The committee of which I was a Member for several years experienced a rather tough battle with our American counterparts. When I went there several years ago, acid rain was the best kept secret in the United States. No one knew anything about it except a few very important and environmentally conscious members of Congress such as Senator Patrick Moynihan and George Mitchell.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Our colleagues in the United States are waking up to the fact that they are polluting their own nests. Something will certainly be done. I will admit that President Reagan was not the great environmentalist in the United States, and God bless him when he goes to his retirement, but President elect George Bush has stated loud and clear that he will bring legislation to cut down on SO₂ emissions in the United States. There will be controls.

We are fortunate that the majority House Leader in the Senate, Senator George Mitchell, is also greatly in favour of acid rain controls and the reduction of SO₂ emissions. I predict that within the next year and a half the United States will bring in meaningful legislation that will cut down on acid rain, which of course will benefit Canada. The House can rest assured that with our new Free Trade Agreement there will be no more pollution than there would be without it.

Mr. Rompkey: Madam Chairman, in a sense this is a maiden speech for me. On the one hand I feel somewhat like the Hon. Member for Parry Sound in the sense that I am starting my sixth term, but in a sense it is a maiden speech for me.

For the first time Labrador has a federal seat of its own and it is my honour to be the first Member to be elected for Labrador. That gives me a great deal of pleasure.

I do not have to explain to Members of the House where Labrador is or what Labrador is all about. It is a northern territory, not as big as Nunatsiak, but about 112,000 square miles. It extends all the way from the small fishing communities on the coast to the great air base at Goose Bay with its NATO components, to one of the greatest hydroelectric developments in the world at Churchill Falls. In the west the iron mining communities of Labrador City and Wabush City on the Quebec border produce between them about 50 per cent of all the iron ore in Canada. That makes up the totality of Labrador.

It is a very diverse area, with a great deal of promise and possibility, and very many problems. It is an area that spoke out very loud and clear in the last election about this agreement that we are debating today.

I want to put those concerns on the record and advise the Government of how the people of Labrador feel. Their concerns were put in a nutshell by Simon Reisman when he said that we should have got the definition of subsidy but we did not. We ran out of time. We do not have a definition of a subsidy in the Free Trade Agreement.

• (1700)

What is a subsidy? Which programs of the Government of Canada will be targeted by the United States? We know already, for example, that the unemployment insurance program has been challenged. That challenge is dormant, but it is not dead. What about northern benefits?

I have to give the Minister of Finance credit, now that he is in the Chamber, for implementing a very generous program of northern benefits for travel and housing for the people who live north of 60 and other selected sites in northern Canada. These benefits are very important to the people of the North. When the Free Trade Agreement comes in, these people will want to know if northern benefits will be targeted as a subsidy or not.

Let us take the case, for example, of an iron ore company in Canada which gets the northern benefit tax break. If the workers who work for a Canadian iron ore company have special benefits but there are no similar benefits for workers who work for an iron ore company in the United States, what will happen because of that inequality? Will the United States then say that that is an unfair subsidy to an iron ore operation in Canada and we must stop doing that because we are supposed to be competing on a level playing field?

As Ralph Nader said, I doubt that we will see an uplifting of support services in the United States. What will happen on the level playing field? Will there be a diminution of the support services we have had in Canada? That is the question, and we do not know the answer. That is the concern of the people.

As well, the people are concerned about the possibility of the loss of control over resources that are very important to them, resources like energy, for example. In central Labrador, there is now one of the greatest hydroelectric projects in the world going on at Churchill Falls. It delivers energy to a large portion of not only the Province of Quebec but of New York State. There are other hydro sites on that river as well. There are perhaps over 2,000 megawatts of hydroelectricity left on that river. What will happen under the Free Trade Agreement? The concern is that we will not be able to have a made-in-Canada price.

As I understand it, the agreement says that we must sell energy to the Americans at the same price as we sell it to Canadians. We do not receive a lot of national newspapers in Labrador, but during the election campaign, I watched the debate on television and I saw Mr. Ritchie, on behalf of the Government's negotiating team, fail to give an assurance that there would be no countervail. I would like someone to address this question.

Mr. Crosbie: I am going to address it for you.

Mr. Rompkey: Fine. Let me set out the question. After we have developed the lower Churchill—

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Can we give you an answer?

Mr. Rompkey: Once you have heard the question. Do you want to hear the question first? This is the question. If, after the lower Churchill was developed, we wanted to establish an aluminum smelter in order to add value and if we wanted to offer that company a special price, like the Government of Newfoundland did at Long Harbour with the Electric Reduction Company of Canada, as an incentive for the industry to be set up, can the Americans not then say that the products from that industry have received a subsidy in the sense that we have charged the industry a lower price for energy than we are selling it to the Americans? Can the Americans not then put a countervail on the products coming from that industry?

I heard that debate and I heard the representative from the government side fail to give an assurance that after this agreement is in place, the Americans will not be able to put that countervail on. I believe that they will be able to do so. I believe if we have a made-in-Canada price, a Canadian price which is lower than the American price, the Americans will be able to say that that is an unfair subsidy and they will put a countervail on it. There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement which stops them from doing that.

Those are the concerns of people who want real jobs, not just hand-outs, as my colleague from Nunatsiak said. Will we be able to set up those industries under the free trade deal? That is the question that has to be answered.

The irony is that we do not even have free trade within Canada. For four years we have been trying to get a deal to develop the lower Churchill. I asked the Prime Minister four times in the last Parliament if he would be a mediator between the Province of Newfoundland and the Province of Quebec in attempting to establish the lower Churchill project. It is not going yet.

There is an abundant market for energy in the United States. There is all sorts of hydroelectric potential in Labrador. Yet we cannot get a deal. We are talking about a free trade deal with the United States of America, but we do not have free trade in Canada. This Government has not done anything to overcome those road-blocks.

I have to support the arguments put forward by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Nunatsiak, and I congratulate him on his election to the Chamber. I hope to be able to work with him because we have many things in common. We need in Labrador the same sort of things he needs in his riding. That is, we need essential services. If we are to compete, whether we have a free trade deal or not, the North needs special attention. It needs water and sewer infrastructures, for example.

Those communities will be expected to compete on an equal basis without equal facilities. We need the trans-Labrador Highway to be completed and we need the settlement of land claims so that the native people of the North can compete on an equal footing. The native people are saying they want some control over their lives, that they want to make sure that the resources on the lands they have inhabited for years give them a return and that they have the necessary infrastructure and community facilities to compete on an equal basis.

What is also lacking is a program for training and retraining. This has been addressed in the House over the past week. If there is one startling weakness in all of this, it is the lack of a program for training and retraining, particularly for young people and for people who live in one-industry towns, those who have no alternatives. If their industries are affected under the free trade deal, they will have to fall back on the resources of the Government. I believe it is very important to have training and retraining programs in place for the people of single-industry towns.

As far as my constituents are concerned, the free trade deal as it stands is inadequate. This Party has put forward amendments, and I would hope that the Government would look at those amendments, consider them and accept them. We cannot stop this deal from going ahead. The Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka is quite right. There was an election and the people have spoken. The Conservative Party has a majority. It is the Government of Canada. They have more votes over there than we have over here. It is impossible to stop the free trade deal. However, we do ask that we be listened to and that the concerns our constituents have expressed be addressed. We do ask that amendments be accepted so that when the deal goes through, it will be a deal with which Canadians can feel confident.

Last, I would like to remind the Government of the need to address the needs of the North and to ensure that the people of the North can compete on an equal basis. That means the provision of the necessary infrastructure, the water and sewer, roads and communication facilities that are needed to allow the people of the North to compete.

Mr. Fisher: Mr. Chairman, as a new Member of the House, it gives me a great deal of pride to represent the new constituency of Saskatoon—Dundurn. Those who are familiar with Saskatchewan will realize the two previous seats, Saskatoon East and Saskatoon West were divided by the river. Saskatoon—Dundurn has the beautiful South Saskatchewan River flowing through it and a great diversity within the constituency ranging from farmlands to beautiful residential areas. As well we have a certain amount of industry from potash mines to packing houses.

I would like to thank the voters of Saskatoon—Dundurn. It gives me a great deal of pride to be here on their behalf. I believe the main reason I am here, although it is not the only one, is that the feeling against free trade in that part of Saskatchewan was so strong that people knew there was no one other than the New Democrats who would be able to stand up for their rights in this staid and beautiful place that we call the Parliament of Canada.

Speaking of the Parliament of Canada, it gives me a great honour to stand here as a Member of the New Democratic Party having been represented in the past by such illustrious people as J. S. Woodsworth, M. J. Coldwell, Tommy Douglas and many others who I should probably mention but am unable to because of time restrictions. One of the reasons we are here today, and speaking most vociferously as we are, is as a result of the legacy of the people whom I have just mentioned. There is no doubt whatever that Canada is an entirely different kind of nation than that of the United States.

Because of that Canada represents a threat to the U.S.A. That is one of the main reasons that we have got ourselves into this free trade deal with the Americans. We talk about harmonizing, level playing fields and social programs. But, this nation of ours is a better nation than that south of the border. I did not say it was stronger or more militaristic, I simply said it was a better place and a better society in which to live. The free trade deal covers every aspect of Canadian society, and I would suggest that from the point of view of the opposition to it, in its entirety. If the free trade deal were a human being, you would have to say of it that it has no redeeming social values. We have to ask ourselves some questions about the free trade deal.

We have to ask why on earth we have it in the first place. We have to ask ourselves what effects it will have on our earning capacity and we have to ask ourselves among other things the effects it will have on agriculture. I think also we should ask ourselves what will life be like after free trade.

Why are we in this free trade deal? We can answer in relation to the United States and mostly in relation to the U.S. as we see the American society since the 1980s and the election of President Reagan. We have come back to something we have almost forgotten and that is Reaganomics and monetarism, the theory of doing business that says if you leave business alone, if you leave industry alone, if you deregulate and let industries run on their own, they will prosper beyond all imaginable levels. I suppose their people will be driving Mercedes Benz, as was alluded to earlier. If that were the case, if the society we are trying so hard to emulate had arrived at that level, I would suggest that everyone in the United States should probably be driving Mercedes Benz.

An Hon. Member: Do you have a bicycle?

Mr. Fisher: The United States of America has since the 1980s used a hands-off approach. The whole concept of monetarism has got itself into the mess in which it is now.

Only a moment ago a Member opposite referred to a $170 billion deficit which the United States has and he suggested that was big trouble. I suggest $170 billion is certainly big trouble. Reaganomics is demonstrably at the root of that said trouble.

Once the effects of Reaganomics took full force and the regulation of business became the leading aspect of the day, all kinds of very strange things happened in the U.S. We have for all intents and purposes what amounted to dumping, dumping from countries where wages were very low, of commodities ranging from steel to automobiles to any number of other commodities. These things flowed into the United States—some legal, some illegal. Some found their way into the U.S. through

Canada. They came into the U.S. from Taiwan, Brazil and Korea, places where the workers in those countries have been exploited in a way that some people in Canada would like to see happen here.

There is the twofold effect to monetarism. One, the unregulated, unfettered ability to do business which the United States which has led to the inflow of cheap goods devastating the indigenous industries. Second, monetarism takes away the ability of Government to have the proper kinds of influence upon all aspects of business and industry within a nation. We have the example of U.S. Steel which in the scheme of things 15 or 20 years ago was the epitome of everything that represented the United States. U.S. Steel was the good old U.S. of A. In that era of 15 or 20 years ago, you could refer to it in the same context as the good old days in the Li'l Abner cartoon where everything that was good was good for General Bullmoose—that may have been General Motors, but U.S. Steel applies as well—was good also for the U.S.A.

What is good for the General Bullmoose and good for U.S. Steel is not any longer good for the United States of America. U.S. Steel has found that it can take its profits made in the U.S., ship them overseas, get into partnerships with steel companies elsewhere, primarily in Korea, and export that steel back to the U.S. at a cheaper rate than it could be produced in the U.S. That is precisely the kind of situation in which we will find ourselves here in Canada, and is precisely the reason the U.S. is in big trouble.

Subsequent to the United States discovering that it had this tremendous deficit, and not entirely sure of its source, there was the election of 1984. Shortly after that the Prime Minister and the President of the United States got together, buddy-buddy, and sang When Irish Eyes are Smiling. At that time the Prime Minister said that the United States was our greatest neighbour and biggest trading partner.

The common expression when one finds oneself in an awkward position these days is simply to say: "Whoops". The United States realized that Canada existed. Prior to that time it was the Pacific Rim, particularly Japan, that was taking all the heat for the deficit in the United States. Now it is Canada.

The pressure on Canadian goods going into the United States increased at a rate which was unprecedented. Therefore, we find ourselves being pressured on every level by our closest friend and neighbour. Certainly, from the point of view of business people, they find themselves in the position of single-handedly feeling responsible for the United States deficit and were forced by our good friend and neighbour to attempt to do something about it. If we get into this free trade deal we will be able to counteract this pressure from the United States, return to the days of friendship, and live in an era of prosperity.

I do not know what happened from the time of the Progressive Conservative leadership prior to the last federal election. There were some people who ran for that leadership, and some who are present in the House, who stated such things as: "unrestrained trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such crucial industries as textiles, furniture, and footwear". The Prime Minister rejected free trade saying: "Canadians rejected free trade in 1911. They did so again in 1983. Canada must increase its share of the total world trade which dropped to 33 per cent in two decades". The Minister of Finance stated: "Bilateral trade is simplistic and naive. It would only serve further to diminish our ability to compete internationally".

I am not sure what happened in the intervening years.

Mr. Charest: They call it elections.

Mr. Fisher: In 1984 the Prime Minister suddenly found himself the Prime Minister with 100 free trade ghost riders on the back-benches saying: "We don't care what you said before you became the Leader. We are here. We have this majority. We are free traders, and you get yourself a free trade deal with that nation so that we can have access to the U.S. market". That is fine and dandy. Let us get access to the U.S. market. One of the reasons that we were going to get assured access to the U.S. market was so that we could get investment in Canada. Remember, everybody was investing elsewhere and not in Canada. We attempted to get a deal where there was free access to the United States. We did not get free access. There is not assured access of Canadian products into the United States of America.

What the Government got was assured access of Canadian capital in the United States, which was an even better arrangement than the previous arrangements because there were some limitations on Canadian capital going into the United States. Exactly the opposite of what the Government said it was going to do occurred, and it exacerbated the problems we had before we got into the deal.

Much has been said about the negative effects of free trade. I do not think that anything negative can demonstrably be shown to be untrue. For example, let us talk about wages. This morning someone referred to the fact that the wages in the United States were not lower than they are in Canada. In the third quarter the average wage in Canada was $19,337. Adjusted for the exchange rate the average wage in the United States was $18,500. The average wage in the sunbelt, which would include the grand and glorious peach state of Georgia, rounded out and adjusted for the exchange rate, was $16,000. I would suggest that an average loss of $3,000 a year for someone going into that country will certainly be significant.

I could go through the list of the average wage for all the 20 sunbelt states, but it is rather long and depressing. Nevada is the only state which has consistently been above the U.S. average. Those are the types of states that our businessmen and people are so fond of saying they are going to move their businesses and industries to when free trade comes in. There is no way in the world that we as Canadian people can be threatened with our businesses and industries going there. Of course, prior to them moving there they will say to their employees that they are going to have to take lower wages, benefits and fringes, or else the company will move there.

There is no justification for the Government getting into such a deal with such a nation, certainly if one wants to start on the elementary level of wages. Employers will force their citizens to take lower wages or else those companies will move out. That is an unjustifiable position in which to put our people. It puts Canadian citizens into the intolerable situation of blackmail.

Let us look at education and compare our education to what is available in some of the southern states, the situation that those people who already live in those states find themselves in, and which undoubtedly we would find ourselves pressured into accepting. The expenditure per pupil in the public schools in the sunbelt states is an average of $3,713. In the United States itself it is an average of $4,063. The 1987-88 estimate for Canada is $5,037 expenditure per pupil in our public schools.

• (1730)

I suggest that that is something we have to look at. We cannot accept the lower standard of living that those lower wage standards would force upon us.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fisher: We should take a look at life after—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I have to inform the Hon. Member that his time is up.

[Translation]

Mr. Tremblay (Rosemont): Madam Speaker, I rise for the first time in this House.

First, I would like to thank the people of Rosemont for allowing me to represent them and work with the members of this House for the development of Rosemont, Montreal, Quebec and Canada.

It is also a privilege for me, Madam Speaker, to rise for the first time to debate an issue so vitally important to all the men and women of Canada.

We have before us a Bill to implement the Free Trade Agreement that was signed by two sovereign nations. This Agreement is the result of lengthy negotiations with our main partner in trade and our closest ally. It was deliberately entered into by this Government to ensure the long-term prosperity of all Canadians.

The question before us as Members of Parliament is simply this: Do the people of Canada support the will of this Government?

Madam Speaker, I call upon the democratic spirit of the honourable members of the Opposition. All during the election campaign, I heard Liberal and NDP candidates voice concerns about the impact of the Free Trade Agreement.

A minority of them have since been elected to this House, yet they still sing the same song. They have not learned anything, Madam Speaker. They are still worried about our social programs, our regional development programs and our labour programs. They are concerned about everything. They are even concerned about Canada's sovereignty.

Madam Speaker, they have yet to understand that we must come to a decision about a piece of legislation to implement the trade deal. This trade deal is a major and even an essential factor of the Canadian development strategy, advocated by our Government.

But, Madam Speaker, Canadians readily understand that the agreement must be judged in the context of the Government's strategy as a whole, the employment strategy, the regional economic development strategy, the research development strategy, and so on.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Madam Speaker, Canadians are fully aware that our country is experiencing exceptional changes, and the Free Trade Agreement is one of the many aspects of these changes, although it is a major factor. Four years ago, Madam Speaker, Canadians got tired of a regime which had divided their country and had been unable to show economic leadership, so they elected a new Government which advocated a fresh economic approach and genuine national reconciliation.

Four years ago the Progressive Conservative Party chalked up an unprecedented victory and, under the direction of the new Government, Canada was about to undertake an historic change in policy.

Discarding the autocratic and arrogant attitude which was the hallmark of the previous administration, the new Government chose from the outset to play fair with the provinces and show confidence in them. Rather than simply maintaining the centralizing and arrogant economic approach of the previous administration, the new Government tackled the issue of redefining Canada's economic priorities and reconsidering the role the state has to play to promote development.

Banking on the country's economic potential and the ability of all Canadians, the Progressive Conservative Government decided to level with the private sector and show confidence in the entrepreneurship of Canadian men and women. Because Canadians are quite capable of holding their own on international markets, the Government's new economic strategy was to look far beyond our own borders. The free trade deal with our major partner has widened our horizons and will make it a lot easier for us to take our rightful place in the economy of the continent and of the entire world.

In short, the 1984 election has proved to be more than a simple change of Government. It marked, for Canada, the beginning of a new era both politically and economically.

At the political level, our country is now more confident than ever before. At the economic level, our country had the best performance of the seven most developed countries. The change initiated in 1984 was profitable in every respect. That is why Canadian men and women decided on November 21 to renew the mandate of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his team.

Madam Speaker, an issue which our Government feels is most important and which was raised on many occasions by the Opposition during this debate on the Free Trade Agreement is that of our ability to ensure the development of all the regions.

How about the Montreal region? Over the past four years, Madam Speaker, what was profitable for Canada also proved profitable for the Montreal region.

To be convinced of that, one needs only remind the House of the general climate which existed hardly five years ago. Having just escaped the worst economic recession of the past fifty years, the region was still assessing the extent of the damage and licking its wounds.

Plant closures, job cutbacks, production rationalization, aging of the industrial infrastructures, etc. The structural weakness accumulated over nearly a quarter of a century were revealed during the recession. A fatalist attitude was gaining ground. This sentiment was strengthened by the clear indifference demonstrated by the Government of Canada towards the region. The federal economic strategies which prevailed at the time, introduced a quarter of a century ago, had been planned in Ottawa and imposed on the region. Whether it was in the field of energy, financial services or air transport, the implicit message the federal Government was giving investors was clear: We know what is good for Canada and the Montreal region will just have to adapt . . .

It is not surprising, Madam Speaker, that in such a context, many Montrealers completely lost confidence in the willingness and even the ability of the Government of Canada to contribute in one way or another to the recovery of their region. For them as for a growing number of Quebecers, the Canadian Government was partly to blame for their economic decline. Instead of helping to find lasting solutions, it had become an integral part of the problem.

Out of this context, a new generation of entrepreneurs started to emerge. A new spirit then took hold of the Montreal community.

For all those who were actively involved in Montreal's recovery, it was obvious that the various social and economic interests and governments had to come up with some solid consensus on the priorities for action. Strong in their new dynamism but mindful of the hardships of the recession, the people of Montreal gradually regained confidence.

But four years ago, an essential ingredient for this new state of mind to lead to real economic recovery was lacking. This ingredient was a new attitude of the federal Government to the region. To break the vicious circle of decline, the Government of Canada absolutely had to learn to trust Montreal's resources, to be open to initiatives based on regional consensus and to see its role as a partner acting in concert with those involved in the region.

The coming into office of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his team in 1984 was to set the scene for a climate of dialogue. The Progressive Conservative Government quickly proceeded to implement in Montreal key management principles it proposed for the whole of Canada. Essentially, these principles sought to replace arrogance with openness, systematic confrontation with the search for consensus, fait accompli tactics with new forms of partnership.

The men and women of Montreal, who for years had carefully been kept out of all major decisions concerning them, were somewhat skeptical at first.

Gradually, they began to realize that the principles put forth by Conservative Party candidates during the election campaign were being translated into concrete action, a new approach to Montreal's problems and an in-depth review of the Government's role in regional development.

Thus, in 1985, the Government simultaneously struck a Ministerial Committee and an Advisory Committee on the development of the Montreal area. The Advisory Committee, chaired by Professor Laurent Picard, was given the mandate to consult the local population at length to identify the strengths and weaknesses of the area as well as key directions development should take.

The report of the advisory committee was made public in the fall of 1986. For the first time in the economic history of Montreal it made it possible to set the basis of a genuine mid- and long-term regional development strategy. In its response to the report a few months later the federal Government indicated its decision to establish seven major areas of development for the Montreal region. These seven areas of development are the basis of a strategy aimed at launching the real economic recovery of the region. The strategy is the result of close co-operation by the various partners involved in the economic development of the region. This is definitely not some kind of magic formula imposed from above, but the expressed will of a community which has the full support of the federal Government.

This consensus has now been confirmed in the recent federal-provincial regional development agreement with the Government of Quebec. For the first time, Madam

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Speaker, a development strategy for the Montreal region has been endorsed by socio-economic development agents as well as by municipal, provincial and federal authorities.

Yesterday the Hon. Member for LaSalle—Emard (Mr. Martin) said:

• (1740)

[English]

"I will keep watching the Government. I will keep watching on regional development. I will keep watching on sectoral development. I will keep watching on social programs". I can tell you that he will keep watching for the next 20 years because the Liberal Party has no strategy except watching. Watching others doing their best for the development of Montreal, and their best for the development of Canada.

[Translation]

Madam Chairman, Montreal is unique in the world. The moment it was founded—nearly 350 years ago—it became obvious that this exceptional site was bound to have a promising future. This archipelago at the confluence of four major waterways was the natural entrance to the continent and one of the main transit ports for trade between the old and the new world. For over two centuries, as a result of such a privileged situation, the region was the metropolis of Canada and its main window on the rest of the world. Eventually Montreal had to adjust to a period of relative decline which radically changed its development prospects. Today, as this period has just ended and Montrealers turned a page, the major challenge is to adjust to a new economic environment and prepare to enter outright into the 21st Century.

Today, we have already taken a historic turn. The spirit now prevailing has nothing to do with the general defeatism that was rampant hardly five years ago. The open attitude, the commitment to consensus, the promotion of new forms of partnership that characterize this Government's management philosophy have been exceptional stimuli for the region.

The 21st Century is around the corner, Madam Chairman. Let us think about this: The number of years to run until the year 2000 is exactly the same as the number of years since the Montreal Olympic Games in 1976.

The decisions made today will determine the status of our resources in the year 2000. Modernizing our industries, developing high technologies, realizing our full international potential are all challenges for the year 2000. On the first day of the year 2000, the Free Trade Agreement with the United States will have been fully implemented for hardly a few months, and Montreal will be a prosperous area open to the world.

Such is the real stake behind the choice now before us. More than a choice of a party, it is a choice of an attitude, a choice of a society we now have to make.

Between a return to the past that would inescapably lead us back to decline, and economic renewal that alone can lead us outright into the 21st Century, the choice is clear, Madam Chairman. It is my hope that all Members in this House will support the Bill to implement the Free Trade Agreement implementation bill.

[English]

Mr. Hawkes: On a point of order, Madam Chairman. I just want to put on the record that there have been consultations amongst the three Whips. We have agreed that the arrangement we have had for a supper hour between six and seven will be extended tonight to between six and seven-thirty. The House will continue in Committee of the Whole, speeches will continue to be made, but there will be no tactical manoeuvring for an extra half hour this evening.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manley: Madam Chairman, it is with great pride that I stand today in this House conscious of the traditions of this place and of the ghosts of great parliamentarians who have stood in their places in this chamber and debated affairs of state. Perhaps no aspect of this first speech more distinctly impresses itself upon me than the fact that I, too, one day will be a ghost in this chamber. My ghostly presence will be made certain by the transcription of these words to be retained in perpetuity for future reference by my descendants.

[Translation]

So, I am very much aware that I am now speaking in this House not only for today, but for the future. I am not only addressing my colleagues, my constituents who have my thanks for the confidence they expressed in me, and the Canadian people, but the children of the future.

[English]

If we bear a great responsibility as parliamentarians, and we do, our greatest responsibility is to our descendants. It has been said that we do not inherit this land from our ancestors, rather that we borrow it from our descendants. It is for our descendants that we must endeavour to enact laws whose hallmark is fairness. It is with both eyes focused on the future that we must conduct ourselves with civility, demonstrating respect for one another and for the traditions of this place and our land.

If I enter this House endeavoring to look to the future I do so heeding voices of the past. I wish to take the time to commend to this House the ancient words of the followers of Saint Francis of Assisi who wrote to the rulers of the people in about the year 1220 saying:

We, the followers of Francis of Assisi and your co-workers in struggling for a better society, send greetings and peace and this message. Keep a clear eye toward life's end. Do not forget your purpose and destiny as God's creature. What you are in his sight is what you are and nothing more. Do not let worldly cares and anxieties or the pressures of office blot out the divine life within you or the voice of God's spirit guiding in your great task of leading humanity to wholeness. If you open yourself to God and his plan printed deeply in your heart, God will open himself to you.

Remember that when you leave this earth, you can take with you nothing that you have received—fading symbols of honour, trappings of power—but only what you have given: a full heart, enriched by honest service, love, sacrifice and courage.

Embrace the God of us all and his Word wherever it surfaces. Imitate his preference for the poor and powerless. Enter into his plan of liberating all peoples from everything that oppresses them and obstructs their development as human beings. Do not grow tired of working for peace among all people.

Help remove unjust social structures and patterns of exploitation. Uphold the rights and dignity of the human person. Foster the creation of a society where human life is cherished and where all peoples of the planet can enjoy its gifts, which God created for all in a Spirit of love and justice and equality.

I believe these words to be as relevant today as they were when they were penned in the year 1220 A.D.

I come to this House grateful for having been elected by the voters of Ottawa South, a new constituency encompassing suburban neighbourhoods in the cities of Ottawa and Gloucester. While my constituency is a new one, it largely encompasses neighbourhoods represented not so long ago by my Leader, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. I dare say that nowhere in Canada were his coat-tails longer than they were in Ottawa South, for he is still remembered as an able, attentive and effective local Member of Parliament. I can only hope to do as well as he did in service of my constituents.

I look as well for inspiration and example to another mentor. It is now some 12 years since I enjoyed the rare privilege of sitting a few hundred yards from this Chamber in the Supreme Court of Canada as Law Clerk to the Right Hon. Bora Laskin, Chief Justice of Canada. I believe that I can say without fear of contradiction that no more notable example of distinguished public service could be found than the late Chief Justice.

In achieving my election to this House, it was my honour to meet with many thousands of my constituents as I sought them out at over 40,000 doors. Many issues of great importance and concern were raised by them. It is my honour as well as my duty to bring these concerns before this House. There were the concerns of Public Servants. I believe I have within my boundaries a larger number of federal Public Servants than any other riding in Canada. They have major concerns that have led to the erosion of morale in their workplace.

There was the environment. My constituents demand and expect action from all levels of Government about this crucial issue. There was the multi-billion dollars of expenditure proposed on nuclear submarines. My constituents are opposed to it as a senseless and shameful waste of money. There was the issue of the use of patronage by Governments and the perception of corruption in the political system. My constituents were appalled at the endless series of resignations in disgrace that characterized this Government in its first mandate. There were concerns of the elderly, of students, of post-secondary students at two universities and a community college. But there was no concern greater than the concerns expressed by my constituents about the trade agreement proposed with the United States.

My constituents voted against it by a margin of more than two to one. Why? They voted for Canada. They voted against moving into the embrace of the United States. They voted against the surrender of our sovereignty to the U.S. Congress. They voted for the things that make us different from the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manley: I do not think we can deny the differences. We are a more peaceful and peaceable people. We are a kinder and gentler nation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Manley: Our historical alliances are based on links of culture and heritage and not simply on links of convenience. We are a people which has resisted the melting pot in favour of celebrating diversity. We are different.

My margin included many who told me that they had always voted Conservative in the past but they could not do so this time. My margin included many to whom I referred as the Diefenbaker Conservatives. I think that the words of the former Leader of the Party across the way, former Prime Minister John Diefenbaker, in his first volume of his biography are of significance. He wrote about the election of 1911 on reciprocity that:

The election had a profound influence on me, and perhaps more than anything else made me a Conservative. I attended all the meetings in Saskatoon. There was wide-spread feeling that if Reciprocity with the United States was accepted, economic union would result, ultimately leading to political absorption... The Conservatives stood for "one Canada", free from United States domination. The bands at Conservative meetings played, and the faithful sang, "We're soldiers of the King". "Rule Britannia" had its place in those programs as we cleaved to our British heritage in defiance of American manifest destiny and Grit continentalism. The result was a tremendous revelation of Canadian determination to be Canadian. This impressed me greatly.

I did not tell the voters of Ottawa South that I was against free trade because, indeed, I am not against free trade or fairer trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Manley: I am not against lower tariffs. I am not against increasing efficiencies. I oppose this trade agreement with the United States. I told my constituents why I was opposed to it. It is because we entered into this negotiation looking for certain things and we did not get them. We did not get what we were asking for. We did not get secure access to the U.S. market. We did not get exemption from U.S. trade remedy laws. We did not get a binding dispute settlement mechanism that is any use to us. But we gave up significant things.

We gave up important economic levers. We gave up the ability to introduce policies in the interests of Canadians in areas such as investment, energy and regional development. We gave up protection for vital sectors that cannot compete. We lost our ability to determine that foreign investment in Canada is in the best interests of Canada. We impaired Canadian ability to conduct independent policies for energy supply to consumers. We diminished provincial power to establish economic and social policies.

Madam Chairman, although I am not a member of one of those Montreal or Toronto big firms, I am a business lawyer and over these last eleven years I have advised a number of clients on their business contracts.

[English]

As a lawyer perhaps what concerns me most is what is missing from this deal and from the Bill that seeks to implement it. I have found with many clients that they can read commercial contracts quite well for themselves, very often they are not so complicated that they are not understandable. What they need good advice for is to point out to them the things that are perhaps missing from an agreement.

I think when one sits down to look at this agreement, as a lawyer one would say: "What is missing here? What do we need that is missing"? Obviously, the definition of subsidy was not arrived at. It is a crucial matter. Clients have often come forward to me and said: "Well, no, we did not agree on this or that important point, but I trust my partner that I am entering into business with. I trust him. We will work it out. We want to get this deal, close it and then we will go on to solve the problems later".

Inevitably that is a prescription for disaster. Once the deal is signed, once the parties begin following a course of conduct that implements a deal, bargaining positions change. The ability to negotiate is eroded. In this deal, by failing to come to terms on the definition of "subsidy" entering into a new relationship with our largest trading partner, we are exposed to making very significant changes to the basis of our economic system which may impose limits on what we are able to negotiate with the United States in five to seven years. I think that is a major concern.

There is the concern that the agreement specifically says that subsidies in the energy sector would not be considered subsidies for the purpose of the creation of a "level playing field". Why are other potential subsidies not mentioned in the agreement? Any lawyer would point out that if regional development programs are not intended to be there, why are they not exempted specifically? Why are they left out? If our social programs are not in danger, why are they not specifically exempted? Put it in. We are being asked to trust the United States, and we can trust them. We can trust them to do what is best for them, not what is best for us.

In a radio interview on CBC before the election, the noted American economist, Robert Reich, said: "If I were a Canadian, I probably would not be terribly supportive of the Free Trade Agreement. As an American, as a citizen of the United States, I think it is quite good for us. Is it good for Canada? Well what do you get? What do you benefit? You get a reduction in tariffs, and that is probably a good thing. But the core issue with which the United States and Canada have to deal with regard to trade frictions is the question of what is an appropriate subsidy from government to industry, and the United States and Canada are no closer to a meeting of the minds on that issue than they were before the Free Trade Agreement was concocted."

I am not only concerned with what is missing from the agreement, but what is missing from the Bill. We had assurances throughout the campaign that social programs would not be affected. Why not put it in the Bill? If we did not get it in the agreement, why not assure the people of Canada, through the Bill, that these are exempt?

We have received assurances from the other side that the deal would increase employment. New jobs are going to be created, we were told. We also know that jobs are going to be lost. Where are the adjustment programs to see that people who lose their jobs are able to train and retrain for new ones? We are in danger of creating in this country a new class of unemployed. What are we going to do for them? We have received assurances that the cultural industries will not be affected. Put it in the Bill. We have received assurances that the environment will not be endangered despite what many environmental organizations have said. Can we not deal with this in the Bill?

I think that the greatest concern for me is that this trade agreement is all that this Government is putting forward by way of economic policy. It is that bankruptcy of policy that has led to this comprehensive, bilateral trade agreement. Our problem is not access to U.S. markets. Our problem is preparing for a future in which we have to compete in a high-tech world with the Japanese, the Koreans, the Germans, and they are beating us. It is not the Americans we have to worry about it. We have to start spending money on research and development. We have to build ourselves up so that we are more productive, so that our economy can compete with all of the world instead of tying ourselves to a falling star.

Why is the Government pursuing a policy of high interest rates causing an increased dollar that has the effect of reimposing tariffs that are going to be reduced through this agreement, causing a greater loss of jobs through high interest rates than are going to be created through this Free Trade Agreement?

Why has the Government failed in its last mandate to develop a strategy that will increase our R and D spending, increase our productivity and competitiveness? Why? Because this is a Government bankrupt of ideas, of policy, of new initiatives. That bankruptcy cannot be better demonstrated than by the campaign that has just ended, a campaign in which I have heard of fear being spread. I have seen fear in my constituency. It is spread by the other side. It is spread by letters from employers who have nothing to do with affected industries, telling their workers that if free trade is not adopted, they are going to lose their jobs. That is the kind of fear that we saw. We saw a major political Party in Canada running television commercials that for 30 seconds consisted of a series of unflattering photographs of the Leader of the Opposition. That is a Party that is bankrupt of policy, if that is all that they can do.

[Translation]

In conclusion, I would like to thank my constituents of Ottawa South for their great confidence. I am committed to serve them to the best of my abilities and represent them well in the coming years.

[English]

Mr. Crosby: Thank you, Madam Chairperson.

We have to begin by explaining the Bill now before the House of Commons, which is Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America. Bill C-2 contains none of the provisions that are being talked about in this House. It is a highly technical Bill, combining the elements necessary to support the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States. I do not think we should lose track of that exercise, because the debate is degenerating into a difficult discourse that reminds me of a story.

It was once said that if you put enough gorillas into enough cages with enough typewriters for long enough, they would type out all of the world's great novels. I think that is happening in this debate, because all we are doing here in this House of Commons is considering enabling legislation to implement the Free Trade Agreement already signed, all ready to go into force, all ready to be implemented by the Government of Canada and by the Government of the United States of America. There is no reason for us to be here.

Then someone has the nerve to say: "We are not regarding the democratic process." Parliament has a history. Parliament has a tradition. We must follow that tradition in calling sessions of the legislature. I have said this before in the House of Commons, but it bears repeating, this is clearly considered and stated to be by the Prime Minister and the Government of Canada a very special session. It is a session of the kind that we convened to deal with the railway strike.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Did anybody come to Ottawa when Canadians were crippled by a closedown of the railway service and say: "We must have a Speech from the Throne. We must have a debate. We must have committees"? No, we all gathered together to pass the railway legislation to end the strike, to return Canada and Canadians to normal, transcontinental activity. Nobody objected to that.

We are told this is a very different kind of session, but it is not. It is no different from any other special session of the Parliament of Canada, of the House of Commons, that was convened to deal with a specific issue, and that specific issue is the Free Trade Agreement. So do not worry. There is nothing unusual about what is going on in the House of Commons these past few days. The only thing unusual is that the opposition Members will not accept the verdict of the people.

What do the members of the Opposition do? They still talk about the mandate; we do not have a mandate. All you have to do is sit in the Chamber for an hour and you will hear everybody talking about the mandate. The latest speech on the mandate came from the Member for Nepean. I do not want to pick on a new Member, but she announced that she had a mandate, and she was here to stop the Free Trade Agreement, have it amended, have it changed, or have some other action taken. So I have taken the trouble to look up the mandate for the new Member for Nepean. The new Member for Nepean got 26,501 votes. The Progressive Conservative candidate got 23,399 votes. The Member of the New Democratic Party got 6,122 votes. There were 291 votes to another candidate.

If you add that up correctly it will come to 56,213 votes. Fifty per cent is 28,106. The Member from Nepean was 1,595 votes short of a mandate, or 47 per cent of the votes. She has no more mandate to come here and represent the people of Nepean and say that when they supported her they demanded that she end or obstruct the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement than the Government has to pass it.

In fact, as I have explained on other occasions, the Government has an even clearer mandate because 4.3 million Canadians, 25 per cent of all Canadians who did not vote in the federal election, accepted the verdict by not voting. They had no authority to call a new election. They accepted the verdict of the rest of the people and we have a very clear mandate. It is a mandate supported by 60 per cent of the Canadian voters, not 43 per cent, 44 per cent or 45.5 per cent.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Sixty per cent of the voters of Canada either directly supported the Progressive Conservative Party or supported the verdict of all the electorate by not voting in the general election. There is no great majority out there saying the Free Trade Agreement should be stopped. It is a figment of the imagination of the Opposition Parties.

Where are the supporters of the Opposition Parties? Where is Maud Barlow, who went on national television and said: "I and my organization will fight the Free Trade Agreement until we beat it to death, till we wrestle it to the ground". Where is Maud Barlow? She is at home watching television, doing her thing. She is not worried about what we are doing in the House of Commons, nor is her great friend, the ultimate opponent of free trade in Canada, Mel Hurtig. Where is Mel Hurtig?

An Hon. Member: Selling encyclopaedias.

Mr. Crosby: Selling encyclopaedias for young children. He flogged it all he could with the seniors of Canada, now he is off to the children. He is certainly not outside the Chamber or anywhere else in Ottawa fighting the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement. Thanks a lot Mel Hurtig. Thanks a lot Maud Barlow. But you are not here when your friends in the Liberal Party and your friends in the New Democratic Party need your moral support.

Where are the pickets that used to appear at every discussion of free trade? I walked into the House of Commons several times in the last days but saw no pickets. They have all gone home with their signs. You do not have anyone left, just a few rumpled Liberals and a few rumpled members of the New Democratic Party carrying out the mandate of the Mel Hurtig's, the Maud Barlow's and the Bob White's.

Where is Bob White tonight? I would like to see him in the gallery of the House of Commons monitoring the free trade debate, seeing if all the Members of the New Democratic Party are saying what Bob White thinks they should say. He gave them great advice after the election. Is he giving the NDP any advice on free trade now and how to fight the issue? I suspect that Bob White is where most sensible Canadians are tonight, preparing for the Christmas season in the spirit that should be common to all of us. Instead we are here beating a dead horse, battling an issue that has already been resolved. We are doing that because Members of Parliament continue the election campaign into this Chamber. They continue to pursue the myths that evolved in the election campaign.

Let us talk about some of those myths. The first myth is that the election was on free trade alone, that everybody who voted in the federal election of November 21, 1988, only had free trade in mind when they went to the polls. I have already said that many people in this country are concerned about abortion. Many people voted on that issue.

Even if they did not, there were many people trying to encourage Canadians to vote on other issues. I received a pamphlet in my mailbox from the Canadian Labour Congress, the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. They were kind enough to provide me and everyone else in Halifax West as well as many other constituents in Canada their views of the federal election. Of course, they did not want anyone to vote Progressive Conservative. They wanted the Mulroney Government thrown out because they did not like the way it was dealing with the postal service.

It cost over $6,000 to distribute a piece of material to all the homes in Halifax West to try to influence them to read the material and decide how they would vote. They were not concerned about free trade, they were concerned about the postal service. I guess their friends in the New Democratic Party should tell the members of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers that they wasted their time and money because everyone who voted NDP voted on the basis of free trade and that everyone who voted Liberal voted on the basis of free trade. Who cares about the postal service?

The fact is that many Canadians care about the postal service and probably were influenced by that piece of election propaganda prepared by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. That union said in advance of the election that they would attack certain Progressive Conservative Party members and oppose them in the election.

It is almost laughable that the Member for Ottawa South, along with the Member for Nepean should come into this Chamber and say that their electors voted for free trade while, in the next sentence, they say their electors are members of the Public Service of Canada.

We know where the Public Service of Canada, through the Public Service Alliance, stood on the matter of electing Progressive Conservatives. They fought all of us tooth and nail and used their money to do so.

In Halifax the members of the Public Service Alliance who work at the dockyard felt obliged to publish lengthy advertisements at the cost of thousands of dollars, urging their members and their families as well as others to vote against the Progressive Conservative candidates. If that was not bad enough, after the election they said they were successful in getting people to vote against the Progressive Conservatives. They said: "We are members of the ship repair unit, Halifax East and we got members of our union and their families and friends to vote against the Progressive Conservative Government".

Are Members of the Liberal Party and New Democratic Party coming to the House of Commons and saying that everyone in Canada voted on the basis of free trade?

I suggest they tell that to the promoters of the Peace Pledge who issued materials to all electors, took out newspaper advertisements, urging people to vote on the basis of the stand on a number of issues, including nuclear weapons free zones, nuclear powered submarines and cruise missile testing.

They regarded these as issues on which Canadians should vote. Are Members of the Opposition saying that no one paid any attention to all the propaganda they produced, especially when those same Members stand in the House and say, as the Leader of the Liberal Party said during the election campaign, that advertising and promotion by Canadian big business has turned the election around.

How do they come to the conclusion that no one paid attention to the Public Service Alliance, which is perhaps a good idea, that no one paid any attention to the Canadian Union of Postal Workers, which is an excellent idea, and that no one paid attention to the Peace Pledge? Certainly Canadians voted on the basis of what they perceived to be the issues. While free trade was a very important issue, we have to explode the myth that the federal election was based entirely on free trade. Let us hear no more talk about mandates from Members of Parliament elected with 47 per cent of the vote and saying they have a mandate but we do not.

Let us talk about some of the myths that relate to the Free Trade Agreement. The most hateful myth of all was medical care and the fact that the signing and implementation of the Free Trade Agreement will destroy, damage or otherwise adversely affect medical care in Canada. Canada happens to have a much better medical care system than they do in the United States.

I think every American, certainly every elected member of the United States Congress is very conscious of that fact. I am sure their knowledge extends to all offices of the U.S. Government.

They know that we have a medicare system in Canada which is less costly, more efficient, which reaches more people at less government expense. They admire our medical care system because they know the statistics that relate to medicare in Canada. They know that we in Canada spend only 8 per cent of our GNP on medical care while in the United States they spend 11 per cent of the GNP on medical care.

Members of the New Democratic Party say that the Americans want a level playing field which will eliminate medicare because they want us to abandon medicare in order to be level with them. I find that strange, since they already spend more on medical care than we do.

In fact, in the whole social program area, the Americans and Canadians spend approximately the same amount of their GNPs on social programs. I have the statistics here, and I would be glad to read them to Members. Approximately 21 per cent of Canada's GNP is spent on social programs, and in the United States it is approximately 24 per cent. How could anyone manufacture the argument that social programs would disappear so that our programs would be equal to those of the United States? How could anyone argue that we would be equally bad instead of equally good?

Members of the Opposition will not face up to these kinds of facts. They want to protract the debate and continue the myths that were portrayed during the election campaign. They want to bring these to the floor of the House of Commons, and they will not face the fact that there are substantial statistical and economic arguments against all the issues they have used to convince some Canadians that the Free Trade Agreement will not be a positive initiative for Canada.

When will they give up? When will they stop trying to convince people, through the medium of debate in the House of Commons, that the Free Trade Agreement should not be implemented? It is time to stop. It is time for members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties to face up to the fact that the Free Trade Agreement does not adversely affect medical care because the costs of medical care in Canada and in the United States are approximately the same. It has no economic impact. It does not affect the price of goods. It does not distort trade, nor do the variety of social programs we have.

Let us talk about pensions. Are members of the Opposition under the impression that there are no pension programs in the United States of America? Have they not heard of social security? Do they not realize that seniors in the United States receive pensions as do seniors in Canada? Perhaps our program is better. I hope it is. It should be and, if it is not, we will try to make it better. However, those programs are in place and the percentage of Gross National Product that is spent on these programs is approximately the same. In the interests of fairness and of properly informing Canadians, please drop these nonsensical arguments.

I would not mind if members of the Opposition started talking about the environment. At least there is an element of uncertainty with respect to the environment. The Free Trade Agreement makes very clear that in no way, shape, or form does Canada give up its right or authority to legislate and implement policies with respect to the environment. However, at least members of the Opposition would argue that we might back off. At least they would be dealing with a subject that might change rather than with facts, figures, and programs that are already in place.

If we are to continue what I have already characterized as an nonsensical argument, at least let us deal with the parts of it that might give rise to some concerns. Let us not deal with those elements that have already been clearly disposed of again and again. Let us not deal with the question of who has the mandate and who has been elected with what percentage. That decision has already been taken by the people of Canada. The play is over, the curtain is down, and now we have to move on to the next performance.

I do not want to make light of those who protest the Free Trade Agreement. I believe there are legitimate concerns arising from a dramatic initiative like the implementation of free trade. I understand why people in the textile industry are concerned. They want to guard their ability to produce and market their goods. I understand the concerns of people in various parts of Canada. However, what I do not understand is the rhetoric that is preached about free trade. I do not understand the people who have entered into the discussion but who do not have any real role to play in the dialogue. I would like to end my remarks with a description of some of the nonsense that I have seen played out.

I was a member of a standing committee that studied the Free Trade Agreement. We had the great opportunity to hear from some of the opponents of free trade. We heard from Mel Hurtig and from Mordecai Richler. Let me tell Hon. Members what Mordecai Richler said to that committee. We are concerned about the wine industry in Niagara and we want to help out. We want to make sure it is not adversely affected. Mordecai Richler, the great opponent of free trade, said:

—but if free trade meant the dubious wines of Niagara would be displaced by the far more palatable stuff distilled in California, I would not be displeased. There is only so much plonk I am prepared to drink for my country. In fact, the louder I hear Ontario squeal, the stronger my support for free trade.

Let us get the opponents of free trade all in one place, and they will tear each other to pieces. They do not agree with each other. They are dealing only in rhetoric, not in facts. Let us get down to the facts. Let us pass Bill C-2. Let us get on with the business of making Canada economically strong.

Mr. Ferguson: Madam Chairman, I wish tonight to draw to the attention of the House the deep and grave concern that I have, returning as a Member. During the early stages of this debate, Hon. Members opposite threw caution to the winds and accused Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition of obstructing. I wish to remind them of what this House is all about.

It is not my intention to lecture Hon. Members, but because many Hon. Members have been in the House for only a short time, it would be useful to remind them of what others have said in moments of national importance. Let there be no mistake about it. The present situation the Government has got itself and Canadian citizens into is of grave national importance.

It is obvious that closure sits too lightly on the shoulders of the Deputy House Leader and many Members opposite. Let me quote from Hansard for the Twenty-second Parliament, third session, page 4512:

To begin with, I say that never in all British history under a parliamentary system have the rules been juggled as they have in this case or have the rules been changed as it were between innings.

The issue at hand is the attempt to ram this trade deal through the House without giving all Hon. Members of the Thirty-fourth Parliament an opportunity to improve an old Bill from a previous Parliament which had an entirely different make-up of Members.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Obviously the Government has not understood that the electorate sent a clear message to the new Parliament that the trade deal could and should have improvements made to it. The tactics being used mean that we are being asked to abrogate our position as the dominant forum for discussions in the legislature and, in turn, leave the decision-making process to the executive. All of this is to meet some preconceived date that was decided before debate began. Because of that pre-imposed date, closure was applied, even though a majority of Canadians voted against the deal.

We have heard a great deal about sovereignty during the past year, but in our parliamentary system the sovereignty of the people is expressed through Parliament. When I say "parliament", I mean the minority or the Opposition, as well as the majority. Let us not have any more statements from the government benches and particularly from the Minister for International Trade who was quoted in the December 26 edition of Maclean's magazine as saying that there is nothing more to be said. I beg to differ.

Surely the Hon. Member for St. John's West does not have a monopoly on what is good for Canadians. Surely he cannot deprive the 125 new Members of the House who have not had the opportunity to express their views and those of their constituents who can no doubt contribute to improving a flawed deal.

Again, I would like to quote from Hansard of the Twenty-second Parliament, page 4513:

I do make an appeal to the Prime Minister. This Parliament, this institution should be a temple of freedom, not a place where frustration becomes the means whereby the rights are swept aside and whereby the rules are misinterpreted in order to achieve a temporary advantage.

I have to suggest, Madam Chairman, that perhaps one of the reasons this debate is being brought to an end is that the Government wants to silence those Members who are speaking out against this deal before we have more plant closings and lay-offs of Canadian workers by parent U.S. companies.

Although we are starting the festive season I am speaking here with a heavy heart. When we consider this Bill, it clearly contains basic principles rejected by 53 per cent of Canadians at the polls. It will, in fact, mean the end of so many of the organizations and systems that we have in Canada which are the envy of the world.

I am shocked and angry about the heavy-handed way this Government has neutered our agricultural marketing systems in Canada in exchange for continued access to markets that we already have and markets that we may or may not be able to continue to supply or have access to, either at home or abroad.

We still have the countervail duty on our Canadian hogs going into the United States. We still have the tax on shakes and shingles. The U.S. trade remedy laws are still intact and, despite all the assurances for the former Minister of International Trade and the Prime Minister in 1987 that the whole object of the exercise was to exempt Canada from the U.S. trade remedy laws. We are not exempt. In fact, the co-chairman of the U.S. Senate Ways and Means Committee last summer pointed out to his colleagues that in the event of a dispute between the Free Trade Agreement and the U.S. law, U.S. law shall prevail.

I am particularly upset that this Government has assured us that our marketing boards and agencies were not on the table when, the powers of these agencies and boards were being removed or circumvented. First, I will address myself to the powers of the Import—Export Permits Act being removed from wheat and grains. Furthermore, under the terms of the agreement, wheat is to be traded freely when support levels in both countries are deemed to be at par, but we have already lost our two-price wheat policy which is costing our Ontario farmers $1 a bushel this year. In view of forecasts of a 70 per cent increase in plantings next year in an attempt by individual farmers in Canada to stay competitive, prices will drop and losses will be much higher unless of course Mother Nature intervenes again this year.

Canada is regarded as having the best agricultural product marketing systems of any nation in the world. Ron Stoddard, Executive Director of the Nebraska Wheat Board stated in London, Ontario on Monday, December 5, that growers in his state are strong supporters of a two-price system for wheat. He predicted that the free trade agreement would be a disaster for Canada.

This grain trade expert went on to say that the international grain trade is the real winner, and as our grain prices reach record low levels we see these international grain companies buy company after company.

Mr. McDermid: Who said this?

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Ferguson: This is already happening in southwestern Ontario. A large U.S. based multinational corporation bought Maple Leaf Mills last year and is now buying some smaller operations. This is occurring at a time when this huge U.S. based company already has a preponderant position in Canadian agricultural supply and purchasing markets. This company is the largest privately-owned company in the United States.

As a farmer from southwestern Ontario, I suggest this is not a coincidence. Prior to the ending of the two-price wheat system by the Government, the Government brought the Vice-President of this company's Canadian operation into the office of the Deputy Minister of Agriculture here in Ottawa for a two-year period, beginning August 1, 1985 and ending July 31, 1987. It is also interesting that Mr. Amstets, the U.S. Chief Negotiator at GATT, is a former Vice-President of that same U.S. grain company. Just think of it, a Vice-President of the Canadian operation in the office of our Deputy Minister of Agriculture here in Ottawa at the same time as the executive Vice-President of the same U.S. based company was the U.S. negotiator in GATT, and was involved in these negotiations.

I was shocked to see a document prepared by this person in the Deputy Minister's office in late 1987 that was extremely critical of Canada's supply management systems, particularly in the poultry sector. Of course, as usual, the people who contributed to that document were not farmers, except for one from Buffalo, Alberta, but rather academics and big business people who showed their greed and could think only of their own market shares and corporate profits. Why did they not invite the poultry people and those whose livelihood depend on a stable and heavy poultry industry?

I submit that the Government is only interested in big business. When I look around me at the numbers of farms being foreclosed or taken over by the Farm Credit Corporation through powers of sale since the election on November 21, let me tell you that Scrooge himself could not be more callous or heavy-handed during this festive season.

Mr. McDermid: You were there when there were 22 per cent interest rates for the farmers.

Mr. Ferguson: Perhaps I should read a little excerpt from The Globe and Mail for December 16. It is entitled "Farmers' net worth plunges since 1984". The article also reports that in a comprehensive survey of the industry, the Federal Farm Credit Corporation found that the average net worth of Canadian farmers declined by 11 per cent since 1984 while there had been substantial increases in the amount of long-term debt, the number of high risk borrowers, and the number of farmers in arrears.

I should go on to point out that in general the Farm Credit Corporation found that farmers belong to marketing boards. Whether they raise poultry, eggs, or are involved in the dairy, they tend to have more stable, more profitable, and better investments than cash crops farmers. Members of the marketing boards are protected from market fluctuations—

Mr. McDermid: Exactly.

Mr. Ferguson: —by established prices. What happened to our marketing boards and agencies in the poultry sector, marketing boards that we were assured were not even on the bargaining table during the negotiations? On page 4 of the Free Trade Agreement we see increases in the global import levels.

Mr. McDermid: Based on what?

Mr. Ferguson: On chicken, turkey, and eggs. It is an increase of more than 40 million eggs a year—

Mr. McDermid: Based on what?

Mr. Ferguson: —at a time when our Canadian producers are being asked to cut back to balance supply and demand.

Mr. McDermid: Based on what?

Mr. Ferguson: As just a point of interest, Madam Chairman, the U.S. company that I mentioned a few moments ago has 13 million laying hens in the United States. In all Ontario we have 7.5 million laying hens and in all Canada we have about 20 million. That one company has 13 million in the U.S. Imagine a company having two-thirds the amount that we have in all Canada. Here in Canada we have not paid any subsidies or provided any financial assistance to the poultry industry for at least the last 13 years.

I ask the Minister of Agriculture when he returns to show his support for the Canadian marketing systems and to honour his commitment to Canada's hatching egg producers and to place hatching eggs on the import control list as was requested and as he promised. I would personally ask the Minister for International Trade to take the initiative in this matter and make their Christmas a happy Christmas for the Canada hatching eggs producers.

Why did the Government not insist during this free trade negotiations and the GATT meetings that the U.S. adopt our system of marketing as the envy of the world rather than the dog eat dog, survival of the fittest, that we see to the south?

Mr. McDermid: Why do you not tell that to your European friends?

Mr. Ferguson: What else did this administration do to our marketing systems that was not supposed to be on the table during negotiations?

Page 119 of the agreement indicates that for the purposes of Article 706 the definitions in paragraphs 1(a) and 1(b) are definitions of chicken and turkey respectively. I do not disagree with those definitions. I think the first two definitions are correct, but then I go on to look at subsection 2 of Article 706 which lists 13 different types of further processed chicken. Under this definition, chicken is certainly not considered to be chicken. There are 13 different types of further processed chicken that are not considered to be chicken: chicken cordon bleu, breaded chicken cordon bleu, Chicken Kiev, breaded chicken Kiev, and chicken TV dinners, and the list goes on.

Under subsection 3 there are nine different types of further processed turkey that are not considered to be turkey. Those further processed products will enter Canada free, outside the import quotas.

If this is not chicken or turkey, what is it? Is this a clear, above-board, honest manner in which to negotiate a trade agreement, or is this the latest method that the Tory administration is using to destroy these producer organizations established under an Act of Parliament? These further processed poultry products will account for more than 50 per cent of production here in Canada within the next few years. Not only will we lose the jobs of the people processing these birds, but the farmers currently supplying these boards will be forced to cut back or forced out of business, along with the other allied industries supplying producers of these products on the farms and on up through the system.

We were promised that our Canadian systems were not on the bargaining table. Now we find that they have been gutted and the Canadian people will be the losers.

When I look into the section on agriculture, curiously I came to page 88 and the definition under Article 711. I was shocked to see that the goods listed in tariff item 22.01 include natural water, snow, and ice. Yet there is no explanation as to whether Articles 7(1) and (2) of the Act supersede Article 711 of the agreement.

The Minister for International Trade should come clean with the people of Canada and admit what he has done, stop the deal, and apologize to the people of this nation. The Tories started out trading horses and ended up losing the farm. Now closure has been imposed upon this institution because the Government did not want to talk about being taken to the cleaners.

In closing, I ask the House either to reject the trade deal or amend it, to ensure that the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board and the powers of our national marketing agencies are left intact and that we retain the powers of the Import Permits Act in order that continued stability is provided for the producers of Canada and that ample supplies of high quality Canadian food are available to Canadian consumers at reasonable prices.

Mr. McDermid: I wish to raise a couple of points. The Hon. Member went part way when he started quoting from the Free Trade Agreement, but he did not tell the whole story.

First, the Hon. Member talked about increased levels of imports that are allowed for chicken, eggs, and powdered eggs under the agreement, but he did not say where the number came from. That number came from the actual average imports over the last five years. It was not a number picked out of the sky or a phoney number. It works out to be a 1 per cent increase. That number was arrived at by using actual importations in this country over the last five years. The Hon. Member failed to mention that when he talked about the various products.

The other thing the Hon. Member failed to mention was that we had reserved the right to establish new marketing boards where producers wanted them and where the Government saw that it was the proper thing to do.

The Hon. Member is a former Minister of Agriculture, albeit that he held his portfolio for only a couple of months, as long as I have had mine, but he did not tell the whole story. Those products to which he referred can be placed on an import control list. As a matter of fact the Government placed yoghurt and ice cream on the import control list after the Free Trade Agreement was signed.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

To boot, I am not sure where the Hon. Member comes up with the fact that we have ruined the marketing boards under the Free Trade Agreement. Article 11 applies in the GATT, has been preserved, and will continue to apply under the Free Trade Agreement. The Hon. Member only goes part way in his explanations, as the Liberals will when they do their explaining on the Free Trade Agreement. That is one of the injustices that the Canadian public had to put up with during the campaign because of the half-truths and just going so far.

For example, his Leader reads the first paragraph in a section but does not go on to read the whereases and whatfors after that. If one only reads part of a paragraph or section of the Free Trade Agreement, it may sound absolutely horrifying to the public.

When one goes on to read what in fact it means and the clarifications that go with it, it makes absolute sense. The dairy industry supported the Free Trade Agreement because it knows that our marketing systems are protected. The poultry associations have also been supportive. They know that the marketing system is preserved. What is happening to destroy the marketing system is that farmers are allowing processors to pay them a premium on chicken they produce. Certain Canadian processors are paying premiums and are destroying the marketing system that they themselves set up and asked for.

If the Hon. Member wanted to do something useful, then he might talk to the producers in this country and attempt to bring some sanity back to what is going on in the Canadian market-place, and not blame the Free Trade Agreement for what is happening. The Hon. Member is nodding his head. He knows what is going on with the producers. I have known the Hon. Member for many years. It is nice to see him returned to the House, although it is obvious that he did not learn much in the four years that he was gone. He has not been fair in the manner in which he has been giving his assessment of the Free Trade Agreement and the marketing board situation.

Mr. Ferguson: I wish to take issue with some of the statements made by the Hon. Minister. In the first place, I never mentioned the dairy industry whatsoever. On page 84, and I refer to this as the global quota, I acknowledged that there would be a global quota. I went on to point out that this would be circumvented by further processed chicken and turkey products that are not considered to be chicken. That is what is going to destroy the industries.

Mr. McDermid: Can they be placed on the import control list?

Mr. Ferguson: Chicken and turkey as defined are already on the import control list, as are eggs.

Mr. McDermid: Can you add to the import control list, according to the agreement?

Mr. Ferguson: I would think that we could. However, if we cannot add then let us have the broiler chicken hatching eggs also added.

I would also like to point out that when the import restrictions are removed on wheat there simply cannot be a two-price wheat system. I wish to go on record as pointing out that the advisory board to the Canadian Wheat Board does not support this deal for that very reason.

[Translation]

Mrs. Landry: Madam Chairman, I am indeed extremely pleased to rise and participate in this debate on second reading of Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States.

This Free Trade Agreement was certainly a major issue during the last election campaign. In my own riding of Blainville-Deux Montagnes, like everywhere else in Quebec and Canada, the debate on this dramatic initiative was marked by fiery and passionate speeches, but unfortunately hardly based on facts.

Both as a Minister and as a Member of this House, Madam Chairman, I was very happy to witness the extensive interest which the free trade issue had raised among Canadians everywhere in Canada.

The free trade issue emphasized not only the importance of trade for our prosperity, but also the importance which Canadians give to all aspects of our lives which make our society unique.

Madam Chairman, I should like to recall briefly the circumstances which convinced us of the need to negotiate a free trade agreement with our most important trading partner. As a matter of fact, it is in the early 1980s that the notion of a comprehensive free trade bilateral agreement with the United States came to light. It was in 1982 that the Canadian Senate, which was made up at the time of a majority of Liberals just as it is today, issued its report on free trade with the United States. The said report stated:

Negotiating a bilateral free trade agreement with the United States remains the best means to achieve the hoped-for objectives of restructuring, growth and competitiveness for the Canadian industry.

Madam Chairman, you will remember that in 1982, the Hon. Donald MacDonald, the former Liberal Minister of Finance, and his commissioners had received from Prime Minister Trudeau a mandate to carry out the most thorough and exhaustive review of our economy and to recommend guidelines for the future. For three years, this commission held public hearings throughout Canada.

Its findings were simple and unequivocal, and I quote:

Free trade will increase our wealth and, at the same time, reinforce the structure of our country and increase our self-reliance.

Madam Chairman, why did these studies, Royal Commissions and other groups and individuals recommend negotiating a free trade agreement? And why did the present Progressive Conservative Government also accept this advice? Our reasons are exactly the same as those for which small countries today are turning to free trade. The rise in protectionism is a threat to Canada's economy. With the Free Trade Agreement, Canada is doing what it must to ensure better access to its largest export market.

The Government and the supporters of free trade believe that this can only provide better economic opportunities for Canadians in all regions of this great country.

Indeed, Madam Chairman, the Free Trade Agreement opens possibilities for all Canadians, from St. John's to Victoria.

Since negotiations on this Agreement began, the need to serve all of Canada adequately has remained a priority. That is why the Free Trade Agreement is widely recognized as an essential element of this country's regional policy.

Just think, Madam Chairman, of the energy sector in Quebec, forestry in the West or fisheries in the Maritime provinces. They will all benefit from this trade agreement.

I also think of the market of 250 million people, the many export opportunities, the development of our resources and so many other possibilities the Free Trade

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Agreement affords us. And that, Madam Chairman, is what will develop our regions.

Nevertheless, the opponents of free trade continue to maintain that it will lead to the disappearance of Canada as we know it and that we will lose opportunities because of it.

On what do they base their opposition? Certainly not on the history of the last fifty years which is one of a continuous progression towards the freeing of trade and the elimination of tariffs and trade barriers between the two countries.

I think we must seriously ask ourselves the following questions. Are we any less Canadian after half a century of increasing trade with the United States? Are we any less independent following the reduction of tariffs? Are we less prosperous? Madam Chairman, I think the vast majority of Canadians will say our identity has never been stronger. I can say that we have never seen such an abundant production in literature, music, art or Canadian films than today. Each of those areas of creativity is solidly protected by the Free Trade Agreement and, as promised, we have maintained all forms of assistance for the cultural industry as well as our capacity of introducing new ones.

Nothing in the agreement prevents the Government from continuing to fund the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, the National Film Board, Telefilm Canada and the Canada Council. I think free trade can only strengthen our sense of identity rather than weaken it, because it is precisely when a country's economy is strong that it can afford to support its art and cultural institutions.

The same argument applies to our social policies. Free trade opponents, the two opposition Parties, of course, say that the agreement threatens those policies as well as our health insurance and unemployment insurance systems. We know, Madam Chairman, how, during the last election campaign, in a way I would call shameful, they spread fear especially among older people. The agreement does not jeopardize in any way the integrity of Canadian social security systems, and any risk would rather come from a stagnant economy, protectionism or the status quo. Under international as well as American and Canadian law, social programs such as health insurance and unemployment insurance, pensions, maternity and other fringe benefits are not considered a subsidy if they apply to the whole population. And, to make sure that those programs are viable, we must be able to afford them. Madam Chairman, only a flourishing economy can guarantee an adequate health system for all Canadians.

And what about the manufacturing industry, particularly the small and medium-sized businesses, where over 12,000 of my constituents of Blainville—Deux-Montagnes work? That group of energetic entrepreneurs represents one of the most dynamic and growing economic forces in the country and in the constituency I am proud to represent. Since I started dealing with those businesspeople many months ago, I have always been impressed by their enthusiasm. I am proud to hear them say how much they will benefit from the opportunities created by free trade. Those small businesses are ready to take advantage of the tremendous benefits resulting from better access to the vast American market. The Agreement will offer new trade opportunities to those Canadian entrepreneurs. It will stimulate the growth of small businesses ready to invade the American market and, just as important, secure access for those already there.

The elimination of duties on manufactured products exported to the United States will give a competitive advantage to Canadian products sold on the American market.

So far, our producers have had a market of 25 million. They will now be able to produce for a market of 260 million.

Madam Chairman, I would also like to talk about the industrial sector. In my riding, like everywhere in Canada, this sector will become more and more competitive internationally as production costs decrease with the elimination of customs duties. Under free trade, the industries of Blainville—Deux-Montagnes, namely chemicals and automobiles, as well as plastics, furniture, fabricated metals and electronics, will be in a better position to compete on international markets.

Finally, these producers will have innumerable opportunities to find and exploit other niches, other production processes, new management skills and new investment possibilities here and in the United States.

Mr. Chairman, that is why national small business associations such as the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, the Canadian Small Business Council and the Retail Council of Canada also strongly support the Agreement.

• (1900)

[English]

I would like to turn for a moment to my role as Minister of External Relations. As Minister responsible for Canada's international aid programs, I am particularly pleased to see how free trade with the U.S. will improve Canada's aid programs to the Third World.

This important trade initiative is part of this Government's two part approach to international trade. Canada is committed to pursuing the gradual reduction of trade barriers, both bilaterally with our most important trading partner and multilaterally through negotiations under the auspices of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The FTA has been hailed by all major industrialized nations as an important check against the rise of protectionist forces in international trade. Such forces present a direct and growing threat to global economic growth, and most particularly to economic development in the Third World.

Co-operation in trade with developing countries has been a focal point in Canada's external relations, and this will be enhanced under the FTA. The economic growth generated by the FTA will strengthen Canada's capacity to support economic development assistance initiatives in the Third World.

The Agreement will enable Canada to continue to reach and exceed this remarkable level of development assistance, which in 1986-87 was $2.26 billion. Such objectives are reached by creating a stronger, more dynamic economic infrastructure right here in Canada. Mr. Speaker, that is how industrialized nations like ours can afford the kind of generous, innovative programs that symbolize the reputation Canada has acquired in the developing world.

The Third World can only benefit considerably from the economic growth that will result from the enhanced trade arising from the Agreement. The growth in our economy brought on by free trade will lead to strong demand for Third World products. Free trade will thus contribute to significant economic growth that will enable Canada to keep its leading role in encouraging and promoting the expansion and growth of the economies of developing nations.

And so, Mr. Chairman, it is clear that those who say that the Agreement bespeaks Canadians at siege in a North American fortress are sorely mistaken. Our opponents can find nothing in the Agreement that might threaten our assistance programs. And the reason for that is very simple. Our assistance policies have nothing to do with our trade relations with the United States. Decisions in the area of assistance will always be made by Canadians and in the best interests of Canada, independently of the Agreement.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say how proud I am to have been granted the privilege of participating in this historic debate. The Free Trade Agreement gives Canadians the chance to show the whole world how hard-working, productive, innovative and competitive they can be. In short, to show that they are ready to meet the challenges of the future.

Mr. Chairman, the people of my constituency, like those in the majority of constituencies across Canada, clearly indicated on November 21st that they wanted the Conservative Government to continue to work to make Canada grow. I am proud to be a member of this Government, which negotiated free trade with the United States to ensure greater prosperity for all Canadians in the years to come.

[English]

Mr. Parker: Mr. Chairman, I am very pleased to speak in Committee of the Whole today on Bill C-2.

