two years ago; the round oyster was fixed at 3½ inches—that was the smallest allowed to be fished—and the long oyster was 4 or 4½ inches, I believe. Now there are certain sections of the county of Gloucester where the beds have never produced a round oyster of over 3 inches. The nature of the oyster in these beds is such that it reaches its extreme growth at 3 inches in the case of the round and 3½ or 4 inches in the case of the long oyster.

Mr. SPEAKER: I do not wish to interrupt the hon. member, but surely the subject he is now elaborating is quite remote from the resolution.

Mr. VENIOT: The resolution relates to unemployment relief, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. SPEAKER: The resolution proposes:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to continue in force the provisions of the Relief Act, 1932, until the 31st of March, 1934.

Mr. VENIOT: I regret very much indeed if I am violating the rules but I submit that a great deal of latitude has been given others. I should be glad of the privilege of finishing this topic, because I think I am discussing relief measures.

Mr. BENNETT: Not for the last ten minutes.

Mr. VENIOT: Well, if the Prime Minister wishes to raise a technical objection I will take my seat and let him bear the responsibility.

Mr. SPEAKER: Shall the motion carry?

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee, Mr. LaVergne in the chair.

Mr. GORDON: Before the resolution carries I want to make a few observations with respect to the bill which is to follow, and that is in connection with the amount to be spent for direct relief. The question of the investing of the executive with power has been the subject of a good deal of debate in this chamber, and the government in the last two years has taken the responsibility of assuming the power without any limitation as to amount. Hon. members will well recall that in 1930 the condition of affairs throughout the world presented a rather alarming picture and it was thought desirable at that time to invest the executive with very wide authority in case matters arose that would need immediate attention, and that authority was exercised through the agency of the then legislation and was continued into the next year.

As hon. members know, the method of providing, first, work on a wage basis and afterwards devoting the attention of this government to help and succor for those in need has been continued up until the present time. After the legislation of 1930 had been in operation, with succeeding extensions, for some fifteen or sixteen months, it was made apparent at a provincial conference that the expenditure devoted towards works and subscribed to by the provinces, municipalities and this government, was too great a burden for those agencies to bear any longer. That subject was debated at length at a provincial conference held on April 9 last year, and it was the unanimous view of the provinces that they could no longer carry on. Of course, it resulted as well in a great deal of difficulty for the federal parliament to carry on and finance, and as a result of that conference it was determined to devote what moneys were available to the relief of those in need and to apply such funds to suit the peculiar situation that might arise from time to time in the dominion. Committees were set up in all the provinces, by the provinces themselves, to deal with their peculiar local conditions.

It has been argued here that a national commission of some sort should have been appointed and should still be appointed for the purpose. That matter was also discussed with representatives of the provinces and the answer was, as one would anticipate it would be, that the administering of moneys to those in need being, as I think every member will agree, peculiarly one for the municipalities and the provinces to deal with primarily and, in a condition of affairs such as at present exists, one to which the federal parliament is justified in contributing, the provinces would not be prepared under these conditions to relinquish their legislative authority and autonomy in so far as that subject was concerned and give it over to the federal power or to any commission set up by the federal authorities.

Mr. HANBURY: Has that opinion been expressed by all the provinces of Canada?

Mr. GORDON: That is my recollection.

Mr. HANBURY: Is there any correspondence to that effect?

Mr. GORDON: I doubt it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I doubt it, too.

Mr. GORDON: That was the view expressed at the conference held at Ottawa on April 9 and it was reiterated just two or three weeks ago at a subsequent conference with the representatives of the provinces. The provinces took the attitude, I think very properly so, that it was one of their functions to do just that thing. Together with the municipalities they were subscribing towards relief more in money than the total of the advances made by the federal authorities. I have no reason to complain about the administration generally within the provinces and I seriously doubt if any commission, federal or otherwise, could have carried on with any more efficiency than the committees set up throughout Canada in the municipalities and the provinces. They have provided economic administration of relief to those in need.

Reverting to my observations made when I first spoke upon this resolution, I may say that as a result of the experience of the last few years, there is a much better organization of effort. Hon. members will understand that it is a most difficult thing to organize and administer a department to deal with a subject matter such as this, one that involves all the complexities of the home and of human life. Each succeeding month has disclosed that the administration is becoming better organized and being placed upon a more efficient basis. However, there is still room for improvement because, as hon. members probably know, there are a few instances where people who did not need relief took advantage of the time and the situation in order to obtain relief from the public treasuries. I do not think I have sufficient facility of speech to describe such people as they should be described. The people of this country are straining every effort at this time to provide assistance for worthy people who find themselves in need and any man who will take advantage of the times in order to obtain relief by some circuitous or underground way will not soon be forgotten or forgiven by the Canadian people.

As I said, the organization has improved greatly because of the knowledge we have gained in the past and the government considers that it is no longer necessary to have included in the bill unlimited authority so far as money is concerned. The bill to be presented to the house will have a limitation so far as direct relief is concerned. This limitation will be in harmony with the experience we have gained in the past and will have regard to the commitments for the next fiscal year which we believe will not exceed $20,000,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, it certainly is gratifying to see that what has been urged so strongly from this side of the house right from the outset has at last come to be part of the accepted policy of the ministry.

Mr. GORDON: I think it would have been unfortunate if we had done it before.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is unfortunate it had not been done before. It is most unfortunate that at the very outset the ministry had not followed in this, as in all matters, the regular constitutional procedure, the procedure which gives parliament control over all expenditures and especially control over all taxation.

The minister began his remarks by referring to the emergency session of 1930, and pointed out that following that session the powers which the government took to itself were somewhat enlarged. May I remind him that at that very session of 1930 the government was told in no unmistakable terms that what we were facing was a depression which in all probability would last a very considerable time, and that what they were asking for at that time, namely, the right to emergent powers, so to speak, ought to be assumed only for that particular session and should not become a regular feature of proceedings. The ministry asked at that time for $20,000,000 but they did not indicate to parliament how that amount was to be spent. What they received was a cheque for $20,000,000 for the government simply to do with as it thought best. If the ministry had been obliged to give a statement to parliament at that time which would have made clear the directions in which that $20,000,000 was to go, how it would be divided up, and to give to the house some indication as to how the amount had been arrived at, they would have found that the consequent discussion would have led to a much smaller sum being appropriated for the purposes of meeting the need for relief as it existed at that time. As I recall, there had been previous occasions upon which the federal government had assisted the municipalities and the provinces in unemployment relief. During the entire preceding ten years the total amount spent out of the federal treasury as assistance to the provinces and the municipalities for unemployment relief did not exceed $2,000,000.

Yet my hon. friends asked for $20,000,000, and that is where they made the initial mistake. If they had come to parliament and had said that they thought a serious condition was arising but believed as they subsequently said that it would be over within a year as a result of their policies; and had asked for the one year an amount equivalent to that which had been spent for unemployment relief in the preceding ten years, say $2,000,000 or double the amount if you like, $4,000,000, they would have had all that they needed to meet the situation until parliament resumed again at the following regular session. It was that first mistake of the usurping of the authority of the House of Commons by the ministry which led to extravagance at the outset.

At the next session the ministry came and demanded not only a blank cheque for the purposes of unemployment relief but for powers to enact by order in council any measure which they might think advisable with respect to peace, order and good government. That was an arbitrary authority the like of which was not assumed for any purpose even during the period of the war by the prime minister of the day. This parliament never before granted to any government the power which the present ministry took from the House of Commons to deal with the unemployment situation. The minister stepped over this part of the ground very lightly; he said they took those powers to help to meet the condition. He did not mention the fact that they were taken from the House of Commons under closure. As a matter of fact, the ministry were so determined to get all this excessive and exceptional power into their own hands that in order to obtain it they had to resort to the use of the closure.

Mr. GORDON: The country approved the action.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The country has never approved it, and I think my hon. friends will come deeply to regret the looseness of control there has been over the expenditure of public moneys. The minister has not said very much about the total expenditure which has been made by the administration without any control whatever on the part of the House of Commons. That is a fact that cannot be brought home too often to hon. members. I am quite sure that the statement by the ministry this afternoon that they are going to put some limit at least on the amount they will require is the result of the discussion that took place in this chamber the other day when the attention of the house and the country was drawn to the excessive amounts that had been expended, because, if my hon. friend had had any virtuous intention of imposing some limit on the amount to be expended, he would have brought that fact to the attention of the house at the very outset, and made it part of his speech when he was presenting the whole matter to the House of Commons. I am glad, however, he is prepared in order to begin anew in a right direction, to take at least one step back. May I emphasize again the significance of what has been done, so that hon. members will not be led into believing that even yet we are being given very much in the way of control. Just inside two years, according to the minister's own statement the other evening, the ministry have by order in council paid out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada in direct and indirect relief, and in advances to provinces, most of which advances, I think in the minister's own mind, are likely never to be repaid, the sum of $115,000,000. That is in two years.

Prior to the time of the war there was not a single year in which the total expenditure of Canada equalled that amount. What the ministry have done in the matter of dealing with unemployment relief might be exemplified in this way: had Sir Robert Borden come to the house the year immediately preceding the war and said to the members assembled that these looked like emergent times and that he thought in the circumstances the government ought to be permitted to do what it pleased with public expenditures for that year; that it had decided no estimates would be presented to parliament, but that the government would demand a blank cheque and the right to be allowed to expend what it pleased, he would have been asking for no more in the way of exemption from control by parliament over expenditures than this government has actually taken from the House of Commons as respects the years expenditure on relief account. He would have been asking for no more for one year than this government has taken for two. If there had been no estimates presented to parliament for any portion whatever of the public service, the total expenditure would have been just equivalent in one year to the total which this government in two years has spent, but without any control by parliament, on account of unemployment relief. I do not wonder that since this fact has been brought out, the ministry have begun to shiver a little, and see the necessity of at least coming back to some restriction. I hope now that they have got far enough back in the right direction to at least fix a total amount, they will recall that this is what we stressed very strongly as imperative in the last two years, and that it was in an endeavour to have them fix some amount that we were compelled to keep up the discussion on this side until in order to get their own way they had resort to the closure. Now that the minister has begun to retreat, I hope he will go back just one step further if only for the sake of maintaining a semblance of parliamentary control over public expenditure. That one step further is to indicate how much of that—did he say $70,000,000 or $20,000,000 they were going to ask for?—

Mr. GORDON: There is a considerable difference.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: —last year it was $70,000,000 that he used, what he is going to ask for now is $20,000,000, how much of that $20,000,000 will be used for one particular purpose and how much of it for another? The bill which we had before us last year, the provisions of which we are being asked to renew, gives the minister power to spend these moneys on particular services which are named in a very broad way. For example, they can pay out of the consolidated revenue account whatever is needed for the requirements of the national parks and the drought-stricken areas; what they need to assist in defraying the cost of the production, sale and distribution of the products of the field, farm, forest, sea, river and mine; what they wish to loan to any province on terms to be agreed upon; what they wish to guarantee of moneys to be borrowed by the provinces; what assistance they wish to give any province in the way of direct relief, and also what they wish to do in the way of loaning or guaranteeing moneys to any public or private corporations. Will the minister tell us how much of that $20,000,000 they intend to devote to those different objects? I am going to ask him to give us that in committee. But in order to have some light thrown on the matter from past experience, I should like him to tell us how much they have spent on each of these various counts in the past two years. How much has gone each year to private corporations out of this unemployment relief fund, and will similar or lesser amounts be taken out of the $20,000,000 for the same purpose? We should also be informed whether this $20,000,000 will cover all the ministry intend to loan and not merely what is paid out in the form of direct relief. These are important questions that later on I may ask the minister to answer in detail.

Before, however, coming to that, may I say a word about what my hon. friend has just said in reference to the suggestion that there should be a national commission to supervise the expenditure so far as it is federal expenditure and to do in cooperation with provinces and municipalities what lies within its power in regard to coordinating and unifying unemployment relief measures as between the different parts of the dominion. The minister says that they discussed this matter with the provinces, and that the provinces said that their business was to administer relief. The provinces might quite rightly say that; it is their business and nobody is asking that they should be deprived of the right of carrying it out. Any suggestion made with regard to a national commission has not been to relieve the municipalities or the provinces of anything that is their duty. The proposal of a national commission has had relation to the supervision of expenditure of moneys which come from the federal treasury and from it alone, so that through such a commission an account may be given to parliament of the amounts that have been spent, and with it some statement of the policy which has governed and should govern in the matter of expenditure. The other evening we heard the minister tell us how much had been spent on this, and on that, but as I said to him at the time, the picture that was presented on that occasion was anything but one which hon. members could comprehend as a whole; it was the most chaotic view of a national situation which could possibly be presented by a ministry.

A commission of the kind I have mentioned, had it been appointed, would have proceeded somewhat along these lines: They would have had their permanent experts associated with them who would have advised as to what would be most in the public interest in the way of the distribution of these moneys, and at the end of the year a budget would have been presented to the government, which the government would have brought into this house and had discussed, a budget which would set out, very much as the Minister of Finance does in his budget with respect to the affairs of the country generally, what was required in all for the purposes of unemployment relief, and in some detail how the government proposed to have the necessary moneys disbursed. Does my hon. friend mean to say that with a budget like that before them, hon. members of this parliament from every part of Canada could have made no contribution towards the solution of the unemployment question? That is where I take the strongest exception, to the way in which the government has proceeded in this matter. They have proceeded as though the members of the House of Commons had no knowledge of, and had nothing to do with, and nothing to say about unemployment or unemployment relief, that all that they are expected to do is to vote sums of money to be spent by the government as it pleases. I say that is all wrong. I think this House of Commons on both sides has members who are familiar with conditions in the different constituencies of Canada and who each year, would have been able to make and would be able to make now if they were given a chance, very valuable suggestions as to what would be most desirable and serviceable in the way of meeting present conditions. More than that, I think the country would be impressed by what would be said in this house back and forth, in the way of support and criticism of the different projects that might be proposed, and thereby put in a position to form some judgment upon them. That is an opportunity which the House of Commons and the country should have at all times where the expenditure of public moneys is involved.

The answer which the minister gives for not proceeding in that way is equivalent to saying that the federal government with respect to the expenditure of federal moneys has recognized responsibility only to the provinces and to the municipalities, but recognizes no responsibility to the House of Commons, no responsibility to the federal parliament, and no responsibility to the people of Canada through the federal parliament for the expenditure of federal moneys. That is what his answer implies, and what it comes to. That I say is quite wrong, and now that to a certain extent the minister has begun to see the error of his ways I think he should begin to tell us a little more in detail and as near as he can just how he intends to spend this $20,000,000 during the course of the next fiscal year.

Just to help him on his way in that regard, may I ask him if he will tell us, to take first the last item set forth in the bill of last year, how much of the blank cheque moneys has gone up to the present in the way of loans or to guarantee the payment of money by any public corporation or undertaking, or has been advanced in cash to any public corporation or undertaking?

Mr. BENNETT: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the right hon. gentleman has any appreciation of what he is talking about.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

[Mr. Mackenzie King.]

Mr. BENNETT: I mean that very seriously, for that any responsible member of parliament should give us what he has been saying in the last fifteen minutes is incomprehensible.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Let the Prime Minister speak for himself.

Mr. BENNETT: It is incomprehensible that any responsible man would say in this house what has been said.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am as responsible as the Prime Minister. He is talking as an irresponsible leader of the government at the moment.

Mr. BENNETT: Don't get worried.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, and I won't stand any insulting words from my right hon. friend either. He talks about me not being responsible; I tell him that he does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. BENNETT: I am sure if the right hon. gentleman has no further knowledge of that than he has of what he has been talking about, his opinion is not very valuable.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: A very fine exhibition by the Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: It is incomprehensible that such a statement could have been made by the right hon. gentleman as has been made in this period of depression. Why? He took the relief bill, took the different items, and he said: How much is to be spent in guarantees and loans to the provinces? And as to the hon. member behind him who cheered the loudest, I wonder what he has got to say about how much had to be loaned to British Columbia.

Mr. HANBURY: Too much.

Mr. BENNETT: Exactly. That government happened to be opposed to him in politics, and the loan was too much.

Mr. HANBURY: No. There happens to be a lot of graft in British Columbia that you could have regulated.

Mr. BENNETT: Anyone who has seen the hon. gentleman's correspondence with the former president of the Canadian National Railways as to the establishment of an executive officer in Vancouver will understand that he is an authority on expenditure. Take the question of loans to provinces.

Mr. HANBURY: It was stolen from my files.

Mr. BENNETT: I think not.

Mr. HANBURY: I know it.

Mr. BENNETT: All I know is that I saw a photograph of the document which came legitimately and properly before the committee.

Mr. HANBURY: How did you get possession of that?

Mr. BENNETT: Through the mail.

Mr. HANBURY: From whom?

Mr. BENNETT: I cannot say whom; I cannot carry it in my mind.

Mr. HANBURY: I accept the Prime Minister's explanation that he did not go into my files.

Mr. BENNETT: But at any rate the hon. gentleman admits it is correct.

Mr. HANBURY: Absolutely.

Mr. BENNETT: There is no reason why he should be so ashamed of himself.

Mr. HANBURY: No, I am not the Prime Minister.

Mr. BENNETT: If he is not ashamed of himself, he should be.

Mr. HANBURY: Not at all.

Mr. BENNETT: He was willing to waste public money. Of course he was, provided he got some political advantage out of it; that is all.

Who would be able to say how much money should be loaned to Saskatchewan or Alberta, for instance, until the crop conditions were known? Who would be able to know, until all the facts became apparent, what should be done?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: How did they know in war time how much was needed?

Mr. BENNETT: In war time it was a question of buying and selling munitions of war, and a question of the cost of putting so many men in the field, which is known to almost a dollar per head per year. It is all worked out in great detail, and there is no trouble about it in the world. But will any hon. member say that any federal government dare accept the responsibility of providing for a limited sum that would admit of no elasticity with respect to crop conditions in any province of which we know nothing at the time? How would you know how much to advance in connection with any of the items respecting the assistance of agriculture and matters of that kind? Let us get down and grip these facts as facts, not as theories of irresponsible people. Let us grip them as facts, and what are the facts?

The facts are that in its first session this government asked this house to vote $20,000,000 to assist in the extraordinary conditions that prevailed in this country. This parliament granted that money. That money was not expended during the fiscal year that ended March 31, 1931, but it was spent subsequently, the whole of it practically in public works—there was very little of direct relief—which afforded employment to many thousands of men during the winter and enabled them to get through without accepting direct relief.

In the next year, as the right hon. gentleman has said, the government asked parliament for power to enable it by order in council to deal with peace, order and good government in this country. What happened last week? The congress of the United States for the first time in its history, put through its senate and House of Representatives between a certain hour in the afternoon and that same evening a resolution to enable the comptroller of currency to march into all state financial institutions to prevent them from being destroyed. We anticipated that. We took care to ask this parliament that we might be able to deal with every matter that might arise in connection with the government of this country in order to maintain the integrity of our institutions, and by reason of that fact no Canadian bank has shut its doors, and no financial institution of any importance in this country has ceased to function or carry on its business. Why? Because we had taken the necessary steps to foresee and do what they are now doing in congress to deal with the situation. Just since I have taken my seat here a message has been placed in my hands that the currency circulation in the United States in the last week increased $732,000,000. Seven hundred and thirty-two million dollars! And that they are in a very grave state of apprehension with respect to the whole financial structure. But we asked this parliament to give us the power to deal with peace, order and government, and pass the necessary orders in council that did save the integrity of our institutions and enable this country to carry on. I would like the most captious critic in this house to say where we would have been if we had not had the necessary legislation to enable us to do so.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Whom did you save? What about the farmers?

Mr. BENNETT: The farmers got the benefit of every security that was afforded to every member of the public. What would have happened to the farmers' savings if the banks closed their doors?

Mr. VALLANCE: How many farmers have savings?

Mr. BENNETT: Only 49 per cent of the farms in Saskatchewan are mortgaged.

Mr. VALLANCE: But that does not mean that the others are owned by farmers.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the position. And 60 per cent of the farms in Alberta are not mortgaged. There is a certain type of member in this house who because he happens to be in opposition goes around and paints the darkest possible picture of his own country, fouls his own nest.

Mr. RALSTON: What did you do in 1930?

Mr. BENNETT: We did not do that. The leader of the opposition asked why this was necessary. This depression is universal, it is not confined to this country. Canada still, in the eyes of those who look on from the outside, is the country that is the best off in the world. Why? Because we have taken steps to prevent the dire consequences—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Is it any wonder that people cannot contemplate even the possibility of government ever falling into the hands of hon. gentlemen opposite? No wonder they turn to the Cooperative Commonwealth Federation.

Mr. HANBURY: What about General Currie?

Mr. BENNETT: He expressed the opinion that a national government was desirable.

Mr. HANBURY: Because he has no confidence in the present government.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not the reason, it is because he knows there is a problem in this country which it is thought by some people could be solved by both parties combined. A problem the hon. member did as much to assist in making as any one I know, through the expenditure of public money in respect to the national railways.

An hon. MEMBER: The Vancouver hotel?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and protests were made because a contract was signed for $4,000,000 and it is now $11,000,000.

Mr. VALLANCE: And the Chateau Laurier, too, and quite recently.

[Mr. Bouchard.]

Mr. BENNETT: The expenditures on that hotel were made during the right hon. gentleman's regime, and the hon. member knows it.

Mr. VALLANCE: The alterations were not.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. BENNETT: Do you know what that hon. member wishes to ask? He wishes to ask about some repairs made in the premises I occupy in the Chateau Laurier. That is his idea, in a period of depression. What is more I have in my possession a communication to the effect that the statements which were made in the committee as to the total expenditure were false. I am glad to have the opportunity to make that statement. That is over the signature of the chief architect of the company. That is the hon. gentleman's idea of political war, in critical times such as these.

Let us go a step further. I ask this committee to take the very statements that were made here this afternoon and ask itself—let any one member ask himself: Could I, could any committee of men, say how much money would be required for that particular purpose during the next year? That is the question. And the reason parliament was asked to grant to the government of the day authority to deal with the problems in the manner in which it did was because we believed it was more important that parliament should confer these powers upon the executive of the country than that we should listen to the cavilling criticism with respect to what was called the rights of parliament. That is the position. And history, even the history of two years, has justified our position. What was being done here was done in England, and the United States this last week has been compelled to do it. Just let each hon. member ask himself that single question: Could I, could anybody say, in the month in which we were obtaining those powers, what sum of money it would be essential to utilize in any particular province of this dominion to accomplish the purpose we had in mind?

Mr. BOUCHARD: Will the right hon. gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. BENNETT: Certainly.

Mr. BOUCHARD: When the right hon. gentleman promised that he would cure unemployment, I suppose he had a scheme in his mind to cure it?

Mr. BENNETT: That question is one which I am perfectly prepared to discuss at any time. World conditions were improving, rapidly improving. In fact we were back to prewar conditions in 1931 when Great Britain went off the gold standard. If the hon. gentleman is, as I believe he should be, a student of the history of our time, he will know that is the fact. That being the fact he knows what world conditions have been since. He knows what has followed, he knows that the richest country in the world, the country to the south of us, is experiencing conditions such as were never heard of before, never in the history of man. He knows what public men have said the past few weeks. He saw what happened during the past week. I ask each member of this committee, as a fair-minded Canadian, to put to himself this question: take that Relief Act of 1931, take these subdivisions as they have been put to this house this afternoon by the leader of the opposition and ask himself if he knows of any committee that could have named the amount that would be required during the next twelve months to meet the conditions that have arisen in this country. That is the real issue, it was that we dealt with. It was that we dealt with in connection with insurance enterprises, the power under the section with respect to our financial institutions. And now we have at least the satisfaction of knowing that what we did then was to foresee a condition that enabled us at least to ride the storm up to the present moment. That is what we have done. We have done it with the legislation which we asked from this parliament, and which this parliament did give us in the plenitude of its power. They say part of this legislation was obtained by closure. Closure is a rule adopted by the house to enable governments to govern, and we used it to govern. What is more, under similar circumstances we would do it again to-morrow. When you find the Liberal newspapers in the country condemning the leader of the Liberal party for the obstruction that took place in parliament, when you find resolution after resolution being passed, great bodies meeting together regardless of political affiliations, saying to this parliament that it was time to do business and stop talking, you can understand why it was not necessary for us to do more than make a preliminary application of the rule to enable the legislation to be passed.

Now I ask this committee once more to get right down to the merits of this particular legislation. We reenact a statute of the past year, and it is subdivided into heads that have been given by the leader of the opposition, and looking out upon the world to-day with the dark horizon that we see, the heavy clouds that are there, will any man accept the responsibility of standing up in this house and saying that "X" money will be sufficient to meet that position or the other? Will he? Will he risk it? That is the question. I leave that problem with each member of this committee to answer for himself. Study those words. They were not put there accidentally or loosely, they were put in there with the greatest care.

Then it is suggested that some private enterprises have received money from the government. One hon. member of this house is authority for the statement that she was told that money had been given to Mr. Wright's furniture factory at Stratford by this government. That is the story that is circulated in the back concessions. Every one knows how false that is. The orders in council have been laid upon the table of this house; if not they were published in the Gazette. That safeguard was established in last year's legislation. The Auditor General will not honour a single cheque that has not behind it the authority of an order in council, and these orders in council have either been published in the Gazette or laid upon the table of the house, so that every member could fully know and appreciate how every dollar has been spent. The two orders in council with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are known to everyone; the orders in council have been issued. They were passed to provide for wages paid to workmen, and the money did not go to the railway company. The great mass of receipts signed by the workmen themselves was lodged in this house; not one single dollar but went to the workmen from the Atlantic to the Pacific. In the first instance the order in council did not issue for many months after the money had been expended by the railway company because, had traffic conditions improved, it would not have been necessary for the company to have borrowed the money from the government. But the order in council is known to all, and the latter of the two orders in council is known also, because it is here. I repeat that every dollar provided was spent for wages, and was not even used for the material that was used in connection with the work.

Mr. BOTHWELL: Who got the benefit of the work?

Mr. BENNETT: Why, the men got the benefit, the families throughout this country who were enabled to earn a living instead of having to go upon relief. It inured to the benefit of the railway company as well, and the company has promised to pay back the money if ever conditions improve to the extent of their being able to earn it. There is nothing to object to in connection with that company; the shareholders have $119 in cash invested in the company for every $100 outstanding. There has been no watering of the common stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. As I say there is more than $119, I should say $120 at least, in cash in the enterprise for every $100 of stock certificates outstanding. That is the position, and they have said that before any dividend is paid on their investment this money that was loaned to them by the government of the day will be repaid. And let me repeat that this money was loaned for the purpose of providing work for 8,800 men from the Atlantic to the Pacific. Had conditions improved and had there been the increase in traffic that was anticipated there would have been no necessity for the loan. So if any hon. member of this committee will take the statute and be fair to himself and the citizens of this country and go over it item by item he cannot say to himself that he can fix, or any committee can fix, with any degree of certainty any sum of money that will be required to meet the demands that may be made.

Mr. NEILL: Would the right hon. Prime Minister permit a question for the sake of information? If the argument is sound that unlimited credit was necessary in the past why is it not necessary still? There may be a further crop failure this fall for all we know.

Mr. BENNETT: I was just coming to that. I wonder if the hon. gentleman realizes that the $20,000,000 is applicable to direct relief only. The leader of the opposition did not follow the amendment that was moved; $20,000,000 is not the sum total that will be required; that amount is for direct relief only.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Exactly; that is the point.

Mr. BENNETT: Why is that? It is because the minister who is in charge has been able, in the light of three years experience, to ascertain what should be the maximum amount that should be necessary for direct relief. That is my answer to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, who apparently was of the opinion that this was a limitation upon the whole. It is not; it is for direct relief only. We know that no body of legislators in any part of the world can foresee or predict with certainty what conditions will be, so we have sought the renewal of this legislation in the terms in which it appears. Because of the facts as ascertained with respect to direct relief, however, the minister proposes a limitation of $20,000,000 for the fiscal year from March 31 of this year to March 31 of 1934. The reason he has given has been said by the right hon. leader of the opposition to be chaotic and difficult to understand, but I think—of course it may be that what I think will not appeal to others here—that if hon. gentlemen will take the trouble to read what has been said they will agree that whatever criticisms may be fairly urged there has been an earnest and sincere attempt to see to it that the great catastrophe that has overtaken the Canadian people should be ameliorated as far as the federal government, within the ambit of its powers, may do so. This committee must remember that as recently as the conference which we held this spring it was reiterated that the provinces would not permit us to discharge their functions.

Mr. HANBURY: They would not permit you to look after your own money.

Mr. BENNETT: We have looked after our money to the extent of checking and rechecking the expenditures which have been made and the contributions we have granted, but that is all. The provinces will not permit the national government to undertake their functions. Some of them made that perfectly clear. Hon. gentlemen opposite talk about a national commission to deal with relief problems, but everyone who knows the elementary principles of our constitution knows that we cannot force the federal power upon the provincial authorities.

Mr. HANBURY: But we can withhold federal money.

Mr. BENNETT: We certainly can, but does the hon. gentleman advocate that we should withhold assistance from those who require it? What we have done is this: We have loaned money to the provinces. To-day the right hon. leader of the opposition put a premium upon their not paying it back; he said they will not pay it back.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister said so.

Mr. BENNETT: Did the minister say that?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The other night the minister said that many of them would not pay it back.

Mr. HANBURY: He said some had been paid back and some he does not expect to be paid back.

Mr. BENNETT: We expect to be repaid, but not as the loans mature. Let me give an illustration, and just listen to this for a moment. In the province of Manitoba they had what they called a savings bank in which the people of that province had deposited some $12,000,000 in small savings accounts. When the cheques were being written to withdraw that money what did they have? They had the promises to pay, the I.O.U's of the province of Manitoba. The money was gone; in its place had been substituted I.O.U's of the province of Manitoba that could not be sold.

Mr. BEAUBIEN: Does that not apply to all banks to a certain extent?

Mr. BENNETT: We guaranteed the $12,000,000 of those deposits to enable the depositors to draw out money with which to live. That was one of the guarantees we made under the statute, and the order in council was laid upon the table of this house.

Mr. RALSTON: The minister did not mention that in the statement he made the other day.

Mr. BENNETT: But it is known, because I filed the order in council here in this house last year.

Mr. RALSTON: That is not what we are discussing.

Mr. BENNETT: That is what we are discussing; it has been referred to by the right hon. leader of the opposition, and I will go a step further. Within the last ten days that $12,000,000 guarantee to Manitoba fell due. They came to us asking that we renew that guarantee, it being their only choice between bankruptcy and solvency.

Mr. HANBURY: And they will keep coming just as long as the right hon. gentleman pays them money.

Mr. BENNETT: But would the hon. gentleman say we should not have guaranteed that amount?

Mr. HANBURY: I certainly do say so.

Mr. BENNETT: Then the hon. gentleman's statement is that these forty thousand small depositors in the province of Manitoba, who believed in a provincial administration but who, when they went to draw out their money, could get nothing but the promises to pay of a government that could not pay, should have been allowed to lose their money and that we were not justified in taking that action in the national interest? Why did we do it, sir? Does the hon. gentleman think that any minister, whoever he might be, or any government is anxious to do that sort of thing?

Mr. BEAUBIEN: May I ask a question?

Mr. BENNETT: Why did we do it? The reason is this: We did it because it was in the national interest of the Dominion of Canada that a province should not be forced into bankruptcy. Does anyone suggest for a moment that it would not reflect upon the credit of this dominion? What a noise would have been made if we had allowed that to happen. In an endeavour that has subjected us to harsh criticism and in order to save the national credit of this dominion we made that guarantee and renewed it the other day.

Mr. HANBURY: And must continue to renew it.

Mr. BENNETT: I still have confidence that the provinces can pay, but if the hon. gentleman says they cannot I can only say to him that at least two of the western provinces, Saskatchewan and Alberta, until recently never knew what it was to have other than a Liberal government. That is the position there.

An hon. MEMBER: And they wish they had yet.

Mr. BENNETT: They wish they had yet? Well, there is no evidence of it.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Oh yes; wait and see.

An hon. MEMBER: If they had they might have been able to pay.

Mr. BENNETT: They might have been able to pay, someone says. All you have to do is to look at the facts and see what the fixed charges of these provinces are, and when and by whom created. If you do you will have a fair understanding of the situation. Let us go a step further.

An hon. MEMBER: What about Saskatchewan?

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, and there $11,000,000 consisted of promises to pay left by the outgoing government of the province.

Mr. VALLANCE: After twenty-four years.

Mr. BENNETT: Let me go a step further. I ask every member of this committee to put himself in our place, to put himself in the place of a member of this administration.

An hon. MEMBER: And cooperate.

Mr. BENNETT: Is the hon. gentleman repudiating the thought? In the province of Saskatchewan, let me point out, we fed some 330,000 people at the sole expense of this dominion because there had been three successive crop failures and it was a national disaster. On the first of July I ventured to tell the house that there was a national disaster and the house was a unit in believing that there was. When there was a great earthquake in the British West Indies or in some foreign country we sent large contributions to relieve such emergencies. Well, here we had seventy odd municipalities faced with three successive crop failures, and we undertook as a national obligation, because of a national disaster, to make the contribution to which I have referred.

Mr. DONNELLY: Did they sign notes for it?

Mr. BENNETT: I believe they did; but what has that to do with the fact that we fed some 330,000 people though we have not talked about it.

Mr. VALLANCE: The provincial government in Manitoba did the same thing.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. gentleman should know—it is impossible to say that he does know, but he should know at any rate—that what he states is inaccurate.

Mr. VALLANCE: You speak for yourself.

Mr. BENNETT: I have stated the situation, and hon. members are thoroughly familiar with it, so far as Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba are concerned. When you come to the maritime provinces, you find that the contribution has been smaller because they felt the depression less. They were not in the same position as the community in Saskatchewan, where they depended on one crop; they had homes, farms and all the conveniences of life. But in the west where, by reason of drought for three years, they could not maintain their homes, we provided the wherewithal. Hon. gentlemen did, this house did; the house was a unit in believing that it should be done, and that is the largest single item in the expenditures we have made. Do we want to repudiate it Do hon. members opposite want to repudiate it?

Could we have foreseen the exact amount that would be required, or could anyone? It was in July, mark you, that we made the statement; it was in the months of July and August that we took charge. Could anyone have foreseen then that a fourth year was to follow? The crop that was then expected to be good failed in some parts and was only fair in others. Now, we must face these facts, and I do wish that some of those who are so critical had had to face the issue and to decide what action should be taken. The responsibility rests on the executive of this country.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. McINTOSH: That is responsible government.

Mr. BENNETT: Yes, that is responsible government and we have endeavoured to discharge it. But when I hear the kind of criticism to which we have listened this afternoon, after the sermon on the Mount—

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): Is this the Doxology?

Mr. BENNETT: When I hear that sort of criticism I wonder what would have happened if hon. gentlemen opposite had been charged with the same responsibility. I wonder if they could possibly imagine themselves in the position where they would have to provide facilities, to see that the money was forthcoming, to make the necessary arrangements; where they must try by a series of checks and balances to maintain the integrity of the institutions and the credit of the country. I put that to my hon. friends fairly, and it is for them to say whether they desire to censure this government. If they do, well and good. Certainly, if this country desires that we should give place to my hon. friends, we should be only too glad to do so in that sense; but from the standpoint of the safety of the country, in view of what we have heard to-day, I am perfectly certain that no one could contemplate such a thing without apprehension of the gravest possible disaster to the body politic.

The suggestion limiting the amount for direct relief, to which this amendment refers, is made for the purpose of taking advantage of the experience that has been gained. I am not one of those who believe that there is any general desire on the part of the Canadian citizenship to take advantage of the difficulties in which this country finds itself and to impose upon it. There are some who believe that; we have had evidence of it to-day in the interruptions that have been made by hon. gentlemen. We have had the suggestion that there is a studied design on the part of a great mass of Canadians to see in what way they may impose upon the state. I do not believe that for a moment, for personally I have seen no evidence of it. I have seen however, as the minister in charge has seen, evidence of there being every now and then a willingness on the part of some to rely upon the state rather than upon their own efforts. Do not forget this, either. It is only a few years ago that the right hon. gentleman opposite, in his place as first minister, saw fit to direct to representatives of soviet Russia a letter in which he said that although they had promised that they would not do so and so, they had within this dominion endeavoured to destroy the empire and the government of this country. And what is the situation to-day, if that is true? Read that letter which the right hon. gentleman then sent to these representatives of soviet Russia. Read it and see what his experience had been with the forces of soviet Russia in this country, and then go out and see for yourselves the evidence that was given under oath in the trials in Toronto. See the evidence that is forthcoming day after day with respect to these matters, in this time of trial through which this country is passing.

I will admit that there are those who are endeavouring to impose upon the state because they are enemies of the state. They are using such power as they have to impose upon the people in this period of depression in order to advance their theories for the purpose of destroying the state. The evidence is there; we know the evidence is there as to where the money came from. Now, all that has added to the difficulties which we have to meet. During the period of war, every man who was put into uniform added one more to the demand for food and clothing, and was the means of putting into circulation moneys for allowances and all that sort of thing. That was the situation then, and one could predict with some degree of certainty what the requirements would be as soon as one knew the number of men who were being called up. But when you are faced with the condition that exists to-day you are confronted with factors that are unknowable, factors that cannot be determined; and we are endeavouring to foresee conditions for a period of twelve months. In that effort we ask parliament to clothe the executive with powers, not that we want power merely for the sake of power, but that we may be able, having these powers in an emergency, to preserve the state from destruction. That is all we have tried to do, and I ask any hon. member who desires to do so, honestly, fearlessly and fairly to look at the matter, to take the statute of last year item by item, and ask himself whether he can face his countrymen for the next twelve months and say that he has done his duty, if he takes this position: so many million dollars for this, so many for that and so much for something else, when we know that you must have power to do effectively that which you seek to do. Power which is not effective is worse than no power at all.

Mr. HANBURY: You have lots of power.

Mr. BENNETT: We would not have had with the restrictions this parliament sought to impose. We would have had no such power to save the situation as we have saved it.

Mr. RALSTON: Have there been any bank failures in Canada? My hon. friend speaks about the financial situation, but has there been any financial situation other than that concerning the provincial banks?

Mr. BENNETT: We have saved every situation that arose in Canada. What is more, the hon. gentleman who sits behind the hon. gentleman is one of the members of this house who inveighed against the government because of what it did with respect to insurance companies. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken was one of those who knew the situation and he knew what we had to do.

Mr. RALSTON: I am talking about fixing the amount and what my hon. friend is saying has nothing to do with that.

Mr. BENNETT: It has everything to do with it if we have to guarantee and we may have to guarantee as the United States has had to do. How do I know what may happen in the next few months?

Mr. RALSTON: No one has spoken about the valuation of common stocks.

Mr. BENNETT: I am talking about the necessity of action being taken to preserve the integrity of our institutions, and the insurance companies happen to be an illustration. That is what the situation is.

It is so with respect to the whole fabric of our financial structure. To hear hon. gentlemen talk you would think that the government of the day was trying to devise some means by which it could be clothed with power which it would desire to abuse. I wonder if this committee thinks that there is any desire to abuse authority which is obtained from this parliament? From the criticisms made you would think that that was the purpose of obtaining it instead of endeavouring to do that which in our best judgment—we do not pretend that there may not be mistakes—will save intact the Dominion of Canada.

Look at the sort of rumours which circulate in the press and which have depreciated our securities in the markets of the neighbouring republic. The newspapers send them out, they refer joyfully to them but upon examination they are found to be untrue. All these things must be considered because we are living in a period of time much more serious than any other so far as the world knows. If we have to resort to every method that the genius and thought of thinkers in every part of the world can suggest, that our experience induces us to believe is sound, we are but doing what any man would do who is charged with responsibility and who has a desire to discharge his duties so that he may preserve the institutions of the state itself.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Mr. Chairman, after listening to the right hon. the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) this afternoon one would think that the government had ended the depression, that its great wisdom in dealing with the affairs of the country had resulted in some remarkable salvation of conditions generally. What are the facts? At the special session of the house, a few weeks after the right hon. gentleman came into office, we were asked to vote $20,000,000 for unemployment relief. The Prime Minister himself estimated that we had at that time something like 117,000 unemployed in Canada, and said that, if the policies of the government had the effect which the government believed they were going to have, they hoped they would not have to ask parliament for further unemployment relief in another year; that the numbers of unemployed would gradually diminish. But what has happened? At the present time we have over 800,000 unemployed in Canada.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The Minister of Labour (Mr. Gordon) told us the other evening that the number of people on relief ran up to over 1,300,000.

Mr. GORDON: I am sorry to interject but I thought I made myself quite plain. The number receiving relief for varying periods, not constant, including men old and young, women old and young, middle-aged and infants in arms amounts to approximately 1,300,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is just what I have said. Let us leave alone the question of dependents and take the actual number of unemployed—

Mr. GORDON: I never said the number of unemployed was 800,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If the hon. gentleman did not, he did not take exception to my statement when I said that the number of unemployed had been given as such by the government's representative in Great Britain. Only two or three months ago, Mr. Howard Ferguson announced in London that the total number of unemployed in Canada at that time was 800,000. No exception has been taken to that statement made by Canada's representative in Great Britain.

Mr. BENNETT: The figure was not 800,000 unemployed.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: What was it?

Mr. BENNETT: That 800,000 were then receiving relief.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I think that was the number of unemployed, and I think it will be found to be so. I took great care to note what the High Commissioner for Canada said at the time. I say further that, if the minister will give to this house an official statement of the total number of unemployed, he will find that figure is within the number. I do not think the government will deny that for one minute.

When the Prime Minister endeavours to have it appear that the course which he has taken has been a course which has saved the country, I want the committee to have a realization of the facts of the situation. The country to-day is in a worse position than it has been at any time since the present administration took office, and, I think, at any time in the history of Canada. That is the situation as it exists to-day. The Prime Minister would have us believe that the wisdom of the executive had been the means of saving the situation.

The Prime Minister has sought to have us believe that it is an impossible thing for a government to provide for emergencies by fixing any definite amount in the estimates, that because no one can foresee what is going to take place, therefore, that the ministry must be given unlimited power to spend whatever moneys it pleases. From the time of confederation up to the present, has there been any occasion, except that which has occurred in this parliament, where a free hand was given to the ministry in the matter of expending public moneys? No one expects the Prime Minister or the Minister of Labour, or anybody else, to come to parliament and say: We need precisely so many hundreds of thousands, or so many millions of dollars, for a specific purpose; this is exactly what is going to be required this year. That is not what is asked of the ministry. But the ministry is asked and is expected to make some estimate, and it may make that estimate as large or as small as it pleases. All that the ministry is expected to do is to say to parliament: We believe that so much will be required this year for such and such purposes, and we base our estimate upon the following grounds which would then be enumerated. We are now in the fourth session of this parliament, and we have had this method of proceeding for nearly three years. Had the ministry adopted from the outset the course which we on this side proposed, it would have been possible for the government to have said to us to-day: We believe that $20,000,000 is all that will be required for the purpose of direct relief—as the minister has just said—and we base that belief upon the following grounds; we have found that, in such and such a year, we needed so much; the next year we needed so much, and last year so much; we believe that $20,000,000 will be sufficient for this purpose this year. Similarly, the amount required for use in the national parks is simply a matter of making up an estimate in that regard. What will be required in other directions is likewise a matter of estimates. That is the way in which parliament proceeds and a ministry presents its estimates. It is idle to say that because no one can foresee what will be required there cannot be some estimate. The method is to present the estimate, give the reasons therefor, and let parliament judge of the soundness of the reasons and exercise its control.

May I point out to the committee what the Prime Minister knows better than anyone else, that, in dealing with questions of great emergency especially where human life is at stake, this House of Commons of Canada has never taken exception to a ministry taking the one course which it can constitutionally take in cases where an appropriation has not been made or is inadequate of asking for a governor general's warrant to meet a particularly emergent situation until parliament can be brought together. I made it very clear at the beginning of the special session in 1930 that, if the ministry found difficulty in estimating what would be required for the purpose of meeting some very critical situation in the matter of relief, and, if it should be necessary, before parliament could be brought together, that a certain expenditure should be made by governor general's warrants on account of the urgency of the human need involved, those of us who sit on this side of the house would take no exception to that particular course, provided that, in the first instance, parliament had been given the control it should have. That is the sound position, and it is the one which ought to be maintained. Are we to hear the same argument again next year, and, if there is a change of government next year, is the incoming government to follow along identical lines in relation to all expenditures concerning unemployment relief? Are we to continue adminstering the unemployment relief of the country by means of blank cheques given the ministry by vote of its supporters in the house? There will have to be a halt to that procedure, or we might as well get rid of parliament altogether. No one knows better than do hon. gentlemen opposite that in asking for this continued free hand in the matter of public expenditures, they are taking a course which cannot for a moment be defended.

I must say I believe, whether intentionally or not, the minister wholly misled the House of Commons in the statement he made this afternoon about the $20,000,000. I certainly got the impression that this year we were going to have, with respect to this particular bill, an amount which would be definite and which would indicate what the ministry really thought would be necessary. Certainly the hon. member for Comox-Alberni had the same impression or he would not have asked of the Prime Minister the question which he did. Indeed, I was waiting until the Prime Minister had concluded his remarks, to ask him the same question: How, if the government cannot foresee what is going to take place in the course of the next few months, has the minister found it possible to fix $20,000,000 as a limit? What is the significance of fixing $20,000,000 as a limit under the circumstances of which we have just been told? It is humbug; humbug pure and simple; no other word would properly describe it. It is another instance of humbug in the case of another great matter which directly affects the Canadian people. Had the minister's statement gone out without a further explanation from him, the people would have been led to believe the government had really got the relief situation in such shape that $20,000,000 would be all that was required.

Mr. BENNETT: The amendment says "direct relief."

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have not seen the amendment.