I represent a very diversified riding. We have three national parks, so the environmental aspects of this legislation are of very deep concern to the people living in my riding. We also have a very beautiful fruit growing and farming community in the Creston area. We are involved in mining through our coal, silver, lead and zinc mines in the Kimberley area. We have the service sector in Cranbrook which services the valley. We have a system of workers in the transportation field as well.

Throughout this campaign we found a very, very deep concern among those people. Yet when I came back to this House, as I have done and am very pleased to do, I heard this rhetoric from the other side. I heard the Minister responsible for housing speak last night in a very violent way with respect to how the Opposition is criticizing the Government.

Mr. McDermid: Violent?

Mr. Parker: Yes, very violent.

Mr. McDermid: Do you know what the word means?

Mr. Parker: That same violence came out during the campaign when we were called liars. We stood on our platform and tried to express the concern we had for our people in those areas I mentioned who saw the greed of the large multinational corporations going for free trade while they were being trampled on. That concern came from across the political spectrum. It came not only from New Democrats, but from Liberals and many, many Conservatives. They left the Conservative spectrum and started to support us because of these deep concerns.

We saw the Prime Minister come into Vernon, not Kelowna or Penticton but Vernon, and offer $20 million to grape growers because of their concerns for their industry. There are no grapes grown in Vernon. The grape industry is located in Kelowna, Penticton, and Osoyoos, but he would not dare show up in those areas with his $27 million. No, he went to Vernon, safe territory, and talked about it. He did not give the grape growers an opportunity to express their concerns.

In Creston where fruit, dairy products, and grain are produced the people are concerned. They are concerned about the fact that their growing season does not compare with that in the United States. They are concerned that the competition they will be facing will be very real. The dairy industry is very concerned about what will happen to dairy products if there are no processing plants to process products. If there are no processing plants, there is nothing else to do but get out of business.

I want to talk for a moment about railway workers. They are saying to us: "What is going to happen when we start going north and south?" That is what the Minister said yesterday. What is going to happen when Alberta builds a four-lane highway to export products to the States and Alberta, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba start running north and south instead of east and west? What will happen to our railway jobs? What will happen to the railway workers? What will happen to the Ports of Vancouver, Thunder Bay, and Churchill? We in this Party want to set up a mechanism to respond to the problems with which these people will be faced.

I was at one time Mayor of Revelstoke. I remember when the Columbia Treaty was signed and what a great deal it was going to be for the province and people of British Columbia. Thousands of acres of land were flooded, not for Canadians, not for the production of power, but to store water for the Americans. We saw them draw down that water to such a level that dust storms occurred. No one could even live in the area. We had to appeal to them to do something, to put in place some type of regulations.

That was a small agreement compared with what we are talking about now. When land was expropriated in this case there was only one Party which stood up to fight. That was the New Democratic Party.

All we are asking for in the Free Trade Agreement is to have some type of mechanism put into place by which we can monitor what will take place. If the Government feels that this is such a wonderful deal, why is it so determined not to give us such a mechanism to protect our people?

I wish to deal with the survey conducted by the Bank of Nova Scotia. The bank calls it an update of an economic development study.

Mr. McDermid: It was done before the agreement was signed.

Mr. Parker: I do not care when it was done. The fact remains that the issues were studied. We have seen what has happened since the agreement was signed.

Mr. McDermid: I love that, a socialist quoting the Bank of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Parker: The bank said that these were the high risk areas that could be affected. Many of them in my riding will be affected: Automotive, heavy truck assemblies, small parts producers, food processing, poultry, fruits, and vegetables. The people in my riding are very concerned when they find out that the banks are starting to identify these areas as high risk areas. When they need capital to participate and to compete, the bank will say: "You are in a high risk area and we are not prepared to lend money to you".

Rail freight car assemblies are also identified as a high risk area. We have a major rail car assembly plant in Golden which has hired many workers. The community has built much of its structure around this plant. If we start to see that these freight cars are going to go south for repairs and so on, into the lower markets where there is cheaper labour we will find that this railway shop will not be able to maintain and create the jobs that our communities expect from it.

Shipbuilding, ship repairs, chemicals, organic specialties, box board and container boards, agriculture, poultry, trucking services, cable television programs, and footwear are areas which have been shown as high risk.

When these people try to get money to compete in what has been called a level playing field, they will find that the banks will not give them the opportunity to participate in those programs.

I have worked for many years on a program to sell western Canadian coal to central Canadian markets. We have started to break through in that market. Several million tonnes of western Canadian coal from the Sparwood-Elkford area have been sold to supply plants in central Canada. This has created jobs and kept the money in Canada. Money has been flowing to pay the workers in British Columbia.

This is the type of program that we should be working on. There should be east-west co-operation to buy western national resources to supply central Canadian markets. In turn, we would buy the manufactured goods.

Mr. McDermid: You want to keep westerners hewers of wood and drawers of water and provide central Canada with all the manufacturing. Is that what you said?

Mr. Parker: Let us have them buy our raw materials. We will buy their finished products. We will create thousands of jobs across Canada. We will create thousands of jobs in my riding. People will be taken off the unemployment insurance rolls.

In 1984, during the national election campaign, the big saying in my riding was "jobs, jobs, jobs". The jobs were not there. We lost jobs. We lost a fertilizer plant in Kimberley; 150 people lost their jobs. We are one of the richest agricultural countries in the world, and we cannot keep a fertilizer plant going.

The Conservative Member whom I replaced allowed that to happen. Members opposite talk about east-west alienation. That was created by this Government which has allowed these types of things to take place.

I would like to talk about a few other promises that were made. The Conservative Government cannot be trusted. The Prime Minister and the Conservatives cannot be trusted. They have increased taxes on the average family by over $1,300, and they said that they would not increase our personal taxes. They tried to deindex the pensions of our senior citizens.

Mr. McDermid: No, we did not.

Mr. Parker: That is what the former Member said during the election campaign. He also said: "Sid Parker is not telling the truth. We did not try to cut pensions, we only tried to deindex them". Is that not something?

The Conservatives passed legislation which drastically increased the cost of prescription drugs.

Mrs. Sparrow: No. We brought in research and development.

Mr. Parker: Show me the jobs that were created by the program. Show me the jobs in Kootenay East. Jobs have been lost in Kootenay East. Our pensioners are now paying three and four times more for their drugs than they have paid at any other time. This is as a result of the Free Trade Agreement, whether or not Hon. Members opposite agree. It was done as a gesture to the Americans. The Conservatives have given thousands of profitable corporations—

● (1920)

An Hon. Member: You are a total stranger to the truth.

Mr. Parker: He says that I am a stranger to the truth. I can remember when the great debate took place in the 1984 election and the Liberals were criticized for patronage appointments. We saw what happened after the Conservatives were elected.

Mr. McDermid: We took care of your House Leader. His name was Ian Deans. We took care of Stephen Lewis. We took care of all your friends. All your friends got good jobs. You are just sore because you did not get one.

Mr. Parker: Mr. Chairman, they are getting a little rattled.

The Chairman: Order, please. After we have some quiet, the Member may continue.

Mr. Parker: Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. McDermid: What has this got to do with the Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. Parker: Mr. Chairman, they talk about "honesty" and they talk about "trust us". Let us talk about whether we can trust them. Let us talk about whether we can trust them with the Free Trade Agreement. I can remember the Hon. Member for York—Peel in this House, who was found guilty on 14 different counts of conflict of interest, not one, not two, and $600,000 of the taxpayers' money was used to try to defend him.

I say to small businessmen out there who are supporting the Conservative Government: "If you got yourself into a situation where you would be charged, and you were found guilty on 14 different charges, would the Government come and pay your legal fees?" I do not think so.

Before I close, I want to discuss water. I think water is what this agreement is all about; this is taken from Wildlife International. As I said before, with regard to the Columbia River Treaty and how it affected our water, I remember that we as a municipality decided it was too costly for us to run a city water main to irrigate our golf courses. We wanted to pump water out of the Columbia River reservoir to irrigate our golf course. Do you know that we could not do that in Canada? We had to get permission from the International Joint Water Commission and the Americans to take water from our own rivers and our own country to irrigate a golf course within our own country.

Mr. McDermid: Who sat on the joint commission? Why did they set up a joint commission?

Mr. Parker: It does not matter who sat on it. I am saying that we better clarify what we have. I have an article here. There is a loophole in the controversial Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement which could have an unwanted impact on Canada's most essential natural resource, water. It reads:

U.S. politicians have already voiced the possibility of future needs for Canadian water, says Donna Leith, Director of the Education and Information Program at the Rawson Academy of Aquatic Science.

As the agreement stands now, says Leith, our American neighbours, who face worsening H₂O shortages, have equal access rights to all precious Canadian waters.

That is what it says. Here is what she says is the solution to it:

The only solution to strengthen Canada's position, she says, is to implement a joint Canada-U.S. Declaration of Meaning which clearly excludes water from the trade agreement.

This was not done.

Mr. McDermid: Who said that?

Mr. Parker: I told you who it was. It comes from Wildlife International of November and December, 1988, and her name is Donna Leith, Director of the Education and Information Program at the Rawson Academy of Aquatic Science.

So note that and let us do something.

Mr. McDermid: I have met with them before.

Mr. Parker: You have met with them.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. McDermid: I know where they are coming from, and you are wrong.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mr. Fee: Mr. Chairman, first I would like to echo the comments made by my predecessors on both sides of the House. They stated what an honour it was to dedicate their maiden speeches in this House to such an important topic as the free trade debate. I doubt whether Parliament has faced such an important issue since the Second World War.

I would like to offer my congratulations to you and to your colleagues in the chair on your appointments. It is very apparent, even to a newcomer like myself, that you and your colleagues are all held in very high esteem by the House. I wish you very good fortune as you face the challenges ahead.

It is also a privilege for me to stand in this House as the representative for Red Deer. I would like to take this opportunity to express my appreciation and gratitude to the voters of Red Deer for placing their faith and confidence in me. It is with a great deal of humility that I take up this role, standing as I do in the shadow of such a fine and able servant of the people as was my predecessor, the Hon. Gordon Towers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fee: Mr. Towers is very well respected in Red Deer, as evidenced by his regular large majorities with every election that he faced. There is no doubt that he had the confidence of a majority of the people in Red Deer. I have been impressed, even in Ottawa, as I wandered the halls talking to my colleagues on both sides of the House with the respect of which they talk about my predecessor. Probably more important than that, when staff members in the Commons, the security guards, even the bus drivers, find out where I am from, they ask and inquire after Mr. Towers and tell me that I have very big shoes to fill. I realize that I have big shoes to fill, and I am going to do my best to fill them.

I have also been told that there is only one proper way that I could officially recognize my predecessor, who in addition to providing total commitment to the people of Red Deer, was noted for his poetry. With the indulgence of the House and the Chair and with respect for the poet of Dromore, I would like to offer the following:

There's tough work ahead for Douglas Fee
If I'm to serve as well as he
Who, with lively verse before me came Into this House of national fame.

Alas no more will this House hear
From Dromore's Bard now in Red Deer
But I am here and though not a bard,
I am prepared to work just as hard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fee: Mr. Chairman, through you to the House, I would have to state that I am not a poet, and that will probably be the last effort you will hear from me.

My riding is a reflection of the very best that the Province of Alberta has to offer. From the majestic Rockies in Banff National Park in the West, through to the bustling City of Red Deer in the East, our riding boasts beautiful scenery, sprawling farms and ranch land, rich resources and, most important, friendly, hard working people.

Agriculture is the basis of our economy, but we also rely very heavily on the energy sector, oil, gas, and petrochemicals. The Free Trade Agreement is going to have a profoundly positive impact on the energy sector as a whole and on my riding in particular. In the short time available, I would like to explain why we see benefits and why a clear majority of the voters in Red Deer supports the Free Trade Agreement.

First, let me deal with tariffs.

The eventual elimination of tariffs will allow the free exchange of goods across the Canadian-American border. Most of our natural resources already cross that border duty-free, but tariffs are still quite high on value-added goods. As a result of the Free Trade Agreement, not only will Canadians be able to increase their exports, particularly in further processed goods, but Canadian consumers and manufacturers will have access to lower priced goods. As has been expressed earlier in the House, the Canadian consumer will be the ultimate winner from the free trade arrangement.

Under this agreement both Governments agree not to discriminate against foreign purchasers of energy by using export taxes. In other words, price will be determined in the market-place where it should be determined. All provincial and federal rights to develop our energy resources in Canada remain intact. The Free Trade Agreement is a logical, consistent step toward a freer market in energy. It meets all our prior obligations to the International Energy Agency.

This Government began the liberalization process when it abolished the National Energy Program and the Petroleum Gas Revenue Tax. I was somewhat shocked yesterday when I heard Members on the opposite side of the House say that this agreement would prevent the institution of another national energy program. For the people of my riding that is a very good reason for supporting the Free Trade Agreement. We do not want another national energy program.

The National Energy Program and the PGRT absolutely devastated small Canadian-owned oil companies in my constituency. Several Canadians lost a lot of money and a lot of faith in government with those two programs. They are getting that faith and confidence back. The entrepreneurs in the Alberta oil patch have started over again. I talked to several of these people throughout the election campaign, and they told me emphatically that they do not need nor do they want Governments telling them how to run their business. They want the opportunity to compete fairly. They want the market that will be secured by the Free Trade Agreement.

The Free Trade Agreement confirms each country's commitment to move toward a liberalized investment climate. Canada will retain important rights to monitor foreign investment. In energy, takeovers of healthy Canadian companies by foreigners are prohibited.

Both Governments have agreed to apply the respective rules and regulations to everyone, regardless of their country of origin. In other words, the Americans will not discriminate against Canadian companies doing business in the United States simply because they are Canadian and vice versa.

Each Government, however, retains the right to establish whatever safety standards or environmental regulations it wishes. Those who want to do business in Canada will have to play by Canadian rules. Provisions for national treatment do not and will not apply to social programs or medical services, regardless of what the Opposition would try to have us believe.

The Free Trade Agreement confirms our commitment to the principles of GATT and the International Energy Agency. This means only that when we cut back production we will allow the Americans a chance to bid on a proportion of remaining production. We do not have to give our energy away, but in times of international shortage we will not turn our back on our neighbour and our best customer, either.

We still retain the right to provide government incentives for exploration and development of our energy resources, but perhaps the greatest achievement of our Free Trade Agreement is its creation of a secure trading environment. With the elimination of tariffs and a commitment to national treatment, cross border trade will undoubtedly increase. Since 85 per cent of our energy exports go to the United States, it is essential that we secure access to that market.

Secure access will lead to more investment. This will result in the development of large scale energy projects like the one announced last week by the Caroline Area Gas Producing Group in my riding. It plans to invest $600 million to build a natural gas refinery, employing over 1,400 construction workers and ultimate employment for 150 people. There was the announcement by the Minister for International Trade yesterday that the Joffre plant just outside my constituency will be expanded with a third phase by Novacor. It is another investment of a half billion dollars. It will have very positive and long lasting effects on my constituency.

These projects require a staggering amount of capital in order to be built, in fact more capital than Canada alone can provide. A stable trading environment will encourage investors to plan for a longer term. This will mean more money spent in Canada, more jobs, and greater prosperity for Canadians.

I find it amazing that in my constituency there are so many examples of positive reactions to the re-election of the Conservative Government and the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement, and that people sitting in the Opposition can only find doom and gloom about it.

This agreement offers Canadians an opportunity to become more than hewers of wood and drawers of water. Lower tariffs, secure access to large markets, and more investment will promote diversification. We will be able to refine our natural resources right here in Canada and sell the refined products abroad, rather than ship out raw materials. This means more jobs and better jobs for Canadians.

Another example from my constituency is Sun Pine Forest Products. It is planning a huge expansion of its timber processing business, in anticipation of an increased market in the United States. It is building an 80 million board foot sawmill near Rocky Mountain House. It will include a chipper, planer mill, dry kilns, a CCA treatment plant, and a fibre board plant. Some $32.5 million will be invested to create 267 long-term jobs. Estimates are that over 600 construction jobs will be created and 530 indirect jobs. Sun Pine's payroll will be over $17 million a year. This kind of investment will have a profound impact on our local economy. It is a prime example of the benefits secure access to a large market can bring.

There is still a huge, untapped potential in Alberta's energy resources. This agreement will enhance our security of supply. Security of supply depends on a strong domestic energy industry, capable of developing new energy resources to meet future requirements. Free trade will strengthen Canada's energy industry, both through new investment and through an increase in exploration and development activity. In turn, this will enable the industry to find and develop the energy resources necessary to ensure that Canada's requirements are met.

Finally, the Free Trade Agreement is important for the long-term viability of the energy sector because it provides, for the first time, a means by which Canada and the United States can settle trade disputes when they arise.

The binational dispute settlement mechanism, and the commitment to prior consultation concerning trade legislation affecting the other country, will ensure that trade between Canada and the United States operates fairly and reasonably. With this arrangement in place we no longer need to talk about mice and elephants. Canadians and Americans will meet as equals.

The people of my constituency and I believe that as long as the rules of the game are followed we can compete with the best in the world. We will still have to work long and hard, because even though the Free Trade Agreement creates an opportunity we must go out there and take advantage of it.

My Province of Alberta is a province of pioneers. Our parents and grandparents settled the land. They passed down to us a solid rural work ethic. We still believe that the good Lord helps those who help themselves, that hard work should be rewarded, and that there is a place in our world for creative and free enterprise.

Albertans are bold and independent. They do not want government to intervene in areas where they can take better care of themselves. We are not afraid of competition. We have met challenges before. We look forward to the challenge of maximizing the benefits of the Free Trade Agreement.

I conclude by saying that the Free Trade Agreement is a golden opportunity not just for Red Deer, not just for Alberta, but for all the regions of Canada. By further opening up and securing access to American markets, the Free Trade Agreement will promote regional development and therefore stronger regions and a stronger Canada.

This agreement will be successful not because it weakens central Canada but because it strengthens the regions. Regions of Canada do not want to rely on hand-outs, nor do we want to remove ourselves somehow from Confederation. We only want a chance to live up to our potential. This agreement will help us do that.

Mr. McGuire: Mr. Chairman, it is an honour for me to rise in my place tonight representing the great riding of Egmont in the House of Commons. Egmont has had many distinguished representatives over the years, including Prime Minister William Lyon Mackenzie King when he first became Prime Minister in 1919, Colonel James Ralston, Minister of War during World War II, and the Hon. J. Watson MacNaught who served as Solicitor General of Canada, to name just a few.

I pledge to my constituents of Egmont that I will represent their views to the best of my ability and in the best tradition of my predecessors. The riding of Egmont in western Prince Edward Island is a district whose wealth is based on agriculture, fishing, and tourism. Egmont is an urban-rural riding whose population is fairly evenly distributed between the urban areas of Summerside, St. Eleanor's, and Wilmot, and the rural area which stretches from St. Eleanor's to the north-western tip of Prince Edward Island.

The riding of Egmont voted decisively against the Government's Free Trade Agreement. This agreement was described to me by a fisherman in my riding as being like an iceberg which is approximately one-tenth above water and approximately nine-tenths below water. Indeed that was and still is an apt description of the Free Trade Agreement.

Because there is no definition of what is a subsidy, because regional development programs are not guaranteed, because there is no assurance that marketing boards will survive this agreement, and because the support programs for our fishermen will likely be discontinued, the iceberg analogy is very applicable. There is far too much that we do not know or understand about this agreement. The Canadian people are not being told and will not be told what is likely to happen to them, except that there will be winners and losers.

The farmers in my riding feel that they will be losers. The fishermen in my riding feel that they will be losers, and the youth and senior citizens feel that they will be losers.

Our forefathers came to this country to escape the harsh rule and greed of the class society in Europe. The Scotsmen came here after it was discovered that sheep were more valuable than people and they were evicted from their ancestral lands and told to fend for themselves. The Irish came here to escape oppression and famine in a country where they were not allowed to own their own land or to raise meat to feed themselves. Other Europeans came here to escape tyranny and war, and in Canada, they joined with the French Canadians to build a different, more caring society for themselves and their children.

They wanted to build a country in which there were no lords of the manor. They wanted a country based on rights and freedoms that they could only dream about in Europe at that time. They came here and built such a nation, a nation in which free and caring people were the basic building blocks and in which greed was never a national characteristic.

There are new lords of the manor who are taking over the direction of this country. The American multinational corporations and the Canadian conglomerates with their insatiable appetite for optimum profit margins and who recognize no national boundaries are now orchestrating our society to suit their own ends.

During the recent election campaign, the large corporations spent millions and millions of dollars on advertising which was designed to influence the people of Canada, to threaten their workers, and to scare them with their doomsday predictions to the extent that their point of view won the day. Now they have a Government that will do their bidding for the next four years.

There were election activities of the most undemocratic sort imaginable. These corporations made a mockery of the Election Expenses Act. Now they will have their way in this country. They are the new lords of the manor.

The small farmers, the small inshore fishermen, senior citizens, and the truck drivers of Egmont, how can these ordinary Canadians hope to compete against the corporate might of Canada and the United States? The Economic Council of Canada predicted that there would be approximately 890 jobs created in Prince Edward Island over the next ten years as a result of the Free Trade Agreement. That is an average of 89 jobs a year.

What will be the price we will have to pay for these 89 jobs per year? How many dairy farmers will go out of business to create these 89 office jobs? How many hog farmers will survive once the subsidies to the industry are eliminated? How many potato farmers will suffer when the President of the United States invokes the Mitchell amendment and limits the importation of Canadian potatoes?

Potatoes are Prince Edward Island's major export. Under GATT, Canada succeeded in lifting import quotas ten years ago. Now we will have import quotas again. The economy of Prince Edward Island could be brutalized if our potato and fish exports are subject to limited entry to the United States market.

What will happen to the rural communities of Prince Edward Island when the farmers and fishermen go out of business? What will happen to the small businesses in these small communities? They will disappear and they will not be replaced. There will be no headlines in The Globe and Mail as there were when the tragedy of the Gillette Company was announced.

No one will notice the creeping devastation of the agricultural sector in Prince Edward Island. Time will pass and no one will notice as one farmer here and another one there falls by the wayside. The rural areas will slowly but surely become a waste land.

The Free Trade Agreement will finish the family farm in Prince Edward Island. That is why Prince Edward Islanders voted against the Tories in the recent election. They chose to believe the four island Liberal candidates and our esteemed Premier, the Hon. Joseph Ghiz, who said that this deal was a bad deal for P.E.I. and was a bad deal for Canada.

Prince Edward Islanders know their history. They know that the Atlantic area suffered economically when it joined Confederation. We joined in with a great experiment called Canada and redirected our trade east-west rather than south and east. As I said, we suffered economically because of this decision. However, over the years, economic opportunity has been more equalized across the nation. Transportation subsidies, regional development programs, and social programs like workers' compensation, the Canada Pension Plan, and the unemployment insurance program have been put in place. These great advances in the redistribution of our national wealth have given all our citizens an opportunity to share in the prosperity of this great nation.

The people in the Atlantic provinces, the people in the North and the people in the West have the gut feeling that we will return to the bad old days of dog eat dog: If one happens to live in an area that is regionally disadvantaged, then tough, one can always move. People in the Atlantic provinces will again be forced to move to the United States to find employment, as they had to do at the turn of the century. This time, Canadians in other parts of the country will find themselves in the same predicament.

In conclusion, I believe that the Government has a responsibility to assure the people of Prince Edward Island, and indeed all the people of Atlantic Canada, that their interests, concerns, and way of life will not be dismissed in the cavalier manner that they were by former civil servant and now corporate executive, Mickey Cohen, when he stated: "Atlantic Canadians you are on your own".

Mr. Taylor: Mr. Chairman, I very much appreciate the opportunity to speak here tonight. I want to state in this my first speech in this magnificent Chamber that I am proud to be a Canadian I am proud to be a New Democrat, but I am even prouder to be a representative of The Battlefords—Meadow Lake, a constituency in northwest Saskatchewan.

I am very happy, also, to be able to make a few remarks on what is probably the most important piece of legislation that has ever been talked about in this Chamber. It is described here on the Order Paper as: "Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America". It is legislation of a considerable number of pages, legislation not unlike the agreement itself.

Before I talk about this legislation, I want to make a few remarks about The Battlefords—Meadow Lake constituency and to thank the voters who gave me the opportunity to be here, the voters who placed their trust and confidence in me to carry their message to this Chamber, and to the other Members of Parliament herein.

The message I was sent here to discuss was one very much against this free trade legislation. In The Battlefords—Meadow Lake constituency the free trade legislation or the free trade deal was very much a single issue. I will speak tonight on behalf of the people who oppose this deal, and I will bring some of opposition to your attention, Madam Chairman, in a moment.

Throughout the riding and throughout the campaign I was told time and time again that the free trade deal was bad for Saskatchewan and bad for the people of Canada. I was told too many times to count that this deal was being sold to an uninformed electorate by a Government without a single guarantee that what our grandparents and parents had worked for, in many cases fought for, would be protected for our future and for our children's future.

Here we go again with new legislation, not much different from that introduced prior to the election. Still, after all of that discussion, argument, and expressed concern, there is no protection or guarantees despite hundreds of words from a very concerned population. Has this Government not listened to anything? Has this Government not listened to the people it claims to represent? Seniors, farmers, wage earners, Indian people, pensioners, small business people, service club representatives, members of church groups, the handicapped, and students in my riding, all Canadians, all intelligent, all concerned that the Government has ignored their concerns about the future of this great country.

The Battlefords—Meadow Lake constituency is an area made up of farmers, city and native people. It is a diverse economy with agriculture being the predominant nature of that constituency. These are very down to earth people, very intelligent, very caring individuals, all of whom have a great deal of concern for their friends, their neighbours, their family, their province, and their country.

Earlier this day the Minister, the Hon. Member for Brampton, talked about what the Government had done for farmers in Canada. I want to mention a couple of things in that regard. First, I want to bring to the attention of the House a letter that I received today from one of my constituents, a fellow who lives in Borden, Saskatchewan, right near the very eastern edge of the constituency of The Battlefords—Meadow Lake. He writes:

Dear Mr. Taylor:

First I would like to congratulate you for winning your seat in Parliament. It is unfortunate in my opinion that the PCs won a majority because I feel that this so-called free trade deal is going to be detrimental to Canada.

This is an ordinary farm person speaking from his heart. I hope, Mr. Chairman, I do not have to listen to this noise. I did not go for supper tonight and get fed up like these people. I am getting fed up here in the House.

My constituent continues:

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I am certainly not against trade with the United States but I feel that this deal may have gone too far.

Members can cheer that because that is my feeling as well.

As a farmer I feel that our marketing boards are in danger because no matter how adequately the PCs claim to defend them, the Americans make no bones about wishing to dismantle them. This I believe began to become apparent in the recent GATT talks.

This is a good letter from one of my constituents. He goes on to say:

However even worse than the danger to certain segments of our economy is the over all danger of associating ourselves so closely with a country that is 10 times our size. We will be swallowed like a cat swallows a mouse.

The election campaign brought to my attention many things to which my friends and colleagues from the Alberta area should pay some attention. The leader of my party in Saskatchewan spent a lot of time in my constituency and spoke to many different groups. One of the stories he was relating to the people in my constituency referred to Alberta farmers, Alberta ranchers. This is the story: One rancher has 100 head of cattle on his ranch and another rancher has 10 head of cattle. The farmer with 100 head of cattle leans over the fence and says to his neighbour with 10 head of cattle: "Why don't we take down this fence and let our cattle share all this land?" I do not think there is a single Alberta rancher, if he had 10 head of cattle, that would tear down that fence and allow his neighbour with 100 head of cattle to go through his pasture and let the cows eat up all the grass that was there for his cattle. That is what this free trade is about. That is the sort of thing Americans are asking Canadians, with the 10 head of cattle, to do.

I would like to read some more from my constituent's letter. He writes:

I wish this free trade deal could be stopped. I don't think that it can, but at least I believe that it is going to have to be watched very closely to protect ourselves as Canadians.

Thank you for attention and good luck in your deliberations in Ottawa.

This letter comes from a person who I have never met before. It arrived in my mail today. It gives me the courage and stamina to stay here and talk to my friends across the way.

I also want to bring to the attention of the House an article that appeared in the newspaper this morning. Many Members will have read it already. It deals with a Canadian study that says that Canada lags far behind other countries in the export of items such as bread, cookies, and beer. This study was done by the Grains 2000 group. I do not know too much about it, but I believe that as long as we have free trade we will never be able to develop and continue those processing industries which use agricultural products to improve our agricultural industry and exports of agricultural products in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Waddell: Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order. I thought there was a tradition in this House that new members were given the courtesy of the House to complete their speeches. I would ask Hon. Members, including Ministers, to respect that tradition.

Mr. Taylor: I appreciate the interjection of my colleague, Mr. Chairman, unlike the interjection of Members opposite. I want to get back to the comments made this morning, because they were made in the context of this debate by the Member from Brampton who said that his Party had done so much for agriculture over the last four years.

First, our farm community, according to the 1986 census, is getting older, farms are getting bigger, and land is not worth as much as it was in 1984. Quite a number of things should be brought to the attention of this House, particularly as we look at the Province of Saskatchewan. We are talking about an increase of 35 per cent just in the last year in farm bankruptcies in the Province of Saskatchewan, the highest percentage in the Canadian context. We have farm income that although it is higher than ever is supported mostly by government payments because the price that is paid for the commodities on the international market, not supported by this Government, is down. The total net income of farmers right across the country has declined. In Saskatchewan it is some 47 per cent over the last few years. These things indicate that the farming sector, particularly in Saskatchewan, is not supported by this Government.

Between May 1987 and May 1988 the Canadian farm sector lost 24,000 jobs on the Prairies alone. The recent drought, the worst since the 1930s, scorched millions of acres of crop land and cattle range. This Government in the election campaign promised a drought relief program for the drought stricken farmers of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Alberta. They forgot to talk to their partners in cost sharing of this program, the provinces, and now the provinces are backing out and the program is in jeopardy. It did not consult with provincial counterparts before making a cost-shared promise during the election campaign.

• (2000)

The total farm debt in Canada has now reached a staggering $22 billion. The farming situation is so bad that most farmers now earn more off-farm income than on-farm income. One-third of all farm income is made from off-farm jobs as a consequence of the poor income situation on the farm.

On the other hand the New Democratic Party has provided a tremendous amount of encouragement to the farmers in Saskatchewan. That was evidenced by the recent election campaign. Certainly, the people of Saskatchewan indicated that the New Democratic Party was more trustworthy than the Government in place.

The New Democratic Party did support agriculture, and we do support the farm groups that oppose the free trade deal that we are discussing in this legislation.

Mr. McDermid: You do not support the Cattlemen's Association.

Mr. Taylor: The family farm stabilization program that the New Democratic Party discussed during the election campaign is a program to assure farmers of a basic income for their production. It was a program designed to take the place of the current haphazard and ad hoc programs of the Government. This program ties the price to the U.S. target price so that the Canadian farmer is getting the same benefit on the world and international market as American counterparts, those same American counterparts whose organizations are threatening to destroy the marketing system that is selling that product on the international market.

According to an article in October the United States Wheat Board talked about the U.S. Government desiring to make the elimination of the Canadian Wheat Board one of its demands in the negotiations on agricultural reform.

The New Democratic Party also calls for a revamping of the Farm Credit Corporation, an overhaul that makes it a true farmers' bank and not a lending institution of last resort, as the Government has set it up. We also talked about tax fairness for farmers to ensure the restoration of five year block averaging in recognition of fluctuating incomes on the farms.

We were also talking about funding to be provided for farm water, soil conservation research, and financial assistance for farmers to explore new conservation techniques or retire farmland for conservation purposes. A major problem in the near future will be the depletion of the land in western Canada. That land which supports and nurtures the economy of western Canada is slowly being depleted. Something has to be done in conservation terms in order to protect it.

The free trade deal has been criticized in numerous editorials in western Canadian newspapers, by western Canadian editorial writers, and by people who have been heavily involved in the agriculture sector.

Mr. Andre: The Edmonton Journal was the only western newspaper.

Mr. Taylor: I have quite a few here and I am prepared to read every one, if the House will indulge me. For example, the Canadian Wheat Board has an elected advisory committee. It is meant to provide advice to the Canadian Wheat Board to help its operations. That committee met and clearly discussed the implications of the Free Trade Agreement and the legislation on agriculture and on the Wheat Board. That committee strongly recommended that the Government not proceed with the agriculture sections of the free trade legislation, and that the Canadian Wheat Board was definitely in jeopardy as a result of the provisions included in this legislation. As a result, we strongly urge that changes be made in that one context alone.

The Saskatchewan Wheat Board delegates put forward a motion to support the proposed Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement, but in August withdrew that support because they had no assurances from the Government that the integrity of the Wheat Board as a sole marketing agent for Canadian wheat, oats, and barley would be protected.

We have lost the two-price system of wheat as a result of the deal. We have lost the freight rate on canola moving West. One plant has been lost in the City of Lloydminster. A canola crushing plant in the City of Lloydminster has announced that it will be closing. That is a direct result of the free trade deal. We in western Canada are finding that the implications of this deal on agriculture and on our economy are too great to support.

I urge that the House think strongly about the implications of this legislation, and about the implications of what it means to the future of the strongest economy that we have in western Canada. I urge Members to defeat the Bill in front of us. Let us return to the drawing board and put together some reasonable alternatives to trade fairly with the United States.

Mr. Soetens: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to have the opportunity to address the House. I wish to thank the people of the riding of Ontario who have given me the honour and privilege of being here to represent them, particularly on two points. First, they have sent me here to follow along on the fine tradition of the former Member for Ontario, Mr. Scott Fennell, the Government Whip. Now that I am here, I have often thought that the Government Whip is using the whip on the wrong side of the House. Perhaps in the future we can change that pattern.

Second, and the most important the reason I am excited about being here is that the people of the riding of Ontario granted me enough support that I can say that I stand here with support that almost equalled in total the vote received by the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, and the Right Hon. Member for Oshawa, combined.

Mr. McDermid: You have a mandate.

Mr. Soetens: The riding of Ontario contains approximately 150,000 people. It is a very exciting riding. I would like to make sure that Members of the House are aware of the community I represent. There are three municipalities, Whitby, Ajax, and Pickering. Each is similar in size with approximately 50,000 population. It is a very young riding. There are many first-time home buyers. The population has doubled in the last seven years. Undoubtedly, with the growth that is taking place it will continue to grow and double in roughly seven to ten years.

It has a diverse economy, which is functioning very well, perhaps because of the economic policies established by the Government of the last four years. It is functioning so well that we are facing a shortage of serviced industrial land in the riding.

For example, unemployment is at such a low level that there are numerous jobs advertised for skilled and unskilled employees available in the riding of Ontario. Over the last year unemployment dropped to such a level that on several occasions it was not possible to record the level of activity.

Residential construction in the riding is at record levels with more than 4,000 housing starts per year during the last three years, and a projected similar ratio for the next two or three.

Housing is expensive, with prices starting at $130,000 for a 1,000 square foot home on a 30 by 100 foot lot.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Because of the number of people moving into the riding, there is tremendous upward pressure on house prices.

There is tremendous activity in the riding of Ontario in the commercial and industrial sectors, with both large plants and industries expanding. Industrial/commercial buildings of 4,000 to 40,000 and up to 400,000 square feet are being constructed. It is an exciting area in which to live, and an exciting area to represent here in Parliament.

There were numerous issues debated in the last election campaign. In fact, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra in his opening comments raised a couple of those issues and I should like to take a couple of moments to deal with them now.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, at page 122 of Hansard, is reported as having said:

We are granting American industry what is called under the agreement national treatment—national treatment in Canada for American institutions and American citizens, national treatment in goods and services and investments.

He went on to say:

That means Americans will be treated the same as Canadians when those Americans operate in Canada.

I do not know what is wrong with that. I would merely say: Thank goodness we didn't elect a Liberal Government, given the way past Liberal Governments have treated the business community. In the light of that record, Americans wouldn't want to be treated in the way in which Canadian industry was treated.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra went on to pose the question: What happens to our bright Canadian citizens, those who establish an industry, those who have incentives, those who have ideas and create an industry that is worth $10 million?

Yes, such an industry might be sold to an American firm. But, the difference is that, under a Progressive Conservative Government, that $10 million would probably be reinvested in Canada to create even more jobs. While the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition doesn't appear to like that idea, I can tell you that it would be just great for Canada.

The election campaign did result in the return of a Progressive Conservative majority Government. In the riding of Ontario, the campaign was waged on several issues.

Many of the Liberal and NDP Members of this House have said that they were elected on the basis of their opposition to free trade. I can tell you that the people of the riding of Ontario voted for fiscal responsibility, for leadership, for environmental policies, for the local candidate, for free trade, and other issues. More important, the people of the riding of Ontario voted for a future; they voted for a vision. It is because of that vote, and my personal convictions, that I rise today in support of the Bill to implement the Free Trade Agreement.

In the riding of Ontario, the impact of our currently operating trade agreement is evident everywhere. There are numerous large and small business reaping the benefits of the Auto Pact. And now with the FTA, all businesses will have the same opportunity—but not just in the riding of Ontario, and not just in the Province of Ontario, but in all of Canada.

In Ajax-Pickering, we have the Ajax-Pickering Board of Trade, representing in excess of 250 businesses, most of which are small and independently owned, and all of which have come out solidly in support of the Free Trade Agreement. Throughout my riding there are numerous businesses from many areas of endeavour which have taken a very public position in support of free trade.

To give Hon. Members an idea of the diversity of the industries operating in the riding of Ontario that support the Free Trade Agreement, let me provide you with a brief listing: plastic injection moulding companies; tool and die companies; paint manufacturers; chemical manufacturers; pharmaceutical manufacturers; steel companies, both primary producers and secondary fabricators; furniture manufacturers; polymer-resin companies; telecommunications antenna manufacturers; high frequency radio communications manufacturers; aircraft parts manufacturers; textile dyers and finishers; engineering firms that specialize in road and bridge construction; laboratory research equipment service companies; biotechnology engineering firms; printers; construction companies; lamp and lighting manufacturers; automotive manufacturers; automotive parts manufacturers; and home builders.

The foregoing list represents only a few of the many industries in the riding of Ontario which have publicly come out in support of the Free Trade Agreement. Suffice to say that the vast majority of the companies in the riding of Ontario, companies employing 2, or 20, or 200, or 2,000 people, and collectively employing over 20,000 people, support the FTA.

In my previous employment, I had occasion to travel throughout the states of Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Louisiana, and the Carolinas—all of those states about which the opposition Members in this place seem to be concerned. I have also had occasion to travel throughout Virginia, New York, Connecticut, Pennsylvania, and other states of the United States. I have travelled throughout all of those states on business, selling goods produced by Canadian manufacturers, and I was able to do so successfully.

I have no hesitation in saying that we can compete successfully against U.S. manufacturers. There is nothing that the Americans have that we cannot deal with.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Soetens: While the preceding is sufficient reason for me to support the Free Trade Agreement, I also support it for what it can do for the rest of Canada. The riding of Ontario is but one of 295 ridings in Canada, just as the Province of Ontario is only one of 12 main parts of Canada when one includes the Territories.

When my parents brought the Soetens family to Canada from Holland, we started out in Nova Scotia. That was some 34, 35 years ago. It did not take very long for my parents to discover that there were no jobs available in Nova Scotia in my father's field of endeavour, in his area of expertise. As a result, we packed our bags and moved to Ontario. That was 33 years ago.

It is that very tragedy of Canada that causes me to support the Free Trade Agreement. Today, many young men and women who wish to further their careers—or, in many instances, start their careers—are moving from the West or from the East to Ontario, leaving their homes, their families and their friends behind. Government support programs, many supported by the vibrant economy of the Province of Ontario, have not stopped that flow.

With eight of the ten provincial Premiers supporting this deal, with their collective hope that it will encourage more jobs at home, I am absolutely convinced that the old ways are simply not good enough any longer. The Canadian fabric and family are under great stress and strain, and the Free Trade Agreement will provide some relief. More important, it provides a future.

I should like to conclude by quoting the words of the Hon. Member from the riding adjacent to mine, the riding of Oshawa. I think it apropos the discussion we are having in this place. This is a quote from Hansard, and I direct it to the Members in opposition:

You have sat too long here for any good you have been doing. Depart, I say, and let us have done with you. In the name of God, go.

I invite Hon. Members to vote for this Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Mr. Boudria: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased this evening to have the opportunity to speak on the Free Trade Agreement. I want to give this Government a final opportunity to change its mind, to repent and spare the people of Canada—

An Hon. Member: Let's vote now and find out.

Mr. Boudria: It is not too late. There is still time for this Government to do the right thing.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: Let me try to convince the Members opposite of the merit of changing their minds. I will start by reading to them a statement made by a very famous Canadian, as follows:

This country could not survive with a policy of unfettered free trade. I'm all in favour of eliminating unfair protectionism where it exists. This is a separate country. We'd be swamped. We have in many ways a branch-plant economy, in many ways, in certain important sectors.

The words of the Right Hon. Prime Minister as reported in The Globe and Mail of June 1, 1983, at the time that he was Leader of the Opposition.

An Hon. Member: What a change of heart.

Mr. Boudria: I quote again:

I've never used the words "free trade". I don't think any of your colleagues have heard me ever use that.

Once again the words of the Right Hon. Prime Minister as quoted in The Toronto Star of November 28, 1985.

● (2020)

It is quite evident to most of us on this side of the House, and if we say it long enough it will be evident to government Members as well, that the Government tried to fool the Canadian people in getting this deal approved. Some people across the way may say that is only a partisan remark. I know you would not think that, Mr. Chairman, you are far too objective and non-partisan so you would understand the following quote from a government document which said: "Benign neglect from a majority of Canadians may be the realistic outcome of a well executed communications program. The best strategy for the Government is to adopt a low profile approach to the general public".

In other words, what the Tories were telling each other in this secret document I am quoting from is that we will hide the information, feed them just a little bit of propaganda, hope they keep quiet, and we will get the free trade deal through. That was the Tory plan. Because of the vigilance of my colleagues on this side of the House the strategy did not work.

Mr. Charest: Is there a recount going on?

Mr. Boudria: I want to read to you from a press release of July 26, 1984.

Mr. Charest: That was the second last election, Don.

Mr. Boudria: Wait a minute.

Mr. Charest: You are one election late.

Mr. Boudria: I tell the Hon. Minister it is important because this statement was made—

Mr. Charest: In Sherbrooke.

Mr. Boudria: Yes, exactly, in Sherbrooke, Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Thank you. I am glad to have such applause from the Tories.

Mr. McDermid: Just ignore it and keep going.

Mr. Boudria: I will read this document slowly for the Tories: "The PC objectives in the textile and apparel industries are to ensure the short-term stability of the industry through fair and balanced trade measures and, in the long term, to facilitate adjustments by supporting measures that promote and reinforce the strength of the industry". It says point number one is fair trade but not free trade.

Mr. Charest: What was it about?

Mr. Boudria: The Minister will surely understand that. I am sure he would. It was released in his own riding.

Mr. Charest: What was it about?

Mr. Boudria: What happened in between—

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Charest: It was about the textile policy.

Mr. Boudria: That is what I just read, yes. I know I read it kind of quick, but—

Mr. McDermid: And he has been elected twice since then.

Mr. Boudria: I am sure the Hon. Minister would have picked that up, that it was about the textile industry.

Mr. Charest: Yes, because they support us.

Mr. Boudria: The Government said fair trade but not free trade. We would be swamped, said the Prime Minister.

Mr. Charest: There is no free trade in textiles.

Mr. Boudria: Let me read to you another document and see if the Conservative Members recognize this one.

The Chairman: The Minister of State on a point of order.

The Deputy Chairman: The Minister of State for Youth and Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Charest) on a point of order.

Mr. Charest: A point of order, Mr. Chairman. I will not intervene at length in the remarks of my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria). Presumably this document was published or released in July 1984 during the previous election campaign. It relates to an issue which is of great interest to the residents of the riding of Sherbrooke, namely the textile, clothing and footwear industry. I would have thought the Hon. Member would make that clear. But since we are talking about the campaign of 1984, I take this opportunity to set the record straight concerning his statement, and I can tell you right now that the Sherbrooke textile industry supported the Government in the 1988 election, as did all textile workers who denounced the Liberals—

[English]

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, that was not a point of order. It was not even a good point.

Let me continue reading from these important documents. Let us see if the Conservative Members recognize this one: "It would render Canada a field for American capital into which it would enter as freely for the prosecution of public works and private enterprise as into any of the present states. It would equalize the value of real estate on both sides of the boundary, thereby probably doubling at once the entire present value of property in Canada. Whilst giving stability to our institutions and introducing prosperity, it would raise up public, corporate and private credit. It would increase our commerce, both with the U.S. and foreign countries, and would necessarily diminish to any great extent our intercourse with Great Britain into which our products would for the most part enter on the same terms as at the present. It would render our rivers and canals as highways for immigration to and export from the West and to incalculable benefits for our country".

Mr. Charest: Would you repeat the last phrase?

Mr. Boudria: "It would also introduce manufacturers into Canada as rapidly as they have been introduced into the northern states".

Mr. Charest: He can read.

Mr. Boudria: Pardon me?

Mr. Charest: I said you can read.

Mr. Boudria: I know Members across the way are very curious about this document which speaks so highly about how a certain measure would increase trade between Canada and the U.S. Perhaps I should tell them what I have been reading. I have been reading to Conservative Members the Annexation Manifesto of 1849. That really describes well the kind of attitude we see across the way now that existed in 1849.

Mr. Charest: Really up to date in your research. We thought you were only one election late, looks like you are a century and a half late.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, the more things change, the more they remain the same!

[English]

I want to talk about the effects of this free trade deal. We have heard about the closure of the Gillette plant on November 24, at a cost of 590 jobs. We have heard about the closure of the Ortho plant on November 25, 16 jobs lost. There is the closure of the PPG Canada Incorporated plant on November 26, 139 jobs lost. Then there is the closure of British Footwear on November 28, 50 jobs lost. The closure of Northern Telecom on December 7, 870 jobs lost. Those are all closures since the Government was re-elected on November 21.

Mr. Charest: What about the openings?

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Boudria: The Minister will claim they are all mere coincidences.

Mr. Charest: What about the openings?

Mr. Boudria: This is all coincidence that they are shutting down and moving to the U.S. in preparation for free trade. Mere coincidence, say the Tories.

Mr. Charest: Point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell, in the name of logic, if he is going to attribute loss of jobs to the FTA, would also attribute to the FTA all the jobs created since November 21?

The Chairman: The Chair thinks that is a matter of debate.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I am looking forward to the Minister's speech so we can interrupt him as frequently as possible. I hope my colleagues will give him the kind of reciprocal treatment he so richly deserves.

I want to talk about the Prime Minister's trade deal and its effect on Canadian farmers. As my distinguished colleague just pointed out very astutely, it will have disastrous effects on Canadian agriculture.

Some Hon. Members: Nonsense!

Mr. Boudria: The Tories say "nonsense".

Mr. Andre: It is going to cause drought and plague.

Mr. Boudria: We know the deal is bad for Canadian agriculture. Members across the way are saying there is nothing wrong with the deal. I say to them: If there is nothing wrong with the deal, then why on July 30, 1988, did the Canadian Federation of Agriculture send a letter to all Hon. Members saying that they have grave reservations about Bill C-130? Why did they say they want to see it amended before it is passed in the House? They rejected it in its present form. That Bill was identical to the one moved earlier last week, Bill C-2. This letter dated July 30 was sent to us by the National Council of the Canadian Federation of Agriculture. I say to Members across the way: If the deal is so good for agriculture, why is it that an umbrella organization representing most if not all of the agricultural producers in Canada is against the deal?

Mr. McDermid: They are not.

Mr. Charest: Why did the farmers vote for us?

Mr. Boudria: The Minister asks why the farmers voted for the Government. I cannot complain personally about the vote of farmers in my riding because I was elected with 74 per cent of the vote. I think I have a mandate to speak on their behalf. The Conservatives say that under this deal we have guaranteed access to U.S. markets.

• (2030)

Mr. Charest: No, it was not.

Mr. Boudria: Oh, yes, it was said in the House in speeches yesterday. It has been said repeatedly in the House of Commons that we have this guaranteed access to the U.S. markets and that from now on things are going to be great.

Mr. Charest: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. In the name of accuracy I think that it would only be fair, if the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell is making allegations about things that were apparently said by some Members on this side of the House, that he cite what was said. I challenge him now right here to get up to cite my words. I would like him to read me my words which I allegedly said in this House or elsewhere.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to abuse the rules of the House. I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that Members should not be rising in their places pretending to raise points of order. I say to the Minister that if he cannot play within the rules of this place, why does he not go outside and talk to someone, if anyone is willing to listen to the stupidities he has to say?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Boudria: I was quoting a document—or I was attempting to—when his arrogance interrupted me. I want to say to the Minister—actually, I want to say this to other Members because they can probably understand it while he cannot.

The statement of administrative action of the President of the United States which was tabled with the United States Congress states under Article 1902 that each party retains the right to apply its national anti-dumping and countervailing duty laws to goods of the other party, and also reserves the right to amend those laws. The rights of amendment to the anti-dumping and countervailing duty laws with respect to goods of the other party is subject to requirements to notify, consult and so on. In other words, not only can the United States still apply countervailing duties, and any other protective measure it wants, against Canada, it can even make new countervailing duty laws that it does not have now and apply them.

Some Hon. Members: So can we.

Mr. Boudria: That is an interesting point. Members opposite say: "So can we".

One country is 10 times the size of the other. Members across the way are saying that they want to penetrate the large U.S. market in order to gain access to it; we want that guarantee because it will be good for our country.

[Translation]

Mr. Fontaine: On a point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Lévis on a point of order.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Chairman, I heard the Hon. Member compare the two populations—Americans and Canadians—but he forgot to point out that now we have a tribunal to settle disputes and at least two Canadians and two Americans sit on that tribunal, so it does restore some balance between the two states. Before there were two Americans who could challenge the allegations made by Canadians. My colleague ought to mention that.

Mr. Boudria: A point of order, Mr. Chairman.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell on a point of order.

[English]

Mr. Boudria: I did not hear a word that he said, but that does not matter anyway.

I want to read an article from the Toronto Star of August 2. It is entitled: "More trade surprises". With regard to President Reagan it states in part: "Nor did he forget those Canadian farmers who may take solace in the trade exemption for marketing boards. Reagan warned that as soon as the deal is in place the U.S. plans to go after Canadian import restrictions on poultry and eggs".

For farmers under supply-management, it is quite clear that the Government of the United States intends to damage those structures that we have now even further than they are already damaged under the Prime Minister's trade deal. Under this trade deal they are damaged a number of ways.

First, Article 710 states that supply-management is protected. On the surface that may be convincing to some. However, Article 703, which precedes of course Article 710, states:

In order to facilitate trade in agricultural goods, the Parties shall work together to improve access to each other's markets through the elimination or reduction of import barriers.

It could be interpreted by courts of law in the future that this article is in direct contradiction to Article 710. How will it be interpreted in the future? I know that some of the legal whiz-kids across the way are saying: "We have nothing to fear". But I am not convinced at all.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, first of all, we know that most of the farming in my riding is subject to quotas—dairy farming. Now I know that farm issues like milk production might not interest the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce), but for those here who are interested in it, I am convinced that the dairy industry is threatened by this Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that this Agreement threatens the agricultural sector.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Chairman, point of order.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) on a point of order.

Mr. Fontaine: Mr. Chairman, I was on the Legislative Committee that heard representations from the farming community on free trade, when the Hon. Member did not come last summer. They came to testify in favour of free trade; the Coopérative laitière du Québec is in favour of free trade; the red-meat producers of Canada are in favour of free trade; the grain growers are in favour of free trade. Did no French-speaking Quebecers come to this Committee last year, Mr. Chairman?

The Chairman: Debate. The Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria).

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, you are very patient with those Conservatives. They do not deserve all that patience, and I congratulate you.

First, the Hon. Member opposite, who came to debate free trade in my riding, knows very well that the farmers of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell at a public debate in which he participated in our riding were opposed to the Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Boudria: "Oh, oh!" say the Hon. Members on that side of the House. A fact that the Hon. Member for Lévis (Mr. Fontaine) across the way forgot!

Finally, Mr. Chairman, as I was saying before I was interrupted by the Conservative Members opposite, the Agreement threatens the dairy sector and milk production in the riding of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell and elsewhere in Canada. First, there is the whole subject of ice cream: 4.5 million hectolitres of milk are used to make it.

I see that the the Minister of State for Agriculture (Mr. Blais) has just arrived.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Chairman, I am happy, extremely happy, to see that the Minister has arrived to lend an ear so that he may later convince his Conservative colleagues of the error of their ways. I see that the arrogance born of power has already overtaken the Minister of State for Agriculture. May I remind him that in a democracy, all positions, even that of Minister of State for Agriculture, are temporary. Time will tell what is to become of the Minister of State for Agriculture.

In closing, Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask my colleagues opposite one last time to think. I know that they are not often called upon to do so and that thinking is hard for them, but I am sure they can learn. With practice, even a Conservative can learn to think.

I ask the Members opposite to think. Mr. Chairman, there is still time for them to withdraw this bill, forget the whole thing and come to their senses. How about it, Mr. Chairman?

• (2040)

The Chairman: On a point of Order, I give the floor to the Minister of State for Youth and Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mr. Charest).

Hon. Jean Charest (Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

I would not want this speech to go by and at the end, hear the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) refer to an alleged arrogance on this side of the House, when at the end, only a few days before the electoral campaign got under way—

The Chairman: Order! I do not consider that to be a point of order. We shall now continue the debate with the Hon. Member for Wild Rose (Mrs. Feltham).

[English]

Ms. Feltham: Mr. Chairman, as a new Member in a riding in Alberta, it gives me great pleasure that my first speech in Parliament will address the important issue of free trade. I would also like to take this opportunity to again thank the people of Wild Rose for placing their faith in me and for electing another Conservative to the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Feltham: The constituency of Wild Rose is appropriately named. The shrub is a hardy flower that grows extensively across the prairies and the foothills of the Canadian Rockies. It flourishes in some of the most adverse conditions, just as the people of Wild Rose have managed to prosper despite the economic ups and downs of the past 15 years.

In the western part of this large riding, the people of Banff, Lake Louise and Canmore have developed a world class tourist centre that attracts not only those who come to view the magnificent physical setting, but also those who come to partake of the varied cultural activities of the Banff School of Fine Arts.

The towns of Bowden, Olds and Didsbury in the north part of the riding service a major grain producing area. In Olds, there is an agriculture college that focuses on teaching young people how to become better farmers and how to compete in a very competitive world.

The eastern part of the sprawling riding contains the wide open ranges necessary for cattle and livestock production, with Strathmore being the largest centre east of Calgary.

Airdrie is a city of 11,000 people and is the central point of our constituency. It is a growing city, but well-planned and forward-looking. Both Airdrie in the north and Cochrane to the west are within 10 miles of Calgary. Yet they could not be called bedroom communities since they not only service the rural agricultural community, but they are also home to the many executives and professionals involved in the petroleum industry. The whole riding, for that matter, has a stake in the petroleum industry, as attested to by the hundreds of oil pumpers covering the landscape.

The people in my riding have always been Conservative when it comes to politics, but when it comes to business, they are always eager to try new ideas. They are entrepreneurs. They are business people.

When given a choice on November 21, the people of Wild Rose voted "Yes" to free trade. They know that ratification of the agreement means they can look forward to a booming economy, to challenge the economic greatness of the United States and to be exceptional in their own fields, whether it is agriculture, tourism, or business. The people of Alberta still have that pioneer spirit, but they do have long memories. They remember that a Liberal Government crippled a booming oil industry with the National Energy Program. They remember the PGRT. They remember the years when the Liberal Government forgot the western farmer.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Feltham: Albertans know how to avoid a boom or bust economy in the future. It is to diversify. We must stabilize our economy. We must be less dependent on an economy that is cyclical in nature, where world prices for petroleum and agricultural products fluctuate while costs remain high. We must establish stability. We must diversify. To diversify, we need markets for our products. That market is just south of our border. The Free Trade Agreement will open that border to Alberta and we will take advantage of it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Feltham: The removal of the tariff walls will allow Alberta industries to become important on both the national scene and the international scene. Businessmen know that the Free Trade Agreement will expand opportunities for them to open new markets in the United States. The young people of our country can now look forward to a possible future in business when this agreement is ratified. Would anyone deny that future for our youth? The opposition has said that we cannot compete in the U.S., but we do compete, and we will continue to compete. Those whose primary market is the American market will find that their expansion potential will increase.

Businessmen trying to do business in the United States have had to cope with differing technical standards and a myriad set of requirements for licensing and registration. This has slowed their expansion, but already, because of the Free Trade Agreement, talks have begun to make it an easier operation to expand into the American market.

With expansion potential increased, investors' confidence will make it easier for small businessmen to secure investment funds for modernization and for new ventures.

With expansion potential, increased industrial confidence will make it easier for small businessmen to secure investment funds for modernization and new ventures. Entrepreneurial initiative will take over and Alberta small businessmen will be able to achieve their full potential.

The Alberta agricultural sector will have access to the fastest growing market in the world. Removal of U.S. tariffs on red meats will mean that Alberta beef will be more competitive in the U.S. market. Cattle producers know what is good for them. Support for free trade is strong from Alberta cattlemen. They understand the importance of free trade to their sector of the economy. It is interesting to note that for the past 100 years The Cattlemen's Association has been promoting free trade.

For years people in the agriculture sector have had to put up with a time consuming and costly procedure to protect themselves in trade disputes. A settlement process that will be efficient and fast is what farmers have needed and will now get.

For the first time there will be a process for settling trade disputes and a means to protect our farm exports from annoyances like the countervailing duties that the U.S. throws up to protect their own farm and manufactured products.

Just imagine what the removal of trade barriers will mean to those who want to enter the agri-food industry. They will find that the removal of tariffs on packaging materials, food ingredients and machinery will encourage this sector to expand. The additional jobs that will be created and the additional profits to be made will encourage growth and productivity.

Now let us think about the depressed petroleum industry. Presently there are such high duties on petrochemical by-products that some cannot compete in the U.S. market. An 18 per cent U.S. duty on Canadian methanol and 12.5 per cent on polyethylene make it difficult to compete and to give impetus to expand our present capacity and to process our raw products in Canada, and to increase the profitability of existing exports. The U.S. market will be opened to a whole range of oil derived products made in Alberta.

Investment prospects for additional facilities needed to increase production in the petrochemical industries will mean a more secure future for the petrochemical sector, a future for our young people. We will no longer just pump our oil and ship it elsewhere, we will build plants, we will create jobs, we will ship quality finished goods at competitive prices to the markets in the south.

Albertans know what they want. They want to maintain their right to ownership, their right to levy royalties and their right to determine the rate of production. This is important to Albertans. With the Free Trade Agreement, these rights are guaranteed.

Today, in an article in The Ottawa Citizen the President of Novacor Chemicals of Calgary, one of Alberta's natural gas producers, states that his company stands to save $30 million in tariffs. What will he do with those savings? It has already been decided. He will open a third ethylene plant. This means more jobs, in fact 200 permanent positions. Without free trade this project could not have gone forward. Competition does not phase him. His company is willing to compete with the U.S. producers.

Expansion in all areas of the economy will mean a broader based economy, with more jobs going to all Canadians. Under the Free Trade Agreement the Canadian Government can continue to provide funds for economic growth and development, if the objective is to eliminate social, economic and industrial disadvantages.

Government structures like the Western Diversification Office can still provide creative assistance to develop markets in areas where Albertans may have a competitive edge. Tariff-free access to the U.S. market can only enhance export opportunities for the Alberta petrochemical and livestock industries. Small businessmen will be able to achieve their full potential and our mining operators will have access to a larger market.

Albertans recognized these opportunities when they voted for free trade. That is why I am here today. Albertans have already said yes and I now say yes to this very important agreement.

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Chairman, this is my first opportunity to speak in the House and thank my constituents back home in Okanagan—Shuswap for placing their confidence in me as their representative here in Ottawa. I want to send my best wishes for a very joyous holiday season to those at home who are viewing tonight.

I was sent to Ottawa for a very specific reason. It was to provide a voice of concern from the West, from British Columbia in particular and the Okanagan—Shuswap area. It is a voice of concern that would stand up and be counted with regard to the trade deal that is facing us today.

I am delighted to take my stand here tonight and oppose the implementation of Bill C-2 and oppose this trade deal because it is not a deal on free trade. It is not even fair trade. It is a sell-out of Canada's resources. It is a sell-out of Canada's future.

Let me go into a brief history of this trade deal. It is not the first time that the subject of free trade has been before the Chamber. I want to quote some voices of history who have talked on this most important topic before:

The American title, by right of our manifest destiny, is to overspread and possess the whole of this continent which providence hath provided us. Texas is secure and so now, who is our next customer? Shall it be California or shall it be Canada?

Those were the words of John O'Sullivan who, in 1891, set the stage for the first debate on free trade. As we all know, that debate ended when Sir John A. Macdonald won a Canadian election on this very issue and turned back the American free traders at the 49th parallel. Macdonald said that free trade with the U.S. would inevitably lead to annexation and asked how Canada could keep its political independence when it had thrown away its economic independence.

We all have a feeling for history in this House. As we all know, the trade issue arose again in 1911 when the Laurier Government negotiated a free trade deal with President Taft to reduce tariffs on a broad range of natural products and manufactured items. The agreement sailed through the U.S. House of Representatives, supported by the Speaker of the Assembly who said at that time:

I am for it, this reciprocity agreement, because I hope to see the day when the American flag will float over every square foot of British North America clear to the North Pole.

Former Liberal Leader Edward Blake broke with the Laurier Government over that issue and stated that free trade was the same as commercial union and would lead to political union with the United States.

Once again the issue was raised and fought, and this time, for those Hon. Members who are so verbose on the other side of the House, the issue—

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. A new Member of the House is trying to deliver his maiden address. We are having trouble with the clocks and that is what the uproar is about. I wonder if there is something that can be done to stop the clocks from running the way they are in order to give the Hon. Member a chance to deliver his maiden address.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I rise on the same point of order. I appreciate the generosity of my hon. friend for drawing our attention to the problem with the clocks. Having watched the clocks and noticing how quickly their hands are moving, I would say that if we were to wait for another 15 minutes, it would be time for the next general election. I think we should hold off for awhile.

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Chairman, may I say that I appreciate the comments of my colleague from the other side of the House. It does get a trifle difficult with the uproar that is going on, but we try to do our best.

As I was saying regarding the history of free trade debates in Canada throughout the last 100 years, as it was in 1911 it remains today the most important issue that has ever faced the Canadian people. Its outcome will unalterably define the future of this land.

This trade deal is about more than cheaper widgets. It goes much further than a simple reduction in tariff barriers. If it were simply about a reduction of tariff barriers alone, I do not think we would have too much problem with it.

However, in the words of U.S. President Reagan, this deal is a new economic constitution for North America. The Macdonald Commission calls it a leap of faith. The Concerned Citizens for Free Trade call it an attack on the very survival of Canada as a nation. The prophets of free trade promise long-term prosperity and economic growth. Critics warn that Canada in an integrated economy will suffer a period of uneven expansion followed by long-term economic decline.

U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter summed in up best when he said:

The Canadians don't understand what they have signed. In 20 years they'll be sucked into the U.S. economy.

How can I be more explicit? Those are not my words but the words of the U.S. Trade Representative.

Let us look at what happened in the Maritimes. In the 1860s, Maritimes businessmen who supported the concept of an integrated economy made a gamble in an attempt to expand profits by harmonizing with a larger market. The collapse of the mass consumer industry in the Maritimes followed, most Maritime businesses failed and almost all the workers were thrown out of their jobs. Branch plants were closed as they became controlled by new, Montreal based corporations.

As a result, the Maritime Provinces were thrown back on their remaining resource industries and a huge wave of emigration and destabilization followed. As Canada prepares to enter a similar economic union with the United States today, it is important and imperative to keep in mind the earlier fate of provinces like Nova Scotia and to remember that the Bank of Nova Scotia does not live there any more.

The Prime Minister has said that free trade will provide lower tariffs and market opportunities. He said that it will protect Canada against future U.S. protectionist measures. He said that it will give Canadian industries increased opportunities to bid on U.S. government projects. These were the Prime Minister's three principal reasons for going into the free trade deal, so let us have a look at these reasons.

The first reason was to secure access. Tariffs will be reduced, but let us recall that 80 per cent of goods already come across the U.S.-Canada border tariff-free. Reductions will only apply to a portion of the remaining 20 per cent. The 15 per cent duty on Canadian softwoods and the remaining tariff on shakes will still apply, so what benefit is it to the lumber industry? Tariff reductions essentially pale beside what could be negotiated through continued negotiations at the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

This comprehensive trade deal was not even necessary in order to reduce those tariffs. U.S. President Reagan has had the constitutional authority since April, 1987 to reduce tariffs with Canada on a bilateral basis without the need for a comprehensive trade deal. If we do not need the trade deal to reduce tariffs, why did we go into this agreement in the first place? Perhaps it was to remove those non-tariff barriers, the U.S. trade remedy laws, which penalize the export of Canadian products. Let us look at that area.

The Prime Minister again promised Canadians that in negotiating the deal these punitive U.S. trade measures would be eliminated. Canadian Trade Ambassador, Simon Reisman, said that the deal would not be worth the powder to blow it to hell if it failed to protect Canadian exporters from future U.S. protectionist measures. The Hon. Minister for International Trade, who admittedly had not read the deal at the time, argues that the agreement has accomplished this important objective. In fact, it has not.

Instead of a binding dispute mechanism, Canada has settled, has capitulated, for a bilateral panel that will serve only as a court of last resort after those trade embargoes have been imposed. The panel will not be able to challenge the laws, only the application of those laws. We have relinquished the right to appeal under the International Trade Tribunal, and we have even less protection under this trade deal that we enjoyed under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

What about government procurement? That was the third reason for going into this deal. Under the agreement, Canadian companies can apparently bid on $3 billion in U.S. government contracts. That sounds good until it is compared with the $18 billion the U.S. Government put on the negotiating table in the last round of GATT negotiations. Again we have come out second best.

On the three critical components of the trade agreement—secure access, protection from future U.S. countervail and increased access to government procurement—on the three pinnacles, in each case the Government has failed to negotiate those three critical components.

What about economic considerations? Informetrica, an Ottawa based research house, reports that free trade will eventually provide an over-all benefit to Canada with increased output, employment, and income in the very long term. Just how long that is is anyone's guess.

The initial gains will be concentrated in selective provinces such as Québec and Ontario but will be offset by economic dislocations in other areas. An economic dislocation is an economist's way of saying that people are going to lose their jobs.

Here is the crunch. The analysis by Informetrica states that increased tax revenues, as a result of the free trade deal, will be insufficient to offset the loss of customs revenue from the reductions of tariffs in the trade deal. That is an economist's way of saying that free trade will increase the federal deficit. The analysis further argues that any attempts to reduce the deficit that will accumulate through the free trade deal by increased taxation will in fact reduce or possibly nullify the economic impact of the Free Trade Agreement. Increase taxes and the benefits of the Free Trade Agreement disappear. What we have is an economic catch-22. Free trade increases the deficit. If we try to buy down the deficit by increasing taxation any advantages go up in smoke.

In fact, the Prime Minister intends to do just that. His national sales tax scheme will impose a minimum sales tax on all goods and services. It will tax virtually everything that moves and a lot that does not. Most tax experts believe that when you add increased national sales tax being imposed to pay for free trade to provincial taxes, we could be looking at a tax rate of between 15 per cent and 17 per cent.

The Canadian Homebuilders' Association estimates that such a tax on homes will disqualify at least 60,000 families from getting a mortgage. That means a downturn in the housing market and all areas of the economy that are sensitive to consumer demand.

The Prime Minister and this Government are grabbing the taxpayer's pocketbook to pay for the free trade deal. By so doing it will lower disposable incomes and negate any economic advantage of the Free Trade Agreement. In the final analysis, if one supports free trade then one must also support either an increase in the federal deficit or an increase in taxation. It is as simple as that.

Believe it or not, I have tried to outline the benefits of free trade. There are many costs associated with it. Even the strongest opponents of free trade have said that it will impose massive readjustments to the Canadian economy and the Canadian workforce. Some will end up winners, but many will end up losers.

Bruce Wilkinson, Professor of Economics at the University of Alberta, argues that the Mulroney trade deal amounts to an economic constitution between Canada and the United States which will place us on an irreversible path toward political integration. This trade agreement surrenders our right to make our decisions and to pursue our own national destiny. It gives Washington the powers that are the prerogative of provincial capitals.

Mr. McDermid: Give me one example.

Mr. MacWilliam: It promises to change dramatically the economic, social and cultural landscape of this country.

Just as there is no free lunch—and we have heard that saying many times from people on the other side of the House—there is also no free trade. Everything has its price. What the Members of this House must do in these negotiations is ask themselves whether the price of this trade deal is really worth it.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Chairman, I rise with a Damocles' sword of closure over my head. Should it happen it will be the equivalent of parliamentary slavery. We have heard reflections on the part of government of arrogance in attitude, unfairness in approach and discrimination to the new Members of Parliament.

In the spirit of this holiday season first let me greet you, Mr. Chairman, Mr. Speaker, Her Excellency the Governor General, all our colleagues in the House and Senate, all Canadians, all families across the country and, more particularly, the constituents of Winnipeg North with the twin messages of peace and prosperity and in the language of my original tongue, Maligayang Pasko at Manigong Bagong Taon. Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

It is also in this festive spirit that I would like to speak to the subject of the free trade deal and the implementing legislation. Allow me, Hon. Members, to reflect also during this festive season a sadness with you.

A few months ago a member of my Filipino community, a Canadian immigrant, was hastily deported to the Philippines. Her name is Sally Espinelli. I question the fairness of this Government. It is fundamental rule of fairness that a person is given avenues for redress, including appealing a case to the Canadian Human Rights Commission. In fact, the Canadian Human Rights Commission recommended that Sally Espinelli's case be placed before that body. That was not to happen because the Government failed to exercise the virtue of moral fairness and denied a Canadian immigrant the due process of judicial review.

Now back to the subject of tonight, the free trade deal. I seek the understanding of government to allow amendments to this deal, to make clarifications and thereby prevent uncertainties in the future. Is there a basis to believe that there are uncertainties in the future?

The Minister for International Trade, if I may paraphrase, said that it would take four to five years to see whether this deal was good or bad. That, to me, is an admission that the deal could be bad, and we believe it is bad. We believe it is bad for the people of our country. Sure, statistics have also been mentioned of jobs being created. Statistics have been mentioned of jobs that will be lost. What is clear, and I think it has been denied by government, is that jobs will be lost.

To that problem we have to have a mechanism—common sense dictates—to help the displaced workers of our country as a consequence of this deal. Let me say to the Government that even Supreme Courts of nations allow reconsideration of original decisions. Why cannot the Government, during this season of understanding, allow amendments so that the total sentiments of the Canadian people across the country can be reflected truly in this deal? It is indeed a big challenge to the Government. It needs a big heart to answer the challenge.

I am referring to a declaration entitled "A Canada—U.S. Church Declaration on Justice for Farmers and Food for People", adopted in September, 1988. This group is committed to justice and to supporting the self-sufficiency of peoples in producing their own food and developing their own economic and social institutions to enhance the quality of life. It is a group deeply committed to security to tenure for those who work the land, a group deeply committed to wide distribution of land among people, a group deeply committed to the right of people to eat healthy and nutritious food, a group committed to a system of pricing that returns to the producer of food the cost of production plus a fair return that provides a reasonable standard of living, a group deeply committed to countering the concentration of control and ownership of land by the few and the domination of food production and distribution by corporations. I submit that these principles of morality and of commitment to people are sound and laudable.

I submit to the Government that this group is deeply opposed to this deal because it feels that the deal is detrimental to those principles.

Article 409, "Other Export Measures", asks us to guarantee supply to the United States of our total resources. It states:

1. Either Party may maintain or introduce a restriction otherwise justified under the provisions of Articles XI:2(a) and XX(g), (i) and (j) of the GATT with respect to the export of a good of the Party to the territory of the other Party, only if:

a) the restriction does not reduce the proportion of the total export shipments of the specific good—

I would like to call to the attention of the Government that this article does not only refer to energy. It continues:

—made available to the other Party relative to the total supply of that good of the Party maintaining the restriction as compared to the proportion prevailing in the most recent 36-

month period for which data are available prior to the imposition of the measure—

What does that mean? It means that, the United States having set the level of consumption, we must maintain it or reduce our own supply. This particular provision in the agreement would in future disallow us to make a Canada-first policy on our energy resources.

Article 409, "Other Export Measures", refers specifically to the energy good as a resource and states our obligation to supply the United States, or we do not supply ourselves.

Article 906, "Government Incentives for Energy Resource Development", states:

Both Parties have agreed to allow existing or future incentives for oil and gas exploration, development and related activities in order to maintain the reserve base for these energy resources.

I ask the Government: Why not also have the other programs, our health care and social programs specifically mentioned in the agreement, in order that there will be no uncertainty in future?

The last time I spoke I discussed the weakness and feebleness of the binding settlement mechanism. I will not elaborate on it further. However, I do feel that we should accept amendments to address some of the limitations of this proposed agreement.

Bruce H. Fisher of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in Halifax stated:

The United States probably agreed to the inclusion of such a weak dispute settlement mechanism precisely because it would be ineffective in forcing the U.S. to accept unpopular judgments. However, as Canada's exports are largely dependent on the U.S. market, the latter might be able to use such a system to force concessions out of Canada on difficult bilateral disputes.

Indeed, there are other potential considerations as a consequence of this trade deal. We have already mentioned the weakness to allow regional expansion. There is another interesting feature, namely, that regional expansion may be exempted if the industries to be developed involve military equipment.

The Canadian Peace Pledge Campaign stated:

A Canada/U.S. free trade deal could also make military production more central to the Canadian industrial strategy. While the agreement in general views government subsidies to industry . . . as unfair and thus prohibited competition, support to military industries would be exempt. This could mean the only regional industrial incentives available will be to military industries.

I tell the Government that if for the reason of peace only Canadians have a strong interest in rejecting the Reagan—Mulroney deal.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I would like to call to the attention of the Government Article 1801. In effect, it prohibits Canada from requesting the GATT to examine complaints related to the United States countervailing and dumping duties.

Mr. Mel Clark, Deputy Head of the Canadian Delegation for the GATT Tokyo Round, stated:

In 1949 . . . the determination of rights and obligations between Governments arising under a bilateral agreement is not a matter within the competence of the contracting parties—

This means that the subsequent Article 1801, subsection 2, becomes meaningless under this proposed agreement.

Let me come to the issue that I truly feel can be threatened—our social and health care programs. Article 1401 mentions the services covered under this agreement. Part of the services include the management of the health care services. I would like to put on record the belief that non-profit public administration of our health care system would indeed be jeopardized and therefore our medicare system, which is the best in the world, could be in jeopardy.

In medicine, we first make a diagnosis and then provide treatment. Before we make a diagnosis we would like to get all the information and do the essential medical examination of the patient. Mr. Chairman, you have heard submissions, information, from all of us from the government side and the opposition side. It is only fair and right that we conclude that there are defects in the current Mulroney—Reagan deal. It is in fact only half a free trade agreement.

I quote the words of Mr. Godsoe, past Executive Director of the Macdonald Commission on the Economy:

Implementing the agreement would not only be contrary to the Macdonald Commission's recommendations, it would set off intensive negotiations over the real agenda. Canadian negotiators have stated there was no time to conclude any agreement on the definition of "unfair trade" and what regional development or other economic or social support programs would be in jeopardy.

Mr. Godsoe went on to say:

In short, what else is there to offer the Americans except agreement that at least some of our government-support programs are to be classified as unfair trade subsidies? Surely the most ardent advocate of the current agreement must concede that. The focus will then shift to what regional-development and other support programs will have to be discontinued at least for export industries. This is the measure of (the) failure of the free-trade deal.

for export industries. This is the measure of (the) failure of the free-trade deal.

The American concerns have been addressed in the Free Trade Agreement: Access to our financial markets, access to our resources, and access to our service sector. Our Canadian concerns in respect of lower barriers have been addressed in part, but continue to be somewhat elusive. Other concerns have not been addressed at all. I have in mind potential harassment of Canadian exporters by the U.S. and the lack of stable and secure access to American markets.

Indeed, there are two key issues that have gone undelivered by the Free Trade Agreement: The binding arbitration of disputes and the lack of a common book of rules defining unfair trade practices.

I am in favour of freer trade, as are all Liberals; but, I am vehemently opposed to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

In the same way that I would not drink a glass of water filled with impurities, I would not accept a trade deal filled with impurities—

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Hon. Member should know better than to refer to the “Mulroney-Reagan” trade deal; rather, he should refer to the Right Hon. Prime Minister either by his riding or by his—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Pagtakhan: No one would drink a glass of water filled with impurities. No one should accept a free trade deal filled with impurities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pagtakhan: Let us not fear amendments, let us fear arrogance; let us not fear debate, let us fear its absence.

I am asking that there be a clarification in respect of some of the provisions of the Free Trade Agreement.

I can believe that this Government is sincere in believing that there are no weaknesses in the FTA. But, the Government must believe that we on this side are also sincere in believing that there are in fact weaknesses in this deal.

Where there is an honest difference in opinion, the reasonable person will ask a good lawyer to provide a clarification in black and white. In that way there is no possibility of a misunderstanding in the future.

It has been said often that if something is not specifically dealt with in the agreement, there is no reason to worry. Let me remind Hon. Members opposite of a universal truism: Absence of evidence is no evidence of absence.

In closing I would ask again, in the spirit of Christmas, that this Government take cognizance of the concerns of Canadians across the country, take cognizance of the concerns of the constituents of Winnipeg North. I say to the Government that an ounce of clarification today is worth more than a pound of conflict in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orleans): Mr. Chairman, as I rise to speak before this august assembly, I must admit to you that I have two concerns.

The first is that we are in Committee of the Whole for clause-by-clause consideration in principle of Bill C-2 on the Canada—United States Free Trade Agreement. I note that we are only at clause 2. I am really extremely concerned: Will we continue our deliberations here until July or August? Will we be singing “Santa Claus” here on New Year’s Day or Christmas Day? I am really worried that we are only at clause 2. But people do not seem to be worried; it seems that parliamentary procedure is flexible enough that we can talk about anything and nothing in this free trade debate.

My second preliminary remark, which is part of my introduction, Mr. Chairman, concerns the look on the faces of our friends opposite. The other day, I quoted a Latin saying that delighted my colleague here from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) and this evening, I feel like giving you another Latin quotation that is very appropriate for the situation. There is an old Latin proverb that the ancients liked to quote and it goes like this, Afflicto afflicto non addenda est. It means that one should not add to someone’s woes.

Mr. Chairman, looking at my friends opposite and their woeful expression, I almost feel like keeping quiet and saying that one should not further afflict those who are already afflicted. And I am afraid that my speech tonight will only confirm this wise old adage, Afflicto afflicto non addenda est.

But my constituents have given me a mandate and I will take courage and forge ahead.

My message tonight is meant to be above all a testimony. I note that my neighbours opposite, my friends opposite, as they are called in the parliamentary tradition, take great pleasure in philosophizing on free trade. They read texts, they theorize, they philosophize. I bring you the real life experiences of people with whom I spoke during the election campaign, not theoretical speeches but concrete facts.

In the riding of Montmorency—Orleans, I based my campaign on the business community, among others. I visited lots and lots of people and many companies. I shook almost 15,000 hands in the riding of Montmorency—Orleans. I went to places where people work and live, to golden age clubs, restaurants, car dealers, small and medium-sized businesses and big factories. Everywhere, the workers, the owner, the boss, anyone—

I went to various workplaces and every time I visited a small or medium-sized business or a large concern I would get to meet the head of the company and ask him: Listen, what do you think of free trade? And surprised I was: 100 per cent of those I questioned in the riding of Montmorency—Orléans were supportive of free trade and the agreement negotiated by our leader and his representatives.

So much so that I will tell you something. The highlight of my election campaign was when I went on television and asked my Liberal opponent and my socialist NDP opponent, Mr. Gourdeau, a nationally-known personality: Name one single business in the riding, one single small or medium-sized business which is against free trade. I did that on the radio and twice on television. I never did get an answer. Are we here to make philosophical statements or to represent our constituents? Are we here to show off or to perform, or are we here to represent the people, the men and women who elected us?

It was rather amusing in my riding of Montmorency—Orléans because the national NDP leader, Broadbent, the champion or ordinary people... When I talked to my constituents of Montmorency—Orléans, my people, many of whom suffer from the high unemployment rate or end up on social welfare, I would say to them: Are you aware of the hourly wage rates in Oshawa, you know, the city of the ordinary candidate over there who always keeps his cool and peppers his speeches with the word "ordinary"? I said to them: Do you know what the hourly rate, the unemployment rate is? It is nil in the constituency of Oshawa and 10 to 15 per cent in Montmorency—Orléans. It is easy to say you're fighting for ordinary Canadians and be against free trade in Oshawa and Windsor. There, the people are already "tuned in" to the United States under the Auto Pact. Things are going well there, but will they share the wealth with Quebec and the rest of Canada? No way! That's what I told the people in my constituency and they replied: Shame! Mr. DeBlois, when you are elected, you will go to the House and tell your colleagues opposite that we, too, would like to share in the economic prosperity enjoyed by Ontario and Oshawa in particular.

Let me tell you what two industries had to say. In my constituency of Montmorency—Orléans, Abitibi Price runs a plant that employs 400 people. That's a lot of people! They work day and night. I visited the plant twice, once during the day shift and once during the night shift. I did not inform the Téléjournal camera crews so that my visit could be seen on the news that night. No one saw me, but I was there during the day and at night. Some party leaders alert news teams so that they can be seen on the Téléjournal... My visit did not make the news, but I was there, even at night, in a small room with union leaders and the ordinary people. Afterwards, I went to see the boss on the third floor and talked about free trade.

I also went to see Léo Cauchon at a saw mill called Château Richer. He said: Listen, Charles, the tax on timber really hit me hard this year. It was so sad. And let me tell you what the president of Abitibi Price had to say. He said that without free trade, Canadians would lose. Canada would be the only Western country without access to a market of more than 100 million people. Mark my words and take heed. Throughout history, every time a smaller country signed a bilateral trade agreement with a larger country, the smaller country always came out ahead, and never at the expense of its culture or its independence. Those of you who talked about being dwarfed, about it being a case of the elephant and the mouse, you were out to lunch! I know what I am talking about.

When I am with my people... The leaders of the Liberal and New Democratic parties wanted to scare people: You will lose your pensions. The former Social Welfare minister said that free trade would give us AIDS. U.S. blood is tainted with AIDS. The people of Montmorency—Orléans said: Come on, we're not going to swallow that!

I am sorry if I sound a bit demagogic, Mr. Chairman. But the people in my riding were outraged when they watched the national news in the evening and heard Mr. Turner say it was the end of the Canadian dream. Come on! I asked the people in my riding if they had ever been in Jasper or if they had visited Alberta. The answer was no. I asked them if they had ever been to Old Orchard. The answer was yes. Our people in Quebec are used to travelling to the United States. They will not lose their culture nor their language. Do not try to make us believe Americans are bad boys who only think of manipulating us. Our people are proud to be able to do more business with the Americans. So big industries and small industries, those of ordinary people, to borrow a phrase from the NDP, our socialists, our avant-garde, those champions of ordinary citizens . . . I visited small businesses. I have in mind Consulab that specializes in advanced technology and Moulures Bégin. Here is what I heard from them: "Do not tell anybody I am for free trade, I want to get ready before other small businesses in the same field. Wait before you talk about it." I renege on my word tonight, but I do so in the interest of the country and that of Hon. Members. It is important that you know about it.

I must say I had much fun discussing free trade. I thank the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), the Leader of the Liberal Party, for waking us up. I spent the past three weeks discussing free trade everywhere, and I feel that the popularity-seeking arguments put forward by the Opposition have scared our people stiff. You will notice that everybody who can see straight in Quebec, including Premier Bourassa, the PQ Leader, the Desjardins Movement, such great journalists as Alain Dubuc, the Mayor of Beauport, the largest city in my riding, Jacques Langlois—none of them belonging to the Conservative Party—are all for free trade.

It is important to mention that two weeks before the election, in the Quebec region, all open-line radio hosts invited objective guests such as Bernard Landry, Claude Masson, an economist with Laval University . . . We felt that the more we were going to explain free trade, the more people would understand it. You may have noticed that since the November 21 election, the various polls indicate that we would have won more seats, and the proportion of people who are now for the Free Trade Agreement is constantly rising. In other words, if the election was held today, three-quarters of all Canadians would support free trade and we would have between 225 and 250 seats.

As you may have guessed, Mr. Chairman, I want to be consistent with my original statement. I will not insist further. I suggest that we should not add to the pain of the people who are down. Afflictio afflicto non addenda est . . . That is enough. I just want to repeat again that when we listen to the people concerned—when I see a guy in the Quebec region—in addition to being the Member for Montmorency—Orléans, I am a member of the regional caucus which is brilliantly chaired by the Hon. Member for Québec East (Mr. Tremblay), when I see a guy like Louis Garneau who supplies the praiseworthy Canadian cycling team with clothing for cycling and has to pay 30 per cent of custom duties to the United States. He said: With the free trade agreement, tomorrow I could pay $100,000 per year less in custom duties, and I would be able to open a plant in Saint-Augustin. When I say that to the people, they say: "It is great, Mr. DeBlois!" I am not the one who is saying that, but an ordinary guy back home who is the president of a company which is far from being a multinational.

Having said that, Mr. Chairman, I think that we do not need to look into the Bill before us. I realize why we are still dealing with Clause 2. It is not necessary to study every clause, because the demonstration I have just made will certainly reassure Members opposite and I am sure that tomorrow at the latest we will be able to leave and spend Christmas at home, knowing that our friends will change their minds and finally support this dramatic and important initiative for the future of Canada, namely, the adoption of a bilateral agreement with the United States.

[English]

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Chairman, it gives me great pleasure to contribute and to participate in the debate that is designed to introduce some amendments to the trade deal. My Party and I feel a great need to amend the trade Bill that we find deficient both in process and in content. I dare say that the Government has recognized many of those deficiencies, many of the shortcomings, both in the House in the course of the last couple of days and also during the election campaign.

The people of the riding of Eglinton—Lawrence have been most generous in demonstrating to me and to my Party the type of trust, faith and encouragement they have in us. They did that with their votes. That demonstrated their complete trust in our position that they would be following a debate on this historic document tonight.

I say that it is historic because of all the reasons we have heard over the course of the last couple of days. These reasons mark a new thrust, a new direction, a new sense of a vision for Canada. Unfortunately, it is a sense of vision that ignores some of the very real material realities that the country has experienced over the course of the last 20 years. I am happy to say that I am part and parcel of those new realities in the country that we all share and in which we all take pride.

I would like to take a moment to thank the people of Eglinton—Lawrence, people who are very representative of the new dynamics of Canada. They are people who represent all spectrums of the economic, social and cultural mosaic of Canada. There are people in my riding who range from the extremely wealthy, the very established, to the very poor, as well as the very new. We have a very vigorous entrepreneurial sector which numbers a great manufacturing district of well over 600 enterprises.

When I rise to say that I am going to speak and want to address very specifically some of the amendments that my Party will make to this trade Bill, I do so because the people of my riding, who have a sense of a dimension and perspective for the country, which includes social peace, social well-being as well as entrepreneurial dynamics, want their interests both protected and promoted. We can do that if we accept that amendments to this particular deal which bring us to that kind of purpose.

The Government has recognized that amendments need to be made. Through statements during the course of the election campaign as well as through statements in the House we have heard all types of reassurances. We will move amendments to ensure that those reassurances are there on paper for us to examine and to refer to.

It is going to be a commercial deal, a deal that will include the new economic order for us in Canada, that my Party does not share and that we would like to amend in order to put it on the appropriate path. That appropriate path includes a direction that a Minister of the Crown in the previous Parliament acknowledged reflected the true dimensions of Canada, when he said in a business conference in Toronto: "over the course of the last five years 65 per cent of all the businesses started in this country were begun by entrepreneurs from that sector of our population that we call the newer Canadians, the multicultural, the multi-ethnic community". Some 65 per cent of all new businesses were generated by people who were new, people who had something to contribute to the country. That contribution came not only from their individual talent and desire to succeed but from their sense of ownership in the destiny of a country that had become theirs, a country which they would like to take into the 21st century as a free, independent, sovereign, industrial and commercial example to the rest of the world.

Those people also fall into the category that the Government has acknowledged is the greatest creator of jobs. Some 85 per cent of all jobs in Canada are created by small and medium-sized businesses. When we talk about a new economic order, we have to consider where the dynamics for the entrepreneurial spirit will be generated. If this deal will generate that kind of spirit, then we should support it, but let us not support the deal if we do not find the kinds of guarantees that promote the entrepreneurial spirit.

In the riding of Eglinton—Lawrence there are people who are major players in the financial world. There are people who are in the professional fields, entrepreneurs and labourers as well. None of them need lessons about courage or risk-taking. They do not need lessons about the opportunities that an increased market-place can provide. Some 80 per cent of these people come from a background which is neither French nor English. Yet they are proud to be part of our country. That 80 per cent needs no admonitions about encouragement. They have left countries in which they were aware and familiar with the legal system, the cultural and social values. They came here because it welcomed them with open arms, the entrepreneurial spirit, the desire to create and to contribute. They did not come here because they were afraid to take risks. They did not come here because they were afraid about a new market-place. They did not come here because they were afraid of competition, nor did they come here because they wanted to be dependent upon others. They came here to create a new wealth, a wealth in which others could share. They did that with a sense of great pride and social accomplishment.

Those are the types of people from Eglinton—Lawrence who said to me and to my Party: "Go to Ottawa. Protect and promote our interests. Be aggressive. Be dynamic. Express our views in the House and make sure that Canada and our interests are defended".

I stand and speak on behalf of those people from Eglinton—Lawrence who are now in the midst of their Christmas season. Others have just finished the Hanukkah season. To all of them I wish them the best for the season and for a happy new year as well. I wish you, Mr. Chairman, and all my colleagues in this place the same. For all of them, I am here with my Party to move amendments that will ensure that their interests and vision of Canada that is continually evolving are protected. We must move amendments because the negotiation process is faulty. The context is faulty. We need to be able to produce a different type of environment if we are going to go through with this deal.

Let us take a look at what happened. It is not that long ago that the Prime Minister, the Trade Minister, the Finance Minister, and several other members of the Cabinet indicated that this Free Trade Agreement, as they called it, would be an anathema to Canada, to the Canadian vision, economy and society as we knew it a mere three years ago and as we still recognize it today.

What happened? Over the course of a few years we found that former and current Governments dismantled immediately some of the basic pillars of our Canadian economy. First, they removed the restraints on investment, removed FIRA, and removed the controls on foreign investment in Canada. Second, we saw the removal of the pillars that we had seen as the strength of Canada in the National Energy Program. We opened up our capital markets to foreign investors without due regard, without putting any constraints on them to consider the needs of Canada, our historical dimensions, and the special considerations of the way we have evolved socially and culturally.

What happens when we remove the levers we had at our disposal in negotiation? We end up negotiating in the supine position. It is no irony. It is no coincidence that the major negotiator in those talks, Mr. Simon Reisman, indicated that a deal could not be struck on the basis of commitments that the Prime Minister had made to various Premiers of the provinces, including the Premier of the Province of Ontario.

Some of those guarantees for protection of our agriculture, which some of my colleagues have expressed in a most eloquent and very definitive manner, are at a disadvantage by virtue of our climate and by virtue of our own geographic and geophysical terrain. Second, there would be guarantees with respect to protection of our investment market and our capital market. There would be guarantees for the maintenance of social programs. Canadians have fought hard over the course of the last decade to maintain social programs that have become the envy of modern societies throughout the western world and have served as models for the emerging societies of the eastern world.

We saw some of the guarantees that the Prime Minister gave to our Premiers. I refer to the guarantees for the Auto Pact in my province and the dynamics that they produced for a particular sector of the country which we wish could be distributed throughout the rest of the country. We were given guarantees that we would have access into the American market and that there would be protection from unfair competition from the United States. We saw guarantees given for a binding dispute settlement mechanism. We saw guarantees given to the provinces that there would not be any compromise on energy.

All of those were poor guarantees. They were not worth much. They were given in a free spirit. They were given very eloquently. They appear to have been given very trustingly and very vociferously, but it proved in the end to be worth nothing more than the warm words that they indicated. We see that this trade agreement lacks all of those. It is no coincidence that we see a major province like Ontario indicate that the Free Trade Agreement is not in the interests of our province, and we dare say, not for the rest of Canada.

Let us take a look for a moment at the kind of access that has been provided for us under this particular deal. Let us look at the reasons why we will have to move amendments, why it is incumbent upon us as the party which represents those people who have interests in the development of the economy and in maintaining the social and cultural dynamics therein, to move the kinds of amendments that we will move. First of all, we do not have guaranteed access. Nowhere in the deal is there an indication that we have guaranteed access to an American market. When we hear the great words about a very large market-place for our goods, we ask ourselves, where does it say we move in? Where does it say that that market is open to us and not to anybody else? We keep in mind that this is a nation of people who have built greatness on adversity, who have been unafraid of challenges. It has been people who have taken the bull by the horns and have done what they needed to do to create success where none could be seen.

Where is this great opportunity? Is it with the great buyers in the United States? I refer to the federal, state and municipal legislatures, which through their procurement policies develop a great clientele and market-place. No, we do not have access to that. Do we have access to any specific sector of their economy that other states do not yet have? No, we do not have that either.

What we have is an opportunity over the course of the next 10 years to diminish tariffs so that we can make it easier for American and multinational corporations to increase competition in Canada. Yes, competition will be good. Perhaps it might even lead to lower prices. I say "perhaps" because there is no study which indicates that the benefits to consumers will be anything but marginal.

What will we have? Will we have an opportunity to create a greater entrepreneurial class? Perhaps, if we ignore the fact that 55 per cent of all manufacture and trade being conducted between the United States and Canada is done between a branch plant and a home office, if there is to be rationalization, then we in the branch plants will be the first victims of such rationalization. Is there going to be greater opportunity for us to increase our development of industrial capacities here when American corporations will increase as well their production capacity here?

Mr. McDermid: Here?

Mr. Volpe: Perhaps not. One question that we have to ask ourselves is what will happen? We acknowledge what the Government has said over the course of the last few days. There will be winners and losers. If those losers are many of our employees, what will happen as our Government is pressured to meet either the needs of those businesses which find themselves in difficulties or the workers that find themselves dislocated? Will we make a decision to support industry? Will we make a decision to support our workers and our families?

We find ourselves entering into a deal that turns out to be little more than a continental energy pact, a continental energy pact that might make some sense to producers. It makes a lot of sense to the government side, but it does not make a lot of sense to the manufacturers in my riding. The manufacturers in my riding ask why would I give my competitor to the south the same price that I have to pay for my energy costs? When my overhead stays at x dollars and is compared to a competitor to the south, what do we do with the cost of our products when we go into a common market-place?

Mr. McDermid: They pay twice for electricity, twice the price.

Mr. Volpe: The entrepreneurs in my riding want to know that if there is going to be a level playing field it shall be level and it shall be balanced, and that we take into consideration the special needs of all Canadians.

What I want to do is explore some of the other dynamics that the people in my riding suggest that we ought to look to. Some of those dynamics have been ignored by a Government that has put all its eggs into one particular economic policy, one do-or-die economic strategy for this country. That is the tragedy of this trade deal.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Volpe: The Minister is accustomed to saying those kinds of words because he does not have anything positive to say. That is fine. The people in my riding have asked for and insist that what should happen is that an economic strategy take into consideration the potential of small businesses, that we increase opportunities to maintain the flexibility, the adaptability and the aggressiveness toward specialization that will be required as we enter the 21st century.

Mr. McDermid: That is what this is all about.

Mr. Volpe: The Hon. Member had better read it again. That is not what is in there.

Why do we not take a look at turnkey industries, promote sunrise industries, develop specialization, develop secondary and tertiary industries and promote them through the resources that we have available, not only in the natural and in the human sector, but also through whatever government assistance we can provide? As we move toward a more global economy, let us not forget that the 250-odd million people who live to the south of us do not represent the sole market potential in this world. If we are to be truly global citizens, we should explore every market potential around us.

In closing, let me add that the chief negotiators from Mexico say they would never enter into such a deal in a hundred years. The chief negotiator from Israel said that Canada gave up 100 times more than it got. Our Prime Minister said that he was against free trade but supports it now because only donkeys do not change their minds. I hope he really meant that so when he looks at the braying bunch behind him he may have a change of heart.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I noted with interest the comments of my hon. friend with respect to his premier. As a citizen of Ontario, I watched with interest during the last campaign the all-out exhaustive, unrelenting campaigning by the Premier of Ontario against the Free Trade Agreement. In fact, he was so exhausted that during the last two weeks of the campaign he went to the Far East to recuperate.

I hereby give notice pursuant to Standing Order 57 that at the next sitting of Committee of the Whole House on Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, I will move that further consideration of Clauses 1 through 150, the preamble, title and schedules and any amendments proposed thereto shall be the first business of the committee and shall not further be postponed.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wish to give notice that if the Minister chooses to move the motion of which he has given notice at the next sitting of the committee, I would like to raise a point of order before the motion is put to the Committee because it would be my submission that such a motion would be out of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, this is a rather historic occasion. If the Hon. Member actually does move closure at the Committee of the Whole stage at the next sitting of the House, it would be the first time this has happened in 32 years. I just want to draw to your attention that the last time this happened was during the infamous pipeline debate. Once again I just want to say that this is an historic day but a rather black mark in terms of Canada's history.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Chairman, I think we are all dismayed by the action taken by the Minister, but we have become accustomed to these kinds of tactics. I want to raise a question with the Minister relating to procedure. This morning the junior Minister for Trade made a direct request on behalf of the Government that amendments be presented so they could be given consideration and we would be able to organize the business in a way that would allow us to make sure those amendments are there.

If the Government intends to cut off debate, is it also prepared to have the presentation of the amendments relating to the different clauses of the Bill proceed in such a way that would allow us to make sure that those amendments are there? I am simply repeating the words used by the Minister this morning. Is the Deputy Government House Leader prepared to end debate tomorrow under those circumstances on these very important matters, before there has been an opportunity to comply with the request of the Minister and ensure that we have an opportunity to specifically look at the amendments the Opposition wants to present?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, that offer was naturally on the table last week, given in good faith, and we were prepared to do that as we were prepared to debate through last weekend in order to give all colleagues in the House an opportunity to debate.

Unfortunately, the offer was not taken up by the Opposition Parties. I understand from my colleague, the Minister of State for International Trade, that he has not had an opportunity to even review the amendments, although that might have been made possible by my hon. friend. Under those circumstances I certainly hope we will get to the clauses to which my hon. friend wishes to make his amendments, and also allow other colleagues to make their amendments. But those offers were on the table last week, given in good faith by the Government, not taken up by the Opposition Parties.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I just want to clarify something with the Hon. Minister. He only stated half the proposition. He said those offers were on the table, but they were conditional on the time allocation. Of course, no one who has any respect for the rights of this Parliament would agree to under those conditions.

I want to repeat to the Chair, because I think it would be part of the judgment of the Chair itself, that it was not an offer made last week but one made this morning, where the Minister requested the submission of those amendments. We would like to have the opportunity to present them so that the debate can target particularly the kind of concerns our Members have raised during the day. We want to have the offer to put these forward. I think it would be a judgment by the Deputy Government House Leader and the Government during the one day we have left, to allow us to proceed to some of the pertinent clauses in the Bill so that amendments can be properly presented in their proper form.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, the offers were on the table last week, made in good faith. The offers were on the table this morning, made in good faith. The offers were on the table this afternoon, made in good faith. They have not been taken up by the Opposition Parties.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Mr. Chairman, I thought I should rise on a question of privilege. If the Government intends to invoke closure, it will be a betrayal of democracy and a reflection of the pusillanimity of the will of the people.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I want to seek clarification from the Deputy Government House Leader. He indicates that there were some packages or some offers that were made. I have been in the House of Commons all day. When not here, I have been watching on the monitors in the lobby. I do not recall hearing a presentation put to the House of Commons. Perhaps I am wrong. I would ask the Deputy Government House Leader, if he did make an offer to the House of Commons, what that offer was?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, during the meetings that I had with my hon. friend we reached agreement on certain terms. Those terms were drafted, copies were made available to my hon. friend and were made available to the Liberal Party. My hon. friend knows very well that his Party was unable to agree to those terms. They are here and they are available.

I do not think we have to negotiate on the floor of the House. Those negotiations took place with my hon. colleagues opposite. I say without equivocation that the offers were made, the offers were drafted. We believe the offers would have been acceptable to allow for exactly what my hon. friends wanted, that is the tabling of the amendments, the putting of the amendments, the divisions on a recorded basis so that everyone would know who stood for what. Unfortunately, they were not taken up.

The Deputy Chairman: I must say that if there are going to be further negotiations in regard to this matter, I wish it would be done behind the curtain. There are other Members who would like to speak on Clause 2. If there are to be further negotiations I would hope it would be done behind the curtain.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, I want to make it perfectly clear there will not be any further negotiations. I want to say that I take some offence. We have had some discussions. I thought these discussions were in confidence. Obviously they were not.

I guess what I am saying is that any suggestion that there might be some overtures made by the Government to the Opposition, after the Deputy House Leader stood in the House and indicated that there were attempts made earlier when in fact we had some discussions but I was not aware these were public discussions—I guess they are now—

Mr. McDermid: You asked.

Mr. Riis: He stood up in his place and said these offers had been made.

Mr. McDermid: Had they?

Mr. Riis: In the House.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would hope that further negotiations, if there are going to be negotiations, would take place behind the curtain.

Mr. Riis: There will not be any further negotiations.

• (2220)

Mr. Clark ((Brandon—Souris): Mr. Chairman—

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I would simply like to direct a question to the Deputy House Leader. There are a total of 21 amendments which we would like to be able to present to the House and have voted—

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I am afraid that that is debate. The Hon. Member will have an opportunity to present his case later.

Mr. Langdon: Let me finish my point of order, Mr. Chairman. My point of order is simply to inquire of the House Leader if he is in fact saying it is not possible for us to put such amendments because he intends for the debate to remain on Clause 2 throughout the entire time.

Mr. Deputy Chairman: I recognize the Hon. Member for Brandon—Souris on debate.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): Mr. Chairman, I am happy to have an opportunity to address the issue of free trade once again, and I do so primarily as a western Canadian with a special interest in agriculture.

I had a chance to speak on this matter before the election, but there have of course been changes in circumstances since the election. It has been a most unusual election and in fact a very historic election. There is probably one other election in Canadian history that has been fought on a single issue to the extent that this one has, and that was the election of 1917.

The fact that this election was fought on a single issue to the extent it was and the fact that the majority is as significant as it is, a majority that is greater than I for one would have anticipated, means that the Government, as a result of having won the election, very clearly has a mandate to an unusual degree. It has more of a mandate, perhaps, than governments had coming out of previous elections.

I am also conscious of the fact that there have been other elections in Canadian history in which free trade was a principal issue. That of course was true of the election of 1891 and it was also true of the election of 1911. In those election campaigns, the Party advocating free trade was defeated. One might well ask what is different this time, why is it the Party advocating free trade has been successful. The answer to that will probably be determined in the future by historians and economists, but I would suggest that the reason is primarily that our economies have matured significantly since 1891 and 1911.

There is indeed a new confidence in Canada that was not there earlier. The new confidence is as a result of some changes that have taken place in the world. The example set by the European community, the fact that small nations can work and trade with larger nations without losing their identity, sovereignty or culture, has given confidence going into this campaign, confidence on the eve of the Free Trade Agreement.

I would also suggest that the fact that we as Canadians have demonstrated our ability to compete with Americans these last few years has been significant. As we entered into this campaign and during the course of the debate in the last few months, many Canadians, though perhaps not all, have been mindful of the fact that we have been competing in trade with the Americans and that we have been doing so successfully. The fact that the balance of trade has been some $16 billion in our favour during the course of the last two or three fiscal years is proof of our ability to compete, and I think that gave Canadians the confidence they needed as they wrestled with this question.

The confidence Canadians have in the administration of the Government over these last four years has also been very operative in the decision they reached during the course of the last election campaign. I speak particularly as a western Canadian, and I say with a considerable amount of pride and satisfaction that never in the history of Canada have western Canadians played such a significant role in the leadership of this nation as they have in the last four years. Many Canadians accepted that as being part of the decision-making process.

I would certainly not pretend for a moment that all Canadians who voted for the Progressive Conservatives on November 21 voted with a deep understanding of free trade. They did not. However, I think many who voted for our Party did so with the realization that they have confidence in those who were providing leadership to this Party. Having faith in the leadership of the Party, they were prepared to accept the management skills for the direction they have seen followed these last four years and have believed that those who are leading this Party and who have lead the Government for the last four years had the good interests of all of Canada at heart. They have confidence in them as they look ahead to the next four years.

However, a great deal remains to be done. I think of my riding of Brandon—Souris, and I would like to note in passing how appreciative I am to the voters of Brandon—Souris for having confidence in me and for providing me the opportunity to serve for the third time in this House of Commons. However, I would not pretend for a moment that all the residents of Brandon—Souris feel confident about free trade. In fact, they do not. Many have some real reservations about free trade. We as a Government must accept some responsibility for that. Quite frankly, I do not think we explained free trade as adequately as we should have these last few months, and that is one of the reasons for some of the difficulties we had during the course of the election campaign.

Perhaps we as a Government depended too much on the print media. Perhaps we forgot that we are in the age of television. I think we should look at that in retrospect. Perhaps we forgot for a moment that it is easy to frighten people in 30 seconds over television but it is difficult to reassure them in 30 seconds. As a candidate in the last election campaign, I am very mindful of the difficulties we encountered at about the time the Opposition advertising campaign began.

What troubles me about the last election campaign is the fact that there was so much fear generated by politicians. We have a responsibility as politicians, regardless of what Party we represent, to indicate to the voters what we stand for, the policies that we advocate and the plans we have in mind. What we saw too much of in the last election campaign was an emphasis on the part of some opposition Parties on what they were against rather than what they were for. This unfortunately contributed to some of the fear and uneasiness that existed.

I speak with confidence when I say that I believe that during the course of the next four years, those fears which may exist now or may have existed during the course of the election campaign will be dispelled as free trade evolves. I am confident that when we come to this evaluation period which the next four years will provide that many people will be reassured by what will have transpired.

I would like to take this opportunity to talk about what the Free Trade Agreement is and what it is not. I hope to address some of the concerns of my constituents and of others who as yet remain unconvinced.

The Free Trade Agreement is a commercial agreement between two nations. It is an agreement not unlike that which the European communities entered into several years ago. It is an agreement not unlike that which Australia and New Zealand are currently participating in. It is a commercial agreement under which there will be, over a period of some 10 years, a gradual reduction in tariffs. It is also an agreement that will reduce the likelihood of non-tariff barriers interrupting trade between our two countries.

It is not a proposal for an economic union. It is not a proposal for a political union. One of the advertisements which distressed me the most and which I found to be the most intellectually dishonest was the one which suggested that the border between Canada and the United States was being erased. I cannot believe that those who created that advertisement or those who provided that it be shown believe that that was an honest thing to do. It may have been effective for a period of time and in the end, it may have been effective for some Canadians who really believe that somehow or other, Canadian sovereignty is at stake.

Each of us who stand in this House are proud of the fact that we are Canadian. We would not be part of the political process if we were not. I think it becomes meaningless to become engaged in a debate about who has been or will be the greatest of the Canadian nationals. We do know that there is no threat to Canadian political sovereignty in the Free Trade Agreement. We are sometimes criticized by those who say that American law remains in place, and indeed it does, as Canadian law remains in place.

The very fact that the law is there for me disproves the suggestion that there is any loss in sovereignty. We retain the right to make our own laws. We retain the right to sit and deal with countervail if necessary, as do the Americans. If that were not the case, then it may well be that some could criticize us for surrendering our sovereignty. We have not done so.

What we are seeking in the Free Trade Agreement and what I believe we have secured is the right to access to larger markets and enhanced access to markets. There are no guarantees. I do not think there are guarantees about many things in this world. There are no guarantees that we will have total, unfettered access to American markets because we will not. What we have is the opportunity to trade, the opportunity to compete. We have the opportunity to have greater access to a market which is 10 times our size. The size of that market is exceedingly important to us.

In relative terms throughout the world we are a small nation. In fact, there are really only two industrial nations in the western world which do not have guaranteed access to a market of 100 million, ourselves and Australia. If we seek, because we meet the economies of scale which are a characteristic of an industrial society, then we must have that type of access to that market.

I do not pretend to be an economist, but the little economics I studied at University reminds me of the fact that in order to have an industrial society there are some necessary characteristics. There are some necessary attributes which a nation must have. You must have the natural resources, which we have. You must have the entrepreneurial skills, which we have demonstrated we have. You must have access to capital. You must have the labour supply and you must have the transportation system. We have all of those. You can have all of those and have nothing if you do not have access to market.

We in Western Canada historically have grown a good quality agricultural product and we have grown it in surplus. We know throughout our history that without access to international markets we in Western Canada do not have an economic future. That is why we as a region have advocated free trade. That is why we as a region have historically believed we were the victim of a national policy of protective tariffs.

We know we must sell outside our country. We in the West know very clearly that one-third of the jobs in Canada come as a result of exports. We know that 50 per cent of agricultural income comes as a result of exports. We know that if we do not trade, we die in economic terms. Having said that, I am amazed how often some of us seem to forget.

Sometimes in the phone-in programs farmers call and ask why we worry about markets outside of our country.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Why do we not have supply management for all of agriculture and concentrate solely on the domestic market? The answer to that is very simple, Mr. Chairman. It lies in the fact that 50 per cent of our agricultural income comes from exports. If we did not have access to those markets, we would lose, it would seem logical, 50 per cent of our agricultural community. We depend on that market, and the Free Trade Agreement gives us access to that market. That is why the cattle producers of Western Canada and cattle producers throughout Canada for the large part are so keen on the Free Trade Agreement.

In fact, the Canadian Cattleman's Association has been very impatient with us, even though as a Government we were committed to free trade, by the fact that we have not moved more quickly in that direction. That is why the Canadian pork producers are so supportive. They know we sell 30 per cent of our hogs into the U.S. If we do not have access to that market, then our own hog industry is in jeopardy.

As I travelled throughout this last campaign, I visited my Hutterite Colonies. Even the Hutterites do not always vote or as often as they should. Even though traditionally they do not take a great deal of interest in federal politics, this time they did because they are hog producers. They know in Manitoba how much they are dependent upon the American market. I think to a greater degree than ever before they voted as a result of that and they voted in favour of free trade because they voted for their own economic livelihood.

During the course of the campaign I heard many people express fears about the Free Trade Agreement. It is important to try to dispel those fears. People were afraid that somehow or other the deal was a threat to our social programs. Yet, when you asked our opposition where in the agreement is there a reference to social programs, they conceded there was none.

People were afraid, as we all know, that there was a threat to medicare. Yet when you asked the opposition where in the agreement is there a reference to medicare, they conceded there was none. People were afraid that there was some sort of threat to our cultural identity. Yet when you asked the opposition to refer to where in the agreement our cultural identity was threatened by the Free Trade Agreement, they conceded that there was no evidence. The opposition talked about a threat to our energy and to our livelihood and our ability to obtain control of energy. There was much confusion about pricing. Some of my opponents said that we could not sell energy to our customers for more than we sold it in Canada. That is not true, Mr. Chairman. In fact, Quebec Hydro has demonstrated that it can sell hydroelectricity to the State of New York at three times the price it sells to the Province of Quebec.

We, in the Province of Manitoba, have a massive development project in the North. The limestone does not make any sense to us unless we have access to American markets. There is no sense whatever. We produce hydroelectricity at a surplus. Under the Free Trade Agreement we will have a greater likelihood of developing long-term, vital long-term markets, for hydroelectricity in the U.S. The Free Trade Agreement will prevent the coal industry in North Dakota from setting import tariffs against that hydroelectricity going into the U.S.

What about the fear expressed so often that in times of shortage we would have to sell our resources to the United States and could not look after our own interests? Unfortunately, sometimes we have short memories sometimes. Many of us have forgotten that Canada and other nations entered into agreements early in the 1970s specifying that in times of shortage there will be a sharing according to existing contracts in proportion with existing contracts. For example, if we in Manitoba sell 20 per cent of our electricity into the United States and consume 80 per cent of it ourselves and there is, for some reason, a shortfall in Manitoba we have agreed, and it seems to me morally logical as well as the law of the land at the moment to share that shortfall for the duration of that contract. The Americans would not have it any other way and we would not sell energy if it were any other way. If we were the customer, we would not have it any other way either.

The Free Trade Agreement is complex. Any document written by lawyers is inevitably complex.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): I am afraid that is true. It is a make-work project by lawyers. If we could all understand what lawyers wrote, perhaps we would not need lawyers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Brandon—Souris): I say that facetiously, of course. It is difficult to read legalese and it is not exciting to read. It reminds me of some of the history texts which I read and even some of the material which I have written, none of which is exciting to read. It is still exceedingly important to understand. Unfortunately, in this age of television we have this tremendous tendency to reduce the complex to simplicity which makes it easier for us but it can also be very misleading.

I see the Free Trade Agreement as an opportunity. We in Western Canada have always believed in opportunity. There are no guarantees but there were no guarantees when the pioneers came to Western Canada. When our forefathers came to Western Canada there were no guarantees of success. There was no guarantee the region would be productive and there was no guarantee that there would be markets for what was produced. There was a willingness to take a risk. First because the people who came believed in themselves.

I believe that we as Canadians must continue to believe in ourselves. I say with some sadness that sometimes I believe we are our own worst enemies. For whatever reason, Canadians have a certain inclination to develop an inferiority complex. As a result of that inferiority complex, we cannot compete with others because they are larger but I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that we throughout our history have demonstrated that it is not the size of the nation that is important, it is the quality of the people who constitute the nation.

I believe our history demonstrates that we have the capacity to be a world leader. We have the capacity to trade with our American friends to the south. I believe, given the opportunity we as a nation are about to take that opportunity and we will prove that we can in the future do as we have done in the past. We can do with it in such a fashion that we will build a future. We should take that opportunity, grow with it, and build a future that is important, not only for ourselves, but for our children and generations that will come after us.

The pioneers who settled western Canada did not think only of themselves, but of other generations. They thought of their children and grandchildren. We as a nation have a responsibility to also think of our children and grandchildren. The Free Trade Agreement represents for our children and grandchildren a future on which all of us can build.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Chairman, I would like to compliment the staff of the House of Commons for making me feel at home on this the night of my maiden speech by turning the clocks to Pacific Standard Time, the time in my riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt. I would also like to take this opportunity to thank all of the people in that riding for their faith in me and returning a member of the New Democratic Party to the House of Commons for the first time in more than 30 years.

The last member of the New Democratic Party to sit in the House was Owen Lewis Jones who sat in the House between 1948 and 1958. At that time he had a number of concerns about the area that are still shared today, concerns about agriculture, and productivity of the farmers. Those are still some of the concerns of the Okanagan and certainly concerns that I share with the farmers of that area.

The riding of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt is an interesting riding with four major regions. The Merritt area is heavy in mining, ranching, and forestry. The Similkameen area shares in common with the Okanagan region the major thrust of tourism and agriculture. The area of the boundary country is also agriculture and forestry, along with mining. It is a diverse area taking in many things of interest. In particular, Grand Forks is an area that has an interesting culture with a Doukhobor background. It also has a history that goes back into the early days of British Columbia.

One of the problems in our area, particularly in the Merritt area, but shared by the whole Okanagan—Similkameen region, is that in British Columbia the unemployment rate is approximately 2 per cent higher than the average for the rest of Canada. The Okanagan region is 2 per cent above that. In the City of Merritt the unemployment rate adjusted is 24.4 per cent, and unadjusted of those employable over 15 years of age and under 65 is pushing 37 per cent. This is something that we as Members of the House have to work toward solving. I as a Member of that region intend not to sit in the corner and say nothing, but to speak up in the House on matters such as this, and point out to the House that that is unacceptable anywhere in Canada, and certainly is unacceptable in the region that I represent.

Another large factor is that a major portion of the population of the Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt area is the seniors population. Recently I read that the population of seniors over 65 is 11 per cent in Canada. In the area of Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt there is more than double that. The town of Osoyoos where I come from and reside has a seniors level over 65 of some 28 per cent. The neighbouring small community of Oliver has a seniors population of 35 per cent. The average over-all is somewhat double the national average. More has to be done in my area particularly to ensure that seniors are looked after.

In talking to seniors and going through facilities throughout the past couple of years, I find that there is a definite lack of geriatric research. There are problems for seniors because there are not ample facilities for those seniors. If the facilities are present, there are other factors that they find difficult. Transportation in the area is difficult in small areas, and that is something that we as Members of this House have to deal with.

Seniors are also frightened by the unexpected and the unknown. In this particular case, the unknown that frightens seniors is the particular Bill that is before the House now. Seniors do not know and cannot receive an assurance from the Government that social programs are not part of the deal.

Mr. Crosbie: They have had the assurance a thousand times.

Mr. Whittaker: Besides the assurance they need more than loud words from the Minister for International Trade from St. John's. They need something in writing, an amendment. The very fact that social programs have not been put in that agreement leaves the matter open to interpretation.

Mr. McDermid: Name the article, name the chapter that it is under.

Mr. Whittaker: That is exactly what I am saying, Sir. If you read it, you would know—

Mr. McDermid: I've read it more times than you ever have.

Mr. Whittaker: —that in fact they were not in the agreement, and should have been put in the agreement. The Minister has admitted that there were certain things that could not be dealt with in that agreement such as subsidies. They should have been dealt with by the Minister. They should have been dealt with by our negotiator. It is unacceptable that they are not and have not been in that agreement.

Our seniors deserve better than that in their golden years. They deserve the assurance. They should have that assurance, not only from the Minister, but from both sides in this deal, both Canada and the United States, that their futures will be looked after; that they do not have to worry about medicare or their social programs. It is unacceptable that those have not been put in the agreement.

In the preamble to Bill C-2 it states that the Free Trade Agreement is:

to promote productivity, employment, financial stability and the improvement of living standards, to establish a climate of greater predictability for Canadians to plan and invest with confidence and to compete more effectively in the United States and global markets,

I would like to give an example of the type of confidence that we have in the Government. In my area there was a small utility company called West Kootenay Power and Light. In that area we were very proud of that small utility. It provided power to some five regional districts. In those regional districts Canadians at least had control of that utility. Two years ago, after the dismantling of the Foreign Investment Review Agency by the Government, over the objections of my constituents, the Government sold West Kootenay Power and Light to Utilicorp of the United States. That company could not even purchase another utility in many of the states of the United States, but we in Canada sold that utility to the United States. We have been assured by the Members that, if we do not want to sell anything, we don't have to sell it.

• (2250)

That was a case, Mr. Chairman, where we did not want to sell West Kootenay Power and Light. Where is it? It is in the hands of the Americans. At the present time, the same Americans are in the Okanagan trying to push through a gas and oil turbine plant, a plant which would threaten the environment in that area, an environment to which this Government has paid only lip service. We in the New Democratic Party are going to fight for a safe environment for future generations.

That, I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, is only the start of what is to come under this Free Trade Agreement—the sale of our utilities, the sale of our future. We are having a sale on our resources.

In my region of the country, the wine industry and the soft fruit industry are now down the tube. That is not something that is going to happen in the future. It is something that is happening now, in anticipation of the Free Trade Agreement coming into force and effect. I have friends and acquaintances who are pulling up their soft fruit trees—their peach trees, their cherry trees. This is all in anticipation of the coming into force of the Free Trade Agreement.

Our fruit growers need more than lip service from this Government. What they need is the assurance that they will be able to compete effectively. They do not want to be sold down the river by this Government, with no program of compensation put in place for them.

In the Okanagan, there are 210 farms involved in grape growing, comprising some 1,400 acres and accounting for gross receipts in excess of $10 million a year. It is a fledgling industry. When the California wine industry was at the same stage of development, the U.S. Government saw fit to provide protection for it against competition from Europe. We in this country have decided that our fledgling wine industry is to be sacrificed on the altar of free trade. That is unacceptable.

The B.C. wine industry is a part of the future of the Okanagan. It plays a major role in terms of both tourism and agriculture. It is a necessary part of the romance of the Okanagan Valley. It is something that those travelling through the Okanagan can enjoy. In my riding alone, there are eight wineries, all of which are threatened by the Free Trade Agreement. We produce good wines. They are wines that should be available here in Parliament, in preference to French wines. We should be selling our B.C. wines here in the halls of Parliament.

Mr. McDermid: I can tell the Hon. Member that Canadian wines are available in the parliamentary dining room, and at the various social functions held by the Parliament of Canada. I invite him to go to the parliamentary dining room to see the number of good Canadian wines that are available.

Mr. Whittaker: I would like to see more of our good Canadian wines available within these hallowed halls.

Mr. Beatty: Surely not in the halls of Parliament.

Mr. Whittaker: Mr. Chairman, I have here in my hand a letter from a grape grower in Summerland, British Columbia, the owner of El Racimo Vineyards. In his letter, this person states:

The problem is quite simple to delineate. Once I have to pull out the grape vines on my land I am stuck! I will have 10 acres with a mortgage and family to support. No income. No job. No retraining program. No viable means of relocating to find employment with the debt load that I will have to sustain. No alternate crop. No means of disposing of my property (there being little demand for farm property in the Okanagan Valley nowadays). No money (since the bank wants the compensation package to protect its equity in the property).

This individual is not the only one who has this type of concern. Reference was made earlier this evening to a gentleman in the Summerland area who could not get funding, a gentleman by the name of Bill Summers. In fact his plight was raised in the House during the last

Parliament. Because of the shortened process, he was not allowed to appear before the legislative committee.

Mr. Summers telephoned me before I left for Ottawa, requesting that he be permitted to appear before the parliamentary committee studying the Bill. He wants to tell Members of Parliament how unfair the Free Trade Agreement is, and of the uncertainty it holds for the grape growers in the Okanagan Valley.

Mr. McDermid: Tell us about the GATT decision.

Mr. Whittaker: I would be pleased to tell you about the GATT decision. The Free Trade Agreement was signed in October; the GATT decision came down in December.

Mr. McDermid: When was the GATT panel struck?

Mr. Whittaker: That is the situation with respect to GATT. Under the present structured compensation package, this gentleman will receive substantially less than he would normally make. The compensation package that has been put together by this Government doesn't do the job for farmers. Certainly the fact that the compensation package is what it is reflects the fact this Government has not done a proper research job.

The compensation package provides that farmers will be paid approximately $1,100 to pull out their vines, with $7,000 being provided to plant new vines. They are told that they have to upgrade, and they know that they have to upgrade. But, in order to get the upgraded grapes into their orchards, they will have to incur a cost of $11,500 an acre. Right off the bat, they are into a negative position.

That is not the crowning point. It takes approximately five years to get those vines into full production. What do these people do for a living while they are awaiting a yield from the upgraded crop? Do they simply sit on their thumbs? Will this Government provide them with financial assistance? Our grape growers are placed in an untenable position.

I had occasion to speak to one farmer recently, an individual who was over 50 years of age, and he said to me: "What am I going to do? I have put every penny I have into this farm. I have equipment that isn't good for anything but growing grapes. Some of my land isn't viable for anything but grapes. What do I do? If I switch to apples, I lose the investment I have in my equipment."

That is the effect the Free Trade Agreement has on the grape growers in my region. The soft fruit growers are placed in the same situation. When is a proper compensation package going to be put together for them, such that they can take comfort from the fact that they have some means of support in their retirement years?

Many of the soft fruit growers in my region are looking to a means of supporting themselves in their retirement years. They have put everything they have into their farms, and they now need some assurance from this Government that they will have something to look forward to in their golden years.

Bill C-2 is not defensible. It is legislation that my constituents cannot live with. It is legislation which my constituents have asked me to speak out strongly against.

If amendments were allowed, I would propose an amendment to the following effect: For greater certainty, nothing in this agreement shall be interpreted so as to adversely affect Canada's social, cultural, environmental, agricultural, and regional development programs, nor impair any future federal or provincial Government in designing new policies and new programs in these fields.

Without an amendment along those lines, Bill C-2 is unacceptable to my constituents, unacceptable to British Columbians, and unacceptable to all Canadians.

Mrs. Jacques: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank you for recognizing me. I would like to take this opportunity to express my heartfelt thanks to my constituents in Mercier for their support during the last election. I would like to assure them of my renewed, complete commitment and co-operation on matters of concern to them. I am very proud to represent them for another term.

[English]

I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member for Vancouver South on his election as Speaker of this place. As well, given that I will be, this evening, putting forward my views on the Free Trade Agreement, I should like to take this opportunity to congratulate our former colleague, Pat Carney, and the Hon. Member for St. John's West on the work that they have done in connection with the Free Trade Agreement.

On November 21st, the people gave us a mandate to implement the Free Trade Agreement. "Let the people decide" stated the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Chairman, we now realize that during the elections the people decided. The Leader of the Opposition wanted to tear up the agreement. But the people decided on November 21st, and on a majority basis. They proudly and enthusiastically welcomed the Free Trade Agreement. The people know full well that new initiatives are needed to ensure significant economic growth.

Mr. Chairman, this agreement is in Canada's best interests. Through trade negotiations, we will make our trade secure, give it more scope. Some 20 per cent of Quebec's products are exported abroad, 75 per cent of which to the United States. Further, 250,000 jobs are directly or indirectly linked to Quebec's external trade. It is therefore of prime importance, Mr. Chairman, to open up borders between nations, and more particularly between Canada and the United States.

The elimination of tariffs and non-tariffs barriers imposed by the United States will benefit the Canadian and Quebec economies. Improved and enlarged access and the security provided by a long-term trade agreement, will create a climate under which the private sector will invest in Quebec. Those investments will involve very modern, world-scale facilities directed to the over-all North American market. This will result in an efficient and dynamic economy.

Let me take as an example the petrochemical industry, mainly based East of Montreal's limits, in my constituency of Mercier which harbours 49.8 per cent of that industry's jobs. The petrochemical industry also is active in the constituency of my colleague for Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies (Mr. Corbeil) and the constituency of the Hon. Member for Verchères (Mr. Danis). That industry will see a significant difference when the reduction of tariffs leads to increased exports and the industry's profitability. Canada is the major supplier of petroleum and refined petroleum products to the United States, with deliveries upwards of 750,000 barrels a day.

Mr. Chairman, several industries in my constituency will undoubtedly benefit from the Free Trade Agreement: Union Carbide, Pétromont, Kemtec and Soligaz. Soligaz is planning to export over 75 per cent of its production to the eastern United States. When the Free Trade Agreement is implemented, 15 to 20 per cent of the tariffs will fall. That will be very good.

Free trade means better jobs, better opportunities and better prices for thousands of Canadians. The Agreement opens the door to new challenges and new opportunities.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Chairman, those who stand to gain the most from the Free Trade Agreement are our children. For them, Canada will truly be a land of opportunity, growth and prosperity. They will use their many skills and talent, but more importantly, they will have all the tools they need to succeed. They will have access to the largest market in the world, the U.S. market.

The bilateral trade agreement will provide Quebec entrepreneurs with many opportunities. They will distribute their products to over 250 million American consumers. The Agreement will also open the door to world markets, because the American market is a world market.

Canada's prosperity depends largely on trade and millions of jobs depend on our ability to export our products.

The small part of the country which I have the honour and privilege to represent in the House of Commons has experienced economic difficulty during the past few years. Job losses associated with the shutdown of factories and companies created this situation. It was when the Liberals were in power, Mr. Chairman, that they closed four refineries. We worked hard to get the east end of Montreal back on its feet and we succeeded.

A refinery closed its doors at the time, in 1984, and we invested $10 million to save it.

Also, Mr. Speaker, since 1984, 2,500 jobs have been created in Mercier riding. I am proud to run as a Conservative.

I would also tell you, Mr. Speaker, that many companies have expanded and modernized in anticipation of free trade.

Indeed, the petro-chemical industry and others will enjoy increased productivity and return on investment. We will even see a very significant industrial redeployment.

Quebecers see the trade negotiations as a way to achieve five main objectives, namely to make Quebec a productive, competitive society, to develop and encourage investment, to create a substantial number of jobs, to reinforce its technological base and finally, Mr. Chairman, to fight rising protectionism.

In short, Quebec hopes to develop a dynamic economy that can adapt to its environment with more flexibility and to better seize the opportunities for change afforded by the prospect of internationalizing its markets.

I would like to add, Mr. Chairman, that during the election campaign, the Liberals and the NDP used dishonest and unfair tactics and they continue to do so in the House today; they amuse themselves by frightening old people, women and all those who benefit from social programs. You should be ashamed to do something like that.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that the Liberal candidate in my riding during the campaign went around saying, "Don't vote for her. She's pregnant and she won't look after you!" What a disgrace! And what a misogynist! Look where he is today! He stayed in Montreal. He did not come here to Ottawa.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to reassure the Canadian people, all seniors, women, everyone who benefits from social programs, by telling them that their social programs will never, ever be cut. That is not part of the free trade negotiations, as my colleague from Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt (Mr. Whittaker) said so well just now. He should be ashamed to say things like that and to frighten old people, to tell them that with the Free Trade Treaty, their old age security pensions will be cut. I find that ridiculous.

Also, Mr. Chairman, I would like to quote Mr. Broadbent: "The Prime Minister received a clear mandate. The Agreement with all its flaws received the people's approval. It would not be appropriate to oppose it now. I believe that we have exhausted every recourse."

But today, Mr. Chairman, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who is not even here tonight, tells us that and continues to delay passage of the Free Trade Bill. I find that shameful. It costs Canadians money—their taxes. How much do you think it costs to sit this evening?

So I would like to ask them to approve . . . I think that the people gave us a clear mandate. They want free trade and I hope that you will support it.

• (2300)

[English]

Mr. Fontana: Mr. Chairman, I feel proud and privileged to represent the people of London East and I thank them very much for their confidence.

First let me say that the announcement by the Deputy House Leader that he intends to invoke closure again tomorrow is totally unacceptable and irresponsible. What it means, again, is that the majority of people in Canada is denied the opportunity of putting forward its position to this Government. Members on this side of the House have a legitimate right to be here and have a mandate. They want to put forward their position to the Government. I agree that the Government has a mandate to govern, but it must govern responsibly. I suggest that the frequent use of closure motions essentially deny the rights of members on this side of the House to put forward the concerns of the majority of Canadians who are still very uncomfortable with this deal.

It is clear that we cannot stop this bad deal, but we can try to make it better. We propose to put forward some 26 amendments, if given the opportunity to do so.

As I said before, the Government has a mandate to govern. We have a mandate to put forward our position in a responsible fashion in order to convince the Government not to implement the agreement in its present form. This assertion is in question. It is also a fact that we on this side of the House have a mandate. We were elected to represent those frustrations, those concerns, and those fears of the majority of Canadians who still feel that this deal is a bad deal.

It is fair to say, even after spending close to $30 million of taxpayers' money, that the Government has failed to convince the vast majority of Canadians that this deal is good for them. However, the Government still tries to blame us for its inability to reassure the country.

As for the NDP, I might say that it is nice to see that its Members have finally decided to help us out in opposing the deal. I feel obliged to point out that if they had focused their attention on fighting the deal during the election, rather than on the ineffective and futile campaign that they waged, maybe we would not find ourselves in this unfortunate position. Mr. Bob White also said that.

During the Leaders' debate the Prime Minister called this deal a commercial document—no big deal and cancelable on six months' notice. That did not surprise me, considering that this is the same Prime Minister who was against free trade in 1983, perhaps because of similar concerns to those that I now have. The Prime Minister also asked Canadians to take a leap of faith. However, I suggest that that leap of faith is into a pool which has no water. We as Liberals want to put some water in that pool by proposing some very constructive and positive amendments, if given the opportunity to do so.

Perhaps the Prime Minister should have referred to the positions taken by his predecessors Sir John A. Macdonald, Robert Borden, and John Diefenbaker. These wise men all understood that a comprehensive bilateral agreement with the United States, one that does not adequately protect our fundamental social, cultural, and regional differences, would be dangerous. They were right then and we are right now.

This trade deal is more than a commercial document. It is more than an agreement on tariffs. It does not provide the safeguards to protect our unique Canadian way of life and our values.

These values are reflected in the best social programs in the world, in our regional development programs, and in our cultural and environmental policies. We have always been a much more caring and generous people toward each other.

Unlike our American friends, our great social programs such as UIC, pensions, and health care have happened because Canadian Governments have made them happen, not because of market forces or the good will of big business. This is why over 37 million people in the United States live without adequate medical coverage and more than one million were turned away from hospitals last year. Our country is more than a corporate balance sheet and its people are far more important than that.

My home town of London is a major medical centre. Does the trade deal mean that the rich U.S. hospital corporations can come here and buy Canadian hospitals? While the deal only covers health management services, and we know that hospitals are within provincial jurisdiction, that does not end this concern.

Article 2011 allows either country to claim compensation if the other one takes any action that "causes nullification or impairment of any benefit reasonably expected to accrue to that Party, directly or indirectly, under the terms of the agreement". This is a critical clause. It means that the U.S. can claim compensation if Canada takes some action, even if it is not mentioned in the agreement. Article 2011 could allow the U.S. to demand compensation should its hospital corporations be prevented from expanding their services in Canada. An amendment limiting the scope of Article 2011 should be entertained.

London also has many small manufacturing plants. I am a little concerned that goods, partially manufactured in America but finished in Mexico under the Maquiladora program, could flood this country with goods that we cannot compete with. Goods produced under Maquiladora should not be considered as U.S. origin products for the purposes of the FTA. This loophole is a killer for Ontario manufacturers. It will affect hundreds of jobs. We need safeguards and adjustment programs prepared to protect our Canadian workers before the fact, not after the fact.

Yes, the Americans are our friends and our allies. Yes, they are our greatest trading partner. But that does not mean that we have to give up our standards in the name of free trade. In fact, Mr. Ralph Nader really warned us that free trade means moving to a lower standard for our social and other programs.

Some people say that the Mulroney trade sell-out actually protects Canada. To these people I ask: If this were true, why then did we not achieve guaranteed access to the American market? Why were we not given exemption from their omnibus trade Bill? Why did we have to postpone the discussions on the crucial issue of what constitutes a subsidy?

I ask you, Mr. Chairman, who in their right mind would sign any document with a crucial definition that will remain unresolved for seven years? Is that not a classic case of putting the cart before the horse?

We already have 80 per cent free trade with the United States. We did not have to sell our souls for the other 20 per cent. We should have continued with sectoral agreements through GATT without compromise to achieve the same end.

This Government is determined to rush this agreement through at any cost and to use all tactics available to it, including closure, closure, closure, to achieve its goal.

I ask the Prime Minister in the spirit of reconciliation and healing that he himself admitted was needed after the election, whether he will he stop this parliamentary roller-coaster ride and allow for more public comment on the deal? Will he allow the House of Commons to deal with constructive and positive amendments to what he guaranteed Canadians during the election?

I am sure that the Minister for International Trade feels the same way as I do about this country. This country is a special country. It is our home and it provides our livelihood. Let me point out to Conservative Members that in the last century Sir John A. Macdonald acknowledged this when he said:

There are national considerations that rise far higher than the mere accumulation of wealth, than the mere question of trade

advantage: there is prestige, national status, and national dominion—

In preparation for the 21st century, and to be able to compete globally and not only with the United States, we must begin to invest more in education, more in research and development, more in training and retraining programs. In short, we have to start investing in our people to become leaders, not followers, and surely not a shadow of the United States in the North American continent.

It is an honour to be given a chance to stand up in this House to fight for my country's future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Valcourt: If I may, Mr. Chairman, as I rise for the first time in this new Parliament, I should like to thank the people in my Madawaska—Victoria riding who have trusted me and asked me to represent them again in this Parliament.

• (2320)

[English]

Someone said: "Let us hear from Main Street. Main Street has spoken. The people have decided". Since we have been in this place the last few days, I thought this was all over.

[Translation]

I thought that we had heard enough from the prophets of gloom and doom. I thought that the campaign of fear was over. Apparently it is not. They have not come to their senses, Mr. Chairman. One must wonder if those people who were elected and had called for an election . . . After all it was the leader of the Opposition who asked for an election where the Canadian people would decide. Well, back home, in my Madawaska—Victoria riding, the people decided for Canada. They decided for the future of Canada. They voted for us because they realized what was needed to succeed. You know, during the November 21 election, the Liberal Party made the mistake of trying to represent some people they did not believe in. They did not believe in them. They thought that Canadian businessmen, that men and women, young and old, were like them. They thought that these people lacked the necessary energy, enthusiasm and resources to attack new markets. That is what the Liberals think of Canadians.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

[English]

I was proud to be a Canadian the day after the election. After the campaign of fear that I witnessed, the people collectively pulled together and said: "We do not believe that crap. We are capable Canadians. We shall succeed". I was proud to be a Canadian.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Valcourt: That is what being a Canadian is all about.

On Sunday I was inadvertently watching Question Period and I saw the Right Hon. Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in a nice interview with Pam. There he was in his splendour telling us that he had caught the minds and the hearts of Canadians.

I do not have much experience in this House. I was a Member of Parliament for the first time in the last Parliament, but during this election campaign I had the occasion to visit a senior citizens' home in my riding of Grand Falls. I will never forget what I saw there. I never thought in my life as a young, naive politician, that people would sink so low as to scare poor, insecure people in a senior citizens' home. If, in order to get a vote, you have to get into a senior citizens' home, you have to go see a poor, old lady who is sick and tell her that she is going to lose her pension cheque, you are getting pretty low. That is a new high at being low. The NDP and the Liberals did that. That is what they did.

[Translation]

Mr. Chairman, I heard earlier a necktied Socialist refer to the Canadian identity. A necktied socialist is something dangerous! He referred to the Canadian identity we were going to be swallowed by those wicked Americans, they were going to strangle us Canadians. I am an Acadian from New Brunswick. I am from Northern New Brunswick, not an area where GM has big plants. The unemployment rate is high. We have fishermen. We have lumbermen. We have plenty of guts. We have farmers. We are Acadians, Francophones, a supposedly minority group in New Brunswick. You see, we Acadians in 1755, were the first to land in America. We came from France. Let me say to my colleagues from Quebec that Champlain, before going to their area, established Port-Royal in our area!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Valcourt: Looking into the Acadian people's history, a working people, a people who had to fight for their most basic rights, we had to fight for our schools, we had to fight for our hospital system. We had to fight to keep our language, our religion. And to hear a necktied socialist tell us that because we Acadians finally will be able to prosper, have a little money in our pockets, create jobs, we are going to become Americans? No, thank you. No way! We are not Americans. We are and will remain Acadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Valcourt: Mr. Chairman, . . .

[English]

You hear some of the Grits or the socialists talk about the Sale of Canada Act. We have sold Canada.

[Translation]

We sold the country down the river, so they say. I would like to ask him to come down in the Madawaska area. Do you know, Mr. Chairman, how I explained this to people at home? Let me tell you about the great city of Edmundston, the capital city of the Republic of Madawaska. The Republic of Madawaska is our area. In our area, we are next to the American border. Those wicked Americans, we see them every day. We visit. We go and have a beer on their side, they come and have a beer on our side. We fraternize.