Mr. BENNETT: It was read just now.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: We have the minister's statement and the impression left by it, but the point I want to make clear is that direct relief is only one item in the relief program, and that the ministry still retains power to use a blank cheque for any other particular expenditures which it may wish to make under the head of relief in any other shape or form. Those are large items, and we have no guarantee whatever that the amounts which will be spent by the ministry this com-

ng year may not be considerably larger than hey are during the present year or were the year before. What the Prime Minister sought to do in his utterances this afternoon was to throw as much dust into the face of this committee as it was possible for him so to do. I do not think he did himself much credit in his method of speaking this afternoon with his vituperations, unnecessary epithets and the manner of presenting his statement. But, most of all, may I say that he did not do himself any credit in his slighting reference to the Sermon on the Mount. When the right hon. gentleman made the slighting reference he did to the Sermon on the Mount, he forgot he was speaking of a sacred—

Mr. BENNETT: I did not make any slighting reference to the Sermon on the Mount. I made reference to the hypocritical use of it to cover up political cant.

Mr. McINTOSH: What about the "grace of God" speech?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If my hon. friend did not make the reference for that purpose, he made it to provoke a sneer and a laugh in this House of Commons, which is something considerably worse. He has just this moment spoken about making references to sacred subjects for hypocritical reasons. I ask my right hon. friend: Was that his motive when he spoke in the city of Toronto about the grace of God? Was he acting the hypocrite then? Was he using phrases from the Scriptures for a political end?

Mr. BENNETT: This was not at a political meeting. It was a religious meeting.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: There is neither place nor time when it comes to stating fundamental beliefs in relation to questions of the day, and what is said on a public platform by the Prime Minister of Canada in that regard is assumed by the public to have been said from very high motives and from motives by which he will be judged by his fellow men. When I made the statement which I did in this house to the Sermon on the Mount, I was speaking of what I believe, and I said it in all reverence. It ill becomes the Prime Minister of this country to endeavour to provoke a sneer by any reflection on remarks made at that time. I might say, in justice to my right hon. friend, because I think I know him a little better than perhaps he thinks I do, I believe he lost his head a little this afternoon, or he would not have said what he did. I just wish to tell him that, if he does not expect people to be critical of his motives, he had better not impute to others the motives which have evidently been those that have guided himself.

I would resume this discussion in committee and ask the minister to tell us what amounts of money have been paid on blank cheque account for the purpose of assisting corporations or private undertakings?

Mr. BENNETT: On a question of privilege may I explain to the right hon. gentleman that the observations that I made with respect to the grace of God were made at a Bible class meeting where I would again repeat them; I desire that to be perfectly clear, but those who will look at the pages of Hansard and look at the report of sneers that were made later at my having uttered those remarks, will understand something of the attitude of mind of certain hon. gentlemen.

Mr. McINTOSH: Why did you repeat the insinuation?

Mr. BENNETT: I did not.

Mr. STEWART (Leeds): While the minister is looking up the desired information, may I put before the committee the much discussed amendment. It is moved by me, seconded by the hon. member for Kings (Mr. Macdonald):

> That this resolution be amended by adding thereto the following words: "Provided, however, that the amount to be paid for direct relief for the fiscal year ending the 31st of March, 1934, shall not exceed of the sum of $20,000,000."

The ACTING CHAIRMAN (Mr. Maloney): Shall the resolution as amended be adopted?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No. Will the minister just tell us how he arrives at $20,000,000 as being the amount he assumes will be sufficient?

Mr. GORDON: The figures making up the total spent or contributed by the Dominion government under the various statutes are, of course, with respect to the 1930 and 1931 acts, set out at length and detail in the report that was tabled last year in connection with this whole subject matter. The legislation now in force, which will expire at the end of this month, contemplates that all the details covering an innumerable number of items with reference to almost every county in Canada will be included in a similar report. That was the reason why a few days ago in outlining the details which I then gave I was desirous of placing in the hands of the members as much information as I could possibly give with respect to what had been done throughout Canada, what money had been spent and where it had been spent.

Under the Relief Act of 1930 the Dominion government contributed a total of $17,987,-173.86. If it is the desire of the right hon. leader of the opposition that I should spread again upon Hansard details as to the provinces which participated in those advances I can do it, but I think if one looks at Hansard the details will be found there in the statement which I gave to the house some time ago. However, if it is thought desirable that I should again go over the same ground I have no objections to doing it.

Mr. RALSTON: Is that $17,000,000 for direct relief?

Mr. GORDON: That is the total of disbursements made under that legislation.

Mr. RALSTON: What was asked was, where does my hon. friend get the basis on which he estimates $20,000,000 for direct relief. My hon. friend is giving us the expenditures under the act of 1930, under which there were many other expenditures besides expenditures for direct relief. There were a lot of public works, as I remember.

Mr. GORDON: I am giving only the amount which the Dominion government contributed, first by way of public works, and secondly I can give the sum contributed for direct relief.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Were the public works done under the patronage system?

Mr. GAGNON: That is a ridiculous question.

Mr. BOUCHARD: It was done. I will show you how ridiculous a question it is.

Mr. GORDON: I do not quite understand the hon. member.

Mr. BOUCHARD: The hon. member for Dorchester could explain. He said my question was ridiculous, but I think he understood it. I can show you how ridiculous it was.

Mr. GORDON: Under the 1930 act the Dominion government subscribed to public works $14,396,976.81, and to direct relief $3,547,135.08.

Mr. RALSTON: What was the date of the expiry of the amounts just given? Was it March 31, 1931?

Mr. GORDON: That would be up until August, 1931. Under the terms of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931, and the Continuance Act of 1932, the Dominion government subscribed the sum of $41,501,-791.96.

Mr. RALSTON: That was the total?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, under the act of 1931 and the Continuance Act of 1932.

Mr. MACKENZIE: Until what date?

Mr. GORDON: That would be up until the expiration of the statute as of January 31, 1933.

Mr. RALSTON: Would my hon. friend divide the amount so that we would have that continuity which he desires, by showing the expenditure under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931, which I presume would carry us to March 31, 1932, and then show the expenditure under the Continuance Act from March 31, 1932, up to January 31, 1933?

Mr. GORDON: The figures I have here are not divided in that way, but I think I can have them separated so as to make that clear. In the meantime I have given the figures under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931 and the Continuance Act of 1932. The Dominion government contributed $41,501,791.96.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Is that for direct relief or does it include public works as well?

Mr. GORDON: No; I will have to have those figures separated.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: How much of that amount is for loans to corporations of any kind?

Mr. GORDON: To answer that question I should have to have the figures separated.

Mr. DONNELLY: What proportion went for administration?

Mr. GORDON: The administration under the 1930 legislation cost $43,061.97. I have not the exact figures for administration under the subsequent acts, but I can easily get them.

Under the present legislation, up to January 31, 1933, there has been paid the sum of $9,525,953.53, and it is estimated that up to the end of this fiscal year, having regard to the numbers who are on direct relief and the cost, because this is practically all direct relief, the amount required for the year will be in the neighbourhood of $20,000,000. Of course, that is purely an estimate, but I think it is a very nearly correct estimate. Hon. members will understand that it would be hopeless for me to attempt to give the exact amount. The best we can do is to estimate it.

With respect to advances made to corporations, I have not those figures before me at the moment, but I can get them.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The minister will recall that when he spoke before, I suggested to him that it might be well for him to have his deputy here when we got into committee because we would want a good deal of information along these lines. I hope the minister will not try to put us off with general statements that so and so can be found in such and such a report, or that he will get the information to-morrow. We want the information before we get out of committee.

Mr. GORDON: I will have the officer here for that purpose.

Mr. HANBURY: Assuming that the minister has given all the information he has at hand—I notice the Prime Minister has now left the chamber; I had hoped to obtain some information from him. When he was speaking this afternoon he took some credit to his government for the fact that no bank in Canada had been obliged to go into liquidation, and for the vast sums of money that he had advanced to the provinces and to the provincial bank in Manitoba. I am not altogether critical of the amounts the government has found it necessary in the past to advance to provincial governments, but I would like to know whether this policy is to continue. Is the federal government to become responsible for all municipalities, all large banking corporations, all insurance companies?

Mr. RALSTON: And Newfoundland.

Mr. HANBURY: Yes, and the Dominion of Newfoundland? That is something that I believe the people of Canada are entitled to know. To what extent are we going to pyramid the liabilities of all parts of Canada? Is the Dominion government accepting full responsibility, no matter who undertakes the obligation, no matter how much a municipality is involved or how much it wishes to spend, no matter what happens to the banks or to the large companies? I say we are entitled to know from this government, now, when they ask us to pass this legislation, to what extent they are prepared to go. I would ask the minister to give us some information in that respect.

Mr. GORDON: The answer, in so far as I can give it, is simply this, that the government is asking the house to invest it with the powers contemplated by the bill, the terms of which are well known to hon. members. They are broad in their character, from some angles, of course. To attempt to prophesy to what extent we may have to invoke the legislation in the coming year is impossible for me or for anyone else. But I think I can say this to the hon. member, and I do not think he will quarrel much with it, that if during the coming year the occasion arises in connection with the safety of Canada, requiring such measures as are contemplated by this legislation, whether it be loans to provinces, or to business concerns the failure of which would challenge or imperil or perhaps destroy the business of this country, then I should say that this government would take proper action, as contemplated by the legislation sought in this bill, to see that such an occurrence, in so far as it was in the capacity of this government to prevent it, should not take place.

Mr. VENIOT: The other night when the minister was dealing with the amount advanced to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for relief, I asked him if he could tell me what amount was advanced to the Canadian National under like conditions, that is to keep the shops of the Canadian National Railways going intermittently. He promised to get that information for me, and if he has done so I would like to have it.

Mr. MANION: Perhaps I can answer the question in a few words. The Canadian National railway shops were not closed at any time.

Mr. VENIOT: No, but they were put on intermittent work.

Mr. MANION: So were those of the Canadian Pacific. The Canadian Pacific railway shops were on an even less number of days' work per month than the Canadian National shops. But the Canadian Pacific Railway Company after closing their shops, came to the conclusion that they could not open them again without some assistance, and the government, after considering the matter very thoroughly, decided to lend them money to keep the shops open for a certain time last year and a certain time the year before. May I point out that in view of the vast amounts of money which have been advanced from time to time to the Canadian National I do not think there should be criticism of a loan to the Canadian Pacific of, I think, about $2,500,000 in this connection.

Mr. VENIOT: Wait until the criticism is made; I have not yet made any criticism of it. But I think this committee is entitled to know what it costs to keep the Canadian National railway shops open. I will take one example, the shop at Moncton, that is carried on sometimes four days a week; was that carrying on four days a week part of the operating expenses of the Canadian National Railways charged up to deficit?

Mr. MANION: The Canadian National Railways made no request for assistance in keeping their shops open at any time.

Mr. RALSTON: And you have made no advances to the Canadian National for the purpose of keeping the shops open?

Mr. MANION: Not for that specific purpose.

Mr. VENIOT: But while the Canadian National did not make any request for advances, the fact of keeping the shops open to help unemployment was charged against the deficit of the Canadian National Railways Atlantic section?

Mr. MANION: I do not admit that, because the Canadian National Railways have never taken the attitude that they kept them open to help unemployment. Their position is that they required to keep them open for the time they kept them open.

Mr. VENIOT: I will put it the other way; the Canadian National Railways cut down the time of work in those shops to economize, and practising that economy they were still left with a deficit. That deficit was charged up against the operations of the Canadian National, not paid by the government of the country, and it becomes part of the debt of the Canadian National Railways to the government of Canada. Am I right?

Mr. MANION: I am afraid my hon. friend is not altogether right in that either, because in the future, if we accept the Duff report and put it into effect, as we expect to do, the deficit will be charged to the consolidated debt of this country, so it will not be charged as part of the debt of the railway.

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, and interest charged against it. Now I will come to the criticism of the loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The Prime Minister, speaking of that this afternoon, told us that every dollar of the money loaned to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company went to the men, that the shareholders received not one cent, and that the company were to pay back the loan. I was surprised that the Prime Minister at the time did not give the contents of that order in council, which distinctly states that the money was loaned without interest. It further states that it is not to be repaid to the government of Canada until the Canadian Pacific Railway earns sufficient to pay more than five per cent dividends to its shareholders.

Mr. MANION: Which order in council?

Mr. McINTOSH: That is the way the press reported it.

Mr. VENIOT: That is not only the press report, that is the order in council.

Mr. McINTOSH: That is the report I saw.

Mr. VENIOT: That order in council was passed, I think, on September 30, 1932. The work was done between September 1 and December 31, 1931.

Mr. MANION: I am not trying to find fault, but simply to keep the matter clear. May I suggest that there were two orders in council. One was on a different basis from the other.

Mr. VENIOT: I will come to that. I am now dealing with the order passed for the payment of wages to these men for work done between the first of September and the last of December, 1931.

Mr. MANION: That is correct.

Mr. VENIOT: Notwithstanding that that work was done between those dates, and that parliament sat here from some time in February to the 29th of June, not one word of information was given to this house, and it was only on the 30th September, 1932, that the order in council was passed, six days before the opening of the present session. Under that order in council the Canadian Pacific Railway Company received that loan without the payment of one cent of interest, yet in order to make that loan to the Canadian Pacific the government had to issue bonds for $80,000,000, in which amount was included this $1,447,222.70. On that loan to-day we are paying interest at the rate of 4¼ or 4½ per cent. During the flotation of that loan the Caandian Pacific Railway Company subscribed some $3,000,000 on which amount the company is now being paid 4½ per cent interest.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No, no.

Mr. VENIOT: It is said that this was trust money which was taken from the reserves. That makes no difference; it was Canadian Pacific Railway money. Where did that reserve come from but from the people of Canada? In part it was built up by the sale of lands with which we bonused the construction of that railway back in 1882. This very rich company is not able to spend $1,500,000 to help out unemployment and keep their men going, though it was able to purchase $3,000,000 of Canadian bonds which are now earning 4½ per cent. Further, the conditions under which the loan is to be paid back protect the shareholders of the company. Under the order in council the loan is not to be paid until the net earnings of the company show sufficient revenue to pay dividends of more than 5 per cent to these rich shareholders.

Mr. GAGNON: Rich shareholders?

Mr. VENIOT: Yes, most of them are wealthy.

Mr. BOUCHARD: Would the government do the same thing for the farmers?

Mr. VENIOT: Will the government do the same thing for the Canadian National Railways?

Mr. MANION: We have been doing it for years.

Mr. VENIOT: You are charging the Canadian National Railways interest.

Mr. CANTLEY: But the interest has never been paid.

Mr. VENIOT: The Canadian Pacific Railway Company is not being charged interest. Let me go a little further. I took notice that during his speech to-day the Prime Minister once more felt called upon to attack the press of the country; he referred to rumours in the press which tend to lessen the value of our securities in the United States. Let the right hon. gentleman look at his own speeches; let him refer to the speech he made to the delegation of railway employees who waited upon him three or four weeks ago asking that certain measures be put in force for the relief of railwaymen. If he was correctly reported in the press he recited the dire distress which existed among the employees of the two railway systems of this country; he went on to say that the systems were nearly bankrupt, and he wound up by saying, "I am proud to be able to state to you gentlemen that in my lifetime I predicted this situation."

Mr. HANBURY: He meant "produced".

Mr. VENIOT: Perhaps so; perhaps the press had the wrong word. What was the result? Within forty-eight hours Canadian Pacific Railway stocks fell several points on the New York market. So instead of blaming the press for rumours depreciating the value of our stocks in the United States the Prime Minister had better strike his breast and say mea culpa.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Before we leave the question of advances to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company there is one other point I should like to bring up. The other evening I referred to an item which appeared in the press to the effect that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had been advancing money to railways in the United States which were affiliated with the company, apparently to keep those roads running and to help the men engaged thereon who otherwise were threatened with unemployment. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has money that can be used for the purpose of assisting unemployment in the United States surely there was no need for the government to make advances to that company.

Mr. MANION: Does my right hon. friend assert that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company advanced money to help unemployment in the United States? I did not know that. I am just asking for information.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I want to know from the Minister of Railways whether he has heard of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company making advances to roads in the United States to assist them in the distressed condition in which they find themselves.

Mr. MANION: No, I have never heard that, nor have I seen it in the press. While I am on my feet may I say just a word. I do not wish to delay my colleague's measure, but there was another order in council to which my hon. friend did not refer except in passing. I refer to the second order in council under which the second loan was made. Under the terms of that order in council the money is to be repaid before any dividends are paid.

Mr. VENIOT: But that is not so under the first order in council.

Mr. MANION: I just wish to keep the record straight in that connection. I do not wish to quarrel with the facts stated by my hon. friend with regard to the first order in council, but under the terms of the second order in council we have insisted that the money must be repaid before any dividends of any kind are paid. I am not here to defend the Canadian Pacific Railway; usually they can defend themselves, but I think in justice to them and in justice to our action in helping them keep their shops open I should say that the company did not pay dividends on common stock at all last year, and I do not think they are likely to pay dividends for some time to come on that stock.

Mr. VENIOT: The dividends were only postponed for discussion at the next meeting.

Mr. MANION: It is not for me to defend the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I do not think that company is likely to pay dividends on its common stock in the very near future.

I should like to point out also that the shops of that road extend from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and there were some 8,500 men affected. The Canadian Pacific Railway took the attitude that they could not afford to keep these shops open without some assistance. I do not want to make a comparison between the railways, but for years we have been giving assistance to the Canadian National Railways and I do not think there is anything out of the way in the fact that for two years we have assisted the Canadian Pacific in order to keep these 8,500 men employed. We must remember that in all probability a larger amount than the interest on these loans would have been paid out in direct relief had we not taken this action.

Mr. VENIOT: I should like it distinctly understood just what I had in mind; I am afraid the Minister of Railways may have misunderstood me. I do not criticize the lending of the money to help the Canadian Pacific Railway. What I do criticize is the method that was adopted, and I am justified in that criticism by the remarks of the minister. Under the terms of the second order in council the money must be paid back before any dividends are declared; evidently the government saw the folly of their way.

Mr. MACKENZIE (Vancouver): What was the amount of the loan?

Mr. HEAPS: I should like to ask the minister if he has any idea of the kind of work in which these 8,500 men were engaged?

Mr. MANION: I do not know the details, but it was shop work of some kind. I think they called them the back shops, but I am not even sure of that.

Mr. HEAPS: I received a letter this morning which, had I known this matter was coming up, I would have brought with me. I will undertake to show it to the minister perhaps before the day is over. In this letter it is complained that some of the men employed in the Canadian Pacific Railway shops have not received the amount of work they should have received under the money advanced by the government. This is the claim they put forward. Whether it is justified I cannot say, but I hope an investigation will be made. In this communication which they have sent me the men complain that a large part of the money loaned by the government to the Canadian Pacific Railway was used to pay permanent officials who perhaps would otherwise have been employed whether the shops were closed or not. In this way, they say, the Canadian Pacific Railway escaped what were probably ordinary obligations in using the money to pay permanent officials so that men who ought to have been employed for a longer period were consequently given a shorter term of employment while others had to walk the streets. The Prime Minister this afternoon said that there had been submitted to the government a statement of the wages paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway to the men, and on the basis of the work slips signed by the men an amount of money was advanced to the railway. I have no doubt the Prime Minister's statement was correct, but in view of the letters I received this morning from men actually employed in the workshops I think the Minister of Railways should investigate the matter and see whether the facts are as indicated. The men, I repeat, make the statement that the money advanced by the government to the Canadian Pacific Railway was used to pay officials who would perhaps be employed in any event and that an insufficient sum was used for the purpose of giving employment to the workmen.

Mr. MANION: I do not believe there is truth in that statement. Money was borrowed for the purpose of giving employment to men in the shops and I have every reason to believe that it was used for that purpose. Naturally I cannot give details, but I have confidence enough in the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway to believe that they kept faith with the government in that regard. After all it is obviously difficult for men working in the shops to be able to tell positively what disposal was made of the money borrowed by the railway. It is a common practice among men in the ranks to criticize the officers of the army. It is not necessary that one should go further than the war to find that out. I myself heard severe criticisms from privates who did not know anything about a particular battle front apart from what was going on in their own immediate section; yet they were quite free in their criticisms of headquarters staff. The same is true of workmen generally; they are prone to criticize headquarters. I believe that the Canadian Pacific Railway did with the money exactly what they undertook to do and provided work for the men as far as they could.

Mr. HEAPS: I do not think the minister quite understands the position. In the shops themselves there are a large number of permanent officials. I have worked in the shops so that I have some idea of the situation. In these shops these permanent officials are on a monthly salary and they are the ones in respect of whom the complaint is made. The money was used to pay them instead of a greater proportion of it having been used to give employment to men who had to walk the streets. I will hand on to the minister the communication I have received and I hope he will investigate the matter.

Mr. MANION: I will do that.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I regret that the Prime Minister is not in his place because I wish to make a slight comment on a statement he made. I do this for the sake of accuracy, because I think it is essential that we should have a true picture of conditions in the country, neither exaggerated nor underdrawn. In the course of his remarks the Prime Minister congratulated us on the fact that approximately sixty per cent of the farms in Alberta and Manitoba were free from mortgages, only about forty per cent or a little less being mortgaged. I had heard that statement before and I therefore made inquiries and found that my own impression was absolutely correct and that this was not the case. It is true that some sixty per cent of the titles to farms in these provinces are clear of mortgage.

Mr. HANBURY: By acreage or number?

Mr. SPEAKMAN: By number. But that does not mean that the title in every case rests with the farmer. It does not take account of the agreements of sale. The titles to a great many of the farms are held by land-owning companies, such as the railway companies, the Hudson Bay Company, and various land-holding concerns. They are sold to the farmers on agreements of sale and paid for over a term of years, and while the title is clear it is not held by the farmer. So far as the farmer is concerned therefore an agreement of sale is the same thing as a mortgage. I know of my own knowledge—this is not a matter of authentic record however—that the percentage of farms now being paid for under agreements of sale is greater than the percentage of mortgages, so that so far as the farmer himself is concerned, although the statement made by the Prime Minister is technically correct, taking the actual mortgages and the agreements of sale, the percentage is nearer ninety than forty. The Prime Minister's statement is technically correct but it leaves a wrong impression, and nothing is gained by underestimating the situation any more than there is advantage in exaggerating it. It makes no difference to the farmer whether he owns the title and has subsequently borrowed money and placed a mortgage on his farm, or whether some land-holding company holds the title and he has to pay under an agreement of sale, for in any event the farm is a mortgaged one. I confirmed my impression by inquiry at the bureau of statistics.

Mr. HANBURY: Some minutes ago I asked the Minister of Labour a question with regard to advances being made to the provinces, municipalities and so on, and he gave me an answer which explained the position the government had taken during the past year and which they might be expected to take in the coming year. What the minister said is however hardly a definite answer. I realize of course the difficulty of giving a definite answer. I wish to ask him now a definite question. Should one of the provinces of Canada be unable to meet its obligations and be in danger of defaulting, would this government furnish it with sufficient money to meet those obligations?

Mr. GORDON: I agree with my hon. friend in one respect at least, that his question is a difficult one to answer. If there arose such an occasion as he indicates, the coming of the federal government to the relief of the province unable to meet its obligations would and, I think, should be determined from the point of view of conditions in the country generally, and the capacity of the federal government to assist the province concerned. I can however go as far as this with confidence, that if a province found itself in such a financial position that it could not carry on and was unable to meet its obligations, the federal government in such an event would hesitate before refusing to render assistance, because the seriousness of permitting a province to default generally might very well entail very severe results from the point of view of the federal government itself. The question is hypothetical.

Mr. HANBURY: Not at all.

Mr. GORDON: It would depend in large measure on the conditions generally at the time of such an event as the hon. gentleman suggests.

Mr. HANBURY: I may be giving the minister a difficult question to answer but I believe the people are entitled to this information. He says that it is a hypothetical question, but it is far from that. It is being done by this government and it has been done, and I am just asking what they contemplate in the future, whether this is a definite policy upon which the people can depend. I think we are entitled to know.

For myself, I am not in favour of it. As I stated before, I quite agree that in the past the government may have been justified; I do not criticize the action they took in the past, but does the minister and do hon. members of this house realize that the policy of this government in financial matters simply means that the federal government is assuming responsibility for every national institution, every province and every municipality in Canada? Our hon. friends in the far corner are criticized when they talk about the nationalization of credit and things of that sort, but what else is this but a nationalization of credit? What else has the government been doing but nationalizing credit? Will this government permit a municipality to default? They say they will, but a province will not.

An hon. MEMBER: They have.

Mr. HANBURY: They put in their own men and they assume the responsibility of operating the municipality. This government will not permit a province to default, but I say that the time has come when in order to maintain the federal credit the provinces should be asked to look after themselves.

Mr. MORAND: Your basis is wrong.

Mr. HANBURY: My basis is not wrong. The time has come when the federal government cannot continue to pyramid its responsibilities. It is behind every railroad company, every trust company, every mortgage company, you might say, every insurance company, and every bank. In other words, we have pooled the credit of Canada. If we have done this and if we are going to continue to do it, then it should be announced as a definite government policy. As I see it, the time has come when we should say that we are not going to continue to do this. I come from a province that requires assistance, but in the national interest I think the time has arrived when that province should be told to stand upon its own feet. I realize that the time may come when the federal government may have to assume responsibility in so far as the bondholders of that province are concerned. The government is just staving off the evil day and perhaps bringing closer the day when the government's own bonds will not sell at the price at which they think they should sell. The time has arrived when the provinces of this country should shift for themselves, and I should like to have the assurance of the government that they will seriously consider the matter before they continue their present policy of pooling the credit resources of the whole of Canada.

Mr. COOTE: Mr. Chairman, I should like to say a word upon this point before we drift to something else. Right at the outset I want to say that the Dominion government is more responsible for the position in which certain provinces and municipalities now find themselves, that of being unable to meet their bond interest, than anyone else. It is the money policy persisted in and carried out so consistently by this government, the so-called sound money system, which has made it impossible for some of the provinces and municipalities to do their own financing. First of all, this government is responsible for unemployment, and then it insists that the provinces and the municipalities shall bear two-thirds of the burden of unemployment relief. The provinces are forced to borrow money for this unemployment relief, upon which borrowed money they have to pay high interest rates. One of the reasons for these high interest rates is the national service loan which was floated over a year ago. This loan carried a high rate of interest, and the western, and probably the eastern provinces as well, when entering the money market found that they had to pay the highest rates of interest that they had ever paid in their histories. Dominion of Canada bonds are supposed to be the best class of security, and when they carry a high rate of interest the province, the municipality or the corporation issuing bonds finds that it has to pay a rate of interest higher than this government. When this national service loan was floated with such a high rate of interest other outstanding bonds, amounting to probably billions of dollars, bearing lower rates of interest, immediately dropped in value. Many of these bonds were held by our financial institutions and in order to take care of that situation the government passed an order in council authorizing the banks to value their securities higher than the actual market value.

Let me come back to the government's money policy and the reference made this afternoon by the Prime Minister to the Manitoba savings bank. The right hon. gentleman said that when the government took over the assets of this bank it was found that it had nothing but the I.O.U.'s of the province, and he inferred that those I.O.U.'s were not worth their face value. That was the only inference I could draw from his remarks. If the bonds of the province of Manitoba are not worth their face value it is because that province cannot collect enough in the way of taxes to pay the interest upon those bonds. The reason they cannot collect enough taxes is because the price level of agricultural and other products of that province is so low. The reason for these low prices is the unsound money policy of this government which makes the British pound worth only a little over $4. Last year it was down to about $3.70. The government's effort has been to keep down the value of the pound, or keep up the value of the dollar. Had this government adopted a more sensible and fairer money policy, the pound to-day would be worth $4.87, and would have been at least at that value during the past year. The western provinces, and probably some of the eastern provinces, would then have been able to collect several millions of dollars more in taxes. The farmers of Manitoba would have been able to pay the taxes which they have not been able to pay, and which will probably remain unpaid for some time.

I say to the committee that the Dominion government has a great responsibility in assisting the provinces and municipalities. Of course it is a case of how far it can be done; we may come to the point where it cannot be carried any further, but the responsibility rests chiefly with this government. I do not think that we can simply wash our hands of the whole affair and tell the provinces and the municipalities that they must look after their own affairs; it would not be fair. It is the unsound money policy of this government which has ruined the credit of some of the provinces and the municipalities, and it will finally ruin the credit of the dominion if it is persisted in too long.

Mr. NICHOLSON: Does the hon. member consider it is sound banking for a provincial savings bank to liquidate the savings of the people and place bonds instead of cash in its vaults?

Mr. COOTE: I am not discussing the policy of the savings bank in Manitoba, I am discussing the question raised by the Prime Minister as to the value of the bonds of Manitoba. I think it will be found that the banks of Canada have many millions of dollars of these bonds. It is under the banking system of which he is so fond that the tremendous bonded indebtedness of our provinces has been built up. It is because of the silly, perhaps I should say senseless financial policy which has been followed in Canada for so many years that we have borrowings, I suppose amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, in foreign countries, and these foreign borrowings constitute a great weight upon the people. These undertakings should have been financed in Canada through the operations of a government central bank. I know my hon. friend does not like the idea of a government bank, but I would like him to think a minute and consider the position we are now in under the system which he thinks is O.K., one hundred per cent perfect.

Mr. NICHOLSON: My hon. friend apparently misunderstood my question. I was not referring to what the banks generally were doing; I was referring to the provincial savings bank in Manitoba. That bank purchased Manitoba bonds—government I.O.U's—with the savings of 40,000 people and placed them in its vaults, thus making it impossible to keep its assets liquid. The result was that because of that depositors could not get their cash with which to pay the bills and taxes to which my hon. friend referred.

Mr. COOTE: Most banks consider bonds are liquid assets. Whoever heard of a savings bank keeping all its money in cash? That is never done. I can go further and say that no bank in the world to-day can within two weeks meet all its liabilities if it were required by the investing public to do so—

Mr. NICHOLSON: Was it two weeks?

Mr. COOTE: —it is not banking business.

Mr. HOWDEN: I should like to address the minister on rather a different matter. We have talked about a lot of things that might happen if something else happened, but in Manitoba there is something that has actually happened. In the whole of that province there are two points at which relief measures have absolutely broken down. In the city of St. Boniface no relief of any kind has been advanced for the last ten days. I have heard the present Prime Minister and the former Prime Minister, the leader of the Liberal party, state that according to the constitution of this country, relief must be sought in the first place from the municipality, in the second place from the province, and, finally, in the case of those two bodies falling down, from the federal government. Well, these two bodies have now fallen down; there is not a dollar forthcoming; we have about 1,000 or 1,500 pretty snorty, cranky men milling around in St. Boniface, and I would not be very much surprised to see a heading in the paper that half the place had been burned down. Just what is going to be done about the matter? I have made it my business to interrogate the ministers of this government before, both on the floor of the house and privately. So far, there seems to be no possible chance of relief coming from this source, and if we cannot get relief from this source, then so far as the city from which I come is concerned, God help us, because we have no money.

The banks have definitely refused to lend money either for relief purposes or to carry on the administration of the city. With the exception of some $20,000 or thereabouts which the federal government was good enough to advance some days ago, no moneys have been advanced to the city of St. Boniface since last December, but $20,000 is simply a drop in the bucket.

Mr. GORDON: That is the amount of the bill sent in to us and we paid it.

Mr. HOWDEN: But the minister will admit I have discussed this matter with him and have handed him communications, telegrams; that he has received similar communications and so has the Minister of Finance, pointing out that in this community of 10,000 people they are positively up against a stone wall. More than two-thirds of the citizens of Transcona and of St. Boniface are unemployed; sixty per cent of them are or were on relief and now there is no relief forthcoming. I should like to ask the minister whether, in heaven's name, there is any chance of our getting any help before we have bloodshed, pillage and other forms of trouble in that part of Manitoba. There is no help, no relief forthcoming from the province; the city is flat broke, insolvent. Is this government going to come to our aid or is it only going to send military troops after we have had open revolution and fire?

Mr. GORDON: I have had two interviews with the hon. member for St. Boniface about the situation in that municipality. I do not understand and I cannot conceive why we do not receive such representations from Manitoba. All we have to have is the bill so far as St. Boniface is concerned, and we have not had any such bill that we have not paid. I ask the hon. member this question—and I do so not with any desire to be acrimonious—has he made the same representations to the premier of his province that he has made to me?

Mr. HOWDEN: I can reply to that by saying that I am not supposed to make these representations to the premier of my province. I am a member of the House of Commons, and the fact is that the officials of the city of St. Boniface have appealed to me to make representations on their behalf because they can get no succour from Manitoba. I know nothing about the premier of my province or his administration, but evidently whether he is forced to do so or whether he is voluntarily doing so, he is not affording to those communities the degree of relief that they need. The minister will agree with me that messages have come to the federal authorities and there is no doubt about the conditions that prevail in those communities.

Mr. GORDON: Messages from the mayor of St. Boniface.

Mr. HOWDEN: Three months ago the city of St. Boniface discharged one-half of their officials because they could not see any possible chance of paying them. That is the condition of affairs; there is no doubt as to the situation. The town is full of unemployed, people who have been on relief. Now the relief is shut off. What are we going to do? May I ask the minister whether, in view of the articles of the constitution of the Dominion of Canada which state that the dominion shall come to the relief of those who cannot find relief from either municipalities or provinces, we may hope for some succour, some relief, for those people who at the present time have no means in the world of sustenance?

Mr. GORDON: If it is made known to this government by the Manitoba government that the city of St. Boniface—and I understand it has had a very difficult time financing the municipality for some years past; perhaps I am wrong in this, but I believe it has been in receivership for a long time—

Mr. HOWDEN: Quite so.

Mr. GORDON: Surely there can be no great difficulty if the man in authority, whose responsibility is certainly primary to ours, will disclose to his government that in his opinion the municipality cannot pay anything, and if Manitoba has come to the point where it has ceased to function as a province so far as St. Boniface is concerned, it will not take me very long to make up my mind as to what shall be done. I would earnestly ask the hon. member to make that representation by wire to the Premier of Manitoba and see what he says about it.

Mr. HOWDEN: Have I the minister's undertaking that if I receive from the Premier of Manitoba a message that he is quite unable to render any succour to the city of St. Boniface, I may expect help to go out from this federal body?

Mr. GORDON: We shall certainly take such action as will ensure that people will not suffer for want of the necessities of life. At the same time I am not unconscious of the fact that those who essay to administer the affairs of a province cannot sit back and shift their responsibility to somebody else.

Mr. HOWDEN: I am very glad to have that word from the minister, and I shall see to it that some word is forthcoming in the very near future.

Mr. BRADETTE: I want to supplement and enlarge upon what I said yesterday with respect to the back to the land movement. I had not finished when my time was up. I know it is not very popular for a so-called back-bencher to make long speeches, but at the same time it is the duty of a member of parliament to bring as forcibly as he can before the house the situation which he finds in his own section of the country, particularly when it may develop into a national situation.

I said yesterday that I was in favour of the back to the land movement, and that during the last two or three years there has been a reverse movement from the cities back to the rural centres. There are now tens of thousands of people in our industrial centres who are trying to find useful occupation on the land, and I want to compliment the government for its efforts in that direction.

I want to enlarge particularly upon a certain feature affecting the agricultural class in my own section of the country. Most of them are settlers, and some of them are now graduating into the farmer class. But in that class we find unemployment. Their position is much the same as that of our western farmers in that they are not receiving fair remuneration for their products, particularly for their pulpwood. The government has taken the initiative in bringing these settlers to my own section of the country, and the first crop they will have on their new holding will be pulpwood. It is the only production they will have for a good many years to come. I am sorry to say that the only market which we have for our pulpwood, and this applies to practically all primary products, is the United States, which is now shut to us. I saw a dispatch in this morning's paper that the Prime Minister is going to visit Washington and discuss with the American authorities a larger market for Canadian products in the United States. If this report originating from a press report in England is true, I fervently hope that the Prime Minister will consider the pulpwood question so that we can find a reasonable market for the primary product of the settlers in the newer section of Ontario and elsewhere. It would make the situation all the more easy for the government in maintaining our population on the land.

This winter, under direct relief, which is properly applied in my section under the guidance of Mr. Tackaberry, one of the major officers of the northern development branch, the settlers on direct relief were paid $2.75 a cord for pulpwood. Anyone who knows anything about the ordinary pulpwood lumbering operations knows that it is absolutely impossible for any Canadian to earn his salt at that rate of pay. The least they should get is $4 or $4.50 a cord. Anyone who knows all the labour involved in cutting a cord, piling it in the bush, hauling it to the siding and loading it on the car, a very hard and slow process, knows that $2.75 a cord is absolutely ridiculous. I know that the government cannot settle this question overnight, but I fervently hope that the Prime Minister, if he visits Washington, will find it possible to open up that market to us. Two years ago he stated in this house that foreign countries had to come to Canada to buy their raw materials. But that does not apply so far as pulpwood is concerned, for our exports of pulpwood in the last three years have been almost nothing, the United States buying most of her supplies from Russia, Finland and other Scandinavian countries. Because of our close proximity to the United States and our railway facilities which place practically all sections of this country within easy reach of it, that is a market which I think should be regained for Canada.

As I said yesterday, we are going to see more and more of the back to the land movement, but at the same time the agricultural class must be helped more than it has been in the past. Under the scheme to which this government contributes, the settler receives a total sum of $600, as was stated by the Minister of Labour the other day, $500 being paid the first year, and the balance of $100 being reserved to take care of the settler in his second year. As I said a moment ago, we have unemployment among the agricultural class in my section of the country. Nearly seventy-five per cent of our own settlers, who have been settled for fifteen or twenty years, are now on direct relief, and unless measures are taken to anticipate the situation within the next two or three years, the back to the land movement will mean that there will be more unemployment. Is there a solution for that difficulty that we can foresee? I answer in the affirmative; yes, there is. I believe it is the duty of the central government to inaugurate a scheme for bonusing land clearing. As the minister knows well, for the last ten or fifteen years we have been agitating in northern Ontario for a land bonus scheme. Last winter, in the Ontario legislature, one of the committees of that house made a recommendation in favour of a land bonusing scheme. The province of Quebec inaugurated such a scheme some seven or eight years ago, and I am in a position to know that it has done a lot of good for the northern part of the province. It is absolutely outside of politics. I am glad to be able to support my colleague from North Cochrane, Mr. A. Waters, who spoke in the Ontario house last Monday in favour of such a land bonusing scheme. I hope that the Minister of Labour, who I know has great influence with the government and is well known in every section of northern Ontario, will find it possible to inaugurate such a scheme. It would not take any very large sum of money because, from information I have received from the Department of Agriculture for the province of Quebec, I find that the average yearly expenditure under their scheme for the last three or four years has been $300,000. I maintain that if we inaugurated such a scheme the people who are now on the land would be absolutely self-sustaining within a very few years.

At six o'clock the Speaker resumed the chair and the house took recess.

After Recess

The house resumed at eight o'clock.

PRIVATE BILLS

CONSIDERED IN COMMITTEE—THIRD READINGS

Bill No. 31, for the relief of Margaret Borham Willson.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 32, for the relief of Clarence Eldon Durham.—Mr. Garland (Carleton).

Bill No. 33, for the relief of Maurice Pashlink Simon, otherwise known as Maurice Simon Pashlinski.—Mr. Hanson (York-Sunbury).

Bill No. 34, for the relief of Marjorie Elizabeth Rae Dixon.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 35, for the relief of Joseph Adrien Desmarteau.—Mr. Bell (St. Antoine).

Bill No. 36, for the relief of Henry Norman Bethune.—Mr. Anderson (Toronto-High Park).

UNEMPLOYMENT AND FARM RELIEF

CONTINUATION FOR ONE YEAR OF PROVISIONS OF RELIEF ACT, 1932

The house resumed consideration in committee of the following proposed resolution—Mr. Gordon—Mr. Bury in the chair:

Resolved, that it is expedient to introduce a measure to continue in force the provisions of the Relief Act, 1932, until the 31st of March, 1934.

Mr. BRADETTE: When we adjourned at six o'clock, Mr. Chairman, I was enlarging upon the back to the land movement and suggesting that the government inaugurate in every province of our confederation a land bonusing scheme which is absolutely workable. After giving very thorough study to that suggestion for many years I believe the amount of the bonus to each family should be $25 per acre per year for not more than ten acres, for land that is cleared and put under cultivation and seeded. For single men the maximum might be five acres and the bonus $25 per acre per year. Already this scheme is in operation in the province of Quebec, where the maximum amount given is $24, made up of $12 for the clearing of the land to those who actually reside on it and $12 for putting the land under cultivation. This scheme has worked very well in the province of Quebec for the last seven or eight years.

I should like to speak for a moment of the conference held here last winter between the provinces and the dominion I believe the federal government was satisfied with the present policy, and I believe the provinces were looking to this government for direction. I am afraid that direction has not been given, but I hope that before we meet next session some scheme similar to the one I have suggested will have been established by this government instead of the present one of laissez-faire.

This afternoon I said that those taken from the cities and placed on the land under the present scheme have at their disposal a maximum $600, of which $500 is spent in the first year and the other $100 the following year. The man who is placed on new land in Ontario will not be in the same position at the end of his two years as will the same class of man who has been settled on land in Quebec. Under the present scheme of land bonusing in Quebec those people who have taken advantage of the scheme will have at their disposal for the first two years an average of $200 a year, and I think the federal government must realize that the people they are placing on the land now will have to be maintained for more than two years. I say this because I know the real situation in our part of the country. Last fall I read an editorial in the Ottawa Journal praising some financier who had made a speech in this city in which, the Journal claimed, he had stated the situation exactly as it existed so far as finance, industry and commerce were concerned. It is not a pleasant duty for members of parliament to discuss serious situations which may exist in their ridings, but I believe the principle which applies to financial or business men also applies to members of parliament. I am making these statements now not because it gives me any pleasure but because I realize my duty as a member of this house.

Let me urge as strongly as possible that the federal government inaugurate in every section of the country a system of bonuses, for clearing land in timber areas and for breaking land in the prairie provinces. In addition, in many areas there is a good deal of drainage to be done. The minister is familiar with the northern section of Ontario, and he knows that in a great many cases there is some marsh or muskeg to be drained. We all realize, I know, that when these men leave the cities without capital it is absolutely impossible for them to install a proper drainage system. There again I would urge the federal government to use its influence with the provincial authorities so that certain amounts of money may be given those new settlers who have to drain their land. Every man familiar with agricultural activities fully realizes that unless the land is properly drained there is practically no chance of having good crops. I do not wish to imply that the province of Quebec is leading in all these matters, but in this case I think Quebec is showing the way. In that province a certain amount of money is granted according to the percentage of drainage done on each holding, and I think that principle should be applied in Ontario and the other provinces as well.

During the present session we have heard expounded some very wonderful theories, and when I speak of the back to the land movement I know that I am talking shop. I do believe, however, that in the solution of the present agricultural problem we will find the solution of most of our troubles. I mentioned that fact some time ago, and I should like to enlarge upon that statement, but I believe an opportunity will be afforded me when I speak on the budget. At the same time, this government in cooperation with the provincial and municipal authorities is placing people on the land. These people have been accustomed to highly mechanized surroundings, whether they were working in factories or in other occupations, and we also know that it will be almost impossible for them to get very much machinery for the first few years on the land. Because of that fact alone I want the government fully to realize their responsibility for these people for the next seven or eight years.

The problem of agriculture is the most important problem facing us at the present time. The whole world has been interested in the five year plan experiment in Russia. There the government, which had power over tens of millions of people, decided on certain formulas in order to put that country on an industrial and agricultural basis which would be equal to that of the older and more civilized countries. This was all to be done within five years. I believe the plan has worked well so far as industry is concerned; they have factories producing machinery, automobiles, farm implements and so on, but if the plan has been a failure—and I believe that in many ways it has been a ghastly failure—it is because of the fact that you cannot conduct agriculture by formulas. In the application of the five year plan they left so much to industry, so much to hydro and so much to other forms of industrial development, while to agriculture they decided on the production of millions of bushels of grain and other commodities. However, such formulas cannot apply to agriculture. Because of drought and climatic conditions that nation to-day is close to starvation; the farming class have not been able to produce what it was thought they would produce. To some extent the same thing applies in our own section of the country to-day.

The movement back to the land is going to increase steadily and I think the government should make a thorough study of the situation. Indeed I think it would be worth while for the provincial and federal governments to hold a conference to investigate that aspect of the subject alone. That the situation may become serious is indicated by the fact that only a few days ago the hon. member for Stanstead brought the house to a realization that even the committee on agriculture could not deal with all phases of agriculture in every part of the Dominion. I hope the government will find it possible to remove the anomaly that now exists as between the urban and the rural population in this country. I believe that it is in this direction we should look for a cure for the evils from which we are suffering at the present time.

I will not deal at greater length with the problems that arise under this act. What I stated a week ago I repeat now, namely, that so far as northern Ontario is concerned we do not believe in the principle of direct relief. It is a palliative, I admit, and the Minister of Labour under present circumstances, seeing that the federal government has not found it possible to inaugurate a policy of public works so as to give employment to Canadians, no doubt has to maintain this act for another year. I fervently hope however that for the sake of the morale of Canadians, whether urban or rural, the government will find it possible at the end of twelve months to adopt a different system whereby Canadians who are anxious and willing to work may be given employment and not the dole.

All the newspapers in northern Ontario, such as the Northern Tribune of Kapuskasing, The Northland Post of Cochrane, and The Porcupine Advance of Timmins, have been decrying this so-called direct relief and asking that the government spend money on capital works. This country will have to make capital expenditures in that northern section, where we have wonderful resources. The population is sparse, and the government might very well spend money on public undertakings. The trans-Canada highway, the construction of colonization roads, and airways enterprises in the Department of National Defence offer opportunities for the expenditure of moneys in a public way, which would help not only the present situation but any situation that might occur in the future. I have been reading an editorial from Saturday Night, which I believe is a journal that is friendly to the present administration. It is the issue of March 4, 1933, and from it I quote the following:

This Country Needs Relief From Relief

The state of despair into which we were thrown a few weeks ago by the revelation that the Dominion-provincial conference, of which we had formed high hopes, was not and was never intended to be a serious step towards the solution of any of our economic problems, has lasted until the present time and is still enduring; and under its influence we have, we believe, made practically no reference to any conceivable early alleviation of the country's troubles, save such as may come from the international debt or currency policies of other countries. This silence does not mean that we consider the present state of unemployment relief administration to be any less serious than before; we have merely no hope of anything being done about it. When, therefore, a minister of the crown tries to induce the Canadian people to believe that the problem is solving itself, it is time to protest against that assertion even though we have no expectation that he or his colleagues will do anything to solve it whether we protest or not.

The Hon. W. A. Gordon estimates that Dominion expenditure on relief for the year to March 30 will be below 25 millions. It is possible, though we think not probable, that the amount put through the books may be within that figure; but there is a very heavy lag in the charging of such expenditures against the final guarantor, the Dominion government, and we are convinced that the liability really incurred in the year will be far greater.

This optimistic figure Mr. Gordon compares with that of 41 to 45 millions attained in the preceding year (it is odd, by the way, that the expenditure of a year long since past should still be so vague and that of a year not yet ended so exactly computable), a year in which the method employed was that of financing needed public works instead of the present entirely non-productive "dole." In other words the country got something for most of the 45 millions; while it gets absolutely nothing for its 25 millions; and a considerable part of the 45 millions went not for labour at all but for materials. We are not defending the 1931 system, which we believe was grossly extravagant, but merely pointing out the meaningless nature of such comparisons.

In our section of the country we have had what has been known as the Sturgeon Falls scandal, and the population of that section has come in for a good deal of criticism. In this connection I wish to read the following from an editorial that appeared in the Porcupine Advance of Timmins, of February 2, which places the blame for the present state of affairs there, not on the people of Sturgeon Falls but absolutely on the act itself. I quote:

For some weeks past some of the newspapers of the province have been fairly feasting upon the sensational disclosures in connection with the administration of direct relief at Sturgeon Falls. Day after day has brought its startling disclosure. And then comes an anti-climax! The people of Sturgeon Falls explain it all by blaming it all upon the newspapers! The newspapers have made a sensation out of inconsequential details, the theory says. The whole thing doesn't amount to anything in particular (so the explanation runs) but the newspapers have made a mountain out of a collection of molehills. Of course, quite a respectable little mountain could be made out of molehills, if you had enough of them,—and there seems to be quite a number of molehills in this Sturgeon Falls business. But after the excitement, sensation, astonishment and alarm created by the evidence in the Sturgeon Falls investigation, such an explanation seems cheap, paltry, common! The Sturgeon Falls folks had given hopes of better things. They had shown inventiveness, originality, and romance, and a fine grasp of the essentials for attracting attention. Why spoil it all by a cheap, time-worn, ancient old wheeze, like saying the newspapers are to blame. That is the excuse of all the cheap fellows, whether politicians or criminals or overtalkative fellows alarmed at their own words. Some day newspapers will demand relief from this sort of thing, but in the meantime, the newspapers are sadly disappointed in the people of Sturgeon Falls. Why not blame it all on direct relief? That would be nearer the mark. Direct relief lowers the morale of the people, fosters fraud, encourages dependence, indolence, chicanery and what have you. The newspapers only told about it all. Direct relief was the father, mother and whole family tree of the evils that have shamed Sturgeon Falls.

That editorial I believe reflects the feelings not only of the people of northern Ontario but of every section of Canada.

There is another matter I want to discuss for a moment or two. I believe that in connection with this relief measure we are creating another bureaucracy. So far this country has kept itself pretty well away from that danger, but here we are setting up a new set of officials whose duties frequently overlap those of existing officials. In northern Ontario there is an organization that looks after the farmers and settlers, and generally speaking the higher officials of that organization enjoy the confidence of the people. Now, I believe that the administration of direct relief should be left in the hands of the northern development branch. There are officials in every locality under this relief measure and personal conflicts are bound to come up, to the detriment of the whole scheme. I know that I am expresing the views of the Conservative member for North Cochrane in the legislature of Ontario, because he made the same statement in the legislature this week, when he urged that the administration of direct relief be left in the hands of the officials of the northern development branch. The Ontario government finds it necessary to curtail expenditures to some extent in connection with the branch, but it must maintain a skeleton staff, and most of their officials—I could mention many names which are well known to the minister—are men who are fully equipped for the administration of relief. They know the situation thoroughly and are familiar with all the conditions that exist in that part of the country. Why have this overlapping of officials? I am making this suggestion in all sincerity and I hope it will be received in that spirit. I have seen it work out last summer, I have heard of many cases, and I have come to the conclusion that we have too many officials bringing about a conflict in jurisdiction. The provincial government has a splendid body of officials and efficient organizations which cover eighty per cent of the area of the province of Ontario. They are fully equipped and have had experience during the present depression, and I feel that their work would be satisfactory to everyone concerned.

I stated last Friday that perhaps we could criticize some of the acts of administration or certain cases here and there where politics had played a part, but taken as a whole I believe that the administration, as far as northern Ontario is concerned, has been carried out without political interference. I hope the minister will find his way clear to cooperate along these lines in the application of the direct relief act. May I again express the hope that the government will find it possible to provide work for many of the men up in our fine section of the country.

My last appeal is that the government devise means whereby in useful and fruitful occupations our people may again come into the full meaning of Canadian nationhood.

Mr. DONNELLY: Mr. Chairman, I feel I would be neglecting my duty if I did not say a word or two in connection with this unemployment and farm relief measure now before the house. An idea seems to be prevalent in the mind of the government and of many people in the city that if they can only get the people back to the land, all will be well; that all we need to do is to get our unemployed out of the cities and towns and on the land and then they will be able to make a living. Speaking in this house last November, I stated that it was impossible for any man to take the best farm in western Canada and make a living out of it and pay his taxes. Yet this government seem to think that the only thing they have to do is to get a man out of the city, send him out to a farm and all will be well. There is no class of people in the country to-day suffering as much as the farmer. The farmer is receiving for his products only one-fifth of what he received in 1929. Day by day, week by week and month by month his condition is becoming worse and worse.

Just look at conditions this year as compared with last. I hold in my hand the live stock market report for December 29, 1932, sent out by the Department of Agriculture. The first item that appears is butcher steers—the prices quoted are the top prices for each item. The price at Moose Jaw for the week ended December 29, 1932, was $2.75 per hundredweight. It costs the farmer about $1 per hundredweight to get his cattle to the market, so he would net $1.75. In 1931, he received $5 per hundredweight, or a net figure of $4. Yet the farmer is prosperous and the depression is over! We are to congratulate one another upon the prosperous condition of the agricultural worker. If a farmer sends an ordinary cow into market he finds it has no value at all and in many cases he must put up a deposit to cover the cost of transportation. Yet some of our hon. friends on the other side from Quebec state that the farmer in western Canada is so prosperous that he can go down to California to spend his winters!

The next item is select bacon hogs. On December 29, 1932, the farmer got $3.40 but in 1931 he got $4.20. What do we find with regard to wheat? Last year the farmer received somewhere between 55 and 60 cents per bushel, and as it costs about 20 cents to get the wheat to market the net return was in the neighbourhood of 35 or 40 cents. But what is the farmer getting this year? The prices have run between 40 and 48 cents, so the farmer is receiving from 25 to 28 cents per bushel. Yet we are told that this year he is a lot better off than he was last, and that we should get all our unemployed back on to the farm.

Take the matter of poultry. Last fall I saw several carloads of turkeys being purchased to be shipped to eastern Canada. There were big headlines in the paper stating that the Canadian turkey was receiving the top price in England, and what a wonderful bird it was. It is a wonderful bird.

Mr. DUFF: The Prime Minister went over with some of them.

Mr. DONNELLY: He went over to England but I do not know whether or not he went over with the turkeys. One year ago the farmer received from 12 to 18 cents per pound for his turkeys, but what did he get this year? From 4 to 9 cents per pound—not half as much. I saw three large birds, each weighing from 12 to 15 pounds, sell for 50 cents each. They were off grades, they had a little twist in their breastbones and could not be graded as number ones, but the meat was there and they were just as good as the others.

I repeat that the farmer in western Canada is unable to make a living, and yet we are being told that the thing to do is to send our unemployed back to the land. They are to be sent back to the land in order to produce more so that the farmer will have additional competition and have his prices lowered still further. This is the condition as it exists to-day. The condition of the farmer is becoming worse and worse. This afternoon the Prime Minister told us how he had looked after seventy municipalities and had sent out direct relief to 330,000 in the dried out areas of Saskatchewan. It seems that every time we speak of the farmer we speak of relief, but when we speak of the Canadian Pacific Railway or the provincial government, we say we are giving them financial assistance. All we are doing for the farmer is to finance him. For years and years the farmer in western Canada has been going to the merchant who would finance him until he marketed his crop, but to-day the merchant cannot do this. The result is that the government is financing the farmer, but for everything the farmer gets he has to sign a note to the government. Why is it that the farmer in these dried out areas who has had the hand of Providence against him for the last three or four years has to sign a note for anything he receives in the way of assistance when he is hungry or wants a bed upon which to sleep, although the man in the city or the farmer in any other province does not have to sign a note when he is given similar assistance? Why does this government compel our farmers in the dried out areas to sign notes when they do not do it anywhere else?

Mr. GORDON: This government never compelled them to sign notes.

Mr. DONNELLY: I beg your pardon, I have the notes right here. I have one of your agreements and if it is not asking that a note be signed, I should like to know what it is.

Mr. GORDON: When the hon. member said "this government," did he mean the Dominion government?

Mr. DONNELLY: Let me read it for the hon. gentleman. If it is not for this government, it is not for the government of Timbuctoo:

I,....., the above named applicant hereby faithfully promise and agree to pay to the Saskatchewan Relief Commission on behalf of His Majesty the King in the right of the Dominion of Canada—

If it is not this government, what government is it? Is it the government sitting over there, or what is it? This is the government that asks men to sign these notes, and, by signing them, to agree to pay the money back. We ask the Prime Minister why he did this. "Well," he said, "I have received many telegrams from people in western Canada asking that this be done." We asked for copies of those telegrams, but we never received them and we never found out what happened to them. When I was in western Canada, on every platform I stood I asked that those who had sent telegrams should stand up, but I have never yet seen anyone do so. I believe they were afraid to stand up in case they might be lynched. Someone suggests that they were afraid section 98 of the criminal code might be used against them and they might be sent to gaol. In any case these people are discriminated against by having to sign these notes, whilst people in other parts of the country receive relief without having to do so. When the Prime Minister was returned at the last election we said: We want not charity, but work; and the Prime Minister promised work. In Regina he cried like a Billy Sunday over the situation.

An hon. MEMBER: It was a sermon on the mount.

Mr. DONNELLY: Yes, we listened to the sermon on the mount then but we listened to the swan song this afternoon. It was a doleful tale, and from the way things are going the tale will be more doleful yet. We say that we should not be discriminated against, and if other people are going to get charity, we are prepared to take as much as any of the rest of them.

The farmers in the dried out areas last year received assistance in matters of farm implements, twine and binder repairs. What do we find? As soon as the harvest is cut and the grain threshed and they begin to take in their crops, they have to send so much in to the municipality for direct relief. In some of those municipalities, if a man had 1,000 bushels of wheat he would have to keep 200 bushels for seed. He would have 800 bushels for sale, so that at from twenty to twenty-five cents a bushel he would receive somewhere between $160 and $200. Out of that he would have to pay $40 into the municipality, that amount being sent on to pay for this direct relief. After they got the $40 they sent a man around to distribute the relief. There was a duplication; they took it from the farmer and they had to hand it back. Over and over again that was done and we know that it is being done all through that area.

We are glad, however, to note one thing. At first when this relief was mentioned, we advised the government not to have relief officers going throughout the municipalities, but to let the relief be handled by the municipal officer. We are glad to note that this year the relief is being handled as we suggested. There are now no relief officers running about the country in high-powered cars. Last year they were driving from one town to the other, smoking big cigars, burning up gas at the rate of $150 to $200 a month, doing nothing but just going from town to town and drawing as much money themselves as they were handing out in relief. To-day we find a municipal officer carrying out the relief work just as effectively at a much lower cost.

Mr. McINTOSH: The government are not doing it in the north in that way; they still have their relief officers sent there.

Mr. GORDON: In answer to the interjection of the hon. member for North Battleford, there will be no relief officers in his constituency.

Mr. McINTOSH: They are there for the provincial government's relief commission, and they therefore indirectly represent the federal government in this matter.

Mr. DONNELLY: In the drought areas the government is handling the relief one hundred per cent. Am I not correct?

Mr. GORDON: We are paying one hundred per cent relief in that area.

Mr. DONNELLY: What we find very strange is that although the federal government is doing that, it has nothing whatever to do with the administration. Does that not seem odd? The government pays for all the relief and yet has nothing to say as to how it is being handled; it is leaving somebody else to do the work. That is the case in my district and others.

Last fall I referred to the manner in which these orders are brought in. A man goes into one of those relief offices and he is asked: How much a month do you want? Last year that was the way in which they handled the matter. This year they decide how much they are going to give and they give the man an enormous sum to spend and to squander. For instance, a husband and wife receive from the relief officers in the way of groceries $4.50 a month, while a single man gets $3.50 a month.

Mr. DUFF: Does he buy grapefruit with that?

Mr. DONNELLY: I do not know whether he buys grapefruit, but this order is sent to him and he takes it to the grocery store. It calls for so much in the way of beans, Epsom salts, rolled oats, tea, coffee and so on, and the price is set down opposite each item. I said last year and I say again that not one merchant that I know of in western Canada is making out that order exactly as it states. He fills it in with something or another; he writes down so much salt, so much rolled oats, and so on. The result is that rolled oats and beans have gone out into that western country in carloads; more rolled oats and beans have been sold there than ever before, yet no more is being handed out than formerly. The merchant fills in the order just as he likes, making it come out to the total at the bottom, and then he asks the customer: What do you want? He hands the order out to the customer just as the latter wants it, and it is taken away. I said that last fall and the former hon. member for Mackenzie, who is now on the tariff board, said that he did not have that experience in his district, but he knew it was wrong. I have seen hundreds of those orders put up; I have asked hundreds of merchants and have yet to find one who says that he does not fill out orders in just that way. Moreover, I saw the relief commissioner in Regina and asked him whether those people were filling out the orders in that way. He said: "I know it." I said: "Why do you not send the people a cheque for $4.50 a month?" He said: "We are afraid to do that; they may spend it in another way." Just imagine! Do they think it is extravagant and that the people will go and buy liquor with it? Why they do not send cheques, it is impossible for me to say.

In addition to that, there is in Regina a little army of clerks—at one time there were 150 or 200 of them—whose occupation was to go over those orders and check them up to see that the right quantities of beans, salt, rolled oats and so forth were entered and that it was figured out correctly at the bottom. But the whole thing was fictitious. It was and still is the biggest part of their job to check up those orders that come in and to see that the bills are filled out correctly. If this government is putting up one hundred per cent of the relief that is being handed out in those drought areas, we regret this is the case, and we do not know how long it is to be continued. An hon. member beside me suggests that it will continue as long as this government remain in power, and I believe it will because I do not think they are in league with anybody, even with Providence. As long as this condition exists in which we are providing one hundred per cent of the relief I do not know why we should not have something to say as to how it shall be administered. This government most certainly should have something to say in the administration of this act

Mr. SPROULE: After listening to the hon. member for Willow Bunch it seems to me that it is time for somebody from Ontario to say a word or two. For two or three days we have been listening to our western friends criticize the government, and one hon. gentleman said he would welcome the day that this government would stop assisting provinces that could not look after themselves, while another hon. member wants to know if the government is not going to continue to look after them.

The hon. member for Willow Bunch talks about the prices for cattle. He knows perfectly well that cattle are not worth any more across the line than they are here, and even if they were we could not ship our cattle into the United States because of their tariff.

Mr. DONNELLY: What line are you talking about?

Some hon. MEMBERS: Sit down.

Mr. SPROULE: Then the hon. member for Willow Bunch talked about the prices for turkeys. He would not give the Minister of Agriculture credit for assisting to market 76,000 pounds of western turkeys in the old country. He also said that turkeys were bringing only four and five cents a pound to the farmer in the west.

Mr. DONNELLY: That is what we got.

Mr. SPROULE: I sympathize with the farmers of the west, many of whom came from Ontario, but there are a good many others out there like the hon. member for Willow Bunch, who has a lot of gas on his stomach and no doubt feels better after he gets it off and sits down. That is about all that his talk amounts to. The members from Ontario sit still and do what they can to help their fellow Canadians in the west. We voted for the five cents a bushel bonus on wheat and also for seed for the western farmers. We have every sympathy in the world for them, but when some members from the west stand up in this house and keep on hollering about hard times, they are just making it all the worse for themselves because some day Ontario and eastern Canada are going to stand up and tell them that they are just about through giving assistance and credit to the west. I do not want any division in this country between east and west, and there should not be.

As far as prices in this country are concerned, you cannot point a finger across the line and show where prices are any better for eggs, butter, cattle or anything else. The hon. member for Willow Bunch also talked about the prices for hogs. If he had watched the Chicago market or any other American market, he would have seen that prices over there are no higher than here. We could not ship our hogs to the United States anyway because of their tariff. To hear the hon. member talk you would think this government was to blame for the United States tariff.

Mr. DONNELLY: They are.

Mr. SPROULE: They are not to blame for anything of the kind. I do not want to take up very much more time, Mr. Chairman, but I think it is time that a lot of these members from the west with so much wind on their stomachs should sit down, and then they will get along easier, otherwise the day will come when somebody will tell them where they get off. I do not want the day to come when there will be any division in this country. I have as much sympathy for agriculture as any man, and I defy any hon. member to stand up and say that this government is not doing its best for agriculture. If certain hon. members from the west have anything constructive to offer, why do not they outline their remedies? Instead, they talk as though we were responsible for the United States tariff. We had nothing to do with it at all, and they know that well enough. They are only talking politics; there is nothing to it. They are simply trying to make out that this government is to blame for conditions in this country to-day. I say, Mr. Chairman, that this government is doing its best to bring this country out of the depression, and prices in Canada for all agricultural commodities are higher here than in the United States. Why not give the government a little credit instead of standing up and grumbling and complaining all the time? I do not want to take up any more time, Mr. Chairman, because we want to get along with the business of the house.

Mr. BLAIR: I enjoyed listening to the speech of the hon. member for East Lambton. I think we fully realize that the government is trying to bring this country out of its present dilapidated condition, but I think they are going about it in the wrong way. Their efforts may be conscientious enough, but they are very much misguided.

We find ourselves to-day, Mr. Chairman, in a peculiar condition in this country. We are the unwilling victims of the strangest "famine" ever recorded in history. When evil days fell upon ancient nations there was generally a famine or a plague of some kind, grasshoppers, locusts or the like. At the present time our country is well favoured by the hand of Providence. We have an abundance of everything, an overabundance, in fact. We have too much food, and yet we find starvation in this land. We have too much clothing, and yet some of our people are naked. We have too many houses, and many of our citizens are without homes. We have too much coal, and some of our people are freezing. We have too much of everything that the heart of man can long for, and yet we have a famine—unemployment. Imagine unemployment in a young and rich country like Canada, with its great resources! Nevertheless unemployment is here and getting worse. Let me compare our unemployment figures with those of some other countries. On October 15, 1932, in France one out of 170 was unemployed; in Italy, one out of 45; in Great Britain, one out of 25. Canada—just imagine, in this young and prosperous country!—one out of every twelve of our population is unemployed, according to the Prime Minister's own announcement. The figures I have just quoted are taken from fairly reliable papers in France, Italy and Great Britain. Unemployment is still with us, although this government were going to cure it in three days when they got into power. They are now in their third year of office—

Mr. SPENCE: You tell us how to cure it.

Mr. BLAIR: I will give the hon. gentleman a little information before I get through if he happens to be here to listen.

[Mr. Sproule.]

The government, I say, took office with the avowed object of relieving the unemployment situation. The unemployed at that time were reported to number 100,000. In normal times there are 50,000 unempolyed in Canada; so at that time we had only some 50,000 more unemployed than normally. After the third session of this parliament the Prime Minister announces that he is feeding 1,370,000 people in this country. The policy advocated and chiefly depended upon by this government to relieve unemployment was high tariffs. I must say that the gentleman from Toronto who asked how they were going to do it—

Mr. SPENCE: They are not growling from Toronto.

Mr. BLAIR: The lodges in Toronto gave these poor fellows buttons and ribbons and the password, they were paraded here and there—

Mr. SPENCE: It did not cost you anything.

Mr. BLAIR: These poor fellows have been eating the apples of Sodom ever since; they are travelling up and down our concessions by hundreds. Toronto should be ashamed of herself, leading these poor innocent people to vote for high tariffs, and big fat organizers getting them in their lodges and sticking little ribbons on them. I have hauled them into Toronto time and again with their pants tied up with binder twine and a little button on their lapel. I tell them: "You are the boy; you are a faithful citizen." Then the railwaymen—that is another pitiable thing. Toronto Tories came through our district campaigning among the Canadian Pacific employees for high tariffs, and the men were simple enough to listen to them. They did not realize that high tariffs were not going to improve the traffic on their railway, and the Canadian National men were not much better. How can you improve traffic on the railway by raising the tariff rates three times as high, putting on a six per cent sales tax when the goods come off the cars, and an excise tax of three per cent, and then telling these fellows it will improve traffic on the railway and give employment to more railwaymen? It was one of the biggest farces ever heard of. I can never understand how they got the railwaymen to believe that nonsense. But they have been badly disappointed; I have seen men who were conductors down in the soup kitchens in Toronto getting a bite to eat. The same with commercial travellers: a band of Tory drummers out of Toronto were sent wholesale throughout the province to tell the people of Ontario that the factories would be prospering and that everything would blossom as the rose, that Canada would go ahead if they would raise the tariff. But now these drummers are out of employment and have been looking for a job for the last two years. You see them at the soup kitchens in Toronto, and the same in Hamilton. And so we could go from one class to another.

The poor farmer, I pity him. I never knew why they were so much opposed to the New Zealand butter treaty, but there was a little logic and brains behind that opposition. It was a great mistake, as any farmer who looked into it could not fail to realize, when we were getting $3 from New Zealand for every dollar she got from us. The farmers are among the greatest sufferers. Ostensibly they are living in their homes, but it is a sad condition when a man has reached the age of fifty-five, has his family around him and depending on him, and knows that he is not worth a dollar, that if his creditors demanded payment he could not possibly pay them and would have to walk off his farm. That is the condition of many farmers in our good old county of Wellington, where we pride ourselves on good farms and good farmers; yet in some cases their taxes have been unpaid for two years. Yet these are men who three years ago were fairly well off. The previous speaker spoke of poverty in the west. No doubt the western farmer is poverty stricken, but in Ontario the farmers are suffering very seriously from the advice they received from Tory Toronto.

Another question is the unfortunate state of affairs existing in our prisons. We Canadians are an honest law-abiding people, and if our gaols are overflowing it is an insult to our intelligence. Seventy-five per cent of those we have in gaol are not criminals; they are the victims of unemployment caused by a wrong national policy.

Mr. DUFF: Bennett's tourists.

Mr. BLAIR: Yes. We are all pretty much the same by nature; if we are driven to distraction any of us would steal. If our families were in extreme poverty it is no use for us to say we would not steal; any of us would break a window and take something to keep his family from starving. Some of us may be too pious for that, but I do not think I could be depended upon if my children were in need; I would be in gaol with these other birds. We need a different distribution of wealth in this country. We do not want all the wealth in the hands of a few rich people who control our financial institutions. We want many people owning their own farms and their own homes. We do not want great banking systems that control our economic power and set up white elephants to advertise themselves like the Bank of Commerce in Toronto—a fool enterprise—instead of lending the money to the farmers in the rural districts. They take the money from the rural parts and spend it foolishly in the cities. We want a banking system from which the small town merchant and the home builder can secure a limited amount of money and credit. We need, as never before in Canada,—and this I think is very important—we need a Magna Charta defining the rights and privileges of the poor classes. The farm and labouring classes are certainly being imposed upon by the policies of this government. Of course the rich wish to keep their fortunes; it is only natural that they wish the payment of bonds to be guaranteed and factories to be kept working—we all want that. They want to keep the banks open and solvent, and we all want that too. But the wishes of the poor take a different direction: they wish work or increased wages—and some of them surely need it. The farmers wish to get a better price for their wheat and wool; the labourer wants work so that he may have enough to eat and to wear and so that he may provide something for his old age.

Now I would like to deal more particularly with the causes of this unemployment. One important factor is the depreciation in the values of the products of the farm, as a result of which farmers are unable to buy. A farmer who bought his farm three years ago for $6,000, giving a mortgage for $3,000, to-day has not a dollar of equity in his farm. The depreciation of farms is at least fifty per cent; the mortgagee literally owns the farm. When he bought that farm, $3,000 perhaps meant 3,000 bushels of wheat, but to-day it means about 7,000 or 8,000 bushels, and the result is a double liability. What has brought about that situation? It has resulted from stangulated trade and commerce due to high tariffs. the sales tax, the great expenditures of this government, increased taxation of all kinds and the increase in the national debt. It seems that decreases in trade and increases in taxation go together. I suppose we all realize that the difference in tariff revenues between the last year the Liberal government was in power and the first year the present government took office was about $80,000,000, which had to be made up by taxation. There are about 2,000,000 homes in Canada, which means that $40 would have to be collected from each home to realize that amount. That amount would drive most of our farmers off the land if they had to pay it in extra taxation. Economic conditions are not known by the public; one after another our Conservative friends stand up and boldly declaim on behalf of their beloved policy of high tariffs, telling the people that good times are just around the corner and that we are on the up grade. We believe they should tell the truth; optimism is not a species of cheerful imbecility based on bedtime stories. We must not forget the statement by Lady Nairne that "truth will stand when all else faileth," and I think the public should be told definitely what is the situation and asked to cooperate in facing it. To-day the people have lost faith, and nothing destroys faith more than falsehood. People are afraid; fear paralyzes their efforts. We must take the people into our confidence and tell them the truth and ask for intelligent cooperation. If we did so we might experience some improvement.

The other day we read in the press that Sir Arthur Currie was pleading for an inflation of the Conservative party by adding to it Liberal brains. Knowing the Curries as I do I felt that he saw a sair, need, and I would say he was one hundred per cent Conservative. You cannot ask for more members on the other side; they have so many now they do not know what to do with them. They have enough material for two cabinets, yet Sir Arthur Currie rightly thinks there should be some Liberal brains infused into the Conservative party, and he is not the only one who so thinks. The country has begun to realize that something like this is absolutely necessary.

Mr. SPENCE: Would you like to come in?

Mr. BLAIR: Not under your present policies; I could not do it, much as I would like to associate with some hon. gentlemen opposite, some of whom I admire very much but whose policies I detest. I believe the Prime Minister, in his own mind, was a sort of Sir Galahad, and I believe now that he was conscientious. I did not think so at the time; I thought he was wrong and knew he was wrong, but since then I have changed my mind. I believe he thought he was right, but now he is coming to the point where he knows he is absolutely wrong, and I think his followers are beginning to realize that his policy is carrying this country downhill as fast as we can go. This would not be the case if we were not following the policies of the United States, and they are bigger fools than we are. They have committed all the sins we have committed, but they were a little ahead of us. We were imitators; we have been mimicking the United States. At one time the capitalists of the United States wanted control of the financial system; they wanted to make and valuate their own money, but Washington said, "No, we are not going to give away our rights". Later on Jefferson said the same thing but when the war came Lincoln sold the rights of the people and allowed United States capitalists to make and valuate their money. Once I attended a celebration on Lincoln's birthday, and much ado was made about Lincoln worshipping the goddess of liberty. I could not help saying that Lincoln liberated the slaves constitutionally but enslaved the inhabitants of the country economically when he tied them up to the financial institutions of the United States and of Great Britain, because at that time Great Britain had an influence over United States banking institutions similar to the influence the United States has over us at the present time.

Now I come to what I think is the great cause of this depression; I refer to deflation and its collateral forces. You can deflate money without destroying it, without taking it out and burning it as the banks do every year when the western crop is moving. Deflation simply means removing money from circulation. I think the definition of the power of money is similar to that law of physics which says that the force of a moving body is the weight of the body multiplied by its velocity. I believe the power of money is the volume of money multiplied by its velocity, and I think the power of money depends more on its velocity than on its volume. Hon. gentlemen to the left keep suggesting that we should increase the volume and inflate money. I am not sure that this has not been done; I think that action has been taken by the government to the extent of at least $35,000,000, if not more.

The great thing about money, however, is to keep it in circulation. One dollar would pay a thousand dollars of debt if you could keep it going fast enough and in a certain direction. The usual number of moves of a dollar in circulation is ten or fifteen in a year, so one dollar will pay ten dollars' worth of debts and one hundred dollars will pay a thousand dollars' worth of debts. At the present time, however, we feel that instead of increasing the velocity of money the government has strangled trade and commerce so that money cannot circulate. I believe everything that checks the velocity of money or that comes between the producer and the consumer is a deflator, that it will lower the prices of farms, that it will lower wages and throw men out of employment. I believe that the closer together you can bring the producer and consumer the more you will actually inflate. I think a hill on a railway right of way is a deflator. A storm at sea is a deflator. A cataract on a navigable river is a deflator. These all hinder the commodities of the producer reaching the consumer. Every tariff barrier is a deflator; it reduces the wages of the labourer and throws men out of employment. Time is a deflator; if you can trade your products with some person close at hand it takes less time to make a turnover.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): I think the hon. member is wandering away from the resolution. He has been discussing a subject that has only the remotest connection, if any at all, with the resolution.

Mr. BLAIR: I will try to tie up my remarks with the resolution and put myself in order.

An hon. MEMBER: Go ahead.

Mr. BLAIR: No, I think the chairman is quite right. What I mean is this. If we deflate money, that has a tendency to reduce wages and throw men out of employment. Now, I hold that if we can trade with a country close to us—and I believe that my hon. friends opposite are talking about reciprocity with the United States—then it is better for us to try to trade with people right at our elbow rather than with people three thousand miles away.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): Does the hon. member think he is on the resolution now?

Mr. BLAIR: Yes; I submit that what I am saying now is quite relevant to the motion before the house.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): I am afraid the hon. member is not speaking to the resolution.

Mr. BLAIR: The chairman will see the relevancy of my remarks in a moment. The high rate of interest is a deflator and it lowers the wages of men and throws others out of employment. The Ontario government raised the rate of interest to six per cent, with the result that farmers could not get mortgages on their farms, nor could townsmen get mortgages on their houses. Did that interfere with employment? I think it certainly did. The banks refused to lend money to the farmers and, inasmuch as farmers could not afford to hire help, that added to the unemployment of farm labour.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): I must really rule the hon. member out of order.

Mr. SPENCE: Do you talk like that at home?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): The resolution to which the hon. member is supposed to be speaking is:

That it is expedient to introduce a measure to continue in force the provisions of the Relief Act, 1932, until the 31st of March, 1934.

Mr. VALLANCE: But there is an amendment before the house, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): The amendment is only an addition to the resolution.

Mr. DUFF: Will you please read the amendment, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): The amendment is:

That this resolution be amended by adding thereto the following words:

"provided, however, that the amount to be paid for direct relief for the fiscal year ending the 31st of March, 1934, shall not exceed the sum of $20,000,000.

That does not bring the hon. member's remarks into order.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): It is just as funny on the amendment as on the main motion.

Mr. BLAIR: Hon. members may regard the matter as funny but it is not. If I may be allowed to continue with this train of thought, may I point out that frozen credits bring about a greater degree of unemployment. Surely that has a marked relationship to the resolution, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): I would direct the hon. member's attention to the fact that we are not discussing the causes of the situation; we are asking whether, unemployment still existing, we should continue the Relief Act.

Mr. RALSTON: May I speak to the point of order. We must remember that the Unemployment Relief Act contains many provisions other than the payment of money. Section 4 of the act which it is proposed by this resolution to continue is that the governor in council shall have full power——to make all such orders and regulations as may be deemed necessary or desirable for relieving distress, providing employment and, within the competence of parliament, maintaining peace, order and good government throughout Canada.

I submit that we are in order in discussing any measure which the governor in council might possibly take having in view the relief of distress, the provision of employment, or the maintenance of peace, order and good government. Section 2 is very much in the same words but deals particularly with the payment of moneys out of the consolidated revenue fund for any of the purposes indicated. I submit therefore that this debate is a good deal wider than most debates on ordinary resolutions. This resolution precedes a bill which is intended to extend an act permitting action in any form, and any hon. member can suggest anything that relates to any of the objects contemplated.

Mr. GORDON: My hon. friend has been reading from the 1931 legislation, but that is not the legislation we contemplate extending for a year. The legislation with which this legislation has to do is that of 1932.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: The only difference is that the clause with regard to peace, order and good government is dropped.

Mr. GORDON: At one time that was quite an important subject.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, it was.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Bury): The hon. member who has the floor frankly admitted that he was wandering from the subject and I ask him in fairness to the committee to keep as close to the subject as he can.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): And that will be far enough away.

Mr. BLAIR: I was referring to deflation. Mr. Austen Chamberlain, I would point out, set his heart upon deflating and asked the bankers to assist him in 1920. What were the consequences? The people bought less; interest increased; scarcity of money followed with depressed industry; debts increased as money became dearer; and there was an increase in taxes. The banks at any time can restrict credits till wages fall. Lord Rothermere pointed out that the gold standard benefited the bankers by restoring the prestige of currency, but it put an unbearable handicap on industry and farming.

Mr. VALLANCE: I am sorry that the Prime Minister is not in his place this evening. He took it upon himself this afternoon to read many of us a curtain lecture. He accused some members of the opposition of using the present position of the country for political purposes. While listening to him I was reminded of an old high school teacher I had as a boy in Scotland. We used to have a debate every Friday afternoon and this fellow was always chosen as critic, and on more than one occasion he pointed out that anyone participating in debate who had no argument to advance usually resorted to abuse. That statement came to my mind this afternoon while I listened to the Prime Minister. He accused some of us of using the present condition of the country for political purposes. I would remind him of some of his campaign speeches in 1930, and would leave it to the house and to the people of Canada to decide whether at that time he tried or did not try not only to make capital out of the condition the country was in then, but to magnify it many times. I should like to repeat some of them because I think they would stand reiterating. We had better go out to the Pacific coast first of all and see what he said to the people out there. Incidentally he did not win all the seats out there; we have four members right here in spite of the promises he made. Speaking at Victoria on June 17, he said:

> You have my promise that if the Conservative party is returned to power that as soon after July 28 as possible parliament will be called together to deal with the problem of unemployment by providing, not doles, but work, and that legislative action will be taken to bring about the future security of our country and the well-being of its people.
> We cannot tolerate the dole. Men and women of this country want work, not charity.
> Is there any excuse for Canada to have hard times if the government is discharging its duties as it should?

Have we had hard times since 1930? I leave it to the people of Canada to decide that after hearing the statement made by the minister of mines and immigration and colonization and labour to the effect that we have spent $115,000,000 in the relief of unemployment. I think that statement of the minister's proves that conditions to-day are much worse than they were in 1930.

What did the Prime Minister say in Regina, the capital city of the province of Saskatchewan? Speaking on June 10, he said:

> When you gamble with a nation's prosperity for power the result is inevitable. The government of to-day has not seen the to-morrow,—

We certainly did not see this day; we never thought that Canada would see a day like to-day. He continued:

> —they have only thought of to-day and thinking only of it the result has been that now we have unemployment, people walking our streets, men and women hungry,—we have all these things in this great rich country.

Are the people less hungry to-day than they were in 1930? I ask the committee to consider this question in the light of the statement made by the minister. Speaking at Vancouver on June 18 and referring to the then Prime Minister of Canada, the present leader of the opposition, he said—

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): That is all past.

Mr. VALLANCE: It is all past and you do not like to hear of it. He said:

However blind he may be to your future and deaf to your present needs, surely he cannot stop his ears with smug complacence and self-esteem to the cry that carries across the nation —the cry of the destitute and hungry, the cry of mothers and fathers and little children who call to us as Christians and as Canadians to heal their pain. I would have welcomed his cooperation in this time of national distress.

He is just about to ask for it again. He continues:

It transcends the realm of politics, it appeals to the heart of man, not to the imagination of the politician.

He was not talking to a bible class at that time. This afternoon when questioned about a certain statement which he had made he drew attention to the environment in which his statement had been made, before a bible class. I think that a man occupying the position of Prime Minister of Canada, no matter where he makes his statement, whether it be before a bible class, whether it be on the floor of the house, whether it be in Vancouver, Regina, Winnipeg or Hamilton—

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Or Battleford.

Mr. VALLANCE: Or in Battleford, if you like. I will make a statement in the most kindly way—if he does not mend his ways, he may be in Battleford. Then at Renfrew on July 16 he said:

There is no excuse for unemployment in our country. There is no excuse for poverty. We have the people and the resources. We have the capital, but capital will not allow itself to be used unless there is stability and certainty. It must not be wiped out by factories being closed down by unfair competition from abroad.

He made that statement and used the words "unfair competition." The Prime Minister's policies have been in existence since 1930 and to-day we have only twenty-five per cent of both our external and internal trade as compared with that time. I could go on and give many more quotations from the speeches made by the Prime Minister relative to the position of the unemployed but—

An hon. MEMBER: Make your own.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Go on, your's are better than his.

Mr. VALLANCE: "Was you there, Charlie?"

Unemployment was not the only problem with which the Prime Minister was going to deal; he was going to solve all the problems of Canada overnight; he was going to give relief to everything, but he has ended up by relieving the people of all they ever had. He made the statement this afternoon that forty-nine per cent of the farms of Saskatchewan were without mortgages. I challenged that statement this afternoon and I do so again to-night. It may be that forty-nine per cent of the land in the province is not at present under mortgage, but that land is not held by the farmers who are actively clutivating it. With the exception of a very small percentage of farms, the only farms without mortgages are those which have been wrested from the farmers by the mortgage companies. If this government is in power much longer it will be ninety-nine per cent, not forty-nine. I make this prediction: If the Prime Minister will take the statistics one year from now, that is if he goes to the country in one year, or, say, two years from now, he will find that the figure will be nearer to ninety-nine per cent than to forty-nine.

Mr. DUFF: The whole country is mortgaged under this government.

Mr. VALLANCE: What did he propose to do for the farmers and what has he done for the farmers? I would be just as bold in making my statements if the right hon. gentleman was present, or perhaps a little bolder.

An hon. MEMBER: You could not be.

Mr. VALLANCE: He stated that when he backed the provincial bank of Manitoba to the extent of $12,000,000, he did so in order to save the deposits of the farmers. I doubt if over three per cent of the farmers of western Canada have deposits in the banks. They owe much more to the banks than they have in the way of deposits. He talked of sound money and about conditions as they are to-day, but let me give an illustration—and I hope the chairman will not rule me out of order because I believe it has some bearing upon the subject under discussion. We think each individual in Canada is entitled to fair and just consideration. We also believe we should make equal sacrifice in the condition which we find in this country. Before I left home I was speaking to some of the farmers in my constituency. Let me take the house back to 1917 and 1918 and show it a statement given to a bank in order that credit might be extended to a farmer. Let me show the house another statement given in January, 1933, which indicated the visible assets of that farmer to be 100 per cent more than they were in 1917, yet in spite of that fact he has not to-day a statement one-third as good as he had in 1917. If that same farmer had in 1917 taken that amount of money and invested it in government bonds, he would still have the same amount of money and the interest on it would have a greater purchasing power to-day than it had in 1917. Hon. members ask: Why have you so much distress among the farmers? That is one of the reasons. The primary producer is bearing the burden. The $115,000,000 spent by this government in unemployment relief has to be paid, not by the factories, but from the great natural resources of Canada, and agriculture makes the largest contribution to it. The government has attempted to give some measure of relief to agriculture, and I hope that before the bill to be founded on this resolution is passed, the minister will be in a position to tell us just where the government stands in relation to the farmers, and especially the wheat growers of western Canada.

What did the Prime Minister promise the farmer? We know what he has done. I want to read a few of the promises he made.

Mr. DUFF: When was this?

Mr. VALLANCE: This was during the 1930 election campaign. I think the following is the choicest one of the lot. Speaking in Winnipeg, he said:

> Listen you agriculturists from the west and all the other parts of Canada, you have been taught to mock at tariffs and applaud free trade. Tell me, when did free trade fight for you? Tell me, when did free trade fight for you? You say tariffs are only for the manufacturers. I will make them fight for you as well. I will use them to blast a way into the markets that have been closed to you.

I quote merely that one. Will any member sitting behind the government or any member of the government rise in his place now and tell me of one instance where this administration has ever opened a new market, let alone blasted its way into one? Our exports show that it has not done so. It has even closed markets. The last night we were discussing this question, not under this minister, but under the Minister of Trade and Commerce, I drew to the attention of the government the fact, which they were very reluctant to admit, that we had been offered the sale to China of 50,000,000 bushels of wheat, which sale this government did not blast its way into but blasted its way out of, and this at a time when Canada needs every possible market in order to get rid of the wheat surplus we are holding. As I have said, I hope before this measure goes through that the minister of immigration, mines, labour and deportation will tell us just the position the government finds itself in to-day with regard to the wheat situation.

[Mr. Vallance.]

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Friday afternoon is usually looked upon as the parliamentary quiet week-end; it is the day that is usually chosen to put through knotty bills, agricultural estimates, difficult resolutions and that sort of thing, but this afternoon has proved to be an exception to the rule in this respect. We had a violent volcanic eruption on the part of the Prime Minister and then a sudden departure; and we have not seen him since. I was going to make the suggestion to the minister who is leading the house—it may be the Minister of Railways at this moment—that as it can be seen by the temper of this committee we are not going to get anything through to-night, they might as well take up something that we might agree on and thus save time. If, however, that is not considered advisable, I shall proceed.

What was the cause of the gaseous eruption we had this afternoon on the part of the Prime Minister? The Minister of Immigration and some other portfolies, in explaining this resolution, said that an amendment was to be made to the bill based on the resolution when the bill came before the house, and it was a very important amendment inasmuch as it meant reverting to the good old practice of responsible government and supervision of all expenditures by parliament. This is something that has been fought for by the Liberal party for nearly a hundred years and won, and for the first time departed from by this government. Does anybody think our right hon. leader, who has been noted ever since this government came into power for fighting first for the retention of that right and afterwards for the restoration of it, could, when he sees it restored, ignore the change? He could not lightly pass that up. Nobody would expect anyone in the position that my right hon. leader occupies would have let that pass without some comment. What was the comment? I have not read Hansard since, though I might have done so, but I recall quite well that no offensive language was used in making the criticism, nor was the tone offensive. In fact, the observation was particularly mild when one considers that after three years my right hon. leader has attained his objective with respect to this important matter. Yet the Prime Minister did not seem to take it in that way. I did not dream of such an eruption and explosion as a result of the fair comment of my leader. Well, it came, I suppose all of us have bad days and this may have been one of the Prime Minister's. He apparently got up on the wrong side of the bed. Those of us who have been in cabinets and know how tired we sometimes are towards the end of the week realize the situation. But I would ask his colleagues that when he gets into that frame of mind that he cannot control himself, they keep him out of the house altogether for a little while till recovery ensues. Let him not run amok for half an hour, pawing up the ground and throwing things around, and then take to the curtains—a curtain decorator. That is not fair either to the rest of us or to himself. We take no pleasure in discussing this matter in his absence. We would rather defer this resolution, and if the minister will say that he will do so, I shall stop talking about it right now. He can bring on supply. We can deal with the grain act, as the Board of Grain Commissioners are here, I understand; and there are a number of other items that we might discuss to better advantage than this resolution.

Mr. MANION: Go on. We always like to hear the hon. member.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: If the government do not choose to do that, we can continue to discuss the resolution even in the Prime Minister's absence.

As I indicated at the outset, there was no occasion for the violent language indulged in by the Prime Minister, and if the ministry want to get the session over in reasonable time, that is not the way to proceed. There is an impression abroad that as soon as our money plays out, the opposition is going to play out. That is not the case. The money may play out on the third of April, but we shall play on, especially if we get a few more scenes like this afternoon. Let hon. members make no mistake about that. An important railway bill is coming before the house on Monday and I would rather have been in a quiet frame of mind for it; but I feel we on this side have had just cause for indignation, and in the absence of the Prime Minister we are precluded from going into the matter in the way we should.

I want to commend the minister now, and I hope I can do it without any further irruptions from the treasury benches, for having reverted to the policy of having at least part of the expenditures under this bill discussed in this house. We are not possibly taking the best advantage of the opportunity at the beginning, but that is not our fault. I certainly was one of those who thought that this $20,000,000 was the entire amount that was going to be spent under this bill, but instead I find that that is only the amount for direct relief. Will the minister tell us how he arrives at that $20,000,000?

In extenuation of or excuse for the arbitrary blank cheque method of administering public moneys which this government has been practising for the last two years, the Prime Minister this afternoon made a lot of the fact that no individual could estimate the requirements of the country and specify any definite amount that would be required for relief. But you can say that of any vote in the estimates. As my right hon. leader has pointed out times without number, the Prime Minister might mention any amount he liked and my leader would let it go, and if the amount designated were not enough, the usual practice of resorting to governor general's warrants would meet any further situation that might arise. So there was no justification for departing from the regular practice of the supervision of all government expenditures by this parliament, instead of playing the dictator, mighty unsuccessfully too in this respect, until now the proper practice is about to be resorted to.