In our area, Mr. Chairman, there is a large paper mill. It is now owned by Noranda, those wicked capitalists who create jobs, you know. They employ people.

In our area, there is a large paper mill, and I told everybody—there is a paper mill in our area and there is another one on the other side of the river. Some 800 feet across the river. There are two mills—one on the American side and one on the Canadian side. During the campaign, the socialist candidate and the Liberal candidate were saying: "Free trade is horrible! We are going to lose jobs. This will sell the country down the river."

Well I am telling you that they have been selling off the country for too long, much too long!

Back home I would say to them: Have you ever asked yourselves why in Edmundston . . . You, shut up!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Valcourt: Why do we have a paper mill in Edmundston, a huge paper mill which does not produce any paper? We do not make paper, we make pulp. We harvest our natural resources, our lumber, we take our big beautiful logs on the Verte River, we bring them to the mill, we stir a bit, we make paste and then we ship that to the United States and they make the paper. Do you know why? Because of the tariffs. Because if we make the paper in Canada they slap on a tariff when it gets to the border. So the mill is built in the United States and the paper is made in the United States. We have been shipping our natural resources down south for a good many years.

The people in the Atlantic . . . I see the former mayor of Moncton, the Member for Moncton, a man from the Atlantic who should know better and who spoke against the Free Trade Agreement. What did our fishing industry produce? We take a big cod. Back home we fish for cod, then what do we do with it? What? Do you know what we do with it? We freeze it and ship it whole to the border. And do you know what the Americans do when they see our big beautiful cod? They kiss it. Welcome! They take our cod to New England. They have their own people work on it.

Do you know what we would like to be able to do? We would like to take that same cod, cut it up ourselves in nice little filets, wrap them in attractive packages labeled "Made in New Brunswick" and then sell them to the Americans.

Mr. Chairman, when we are . . . You too shut up! When you think of the speeches we hear in the House . . . and this afternoon some Members were still talking about water. They still think we are going to divert the St. Lawrence River and reroute it through the United States. These projects do not make any sense! But those people, Mr. Chairman, they seem to think that the apocalyptic message they sent out during 51 days . . . But Canadians gave you a clear answer. You wanted Main Street to speak, Main Street has spoken!

Mr. Chairman, Christmas eve is drawing close. A moment ago I was listening to the previous speaker who was upset because we imposed closure. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, we ought to use the guillotine, and I am not too sure where, but certainly in the debates because Canadians have heard everything Members opposite had to say to scare them. They heard all the threats.

Older Canadians. I have a suggestion for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. When the next cheques are sent out, why not include a notice to the effect that, despite the free trade deal, they will get their cheques in February, they will get them in March, they will get them in April. Let's tell them!

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear, Réal Caouette! The bogey men!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Valcourt: Yes, the bogey men and the scare-crows, but this is Christmas time. Go and decorate your Christmas trees in peace! Stop scaring people. Accept the will of the Canadian people. Because the night of the election, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) were saying to Canadians they accepted the verdict. In a boxing ring, when the referee counts to ten and declares you out, you shut up and go home. That is all you can do.

The people have decided. They have legitimate concerns, of course, but if they want to know what the Free Trade Agreement really means, I tell them to go to the office of my colleague, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) who will be delighted to explain it to whoever is able to understand.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Kenora—Rainy River has the floor.

Mr. Nault: Mr. Chairman, it is a pleasure to have to follow a bit of comic relief. I know that it is a difficult time and a difficult night, with long hours. It is always nice to have someone be a bit of a clown.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nault: Unfortunately, this is a serious issue.

I would like to begin by taking this opportunity to thank the people from Kenora—Rainy River who have again gone back to the Party that got this country this far in so long.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Remember Trudeau.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would appreciate a little civility. The Hon. Member is making his maiden speech.

Mr. Nault: I want to take this opportunity to thank the people of Kenora—Rainy River for the honour of representing them in Parliament. I have been given the task of representing their collective views in this House.

Kenora—Rainy River is the fifth largest riding in Canada. It consists of a hardy breed of northerners who are very independent thinking and very proud of their part of the country.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Kenora—Rainy River is a very beautiful part of Canada, one which has potential not only in the natural resource sector but in tourism and the service industries. Agriculture is also a very significant aspect of the southern portion of the riding.

The Kenora—Rainy River riding has tremendous potential, potential that as yet has not begun to be tapped. That potential will be severely handicapped if this Free Trade Agreement goes through.

In an area like northwestern Ontario the need for the Government to take an active role is essential to achieving growth and prosperity. From the mid-1930s to the election of the Government in 1984, the strategic objective of successive Canadian Governments in trade negotiations has been to increase the standard of living of Canadians by obtaining improved and more secure access to foreign markets at reasonable costs which do not put our independence at risk and provide some flexibility to continue protecting a few industries that have difficulty competing with imports.

Why this Government has thrown those objectives out the window only God and their corporate friends can answer.

Because of the Government's need to pursue its political objectives, my riding stands to be a big loser under this agreement, as does all of northern Ontario. I guess the Tories already know this because all they have to do is look around and across the aisle to notice that only one of their Members out of twelve are left. The Hon. Member for Timiskaming must feel awfully lonely.

• (2340)

Mr. MacDougall: No, I feel great.

Mr. Nault: Due to the 1987 softwood lumber understanding and its grandfathering by Article 1910 of the agreement, the Government has in effect killed the softwood lumber industry in northern Ontario. Adam Zimmerman, chief executive officer and chairman of Noranda Forests Incorporated, recently stated that the lumber agreement cost Canada's forest products industry more than $1 billion in 1987. Does that not seem to be an odd way to reduce costs, raise real incomes, and create new jobs?

On behalf of those men and women who have lost their jobs because of the Government's lack of intestinal fortitude or guts, I would like to say thanks for nothing.

I will not apologize for the people of Kenora—Rainy River who have voted against the Free Trade Agreement. As the Liberal Party has continuously said over and over, we are in favour of trade. We are free enterprisers, but we believe our country has been sold down the river by this Government.

What is it that we as Liberals have against this particular Free Trade Agreement? Is it, as the Conservatives would lead us to believe, for political reasons, or is it truly because this is the most poorly negotiated deal in history?

We have given away our forestry industry and our agricultural sector. We have given away our energy resources, and more specifically control over these resources, to the point that policy in this sector will be controlled in Washington, not in the halls of the Legislatures of our great country.

Due to its hidden agenda which is to tie the hands of future Governments and to limit the role of the Government of Canada, the Government has entered into a harmonization of economic policy. What does this harmonization mean? To me, it means the same wages for workers in this country as for those in the U.S. It means less contribution by business for the benefits of workers. It means less unemployment insurance for Canadians in the long term. It means that pension moneys given by business will be eroded because of the pressure to compete with comparable American businesses to achieve a so-called level playing field.

I am very ashamed that this Government will be allowed to widen even further the gap between the rich and the poor.

The Tory Government is in the process of creating a fragmented society, a society which will not nurture the areas of the country which are vulnerable to boom and bust cycles, areas like northern Ontario which rely so heavily on natural resources and the industries that go along with these resources.

Under the Free Trade Agreement, subsidizing industry during these difficult times will be prohibited. So much for regional development in regions of Canada like Kenora—Rainy River. I suggest that if members on the government side really care about the regions of the country which need government assistance, they should join with me in recommending an amendment to the FTA which would allow maintenance of regional development.

Similar to the pressures to harmonize our economic and social policies with those of the U.S., there will also be eventual pressure by business to standardize Canadian and U.S. environmental protection. This is a very obvious conclusion.

In order for companies in Canada to compete with companies on the other side of the border, their production costs must be of an equal nature. Canadians cannot allow this to happen, because if they do—and the record of past American Governments proves how small a priority the environment is to them—future generations of Canadians will never forgive us for our insensitive and uncaring policies of the 1980s. The environment and the protection of our environment are our gifts to future generations. Let us as parliamentarians never lose sight of this objective.

During the election campaign, the citizens of Kenora—Rainy River continually indicated to me their disgust of the American style of politics used by the Tory Party. One particular advertisement which the Tories used on the radio went like this: “A vote against the Free Trade Agreement is like shooting yourself in the foot, but a vote for the NDP and John Turner and the Liberal Party is like shooting yourself in the head”. Is this any way to set an example to the young people of Canada who are listening to this type of garbage?

The last election campaign was like a nightmare. It got so bad that I had people tell me at the door that they were no longer watching the news at night. Seniors in particular could not believe how downright slimy this Party had stooped to become. I am sure this election campaign will go down in history as being the most distasteful the electorate of Canada has ever seen.

What I disliked most, if it is possible to dislike something the most considering the number of flaws in the deal, was the virtual giveaway of our ability to regulate American foreign investment in Canada. We in the Liberal Party have always believed that foreign investment is good for Canada, but simply to open the doors to foreign investment without insisting on some performance rules, job creation or screening, is just plain suicide.

It is essential that the Conservative Party exercises its right as the ruling Party to allow amendments which will restrict the complete takeover of Canada by American interests. If these amendments are not forthcoming, the fragile economy of northern Ontario will be in jeopardy. I respectfully ask government Members and all Members of the House to consider the implications as I have outlined them.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, I rise more in sorrow than in anger. I have been here pretty well all day waiting to hear one original thought, one new argument, one new point that any member of the Official Opposition or the unofficial opposition could bring up in connection with the Free Trade Agreement, and there was not one new point. There were no new points. We have been subjected all day today and all day yesterday to a series of repetitious points, the same hackneyed, false points that were made during the election campaign by the same false, hackneyed people, some of whom got elected to the House.

The best illustration of the kind of campaign that was waged against the Free Trade Agreement I can think of was when a Liberal candidate in Newfoundland, who turned out to be successful, met a young woman walking down the road in a rural area. She was eight months pregnant and he went up to her and said: “You know, that is the last free one you will be having”. That is the kind of campaign that was waged against the Free Trade Agreement by Liberal candidates, and they should be ashamed of themselves for waging such a campaign.

The proof of the pudding will be in the eating. I prophesize that in a year's time, in two years' time, in three years' time, in four years' time, we will not hear another word from members of the Opposition about the Free Trade Agreement because they will be afraid to utter a word against it when the next election comes. We are hearing the last kick at the cat by this mangy collection opposite.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: It was Mark Twain—

Mr. Boudria: He is a well-known Canadian.

Mr. Crosbie: He was an American. There are some well-known Canadians, but it was Mark Twain who said that if you pick up a starving dog and make him prosperous, he will not fight you. That is the principal difference between a dog and a man. That is also the principal difference between a man and a Liberal or a man and an NDPer. We will make them prosperous against their own will, against the struggle they have put up against the Free Trade Agreement. The difference between them and the dog is that they will be biting us in four years' time instead of thanking us.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I came across another statement today that reminded me of many of the Hon. Members opposite. Someone, though I do not know who, said that it was unfortunate that a mere 90 per cent of politicians give the other 10 per cent a bad name. There is an hon. gentleman back there from some district in Vancouver. He had to scoot all over B.C. to find a district that would accept him. I am glad to see he snook back in. It is nice to see him back here because he is not a bad chap for a socialist.

• (2350)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I want to deal for a couple of moments with something which the Member from Malpeque said today about regional development. How long, oh Lord, do we have to go on with this talk about regional development and how the Free Trade Agreement is somehow going to put a stop to regional development policies in Canada? How could we put a stop to them when they are in the very Constitution itself? That this country is dedicated to overcoming regional disparity is in the very Constitution.

Many hon. persons opposite are supporters of GATT. The critic for the NDP would not come to our GATT meeting in Montreal last week because his Leader would not pass on the invitation to him. I personally wanted to see him at the GATT to see how he would perform when he saw there was a GATT, when he got himself torn away from his fixation with the U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I was hoping to see him and the Hon. Member from "Winnipeg Soft Centre" at the GATT as well but, no, he did not turn up at the GATT.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know where the Member from "Winnipeg Soft Centre" was when the GATT meeting was on. I am glad to see the Hon. Member for Sudbury is back in the House. I have never heard him make sense, but he is often amusing and that makes up for it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I would like to suggest that the Minister stick to the subject, though I know it is difficult since he has not read the deal. I very much hope that he will come across with some comments about this trade deal rather than about extraneous subjects.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Chairman, we can all be thankful at what we are saving his students from.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member from "Windsor—Woeful" should just sit back and relax.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Let us look at the Free Trade Agreement and regional development. There happens to be a General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade that was entered into by the Liberal Government of the day in 1947, I believe it was. Ever since 1947 there has been a subsidies code of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. I know that this is news to the Hon. Member from "Winnipeg Soft Centre" who has never looked at the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trades. I do not know what he has ever looked at frankly, except the mirror.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Article 8 and Article 11 of the Subsidies Code of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade read like this: "Subsidies are used by Governments to promote important objectives of social and economic policy. Among such objectives are the elimination of industrial economic and social disadvantages of specific regions.

In other words, ever since 1947, Governments have been given the imprimatur. They have been given permission. They have been given consent. They have been given the go ahead. They have been given the okay. They have been given the nod to go ahead and subsidize within their own countries for certain purposes, to promote important objectives of social and economic policy, including the elimination of industrial, economic and social disadvantages of specific regions. I am from a region that has suffered from industrial, economic and social disadvantages for 400 years, and I am the living proof of it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Do you think for one moment that I am going to support a Free Trade Agreement that does away with the possibility of assistance from my own region which suffers from industrial, economic and social disadvantages? Do you think that the Premier of Newfoundland—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Crosbie: That is why you got 2,000 votes in my district and I got 25,000 votes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I am too modest to mention this but I happened to get 60.5 per cent of the vote, and I have a mandate and I have a "womandate" as well.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I want you to go down to Branch—92 per cent of the vote, 92 per cent! When I find that other miserable 8 per cent, God help them.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: As I was saying, the Free Trade Agreement was negotiated under the terms of the GATT and incorporates certain provisions of the GATT, including the GATT subsidies code. This means that Governments in Canada can continue to provide for economic growth and development. Why then did the opposition Parties go around this country, particularly in Atlantic Canada, with the vicious untruth that somehow this agreement was to interfere with regional development in this country? All that is in the Free Trade Agreement is a commitment for us to negotiate with the Americans to see if we can agree on a common definition of trade distorting subsidies, but 96 nations in the GATT have not as yet been able to agree on what these are. We want to see whether we can agree with the Americans. If they suggest a definition that we disagree with, we say no, n-o, no.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: There is not an American in the world that I am afraid of. There is not a member of the NDP or a member of the Liberal Party that I am afraid of. There is no one I am afraid of, Mr. Chairman. I can say no to anyone, except my wife.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: There is nothing in this Free Trade Agreement that endangers Canadian regional development policies of general application across this country.

We heard, of course, the myth and the exaggerations about social policies. We have already had a social policy that was challenged in the United States of America. The two opposition Parties knew of it. The Hon. Leader of the Opposition knew all about it. This famous lawyer headed up McMillan Binch in a pinch. You could find him at McMillan Binch for a number of years. He had to know all about this, because if he did not know all about it himself he had to the high-powered help to tell him about it. They used to take him by the hand and lead him down to Winston's every day for lunch and lead him back after lunch.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: In 1985 one of our social programs was challenged, Mr. Chairman. You are certainly well qualified to be Mr. Speaker. In fact, I hope some day to be looking at you and seeing you in an upper place wherever that might be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: One of our social programs, unemployment insurance for fishermen, was challenged in 1985 by a group of American fish importers or somebody down there who did not like competition from Canada in the fishing industry. They challenged the unemployment insurance program for fishermen and claimed it was a subsidy.

Who threw it out? Who overturned the case? Who gave it the boot? Who took it by the slack of the drawers and put it right out through the door? The Americans took it by the slack of the drawers, not Canadians, not Ukrainians, not Uruguayans, not Peruvians. Americans took this stupid case by the slack of the pants and threw it out through the door because they said that it was a social program of general application, and therefore it could not be challenged.

The Deputy Chairman: I regret that I have to interrupt the Hon. Minister.

Some Hon. Members: No, no.

Mr. Crosbie: We have another nine hours tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: It being twelve o'clock midnight, pursuant to Order made Friday, December 16, 1988, it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the Bill again at the next sitting of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

LABRADOR FISHERMEN'S BENEFITS—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I have sent the following letter to the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Ms. McDougall):

Fishermen and plant workers on the Labrador coast feel that they are discriminated against under the U.I. regulations. The benefit period now ends May 15. Yet ice is in the bays on the Labrador coast until the end of June. During that time it is impossible for fishermen to fish and, therefore, for plant workers to work . . .

. . . Labrador fishermen feel they are economically punished because of a fact of geography. Through no fault of their own and because of forces beyond their, or anybody else's, control they are without income for six weeks every year.

What other group in Canada is systematically denied income every year simply because of geography?

. . . In the long term what is needed is an income support plan for fishermen separate altogether from U.I. But until such time as that is introduced we must make U.I. work, inadequate as it is.

The fishermen on the Labrador coast are among the most disadvantaged in Canada. They have struggled for centuries to eke out a living . . . But the fact remains that at the present they need a cash income during the winter months including the period from May 15 to June 30. The fishermen of Labrador are asking for simple justice when they ask for the extension of U.I. to the end of June.

GENERAL ELECTION

TERREBONNE CONSTITUENCY—CHOICE OF THE FUTURE

Mr. Jean-Marc Robitaille (Terrebonne): Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin by thanking the people of Terrebonne for the confidence they showed in me on November 21. By giving me a majority vote, they also gave a majority vote to the Progressive Conservative Government and its extraordinary leader, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). For the second time in a row, the men and women of Terrebonne elected a member of the Progressive Conservative Party. I shall endeavour to live up to the confidence they have shown in me.

The people of Terrebonne wanted someone who knows where he stands. They did not want a Liberal or a socialist, Mr. Speaker, as neither party knows where it stands. The people of Terrebonne, like the rest of Canada, showed great political savvy by refusing to give in to the unfair scare tactics used by the Liberals and the socialists.

The people of Terrebonne, in their unbounded wisdom, intelligence and self-assurance, chose the way of the future. The people of Terrebonne, Mr. Speaker, chose the way of free trade because they know that it will be good for them. We, the Conservative Party, know where we stand, and we shall keep our word.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED HIGH-SPEED COMMUTER RAIL NETWORK AROUND CITIES

Mr. Alan Redway (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, once the free trade legislation has been enacted, the Government must quickly turn its attention to the problems of Canada's urban frontiers, our cities.

S. O. 31

To some extent three of those problems, the lack of affordable housing, inadequate public transportation, and the need to clean up the environment, are all linked. The development of a modern, high-speed commuter rail network around our cities would not only help solve transportation problems, but would also provide the infrastructure necessary to increase substantially the supply of less expensive land available for badly needed housing, while at the same time reducing pollution and conserving energy.

The linchpin is the high-speed commuter rail network. Rail is a federal responsibility and no Progressive Conservative Government has ever failed to build a railway to solve a problem. Let us hope this one will not be the exception.

CHILDREN

THIRD WORLD DEBT BLAMED FOR DEATHS OF CHILDREN

Mr. John F. Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in the last 12 months at least half a million children in the Third World have died because of a slowdown or reversal of economic progress in their countries. UNICEF, in its annual report released yesterday, places the blame squarely on the crushing burden of debt owed by these countries to banks and financial institutions in the industrialized world.

UNICEF has called for a summit of world leaders to reduce this deadly accumulation of debt. It has asked for Canada's assistance in promoting such a summit. As one of the rich countries in the world we have an obligation to accede to the request.

I call upon the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to make every effort to ensure that such a summit will be held. In 1989 the UN will be adopting the Convention on the Rights of the Child. The protection of these rights, however, must start now.

GENERAL ELECTION

SUPPORT OF THE POPULATION OF LOUIS-HÉBERT

Mrs. Suzanne Duplessis (Louis-Hébert): Mr. Speaker, my first words are to congratulate you on your reelection as Speaker of this Hon. House. On November 21st, constituents of Louis-Hébert returned me here and I want to thank them today. Like my first term, this second one entails heavy responsibilities, but I am convinced that with the support of all my constituents and people in the community, I can perform my role in an efficient and dignified manner.

As in the past, I intend to keep listening to the people in Sainte-Foy, Sillery and Cap-Rouge, and my constituency office will always be open to all.

In this holiday season, I would like to extend to all those I am privileged to represent in this House my best wishes, and may the New Year bring peace, health and happiness to you and members in your family!

NATIONAL CAPITAL

CALL FOR ENLARGEMENT OF REGION

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, earlier this year the united counties of Prescott—Russell and the municipalities of Clarence Township, Cambridge Township, North and South Plantagenets, Plantagenet Village, and the Town of Rockland signed resolutions asking that the National Capital Region be enlarged to include their own municipalities.

After Question Period I intend to move in the House of Commons a Private Member's Bill to enlarge the National Capital Region to give that privilege to residents of the constituency that I have the honour and privilege to represent. I hope to have the support of all Hon. Members in this House so this Bill can be enacted as soon as possible.

FREE TRADEJOB CREATION

Mrs. Gabrielle Bertrand (Brome—Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, during the last elections, my Liberal opponent travelled around the constituency claiming everywhere and on every forum that free trade would have nothing worthwhile, and that it would be detrimental to Brome—Missisquoi. Not only was he completely wrong, but in so doing he insulted the hundred or so entrepreneurs in my constituency who show remarkable dynamism. Indeed, between 1984 and 1988, more than $1 billion were invested in Brome—Missisquoi; 1,600 permanent jobs and 1,400 temporary ones were created. In our area, we are not afraid of free trade; in our area, we have confidence in the future. As proof of what I said, two weeks ago Dominion Textiles, a supposedly vulnerable company, announced the creation of 200 new jobs in Magog. Yesterday, General Electric announced a $40 million investment, the creation of 210 new jobs and the consolidation of 150 jobs. This means 560 jobs over two weeks for Brome—Missisquoi! The Leader of the Opposition may call that marginal, but to me this involves the future of young people in my constituency and I feel this is excellent news.

MINES AND MININGINVESTMENT BY VAL D'OR COMPANY IN UNITED STATES

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, Val-d'Or's Société Espalau is investing in the United States and, through Forage Moderne, it has just opened a new American branch plant which will operate under the name of Modern International Inc. This company will be carrying out exploratory drilling in the United States, mainly in Nevada. It expects to begin work as early as February 1989.

Seventy per cent of Modern International shares will be held by the firm Forage Moderne of Val-d'Or. Through this investment it will gain access to a new market in a region where mining exploration is at its peak.

That, Mr. Speaker, is the kind of initiative taken by far-sighted Abitibi businessmen in the context of free trade.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRSSEWAGE TREATMENT PLANTS

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, right now, in almost every municipality in eastern Ontario and across Canada, city officials are being faced with rapidly deteriorating municipal infrastructures. The capital costs involved for adequate rehabilitation are well beyond the capacity of any local government.

Sewage treatment plants need millions of dollars to upgrade them to an acceptable capacity level. In eastern Ontario alone, 38 plants fail to meet provincial standards, often resulting in raw sewage being discharged directly into our rivers. This type of pollution is an environmental crime and it has to stop.

The federal Government must co-operate with the provincial and municipal Governments and pay its share of these costs. I urge the House to act swiftly on this matter.

CHILDRENPLIGHT OF POOR CHILDREN

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, Christmas is a time of good food, family, and friends. At Christmas we indulge our loved ones, especially our children.

How sad that this Christmas over one million children in impoverished families will be disappointed. How ironic that, in a country as rich as ours, one out of every six children is denied proper nutrition, housing, and clothing. We allow the potential of all of these children to be jeopardized by a miserly and outdated attitude towards social policy.

● (1415)

The Child Poverty Action Group tells us that over 300,000 children in Ontario, our richest province, are poor. In my own province of British Columbia 126,300 children are disadvantaged, much higher than the national average, and they are going to school hungry.

The National Council on Welfare warns us that the federal Government is systematically cutting all child benefits by 3 per cent a year.

TRADE

PLANETARY CHALLENGE OF THE 21ST CENTURY

Mrs. Nicole Roy-Arcelin (Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, forced to compete with other economic unions in the rest of the world, Canada had no option but to secure its fair share of the market with its powerful and friendly ally, the United States, so as to face up to the many worldwide challenges of the 21st century.

The socialists and the Liberal Party, two reactionary factions whose ideas have yet to reach beyond the threshold of the 20th century, would have us revert to the horse and buggy days of our forefathers.

Mr. Speaker, McLuhan correctly predicted that technological progress, media and communications development, as well as more numerous economic ties between nations would propel us further away from the moribund economic nationalism which leading members of the Opposition are attempting to revive.

Mr. Speaker, taking a leaf from the book of the Hon. Member for Montmorency—Orléans (Mr. DeBlois), I use a dead language so as to be better understood: Quousque tandem abutere, Catalina, patientia nostra? How long will you Liberals and socialists abuse the patience of the population?

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CONSTITUTION

QUÉBEC'S PROPOSED SIGN LANGUAGE LAW

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In its judgment, the Supreme Court of Canada declared as it related to the Québec sign law that it was clear that it was within the power of the Québec National Assembly to promote the French language as the predominant priority principal language of the province, but not at the expense of excluding minority language rights.

Does the Prime Minister approve of the legislation introduced by Premier Bourassa, applying the so called inside-outside formula which excludes the use of non-French signs outside business establishments? Does he think that that Bill meets the test of the Supreme Court of Canada judgment?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in the last two days I have indicated that I neither approve of it nor do I believe that it meets the test of what the Supreme Court said. I indicated this in response to the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce and other members of the Leader of the Opposition's Party.

I indicated this morning that the position I have held and continue to hold is that I hope the Government of Quebec could find, as the Supreme Court suggested, a way of accommodating those two fundamental principles of respect for the French speaking dimension of Quebec and respect for the principles enshrined in the Quebec Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

That in regard to the specific issue is the way we wish it to be done. Anything less than that of course is disappointing to us. I have conveyed this to the House time and time again. I have responded to members of the Leader's Party. In respect of the protection of minority rights in the Province of Quebec, both the Member for Mount Royal and the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce complemented me and congratulated the Government on its stand on Monday and Tuesday.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): If the Prime Minister is of the view that the legislation introduced by the Premier of Quebec does not meet the test of the Supreme Court judgment, as he just said, how can he approve of that legislation?

APPLICATION OF NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said several times that, in general, he is against applying the notwithstanding clause. Does the Prime Minister approve of the use of this notwithstanding clause in the Quebec Bill itself as a way to get around the Quebec Charter of Rights and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and to counter the effects of the judgement rendered by the Supreme Court of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was and remain opposed to having a notwithstanding clause in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

I was opposed to the Canadian Government's making such a concession to the provinces in 1981-82. It was not Quebec, but other provinces, that sought this concession. Mr. Bourassa did not request the notwithstanding clause; he was not there. The clause was a concession to the provinces. If I am against the clause, I am of course against using it if such use is contrary to the fundamental rights contained in the Quebec and Canadian Charters of Rights and Freedoms. I do not blame the Government of Quebec or the Government of Ontario for the existence of the clause. Neither Premier Peterson nor Premier Bourassa asked for it; it was a concession of the Canadian Government to the provinces. And unfortunately, today, using this clause has a negative effect on the Quebec Charter and the Canadian Charter of fundamental rights. That is my position and I think that, in essence, it is shared by almost all Hon. Members.

PROVISIONS OF QUÉBEC BILL—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, let us see what position we have obtained from the Prime Minister this afternoon. He has admitted that, in his opinion, the Quebec Bill now before the National Assembly does not meet the test of the Supreme Court of Canada judgment. Therefore, logically, he ought to disapprove of that Bill but has not said so.

He says he is against the notwithstanding clause, and yet the Quebec Bill employs that notwithstanding clause. Therefore, logically, he should not approve of the Bill, but we cannot get a statement from him as to his opinion on the Bill before the Quebec National Assembly.

May I ask the Prime Minister a further question?

Mr. Masse: You are not in a courtroom.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Hon. Minister says that I am not in court here. This is the highest court in the land. This is the House of Commons of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Both of the Prime Minister's admissions, on the test of the Supreme Court of Canada as it is reflected in the Bill, and the notwithstanding clause, should lead him to the conclusion that he cannot approve of the Quebec Bill.

I want to put it in other terms. Does the Prime Minister believe that the Quebec Bill, in its suppression of the use of minority languages outside commercial business establishments in Quebec, offends the Quebec Charter of Rights and the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms, and if so, does he not believe that that Bill should never have been introduced in its present form?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend is asking me a question his colleagues asked me on Monday and Tuesday, and the answer remains the same. I answered the question very clearly and very specifically.

The Quebec Bill, in my judgment, clearly does not meet the tests set out by the Supreme Court of Canada, and therefore, clearly, if it fails to do that, one of the tests being respect for the provisions of the Charter of Rights and Freedoms in the Province of Quebec, surely in the absence of that, it offends the Charter. Therefore, as I have indicated, anything that offends the Charter is something that I find unsatisfactory both as a legislator and as a Canadian.

Mr. Nunziata: That's pretty strong. That's strong language, Brian.

Mr. Mulroney: I—

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has asked a question which is of great importance to the whole country. The Prime Minister is responding. I am sure Hon. Members would want the Prime Minister to continue his answer.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, on October 26 in Sherbrooke, I said that in my maiden address in the House of Commons I said then that it was fundamental to the idea of Canada to ensure that the rights of our linguistic ethnic minorities are protected at all times. I believe we have done so with the Meech Lake Accord which fully respects the rights of English-speaking Canadians in Quebec and French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec. We have recognized Québec as a distinct society, and English-speaking Quebecers are an integral part of that distinct society.

That is what I said in Quebec during the election campaign and that is exactly what I am saying today.

[English]

I call to my friend's attention, in regard to the instrument that gave rise to the problem we are dealing with, a press conference that took place on Wednesday, November 18, 1981, as reported by Robert Sheppard and Michael Valpy, in which the then Prime Minister was asked about the agreement to let Legislatures override fundamental legal and equality rights, about whether the Government of Canada under the new Constitution had consented to different language rights for Canada and for the rest of the country.

At page 322 it states: "Well, yes', said the Prime Minister with some candor. 'You are asking me now', he said, 'if I consider it' the Constitution—a success. No, I consider it an abject failure.' He abruptly stood up and walked hurriedly outside into the rain into his waiting black limousine leaving the riddle behind him". The riddle is still here. The riddle and the challenge of language rights will only be solved by tolerance, generosity, and leadership, such as the kind that Members of this House I believe have always provided.

That is the commitment that we have made in regard to language rights elsewhere.

We have been left with a less than perfect instrument which we must all try to correct.

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER SHARES VIEW OF SECRETARY OF STATE

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. the Prime Minister and relates to the series of questions asked by the Leader of the Opposition.

I appreciate the Prime Minister's remarks about the notwithstanding clause, and I should like to ask him how he can reconcile the statements he has just made with those of his Secretary of State who must also champion the rights of official languages minorities.

So I am asking the Prime Minister whether his views are shared by his Secretary of State, or whether his being away from the House attests to his disagreement with the Prime Minister?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Given the seriousness of the debate, Mr. Speaker, I am surprised by this kind of question. Would it be fair on my part to ask whether the fact that the Leader of the Opposition has been away for two days indicates that he disagrees with the Hon. Member for Shefford? Surely the Leader of the Opposition had good reasons to be absent, just as the Secretary of State does. He deserves as much consideration on the part of the Hon. Member for Shefford.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): By way of a supplementary, Mr. Speaker, I will not seek justification for the absence of the Secretary of State, but justification for his remarks. I am asking the Prime Minister how he can reconcile the position he has just stated—and I agree with him—with that of his Secretary of State, which happens to be the opposite. Are there two kinds of truth for the Government, or is the Government trying to have its cake and eat it too? I would like the Prime Minister to tell us the Government's clear, precise and specific position which agrees with that of the Secretary of State because the Secretary of State is supposed to be the authorized spokesman for official languages minorities, and the matter comes under his responsibilities as Minister and Secretary of State.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Yesterday I explained that there is no contradiction whatever in the position of the Secretary of State and mine as expressed to La Presse. I speak for the Canadian Government as Prime Minister of Canada. What I said is the full position of my Government, and all Members, I mean all Ministers endorse this position.

Now are there differences concerning certain nuances? I would draw the attention of the House to a statement made the day before yesterday by my friend and published in La Presse of December 20. I quote:

Mr. Lapierre has stated that the privileges of the National Assembly must be respected. According to him, federal MPs can only express personal opinions.

So the privileges of the National Assembly must be respected if it is to legislate in fields under its jurisdiction, and that is exactly the opposite of what your leader has just said.

PRIME MINISTER'S CONVERSATION WITH QUEBEC PREMIER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister on the same subject.

As the Prime Minister knows, the Supreme Court of Canada made a decision on Bill 101. It notably underlined that the Government of the Province of Quebec has the right to give predominance to the place of the French language in that province and suggested a course of action for a Government that wanted to do that—appropriately do that in the Province of Quebec—but which at once would be consistent with the Québec Charter of Rights and the Canadian Charter of Rights. The Premier of the Province of Quebec took a decision to move in a different direction instead of that one, and instead used the notwithstanding clause.

If I understood the Prime Minister clearly today, he has expressed his unequivocal opposition to the route that has been chosen. Has he in conversations with the Premier of the Province of Quebec in the past 24 hours, or before suggested very directly the desirability that the Premier change his legislation and bring in a Bill that would be consistent with the two Charters and, at the same time, give the desired predominance and desirable prominence to the French language in the Province of Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP is asking me whether today I conveyed my opposition or my views on this. I conveyed my views on this to the Premier of the Province of Quebec before the decision was made.

Last Sunday morning I called him and conveyed my views that anything at variance with the principles established by the Supreme Court would clearly run counter to the fundamental precepts maintained by the Supreme Court. I was of the view that the Supreme Court decision could be accommodated with all of the necessary respect being given to the two fundamentals that were mentioned.

The Premier of Quebec clearly has come to a different point of view, which is not mine, and which I regret, because it runs counter to the Charter of Rights and Freedoms both of Quebec and Canada—it runs counter to the positions I have encouraged elsewhere—and he is in the process of passing this legislation because of an instrument that was provided in 1981 which allows a provincial Premier to override the most inalienable rights in the Canadian and Québec Constitution. This is something of grave importance that goes back, not to any Meech Lake Accord but to 1981-1982 which, no doubt, will ultimately have to be resolved.

If my friend is asking me whether today I have dealt with it, I dealt with it on Sunday before the matter arose.

PREMIER'S RESPONSE TO PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, since Sunday, and more relevantly since the Government introduced this legislation in the Province of Québec, we have had a breakdown in the constitutional process at the national level. We have had some significant resignations from the Government of the Province of Quebec itself in the Quebec National Assembly.

In the Prime Minister's serious conversation with the Premier of the Province of Québec at the time, did the Premier indicate that he would be open at some point to changing that legislation in a direction that would be consistent with the goals of achieving predominance of the French language in the Province of Quebec but which would not in any way impinge upon the freedom of expression in our country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Premier did not indicate that in a conversation with me.

I believe I saw him in his televised press conference indicating that if Meech Lake were passed and if the protections for English and French-speaking minorities contained in Meech Lake came to pass, that it may very well be that that would be sufficient protection for the Premier of the Province of Québec to forgo the kind of initiative that was taken. I would want to check carefully what he said, but my belief is that what he was saying in his press conference was that, if Meech Lake were passed, that those protections sufficient for English and French-speaking minorities would exist. I think that would be along the lines being sought by my own friend and would be encouraging. But in the conversation that I had, no such undertaking was given to me.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER MEET QUEBEC AND OTHER PREMIERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister may be right, but if I remember correctly, the Premier of Quebec said the opposite—there was no connection whatsoever between Meech Lake and his decision as Premier of the Province of Quebec.

But I would like to ask the Prime Minister a simple question: considering that the Premier of Quebec might change is policy, has the Prime Minister decided to have an early meeting with the Premier of Quebec and the other Premiers to continue the Process of constitutional change and, at the same time, solve certain fundamental problems?

The Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think I answered yesterday to my friend that I wrote to the Premier on October 7 to set up a First Ministers' conference during the first quarter of 1989. No doubt constitutional matters will be discussed at that meeting.

But the problem remains intact, to use the phrase of my predecessor on the matter of the Constitution. He himself in his book judged the 1981—1982 Constitution very severely. The major flaw was Quebec's absence. They did not succeed to bring Quebec back into the Canadian constitutional mainstream, even with the "notwithstanding clause".

So, here is a challenge for us all to try and find a formula that would allow an honorable and enthusiastic return of Quebec into the Canadian family—then we will be in a position to proceed with the other important decisions such as Senate reform, justice for our native peoples, and all the other major questions that await us. But we can do nothing unless we can find a formula that will allow Quebec to come back honourably into the Canadian Constitution.

[English]

REQUEST THAT FIRST MINISTERS' MEETING BE CONVENED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a series of questions for the Prime Minister. Yesterday the Prime Minister criticized the Premier of Manitoba for linking the question of Meech Lake to the Language Bill in Quebec. The Prime Minister today in Question Period has just made that linkage himself.

Mr. Valcourt: That is stupid.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): The fact is he just did.

Second, the Prime Minister has not indicated what his reaction would be to the calls by the Premier of New Brunswick, the Premier of Ontario, who have asked for an immediate First Ministers' meeting to consider the notwithstanding clause and to consider the question of how we can provide a national protection for minority rights.

Will the Prime Minister now agree that a First Ministers' meeting would be immediately called in the new year and that specifically on the agenda would be the question of how the notwithstanding clause could be a matter of agreement among all the provinces and the federal Government to eliminate it from the Constitution in order to ensure the full protection of minority rights?

• (1440)

Why was that not part of the Meech Lake consideration? Is the Prime Minister now prepared to reconsider his position and put it on the table so that we can eliminate the precedent that was established a few days ago?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there are two serious misstatements of fact in the prefatory remarks of my hon. friend. He stated that Premier McKenna asked for an immediate First Ministers' Conference. He did no such thing; he said the contrary. He said that a First Ministers' Conference would be premature.

The Hon. Member then indicated that I made a linkage between Meech Lake and the utilization of the right.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Yes, I did.

Mr. Mulroney: I said no such thing. I said that Premier Bourassa in his response in a press conference appeared to indicate that he could forgo perhaps ultimately the utilization of the notwithstanding clause, if the protections for Quebec and the other minorities were there pursuant to the adoption of the Meech Lake Accord. It was not at all what I said. I made no such linkage whatsoever.

An Hon. Member: Do you disagree with them?

Mr. Mulroney: I made no such linkage at all because there is no linkage between the Meech Lake Accord itself and what has transpired in the Province of Québec. The Meech Lake Accord provides for greater protection, and greater justice, and greater equality for English and French-speaking minorities across Canada, and surely all Members of the House must be in favour of that.

PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister did not answer my question.

The country is looking for decisive national leadership at this very crucial time in the history of the country, and the Premiers are asking for it. We now have an opportunity to do something fundamentally important for the protection of minority rights in the country, similar to what the House of Commons did a few years back when, in the province of Manitoba, there was a threatened abrogation of French-speaking rights and the House adopted a resolution which the Prime Minister, when he was Leader of the Opposition, fully supported.

As a national Leader and the head of the Government what action does the Prime Minister intend to take to deal with the very serious circumstances we are in? Will he call a First Ministers' meeting? Will he put the question of national initiatives to protect minority rights on the agenda? Will he consider eliminating the notwithstanding clause from the Constitution as part of the talks at that First Ministers' meeting?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think that even my hon. friend will acknowledge that he gets the Christmas prize for temerity. It takes an awful lot of nerve to ask me if we will deal with something in regard to the protection of minority rights, particularly as those minority rights might be affected by a notwithstanding clause.

My recollection is that he was a Member of a Government that gave the notwithstanding clause away, and it should never have been done.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): You are the Government now; take your responsibility.

Ms. Copps: How is the Tory, Sterling Lyon?

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: As I said, the matter at this point is very important to the country, and we should therefore extend a level of courtesy to all Members in this House.

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, when I was in Saskatchewan on April 14, 1988, when there was a problem in regard to minority rights, I was asked in the presence of Premier Devine how I fundamentally felt about the concept of minority rights. My philosophy is one that perhaps my hon. friend will allow me to repeat in one line.

I said, if you want to understand how you should deal with minorities ask yourself what it would be like to be in a position of a minority and treat the minority with all the generosity that you would want extended to yourself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): What are you going to do about it? Come on, Brian, show some leadership on this one.

Mr. Mulroney: That applies to English-speaking minorities in Québec, French-speaking minorities in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta, and elsewhere. It applies across the board.

All Members of the House, all Leaders of political Parties in this House, recognize that language can indeed be a difficult instrument of division, but it can also become an instrument of some unity and strength. It has to be treated fairly and in a responsible, thoughtful manner.

As I indicated yesterday, I will be meeting with the First Ministers.

I think we made very substantial strides with Bill C-72 which provided substantial enhancement of minority language rights in the federal Public Service and across Canada. We did the same thing with the Meech Lake Accord, perhaps not perfectly, but we made great strides in protecting English and French-speaking minority rights across Canada. We can do more.

I am satisfied, if the atmosphere is one of calm reason, that ultimately tolerance and justice, for which Canadians are well known, will prevail and we will have the type of Canada which brings fairness to minorities wherever they are.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CHARGES AGAINST FORMER MP—GUILTY PLEA

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Two weeks ago the people of Canada were witness to an unseemly manifestation of corruption in the guilty plea of the former Member of this House for the riding of

Oral Questions

Gamelin. This man was not just an ordinary crook, but an elected Member of the House, and a Member of the Prime Minister's caucus.

This guilty plea and the preferred indictment process chosen by the Crown have now covered up the facts and background of this corruption, but the public interest requires disclosure of this information.

What steps will the Prime Minister take to expose and explain this insidious chain of corruption associated with his Tory Government?

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member feels very strongly about this question, and it is a matter of importance. I would just point out that it may well be administration of justice in the province, but the Minister is rising and we will hear the Minister.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs and Acting Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as you indicated, this question relates to a matter that is still before the courts. I have no intention to make comment on it, and I would hope that the Hon. Member would show in his subsequent activities in the House a greater respect for the institutions of the country, including the courts, than he has shown in his first question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Contempt himself!

VICTIM IMPACT STATEMENT QUERY

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice has failed to note that the matter I just addressed has been the subject of a guilty plea in the courts of this country.

Mr. Beatty: It's still before the court.

Mr. Lee: As the Minister of Justice and the Prime Minister know, common law criminal procedure permits parties harmed by an offence to make submissions to sentence through the Crown.

Will the Prime Minister make a commitment to the House to submit a victim impact statement to the court so as to impress upon the court and all Canadians the seriousness of these offences?

Mr. Charest: That is incredible!

Mr. Beatty: Where is your Leader?

Mr. Andre: Out of order!

Mr. Foster: I do not think the Tories like this question. Methinks the Tories do protest too much.

Ms. Copps: Ripping off the public!

Mr. Charest: Any other case you want us to handle?

Ms. Copps: How about Sinc Stevens' legal bills? Bribes, that is what we are talking about.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

SOCIAL PROGRAMS—POSITION OF CANADIAN CHAMBER OF COMMERCE

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Right Hon. Prime Minister.

During the election campaign, the Chairman of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce wrote a letter to the Leader of my Party, saying, in part, and I quote:

We have no fear whatsoever that our social or development programs will be affected by the free trade agreement, and we have said so repeatedly.

In the light of the statement by the Chairman of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce yesterday that his organization is now calling upon the federal Government to cut spending on universal social programs, including the unemployment insurance program, as well as spending to industry, which would take in regional development programs, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether or not he is prepared today to say, in an unequivocal way, that he will reject the request of the Canadian Chamber of Commerce for this type of cut-back in government spending, and in fact maintain the level of government spending on social programs in this country.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): The Hon. Member is quite correct in quoting someone as saying that the Free Trade Agreement will have no effect on the social services, the social programs that are now in effect in Canada. That is quite clear when one reads the terms of the agreement.

As to any suggestion that those outside of government can influence government spending, I can only tell the Hon. Member that we in this Government decide upon government policy, and not anyone from the outside.

The fact that many members of the labour movement in Canada are asking that the Leader of the New Democratic Party be removed from office is not to say that their advice should be heeded. The fact that the same individuals who came out against free trade are now coming out against the Leader of the New Democratic Party is not to say that their advice should be listened to.

CHAMBER'S REQUEST THAT ROYAL COMMISSION BE APPOINTED

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton—Melville): The "Bay Street" buddies of the Minister, mainly in the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, have called upon the Government to establish a royal commission on social programs in this country.

I would ask the Prime Minister to confirm today that he will say "no" to his Bay Street buddies, that he will say "no" to the multinationals in this country, and that there will be no royal commission looking to cutback the social programs in place in Canada today.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister and the majority on this side of the House were elected by the voters of Main Street Canada, and those are the people we intend to listen to for the next four years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER TAX—LAY-OFFS ANNOUNCED BY GREAT WEST FOREST PRODUCTS

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

Great West Forest Products of Thunder Bay today announced the lay-off of 180 employees.

Some Hon. Members: Shame, shame!

Mr. Comuzzi: That lay-off will be followed by a lay-off of a further 180 people who work in the bush. In addition, 60 independent contractors will lose their jobs.

This lay-off, in total, will affect 420 workers.

In its press release the company states that the closure is a direct result of the 15 per cent export tax imposed by this Government.

Why has the Government not taken action to get rid of that export tax, a tax that is costing hundreds of jobs in northern Ontario?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): The export tax was a tax—

An Hon. Member: That is a tax on Main Street Canada, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The export tax was a tax imposed after a great deal of consultation between the Government of Canada and the Governments of the provinces most affected by the threatened American actions in connection with softwood lumber. Rather than having increased tariffs attached to Canadian softwood lumber products going into the U.S., it was felt that the money should be kept in Canada, and it is for that reason that the export tax was imposed.

Through the increase in stumpage fees and, in certain provinces, the imposition of the 15 per cent export tax, the additional moneys are retained in Canada, principally in British Columbia, as opposed to going into the coffers of the U.S.

Mr. Speaker, this is not something that was voluntary on our part. It was, rather, to salvage a situation that was not of our making.

Ms. Copps: That was Pat Carney's "final offer".

Mr. Crosbie: When and if it becomes possible to alter that arrangement, and the provinces and the other parties concerned wish to have it changed, we would be more than willing to sit down and discuss it with them.

Ms. Copps: Are you going to amend the Free Trade Agreement?

REQUEST FOR ELIMINATION OF PROVISION IN FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): My information is that this is just the tip of the iceberg in so far as the loss of jobs in Thunder Bay is concerned.

Oral Questions

Thousands of jobs will be lost this winter due to this export tax.

As has been said, it is something that has received grandfathering treatment under the Free Trade Agreement. I would ask the Minister whether the Government is prepared to take action to eliminate the grandfathering treatment and to delete the applicable clause from the Free Trade Agreement.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Memorandum of Understanding has a termination clause in it, and if the provinces and the other parties concerned believe that it is an arrangement that should be terminated, thus allowing the Americans to proceed with the countervailing tariffs that they threatened, that is a step that could be taken. But we would certainly have to consider such a course very carefully.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Take it before the GATT. Challenge them.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENT'S SOCIAL POLICIES—EFFECT ON NEW BRUNSWICK INDIANS

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Indian Affairs.

Yesterday I was informed by representatives of New Brunswick Indians that the Department of Indian Affairs has adopted a new set of social policies, policies that encourage native poverty.

Indian communities now face a series of unilateral cut-backs imposed by the regional administration of Indian Affairs, which cut-backs will make life very difficult for those communities, communities in which unemployment runs as high as 90 per cent.

Is the Minister aware of these cut-backs, and does he agree with them?

[Translation]

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, if the Hon. Member for Beauséjour wishes to have information on the budget of the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development for native people and Indians, especially in New Brunswick, I can show him that over the last four years, the funds for services to Indians increased steadily since 1984. Therefore, his allegation of cuts is not based on facts and he would do well to check the figures before rising in the House and uttering such nonsense.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET INDIAN DELEGATION

Mr. Fernand Robichaud (Beauséjour): Mr. Speaker, representatives of the Indian communities of New Brunswick were the ones who showed me those figures and said there were cuts. Could the Minister explain why he has so far refused to meet with this delegation that is now here in Ottawa in order to understand the implications of these cuts on these communities? Does he agree to meet with them? They are here and wish to meet him.

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I am glad to see that the Hon. Member for Beauséjour has managed to find time to meet with these Indians. I could tell him, Mr. Speaker, that I have never refused to meet with anyone. Indeed, the Indians of New Brunswick probably never had a Minister of State for Indian Affairs and Northern Development who gave them so much time because I am the first one from New Brunswick; however, I do not intend to make appointments in the House of Commons. But certainly, if they want to contact me, I am ready to meet them.

ENERGY

PRICE OF OIL

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, and is as follows:

'Twill be the night before Christmas, and up at the Soo
More than 600 steelworkers will have no work to do.
Lay-offs at Algoma for up to two months
Starting just before Christmas have folks down in the dumps
And the reason is low sales of tubular steel—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

'Cause out in Alberta nobody will deal.
With oil prices staying disastrously low,—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Given the time, perhaps the Hon. Member would like to put his question.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, it is so rarely that I am struck by the Calliopean Muse. It costs jobs in Ontario. It costs jobs in Alberta. When will the Minister approach his Alberta confrères to negotiate a reasonable Canadian floor price for Canadian oil?

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Mr. Speaker, no one is talking about a return to the National Energy Program.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): What we are talking about is allowed for in the Western Accord that the Minister signed in 1985, a floor price for Canadian oil.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, obviously, if the Minister sets a ceiling price, he will set a floor price. And if so, we would be right back to the national energy policy.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER PRODUCTS EXPORT CHARGE ACT

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the

Tabling of Documents

Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 32(2), I have the honour to lay upon the table, in both official languages, copies of the annual report of the Softwood Lumber Products Export Charge Act; and I move:

That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis), which was agreed to on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Tuesday, December 20, consideration in committee of Bill C-2, an Act to enact the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement Implementation Act—Mr. Crosbie—Mr. Danis in the Chair.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I move:

That further consideration of clauses 1 to 150, the Preamble, Title and Schedule and any amendments proposed thereto at the Committee of the Whole stage of Bill C-2 shall be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands rises on a point of order.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Chairman, as Hon. Members will know, the present closure rule was introduced into the House of Commons in 1913. The words of the rule are quite explicit. We heard them in the motion just read by the Deputy House Leader. I refer to the words: "The items shall be the first business of the committee and shall not further be postponed". I submit that the words "further be postponed" have a specific meaning. In my submission, the motion as proposed is out of order.

The words of the closure rule in the House have been unchanged from their introduction in 1913. At the time of their introduction the Hon. Arthur Meighen, who was the Minister who had framed this particular rule, made certain statements about the application of the closure rule. Those words are instructive for understanding the manner in which it is to be dealt with in the House today. I would like to refer to House of Commons Debates of April 10, 1913 where, as reported on page 7536, Mr. Meighen was discussing the manner in which this rule would be applied. He stated:

I do not know that I understand the question but I will repeat what I have said and I think the hon. gentleman will understand me. Clause 2 is under discussion and the Government have reason, by what they have observed, to see that it is being obstructed, or on reasons that appear to them good, they move that the discussion be adjourned.

He was interrupted, and then further stated:

Nothing more, however, is done at that time and they pass to clause 3. That is the next thing to do, without a doubt. Clause 3 then becomes the subject of discussion in the committee. Clause 3 is under consideration and the committee discusses it also for a time, and the Government takes the responsibility for the length of that time. Then, if the same conditions develop; if the Government deem it is their duty as the custodians of the rights of the people of this country, they can move that the consideration of that clause be postponed. Then the committee passes to clause 4 and it is in the same category, and nothing is done as yet except merely to move the postponement.

In this committee we have considered one clause only, and it has not been postponed. How can it be further postponed, that is the question.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: Following the introduction of the closure rule in 1913 it was applied in the debate on the naval Bill in that year. The procedure described by Mr. Meighen in the passage I have quoted was followed faithfully throughout the discussion on the naval Bill in Committee of the Whole, and indeed on all other parts of the Bill.

In 1917 closure was invoked again on two occasions. Rather than go back to the 1917 Debates, I would like to read from Hansard of May 31, 1956 where the events of 1917 were summarized by a person now sitting at the Table of the House, Mr. Stanley Knowles, who rose on a point of order similar to the one that I am raising today. At that time he summarized the use of closure on the naval Bill in 1913, and at page 4509 of Hansard he stated:

In the case of the naval aid bill in 1913—hon. members can find this in volume V—after considerable discussion clause 1 was carried. Clause 2 was discussed for a considerable time and then was postponed, as recorded in column 9276. Clause 3 was moved in that column and postponed in column 9339. Clause 4 was moved on that page and not postponed until column 9348. I could go on right down to clause 6. It was only after all of the clauses had had some discussion in the committee—I am not confusing the issue by pointing out the kind of so-called discussion we had on clauses 1, 2 or 3; I am letting that go because the issue about clauses . . .

Mr. Knowles continued to discuss the pipeline Bill, and I need not read that.

Mr. Knowles described two instances in 1917 on a Bill having to do with the Canadian National Railways, and

I will not read it all because it is exactly the same procedure that was followed in 1913.

Having referred to those three precedents, there is a further one in 1919 to which I wish to refer you, Mr. Chairman. That is the debate on April 25 and 28, 1919 on the Bill to establish the Canadian National Railways Company. In all of those cases that I have cited the procedure was followed: the clause came up for consideration before the committee, was considered by the committee for however brief a time, then consideration was postponed.

The closure motion was moved after all clauses had been considered, and a day's debate was then held which went at that time until 2 a.m.—now we go until 1 a.m.—and the question on the Bill was finally decided.

That procedure changed in only two instances. I wish to describe them briefly because obviously they will be relied upon by the Government in support of this most unusual procedure. I submit that they are quite different from the circumstances in which we find ourselves today. The first of those occasions arose in 1932 in a discussion on a Bill entitled the Unemployment and Farm Relief Continuance Act of 1932.

That particular Bill contained three clauses. The first was the operative clause, the second required that all Orders in Council and regulations made under the Act be tabled in the House of Commons, and the third was the title. During the consideration in the committee of that Bill, following lengthy discussion on clause 1, the Government invoked the closure motion similar to the one being considered today, and moved that further consideration of all clauses not be postponed.

At the urging of the then Prime Minister, the Chairman ruled that the discussion on clause 1 had covered the discussion on all the other clauses of the Bill because it was the operative clause in the Bill, and he allowed the Government motion to be voted upon. It was first carried in the affirmative and the closure rule went into effect so that the decision was made later that day on the Bill.

The second example of procedure, which I submit was incorrect, as was the 1932 example I have just cited, occurred 32 years ago in the pipeline debate. In an earlier speech in the House on the procedural motion last Friday I have already discussed the import of that particular measure.

During the course of the pipeline debate on May 31 there were seven clauses in the pipeline Bill. There had been three considered in Committee of the Whole and postponed. Consideration was proceeding on Clause 4 and had proceeded for some considerable time. The Government moved a similar motion to the one moved today, that further consideration of all the clauses not be postponed. It was then that Mr. Knowles, among others, and Mr. Fulton, who was a former colleague of some of the people on the other side of the Chamber, raised points of order objecting to the proposal that had been put before the House.

The Chairman ruled that the motion as proposed was in order. The Chairman's ruling was appealed to the Chair. The Speaker also ruled that it was in order, and his decision was appealed to the House and upheld on appeal. That decision was made on Friday, June 1, a day referred to by former colleagues opposite as Black Friday. On the following Monday they were so disturbed that the Speaker had made such a ruling that they moved a motion of non confidence in the Speaker of the House, an unprecedented move, and debated that for some days in an effort to undermine his authority.

There are no other precedents of which I am aware, or that I have been able to find where this rule has been used in Committee of the Whole.

● (1600)

Based upon a review of those authorities, I submit that the motion now before us is out of order. I submit to the Chair that the 1932 ruling, upheld in 1956, constitutes a bad decision and one which ought not to be followed. As a consequence, the Chair should ignore the rulings of 1932 and 1956.

R. MacGregor-Dawson, in his book Procedures in the Canadian House of Commons, published in 1962, states, at page 130: "The precedent established in 1932 and strengthened in 1956 is obviously an undesirable one. A system under which only a few clauses of a Bill are considered before being passed is neither wise nor sensible."

In addition, the Speaker of this House, on Thursday, December 15 last, made a ruling on a previous closure motion moved by the Deputy Government House Leader, and I should like to quote from that ruling. At page 78 of Hansard, we read the following:

After a very careful consideration of this point, I am more persuaded by the weight of precedent and practice. Taking into consideration the gravity of the measure to be invoked and the necessity of protecting the rights of the minority, it is my feeling and decision that the intention of the Standing Order as drafted and as it has been applied is to allow a majority to impose closure only after debate on the question has begun. This is to ensure that such a debate is not unfairly or prematurely curtailed. In this instance, debate on the motion had clearly not begun when the Hon. Minister served notice.

And I submit that debate on any clause but Clause 2 of Bill C-2 had not begun at the time of the notice of motion calling for closure, or the motion itself.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Milliken: If you are not persuaded that the rulings of 1932 and 1956 are incorrect, then I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that there is another significant difference. I have in my hand the 1932 Bill that was under consideration. As can be seen, it is one page in length, with a title page. I also have in my hand the pipeline Bill, which comprises some seven or eight pages and a title page. And I now have in my hand Bill C-2, the Bill which we are being asked to conclude committee consideration of today, having only discussed one clause, and one can readily see how thick it is. In addition to the Bill itself, it has schedule, after schedule, after schedule.

Mr. Chairman, I suggest to you that the 1932 and 1956 precedents, being poor rulings, ought to be overlooked by you, and that you should take cognizance of the precedents established in 1913, twice in 1917, and again in 1919, precedents established in accordance with the view of the author of the closure rule as to how that rule should operate in this House.

I submit that that is the proper course for the Chair to follow. The motion of the Deputy Government Leader ought to be ruled out of order, and we should proceed to clause-by-clause consideration of the Bill.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): What is your answer, Doug?

The Chairman: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis), on the same point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Chairman, at the outset, I must say that the case presented by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands is an extremely convincing one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: I simply wish to add two points, the first of which is to repeat again that the last time we saw this procedural blitzkrieg take place was back in 1956, 32 years ago, during the pipeline debate.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I refer the Chair to Citation 334(8) of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, which makes it perfectly clear that the precedents conflict as to whether closure may be moved on a clause which has not yet been called and postponed in Committee of the Whole.

As the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands has indicated, on four occasions—1913, twice in 1917, and in 1919—all of the clauses had been postponed before closure was moved; and on two occasions, in 1932, in connection with the unemployment and farm relief legislation, and in 1956, in connection with the pipeline legislation, closure was used on clauses which had not yet been called.

Obviously the precedents conflict; there are precedents on both sides of the argument. But, I think that we in this House would be well advised to look to the most recent decision of our own Speaker, a decision brought in on December 15 last in respect of the attempt by the Deputy Government House Leader to give notice of closure in respect of a debate which had not yet begun.

In his ruling, the Speaker made it perfectly clear that such a course was unacceptable; that procedurally, such a course was inappropriate.

I submit to the Chair that we are in exactly the same position at this time. We are being asked now to accept the notion that we can discuss closure on questions that have yet to be put. I suggest to the Chair that the motion of the Deputy House Leader to invoke closure be ruled out of order.

The Chairman: The Chair recognizes the Minister of State.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, at the outset let me compliment the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands on his initial foray into the procedures of this House. I compliment him on the considerations which he raised in his argument.

He asked us to follow comments made during debate in this House, and that we consider to be a worthwhile effort. Such comments are always instructive. However, I think the Chair would agree, as would all Members, that we are more inclined to follow the precedents set by previous Speakers than we are comments made during the course of debate.

Rather than asking the Chair to overrule the decisions of previous Speakers, we request that the Chair follow precedent.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops made the comment that, on December 15 last, a notice of closure was ruled out of order—and, yes, it was. That notice of motion to invoke closure was ruled out of order clearly because it had been given before the debate on the motion for the second reading of the Bill had commenced. I understand that. At the time I commented that we had ventured into that area knowing that there was no precedent. I can recall saying at the time that we had decided that we would test it to see if we could make it stick—and it didn't stick, and I can recall complimenting the Chair at the time on its ruling.

Obviously, the notice of closure should come at the proper time. I grant that. But I suggest to the Hon. Member that there is a big difference between the situation of December 15, which involved our having given notice of closure before the debate had actually started, and the situation which prevailed last evening, at which point we gave notice that we would be moving closure during Committee of the Whole consideration at the first crack.

I draw to the attention of the House the actual wording of the Standing Order 57, which states that any Minister of the Crown may move that the debate shall not be further adjourned, or that the further consideration of any resolution or resolutions, clause or clauses, shall be the first business of the committee and shall not further be postponed, and so forth.

In accordance with Standing Order 57, I gave notice yesterday of our intention to move closure today. We are now in Committee of the Whole, having resumed Committee of the Whole consideration of the Bill, and it is for that reason that I have put the motion at this time.

I submit to the Chair that we have used all of the proper and required forms, proposing that all of the elements of the Bill, none of which had been voted or stood by the committee at the time of the putting of the motion, be the subject of the closure motion. All clauses and all elements of the Bill were included in the notice, and the request was that it be dealt with as the first business of the Committee of the Whole.

There is an "s" or a pluralized form in the standing order that has been unchanged since 1913, other than, as has been mentioned, to change the hour from 2 a.m. to 1 a.m. The clear intention of the order is that one closure motion can be moved with respect to all parts of the Bill, or any specific parts. We went on to add schedules and to make sure that our notice was all-inclusive.

I want to refer my friend to the pipeline debate and the decision. I think it is important to note that in this particular case it was a decision of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House, which was appealed to the Speaker, and then the Speaker's ruling was challenged. What we had here was something that does not happen anymore, that is, a challenge of the Speaker's ruling. Not only do we have the ruling but we have the force and effect of a House decision backing up a Speaker's ruling.

I want to read what the Speaker said on June 1, 1956. He said this:

The question is the following one:

In committee of the whole, Mr. St. Laurent (Quebec East) moved that at this sitting of the committee of the whole house on Bill No. 298, an act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipe Line Crown Corporation, the further consideration of clauses 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, the title of the said bill, and any amendments proposed thereto, shall be the first business of this committee and shall not be further postponed.

Mr. Fulton raised a point of order that the motion was not in order on the ground that certain clauses of the bill have not been before the committee and also that other clauses were postponed before being considered by the committee, and therefore, in accordance with standing order 33, the said clauses could not come within the ambit of the proposed motion. The chairman ruled that in accordance with the rules and the practice of the house the motion is in order. Whereupon Mr. Knowles appealed to the House from the ruling of the Chair. The House divided on the question: Shall the ruling of the chairman be confirmed? And the ruling was confirmed on the following division:

I want to repeat that. That ruling of the Chair has the authority of a decision of the whole House.

Mr. Fulton argued that certain clauses of the Bill had not been before the committee, and I quote— "therefore, the said clauses could not come within the ambit of the proposed motion". That was his argument. What did the Chairman rule in response?

At pages 4516 and 4517 he ruled that the whole question seems to revolve around the interpretation to be put on the words "further consideration found in Standing Order 33". That was the number of the former closure rule.

He said Clauses 2 and 3 had not been called, but it seems to be generally agreed that their subject matter was discussed during the debate on an earlier clause. I would suggest to the House that yesterday through until 12 o'clock in the evening there was a wide-ranging discussion on all clauses of the Bill, and a wide-ranging debate, very ably participated in by Members from all sides. I cite that ruling to back up my argument that the notice that we gave is in order and that the motion is in order.

I suggest that in this day and age one cannot argue that a closure rule must work in such a way that you have to close and go through this exercise on every clause. That just would not go down well in terms of today's society, in terms of delay rather than debate. I suggest that this is not the intent of the operation of closure. That would be a recipe for the complete disempowering of this House. I do not think the people would stand for it. I would like to quote, if I could, from a great parliamentarian, Mr. Clement Attlee who said this:

I have sat too long on the opposition benches not to be sensitive of the rights of the opposition and of the rights of private members. It is the right and duty of the opposition to criticize the administration and to oppose and seek to amend the legislation of the government but it is nonetheless the right and duty of the government to govern and to pass into law the program which it has been elected to carry out. The successful working of our parliamentary institutions depends on harmonizing these conflicting rights and duties. It will be the object of the Government to preserve the rights of minorities as an essential feature of democracy, while at the same time ensuring that democratic institutions are not wrecked by the failure to carry out and implement the will of the majority.

I suggest that the ultimate test of the acceptability of closure is not procedural. The ultimate test of closure is in the public. How does the public react to closure? Is there a hue and cry? Is there editorial outrage? Are your phones ringing and are my phones ringing?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: I bet they are. I will bet they are; and they are saying: "What the devil are you doing? The people decided". That is what they are saying on your phone calls.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I close not with a procedural argument, I admit, but I suggest to you that the public was asked to decide a fundamental question, that is, the free trade Bill. They decided. We are here to take action on that debate. I submit that the action we are taking by way of notice of closure and the closure motion is fully in order.

Mr. John Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some very brief submissions on the point of order. I would submit that the motion moved by the Minister is out of order. I concur with the comments of my colleague with respect to his reasons why the motion is out of order. I would further submit, Sir, the wording chosen by the Hon. Minister would also render his motion to be out of order. I would like to read it for the House. He moved a few moments ago, presumably under Standing Order 57 of the Standing Orders, and I quote:

That further consideration of Clauses 1 to 150, the Preamble, Title and Schedule and any amendments proposed thereto at the Committee of the Whole stage of Bill C-2 shall be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed.

The operative words are: "shall not be further postponed". The intent of the motion moved by the Hon. Minister is that the debate ought not to be further adjourned. Under Standing Order 57 of the Standing Orders it speaks of the notice that must be given at a previous sitting of the House. It refers to the difference between not further adjourning a debate and not further postponing consideration of any particular clause that may be under consideration.

As my hon. friend submitted, how can one further postpone something that has not yet been postponed? As I understand it, the only clause under consideration at the present moment is Clause 2. At no point was Clause 2 ever postponed.

With respect to adjournment, I suspect that what the Minister is trying to do is to limit debate until later this day, in other words, to exhaust debate not only on Clause 2 but on every clause in Bill C-2. But he chose the wrong motion. Once again he used the words "shall not be further postponed".

If you refer, Sir, to Standing Order 57 of the Standing Orders you will see that the first part of the clause indicates that at a previous sitting of the House a certain notice must be given. It states that the Minister:

—may move that the debate shall not be further adjourned, or that the further consideration of any resolution or resolutions, clause or clauses, section or sections, preamble or preambles, title or titles shall be the first business of the Committee, and shall not be further be postponed;

I submit to you, Sir, that the motion is out of order because the Minister chose the wrong wording, as well as for the reasons given by my learned friend. In order to further the intent of what the Minister was trying to do he ought to have used the words "that the debate shall not be further adjourned and that any clauses presently postponed shall not be further postponed".

In closing, I would ask that you, Sir, refer to the dictionary definitions of the words "adjourn" and "postpone". In the Oxford dictionary "adjourn" is defined as "being moved to another place or time"; and "postpone" is defined as "keep from occurring until a later time".

• (1620)

At no point did this House "keep from occurring until a later time" any particular clause under consideration, especially Clause 2. We did in fact adjourn the debate yesterday until today.

For those reasons I ask that you rule the motion moved by the Minister out of order.

Mr. Cooper: Mr. Chairman, I want to participate briefly in this point of order. I do not need to revisit a lot of the ground already covered.

I think it is very clear this motion is in order for a number of reasons. If we refer to Citation 334 of Beauchesne's, as was done by the NDP House Leader, it says very clearly we have the precedent to proceed with this motion. We are backed by precedent, we can proceed, and as anyone who looks at the procedures of the House well knows, we tend to look at the most recent precedents as setting the tone and determining the rules that we can use in this institution today.

The other point made about that particular precedent is that it was agreed to by the entire House of Commons. It was put to a vote and Members endorsed it. However, I think there is one other element which has to be taken into account.

This happened back in the 1950s. Since that time there has not been an attempt, as far as I am aware, by any committee to go back and revisit this clause, to look at the precedent that was established in the pipeline debate, and attempt to overturn that precedent. I have participated in two groups which looked at the rules of the House of Commons and the precedents and suggested reforms, the Lefebvre Commission and the McGrath Committee. The latter committee was the author of the many rule changes we saw in the last Parliament.

I submit that the reason for there never having been an attempt to look at the closure rules and say that the pipeline debate precedent should not be used, is very simple. The majority decision of the House of Commons at that time was found acceptable and it has allowed this House to continue to do the type of thing we are doing today by introducing this motion. In fact, the precedent does apply and there has been no attempt to change it.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Chairman, I have had some brief discussions with the House Leaders of the other Parties. I would suggest that in the event the Chair wishes to reserve on this decision and consider it, it would be helpful to all Members of the House if we were to agree on a time to come back to the House for a decision. I am not trying in any way to suggest that you rush this decision or anything like that, but if you found it appropriate, we might be prepared to convene to hear your decision at seven-thirty and to continue with clause-by-clause consideration in the meantime. If we can work out a specific time I think it will be helpful to all Parties.

The Chairman: I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Kingston and The Islands, the Hon. Member for Kamloops, the Minister of State, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston and the Hon. Member for Peace River for their comments on this procedural matter. I will in fact take this matter under advisement for some time and I was going to suggest that we come back at the call of the Chair. However, I understand it would be easier if the Members had a specific time at which to return. If the suggestion made by the Hon. Minister is acceptable to the other two House Leaders, the Chair would also find it acceptable.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Chairman, I do not want to rush you in your decision or in any way ask you how you intend to proceed. Standing Order 57 states that immediately before the Order of the Day, the Minister may do what he has done, that is, move closure in accordance with Standing Order 57.