What is the trouble then, with the Prime Minister? I know it is hard to climb down. Don't we remember in this house the night the special income tax bill was climbed down from and the booby talk that was indulged in by the Prime Minister? The coon came down, however. We do not know or care whether it was head first or tail first, but he came down, and he has had to come down many times since, and will have to many times more, and the sooner the Prime Minister learns how to back away from his many blunders the better it will be for this country. He had not the grace to climb down properly and gracefully this afternoon, but instead he blew off like an extinct volcano come to life again. He has been an extinct volcano for the last month. I thought his colleagues were bringing him up, like Maggie was bringing up Jiggs, making him behave better. But even if Maggie were successful for a while Jiggs still blows off now and again as he did this afternoon. We do not want any more of that, Mr. Chairman. We do not mind it once. We do not mind having some consideration for the Prime Minister and his colleagues in their troubles in trying to bring him up, while he is trying to bring them up. Has there been one thing that they have put their hand to that they have not made a botch of in the last two years? I do not know one. They could not come down on this policy of parliamentary control of money without making a mess of it also. If the Minister of Labour had been left to himself I think he would have acted all right. He is a ponderous gentleman but I think he is a pretty good scout taken on the whole. I do not know how he came to speak of the amendment on the resolution, but since he spoke about it I presume I am also in order, Mr. Chairman, although I think he should have waited till the bill came down.

Anyway, the government has made many blunders, and the Prime Minister has not yet learned how to back down in spite of all his experience in that respect. He will have to learn soon because the way is thorny and strewn with many back-ups, and I am sure that the government will have to get a fresh pair of breeching straps on because the other ones are all worn out by this time with backing up and backing up from the sight of themselves and their evil works. Our good friend the Minister of Labour, with his more phlegmatic character, and not so much like a spirited racehorse, does not mind it so much. But they have got to do it just the same.

There are one or two other matters to which I wish to refer. The Prime Minister was continually complaining that there was no way of estimating the nature of the crop or the nature of the climate next year. Then how was this $20,000,000 estimated? There is direct relief still being given in southern Saskatchewan over a considerable area where there is no more prospect of a crop this year than there has been for the last two years, so far as the condition of the soil is concerned. The summer and fall there were exceptionally dry, the winter has been dry; there has been no snow or very little. The cars are running from Weyburn to Moose Jaw yet. The result is that the prospects in that area were never worse, and my hon. friends opposite have made an estimate under the worst possible conditions of what is likely to be required in other parts of Canada during the coming summer. If they can do that now, why not at other times? Has there been some new knowledge of meteorological conditions whereby you can forecast the rainfall for next summer? I never heard of any such new information, but if the minister has any, I wish he would tell us upon what he bases this estimate for the coming summer. If he cannot tell us, then all this fumadiddle nonsense the Prime Minister was indulging in, because that is what it was, goes by the board.

One of the statements which the Prime Minister made when he was trying to get himself out of a dilemma, although he succeeded only in getting deeper into the mire, was that the present government in Saskatchewan had inherited a legacy of a great debt from the previous government. That has not very much to do with this debate, but since the Prime Minister indulged in gross misrepresentation regarding the debt of Saskatchewan, I may say that in the last three years, since the Tory government came into power there, the debt of Saskatchewan has doubled. It was $60,000,000, in round figures, when they came in, and now it is twice that amount and more. So I would suggest to the Prime Minister that when he is speaking of Saskatchewan matters he regard the facts a little more closely. Let him go to his chief organizer, C. B. Daniel, in southern Saskatchewan, and he would get better information even from that partisan source.

I am going to deal for a little with the Saskatchewan relief commission. The hon. member for Willow Bunch has indicated to whom the relief notes were payable—to the Dominion government. The relief commission acted merely as an intermediary agent for collecting the notes. He also indicated that in the south everybody had to sign in advance a promissory note for the least little thing that would go around one's little finger before one could get anything. Contrast the violent difference between those who got relief in the south, all returnable to the government, and those who got the five-cent bonus in the north. In the northern part of the three prairie provinces, they got over $11,000,000 as a gift, and none of it was returnable. Why, you could not find fifteen children just out of high school who would make a worse muddle of administering that relief relatively between the northern and southern parts of Saskatchewan, Alberta and Manitoba. Go to any bunch of school children and their infantile minds could devise something better than hon. gentlemen opposite did on that occasion, and that has been about the size and measurement of this government on most questions.

Mr. GORDON: The hon. member for Last Mountain does not agree with you.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: They all agree with me.

Mr. GORDON: The hon. member for Last Mountain does not.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: Of course, he agrees with me. Every sensible man agrees with me except this ministry. There is not a man from the west, no matter on which side of the house he sits, who does not consider it the standing disgrace of this government the way that relief was handled in the west, because the bigger the crop a man had the more relief he got in the way of a bonus, and the less crop a man had the less the government gave him. If he had no crop at all, he got nothing except what he had to sign up for and pay for, giving promissory notes in advance or a seed grain lien on the resulting crop. Rather than go out of their way to talk about this most unjust relief distribution the government should go and bury themselves politically for the rest of their natural lives, get out of sight of their fellow men, for the disgraceful manner in which they handled that important problem.

Now I think I will give my hon. friend the minister an opportunity to speak if he will. We might get along if he would show us how he arrives at that $20,000,000 as the amount for direct relief when he has no more opportunity to-day of forecasting the requirements than he had formerly, so far as crop prospects are concerned. He has the experience of the former two years, that is admitted, but he knows nothing about rainfall next summer, and that has everything to do with the question of relief or no relief after the crop is harvested. I shall be very pleased to hear what he can say to clear that up, then we may make some progress. I think my hon. friends on the treasury benches will agree that for the last month or so those on this side of the house have been making every endeavour to facilitate the work of the session—

Mr. SPENCE: To block everything, you mean.

Mr. MOTHERWELL: I have only to point to two weeks ago to-night when, for the first time in my experience at any rate, two thirds of the estimates of the Department of Agriculture were passed in a little more than two hours. We gave them fair discussion; we did not neglect our duty, but we did our best to facilitate the work of the session. We have been doing that all along. I have been here for ten days at a time without opening my mouth. We cannot, therefore, be charged with holding up the work. But when we have such an exhibition of anger and venom as we had this afternoon, nothing like this can go through until we have some reasons given why they have changed their policy, or until the Prime Minister comes here and faces it out. That is the position I take. We should not be expected to go ahead with this vote in his absence. If he knows he is going to be absent—I can understand his being unavoidably absent; that is the misfortune of every leader; but if he knows he is going to be absent he should not give us such a fishwife tongue-thrashing immediately before he retires. I thought I had some of the grace of patience and endurance left, but I cannot stand that in silence and I am not going to, and that is all there is to it.

That is all I am going to say just now. I hope the minister can explain his change in policy or acknowledge the corn at once. If he does, I think we shall get along with the resolution, otherwise we cannot and will not.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I am going to take the time of the committee for only a few minutes. I would not have risen at all had it not been for the statement of the Minister of Labour to-night that he does not supervise expenditures made by the provinces, but endeavours to give the provinces a free hand in matters of relief. That is the way I understood the minister to express himself. This afternoon the Prime Minister said the situation in the province of Saskatchewan, and the reasons that so much money had to be advanced to that province, was due to the debts incurred by the previous Liberal government. The last speaker has referred to that, and I wish to put on Hansard the figures in connection with the situation in Saskatchewan. It is about time the Minister of Labour did see how relief moneys are being expended there.

At the time the Liberal government went out of power in Saskatchewan after being in office for twenty-four years, they left a debt of some $62,000,000. Out of that public debt they had about $10,000,000 invested in farm loans; they had about $10,000,000 in their provincial telephone system, leaving a balance of some $42,000,000 for which they had built the parliament buildings, ten or fifteen court houses, three normal schools, two tubercular sanatoria, two mental asylums, and roads and bridges. That $62,693,011.44 of debt has been increased from April 30, 1929, to December 31, 1932, to $137,819,430.97. If the province of Saskatchewan has piled up a debt such as that in some forty months, and this government, as anounced by the Prime Minister to-day, has paid most of the relief in Saskatchewan—we do know that they paid all the direct relief in the dried out area—then we would like to know as representatives of the province of Saskatchewan where the rest of the money has gone, and what it has been used for. If Conservative governments are so wonderful, as intimated by the Prime Minister, how is it that every year since they came into office in that province they have had deficits, varying from $518,177 to $5,820,289? I feel that it is time this government took steps to see how relief is being distributed in Saskatchewan, and to look after the money that they are responsible for.

I want to correct one other statement made to-night by the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Sproule), who said that prices of all farm products are higher in Canada than in the United States. I have quotations of March 1, from Chicago and Toronto. On that date, prices in Chicago, as quoted in the Chicago Tribune, on prime steers weighing from 1,000 to 1,500 pounds, were 6 cents to 7¼ cents. Making allowance for exchange the Canadian price there would be from 7 to 8½ cents. In Toronto on the same date, according to quotations in the Mail and Empire, prime steers of 1,050 pounds were worth from 3·5 to 3·6 cents.

Mr. SPROULE: If the hon. gentleman would be fair he would not take the lowest price on one market and compare with the highest price on the other.

Mr. BOTHWELL: I took the papers and gave the quotations for the latest available date. I just wished in rising to mention those two matters, in order to correct the statement made by the hon. member for East Lambton, and to draw the attention of the Minister of Labour to the fact that it is time someone was looking after relief expenditures in Saskatchewan.

Mr. HOWARD: I would like to ask the hon. minister a few questions before making the few remarks I have to make.

I understand that the advances made to the Canadian Pacific Railway under the first order in council amounted to $1,447,222.71. Can the minister tell me what the second advance is up to date?

Mr. GORDON: The second loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company was $1,000,000. I do not believe that money has yet been paid. As the order in council says —it is tabled—the money was to be devoted to payment of wages for shopmen in the various shops of the company, and to that alone, I believe. The exact amount that has been earned up to date I have not in detail, and I believe that no money has yet been paid upon the last million.

Mr. HOWARD: Then this means that on the first loan the Canadian Pacific Railway is not to pay any interest, and that the money is not to be repaid until the company earns dividends in excess of 5 per cent on its common stock. Conditions were changed in the second order in council, however. This afternoon the Prime Minister and the Minister of Labour said that these loans were made to assist the men employed in the different shops from coast to coast. Some time ago I directed a question to the Prime Minister on the orders of the day, to which I received a very evasive answer. Now I wish to press the question, though possibly I would not have done so if I had been given a proper answer previously. In the city of Sherbrooke there is a shop belonging to that branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway known as the Quebec Central. During the last three years the number of employees in this shop has been gradually decreasing; finally they closed the shop, boarded up the windows and dropped their last 125 men on the streets in addition to the other unemployed in Sherbrooke. A great many of those men were heads of families, and some twenty-five of them now are on direct relief. If the government of Canada, administering the property of the people and the money of the taxpayers, can hand over to a private corporation some $2,500,000 of public money, I ask for an equal distribution. At least that money should be spent pro rata as between the different shops from coast to coast; I think that is only a just and reasonable demand.

There is some further information which I should like, and I ask this question because of a question and answer which appear at page 1095 of Hansard. The leader of the opposition directed the following question to the Prime Minister:

Am I right in understanding that this guarantee is given under the Unemployment Relief Act?

The Prime Minister's answer was:

I believe the correct name is the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act.

So I am going to ask the Minister of Labour to tell this committee the extent to which the government of Canada has guaranteed to support the wheat market or the Canadian Cooperative Wheat Producers, Limited, in the marketing of the wheat crop of western Canada.

Mr. GORDON: With reference to the first part of the observations of the hon. member for Sherbrooke I may say that the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway and the employees saw the government on a number of occasions with regard to the closing down of what are known as the main shops. The first order in council passed with respect to loans provided for the sum of $1,447,222.71, and it affected 8,455 employees.

The shops concerned were Angus, Carleton Place, McAdam Junction, West Toronto, North Bay, Winnipeg, Ogden and Vancouver. All the money was paid in wages, as follows:

Angus	$813,989 64
Carleton Place	11,103 58
McAdam Junction	22,461 25
West Toronto	58,924 93
North Bay	27,326 92
Winnipeg	319,175 98
Ogden	156,041 18
Vancouver	38,199 23

That order in council was passed under the provisions of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act, 1931. The next order in council that was passed in order to keep these men at work was dated December 22, 1932, and provided for an advance not to exceed $1,000,000, to be devoted to the payment of wages to employees in the shops. The loan is to be paid back to the government before any further dividends on the common stock of the Canadian Pacific railway are declared and paid. The work has been done but the money was not to be advanced until the spring.

With regard to the other question asked by the hon. member, it is unfortunate that the Prime Minister is not in his seat just now. He is engaged with a committee of western farmers, discussing with them some of their problems. If the debate cannot go on without the answer desired by my hon. friend from Sherbrooke I will move that the committee rise, but if the answer can be delayed until the prime minister is able to be present I see no reason why the debate should not proceed.

Mr. HOWARD: I will let the question stand, so long as the debate is to continue. But let me bring up this further point. Does the minister consider that the men in Montreal, in Calgary or in Vancouver are more important or stand in any different position from that of the men working in the shops in the city of Sherbrooke?

Mr. GORDON: I would not care to express an opinion one way or the other. The Canadian Pacific Railway and their employees made representations to the government, and I take it that the Canadian Pacific Railway and its employees probably knew better than anyone else could know where they could keep the men on and do the work that required to be done to the best advantage and for the benefit of the greatest number. I do not think the hon. member himself would suggest that the government should inject itself into the management of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I think we have had quite enough experience in the management of railways in the past.

Mr. HOWARD: Evidently the minister has not read the proposed railway bill. I understand that this direct relief is handled by the Canadian Pacific Railway and not by the provinces.

Mr. GORDON: No, this is a loan to the company.

Mr. HOWARD: But it has no connection with the provinces, so it must come directly under the control of the Minister of Labour.

Mr. GORDON: That is not correct. The loan was made under the provisions of the act which permits a transaction of this character with a corporation deemed to be a public corporation under the act. I do not think anyone would debate the point that the Canadian Pacific Railway is a public corporation within the meaning of the act.

Mr. HOWARD: Does the minister mean to say he has no jurisdiction over what they do with a straight loan?

Mr. GORDON: The orders in council provide that the money shall be devoted towards the payment of wages to the workmen in the shops of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. HOWARD: Then it is only fair that the workmen should be properly treated. I am not asking the government to pay relief money or give work to men who are not entitled to it, but, according to seniority, the men have exactly as much claim to assistance, and in fact a little more in some respects, if that is a government loan to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I would ask the minister to see to it that the Canadian Pacific Railway Quebec Central shops in Sherbrooke are given a square deal so long as other shops from coast to coast in Canada are assisted under this vote. I am not at the moment sanctioning the loan, nor am I criticizing it; I will give my opinion in that regard later on. But as the money has been taken—the money of the taxpayers—and handed over to a private corporation without interest, on terms, I submit, and I am satisfied to stand by the judgment of the country in this, that it is not fair or just to leave 125 men out on the streets in Sherbrooke and to specify certain other places where this money may be used as the company deems fit.

The other question is very much more serious, due to the greater amount involved. Before we pass this resolution it is important to the taxpayers of Canada to know to what extent this government is obligated in actual dollars and cents in connection with guarantees to the banks. In view of the statements made this afternoon I would go further. The Prime Minister this afternoon asked whether any man would dare to get up and say that we should not have guaranteed the provincial bank of Manitoba. That is not the situation. The Prime Minister refused to guarantee the provincial bank of Manitoba but he guaranteed the chartered banks in Canada when they took over the assets of the provincial bank of Manitoba.

Mr. GORDON: That statement cannot go unchallenged. The situation was as explained by the Prime Minister with respect to what is known as the provincial savings offices in Manitoba. There is no doubt that the premier of that province and his colleagues had of necessity to do something with somebody in order to render it possible for the depositors, numbering some 43,000 in Manitoba, to have the right to withdraw their moneys from provincial institutions set up by the province, and if help was not forthcoming from some quarter they could not have done so. So far as this government is concerned, the guarantee certainly was given to the banks and they took over the liabilities. For my part, I do not see how anyone could have done otherwise, and I think it would have been quite a serious matter, perhaps more serious than we sometimes think, if the provincial savings office of Manitoba had been permitted to go to the wall and it had been proclaimed in this country that a province had set up such an institution and had failed to take the necessary steps to enable the institution to protect depositors. This the province did, and the dominion guaranteed the banks against loss.

Mr. HOWARD: I understood from the Prime Minister's own statement this afternoon that he had guaranteed the bank of Manitoba, or their depositors, to save their money.

Mr. GORDON: He did not say that.

Mr. HOWARD: He guaranteed the chartered banks and they took over the assets of the bank of Manitoba. Well, those guarantees should be added in. I am quite willing to give all the help I can to the government and to cooperate with them in any way I can. But if they do not do some of the things which I think they should do under present conditions, I intend to criticize them, and if they do those things I am prepared to give them one hundred per cent of cooperation. This country is in an extraordinary condition to-day and if the government does not place fairly and openly before parliament, the people's representatives, the exact state of affairs and inform the people precisely where we are, I do not think it is playing fair; it is not the proper course to follow.

[Mr. Howard.]

The minister this afternoon estimated that it would require $20,000,000 to carry on his direct relief. I have no criticism to offer in that regard, but I suggest that the government at some stated time, as of January 31, December 31 or March 1, any day they choose, should indicate to the people to what extent the country is obligated in connection with guarantees in the marketing of wheat. I had a peculiar experience this week. A gentleman came to my office and asked me whether I could ascertain for him how many million bushels of wheat the government controlled in western Canada. I failed to see at the moment what he was driving at but I told him I would try to get the information for him. He said: "I know how many bushels are in the hands of the western farmers and how many million bushels are held by private elevator companies, and I have a good idea of what the market demand is in foreign countries. Now I am a speculator in the wheat market and have been all my life, but I do not know what to do, nor does anybody know what to do, so long as the government of Canada interferes with the natural course of business". That shed a new light on the subject for me. I had not known so much about it before but then I realized the seriousness of it. In other words, if he thought that there was to be a rise he would buy wheat; but he does not dare to do so because the Canadian government, with the taxpayers' money, is interfering with legitimate trade, preventing either a rise or a fall, so that people do not know whether the trend is going to be upwards or downwards under general conditions. Ordinarily the law of supply and demand regulates the prices of commodities in any line, but in this instance the government interferes with commodity prices and I think we have a right to know to what extent we are obligated at the present time under the guarantee. We have a right to know that before we pass this resolution.

I have been surprised that the Prime Minister of Canada has become so pessimistic. I am not pessimistic, even though conditions are tough, but I do think that speeches such as those the Prime Minister delivered in Hamilton, in Toronto and before the railway men of Canada will not help the situation. He knows, as well as everyone else, that after that speech Canadian Pacific Railway stock dropped from five to ten points in foreign countries—France, England and Germany unloaded Canadian securities right and left. Now, if there is one country in the world that is solvent to-day it is Canada, for we have more assets per capita than any other country. In spite of these hard times our situation is better than that of any other country and we ought to stand together and be optimistic and use good judgment in an effort to meet the situation.

An hon. MEMBER: That sounds good.

Mr. HOWARD: You bet, and I feel that way. The hon. member for East Lambton quoted figures in regard to agricultural products, and the other night the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi made a speech, and sent out to the eastern townships hundreds of copies of it, which did not give the facts. I wish to give the facts. I asked the dominion statistician to give me figures, and I do not think that hon. members will dispute them. I usually quote figures from the market in my own constituency and from the Montreal market, but here are figures from the dominion statistician. The question has been asked, "Are we Canadian farmers not satisfied when our commodities in Canada are the highest of any place in the world to-day?" That is what the hon. member for East Lambton said a moment ago; that is what the hon. member for Brome-Missisquoi said, and that is what the hon. member for Compton repeated. Here are the real figures, and if it is desired that they should be put on Hansard in tabulated form I shall be glad to give them. The tabulation given is for Montreal, No. 1 pasteurized eastern butter and New York creamery extra butter, so there can be no question that the figures given are upon the same basis. In January, 1932, the price at Montreal was 20·9 cents as against 23·7 cents in New York. Yet we are told that the prices are higher in Canada than in the United States. In February the price at Montreal was 18·3 and at New York 22·6. In November the prices were 20·8 cents and 23·2 cents respectively. The last figures given are for December, the last price obtainable from the bureau, just three months ago, and they are 21·5 cents and 23·9 cents respectively. Unfortunately we are getting less for our products than is being obtained in the United States. Using the figures given in another way, we find that in January 1928 the price at Montreal was 35·5 cents per pound as against 20·9 cents in 1932; in February, 36·5 cents as against 18·3 cents; in November, 39·9 cents as against 20·8 cents, and in December, 40·6 cents as against 21·5 cents.

Mr. SHAVER: Will the hon. member quote the spread in prices between Montreal and New York for 1928?

Mr. HOWARD: 35·5 and 48·9; 36·5 and 46·5; 39·9 and 50·7 and 40·6 and 50·8.

Mr. SHAVER: The spread was four times as great four years ago.

Mr. SPROULE: The hon. member for Willow Bunch was not quoting to-day's prices, and the hon. member is now quoting prices for one or two years back. We were talking of to-day's prices.

Mr. BROWN: The hon. member gave you to-day's prices on beef.

Mr. HOWARD: Let us take the spread in 1930. In January the prices were 37·6 for Montreal and 36·1 for New York; in February, 36·2 and 35·5; in November 29·4 and 36·1 and in December, 28·8 and 32·0. I will give the committee the prices on pork for 1932 as quoted in Montreal and New York. For January the prices were $16.50 in Montreal and $17·125 in New York. These prices are per barrel of two hundred pounds. In February the prices were $16.50 and $16·719; in November, $16 and $16·450, and in December, $16 and $14·750. The beef prices also showed a difference between Montreal and New York. For January, 1932, they were 11·3 cents per pound in Montreal and 14·5 cents per pound in New York; in February, 11·3 and 13·0; in November, 8·0 and 15·0 and in December, 8·3 in Canada, and 13·5 in the United States.

Mr. SPROULE: I quoted Chicago prices, and that is where the bulk of this stuff goes.

Mr. HOWARD: In January, 1932, the price of fish in Halifax was $8 per barrel of 205 pounds as against $13.12 in New York; in February, the prices were $8 and $12.30; in November, $4.75 and $11.48, and in December, $4.75 and $12.30.

Mr. SPROULE: I quoted Chicago and I defy the hon. member to quote anything different.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Maloney): I must say to the hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Sproule) that the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Howard) has the floor.

Mr. HOWARD: I think it is only fair that these figures should be placed upon Hansard. I regret that the prices for our products are as low as they are and I am willing to give all the cooperation I can to the government to help raise the prices of our products. I say that in all sincerity and I think the minister knows I am sincere. However, I think the truth should be told and that we should not try to bluff the people.

Mr. SPROULE: I ask the hon. member to withdraw. I never quoted anything but Chicago and I defy him to change that.

Mr. BROWN: You did not quote any prices.

An hon. MEMBER: Chicago versus New York.

An hon. MEMBER: The Maroons win.

Mr. HOWARD: Going back to government loans, there is just one more thing I should like to say. If the government is going to lend money to corporations and the Canadian Pacific Railway should be included, I ask that it be stipulated that they treat the employees in one of their shops, according to their seniority rights, in exactly the same way as they treat the employees in other shops in Canada—give Sherbrooke the same treatment as Vancouver.

Mr. RALSTON: Mr. Chairman, I want to say just a few words about the general presentation which the minister made in introducing the resolution and deal with one or two matters in connection with which I presume the minister will be prepared to give information when the committee next considers this resolution.

In the first place may I say with all due deference that it was exceedingly hard for members of the house and the committee to get any intelligent and general idea of the broad outlines of the scheme which the minister was presenting. We had the idea that this government had started out with direct relief accompanied by a certain amount of relief works. We have heard subsequently, and it is always emphasized, that due to the opinion expressed by the provincial governments at the conference, the matter of public works has been abandoned. I submit that it has been very difficult to extract anything definite from the minister's statement the other day as to what the policy of this government is with regard to relief. The government is supposed to have been doing its best for the last three years to make good its election promises, or if not to make good its election promises at least to give some relief in the meantime. In spite of this we find the minister coming down with a hodgepodge, if I may so call it, or a patchwork in the shape of a policy consisting of a variety of disjointed and spasmodic spurts. All that has been done and all that has been proposed by this government is that we put an unlimited amount of money at the disposal of the Minister of Finance or the Minister of Labour and that when somebody comes up for this or that thing, a hand will be dipped in the bag and the money handed out.

Let me give some idea of the variety of projects towards which this money has been devoted. According to the minister's statement the other night, the first thing he always mentions in making up his accounts against the provinces is the advances for the federal government's share of relief work. I submit that that item should not be in there at all because the federal government's share of relief work should not be charged to the provinces; it should be by way of a direct grant. Hon. members will remember that the other night the minister solemnly went through the formality of quoting about five or six cases. On the one side he charged up to the provinces the advance for the federal government's share of the relief works and on the other side he credited the expenditure which the federal government should make, and the net result was nothing.

One of the next items that he mentions in his charges against the provincial governments is the loans for the provincial governments' share of the public works. Those are the items which give a good deal of concern. The minister makes up his totals in two or three ways. In one breath he says: Last year we paid out for direct relief something like $7,000,000. Then he says the total to date of accounts paid and credits against advances amounts to $11,207,874.72; and then he says that the total expenditure for federal relief will not exceed $25,000,000. But as was pointed out this afternoon, he does not include in that loans to provinces.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): He never said that he did.

Mr. RALSTON: It is something we have to consider when we are finding out what is done under this act, because what is proposed under this resolution is that a bill which will be founded on it will extend the full provisions of the act as regards not only paying direct relief but making loans as well. Therefore we should have some sort of succinct statement showing the amount of these loans. My figures are only very rough, but I am giving them in order that there may be on Hansard a statement bringing together all the figures given by the minister in this regard. I took them down as the minister made his speech and, while they are subject to some correction, they give roughly the totals of the net amounts loaned or granted to the different provinces. They are in round figures:

Prince Edward Island	$ 14,630
Nova Scotia	213,000
New Brunswick	38,000
Quebec	1,389,000
Ontario	2,633,000
Manitoba	8,000,000
Saskatchewan	20,900,000
Alberta	6,178,000
British Columbia	5,800,000

In addition to that there are the figures for the wheat bonus:

Manitoba	$1,100,000
Saskatchewan	5,000,000
Alberta	5,857,000

In putting these on record, I do so with the statement that they were noted just roughly as the minister was speaking, and they may be subject to very substantial corrections, although I think the figures so far as I understand them represent in round numbers the amounts of money which have been advanced to the different provinces under the act by way of loan or advance.

This gives us a picture so far as the provinces are concerned. Now let us return to the different projects for which this money was paid. The minister says that direct relief was the headliner and the main avenue through which unemployment was to be assisted. As regards direct relief, he says in his speech that we spent something like $7,851,000. But, as he said, there were many other projects besides that, and he elaborated at great length the back to the land movement which had been inaugurated. If I am correct, the total amount spent on the back to the land movement for all the families that had been put back on the land and assuming that they are all settled properly, is less than half a million dollars in comparison with advances, loans and everything else amounting to something like $55,000,000.

Another item that he spoke on was the Banff-Jasper highway, the total amount for it being $367,000. Then there was flood prevention on the Assiniboine river, $5,000, and a small sum, only $3,000, through the Department of Agriculture for fitting up boats in connection with the export of cattle. The total amount for a much heralded scheme by the Department of National Defence for the building of airways across Canada was some $93,000. Therefore when one comes to look at the whole picture the direct relief item is the big one. Summing up the projects, big and little, in this confused policy: there is the land settlement of which I have already spoken; advances for homeless and single men; the Saskatchewan relief commission, area "A" and area "B," the amount for which is included in the sum I mentioned for Saskatchewan; amounts for seed grain; for New York commitments, which means advances to make up deficiencies of exchange on provincial commitments payable in the United States—these are all under the unemployment relief act which he proposes to extend this year—wheat bonus; relief camps; Banff-Jasper highway, which I mentioned a minute ago; Manitoba dykes, the airways, and items called non-recoverable advances. They are all under the relief act, and they justify what I said a minute ago that whenever money was wanted for some particular purpose the thing to do was to go to the government and the government reached into the bag provided by parliament and handed out the money under the act called the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act. There was also something like $200,000 for moving Nova Scotia coal and a small amount for repatriation.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Does the hon. member oppose the item for moving Nova Scotia coal?

Mr. RALSTON: I am not opposing any of these items; I am simply trying to get before the country in intelligible fashion the expenditures which have been made and the objects to which they have been devoted, in order to show that this is a somewhat important bill and that the committee is entitled to all the information it can get with regard to the classification of expenditures which are to be made.

Mr. STEVENS: May I interrupt my hon. friend for a moment? Was the item of the wheat bonus, which was quite considerable, not under separate legislation? Just as a matter of accuracy, I think it is.

Mr. RALSTON: All I am saying is that the Minister of Labour referred to it in his speech, and I took it to be under this legislation.

Mr. GORDON: I think it is under separate legislation, but I referred to it in passing.

Mr. RALSTON: I took it to be that the amount had been spent under this measure.

Mr. STEVENS: Under separate legislation.

Mr. RALSTON: Then there are other matters. The hon. member for Sherbrooke mentioned one of them. Quite a number of things have been done under the power given the government by this act. One is the advances to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I presume the guarantees which have been given in connection with the Beauharnois project have been made under this legislation. The committee has a right to find out what has been done in connection with that. There is also the matter of the "flyer" which was taken by the government in wheat futures and which has been referred to by the hon. member for Sherbrooke. Provincial highway construction has also played some part in connection with unemployment relief work. These are matters in connection with which the minister should be prepared to give us information.

I want to say a word with regard to the attitude the minister took this afternoon as to the request of the hon. member for St. Boniface. The minister technically is quite right in stating that he administers the matter through the provincial government and then through the municipalities. But I submit to him—and I submit it to him perhaps more forcibly because I have in my own constituency some cases which are in somewhat the same position as that in the constituency of the hon. member for St. Boniface—his pledge to the people of Canada was that this government would see that the people would not go without food, shelter or clothing. That was a pledge made by the federal government. There was nothing in that which indicated that one would have to apply to the municipality, the municipality to the province and then the province to the federal government. If a situation arises where a province falls down or a municipality does not do the proper thing by its people, my hon. friend in carrying out the obligation he has assumed must see to it that direct relief is furnished if necessary. He has not done his full duty by saying: Why do you not go to the provincial government or to the municipality? The people are starving; they need this food, shelter and clothing which was promised them, and he has no right, particularly when he knows the provincial situation which was brought to his attention by the hon. member for St. Boniface, to ask them to wait until some time in the future and after application is made to the Manitoba government. I have the same condition in my constituency. Individuals there, not groups, are writing me from time to time. I just happen to have a letter here which I brought with me to the committee, written on February 13, complaining bitterly with regard to conditions in the district of Shag Harbour, Shelburne county. My correspondent is a man by the name of Waybret, who says:

> What the poor people want to know or if they have made any allowance what a poor person should have for a month's food. That is, a person that has nothing. We have poor people here who have nothing, not so much as clothes. But the poor pepole are not particular what variety of food they have as long as they can get enough to keep from starving till they can go to fishing again.

I shall be glad to read the whole letter to the committee, but the important part is this:

> Just imagine what you can get for your dinner for two cents and a quarter, three-quarters of a loaf of bread for twenty-four hours, what it amounts to, and the people can't no way live on it, and there is lots of people going hungry for want of food.

He encloses a list of eight people, giving their names, who he says cannot live on seven cents a day.

Mr. GORDON: I have never yet heard since I have been in the Labour department of any place in Canada where the municipality or the province has a schedule as low, or anything like as low, as seven or four cents a day.

Mr. RALSTON: I do not know about the schedules in other places, and I did not know about this schedule until I got this letter.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): Do you know if it is correct?

Mr. RALSTON: This letter is from a reliable chap down there.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): I bet it is not correct. I make you a sporting offer.

Mr. RALSTON: I am giving it to the committee. My hon. friend may know about his own constituency, but I think I know about mine. That is the scale that is given, according to this letter, and I am bringing it to the attention of the minister for the purpose of emphasizing this: I do not think the minister ought simply to say they should go to the municipality, and the municipality to the province.

Mr. GORDON: Would my hon. friend suggest that the Dominion government should go down to Yarmouth or any place and individually administer relief?

Mr. RALSTON: I am saying that if it is necessary my hon. friend will have to do that if he carries out his pledge.

Mr. GORDON: I did not pledge anything.

Mr. RALSTON: I know exactly what my hon. friend pledged. He said the Dominion government would see to it, as I understood him, and he will correct me if I am wrong, that no one in the Dominion of Canada would go without food, clothing or shelter.

Mr. GORDON: Yes, but surely, Mr. Chairman, when I made the statement in substance that every available dollar in the federal treasury would be devoted, if necessary, towards seeing that our people shall not suffer this winter on account of lack of food or clothing or fuel or shelter, I had a right to assume that the provinces were governed by decent, respectable Canadians, and I have no reason to think that they are not.

Mr. RALSTON: That does not answer anything at all. My hon. friend was not assuming and did not suggest that he was assuming anything. He was giving that pledge to the people of the Dominion of Canada, and that is why I am saying to my hon. friend that I do not think he is treating the situation quite fairly when he refers the hon. member for St. Boniface to the municipality. This is an emergency. My hon. friend has bitten it off and has taken the responsibility, and he ought at least to investigate, and not simply sit back and say: "We have not any reports from the provincial government," because a good many people can go hungry before a municipality or a province moves in connection with the matter. That is the point I am making, and my hon. friend should not stand on ceremony, as apparently he is doing in connection with some of these matters. It is all very well to say that it is a municipal or provincial charge. The good old constitution is serving its purpose with my hon. friend just now. But he has taken that responsibility, and I submit that he should do whatever is necessary to see that relief reaches these people.

Just to open the matter of the advances with regard to what I may call wheat futures, I do not think the orders in council which were passed in connection with that matter have yet been put on the records of this house. They have been referred to by the public press, and the Prime Minister some time ago made a statement in the house, but the orders in council have not yet been put on record. I do not want to take up the time or the space in Hansard to read them through; all I want to do, if I can, is at least to begin to summarize them.

The first one—I think this is the first—is P.C. 2238, passed on September 12, 1931. It recites a report from the Minister of Finance under the Unemployment and Farm Relief Act of 1931, and of an undertaking—hon. members will note this—> —of an undertaking on behalf of the government, made before the session of parliament at which the said act was passed, to implement by legislation—

A certain recommendation, which was that certain chartered banks, namely, the Bank of Montreal, the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Bank of Toronto, the Canadian Bank of Commerce, the Royal Bank of Canada, the Dominion Bank, and the Imperial Bank of Canada, should be guaranteed the amounts of money advanced by them to an association or company known as the Cooperative Wheat Producers Limited:

> —hereinafter called "Wheat Producers," and interest thereon until repayment as agreed between the said banks and Wheat Producers in connection with and incidental to the marketing of the wheat and other grains grown in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta in the year 1930 and delivered to or in process of delivery to Wheat Producers, and including advances for purchases of wheat or other grains deemed necessary by Wheat Producers to secure the advantageous sale of such grains already delivered to or to be delivered to Wheat Producers.

That clause beginning with the words "and including" is of particular importance in connection with the transactions which subsequently took place.

There is a recommendation in the order in council that the guarantee should become operative and payment should be made out of the consolidated revenue fund of Canada when all or practically all of such wheat has been sold or realized upon, less expenses.

Progress reported.

At eleven o'clock the house adjourned, without question put, pursuant to standing order.

Monday, March 6, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

UNEMPLOYMENT RELIEF

Mr. GORDON: I desire to lay on the table of the house certain orders in council passed pursuant to the relief legislation.

PETITION

Mr. ROSS W. GRAY (West Lambton): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the house a petition signed by Charles Hayward and over nine hundred other farmers residing in the constituency which I have the honour to represent. The petition is addressed to the Minister of Finance.

Mr. SPEAKER: The petition is directed to the Minister of Finance and should have been presented to him, not to the house. The references of the hon. member to the petition will be struck out.

DUTY ON BRITISH IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. W. D. EULER (North Waterloo): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of National Revenue (Mr. Ryckman) based on an article which appeared in a Toronto financial paper a few days ago. This article stated that when Great Britain went off the gold standard wholesale prices of commodities in that country were seven per cent lower than Canadian prices but that they had increased until now they are seven per cent higher than Canadian prices, an increase of fourteen or fifteen per cent. My question is whether the government has given or will give consideration to the propriety of altering the basis for duty on British imports from the old par value of $4.86\frac{2}{3}$ to conform with the alterations in the prices of commodities in Great Britain.

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (Minister of National Revenue): I have not seen the article to which my hon. friend refers, but so far as my knowledge goes I think the facts stated are not quite correct. I shall be glad to consider the matter and give an answer to-morrow.

PENSION LEGISLATION

On the orders of the day:

Mr. C. G. POWER (Quebec South): I should like to ask the Minister of Pensions and National Health (Mr. MacLaren) if the rumour which appeared in the press to-day to the effect that pension legislation will be introduced shortly is true.

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): In reply to the hon. member's question I may say that a bill will be brought down this session containing amendments to the Pensions Act.

NEW ZEALAND BUTTER

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to ask the Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Stevens) whether he is prepared now to answer the question I directed to him last Thursday.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): What was the question to which my hon. friend refers?

Mr. REID: I will read the question as it appears in Hansard for Thursday last:

Have any representations been made to him by any dairymen's associations or other interests in British Columbia in connection with the increased sale of New Zealand butter at prices which it is claimed will be disastrous to the farmers of British Columbia? If so, what steps have been taken to protect the dairymen?

Mr. STEVENS: Representations have been made and all reasonably adequate steps have been taken.

WHEAT MARKETING BOARD

On the orders of the day:

Mr. CAMERON R. McINTOSH (North Battleford): I should like to direct a question to the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett). In view of the further representations which were made last week by representatives of the western pools in regard to a national wheat marketing board I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has any additional information to give the house beyond that which he gave on Monday February 13.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I have advised the representatives of the pools that the government has no intention of setting up a national wheat marketing board at this session.

NEW WESTMINSTER PENITENTIARY

On the orders of the day:

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie) based on a communication which has just reached me with regard to some trouble in the New Westminster penitentiary. I wonder if the Minister of Justice has any report on the matter.

Hon. HUGH GUTHRIE (Minister of Justice): I have had no recent information of any trouble at all in that penitentiary. Some three or four weeks ago I received a report that a disturbance had been planned, at all events, involving some seven or eight prisoners, but nothing serious developed although I may tell my hon. friend that I have received warnings from outside the penitentiary that an effort is being made to stir up trouble there. That came to me through an intercepted communication from outside, and it was back about the beginning of January. No trouble of any kind has occurred there so far.

Mr. BRASSET:

For a copy of all letters, correspondence, telegrams and report of the investigation into the resignation of Willie Mainville, as postmaster of Grande-Vallee, Gaspe county.

INGONISH HARBOUR, N.S., LIGHT KEEPER

Mr. DUFF:

For a copy of all letters, telegrams, memoranda and other documents exchanged between the Minister of Marine or any of his officials and any person or persons in the province of Nova Scotia, regarding the dismissal of George MacDonald as lightkeeper at Ingonish harbour; also memorandum giving charges against said lightkeeper with copy of any evidence or reports made by William Noblett the commissioner investigating the charges against said MacDonald.

PORT DANIEL CENTRE POST OFFICE

Mr. MARCIL:

For a copy of all telegrams, petitions, correspondence and other documents in the possession of the Post Office Department, regarding the dismissal of the postmaster at Port Daniel Centre, and the appointment of a new postmaster, during the year 1932. Also a copy of all evidence taken and report made by the commissioner in connection with the matter.

GRANBY, QUE., AIRDROME

Mr. TETREAULT:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, letters, reports, and other documents, exchanged between the Department of National Defence or any official of the department and the promoters of the airdrome at Granby, Quebec, and the former member of Shefford, Mr. Ernest Boivin.

QUEBEC INDIAN LANDS

Mr. TETREAULT:

For a copy of all correspondence, telegrams, reports and communications exchanged between the government of the province of Quebec and the federal department of justice, since 1920, respecting the claim of $300,000 made by the province of Quebec in connection with Indian affairs.

ST. ISIDORE-COULOMBE, QUE., MAIL CONTRACT

Mr. BOULANGER:

For a copy of all letters, petitions and other documents on file in the Post Office Department, respecting the application of Mr. Jos. Dallaire, junior, of St. Isidore, county of Dorchester, for a contract to carry the mail from the Canadian National Railways station at St. Isidore to the Coulombe post office.

FREIGHT RATES ON GRAIN

Mr. REID:

For a copy of all correspondence, letters, and telegrams exchanged between the Minister of Railways and Canals or any other minister of the government, and the premier or any minister of the government of British Columbia or any other person, regarding the matter of the reduction of freight rates on grain or grains used for domestic purposes, since the 1st of December, 1932, up to the present time, and including copy of suggestions as contained in the joint letter of Mr. Stephen, acting vice-president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and Mr. Fraser, vice-president of the Canadian National Railways, sent to the Hon. Mr. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals, on the 1st of February, 1933.

Mr. MANION: I have no objection to this motion passing, but in a large measure it has already been answered; as a matter of fact the essential parts of it have already been tabled. I tabled them a few days ago, but if there are other telegrams and letters that have not been brought down I shall be glad to table them.

Mr. REID: What has been tabled?

Mr. MANION: The essential parts with respect to grains, and the letter from Mr. Stephen and Mr. Fraser. In fact, pretty nearly all that the hon. gentleman asks for has been tabled. However, I will look into the matter and table anything else that is affected by the motion.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Dropped.

Mr. REID: No, Mr. Speaker, it is not dropped.

Mr. SPEAKER: I did not understand the minister to say dropped.

Mr. MANION: I have no objection to the motion carrying, but as I have pointed out most of the information has already been tabled.

Mr. SPEAKER: Carried.

Motion agreed to.

FEDERAL DISTRICT COMMISSION

Mr. CHEVRIER (for Mr. Fournier):

For a copy of all reports, letters, telegrams, recommendations, contracts, documents and other papers in the files of the Federal District Commission, respecting the purchase of a piece of land on Laurier street, Hull, for the purpose of creating a park and playground.

Mr. BENNETT: The hon. member in whose name this notice of motion stands is not present, but in any event I think the motion belongs to that class which should not be passed by this house. None of the documents referred to are in the custody or possession or under the control of the government of Canada. The Federal District Commission is an independent body transacting its own business using, it is true, money which we provide them with and with respect to which they make an annual report which is tabled in the house and which, under the practice, may be reviewed by the committee on public accounts. I do not think the motion should pass.

Mr. SPEAKER: The motion will be dropped.

CONTRACTS UNDER PREVIOUS GOVERNMENT

Mr. BOULANGER:

For a copy of all contracts granted by the preceding administration that were revoked or modified by the present administration since taking office to date.

TREASURY DEBENTURES AND BONDS

Mr. BOULANGER:

For copies of the debentures and bonds of the treasury of the Dominion of Canada printed under chapter 71 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, printed and published in pursuance of section 133 of the British North America Act and section 10, chapter 2 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927.

CANADIAN COINAGE

Mr. BOULANGER:

For specimens of Canadian gold, silver, nickel and bronze coins minted under the authority of chapter 40 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, printed and published in pursuance of section 133 of the British North America Act, and section 10, chapter 2 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927.

DOMINION NOTES

Mr. BOULANGER:

For copies of Dominion notes issued and printed under chapter 41 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, printed and published in pursuance of section 133 of the British North America Act and section 10, chapter 2 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927.

Mr. BOULANGER:

For a copy of the contract granted by the government of the Dominion of Canada for the printing of Dominion notes issued under chapter 41 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927, printed and published pursuant to section 133 of the British North America Act and section 10, chapter 2 of the revised statutes of Canada, 1927.

BILINGUAL COINAGE AND CURRENCY

Mr. BOULANGER:

For a copy of all correspondence or petitions forwarded to the government or any member of the ministry, by any person or association, requesting the coinage of Dominion metallic currency and the printing of Dominion notes in the two official languages of the country.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): With respect to the notices of motions standing in the name of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Boulanger) numbers 13 to 18 inclusive, the hon. member for Bellechasse is not in his place. The meaning of some of the notices is very obscure, and it is difficult, without some dates being added, to understand exactly what is meant by others. For instance with respect to number 13, almost every contract has had some slight modification made, either by extras or otherwise, by all governments. If that is involved it would take a very long time to get copies made of all those documents. Possibly the hon. member does not require that. With respect to the others it will be necessary to have some clearer expression of what is meant than a mere statement of statutes. I suggest that these motions stand until the hon. member comes to the house.

Mr. SPEAKER: Numbers 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18 stand in the absence of the hon. member.

INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITIONS

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That it is expedient that parliament do approve of the convention relating to international exhibitions, and the protocol of signature, signed at Paris on the twenty-second day of November, nineteen hundred and twenty-eight, on behalf of the government of Canada, by the plenipotentiary named therein, and that this house do approve of the same.

He said: This convention relating to international exhibitions was signed at Paris on November 22, 1928. Hon. members will observe from reading it that its purpose is to limit the number of international exhibitions and to establish a uniform code for their organization and administration, which shall be equitable to all countries. It applies however only to exhibitions that are official, or officially recognized, and which last for three weeks or longer. The contracting countries agree to withhold state patronage, subsidies, grants and other privileges from international exhibitions, which, being within the scope of this convention, do not comply with its provisions.

I do not think it is necessary to do more than say the principle is provided for. It is estimated that it will cost £4,000 a year to maintain it, contributions to be made on the basis of contributions made to the League of Nations.