A point of order was raised. Now, on the Minister's suggestion, you say we shall proceed to debate Clause 2, which is not yet before us, because the Orders of the Day have not yet been read. That poses a problem . . . Listen carefully. There seems to be something missing.

If there is nothing before the House, there is nothing before the House. We can't invent something.

If the House agrees to proceed with the debate on Clause 2, the Chair must put a thing called Bill C-2 before the House. Then, we shall proceed with the debate.

I do not understand. I therefore ask the Chair to tell us how—the suggestion is a good one—but how do we proceed? I would like to know how we are to get out of this.

The Chairman: I shall reserve my decision in any event. There, I think that is settled.

My next decision is that I intend to adjourn for some time. If the House, if Hon. Members had wanted to continue the debate by agreement, that could have been done, but I see, I think that it might be in the interest of the House of Commons at this time and of the Committee to adjourn for a while.

So I intend to adjourn. All that I ask you now is whether you have a time to suggest to me. I will certainly take more than an hour, at least. But I think it would be preferable to have a set time so that all Hon. Members know when to come back.

I think that the suggestion of 7.30 p.m. seems reasonable to me and if there is no further objection . . .

[English]

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Chairman: Is it the wish of the Committee to suspend the sitting to the call of the bell?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The sitting of the Committee was suspended at 4.25 p.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Wednesday, December 21, 1988

[Editor's Note: Continuation of proceedings from Volume A.]

SITTING RESUMED

The Committee resumed at 7.30 p.m.

The Chairman: I am now ready to rule on the point of order raised by a number of Members.

In the point of order raised earlier today, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands argued that the Hon. Minister of State for the Treasury Board was premature in giving notice of closure in relation to Bill C-2 because debate had not begun on many of the clauses that he referred to in his notice.

This leads easily to the further argument that the Minister's motion now before the Chair should be rejected. Since this motion must flow from his notice of yesterday, it too, it is argued, is defective.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and the Hon. Member for Kamloops quoted from the Speaker's ruling made last week on December 15, 1988 in support of their argument. I should first address that issue.

Standing Order 57, without a doubt, provides for the giving of notice of closure either in the House or in Committee of the Whole. The Speaker's ruling of December 15, 1988 clarified what appeared to be an ambiguity as to the timing of the notice, and he ruled that notice can only be given once the debate has commenced on the matter to be closed.

Consideration of Bill C-2 in Committee of the Whole has also without a doubt begun, particularly as the committee is currently on Clause 2 of the Bill. The Minister, during the course of the consideration of Clause 2, gave notice of his intention to close debate on Clause 2 and on all remaining clauses of the said Bill. The timing of the Minister's action is, in my view, in keeping with the Speaker's ruling. Unlike the situation referred to last week, the Minister has served notice after debate on the committee stage had begun.

The Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands and the Hon. Member for Kamloops further argued that the Minister's motion is procedurally faulty because it attempts to closure in Committee of the Whole parts of the Bill that have not yet been debated or postponed.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops is right in saying that Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, page 118, Citation 334, paragraph (8), sheds little light on this matter and that the citation is not quite definitive.

And I quote:

Precedents conflict as to whether closure may be moved on a clause which has not yet been called and postponed in a Committee of the Whole. On four occasions (1913, 1917 (twice) and 1919) all clauses had been postponed before closure was moved. On two occasions (1932 and 1956) closure was used on clauses which had not been called.

[English]

The committee will appreciate that since notice of this point of order was given yesterday, I have, in anticipation, reviewed in detail all the precedents mentioned in that citation, and for the benefit of those who may not yet have time to do so, I believe it would be useful to take the time to summarize them.

In 1913, the order in Committee of the Whole was on the Naval Aid Bill C-21. On February 28, 1913, debate commenced in Committee of the Whole on the Bill which contained five clauses. Clause 1 was adopted; Clauses 2 to 5 were all debated and postponed. Prime Minister Borden then proposed a new Clause 6, and it was debated and postponed. On May 8, 1913, notice of closure was given by the Prime Minister. On May 9, 1913, the Prime Minister moved:

That further consideration of the second, third, fourth and fifth clauses and the proposed sixth clause of this Bill shall be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed.

This motion covered all remaining clauses of the Bill in a new proposed Clause 6. The motion was agreed to 71 yeas; 44 nays. No procedural objections were made on the proceedings.

It should be noted that Prime Minister Borden had a very specific purpose in postponing consideration of all the clauses before invoking closure. Under our rules, new clauses are considered only after all clauses have been considered. I refer Hon. Members to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 765.

• (1940)

Therefore, had the Prime Minister proceeded in any different manner, he could not have proposed his new Clause 6 to the Naval Bill since closure could preclude the Committee of the Whole from reaching Clause 5 before the hour provided for interruption.

In 1917, there were two occurrences of closure in Committee of the Whole. All four clauses of Bill C-125, the Canadian Northern Railway Act, and all five clauses and the schedule of Bill C-133, the Wartime Elections Act, were first postponed before closure was invoked. The Debates or the Journals offer no explanation of why this procedure was followed and there was no objection or procedural discussion.

The 1919 case is more analogous to the 1913 case. The Committee of the Whole was debating Bill C-70, the Canadian National Railway Act. The Committee had adopted some clauses and postponed others in what was a 30-clause Bill. As in 1913, the Prime Minister was required to seek the postponement of all the clauses because he, too, wished to move two new clauses numbered 31 and 32. Like Prime Minister Borden in 1913, if he had proceeded any differently and had invoked closure any earlier, he would probably have been precluded from moving any amendments.

The next instance of closure in Committee of the Whole was on April 1, 1932. Prime Minister Bennett moved:

That further consideration of the title and Clauses 1, 2 and 3 of the Unemployment and Farm Relief Continuance Act, 1932, shall be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed.

This motion covered all clauses of the Bill, although only Clause 1 had been formally called and debated. The motion was put and carried and there was no procedural challenge to the fact that some clauses had not been called or postponed. This precedent is virtually identical to the situation the committee now faces.

The most recent example of closure in Committee of the Whole took place on May 24, 1956, when debate commenced in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-298, the Northern Ontario Pipeline Corporation. Clauses 1 to 3 were postponed, Clause 4 was being debated, and Clauses 5 to 7 were never called. On May 30, 1956, notice of closure was given by Prime Minister St. Laurent. On May 31, 1956, Prime Minister St. Laurent moved:

That at this sitting of the whole House on Bill No. 298, an Act to establish the Northern Ontario Pipeline Corporation, the further consideration of Clauses 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, the title of the said Bill, and any amendments proposed thereto, shall be the first business of this Committee and shall not be further postponed.

The closure motion covered all clauses of the Bill, although Clauses 5 to 7 were never called or debated. A point of order was raised, and the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole ruled the motion in order, referring to the 1932 precedent. His decision was appealed to the Speaker, who confirmed the ruling. The Speaker, whose rulings were at that time subject to an appeal of the House, were also challenged.

The question was put to the House for decision, and the ruling that the Minister could closure clauses not yet called was sustained by a vote of 143 yeas to 50 nays.

To address the matter raised by the Hon. Member for York—South Weston, I should point out to the committee that the language used by the Minister today is the same as in every case heretofore mentioned.

As I said earlier, Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, citation 344, offers little direction, but an analysis of the cases seems to provide some indication.

In two cases, 1913 and 1919, it would appear that the clauses were postponed for procedurally strategic reasons. In two other cases, both in 1917, all clauses were simply postponed and the debates shed no light on why. On the last two occasions when closure was invoked, in 1932 and 1956, some of the clauses in the Bills concerned had not been reached, and in the latter case rulings were made by the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole and the Speaker, which were subsequently confirmed by the House itself, that the closure motion was in order.

The 1958 Fourth Edition of Beauchesne's gives us a little more to consider. The committee will remember that prior to 1968 most Bills of Supply and of Ways and Means destined for a Committee of the Whole were preceded by a resolution first considered by the Committee of the Whole.

Citation 167 of the Fourth Edition of Beauchesne says, in part:

—If, under this Standing Order, the notice applies to several proposed resolutions, the whole of the sittings allowed for discussion may be engaged in only a part of them and the remainder has to be voted on without the House having debated them at all. The right of free debate is thereby abolished in so far as those proposed resolutions are concerned.

This citation is very important, and I will read it again in English.

[English]

—If, under this Standing Order, the notice applies to several proposed resolutions, the whole of the sittings allowed for discussion may be engaged in only a part of them and the remainder has to be voted on without the House having debated them at all. The right of free debate is thereby abolished in so far as those proposed resolutions are concerned.

It is obvious from that citation that Beauchesne's 1958 Fourth Edition at least envisaged the possibility of closure being applied in Committee of the Whole to parts of a Bill not yet debated.

The Hon. Minister of State for the Treasury Board made a strong point in underlining that the 1956 precedent which confirms the 1932 precedent carries the authority of sustained Chairman's decision, a Speaker's ruling, and a recorded decision by the House itself.

The Hon. Member for Peace River accurately pointed out that in all the recent discussions of procedural reforms, closure has remained untouched.

Therefore, in light of the 1958 Beauchesne's citation, the precedents of 1932 and 1956, and the lack of further direction by the House since 1956, I must rule that the Minister's Notice given yesterday is valid and that his proposed motion is in order.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Chairman: It is now my duty to propose the question without further debate.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I respectfully appeal your ruling to the Speaker.

Mr. Speaker resumed the chair, and the Chairman of the Committee made the following report:

When the Order of the Day to resume consideration in Committee of the Whole of Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, was about to be called, the Hon. Minister of State for Treasury Board proposed to move that further consideration of Clauses 1 to 150, the preamble, the title and schedule, and any amendments proposed thereto of the Committee of the Whole stage of Bill C-2 shall be the first business of the Committee and shall not be further postponed.

A point of order was raised by the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands about the procedural acceptability of the notice and the form of the motion.

After hearing argument, I ruled that the notice was in the proper form and could be proceeded with.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Whereupon, the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands appealed to Mr. Speaker from the decision of the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker: Under the circumstances, it would be appropriate for the Speaker to stand the House for a few minutes to consider carefully the reasons the Chairman has given. I shall do that, to the call of the Chair.

• (1950)

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, when you say "to the call of the Chair", will the bells ring for five minutes as they did on the previous occasion?

Mr. Speaker: I think that would be appropriate.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The sitting of the House was suspended at 7.52 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 8.15 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: I have been following the proceedings carefully. I listened to the Chairman's ruling, and I have considered the arguments from both sides of the House. During the recess just concluded I read the Chairman's ruling, and I am satisfied that the two precedents mentioned, that of 1932 and that of 1956, are persuasive precedents. I rule that the Chairman has properly applied them to the issue before us. Therefore, I confirm the ruling of the Chair.

House in Committee of the Whole on Bill C-2, an Act to enact the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement Implementation Act—Mr. Crosbie—Mr. Danis in the chair.

The Chairman: The motion is the following one: Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moved:

That further consideration of Clauses 1 to 150, the preamble, the title and schedule, and any amendments proposed thereto at the Committee of the Whole stage of Bill C-2 shall be the first business of the committee and shall not be further postponed.

Is it the pleasure of the committee to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

• (2020)

Motion (Mr. Lewis) agreed to: Yeas, 147; Nays, 77.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Chairman: I declare the motion carried. The Hon. Member for Fraser Valley East, on debate.

Mr. Belsher: Mr. Chairman, at the outset I should like to compliment you on accepting the position of Chairman of the Committee of the Whole. As well, I congratulate you on your re-election. I should also like to extend a special welcome to all new Members of the House. I wish them well and look forward to working with them.

I should also like to say a special thank you to the people of Fraser Valley East for again honouring me with their support and sending me back to Ottawa to be their representative in this the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

We are on Clause 2 of Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement. The agreement itself is about the phasing out of tariffs. The position of the Opposition is: Given that 80 per cent of the trade between Canada and the U.S. is free of tariffs, and given that we are getting along fine under that regime, why bother with the other 20 per cent?

An Hon. Member: Hear, hear! A good question.

Mr. Belsher: The fact is, the 80 per cent of the trade that is without tariff is trade in raw materials. It is the value-added exports that attract tariffs, and it is those tariffs that we are endeavouring to phase out over the next 10 years.

To give Hon. Members an example, a pair of shoes produced in Canada would attract a 48 per cent tariff if sold in the U.S. Yet, raw materials flow back and forth across the Canada-U.S. border without tariff. The Opposition Parties have played to the fears of Canadians. They say that because something is not in the agreement, it is at risk. That is just not true.

The Free Trade Agreement is a trade agreement only. It is a way of ensuring continued access to the largest market in the world, the U.S. market. Bill C-2 merely implements the agreement consummated by the Prime Minister and the President over one year ago, an agreement which will ensure continued access to each other's markets without fear of tariff barriers, without fear of protectionism.

In the Fraser Valley, the independent shake and shingle producers know first-hand the detrimental effects of protectionist measures. In a recent letter to the Prime Minister, the Fraser Valley Independent Shake and Shingle Producers Association stated:

We urge you to pass the Free Trade Agreement as soon as practical so that others, when faced with similar actions from the U.S., will have a definitive course of action available to them that will lead to a more timely and objective solution.

Further, they went on to state:

We strongly agree with your opinion that had the Free Trade Agreement been in place in 1986, this specific section 201 action by the U.S. against us would not have been implemented.

This from an industry which has suffered without a free trade agreement.

I have heard opponents compare the Free Trade Agreement to being as dangerous as laying down beside an elephant. To those people, I say: Please wake up to reality. We are already laying down beside an elephant. The Free Trade Agreement is to protect us should that elephant decide to roll over.

As I stated during the election campaign, the Free Trade Agreement is good for the people of my riding of Fraser Valley East, and for the people of Canada. It does not threaten our social programs. It does not give our resources to the Americans; it does not give our water to the Americans; and it does not threaten our agricultural supply management systems.

We cannot say it more clearly than that, and still the Opposition Parties try to scare Canadians into believing their wild accusations.

I am glad to see that Canadians cannot be hood-winked. They have clearly stated, as the results of the election of November 21 indicate, that they are not afraid of progress.

I see the Free Trade Agreement as ensuring that the American market-place remains open and accessible to Canadians, providing opportunities for continued economic growth and ensuring the continuation of the prosperity we have begun to build in the past four years of Progressive Conservative government.

Let me take a moment to review the history of free trade. The idea of some sort of free trade agreement with our neighbour has been around since Confederation, and even before. Sir John A. Macdonald sought reciprocity and turned to his national policy only when the U.S. rejected the idea of reciprocity.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier, the seventh Prime Minister of Canada, and a Liberal, wanted unrestricted reciprocity with the U.S.

In the 1930s, both Canada and the U.S. entered into a Most Favoured Nation agreement to help stimulate one another's economies in the wake of the depression of the 1930s, leading to the establishment of the GATT.

In 1982, the Canadian Senate, dominated by Liberals, issued its report on free trade with the U.S., which report stated, and I quote:

—the desired restructuring, growth and competitiveness of Canadian industry can best be achieved by the negotiation of a bilateral free trade agreement with the United States..

In 1983, Prime Minister Trudeau appointed the Royal Commission on the Economy, headed by Donald Macdonald, a former Liberal Finance Minister. That commission was in place for three years, during which time it held public hearings in every part and region of Canada. Its conclusions were straightforward and clear:

Free trade will help make us richer and, by making us richer, strengthen the fabric of our country and increase our self-confidence. It will offer our nation a more secure relationship and make us less vulnerable.

Earlier this month, Canada hosted the GATT countries in Montreal for the purpose of conducting a review of the mid-point results from the GATT Uruguay Round.

GATT was formed January 1, 1948. Canada was one of the 23 founding members. This agreement sets out the rules for international trade. We remain firmly committed to GATT today and the rules it has put in place. It remains the cornerstone of our trade policy. The FTA is fully consistent with the spirit and letter of GATT. Article 24 allows GATT signatories to negotiate free trade areas.

The most current round of multilateral negotiations began in September of 1986. It is to be concluded in 1990. These negotiations, called the Uruguay Round, included on the agenda across the board negotiations on agriculture. Unfortunately, there was no agreement. There is an obvious need for more discussion within GATT on agriculture. Canada's import controls in support of supply-management programs are in conformity with GATT. This is not the case with the U.S. or the European Economic Community. The U.S. and EEC support policies that generate large surpluses which are in turn dumped on the world market with the help of massive export subsidies.

At the recent Montreal meetings we worked to reduce trade distorting subsidies which are causing serious difficulties for our farmers. What we were concerned with at those meetings in Montreal was the fact that Article 11, dealing with supply-management and import restrictions, is imprecise. Canada's position is that the Article should be clarified to ensure that it is not misused, that the appropriate agricultural products are covered and the Canadian supply-management system is compatible with post-Montreal GATT obligations. Unfortunately, the 96 GATT member countries at the meeting could not agree on a negotiating framework and the gap between the EEC and the U.S. was too great at this time. However, we will continue to work toward a solution at future meetings.

Because of Article 11, even if you were to throw out the Free Trade Agreement you would still be faced with doing something about trade distortions. That is something the opposition Members failed to tell the farming community.

The Government had three objectives regarding agriculture in the Free Trade Agreement. One was to improve access for farm products, then to make access more secure, and then to preserve our agricultural policy instruments. Those objectives were met. The agreement gradually eliminates all tariffs and addresses a broad range of agricultural non-tariff barriers. It also safeguards the Canadian agriculture marketing system, and provides flexibility for the introduction of new supply-management systems consistent with rights and obligations under GATT.

With respect to the specific impact on the major agricultural sectors of most interest to the people of the Fraser Valley, this agreement will have no effect on the supply-management system for dairy products or the poultry industry. There will be no effect on primary producer returns for poultry and eggs from tariff reductions since import controls are maintained, although import quotas for chicken, turkeys and eggs will be increased slightly to the benefit of the food processor. That was based on an average of imports over the previous five years. Increased export market opportunities for high quality finished cattle for slaughter and high quality beef and pork is what is expected by that industry.

The Opposition, over these many months, has been saying that we sold out our energy. Nothing could be further from the truth. The Free Trade Agreement says, in Article 902, that Canadian and U.S. rights and obligations under GATT on legitimate trade restrictions on energy products are affirmed. Canada retains its power to control the flow of Canadian energy exports. It also says that if you have contracts, contracts must be lived up to. As it affects British Columbia, this part of the agreement talks about the Bonnyville power system which B.C. wants access to in order to sell energy to the California market. That is covered in Article 905.2.

Article 907 deals with Canadian uranium and electricity exports. It has been said that we cannot sell energy to the U.S. at a higher price than what it is sold for in Canada. That is just not so. Article 908 says that Canada's long-term obligations under an international agreement are still in effect in times of supply shortages. That agreement was signed with the former Government some 10 or 12 years ago.

We have many times been accused of selling out our water. Yet we know water was spelled out very clearly in the agreement. The agreement says nothing it contains, except Article 401, applies to water. It goes on to explain that water means natural surface and ground water, in liquid, gaseous or solid state, but does not include water packaged or as a beverage or in tanks. Yet the opposition Members neglected to tell the people that these things were in the Bill.

What has been said about the agreement after the election? In a series of interviews on November 23, the Leader of the NDP said various things. He was quoted in The Globe and Mail as saying the Canadian people have taken a decision and the Prime Minister certainly has the right to continue with passage of free trade. At another point he said it would be churlish and inappropriate to say something should be done about the law at this stage. All the chances for amendments that could possibly have been taken have been exhausted.

Ms. Copps: Who said that?

Mr. Belsher: That was the Leader of the NDP. In La Presse on that same day he said in our parliamentary tradition, the Canadian people made a decision and the Prime Minister now has the right and mandate to pass the free trade Bill. Later on he said the Prime Minister has been given a clear mandate. The agreement, with all of its faults, faults by NDP standards, has been approved by the people. It would not be appropriate to oppose it now. He indicated it was extremely unlikely that his Party would reintroduce amendments to the Bill once Parliament resumes.

So much for what the NDP say. Let us now see what the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition said on the same day. In the Ottawa Citizen he was quoted as saying that the people decided they want the deal. He said the people are always right. In the Montreal Gazette he is quoted as saying they would be restating their position on the matter but they let the people decide and the people have decided. Having stated their case they would let matters proceed. What happened between November 23 and today?

The Tourism Industry Association of Canada ran an ad which said that tourism and free trade feed each other. That association, representing over one million Canadians directly or indirectly employed in the industry, believes it is important for all Canadians to understand that tourism is a $21 billion industry, second only to the auto sector in foreign revenues earned.

It generates roughly $9 billion in taxes and is growing more than twice as fast as any other major industry. Tourism means jobs for one in ten Canadians; one in four for Canadians under 25. Some 20 per cent of our tourism revenues come from visitors beyond our border. The association urges all associated with the industry to consider the many economic benefits that will flow from the Free Trade Agreement to ourselves and to all our different enterprises and to Canada.

Another organization we are well acquainted with in this Chamber is that of the Canadian Federation of Independent Business. They talked about their wish list for Christmas with the new Government. The results of more than 17,000 personal member interviews showed strong small business support for free trade. Six small and medium-sized firms out of every seven said the agreement will have a positive effect on their business. The importance of free trade to the over-all health of the small business community cannot be ignored.

They go on to say that small business is vital to the growth of the Canadian economy. Companies with less than 20 employees were responsible for some 85 per cent of the job creation between 1978 and 1986. The over-all health of small business will likely reflect the over-all health of the Canadian economy.

Much has been said about the Americans and their ability to make their laws for themselves. People fail to realize that Canada has not given up its ability to make laws, nor have we changed our laws.

The agreement is of economic benefit to Canada. This Government has started upon this road and has followed it through because we feel it will be of benefit to the Canadian economy. With benefits flowing to the Canadian economy, what better assurance is there for the social programs that Canadians enjoy?

History is on our side. We know that through history, when tariffs have been lowered, trade has gone up. With trade, there are benefits. We know that Canada produces more than it can consume. So, where will we go for our markets? The money is not sufficient within our own country.

I am glad to be a part of the Government that is setting this trade deal in motion. I will be pleased to stand in my place when it comes time to vote on the third and final reading in support of the motion that this Government has taken under the leadership of our Prime Minister and his Cabinet and to do my part to further the Free Trade Agreement with the United States of America.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I am pleased to rise to participate in the debate on the Free Trade Agreement, pleased at the fact that the voters of Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing chose me to represent their interests in Ottawa, and pleased with their belief that the Free Trade Agreement is bad for Saskatoon, bad for Saskatchewan, and bad for Canada.

It is with sorrow that I speak today. The sorrow comes from seeing a Government that is so ideologically driven, and bound to big business backers introducing legislation which so vigorously attacks Canada's best interests. It attacks Canada's control over its own resources and ability to set its own economic destiny. It attacks Canada's social programs, health care system, environmental standards and financial investment strategies. It threatens Canada's family farms and agricultural institutions with extinction.

This deal strikes at Canada's very heart and identity. It should be seen as part of a wider, neo-Conservative agenda. It is part of the agenda of the Conservative Government and its business allies to reduce and remove the differences between a free-enterprise market-driven United States and the social democracy, albeit one which requires further improvement, which the New Democrats and the CCF before them in Saskatchewan pioneered for Canada and which Canadians have built over the last 40 years.

Even the Conservative Party played a part in this process of developing the Canada we know today.

Mr. Crosbie: Talk to bad boy.

Mr. Nunziata: You are not supposed to heckle, Mr. Crosbie. Point of order, Mr. Chairman.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

An Hon. Member: Do you have to rain on everybody's party?

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for York South—Weston on a point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: I regret very much and apologize to the Hon. Member for having to interrupt in the middle of his speech. There is a tradition in this House when a new Member is making a speech that Members on the opposite side ought not to heckle. The Minister of Trade and his side-kick, the Minister of Housing, have been heckling the new Member as he has been delivering his speech.

The Chairman: It is not really a point of order. It is tradition that we do have a bit of civility when the person—

An Hon. Member: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: I am talking to the Hon. Member who just made the representation, the Hon. Member for York South—Weston. I am just making the representation for the Hon. Member, for his edification. I have just been speaking to him, and he is not helping me by speaking across the floor. There is a tradition here to have a little civility when a Member is making a maiden speech. I agree with him, but that goes both ways. Therefore, I would like to recognize the Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing.

Mr. Axworthy (Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing): Mr. Speaker, even the Conservative Party played a part in this process of developing the Canada we know today. CN, CBC, and the first regional development programs were enacted under Conservative Governments. They were rather different governments from this one. As everyone knows in this House, John Diefenbaker would be as fiercely opposed to this free trade deal as we are on this side of the House today.

The Conservative Government, along with its business allies, is on a path to destroying all that makes Canada a better, more caring and compassionate society than the United States. It cares not about the consequences, the potential job losses. It cares not about the loss of control over energy and resources, over our investment strategies and job creation programs. It cares not about the consequences to Canada's economic and social fabric.

There have, however, been two positive consequences of this free trade debate. First, it encouraged Canada and Canadians to think clearly about what type of society they wanted. As the election shows, most Canadians in Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing and across this country said "no" to the type of Canada proposed by the Government across the aisle. Second, it flushed out this Government's and the business community's neo-Conservative agenda for this country.

This Free Trade Agreement is really an economic constitution for Canada. It establishes the market as the final decision-maker over important economic and social issues which we in Canada have grown to see as being partly the responsibility of our democratically-elected governments. It is not just a commercial or business deal. It strikes at the heart of Canada's social fabric.

It is worth noting that virtually all of the business organizations which supported the Free Trade Agreement have been promoting a neo-Conservative social and economic agenda over the past decade at both the federal and provincial levels. Only yesterday they were calling, as we have heard today in this House, for a review of social spending in Canada. This provides opponents of the Free Trade Agreement with legitimate and real grounds for suspecting that social programs and regional development subsidies are at risk.

This is not a commercial deal but a reflection of the political, social and economic agenda which is totally unacceptable to the majority of Canadians, as the election on November 21 showed. This Conservative Government has given in to its big business friends. It is a case of whoever pays the piper calls the tune.

This deal is bad for Canada in so many ways that we cannot deal with all of it in a short 20 minutes. Therefore, I would like to concentrate on two issues—agriculture, and social and health programs.

We all remember the assertions made by the government Ministers that agriculture was not on the table. Yet against the advice of most agricultural organizations and the advice of the Macdonald Commission, agriculture was included in this deal. It is by far the largest article in the Free Trade Agreement.

What about agriculture? As all Members know, most farmers are opposed to the Free Trade Agreement. The Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the largest farm body in the country, called it a "threat to many sectors of agriculture and unacceptable in its present form". The Saskatchewan Wheat Pool says that the deal will undermine the Canadian Wheat Board and other marketing boards. The Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee said the same thing. The National Farmers Union, the Federations of Agriculture in Quebec, Nova Scotia and Ontario all came out strongly opposed to the implications of this deal. Even some of the Government's own advisors have indicated this Free Trade Agreement is bad for agriculture.

Why is there so much opposition to this if the Government says it is so good? Farmers across the country agree that supply-management across a wide range of agricultural products is threatened.

Last weekend I met with representatives of supply-managed sectors in my constituency. The riding contains significant chicken, turkey and egg producers, between 75 per cent and 80 per cent of Saskatchewan's dairy industry. They all fear for their existence under this deal. Tariff removals and expansion of global and supplemental quotas threaten Canada's supply-management system which has served both producers and consumers well. Provisions which allow producers access to cheaper U.S. imports pose a real threat to our farm and our rural communities.

The Government tells farmers that they need not worry, that marketing boards are safe. Farmers in Saskatchewan did not believe the Government on November 21 and they do not believe the Government now. It is for good reason.

In his recent debate with Michael Dukakis in the presidential elections, President-Elect Bush said that he was opposed to supply-management. The U.S. government's position at GATT to remove Article 11 which permits supply-management has been supported by the Government. It is not surprising that our supply-managed agriculture sectors feel threatened by this deal and by the Government.

Grain farmers fear for the continued existence of the Wheat Board and we have seen moves against that in recent weeks. The list goes on and on.

The Government seems unable to understand or is prepared to ignore that giving up control at the border will destroy our marketing boards and destroy the agricultural industries and the rural communities they serve.

Furthermore, the health of Canadians is at stake here. The Americans have lower health standards, lower sanitary standards, and lower production standards than us. Practices are permitted in the United States which we will not tolerate here. This Free Trade Agreement will give rise, through the harmonization process, to Canadian standards being replaced by lower and less desirable American standards, to the detriment of Canadian consumers, Canadian producers and our rural communities.

In summary, this agreement is a dangerous agreement for Canadians because of what it does to our import barriers. No one will be able to persuade the Americans that our marketing boards and our Wheat Board are not barriers to trade. Yet the Government is prepared to sacrifice western agriculture to its ideological agenda.

I want to talk briefly about health and social programs. We have heard a lot about how our health and social programs are protected under this deal. All members of the House know the social and health programs which Canadians enjoy were developed first by CCFers and New Democrats in Saskatchewan. Those Saskatchewan New Democrats fought for these programs and some of them even lost their lives in that fight. They fought against the same forces that now support the Free Trade Agreement.

Social and health programs have a special place in the hearts and minds of New Democrats in Saskatchewan. It was not Mr. Justice Emmett Hall who developed medicare, it was Tommy Douglas, Woodrow Lloyd and Allan Blakeney. New Democrats and Canadians know that and they are proud of that. If not for these three, Douglas, Lloyd and Blakeney, and those CCFers and New Democrats who supported them in Saskatchewan against all odds, Canada would not have a medicare system today.

Much of what makes Canada distinct as a society and a more caring and compassionate society than the United States, a better society I believe, grew out of the vision and work of the CCF and NDP in Saskatchewan. We will not let this House or Canada forget it.

Our health care systems are in danger under this Free Trade Agreement. The Free Trade Agreement will threaten our health care system and the health of Canadians in three main ways: First, it opens up Canada to the American market-driven, for-profit system of management of health care; second, it places permanent legal and political limits on the future powers of Canadian governments to regulate health care services or establish new publicly funded health services; third, it encourages ongoing political pressure from business on both sides of the border to level the playing field by cutting publicly supported social services, including health care.

In Saskatchewan we have seen first-hand considerable evidence of this strategy already. We have seen considerable evidence of the attack on our health care system with the decisions of an increasingly unpopular Progressive Conservative Government there.

Many articles in the agreement serve to attack our health care program, but I will only mention two. Article 2010 sets out the conditions under which either party may establish a monopoly. The definition of a monopoly would include future expansion of Government social services that might replace private services, such as a new dental care program or eye care program. Where the establishment of a monopoly affects American investors, Canada must notify and consult the United States in advance and endeavour to minimize or eliminate any nullification or impairment of benefits under this agreement. If that does not give up something, I do not know what does. If that does not give up the right to ensure that Canadians receive the sort of health care we decide we want, I do not know what does.

According to Article 2011, the nullification and impairment article, almost any present or future Canadian regulation, law, or health care program that had any effect whatsoever on American trade, investment, or profits in health care services, could be challenged by the U.S. Government or American corporations.

According to Article 103, the trade deal is binding on all levels of Canadian Government and essentially constitutes an economic constitutional document. Once in place, it limits the powers of all levels of Canadian Government to carry out action and exercise the powers that they have traditionally enjoyed in the provision of social service programs.

The omission of health and social programs from the Free Trade Agreement does not mean they are secure. All will be vulnerable to attack as unfair subsidies, and subject to countervailing duties or pressure for reduction or elimination.

This risk applies to Canada's health care system, unemployment insurance benefits, Canada Pension, Old Age Security, Family Allowance, equalization payments to poor provinces, subsidies to industries, regional development programs and eventually even perhaps to federally funded day care, none of which exist on the same scale in the United States. All these are subject to serious challenges. All these ensure that Canada gives up a great deal under the agreement.

Over-all, we lose under this agreement. We give up our resources and our control of public services, but we do not even get guaranteed access to the American market in exchange. The Free Trade Agreement in no way prevents the United States from continuing to apply countervailing duties, as it did in the softwood lumber case. The dispute settlement process must apply the trade law of the country concerned in resolving disputes. We get no protection from that under the trade agreement.

Set in its broad context, the Free Trade Agreement forms part of an over-all strategy of Canadian big business to roll back the gains in public ownership. We have given up an enormous amount. Canadians voted against this deal on November 21. The constituents of Saskatoon—Clark's Crossing voted against this deal on November 21.

I hope I have given some indications as to the reasons why they voted against it and why they did not accept the vision of Canada the Government presented.

It is an unfortunate and sorry day for Canada when we give up so much for so little.

The Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Richelieu (Mr. Plamondon).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Plamondon: Mr. Chairman, this is the first time I am greeted with such applause by the Opposition. They must have the wrong list.

Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to take part in the discussion of clause 2 of the free trade legislation. It is indeed a pleasure, because this is one of this Government's best achievements, certainly an achievement that will bear fruit for the coming generation and all those after that.

But before getting into the heart of the matter, that is clause 2, I would like to take this opportunity to hail my constituents who re-elected me with a 23,000 vote majority. This was a clear approval, by 69 per cent of the popular vote, of this Government's policies and the performance of their Member of Parliament. I am deeply touched by that vote of appreciation, which I view as a heavy responsibility for the Government and for myself to pursue in the same direction. I therefore hail all the areas in my constituency, starting from the beautiful community of Bécancour which over these last four years has enjoyed enormous levels of investment, because Bécancour, which has the largest industrial park in Quebec, had always been the center of federal-provincial bickering at the official level, but has now enjoyed a climate of co-operation over the last four years, which resulted in the location of five major industries in Bécancour's park since then. For instance, Norsk Hydro will soon hire 350 employees, the aluminum recycling company soon to be joined by a magnesium recycling company.

Finally, this park is doing better and better thanks to this Government's drive and especially its policies, either in the area of Nicolet which also has enjoyed heavy investment, mainly the $1,200,000 Museum of Religions, as well as the whole area of Saint-Célestin, Anneville, Sainte-Monique, Grand-Saint-Esprit, a part of our country which often had felt neglected by the previous Government and has been in full economic swing for four years now. So the people in that area, people in the Baie Dufévre area which are the biggest dairy producers in the country, were not afraid of free trade—they did not believe the lies, and the false rumors the Liberal Party tried to spread in the constituency of Richelieu through the efforts of their candidate.

Ours is a proud region, and I enjoyed telling the story of Baie Dufévre's farmer, a good Conservative, who was told by his neighbor, a Liberal farmer who, having been used to years of arrogance was always boasting of having the best performance: You know, in the morning I get aboard my jeep, and when the day ends I have not seen the end of my farm. To which our good Conservative friend replied: I also have a jeep like yours. This shows that the era of arrogance is over in that region, the fear Liberals tried to instill into the people during the election campaign is over.

This is also true of the area of Pierreville—the Pierre Thibault company which makes fire trucks, is banking enormously on free trade to increase its work force and of course its list of customers—all because of higher productivity that free trade would bring about. The regions of Yamaska and Saint-David and the communities in and around the Sorel-Tracy region, namely Saint-Robert, Saint-Aimé, Sainte-Victoire and Saint-Ours, will benefit greatly from free trade. My constituency, Sorel-Tracy, in particular, stands to gain considerably. Companies like Atlas Steel and Slater Steel, which buy much of their raw material on U.S. markets, will gain guaranteed access to those markets over the course of the next ten years and see the rates drop from ten to two to one per cent annually during that time.

The Free Trade Agreement is a gold mine for companies like Fer et Titane and large companies such as Soreltech in the Sorel-Tracy and neighboring regions. Those regions were predestined for free trade. I salute the voters in my riding of Richelieu and thank them once again for the wide margin and the 69 per cent majority they gave me. I intend to keep working as I have done during the past four years, that is, to represent them and voice their concerns in this Chamber, and, especially, to ensure the economic growth of my riding.

Mr. Chairman, as we are now reviewing Clause 2 of the Free Trade Bill which deals mainly with definitions, I would like to share with you a few thoughts concerning social programs. Our social programs received special attention from the Liberals during the election campaign, a campaign based on fear, a lack of confidence in Canada and in Canadians' ability to perform in the North American context. As they had too few economic arguments, the Liberals turned to scaremongering, saying that our hospitals and our social programs would be jeopardized by the Free Trade Agreement. Experts proved it wasn't so, of course, and we had to remind the Liberals and the people of Canada that their fears were totally unfounded!

On the issue of federal-provincial relations, the Liberals claimed that it was impossible to come to any agreement with the provinces. Yet, we managed to do so. They have always been rather arrogant. This reminds me of an anecdote concerning the Liberal team which was in office before we took over in 1984. It seems there was an African province which had a problem with elephants. So this African province appeared before the United Nations and urged that a special commission be appointed to solve the problem created by surplus elephants within its territory. Thus Canada was appointed, as were France and England of course, along with the Americans, and their mandate was to find a solution to the problem of surplus elephants in that province.

The Americans did not waste any time coming up with their solution: How to can elephants and sell them for human consumption. The French produced a report entitled: Is control of unweid female elephants possible? Our English friends took a novel approach in their report: Can we organize safaris for the royal family with a view to reducing the number of elephants in that region of Africa? But nary a word from the Canadians, the Liberal Government just could not produce a report. So two months later the UN President called and said:

Are you going to release your report on the elephant problem? Two months later they delivered a long report entitled: Do elephants fall under provincial or federal jurisdiction?

So that is the kind of Government we had, forever wondering, before intervening, whether a given issue was a provincial or federal responsibility, instead of creating a climate of co-operation between the provinces, as this Government has done, which has resulted in a significant economic fallout in all ridings throughout Quebec and the rest of Canada.

Since the trade agreement was signed we have often said that the integrity of Canada's social security system is not threatened by the Free Trade Agreement. Indeed, Mr. Chairman, the greatest threat against our social programs would be a stagnant economy, protectionism and the status quo. Not only does the trade deal not threaten our social programs, but our Government and future Governments will have all the leeway they need to prepare new social policies to meet the needs of all Canadians. Our social security system is second to none in the world and we are proud of this collective achievement.

Mr. Chairman, history has shown that we can enhance our social system while remaining competitive on the market. Canadian companies have shown that they can compete internationally and the argument that social programs are an unfair burden and hurt the competitiveness of Canadian companies is invalid.

In 1965, Madam Chairman, Canada acquired a health insurance program and over the next 20 years, trade with the United States grew steadily to reach nearly 80 per cent of our total exports. During this time, health insurance was never considered an unfair burden by business. Why would we believe today, Madam Chairman, that our health insurance program or our old age security pension plan in particular would affect our ability to compete? Only a flourishing economy is able to give a country an adequate social security system for its people. And that is just what the Free Trade Agreement will give Canada: prosperity.

These same social programs, Madam Chairman, cannot be considered subsidies because—

• (2110)

Ms. Copps: Madam Chairman, if you know the Standing Orders, you know that Members may talk about anything in the House when it sits in Committee of the Whole.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Madam Chairman, the Hon. Member has just said that the Free Trade Agreement will guarantee a flourishing economy. I would like to know whether he is saying that to the Gillette workers.

Mr. Charest: It seems to me, Madam Chairman, that the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) should know that in Committee of the Whole, her question is absolutely not a point of order. We are surprised that now, after four years of experience in the House of Commons, she does not know better. Maybe we should not be surprised, Madam Speaker. But anyway—

It is obviously not a point of order.

Mr. Plamondon: Madam Chairman, I think that if each and every time we disagreed with the arguments put forward by members of the Opposition or the NDP, we would be rising on points of order at every word so to speak. But we extended them the courtesy of hearing them, and I hope Opposition Members will extend me the same courtesy by hearing my arguments. I would be most pleased to join the Hon. Member at any time in a debate on workers' problems and the number of new jobs created by this Government, as opposed to the number of jobs lost when they were the Government.

But let me come back, Madam Chairman, to the matter of social measures. I was saying that those same social programs cannot be viewed as subsidies, because under a principle of international law, under the American and Canadian legislations, they are not when they apply to the whole population, such as health care, unemployment insurance, old age security pensions, maternity benefits and other social benefits.

Moreover, government services such as health care are excluded from the agreement. Only management services for health care facilities, such as maintenance, food services and payroll services come under the agreement.

The inclusion of those services, Madam Chairman, only recognized the status quo. It will neither encourage nor discourage the entry of American firms into the management of health care facilities. The activities of those businesses have been and will be under the jurisdiction of provincial Governments; where a provincial Government decided to privatize the management of those health facilities and thereby to allow American firms to bid for contracts, American firms wishing to locate in Canada could then do so.

The inclusion of management services for health care facilities, Madam Chairman, in no way threatens the viability of our programs. The Free Trade Agreement poses no threat, and provinces have all the leeway needed to manage their own facilities.

If I may, Madam Chairman, I should like to quote Mr. Ritchie who was on the Canadian team which negotiated the free trade deal. He said:

If these facilities are administered by the federal or provincial Governments, if they are quasi-public and non-profit making, in all such cases they are not covered (by the Free Trade Agreement). Even if they are commercial. Of course, the Governments have every right to regulate, even regulate who can become the owner of such facilities.

As Mr. Ritchie sees it, clearly the problem of privatizing health facilities has nothing to do with the free trade deal.

Ninety-five per cent of Canadian hospitals are publicly-owned, therefore they are not covered under the FTA. As long as these facilities remain public property, nothing in the trade agreement threatens the ownership of our hospitals. When there is talk of managing health care facilities, the reference is to services only, services such as computers and catering, for example.

Madam Chairman, I am proud to live in a country which over the years has managed to use its resources in such a way as to make it possible for all citizens to enjoy decent living conditions. I know that all Government Members share my views.

Madam Chairman, we are not the only people in this country who are convinced that the Free Trade Agreement will not affect our social programs. Eminent personalities like Judge Emmet Hall, the father of health insurance in Canada, Claude Castonguay, who is mainly responsible for giving Quebec health insurance, Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Quebec's Minister of Health and Social Services, Pierre-Marc Johnson, former Minister of Social Affairs in Quebec, Bernard Landry and so many others have maintained that nothing in this Agreement endangers the viability of our social programs.

But there is more than expert opinion, Madam Chairman; there are all those Canadians who on November 21 gave the Conservative party a second mandate to bring this great enterprise, the Free Trade Agreement, to completion. They are people who care about the future of the country, as we do, and who have understood that Canada's sovereignty in the field of social policy is not threatened by this Agreement. There are all my constituents in the riding of Richelieu, Madam Chairman, who gave me a second mandate and whom I am proud to represent—young people, others not so young, entrepreneurs and builders who have confidence in themselves and who know that they can meet the challenge of free trade.

These are the same people, Madam Chairman, who have understood that only a strong, prosperous Canada can guarantee the viability of our social programs. And this very prosperity necessarily depends on implementing the Free Trade Agreement with our largest trading partner, the United States.

Thank you, Madam Chairman, and again, let me thank those who voted for me in Richelieu.

[English]

Mr. Flis: Madam Chairman, after a leave of absence of four years, it is indeed a great honour to speak in this Chamber again. I was looking forward to returning because in the four years I was absent the Members who served here brought in some excellent changes to the rules of the House.

For example, Private Members' Bills are getting to be much more important now, and I know of the work done on that by the Hon. Member for Etobicoke—Lakeshore. I know that parliamentary standing committees have been given much more authority and accountability. These are all positive steps in the right direction. The bells are much more pleasant to listen to, and that is a step in the right direction as well.

One thing that disturbed me very much upon returning was the fact that from day one the Government facing me has been closure crazy. It will not allow us to put amendments. It will not listen to what is being said. It will not listen to the new Members of Parliament who represent the people of Canada.

In 1981 when the Liberal Government brought in time allocation on a borrowing Bill, nothing so Draconian as closure but simply time allocation, the Minister for International Trade who introduced Bill C-2 to implement the Canada-U.S. FTA said:

What about closure, Mr. Speaker? We have just seen this government attempt to hijack the whole Canadian nation, not Parliament but our whole country, destroy the very consensus on which it is based by using their majority in this House to do things they were not authorized to do by the public. . . . They are not a legitimate government when they attempt to change the very nature of Canada—

Now who is changing the nature of Canada? Those were the words of the Hon. Minister for International Trade, but he wants to change the nature of Canada without listening to the new Members of Parliament or to Canadians.

Directing the House Leader, of course, is none other than the Deputy Prime Minister. I used to have a very high respect for him, but let me tell Hon. Members what he said:

If we believe in parliamentary democracy and the right to freedom of speech, then we must ensure that the rights and privileges of Parliament are always secure.

By virtue of a closure motion today we have a further contempt for and erosion of the spirit and privileges of this institution. I believe tyranny begins when parliamentary debate ends.

He went on to say:

At the very outset I must say that I abhor this tactic. I find it offensive. I find it repugnant because it strikes at the basic fabric of our parliamentary democracy. Instead of having a parliamentary democracy we have what resembles a parliamentary dictatorship.

Who is the dictator today trying to force the most important Bill next to the Constitution through this House without allowing any amendments, bringing in closure every day since we have been here? Who is the dictator now?

I want to thank the people of Parkdale—High Park for re-electing me and sending me to speak on their behalf. My predecessor received a total of 34 per cent of the votes.

Mr. McDermid: What did you get?

Mr. Flis: And even those were votes won by intimidation, votes by third party advertising presidents sending letters to workers intimidating them to work for the Conservative Member. I have never seen an election with that kind of intimidation. It is a disgrace that the Tory Party would stoop to doing that.

I am here to represent my constituents. Before I got to Ottawa there were already letters on my desk awaiting me. Here is one from two of my constituents:

Dear Mr. Flis:

We are just two of the many Canadians who are very concerned about the future of this country. We do not believe that a majority of Canadian people want this deal passed, and an over fifty-per-cent vote against the Conservatives strengthens this belief.

Please continue to fight as loudly as you can against free trade. In a democratic society it is the majority who should decide and it is our opinion that a national referendum is the only true way to discover whether Canadians really want this deal passed. This issue, the future of Canada, is too important to allow Mr. Mulroney to assume a majority of consent of the Canadian people.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

If the recent decision to close certain plants in Ontario and Quebec is a preview of the results of free trade, then Canada's future is in doubt:

Yours truly,
Charlene E. Black, & William K. Jackson

The Minister of non-housing should have the courtesy to listen to the constituents of Parkdale—High Park.

Mr. McDermid: I am listening.

Mr. Flis: He never listens. He has no respect for our constituents.

Here is another letter from Andrew Cullen. Mr. Cullen, from 89 Constance Street, writes:

Dear Mr. Flis:

I want to voice my support for your opposition to the trade pact and I hope that you will do what you can to stop or amend it in the House.

Here is a constituent who realizes that the Conservatives won a majority. What is he asking through me? He is asking that they accept amendments.

The Liberal Party through our critic, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre, has presented excellent amendments on behalf of our Party. We would like to see an amendment that would provide a permanent review by parliamentary committee. What is wrong with that, Madam Chairman? You would allow it. You are a fair person. The amendment would be like this:

The implementation of this Act shall be reviewed on a permanent basis by such committee of the Senate, of the House of Commons or of both Houses of Parliament as may be designated or established for that purpose.

What is wrong with such an amendment, or an amendment to allow to review and report after three years? We would simply word it as follows:

The committee designated or established for the purpose of subsection (1) shall, within three years after the coming into force of this Act, undertake a comprehensive review of the provisions and operation of this Act, and shall, within a reasonable period thereafter, cause to be laid before each House of Parliament a report thereon.

What is wrong with that amendment, Madam Chairman? We have an amendment about the protection of our environment and health. I know the Tories are not interested in protecting our environment and health. They have no respect for Canada's environment. They have no respect for our health programs. We would word it:

For greater certainty, nothing in this Act or in the Agreement shall restrict the authority of the Government of Canada to protect the Canadian environment and the health of Canadians.

The Tories will not accept that amendment. What about an amendment to protect the cultural industries, worded:

For greater certainty, nothing in this Act or in the Agreement shall limit or restrict the support of the Government of Canada to the development of cultural industries in Canada.

What is wrong with that amendment?

Do you think, Madam Chairman, that the Tories will accept an amendment to protect health care facilities management services? We would word it:

Notwithstanding Article 103 of the Agreement, the federal government shall not compel municipal or provincial governments, through the use of override legislation, to comply with any provisions of the Agreement with respect to health care facilities management services enumerated under the Standard Industrial Classification numbers—

For their information we even list the numbers because the Tories cannot read, Madam Chairman. What about an amendment on adjustment programs? I raised in this House during Question Period the ripple or chain effect this Bill will have on small industries. I gave an example of Hamida Textiles Inc. In canvassing I met a constituent who was selling equipment to restaurants. Another was in the pharmaceutical business, another in the furniture business, and another in the medical supply business. Everyone told me that if this trade deal went through they would go under.

All we are asking is for protection for those small businesses that will go under. What kinds of adjustment programs are there for them? What kinds of retraining programs are there? The Bill does not give any. The Minister gives great promises, but will he deliver on those promises? Can we trust this Government? This is a Government which promised that senior citizen's pensions would not be touched. What happened? The Tories tried to touch them, but we would not let them.

We heard a lot of debate about the social programs. If they are not going to be touched as the Tories say, why not allow us an amendment such as this one:

For greater certainty, nothing in this Act or in the Agreement shall be interpreted so as to affect the continuation of existing or the establishment of new Canadian social programs, including the health care system, unemployment insurance, child care, pensions, minimum wage law, labour law and maternity benefits.

These are all programs which the Liberal Governments brought in over the years and which the Tories want to give away. I am very honoured to return to this House at the same time as the Hon. Members for Nunatsiak and for Western Arctic.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

[Translation]

Mr. Ferland: Point of order, Madam Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Portneuf (Mr. Ferland) on a point of order.

Mr. Ferland: Thank you very much, Madam Chairman. I am sorry, but there is a tradition in this House that allows Members to clap their hands but not to pound on their desks. It might be worthwhile to point this out to the new Members.

[English]

Mr. Nunziata: Madam Chairman, I rise on the same point of order. On behalf of the Official Opposition I would like to apologize to the Hon. Member for waking him up.

• (2130)

Mr. Flis: The Hon. Member knows that he has no point of order.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Would the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park wait for a second, please.

I know that there are a number of new Members. The Hon. Member for Portneuf raised a very valid point, and I am sure it would be very much appreciated by everyone. The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park has the floor.

Mr. Arseneault: Madam Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Is the Chair saying that we were not correct in what we were doing here? We cannot hear you from here.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Restigouche might hear a little better if he would wear the earphone which is provided to every Member.

There is a custom in this place where people do not normally use their desks to applaud, but use their hands.

Mr. Arseneault: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I will keep an eye on everything.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member is quite welcome. The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park.

Mr. Flis: I know that the Hon. Members for Nunatsiag and Western Arctic would want to see an amendment on aboriginal claims which we would word it: "For greater certainty, nothing in this Act or in the agreement applies to the lands, resources, and waters claimed by aboriginal people pursuant to an aboriginal claim, or to the laws and policies relating to such claims."

I think that everyone in the House should support that amendment, and we should be proud that there are MPs in this House who represent those people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Flis: In this whole Bill the term "subsidies" is not defined. We know the negative impact that that might have on regional economic development. We would like to introduce an amendment to protect our regional economic development programs. We would word it: "For greater certainty, nothing in this Act or in the agreement shall, in any way limit or restrict the exercise of the authority of the Government of Canada in any of the following areas".

Time will not permit me to list all the areas, but areas such as the economic development of all regions of Canada on an equitable basis, and formulation of plans and integrated strategies to support development and diversification of the economies of all regions of Canada. The Government has our amendments. However, it will not allow us to table them.

My constituents of Parkdale—High Park sent me here, if not to kill the Bill, at least to make it better. When we were the Government I remember us debating the Constitution, the Western Grain Transportation Act known as the crow Bill, the Canadian Aviation Safety Board Bill, and the Ports Canada Bill. We allowed amendments from the Official Opposition. Will the Government allow any from this Official Opposition? No, it has forgotten what Parliament is all about. It is hijacking Parliament.

One of my constituents is concerned about foreign takeovers, and in his letter he further states:

I am a computer software contractor, and even though I can compete well in the U.S. (I did about $30,000 worth of business there last year) I am worried by the lack of foreign takeover protection. Our high-tech industries may be able to compete, but they are vulnerable to foreign buyouts.

We certainly have competitive industries, but if they are taken over they are no better to us than any other branch-plant; the profits move south and are not ploughed back for the future, then the technology moves south, and soon after the jobs move south. I already see a dangerous level of penetration of our industry, and I think we will find one day that the winners have been bought and that we are left with the loser.

The letter is from Andrew Cullen, a constituent of Parkdale—High Park.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Minister of State for Housing is not listening to grass roots Canadians. He thinks that he knows it all. I invite him to come and visit Parkdale—High Park where people have nowhere to sleep and where six to eight people have to sleep on the floor in one room. I invite the Minister to come and see what the housing crisis is all about and to listen to the grass roots people.

I not only received letters from the riding of Parkdale—High Park. I received letters from across Canada. The following is a letter from Saskatchewan which states:

Dear Mr. Flis,

I am writing as a Canadian citizen, who is extremely concerned that an independent Canada be left for my children and future generations of Canadian children.

I therefore urge you, as an elected member, representing the over 1,200,000 more Canadians who voted against the Free Trade Agreement than voted for it—to be true to your mandate—and fight the F.T.A.

That is someone from Saskatchewan who is asking me to stand here and fight this agreement. Perhaps I am receiving so many letters from Saskatchewan because I was born and raised there. The letter further states:

Canadians elected you, on the promise to fight for our future. Your duty to Canada is to fulfil that promise.

I look forward to your reply.

Yours truly,
Jessie L. Steinhauer-Edwards

I also received a letter from New Westminster, B.C., which was addressed to Jesse Flis, Parkdale—High Park. It states:

The results of the recent federal election clearly demonstrate that a substantial majority of Canadians voted against the Mulroney-Reagan Trade Deal. In fact, only in the provinces of Alberta and Quebec did the Mulroney government receive absolute majorities and, again, not in every riding.

Therefore, we strongly urge you to work to the best of your ability to oppose this deal that the majority of Canadians do not want or in the alternate, based on tactical considerations, fight for effective amendments to lessen its adverse effects on Canadians.

Here is someone from B.C. asking us to fight to bring in amendments, and the Government will not listen. It will not even let us table the amendments. Talk about hijacking Parliament, shame.

Every Prime Minister has a vision of Canada. Unfortunately, the vision of the present Prime Minister is a scary one. He wants to give up what our immigrant parents built for over 100 years. They built this country with their bare hands, and the Government wants to give it away to the United States.

Mr. Mayer: What a bunch of rubbish.

Mr. Flis: In this Parliament we are casting an historic vote on Canada's fate. We are casting a vote to decide whether we want a mosaic Canada like our fathers built or a melting pot Canada. We are to vote on whether we want a Canadian Canada or an American Canada. We are to vote on whether we want a sovereign nation or whether we want to be the fifty-first state of the United States.

Ms. Copps: We choose Canada.

Mr. Boudria: I rise on a point of order, Madam Chairman. I am seeking clarification and assistance from the Chair. I have had the opportunity to review the precedents, and I am unable to find where it has been decided that it was not permitted in any way for Members, either in Committee of the Whole or in the House of Commons, to manifest their approval of another Member's speech by way of applauding on the desks as opposed to with their hands.

Given that this was raised by a Member across the way, and it has been reviewed by yourself, I am seeking assistance from the Chair. Thus far it has been the practice, started by some individual caucuses which for reasons known to themselves would demonstrate their approval in a manner that was changed after television was brought into the House of Commons, but there are no rules preventing or suggesting by which means the applause should be manifested. Perhaps the Chair could enlighten Members on the ruling that was given some time ago.

Mr. Oberle: I will be prepared, Madam Chairman, to allow the Hon. Member, and perhaps the one sitting next to him, special dispensation to thump their desks. It seems to me that it would better reflect the nature of their respective characters.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Restigouche.

Mr. Arseneault: Madam Chairman, I do not need special dispensation from the Hon. Member. I can speak for myself. I can only say that the speech was such a great one, I could not restrain my enthusiasm. It is not my fault that those on the opposite side were awakened.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I should like to respond to the point raised by the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

There is not in fact a written rule forbidding Hon. Members from using their desk tops in that manner for the purpose of showing approval or disapproval in respect of what is being said. However, because it causes sound problems for the television technicians, it is a practice that has fallen into disuse.

I see no difficulty in new Members being made aware of the problems that it causes, and it is my hope that it is not something that would again become a practice in this Parliament.

Mr. Boudria: Madam Chairman, if I may, I should like to express my appreciation to the Chair for its clarification of that previous ruling.

Mr. Attewell: Madam Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Markham, on a point of order.

Mr. Attewell: Madam Chairman, having been born in the Parkdale—High Park area of Toronto, and having spent my first 20 years in that area, I am embarrassed by the lack of substance in the remarks of the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park.

I wonder if we might be able to get all-party agreement to give him another 20 minutes, in the hope that he can come up with something of some substance and content.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear! It is unanimous.

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Flis: On a point of order, Madam Chairman—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park on a point of order.

Mr. Flis: Madam Chairman, because of all the heckling, I was only able to get half way through my remarks, and certainly I could use another 20 minutes in order to finish them. I am willing to accede to the request of the Hon. Member for Markham, and in fact I now seek unanimous consent of the Committee of the Whole to continue for another 20 minutes.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I have asked whether there is unanimous consent that the Hon. Member for Parkdale—High Park be permitted to continue for another 20 minutes, and that unanimous consent is not forthcoming.

[Translation]

Mr. Côté: Madam Chairman, before I start, I would like to thank the people of the magnificent riding of Richmond—Wolfe for turning the riding around and helping to bring this Government back to power.

Here are a few facts about my riding. Richmond—Wolfe boasts 52 municipalities and towns and 53,000 voters, 11 per cent of whom are Anglophone. Its main industries are in the manufacturing and mining sector. The city of Asbestos exports asbestos; Disraeli exports Shermag furniture; Bromptonville and Windsor export pulp and paper; Valcourt, in my riding, is home to Bombardier, a large, well-known firm. The people of Richmond—Wolfe voted for Yvon Côté and the Government because they are convinced of the positive impact and economic benefits of free trade. I share their conviction and take this opportunity to thank them for their support.

It is with great pride, Mr. Chairman, that I take part today in the debate on the Free Trade Agreement. On November 21, the people of my riding, and millions of other Canadians like them, showed the rest of the world—yes, the rest of the world—that Canada wants to open itself to the world. They are the people, Mr. Chairman, that I have the honour and privilege to represent in this Chamber.

Barely a few years ago, China, Iran and even some European countries seemed to us to be somewhat distant and inaccessible and we even had difficulty imagining that other economic systems could exist. All that really mattered for us was our own country, I might even say our own town or village. Well, we realize now that there is in this world, in addition to Canada, a great many other countries and thousands of towns and villages, and that it extends beyond the oceans, as we know now through the printed media and other forms, as well as through our travelling and business acquaintances.

Today, whenever we switch on our television sets, we can visit this planet which includes more than our parish, our town and even our country, and we can even reach out to other planets.

Today, we must learn to share with others. Technical progress in the area of communications, the specialization of production and even transformation technologies, as well as the lack of some resources are factors which, among others, have contributed to opening up the world, especially in the area of trade.

As I was saying, we are no longer the citizens of a ward, a city, or even a country. In several respects, we belong to the international community.

I think we all know the Rolling Stones who do not belong to this country. We all enjoy eating New Zealand lamb and we are pleased to taste clementines from Morocco. We enjoy the fragrance of French perfumes. We wear clothing made in Hon Kong and we are happy to drive European or Japanese cars.

In my own riding, we have an international vocation. Pulp and paper from Brompton and Windsor, as well as asbestos from the city of Asbestos are exported everywhere in the world, the Bombardier firm with its snow and transportation equipment, are all proof that we are no longer living in a small village, but that we have become international in our dealings exchanges with other countries.

Mr. Chairman, such is the reality which we must accept. I regret that the people sitting in the Opposition cannot recognize this reality. We must maximize our opportunities by opening up trade with the rest of the world. As a matter of fact, as recently as December 15, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) stated before the Conference of the Americas, and I quote:

To use a truism, national economies are becoming more interdependent, and what occurs outside our country is now as important as what occurs inside.

Again, this goes to show you that what concerns the rest of the world concerns us too.

How many countries are now geared to the international market? Let's take for example the European Economic Community, or the free trade deals between Australia and New Zealand. I should also mention Israel and the United States, and countries like Canada and the United States which are slowly but surely moving towards such international agreements.

The obvious thing about free trade is that it seems to satisfy the needs of each and every country, each and every partner, while making good use of the economic, geographical or political characteristics which make them unique. It is like two merchants in a village who, instead of competing against each other, decide to merge through a partnership agreement. In such a way will Canada, instead of being the so-called little brother to the American big brother, become an equal partner with the United States, with the same rights and claims.

History shows us therefore that Canada and the United States have developed through this century a most powerful trading relationship.

The idea of striking a free trade agreement with the United States did not come by chance to our political leaders nor is it a drastic change in Canada's history. This agreement, Mr. Chairman, is merely the logical extension of an existing relationship in accordance with the trend towards trade liberalization which prevails in the international economic community.

While I am on the subject of history, Mr. Chairman, allow me to recall certain events. In 1911, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, then Prime Minister of Canada, sought to liberalize trade with the United States. In 1935, to refresh the memory of the Liberal Opposition, Mackenzie King signed an agreement with the Americans in order to reduce tariff barriers between Canada and the United States. In 1983, to again refresh the memory of the Liberal Opposition, the Liberal Prime Minister, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, also sought to establish sectorial trade deals while establishing at the same time the Royal Commission on the Economic Union and Development prospects for Canada, better known as the Macdonald Commission.

I am only recalling a few facts of our history. They all have in common the same will to modify and even depolitize the framework of the economic relationship between Canada and the United States.

That relationship exists mainly because of the geography of our two countries. Is it not a fact that Boston is nearer to Montreal than Vancouver or even Calgary for instance, without of course making it a matter of distances to our fellow citizens in western Canada.

Clearly, nature had its way. The value of our exports to the United States has been on a constant increase, Mr. Chairman. Today, nearly 80 per cent of our exports go to our neighbors down South. Some believe, or used to believe at least that since we already exported close to 80 per cent of our products, there was no need to sign an agreement for freer trade because of the access we already had to the American market.

However, Mr. Chairman, that access is very uncertain. Let us simply recall lumber which many Members already referred to in their speeches, and which was a victim of American protectionism. So there are dangers to be avoided. If the Americans had fully countervailed, as they were getting ready to, the countervails that were being contemplated could have ruined 20 of Quebec's towns and villages, and wreaked havoc in British Columbia.

Those situations, Mr. Chairman, are a constant menace for Canada and whole segments of our economy. The rising protectionism in the United States is in fact a constant danger for our country and certainly could have become so, had it not been for the prospect of the Free Trade Agreement with our neighbours down South. And indeed, the Free Trade Agreement is checking that strong American tendency to protectionism while granting Canada a privileged trade status.

That agreement, Mr. Chairman, allows us to maintain our access to the United States and develop the potential of other sectors that until now were being kept away by tariffs that often were very high. We need the American market, as the United States also needs Canada to strengthen their international economic credibility.

On this matter, Mr. Chairman, let me quote Mr. Bernard Landry, an economist and former Minister in the Lévesque government:

For a few years in particular, the Americans have been promoting freer trade on the global scale in a very far-sighted and probably generous way. They are preaching to the rest of the world fair practices and fluid trade.

Their argument stands to lose weight if the economic borders between the U.S. and their main partner are more anarchical and less open than, let's say, those between European allies.

And that is one good reason why the United States want freer trade with Canada. This trade deal is also important to us because it gives us access to the American market. Not only do we have to continue trading with the United States, but we also have to face more aggressive international competitors. The emergence of new industrialized countries from Asia, including the exceptional development of Japan and the growth of China, not to mention Europe of 1992, are all key elements to the new dynamics of international trade. We will have to fight very capable competitors. We already know that. So, it won't be easy to maintain and assert our position on the world economic scene.

Mr. Chairman, in this tough competitive world, Canada was the only big industrialized country which did not have access to a market, at home or abroad, of more than 100 million people. And we all know the importance of such a deal.

The Free Trade Agreement will give us access to a market of more than 250 million people, giving us the opportunity to produce in huge quantities and to lower production costs. This is what we mean by economies of scale. So, who will be the big winner in all of this? The United States compared to us, or us compared to the United States. Obvious, isn't it? We will gain access to a market of 250 million people. Americans are the ones who might have doubts about a market of only 25 million people spread out from East to West! I think the advantages are obvious. Therefore, to succeed on international markets, we must be competitive, Mr. Chairman, and there is no magic formula for maximizing our chances of success. We have to offer the best products at the lowest prices. It's simple logic.

We already have trading relations with Europe and Asia, but we must put all the chances on our side if we want to maintain these relations and develop new ones. The world has changed, Mr. Chairman, and we must be competitive if we are to maintain our standard of living. We must therefore hold our own on the international economic scene and, to achieve this, we must start at the beginning by respecting the nature of our own trading dynamics.

The prosperity of the Canadian economy depends largely on its capacity to export. A third of our GNP depends on trade and accounts for 3 million jobs, 2 million of which are linked exclusively with our trade with the United States.

Mr. Chairman, the Americans are our major trading partners. We are an exporting nation and a lot of our wealth comes from trade. Why seek elsewhere what we already have near at hand?

Mr. Chairman, just south of the border lies the greatest industrial country in the world with which we have been trading for more than a century and which offers us the possibility of developing our economic potential. The opponents of free trade have been desperately trying to have us believe that this agreement threatens our sovereignty, our social programs and our regional development policies.

Finally, if anything threatens our sovereignty, it is our stagnant economy. Mr. Chairman, nothing in this Agreement threatens our national sovereignty. Under this Agreement, we maintain our capacity to manage our own cultural, social, economic and environmental promotion tools, that is our own destiny. How have we managed to implement all those programs so typically Canadian, when for the past 50 years we have lowered our tariff barriers and increased our trade with the United States? Have we lost those social programs? Have we lost our sovereignty? Never. In fact, Mr. Chairman, it's partly our profits from increased trade over that period that allowed us to introduce health insurance, old age pensions, family allowances, and all those great social programs at the heart of Canada and our well-being.

Some key figures have also maintained that nothing in the Agreement threatened the viability of our social programs. Those people, Mr. Chairman, are none other than the fathers of the Canada and Quebec Pension Plans, namely Mr. Justice Emmett Hall and Mr. Claude Castonguay. Let me quote the latter: "I disagree completely with those who say that our social programs are threatened by free trade. On the contrary, with the Canada-U.S. Agreement, we stand a better chance to maintain and possibly improve our social programs." Their statements have been endorsed by the Quebec Minister of Health and Social Services, Mrs. Lavoie-Roux, and by a former holder of that portfolio, Mr. Pierre-Marc Johnson.

In conclusion, we must not be deceived. Mr. Chairman, only an economically strong Canada will be able to support these programs and our ability to promote new ones. That is what I call acquiring the wherewithal to assert one's sovereignty. I repeat, Mr. Chairman, the world is changing and evolving rapidly. Now, trade is not only nationwide, but rather worldwide. Therefore, any responsible government must set its trade policies with this in mind. If our country manages to add a successful round of GATT negotiations to the success of the Free Trade Agreement, it will have a solid base for growth and prosperity. That is the rationale for the twofold approach to trade which the Conservative Party intends to pursue. Mr. Chairman, there could be no valid alternative to such a good, realistic vision of the dynamics of trade. That is why on November 21, Canadians, and in particular the voters of Richmond—Wolfe, chose to trust the only Canadian political party that is able to ensure the economic future of this region and also the nation.

The people have spoken. They clearly expressed their opinion and there can be no more obstacles to implementing the policies that the people have freely chosen to support. Canada is therefore committed to seeing its trade initiative with the United States through, in the firm conviction that it will be an important springboard for the development and prosperity of this country. The world is opening to us, Mr. Chairman, and we must give ourselves the tools required to keep and strengthen our place in the international economic community. This is the challenge that Canada will meet because we are giving it the chance.

[English]

Mr. Parent: Mr. Chairman, I too rise with a great deal of pride in this debate. I am one of the new-old fellows. A few days ago the House Leader said that first we had the rat pack and now we have the retreads coming back. There is an old saying in French—

[Translation]

The more things change, the more they remain the same! The House has changed a little. Instead of 282 Members we now have 295 and each Party is well represented in the House.

[English]

I want to talk tonight not only about free trade. I want to mention how very happy I am that the citizens of the riding of Welland—St. Catharines—Thorald chose to send me back here. I also want to say something about the gentleman who sat in this House in this place for four years. I refer to Mr. Allan Pietz who was a member of the governing Party on the other side of this place. Mr. Pietz served my riding very well. He is an honorable and honest man.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Parent: We first met in the 1979 election. I nudged him out. He then came back in 1984 to defeat me. I have won the seat again.

I come back with some humility as a matter of fact. Most of the Members in the House have not tasted defeat. I have. It gives one a different perspective about what one tries or is trying to do when one comes back to this place.

The riding of Welland had its name changed. It used to be just the riding of Welland, which it was since 1867. Since 1935 it was held by a Liberal Member of Parliament. I will try to hold it a little bit longer. I must tell Hon. Members that the people of the riding were served well by Mr. Pietz. I hope to continue in his tradition.

Tonight I want to talk about the free trade Bill which is before us. Yes, it is an historic Bill. In it Canada is choosing the direction that it will take for the foreseeable future. Make no mistake about it, our country is now going down a road which will be more and more driven simply by economics. I wish I could say that I believe in my heart that economics will not be the only thing that matters to members of the Government. I ask them in the name of the people who elected me to be cautious before they do any tampering with any of the programs that we have put in place over the years.