Possibly the motion to approve should have been submitted to the house before this, but for one reason and another, namely waiting for other countries to complete their approval, such action has not been taken. At the signing this country was represented by the Canadian Minister at Paris. The convention is now in force, having been ratified by Albania, Germany, Belgium, Spain, France, United Kingdom, Italy, Morocco, Rumania, Sweden, Switzerland, Tunis, Czechoslovakia, Portugal, Denmark, Poland, and the Netherlands. On October 22, 1930, we as a nation advised the French Chargé d'Affaires at Ottawa that we proposed to ratify the convention, and it is now important that this action should be taken in order that we may benefit by its provisions. I think in the end it will result not only in the saving of money but also in securing some uniformity of administration in connection with international exhibitions.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I think there is little to add to what the Prime Minister has said. There is however one important provision of the convention to which my right hon. friend did not draw the attention of the house, of which it might be advisable to speak. It is one evidently intended to assist in making international exhibitions a great success:

In every exhibition to which the present convention applies, goods subject to customs duties and taxes forming part of foreign exhibits shall be admitted temporarily free of duty and tax on condition of being reexported.

In freeing commodities even temporarily from customs duties the convention sets an example to the nations that it might be well for some of them to emulate.

Mr. BENNETT: As a matter of fact that is but a recognition of what we already have in our tariff, extended to other countries.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It is worth mentioning.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: Then I move:

That a message be sent to the Senate informing their honours that this house has adopted the above resolution and requesting that their honours will unite with this house in approving the above mentioned convention and protocol of signature, and that the clerk will carry the said message to the Senate.

Motion agreed to.

VISITING COMMONWEALTH FORCES

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved the second reading of Bill No. 40, respecting visiting forces of His Majesty, and the exercise of command, discipline and attachments of commonwealth forces when serving together.

He said: I do not know that it is necessary to add anything to what is indicated by the notes that accompany the bill. Shortly put, the matters mentioned in the bill were vested in the Imperial parliament under the authority of the Army Act, with the passing of the statute of Westminster the responsibility rested with the dominions, and the various dominions that constitute the British commonwealth of nations have agreed upon a bill, with such changes as local conditions necessitate, and that is bill number 40, the second reading of which I now move. If there are any matters requiring explanation such explanations will be furnished during its progress through the house.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I accept the statement of the Prime Minister that this bill is necessary as a consequence of the statute of Westminster, and that its purpose is to facilitate training and cooperation as between different forces—

Mr. BENNETT: Visiting forces.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes, of the several nations of the British commonwealth of nations. The provisions of the bill however refer to service of these forces together. I shall ask the Prime Minister, when we get into committee, whether it is clearly understood that this service relates only to service together in cooperation for training purposes, not service together in time of war. I am not sure that the bill is not capable of the interpretation of also relating to possible service together in time of war, if, indeed, that is not exactly what is intended.

I assume that the provisions of the bill are all subject to the provisions of existing statutes which govern the placing of the Canadian forces at the disposal of His Majesty outside of Canada, whether it be the army, air forces or naval service, and that the bill as presented is in no way intended to override the fundamental provisions of those acts.

There is just one other point that I should like to mention. The use of the words or rather the designation, "commonwealth forces" is a new one. The Prime Minister explained at the time of the introduction of the bill that it means the forces belonging to the nations of the British commonwealth. So long as it is understood in that way I take no exception to it, but I should not like it to be assumed that in adopting that term, we are creating under commonwealth forces so-called some new form of Imperial forces, some consolidated or centralized forces.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee thereon, Mr. Tummon in the chair.

Section 1 agreed to.

On section 2—Definitions.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the right hon. gentleman will see that the definition of "the commonwealth" meets his difficulty.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Section agreed to.

Sections 3, 4 and 5 agreed to.

On section 6—Application of section.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: This section applies to the forces of all the dominions and of the United Kingdom. Paragraph (ii) of subsection (2) reads:

(ii) subject to anything to the contrary in the conditions applicable to his service, may place any member of a home force at the disposal of the service authorities of another part of the commonwealth for the purpose of being attached temporarily by those authorities to a force to which this section applies belonging to that part of the commonwealth.

Mr. BENNETT: To which the other force belongs.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Will my right hon. friend explain whether under that section, assuming, for example, that another portion of the empire were engaged in war, it would be possible for the Minister of National Defence of Canada to place at the disposition of the forces of that part of the empire members of the Canadian forces.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not what the section contemplates. I think the explanatory note that is opposite the section is a fair statement of the situation. The explanatory note reads:

This section deals with the attachment of personnel and mutual powers of command. The cooperation in defence matters which has existed now for many years involves the interchange of officers and men, and it is necessary to enable such officers and men to carry on their duties on the same basis as if they were members of the forces to which they are attached. Subsection 4 deals with combined operations and makes it legally possible to have a single command, subject, of course, to the consent of the governments of the component forces.

There is in the bill, so far as I have been able to understand it, nothing that in any way impinges upon the provisions of any existing act of parliament, but owing to the Army Act being no longer applicable this bill makes provision for those matters that were heretofore dealt with by the Army Act. As I say, there is no derogation from the powers of parliament nor any interference with the most complete autonomy and control by our own parliament and country. That is my understanding.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Does my right hon. friend regard the section as having application in time of war or only in time of peace?

Mr. BENNETT: My understanding of it is that it has no war application, because the question of war, with respect to our forces, is a matter that ultimately has to be determined by this parliament. This legislation is entirely subject to any existing statutes or any that may be passed. It deals with visiting forces or with those that technically are perhaps not visiting forces, that is forces that go from one country to another for the purpose of training. For instance, at various times we have officers attached to the forces of Great Britain, and, as the right hon. gentleman knows, it has been customary for many years to have the same interchange with respect to other parts of the empire. According to my understanding and reading of the measure, it does not apply to a war condition.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am glad to have my right hon. friend give that interpretation. Just to make doubly sure of the point which has been mentioned, may I direct his attention to the concluding sentence of the explanatory note regarding section 6, which reads as follows:

Subsection 4 deals with combined operations and makes it legally possible to have a single command, subject, of course, to the consent of the governments of the component forces.

The Prime Minister has emphasized the importance of the control of parliament in time of war, but if the provisions of this act were to apply to service in time of war, it would give to the government of the day, in view of that explanatory note, the power which I think, and which I believe my right hon. friend thinks, ought to belong to parliament. In other words, the government of the country apart from express authority from parliament should not have the authority to place Canadian forces under a single command in any other part of the empire or in any other part of the world.

Mr. BENNETT: The former Minister of National Defence is familiar with the necessity for this legislation. I am not a military man. The necessity arises out of the Imperial conference of 1926 and the subsequent steps taken in 1930. The bill as I understand it was agreed to by the representatives of the various countries. The preamble makes it abundantly clear. It says:

Whereas it is expedient to make provision with respect to forces of His Majesty from other parts of the British commonwealth or from a colony when visiting the Dominion of Canada; and with respect to the exercise of command and discipline when forces of His Majesty from different parts of the commonwealth are serving together; and with respect to the attachment of members of one such force to another such force, and with respect to deserters from such forces:

It might well be that if parliament had taken action as required by existing statutes, "serving together" might be in time of war. That is clear, is it not?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: That is what I think it does mean myself.

Mr. BENNETT: But I think it is clear that there is no interference with the power of parliament. The words in the explanatory note, "the consent of the governments of the component forces," mean in that instance the consent that is provided for by the statutes of this country which lay down the only method by which forces can be dispatched out of this country, which is of course with the consent of this parliament. If another country permits its forces to come here and our forces are serving with those of another country, then section 4 provides that any member of the other force—we will say it is an Australian force that is serving together with the Canadian force—shall be treated and shall have the like powers of command over the home force as if he were a member of the home force of relative rank. That is, if you have the two forces serving together here and commanded by an officer from, say, South Africa or Australia, he should have the same powers as though he were dealing with his home forces.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): If this applies merely to forces on a visit for purposes of training, why is subsection 4 inserted?

Mr. BENNETT: Subsection 4 deals with unity of command, and undoubtedly under certain circumstances would apply in time of war. But no force can leave this country except with the consent of this parliament. That is clear under our own statutes.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My right hon. friend did not get my point. If the act is merely for the purpose of controlling visiting forces—

Mr. BENNETT: It goes further than that. I stated a moment ago that it goes further than that with respect to matters of discipline, desertion, and matters of that kind. It goes further also with respect to unity of command where two forces are serving together, and the position which is occupied by whoever may be in command is made equivalent to the position he would have if he was serving with his home forces in his home country. But this legislation gives no power in any sense to alter the provisions of existing legislation with respect to the movement of armed forces from this country. That can only be done, as I understand the law, with the consent of parliament.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): My point is that if this act is merely for the purpose of governing existing forces—

Mr. BENNETT: I say it is more than that.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): —then in case of war, if parliament takes action and sends forces from Canada, those forces will be under the command of a superior officer in Great Britain or from some other part of the empire, and it will mean that we shall be passing control of our army into their hands.

Mr. BENNETT: On the contrary, they might be passing control into our hands. It does not touch the substance or principles which have to do with peace and war and the movement of forces. But when a home force and another force to which this section applies are serving together, then any member of the other force shall be treated and shall have over members of the home force the like powers of command as if he were a member of the home force of relative rank. That is, if forces from New Zealand and Canada were serving together, and a New Zealander were in command of the two forces, he would have the same position as one of his rank would have if he were a Canadian in charge of the two forces. That is all. It is merely for the purpose of establishing, just as the section says, some cooperation in defence matters; and if reliance is placed upon cooperation, then there should be no conflict in case of two forces, one from New Zealand and one from Canada, serving together as to whether a Canadian of a given rank was in command or a New Zealander of the same rank. But if a New Zealander were in control of the two forces he should have the same powers of command over the forces as though he were a Canadian; and vice versa, if a Canadian were in command of Australian and Canadian forces serving together, he should have the same rank as he would have if he were an Australian of that rank under their statute.

The reason I am speaking with very great care about the matter is because it is not a matter about which I have any technical knowledge. I am only speaking by the book, as I understand it. The discussion that took place in the conference of 1930 is summarized by the note that appears on page 2 of the bill. As a result of that, discussions took place for the purpose of trying to draw up a bill that would not by any possible chance be considered as impinging upon the power of parliament or upon the strength of existing statutes that dealt with substantive matters of military defence. I think that that is a correct statement of the position.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I feel sure that the assurance which the Prime Minister is giving the house is one which he believes to be absolutely correct, and one which certainly we are all glad to have. At the same time, I do think that the wording of the statute itself would seem to give, on occasions at least, some powers to the Minister of National Defence himself, and on other occasions to the governor in council itself which we have not up to the present assumed would be existing in relation to or in time of war. May I direct attention to subsection 5 of section 6 which reads as follows:

> For the purposes of this section, forces shall be deemed to be serving together or acting in combination if and only if they are declared to be so serving or so acting by order of the Minister of National Defence, and the relative rank of members of the home forces and of other forces shall be such as may be prescribed by regulations made by His Majesty.

Just what is meant by "regulations made by His Majesty"? Does it mean by His Majesty as advised by the British government or as advised by the government of one of the other nations of the British commonwealth in the case of Canada, our own government? Also is there not a possibility that section 6 will be construed as giving to the Minister of National Defence power which up to the present time we have assumed would be exercised only by parliament itself? I raise that question more particularly because of the wording of section 8, which we have not yet reached. When we come to section 8, it will be noticed that as regards any naval force it says:

So far as regards any naval force and the members of any such force, the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be in addition to and not in derogation of such of the provisions of any act of the parliament of the United Kingdom or of the parliament of any other part of the commonwealth as are for the time being applicable to that force and the members thereof.

While that section is there with reference to the naval forces, there is no similar section with respect to the army or air forces, and the omission of a similar section with regard to the army and air forces seems to me to lend added significance to the powers that are given to the Minister of National Defence under subsection 5.

Mr. BENNETT: There is a very simple explanation for that.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I saw the explanation, but I did not regard it as very satisfactory. However we shall come to that section later on.

Mr. CAHAN: I believe if the right hon. leader of the opposition will look at the definition of the term "member" where it is used in this bill he will notice that it applies to an individual person, either an officer or one serving in the ranks.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Yes.

Mr. CAHAN: "Member" does not apply to any particular ship of the naval service, or any particular company, regiment or battalion of the home forces or of visiting forces. The definition shows that the term "member" applies to an individual person and not to a company.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I saw that, but I think the minister will admit that if the Minister of National Defence wished to do so he could name a sufficient number of members to include a squadron, regiment or any other body.

Mr. CAHAN: He would have to name dozens of them.

Mr. BENNETT: You would have broken formation, in that event.

Mr. NEILL: The house seems to be passing this bill largely out of respect for the opinion of the Prime Minister that it is necessary and appropriate so to do, because there is no doubt that the language of the bill is so horribly involved, and such long sentences are used that it is very difficult for the ordinary individual to have any accurate understanding of it. May I ask the Prime Minister if it was agreed at the Imperial economic conference or elsewhere, among the British commonwealth of nations, that this act should, so to speak, be a standard act that would be passed in these terms by British nations, or is this legislation merely indigenous to Canada? Is there any record of other nations in the commonwealth having passed such legislation?

Mr. BENNETT: If the hon. member who has just spoken would turn to page 2 of the bill he would find an extract from the summary of proceedings of the Imperial economic conference of 1930. It will be observed that the report was very simple but—

It was impossible to more than examine some aspects of the practical problems which will be involved in the carrying out of the recommendations contained in paragraph 44 of the report of the conference on the operation of dominion legislation.

It is assumed that all governments will desire to take such action as may be necessary to secure (1) that the military discipline of any of the armed forces of the commonwealth when present, by consent, within territory of another, rests upon a statutory basis. . . .

The reason for that is that the Army Act no longer applies to this part of the British Empire, it being passed at Westminster and—

(2) that there shall be no period of time during which the legal basis of military discipline could on any ground be impeached.

That is for purposes of discipline and control.

The methods by which the above two objects can best be attained must necessarily be a matter for the government themselves.

As the action to be taken to give effect to the recommendations contained in paragraph 44 of the report of the conference on the operation of dominion legislation is likely to take some time, it was agreed that all the governments concerned will take such steps as may be necessary to provide against possible difficulties during that period.

In 1929, it will be remembered, a committee met in London to draft legislation to give effect to the principles enunciated in the 1926 conference. The then Minister of Justice represented the Dominion of Canada. Their recommendation did not undertake to draft this bill, but in 1930, when the matter was referred to the appropriate committee, resolutions were arrived at which are set out on page 2 of the notes to the bill. And this bill represents not the draftsmanship of the Dominion of Canada but a bill which is assumed to represent the views of all parts of the commonwealth, subject to changes in terminology and matters of that kind which may be made necessary because of local conditions. I believe the right hon. gentleman said he had the British bill before him this afternoon.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: No, I was referring to the convention concerning exhibitions.

Mr. BENNETT: I understand; that was in connection with another matter. When the hon. member for Comox-Alberni asks whether or not action has been taken by any other countries, I must answer that I am not definite as to the number who have passed this legislation. My understanding is that it has been passed, but of course in England they still pass their Army Act. The only difference is that the Army Act does not now extend beyond the confines of the United Kingdom, and, of course, the colonies included in matters of that kind. It does not extend to the Dominion of Canada; therefore we are passing this bill.

With regard to the point made by the right hon. leader of the opposition, I do believe that the note appended to section 8 is adequate explanation of the situation. That is, when the matter came before the council of external affairs we settled the general terms of the bill. Section 8 makes it clear that inasmuch as the Army and Air Force Acts are dependent for their force and effect upon the Army and Air Force Annual Act passed annually by the parliament of the United Kingdom and are no longer, in themselves, subsequent to the passing of the statute of Westminster, applicable to Canada, we felt that we should take some steps in statutory form by appropriate legislation to deal with the position. We already had dealt with the military side of it in our Militia Act; we have already dealt with the air side of it in our Air Force Act, and we have dealt with it in a limited way under our Naval Act. Inasmuch as it has to be prefectly clear that there shall be no confusion of authority section 8 states:

> So far as regards any naval force and the members of any such force, the provisions of this act shall be deemed to be in addition to and not in derogation of such of the provisions of any act of the parliament of the United Kingdom or of the parliament of any other part of the commonwealth as are for the time being applicable to that force and the members thereof.

Because there may be—and I believe it is contended there are—some provisions in United Kingdom legislation that are still of empire scope with respect to naval matters. That is the position, as I understand it.

I shall not ask to have the bill taken out of committee until I can ascertain definitely whether or not all of the countries affected have passed legislation, and whether or not my information in this connection is exactly correct, because I wish to make perfectly clear the position of Canada with respect to this legislation. In 1926 we made it abundantly clear that we would be responsible for legislation of this character; in 1929 a committee met for the purpose of determining what statutory enactments would be necessary to give effect to the principle. In 1930 the legislation was agreed upon, in form, there being two or three sections left open until after, in this country, we had a conference of the premiers of the provinces in order that they might agree to certain sections of the statute of Westminster. Inasmuch as there would then be, after the passing of the statute and the expiration of the Army Act of that year, no authority dealing with this matter, it becomes essential that we should pass the necessary legislation. I do not know whether or not properly speaking it should not have been passed last year, but in conference with the officials of the department it was made clear that in keeping with our obligations and our position with respect to visiting forces which might, with our consent come to this country, or with respect to the union of forces from another part of the commonwealth with our own, there should be uniformity, and that the legislation should be enacted. That is the reason for it being before the house.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: I am pleased to know the Prime Minister says that he will allow the bill to remain in committee. In that connection may I point out to him that I believe his remarks left the impression with hon. members—certainly they did with me—that he is of the opinion that before any of the forces of Canada, whether they be militia, air or naval, can be placed at the disposition of another part of the empire or on service abroad, parliament must be summoned in the first instance and give its consent. The right hon. gentleman nods his head in approval. I believe he will find that such is not the case. I remember that at the time of the Chanak incident in the near east in 1922, we were asked if we would place at the disposition of His Majesty certain Canadian forces. The reply given at that time was that we believed public opinion in Canada would demand, in the first instance, the summoning of parliament, and the authorization by parliament of any forces to be sent abroad

I do not think there is any statute which places that obligation upon parliament. I believe under the Militia Act and also under the Naval Act the governor in council has power in time of emergency to place the forces of Canada at the disposal of His Majesty in different parts of the world. But if parliament is not in session at the time, it will have to be summoned within so many days.

Mr. CAHAN: Is that for overseas service?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: If it is regarded as an emergency, which may affect this dominion it may be in any way. That is the law as it stands. I submit that under the wording of this act, in the light of that circumstance, the governor in council could take the military, naval or air forces and place them at the disposal of His Majesty in parts of the British Empire or in other parts of the world, at the instance of the governor in council himself, and not at the instance of parliament. I think it most important that it should be understood that the forces of this country are not to be placed, at all events, by virtue of anything in this act, at the disposal of His Majesty without parliament being summoned and so authorizing in the first instance, or in other words that it should be made quite clear that this act is intended primarily to further efficiency and cooperation through training in times of peace.

Mr. McGIBBON: How could they do that unless parliament was summoned to vote the money?

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: They could do it as they have done a multitude of things; the government could go ahead and meet the necessary expenses by issuing governor general's warrants, or on its own credit and ask parliament to ratify its action later on. I should like to read to my hon. friend the section of the Militia Act, which is chapter 132 of the revised statutes of 1927. Section 64 reads:

> The governor in council may place the militia, or any part thereof, on active service anywhere in Canada, and also beyond Canada, for the defence thereof, at any time when it appears advisable so to do by reason of emergency.

Then section 66 states:

> Whenever the governor in council places the militia, or any part thereof, on active service, if parliament is then separated by such adjournment or prorogation as will not expire within ten days, a proclamation shall be issued for the meeting of parliament within fifteen days, and parliament shall accordingly meet and sit upon the day appointed by such proclamation, and shall continue to sit and act in like manner as if it had stood adjourned or prorogued to the same day.

Sections 19 and 21 of chapter 139 of the revised statutes of 1927 respecting the naval service of Canada are similar, and I submit that under the provisions of these statutes it would be entirely possible for the governor in council to place the different forces of Canada at the disposition of His Majesty in other parts of the world without having parliament in session and without the authority of parliament for so doing. In addition I submit that it would be within the power of the Minister of National Defence himself under the provisions of the bill now before us to transfer those forces to a single command, all this before parliament had any say in the matter at all. I believe that phase of the matter should be looked into very carefully before we proceed finally with the bill.

Mr. BENNETT: I was about to read sections 64 and 66 of the Militia Act, but I think the right hon. gentleman will observe two things. First, there is a limitation placed upon the power of the governor in council. If forces are sent beyond Canada it must be for the defence of Canada.

Mr. RALSTON: It always has been so.

Mr. BENNETT: That is the first point. Then it is provided that parliament must be called to meet within fifteen days in any event. That being so I submit that my original statement that there could be no dispatch of troops from this country without the consent of parliament is strictly true, for it would be impossible to mobilize and send any body of troops from this country in fifteen days. That at least has been the constitutional position that always has been taken in this country, that even for the defence of Canada there can be no such thing in practice as troops leaving the country without parliament having given its consent. The hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario has raised the point upon which I think the argument always has been founded, that since parliament must meet within fifteen days and since there can be no warrants issued after parliament meets in order to vote the money, it therefore follows that parliament must give its pronouncement yea or nay upon the matter by providing or refusing to provide the necessary money.

I believe this meets the difficulty raised by the right hon. gentleman. There has been no change in these statutes for a matter of thirty-five or forty years. We always have predicated the movement of armed forces out of Canada upon the assumption that it was necessary for the defence of Canada. Then, the governor in council having taken the requisite action as an executive act, since the obligation is to call parliament within fifteen days before any expenditure is made and before the troops in fact are dispatched, it follows in the very nature of things that if parliament met and declined to vote the money an expedition would be abortive and could not function. That is the law as I understand it; I believe that has always been the law in this country since we have had to consider these questions. Let me repeat that no troops can leave this country to engage in military operations without the consent of this parliament. I believe that is a correct statement of the position in view of sections 64 and 66 of the Militia Act.

Now let us turn to the Naval Service Act. The real reason for section 80 appearing in the terms in which it does appear will be found in section 46 of the Naval Service Act, which reads:

> The Naval Discipline (Dominion Naval Forces) Act, 1911, enacted by the parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland shall apply to the naval forces raised by the Dominion of Canada and the ships provided for such naval forces, subject to the modifications, adaptations and exceptions set out in the last preceding section.

The preceding section has to do with the Naval Discipline Act of 1866 and all the amendments thereto, because in 1918 this parliament thought it desirable to adopt in that way the provisions of the statute passed by the United Kingdom in order to secure, as other dominions had secured, a measure of uniformity in the administration of the naval forces. As the right hon. gentleman has remarked, the Air Force Act deals with a new arm of the service, about which all our legislation is more or less experimental.

Is this not a fair way to put it: There has been no change in the substantive law of this country with respect to armed forces, naval or military, for many years. Even the great war did not bring about a change. Our naval act is a relatively new act, which was passed some fourteen or fifteen years ago, and that statute involved a great deal of labour because it had to do with conditions which were entirely different, since the movement of ships at sea is entirely different from the movement of forces on land. I understand that section 80 was passed because of the fact that under the statute we passed, adopting in terms the British statute, there is a residuum of authority resting in the central power. Mark you, it covers not the home forces of Great Britain but the naval forces of the dominions; that is section 46.

That is my understanding of the situation as it now exists. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman has had occasion during his legislative experience to deal with the Dominion Naval Forces Act of 1911, which I think came into force during the first eight months of that year. It was passed at Westminster, I believe following the Imperial conference of that year, as being a statute that embodied an agreement at which all the prime ministers were able to arrive, not to interefere with the autonomy of each of the dominions but to preserve uniformity of administration in connection with the naval forces of the dominions, if it was thought desirable by the people of the dominion affected to utilize their forces for a common purpose. As this section stands it merely provides that by subsection 4, to which attention has been directed, we shall treat one from abroad within the commonwealth as though he were a Canadian, and the statutes of the other dominions treat a Canadian as though he were a New Zealander or Australian for the purposes of common command if there be such. I do not think it possible to say that any troops could be moved out of this country under any circumstances unless parliament gave its assent; firstly, because fifteen days is a period of time which would certainly elapse before mobilization and movement could be completed; and secondly, no government would move forces out of this country if on calling parliament such action were negatived by non-provision of the moneys necessary to pay for the expedition. Therefore the first statement I made is I think a statement that has been made in this house frequently and generally accepted as true, that there could be no movement of forces out of Canada for the defence of Canada unless this parliament had approved.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: May I just make doubly clear the position I take in the matter. I assume that this act has really been drafted by the British government and not by our own government.

Mr. BENNETT: No; I would not say it has been drafted either by the British government or by our own. I think it is fair to say that it was drafted by a committee of all the dominions. The hon. member who sits behind the leader of the opposition, my hon. friend from Shelburne-Yarmouth, was himself present in England in 1929 and must know something of the circumstances in connection with the discussion of this particular aspect of the matter. In 1930 when I came in I found it regarded as having been, shall I say, a fact accomplished, the only question being as to how to give expression to the common purpose, and the legislation now before the house is legislation which has been agreed upon by the parties, subject to such variations as local conditions bring about.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Whoever drafted it undoubtedly had in mind two things, first of all the providing of means whereby the forces of the empire might operate together in times of peace with a view to preparing for more efficient service in time of war. That I think is the first object of the measure —that in the event of this parliament deciding in time of war to place its forces at the disposition of the empire as a whole there would be practices which would be known, and methods adopted, which would facilitate, expedite and ensure effective co-operation. Some measure of the kind here proposed is necessary in order to enable this preparation in time of peace to take place. There is another object which I think would also be in the minds of those who had the drafting of the measure, and that is the possibility of the different forces of the empire serving together in time of war, and that the second object was so to draft the enactment at the moment as would make its provisions applicable also in time of war. Both these objects may be necessary and desirable, but I am inclined to believe that in drafting the measure those who have had the matter in hand have gone a step further than has been heretofore intended by anything this parliament has sanctioned or contemplated, and certainly anything from what he has said the present Prime Minister has in mind, and have made it possible for a subsequent administration say, if they desired so to do, to have certain of the forces of Canada placed under a single command prior to the time of this parliament's meeting. If there could be added to the act a clause which would ensure that in so far as its provisions are concerned they shall in time of war be effective only after parliament itself has given its consent to such a step, I think that would be advisable and would place matters beyond any doubt.

Mr. RALSTON: May I say a word following what my leader has said. Section 6 is the section that gives me some difficulty, as perhaps it has also the Prime Minister and my leader. We have persistently and insistently contended that there should be no unity of command without consent; that is the point on which Canada and the other commonwealths have been very strong.

Mr. BENNETT: I think that is secured.

[Mr. Bennett.]

Mr. RALSTON: I was going to speak about that. When our troops went overseas unity of command was effected by putting all the forces under Field Marshal Haig, but only by consent; and later when all the allied forces were put under Marshal Foch it was the same thing. Subsection 4 of section 6 makes a slight inroad on that, and I should like to have the Prime Minister, while the matter is under deliberation after the committee rises, consider the question whether at least there should not be action by the governor in council rather than the Minister of National Defence. I am the last one to derogate from the responsibilities, the functions and the dignities of that high office, but at the same time this is the disposition of troops by His Majesty's representative, who is commander in chief of the forces, and therefore it seems to me to be an act solemn and serious enough to have the approval or the consideration of His Majesty's privy council. It is all very well to have visiting forces here, each one under its own command.

Mr. BENNETT: That always has been so.

Mr. RALSTON: Yes, and to invest those in charge of visiting forces with sufficient authority to carry out commands and enforce discipline. But when you combine forces you do something that has not been done before, and it should not be simply an order of the Minister of National Defence, because immediately you have done that you may have altered completely the ranks of the officers in the forces. The provision is that, automatically, there is unity of command the moment the minister gives his consent to the combination. Unity of command is effected under the officer of senior rank, whoever it may be, and further than that I notice that subsection 5 provides that the relative ranks of members of the home force and of other forces shall be such as may be prescribed by regulations made by His Majesty. It does not say whether His Majesty is to be advised by the government of Canada or by the government of the United Kingdom and I do not know what the Prime Minister has in mind. It would seem to me as if it were intended to be His Majesty in the right of the United Kingdom. I think we should have some say in deciding on the relative seniority of ranks of officers who make up the combined force.

Mr. BENNETT: In view of what has been said I shall discuss the section more fully with the legal officer of the Department of External Affairs and the chief of the general staff. It may be possible that the construction placed upon the section is as wide as the hon. gentleman opposite suggests, but that was not my understanding of it when I came to the house with it. I shall therefore ask to have the section stand until I have had an opportunity of discussing it and reporting to the house exactly what the views of the legal adviser of the department and of the chief of the general staff may be.

Section stands.

On section 7—Application of act to mandated territories, colonies and other territories.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: As regards this section, it sems to me it might as well be dropped out of the Canadian act. What it really does is to authorize the governor in council to place any of the forces of Canada in other parts of the British Empire for the purpose of joining in service with forces in other parts of the empire in respect of mandated territories and in respect of the defence of colonies, or to services in some other force to be rendered to colonies. Unless we are going to take upon ourselves the obligation of agreeing to let our forces be placed generally at the disposal of other parts of the empire, I think that clause might well be dropped. I notice in the explanatory note it says that it is probable the provisions of this section will rarely be evoked and that it will be necessary to make a special order in council on each occasion. I really do not see why the section should be there at all. It is going to place by inference a new obligation on this country with respect to cooperating with other parts of the British Empire in their special defence relations to colonies and mandated territories.

Mr. BENNETT: I think the right hon. gentleman has an entirely erroneous view as to section 7. What is intended is that in the rare case of the forces of any colony or mandated territory desiring to visit here, with our consent, this shall apply; because there is a limitation to commonwealth forces, namely forces of the British commonwealth of nations, and unless this provision were here it could not be applied to either mandated territories or colonies. The statute is extended by section 7 to meet that situation. When I first saw the statute I am free to say that my view was not very different from that of the right hon. gentleman himself. But it will be observed that—

> This act shall, subject to such exceptions, adaptations and modifications as the governor in council may direct, apply—

The note indicates that it is thought the provisions of the section will rarely be evoked; yet it is desirable to make provision for such a case in the statute. Certainly it does not contemplate a force being placed at the disposal of any central authority for use in mandated territories or colonies; that is clear. Such a power could not be derived by implication, and I think on mature consideration the right hon. gentleman will agree that it is desirable to provide in the one statute at the one time for contingencies that may arise with respect to these other territories that form part of the British Empire, namely the dominions, that constitute the commonwealth, as well as (a) the colonies and (b) the mandated territories under the League of Nations, for which responsibility rests with us as a signatory to the league, as well as others.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: To an interpretation such as the Prime Minister places on this section I would take no exception, and will be quite satisfied if that is the correct interpretation. As I read the section, piecing it together with other sections, it seemed to me that it gave to the governor in council at any time power to deal with the forces of Canada as a whole for service generally in connection with mandated territories and colonies.

Mr. BENNETT: That is not my understanding. If it were I should not ask the house to pass it.

Section agreed to.

Mr. BENNETT: Perhaps section 8 had better stand with section 6, in view of the observation made by the right hon. gentleman.

Progress reported.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DECISION TO DEFER CONSIDERATION OF BILLS ON ORDER PAPER

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I understand that the opposition thought it desirable not to proceed to-day with order number 18, Canadian National-Canadian Pacific Railway bill. In view of the events of the last few hours I think it is undesirable to proceed at the moment with order number 17, the Relief Act. It may be that we may think it desirable to offer to the house a further section to the resolution.

If it is agreeable we will proceed now with order number 18, and if hon. gentlemen opposite desire to adjourn the debate until to-morrow it will be quite satisfactory.

Right Hon. W. L. MACKENZIE KING (Leader of the Opposition): I would not take exception to what the Prime Minister suggests were it not that I asked specifically at the close of Friday evening of my hon. friend the Minister of Justice (Mr. Guthrie), who was leading the house at the time, as to whether it was understood that the railway measure would not be proceeded with to-day, and I got the direct assurance that it would not. I have intimated that decision to some hon. members on this side of the house who expressed to me their desire to be here when the second reading of the railway bill was being proceeded with and I feel that I would not be protecting their wishes if I did not ask my right hon. friend in the circumstances to allow that undertaking to stand.

Mr. BENNETT: I trust the right hon. gentleman understands that since Friday many events have transpired that make it desirable at least to reconsider many things from a different angle than heretofore. It was for that reason I concluded not to go on with number 17, lest it be thought desirable, as I said, to add another section to the resolution, which might enable the discussion to take place on both amendments, the one now before the house and another, and dispose of them promptly. But I quite appreciate the right hon. gentleman's position with respect to number 18 and we will not proceed with it.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: And I respect my right hon. friend's position with regard to number 17. I think he is quite right in not proceeding with the relief resolution this afternoon; I share his views on that entirely.

Mr. BENNETT: I am glad to see that we agree upon something.

Then we will go into supply. We might take a League of Nations item in External Affairs.

SUPPLY—NEW WESTMINSTER ELEVATOR

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved that the house go into committee of supply.

Mr. THOMAS REID (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, before you leave the chair I have a very important matter to bring to the attention of the government and one which I think ought to be discussed. It relates to the New Westminster elevator. I have hesitated to bring this matter before the house in order to see if this undertaking which was commenced in 1928 would operate successfully. But there are certain serious matters concerning it which I think should now be brought to the notice of the government.

The history of the elevator is briefly this. After years of endeavour it was decided to construct an elevator on the Fraser river. I might say that we in the lower Fraser valley and in the vicinity of New Westminster look upon the Fraser as the greatest river in the whole of Canada, if not on the American continent. After years of endeavour the government of the day was persuaded to assist in the construction of an elevator on the Fraser river in the vicinity of New Westminster. About that time a company was formed called the Fraser River Elevator Company. This company was formed with a view to getting control if possible of this elevator or ownership of it after it was constructed. The company consisted chiefly of one man by the name of Samuel McClay. He conceived the idea of forming a company so as to have control of this elevator. According to the return furnished to me by the provincial government last September the company consisted of this Mr. McClay and a Walter A. Wilson, chartered accountant, both of 207 Hastings street west, Vancouver. It was capitalized at $25,000. I am in some doubt whether any money was actually subscribed outside of the money for legal fees and incorporation expense.

The nominal capital of the company was later increased to $1,000,000, and in these days, when watered stock is under criticism, I would ask the house to take note of the fact—

Mr. BENNETT: It might be well to remember that this is a provincial, not a dominion company.

Mr. REID: Yes, it is a provincial company. The information given to me from the provincial government at Victoria is to the effect that the company was originally capitalized at $25,000 divided into 250 shares of $100 each. These shares were subsequently subdivided into 25,000 shares of $1 each and the capital increased to $1,000,000 divided into shares of $1 each. The present shareholders of the company are John Coughlan, who goes under the name of a shipowner, 160,000 shares; Charles Coughlan, of Connaught drive, 160,000 shares; Samuel McClay, now chairman of the Vancouver harbour commission, 300,000 shares, and two others, Mr. Sugarman and Mr. MacInnes, 100 shares each. That was the report given to me by Mr. Garrett, registrar of companies, Victoria, in September, 1932, and as the Prime Minister has pointed out, this is a provincial company. This Mr. McClay, who is now chairman of the harbour commission, is the man who is said to have been appointed to that commission to look after the personal interests of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. STEVENS: I cannot allow any such observation as that to pass unchallenged; there is not a word of truth in it.

Mr. REID: The hon. member will have to take my word that Mr. Samuel McClay made this statement to me in 1931, in the Chateau Laurier in this city, and I consider my word is as good as that of the Minister of Trade and Commerce.

Mr. STEVENS: I simply state on a question of privilege that there is no truth in the allegation made by the hon. gentleman that Mr. McClay was appointed to any harbour commission to look after my personal interests. The statement is without any foundation in fact and is absurd.

Mr. REID: I am glad to hear that, because Mr. McClay made that statement and he made some others to me just as serious, but this one has some bearing on the case I am endeavouring to present to the government. I can say without fear of contradiction that that statement was given to me in 1931 by Mr. Sam McClay in the city of Ottawa.

After it was decided to go ahead with this elevator and after an estimate of some $600,000 had been given by Messrs. C. D. Howe and Company, who were the engineers and who were asked to submit plans, tenders were called for the construction of the elevator and a contract was let to the Stuart Cameron Company of Vancouver, whose tender of $460,279 was the lowest.

Mr. STEVENS: What date?

Mr. REID: The contract was let on February 20, 1928, after approval had been received from the Department of Marine. Actual construction was commenced a few days later, but the unusual freshet that occurred in the Fraser river early in May of that year interrupted the work on the foundation and caused a delay of some two months. Before the work had proceeded very far, it was decided to make a change in the construction of at least part of the elevator. I should here like to make a slight criticism in regard to the fact that the change involved an expenditure of some $90,000. It would be interesting to know just how that sum of $90,000 was arrived at, because no credit at all was given for the woodwork for that portion as specified in the contract of $460,000 and I have grave criticism to offer regarding this $90,000 extra having been paid to this company who were constructing the elevator for this change in the plan.

Mr. BENNETT: When was the work completed?

Mr. REID: It was completed some time in 1929. The engineer's final certificate was issued in April of that year. Other changes made in the original contract to the Stuart Cameron Company were certain additional equipment required by the proposed lessee, changing the piling in dock and revetment from fir to cedar, besides sundry other extras. The contract price of February 20, 1928, was $460,279. An agreement of May 11, 1928, provided for a change from wood to concrete at an additional $90,000, and as I say, no credit whatever was given for that change over and I maintain the $90,000 was an overcharge. There was additional equipment amounting to $11,467.91, and sundry extras, including changing piling in dock from fir to cedar, amounting to $4,635.25.

Owing to the delay occasioned by the freshet and also by a carpenters' strike in the fall of 1928, construction was not completed until April, 1929, when the engineer's final certificate was issued.

In May, 1929, some subsidence in the fill-back of the revetment wall took place, and early in July a portion of the revetment collapsed, while the storage building showed some slight movement towards the river. On the advice of the engineers, work was immediately commenced to strengthen the storage and to repair the damage to the revetment, this work being completed in the fall of 1929 at an extra cost of some $23,000.

Messrs. C. D. Howe and Company, the engineers who had charge of the matter, then reported that the elevator was perfectly safe and could be filled up with grain, but the proposed lessees, who were known as the Fraser River Elevator Company, but who were in reality Mr. Sam McClay and Mr. Coughlan of the city of Vancouver, raised some objection and said that the elevator was unsafe and that they could not take over the lease. They said that they were afraid to put grain into the elevator, although the engineers, Messrs. C. D. Howe and Company, had given a certificate to the effect that the elevator was quite safe and would stand any strain or load in the way of grain. Messrs. McClay and Coughlan from then on raised great objections to taking over this elevator; they placed all kinds of difficulties in the way, stating that they were prepared to take a lease of it, but that they certainly could not do so as in their opinion it was unsafe. They prevailed upon the government to have three engineers appointed to look into the matter, and the latter suggested further improvements which were carried out at a cost of $40,000. Plans, specifications and estimates of cost of this work were prepared and were forwarded to the Department of Marine on November 12, 1930, the estimated cost being $40,345.08, including engineering fees. The commissioners had to wait some little time for authority to proceed with the work, pending arrangements being made in connection with finances.

As I have already stated, when the elevator was finished, the company started to find fault with the structure declaring it to be unsafe and accordingly they refused to sign the lease. I believe that the object of the so-called company, consisting of two men, was to obtain at a reduced figure control or ownership of this elevator, which had cost this country in the neighbourhood of one million dollars, including of course all the improvement work done around it. At the outset they had agreed that when the elevator was constructed they would lease it for a period of twenty years at an estimated cost of $700,000. The $700,000 was to include elevator, trackage, wharf, and all pertaining to the elevator. It would have been quite a fine scheme for the company if they had obtained such a lease—and remember they had not put up a cent. Here was the country going to build an elevator and at the end of twenty years the company was going to be the complete owner of it. It would be very nice if any one of us could go to the government and ask them to build a house for us at the country's expense, and we rent it for twenty years and then become the absolute owner. That is just on a par with the scheme of this shadow company for obtaining this elevator. I believe, and I say this in all sincerity, that the object of that company was to so damn the structure that they would obtain possession of the elevator at their own figure, and both Mr. McClay and Mr. Coughlan told me when I met them at the elevator last year that they expected to obtain possession of the elevator over a lease of twenty years for some $500,000. They were going to get it at a reduced figure because they claimed they were entitled to compensation on account of delay in the completion of the elevator, which they claim resulted in a business loss to them and which they maintained the government should pay for. I cannot say definitely at the moment just what amount they claimed from the government or the harbour board as a business loss by reason of the elevator not being completed at the stipulated date. But I know it was some thousands of dollars.

An agreement was then drawn up with the harbour board by which the company was given possession of the elevator to run it as a kind of storage elevator. They paid nothing for it. The taxes and the expenses of the elevator were borne by the harbour board, which had received loans from the government. This so-called company, The Fraser River Elevator Company, put up no money, but they obtained possession of the elevator. In the agreement which was drawn up it was stated that the company, on request of the harbour board, would move out on notice and give them quiet possession of the elevator. Notice was sent to the company by the harbour board quite a number of times to move out, but the company paid no attention to the notice; they simply sat there. I think it should be noted that this company, after they had obtained possession of the elevator, defied legal authority to oust them from it. It is true that the company were making some so-called claim from the government for not being able to obtain possession of the elevator at the time stipulated, in consequence of which they stated they had suffered a business loss which they themselves estimated at some thousands of dollars. But they should never have been given the right of entry into the elevator without putting up some money. There has been nothing but grief since they got in there.

The company I believe made a little money from the operations of the elevator. At various times considerable quantities of corn were brought into the elevator, which the company was operating without paying anything at all to the harbour board by way of lease.

Coming to 1932, the company was notified by the harbour board on several occasions to vacate the elevator. This it refused to do. It paid no attention to the request at all. After the harbour board had brought all the pressure it could to bear upon the company, the board decided to call for tenders for the lease of the elevator to be run as an elevator for grain. Two or three firms tendered, in particular the Fraser River Elevator Company, and the Searle Grain Company. The latter company has some 364 elevators, I believe, in this country and is in the grain business in a large way. Although it was stated by one of our local papers that I seemed to be more in favour of leasing the elevator to Yankee interests than Canadian, I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that the harbour board itself recommended that the lease be given to the Searle Grain Company, a very reliable grain company, which, as I said, operates some 364 elevators in this country. But the tender of the Searle Grain Company was turned down by the Department of Marine and the harbour board were notified to give the lease to the Fraser River Elevator Company.

To go back for a moment to the steps that were taken in 1932 to make this so-called company vacate the elevator before lease tenders were called for, the harbour board was pressing this so-called company fairly hard but the Department of Marine sent word by telegram not to press the company any further, and not to put them out, as all the matters in connection with the leasing of the elevator had not been finally settled. I make this criticism regarding the attitude of the Department of Marine, that they did not allow the harbour board forcibly to eject the company from possession of the elevator, of which it had been in possession since 1929 and without any cost to them. The company had been operating the elevator at a profit to themselves since taking it over.

Coming again to the leasing of the elevator, tenders were called for in 1932, and tenders were received from the Fraser River Elevator Company and the Searle Grain Company. The Fraser River Elevator Company offered $20,000, plus one-quarter of a cent a bushel up to six million bushels. If six million bushels had been put through the elevator in a year, that would have amounted to $35,000 a year. The Searle Grain Company offered $33,000 a year cash payable half-yearly.

The harbour board recommended to the Department of Marine that the lease be given to the Searle Grain Company for $33,000 cash, but the department wired the harbour board to give the lease to the Fraser River Elevator Company. I understand that that wire was sent by the hon. Minister of Marine, although the information was given to me that Mr. Ramsay, the head of the grain board, also recommended that the Searle Grain Company were the legitimate ones to get the elevator because they were a reliable company and really in the grain business, and not simply ostensibly in it like the Fraser River Elevator Company, which while operating a grain business was not really in the business, and had no grain connections. It is an actual fact that the New Westminster harbour commissioners had recommended to the government that the lease be given to the Searle Grain Company.

But that is not all; and it would not have been too bad. But the agreement drawn up by the harbour commissioners with the Fraser River Elevator Company provided that the lease was to run for some three years, and that the company was to put up $10,000 cash and $10,000 in bonds, and pay one-quarter of a cent a bushel up to six million bushels. The company were very eager to get complete charge of the elevator. But up to the present time the information that I have both from the harbour board and others connected with the matter is that this company has not yet put up one cent, although the lease was granted in October last, and although the company has put over one million bushels of grain through the elevator.

Mr. Speaker, I believe urgent steps should be taken in connection with this matter regarding an elevator which has cost the people of Canada nearly a million dollars. It would seem that ever since completion it has been practically controlled and owned by the Fraser River Elevator Company, without them contributing five cents towards it. After a lease being signed in October of last year, despite the fact that about a million bushels of wheat have been run through the elevator, no money is yet forthcoming. My contention is that the government should take steps to see that this firm remain no longer in control, even though they have to be forced out in whatever manner the government deem desirable. In any event the firm I have mentioned should not be allowed to continue operation of the elevator. They have promised to put up money, and the lease calls for it. Having taken possession I do not know whether or not the government will be able to put them out. I know the harbour board would have liked to put them out last year, but were told not to molest them. They are sick and tired of this company.

I bring to the attention of the government the seriousness of allowing a firm such as I have described to have charge of an elevator costing close to a million dollars, and in allowing them possession of that elevator. In my view they should not have been allowed possession. Further, the chairman of the Vancouver harbour board should not be allowed to have anything to do with the operation of an elevator on the Fraser river. I make that complaint in all seriousness. No one connected with the harbour board of another port should have private interests in a grain elevator owned by this country.