Free trade is not something which is new to my Party. We in this House know that it was the Liberal Party which was in power with the exception of a few years under the leadership of Mr. Diefenbaker and the present Secretary of State for External Affairs. From 1948 to 1984 Liberals are the ones who negotiated the trade deals which made it so that we could trade 80 per cent of our goods, at least, and 90 per cent in Ontario, with the United States where there were no tariffs or duties put on goods. We did that by being sure that we did not dislocate too many Canadian people. We did it always keeping in mind that first and foremost we are here not only to make the almighty dollar but to take care of those people who are given into our care for whatever time we serve in this place.

At the outset of the election and before that in 1983 even the Prime Minister said: "Don't talk to me about free trade. I will have none of it—not now, not ever". Some time in the intervening years the Prime Minister decided to change his mind. In so doing he has virtually dragged us down that road, that road which I think is going to offer a number of pitfalls.

With respect, Mr. Chairman, I believe that this free trade deal is not a good deal for Canada. The reason I oppose it is because it does not give the type of protection that I believe the people of Canada will be needing in the months and years ahead.

When the Government set out to put free trade into motion, it wanted three things. One of the things it wanted was free and unfettered access to U.S. markets. I submit the Government did not get such a concession from the United States.

A second thing the Government wanted was a tribunal that would settle disputes between the two countries. It did not get a tribunal which could make binding decisions. All this tribunal can do is decide whether Canadian law or American law has been broken. We know from the softwood lumber deal and the 15 per cent tax that we have our people put on their product that this has remained in place even with the free trade deal. What many of the premiers wanted and this Government said it wanted was an exemption from the omnibus trade Bill, the protectionist trade Bill, coming into place by the United States. They did not get this protection.

For the three things we set out to do and did not get, what did we have to promise? What did we give up to get this non-deal? One of the things we gave up is control over our energy. It is well known in this House that through this free trade deal, the Americans will have as much access to our energy at Canadian prices as we have. We know that even in a time of crisis when things are difficult for us here in Canada, we will not be able to take care of our citizens first unless we give the Americans the same amount of energy that they had negotiated before on an average of three years.

What do we do with our industries that are located close to energy supplies around the Niagara Peninsula and Niagara Falls where hydro is sold at a cheaper rate in Ontario than in the United States? We, as Canadians, have developed that energy over the years. Now we will share it without any extra costs to the Americans. They will be paying the same that we will be paying.

Under the National Energy Program, established by the Liberal Government, we had to have a 25-year supply in the ground before we could start exporting. Then it was 15 years. Under this Government, I guess we do not need any supplies for ourselves. Whatever we take out of the ground, we should sell as fast as it comes out.

I submit to you, Mr. Chairman, that we have given up control over our financial institutions. We used to have in Canada FIRA, the foreign review agency, which screened any foreign take-overs of Canadian companies worth more than $5 million. We will have some kind of screening in the years ahead, but after three years, the only screening that there will be by an agency called Investment Canada is for any companies that are worth over $150 million.

We have approximately 7,500 companies worth more than $5 million in Canada. Of those, only 10 per cent are worth more than $150 million. This means that foreign companies will be able to come into Canada to buy up, raid, and merge with Canadian companies so that control of these companies is in the hands of companies from a foreign nation. How long would the United States put up with another nation owning 90 per cent of their energy? How long would it take them to pass a law so that they would have control of their own destiny? Yet, we invite people into Canada to take economic control of our country. By so doing, we diminish ourselves as a nation.

One of the speakers from the other side mentioned earlier that whoever pays the piper is the person who calls the tune. I suggest that before too long, the economic control of our country will be in American hands. They will be calling the economic tune for Canada. We are going to have to dance to whatever song they want us to play.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

—I am sorry, I do not recall the name of his riding—

An Hon. Member: Richmond—Wolfe.

Mr. Parent: —of Richmond—Wolfe talked about pensions—

An Hon. Member: A Québecer.

Mr. Parent: A Québecer is a Canadian. Is there a difference between a Québecer and a Canadian? It is the same thing, even here in this House?

An Hon. Member: Yes.

Mr. Parent: He talked about old age pensions. I remember a few years ago when a woman was here on the Hill, I believe her first name was Solange, and she spoke to our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and at the time the Prime Minister wanted to reduce old age pensions. She said to him: Mr. Mulroney, you lied to us. Imagine saying words like that to a Prime Minister! She said: You lied to us. We voted for you, and then you forgot all about us. Bye, bye Charlie Brown! You remember that, don't you?

[English]

Not only when he spoke about his sacred trust of the old age pensions. It was not long before even the Old Age Pensions were attacked.

We have heard it said time and time again that social programs will not be touched. We have been asking: "Where does it say they will be protected?" There is no place in this agreement where it says they will be protected.

I question seriously whether our social programs will not be attacked and diminished. I believe there will be pressures brought upon this Government by the American Government when they come to negotiate what is a subsidy. These subsidies, if they are seen to be unfair subsidies, will result in demands that they be taken off or diminished. Who is going to suffer for that, Mr.

Chairman? I submit to you it will be the Canadian people who will suffer for that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: They do not care.

Mr. Parent: I do not want to say they do not care. I believe that Hon. Members on both sides should want what is best for the Canadian people. Even if the Americans do not put this kind of pressure on, perhaps it will be our own Canadian businessmen.

There was a report by the Québec Association of Businessmen. They were saying that they will need some relief because of the moneys they are paying for the social programs of the people who are working for them. Already we are getting indications that there will be pressures being brought to attack those people in our society who can least defend themselves.

We have built these social programs over the years, block by block and step by step, so that the Canadian people would be taken care of in their old age. Do we want to become like the Americans in harmonization? If we do, we do not rise to the highest level. I suggest that we will be falling to the lowest common denominator, and that will be falling into the American system. I for one would deplore that very much.

I want to comment briefly on the tactics in this campaign. I sat in the House for a number of years. There were only two times in 10 years that I ever heard the word "liar" used, and on both occasions the people who used the word were kicked out of the House, rightly so. There should be no place in this House for the term "liar", much less for anyone in the House or outside the House to call one of the leaders of our Parties in this country a traitor. These are the kinds of words we heard in this campaign. It is a shame. It brings all of us down when we start talking like that, and we should avoid it.

Ms. Copps: Down in the mud.

[Translation]

Mr. Parent: Yes, it is very sad when people say such things.

[English]

Someone once said that ours is a MacDonald riding. I guess that means we have working people, like my dad was, who work in the factories and try to make a living as best they can for their families.

For the first time in five campaigns there were employers in my riding writing letters to employees, stating that if they did not vote for free trade, they were in grave danger of losing their jobs. It is a form of blackmail. When big business tries to put pressure on ordinary Canadians who are trying to make a living, how do you want them to react, if not at least with a little bit of fear? That is why I expressed at the beginning of my speech how very proud I was to represent the people of Welland—St. Catharines—Thorold. They did not knuckle under to that type of blackmail.

While I do not even like the word, I do know that what they were doing was unfair. It is not in the Canadian tradition to try to force people to one's way of thinking. The Canadian way has always been to try to bring people around to your way of thinking by giving them good arguments.

This is a bad deal. I ask Government Members to act with caution. This may be the fulfilment of the American dream, as Mr. Reagan said it. But it is not the fulfilment of the Canadian dream. Those dreams are in the hands of the Government for the next four years.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Speaker, first let me express my appreciation to my constituents in Fundy—Royal who have given me the opportunity to represent them again in the House of Commons for my fifth mandate.

It indeed has been an interesting time since 1978. As a matter of fact, this last election was probably one of the most interesting and different campaigns that I, along with most other of my colleagues, I know on this side, have experienced since we began our political careers.

At the outset of this campaign, the Leader of the Opposition took a prominent place. I note with interest how quickly that prominence seemed to quickly diminish to the point where the subject of conversation among Canadians was what the Leader of the Opposition would do wrong on a particular day. On the first day we saw the Leader of the Opposition stumble on one position while, on the second day, he stumbled into another position. One began to wonder what the Leader of the Opposition would stumble on next. Is it not a shame what took place?

Ms. Copps: It keeps him out of jail.

Mr. Corbett: What took place is a shame. That is what led us to why we are here now. I know it is difficult for the Opposition to try to concentrate on what happened during the campaign—

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Ms. Copps: Michel Gravel.

Mr. Corbett: —and what went into it—

Ms. Copps: Sinclair Stevens.

Mr. Corbett: The fact is that we and the Canadian public were subject to a very inept campaign by the Opposition. They wondered what they could do to grip the imagination of people in order to get them out of the dilemma concerning the actions of their leader. In Montreal the Liberals were concerned about whether their leader would come back to Montreal, and what kind of trouble they would expect if he did.

Ms. Copps: Tell us about Gravel.

Mr. Corbett: They decided they should do something dramatic to capture the imagination of Canadians. They decided to revert to that tactic that is most despicable. While they knew it to be cowardly, they would do it as a last resort. The Liberals had no substance or background. They had no future unless they did something dramatic. They decided to attack those people in our society.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please. I would appreciate a little civility. I would appreciate if Hon. Members would let me hear the speech, at least to see whether the Hon. Member is in order.

Ms. Copps: We are on Clause 2.

Mr. Corbett: I must say that nothing does my heart and soul better as a Maritimer from the cradle of Confederation than to be able to present to the House of Commons, Canadians and the nation a speech to the melodic strains of O Canada sung, a little off-tune, by the Member from Hamilton. She demonstrated her incapacity in the last Parliament. If she continues, I am sure she will do the same amount of damage to the Canadian electorate in the future.

How were the Liberals going to accomplish these objectives? They were going to approach those people in this country who were least able—

Ms. Copps: I rise on a point of order. To correct the record, I think the Hon. Member believed somehow that I was humming the Canadian national anthem. I was humming the American national anthem. I am surprised that the Member does not know the difference. I am not surprised he will not know the difference five years from now, but we still have our anthem.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Deputy Chairman: The Member for Fundy—Royal.

Mr. Corbett: What it points out to me is that she is unable to as much as carry a tune as she is to carry a message. To get back on track, trading agreements are nothing new to Canada. In the last 40 to 50 years, we have been involved in trading arrangements with various countries. We have been developing trading arrangements with the United States for the last 40 to 50 years.

It was only a couple of weeks or so ago that there was a big meeting in Montreal, a place near and dear to all of our hearts. Where on earth were all of these people? Why were they not thundering down to Montreal to be in touch with what was going on with the very important General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade? They are the ones who expressed so much concern over the number of weeks we were involved in the election campaign.

It seems that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor created some hullabaloo in the House the other day because his Leader had not passed on his invitation to attend this meeting in Montreal, as though it were the Government's fault that his Leader decided that he should not be provided with this invitation. If this is such an important issue, why is it that all these people were not flooding to Montreal, taking up all the hotel rooms, fighting for positions in the conference room? Of course, the answer is that they are not at all interested in trading agreements, as they have not been for the last 40 or 50 years.

What interest is shown when we start discussing tariffs on a bottle of perfume or a suit of underwear or a can of paint?

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I would like to indicate that the Hon. Member yet again inaccurately described what took place with respect to invitations to attend the GATT meetings—

The Chairman: That is not a point of order. On debate, I recognize the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman—

The Chairman: The Chair has ruled that that is not a point of order. On debate, I recognize the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Chairman, I do not doubt that the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor is attempting to take up the time of the House with frivolous points of order because he has nothing left to say. The people said it all on November 21 and we are here to prove that point.

Mr. Langdon: Point of order—

Mr. Corbett: Let me tell Hon. Members why these people are not flocking down to Montreal to listen to what was going on when the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade met.

The Chairman: I recognize on a point of order, and the Chair presumes it is another one, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Chairman, the point I rise on is that you as the Chairman might hear the point of order before making a decision that it is not a point of order. My point is that the reason people were not at the GATT conference to share in the Government's failure was because of a poor approach which the Government took—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Chairman: The Chair fails to see how that can be a point of order. I recognize the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal.

Mr. Corbett: I am delighted that that was brought to our attention. Canada has been a member of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade for a good number of years. As a matter of fact, it was the Hon. Member's colleagues, in conjunction with the Government they supported for so many years, the Liberal Government, who determined that we were so ineffectual to this point. At least we have been able to bring the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to this country to start discussing this country's needs, the first time in a good many years that has taken place. It is to the credit of this Government that we have accomplished at least that much, and that is a heck of a lot more than we can say for Hon. Members opposite. Thank you for bringing that to our attention.

The reason that they did not go to Montreal was because, to their constituents, a discussion about a 15 per cent tariff on a can of paint or on a suit of underwear or on a bottle of perfume is just about as sexy as watching paint dry. I know that to some opposite, that might come as a bit of a shock, but those are the kinds of things they discuss at those meetings. If I stand before Hon. Members and all of a sudden determine that they will lose their medicare and old age pensions—

The Chairman: The Chair has a point of order from the Hon. Member for Restigouche.

Mr. Arseneault: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the Hon. Member would stick to the facts. I do not think it is right for the Hon. Member to presume why I was not at the GATT hearings.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Fundy-Royal has the floor.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Chairman, I will not take that matter up with the new Hon. Member. He can be excused for his ignorance. There is no question that over the next number of years he will become more acquainted with what takes place and how this Chamber works. However—

The Chairman: The Chair has another point of order from the Hon. Member for Restigouche.

Mr. Arseneault: Mr. Chairman, I may be a new Member but I am just an ordinary person and I do not appreciate the word "ignorant". As a schoolteacher and an educator, I never allowed that kind of thing to take place in the classroom. This is the highest court in the land as far as I am concerned, and it should not be allowed here. I think the Hon. Member is lowering himself, and I ask the Hon. Member to withdraw that comment.

Mr. Beatty: You should listen to some of Sheila's speeches.

Ms. Copps: Stick to your tricycle, Perrin.

Mr. Beatty: See what I mean? Get a grip on yourself, Sheila.

The Chairman: The Chair understands full well the reaction of the Hon. Member for Restigouche and the Chair does believe that that type of language should not be used here. However, I will not ask the Hon. Member to withdraw, but I would hope that that type of language would not be used.

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Chairman, I beg to differ with the Hon. Member. There is nothing wrong with being ignorant of issues. If one comes to the House of Commons thinking he or she knows everything about all that goes on, indeed that will create one of the difficulties with which we are faced this evening. We should not expect the people who walk into this Chamber, fresh from the streets and high schools of this nation, when they have not had any opportunities or experiences, to deal with the issues placed before them. They should have the experiences of our front-benchers who have a wealth of knowledge. If you think that I was referring to the individual's intelligence, Mr. Chairman, of course I did not intend that to be the case whatsoever.

We have an opportunity as a nation to take ourselves out of this ignorance and move ourselves into the 21st century to become a part of a world trading nation that will bring prosperity and will provide our children and grandchildren, who would otherwise would not have had a chance, great opportunities. These people would have denied them the opportunity to deliver that message to the people with any enthusiasm on November 21.

Speaking of November 21, I wish to say that today is a great occasion. December 21 is our first anniversary. I would like to congratulate the Government on a grand election which was held just one month ago, and it was a great day for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Corbett: The people have decided. We now have a chance to move forward and provide more opportunities. We have a chance to leave the archaic attitudes of members of the Opposition behind us. We can provide Canadians with new opportunities and social programs—

• (2240)

Ms. Copps: Mr. Chairman, I have a point of order. The Member for Fundy—Royal has claimed today is his anniversary, the anniversary of his Government. I would like to remind the Hon. Member that today happens to be the darkest day of the year, being the winter season.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Corbett: Mr. Chairman, I want to congratulate the Government on its first anniversary of the election and remind Hon. Members opposite, as it has just been brought to my attention, that not only is it the first anniversary, but it is also the longest day in the country's calendar.

Today, as the Government, we have that opportunity of continuing to bring to the country's attention the most significant program the country has probably seen since Confederation, one that will be responsible for bringing increased prosperity and a future that none of us will ever regret.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Corbett: I also want you to understand, Mr. Chairman, that our senior citizens who were concerned about losing their old age pensions, who were concerned about their grandchildren being drafted because of the lies and the other things that were being brought to their attention by way of fearmongering et cetera, are still receiving their old age security. This Christmas will be brighter. This Christmas will be more wonderful and their grandchildren will be more secure.

Let me tell you, Mr. Chairman, the greatest problem that we have with free trade is not the fear of protectionism but the prosperity it will bring all of us as a nation. It will bring us together more united, happier and more able to go forward as we look forward to enjoying the future prosperity that is inevitably going to come.

Mr. Harvey: Mr. Chairman, tonight's poem will be in blank verse, and without discernible meter, so I hope it is deemed to be in order.

I was interested in the remarks of the Member for Fundy—Royal who observed that he was coming here to this body to represent the cradle of Confederation. I am certain that Members of this House and perhaps the people of Canada watching, wherever they may be, will deem it ironic that the Member comes from the cradle of Confederation to serve on the benches of a Government that seems determined to turn this House into the grave of Confederation. Do I hear a point of order already? Surely not.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Nobody is listening.

Mr. Harvey: You are too kind. By heavens, the Government members are feisty tonight. It must be the opening of the Parliamentary Restaurant so late in the evening.

I am pleased, however, to have this opportunity to speak tonight because there will be scores of new members elected to this House for the first time—on that anniversary so lately heralded by the Hon. Member for Fundy—Royal—who will not have the opportunity to speak in this House on this Bill at any of its stages, at any point in its progress.

Mr. McDermid: You have had three times already.

Mr. Harvey: I am sorry, my good friend. This is my first time on this Bill.

The reputation which this Government enjoys for factual information is more than borne out by the chap heckling at this point. There are, I would guess, between 60 and 80 new Members in this House who will have no opportunity to address this Bill despite it having been unquestionably the most important issue discussed in the recent election, which means the constituents who elected them, whether or not on balance they approved of the Free Trade Agreement or rejected the Free Trade Agreement, will be unheard in this House in this Thirty-fourth Parliament, which is, after all, the Parliament—I think it is safe to say—that will pass this Bill into law.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvey: Those Canadians will not be heard because of this Government's unbridled determination to pass this thing by an artificial deadline that means nothing to anybody save it. It is inexplicable unless, of course, one takes into account perhaps overwhelming pride, or perhaps the arrogance of power, or some other such unworthy motivation. As I say, Mr. Chairman, I tonight have this opportunity and I intend to use it and I thank you very much for it.

What we have before us in this Bill is a new fundamental Constitutional document for this country for, as the Bill itself holds out, in those instances where there is a statute or a regulation or some other instrument which is in conflict with the Free Trade Agreement, it is the Free Trade Agreement which will prevail.

I must admit I have not been to law school. That is true. I think that may put me in the minority in this House, but it is true nonetheless. But it does seem to me that the principal characteristic of a fundamental constitutional document is that it overrides anything with which it comes into conflict. That seems to be—Members opposite will correct me if I am wrong—in the nature of this Free Trade Agreement. Hence, it is only reasonable to deem it a fundamental constitutional document.

It is a fundamental constitutional document which, being put in place, gives the Americans, the Congress of the United States, the administration in Washington, a part it has never enjoyed before in this country.

This can be seen as the culmination of two centuries of American state craft, if such is what you want to call it, but I do not think it is a thing which Canadians ought necessarily to celebrate. I do not know if it is a thing which we ought to greet with open arms: "Hurrah. The Americans at long last seem on the verge of achieving the aims they have striven for for 200 years." What kind of Canadian Government would celebrate that? Obviously the Canadian Government we have here now, is the Canadian Government that is bidding to become the grave of Confederation.

In the election just passed—and we have heard a lot about this in the last few days—there was the great question of mandate. Members across the way claim that their Government enjoys a mandate. It is true the Government enjoys the mandate to govern and to put this legislation before this House and it enjoys the mandate to pursue with the passage into law of that legislation with all the vigour it can muster. We, however, on this side of the House enjoy a mandate as well. It may not be as overwhelming, but it is a mandate. God knows, the mandate I enjoy in Edmonton East is hardly overwhelming. I am here by virtue of 38 per cent of the votes cast. I do not claim that to be overwhelming.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: We can all be forgiven for one mistake.

Mr. Harvey: It is, however, just a wee bit better than the 36 per cent earned by the Conservative candidate who supported the deal. When put together with the votes received by the Liberal candidate, who equally vigorously opposed the deal, you will find that the votes cast in Edmonton East gave a majority, a clear majority, to the anti-free trade forces in that election. The pro-free trade forces, including the Reform Party, God bless them, even the old Christian Heritage Party—and with that, if you want them, you can even have the Western Canada Concept and the Western Independence Party. They are yours. Fine, take them. But you still do not get a majority in Edmonton East. In fact, by that measure you do not get a majority across this country.

● (2250)

Might I draw the attention of Hon. Members to this display which I sport on my lapel: "53-43 No Deal". It means that the combined national vote of those candidates opposed to the free trade deal was 53 per cent. The combined national support of those Conservative candidates supporting the deal was 43 per cent. Roll in the Reform Party, roll in the Western Canada Concept, roll in every other group, but the Government came up with 47 per cent.

Members opposite can call that a mandate if they want, and in many respects it is a mandate, but it is not a majority. A majority of Canadians rejected this deal.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Having established that point irrefutably, I would like to move to the deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I hold up a copy of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement and Members opposite applaud. That is magnificent, Mr. Chairman.

This booklet accompanied me to every door on which I knocked, and to every forum at which—not always to the enlightenment of those I addressed—I spoke.

At every occasion in the campaign concluded November 21 I had this trusty little booklet with me. The reason I had it with me was because, prior to the election, when I was out canvassing, when it was already an issue, the electors of Edmonton East kept telling me: "We don't know what's in the deal. We don't understand it. We wish someone would tell us what is in the deal". That is why I carried this around with me.

From time to time it was only a matter of turning to various parts of the deal. For example, chapter 19 is one of my favourites. I do not know about elsewhere, but in Alberta this deal was held up as that shining instrument which will guarantee to our producers and manufacturers unfettered access to the American market. That is how it was sold to the people of Alberta. Yet, when I went door to door and opened this little booklet at page 271, and read out Article 1902 which states:

1. Each Party reserves the right to apply its antidumping law and countervailing duty law to goods imported from the territory of the other Party—
2. Each Party reserves the right to change or modify its antidumping law or countervailing duty law—

Mr. McDermid: Each Party.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Indeed, no question. We can do it too. However, the point to bear in mind when the Conservative Government was selling this to the Canadian people as a guarantee of access is that it is clear in Article 1902 that it is no such thing. Having simply read it, it became clear to the people of Edmonton East.

Mr. McDermid: Now read chapter 18. Chapter 18 refers to that, be honest now. Read it.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I have read it. But the point is right here in paragraphs 1 and 2, and it states—

Mr. McDermid: What does it say about the law?

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): As the Minister for International Trade seems so fond of saying, if this deal had been in place the shakes and shingle tariff never would have been imposed, the softwood lumber tariff never would have been imposed. That is nonsense. It is perfectly within the right of the Americans to impose those duties under Article 1902.

For example, let us say a steel plant in Edmonton comes up with some fantastic new steel fabricating process that takes the market by storm, and it is exporting into the United States to beat the band. There is nothing under Article 1902(2) to prevent the Americans from introducing new tariff laws to prevent that.

Mr. McDermid: Read chapter 18.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I have read chapter 18 but it does nothing to impair the effect of Article 1902(1) and (2).

Mr. McDermid: What does it say about introducing new trade legislation? Come on, get with it. What does it say about being GATT consistent or FTA consistent?

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Nothing that is not overcome by Article 1902.

Mr. McDermid: Read chapter 18.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I have read chapter 18. It does not defeat Article 1902.

Mr. Langdon: No guaranteed access. None at all.

Mr. McDermid: He's changing his tune about the laws.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): They are very excitable tonight, Mr. Chairman. Do you suppose that they have been dealing with Mr. Ben Johnson's staff? I would suggest that the pages check whatever it is that they are putting in the water.

Mr. McDermid: Order. What was that crack about Johnson?

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Another article that the people of Edmonton East found most intriguing was Article 2005. We were told originally that cultural industries were not on the table. Then, having been dropped on the table by accident, it was discerned that, by God, they were exempt. It is true. The first four words of Article 2005(1) are: "Cultural industries are exempt". By God, congratulations.

Alas, Mr. Chairman, those of us who felt so compelled continued to paragraph 2 where it is with grieving heart we read:

Notwithstanding any other provision of this Agreement, a Party may take measures of equivalent commercial effect in response to actions that would have been inconsistent with this Agreement but for paragraph 1.

How the heck did that get in there?

Mr. Langdon: That's the contradiction.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I have not been to law school, but as I read this it means that if, for example, in a surfeit of nationalist fervour the Government decides to pursue vigorously a national film industry including subsidized distribution—whoa! Flora, where are you? I hear Members opposite saying no, no. I know that it is too much to ask until Members opposite are replaced by the New Democrats. Before the century is over, it will happen, Mr. Chairman.

In any event, in this deal there is nothing to stop the Americans from imposing a duty of equivalent commercial effect on anything.

Mr. Fulton: Right on.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Let us say, Mr. Fulton's cherished salmon.

Mr. McDermid: Order.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Or perhaps those automobile parts for which this particular province is so well famed.

Mr. Langdon: Be careful now.

Mr. McDermid: Reel him in a little, Steve.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): What we have here is an exemption for culture that is no exemption at all. It is merely a shifting of commercial responsibility from culture to anything else the Americans decide. It becomes even more interesting when one reads the definition of cultural industry found in Article 2012 which states that "cultural industry means", among other things:

c) the production, distribution, sale or exhibition of audio or video music recording,

In my town there is an outfit called Stony Plain Records. It is one of the most successful independent Canadian record labels in the country. The owner of that company, Mr. Holger Petersen, is a good friend of mine. We used to play in a band together. It was not a very good band, but it was fun.

Mr. Beatty: Sort of like the NDP.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): The owner of that company has told me that this clause, by itself will drive him out—only two minutes remaining, Mr. Chairman. How time flies when one is having fun.

• (2300)

Let me now deal with the subject of subsidies and social services. Over and over again we have heard the assertion that there is nothing in this agreement that will in any way affect social services or health care.

One can only wonder whether those who make that assertion have ever read the schedule to Chapter 14—

An Hon. Member: Certainly, Crosbie has not.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East):—and, if they did, whether they took the time to figure out what the numbers mean. It is just a bunch of numbers. But when one reads those numbers, when one compares them to the StatsCan industrial classifications, one finds, for example, that “Management Services” includes the management of nursing care homes, of homes for the handicapped, and of foster homes.

We could wind up raising a generation of “McChildren”.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): Under No. 861, we have the administration of general hospitals, of rehabilitation hospitals. Also included would be public health labs and blood bank labs.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Some Hon. Members: Time.

Mr. Harvey (Edmonton East): I do not want to stand here and accuse Hon. Members opposite of having lied to Canadians during the last election campaign, but I will tell you, there was some mighty thick smoke. In some ridings, such as Edmonton East, the voters saw through that smoke; in fact, the majority of Canadians, 53 per cent, saw through that smoke. And, if this Government ignores that majority, it does so at both its peril and the country's peril.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Calgary Southwest, on debate.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Chairman, I am extremely pleased to be able to participate in the debate on the Free Trade Agreement.

At the outset, I should like to congratulate the Hon. Member for Vancouver South on his re-election to this House and on his having been chosen as Speaker of the House. As well I pass along my congratulations to you, Mr. Chairman, on your re-election and on your again assuming the post of Deputy Speaker of the House and Chairman of the Committee of the Whole.

I welcome all new Members to this place. Certainly, they have been totally immersed in parliamentary procedures over the course of the past few days, and I congratulate them on the job that they are doing.

I also wish to extend my thanks to the constituents of Calgary Southwest for their support in re-electing me to this the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: You have a mandate.

Mrs. Sparrow: Yes, I do have a mandate. Indeed, I had five opponents, and none received back their deposits.

Mr. Della Noce: Having been elected with the biggest majority in Canada, we certainly can say that you have a mandate.

Mrs. Sparrow: The Hon. Member is correct in saying that I was elected with the largest plurality in Canada.

Mr. Della Noce: A majority of 30,000.

Mrs. Sparrow: The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement represents the most comprehensive free trade agreement ever concluded between two countries. It covers more trade and trade related issues than any other agreement in the world. More important, it breaks important new ground and thus will be of great value to both the U.S. and Canadian economies.

Ms. Copps: It breaks the backs of the workers of Canada.

Mrs. Sparrow: The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement sets new standards for trade agreements and is consistent with the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, the GATT.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

It meets the test of fairness and of mutual advantage. It is a win-win situation. It is an agreement that moves Canada into the 21st century, with a sound base and a focus on the future, for utmost success.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sparrow: It will provide a stable climate, a stable environment for my children, for your children, and for our grandchildren.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sparrow: Canada cannot isolate itself from the rest of the world. Hon. Members opposite want to look inward, want to look backward, but they do not want to look forward. Your views and your practices do not work today, and they will not work tomorrow.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Hamilton East, on a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Chairman, I hesitate to interrupt, but I should think that the Hon. Member, with her experience in this place, would recognize that under the rules of the House she should be addressing the Chair.

The Chairman: The Hon. Member for Calgary Southwest, on debate.

Mrs. Sparrow: Mr. Chairman, we must face reality, and this Progressive Conservative Government is facing reality, is meeting the facts of the real world head-on.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sparrow: Our trading regime has changed over the last 40 years. It has changed dramatically since we signed the GATT in 1947-48. We are a trading nation. No fewer than three million jobs in Canada depend upon trade, and 30 per cent of our gross revenues comes from trade. We have to trade to exist, and we must have secure markets in order to maintain our standard of living.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sparrow: Canada is blessed with an abundance of natural resources. In the past, we have been extremely successful in selling our primary products. But today Canada wants to upgrade, wants to process such things as our natural gas, our uranium, our forestry products, our fish—all of our products. When we do so under the current regime, the processed product is subjected to large tariffs or duties.

Today Canada exports most of its natural resources tariff-free, whereas value-added products meet with a heavy tariff.

Taking the petrochemical industry as an example, 40 per cent of Canada's total petrochemical sales are in export markets. Of the methanol produced in Canada, 80 per cent is exported, attracting a U.S. duty of 18 per cent. The tariff on polyethylene is 12.5 per cent; and on styrene, 7.4 per cent.

Every 2 to 2.5 per cent reduction in tariffs translates to $28,000 to $30,000. Once the Free Trade Agreement is implemented, the removal of the tariffs applied to petrochemical products will add millions of dollars to the cash flow of the petrochemical industry in Canada, thus leading to new investments for facilities.

Only last week Novacor of Calgary announced a multimillion dollar expansion and upgrading of its petrochemical plant at Joffre, Alberta.

The Free Trade Agreement is already having an effect in Alberta.

Let me point out how tariffs work against us. SunIce is a Calgary firm that manufactures ski clothes. Its products are very well regarded world-wide. The volunteers who participated in the staging of the Fifteenth Olympic Winter Games in Calgary, as well as many of the participants, wore SunIce garments.

All Hon. Members will be aware that Calgary hosted the Fifteenth Winter Olympic Games, held in February of last year. We are very proud of that.

An Hon. Member: And a job well done, too.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Sparrow: The SunIce Company wished to sell its products in the U.S. But guess what—there was a 23 per cent tariff imposed on them. So what did they do? They went into the U.S. and built a factory, hiring American citizens to work in that factory.

It created jobs in the U.S. It did not create jobs in Canada, and we were the losers.

Let me take a moment to quote a passage from the Western Economic Opportunities Conference, held in Calgary, Alberta, in 1973. A new Member of this House was in attendance at that conference, in the person of the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Juan de Fuca had the following to say on the subject of tariffs:

Tariffs have encouraged the concentration of manufacturing in Central Canada, with western Canada supplying agricultural products and other raw materials. The national tariff structure inflicts particular penalties on western Canada.

He also said that bilateral negotiations with another country, in particular the United States, were likely to make western Canada more productive than the GATT.

• (2310)

Some Hon. Members: Who said that?

Mrs. Sparrow: Davey Barrett. He also stated in his 1973 conference that the most obvious and most important market for western Canada is the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Who said that?

Mrs. Sparrow: Davey Barrett. He also said that the lowering of U.S. tariff walls could provide a breakthrough for western Canadian industries. There it is.

Some Hon. Members: Who said that?

Mrs. Sparrow: Davey Barrett.

Mr. Langdon: Point of order—

Mr. Beatty: He just took the bait.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Chairman, the Hon. Member should not be referring to Hon. Members of this House by their names. She also should not be suggesting that particular Hon. Member ever supported this trade deal because he did not at any time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Reel him in, Bobby.

Ms. Copps: Barrett for leader.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I am sure the Hon. Member, as an experienced Member, will find another way to refer to a Member than by his name. She should use the name of his riding. As far as opinions expressed, that is a question of debate.

Mrs. Sparrow: Madam Chairman, I realize why there was a point of order. The Hon. Member across the way is perhaps a little bit embarrassed over the new Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Langdon: I rise on a point of order, Madam Chairman. I hate to raise points of order in view of the tremendous majority my good friend received.

Mr. Beatty: Don't refer to her as your good friend. That is a slur on her character.

Mr. Langdon: However, I think it is also a rule of this House not to attribute motives. I certainly never would have as a motive embarrassment over the strong fight against the trade deal which the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca put forward.

Mrs. Sparrow: Madam Chairman, I was just going to say a few words about protectionism. Protectionism is going to continue to rear its ugly head. I know we heard a great deal about the softwood lumber deal. The Opposition never brought up the fact that in 1986 we were charged by the U.S. Commerce Department with unfair subsidies.

Two years later the same charge was made, but guess what happened? The U.S. law was either manipulated or distorted because of political pressure. This Free Trade Agreement will install a bilateral dispute mechanism which will not allow political pressure to change or distort international trade law.

Mr. Harvard: I rise on a point of order, Madam Chairman. I have a question concerning the rules. I am a new Member, so forgive me for not knowing the rules—

Mr. McDermid: You have a rule book in your desk.

Mr. Harvard: I will read it. I have heard something somewhat familiar to me because I come from the Province of Manitoba. I heard it on that side of the House. It is emanating from those Members. I heard it in the Province of Manitoba. We tried to stamp it out in the last election. We were almost successful in the City of Winnipeg.

I am referring to whether it is permissible for us in this House to listen to Tory bullshit?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Harvard: I come from Manitoba and that is what we call it. We call a spade a spade.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Some Hon. Members: Out!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It is getting to be quite late in the evening. Members are debating quite passionately. It is of course quite understandable that Members will not always agree with what is being said on one side or the other. On the other hand, the language used by the Hon. Member is not the type of language that Members appreciate hearing in this House, especially when a Member is on his feet.

I think it would be proper at this time for the debate to continue.

Mrs. Sparrow: Madam Chairman, I do hope that since I have been interrupted quite a few times you will extend my time.

I was talking about protectionism. The chairman of the U.S. Senate subcommittee on trade, Sam Gibbons, met with me last May and we discussed protectionism. That committee has before it 139 Bills on protectionism. They are not necessarily directed against Canada in particular, but I can assure you that if Canada does not get this agreement through we certainly will suffer and be caught in the side-swipe when the U.S. moves forward on its omnibus trade Bill.

I want to spend a few moments on energy. There is nothing in this agreement that forces Canada to sell anything to anyone, nothing. The provinces retain complete control and full jurisdiction over all their natural resources. They have the right to control exploration, development, and production of all their oil and gas. This agreement secures a market for our exports only if we are a reliable supplier. That is fair.

As well, neither country will be able to place restrictions on energy exports or imports. We started way back in June, 1985 to deregulate the industry. Oil in June and natural gas in October. We got rid of the National Energy Program. We got government intervention and control out of the oil and gas industry. We said: "Let the free market move. Let private enterprise do it".

I was totally embarrassed today when the Hon. Member for Edmonton East rose in Question Period and asked the Minister when this Government was going to put a floor price on oil. I can tell you: Never. Never, never, never.

All through the election I heard that we were selling out our natural resources. Canada cannot charge more for its exports than we charge our own residents at home. That is nonsense. All contracts are freely negotiated on a commercial basis. In that regard one can look to Québec and what the Premier of Québec has done in terms of selling his electricity into the northern U.S. He sells it at two and a half times more than what he is getting from the residents of Quebec. These are freely negotiated contracts.

I want to repeat again that this Government believes in private enterprise. We are not going to interfere, nor should we, in terms of regulating an industry. Our job here is to create a stable fiscal climate to allow industries to get on with the job and let the free market operate.

To develop, to explore, and to produce natural resources cost millions and, in fact, billions of dollars. Canada is a huge country geographically, but populationwise we are very small. We do not have the capital to bring on stream our natural resources. We need foreign investment. Investors look for a stable, reliable country. That is what the Conservative Party stands for, and I am proud of it.

Our synthetic reserves in northern Alberta, the oilsands, the heavy oil, the frontier reserves in the Beaufort Sea and off the East Coast are extremely costly to develop. They take years to bring on stream.

Do we want security of supply? Do Canadians want security of supply? If they do that is exactly what this Free Trade Agreement will bring them.

I wish to quote the Canadian geological potential for oil in Canada. It is 680 years, but it takes money to develop. In terms of natural gas it is 167 years. We have not even started looking for it. We have an abundance of natural resources. That is exactly what we will produce.

During the election I heard a great many myths about the environment. They went: "Oh, dear, time and time again Canada will be forced to harmonize with the United States environmental standards". That is nonsense. Under Article XX of the GATT we can protect public morals, such as through the prohibition on trade in pornographic material. We can protect human, animal or plant life or health. We can protect the environment. It is all in here under Article XX.

In closing I want to say that we did not leap into this deal overnight. It started in March, 1985 with the Québec Summit. We got an agreement in the fall. We spent 18 months negotiating. We spent 18 months talking to ITAC. Simon Reisman, the negotiator, had a 40-person team. The International Trade Advisory Committee. There were 15 SAGIT sectoral advisory committees. They met every month. They reported to Mr. Reisman who in turn reported to our Minister of Trade.

This particular agreement has had more study, more provincial government input, more industry input than any other agreement ever entered into by the Government of Canada.

The dispute settlement mechanism is described in chapters 18 and 19 chapters. It probably has to be one of the very strongest benefits of the deal. There was a report done by a legal firm in town called Fraser and Beatty which states that it is a tremendous asset, probably one of the very best dispute settlement mechanisms that exist.

The Free Trade Agreement is important for Canada. We did win a mandate. We have more seats in this House than the other two Parties. We have the right to fight this, and we will.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Chairman, the constituents of South West Nova know my feelings on free trade. I would like to spend my 20 minutes asking the Minister some quick, simple questions which my constituents and many Canadians have asked me—

An Hon. Member: Can he answer them?

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): I do not know; it is up to the Minister.

Obviously, a great many Members do not realize that they have the privilege of being able to question directly Ministers and their officials. I regret that the officials are not here tonight.

Mr. McDermid: They are here. I can get them in one minute.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): You may need to, John; excuse me, I will ask you the question in a minute.

I am sure the Minister can answer the simple questions. They will be brief and to the point.

My first concern relates to the working group on subsidies as set up by Article 1907. I realize that the two countries have agreed to establish a working group to develop more effective rules and disciplines concerning the use of subsidies, and to develop a substitute system of rules for dealing with unfair pricing and government subsidization. I have a number of questions on subsidies for the Minister. The Minister of Trade, I am sure, is aware that we have debated back and forth in committee. I am only exercising my right as a member of this committee to ask him some questions. I know that he is brief in his answers.

Has the Canadian Government, the Cabinet, done an evaluation of what is a subsidy as it relates to Canada and the Free Trade Agreement?

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, Madam Chairman, naturally over the years we have looked at what is a subsidy. I cannot stand if the hon. lady is going to stand.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): I just asked for a yes or no answer.

Mr. Crosbie: We can wait until the end of the hon. lady's speech and then I can give the answers.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): Just answer yes or no.

Mr. McDermid: Sit down and let him answer.

Mr. Dick: He can answer for 20 minutes if he wants.

Ms. Copps: Don't be a dick.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): Is the definition of a subsidy in the Free Trade Agreement to be retroactive before January 1, 1989? Will companies presently receiving Atlantic Canada Opportunities grants in the East be penalized, or is there a cut-off date for when the subsidy begins? In other words, is there a cut-off date on to when a subsidy actually begins for the Free Trade Agreement? My question requires a yes or no answer. I am just asking.

Mr. Crosbie: Obviously, the answer is no. There has been no agreed definition of what is a trade distorting subsidy. We are hardly going to make it retroactive if there ever is an agreement.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): In other words, we had better hurry up and get all our grants in first before January 1, 1989.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): I have the final determination that was made in the United States with respect to the Atlantic groundfish countervail action. I am sure the Minister is aware of the list which is contained in that determination.

I do not really want to go into details. I want to outline some of the programs that were determined to be a subsidy in that determination by the Americans. I wish to enumerate 11 or 12 of them, because I think that they are important vis-à-vis whether or not the delegates on the committee have some type of order to look at these as subsidies.

They are: the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program, the Department of Fisheries and Oceans Promotion Branch, assistance for the construction of ice-making and fish chilling facilities, certain types of investment tax credits, programs for export market development, regional development incentive programs, industrial and regional development programs, fisheries improvement loans programs, Department of Fisheries and Oceans grants to fishermen and fish processors—I am reading from the determination. There are 38 subsidies listed which went into the evaluation. I could go on with the list.

The Hon. Minister knows that we are both interested in harbour development for fishermen, but preferential user fees to fishermen under the Small Craft Harbours Program were determined to be a subsidy. There is also government equity infusions into National Sea Products and Fishery Products International. It is no wonder that if it is not going to be retroactive it will not hurt at all.

Then you can go to the ones that affect Newfoundland, Mr. Minister, such as Newfoundland grants for the rebuilding and repairing of fishing and coastal vessels. There are about eight of them.

There is a list of subsidies. I want to know whether the Minister will give any instruction to the working group that will evaluate the rules on these 38 points which brought in countervail on subsidies. I do not want to know what happened to each program. I want to know if the Minister has any direction for that working group when it comes time to set it up. It is coming by January 1, if we pass it between now and the end of the year. Has the Minister given a list of protected industrial growth subsidies to the working group? Has he made such a direction?

Mr. Crosbie: There seems to be a lot of confusion in the mind of the Hon. Member. I suppose her departure from the House for four years has caused some confusion in her mind of these matters.

The subsidy situation is this: With or without the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, the United States now has a law, as do we, to deal with the question of whether or not exports into the United States are unfairly subsidized. We have the same laws in our country. There is nothing strange or peculiar about the fact that the Americans have those kinds of laws. Every trading country in the world has them to protect themselves from unfair trading.

Therefore, if the Americans export products to Canada that are unfairly subsidized in a trade distorting way, then a Canadian company can make a complaint to the relevant authorities here in Canada. If they can show that the American product was unfairly subsidized in a trading sort of way, then we can put on a countervailing tariff. This is a law that works both ways.

Last year, this year, next year, the Americans will be able to bring actions against Canadian exports to the United States under their trade law if they allege that some product of ours has been unfairly subsidized. Up to the end of this year, the case will be determined by an American agency. They would make a determination whether or not under their trade law there was an unfair trade distorting subsidy.

After January 1, that will no longer be the case. We will be able to have a dispute resolution process to which we will appoint two members.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): It is my job—

Mr. Crosbie: Madam Chairman, I was asked a question, and I have the floor.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): No. Madam Chairman, he has not answered my question.

Mr. Crosbie: I have the floor.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Crosbie: If I am asked a question, I should be able to answer it. After January 1, when this legislation passes this House, we will have a new dispute resolution mechanism. There will be a board appointed—two Canadians, two Americans—with a neutral chairman.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): A point of order, Madam Chairman—

An Hon. Member: We are in committee, Madam Chairman.

Mr. Crosbie: Have I the floor, Madam Chairman?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Not at this time. There has been a point of order raised by the Hon. Member for South West Nova.

Mr. Crosbie: Either the Hon. Member is asking questions or she is not. What kind of nonsense is this?

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There was a point of order.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): I specifically asked the Minister a question. I do not need a lesson on countervail.

Mr. Crosbie: You do, you certainly do.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Chairman, I do not know if you have had the experience of sitting in Committee of the Whole.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): He cannot answer the question. My question was a simple question on whether or not he was going to provide any guidance on subsidies as of January 1. Please answer the question. I do not need a lesson. I will make a speech if you want me to. It is my time. I am asking a question. Answer the question.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Mr. Crosbie: If I can continue with the answer, the Hon. Member is confused.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): I am not confused about subsidies. It is the whole issue that you have to discuss.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order. There is something that should be made a little more precise for all Members in this Chamber. It is the prerogative of a Member, in Committee of the Whole, to ask questions of the Minister responsible for the Bill. The time taken by the Minister, now that we are within a situation of closure, is part of the 20 minutes in which the Hon. Member has to make a statement. Whenever a question is asked, I think the Hon. Member should be allowed the time to answer.

The last time the Hon. Member for South West Nova rose, she rose on a point of order. The point of order was not made and debate started again. I will not consider the time which has been taken by the point of order. This discussion will not be taken into account when adding up the time which the Hon. Member has coming to her.

The Hon. Minister had the floor. I think it would be useful to everyone if the answer is concluded as quickly as possible.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I will try to finish very quickly.

The present system is that every case is decided individually. There is no agreed definition on what is a "trade distorting subsidy". If two countries could agree together on a definition of what makes up a "subsidy", it would save a lot of time and effort on everyone's part in taking these individual cases before dispute tribunals. That is what the committee will be doing over the next five to seven years, attempting to see if we can agree with the United States on what is a definition of a "trade-distorting subsidy". We will not agree to any definition that will endanger regional development programs in Canada. The law will not change in the United States. It will not change here unless we both can reach agreement in this committee.

The omens are not good about agreement because 96 GATT countries have not been able to reach agreement. Perhaps over the next five to seven years we will be able to do so. We are not going to agree to anything that is damaging to Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for South West Nova.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): I just want to say, Madam Chairman, thank you for your indulgence. I feel that it is my right to have my 20 minutes. The Minister does not need to instruct me on the preamble to his question. I am only asking: Did he or did he not instruct the group that will be sitting down as to matters that are priorities with respect to Atlantic Canada? He says he would not agree. That is fine. I am just wondering if he has made a list.

• (2340)

My next question concerns Chapter 12 of the agreement. I am pleased to see that the Government grandfathered the ownership of the vessel that catches the fish in Canadian waters.

There is a difference between the East Coast and West Coast, and I will not worry about the West Coast since the Government obviously does not. I am only interested in the East Coast.

The explanation in Chapter 12 states that the powers of the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans to ensure that Canada obtains benefits from our fisheries resources remain intact. The agreement protects the current Canadian policy restricting foreigners—I presume foreigners means the U.S.—to a minority ownership of licensed Canadian vessels, or of companies that own licensed vessels.

What is most astonishing to anyone in inshore fishing is the statement: “or hold enterprise allocation”.

The Minister must know that 80 per cent of the East Coast fisheries is under enterprise allocations.

Mr. Siddon: That is not true.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): This means someone can go to the American stock exchange and have a minority interest in Fishery Products and National Sea. The Canadian fish which we fought so hard to control within our waters is now going to them. It also means that you can take 150 inshore boats—

Mr. Siddon: Point of order.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Chairman, that was not the Minister I was talking to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Minister rose on a point of order.

Mr. Siddon: I think the Hon. Member would want the House to have correct information. She should tell the House that 80 per cent of the Atlantic fishery was not under enterprise allocation. She should tell the House the facts.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): He does not know what he is talking about.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Minister may want to enter into debate at a later stage. It is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for South West Nova.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): The Minister knows the fishery policy. We all know it on the East Coast. Fifty-one per cent of the boat ownership must be owned by Canadians. That is grandfathered. However, we do not know who will own 49 per cent.

For example, if Investment Canada has a level of $150 million, an entire sector of an inshore fishery could possibly be bought at 49 per cent, so that the direction of that inshore fishery could change hands. I do not think that was what the Minister wanted. I am sure he did not want to give up control of our fish in our waters to a foreign minority shareholder.

Mr. Siddon: A point of order—

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): When you consider that it has to be landed on shore—

Mr. Siddon: Point of order—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Minister, on a point of order.

Mr. Siddon: I think the Hon. Member would want the House to know that inshore fishermen must have Canadian licences and that only Canadians can own—

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I have advised the Hon. Minister before, and it would be appreciated if he would rise on debate and not try to debate on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Madam Chairman, I appreciate the fact that you pointed out that there was a world of difference between a point of order and debate. The Minister is interrupting the flow of an eloquent and passionate speech with fictitious points of order that are really debate. Let us hear from a passionate defender—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I would point out to the Hon. Member that I made this point with the Hon. Minister. I will give the floor back to the Hon. Member for South West Nova.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): Madam Chairman, I will return to some of the other concerns I have in this Free Trade Agreement. I am concerned about the technical standards. I am concerned about restrictive trade practices. I am concerned about temporary entry permits.

There is a difference between American immigration law and Canadian immigration law. I suggest that Americans could come in and spend as much time as they want here, while I believe Canadians are restricted by immigration laws to six-month period.

Mr. McDermid: Where does it say that?

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): They can come up here for an extended period of time. There is no discretion.

Mr. McDermid: Where does it say that?

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): I have the section and I will send it to the Minister later.

I understand that mirror legislation must be passed with respect to the temporary entry permit. How long will it be before we will have the same right to go to the States as Americans have to come here? Or, will there be shorter periods?

I also want to deal with cheap labour.

Mr. Crosbie: When do we get a chance to answer the question?

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): I did not ask a question yet. I will ask a question if you want, Mr. Minister. Does the Minister expect that inshore fish landed at our wharfs would be processed anywhere in eastern Canada when it could be processed anywhere in the States cheaper?

In other words, I understand the grandfathering position so that the fishing capacity has to be 51 per cent owned by Canadians. However, I can see the minority taking hold of that and taking it over. I understand that it is grandfathered and that you have to land inshore fish at the wharfs. However, I believe that ultimately our company will not be able to buy because they must compete with the cheap labour and processing.

Does he not believe that the inshore fishing community will be harmed by the process of landed fish going straight to the States to be finished?

The Minister may say that this agreement will allow us to process our fish further. Yes, you can find six people to do fish cakes. They can do all the fish cakes the Americans will eat. That is six more jobs, but what about all the plant jobs? Seasonal workers may be considered a subsidy and the fish may be sold to the States and processed there. The inshore fishery will go out the window.

We are worried about communities and their lifeblood. You are worried about fish cakes for National Sea and Fisheries Products. I cannot believe that any Minister coming from the East would allow a minority shareholder to put our landed fish stocks in Boston or anywhere there is cheaper labour.

Fisheries Products International and National Sea already have places there because it is cheaper to bring the fish there. How will the Minister keep our natural resources in Canada?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: There are only a few minutes left, if the Minister wishes to answer.

Mr. Crosbie: How are you going to keep them down on the farm now that they have seen Paris? I am glad the Hon. Member wanted to observe the rules of the Committee of the Whole by asking—

• (2350)

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I am sorry, I recognize the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Chairman, I have a procedural question I would like to raise with you. It is my understanding that once closure has been applied in Committee of the Whole, it is not possible to conduct question and answer sessions, and that an Hon. Member is limited to one intervention as the Hon. Member for South West Nova has already done. I wonder if that is not the case, Madam Chairman.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: At one point. The Hon. Member probably did not understand, although I made that point very clear at the outset of the speech of the Hon. Member for South West Nova. Should the Hon. Member wish to ask questions of the Minister responsible for the Bill, the time the Minister would take to answer the question would be deducted from the 20-minute period allowed to the Hon. Member. Otherwise, it would be considered an intervention from the Minister. Within the 20-minute period, the Member may again rise to his feet and be recognized after asking a question of the Minister. Does that answer the Hon. Member's question?

Mr. Langdon: Yes, Madam Chairman, but this creates a problem with what I understand to be an important rule which comes into effect when closure is imposed by the Government in Committee of the Whole, that is, that a Member cannot speak more than once.

In this case, the Hon. Member for South West Nova will have spoken a number of times and the Minister will have spoken a number of times. That would seem to contradict the rules imposed under closure.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Perhaps the Hon. Member will allow me to try again. Once we are under closure, no Hon. Member is allowed to speak for more than one 20-minute period. Should the Hon. Member choose to ask a question of the Minister responsible, the time the Minister takes to answer the question is taken into consideration within the Hon. Member's 20-minute period. This is a choice the Hon. Member can make.

The time which was allowed the Hon. Member for South West Nova has now expired. We will resume debate with the Hon. Member for Guelph.

Mr. Crosbie: Now do I have the floor?

Mr. Tobin: Madam Chairman, I rise on a point of order. Of course we accept and support totally the explanation you have given to the Hon. Member who raised the question, but I simply wonder if Madam Chairman took into consideration the time that was spent in explaining to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor what exactly was happening tonight when tallying the total time spent by the Hon. Member who has just spoken. I wonder whether or not there is time remaining for the Minister to give his normal short, succinct and brief answer and for the Hon. Member to respond.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I can assure the Hon. Member that the time taken by points of order during the Hon. Member's speech was taken into consideration and added to the normal time, but now the time has in fact expired and we are resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Laval.

Mr. Crosbie: I haven't answered the question yet.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Laval has the floor.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Before I begin, Madam Chairman—

[English]

Ms. Copps: Madam Chairman, before the point of order was made, I understood that the Chair had recognized the Hon. Member for Guelph.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: At this time of night, the Hon. Member may allow the Chair to have a problem when recognizing a Member. I do apologize. I recognize the Hon. Member for Laval.

[Translation]

Mr. Ricard: Madam Chairman, before I begin my comments, I would like to congratulate the Minister of External Trade (Mr. Crosbie). For almost 18 months he was accused of not having read the trade agreement. I suggest that he deserves a good hand of applause for the way he has been answering questions, and if my colleagues want to join me, we are going to very strongly applaud him.

An Hon. Member: It would seem he learned it by heart since that time!

Mr. Ricard: Yes indeed, it would even seem he learned it by heart. Congratulations, Mr. Minister.

Madam Chairman, I would like to make a brief statement. What is the purpose of the legislation now before us? As stated, it is—to strengthen the unique and enduring friendship between the two countries and their peoples as befitting great trading partners, to strengthen Canada's national identity while at the same time protecting vital national characteristics and qualities, to promote productivity, employment, financial stability and the improvement of living standards, to establish a climate of greater predictability for Canadians to plan and invest with confidence and to complete more effectively in the United States and global markets, to build on Canada's rights and obligations under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and other multilateral and bilateral instruments of cooperation, to contribute to the harmonious development and expansion of world trade and provide a catalyst to broader international cooperation, and to establish effective binational procedures for the resolution of disputes in antidumping and countervailing duty cases involving the two countries and, generally, any dispute arising out of the Agreement;

Mr. Chairman, reciting that statement, I am still wondering why Opposition Parties are cautioning Canadians against the right to negotiate or trade with the United States, which will enable all residents in Canada to benefit from the Agreement.

I wonder how they can explain to Canada and Canadians that we should exercise caution because when trading with the Americans we could be tricked.

During the past week and a half, and maybe longer than that now, I have heard in this Chamber all kinds of comments and allegations, and often falsehoods, about what this Bill would have us do with our American colleagues.

As you know, Mr. Chairman, when two people decide to enter into an agreement, they sit down at a table to hammer out the details of the agreement, then finally sign it. The process, I would think, is the same when the parties involved are two countries. This Chamber is full of lawyers. I am sure they will agree with me on that. When two countries decide to enter into an agreement, the same rules apply. They sit down together, each side says what it wants and they try to come to an agreement.

We are 25 million strong in Canada and we produce much more than we consume. Obviously, we try to sell our products to other countries as best we can. Part of our excess production goes to the United States and we are currently trying to increase our sales to that country.

We know that to the 250 million Americans, Canada is a small market. But for them, the Free Trade Agreement means much more than trying to sell or buy consumer goods.

● (0000)

It shows that they can get along with another country. It sets the scene for future negotiations with the world. The ultimate purpose of the Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Chairman, is not to establish trade between two countries, but to establish world trade. What we want is a world market for our products. If you remember, some time ago, we clearly showed that Canada could compete with any other country in the area of high technology. Canada, and I should say even Quebec, boasts the best engineers in the world. Laval has produced good engineers, Mr. Chairman. I am one of those engineers and I am not afraid to say so. There is a large firm in Montreal called Lavalin which competes on the world market. It is the only engineering consultant firm to have succeeded in getting into Russia. And that's no small feat, Mr. Chairman. These people are able to compete on the world market, which means that if we can sign agreements with our American partners, we will be able to tackle the world market, as well as sell our expertise, goods and services. Of course, the Liberals will say that we will never be able to achieve that goal, because they themselves were never able to prove that in the past. They were never able to set up a system to help us expand.

As far as the implementation of free trade is concerned, Mr. Chairman, they claimed during the election campaign that we were unable to foresee its impact.

Mr. Chairman, we are saying that custom duties will be entirely eliminated for approximately 15 per cent of our bilateral trade. As soon as the agreement is implemented, goods made in Canada or in the United States such as computers and computer hardware—this is high technology—fur, clothing, frozen fresh fish,—I wish to pay tribute to my colleague the Minister of State for Small Businesses and Tourism (Mr. Valcourt) who clearly demonstrated last night what he will do with cod. Animal feed, skis, skates, whisky—which may be somewhat important but which will be able to cross the border tax free. At the same date, custom duties will be reduced by 20 per cent on approximately one-third of all the other goods exported or imported. For instance, machinery, paint, furniture, paper and paper products. The Minister himself mentioned paper products yesterday.

He said that we were supplying the raw material in Canada, but that the Americans were making the finished product; with a new free trade agreement, we could make it here. Hardwood plywood, oil, and spare parts for cars; this will affect my friend the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) and Luigi. These duties will be reduced by another 20 per cent until these goods account for approximately 50 per cent of our bilateral trade.

Let us deal now with embargoes, Mr. Chairman. Canada will lift its embargoes on second hand planes and cars which are 8 years old or older, but this restriction as to the age of second hand cars will be gradually eliminated by as much as 2 per cent per year until January 1, 1993. Of course, there is a lot of detailed planning behind all of this.

Residence permits for businessmen. As you know, Mr. Chairman, I tried one day to go and work in the United States as an engineer and I found it very difficult for a Canadian professional to be hired in the United States and try to secure a position there without being sponsored by an American firm. And this caused a lot of problems because the company which wanted to do business in the United States market had first to ask for a working permit there which they could never obtain. So they were compelled to join an American corporation to sponsor a Canadian corporation. With free trade, new rules for temporary visits to the United States by business people, professionals, merchants, investors and persons transferred within a company will take effect for Canadian citizens. That seems clear to me—it is not hard to understand.

An Hon. Member: American citizens too.

Mr. Ricard: American citizens as well, that is true. You are right, sir, it is free trade we are getting into. So if we go down there, they have the right to come up here, to our country. And I think that we are big enough, mature enough and man enough to accept it and to work with the agreed upon rules.

So, Mr. Chairman, looking at all that, we easily realize that it cannot be bad for Canadians.

What will be the effects on a province like Quebec? For four years, we have heard the Liberals here tell us that the Montreal area was being neglected by the federal Government. The Montreal area has the labour force, the infrastructure, everything we need to give those people the chance to take on the world market, the American market. But they must be given the opportunity to do so.

For 20 years, the Liberals tried to subsidize companies that had trouble surviving. It was like putting band-aids on wooden legs, Mr. Chairman. They never solved the problem. With the means at hand, we tried to solve the problem effectively. We saved Petromont. We invested millions, but in an intelligent manner. We enabled this company to compete, to restructure, to go after markets that were closed to it until then.

So, Mr. Chairman, if the Montreal area can have access to the American market, if it can produce high tech products, if it can produce finished products, what will it do? We will sell them to the Americans. Indeed, we have already started. Look at companies like Spar, which produces the Canadarm for the U.S. shuttle—

An Hon. Member: It is made in Lotbinière.

Mr. Ricard: It is made in Lotbinière—even better. There must be some small screws made in Lotbinière.

Mr. Chairman, we realize that Canadians can do.

Mr. Chairman, I remember the demagoguery the Opposition parties resorted to in 1984-85 when we talked about giving Crown corporations back to private enterprise and decentralizing. We then had the first company sold to private enterprise, namely de Havilland. I remember that very well because at the time I was chairman of the Committee on Regional Economic Expansion and we had held hearings on the sale of that corporation to private sector interests. I recall that at the time someone said that if the Government were to get rid of Crown corporations it would kill that industry, create unemployment and witness the exodus of Canadian brains to American companies since Boeing was then the prospective De Havilland buyer.

We also had the privilege of listening to Mr. Bob White who had come to make representations.

An Hon. Member: Not Bob White?

Mr. Richard: Bob White, in person.

An Hon. Member: The leader of the NDP?

Mr. Ricard: The future leader of the NDP. He came here with his retinue of 15 or 20 people and attempted to laugh at the state, to ridicule the Canadian Government. He was not aiming only at the Conservatives, Mr. Chairman, the Liberals too were a target because, naturally, for Bob White absolutely nothing exists except socialism, the NDP and socialism. As far as he was concerned, any sale of a Crown corporation to the private sector was a scandal, soon to degenerate into a cancer.

We witnessed the same scenario when Canadair management decided to sell some of their shares to private interests. The same people came to the House, they appeared before the committee where they made demagogic statements and accused us of every sin in the book, they came to tell us we were selling this country off to the Americans, they came to tell us that we were getting rid of our heritage, Mr. Chairman, our heritage!

Now if we consider the results of these sales, this privatization, without actually saying that we created jobs, the fact is that these companies almost doubled the number of workers they had at the time, they increased their profits three and four times over. That is what they did. The beauty of it is that the additional provincial and federal taxes and every other tax related to their purchasing power enabled us to justify fully the loans we had made, and then some.

I said that the Montreal region is home to a number of high technology industries like Spar in the riding of my friend the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux), Canadair, Paramax, Canadian Aviation Electronics, each one a high tech undertaking which would stand to gain a lot. But in order to achieve this, Mr. Chairman, the Bill under consideration first has to be adopted. We must adopt this Bill because it is the tool we need to amend the laws that will enable us to develop our high technology.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to talk to you about the Space Agency. During the election campaign, the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) said that the space agency would be built in the Montreal area. If you take a look at last week's newspapers, you will see that a dozen of the members in his caucus want the agency to be built in Ottawa. It is obvious that the Members involved are Opposition backbenchers. The fact remains, however, that the Liberals can't seem to get together to decide where they want the space agency to be built. They wanted to trip us up by trying to pit us, the Members from the Montreal area, against the Members from the Ottawa area for the space agency. They wanted to create a rift between us.

Mr. Chairman, on this side of the House we did not stoop down to that demagoguery, we did not trip over. We did not compromise ourselves. The Prime Minister (Mr.

Mulroney) said he would make a statement in due time and all other Ministers abode by that.

What is important to us, Mr. Chairman, it is not whether the Space Agency is in Montreal or Toronto or Ottawa. What is important to us, Mr. Chairman, is that Canada be recognized as the high technology place, the place to develop aerospace. If we can have people in Saskatoon and Halifax working on high technology, aerospace products, people in Montreal will applaud, Mr. Chairman, they will support that, and those people will be able to promote the aerospace industry in Montreal.

I think that on this side of the House, all Members here, all Conservative Members share that view, and everyone is working for the good of Canada—everyone wants to promote Canada.

Mr. Chairman, as my time has expired, I would like to conclude by saying that the sooner the Bill is accepted, the sooner Canada will grow, the sooner the high technology industry in Canada will be improved, and the better it will be for Canadians, Quebecers and especially people in Laval.

[English]

Mr. Crawford: Mr. Chairman, I wish to thank the constituents of the riding of Kent for the trust and confidence they have placed in me. As a representative for the riding of Kent in southwestern Ontario, I pledge to go above and beyond the call of duty for my riding.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crawford: It is indeed an honour, a privilege, and a humbling experience to be a new Member of Parliament. In this my maiden speech in this hallowed Chamber, I am pleased to put forward my comments regarding the free trade deal in this historic debate, and particularly on how it may affect Kent. I wish to concentrate on three aspects or issues that are of specific concern to Kent: agriculture, the automotive industry, and the environment.

Kent County has some of the most fertile land in Canada, and it is number one in the nation for corn production. Day in and day out our farmers are confronted with things not under their control, such as the weather, low market prices, and high input costs. The trade deal puts at risk one of Canada's most basic industries, our food industry. The Government said that our supply-management boards are left intact by the trade deal, but elimination of tariffs on processed foods will undercut Canadian poultry, eggs, and dairy marketing boards. As more processed foods are imported from the United States, the authority of Canadian marketing boards will weaken, and processors and farmers will lose business.

Article 401 will eliminate tariffs on fruit, vegetables, and processed foods. This will frequently make it difficult for our fruit and vegetable producers to compete with imports from the United States, especially the southern states which have a much longer growing season.

Our shorter grower season limits our ability to grow fruit and vegetables relative to the U.S. These products are generally in larger supply in the U.S. and at a lower price than in Canada. Therefore, because our food processors pay higher prices for Canadian than U.S. fruit and vegetables, by eliminating tariffs the trade deal obviously puts pressure on processors to relocate operations in the United States, closer to the source of cheaper supplies.

Our farmers are faced with more than Mother Nature, with more than the big banks breathing down their necks. Now the trade deal throws our farmers to the wolves.

The use of pesticides will be forever changed by the trade deal. Just as we are recognizing an urgent need to develop policies that move us away from a dependence on herbicides and pesticides, the free trade deal commits us to an American approach that actually makes it easier for certain pesticides and herbicides to be licensed.

Schedule 7 to Chapter Seven specifically concerns pesticides. It states that the U.S. and Canada must "work toward equivalent guidelines, technical regulations, standards and test methods". The difference between the U.S. and Canadian approaches are quite real. In the United States there are 20 per cent more active pesticide ingredients registered for use, and over seven times as many pesticide products.

One good example is the herbicide Alachlor, a probably cancer-causing substance which the U.S. continues to license, but it is banned in Canada. Alachlor, which has been demonstrated to cause tumours in test animals, has been found in both ground and surface waters across Canada. According to Health and Welfare officials, the evidence that it could be cancer-causing was the most convincing they had ever seen for a pesticide. Yet, the U.S. found that the benefits outweighed the risks and it continues to register Alachlor.

Not surprisingly, the manufacturer has argued that Canada's licensing rules should be changed to reflect the American criteria. The free trade deal will weaken Canadian pesticide regulation. The effect will be to trade the adverse impact on Canadian health and environment in a return for greater profits to the transnational chemical industry.

That is clearly unacceptable. The citizens of Kent are concerned that this Government will not even consider amendments which would safeguard our ability to ban, inhibit, or restrict the use of pesticides or chemicals, an ability which is cast in doubt by Schedule 7 of the Free Trade Agreement.

What about the environment in general? The constituents of the riding of Kent have a heightened awareness of this Government's poor record on the environment. The northern parts of Kent County draw their water from the Sinclair River, an international waterway and a waterway that is threatened by chemical spills, blobs, and waste water.

The residents of North Kent, which comprises the native reservation of Walpole and the Town of Wallaceburg and the Town of Dresden, want a clean water pipeline from Lake Huron so as to eliminate the threat of spills and to permit them the same quality of water as that available to the City of Sarnia.

This Government has repeatedly said that the free trade deal is not about the environment. In fact, the environmental significance of the trade deal has been apparent from the outset. As early as June 1986, this Government's own environmental advisory council called upon it to conduct a public and thorough assessment of the implications of the Free Trade Agreement, and this before negotiations were concluded.

The advice of this Government's own advisory council on the environment was ignored.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Crawford: In response to the critics of the trade deal, the Government is now claiming that the environment is protected under Article 609 of the agreement and under Article XX(B) of the GATT.

This Government's claim that nothing in the trade deal prevents Canada from regulating to protect the environment is entirely false. Its strategy appears intended, once again, to capitalize on the fact that most Canadians have not read the Free Trade Agreement.

One is left with the impression that the environmental concerns were not omitted recklessly or inadvertently. The Government has drawn attention to sections of the Free Trade Agreement and the GATT which, we are told, concern the environment; but neither provision applies to the very parts of the Free Trade Agreement of greatest environmental concern.

By raising Article 609 and Article XX(B) of the GATT, the Government underscores its total failure to protect the environment from the worst impacts of the Free Trade Agreement. The only conclusion left is that the framers of the deal were careful to make sure that their major objectives were not stopped by any concern for the environment.

There is no mention of environmental protection anywhere in this trade deal. As a consequence, the implications for the environment are not clear. No environmental impact study of a Free Trade Agreement had been carried out by the Government before, during or after the deal was signed.

As well, Canada may face pressures to lower our standards to American levels. Canadian business could argue that our stronger regulations in such areas as acid rain emissions, air pollution, liquid waste disposal, and the use of pesticides could put Canadian companies at a competitive disadvantage.

Ms. Copps: Shame. Another sell-out.

Mr. Crawford: The Ontario Environment Minister agrees that subsidies given by federal and provincial Governments to reduce pollution emissions may be attacked by American companies as unfair subsidies. The definition of "unfair subsidies" is to be decided over the next five to seven years. Pollution control subsidies and subsidies related to the environment have not been excluded from this deal.

Mr. Chairman, this Government's concern for the environment takes second place to its concern for big business and the profits of big business, with no concern for the environment.

The auto industry is of prime importance to the riding of Kent. Because of our proximity to the major car manufacturers, our auto parts factories have grown and prospered. The auto pact has played an important role in that success.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crawford: Throughout the negotiations, the Government maintained that the auto industry would not be part of any Free Trade Agreement and that the Auto Pact would remain intact. Yet, when the free trade deal was made public, one found an entire chapter dealing with changes to the Auto Pact, Chapter 10.