I make a serious complaint against the company, and ask the government to investigate and to take immediate steps to dispossess the company of an elevator which, as I have stated before, belongs to the people of Canada. The company has put up no money—and I doubt if it has any—not one cent has been contributed by way of rental, even though it made money when it used the elevator for storage purposes, and are now making money.

I have merely touched the high spots of all the circumstances. I have information upon which I could easily lay my hands concerning the whole transaction about which I have not spoken. I have not gone into minute details although the circumstances might warrant further discussion. However I believe it would be well if a commission or a commissioner were appointed to look into the whole matter. The government should also investigate the fees paid to engineers. Mr. Howe was engaged as engineer to draw plans and look after the construction of the elevator, and yet we find that over $30,000 was paid to another engineer. In addition to that large sums have been paid to Mr. Howe for his work. I am informed that the $30,000 in engineering fees went to a man named Major Swan. In my view the whole cost of the elevator should be placed under scrutiny. My main complaint however at the present time principally concerns the firm now in possession, the people who are running the elevator and making profit, but who are not actually in the grain business. Mr. McClay is the one chiefly interested in the business, but he is also chairman of the harbour board of Vancouver, and Mr. Coughlan is one of the chief directors. Two other gentlemen have nominal holdings of one hundred shares each, valued at one dollar a share. This is on the information supplied me from Victoria as to who actually comprise that company. In my opinion the company should be put out of operation, because they are not really interested in the grain business. Either the harbour commission, the government or some responsible grain company should take over the elevator and run it so that the dominion and the country would receive some return for its outlay in the building of the elevator.

I have made my statement in all seriousness, with the desire of having this, the first elevator on the Fraser river, put into successful operation, as I expect to see many more on the Fraser river. It will not operate successfully as long as it is handled by the Fraser River Elevator Company. They have given it a black eye and have brought condemnation on it in every shape and form with a view, as I have said, eventually to obtaining ownership of it at some $200,000 less than its original cost, and without having to put up one dollar.

Hon. H. H. STEVENS (Minister of Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member (Mr. Reid) has given to the house a most interesting story, but I fear the manner in which he has spoken has left in the minds of hon. members an entirely erroneous impression. The view the hon. member has sought to leave with the house is that the government had entered into a lease of certain government property, namely an elevator, in a most improvident manner, with a company which really had no responsibility. From certain interruptions which I made it will be clear to the house that the origin of the alleged difficulty was before the present government took office.

The facts are comparatively simple. Prior to 1928 very strong pressure was brought to bear upon the then government to construct an elevator on the Fraser river at New Westminster. Those representations culminated in a contract for the construction of such an elevator. Before actual construction was undertaken I understand negotiations were carried on between the company which proposed to construct the elevator and a department of the government. Of that, however, I have no personal knowledge, and therefore cannot give any accurate information. In any case the negotiations culminated in a lease being granted to the company by the preceding government.

A word now, in regard to the construction of the elevator. I believe the superstructure, as a whole, was well done. But a question was raised by Mr. McClay in 1928, who was a member of the lessee company, concerning the adequacy of the foundations. I believe he is on record as complaining that the provision made by the engineers at the time of construction in 1928 was not sufficient, because in his opinion the erosion caused by the flow of the Fraser river would probably result in the loaded elevator slipping. This is what actually occurred: When the elevator was finally constructed and possession was taken by the lessees, the insurance companies refused to place any insurance upon grain stored in the elevator. The result was that the lessees could not use the elevator. The point raised by the engineers of the insurance company was that if a load were put into the elevator it would probably slide into the river, resulting in a complete loss. As I have said, the lessees could get no insurance upon grain placed in the elevator; consequently, while in the first year they did pay certain rentals, they were deprived of the opportunity of doing business, and their guarantees and banking arrangements were to them only a dead loss.

When the present government took office we took action. We appointed a committee of engineers to examine the point raised regarding foundations, and my recollection is that that committee, composed of reputable and experienced engineers of the government, reported that certain work costing approximately $300,000 would have to be done in order to make the structure suitable for occupation as an elevator. Of course it must be borne in mind by all hon. members that an elevator must carry a tremendous weight when it is loaded with grain. I think this elevator has a capacity of something like one million bushels, though of that I am not sure. In any case, the weight would be terrific, and this committee of engineers decided that work to cost about $300,000 would have to be done before the elevator was safe for occupancy. So steps were taken—I confess frankly very reluctantly by the government of the day—to spend this $300,000; it was felt that here was a structure costing half a million dollars or more which was useless unless this subsequent work was done. So this government authorized the harbour commissioners to have the work done, the government advancing the money, and the work was done and the elevator declared suitable for occupancy as a grain elevator.

Then there was a dispute between the lessees and the new government as to what damage they were entitled to, if any, and as to what amended terms should be offered for the occupancy of the elevator. That dispute continued for some time. The Fraser River Elevator Company made certain claims for damages; they claimed that allowances should be made for losses for lack of occupancy and for money expended during the period of dispute. Then, if I remember correctly, the harbour commissioners of New Westminster were waited upon by another company, called the Searle Grain Company, who made offers for the elevator. This, of course, was subsequent to the elevator being repaired and made suitable for occupancy. The lessees, the Fraser River company, who had possession in name only and who had been unable to do business because of the difficulty with regard to construction, naturally protested the loss of the property and the handing it over to another company. There was a hiatus, a period of time when there was more or less a dispute. The final settlement with the Fraser River Company—I am speaking now with a little hesitancy as I have not the documents before me, but I think I am correct—was that the company agreed to waive their claim for damages provided they were given free and safe occupancy of the building, and to pay a rental of $20,000 a year as indicated by my hon. friend and a quarter of a cent per bushel for the grain which passed through the elevator. I believe they represented that they expected to move from four million to six million bushels yearly through the elevator. The other company offered $35,000, my hon. friend says.

Mr. REID: $33,000.

Mr. STEVENS: My recollection is that they offered $22,500 and subsequently increased the offer, but I do not think it went to $35,000.

Mr. REID: $33,000.

Mr. STEVENS: I am not in a position definitely to dispute that figure, but I know their original offer was nothing like that. True, the matter was discussed by the Department of Marine, as all these matters are, with the harbour commissioners, and that was done in this case particularly in view of the fact that in the meantime we had advanced the necessary money to correct the defects in construction. True, the Department of Marine was in touch with the situation there, necessarily and properly so. Finally, however, having in mind the several years during which the Fraser River company had not been given quiet possession and had been unable to get insurance or do business, it was decided that they were entitled to some consideration, and that consideration was given them. Briefly these are the facts and that is the story.

Now I wish to refer to several observations made by the hon. member in presenting his case. He complains very bitterly that a change was made during the period of construction and that an additional $90,000 was spent. If that is so it was spent by my hon. friends opposite; I am not complaining, but my hon. friend complains. He spoke of it several times, and seemed to insinuate that possibly there was something in the nature of a scandal behind it. I know nothing of it and have never heard of it. My hon. friend may know something that I do not know, but that was what I gathered he intimated. If so he should inquire from hon. gentlemen opposite who had control of the whole situation at that time. I want to make it abundantly clear that I am making no such insinuation myself.

In the second place the hon. gentleman calls into question Mr. Howe, the engineer. All I have to say is that Mr. Howe was retained by my predecessor in the Department of Trade and Commerce for the expert engineering on all the government elevators constructed during the period they were in office.

Mr. REID: I said Mr. Howe was the engineer in charge and that he O.K.'d the plans. I made no criticism of Mr. Howe.

Mr. STEVENS: Very good. It is rather a narrow difference when you criticize a given plan or operation O.K.'d by an individual and at the same time exculpate that individual from all blame. My hon. friend can do that if he likes; it takes a more adroit mind than mine. I have this to say, however: Mr. Howe is no particular personal friend of mine but he has been recognized by the United Grain Growers, by the pools, by the preceding government, by my predecessor in office and by almost everyone in Canada who has had anything to do with elevator construction as one of the most experienced elevator engineers in Canada. That is not my testimony; it is the testimony of all those to whom I have referred, so I think in retaining Mr. Howe the preceding government did a perfectly proper thing. I am not calling him in question at all, but my hon. friend is doing so. Mr. Howe was responsible for the plans of that elevator. He designed them and he supervised construction.

Mr. REID: He however washed his hands of the elevator later on when they interfered with him.

Mr. STEVENS: When who interfered with him?

Mr. REID: When the harbour board interfered. Here is his letter.

Mr. STEVENS: The fact is that Mr. Howe was in charge. I do not call him in question nor do I call in question the Department of Marine prior to 1930, when this elevator was built. I do say this was a very difficult piece of ground upon which to construct an elevator, and an engineering error may have been made. The fact is that no insurance company would insure the building; certain work had to be done to put it into proper shape, and this work was done. No blame in this regard lies at the door of this government, nor am I placing the blame on any other government. I am merely stating facts. My hon. friend goes on to say that Mr. Howe was paid a huge fee; those are his words, and the suggestion is that he did not earn it. I suggest that Mr. Howe is an honourable man in his profession, and is entitled to his fee.

Mr. REID: It was the other engineer to whom I referred.

Mr. STEVENS: I am just coming to that, and I am sorry my predecessor in office, the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. Malcolm) is not in his seat. Major Swan is well known to the friends of my hon. friend, the members of the former government; he is a gentleman who frequently was retained by the government in these matters. As a matter of fact, if I am not mistaken, at the very time he was engaged on this work he was consulting engineer for the Vancouver harbour commissioners. I knew Mr. Swan before he went overseas and I have known him since his return. I know him as an honourable man, a gentleman of repute, an engineer of parts and a very strong supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite. My hon. friend says he was paid $30,000. If he received that fee I have no doubt that it was in accordance with the standards of engineers, but there again that has nothing to do with it. That was under the control of the government who preceded us. I am not calling it in question and I think my hon. friend had better discuss that with the gentleman with whom he is now associated.

My hon. friend says that the contract was let in February, 1928. He says that the elevator was completed in April, 1929, and that there was a refusal on the part of the Fraser River Elevator Company to take the lease. So there was. There was a refusal after they had taken possession and found that they could not get insurance. They could do no business in the elevator and it was perfectly proper that they should refuse under these circumstances. Then my hon. friend brings in at very considerable length the organization of the Fraser River Elevator Company and he repeatedly, time after time, stressed the fact that Mr. Sam McClay, president of the Vancouver Harbour Commissioners at the present time, was a member of that company. That company was organized—I am speaking from memory—some time in 1926 or 1927. At that time Mr. McClay was in private life and was quite entitled to engage in any line of business he wished. He had nothing to do with the then government and nothing to do with this government so far as that period of time was concerned. He was a member of that elevator company, I believe. Mr. John Coughlan, a splendid citizen, a man of about seventy-seven years of age, who has carried on business in British Columbia to my own knowledge for thirty years, is a man of repute, a man of substance, and in every sense is entitled to consideration in any business deal to which he places his hand or gives his attention. After Mr. McClay became chairman of the harbour board in Vancouver he was dissociated from this company and had nothing to do with it.

Mr. REID: He still possessed 300,000 shares.

Mr. STEVENS: That is probably the original record.

Mr. REID: That was last year.

Mr. STEVENS: So far as my information goes, Mr. McClay is not associated with the company now; he is entirely dissociated from it. That he was associated with it at one time there is no question, and had his advice been followed at the time the construction was in process, when the lease negotiations were being carried on with the then government, the country would have been saved the $300,000 which subsequently was required to do the very thing the hon. gentleman suggests should have been done. But Mr. McClay is not associated with the company now, I repeat.

My hon. friend says that in 1932 this company refused to vacate. That is one way of putting it. I submit this, however, to hon. members who have the slightest inclination to fairness: Here is a company that had been given assurance several years before of the quiet occupation of a piece of government property for which they were to pay $30,000 a year, and on which they had paid a year's rental, and when they came into possession they found that they were unable to operate for the reasons I have mentioned, reasons obviously not due to actions on their part.

Mr. REID: There is no record of a year's rental. They put up $30,000 in bonds which they lifted later on.

Mr. STEVENS: I know that they put up $30,000 in any case, but they had no quiet possession, they were unable to operate, and they could not get insurance. It was in view of these facts that subsequently, when it came to the 1932 period, consideration was given them. I may say to my hon. friend that if that company under its present lease, which is a legal document—and I have no doubt that Mr. Coughlan is held responsible for that; if he is not he should have been—if the company, I say, are violating the terms of that lease, if they are falling down in their part of the agreement, then I have no hesitation in saying that the harbour commissioners certainly should enforce the lease. That is my position and it is as clear as day. They must observe the terms of the lease. I do say, however, that in my opinion the harbour board and the Marine department were not only within their rights but did the fair thing when they permitted the continuance of that lease in the light of the experience which the company had had prior to the rectification of the faulty construction.

My hon. friend in his concluding remarks said that Mr. McClay, who is president of the Vancouver Board of Harbour Commissioners, ought not to have anything to do with the company. With that I entirely agree, and my information is that he has nothing to do with it. I trust that assurance will calm the perturbation of mind of my hon. friend—

Mr. REID: He still takes a supervised interest in it—his son is running it.

Mr. STEVENS: My information is entirely to the contrary.

Mr. REID: I have, however, seen him there; I saw him before I came to Ottawa.

Mr. STEVENS: That is all I wish to say at the moment, Mr. Speaker. I have not before me the documents and details but the house may, if it wishes to do so, examine the records which will bear out the outline of the situation as I have given it.

Motion agreed to and the house went into committee of supply, Mr. Perley (Qu'Appelle) in the chair.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

Publications of League of Nations for distribution to members of parliament and a grant to the League of Nations Society in Canada, $3,000.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): I am calling this item in the Department of External Affairs to have the department in committee. The item is non-contentious.

Item agreed to.

NATIONAL HEALTH

The administration of the acts respecting food and drugs, opium and narcotic drugs and proprietary or patent medicines, including the laboratory of hygiene, $140,000.

Mr. SPENCER: What is the reason for the reduction in this case?

Hon. MURRAY MacLAREN (Minister of Pensions and National Health): The reduction is $5,000 out of a sum of $140,000. It is almost immaterial. It is accounted for by the endeavour to administer as carefully as possible under present circumstances.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: It does not represent much of an endeavour.

Mr. MacLAREN: No, it is comparatively immaterial.

Mr. McGIBBON: Perhaps the minister can give some explanation of the activities of this branch.

Mr. MacLAREN: This appropriation is for providing laboratory and inspection service dealing with adulteration and misbranding of human food and of drugs employed for the treatment or prevention of disease in man or animals; the control of export, import and sale of all habit forming drugs; investigations and prosecutions in connection with traffic in narcotics, and payment of lawyers' fees in connection with the various prosecutions; and the protection of the public by seeing that all proprietary or patent medicines sold are of some value and not dangerous, and that false or exaggerated claims are not made either on the label or in the advertising.

Mr. RALSTON: Does the minister carry out the provisions of the act by the aid of the mounted police, or has he special officers?

Mr. MacLAREN: The department keeps in close association with the mounted police in reference to the detection and prosecution of cases arising under the narcotics act.

Mr. RALSTON: Those are the only officers the minister has to enforce the act?

Mr. MacLAREN: As far as narcotics are concerned we cooperate with the mounted police. Regarding adulteration of food we have inspectors placed at intervals across the country, twenty-seven or twenty-eight of them. When cases arise reports are sent in to the department, and food that is suspected is examined in our laboratories and the necessary action taken.

Mr. RALSTON: Do the mounted police take charge of the prosecution?

Mr. MacLAREN: In which case?

Mr. RALSTON: Where adulterated food is found and report made to the department and the department is convinced that an offence has been committed, is the matter then placed in charge of the mounted police?

Mr. MacLAREN: No, our connection with the mounted police is restricted to narcotics. Food comes under our food inspectors, and the action is taken by the chief inspector.

I might say for the information of the house that while there were a number of reports and prosecutions, in the last two years the principal food which has come under the observation of the department and in connection with which prosecutions have been instituted and fines fixed is sausages. I say this for public information as well, that there are certain substances which have been added to sausages in the way of preservatives, and I think perhaps in the way of colour, and the department is doing what it can to suppress this adulteration. I mention it because quite a considerable number of cases have come before the department.

Mr. NEILL: Do I understand that the minister or his department is responsible for the administration of the Meat and Canned Foods Act?

Mr. MacLAREN: That is under the Department of Agriculture. The matter of foods comes partly under my department, partly under the Department of Agriculture and also in some cases under the provincial authorities. Misbranding and adulteration of canned foods are dealt with by this department, but on the whole canned foods are under the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. NEILL: Let me make my meaning quite clear. Was the minister or his department privy to or cognizant of or in any way responsible for the perpetration of P.C. 206 that we talked about the other day, in connection with the inspection of canned salmon? It was certainly issued under the provisions of the act dealing with meat and canned foods. I am anxious to know who is responsible for that offspring.

Mr. MacLAREN: The answer is that the department does concern itself to a small extent with canned foods, that is to say as regards labelling. If it is mislabelled, then the department is concerned.

Mr. POWER: Do the functions of the inspectors of this department extend only to the labelling of the canned foods, or do they go beyond that?

Mr. MacLAREN: I understand the hon. member asks, is the department limited to misbranding and mislabelling. That is largely what we are confined to. The Department of Agriculture actually deals with canned foods, but should a case of adulteration be brought to its attention then the department analyzes and reports on the condition.

Mr. POWER: Is it a fact that the department has inspectors to examine foods that are placed on the market?

Mr. MacLAREN: Well there is a Meat and Canned Foods Act, that is specially under the Department of Agriculture. I was suggesting a moment ago that there are various departments and organizations having to do with the adulteration of food—the Department of National Health, the Department of Agriculture, which deals particularly with canned foods, and food under the provincial authorities.

Mr. POWER: At this point will the minister explain how the work is divided? Surely there is not any overlapping. I understand from the minister there are three bodies which deal with the adulteration of food.

Mr. MacLAREN: I quite agree that there is a possibility of confusion as to just where the responsibility lies in different cases. This is a memorandum on the subject.

The control of the manufacture and sale of foodstuffs comes under the Department of Pensions and National Health, the Department of Agriculture, the provincial departments of health and the municipal departments of health. The Department of National Health prescribes standards of quality and fixes the limitation of variability permissible in any article of food. Through its inspectors and analysts certain foodstuffs are collected, examined and analysed for adulteration and misbranding. Under the Meats and Canned Foods Act the Department of Agriculture controls foodstuffs that are manufactured for export and interprovincial sale, according to the standards of quality set up by the Department of National Health where they apply, and, in other instances, according to their own standards. All manufacturers who export and sell interprovincially are obliged to obtain a permit from the Department of Agriculture. The inspectors of this department supervise the foodstuffs during the course of manufacture and examine them after they are placed on the market. In some isolated instances provincial departments of health have set up standards of quality for certain foodstuffs, for example, milk, but in the main they follow the standards set up by the Department of National Health. Municipal departments of health confine their activities to the examination of premises in which foodstuffs are stored or exposed for sale. I think that indicates how the work is apportioned.

Mr. HOWDEN: Does the department regularly analyze all new patent medicines that are put on the market before they are allowed to be sold?

Mr. MacLAREN: They are not examined until application is made to the department to have them registered. When the application is duly made, they are passed on by the department.

Mr. HOWDEN: They are examined?

Mr. MacLAREN: Yes. Patent medicines are examined. If they are not in accordance with the labelling, action is taken.

Mr. McGIBBON: Some time ago I asked a question and I do not think the minister got the purport of it. What I want to know is the activities of this department in enforcing the Opium and Narcotic Drugs Act, how much money was spent under it, what success the department has had, and a résumé of what it has done during the past twelve months.

Mr. MacLAREN: In reference to opium and narcotics, there were the following expenditures:

Legal services, $32,541.07; witness fees and expenses, $315; secret investigational work, $291.92—Total, $33,147.99.

Mr. DUFF: In regard to the $32,000 for legal services, will the minister give the names of the lawyers who received this very large sum of money in these times of depression?

Mr. MacLAREN: They will be found in the Auditor General's report. I am sorry I do not have the names here.

The cases of prosecutions are as follows:

Possession of drugs	173
Selling or distributing	45
Importing without a licence	3
Smoking opium	42
Frequenting opium den	39
Possession of pipes, etc	24
Professional cases under sections 5, 6 and 9	7
Total	333

Mr. POWER: The hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough asked the minister to give the details of the expenditure of $32,000 on legal fees; we have not as yet had that.

Mr. MacLAREN: I have not those details with me, but I know, for instance, there have been cases of appeals to higher courts and this has added materially to expenses.

Mr. POULIOT: Higher courts mean higher fees.

Mr. SULLIVAN: Is the sum of $32,000 for one part or for the whole of Canada?

Mr. MacLAREN: That is the total legal expense in connection with narcotics.

Mr. POWER: I think we are entitled to some kind of reply. To say that some cases were taken to the higher courts and the fees were higher is not a reply. I think the information should be put at the disposal of the committee.

Mr. MacLAREN: Pardon, me, I said nothing of the kind.

Mr. POWER: Then I absolutely withdraw what I said.

Mr. MacLAREN: I did not say that the expenditure of $32,000 was incurred because of the higher fees, but a case that is appealed and goes to a higher court involves more expenditure, as I think my hon. friend will agree.

Mr. POWER: Oh, quite.

Mr. MacLAREN: The expenditures for legal services were as follows: Elie Beauregard, Montreal, $1,757.10—

Mr. POWER: He is a good Liberal.

Mr. SULLIVAN: He is chief Liberal organizer in Montreal.

Mr. MacLAREN: There was also paid to R. L. Maitland, Vancouver, $4,175.70; Gustave Monette, Montreal, $10,668.70—

Mr. POWER: May I say for the benefit of my hon. friend from St. Ann that Mr. Monette is a good Conservative.

Mr. MacLAREN: One must remember that a large percentage of these cases are in the province of Quebec, particularly in Montreal.

Mr. POWER: Is that persecution or prosecution?

Mr. MacLAREN: There was also paid to Preland and Richardson, Toronto, $1,539.33; Arthur Sullivan, Winnipeg, $5,849.08; R. A. Wootton, Victoria, $1,619.10; accounts under $1,000, $6,512.08. All these accounts have been taxed by the Department of Justice.

Mr. POWER: Has Mr. Monette acted in several cases or only in one?

Mr. MacLAREN: He has acted I think in nearly all the Montreal cases. Incidentally I may say that it is desirable to obtain the services of those who have had experience and training in this peculiar class of case.

Mr. POWER: I can quite understand the reasoning of the minister that we should have barristers who are trained in this particular class of work. When did Mr. Monette's training with the department begin?

Mr. MacLAREN: He has been handling this class of case for a number of years: I cannot say just how many. The experience of the department is that it is advantageous to have continued those legal men who are familiar with this particular class of case.

[Mr. Power.]

Mr. McGIBBON: I do not wish to embarrass the minister in any way, but I should like to impress on the house that this is a very serious question. Tens of thousands of people in this country are being demoralized by the use of narcotics; and that is one of the big things which this parliament and the country has to fight. I should like to hear from the minister, if I may, what progress has been made in the last twelve months in suppressing the smuggling of opium, the use of which has demoralized tens of thousands of our people. It is one of the really serious questions before the people of Canada. I am not particularly interested in who got the money for enforcing the act, but I am interested in knowing how well the act was enforced and with what results.

Mr. MacLAREN: The suppression of the illegal use of narcotics is one that is very closely studied by the departmental officers. There is no evidence of an increase; on the whole I believe there is a diminution in the use of narcotics, if the convictions are a guide, and I believe they are a fairly safe guide. The convictions have been as follows, 1925, 835 convictions; 1926, 743; 1927, 490; 1928, 430; 1929, 567; 1930, 458; 1931, 333. So far as one may judge from the convictions, the use of narcotics is less than it was in previous years.

Mr. GERSHAW: Perhaps the minister would give us a little further information regarding those convictions. What becomes of the addict who is convicted? Is he punished by being sent to gaol, or is hospital treatment provided for him?

Mr. MacLAREN: So far as the penalties are concerned, there are heavy fines or imprisonment, or both. So far as treatment is concerned, arrangements are made for giving suitable treatment to the individual.

Mr. GERSHAW: What treatment is provided? Does the department pay for the treatment, or how is it provided?

Mr. MacLAREN: The department does not pay for the treatment.

Mr. GERSHAW: Who provides the treatment?

Mr. MacLAREN: It depends upon the man. A man may pay for his own treatment, for instance, or if he is sent to a public hospital he becomes a public charge.

Mr. POWER: Does the minister say that a man convicted of a crime under a narcotic act and sentenced to imprisonment is obliged to pay for the treatment he receives as a prisoner?

Mr. MacLAREN: Arrangements are made for the treatment of individuals who are imprisoned.

Mr. POWER: At whose expense?

Mr. MacLAREN: At the expense of the public. Arrangements are made with the gaol physician who carries on the treatments.

Mr. POWER: Does the Department of Pensions and National Health pay the physicians for those treatments?

Mr. MacLAREN: We incur no expense. But in cases where there is no imprisonment we do everything possible. We advise the people affected to go to hospitals or sanataria to receive treatments, and show an interest in the welfare of each individual.

Mr. POWER: Who carries on the work of advising and showing interest in the welfare of individuals?

Mr. MacLAREN: The medical officers of the department. Then we have a special staff dealing with narcotics, who do all they can, from a humanitarian standpoint, to assist the people affected.

Mr. ROSS: Does this matter not come under the control of the provincial legislatures? After a successful prosecution the individual goes to an institution, and such institutions are maintained by the provinces, therefore all expenses fall to the provinces.

Mr. HOWDEN: I understand there are no provincial institutions to care for narcotic victims. I understand, further, that for a long time there has been an agitation to have the federal Department of Health take steps to provide such institutions. Is the department giving the matter any serious consideration, and is there any likelihood of the government supplying a fund for this purpose?

Mr. MacLAREN: The view of the department is that the matter is of a provincial nature, and it has not been considered by the government. Outside of that, however, it is the disposition of the department in every possible way to help in connection with this very important matter. While the care of the sick and of those who indulge in narcotics is a responsibility of the provincial legislatures, yet in many cases our own departmental officers can and do help individuals. In any event they are interested in seeing that the best possible treatment is given.

Mr. HOWDEN: If the federal department assumes the responsibility for locating narcotic victims, and those who are guilty of infractions of the law, one wonders that it does not take any responsibility whatever in connection with relieving the unfortunate condition in which those individuals find themselves. It seems reasonable that if the government assumes the one responsibility it should assume the other concerning the cure of these people.

Mr. MacLAREN: As the matter is within the control of provincial legislatures I am afraid I cannot agree with the hon. member. I do not believe one would want both federal and provincial governments attempting to do the same thing. As a matter of fact curative measures come under the provincial and not the federal control. Whether or not the action suggested by the hon. member is advisable is a different matter.

Mr. HOWDEN: Do I understand from the minister that provincial legislatures have no responsibility concerning trafficking in narcotics, but that the constitution has placed the matter, so far as that angle of it is concerned, solely under the responsibility of the federal government? Do I understand, further, that the federal department takes no responsibility for cure?

Mr. MacLAREN: I have explained what the department is doing and believe I have covered the ground sufficiently. I do not say that the provinces have nothing to do with the apprehension of offenders, because the fact is that provincial and local police do their duty in connection with the detection of the improper use of narcotics.

Mr. HOWDEN: The matter of what should be done with narcotic victims is widely debated not only in this House of Commons but throughout the country. As a matter of fact the ordinary hospital is not the proper place to deal with such people. There are institutions throughout the United States where much better treatment is provided than is given in Canada. For a long time there has been an agitation in Canada for provision for similar institutions. So far no provincial legislature has accepted the responsibility of establishing such institutions, and the federal government adopts a similar attitude. In my view this is a matter to which the department should give very serious consideration, because until in Canada we have some means of properly treating these victims, we will not get very far.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Perley, Qu'Appelle): Shall the item carry?

Mr. ROSS: What is the objection to—

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. Perley, Qu'Appelle): It is six o'clock.

At six o'clock the committee took recess.

After Recess

The committee resumed at eight o'clock.

Mr. HOWDEN: I should like to add one or two remarks to what I was saying when the committee rose for dinner. We were talking about the narcotic drug traffic, and I should like to say that there are a few things in Canada which seem to fall between the two stools, the federal government on the one hand and the provincial government on the other. What is the drug traffic? It simply amounts to this, that a number of unscrupulous individuals enter into this traffic and victimize whomever they may for their own profit. Unfortunately the victims often are prominent persons of high social standing, and frequently are women. I can say that without fear of contradiction. Eventually the criminals who sell the drugs, as well as their victims, are brought to justice. Those who indulge in the traffic for purposes of gain are sent to gaol; but the victims also come before a judge and are fined, and what happens? They can be sent to gaol or to hospital, but unfortunately the hospitals will not take in these people unless they have special guardians. So for the most part they have no other place to go but the common gaol.

Before recess I maintained that somehow or other the federal government should make advances to the provincial governments for the construction of institutions where these people could be looked after. Unfortunately some of the first families of the land—and I speak with knowledge—number victims of the narcotic trade among their members, and there is practically no place to send those people because the hospitals wash their hands of the responsibility of looking after them. That is the position in connection with this matter. When I broached the subject to the minister before dinner I was simply reviving an old question that has been discussed in various quarters for a long time. There is no doubt that there is a crying need for at least one institution in every province for victims of alcohol and drugs, where they may be sent for succour and care and in the hope of being retrieved. When victims of narcotics are sent to common gaols they suffer the torments of hell and apparently there is no other place to send them. In Manitoba the province has what we call a psychopathic hospital for the care of incipient and minor cases of insanity, and fortunately this hospital does care for these people. There may be other such institutions in Canada, but I do not know of them.

Surely this is a responsibility of the federal government, because the question is a national one. If the government are sufficiently interested in the matter to bother running down these people and taking them to court, at least they should give them some care and consideration after they have been run down. I am bringing up this matter again so that the minister may give it his attention and in the hope that the federal authorities will consult the provincial authorities and provide places for the care of such cases.

Item agreed to.

Public health engineering, $17,000.

Mr. BROWN: Explain.

Mr. GRAY: What is the reason for the increase?

Mr. MacLAREN: This vote is for the enforcement of the regulation under the Public Works Health Act and for investigations with regard to the pollution of boundary waters. The engineers of the department are engaged in checking the purity of the waters in international rivers and lakes.

Mr. GRAY: What is the reason for the increase of $2,000?

Mr. MacLAREN: The previous amount was not quite large enough to provide efficient service.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacLAREN: I do not say that in order to be amusing. The examination of the waters of international streams and lakes is a very interesting and important work, requiring the services of a number of engineers. Last year we would have liked one or two additional men but were not able to get them.

Mr. MITCHELL: I should like to know what public health engineering is.

Mr. MacLAREN: It includes the examination of international waters, under an agreement with the United States; it has to do with the inspection of federal buildings from a health standpoint as well as checking the purity of the water supplied on trains, and similar matters.

Item agreed to.

Marine hospitals, including burial expenses of destitute deceased mariners and grants to institutions assisting sailors, $187,500.

Mr. VENIOT: This fund is made up principally of mariners' fees paid in the various ports. Does the government contribute to it?

Mr. MacLAREN: This item provides for medical and surgical attendance and such other treatment as may be required for sick and injured mariners belonging to vessels that pay sick mariners' dues in conformity with the provisions of the Canada Shipping Act, chapter 186 of the Revised Statutes of Canada. With certain exceptions, dues at the rate of 2 cents for every ton which a ship measures, registered tonnage, is collected from every vessel arriving at any port in the provinces of Quebec, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, and from any place out of Canada or from any port in another province; and the revenue thus obtained is generally speaking approximately equal to the expenditure incurred. The department operates a hospital at Sydney, Nova Scotia, and one at Lunenburg for the exclusive use of sick mariners entitled to the benefits of the act. At other ports provision is made as far as possible for care and treatment at contract rates at the various local hospitals. Where there is no marine or designated hospital the collector of customs, who approves the application for treatment, sends the sick mariner to the port physician and if considered necessary provision is made for his care and treatment in some private residence. Owing to the decrease in shipping activities here has been a decrease in the number of vessels paying these dues and also a decrease in the expenditure.

Mr. VENIOT: I know all about the operation of the act. What I want to know is whether the fund is entirely taken up for the purpose indicated by the minister or whether there is a deficit to which the government must contribute.

Mr. MacLAREN: Last year the receipts were $184,485.47. The previous year they were $201,767.

Mr. VENIOT: What were the expenditures?

Mr. MacLAREN: For the year 1930-31 they were $209,085.55, and for 1931-32, $208,845.90. In the year 1930-31 the deficit was $7,237.83, and last year, $24,360.43.

Mr. VENIOT: Did the government contribute to the deficit out of the consolidated revenue fund?

Mr. MacLAREN: There has been a surplus in previous years and with that we have been meeting the deficit.

Mr. VENIOT: How much of the surplus is now left?

Mr. MacLAREN: Since confederation there has accumulated a net surplus of $273,538.70.

Mr. VENIOT: With such a surplus I do not see why the expenditure should be reduced this year. This is not money that comes out of the government of Canada; it is money contributed by the vessels the sailors on which are supposed to receive this hospital aid when necessary. I cannot see therefore the necessity of reducing the expenditure when it is so absolutely essential to look after these men. In addition to the amounts collected from vessels coming from foreign ports and from vessels sailing from one province to another in Canada under Canadian register there is also a payment made to look after sick or injured sailors locally—fishermen. The fishermen pay into this fund and are looked after locally. The minister says that where there is no hospital arrangements are made for the treatment locally of sick or injured sailors. I have in mind a fisherman who was injured in the harbour of Shippegan. The vessel to which he belonged had paid sick mariners' dues, and in the course of his calling a codfish hook ran into his hand. There was no local doctor authorized to look after sailors in Shippegan and this man would have had to drive twenty-one miles to see a doctor. He could not stand the drive; the suffering was too great. The sub collector of customs at that port therefore gave the man an order to be treated by a local doctor, but that local doctor not having an appointment through the department has been refused payment for the treatment of this sailor. I hold that the doctor is entitled to payment. It would be a hardship—I will not qualify it with any stronger word—to force a sailor to drive twenty-one miles with a large fish hook stuck in his hand, and that it what this man would have had to do; he would have had to go to Caraquet. He could not undertake that drive, he was treated by the local doctor, and the doctor gets nothing.

Mr. MacLAREN: I need hardly point out that in emergencies no regulations hold.

Mr. VENIOT: Why then was this doctor not paid? I have the correspondence, and it says that the collector of customs had no authority to order a local doctor to look after this man; he should have sent him to Caraquet.

Mr. MacLAREN: He had not under ordinary circumstances, but in a case of emergency he had every reason to do so. If the hon. gentleman brings the matter to my attention, with the name, I shall have that promptly put right. The rule in ordinary cases is that they go to the regularly appointed man only. But in case of emergency these men must be looked after, and the department will see that they are looked after. I presume the hon. member for Gloucester has in his mind the small boats. I think the men who use these small fishing boats are receiving very fair treatment compared with the general medical attendance. For instance in the last year vessels of less than thirty-four tons produced a revenue of $1,236; and on cases of members of crews of these small boats $10,313.82 was expended.

Mr. MacINNIS: Would the minister tell the committee how much of last year's vote was given in grants to institutions for assisting sailors?

Mr. MacLAREN: The total is $2,600. It is divided in amounts of $200 to various sailors' institutes on the Atlantic and the Pacific—Navy League of Canada; Sailors' Institute, North Sydney; Navy League, Sydney; Seamen's Mission Society, Saint John; Catholic Sailors' Club, Saint John; Catholic Sailors' Club, Montreal; Catholic Sailors' Club, Hochelaga Branch; Montreal Seamen's Institute; Montreal Sailors' Hospital; Catholic Seamen's Club, Quebec; Quebec Seamen's Institute; Vancouver Sailors' Home; Victoria Sailors' Institute. These different organizations received $200 a year towards their facilities for looking after sailors.

Mr. HOWDEN: Does this item really constitute a form of insurance that is afforded sailors, or why does the government of Canada give special consideration to sailors as a class?

Mr. MacLAREN: Yes, I would consider it a form of insurance. Two cents a ton is charged on vessels coming to our ports from outside the country or the province, to form a fund to pay for the expenses of sick mariners. Otherwise they might be left uncared for or go ashore without proper means of support. The insurance, if you wish to call it so, is paid by the owners of the vessels.

Mr. DUFF: I notice there is a decrease of $20,000 in this item. I would like the minister to explain why this very important vote is decreased by that amount. He told us a short time ago that there were certain marine hospitals in different parts of the country. These hospitals are kept up by the appointment of marine doctors by the department. In my own town there is a marine hospital which for a number of years has been of great benefit to the fishermen and sailors coming into that port. After this government came into power the doctor who had had charge of the hospital, a very capable man, was dismissed without cause and another physician, a Conservative, appointed, without reason and without justification. Then for some reason, within eighteen months that new appointee of the Conservative government was dismissed. I would like to know why this very capable doctor was dismissed and another man put in his place.

Mr. HANSON (York-Sunbury): There must be something wrong about that statement.

Mr. MacLAREN: That is a question that I would prefer to take up with the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough in the department. I suggest that it is not advisable to discuss a matter of that kind here, because I believe it would give rise to harm, certainly to no good. But I wish to say this, very emphatically and without any doubt, that the officer he refers to was not displaced without cause. I suggest that the hon. member come down to the department and I will show him the files; I would rather not put the matter on Hansard unless he insists upon it. Neither that officer nor any other has been displaced without good and proper cause.

Mr. DUFF: Of course I appreciate the minister's delicacy in not wanting to deal with this matter on the floor of the house. The first physician dismissed was a Liberal. Without telegraphing this gentleman or getting his consent to having this matter discussed publicly here, I am willing to take the responsibility for asking the minister now, without going to his department, why this very capable doctor who had been the physician in the hospital for a number of years and who had the confidence of the fishermen and sailors, was dismissed in 1930. That is the first point. The second thing I want to say is that after this capable doctor was dismissed upon the present government coming into power, a very capable Conservative doctor was appointed to that hospital and within twelve months that Tory doctor was dismissed without cause. Surely the minister does not want me to go to the department and discuss with him privately why a good Conservative, a man who always voted for the Conservative government, who went out and worked during every one of the last ten elections, was dismissed without cause as medical officer in the Lunenburg marine hospital. I think it is time the minister should give the public and me the reason why this good Conservative was dismissed without cause.

Mr. MacLAREN: I should say that what the hon. member has stated is evidence that the department is administering its affairs without regard to politics. As I said, I am not, if I can help it, going to drag the affairs of these men into public in the house. I do not think it is a proper thing, and I ask the committee to support me in that.

Mr. DUFF: I think we have a right to know why these capable men were dismissed. As to the first doctor, I have no objection to that, because by dismissing him the minister and the government have made of him a good canvasser against the present government in the next election.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Why worry?

Mr. DUFF: In the 1930 election, due to the fact that this first doctor had an appointment from the previous government, he did not stir from his place on polling day; he did not do anything at all to help return the Liberal party to power. Now, of course, since his dismissal, he is a good Grit and in the next election he will go out and work to elect a Liberal candidate. Since this government came into power, without reference to the Civil Service Commission, without reference to anybody except the patronage committee, they appointed a Conservative doctor to take charge of the hospital, but not satisfied with that, within eighteen months after this very capable doctor had been appointed, they dismissed him.

Mr. MacDONALD (Cape Breton South): Perhaps he turned Grit.

Mr. DUFF: The cute old fox from Cape Breton South is right. That former Tory doctor, because of his dismissal, is going to vote Grit and work Grit in the next election. I am not complaining. What I want to know from the government and the minister himself is why this capable doctor, who was a friend of the party and should not have been dismissed, was let out. It is up to the minister and his officials to give reasons for the dismissal of this doctor and the appointment of another Conservative.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. DUFF: No. I am going to demand that the minister give me a good reason for what was done in this case. First, a gentleman of his own profession, of good standing in the medical profession, was dismissed from his position as marine physician because he happened to be a Liberal. I have no particular objection to that. What I want to know is why, after this Liberal doctor was dismissed and a Conservative appointed, within eighteen months the latter capable gentleman, who was a Conservative and a good follower of my hon. friend, was dismissed from his position, and I am going to demand an answer.

Mr. MacLAREN: I can go this far with my hon. friend. I would do a great deal to meet his wishes. I may say that the first vacancy was caused by death. As regards the other, an investigation was held, the various aspects of the case were looked into and it was decided that his services should be dispensed with.

Mr. DUFF: I agree with the minister that the first dismissal was caused by death, political death. I think I should know exactly what happened in regard to the dismissals from this hospital. It is true that a year before my hon. friend was appointed Minister of National Health, the gentleman who was in charge of the hospital in that town did die, but I had the honour and pleasure of recommending a new man; in fact I recommended not one but two, because they were in partnership. When this government came into power, those gentlemen were dismissed. As I said a moment ago, during the 1930 election they felt that because they were getting $1,000 in salary from the government, they could not very well go out and work for the Liberal candidate. Therefore, I was delighted that they were dismissed because in the next election they will be the best workers we have in that part of the country. I believe to the victors belong the spoils, and I have accordingly no objection when my hon. friend, of course on representations made by his party—and I am not complaining of that; I would have done the same thing—appointed a good Conservative. It was the proper thing to do. What I do object to is that within twelve or fifteen months after this Conservative, a respectable, efficient physician, who looked after his work and who had the confidence of the fishermen, sailors and citizens of the town, was appointed, he was dismissed. I am sure every hon. gentleman opposite should sympathize with me in my argument, because I am trying to defend their own party. It may be all very well for the minister to try to get by this with a smile, but he must not forget that in that little town where the hospital is situated, the fact that this good Conservative, a reliable physician, was dismissed from his position, would have some reflection on his standing and character in the community. I, who am a neighbour of this man, resent that my hon. friend, for some reason which I do not know, dismissed this capable physician, who had the confidence of the fishermen and sailors, and appointed another man in his place. It is due to the community and to the Conservative party that the minister should explain why this was done.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Carried.

Mr. DUFF: With regard to this dismissal and the new appointment, I want to ask the minister whether the new appointment was made by the Civil Service Commission or by his department?

Mr. MacLAREN: All these appointments are departmental, none being made by the Civil Service Commission—or rather, I understand that for some years there has been an understanding or agreement between the Civil Service Commission and the department, and the latter makes the appointments.

Mr. VALLANCE: How long has this agreement been in force between the department and the Civil Service Commission giving power to the former to make the appointments?

Mr. MacLAREN: That was brought about by an order in council.

Mr. VALLANCE: When?

Mr. MacLAREN: It was some time ago, in 1923.

Mr. VALLANCE: I happened to be a member of the committee which investigated the administration of the civil service last year, and what the minister now says simply bears out the evidence that was submitted to that committee, showing that the Civil Service Commission was not performing the functions for which it was created. In nine hundred and ninety cases out of a thousand, before an appointment is made by the Civil Service Commission, it has to be O.K.'d by the head of the department.

Mr. QUINN: You should know.

Mr. VALLANCE: I should know because I was a member of that committee.

Mr. MacLAREN: The commission does not appoint these men.

Mr. VALLANCE: That is what I am saying.

Mr. MacLAREN: That is what I say.

Mr. VALLANCE: This is just another case that goes to bear out the evidence that the Civil Service Commission is not performing the functions for which it was created. As the minister has told us to-night, an agreement is entered into between the head of the department and the commission whereby the commission waives its right to make the appointment, and in nine hundred and ninety cases out of a thousand it will be found that the department makes the appointment. We had deputy ministers come before that committee last year and point out to us definitely that time after time an eligible list would be presented to the department and be torn up, that a second list would be presented and be torn up, and then the head of the department would invite or suggest to somebody to make application, and that application would go through. The Civil Service Commission is not allowed to function.

Mr. COTNAM: Now you have put your foot in it.

Mr. DUFF: The hon. member for North Renfrew said that the hon. member for South Battleford had put his foot in it. It would be better if some people would put their foot in their mouth and keep quiet.

The minister said a moment ago that these appointments were made without reference to the Civil Service Commission. My understanding of the order in council of 1923 was that all appointments to positions over $200 had to be made by the Civil Service Commission and be advertised in the regular way, and that positions under $200 were left to the government to fill. If I had my way the party in power would make all the appointments. I agree with my hon. friend from South Battleford that the Civil Service Commission is now and has been purely a camouflage. I see by the newspapers of the last few days that a gentleman from Prince Edward Island is coming to Ottawa to be made chairman of the Civil Service Commission, and that two other gentlemen are to take the places of the two now serving. I say that the best thing for this government to do, especially in view of the economic conditions to-day, would be to do away with the Civil Service Commission, and let the ministers of the different departments and members of parliament take full responsibility of all appointments of whatever kind.

Coming back to this particular case, the Minister of Health, on the representations of somebody, dismissed a capable Conservative physician.

Mr. MacLAREN: I rise to a point of order, Mr. Chairman. That is not the statement I made. I said that an investigation was duly held, as a result of which it was considered advisable to retire this man.

Mr. DUFF: I accept the minister's explanation. I would not for a moment put my judgment against his, and I am sure my hon. friend from Long Lake will agree with that. Nevertheless the fact remains that the gentleman who was appointed physician of the hospital in Lunenburg by my hon. friends opposite after they came into power was a capable man, and I still say that there was no reason why he should have been dismissed.

Mr. BURY: Go and look at the files which the minister has offered to make available to you.

Mr. DUFF: Go and look at the files yourself if you want to see them. You have nothing else to do; I have. I know the circumstances, which my hon. friend does not. He should not try to be smart about a matter that I know all about and that he knows nothing about. I say to my hon. friend from away out on the great prairies, from the ranches of Alberta, if he wants to go over the Rocky mountains, let him go. I come from down by the sea coast.