The trade deal, Mr. Chairman, makes several significant changes to the Auto Pact, changes which eliminate Canadian safeguards and essentially gut the Auto Pact.

Ms. Copps: Shame.

Mr. Crawford: First of all, the policing mechanisms are removed. The Auto Pact allowed companies to move autos across the border tariff-free if those same companies manufactured in Canada 60 per cent of the value of vehicles sold in Canada. Car makers are required to pay full tariff on any imports that do not meet the 60 per cent requirement, and the tariffs are set at such a level that it is always in the car maker's interest to build the cars in Canada, creating jobs for Canadians in the process.

The Free Trade Agreement removes this policing mechanism by phasing out tariffs on original equipment and tires over 10 years, and over five years the tariffs on replacement parts. Without these tariffs, manufacturers will have fewer incentives to invest in Canada, with the consequent impact on jobs for Canadians. Also, the deal introduces a new 50 per cent North American rule of origin.

In order for original parts to move between Canada and the United States at the tariff rates specified in the Free Trade Agreement, at least 50 per cent of the manufacturing cost will have to be incurred in North America. The Government refused to accept the advice of the automotive parts manufacturers of Canada, who warned the Government that unless the North American content requirement was raised from 50 per cent to 60 per cent, up to 20,000 jobs could be lost in the auto parts industry in Canada. This particular aspect of the agreement has many in the riding of Kent very concerned, given that the livelihood of many of the residents of the riding of Kent depend upon this industry.

A third way in which the Free Trade Agreement weakens the Auto Pact arises out of the fact that it restricts the Auto Pact to current participants only. Canada has agreed not to allow companies other than the existing North American car makers to qualify under the remaining provisions of the Auto Pact. We will no longer be able to use the Auto Pact and its access to the U.S. market to attract new investment from Asian companies in order to create jobs.

These changes essentially gut the Auto Pact. This Government has agreed to move from "managed trade" to "free trade" in automobiles.

With tariffs tied to performance requirements, we have been able to create jobs and prosperity in the Canadian auto industry. Why this Government would abandon the Auto Pact when it is working in Canada's interest is baffling. Ideology conquers common sense again.

How has some of the auto industry reacted? As I mentioned earlier, Victor Lonmo, the President of the Automotive Parts Manufacturers of Canada, predicts that 20,000 jobs will be lost in the auto parts industry as a result of this free trade deal, with the job losses occurring primarily in the high technology sector involved in electronics and engine design.

All labour unions in the industry oppose this trade deal on the ground that it would allow auto makers to move Canadian jobs to the U.S. While I do not agree with the politics of Bob White, the President of the Canadian Auto Workers, he makes a reasonable statement when he states, and I quote: "If you have the safeguards without a penalty, how can people be so sure about the future? If you take away the penalty enforcement, I think you put a lot of jobs in jeopardy."

Another aspect of this deal that leads us toward the economic union of the U.S. and Canada is the impact of the minimum wage laws here and across the border. While all Canadian provinces have minimum wage laws, nine American states have no standards. In addition, the minimum wage in 12 of the states is under $3 an hour. In fact, in Texas, the third most populous state in the union, the minimum wage is $1.40 an hour.

Ms. Copps: Shame. What a disgrace.

Mr. Crawford: Under this trade deal, Canadian workers will find themselves in competition with lower paid and poorly protected workers from Texas and Mississippi.

Ms. Copps: They don't care about workers. That is what they want. That is the hidden agenda of this Government—big business.

● (0030)

Mr. Crawford: Factors in the southern states such as lower labour costs, fewer unions and lower employee benefits, have contributed to an exodus of manufacturers from the northern states, all with the highest minimum wages in the U.S. Employment in the manufacturing sectors of Michigan, New York and Ohio dropped by an average of 13 per cent. This same north-south trend will apply to the Canadian manufacturing sector in the aftermath of this trade deal.

Almost 60 per cent of low-income workers are women. Minimum wages are especially important to part-time workers, 75 per cent of whom are women. Thus the threat posed to Canadian minimum wage standards is greatest for women, as well as for the disabled and cultural minorities. Some two million U.S. manufacturing jobs have disappeared since 1979, and it is expected that 90 per cent of the new jobs created in that country between now and 1995 will be in the lower paying personal service sector. This trend is also occurring in Canada.

Given that minimum wage workers in Canada currently find themselves on the low end of the ladder already, they can ill afford further pay cuts to the low levels experienced in the U.S. However, companies will be pressured to harmonize, equalize, and jeopardize the blue collar worker.

The very grave concerns the people of Kent have for this trade deal were demonstrated in my election. The working class, blue collar workers, know they will be hardest hit by this trade deal. They voted for a Party that looks to Canada's future and does not plan just for the next fiscal quarter. They want to see action to train and retrain displaced workers.

The Government says it has the programs in place to look after those who will be negatively affected by this deal. What have the Tories done with industrial training programs? Cut them by 45 per cent. The Government capped support for apprenticeship programs at $37 million this year, a cut of $400,000 from last year. That is the Tory commitment to apprenticeship.

The Government should be following the lead of the Ontario Government, a real leader in skills training. In 1984 the federal Government spent $2.2 billion on skills training. In 1988 it was cut 27 per cent to $1.6 billion. That does not show me that the Government has a real commitment to training and retraining our workers and young people. In the meantime, the Ontario Government added 98 per cent new funds to its programs.

I could go on and on about the effects of this deal on culture, energy, foreign investment policy, the service sector, financial services, women, medicare, unemployment insurance, pensions, child care services, education and Crown corporations, but I will not because I know my colleagues on this side have covered those points very thoroughly.

To conclude, I want to say what a pleasure it was to take part in this historic debate. The future will show who was on the right side of this debate. I want to wish everyone a Merry Christmas and Happy New Year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Longueuil): Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to stand at 12:30 this morning and speak on Clause 2 of the free trade legislation. Mr. Chairman, I would like to thank the residents of Longueuil who voted for me and gave me a strong majority last November 21. Residents of Longueuil gave me 53 per cent of the votes. Believe me, I made at least 75 speeches on free trade during the election campaign. It is mainly for that reason that people from Longueuil voted for me. In my riding of Longueuil there are many small and middle-sized businesses, as well as some large ones, namely Pratt & Whitney. Ninety-nine per cent of these businesses, supported the Progressive Conservative Party because they firmly believe in free trade and in Canada's future under free trade.

Mr. Chairman, the Liberal Party has always claimed to be a very democratic party. They said that it was up to the people to decide but, in 1984, we formed the government with 211 Members. We had the power and we had the mandate to act. But they said that we had to be more democratic than that. The people should be consulted on free trade. Do you know what they did? They used the non-elected Senate to block the free trade legislation. That's antidemocratic. We went to the people because we wanted to be democratic. We consulted the people. Is the Liberal Party still willing to block the free trade legislation with its non-elected majority Senate? If that is what we call democracy, I think that we are off the mark and that Canadians absolutely don't understand what Parliament is.

Canada's geography, Mr. Chairman, is such that it is spread out lengthwise. Canada is a huge country stretching five thousand kilometers from East to West. And the population, of course, is concentrated in the South because people prefer living in the South rather than in the North. To the South, we have the Americans, our neighbours. Through the decades, Canadians and Americans have done business together. We work at that. We buy and we sell. We have learned to work together. They have become our friends. Eighty per cent of all our exports are headed to the United States. That accounts for 2,500,000 jobs which depend directly on our sales to the United States. That's enormous! We absolutely had to make a choice and we decided to reach this trade agreement with the United States precisely to protect those jobs instead of simply saying that we were going to create jobs.

But 250 economists in Canada came out in favour of free trade because they say it will create jobs. I say that what was even more important in all this was the fact that the Americans had decided to use protectionist measures which might have resulted in at least 2 million Canadians losing their jobs. Can you imagine such a situation with a country like Canada, with 25 million people and some $300 billion in accumulated debts. If unemployment continues to increase, if corporations do not make benefits, where will we end up? We will end up broke. So it was really important for Canada to sign this agreement with the United States to continue to develop and grow.

Some businesses in Longueuil, Montreal, and elsewhere in Quebec and Canada export between 20 per cent and 60 per cent of their production to the United States. If the Americans had continued to implement their protectionist measures, these businesses could have lost between 20 and 60 per cent of their market. They would have lost all their machinery. Their only choice would have been to move to the United States. If we want to keep these businesses here, we must make it possible for them to grow, and that is what we are doing with the Free Trade Agreement.

Over the past ten years, we have witnessed a fairly remarkable technological evolution. As you know, there have been changes: even in our own offices, computers have replaced secretaries. That is a dramatic example. We have replaced our secretaries with computers. Unfortunately, we did not make these computers. Why? Because we are not assured of a major secure market which would justify the necessary research and development for these highly sophisticated machines. If we want to develop high technology to replace the jobs we have lost, we need a market which is large enough to justify the investments in research and development. That is why the Free Trade Agreement with the United States is really essential and necessary for Canada. We had the possibility of accepting or not accepting free trade. We also had the choice of progressing or dying. It is because we decided to progress that Canadians provided us with this mandate.

Concerning social welfare, I have never heard so many lies as during this election campaign. We were told that social welfare would be affected. We have been doing business with the United States at a fairly accelerated pace for at least 100 years—80 per cent of all our exports are sold to that country—and we have done it while maintaining our social programs. There has been no change. We will continue to grow with the United States and we will also have a long-term guarantee that we can continue working with that nation and keep our social programs.

I heard Mrs. Bégin, the former federal Liberal Minister, say that free trade would force us to sell our hospitals. It is nothing but lies. None of the clauses in the Free Trade Accord says that we have to sell our hospitals. There will be no changes of any kind before or after implementation. We have always been free to sell our hospitals if we wanted to. But nothing in free trade deal forces us to sell our hospitals. Besides, most hospitals belong to the provinces who can choose to do what they want with them.

You know, there were all kinds of rumours during the election campaign. Some even said at one point, I think it came from the Liberal Party, that free trade would lead to an increase in AIDS.

An Hon. Member: Mrs. Bégin said so.

Mr. Leblanc: I think she is the one who said that. I do not know whether she was talking about free love or free trade, but no matter, she was talking about AIDS. So those bold remarks of Mrs. Bégin give some idea of what we are seeing here, the type and mentality of this Liberal Party, and that is continuing. That is the way Mrs. Bégin spoke and that is what we are still hearing today.

They scared the elderly. That is vile, that is base, that is unacceptable. Most of these people have nothing more than their old age pensions to live on, yet our opponents went as far as telling them they might lose their pensions. Well that is . . . I would rather not say it. It makes me sad, just how low can you get.

But as you would know, Mr. Chairman, older Canadians had their revenge because the Liberals and the NDP treated them like ignorant and naive people. They called them everything under the sun, and they would have us believe things that did not make any sense. So of course they voted for Nic Leblanc of Longueuil.

They also talked about the flag game, you know, the American flag going up and the Canadian flag going down. What misleading statements!

I had the privilege to have as Opposition candidate at home, a Liberal candidate in Longueuil, a distinguished gentleman called Michel Dupuis, a former ambassador to Paris, the chief adviser to the Official Opposition for External Affairs. You know what he wrote in his mailings?

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Leblanc: Beware! Beware! This is a former ambassador speaking. Beware, the Americans are coming! He was referring to dignity. People in Longueuil should have someone they deserve. He was referring to dignity, stating in his ads: Beware, the Americans are coming! Imagine! A former ambassador! This is much viler than I thought. I thought he meant the Americans were coming to buy our products. I told my people: This makes no sense, it is much too low. He must mean the Americans are coming to buy our products, they are coming to help us make our industries grow and create jobs. I found that so vile I could not let the people think that a former ambassador, an official who represented Canada, could say anything so vile. He wanted to protect the dignity of this Parliament and the famous people who are representing us around the world.

Service industries have a yearly $24 billion sales figure. Seventy per cent of our Gross National Product. In Canada, 8.8 million jobs are associated with the service industries.

With free trade, the service industries will have an opportunity to operate in the United States. And I can tell you that all those service industries eventually will be able to operate there. The way they treated service industries—Mr. Garneau, whom I can name because he is no longer here, said we did not have in Quebec people intelligent enough to compete with the Americans in the service industry. I would like to tell Mr. Garneau that I find it rather sad that an insurance company would hire him. We have especially in Montreal, since I am very close to Montreal, I am more familiar with what is going on in Montreal, I can tell you that in Montreal there are companies like SNC, Lavalin, great service industries. Lavalin for instance is the third largest service corporation in the world.

I can say that Lavalin is very proud of the fact that the Conservatives have come to power since it will now be in a position to do even more business with the United States and to keep on moving ahead. With greenbacks worth more than our currency coming in, Lavalin will be in a position to create more jobs in our fine city of Montreal, on the south shore, in Quebec and in Canada. As you well know, last summer the leader of the Opposition stated in a press conference that free trade with the United States would not be a good thing for us. He said that we should make rules whereby we could sell to all countries of the world rather than limiting our sales to the United States. But, as you know, that would mean the status quo. He was talking about something we have already been doing for 50 years. It is a well known fact that for some thirty years now, the European Community are joined in an economic agreement. Japan and Asia have decided to do the same. They are about to enter into an economic agreement.

We have been trying to increase our sales in Europe for 100 years, but even now we only sell 7 per cent of our products in that part of the world. Only 7 per cent of all our exports go to Europe. Europe is one of the most industrialized and advanced region of the world, where you find a lot of consumers, where the workers are well paid, etc. Yet, we only sell them 7 per cent of our products. We are unable to sell our products to Japan, because it is technologically more advanced than we are. We don't do much better with the Africans, the Asians, the Brazilians, or the Central Americans, because they don't have much money to spend. So, what market is still available to us, what market would allow us to grow as a nation? The United States! For fifty years now, we have had access to this natural market, and we will continue to do so. It only proves that the leader of the official Opposition never understood and still does not understand what free trade with the United States is all about.

Let's take for example the Montreal area, a small circle here, which I talked about during the campaign. On an 800 kilometres area, in the Montreal region, we draw a circle from Montreal where 75 million people live, that is 75 million consumers. I am sure you realize that if the Americans were to put a barrier between Canada and the United States, that would only leave 6 million consumers in the Montreal area. A company would never chose to locate in Montreal if there were only 6 million consumers, never. To be able to attract good R&D or hi-tech company, you need to have a population of at least 50 million.

I wanted to talk about farmers, I wanted to say to Mr. Proulx who claimed that free trade was not good, I can say to Mr. Proulx that only—

An Hon. Member: Who is Mr. Proulx?

Mr. Leblanc: The head of UPA. Were he the least bit intelligent he would invent a kind of cheese the Americans like. But I can tell you that with only one kind of cheese, if 250 million Americans decide to buy cheese, a single brand might feed all the cows in Quebec.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leblanc: But he did not think of that. He lives in the past, does not believe in the future. So much for that.

Mr. Chairman, it was a pleasure to speak to you this evening, to the people of Longueuil and to other Canadians. Rest assured that with free trade Canada will remain prosperous. Canadians got the message. The Conservatives got the message. Young people got the message. Mr. Bourassa got the message. And smart people who know the rudiments of economics got the message. Over the next 20 years you will come to realize that free trade is the best historical deal ever made by Canada.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you very much, Mr. Chairman. I want to say this is my maiden speech in this Parliament. I heard a speech earlier tonight by the Hon. Member for Calgary Southwest. That is a Conservative Member. I heard a lot of speeches tonight from the Conservatives, but that was a passionate speech. Imagine a Tory with passion. I have never come across a passionate Tory. It is a contradiction in terms. It is saying that there is such a thing as a progressive conservative.

I want to stir the ashes a little bit with respect to the last election. Hopefully we will find a phoenix or two. I want to stir the memories of Members and of Canadians who are watching here tonight. I heard the Conservatives during the campaign. They talked about lying. They accused certain leaders of the opposition parties of not telling the truth.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Rodriguez: That is right. I heard them in the debates saying that the opposition was going around scaring senior citizens. They said that we were accusing the Prime Minister of lying. I ask you, did I bring my mother on the platform?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: Did I announce that I was deindexing old age pensions?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: Did Brian Mulroney say he was deindexing pensions?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: And did he force us to—

The Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Rodriguez: Who was really lying to the Canadian people? Us?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Rodriguez: Or was it those terrible Tories over there?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Rodriguez: Absolutely. Do we all remember the Wheel or Fortune show in Montreal where they had the smoke and a few mirrors? They started to announce all the Tory candidates from Quebec coming on to the stage. When they had gone through 75, I was still looking. I turned around and said to my wife, "Where is Michel Gravel?" He did not come out of the fog. "Where is Madame Blais-Grenier? Where is Mr. Côté? Where is Monsieur Bissonnette?" They came out of the fog. It was like Godzilla meeting Dracula.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think I detect a sense in the House, if we are calling in the Members, that a five minute bell might be sufficient.

Ms. Copps: You just lost the vote.

An Hon. Member: He said the "yeas" have it.

Mr. Speaker: To clarify the confusion, the yeas have it. Call in the Members. Before we do that, there has been a suggestion that a five minute bell should suffice.

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried. When shall the Bill be read the third time? At the next sitting of the House?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: It being 2.03 a.m., this House stands adjourned until later this day at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 2.03 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

PUBLIC SERVICE STAFF RELATIONS BOARD

TABLING OF REPORT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 32(1), I have the honour to table in both official languages copies of a report to Parliament from the Public Service Staff Relations Board pursuant to Section 21 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

* * *

TABLING OF FIRST ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 32(2), I have the honour to table in both official languages the first Employment Equity Act annual report to Parliament.

* * *

NATIONAL SPORT ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-207, an Act to recognize hockey as a national sport.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the Hon. Member shall have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, the Parliament of Canada has never officially designated any sport for official recognition.

Some Hon. Members: Lacrosse!

Mr. Riis: Lacrosse has never been officially recognized as our national sport.

If there is one thing that is clear across this country, it is the fact that hockey, both as a spectator as well as a participation sport, is an outstanding part of our culture. For that reason I am introducing this Bill officially to declare hockey as our national sport.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

PROTECTION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY WILDERNESS AREA

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to present a further petition today concerning saving the Rouge Valley. The title of this is: "Help Save the Rouge". Residents of Scarborough, Agincourt, Etobicoke, the City of North York and the City of Toronto have signed this petition. They are stating that the Rouge Valley in Scarborough is a unique and precious natural area, and that protecting the endangered wildlife and the wilderness area is in the national interest.

The petitioners are joined by the Mayor of Scarborough, the federal Minister of the Environment, Save the Rouge Valley System and the Coalition of Community Associations and, indeed, yourself, Mr. Speaker, who is supporting this particular venture of saving the Rouge Valley.

Point of Order—Mr. Riis

They call upon the Parliament of Canada to work with the Government of Ontario to establish the Rouge River Valley as Canadian heritage land or provincial park.

Mr. Speaker: I want all Hon. Members to know that I am with great difficulty restraining myself from commenting.

PROTECTION OF MARKET PROGRAMS

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise to present three petitions today on behalf of residents of southwestern Ontario who have availed themselves of their ancient and undoubted right to present a grievance common to your petitioners with a certain assurance that your humble House will therefore provide a remedy.

The petitioners humbly pray and call upon Parliament to reject any proposals that threaten our Canadian farmers' marketing systems and programs. In duty bound your petitioners will ever pray.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the Day.

POINT OF ORDER

PROPOSAL FOR CHRISTMAS RECESS

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think that everyone would agree that Christmas is approaching, Christmas Eve is just around the corner and that this is not the way that we want to proceed any longer. I think that we all recognize that the Government wants to pass this enabling trade legislation. The opposition Parties do not want it to pass.

In recognizing that fact, I wonder if there would not be some disposition to recess for a few days to allow us to return to have a more thoughtful, more comprehensive debate on this issue and to allow Members to get home to their families for Christmas Eve.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops has put a question to the House. The question is one that your Speaker probably could answer very quickly. But, again, I am constrained from doing so. There may be some response from the government side.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we have proceeded as quickly as possible with the disposition of the one item in the Speech from the Throne. There have been certain delaying tactics but we are proceeding. Third reading will commence today. I think the quickest way to accomplish what my friend wants is to have one complete, all inclusive speech from his critic and then vote.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the Day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE
AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade) moved that Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the third time and passed.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I think it might be appropriate, in starting my address on third reading of this important piece of legislation, just to remind the House and, in particular, the House Leader for the New Democratic Party of the fact that this legislation, which incorporates an agreement reached between Canada and the United States in October of 1987 has now had more than a year of debate, of questioning and of examination by the people of Canada and by the Parliament of Canada. The Bill now before the House on which I am moving third reading is a Bill that has already received extensive consideration in this House. It has been through the process before, through committees of the House, a standing committee of the House, and a legislative committee. I suppose that in all our history there has never been a Bill as well considered and debated in every aspect as this particular piece of legislation.

Rather than suggest to the House that we now adjourn for a few days and come back to continue discussing this Bill further, I want to remind the House Leader for the NDP of what his own Leader said just several weeks ago, there having been an election concerning which the Free Trade Agreement was one of the major subjects of debate. He said this on November 23, as reported in The Toronto Star: "I think the process has been gone through now." Then, as reported in The Gazette of Montreal on the same day he said: "The people of Canada have taken a decision and now Mr. Mulroney has the right to continue with his free trade legislation".

Let me just say that never did a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) or a Government have a greater right to proceed with any legislation than have this Government and this Prime Minister with respect to this piece of legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: In addition, the Leader of the New Democratic Party said this as reported in The Globe and Mail on November 23: "It would be churlish and inappropriate to say something should be done about that law at this stage"—referring to the Free Trade Agreement—"all the chances for amendment that could plausibly have been taken have been exhausted". That was a statement of the Leader of the NDP on November 23—two days after the election which had raged for seven weeks almost exclusively on every street corner and in every house in Canada about the very agreement now before the House.

In La Presse it was reported: "On the subject of the trade deal with the United States, he, Broadbent, said that the only thing left for him to do was to accept the decision of the Canadian people. 'In our parliamentary tradition, the Canadian people have made a decision and Mr. Mulroney now has the right and the mandate to pass the free trade Bill'".

Have we seen that kind of spirit exemplified in the House since we opened again on December 12? Of course we have not. We have not seen any acceptance whatsoever of the result of the election campaign that ended on November 21 with a decision in favour of the continuation of the Mulroney administration which meant a decision in favour of the continuance of entering into force of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Has there been that kind of spirit at all in the last 10 or 12 days? No. What we have seen is exactly what Mr. Broadbent said would be churlish and inappropriate. This is what the Leader of that Party said himself. It would be churlish and inappropriate, and the actions of the NDP in the last 10 or 12 days have been exactly that—churlish and inappropriate. They are continuing to be churlish and inappropriate right down to the last second of this debate.

If that is the way they want this to go, that is the way it will have to go. Because, Mr. Speaker, the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement is going to be put before this Parliament for a final decision before Christmas. It is going to be put into effect by January 1, if we can believe statements most appropriately made by Liberal Leaders in the Senate as to what they plan to do the week following Christmas, as long as this House does its job before we rise for Christmas Day. Here is something that the Leader of the New Democratic Party said on November 23. He was voluble on November 23 and very reasonable. In La Presse, he indicated:

"It is extremely unlikely that the NDP will reintroduce amendments to the Bill once Parliament resumes . . . Prime Minister Brian Mulroney has been given a clear mandate".

The moment of truth had come in Oshawa. He continued:

"The agreement with all of its faults has been approved by the people. It would not be appropriate to oppose it now."

Do the Members of the NDP ever listen to what their Leader says? Are they just waiting for some new, bright spark to come from out of the West to eliminate their Leader? Does this mean they are ignoring their strictures and the opinions of their present Leader because they know they have a rising star coming from the West? There has never been a star rise from the West, but perhaps this will be the exception.

The appropriate way for this debate to conclude is for the two opposition Parties to agree that we will debate on third reading today and vote this evening at five or six o'clock. That would allow the Members of this House to rejoin their family members for the Christmas season.

This country entered into a solemn agreement, a treaty with another country. It was entered into a year and two months ago. The date for entering into that arrangement was fixed at January 1, 1989. Will we let it be said that Canada cannot meet its commitments with respect to such an agreement after one year and two months, a general election, and hundreds of hours of debate and discussion during the intervening time? We will be shaming this institution before Canada and the world if we do not conclude our business before Christmas. That is the position of the Government, and it is a most reasonable position. If the people do not want to be reasonable, then the Government must continue on.

What about the Liberal Party of Canada, that mighty institution?

An Hon. Member: You used to belong to it.

Mr. Crosbie: I used to belong to it. I might have something appropriate to say about this suggestion that I once belonged to it. I admit that in my youth I was wayward.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): We know you were convicted of being an extrovert.

Mr. Crosbie: Here is a saying I came across the other day that might apply to the honourable opposition critic with respect to trade. I do not know who said this, but it is very appropriate.

"The man who wants to clean up politics would make a good start by getting out of politics."

There was a most appropriate statement made in 1984. It was made to the present Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). It said, "Do not avoid politics because there are so many hypocrites. There is always room for one more." It could certainly turn out to be true.

Somebody said that I had been a member of the Liberal Party, to which I plead guilty. In 1971, however, I became mature and sensible. Always have an appropriate quote in your pocket. Here is what Lord Halifax said:

"Ignorance makes most men go into a political party, and shame keeps them from getting out of it."

It did not keep me from getting out. I recommend that the hon. gentlemen and ladies opposite consider what Lord Halifax said. Do not stay in the Liberal Party simply because you are ashamed.

I believe there is evidence of more reasonableness in the Liberal ranks than there is in the NDP ranks. We must be fair here. The Liberal Party, experienced in the arts of governing a country which they have governed for most of the last century, are more reasonable. They have accepted the fact that the election is over and that the Conservatives have been returned with a majority. The NDP has not accepted that. They have not accepted their Leader. They are having their strings pulled by Bob White and the seven dwarfs, by Shirley Carr. They are all being manipulated over there. Nobody knows who is really in charge. However, I do not want to aggravate them, this being the Christmas season.

What did the Liberal Leader say following the election? We know that he wanted to let the people decide. That was a mistake, but they did decide. They did not decide the way the Leader of the Liberal Party wanted them to decide. Just after the election he said this in The Ottawa Citizen of November 23:

"He said Tuesday his Party will not block free trade legislation. The people have decided they want the deal."

Then in the same paper, he said: "The people are always right". This is a very sensible position to take.

He said in The Gazette of Montreal on the same day, "We will be restating our position on the matter". Well, by golly, he was right. We have heard that restated a thousand times, but, you know, we let the people decide. "Having stated our case, we let the matter proceed." That was The Toronto Sun of November 23. These are the statements of the Leader of the Liberal Party.

We have had a debate. I have not added up the exact number of hours we have debated this matter since December 12. Perhaps some genius who is good at mathematics could do it quite quickly. We have had many additional hours of debate on the Free Trade Agreement. Everybody has stated his or her position. I know the position of the Liberal Party. I know the position of the NDP. I know the position of the Progressive Conservative Party. The public of Canada knows the positions of the three Parties. The public of Canada is paying no more attention to this Chamber at the moment than they are paying to the man in the moon. They are not paying any attention to politics, with the possible exception of the controversy in connection with language matters in Quebec and other parts of Canada. The public may be paying some attention to that, but they are not paying attention to people who are here debating for the thousandth time a matter on which they decided on November 21.

If they gave us any thought they would say, "What did we elect to the House of Commons? What kind of a charade and farce is the parliamentary system in Canada that this process can go on, that we should be here night after night until one or two o'clock in the morning hacking over matters already decided by the people of Canada? How much longer is it to go on? Is the New Democratic Party to have this continue until Saturday morning?"

An Hon. Member: If need be.

Mr. Crosbie: If need be? Well, there is going to be a "need be", because we are not adjourning until the House deals with this matter. You can be sure of that. Whether it is two o'clock on Saturday morning or Sunday morning or Boxing Day, this is going to be dealt with. That is the position of the Government.

An Hon. Member: Dictatorship.

Mr. Crosbie: Good, the critic is back. I hope the bright light from the West will listen as well.

Mr. Barrett: Are you speaking to me?

• (1130)

Mr. Crosbie: The predecessors of the New Democratic Party, the CCF, were not much brighter than their successors, the New Democratic Party. I have here some clippings from newspapers in 1965, when a free trade agreement was under consideration in the Parliament of Canada dealing with the automobile trade and auto exports between Canada and the United States.

The newspapers refer to the free trade automobile pact. We all know today the reverence with which the NDP approaches the Auto Pact. If one mentions the Auto Pact they genuflect. In fact, Bob White becomes a whirling dervish when one mentions the Auto Pact. I will not get into what Shirley Carr becomes.

Let us look at some of the newspaper reports of the day when free trade in the automobile area was being debated. An article in The Globe and Mail on January 27, 1967, quotes Albert Taylor, President of Local 222, as saying:

'We're going to raise hell about the auto pact and see what can be done about getting jobs for the Oshawa area', Albert Taylor, President of Local 222, United Auto Workers of America, said yesterday.

They are going to raise hell about it. They were opposed to the automobile pact which was introduced by our Liberal predecessors, by the way.

On October 6, 1965, in a report from Oakville which appeared in the Ottawa Citizen, an article about the Canada-U.S. automobile free trade Bill described the position of the Parties. The Liberals say it is a good deal. The Liberals happen to be right. They have been right in the past, they may be right in the future, although one doubts it when one looks across the hall to see what is sitting on the other side.

The Conservatives said: "Let us see how it works—". I will not go on with the rest of it, but since this is the season for honesty, the rest of the sentence states: "We don't like the way the resolution approving it was rushed through the Commons".

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: That was Michael Starr.

What was the position of the New Democrats? "Tommy Douglas condemns the arrangement as a gift to the carmakers". "The NDP candidate in Ontario, Oliver Hodges of Winona, said to his nominating convention, "it is a pricing cartel organized between the Government and the auto makers. It is a secret agreement involving Government money and policy".

Tommy Douglas condemned the Auto Pact as a gift to the carmakers. How things have changed in 23 years. Now we are not allowed to touch the Auto Pact. One of the reasons for the Liberal and NDP opposition to the Free Trade Agreement now negotiated is that they say it affects the Auto Pact.

Mr. Douglas also said that the Auto Pact was a massive giveaway. An article in the Globe and Mail On June 29, 1965, states that:

George Burt, Canadian director of the auto workers, said the union would do its utmost to influence public opinion against the trade scheme.

Are they not lucky that they were just as successful in arousing and influencing public opinion against the Auto Pact as they were in arousing it against this Free Trade Agreement? In both cases they were completely ineffectual.

Mr. Burt went on to say:

... and it is with regret and full determination that the UAW announced it will do its utmost to influence Canadian public opinion against the Canada-U.S. automobile free trade plan.

These are the predecessors of Bob White, who now froths at the mouth when someone mentions a free trade agreement for the rest of Canada with respect to the United States. It is okay now for the automobile industry in Oshawa. It is all right for the automobile industry in Windsor. It is all right for the fat cats of the United Auto Workers here in Ontario, but it is no good for us poor Newfies, it is no good for Atlantic Canada, no good for British Columbia and no good for northern Ontario. It is no good for Quebec. It is only good for the fat cats who are representing Oshawa and Windsor and areas like that where the unemployment rate is practically zero. You can hardly find an unemployed person in the areas I have mentioned.

The free trade auto pact is all right now, 23 years later, for the people who live in those areas represented by the Leader of the New Democratic Party and his trade critic and others opposite. But it is not all right for the rest of us Canadians. To that the Canadian people have given a definitive answer. They have said, "if it is good for auto workers, it is good for us and we want to try a bit of the action". That is what this Government is doing. We are seeing to it that the rest of them get a bit of the action.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Crosbie: I want to be in the Christmas spirit so I will not continue with many of the other quotations.

Mr. Martin: Read Diefenbaker's quote.

Mr. Milliken: Do you have anything to say about unregulated foreign investment?

Mr. Crosbie: Twenty-three years ago at least there was a modicum of intelligence in the Liberal Party of Canada. Today that modicum has been driven out. What we see as a result is across the hall today. We are looking at them today.

What should be the spirit with which the legislation we are now considering is approached? I have given the opinions of the Leader of the Liberal Party, who is no longer listened to by his own caucus. I have given the opinions of the Leader of the New Democratic Party, who certainly is no longer listened to by his caucus. The poor man does not know which shoulder to look over next, or who is coming behind him the quickest.

I want to refer to Premier Peterson of Ontario who was in a statesman-like mode. Perhaps he is getting ready to guide the ship of state federally rather than provincially.

Last summer, according to a Canadian Press report, he said that if the people of this country accept the deal, then obviously he has to stand with the results of that. That is a very reasonable statement. According to an article in the Ottawa Citizen on July 27, Premier Peterson said: "Once there is a clear mandate one way or the other, then we will govern ourselves accordingly. I will accept the will of the people". Is it not wonderful how everyone is prepared to accept the will of the people when they think the will of the people will turn out to be their will? However, when the will of the people turns out to be a will-o'-the-wisp, they change very quickly.

The same article goes on to quote Premier Peterson as saying: "I will accept whatever the judgment of the people is. I still would not think it is a great deal but I would accept the verdict". He also said: "I would look at everything we are doing. We will have to look at the situation as it presents itself". He said that his qualification for supporting the deal, that the Tories must win a majority, is only there because a Tory minority Government probably could not implement it anyway. His qualification has been met. We have a majority.

He also said, as quoted in the Globe and Mail, that if an election is called and the people of Canada endorse the trade agreement he would co-operate in the deal and consider dropping challenges to it on matters of provincial jurisdiction.

He said: "If the people of this country speak on an important issue, I have to accept the results of that, and I would as a democrat". He said: "I would not think it is a great deal but I would accept the verdict".

Could anything be clearer? I will be asking Premier Peterson to stick to what he said in several matters over the next several weeks, including the situation with respect to beer, liquor and wine. I have always found Premier Peterson to be reasonable and a good person to deal with. I will be calling on him to observe the spirit of those remarks on or about January 1, 1989, if this legislation goes into effect as I think it will.

I call on Members of his Party to observe the same spirit of the remarks of Premier Peterson and the remarks of their Leader on November 23.

I do not want to take too long today. However, I believe I have unlimited time. My record is eight and one-half hours in the Newfoundland House of Assembly. If driven to it, if irritated, if aggravated by interventions and people interrupting me, I am capable of going to Christmas Day.

Mr. Martin: We want the record.

• (1140)

Mr. Crosbie: There are some interventions from Mr. Martin. Some call him Mart-in, some call him Mar-tin, some call him Martine. We will see which one works when the convention comes.

To get back to my remarks, the opposition Parties believe this to be a dark day for Canada's future. We say that this legislation is an expression of confidence in the abilities of Canadians and it is a crucial step for building a stronger, more prosperous Canada. If that was not the case, we would not have introduced it.

I want to say to the opposition Parties, it is time for them to give the Free Trade Agreement a chance. They have made their case here in the House and before the people of Canada. We have made our case. The majority have accepted the case that we put before them, so it is time for them to give this agreement a chance. We will know in three or four years' time, before the next election, whether or not this appears to be a good deal. If at that time it is still doubtful, opposition Parties can make their case again, but in the meantime, I believe it is only fair and right for them to give this important commercial step forward a chance to see whether it works or does not work, to see who is right and who is not right.

I appeal to opposition Parties to cease this campaign of trying to sabotage indirectly the agreement they could not stop directly, of ceaseless questioning here in the House of every example they can lay their hands on of some firm laying some people off or making some readjustments in its workforce. This is something that goes on and has gone on every week for the last 100 years and will be going on for the next 100 years. Why not save their fire for actual cases of lay-offs that are caused directly by the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, if there are any such? Why be crying wolf every day, day after day, with an election on this question just over with, trying to pretend that every lay-off in the country is due to an agreement that has not yet even gone into effect? It is just as right for us to come into the House every day and talk about every job that was created that day or every new investment that has been announced.

I would like to ask opposition Parties, once this legislation is passed, to relax and give it a chance, give it a fair trial. This is important for Canadians. This is important for hundreds of thousands of Canadian workers. It is important for tens of thousands of Canadian businesses. It is important for everyone who lives in Canada that this be a success and that the opposition Parties who oppose it not try to sabotage it. Their duty now is to give it a chance.

If their version of what the future holds turns out to be right, they will be in power in four years' time and we will be out. However, it just so happens that we are right and you are wrong, so you are not going to be in power in four years' time. But in the meantime, our opponents are patriotic Canadians and we therefore believe that they will not continue with a campaign of deliberately attempting to create fear and loss of confidence in Canada and deliberately attempting to sabotage the Free Trade Agreement for the next three or four years. The time has come to give the Free Trade Agreement a chance.

What does it do? It sets out a framework for greater security, stability and opportunity in our trade with the United States. That is all it does. It sets out a framework, crucial for creating the confidence that our enterprises need for investment if we are to keep Canada competitive globally. That is what the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement does.

It is no miracle. It will not provide miracles. It depends on Canadians to take advantage of the opportunities it offers. It could be a complete failure. It will be a complete failure if Canadians have not got the gumption, the confidence, the initiative, to seize the opportunities that are offered. No one will have anything laid on a platter before him because of the U.S. Canada Free Trade Agreement. We are not suddenly going to see miracles occur here in Canada. All we are doing is giving Canada and Canadians a chance to increase their economic wealth and prosperity, but it is up to Canadians whether they can compete or not compete. We think they can compete. We have confidence in Canada. I will not say anything about whether our opponents have confidence in Canada or not, but we do, so it is going to depend on us.

For Canadian producers, more trade simply means more business for our workers. More trade means more, better and more secure jobs. For consumers, it should mean wider choice and lower prices, and in the longer run, more trade means stronger economic performance, higher personal incomes and increased revenues to support existing and expanded government services.

All of the niggling talk we have heard about how government services will be threatened is so silly. It is so juvenile and also, of course, quite dangerous. How can we continue to improve and expand government services if we cannot increase the economic wealth of this country? This is a means of increasing the economic wealth of the country.

Let me give just three examples of investments that have occurred because of free trade. There are thousands of them. There will be thousands more. We will start with a small example because of the importance of small business. Roseworks, and I am not talking about some woman who works, Roseworks is a fledgling company that intended to move to the U.S. because of its fear that its business would wilt without free trade. It was going to move to the U.S. if we did not get the Free Trade Agreement. Now it says it can blossom in Canada because the agreement is going ahead. That is Roseworks. They have pioneered technology—

An Hon. Member: What about McCain's?

Mr. Crosbie: Some honourable nitwit says, "What about McCain's?" I will say this about McCain's. Starting out in a small way in New Brunswick, they are now a world giant and they have been able to compete from Canada. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement will not interfere in the continuing growth and expansion of McCain's, and anybody who thinks that it will have little confidence in McCain's and little confidence in Canadians.

Mr. Martin: What did Harrison say?

Mr. Crosbie: Wallace McCain and Harrison McCain are Liberals, but the rooster must be in the hen pen or something considering the cackling that comes from the other side. Harrison McCain and Wallace McCain are Liberals, but that does not make them any less admirable. I admire them despite the fact that they are Liberals. They are entrepreneurs. They may feel that some aspects of the food processing business might be adversely affected by the agreement, and if they are right, then we are prepared to assist whenever and wherever that might be necessary, but we already heard about a potato plant out in Manitoba that would be closed because of the U.S.-Canada agreement being approved, and we have already heard since November 21 that it will not close at all and no one ever said in the first place that it was going to close, so I can tell you that Harrison McCain and Wallace McCain will take great advantage of the Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Martin: Tell us about the cucumbers.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the cucumbers? I have never eaten a cucumber in my life, Mr. Speaker. I hate cucumbers.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I don't like green things.

An Hon. Member: What about pickles?

Mr. Crosbie: I don't like pickles.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Well, don't look in the mirror.

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg soft centre has struck again.

What did Roseworks say? It pioneered technology to preserve fresh flowers indefinitely. I am going to get some of those for occasions in the future when hon. gentlemen will need them as they go to their rewards. The company will increase its staff from 15 to 50 over the next two years. It will export 80 per cent of its product to the U.S. This is one small business in Kingston already saved for Canada. Here is the representative from Kingston fighting the Free Trade Agreement that is going to give his constituents 35 more jobs. He was up on his feet yesterday jawing away about closure as if he had 100 years of parliamentary experience. If he had any sense he would have certainly closed what he was using yesterday to argue against closure. He would be trying to protect these 35 more jobs in Kingston, an area of Canada that badly needs more jobs. Where is Flora when she is needed, Mr. Speaker? That is the question we have to ask.

• (1150)

Flora MacDonald was my desk-mate. She will be sorely missed in the House. However, I think that the people of Kingston have saved her for something even greater, if there could be anything greater than being a Member of the House. I hope that we will hear a lot more from Flora MacDonald in the future. She is a woman of tremendous capabilities and experience. I hope that the Government will be able to find something for her that will suit her talents and her capabilities so that she can go on serving the people of Canada as she has done for the last 20 years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The President of Roseworks—I am glad to see the Hon. Member for Kingston and the Islands is present. He is going to get the Roseworks, if he doesn't look out.

The President, Mr. Peter Blainey, said the following on December 14: "Without free trade we... would definitely have to locate in the United States and those 50 jobs, quite frankly, would not be here [in Kingston]".

Hon. Members still a chance to vote for this Bill on third reading. I suggest to the hon. gentleman that he reconsider his obdurate and stubborn attitude and be prepared to be flexible.

An Hon. Member: Was that after the election?

Mr. Crosbie: December 14 was after the election, after the loss.

An Hon. Member: Is it still Canadian-owned?

Mr. Crosbie: Let us deal with the question: "Do you care whether it is Canadian-owned, or not?" I would like to see the whole world Canadian-owned, lock, stock and barrel. If I had my way I would own it all myself, except that I have devoted myself to public service.

Let us take the question of Canadian-owned. If the firm is Canadian-owned, terrific. However, if the firm is not Canadian-owned, there are still 50 jobs that that firm is creating in Kingston. Frankly, down in Newfoundland we do not give a damn if it is owned by the Martians as long as it creates jobs for Newfoundlanders and Canadians. We do not care if it is owned by the Afghanistanis. We don't care if it is owned by the Martines, or the Martons, or the Crosbies—in fact, we would prefer it to be owned by the Crosbies. It does not matter to us, we are impartial. If I had any sense I would be owning something and not up here working and slaving until 2.30 in the morning. In fact, if I get any offers that would set me up I would be gone like a flash.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): How about a nickel, John?

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. It is my belief that the privileges of all Members have been abused when the Minister for International Trade takes advantage of the television cameras and the 10 people who are watching today to make an appeal to do some useful work, because we all know that the work he has been doing for the last number of years has been useless. This is a terrible abuse of the parliamentary channel. I would hope that he would tell us how the free trade deal will help—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister for International Trade.

Mr. Crosbie: That Hon. Member's future has always been well behind him. He is enjoying his last session in the House. Why did he get re-elected?

Mr. Tobin: With a bigger majority than Crosbie.

Mr. Crosbie: Because I slaved for his district. I improved Deer Lake Airport. I was a fool. There was a new terminal building at Deer Lake Airport, a $17 million harbour improvement at Corner Brook, tens of millions for the Kruger mill in Corner Brook. There were improvements at the airport in Stephenville, and on and on it went. What happened? Well, we see the results of how things went wrong. We are only interested in doing good for the people of Canada, no matter who they have representing them.

Let us look at a larger firm. I want to look at Nova Scotia based National Sea Products.

Miss Clancy: Yes, let's look at that.

Mr. Crosbie: Oh, the Liberals hate success. They hate success. Our Premier is well sprung.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Would you articulate on that a little, please?

Mr. Crosbie: I am not going any further, Mr. Speaker.

Earlier this month Mr. Gordon Cummings estimated that 400 new jobs will be created at National Sea Products because of the Free Trade Agreement. He stated: "The seafood industry now will do more secondary processing in Canada. Instead of taking a fillet of fish, putting it in a 16 1/2 pound frozen block, sending it to the United States and processing it there, we'll be able to do that here in Atlantic Canada".

We have had one example of a small business, and now this is an example of a traditional resource industry expanding in Canada because of free trade. It has a $2 million production line on the floor in Lunenburg which, as a result of our success in the election, will now go into operation creating another 35 or 40 additional jobs in National Sea Products in the next few months because of the fact that the people of Canada supported us in the election.

Let us look at one larger enterprise, Du Pont, a giant chemical company. Next, I am going to hear: "Who owns Du Pont?" Is it American-owned or controlled, or Canadian-owned or controlled, or is it Italian—does Luigi own it? Frankly, I do not care who owns it. I would prefer it to be Canadian-owned, but if it goes on doing what it is doing now, and doing what it promised it will do, it has a very warm spot in my heart.

What is this giant chemical company planning to do? It has stated that capital spending in Canada for 1989 will be $150 million, an increase of 50 per cent over this year. Why is it doing this? Its President, Ted Newall, on December 2 stated: "This is designed to help us capture the opportunities provided by free trade with the United States . . . The end to uncertainty about free trade gives us the opportunity to pursue our corporate strategy more vigorously. Export sales will more than double from the 1987 level, approaching $500 million by 1991. Our strategy is to invest in businesses that can serve the full North American market and that can now, or soon, become competitive with the best in the world".

This is one of the so-called branch plant companies that members of the New Democratic Party kick and thrash around about. They don't mind the old branch plants in Windsor; no, Sir. They don't mind the branch plants in Oshawa. I have not heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party rise and kick the bejabbbers out of General Motors that has put billions and billions of dollars of investment in Oshawa where he has been returned. It is an oasis of prosperity. We never hear them talk about the branch plant mentality when it comes to General Motors. This so-called branch plant company is going to modernize and expand. Why is it going to do that? Because Canada is a good place to invest, particularly because of the increased opportunities under free trade.

• (1200)

Let us look back at what Mr. Newall said:

The end to uncertainty about free trade gives us the opportunity—

Now we have the opposition Parties in the House wanting the uncertainty to continue. They managed to create an atmosphere of uncertainty for most of 1988. The agreement was entered into in October, 1987. They fought this all through 1988. They then said the people had to decide. The Liberals called upon the Senate, this unelected anachronism. The elected remnants of the Liberal Party in the Senate were called upon to block this deal. They created great uncertainty because of the actions of the Senate, the elected second Chamber. That has to be corrected, in my opinion, and corrected soon. We have to apply the guillotine to the Senate. That is my view on the Senate, Mr. Speaker.

An Hon. Member: You send your has-beens there.

Mr. Crosbie: There is only one E Senate that I want to see, emasculated. That is the result that will have to come for the Senate if the Senate is to survive. Never mind the triple E, we should have the single E, emasculation. Now I am getting diverted from whatever I was saying.

The opposition Parties created uncertainty. Then they said there had to be an election. We had the election. The damage done to Canadian business planning and to Canadians who wanted to take advantage of the new free trade Bill was incalculable.

An Hon. Member: The majority said no.

Mr. Crosbie: Millions, if not hundreds of millions, billions of dollars of damage was done because investors had to hold back. They could not carry out their planning because of the uncertainty created by the opposition Parties.

On November 21, the people of Canada spoke, but the opposition Parties still want to carry on creating uncertainty.

Ms. Clancy: They spoke to us too.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Newall said:

The end to uncertainty about free trade gives them the opportunity—

That is why this legislation has to be passed this week. That is why it has to go into effect on January 1, because we have to end the uncertainty. It is our duty to end the uncertainty. It is a virtue to end the uncertainty. The uncertainty must be ended.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Having damaged this country terribly in the last six months or a year, the opposition Parties want to continue to damage the country by going through this charade that we have gone through the last few days.

Mr. Milliken: Utter nonsense.

Mr. Crosbie: We are not going to go along with that. We are ending the uncertainty. We were elected to govern. We are going to govern whether or not the Opposition likes it.

An Hon. Member: What about the positive amendments?

Mr. Crosbie: There has not been a positive statement from the ranks of the Opposition since they got into this House on November 21, not one positive statement.

Mr. Della Noce: Not one from Kingston and the Islands.

Mr. Crosbie: Absolutely. Luigi had it right.

I want to emphasize that while the agreement creates a framework for greater stability and opportunity in Canada—U.S. trade it does not mean an end to trade disputes. Will opposition Members listen to this for heaven's sake so we can avoid a lot of silly, tedious questions in 1989? It does not mean an end to trade disputes, and no one ever suggested, except on the opposition side, that it did. Our trade disputes with the United States will continue, Mr. Speaker. They may even accelerate. They may grow in number and profusion because the United States is still under heavy pressure. The Americans still have a huge balance of payments deficit. They still have a huge deficit in the balance of trade. They are still nervous as cut cats. We have an elected Congress that is just as protectionist now as it was six months or a year ago. This does not mean an end to trade disputes, but it means we have much better defences when it comes to trade disputes with the United States of America.

I am telling the Members of this Chamber today that there will be plenty of trade disputes with the United States of America in the future, but because of the foresight of this Government we will be in a position to deal with them from a position of much greater strength than Canada was in a position to deal with them before.

Ms. Clancy: How?

Mr. Crosbie: I am asked how. You understand, Mr. Speaker, that the opposition Members have not read the agreement.

Ms. Copps: You haven't read it. You said so yesterday.

Mr. Crosbie: I was accused of not having read the agreement simply because—

Ms. Copps: You said so yesterday, that you still haven't read it.

Mr. Crosbie: I admit it. I have never read the pages with all the algebraic equations. I do not think there is a Member here in the House who has read them either. I do not intend to read them. I am not going to read them.

The Member from Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin) is going to look up $A \text{ minus } B \text{ over } C \text{ over } X \text{ minus } Y \text{ equals the power of how much grain will be subsidized in the future. That is up to him to read it if he wants to.}$

Ms. Copps: It is the power of Washington.

Mr. Crosbie: I knew something was missing. Suddenly my ear drums puffed out and there was the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps).

The question was how. The institutional mechanisms and the common rules of conduct that are created by this agreement put Canada in a far better position to promote our interests and defend ourselves against protectionist actions. Isn't it strange how every other country in the world would give anything to be in our position in this Canada-U.S. deal?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Why didn't Hon. Members come to the GATT conference in Montreal?

Ms. Clancy: You didn't invite us.

Mr. Crosbie: I was host to 96 countries plus 9 other countries as observers. It could have suited a couple of these hon. gentlemen to come to Montreal. We extended a hand of friendship to them to see if they could learn anything, but they did not show up.

An Hon. Member: We didn't get the invitation.

Mr. McDermid: Then your Leader didn't give it to you.

Mr. Crosbie: We had representative Gibbons from the United States and Senator Max Baucus. We had American representatives, but our own opposition Parties did not have the interest to send an observer. We had representatives of the P.C. caucus with us. If the opposition Members had come they would have seen the rest of the world envy us because of this arrangement with the United States of America.

Mr. Tobin: That was pity in their eyes. It is the first time a country gave itself up without a single shot being fired.

Mr. Della Noce: It is "boop boop de bepbop"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Our Hon. Member Della Noce has certainly put his finger right on it. "Boop boop de bepbop". Whatever it is. I certainly agree.

Mr. McDermid: Watch Hansard have fun with that one.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Protectionism is still a great problem in the United States because of the American's new sense of vulnerability in the last few years from the huge budgetary and trade deficits. We should have a sense of vulnerability ourselves. The mote is not only in the American eye. Canadians can have motes in their eyes as well. Do you realize, Mr. Speaker, that Canadians are not perfect. Our trade policy is not perfection. We occasionally err on the side of protectionism ourselves. If we do it occasionally, you can imagine that the Americans do it as well.

Mr. Tobin: Give us some examples.

Mr. Crosbie: So does every other country. We all feel these protectionist pressures.

Mr. McDermid: There are liquor and wine mark-ups.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Crosbie: An important segment of the U.S. and its legislators yield to the temptations and blame their problems on the unfair practices of foreign competitors, just as we have a tendency to blame others for our problems caused by our own protectionist actions. The Free Trade Agreement will not stop the American protectionist impulse but it will give us a more effective means to resist protectionist actions directed against our enterprises and employees.

Ms. Clancy: How?

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. lady asks how. The dispute resolution mechanism is the most advanced dispute resolution mechanism ever entered into by two countries in the history of the world. One only has to go to impartial international trade experts to get that opinion. We are going to have the most advanced disputes settlement mechanism in place in the world today. Why?—because Canadians will sit on the panels adjudicating disputes brought in the U.S. by U.S. interests and Americans will serve on the panels struck in Canada to decide disputes brought by Canadians under Canada's trade laws.

• (1210)

Not once during the election campaign or during the free trade debate in this Chamber have I heard Members opposite approach this agreement from both sides. All we hear is their whining and their bitching about what is going to happen here in Canada, about the rights that the Americans will have here in Canada. We have yet to hear them speak about the rights that Canadians will have under the FTA in the U.S.

I cite the example of the health care field. There is only one area in the health care field where the FTA might have an effect on services in Canada, and that is in health management.

An Hon. Member: That's right.

Mr. Crosbie: In Canada our hospitals, our health care system, is almost 100 per cent owned by the provincial Governments—

Some Hon. Members: No, it is not.

An Hon. Member: That is wrong. It is non-profit, but not government-owned.

Mr. Crosbie: In some instances, hospitals are run by the Salvation Army or other religious order. In any event, the health care system is almost 100 per cent publicly financed and controlled by either the provincial or federal Governments. As a consequence, the opportunities for American firms to make inroads in the health management field will be very slim. They will only have that opportunity if a province allows it—

An Hon. Member: And the provinces will.

An Hon. Member: Read Article 2011.

Mr. Crosbie: The Free Trade Agreement does not force, and cannot force, a province to do anything it does not wish to do in the health care field.

But in the United States of America the health system is almost 100 per cent in the private sector, with the result that Canadian health management companies can tender on health management contracts in the U.S. In doing so, they will receive national treatment. They cannot be discriminated against. Under the FTA, they will have every right to compete with American firms on such tenders. In other words, the FTA opens up a vast new market for Canadian health management firms in the U.S. This is an area where we have taken the Americans to the cleaners. U.S. health management firms cannot come into Canada and make the same inroads because of the fact that our health care system is all but totally controlled by Government. As a consequence, the opportunities for U.S. firms in Canada are minimal in the health management field.

Mr. Tobin: That is nonsense; absolute nonsense. Tell the truth.

Are you saying that the provincial Governments cannot give a contract to American firms in the health care area?

Mr. McDermid: No, that is not what he is saying. Certainly they can. But that is a decision for the provinces.

Mr. Tobin: And they will do it. If the federal Government cuts back on the transfer payments, the provinces will have to turn more and more to the private sector. You know that. We all know that. You are simply trying to bluff your way out of it.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, we are listening to the bogeyman. The bogeyman travelled around Newfoundland raising this type of fear.

Mr. Tobin: We got five seats. How many did you get?

Mr. Crosbie: His is a part of the same kind of thinking as that of the Liberal candidate that I mentioned the other night, the Liberal candidate who came across a poor young woman eight months pregnant walking down the road and who said to her: "That's the last free one you'll have."

That is the kind of tactic that was used, and the Hon. Member opposite illustrates that tactic.

Mr. Tobin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin), on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I was not listening carefully, as is my wont whenever the Minister is on his feet, but if the Hon. Member suggested—and I would hope that he did not—that I or another Liberal candidate in Newfoundland said to some poor young woman, eight months pregnant, to quote the Minister, words to the effect "That's the last free one you'll ever have", I would ask the Minister to withdraw his remark, because such an event never happened, notwithstanding the Hon. Member's best attempt to portray it as having happened.

An Hon. Member: How would you know?

Mr. Tobin: I speak for myself, and I would hope that the Hon. Member would have the good grace to take my word on that and withdraw his suggestion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I don't know what the Hon. Member opposite was up to during the campaign. I don't know whether he bumped into any pregnant women during the course of the campaign. I never said that he was the candidate in question. As a matter of fact, he was not. But there were seven Liberal candidates in Newfoundland, and one did exactly what I am telling the House was done. In other words, he was suggesting to this poor young woman that if the Free Trade Agreement goes into effect, "medicare is gone, and this will be the last free child you'll ever have".

Mr. Tobin: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte, on a point of order.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, it is a tradition of this House, generally, that we do not make allegations or attack people who are not here to defend themselves, and I would suggest—

An Hon. Member: Oh come on! What have you been doing for the last four years!

Mr. Tobin: I suggest to the Minister that he show some class, as he is capable of doing on occasion, and withdraw that remark. He is making an allegation against an unnamed individual who is not here to defend himself or herself. It is an improper allegation, done in an improper way, and I would ask that he do the right thing and withdraw it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie).

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a pleasant change to have a Member of the "rat pack" get all upset when an allegation is made against an unnamed person. Usually it is the rat pack that is making allegations about named persons who are not in the Chamber to defend themselves; they are outside this Chamber in the general public. Usually they are asking questions—

Mr. Tobin: Come on, John; show some class.

Mr. Crosbie: Usually they are asking questions that imply some kind of scandalous conduct and it turns out that the scandalous conduct never occurred.

We have seen a hundred examples of that. And then the Hon. Member opposite, who is a Member of the rat pack, gets up and states that I should not say something about a nameless person, a true story about a Liberal candidate in Newfoundland, an individual who went unnamed.

Well, thank God the rat pack has finally gone to ground!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I should like to try to wrap up before six this evening, and with that in mind I hope I do not have to suffer any further interruptions.

While the Free Trade Agreement is not going to stop the American protectionist impulse, it will provide us with far more effective means to resist such actions.

To hear the opposition Members in this place speak, one wouldn't realize that Canada itself has an anti-dumping law, that Canada itself has a countervail law, that our trade disputes law has in it the right of Canadians to approach our regulatory agencies and allege dumping, as was done this past summer in connection with the import of U.S. apples into Canada.

Under Canadian law, Canadian producers and manufacturers can allege that imports coming into Canada are unfairly subsidized, with a request that a countervailing tariff or duty be imposed.

Every trading country in the world has its own set of trade laws. To hear Hon. Members opposite speak, one would think that it was only in the bad old United States of America that there were such terrible laws about subsidies and countervail and anti-dumping.

Canada itself has such laws, and we insist upon retaining those laws until the trading nations of the world can reach common agreement on what an appropriate countervail law is and what the appropriate definition of "trade distorted subsidies" is.

Until that day arrives, we need our anti-dumping and countervail laws, just as the U.S. needs such laws, just as the European Economic Community needs such laws, just as Japan needs such laws, just as any other trading country in the world needs such laws.

The Free Trade Agreement, in addition to creating new opportunities for Canadian enterprises, in addition to providing Canadians with a more effective shield against U.S. protectionist actions, strengthens our bargaining position at the GATT.

I would not expect Hon. Members opposite to know anything about that, because they have demonstrated no interest in the GATT.

While the Liberal Party pledged its dedication to the GATT system, as soon as a GATT panel decision adverse to Canadian interests came down, they began attacking the GATT. That is their wont. They are in support of anything that sounds good. But once there is a result that they do not like, they come out against it.

In any event, in theory at least, they are supportive of the GATT.

They came out against the bilateral arrangement between the U.S. and Canada, but they were all for the GATT. That was their official position.

An Hon. Member: Just like the Tories on the Auto Pact.

Mr. Crosbie: And it is the same in the New Democratic Party. They are for the GATT—until the GATT rules, when applied to Canada, result in a decision that we in Canada do not like.

If we get caught imposing a protectionist action of our own and the GATT panel rules against us, we have the two opposition Parties coming out against the GATT. They no longer like the GATT; they don't like the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. The NDP Party thinks we can rely on our own little market here in Canada. They believe in autarky, I think it is called; that you can just survive on your own little internal market of 26 million people. They forget that 30 per cent of all Canadian jobs come from exports, and 20 per cent of those from exports to the U.S.

• (1220)

Mr. Della Noce: Oshawa.

Mr. Crosbie: They are only concerned about Oshawa, of course. Oh, the autarkist is getting up. Woeful Willy from Windsor is wending his weary way to his "wittle" feet again.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Yes, Mr. Speaker. It concerns a reference the Minister has made a number of times. There was in fact an NDP party last night, which accounts in part for the limited numbers here today.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: Ordinarily it is the "NDP" or the "New Democratic Party".

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I just want to explain why this strengthens our position in the multilateral trade negotiations at the GATT. In the previous rounds of the MTN, one of the most important parts of the process, if not the most important, was what deal would be struck between Canada and the U.S. The reason was and is that Canada and the U.S. are the largest trading partners in the world. We were the two countries that had the most at stake in those negotiations.

Under the GATT rules any agreement reached between Canada and the U.S. had to automatically benefit other countries under the most favoured nation rule, whether or not those other countries made any concessions to Canada. That is why this agreement is so much more favourable to us than it would be if it was reached in the MTN at GATT. Every concession we made to the U.S. or they made to us would have to be automatically conferred on all the other countries engaged in those negotiations. The agreement means that Canada does not have to pay multilaterally for what we have gained bilaterally from the U.S. The Europeans, the Japanese and the newly industrialized countries will now have to make concessions to us for improved access to the U.S. and Canadian markets. That improves our bargaining position immeasurably on the issue of improved access to their markets, which is another tremendous advantage to Canadians of the Canada-U.S. bilateral Free Trade Agreement.

I am still optimistic about the prospects for a successful Uruguay round of multilateral trade negotiations, but we have all seen how difficult it is to solve the agricultural conundrum. We all saw what happened in Montreal on the four areas not agreed to. These issues now have to be reviewed again in April in Geneva. We made great headway in 11 other areas, but these are all held up because we cannot get certain countries to consent because there has been no progress in the agricultural trade subsidy area.

There is a chance that the Uruguay round negotiations will fail. Without the Free Trade Agreement we would then be left outside any major trading bloc, knocking in vain at the door. Because of this agreement we have assured ourselves of access to one of the largest and most prosperous economies in the world, the U.S. Without this agreement we would be left defenceless, particularly in the event that the Uruguay round of negotiations were not successful.

Mr. Harvard: Fiction.

Mr. Crosbie: It is not fiction. If you think this is fiction, you are not fit to govern. You do not want to consider what the possibilities are in the future, you do not want to take action to protect yourself today from what might happen to you tomorrow. That used not to be the Liberal view of things, but the Liberal Party has of course changed immeasurably since I left it and the bottom dropped out of it in 1971.

Free trade with the U.S. is an insurance policy against the worst case scenario. What is that? A global slide into protectionism. That is what the agreement does for us. It helps protect us against the fearsome prospect of the worst case scenario, the Uruguay round fails and we slide into a world of protectionism.

For all those reasons we believe the FTA will benefit Canada, just as the reduction of trade barriers between the U.S. and Canada has benefited us now for 50 years. In 1945, I believe it was, 35 per cent of Canada's exports went to the U.S. Last year it was 76 per cent to 80 per cent. This is not something that occurred under a Conservative Government. This occurred under many Liberal Governments over many years. In all the years from 1945 until now the Liberal Party was in power except for five or six years under Mr. Diefenbaker, eight months of the Clark Government—

Mr. Harvard: A hiccup.

Mr. Crosbie: You can call it a hiccup, but it was a hiccup that resulted in the belch that followed under the Liberal Government of Mr. Trudeau. We all know the damage the Trudeau belch did to Canada from 1980 to 1984. The Canadian people certainly quickly regretted the error they made in defeating the Conservative Party of Joe Clark in February, 1980. They soon discovered to their peril and their cost what they had done.

When the Liberal Party got in it had no authority to change the Constitution at all. It had never asked the Canadian people or suggested to them that it was going to cause constitutional revolution. Yet that same Party, with 43 per cent of the vote, now says we do not have a mandate to do anything at all. We have only 43 per cent. The Liberals got into power with 43 per cent of the vote and then changed the Constitution of Canada. Senator Machiavelli Kirby. We all remember that, if we have any memories at all, and how they went about bullying the provinces. They put in the notwithstanding clause. This is their clause which they are now trying to say they no longer support. That Party is the notwithstanding Party. I do not know how anyone can stand them.

We had six years of Mr. Diefenbaker and eight months with Joe Clark, up until 1984. So in the period from 1945 to 1984, almost 40 years, that is when our increase in dependence upon the U.S. occurred. It occurred under Liberal Governments. They adopted policies such as Mr. Trudeau's policy of turning to Europe. What was it called? The third option. Some 65 per cent of our exports went to the U.S. then. The third option did no good whatsoever. The figure on exports to the U.S. now is 76 per cent to 80 per cent.

We are dealing with the situation left to us by many Liberal Governments. Having gotten us in this position they then spend all their time trying to sabotage the solution we achieved to the problems they left us. Instead of trying to be statesman-like and helpful, they try to create uncertainty and ruin the arrangement we have made. We think the Free Trade Agreement will position us better to meet the new realities of international life, whether they involve reduced or increased trade barriers.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I might remind the House that 1.3 million jobs have been created in the last four years. If you listen to Question Period you would think there was not a job left in Canada. The Opposition get up in every Question Period trying to find some place in the country where they can allege a job has been lost as a result of free trade or whatever. They never once mention during the election campaign the economic policies and conduct of the Government. That was never the subject of debate. It was never the subject of criticism by the Leader of the Opposition or by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. They could not criticize the Government's economic record because the Government's economic record was so strong.

• (1230)

Some 738,000 more women are working in Canada in 1988 than were working in Canada in 1984. The youth unemployment rate has been reduced tremendously. It had gone up and increased under the Liberals, despite Senator Hébert's ploy that the media was taken with, lying down outside the Senate Chamber going to starve himself because our youth policies were not satisfactory. What was he doing when youth unemployment went up by 170-odd thousand under Mr. Trudeau? He was in the Parliamentary Restaurant quaffing champagne and eating pâté de foies gras.

When the youth unemployment rate was being reduced severely he was demonstrating outside the Chamber, with the help of the media. Members of the media would come along every day to have a look to say: "Are his eyelids open or shut? Is he still alive?" One could tell by the tongue flapping, Mr. Speaker, that he was still alive.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): We still must have a little respect for the other place.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Through you, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say to the Minister for International Trade to get a grip on himself. He has now again attacked someone who cannot defend himself, someone who is not in the House, the Hon. Senator Hébert. What we are getting—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is not a point of order. The Hon. Minister for International Trade has the floor.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I believe that the hon. gentleman who was just up on an interjection, a new Member to the House, introduced some new language into the House last night. He has the gall to get up to lecture me about what I should be saying or not be saying in the House. He had better watch himself first, that hon. gentleman. We heard what he thinks is clever language in the House here last night. It did not go over very well then. I suggest to him that he should wait until his Hon. Leader here, the trade critic, gives him the signal before he jumps up and makes an a-s-s of himself again, Mr. Speaker.

I am trying to come to the end of my remarks here.

Mr. Harvard: Please do.

Mr. Crosbie: What I want to suggest—

Mr. Caccia: That is unparliamentary language.

Mr. Crosbie: Who is that croaking up now? That is the hon. gentleman who supports his Leader so avidly. He is such a faithful follower of the Leader of the Opposition. The Leader of the Opposition had to move him into the front row because he could not have him behind his back any longer.

Mr. McCurdy: You are a model of statesmanship.

Mr. Crosbie: I want to speak for a moment on the question—

Mr. Tobin: The only Party whose leadership you have not run for is the NDP. You had better watch yourself. Ed Broadbent has a fellow watching you full time in case you abandon your pinstripes for denim.

Mr. Crosbie: Any Party that I ran for the leadership of would be vastly improved if I made it, that is for sure.

Let me just come to the question of adjustment about which we have heard so much. I want to remind the House once again to get this issue into perspective. Let us take some respected economic forecasting agencies, in this case the Economic Council of Canada, which is as good as any of them can be, and look at what it forecasts for the next 10 years. Remember that the Free Trade Agreement is being introduced over a 10-year period. There is a 10-year period of adjustment for the Free Trade Agreement. Just look at the dimensions of the problem of adjustment as its forecasts show.

The Economic Council of Canada estimates that 439,000 jobs would be created over that 10-year period as a direct result of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. It might be right and it might be wrong. It might be off by tens of thousands, or it might not. It estimates that 107,000 jobs would be lost during that period. That is an average of 18,000 jobs per year. It says that there will be a net gain of jobs likely from the agreement of 251,000 over the period. Remember that our leading economic forecasters say that the result of the Free Trade Agreement is a net increase in jobs. It states: 439,000 jobs created, 187,000 lost, 251,000 net increase. Naturally, we have to be concerned about 187,000 jobs that may be lost. But this country already has a plethora of programs to deal with people who are unemployed and who are in between jobs.

Every year in our dynamic economy something like 3.5 million to five million people change jobs during the year. We have programs. We have the Canadian Jobs Strategy. There are programs of the Department of Labour, programs in the Department of Unemployment and Immigration, programs in the Department of Industry, Science and Technology, to help people who are in between jobs now, and during the time of the Free Trade Agreement or whatever.

Let us get this in perspective. The adjustment might be an adjustment for 187,000 people over a 10-year period. Anyone can come into this House and try to pretend every day that there is some huge emergency outside because of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, but that is pure bluff on their part. That is trying to create a perception. The problem is that there could be adjustments for 187,000 people likely over a 10-year period.

If new programs are needed to assist in any particular area, and there may be several particular areas in which the agreement has adverse effects outside the normal effects, we will be ready with special programs if special programs are needed, just as they were produced for the grape growers of Canada. Let us give the Free Trade Agreement a fair chance.

Once members of the Opposition have finished bemoaning the fact that they lost the election, that they were not successful, once that sinks in and the Free Trade Agreement is here, opposition Members will be good Canadians and give this agreement a chance to work—

Mr. Harvard: For how long?

Mr. Crosbie: I would say it would be reasonable to give it three years in any event. There is not likely to be an election for four years.

Mr. Harvard: Tell us how we are going to get out of it if it is bad.