Mr. BURY: It is you who want the information.

Mr. DUFF: Then why don't you hold your tongue and let me get it? Surely, Mr. Chairman, my hon. friend must realize that I am capable of getting any information I want, and he need not worry his brains about it.

As I was saying, the Conservative government, after they came into power in 1930, dismissed a Liberal appointee. I have no objection in the world to that; it was the right thing to do from my standpoint. Then they appointed a Conservative to that position. What I do object to is that this capable, efficient, decent, respectable, God-fearing citizen who goes to church every Sunday and teaches in the Sunday school, and who voted Tory—

Mr. McINTOSH: He is not a Presbyterian, is he?

Mr. DUFF: Pretty nearly; he may be a Lutheran. This gentleman for some reason or other was dismissed from his position, and there are certain people in the town who cannot understand why that should have been done. I am sure the minister did not do it himself. I cannot believe for a moment that he did it without knowing something about it.

Mr. MacLAREN: The hon. member cannot put it that way. I have said that an investigation was held.

Mr. DUFF: The minister says that an investigation was held. Being a political partisan as I am, and as you are, Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand why the minister had an investigation of a good Tory, for this man was a Conservative partisan, a follower who had given good service to the Conservative party, as well as to the hospital, to the fishermen and the sailors. Why should there be an investigation of a man when there was nothing against his character or his ability in performing his duties?

Mr. BOYES: It is hard for a Liberal to understand that.

Mr. DUFF: It is only a hard-hearted Tory who would do it. A Liberal would never do it. The fact remains that this good Conservative was dismissed from his position, and another good Conservative was appointed. What I should like to know from my hon. friend is what investigation took place resulting in the dismissal of this good Conservative, and what particular qualifications has the new appointee for the position?

Mr. McINTOSH: In other words you want the facts.

Mr. DUFF: Yes.

Mr. McGIBBON: May I interject a word in order that we may get our bearings. I have been greatly interested to learn that nearly every hon. member on the opposite side of the house is opposed to the Civil Service Commission.

Some hon. MEMBERS: No.

Mr. HANBURY: Absolutely the contrary.

Mr. McGIBBON: I happened to introduce a resolution last year in that connection, and I do not think there was a single hon. member in the house, with the exception of myself, who spoke in favour of it. The committee was appointed, and where did we get? Just a little bit more trouble is heaped upon the member when he has to go out and scour the country to get someone to take a job which nobody wants. That is about the size of it. If I were to give my opinion of what I thought of the commission, I am afraid it would not be parliamentary.

Mr. HANBURY: Try it; you cannot shock this house.

Mr. McGIBBON: However, like other Conservatives I welcome an advocate such as the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough. It is something new for him to stand in this House of Commons and plead for a Tory or a Tory cause. I am sure every hon. member on this side of the house, knowing his ability and knowing how he can argue on any side of a case, will welcome his remarks. But I should like to remind the hon. member that he has made some very quick somersaults in this house. When he criticizes the Minister of Pensions and National Health for changing his mind about appointments and at the same time states that the minister should have full liberty to make any appointments he may wish, I suggest he is inconsistent. I can remember that in a session not very many years ago the hon. member took credit for having a certain vote placed in the estimates. I have no doubt that at the time the vote was in the interests of the good Grits in his riding. But, lo and behold! the next year that very same item was kicked out, and by the very same gentleman. Further, he stood up in this house and on both occasions acknowledged the parentage of it. I wonder if he would now tell us what caused the great conversion in his mind on that occasion. What was the great light which changed him from a Saul to a Paul?

Mr. DUFF: Damascus.

Mr. McGIBBON: In one year in Lunenburg he pleaded the cause of the Liberals, and as a result had the item placed in the estimates. The next year, simply because they did not bow down and worship him, he returned to this House of Commons, claiming and exercising the right of having the item kicked out of the estimates.

Mr. HANBURY: That was consistent.

Mr. McGIBBON: The hon. member says that is consistent—if inconsistency is consistency yes. On this side of the house we like the hon. member because apparently he is quite frank; generally we know where he stands. But certainly he ought to be a little bit consistent. Hon. members on this side of the house know what they got when they sat on the opposition benches during the years the Grit government was in power. There was no doubt then as to who exercised the patronage.

Mr. SANDERSON: You do not know what you are going to get after a while, though.

Mr. McGIBBON: We will let the future look after itself.

Mr. McINTOSH: What you are going to get you know not.

Mr. McGIBBON: We know we could not get a penny postage stamp for our ridings when the Liberals were in power.

Some hon. MEMBERS: Order.

[Mr. McGibbon.]

Mr. McGIBBON: All hon. members on this side recognized that fact in those days. Why not be a little bit consistent? I say that this is not the time for patronage. But if the time ever comes, in my opinion hon. members on this side of the house should have consideration before hon. members opposite.

Mr. HANBURY: Regardless of which party may be in power?

Mr. McGIBBON: Oh, we will be here; don't worry about that. I do not know why the doctor was dismissed, but the minister has told us that investigations were made. It is not likely that he made the investigations himself, but it is more than likely he appointed competent people to make them—people in whose judgment he had confidence. If he followed their advice I do not believe the hon. member for Antigonish-Guysborough should be quite so critical. I am sure that had the hon. member been in a similar position he would have been one of the first to follow such advice—and nobody knows it better than he does.

Mr. DUFF: I am sure I appreciate the lecture concerning patronage the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario has tried to give me. My hon. friend and I came to this house in 1917. Ever since that time my voice has been raised against the Civil Service Commission, and in favour of the practice of allowing the party in power to make appointments. I never have changed my views in that connection. If the hon. member stated what is in his mind he would admit that I am making a true statement.

Mr. McGIBBON: Quite true. I merely made the statement that you did not give me any help last year.

Mr. DUFF: I voted for your report.

Mr. McGIBBON: There was no vote taken.

Mr. DUFF: My hon. friend was a member of the civil service committee, and knowing him as well as I do, when he brought in his report I could do nothing but support him, even though I knew he was wrong.

Mr. McGIBBON: I was not on the committee, and I never brought in any report.

Mr. DUFF: However, the matter I was discussing before the hon. member spoke is worthy of serious consideration. If I have shown anything, certainly I must have shown the hon. member for Muskoka-Ontario that I am trying to be fair. If a Grit doctor had been dismissed and I had objected to the dismissal, I might understand the hon. member rising in righteous indignation and criticising me. But the fact is that the gentleman I am trying to support and defend is a Conservative.

Mr. McGIBBON: There must be something wrong when you are defending him.

Mr. DUFF: Putting aside the fact that this good Conservative was dismissed, I should like to ask the minister something about the qualifications of the man who took his place. Were tenders called for or—

Some hon. MEMBERS: Oh, oh!

Mr. DUFF: —or were application forms sent out by the Civil Service Commission?

Mr. WILLIS: You are getting too tender altogether.

Mr. DUFF: No, no. Were applications called for by the Civil Service Commission? Did other physicians have an opportunity to apply for this very important position involving the lives of fishermen and sailors, or how was the appointment made?

Mr. MacLAREN: I am responsible for those appointments. I am glad to say there are many medical men in the department. The field is surveyed, and we ascertain who are available and would be suitable. As a result one is chosen and appointed. I cannot say who recommended him, because I have not the files before me. I could not say about most of these appointments, but I satisfied myself to the best of my judgment that this would be a proper appointment.

Mr. DUFF: I quite understand that the minister is willing to take the responsibility, and certainly I do not want to blame him for this appointment. But my hon. friend said he had officials in his department who looked over the field and selected the list from which the appointee was chosen. I should like to know what particular official looked over the field in this case and why this appointment was made.

Mr. MacLAREN: Because there was need for it.

Mr. DUFF: I do not think that is a fair answer. They might have gone out and picked a veterinary surgeon, a quack doctor without the necessary qualifications, or a chiropractor or any one. Surely in a case of this kind, where the appointment is important, the minister should be able to give some reason for the choice of this particular gentleman.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: I should like to ask a question just to clear up one point in my mind. Did I understand the minister to say that the medical men in these hospitals are appointed not by the Civil Service Commission but by the department directly?

Mr. MacLAREN: That is quite right.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: Does that apply to all the hospitals under the department?

Mr. MacLAREN: It applies to all the hospitals in the marine section only and port physicians.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: It does not apply to the hospitals under the pensions department?

Mr. MacLAREN: To nothing else.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR

Annuities Act, $54,500.

Mr. HANBURY: Would the minister explain this item?

Hon. W. A. GORDON (Minister of Labour): This amount is for the administration of the Annuities Act under which annuities are sold to those who care to invest in them and the contracts are issued by the government.

Mr. McGIBBON: Can the minister tell us if they are still on the same basis?

Mr. GORDON: No; as hon. members will recollect, the limit was reduced from $5,000 to $1,200. I think everyone will agree that this was highly desirable.

Mr. McGIBBON: Are they still on the four per cent basis?

Mr. GORDON: They are still on the same basis.

Item agreed to.

Combines Investigation Act, $25,000.

Mr. SANDERSON: What investigations were held last year under this act?

Mr. GORDON: There was an investigation into the Canadian basket pool; there is at present proceeding the coal investigation; there was an investigation into the tobacco industry and there was an investigation last year into the moving picture industry that lapped over into this fiscal year. I have not before me at the moment the details of all the investigations, but I think that covers practically all the investigations during the year.

Mr. SANDERSON: Is the coal investigation completed as yet?

Mr. GORDON: No. A reference was made in the Senate as to the price of coal in eastern Canada. The situation was drawn to my attention and under the provisions of the act I instructed the registrar, who is the officer charged with such investigations, to proceed with an inquiry. That inquiry is not quite completed; as the hon. member knows this has been a difficult investigation to carry on. About the same time there was an application received in proper form with respect to the mining and sale of coal in western Canada. A preliminary investigation has been made with respect to western Canada, but I have not had a chance to do more than hurriedly review the evidence submitted by our investigators with regard to that situation. Whether or not the evidence we have would justify a further investigation by the registrar I am not able to say at the moment, but the coal inquiry in the east has been going on for some time. I believe the evidence is all in now, and I understand that the report is in course of preparation.

Mr. McINTOSH: Does not the minister think the investigation should be national while he is at it?

Mr. GORDON: The act sets out the method that must be followed in investigations of this character. I think the investigation might be called national if it covers both eastern and western Canada, but whether or not there is sufficient evidence to justify the expense of an inquiry into the mining and sale of coal in western Canada I would not care to say at the moment. I think hon. members will agree that it is not desirable to cause an investigation into private enterprise unless there is at least a prima facie case of something going on in contravention of the terms of the act, because the disturbance of industry by governmental investigations of this kind is not desirable unless such a case is made out. As yet I am not prepared to say that such a case has been made out in western Canada.

Mr. SANDERSON: When all the evidence in the coal inquiry is in and the minister receives the report will it be made public?

Mr. GORDON: The practice in the past has been I believe not to make these reports public inasmuch as this would necessitate the disclosure of the individual's private business. My own view, without having looked fully into the past practice, is that if it is determined that further proceedings should follow the report of the registrar in the interests of the public then of necessity that report would have to be made public, being the foundation of such further proceedings as might be deemed desirable. If however the registrar's report were of such a character that proceedings should end with the reception of it, then, as I think the hon. member will agree with me, it would be highly undesirable to disclose a person's private business to his competitors and to the public.

Mr. REID: Were any requests received from British Columbia last year with regard to gasoline prices? I understand that a man named Ormond was refused gasoline by four companies.

Mr. GORDON: I remember the case to which the hon. gentleman refers. There was a garage man or dealer—

Mr. REID: In Victoria.

Mr. GORDON: In Victoria, yes. He was refused gasoline by some of the wholesalers. The case came under review by the officials of the department and if I remember rightly their report to me was that a case had not been made out such as would justify the registrar making an inquiry. Consequently no further investigation was made.

Mr. SPENCER: When will the coal investigation be finished?

Mr. GORDON: It should be through in the course of the next few days. It will take some time to prepare the report based on the evidence but I think it will be ready in its final form before the end of this month.

Administration, Employment Offices' Co-ordination Act, $12,000.

Mr. MITCHELL: I understand that the Dominion Advisory Council came into existence in 1918 by order in council. The council met regularly until the advent of the present government, and only once since then has it convened. What is the reason for that? Is it the intention of the government to avail itself of the services of the advisory council in the near future, seeing that the appointees to that council represent organizations in the dominion which are very broad in their scope and which possibly could be of considerable service to the government in connection with the problems arising out of the present depression? I believe that the last time the council met there resulted from its deliberations suggestions which were quite valuable to the government.

Mr. GORDON: The last conference was called about the beginning of 1931 or probably late in 1930. Those who are interested in the work have seen me from time to time during the past year. I shall be glad to take into consideration the remarks of the hon. gentleman and if I deem it desirable I shall certainly see that they are called together.

Item agreed to.

Fair wages and inspection, $13,000.

Mr. HEENAN: Is it the practice of the department now to include in all federal contracts the provisions adopted in 1930 with regard to the eight hour day and fair wages?

Mr. GORDON: Yes, in public contracts.

Mr. HEENAN: Before tenders are called for does the government insist that fair wages shall be paid for the different works?

Mr. GORDON: The provisions of the act are being administered very strictly by the department with respect to the status of the wage earner. If there is a schedule attached to the contract the contractors must live up to it; the department insists upon that. Occasions arise when it is quite difficult to harmonize the prevailing wages with what is just and reasonable. The departmental officials, with whom the hon. gentleman is well acquainted, are charged with the responsibility of seeing that the fair wages' provision and all the regulations under the act are given the broadest interpretation in order that wage earners shall not suffer.

Mr. HEENAN: I do not think the minister quite understood me; he said something about a schedule being included in the contract. My question is whether the department now provides for a schedule of wages in connection with all government contracts. We started the practice of providing a scale of wages so that contractors would know what they were bidding on at the time they sent in tenders. Does that practice still prevail?

Mr. GORDON: So far as I am aware, it does. I remember no instance where any other practice has been followed, because it is desirable that the contractor, whether the contract be large or small, should know when he is tendering what he has to figure on in the way of wages. I believe that practice is followed strictly.

Item agreed to.

International Labour Conference, $12,000.

Mr. MITCHELL: In connection with a discussion in this house early in the session the Prime Minister made the declaration that the question of unemployment insurance would be the subject of discussion at the interprovincial conference early this year. I would like to ask to what extent progress was made at that conference towards the introduction of a dominion unemployment insurance measure.

Mr. GORDON: I hardly think that question could be discussed under this item. I am sure the Prime Minister has no desire whatever to avoid giving opportunity for the discussion of that very important question, and I feel certain that before the session ends, if there is evidence of a desire to discuss the matter, opportunity will be given to do so.

Item agreed to.

Administration, Old Age Pensions Act, $2,000.

Mr. NEILL: I take this opportunity of presenting to the minister a question in connection with the administration of the act in British Columbia. I reluctantly do it now, having exhausted every other method I know of.

We passed an Old Age Pensions Act, in 1926 I think it was, and the upper house defeated it. We went to the country and it formed a very considerable portion of the discussions on which the election turned. We came back and passed it again the next year, and I think it may be said to have received the very general support of the public throughout Canada. I do not think anyone would seriously propose to repeal it. There are a few reactionaries who think it clever to sneer at it as being socialistic legislation, forgetting that what you spend on the one hand you save on the other, but generally speaking Canada has accepted the spirit of the act.

I will not say that I charge the minister with instigating—I want to be as moderate as I can—but by his actions he has encouraged and condoned certain policies being carried out; and whether they had that intention or not the result has been to deprive a large number of deserving people of old age pensions who are fully entitled to them. The local board in British Columbia, acting on instructions—they must have been acting on instructions—suddenly turned a violent right about face. As to the question who gave these instructions, I will deal with that in a moment. They have by every known method of subterfuge and evasion gone directly against both the spirit and the letter of the act in refusing pensions. When I appealed to the minister, as I have done repeatedly—I am going to read the letters—he certainly has encouraged them in their action by ignoring complaints and more or less passing the buck. I have heard him say in this house that the matter is primarily one for the provinces to deal with, or that it was the duty of the provinces. I am inclined to the same view, in regard to the original action, but the province of British Columbia specifically and violently denies it. I am going to read the letter of the provincial attorney general on the subject. In any event the minister is responsible for not taking action when it was brought to his attention. It may be said: It is only a case of paying seventy-five per cent of what the province pays out, therefore we have no jurisdiction. That argument will not work. This government is paying out $10,000,000 in this matter; does anyone seriously suggest that the government which pays that $10,000,000 cannot exercise some oversight, cannot say: You are doing this too lavishly, or on too niggardly a scale? Can they not say, I do not think this particular man or woman is entitled to pension? Indeed I have known them to do it, and so they could in respect of an unjustly rejected application. When a case is brought to his attention it is within the scope of the authority and the duty of the minister to draw the attention of the province to the matter and say: Why are you dealing or not dealing with this particular case? It is the same as if I knew of a man in gaol for an offence, and some other person had confessed his guilt and I called that to the attention of the Minister of Justice; it would be his duty, having been apprised of the facts, to take proper action. I do not expect the Minister of Justice or the Minister of Labour to run around the back sections asking people: Have you had a raw deal? But when it is brought to his attention it is his duty to inquire; I will ever maintain that.

As a last resource, I wrote to the Attorney General of British Columbia, and said: "Did you know what was going on?" I thought perhaps it was the board going wrong. This is his reply, dated January 17:

> I have your communication of the 13th instant complaining about the administration of the "Old Age Pensions Act."
> In the first paragraph of your letter you refer to the provincial old age pensions department. May I state that the provincial government does not administer the Old Age Pensions Act.

That will be news I think for the minister.

> This is administered by the Workmen's Compensation Board, it is true, and it is true again that the Workmen's Compensation Board is appointed by the provincial government to administer the "Workmen's Compensation Act," but this board, when administering the "Old Age Pensions Act" is acting for the Dominion government under the dominion statute and pursuant to Dominion government regulations. The board takes its instructions from Ottawa and not from the province.

Please note that.

> The only change in the system might have been that the Dominion government recently assumed seventy-five per cent of the financial obligations, instead of fifty per cent as was formerly the case.

Mr. MITCHELL: Who signed that letter?

Mr. NEILL: H. H. Pooley, Attorney General of British Columbia, in an obvious and patent attempt to pass the buck to the dominion, I think. But the point I want to make is this: Whether or not Mr. Pooley is right or wrong in that regard, I am still dealing with the ultimate responsibility of the minister when a specific case of gross injustice is brought to his attention. I am not talking about changes in the act or regulations; I am talking about a number of specific cases. These departures from law and equity are an outrage and a travesty on justice. I propose to explain them by reading some letters I wrote to the minister, because the matter is there put in concrete form.

The first deals with the use the province makes of the fact that it has a Parents' Maintenance Act, also the interpretation of the regulation which says that they must consider what income the applicant may "reasonably expect to receive." It is on a dreadful travesty and misinterpretation of this that they base a good many of their refusals. Here is my letter dated July 28, 1932, to Hon. W. A. Gordon:

> The provincial authorities of British Columbia are refusing to carry out the provisions of the Old Age Pensions Act. There is a provincial act called the Parents Maintenance Act which provides for the crown or anyone to sue their children for an order for support. It provides that the magistrate, if satisfied that the child has sufficient means to contribute to the maintenance of the parent, "may, in his discretion," having regard to the whole circumstances of the case, order that the child shall pay, etc.
> In scores of cases, the provincial authorities are refusing old age pensions and telling the applicants that they can enforce the provisions of the Parents Maintenance Act.
> How is a destitute old man or woman to get money to sue their children scattered over the continent or even the province? One at Rossland, another in Duluth, a third at Prince Rupert. The cost would be prohibitive. In most cases the magistrate confronted with the fact of the son being married, with four or five of a family or even two or three, and out of work would make no order against the son or daughter and if he did the parent could not collect on it.
> Apart from the fact that in ninety-nine per cent the results would be wholely abortive,—think of the inhumanity of compelling a woman of over seventy with all the love and affection she can ever anticipate in this world, wrapped up in her daughters and grandchildren, being compelled to alienate it all by suing her children whom she knows perfectly well are entirely willing but entirely unable to help her.

I have been told to tell such an old man or woman to sue their children when the children themselves were getting relief work of $16.50 a month with their own wife and family to support out of that.

But forgetting that aspect and even forgetting for the moment that it is impossible for destitute people to start suit against different children in different places, there is another aspect to which I beg your attention and I trust, your support. The Old Age Pensions Act is very definite. It defines certain qualifications and those conditions being met, it is mandatory.

The agreement between your department and the province is a defined contract. It is binding on both parties. The province shall pay to the applicant if qualified—that is, qualified under the Old Age Pensions Act—a certain sum and the Dominion agrees to pay, etc.

It is as obligatory, a person being qualified under the act, to grant him or her a pension as it is obligatory to grant a person the right to vote, he or she being qualified under the Voters' Act. Once qualified under the act there is no discretion to drag in some other act. It is not open to the province to say, "Go, sue your children" any more than it is to say: "Go, and commit suicide."

Had the agreement made between your department and the province contained, in the case of British Columbia an extra provision that the applicants were to qualify under the Old Age Pensions Act but had first to exhaust the possibilities of the Parents Maintenance Act, there might have been reason in their attitude but the act stands alone and should be adhered to.

I have suggested that their duty is to give the applicant his or her pension if qualified and if the board think that there are children able to support their parents,—then let the province sue the children for the amount under the local Parents Maintenance Act.

I have nearly a dozen cases but will take one as an example.

Mother very old and bed-ridden, has had the pension for years. Taken away this spring. Reason given: "It is felt that your son should keep you." Later, I took up the case and pointed out that the son's earnings for the last year were about $50 so that he, as a matter of fact could not keep her. After more writing their final letter reads thus: "Until the above-mentioned takes advantage of the Parents Maintenance Act, we are unable to do anything."

In another case they referred to the clause in new regulations by which they must take into consideration "salary, wages or other means of livelihood which the pensioner may reasonably be expected to receive." They refer to this clause in every case.

In one case I explained that this clause could not apply as one could not say an applicant could reasonably be expected to receive anything from a child who was himself unable to get work or, in one case, working for his board.

The reply I got—it lies before me now (replying to above argument of mine)—reads thus:

"It is reasonable to expect that a single son should be able to support his father."

And for that reason they rejected the application! They did not claim that the son had any money or could get any but because it was "reasonable to expect" that he should have some, they leave the old man to starve. I am sure when you passed the revised regulations last February you never expected such a travesty of justice to be conceived out of their interpretation.

In the case of the old woman or any old person if they have money enough to sue four of their children—all different actions in different places—then they are not actually destitute. If they have no such funds then what is the use of telling them to do the impossible? Impossible in two ways—first, because they cannot pay the cost and, second, because it would not result in their getting any money.

But I stress most of all, the terms of the Old Age Pensions Act. If qualified under that act they are entitled to a pension and they do not have to qualify under or pay attention to any other act.

The province made a contract with you to do such and such things and they are seeking to evade their obligations by a very cheap and wholly inapplicable subterfuge.

I trust you will not allow them to so bring your department into disrepute because of course the suggestion always appears that it is your regulations that compel them to so act.

By the way, I have under my hand an opinion from a very capable lawyer—at least he is the city solicitor of Vancouver—expressing grave doubts whether even under the Parents' Maintenance Act, one could compel a child to support his father who was healthy and able to work and was out of work simply because he could not get employment. However, be that as it may.

I have before me another case; I shall not give the name because I do not think it is desirable to give it publicity. The department writes, not to me but to someone else in connection with a certain case, as follows:

You are no doubt aware of the Parents' Maintenance Act which is in effect in this province and under which act the children are required to maintain their dependent parents. This act creates a legal responsibility in so far as the children are concerned and if Mr. So-and-So is in need of assistance he should endeavour to obtain some under the above mentioned enactment. The findings of the magistrate should then be forwarded to this department.

This clearly indicates in so many words that this father had to sue his son. I investigated the case and found that both father and son were living in a bit of a shack, each of them receiving from the government two days' work or $5.60 a month. That is the son whom this board told the father he ought to sue, and afterwards to submit the findings of the magistrate. I did not get any answer from the minister.

Mr. GORDON: What was the date of the letter to which the hon. member received no answer? Was it a letter to me?

Mr. NEILL: Yes. I think there were five, and later on, after bringing the matter up in the house, I think I got an acknowledgment of three of them. The first letter was dated July 28. I received a sort of blanket acknowledgment from the deputy later on, but not for some months afterward; I shall mention the matter when I come to it. I wrote the minister again on October 26, as follows:

Dear Mr. Gordon:

I would revert to the statement made in my letter to you of July 28 to which I have had no reply. The same situation is still going on, only worse.

The latest case brought to my attention is that of a woman, over seventy, who has been refused a pension although she is sick and over age, on the ground they they consider her husband who is apparently in good physical condition should therefore be able to maintain his wife. The facts are notorious. He is not able to maintain his wife as he cannot get any work, but they refuse the wife's application on the ground that he "should" be able to get work. I submit that that is no answer to the woman's rights under the pension act.

I mentioned a number of other cases in my letter of the date above referred to and suggested that you should have an investigation into the matter. It has got so bad that a lawyer in Victoria has aplied for a mandamus against the provincial official to compel them to grant a pension.

I wrote again on November 3 in regard to another case, and I am citing these because they are all different cases of injustice:

Dear Mr. Gordon:

In reference to the representations I have made to you under date of July 28 and again on October 26 as to the manner in which the Old Age Pensions Act is being administered, I will again call it to your attention with another specific case.

I was not asking him to change the act; I was asking him to deal with specific cases.

A woman applicant had a property assessed at $3,000. The board insisted on regarding that as its true value although it is a notorious fact that assessments in British Columbia are greatly over-valued. They therefore charged her as if she were getting an income of five per cent on $3,000. Presently she sold it for $2,000 to be paid at the rate of $20 a month, which would naturally take a number of years to complete. The payments were not made very regularly, but on June 1, 1932, the amount due on it was $1,100 to be spread out as I have said at the rate of $20 a month. With the knowledge that the purchaser had defaulted on several occasions in the past, and that the property was in a small mining town, the board nevertheless took the stand that the property was worth to her $1,100 in cash and that with $1,100 in cash she could buy an annuity of $177 a year. Consequently they charged her up as having that amount of income, which prevented her getting a pension.

It is a notorious fact that people trying to sell an agreement for the purchase of real estate have to take a very great discount. A firm in Vancouver, advertising to do such business, said they might have got $800 for this agreement if the property had been situated in Vancouver, but when they heard where it was, they would not touch it at any price, and suggested that I might get a local man to give $400 or $500 for it. It is utterly unfair to say she could purchase an annuity to the equivalent of $1,100 with this agreement of sale because it will be quite a few years before the amount is received, if then.

One of the regulations says that they must consider the amount of the Canadian government annuity purchasable by the personal property of the pensioner. It is utterly untrue to say that $177 is the amount of the annuity purchasable by this particular piece of property. I would also point out that it is very doubtful whether this should be considered personal property. The title to the land is in her name, the agreement of sale has never been registered, and I claim she should only be charged with five per cent of her interest in the property.

It may be said that this is a provincial matter, but I would point out that your department made an express bargain with the province that they were to grant pensions in accordance with the act, and they are not granting pensions in accordance with the act. I submit it is the province of your department to inquire into why they do not.

Another case I will introduce here, and it is the last one, although I could go on for hours because I have a stack of these cases a couple of feet high. Again I shall not mention the name. A man was disqualified some years ago because he owned property assessed at such a high figure that at five per cent it produced an assumed income that disqualified him. I pointed out that the property was assessed at five times its true value, being assessed at about $8,000, speaking from memory, while it is worth perhaps $1,500.

Mr. GORDON: Was that man paying the taxes on the property?

Mr. NEILL: Yes, and keeping himself poor doing it. It was a perfect incubus, a white elephant.

Mr. GORDON: He should have got rid of that white elephant and saved his taxes.

Mr. NEILL: It takes about three years to get rid of it by not paying the taxes, and sometimes the government does not hold a tax sale. That was my own recommendation, to let it all go except the house they lived in. I do not know why they did not. But the pension was refused on the ground I have pointed out. Last February the minister's department changed those regulations. The original regulations were that the real estate of a person should be assessed at five per cent of the assessed value. The department found that that created injustice, probably in Ontario. At any rate they changed the rule, and made it read that in future real estate would be taken at the assessed value, or the market value, whichever was the more equitable. Surely that was a good idea because, after all, we all want equity. As soon as that change was made I applied to the board again and said, "Now I am in a position to get this man a pension because you have been given direct authority, not permission but authority, to take whichever is the more equitable, the assessed or the market value." I offered to show them over the ground so they could see where the property was located, see its poverty and its inability to produce anything at all, and to take their own opinion as to its valuation. What did they do? They said: No, we are going to take the assessed value as being the true value. I pointed out that that was not the true value and that the minister himself had changed his regulations to allow them to take the market value. But they said: No, we are going to take the assessed value.

Mr. GORDON: The regulations read, the assessed value.

Mr. NEILL: Pardon me, but that was changed in February a year ago to read, the assessed or market value whichever is the more equitable. I think the minister's deputy will agree with me, and because it was changed in that way this man was entitled to his pension. The board will take a chance today and refuse a pension; using one argument, and a week later they will use the very opposite argument to refuse one if it serves their turn. So they said in this case that they would not take the real market value although the regulations specifically say that they should. So much for that case.

May I add that I received no answer at all to all these letters? As the poet says, there was silence deep as death. But I brought the matter up in the house and made a protest, and next day I got a letter from the minister's deputy, dated November 24, acknowledging receipt of the letters that I had written and saying that "the points raised are being kept in mind for consideration along with a number of other angles which have come to our attention, and I might add to this end the matter of calling a meeting of the interprovincial old age pensions board in the near future is now being considered". But that begs the whole question and evades the point I was asking about. I was not asking the interprovincial board to call a meeting. I said: Tom Jones and Mrs. Smith have got a raw deal; they are not getting justice; you are the head of the department, and you have the power to give or withhold a pension; it is within your province and authority to deal with that. That was my contention.

At this stage I took the matter up with the Hon. Mr. Pooley, the Attorney General, of British Columbia, with the result I have described. Somehow or other, possibly because it was hard for me to believe that a minister looking so full of benevolence as the Minister of Labour, could lend himself to these cold-blooded acts, I thought I would try once more, hope springing eternal in the human breast.

Mr. GORDON: Is the member referring to me now?

Mr. NEILL: Yes. Was the minister surprised?

Mr. GORDON: Considerably.

Mr. NEILL: I did not think it possible that anyone having such an air of genial benevolence could lend himself to such cold-blooded acts, and so, Christmas being just over, with its genial spirit, I thought I would try once more. I wrote the minister on January 22, as follows:

Dear Mr. Gordon:

I wrote you three letters last fall on the maladministration of the Old Age Pension Act in British Columbia, citing instances. I had a reply from your deputy to the effect that the points raised would be kept in mind for consideration and that a meeting of the interprovincial board might be held.

But I would point out that I was not discussing the general act or its regulations but the flagrant ignoring of the act and overriding it which is being carried on by the provincial administration. I took a specific case up with the provincial attorney general, supposing as the act says and as you yourself have stated in the house, the province was responsible for the administration. The provincial attorney general says that the province does not administer the Old Age Pension Act but that you do it through the Workmen's Compensation Board which "takes its instructions from Ottawa and not from the province." This is new doctrine to me and I think untenable. However, if so, it certainly puts it up to you to deal with any specific case of non-compliance with the act. This is not a question of discussing whether the law or the regulations should be changed but of asking you to remedy the grievance of an individual and to give instructions that he be given a pension as entitled under the law. I could cite a score of cases but I am going to deal with a specific one.

Mrs. ..... qualifies in every respect under the act and the regulations but has been refused a pension on the ground as stated in their letter now in front of me which reads as follows:

"We note that your husband is not physically incapacitated and that he is under seventy years of age. In view of this it is felt—"

What business have they to "feel"? It is the law, not their own petty ideas that should govern:

"—it is felt that he should be in a position to maintain you without receiving assistance from the public treasury. Your application therefore cannot be approved."

Note the suggestion that the woman is asking for charity. She is not asking for charity: she is asking for her rights. Then I go on to say:

They have no right to take this stand. It isn't a question of what they feel this woman should get. Neither the act nor the regulations forbid a woman getting a pension because her husband is under seventy years of age or whether he is able to work or not. The act and the regulations strictly provide how applicant's income shall be calculated and under those regulations she is entitled to a pension because neither she nor her husband are getting any income.

Later on representations were made that the woman was sick and quite unable to travel with her husband in a fishing boat and needed attendance in her home, consequently her husband couldn't even go out and fish. After much pressure the board paid some credence to this and asked a doctor's certificate which was furnished as per attached copy and certainly reveals a serious enough condition, even a non-medical man reading would know she could not go out on a fishing boat for days and nights at a time. You will note that the doctor is very specific about her condition. After receiving it the board advised her that they adhered to their former decision. There are scores of such cases, not similar except in that they refused to grant pensions to people entitled to them, but I submit this specific case to your notice and ask that you deal with it. The Attorney General of British Columbia says the board is under your orders, then I beg you to ask the board why they are not granting this pension. The Pension Act is not permissive but mandatory, if they qualify. No registrar of voters, for instance, would be allowed to refuse a person qualifying under the elections act to be placed on the voters' list because he, the registrar, "felt" that the party did not need a vote or would not make a good use of it.

Now I will quote the certificate of the doctor, and if I have not its terms strictly correct it is because doctors, as we all know, are such bad writers. The certificate is by Dr. O. O. Lyons, B.A., M.D.C.M., and is dated December 8, 1932.

To whom it may concern:

I have to-day examined Mrs. ..... She is suffering from prolapse of the womb, chronic nephritis, hypertension, and gall bladder disease. The hypogastric region is tender due to the gall bladder disease, and this makes it very distressing for her to travel and suffer the jar of a small gas boat. She is quite feeble and should have some one near or in attendance continuously. Her condition is not acute and I would not recommend any operative treatment, for her general condition would not permit it.

O. O. Lyons.

[Mr. Neill.]

One would think that such a letter would produce favourable consideration, but they turned her down. Their reply was: "Your husband is under seventy years of age, and he can go out to work." I say the act does not state anything about a woman's husband having to be under seventy years of age. It does say that if anyone is in receipt of an income below a certain sum and comes within the qualifications concerning age and residence, a pension shall be granted.

There is the situation. I have but touched upon the matter; as I say, I could go on for hours citing cases along the lines I have read. Not always the same subterfuge or excuse has been given, but always to the same end. People have been turned down—I was going to say if it were humanly possible, but I believe that would be hardly correct. On one occasion I said: "Why do you not do like the wolf about which we read in the story of Little Red Ridinghood? After the little girl had advanced good arguments as to why the wolf should not eat her, the animal lost its patience and said: 'I am going to eat you anyway'." I suggested that they should simply say: "We are going to refuse you, anyway," and not trouble to make excuses. That is the situation—and I have only touched upon it.

Is it fair and right? What is the government going to do about it? It comes home to everybody in the house; responsibility is upon us all. A few years ago there was a Conservative convention in Winnipeg at which that party firmly pledged itself to the extension of the old age pensions scheme. Therefore that party is committed. We come now to the government, every member of which is sworn to administer the laws. How often do we hear it said that no matter how painful the duty may be, a minister has to administer the laws? In case of a strike the militia are turned out. I have heard a minister say: "I am sorry to do it, but I am sworn to administer the laws, and it is my duty so to deal with the matter." In the present instance the same principle applies. I do not say it is pleasant for them to do so,—but there is the law; why do they not administer it? It says in the scriptures: "For whosoever shall keep the whole law, and yet offend in one point, is guilty of all." I would not go that far, but I would say that if a government is capable of being privy to robbing a poor old woman of $20 a month, I would not trust them with $2,000,000.

I am sorry the Minister of Justice has left the chamber, but the Minister of Labour is a lawyer. I leave it to any fairminded lawyer; faced with the conditions I have described, would they not carry out the law? Would they not go far to carry out the law? As long as it remained on the statute books it is their duty to carry it out with fairness and equity. The minister says yes?

Mr. GORDON: I have not said anything yet.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): I thought you had touched only the edge of it.

Mr. NEILL: There are gentlemen on the government benches—the Minister of National Revenue, and others sitting behind him—big masters of industry, who are heavily concerned in industrial enterprises; what would they think—

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): The Minister of National Revenue is not here.

Mr. NEILL: No, he is not there.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Yes, I say he is not there.

Mr. NEILL: Well, I did not say he was present. I referred to anyone on the treasury benches. If he was not there at the moment, that was his funeral.

Mr. POULIOT: Hamilton is not all there.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Who is not there?

Mr. NEILL: I never suggested hon. gentlemen opposite were "all" there.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Which is even better than not being there at all.

Mr. NEILL: Hon. gentlemen are pleased to be humorous, but in my view this is a very serious matter. I was referring to those multi-millionaires who are concerned with their fortunes. Supposing our friends to the left, the C.C. F.'ers, as my friend to my right called them, were in power—

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Don't let us suppose that; it is absurd. We could not suppose that.

Mr. NEILL: You could not suppose that?

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): No.

Mr. NEILL: Are you sure.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): It is only funny.

Mr. NEILL: Some hon. members opposite are dubious about it, right now.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): Don't believe it.

Mr. NEILL: We will suppose some government—without giving it a name—passed a law involving extreme injustice to financial interests which they represented; how quickly they would raise a howl and say: "We want justice." Why not be as quick to ask justice from this house to remedy an injustice such as I have described? They might look a little bit ahead,—"With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you." If you do not give justice to the poor old men seeking a pension to-day, do not ask us for sympathy if your toes are trod on in years to come.

The Liberal party claims credit for passing old age pension legislation; then certainly they should defend it. The Labour party also claims, with a good deal of sincerity, a great measure of the credit for having passed that legislation. And as the ranks of the old age pensioners are generally—although not always—recruited from the labouring class, they ought to be particularly sensitive about any injustice being done. Then apart from that there is the matter of precedent. If this law is abused, forgotten and ignored, why not others? There are people in Canada, and even in this house, who no doubt would think it a good idea to put the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Woodsworth) in gaol, and keep him there—

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): We would lose all our fun if we did that.

Mr. NEILL: Such action would not do the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre half the harm that is done to these poor old people. He would receive tremendous advertising through the press; he would soon be out of gaol on a writ of habeas corpus and would suffer no injury. He has been in gaol before, anyway. But we cannot help the poor old woman with a writ of habeas corpus; she is helpless. She has nothing to look forward to but old age and destitution. Then there is this main argument, which must beat a responsive chord in every man's breast, namely the sense of fairness as between man and man, and woman and woman.

Mr. BELL (Hamilton): That is right.

Mr. NEILL: This is not a matter of popular appeal. I have no press behind me. There are no great financial interests involved; they will not worry much about the old woman's position. No columnist will be able to write a snappy article about the drab dreary record of a poor old woman's efforts to live on a couple of dollars a month. You cannot make snappy copy out of that. In the very nature of things, these people are poor, financially down and out, unknown in public, private or political life. "There are only a few thousand of them—why bother? Their votes won't amount to much in a public way, anyway. Why bother about them?" Well, they belong to the same class as they about whom it was once said, "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto Me." At least they belong to that class. Perhaps in the sight of the Ruler of the Universe they are just as important as any king, knight, prince, premier or any of the rest of us.

I am not given to suggesting a filibuster or obstruction, but if I had six supporters in this house I would guarantee that not a cent of money in supply would be voted until this wrong had been righted. That is what supply is for; that is why we are here. I would not consent to supply until at least I had a promise—

Mr. COTNAM: We would be here all year if there were six like you.

Mr. NEILL: I am sorry I did not hear the hon. member's remark, but I recall it is said that the fresher the fish is, the better and more beautiful the fish. Of course that does not apply to the hon. member. It only puts him into the poor fish class, when he sees fit to make such interruptions.

Mr. COTNAM: A pretty stale old fish, I tell you.

Mr. NEILL: Quite so.

I place the responsibility on the house, on the government and on each individual member thereof. As to how they discharge that responsibility they will have to answer at the bar of public opinion at the next election, and possibly also at the bar of a higher court, the summons to which is inevitably drawing nearer for us all.

Now I want to ask the Minister of Labour specifically whether he endorses the statement of the Attorney General of British Columbia that his department is giving instructions to this board in that province. Whether the minister's reply is yes or no I want to ask him if he does not realize his responsibility as the supervisor of this large sum of federal money which is contributed, and whether he cannot and will not insist on justice being done. I shall be very glad to furnish the minister with the fullest details of these specific cases, names and everything, and I would beg him on bended knee, if that would be any good, to remedy the conditions which exist. I will be his henchman for ever and ever if he will do justice to these poor people.

Mr. GORDON: I am sure I appreciate the feelings of the hon. member when, during the course of his activities in his own province or elsewhere, he sees some human who is not enjoying as comfortable an old age as the ordinary person perhaps feels he is entitled to enjoy. It is a difficult situation; it is one of those complexities of human life that we have encountered since history began and which I presume will continue to the end. No one sympathizes with the hon. member more than I do; I am sure that when he sees such conditions as he has described it does not give him any sense of satisfaction.

With respect to the act itself, it is a dominion statute passed by this chamber for the purpose of providing the money to pay a proportion of an old age pension to those who come under the provisions of the act and the regulations in connection with it. For reasons upon which I need not enlarge our share is in the nature of a contribution; the fund is administered by the provinces, and the act itself is administered through the agency of the provinces. The agreement is entered into with the provinces, and the regulations are submitted to the provincial authorities. The act contemplates that these regulations shall prevail for a certain number of years. The regulations, it is true, have been varied from time to time, and were changed but a short year or so ago.

This is social legislation of a kind that all countries have not adopted. All countries do not see the force of the principle that underlies this measure. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Comox-Alberni in his suggestion that there is not a direct responsibility upon the sons and the daughters to see that their aged parents receive that support to which they are entitled. I never have been able to bring myself to view with indifference the thought of children in positions of affluence or comfortably well to do who are permitted to take the attitude that they do not owe a responsibility to their parents far greater than any responsibility the state may owe. If we permit an undisciplined administration of this or any other act, thereby relieving those who are primarily responsible for the care of their immediate blood relatives, then I feel confident that we are not going along the path we should follow, because it will not be long until there will be no feeling of responsibility on the part of the children to contribute to the care of their parents in a large number of cases. To encourage the younger people of this or any other country whose aged parents are alive to follow that line of thought is something that will not help in the future and will not tend to build up that class of society I want to see in this country.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I say it was a proper thing for the provinces to pass acts similar to that to which reference has been made, under which children who are able to contribute to the support of their parents and refuse to do so will find the law set in motion to force them to do their duty. I believe that is proper and sane legislation. On the other hand I say that any of these acts that tends to take care of those who happen upon misadventure or who are entering the twilight of their lives without adequate support should not destroy that sense of responsibility, of respect, of love and affection that the child should bear towards his parents.

With respect to the province of British Columbia, it is obvious that as Minister of Labour I cannot inquire into individual cases; I think hon. members will readily realize that it would be utterly impossible for me to do so.

Mr. NEILL: Why not, in a specific case?

Mr. GORDON: I am coming to that in a moment. When a complaint does come to the department that those administering this act in any province are perhaps not administering it as the law and the regulations contemplate, then it is the practice of the department—and I was very much surprised to hear the hon. member for Comox-Alberni say that the practice was not followed in his cases—to direct the attention of the provincial authorities to the case in question, asking them to investigate it and determine to what extent the complaint is well founded. After this item passes I should be very glad indeed if the hon. member would give me a list of the letters he has written to which he says he has had no reply, with their dates and the names of the cases, and I can assure him that I will have them investigated and a report furnished me in order to see to what extent, if any, the law and the regulations have not been enforced in British Columbia.

In order that hon. members may not judge the province of British Columbia only in the light of these cases to which reference has been made by the hon. member I think it desirable to give some figures. In the province of British Columbia the percentage of pensioners to the population over seventy years of age, actually receiving pensions under this act, is 50·72. Compare that with the province of Ontario, for instance, where the percentage is only 34·62. Having that general picture before us we will see that generally throughout the province of British Columbia there must have been a very generous interpretation of the act and the regulations with respect to those aged people who fall within the provisions of the act. That is as far as I can go with regard to the figures.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): Has the minister the figures for Alberta?

Mr. GORDON: Alberta, 51.20, about the same as British Columbia, and Ontario, 34.62. Ontario, I may say, has the law to which I made reference with respect to the necessity of children contributing to the care of their parents. I do not know that I can add anything more to what I have said. The province certainly sets up the machinery to administer old age pensions, and if the interpretation of Mr. Pooley's letter is that they do not administer the act, then I very respectfully suggest that that gentleman has misconstrued the position with respect thereto. The machinery in British Columbia I am told is operated through the agency of the Workmen's Compensation Board and unless there is something radically wrong with the set-up of that board I doubt whether there are people better able to determine who should or should not receive old age pensions, having regard to the experience of the board in workmen's compensation cases. I do not want to be unfair to those who are administering the affairs of the provinces, because they have great and difficult problems to face; but there are bound to be some instances in the administration of an act of this sort where it might appear that through one cause or another, or through a combination of causes, there has been a hardship, that someone has not been given that consideration to which his case entitles him. I can only repeat that if the hon. member will supply me with the dates of his letters and the name of the applicant, the department, on my instructions, will investigate as I have indicated and see that justice is done, if it is found that there has been injustice in the premises.

Mr. NEILL: I am much indebted to the minister; what he says shows that my faith in his benevolence is not altogether unfounded. I am glad to hear him say that he will investigate these cases and I am quite satisfied to abide by his decision. He will find that they are as I have stated and that injustice has been done. Indeed, the situation is so bad that a lawyer in Victoria, acting probably without recompense, took up a case and entered a mandamus against the officials.