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman wants to know how to get out of it if it is bad. If it is bad, we can give six months' notice and terminate it. Under the Auto Pact one has to give one year's notice. If the Americans want to change the Auto Pact they give us notice of one year and then in one year the Auto Pact is terminated, or we negotiate in between. If either one of the parties to this agreement discovers that it is not to their advantage or was not what they thought it should be—and I do not think this will happen—they can give six month's notice and force a renegotiation or bring the agreement to an end.

All I am suggesting is that the opposition Parties give this a chance. If they are not prepared to give it two or three years, a reasonable period of time, they should give it at least a year. They should not try to break the confidence of Canadians and themselves in any opportunities that a Free Trade Agreement will present to Canadians. They should do their best to help us realize and to help Canadians realize the opportunities there are in this agreement. Surely, they have to admit that there are some opportunities presented by this agreement. Surely, they cannot believe that just about the whole business community of the country is so stupid that members of it are supporting something that will not give them an opportunity at all to advance the interests of their own companies.

Mr. Tobin: Fifty per cent of them are American now anyway.

Mr. Crosbie: Who is American? I did not realize that John Bulloch was an American. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business, headed by John Bulloch, supported the agreement with great strength. Sixty-seven per cent of their members said that the agreement would be of benefit to the small businessmen and women of Canada.

• (1240)

An Hon. Member: Where is your Member for Hull—Aylmer? On vacation today? Where is he? In the sun? Florida?

An Hon. Member: If you only worked one-tenth as hard as he does.

Mr. Crosbie: Are they suggesting Luigi is not a Canadian?

I would conclude by saying that this has been a long siege. I did not realize, when the Prime Minister asked me to become the Trade Minister at the end of March, that the process would be so long and painful. It has been just about nine months since the end of March.

I was happy to accept his invitation. I believe that this is a positive benefit for Canadians. I realize this will not produce economic miracles. It will put Canada into a favoured position among the nations of the world. The United States is still the largest and most prosperous market of any country in the world. The Free Trade Agreement will give us an immeasurable sense of security, particularly if the rest of the world is not successful in the Uruguay round of the GATT discussions that are now under way.

This is an agreement that strengthens Canadian nationalism; that strengthens the opportunity for the development of Canadian culture; that strengthens every region of the country economically; that gives Atlantic Canada a new chance. I have visited Nova Scotia frequently. I heard the complaint that Nova Scotia had been done in by Confederation in 1867, that it had been a prosperous place based on north-south trade until it entered Confederation. Then Ontario and Québec imposed high tariffs and stifled progress forever in Nova Scotia. What would happen in Nova Scotia if that tariff arrangement were ever changed? We are now removing the shackles from the Nova Scotia economy that they complained about for 110 years of Confederation. They are being removed from New Brunswick where the Premier supports this agreement. Despite the fact that he is a Liberal, he continued to give the agreement his support during the election campaign. The Premier of Newfoundland supports it. We only have one maritime Premier who does not, and that is the Premier of Prince Edward Island.

This deal is good for every region of Canada. This is a positive step forward for Canada. It is good for all Canadians. It is good for the people I represent. I cannot think of any strong, persuasive, rational argument against entering into this Free Trade Agreement. That is why I am proud to have participated in this process. That is why we are prepared to spend every day from now until New Year's Day to see that this gigantic step forward for Canada becomes law and takes effect on January 1, 1989. The time has come for that to be done.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): We have had a lot of time this last week to sit in our chairs and reflect. I have come to an important revelation. I now know what the definition of "hell" is. It is having to sit in my chair until 2.00 a.m. passing clauses that I have never had a chance to debate and getting up four or five hours later and listening to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) for two hours. There is no more cruel and inhumane punishment than the combination of experiences the Members have been put through.

I do not want to disrupt the Christmas season with the same obnoxious remarks that the Minister made. Before the Hon. Minister runs away for his lunch break at the local gas station, let me pass on to him something that the members of the Liberal caucus suggest as a Christmas gift to the man who has nothing.

We have thought longingly about the Minister for International Trade and what would be the appropriate gift for him at Christmastime. We know he has not had time to write Santa Claus, so we are here in the full spirit of generosity and charity to make a contribution. It came to our desk. It is entitled, "The John Deer Spreader Handles More Manure Faster to Save You Time".

"Let's face it. There are other things you would rather do than spend a lot of time spreading manure. That is why we introduced a new 350 Spreader with reliability and performance that gets you out of the field fast. Not only does the new 350 Spreader save you time, it is economically priced. So whatever you would rather do with your time and your money, the 350 Spreader will help you make it possible."

We have the ideal Christmas gift to replace the Minister for International Trade, and that is the 350 Spreader. Just think of the time we would save the Canadian people. Just think of how the people watching television would be saved an excruciating experience if we had a spreader in the place of the Minister. We would get that manure out an awful lot quicker and more efficiently than what we have today.

In the same spirit of generosity, I want to help the Minister on another small item. It seems that the only poignant moment in the whole speech was when he appealed for a new job.

Ms. Copps: The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was listening.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): We hope the Prime Minister was listening.

The Minister said that he would rather be in another place. That is a sentiment shared by about eight or nine million Canadians.

I pass on to him an offer I saw from one of those American corporate giants that he so longingly loves.

Before Goodyear closed their plant in Toronto, they still had a job opening left. This would be most appropriate for the Minister's talents and qualities and offer him plenty of opportunity for travel, fresh air, and exercise. They need a replacement for someone to glide over the Rose Bowl on New Year's Day. I can think of no more useful accomplishment for that exercise than what we have had here today. I say to the Minister, "It is not too late". He could run out and apply immediately. There are two weeks until New Year's Day. We will look forward to seeing him hang-gliding over Pasadena sometime on New Year's morning.

I wish to say one thing on this third reading. I have been in politics a long time, and I hate to lose. I hate to lose debates, elections, and debates on important issues. The question that has been raised in this debate by Members on all sides is who won the election and what the election really meant. It is important to spend a moment, because the Members on the Cabinet benches and the Tory back-benchers have been banging their desks and rising to their feet and saying, "We won". Let me raise some questions. Let us see what happened in the Province of Newfoundland.

Here is the chief salesman for the trade deal. In his home province one would think that the magic of his argument, the thrill of his comments, his Don Rickles routine, would have mesmerized the people of Newfoundland to the point where they would run to the polls as fast as possible to vote for every Tory Member of Parliament. But what happened? His own plurality fell by 10,000 votes, and five out of seven seats are now held by Liberals.

Let us look at other Atlantic provinces that the Minister is so proud to talk about with a sense of realism and understanding. What happened in Prince Edward Island? There was 100 per cent rejection of the Conservatives. One accomplishment was that not only did he give a message to the Tories, they made a singular contribution to the environment of Canada by getting rid of the last environment Minister.

Mr. Charest: The election is over, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I say to the Minister of Youth, or whatever he is, the election is not over. The election is just beginning. You had better be aware of it. The election has begun.

Mr. Charest: That is pathetic, Lloyd.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): The pathos is in the eye of the beholder. I am afraid the Hon. Member has spent a lot of time looking in the mirror.

Let me recount that there were only two provinces in the entire country that one could say voted in a majority way for the Conservative Party. One of them happened to have an extraordinary number of seats which, by the parliamentary system, gave them a majority in the House. But it was close. We know just how close it was because we know how frantic, sweaty and obsessive—

Ms. Copps: Dirty.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre):—that is right, and how dirty the Tories got in the last couple of weeks because they knew they were going to lose.

We came very close because there were millions of Canadians who rejected the deal and voted against the Conservative candidates in overwhelming numbers. I point to my own Province of Manitoba where we now have five Members in the City of Winnipeg, where we defeated Conservatives and New Democrats on the basis of a very important message, that it was the Liberal Party that spoke for Canada.

If the members of the Conservative Party ever had a moment of reflection—which I doubt since it is a contradiction in terms—I believe they would realize that it requires them to sit down and seriously consider the election results. The results did not give them carte blanche. They did not give them a mandate for dictatorship. It did not give them—

Mr. McDermid: Give me a break.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): It did not endow them with some divine ordination to govern. It gave them a very strong message. It is that there are millions of Canadians who rejected the Government from 1984 to 1988, who defeated 40 or 50 of their own members, defeated six members of the Cabinet and reduced the pluralities of every Tory candidate in this country. More Canadians voted against the free trade deal in 1988, than voted against it in 1911 when it was defeated.

Mr. Charest: What was the population in 1911, Lloyd?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): The fact of the matter is there was a split vote. I want to say with some regret to my friends in the New Democratic Party that it was also a sad sight to see a new coalition emerge in those last two weeks of the election, attack the Liberal Party. It was a coalition of the Tories, big business and the New Democratic Party Leader.

It was hard to imagine that a Party which stood up day after day in the House saying it would oppose to its last breath the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement would, in the last three weeks of the election as it began to slip, turn its fire on Liberals. They forgot that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was the proponent. They somehow forgot that it was the Conservatives who were the advocates of trade and spent all their time, advertising dollars and energy and resources attacking the Liberals. I say that with great regret because we felt that if there had been an effective coalition across the country we could have defeated the Conservatives and we would not be debating this Bill at the present time.

Mr. McDermid: It is all your fault, Steve.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): That saddens me deeply, Mr. Speaker. I want to say by way of personal reflection that I, like other Members in the House, have been intimately involved with this debate for close to four years. I think I speak for all Members of the House, both those who have just been elected and those who were here, that in a sense it has been a rare privilege to be involved in a debate of such historic proportions, win or lose. In some ways we have been serving in a very dramatic and historic way the reason why we are here.

Every one of us, whatever our differences, runs for public office because we feel we have something to offer.

An Hon. Member: Lloyd for leader.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): We know that what has transpired in this country in the past years and months has been something that has demanded the utmost commitment, engagement and involvement. It has required—I make an exception. The Minister of Youth does not have the ability to be committed or engaged. He does not understand what public service means. All he understands is how his job works. That is the limit of his understanding of himself. That is the problem with the Conservatives, and there are too many of them.

That kind of commitment which people have made has been broadly shared by millions of other Canadians. We have simply been their servants in a real way, active as their spokespersons. This has been a very important definition for Canadians. It has required thousands of people to leave the comfort of their occupations and families and ask themselves some hard questions about what this country means.

This debate, as raucous as it gets and with as much rhetoric that has flourished, did require Canadians to come to grips with some very fundamental questions about who we are, what we are and where we are going. I think that sets the base for a continuing debate in this country.

Anyone who assumes that this third reading of the Bill ends the debate is sorely wrong. It just begins the debate. This has been a catharsis for Canadians. It has given Canadians a new perspective of what it means to be a Canadian. It has brought them to realize that we simply cannot let Parliament work in the abstract in some isolation on the Hill in Ottawa and that the only way we can govern is if people are directly involved and can participate.

In some ways that realization came too late. In part, the Tory strategy succeeded. For a long time they were able to keep this matter hidden in the shadows. The strategy that was elaborated in their Cabinet paper in 1985, clearly stated that the only way they could get the trade deal through was if they did not tell Canadians what was in it. The Minister of Trade says he does not like cucumbers but he certainly knows how to grow mushrooms, which is basically to throw the manure at them and keep them in the dark. That is what the Minister and his colleagues have been very capable of doing.

The doors opened with the election. We suddenly realized that something very important was happening. That is why we have been engaged in this debate as long as we have in this last week and why we felt we needed far more time. That is why we believe it was not simply a matter of turning this Parliament into a sausage machine that would process the votes according to some kind of automatic formula, but would provide a forum in which that thirst for understanding and demand by so many Canadians to know more about this deal could be satisfied.

We have been denied, and so have Canadians. I say as a veteran of this House that it strikes me as being sad, in a way, that we could go through the last few days seeing closure brought forward more often than it was during the famous pipeline debate which was called at the time of a crisis of parliamentary government in Canada. The Government has used closure more often for more incidental reasons than any Government in the past, far exceeding anything we saw in the pipeline debate.

There has been no sense of shame on the part of the Conservatives. There has been no regret or apology, no ability to understand what they were doing. They were totally incapable of understanding that one of the real victims of this whole debate has been Parliament itself and that they have put in jeopardy this fine institution by the way they have used their jackboots to simply tramp on the rights of the House. It seems to me that is one of the first casualties we have to look at.

I invite you back at three o'clock when we can continue our discussion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.01 p.m. the House took recess.

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S.O. 31

FREE TRADE

COMPLEMENTARY NATURE OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, the recent meeting of representatives of the GATT countries in Montreal once again demonstrated that all negotiations aimed at reaching a trade agreement are laborious and do not always produce the expected results.

The Federal Liberal team and their leader propose a multilateral agreement as an alternative to the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States. Such a proposal shows a lack of realism, experience and judgment on their part.

Canada cannot go backwards and accept a sudden and abrupt increase in customs tariffs when it has taken almost 50 years to bring them down to their present level. The Free Trade Agreement is an insurance policy against this reversal of things since it provides for the phasing-out of all trade restrictions between our two neighbouring countries and for the stabilization of our long term economic policy.

S. O. 31

Today Canadians are proud to have given their confidence to the Right Hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) and to have supported his proposal for a bilateral agreement with our major trading partner, the United States, while striving at the same time to liberalize further international trade. The Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Speaker, is complementary and non-exclusive.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER TAX—LAY-OFFS ANNOUNCED BY G. W. MARTIN COMPANY

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, earlier this week the G. W. Martin Company of Sault Ste Marie and Searchmont announced that it will be laying off 65 employees in its softwood lumber operations there. This represents over half the employees in the sawmill in the hamlet of Searchmont. This is a devastating blow for this small community.

These lay-offs have resulted from the Government's infamous export tax on softwood lumber which has cost the company $981,000 during the last two years and is now costing half of the workforce in Searchmont their jobs. I call on the Government to rescind this tax which has cost the softwood lumber industry in northern Ontario millions and millions of dollars and will cost thousands of jobs this winter if the Government does not act. The Government must act now to save these jobs in northern Ontario's softwood lumber industry.

HOUSING

TRINITY—SPADINA CO-OPERATIVE HOUSING PROJECT

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, thanks partly to this Tory Government, 36,000 children in world-class Toronto must depend on food banks, many because their food money must be spent on rent.

A co-operative group in Trinity—Spadina is trying to build affordable housing. It is ready to go to tender to build 62 units, family and single, two-thirds of them rent-geared-to-income. However, when construction costs rose, this Government refused to give more dollars to meet the cost. Instead, it slashed the number of

CMHC unit allocations so that this group may totally lose its two years of volunteer labour and its $200,000 provincial start-up allowance.

This Tory Government did the same thing to the same group two years ago. This Tory Government itself has caused increased housing costs by upping the sales tax on building materials and by refusing to impose a speculation tax to deter its land speculator friends.

I call on the Minister of State for Housing (Mr. McDermid) to take off his rigid dollar cap and enable people to build this and other affordable housing to meet the needs of low-income Toronto people.

MULTICULTURALISM

CALL FOR APPOINTMENT OF RACE RELATIONS COMMISSIONER

Mr. Alan Redway (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, another urban problem that needs the urgent attention of the Government is race relations. Equal opportunity and equal treatment are cornerstones of a free and democratic society, and most certainly of our Canadian multicultural society.

Recent concerns surrounding the Albert Johnson and Lester Donaldson cases in Toronto, the Michael Wade Lawson case in Mississauga, and the Anthony Griffith case in Montreal, underline the urban race relations problem. I do not want these problems in my city and I know that you do not want them in yours, Mr. Speaker.

Just prior to the election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) committed the Government to establishing a new Department of Multiculturalism. At the very least, that Department should include a Race Relations Commissioner.

TRIBUTE TO PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Gilles Bernier (Beauce): Mr. Speaker, in a few days, the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Bill will be ratified by this House. This Bill is the culmination of three years of hard work by the Conservative Government and is the boldest economic initiative in the history of Canada.

Thousands of people in all provinces participated in its development, inspired and encouraged by a man who believed in our resources and potential. That man is the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Nineteen eighty-nine is just around the corner, and I hope that Canadians will continue to use their talents to ensure the prosperity of Canada. I pay tribute to the men and women who never despaired, who showed great strength of character in their efforts to develop this complex Agreement that will help employers create jobs and benefit the young people of Canada.

Let it be said loudly and clearly. It took courage, audacity and leadership to develop the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Bravo, Brian Mulroney! Your Government has delivered the goods to the people of Canada. To paraphrase Vigneault, my dear Brian—

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY

CHOICE OF SAINT-LAURENT CONSTITUENCY

Mrs. Shirley Maheu (Saint-Laurent): Mr. Speaker, my riding of Saint-Laurent is the centre of the high technology in Canada. The state-of-the-art technological developments produced there will put Canada at the forefront of the space industry. The creation of the Space Agency will help Canada to become an important partner in the development of space exploration. I was pleased to hear the Prime Minister tell the House that even ridings that had elected members to the Opposition would receive their fair share.

[English]

However, I am disappointed that the Government has not yet proceeded with its commitment to grant the space agency to Saint Laurent. Have the people of Saint Laurent suffered because of their rejection of my opponent in the election? Surely the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would not give the space agency to Saint Laurent just because it is Premier Bourassa's riding but would because Saint Laurent deserves it.

[Translation]

I only hope the Government will keep its promise to give people their fair share and build the Space Agency in the most appropriate location, that is, in Saint-Laurent, which already has the necessary infrastructure.

THE LATE KARL HILSINGER

Mr. Bill Winegard (Guelph—Wellington): Mr. Speaker, the man known as the "Silver-Suited Skier" has died. Karl Hilsinger, former Canadian Football League all-star and sports consultant to the War Amputations of Canada, died of a heart attack last Thursday. He was 56.

We will all remember Karl Hilsinger as the double-leg amputee who appeared in television commercials about the Child Amputee Program, the CHAMP program, sponsored by the War Amputations of Canada.

Karl participated in the 1988 Winter Olympic Games in Calgary. He joined with several others in the CHAMP program in skiing demonstrations and he took part in the Olympic Torch relay. During that relay, he refused to use a wheelchair. He carried the torch while walking on what he called his stubbies.

Karl's passing is a tragic loss to the 1,200 young amputees in the CHAMP program. According to Cliff Chadderton of the War Amps, the children worshipped him. He set the standard for how to overcome a disability. He was a man who dedicated his life to others. He will stand tall in our memories.

THE LATE BERNT CARLSSON

Mr. Jack Whittaker (Okanagan—Similkameen—Merritt): Mr. Speaker, I am sure I speak for all of us when I express our sorrow over the tragic crash last night in Scotland of a Pan Am Boeing 747 en route from London to New York.

The New Democrats have suffered a particular loss in that crash, for one of the passengers on that flight was Bernt Carlsson, the United Nations Commissioner for Namibia and a well-known member of our international socialist family.

The New Democratic Party had worked with Mr. Carlsson for more than a decade, especially since his election as Secretary General of the Socialist International in 1976. We were witness to his untiring efforts to improve East-West relations and to address problems of underdevelopment and conflict in the Third World.

S. O. 31

In the course of this work we came to know him, and he came to know Canada through his visits here. He was a great socialist and a great friend of mankind. He will be sadly missed, not only by his friends and colleagues in the New Democratic Party but by all Canadians.

FREE TRADE

POSITION OF FARMERS

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, in the last election campaign, the Liberals and the New Democrats have tried to scare the Canadian people, especially farmers, by telling them that free trade could threaten their future. On the contrary, Mr. Speaker, our Government was responsible enough to protect our marketing boards by including Article XI of GATT in Article 710 of the Agreement. That means, Mr. Speaker, that the Canadian dairy industry will stay in place and grow stronger and that the poultry and egg industries have been strengthened and protected as farmers had requested.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, we are sensitive to the fact that we export a lot of pork, beef and horticultural products to the United States. Mr. Speaker, as a responsible Government, we couldn't say no to those producers who need guaranteed access to the American market. We couldn't say no to developing a policy allowing our farmers to expand. That is why, Mr. Speaker, on November 21, Canadian farmers and co-operatives said yes to a Progressive Conservative Government as it is the only party to offer a positive and progressive option for the future of Canadian agriculture.

INDIAN AFFAIRS

ESKASONI—ELECTION OF BAND CHIEF

Mr. Russell MacLellan (Cape Breton—The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, on November, 1988, an election was held in Eskasoni. In the band council election for chief the winner won by one vote.

S. O. 31

There are allegations of irregularities in that election but the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs says that this matter cannot be dealt with for months. The town is split and there is not even any move for a recount.

The Supreme Court of Nova Scotia says that it does not have the jurisdiction and the community of Eskasoni is split down the middle.

There is nothing in the Indian Act to deal with this matter and the people of Eskasoni are being denied the rights that people in other electoral jurisdictions can take for granted and have without any problem.

I ask the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development to look into these irregularities and conduct a recount as soon as possible, and I would ask the Minister to bring in amendments to the Indian Act that would look after the shortcomings in the present legislation.

THE LEADER OF THE OPPOSITION

Mr. Ross Reid (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) ran the campaign of his life. He ran long and hard for the hearts and minds of Canadians.

Here is this great warrior for Canada wounded in battle, struggling on despite the will of the people, struggling on despite the coming bells of Christmas, struggling on despite the fact that no one is listening, continuing the campaign of his life. Struggling ever onward leading his tattered, weary, and worn band of loyal banditos.

Mr. Speaker: I am sorry I have to interrupt the Hon. Member but I think that his comments may well be inappropriate. The Hon. Member for Sault Ste. Marie.

PUBLIC SERVICEEMPLOYER-EMPLOYEE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to address the House on an issue which will likely affect all Canadians early in 1989. This issue is the negotiations or lack thereof between the federal Government and its 137,000 civil servants. These negotiations could result in the largest strike in Canada's history.

The negotiation process has been stalemated by the Treasury Board and apparently its strategy is to offer little, request concessions, force overtime, and generally bully the workers into submission. There is also the ever present threat of cut-backs.

Morale is non-existent.

Generally these people are being treated as second-class citizens. It actually is no surprise since we have already experienced government's attitude to displaced workers as a result of free trade.

We should all make ourselves, as responsible representatives, aware of the plight of our civil servants, acknowledge it and finally address it before a most serious crisis is upon us.

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCYSUGGESTED LOCATION WITH NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, there has been much discussion lately concerning the location of our National Space Agency. Arguments have been raised in favour of both the Montreal and Ottawa regions.

While both areas have unique advantages, our national Space Agency should be positioned within easy travelling distance from other scientific groups such as the National Research Council and Telesat Canada.

Talk of decentralization and reallocation of the Government's resources robs this region of its expressed mandate to provide a full service community to its many residents. I suggest that the Government look closely at locating the National Space Agency within the National Capital Region.

THE ECONOMYOECD REPORT ON CANADA'S PERFORMANCE

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, this week the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development forecast that Canada's economy, boosted by consumers' confidence and the Free Trade Agreement, should continue to expand at a healthy rate over the next two years.

The OECD noted Canada's manufacturing plants are running at near capacity, while the unemployment rate dropped to a six-year low of 7.8 per cent in the first half of 1988.

Because of continuing strong business investment and profits, the jobless rate is expected to fall to 7.5 per cent by the end of this decade.

With the economy approaching full employment, we must keep a watchful eye on wages, credit expansion, and rising commodity prices, all the factors that could trigger inflation.

Four years in office has proved the ability of a Conservative Government to strengthen Canada's economy. If you think that is good, just watch us in the next four!

NATIONAL DEFENCE

NUCLEAR POWERED SUBMARINES—COST OF PROPOSED ACQUISITION

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, in the previous Parliament the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) announced the Government's intention to purchase 10 to 12 British or French nuclear powered submarines at a announced cost of $5 billion before June, 1987.

The Tory Government has since revised its cost figures up to $8 billion. However, the Business Council on National Issues estimated the cost at $12 billion but revised it downward when it realized it was hurting its Tory friends.

United States naval experts have been saying $10 to $12 billion, but several experts have recently stated that a $16 to $20 billion estimate is a more likely figure.

During the election campaign, those nuclear subs were the quietest operating pieces of equipment you ever saw. The Tories didn't want to talk about their unpopular desire. It will take 27 or 28 years to produce all those submarines, which means that the Minister of National Defence will be happily collecting his old age pension by the time the last one goes into the water.

Oral Questions

The nuclear submarines program may well be announced quietly before this House reconvenes. If it is, it may be a sad day for Canada's Armed Forces because other areas of National Defence will go in need, all because the Minister of National Defence—

THE CONSTITUTION

NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—APPARENT CONTRADICTION BETWEEN PRIME MINISTER AND SECRETARY OF STATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to put my questions to the Secretary of State, but in his absence I will direct them to the Prime Minister.

The law of the land—Bill C-72—provides that the federal Government, and I quote, "is committed to enhancing the vitality and supporting the development of English and French linguistic minority communities, as an integral part of the two official language communities of Canada, and to fostering full recognition and use of English and French in Canadian society."

The Secretary of State, responsible for implementing this law, said recently that invoking the notwithstanding clause is a legal and legitimate step in that it amounts to using a mechanism included in the Canadian Constitution. As for the Prime Minister, he stated yesterday that resorting to the notwithstanding clause is a breach of the Charters of Rights and Freedoms of Canada and Québec. Mr. Speaker, the contradiction is obvious: one says white, the other says black. How can the Prime Minister continue to defend his Secretary of State who has publicly admitted he cannot do his duty, which is to promote and protect official language minority groups wherever they live?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I find it difficult to watch Liberal Members greet this kind of question with applause, for they have always urged all their colleagues in the House to be particularly sensitive concerning linguistic issues in Canada, and always seek to avoid confrontations and create ill feelings over such questions.

Oral Questions

I answered this question yesterday and I invite my friend to read yesterday's Hansard very carefully, the answers are there, clear and unequivocal. If my friend can indeed show me a contradiction I would be pleased to comment further. Yesterday I spoke in the name of the federal Government. I stated a position which all Cabinet Ministers endorse. This position is fully consistent with the objectives of our linguistic policy, be it under Bill C-72 or pursuant to the Meech Lake Accord whose main purpose is to do justice to our linguistic minorities wherever they happen to be in Canada.

REQUEST THAT PRIME MINISTER DISMISS SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I know the position of the Government. I heard the Prime Minister very clearly. My question was directed to the Secretary of State. Does he understand what his role is? Does he play a role of importance in this country? I say yes, but that gentleman does not understand his role, Mr. Prime Minister. He does not comply with the requirements of protecting and promoting minority rights across the land.

In answer to a question I put him on June 28, 1985, as reported in Hansard at page 6365, the Prime Minister stated:

... I can assure you that, both as concerns the English-speaking minority in Québec and the French-speaking minority in Manitoba and elsewhere, the federal Government is there as a friend, as a supporter, and all our resources and potential will be used to promote the cause of our French-speaking or English-speaking minorities wherever they may be.

Will the Prime Minister live up to his promise? Will he fire the Secretary of State and replace him with someone who cares, who understands, and who will stand up for minorities wherever they are in this country?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, for a Government that had Serge Joyal in as Secretary of State it takes a lot of nerve to talk about promoting fairness.

Mr. Gauthier: Show your courage, Mulroney; show your courage.

Mr. Mulroney: Let me just read for my hon. friend what has taken place since the Secretary of State was sworn in.

[Translation]

June 7: Renewal and enhancement of the Secretary of State's official languages programs. The Government will earmark more than $1.4 billion for these official languages programs over the next five years.

June 15: Signature of one general and three subsidiary agreements with Saskatchewan: $63 million over 10 years. On June 15, again with Mr. Bouchard, signature of an agreement between Saskatchewan Francophones and the federal Government involving $17 million over five years.

June 27: Signature of a general agreement with Prince Edward Island concerning services in French: $4.5 million over five years.

Premier Ghiz congratulated the Secretary of State. On August 26: Signature of a draft agreement with Nova Scotia, the Collège de l'Acadie: $5 million over five years.

November 28: Signature of a draft agreement with Prince Edward Island, the Community School Centre in Charlottetown: $5.3 million.

As I speak, the Secretary of State, Mr. Bouchard, is busy negotiating agreements in favour of Québec's Anglophone minority. Such are the valid reactions of the Secretary of State!

RETENTION OF MINISTER IN CABINET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, we have listened to the Prime Minister avoid a question that relates right to the heart of parliamentary democracy, namely, cabinet solidarity. We have attempted to put questions to the Secretary of State but he has performed the greatest disappearing act this week since Houdini. We cannot reach him.

Mr. Della Noce: He was here last night. Where were you?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yesterday, in response to a question I put to him, as reported at page 522 of Hansard the Prime Minister stated:

I was and remain opposed to having a notwithstanding clause in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

Those were the words of the Prime Minister. The Secretary of State is quoted, as early as October 18, 1988, and as recently as December 21, as saying that the notwithstanding clause is "essential for the survival of certain fundamental Québec values".

Oral Questions

That is not a nuance, as the Prime Minister attempted to portray to the House yesterday. That is a fundamental difference of opinion. I ask the Prime Minister how can he retain a Secretary of State responsible for minority language rights in this country, and their protection, with such a fundamental difference right at the heart of his Cabinet?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition refers to the greatest disappearing act since Houdini. It is the greatest disappearing act since Turner!

Some Hon. Members: Cheap shot.

CONVENING OF FIRST MINISTER'S CONFERENCE—ROLE OF SECRETARY OF STATE

The Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister said yesterday that—

Mr. Speaker: As I said yesterday, this is a very important matter for this country. It is appropriate that all Hon. Members extend a level of courtesy to those who ask questions and also to the Minister who gives the answer.

May I repeat that this is a very important matter, not only for now but for the future of our country.

The Right Hon. the Leader of the Official Opposition.

M. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Yesterday and the day before, the Prime Minister stated in this House that he would call a conference of First Ministers to discuss the matter of the override clause.

I ask him, what role will the Secretary of State be playing at that conference? The Prime Minister wants to do away with the override clause. His Secretary of State wants to keep it.

How are they going to sit together at that conference?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the notwithstanding clause was agreed to by my predecessor in 1981-1982 and it has always been my personal view that a notwithstanding clause is incompatible with a Charter of Fundamental Rights. This is a personal view that may not be shared by everyone, but as far as I am concerned it has always been my belief that if a Prime Minister said: On one hand I give you—

[English]

On the one hand I give you inalienable rights, and on the other hand, by the way, I forgot to tell you, I am going to allow the Premier of a given province to override your inalienable rights. That to me indicates that there is something very fundamentally wrong with the Charter of Rights and the granting of an override. That has always been my position in respect of that override clause.

Ms. Copps: So tell Lucien.

Mr. Mulroney: The Premier of Quebec, as I indicated, did not ask for that override clauses. He was excluded from that ultimate result.

The override clause, having been granted by my predecessor, the exercise of that now presents in its result a problem for all Canadians, including the Leader of the Opposition and myself.

• (1430)

I have found that what we inherited, the constitutional result of 1981-82, is gravely flawed. While at Meech Lake compromises were made—and it is true that compromises were made—there has never been a concession ever made of which I am aware as grave as that which was granted in 1981-82, when the provinces were allowed to override our so-called inalienable rights as Canadians.

Oral Questions

Therefore, the belief that I have stated and the responses that I have given are perfectly consistent with that view.

We inherited the override clause. We will try at a Conference of First Ministers in the future—and Premier McKenna recommends that we proceed slowly in this regard. But, at an appropriate time, we will no doubt review the matter of the override clause, because in my judgment it is at variance with the most fundamental of our rights.

How we resolve this issue clearly will demand reason and fair-mindedness, and tolerance—and I believe that resolve it we shall, because Canadian interests can only be protected.

Minority language interests, minority rights cannot be fully developed while that 1981 override clause exists. That is my view, and that is the view of every member of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is evidently not the view of every member of the Prime Minister's Government, because the Secretary of State does not share that view.

An Hon. Member: That's right; that's the point.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I listened with some interest to the Prime Minister's declaration before the House, a declaration he should have directed not at this side of the aisle but at his colleague, the Secretary of State.

If the Prime Minister felt as deeply as he says he felt, he had the opportunity, with his provincial colleagues, at the Meech Lake negotiations to have that clause removed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

VIEW OF SECRETARY OF STATE—RETENTION IN CABINET

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, what we are talking about here is the fact that the Secretary of State is the Minister to whom the Prime Minister has mandated the responsibility for minority language rights in this country. That is his job. That is his mandate.

So, I ask the Prime Minister how it is that he can retain a Secretary of State, in charge of protecting minority language rights in this country, who is beholden to a "notwithstanding" clause which remains in place at the expense of minority language rights?

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Don't be absurd. You are making a fool of yourself.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Yes, I admit to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that I am perhaps a little incensed, and I imagine that he is too, staying at the Cabinet table with a Secretary of State who does not want to protect minority rights.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I venture to say to the Secretary of State for External Affairs that when he held high office, as Prime Minister of this country, he would not have tolerated that view in his Government.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I ask the Prime Minister: How can any minority group in this country feel protected as long as his Secretary of State remains in this Government?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, dealing with the comments of the Leader of the Opposition with regard to Meech Lake, he knows full well—

Some Hon. Members: Answer the question.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition has just taken four or five minutes to ask the question. Perhaps his colleagues would be good enough to give me the opportunity to respond.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I put forward yesterday, and again today, in both languages, the view that, in the opinion of the Chair, this is a subject that requires a dignified series of questions and a dignified series of responses.

The public is watching us. Frankly, I do not think they will have too high an opinion of us unless we show more of an understanding for the solemn obligation that all of us in this place are under in respect of a matter that means a great deal to this country. I ask Hon. Members to co-operate.

The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition knows full well that the Meech Lake initiative was undertaken as an opportunity to bring Quebec back into the Constitution, which all of us agree is a primordial responsibility.

The reference in those negotiations to the “notwithstanding” clause was—and I think this is accurate; we can check Hansard—was made by me. I think I was the only Leader to refer to the fact that this “notwithstanding” heritage of 1981 was deeply unacceptable and would have to be dealt with.

[Translation]

Concerning the comment made by the Leader of the Opposition, I have before me the text of what was said by the Secretary of State, and I quote:

“The use of the “notwithstanding clause” is a legal and legitimate action under the mechanism included in the Constitution of our country.”

I think this is accurate. He also said:

“It is therefore incumbent upon the Government of Quebec to assess the circumstances under which it may use the “notwithstanding clause”.”

I think that is accurate.

Quebec having been the beneficiary of that clause given by the former Liberal Government, and since the clause exists to the benefit of Quebec and the other provinces, it is now difficult to those who granted that clause to blame another level of Government for using it. I explained the position of this Government, the reasons why I was opposed to its use under the circumstances at hand, that is the decision by the Supreme Court, because I thought that a legislative formula could be found that would reconcile the two major principles laid down by the Supreme Court, that is respect of the French language on the one side, and respect of the provisions of the Quebec Charter of Rights and Freedoms on the other hand. This was not only my own preference, but I think the wish and expectation of every Member in this House.

It is however unfortunate in my view that the Leader of the Opposition, having received most specific answers yesterday, would revert today to that kind of accusation. He knows full well that the answer—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Oral Questions

Mr. Mulroney: Anyway, I will conclude on this, Mr. Speaker—the answer I gave on behalf of all Government Members, concerning the protection of minority rights, was commended by the Hon. Member for Mount Royal and the Liberal Member from Notre-Dame-de-Grâce. I would think this reflects the wishes of everyone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

UNITED STATES IMPORT BAN ON CANADIAN ICE CREAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

This week the Minister announced that Canada has asked the GATT to investigate why the U.S. has prohibited imports of Canadian ice cream since 1970.

Given that the Government told Canadians throughout the election campaign that the Free Trade Agreement would provide “assured access” to the U.S. market, why is the Minister going to the GATT on this question of access just days before the deal goes into effect?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, as Hon. Members may be aware, earlier in the year Canada imposed import controls on yoghurt and ice cream, as we have the right to do, in our view.

The United States objected to the import controls we imposed in respect of ice cream and yoghurt and brought a complaint before the GATT with respect to that action. We, therefore, brought our own complaint before the GATT in relation to the fact that, for the last 15 years, the U.S. has not permitted the importation of any ice cream from Canada.

What is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, and it is for that reason that we are proceeding before the GATT.

Had the Hon. Member listened to my speech made earlier today on Bill C-2, he would realize that the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement does not mean that there will not be trade disputes between the U.S. and

Oral Questions

Canada in the future; rather, it simply provides us with a better means of defending ourselves in the future.

• (1440)

Mr. Althouse: Mr. Speaker, I was aware of that for a lot of years prior to this agreement, and it seems odd, after listening to the rhetoric of the Prime Minister and the Minister of Trade, that we still have to go to the GATT. They have been telling us with this agreement we would not have to do that any more. It appears that their lauded dispute settlement mechanism does not have any effect, which is what we on this side have been saying.

CANADIAN AGRICULTURAL POLICY—U.S. POSITION

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, during and since the negotiations the U.S. has continued to press for changes in our agricultural policy with regard to our marketing board system and our position on Article 11 of the GATT, while at the same time restricting our access to its markets through the omnibus Trade Bill and other measures.

What is the Government proposing to do to defend Canadian agricultural interests in the coming year, 1989?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have been debating the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement now for some 14 months. It has been stated repeatedly by us, and it is a fact, that of course GATT is still in existence. Canada and the U.S. both still belong to the GATT. As a matter of fact, I was a host to a GATT conference in Montreal about ten days ago where 96 countries of the GATT gathered together. I invited observers from the NDP and the Liberal Party and they did not attend. Perhaps that explains why there is some confusion here.

The U.S. has argued that our adding ice cream and yogurt to the import control list on January 28 last is inconsistent with our obligations under Article 11 of the GATT. The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement has nothing to do with it. It is not in effect yet. Even if it were, we still have GATT rights, as does the United States.

We are now going to the GATT with respect to the Americans' obtuseness in quibbling about our import controls on ice cream and yogurt when for 15 years they have not allowed us to export ice cream to the U.S. We are not putting up with that kind of treatment from the U.S. or anyone else.

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD—PRICING AND MARKETING SYSTEM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, it has not been clear from the negotiations thus far that Canada is pressing for a strengthened Article 11. Will the Government respond to the Prairie Pools' request for written assurances that the Wheat Board's pricing and marketing system will be protected under GATT or the FTA? Will it strengthen Article 11 so these marketing boards can continue to operate as they have for years and years?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the GATT has been in existence since 1947. I am not quite sure how long the Canadian Wheat Board has been in existence.

Mr. Mayer: Since 1935.

Mr. Crosbie: Since 1935. However, I can assure the hon. gentleman that Article 11 of the GATT is not going to be changed without our consent because there has to be consensus. All 96 countries would have to agree. We have no intention of agreeing to anything that would endanger the Canadian Wheat Board in any way, shape or form.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

USE OF NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Right Hon. Prime Minister. First, I would like to inform him that it is not the Government's position that we are disputing, but rather the contradictory position taken by his Secretary of State.

I would like to ask the Prime Minister to explain how his Government plans to play two fiddles at the same time and for how long. How can he say that he is against the notwithstanding clause, while his Secretary of State says that the clause is vital? Their statements are clearly contradictory; one does not need a dictionary to see that. One is against the clause and the other says it is vital. Might I remind the Prime Minister that, although he may have inherited the notwithstanding clause from his predecessor, it was he who appointed the Secretary of State of Canada and therefore he who must assume full responsibility for that appointment.

I ask the Prime Minister to explain why he has not yet asked the Secretary of State for his resignation since the Secretary of State has not had the courage to hand it in.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the implications raised by this issue will be looked at very closely by the people of Quebec. Quebecers are taking a closer look at the way the Liberal MPs are formulating their questions. The position I have taken on behalf of the federal Government is clear and constitutes an ongoing, coherent policy on the protection of minorities.

The Secretary of State made a few statements on the use of the notwithstanding clause. It is true that the Secretary of State considers the notwithstanding clause to be a key, or vital, means of protection for the Government of Quebec, which is responsible for the protection of the French fact, not only in Canada, but across North America. In my opinion, his position is a legitimate one since the clause was allowed by the previous federal Government.

The position of the Secretary of State is that the clause is vital because Quebec, having been excluded, has not yet been reintegrated. Once the Meech Lake Accord is signed and Quebec integrated in the constitutional fold, Quebec will enjoy the same protection as that enjoyed by other minorities across Canada. In view of this, the Member from Shefford will undoubtedly want to encourage all federal Liberal MPs to actively support all of the provisions contained in the Meech Lake Accord.

POSITION OF SECRETARY OF STATE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I have no problem. When there was a vote in this House on the Meech Lake Agreement, I stood up like the great majority of my colleagues and supported the Agreement. But in fact, Mr. Speaker, I hope the Prime Minister does not want to link the two things, because he himself yesterday said there should be no link between Bill 101 and the Meech Lake Agreement. I would like to ask the Prime Minister whether he changed his views since yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, I am asking the Prime Minister how he can accept that his Secretary of State squarely contradicts him, despite the bonds of friendship, all the so-called cabinet solidarity, and why he lets the Secretary of State try and sing the tune of his pro-PQ wing while he speaks otherwise? What I want to know is this: Is there one truth or is there two truths—one for the Prime Minister and another to suit his Secretary of State?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in 1981—82, after the Constitutional negotiations, Quebec was left out, isolated and humiliated by the then Liberal Government. Since that time, Quebec has been coping with that reality. One of the realities is that in the course of that unfortunate constitutional negotiation, the then Central Government granted provinces the “notwithstanding” clause. Premier Peterson had not asked for it, Premier Bourassa had not asked for it—it was granted by the Government at that point. With Quebec still excluded from the Constitution this Government, with the support of the other Party Leaders, tried to find a formula that would bring Quebec back into the Canadian constitutional fold, that would allow Quebec’s full participation in the Canadian constitutional decision-making process. Once—

An Hon. Member: We supported that.

Mr. Mulroney: Yes, you are right. The Hon. Member supported that. Once it has achieved its goal of cultural security within a united Canada with full participation in the constitutional decisions, there is no doubt, as its Premier indicated, the Province of Quebec will be ready of course to review the “notwithstanding” clause that was granted to it in 1981, because once Canada is unified, with Quebec playing its full role in the Canadian decision-making process, there will be no more need for override provisions such as the clauses that were granted in 1981—1982.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEPAL—DETENTION OF CANADIAN CITIZEN

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. About two months ago Mervin Budd of London, Ontario, was arrested in Nepal for preaching Christianity and has been held in prison since that time. Mervin Budd is a prisoner of conscience. He was not smuggling drugs. He did not kill anyone. All he did was express his belief in Christianity.

● (1450)

In light of the fact that the Government of Nepal has endorsed the Helsinki Accords and the human rights resolution providing for the freedom of religion, will the Minister please assure the House now that everything possible is being done to ensure that this Canadian citizen will be released from prison in Nepal as quickly as possible?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, we are aware of Mr. Budd's detention. He has retained a lawyer. We asked the American consulate to offer him yesterday . . . and we are still waiting for answers.

[English]

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT PROVIDE ASSISTANCE

Mr. Joe Fontana (London East): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for the answer and her assistance thus far.

Reports indicate that he may be in prison for two years before trial. Mr. Budd in a recent letter to his mother states that he is not satisfied with the help he is getting from his own Government. The Minister says that there is someone from the American Embassy perhaps assisting.

I ask the Minister again to reassure Mr. Budd's family and all Canadians that no stone will be left unturned by his own Government to make sure that this innocent man is freed? We need not the Americans to help us with this individual but our own Canadian Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Landry (Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell my hon. colleague that, when we do not have a consul in a given country, the normal procedure is to act through a foreign consul who has offered to help us.

The American consulate was supposed to meet with Mr. Budd yesterday and to report to us afterwards. But, after experiencing communication problems in that remote area, we will probably get more information today.

I would also like to tell my hon. colleague that he can rest assured that the Canadian Government will assume all its responsibilities and give Mr. Budd the help he needs.

[English]AGRICULTURE*DROUGHT ASSISTANCE PROGRAM

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Agriculture. Given the fact that thousands of farm families are still waiting for their drought assistance cheques which he promised them so that they could pay the bills piling up on their kitchen tables, and given the fact that not a dollar of the $850 million promised to grain farmers by the Minister of Agriculture appears in the Supplementary Estimates for 1988-89, could the Minister please tell the House whether he is still haggling with his provincial counterparts over this money? Or is he finally able to tell us when farmers and their bankers will be getting this money?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we announced and signalled to the agricultural community as soon as we possibly could, the extent of the magnitude of the drought program and the need to have it put in place as quickly as possible so that farmers could arrange their financial affairs in an appropriate fashion.

The forms are close to being ready for being sent out to the producers. We hope that they will be out in the next week or 10 days. Everything is proceeding as it should, consistent with the program that was announced.

TIMING OF PAYMENTS

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, since obviously the Minister of Agriculture does not have much more idea today about when this money will be coming out than he did 10 days ago, I would like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

In light of the genesis of this program which was announced ten days before the election, and which was reconfirmed in the House two days before the Assiniboia, Saskatchewan, by-election, could the Prime Minister tell us when he is planning to call the Beaver River by-election so that farmers and, indeed the Prime Minister and the Minister of Agriculture, will know when this money is coming?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I must say I find the Hon. Member's representations somewhat inconsistent. As I recall, New Democratic candidates all over the country during the election campaign were calling for an announcement for drought. We gave them the announcement for drought, and now they are complaining about it.

As I said in a reply earlier to another member of the New Democratic Party, I regret they are disappointed that we made the announcement and that we are helping farmers. I really regret that very much.

MUNICIPAL AFFAIRS

DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER'S SCHEDULED MEETING WITH FEDERATION OF MUNICIPALITIES

Mr. Alan Redway (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister as well. It relates to the fact that the Deputy Prime Minister is going to be meeting next month with representatives of the Canadian Federation of Municipalities to discuss the funding of municipal infrastructure.

I would like to ask the Deputy Prime Minister if he would advise the House whether this meeting is an indication that there has been a change in policy on the part of the Government, whether the Government is now prepared to fund municipal roads and sewers? Or is this meeting merely a public relations exercise?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, no, there has been no change in government policy on this matter. I and the Minister of Finance and other Ministers stated our position very clearly, that believed that this was a provincial and a municipal responsibility, and we could not provide the kind of funding of the magnitude that the Liberal Party could fund. That was made consistent right across the country.

I indicated to the President of the Federation of Canadian Municipalities that I was prepared to meet with him, but at no time was there ever any commitment or suggestion of a commitment for funding. That remains the position of the Government.

HOUSING

ONTARIO—EXTENT OF FEDERAL COMMITMENT

Mrs. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, I wish to return to the matter of federal support for housing in Ontario. My question is for the Minister responsible for housing.

On Tuesday the Minister said, and I quote from Hansard:

Let me say at the outset that my predecessor did not make a commitment to add an additional 7,000 subsidized housing units. That statement is factually incorrect.

I have in my hand a copy of the official news release of January 28, 1988, by the former Minister responsible, the Hon. Stewart McInnes, and the Housing Minister of Ontario, Chaviva Hosek, and I quote from it: "121 non-profit housing groups in 79 Ontario municipalities have received approval to develop 6,990 residential units in 1988 under the federal-provincial non-profit housing program".

Will the Minister responsible for housing admit that his statement on Tuesday was wrong? Will he make the commitment today to provide the funds for the number of housing units promised to the Ontario Government and the people of Ontario?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, no, I will not change my statement from Tuesday. In 1986 this Government in co-operation with the provinces decided how they would handle the funding of the non-profit housing situation. At that time there were certain moneys allocated and dollars allocated to the social program aimed at those most in need. That was a decision of the Government at that time.

I notice that it is the provincial Government that makes the commitments. It makes the commitments based on the moneys available. The provincial Government made the commitments, used up all the money, and is now back asking for more money. It knew exactly what the amount of money was, as indicated by a letter from the Deputy Minister of Housing from the Ontario Government in January. If the Minister of Housing in Ontario made those commitments, she should meet them.

FEDERAL COMMITMENT

Ms. Beryl Gaffney (Nepean): Mr. Speaker, that is simply not good enough.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Gaffney: The news release that is right here was a joint news release by both the Minister of Housing and Ms. Hosek. Why will the Minister and the Government of Canada not keep its promise? Surely the Government has a responsibility to keep its word. It is not doing it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, that is not factually correct.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: It is your own news release.

Mr. McDermid: This Government committed dollars to the social housing program across this country, and every single dollar has been spent.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for LaSalle—Emard, and I ask a single question given the time.

Mr. Masse: The new chief.

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): I would not join your Party, let alone become your Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

● (1500)

Mr. Boyer: We do not want you and we do not need you.

Mr. Speaker: Given the constraints of time, I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question directly.

FREE TRADE

DEFINITION OF SUBSIDY

M. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of International Trade.

Yesterday, in answer to a question by the Hon. Member for South Western Nova on the possibility of obtaining a definition of what is a subsidy in the context of free trade, the Minister said, and I quote:

[English]

“The omens are not good about agreement... Perhaps over the next five to seven years we will be able to”.

[Translation]

My question is as follows: Does the Government agree to terminate the agreement if a definition acceptable to Canada is not agreed to within seven years?

[English]

My second question, in case the Minister has a little difficulty understanding me—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. gentleman for his election to the House. I can advise him that he is neither wanted in our Party nor would he be needed as Leader, as we have a Leader for the rest of the century.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. gentleman may find a vacancy at the top of his own Party. It has been vacant now for four years.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, in response to the main body of the Hon. Member's question, we do not know whether the negotiations to find common definition of trade distorting subsidy will be successful or not. In the history of the world there has never been a successful negotiation to that end, but we will give it our best effort.

I am delighted to see that the Hon. Member got his Party's chief financial officer to work on his leadership campaign. He will need him.

Mr. Speaker: I know that, given the fact that one issue took up a great deal of time, Hon. Members will co-operate in letting the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Burnaby have her first question in this session.

SOCIAL SECURITYFAMILY ALLOWANCES

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. The Minister is aware that there are more than one million Canadian children living in poverty. He is responding to their desperate need with a miserly 36-cent increase in family allowances this January. In fact, that is a cut in the real value of family allowances.

During the election my Party called for a 20 per cent increase in family allowances and the refundable child tax credit. Will the Government consider making that increase as a real first step in dealing with the desperate problem of child poverty?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I answered a similar question earlier in this session. Let me point out two things to the Hon. Member. The reduction of poverty, particularly as it affects Canadian children over the last four years, is obviously what the Government and I think Canadians generally are pleased with. We would like to see more, but that statistic is something I want to point out to the Member.

Second, the other day I gave figures on the increases for Canadian families, particularly those low income groups, relating to the family allowance and the child tax credit. I was incorrect in some of those figures because they were, in fact, higher than the ones I gave to the House. The total benefits that the Hon. Member refers to, from 1986, with actual full indexation, was an increase of $370.32.

While it was not in the legislation, there was a substantial increase in the child tax credit included in the terms of the budgetary provisions of the Minister of Finance. I think every social policy agency argues that the child tax credit is the way to go. We have expanded that dramatically.

The Hon. Member should look at that side of the ledger. She will find a substantial increase well beyond any inflationary figure.

Mr. Speaker: I regret to advise the Hon. Member that, given the time, I will do everything I can to get her second question in, perhaps tomorrow. She might discuss this with her Whip.

Business of the House

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. May I ask unanimous consent of the House to table a report?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATION

TABLING OF REPORT OF CANADIAN GROUP OF INTERPARLIAMENTARY UNION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House in both official languages the report of the Canadian Group of the Interparliamentary Union, report of the official parliamentary delegation which represented Canada at the Interparliamentary Conference in Sofia, Bulgaria, September 19 to September 24.

I want to add that the Canadian group is proud of the notable accomplishments by our delegation led by Senator Nathan Nurgitz. Canada's proposal to amend the rules to ensure that the Union's executive committee always includes at least two women parliamentarians was adopted unanimously.

Second, Senator Joan Neiman was elected to the union's committee which monitors and investigates violations of human rights of parliamentarians throughout the world. The essential work of this committee, which will now have direct Canadian input, deserves the support of all parliamentarians.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to ask the Deputy Government House Leader the usual question which will enable him to give us a statement of government business for the next period of days.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

House that for the balance of the day the House will continue consideration of third reading of Bill C-2, the legislation to enact to Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States.

The Opposition has quite properly stated its intention to prolong debate at third reading. Therefore, I give notice that at the next sitting of the House, immediately before the Order of the Day is called for resuming debate on the motion standing in the name of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) for third reading of Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, and on any amendments proposed thereto, I will move that the debate shall not be further adjourned.

Tomorrow we will proceed with the motion of closure and complete debate at third reading of Bill C-2, probably at one o'clock a.m. Saturday, December 24.

During Motions under Routine Proceedings tomorrow, after discussion with my colleagues opposite, we will propose a motion without debate, the effect of which will be to adjourn the House to the call of the Chair for the purpose of receiving a Message from the Senate respecting the giving of Royal Assent to the said Bill, and that immediately following Royal Assent on the said Bill a motion to rescind the Order of the House of December 16, 1988, respecting sitting hours shall be deemed to have been moved by a Minister of the Crown, and the Speaker shall forthwith deem such motion adopted, in keeping with the undertaking we gave during debate, and shall adjourn the House for a reasonable time.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): When the House rose at one o'clock, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy) had the floor.

• (1510)

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Thank you, Madam Speaker. The Government has just brought in another motion of closure. The Deputy House Leader in his former life must have been a doorman in a steam bath. He is using closure so often, he does nothing but close the doors and not open them.

One of the initial casualties of this agreement has been the rights and obligations of this Government to act as the trustee and guardian of parliamentary procedures. This has been thrown to tatters and shovelled into the dustbin of history. Other precedents have been established in the last week and a half that will substantially distort future proceedings of this House for many generations to come. We regret that the haste and indecency with which the Government has proceeded upon this legislation has forced it to use these measures.

I keep coming back to the question that many Canadians have, "What was the point of these measures? What was the motivation that prompted this intense, unfeeling and insensitive distortion of the parliamentary system?" We were told it was because the Opposition would stop it all. There was a paranoia on the other side that there would be a wholesale onslaught from the trenches. The Government never gave us a chance to present the amendments we wanted to present so that it could see there was nothing in those amendments that was designed to contradict the agreement but simply to improve it. We recognize that there is a majority. We are not subject to any illusion, but we felt there were deep concerns on the part of many Canadians that had to be answered. We constructed amendments in that light. If the Government had given us a chance, followed the normal procedure and opened up report stage so we could have had the opportunity to table those amendments, it would have seen that the whole intent and purpose was not to obstruct but to improve.

I want to indicate to the House, the Government and Canadians what they are missing. This could have been a much improved piece of legislation without doing any damage to its intent.

Where do we begin? We begin with an amendment that called for the establishment of a special committee of the House that would have the responsibility of examining the implementation of the Bill. It would provide a forum for Canadians to come forward and make their concerns heard. It would lay before the House an annual report as to the effectiveness of that implementation. Is there anything subversive in that? Is there anything designed to place dynamite under Parliament by asking that there be a parliamentary committee established to monitor and watch over what is taking place? We had evidence today of why it was necessary. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said he was not sure that the negotiations on subsidies would be successful. Surely we have a right to understand why, to have officials come forward to set out their concerns and parameters. The only response we heard back was that they could send it to one of the standing committees.

Let me pass on my experience in those standing committees with a government majority. Last summer the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade was seized with the examination of Bill C-130. When we put forward a motion to ask that the committee be allowed to travel throughout Canada in order to give Canadians the opportunity to make their case, it was voted down by that majority. That is what this Government wants us to trust, a majority on the committee that knows no restraint and simply follows the bludgeoning hammer designed to run legislation through.

That is why we felt it was essential that there be a committee with a stated mandate as part of the legislation. That is not so unusual. We have done it with the intelligence security committee where we had a mandate. We have always provided an assurance that on something as important as this there would be an opportunity to be heard. That was accompanied by another amendment that there be a form of sunset clause, that after three years this Parliament be seized with the full scope of the agreement and be allowed to judge its impact, ramifications, and consequences for Canadians.

We heard the Minister for International Trade this morning wax incomprehensibly. He tried during his presentation to indicate that there were going to be benefits. That is a judgment call. He ended his comments by saying that the committee should be allowed to judge. Let us take that at face value. If they are going to be allowed to judge, then they need to have facts upon which to make a judgment. The only way they can get facts is if Parliament has an Opportunity to examine those issues and determine whether the agreement is working the way the Government said it would.

There is nothing in this amendment that in any way subverts the legislation. It makes it better. It gives Canadians an opportunity to be heard. It ensures that Parliament will be the ultimate judge as to whether this agreement is working.

I say to the Conservative Members of Parliament, to the back-benchers, do you see something highly treasonable in that particular amendment? Is it so bad that the Government had to bring in closure to prevent us from bringing it to the floor of the House? Is there something so iniquitous about Parliament looking at this important agreement that would motivate the Government to use Draconian measures to prevent any debate whatsoever? Any fair-minded person would have to say no.

Here are other examples of amendments that are important to submit. There is an amendment which said that under Clause 4, for greater certainty, nothing in this Act or agreement would preclude the continuation of existing or the establishment of new adjustment programs to help firms and workers adjust to the changing results from the implementation of the agreement. Horrors! Imagine the nerve of the opposition putting forward an amendment that Canadians have the right to choose whether they will help workers or communities that are dislocated by this agreement? Is that not an awful thing to do? Is it not terrible that this will not see the light of day on the parliamentary table because it was so contrary to the spirit of the agreement?

There is awfully good evidence as to why it is necessary. We have seen it in front of us today. Colleagues of mine have brought to the Speaker's attention a series of dislocations already taking place. My friend from High Park has already talked about a factory in his riding. My friend from Winnipeg North Centre has had Canada Packers close down in his riding. We have the horrible example given by the Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) and the close of the Gillette plant. Those are examples. They are prima facie evidence.

Of more concern is the underlying fallacy in the argument of the Government that this agreement will create so many jobs that we will have no need for adjustment programs. That has been the defence they have been using. Let me counter that with a couple of specific points. First, the Macdonald Royal Commission which, in a sense, fathered or mothered this agreement, whichever term one would like to employ, said that essential to any trade agreement with the United States would be a massive undertaking of adjustment programs. Do you know why it said that? It is because in testimony before the Macdonald Royal Commission, one Simon Reisman, the mouth that walks, had suggested clearly that if we were to sign an agreement with the United States, we would need to have a transition adjustment insurance program for workers.

• (1520)

I have heard Simon Reisman's name used in sacred terms by members of the Government, St. Simon himself, the author of this agreement, the man who will win the humanitarian of the year award from the B'nai B'rith for his felicitous, kind words during the election campaign, that great public servant, of course, not interfering in a partisan way in the election campaign. St. Simon himself has said that one of the essential ingredients of any trade agreement is the inclusion of an adjustment program, but the Government did not see fit to include it. Why would it have even the slightest hesitation in accepting an amendment of this kind? The Americans presumably would not be upset, but maybe they would.

Then I take you to the testimony of Gordon Richard, the deputy trade negotiator, who when he appeared before the committee last summer, was faced with a question on the very same amendment. He explained to the committee that one of the reasons the amendment could not be accepted is that under the agreement, future adjustment programs would be vulnerable to counterattack by the United States. We would be subject to countervail by any industry or group that received a new adjustment program.

Now we understand why the Government does not want amendments dealing with adjustment. It did not want to face the truth and reality which is, in the words of its own official, that the agreement itself would preclude the establishment of new adjustment programs. I say in all honesty, it is cruel not to have an amendment like this in the Bill because workers will be affected, people will be put out of jobs and communities will be closing down.

That Mickey Mouse program that the Minister of Employment calls the Canadian Jobs Strategy has been criticized by the House of Commons committee itself. The Tory members of the committee said it is not working. Its budget has been cut back by 30 per cent or $500 million. It is a total failure in providing decent training for Canadians from one coast to the other. Its unemployment insurance program has new severance rules which prevent older workers from getting decent training. It is not a proper support for those workers and it is cruel and inhumane to throw workers on the scrap heap simply because this Government is afraid of what the United States might do to it under this agreement.

Similarly, we moved other amendments, and we would have moved others given the opportunity. Have you seen anything so far that upsets the apple cart, Madam Speaker? Hardly. We wanted to put forward another amendment which said that for greater certainty, nothing in the Act or agreement shall be so interpreted as to affect the continuation of existing or the establishment of new Canadian social programs including health care systems, unemployment insurance, child care, pensions minimum wage, labour law, maternity benefits and so forth. Is there something wrong with saying that in the Bill, greater certainty should be established to ensure that this agreement would not lead to the suppression of those programs? We have heard statement after statement made by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) indicating that no such programs will be affected, so what is wrong with entrenching in the legislation his own words? What is the Government afraid of? Why would it not want to have the Prime Minister's own words in the legislation itself?

Mr. Keyes: Maybe the U.S. does not want it?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I am receiving a great deal of assistance from my colleagues. They are a wonderful source of inspiration.

If we start looking at the evidence, we begin to know why. We already know that there have been trade actions which take direct target at many of our social programs. To wit, the United States trade law passed last August, the omnibus Trade Bill, includes within it a new definition of subsidy, something the Minister for International Trade never talked about, which said that any Canadian industry that receives a grant that is specifically targeted or can be construed to be a wage subsidy would be countervailable. That would include things like guaranteed annual incomes, even maternity benefits and assistance to the working poor. Those are the kinds of programs that any decent, humane Government may want to consider.

In order to give some protection for those programs from action by the United States, there should be something in the legislation to say this was the clear meaning of the Government of Canada. Once again, we received from the Government nothing but a deaf ear. I suggest that that makes all those brave promises and commitments made by the Prime Minister during the election campaign ring hollow. That shows just how unwilling he and Members of his front bench are in living up to their word. This has not been a strong point of the Prime Minister. No one will ever accuse him of maintaining sacred trusts.

I believe that we have in front of us now in the commitment the Prime Minister gave during the election campaign the same kind of double dealing, the same lack of honesty that we received during the last election campaign when he said that he would not touch social programs. We have the same commitment and unwillingness to give a guarantee.

I could spend more time on that issue, but there are many of my colleagues more qualified than I to speak to this specific point. Let me go on to another form of amendment which I think is very important, an amendment which says that notwithstanding Article 103 of the agreement, the federal Government shall not compel municipal or provincial Governments to the use of override legislation to comply with any provisions of the agreement with respect to health care facilities, the management services enumerated under industrial classifications Nos. 861, 862, et cetera.

Why would that amendment be important? There are several reasons. First, the Province of Ontario has already moved legislation, Bill 147, to retain discretionary powers in this field, to ensure that under its constitutional right to decide on the form and nature and character of its health services, it could not be interfered with by anything under the agreement, but as we know, Section 103 is an override clause in the legislation giving the Government the right to come to Parliament and say that anything that contradicts the agreement, even in provincial jurisdiction, can be overridden. That effects a fundamental change in constitutional jurisdiction and the division of power without even having had a constitutional conference.

Once again, all we asked was for the Government to live up to its word and to ensure that there would be an amendment that would give clarity to the declaration of the Government that this particular part of the Bill dealing with health management services would not prevent provincial Governments from protecting the sanctity and integrity of their own health management programs. This amendment as well was not allowed to be tabled in Parliament. I suggest that once again, we have weakened the defence of Canadian provinces and Canadians in general from that kind of incursion.

I go on to suggest as well that a further amendment in the area of services is worth considering: Notwithstanding Article 1405 of the agreement, the inclusion of additional health, education or social services to the list of covered services or the increased access provided under the terms of the agreement is subject to ratification by Parliament. Under Article 1405, Canada is committed to negotiating new services to be included under the agreement.

I am not sure how many Canadians were aware that in this new round of negotiations we are entering into, there will be a whole new list including educational services and transportation services. Anything is on the table to be included. That is important because there is a real potential for putting not only our health and social services in jeopardy but also our educational system. Under this agreement the Government could negotiate to include a whole range of educational services. That is a big part of the service industry. We know that education is absolutely crucial to the question of the Canadian identity, Canadian textbooks, software, the right to establish who teaches our children, who provides adult education and who provides those kinds of services.

Mrs. McDougall: Free.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), who should know these things, is all of a sudden finding out. On goes the lightbulb in the Minister's head. A Minister who is in the area of providing support for adult education should be aware of this program. I would suggest that if she is now perturbed by the knowledge that has just dawned upon her perhaps she should go back to her colleagues and say, "Maybe its time we brought in an amendment. Let us go back to committee and amend it to make it correct".

There is another example of why amendments are crucial. I want to draw to the attention of the House a series of amendments. I will not take the time to read them all but I point out that these are amendments to provide for the protection of farm marketing boards. We would ensure that all processed agricultural products containing the sum of not less than 10 per cent of Canadian farm products would be covered by the Import Control List. We would set up an inquiry board to look into the whole impact of this agreement in the horticultural, agricultural food processing industry. We would reserve the right to have import restrictions on chickens, eggs, all the feathered products. We would ensure that nothing in this agreement would alter in any way the rights, the duties and the powers of the Canadian Wheat Board. We would apply certificates to the import question.

There is a whole series of amendments relating to agriculture. How was that important, Madam Speaker? First, agriculture was never supposed to have been on the table. Again the Macdonald Royal Commission said it should not be. Once again, the Macdonald Royal Commission, the bible of the trade agreement, clearly said that agriculture should be exempted because agriculture was not just a commercial enterprise. It was so mixed up in the social fabric of this country, in the stability of our rural economy, in the sense of the family farm and the kind of small town community life that to apply pure commercial criteria to it would be a serious mistake. But the Government did not listen to that. It went ahead and did it.

Now the Government has put in jeopardy a whole range of issues. If you think I am kidding, Madam Speaker, you only have to go back to the words of the Minister for International Trade today or to the GATT meetings in Montreal last week. What did he say? He said that the Western Grain Transportation Agreement, perhaps the most important subsidy to western Canadian farmers, is now on the negotiating table. He is prepared to wipe it out. He is prepared to negotiate it away. He does not care. That is part of the commercial judgment.

He does not understand, even though he is a former Minister of Transport, how essential that is to the continuation of a certain way of life in western Canada, to say nothing of our grain economy. Because the Government has committed itself in an agreement very explicitly to follow without hesitation the line of thinking and the ideology of the United States in this area, it has committed itself to wholesale attack on a large number of programs that provide real stability in our agricultural sector.

Members opposite may protest that, but I say to them, "don't protest. Accept the amendments". That is all they have to do. They can show good faith. Accept these amendments and we know that the Government will be able to live up to its word. We will not argue. All the Government has to say is, "Okay, those amendments are once again reflective of commitments that were made during the campaign". Is it not interesting that what was said up to November 21 has been quickly forgotten in late December? All those fine protestations seemed to have vanished like the winter wind. We know the reason. There is an agenda for a wholesale attack on these programs. One by one they will be picked off; first the cherry plum pickers. Off they go, one by one.

I go back to the point I made earlier. Where can Canadians find out? Who will they be able to talk to about these secret negotiations that are going on, negotiations on services, on subsidies and on technical standards? These are all things that my friend the Hon. Member for Kent (Mr. Crawford) spoke to last night in a very effective way. Because this Parliament has not been given any right to consider it, once again we are being denied those privileges.

I have a few more examples, Madam Speaker. One, I think, is absolutely crucial, and that is the role of the Canadian International Trade Tribunal. That will become a very important agency in this Government. It will be responsible for undertaking all the various action disputes between ourselves and the United States. One of the real fantasies perpetrated during the campaign was the concept of secure access. I read all those documents from the Business Alliance and from the Canadian multivariate conglomerate for the preservation of corporate culture in Canada, whatever it was that was spending all that money on newspaper ads. What was the headline? "John Turner is lying, the Liberals are lying. This is a great agreement because it gives security of access to Canadians".

An Hon. Member: The Minister said the opposite.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Now who is lying? We had the Minister in the House this morning admit that there is no security of access. In fact, U.S. trade law will still apply. U.S. trade organizations will still have the right to countervail, to take action. All we have is a puny, minor, miniscule little review agency which is simply going to do the job that is already being done by the International Court of Trade.

In return for that Rube Goldberg machine that was introduced by this Government as part of the agreement, what did we give up? Access to the GATT to challenge U.S. trade law. We gave up perhaps the most important protection for Canadians, one that we would not simply have the right to challenge whether the law was fairly applied. We have given up the right to challenge U.S. trade law itself. Is that what this Government calls secure access? Let me give some mechanics. Under this review mechanism the U.S. industry will have enhanced powers to attack Canadian industry. The omnibus Trade Bill gives the Americans the right to petition the U.S. Government. The U.S. Government will do all the research for them. It does not cost them a cent. Harassment will have a field day. Why bother having to compete with Canadians when all you have to do is go to your friendly U.S. trade commission and say, "We want to take a trade action against a Canadian exporter" and the commission will do all the work for them, pay for all the research, the high-priced lawyers, run it through the commission, all expense-free?

Mrs. Finestone: And Canadians have to pay themselves.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): That is exactly the point. We do not have a similar kind of role. That is why our amendments give the right of Canadian industry to petition the International Trade Tribunal to get the same kind of assistance to examine U.S. imports into Canada to determine whether they are being unfairly subsidized. At least we should have equal power, equal status and equal rights to those of American industries. If the Americans are going to harass us, we should have the same right to harass them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Center): This Government, as it has shown in the past four years, negotiates on its knees. It is not prepared to give Canadians the same right or grant them the same kind of assurances that they are prepared to let their American counterparts give. We have seen it so often in so many ways. My colleague from Mount Royal in the field of communications can tell you just how unfair a balance that is.

What do we recommend, Madam Speaker? One of our amendments state that the International Trade Tribunal be given that right. Is there something horribly treasonous about Canadian business people having the same right as their American counterparts to go before their own trade tribunal to examine whether the U.S. is unfairly subsidizing American products and then asking for the Canadian Government to help them out?

I would plead guilty in a court of law if I really thought that was an act of criminality. All I say is that it demonstrates why we as