Mr. GORDON: Did he succeed?

Mr. NEILL: It was thrown out of the first court on a technicality, on the ground that he should have proceeded not by mandamus but by fiat, and in the second court it was thrown out on a similar technicality.

Mr. GORDON: He never got to first base with his case.

Mr. NEILL: The thing has got to be so notorious that a society has been formed in Vancouver—there is nothing to be gained by it personally, so far as any member of the society is concerned—to try to have justice done these people.

I want to comment on one or two points made by the minister, wherein in my opinion he was not quite fair. He quoted the percentage of people over seventy in British Columbia as 50.72, and this he said showed that they must have been treated very generously in that province. Well, you can always prove anything by figures, but I submit that the figure quoted by the minister does not show the conclusion which he reached. What it does show is that there are more elderly people, especially bachelors, in British Columbia than young people, and that makes the percentage of those over seventy years of age greater.

Mr. GORDON: More than in Ontario?

Mr. NEILL: Yes. There are not as many young married people in British Columbia but far more elderly people, bachelors particularly, and it is well known that all the cranks drift west and stop there. I am myself an instance. The minister also said that he hoped it was not due to the personnel of the board. No; the personnel of the board are all right; I know them personally. But if their instructions are wrong—

Mr. GORDON: They must follow the regulations.

Mr. NEILL: I sincerely wish they would follow the regulations, but it is their secret instructions that are wrong. If they would follow the regulations as I have outlined them, although I do not approve of some of the regulations the minister made last February, old people would generally be able to obtain pensions under reasonable conditions.

The minister dealt with the Parents' Maintenance Act and he took the sound standard ground that a man certainly should be held to take care of his parents if he is able to. But I am not dealing with cases where children are able to take care of their parents; I am referring to those who are not able to do so. Can it be said that a man receiving $5.60 a month on relief is capable of supporting his parents? I asked the province to administer the Old Age Pensions Act on the face of it, so to speak, and if they thought that the children were wealthy and able to pay their share then the province could sue. The province has the authority and the money, and a poor old man or woman should not be placed in the humiliating position of having to sue his or her children when they know that the children would be quite willing to help if they could.

I deprecate the attitude taken by the board when they say, "You are asking for charity and we feel that you should not become a public charge". But I submit it is not public charity; it is a public right. These people have as much right to receive a pension if they qualify as I have the right to vote if I have the qualifications. I shall be glad to furnish the minister with the information he asks for and if he deals with these cases it will perhaps lead to a better interpretation of the act in British Columbia in the future.

Mr. GERSHAW: I would direct to the attention of the minister one particular case with regard to which I have had correspondence, though not with this department. A man has lived thirty years or more in Canada and is eligible in every way for old age pension, except in this regard, that during the last five years he has lived three years in Saskatchewan and two in Alberta. When he writes to Alberta they say he has not been five years in that province and that therefore they cannot do anything; he writes to Saskatchewan and they say he has not been resident five years there and so they cannot do anything either. I understand that there is an arrangement among the provinces that if a period of twenty years has been spent partly in one province and partly in another they will divide the costs, but apparently there is no such arrangement with respect to the last five years. Will the minister let us know whether there is a possibility of a man in such a situation getting a pension. It so often happens that people living close to the border between two provinces move from one province to the other and thus are at a great disadvantage.

Mr. GORDON: The question raised by the hon. member was given consideration at the provincial conference. I have the matter now before me and there is no doubt about it, if the principle of the legislation itself is sound, that there is what would appear to be the exclusion of a certain class by reason of provincial boundary lines. However, I hope that the difficulty will be determined by agreement.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: One phase of the question raised by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has been brought to my notice and it does seem to me to show a rather harsh interpretation of the law. I refer to the case where the aged person owns certain property which is non-revenue-producing and which still may be assessed at a fair figure. I might cite one case by way of illustration of this point. It is a man of eighty-six who put in forty-five years in my district farming. He came there from the old country, one of the fine type of old English farmers. He worked hard and did fairly well. Unfortunately he was of generous instincts, although a Yorkshireman, and the little money he made he loaned on mortgage to certain of his neighbours who, being farmers, are utterly unable at this time to pay a cent of principal or interest. He still has the old quarter-section, and manages to have it farmed and to get out of it just about enough to pay the taxes on it. But in applying for old age pension—and he has paid taxes for forty-five years—he forgets that phase of the regulations; the department have taken an estimate of all his property, have placed a fairly high assessment on it, and assume that he is getting or should get five per cent on that amount. The fact is that for six years to my knowledge he has not received $2 on it, nevertheless he is down in their books as receiving an estimated income of five per cent on that property. He is perfectly willing to turn the property over to the department, and to sign a quit claim giving them the right of collection so that if anything comes in later they will get it. But in the meantime he has to live, and he is being refused pension on that ground; although, as I have said, there is no income from that property, it is assumed that he is getting five per cent on the assessed value of it. I think that is rather a harsh provision, and I would like to have it looked into. By the way, although the man is an Alberta man it was the British Columbia government that made that ruling.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): I was just going to speak about the same matter but from a different aspect. I came across several cases in our province last year, which I think indicates one reason why the percentages are swelled somewhat, in which parents who had children in comfortable circumstances and who owned property, apparently under some provision of the act are able to turn the property over to the department and receive a pension. I know three such individuals who in my estimation could not qualify for old age pension.

Mr. GORDON: They do not turn their property over to this department.

Mr. STEWART (Edmonton): No, I mean to the authorities in the province, and they, I assume, administer the property. I cannot understand why the same procedure was not adopted in the case mentioned by my hon. friend from Red Deer. The thought that occurred to me was that rather than being stringent there was considerable leniency exhibited in the administration of the act; for frankly I could not see why these persons should receive old age pension, why they should not carry on with their own property and live on the receipts. In one case particularly both husband and wife are in receipt of $20 a month each. No cases of hardship have come to my notice, but those cases caused me some surprise to find the act was interpreted so generously. The case mentioned by my hon. friend would come within the same category.

Mr. SPEAKMAN: The hon. member asks why the old man did not live on the receipts from his property. I stated that there were no receipts of any kind, but that it was assumed by the department that there were.

Mr. REID: I was pleased to hear the minister's remark regarding transients. Numerous cases with regard to old age pensions have been brought to my attention, and I am going to cite one which was referred to me since I came to Ottawa, that of a woman of Canadian birth resident four years in British Columbia and sixteen years in Saskatchewan. British Columbia said: You have not been here long enough. She wrote to Saskatchewan; Saskatchewan paid no attention. I took it up with the Saskatchewan department but I have heard nothing from them. The minister says it is a provincial regulation, but I think there should be some dominion control in regard to such cases. I suppose Saskatchewan takes the view that these people having left the province, they need pay no attention to them. The act needs tightening up in that regard. I would ask the minister what he would do with regard to people who, having resided in another province for many years, move into British Columbia but are not there long enough to come under the British Columbia act.

Mr. MacINNIS: I believe the old people of British Columbia owe a debt of gratitude to the hon. member for Comox-Alberni for the very excellent case he has made in regard to getting the administration of this act improved. I was privileged to see much of the correspondence that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni had in regard to this matter. A good many cases of somewhat the same character have been brought to my attention. One man lived in British Columbia thirty-five years, brought up his family there, and now finds himself without any means. He was in every way entitled to pension under the Old Age Pensions Act, but when he made application they told him he could not qualify because he had adult children living in the province. Apart from the fact that some of his sons were out of employment, I think as the hon. member for Comox-Alberni has said it is asking too much to expect a parent to prosecute his son for lack of maintenance. If prosecution of that kind has to be undertaken, those administering the act should do the dirty work. The minister made reference to the duty of children to look after their parents when they come to an age when they are not capable of looking after themselves. That really is rather strange. I have heard biblical authority quoted in this house for many things; may I give one quotation on this point? I think it was St. Paul who said that it was not for children to make provision for their parents, but for parents to make provision for their children. In any case I think that is fairly good philosophy.

The other point that I wish to make is in regard to the interpretation of the act in British Columbia. The minister quoted the percentage of old people receiving pensions in that province, suggesting that it showed the administration had not been unduly restrictive. I think the hon. member for Comox-Alberni answered that very well. It must be remembered that British Columbia was the first province to come under the act, and for that reason would have more people receiving old age pensions than a province that came in later.

Mr. GORDON: That would not have any bearing upon it.

Mr. MacINNIS: It would have a great deal, because a province that has been under the act only six months would not have as many as one that has been under it a much longer period.

Mr. GORDON: It applies to everyone within the age.

Mr. MacINNIS: Quite so. We have other pension legislation in this country; does anyone suggest that some other act should be invoked to do these people out of their pensions? Would we suggest that because a judge has children who should be able to keep him, he should not get his pension? Why can we not apply the same measure to old people who because of poverty come under the old age pensions legislation, as we apply in the case of judges who for many years before their retirement received good salaries? Moreover, on some cases they are drawing other salaries in addition to their pensions. It is time we should deal more fairly with the old people who are not able to do anything for themselves.

Mr. MITCHELL: Along with the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River, I had the honour of signing the agreement that brought old age pensions into force in Ontario. The members of the labour movement have always felt that this should be an old age pension act, providing a pension to be paid to the aged people for services rendered to the state and to the community. Mention has been made of the Parents' Maintenance Act. The minister says that the law should be set in motion to place the responsibility on the children, but the law is not set in motion. In Ontario the Parents' Maintenance Act was a dead letter until the passage of the Old Age Pensions Act.

Mr. GORDON: What does the hon. member mean by that?

Mr. MITCHELL: Well, it was not used.

Mr. GORDON: I do not think the hon. member is correct in that.

Mr. MITCHELL: I am speaking in a broad way. It is not used even to-day. I do not think there will be any contradiction of that statement.

Mr. GORDON: Well, I contradict it.

Mr. MITCHELL: I believe the responsibility should rest upon the province. I want to qualify that by this statement, that I do not think it is anybody's business what the income of the old person is. The pension should be treated purely as one paid to the old people, as I said before, for the contribution they have made in building up this country.

Mr. GORDON: Whether they need it or not?

Mr. MITCHELL: That is not the question. If they do not need it, they do not have to apply for it. But as the hon. member for Vancouver South said, in relation to the expenditure of the country, it stands in the same position as the pension of a judge who is paid one for the contribution he has made to the state. I am glad the minister cleared up the question with regard to the responsibility for administration of the act. From the remarks of and the letters read by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, I felt that the federal government at least had given instructions in connection with the regulations and that the responsibility was taken away from the provinces and now rested entirely with the federal authorities. Had the federal government accepted the full responsibility for the payment of old age pensions, in accordance with the policy enunciated by them at the last federal election, it is fair to assume the whole administration of old age pension legislation would have to be taken over by the federal authorities.

There is a great deal to be said in connection with the residence provision. Before an applicant for a pension comes within the jurisdiction of the legislation five years' residence in a province is required. Supposing an old person lived in Manitoba for thirty years and then moved into Ontario, it is unfair that he should be disqualified from receiving a pension. That is a point which might well be taken into consideration by the government. But I want to reiterate, so far as Ontario is concerned, that the provincial commission has not proceeded under the Parents' Maintenance Act; it has just taken it for granted that the children can make some contribution to the maintenance of their parents. I am not going to weary the house by quoting many cases I could cite, but the fact remains that in many instances pensions have been reduced where, in my judgment, there has been absolutely no justification when one considers the income received by the children themselves.

Mr. HEENAN: The hon. member for East Hamilton put his finger on a very delicate subject when he said that he thought the federal government ought to take over in its entirety the administration of the old age pensions scheme. I am satisfied that the people of Canada are looking for the federal government to carry out its pledge in that regard. I am also satisfied there would be more complaints along the lines of those which have been brought up by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, were it not for the fact that the people of Canada are waiting, before this parliament dissolves, for the federal government to carry out its pledge and to take over the old age pension plan as a national obligation. In the meantime I think the minister will find that many of these grievances arise out of the fact that the provincial governments are complicating the matter by mixing up two statutes, the Old Age Pensions Act and the Parents' Maintenance Act.

The Old Age Pensions Act, as enacted in 1927, is very clear and specific, in that it provides a pension for a person who is a British subject and is not in receipt of an income of as much as $365 a year. It does not say: "Provided the children cannot maintain their parents." It is true the Parents' Maintenance Act in the provinces contains that provision, but the Old Age Pensions Act that we have on the statute book of Canada provides that if a person is not in receipt of an income of $365 a year, he is entitled to an old age pension. Where the provinces come in is that they suggest that, notwithstanding the fact that a person is entitled to a pension under the old age pension plan, they can invoke the power vested in them by the Parents' Maintenance Act. I contend that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni is right when he says that the old people should receive the pension as provided under the Old Age Pensions Act and then, if the provinces have any rights in the matter under the Parents' Maintenance Act, they should sue the children under that act. But in no case does the Parents' Maintenance Act of a provincial legislature have any right to prohibit the payment of a pension under the Old Age Pensions Act.

With regard to the question brought up by the hon. member for New Westminster and the hon. member for Medicine Hat with respect to the five years' residence, I may say for the information of the minister, who was not in the house in 1927 when we enacted this law, that for the protection of British Columbia the five year residence provision was at that time inserted in the act. British Columbia was the first province that signified its willingness to come in under the act, and we realized that if only one province came in there would be a rush of older people from the rest of the country into British Columbia. So we inserted the five year residence provision in order to protect that province. The day for the need of that protection has gone by. Five provinces are now participating in the old age pension plan, and I am satisfied that the provinces would be quite willing to eliminate that five year residence provision, or leave it at one year if there is necessity for such a provision. I would urge the minister to give consideration to that question, because I know that before I left office the five provinces were quite willing that the five year residence provision should be eliminated from the act. I would ask the minister if there are now any more provinces participating in the old age pension plan than there were in 1930, and how many old age pensioners there are at the present time.

Mr. GORDON: At the present time the provinces which have adopted the old age pension scheme are Ontario, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia. The other provinces have not. The question of the five years' residence, of course, has been the subject matter of discussion and debate; at least, I saw some fragmentary references to it over the past few years in the files of the Labour department. There is the danger that aged people will cross the border of a province that is not under the act into a province that is, and the province that happens to be under the act will suffer acordingly a severe burden.

With respect to the administration of the act generally, while I cannot deny that there may be, and probably are, individual cases of hardship where perhaps the province in its administration of the act, or its officials, have not conformed strictly to the act or to the agreements and regulations, yet the volume of opinion which I have had the opportunity to review is that the act generally is being administered very generously. In fact, as was pointed out by the hon. member for West Edmonton, the officers administering the act apparently have rather tortured the regulations in order to bring people within its scope. I will bear in mind what the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River has said, and see what can be done. Answering his last question, the total number of pensioners as of December 31, 1932, was 70,516.

Mr. HEENAN: Can the minister give us any information with respect to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, both of which provinces in 1928 I think passed acts enabling them to make agreements with the Dominion government, which acts were not to come into effect except on proclamation?

Mr. GORDON: That proclamation has not yet been issued.

Mr. HEENAN: Does the minister know any reason why?

Mr. GORDON: No.

Mr. HEENAN: Can the minister tell us whether or not this government intends bringing into effect a national system of old age pensions and administering it federally?

Mr. GORDON: Of course, constitutional questions might arise between the Dominion government and the provinces if the Dominion government adopted that course. At the moment I am not in a position to answer that question.

Mr. ILSLEY: Has the government made any estimate of how much it would cost this government to pay old age pensions all over the Dominion of Canada out of the federal treasury?

[Mr. Gordon.]

Mr. GORDON: That would depend in large measure upon the number of those eligible by reason of age who took advantage of the legislation. I am afraid it would be difficult to hazard an opinion as to what it would cost.

Mr. ILSLEY: No estimate has been made?

Mr. GORDON: I am told that there was an estimate made in so far as it could be made. Unfortunately I have not the figures before me, but I shall be glad to give them to my hon. friend.

Mr. ILSLEY: I am asking now for the figures. I should not think it would be very difficult to make an approximate estimate of the cost. The government could take its experience in the provinces which have adopted old age pensions and make the necessary allowance for the increased number of those over seventy years of age in the eastern provinces—because I believe there is an increased number there—and in that way arrive at an estimate of the cost. I was wondering if the government had not done that. I say that because, as the minister probably knows, this was one of the live questions in Nova Scotia in the election of 1930. I do not suppose there was any canvass that was responsible for getting more votes for the Conservative party in Nova Scotia than the definite promise to pay old age pensions in full out of the federal treasury. Those of us who went through that election have a vivid recollection of the strength of the canvass that was made against us because we were supporting a policy of a fifty-fifty contribution as against a policy of one hundred per cent contribution out of the federal treasury. The Prime Minister himself wrote a letter which went to a very large proportion of the aged people in Nova Scotia in which he definitely promised that if returned to power his government would see that old age pensions would be paid in full out of the federal treasury. But the government has not done it, and so far as I know they have not any present intention of doing it.

Mr. CASGRAIN: Another broken promise.

Mr. ILSLEY: It appears to be and was a cold-blooded violation of an exceedingly definite preelection promise.

Mr. YOUNG: Did the people believe them?

Mr. ILSLEY: Yes, a great many of them voted that way on the strength of that promise. If possible I should like to get from the minister such an estimate, if one has been made. I should also like him to tell me, if he can, whether the government have abandoned that policy, or whether they have any intention of carrying it out some time, and if so, when.

Mr. GORDON: I shall be glad to look into the question of the estimate and send the hon. member any figures which are available in the department on the subject.

Mr. ILSLEY: What about the preelection promise?

Mr. GORDON: I never make any promises as to the future.

Mr. ILSLEY: The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River asked the minister the same question, whether the government has any intention of carrying out that preelection promise of 1930. Has the government any intention of carrying it out?

Mr. GORDON: I am not in a position at the moment to answer that question.

Mr. HEENAN: I think, Mr. Chairman, the minister ought to answer the question more seriously.

Mr. GORDON: I was never more serious in my life.

Mr. HEENAN: I think, Mr. Chairman, that you coming from Nova Scotia do not want this item carried until we get that information because you are aware that no people were ever deceived so much as were the people of Nova Scotia in the last election on this question. I was down there during the election and I could not hear anything else but the Conservative candidates promising a federal system of old age pensions, and the Prime Minister himself iterated and reiterated that policy from every platform from one end of Canada to the other. The government has now been in office for nearly three years and nothing has been done to carry out that promise. I do not think the minister should get away with simply saying that he cannot state whether the government is going to do it or not.

Mr. McGIBBON: What about your promises to the soldiers of a gratuity for everyone in 1921?

Mr. HEENAN: Will any member of the government say that they did not promise a national system of old age pensions in 1930? Even in the Conservative platform of 1927 the words, as I recall them, were that the old age pension system as at present existing was unworkable and inadequate, and the Conservative platform called for a national system of old age pensions. During the last election the Prime Minister and his colleagues and his candidates from one end of the country to the other, but particularly down in Nova Scotia, where the people were not receiving old age pensions at all, made a very definite promise. I recall very well the pledge of the present Minister of Finance. Surely we ought to have an answer from the minister with whose estimates we are now dealing. If they are not going to do it, we ought to know it; if they are considering it, we ought to know it; if they are going to do it, the minister ought to make an announcement. They ought to be proud to state that is one pledge they intend to carry out. I do not believe the minister should treat the matter as lightly as he seems to treat it.

Mr. GORDON: The hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River should not say that. I do not treat these matters lightly, and he knows that perfectly well. Unquestionably after all he did when minister in the Department of Labour in connection with old age pensions and matters concerning people who do not have too much of this world's goods, he must know that these matters present many difficulties. The question of the administration of the contribution towards old age pensions has been given consideration by the government. The percentage has been increased, and whether or not it will be increased further has been the subject of consideration. I am not in a position now to say, without a great deal of further consideration, that any further change will be made with respect to the percentage the dominion will pay. The hon. member has said it was an election promise. Well, I have not been long enough in politics to know just to what extent election promises should be kept. But I do know—

Mr. CASGRAIN: You are too good to stay in politics.

Mr. GORDON: I do know about a lot of promises made in the Liberal manifesto of 1919 which were not kept. I have no doubt that in some instances efforts were made to keep them, but there was a wholesale disregard of others. Undoubtedly they were but pious hopes. Perhaps one might say that it is a poor man who cannot make a promise.

Progress reported.

On motion of Mr. Bennett the house adjourned at 10.55 p.m.

Tuesday, March 7, 1933

The house met at three o'clock.

BANKING AND COMMERCE

Mr. R. C. MATTHEWS (Toronto East Centre) presented the third report of the select standing committee on banking and commerce.

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister) moved:

That the name of Mr. Speakman be substituted for that of Mr. Coote on the select standing committee on banking and commerce.

Motion agreed to.

IMPERIAL ECONOMIC CONFERENCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. JOHN VALLANCE (South Battleford): I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Under article 6 of the agreement entered into at the Imperial conference of July last it is provided that Canada shall have the right to free entry of 2,500,000 hundredweight of bacon and ham. I notice a dispatch from London wherein this has been contradicted; it is claimed that a mistake was made by the typist and that there is one "0" too many. They claim that we have the right to only 250,000 hundredweight.

Mr. BENNETT: There is nothing in the report.

TREATY WITH FRANCE

On the orders of the day:

Mr. S. W. JACOBS (Cartier): Is it the intention of the government to table the proposed French treaty this session?

Right Hon. R. B. BENNETT (Prime Minister): The matter is under consideration.

DUTY ON BRITISH IMPORTS

On the orders of the day:

Hon. E. B. RYCKMAN (Minister of National Revenue): The hon. member for North Waterloo (Mr. Euler) yesterday asked me a question, which I said I would answer to-day, in regard to the possibility of reducing the value of the pound sterling for customs purposes from $4.86\frac{2}{3}$ to a lower figure. All customs rates for duty were originally fixed upon that value.

I feel that at the present time, in view of the disturbed condition of exchange quotations, it would be unwise for us to consider any alteration in the present arrangement until it becomes apparent that exchange quotations are more stabilized. Changed circumstances with changed requirements may quickly come.

It might be appropriate at this time, however, without entering into too much detail, to explain to the house the circumstances which prompted the government to establish the present basis.

In September, 1931, the commodity price index wholesale in Great Britain as published in the Bank of England Statistical Summary was 99.2. In that month, as all hon. members are aware, Great Britain suspended payments in gold, and the immediate result was an increase in commodity prices in Great Britain. For October, 1931, the figure was 104.4, and in November, 106.4. Since that time the index figure has moved closer to the 100 mark, and in the month of October, 1932, it stood at 101.1, November 101.1, and in December, the last month for which figures are available, it was 101. Comparing that figure. therefore, with the index as in September, 1931, it will be noted that there is actually a slight increase in wholesale prices in Great Britain.

If prompt action had not been taken by our government in September, 1931, to continue to value the pound sterling for customs purposes at $4.86\frac{2}{3}$, the net result would have been that the tariff against Great Britain up to about twenty per cent would have been wiped out, and in some cases indeed the British exporter to Canada would, owing to exchange, be receiving a bonus.

Action could perhaps have been taken by way of special surtax or quota system as has been done by other countries who were faced with unfair competition from countries whose currency had become depreciated, but we adopted the more moderate course of endeavouring to maintain so far as was possible the status quo, with this slight exception that having regard to the fact that there had been an increase in commodity prices in Great Britain variously estimated by experts at the time at anywhere from seven per cent to ten per cent, we decided that although regular duty would be assessed on the basis of $4.86\frac{2}{3}$ to the pound sterling, special or exchange dumping duty would only be collected on a basis of $4.40 to the pound sterling, which represents approximately a discount of ten per cent from the par value.

Since that time representations have been made to me both to increase and to lower the figure of $4.40, but everything considered I believe it has been fair and reasonable to all interests affected.

As I stated at the outset, I do not believe this would be an opportune time to make any change in this arrangement.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: While speaking of matters pertaining to the Department of National Revenue, perhaps the minister would explain the rulings given yesterday by his department and the reasons therefor.

Mr. RYCKMAN: There was only one ruling made by the minister of which the minister had any knowledge. It happens in the ordinary course of business that it is necessary to determine on the spot how an entry should be treated. The result was that our officials were consulted with regard to an entry and, not knowing at what rate the exchange should be computed, they inquired of one of our largest banks as to what they were to do as respects exchange. The answer came that the last rate that was published was $1.18. If they wished to be secured against risk, they would be safe in putting it at $1.25 and making their adjustment afterwards. They adopted the course taken upon the statement of the bank that that was the proper thing to do. Owing to an indisposition I was not in the house yesterday afternoon or evening, but I read the announcements made in the evening papers. I considered the matter, consulted with those who were interested and made up my mind that in view of the special emergency in the United States and the fact that the par rate is dollar for dollar and no quotations were available, and as some special order had to be given, the fair thing to do would be to set a rate of par for par until we had some different information. With that in view I sought to make it clear that it would be only fair at this time and until the matter was settled, which will be no doubt by Friday, that par for par and dollar for dollar should be the prevailing rate.

Mr. MACKENZIE KING: Having in mind what the minister has just said, I should like to know if it is customary for an official in his department to give a ruling and make an order without the knowledge of the minister?

Mr. RYCKMAN: I do not think that is so. I have explained the circumstances in this case and, frankly, I can imagine some measure of excuse for a collector at a port telephoning to the bank and asking for its best knowledge upon the matter and acting in accordance with what the bank thought he ought to do. I think we would do likewise.

Mr. CASGRAIN: No ministerial responsibility.

Mr. IRVINE: Mr. Speaker, we would like to be informed of the subject matter of the conversation now being carried on.

CANADIAN NATIONAL-CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY BILL

Hon. R. J. MANION (Minister of Railways and Canals) moved the second reading of Bill No. 37, respecting the Canadian National Railways and to provide for cooperation with the Canadian Pacific Railway system, and for other purposes.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I do not think it is necessary at this stage of the discussion for me to give any detailed explanation of the bill now before the house. It will be sufficient to say that the bill contains three parts, the first dealing entirely with the Canadian National Railways and the second and third with the two transcontinental railways. The first part deals with the appointment of trustees for the Canadian National Railways, the auditing of its accounts, its annual budget and its annual report to the parliament of Canada; the second part deals with suggested methods of cooperation between the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the third part provides for the setting up of arbitral tribunals for the settlement of disagreements or disputes arising out of the proposed cooperation.

As the house well knows, this bill is based upon the report of the royal commission on transportation, sometimes called the Duff commission. That commission was appointed on November 20, 1931, and made its report on September 13, 1932. The commission was appointed not at the request of this or any other government but really upon the proposal of the heads of the two railways. In the first place, it was proposed by Sir Henry Thornton when he appeared before the select standing committee on railways and shipping, which committee reported to the house on July 16, 1931, in the following words:

Your committee desire to call the attention of the house to the proposal made by Sir Henry Thornton at one of the sessions of the committee. He referred to the serious position of the transportation business generally and recommended that a commission be appointed for the purpose of considering the whole question of Canadian transportation. Your committee regard such a recommendation coming from such a source at this time as worthy of the serious consideration of the government.

A moment ago I stated that the appointment of this committee had been proposed by the heads of the two railway companies, and I think the Canadian Pacific Railway can be linked up by a statement made recently by Mr. Beatty before the Canadian Club of Toronto. A pamphlet was circulated, I assume by the Canadian Pacific Railway, entitled, "An Address delivered by E. W. Beatty, K.C., LL.D., chairman and president of the Canadian Pacific Railway, before the Canadian Club." This speech was delivered on January 16 last. Mr. Beatty said:

We come now to the events of the last two years. In 1931, during one of the sessions of the special committee of the House of Commons which has annually considered the report and appropriations of the Canadian National Railways, questions were asked which led me to think that the time would be opportune for an inquiry into the whole question of transportation in Canada by an independent tribunal; that much good might result and that at least there would be given much information of value to the public as a whole.

I had for two years prior been very apprehensive as to the railway situation. Our traffic had fallen rapidly, our debts had increased and the deficits of the national lines were great. So I conferred with the former president of the national railways and suggested to him that during the course of his examination by the committee he might advise such an investigation as I had in mind. He readily agreed and made such a recommendation. It was unanimously adopted by the committee and later was unanimously approved by the House of Commons. The government acted upon the recommendation of the house, and the so-called Duff commission was in due course appointed.

I quote this speech of Mr. Beatty's in order to show that the heads of the two railway companies were unanimous in suggesting the appointment of this commission. It will be remembered that when the select committee on railways and shipping made its report to the house, that report included the clause which I read a moment ago. The report of that committee was unanimously adopted by this house and as far as I know it was supported generally by the press and public of this country. The government felt it to be its duty to look around and endeavour to find a commission which would be above party politics and have such outstanding ability that its report would be accepted with a great deal of confidence by the people of this country.

[Mr. Manion.]

A commission was appointed with the Right Honourable Mr. Justice Duff, an outstanding jurist of Canada, as chairman. There were also upon the commission representatives of Great Britain and the United States, it being felt that such representation should be had upon the commission in view of the fact that the bonds and stocks of the Canadian Pacific Railway were held to a large extent in Great Britain, while the bonds of the Canadian National Railway were held to a large extent in the United States. It was felt to be only fair that these shareholders should be represented upon a commission in whom they would have special confidence. Lord Ashfield, a gentleman who had made a reputation in the United States and later on in Great Britain in transportation matters was appointed. Another appointment made was Mr. Loree, the president of the Delaware and Hudson Railway. While not the president of one of the larger railways in the United States, Mr. Loree was looked upon by most people in that country as one of the outstanding authorities upon railway matters. He has succeeded in carrying his own railway through these very trying times in a splendid condition. The other Canadian representatives besides the Right Honourable Mr. Justice Duff were Sir Joseph Flavelle, who was for some time in the years gone by the chairman of the Grand Trunk Canadian board and who is an outstanding business executive of this country; Beaudry Leman, of Quebec, who had recently been president of the Canadian Bankers' Association and who, in addition, was a well known civil engineer before he went into banking; Doctor Webster, of Shediac, New Brunswick, a gentleman who had made a reputation in his own profession not only in the United States, but in Scotland as well as throughout the world, and who had that gift few doctors have of being such a good businessman that some years ago he was able to retire from his profession and give, from his native town, Shediac, his services to his country in various lines of endeavour. Finally, there was Professor Murray of Saskatchewan university, who, it was felt, would bring to bear upon the matter the western viewpoint as well as the university-economic viewpoint, if I may so describe it. Therefore I say that we appointed what might well be considered a very distinguished and able commission to deal with this problem, and so far as this bill is concerned, it agrees practically in toto with the report made by that commission. There are some differences in matters of very minor detail, but the principles included in the bill are based entirely on the report of the commission.

Speaking of the report generally, I may say that it was a summing up of the whole transportation situation of Canada. It showed the urgent need of economies if the railways of our country were to get back into a prosperous condition. It pointed out the dangers to the people of Canada if steps were not taken to get the railways back into a proper state of economic operation and management. It advocated very emphatically greater cooperation than had existed in past years between the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways. Finally, it suggested methods whereby its proposals might be put into effect. I think at this moment it might be well for me to quote the warning—I doubt whether it has been quoted in the house before, but it has been quoted a great deal in the press—given by the commission in regard to the situation of the transportation companies in Canada. They said in paragraph 226 of the report:

> We feel compelled, as a matter of public duty, to strike a serious note of warning to the people of Canada. Unless the country is prepared to adopt the plan we have proposed, or some other equally effective measures, to secure the efficient and economical working of both railway systems and thereby not only reduce the burden on the federal treasury but improve the financial position of the privately-owned railway, then the only courses that would be left would be either to effect savings in national expenditure in other directions, or to add still further to the burdens under which the industries of the country are suffering by the imposition of yet further taxation. Failing the adoption of one or other of these courses, and there are obvious limits to their application, the very stability of the nation's finances and the financial credit of the Canadian Pacific Railway will be threatened, with serious consequences to the people of Canada and to those who have invested their savings in that railway.

I may just interject at this moment that some members of the government, notably the Prime Minister (Mr. Bennett) and I as Minister of Railways have at various times in the last couple of years been uttering practically the same warning, and so far as I am concerned I have used on nearly every occasion the same examples or some of them which were used by the transportation commission. I am afraid that the only reward I received, at any rate from one section of the press, was the charge that I was showing enmity to the Canadian National by merely giving the facts. But I submit that no word of mine at any time has been more emphatic in regard to the dangers of the situation than this utterance of the transportation commission. In regard to danger of enmity to the Canadian National may I add this: I believe there is no Canadian, to whatever part of Canada or to whatever party in politics he belongs, who does not realize that we are all deeply and heavily involved from a financial standpoint in the future of the Canadian National Railways, and who does not feel a very sincere responsibility for it, and a very sincere desire for its return to prosperity. In other words, I think it is the wish of hon. members, in whatever portion of the house they may sit, that the Canadian National may be brought back to an economic situation where it may be able to carry on equally well with the other great transportation company of this dominion.

The remedies proposed by the transportation commission were, in brief, as follows: First, they said that there should be no amalgamation of the two railways. I have read over this bill many times and I submit that in it there is nothing that in any way conflicts with that recommendation. Second, they said that the deficits should be voted. In other words, in the future at any rate, whatever may have been the custom in the past, they suggest that we should not put on the railways mortgages consisting of deficits in regard to the payment of interest charges. Third, they suggest the selection of auditors by parliament from a panel presented to the House of Commons. Fourth, they suggest that instead of the seventeen directors now in control of the Canadian National Railways, there should be a board of three trustees, one of whom would be chairman, giving his full time to the work of attending to the financial end of that railway, and the other two close at hand in order to be able to consult with the chairman at all times. Fifth, they suggest, as I have pointed out before, very much greater cooperation and consultation to bring about that cooperation between the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific railways, and, finally, they provide for the setting up of arbitral tribunals in case there may arise disagreements or disputes in carrying out the proposed cooperations, whether proposed by one railway or by the other.

As one looks around the country, one is struck, and I think all citizens who have thought on the matter at all have been struck by the opportunities of economy from the standpoint of cooperation between the two great railway systems. One has only to walk down Sparks street, two or three blocks from where we are sitting here this afternoon, and past two ticket and telegraph offices on that street within a few doors of each other, occupying very highly priced premises, and within a couple of blocks of the union station, to see a duplication which, to the ordinary man at any rate, is certainly unnecessary. This occurs in many of our cities. The same is true at least to a certain extent in regard to duplication of train services throughout the country, although I may say that at times I have come to the conclusion, particularly since the railways have dealt with the matter in some degree, the duplication of trains is somewhat exaggerated. Let me illustrate that by the trains running between Montreal and Ottawa which are often cited by hon. members as being too numerous, and that certainly seem to be so. The other day I looked into the matter and I found that there were three trains in each direction operated by the Canadian National and six trains in each direction operated by the Canadian Pacific. This sounds like a great and unnecessary number of trains to be operating between these two cities. But it must not be forgotten that, for example, in the case of the Canadian National, one of those trains is a transcontinental and is not primarily operated for service between Montreal and Ottawa. Therefore it can be taken from the list. Two of the trains of the Canadian Pacific are likewise transcontinental and accordingly can also be taken from the list. Of the other two Canadian National trains, one is a fast express which connects with the maritime train and with the one to New York. The other is a slow local train calling at the various points between Montreal and Ottawa.

So far as the Canadian Pacific is concerned, their trains are in virtually the same position, with the exception that they have two lines, one the North Shore upon which two locals run in each direction. The others are practically the same, except that they have two transcontinentals which undoubtedly pick up traffic between these two cities, whereas the Canadian National has only one. There is, however, no doubt that throughout Canada between many cities there are opportunities for these two great railway systems to combine their passenger services at least to a certain extent and to effect savings by that kind of cooperation. Not long ago I travelled from Ottawa to my home in Fort William, and between Sudbury and Fort William there was on the train only one passenger besides myself. Hon. members know members of parliament do not pay much for their transportation, so that this service was not very remunerative from the point of view of passenger revenue.

There are other ways in which cooperation can be brought about, by the pooling of different services, by running rights over common trackage, and so forth. But dealing with the question in a broader way, it is a most serious one impinging as it does on the whole financial structure of this country. At the same time largely because of its immensity, its importance, and its seriousness to this country it should be a non-controversial question so far as this house and even those outside of this house are concerned. I submit that there is no reason for party bias or party controversy in dealing with this question. It is too important and too serious for that type of treatment. In the recent hearings before the Senate committee on railways which considered this bill before it came to this house, the whole question was dealt with on a very high plane indeed. I had the pleasure of reading nearly four hundred pages of the evidence and I can say that the question was dealt with in a non-partisan and an entirely unbiased manner, and if I may respectfully make the suggestion I sincerely hope that when this bill goes to the committee of the whole or is otherwise disposed of by this house it will be dealt with on exactly the same high plane, because I submit that this is no time for party strife, and I do not believe that the people of this country in these critical times, particularly having in mind the incidents of last week, are looking for party strife on a matter which is so serious to them as is this question.

The bill is a cooperative bill. It has for its purpose the cooperation to a large extent of the two railways. I repeat, there is nothing in it to cause anyone to fear that it may lead to the amalgamation of the two great railway systems of Canada because the whole trend and spirit of the bill, as well as every clause and letter of it, points to cooperation, and cooperation means, and can only mean, the working together of the two parties to an understanding, and in this case the two parties are the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway. Without doubt this question, in spite of unemployment and the many other problems which Canada and the world at large have to face, is still the greatest problem confronting this dominion, and that is demonstrated by the heavy annual interest charges accruing to the investing public, in the United States to a great extent, on the bonds of the railway, two-thirds of which have been guaranteed by the Dominion of Canada, and for the other third of which this dominion is largely responsible—as the owners of the railway. The interest in 1932 was in round figures $58,000,000. In addition to that, as the house well knows, there is another item of interest which is piling up annually on the books of the company but is not shown in the public accounts of the dominion, amounting to $35,000,000 in round figures. That is interest owing to the government by the Canadian National Railways on past loans made by the government to the Canadian National Railways or to its subsidiary companies. None of that has been paid, and quite frankly I believe that no member of this house thinks that any of it ever will be paid.

There are other railways on this continent of course which are having difficulties, and that has often been pointed out. But the difference to us in this house and to the people of Canada is that these other railways, whether in Canada or the United States, are private corporations, and whatever difficulties they may get into, while they may have an indirect effect upon the financial structure and economic position of the country, yet they have not the same direct effect which the difficulties of the Canadian National Railways have on our whole financial structure. In other words, the Canadian National Railways is directly our problem, and that problem is complicated by the fact that the Canadian National Railways, being a government road, has been for many years borrowing its money upon bonds, while many of the private companies, including the Canadian Pacific, have been raising the hundreds of millions of dollars, which they have put into roadbed and equipment, on stocks of one kind or another. On these stocks, fortunately for the privately owned railways, they may discontinue, and in most cases they have discontinued, the payment of dividends, whereas on the bonds of the Canadian National Railways the payment of interest to the investing public cannot be discontinued without repudiating our debt as a government. The fixed charges of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which as an institution is probably as valuable as the Canadian National Railways at any rate, amounted last year in round figures to $22,000,000, whereas the fixed charges of the Canadian National Railways, because of the reasons which I have just mentioned, amounted to $58,000,000.

In the United States practically all the private railway corporations have about the same proportion of bonds outstanding as against their book values as applies in the case of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The United States railways have a book value of 26 billion dollars, using the word billion in the American sense of one thousand millions. The bonded indebtedness against that 26 billion dollars in the United States is between 10 billion and 11 billion dollars, which is about the proportion of bonded indebtedness of the Canadian Pacific Railway as compared with its assets.

The whole situation is complicated, of course, to a still greater extent by the fact that traffic has decreased so very considerably in the last three or four years. In 1928 the gross revenues of the Canadian National Railways amounted to $304,000,000 while in 1932 they amounted to $161,000,000, or not very much more than half the total of the peak year. While at times we do remember that the peak year was a wonderful one from the standpoint of the Canadian National Railways inasmuch as in that year the railway paid the interest on its bonded indebtedness, which was unfortunately $15,000,000 or $16,000,000 less than the fixed charges in 1932, while it did that and had a couple of million dollars to spare, at the same time it had to borrow from the people of Canada, or have its bonds guaranteed by this dominion, to an amount of $26,000,000 in that year. So, even in its peak year, the road was a serious charge upon the people of this country. I mention that merely to emphasize once again, as was emphasized not once but many times by the royal transportation commission at its hearings from coast to coast in this country, the seriousness of the whole situation, and to indicate why it is necessary for the Canadian National Railways, and the Canadian Pacific Railway indeed, to put into effect very drastic economies of all kinds. When you take into consideration the figures which I have mentioned, the interest owing by the Canadian National Railways, the competition in the last few years of motor vehicles, and finally the injurious effect upon all railways throughout the world of the widespread depression through which we have been passing, you will realize the reasons why the Canadian National Railways and the Canadian Pacific Railway and all other railways on this continent and throughout the world find it necessary to put into effect great economies.

May I at once say this? In 1932 at any rate the Canadian National Railways in that regard did a splendid piece of work, probably unequalled, and I say that deliberately, by any other railway on the continent of North America. Let me give some proof in support of that statement. In 1932—the railway year for the Canadian National Railways is, as hon. gentlemen are aware, the calendar year—the gross revenues of the Canadian National Railways were down by $39,000,000 as compared with 1931. In the ordinary course of railway administration I am informed by the best authorities that when the revenues are down it is generally possible to decrease also your expenses by from sixty to seventy per cent of the decrease in revenues, for of course there is the necessity for upkeep, maintenance, overhead and certain other general charges which cannot possibly be decreased as rapidly as the decrease which develops in revenues when conditions have suddenly gone bad, as they have done throughout the world in the last four years. So taking from sixty to seventy per cent of the decrease in operating revenues of $39,000,000, there should have been a decrease in the operating expenses of the Canadian National Railways last year of between $25,000,000 and $27,000,000. But instead of that there was a decrease in operating expenses last year of $44,000,000, or 112 per cent, instead of the 60 per cent or 70 per cent that should have been expected, and is put into effect on most first class railways throughout the world in times of decreasing revenues. I say that is a remarkable showing on the part of the Canadian National Railways, and to illustrate what it means I am going to quote statements by S. J. Hungerford himself who from time to time puts out statements for the information of the people of Canada. These statements concern the conditions on the Canadian National railways. On September 24 last, when these economies were being put into effect, Mr. Hungerford put out a statement. The statement was given to Mr. Paul Reading, who in turn quotes it in the Ottawa Citizen of September 4. Mr. Hungerford says:

> Railway economy, he pointed out, was a progressive thing. It involved a constant increase in efficiency. Perhaps the best measure of recent improvement was that whereas the net operating revenue of the Canadian National in 1928, its peak year, had been roughly $56,000,000, the system as now organized could show a net of over $75,000,000 on the same volume of traffic as it handled in 1928.

In other words Mr. Hungerford pointed out that with the extreme type of economies which the Canadian National management and directorate had put into effect in the last year they could, with the same volume of traffic as 1928, have saved another $10,000,000.

It is sometimes feared that these economies have interfered with the efficiency of the Canadian National railways. In that connection, in the article which I have read, he spoke as follows:

> From the standpoint of efficiency the system was in a strong position. "Never in its history" Mr. Hungerford asserted, "has this property been in such good physical condition or so well organized to handle traffic cheaply and efficiently as it is to-day."

[Mr. Manion.]

Then in a statement which he gave to the press on January 3, 1933, he said the following:

> In gauging measures of economy to meet declining revenues, the executives of a railway system must guard against jeopardizing the condition of the property. Facilities and equipment must be maintained on a standard of safety and efficiency. This factor has been carefully considered by the Canadian National Railways management and at the present time the property is in fit and proper condition to handle all traffic offering safely and efficiently.

That, I think, should set at rest any suggestion which occasionally is made to the effect that the efficiency of the railways is being in anyway sacrificed to economies. I may point out another statement Mr. Hungerford made to me personally only a few months ago. A statement had been made in another chamber by a very outstanding gentleman of that chamber that the employees of the Canadian National railways were going around fearfully expecting that when they went out in the morning they might have their positions, but when they came home at night they would not have them. I felt that was not a satisfactory position, and did not promote a satisfactory mental attitude on the part of the employees. With that in mind I talked the matter over with Mr. Hungerford, and he assured me at that time that outside of the necessary decreases due to decreasing business, the necessary contraction, on any large scale, had largely been accomplished.

May I at this point state that I wish to compliment very sincerely indeed not only Mr. Hungerford and the managing officers of the company, but all the men of the rank and file who have kept up their courage and who, through loyalty, have done their work faithfully and well for the Canadian National railways in very difficult times indeed. I wish to compliment them on the splendid esprit de corps they have shown. I do not believe I would be doing justice if at the same time I did not compliment the directors who, in the near future, will probably be replaced by the three trustees mentioned in the bill. The directors were appointed nearly three years ago. I wish to say here and now that the majority of them have done splendid work, have served loyally and well, and have given the very best they had in every possible way to help Mr. Hungerford and the management to bring about the results I have just indicated.

Because I believe the information will be of interest to the house, may I set out a few examples of the types of economies about which I spoke, and which I mentioned were specially put into effect by Mr. Hungerford and his managing officers. Not long ago he gave me a statement comparing the savings brought about by these special types of economies, showing the difference between the year 1932 and the year 1930. I did not think to ask him why he took one year instead of another. However he probably took 1932 because it was the last year, and I presume he took 1930 because it was at that time that the particular economies began. As a matter of fact in 1929 the decrease in revenues had not become very heavy, and I have no doubt the railway management of that day were probably hoping in the near future to get business back to normal. There is no doubt many people believed the depression would not last long. At any rate economies were not put into effect to any great extent until 1930.
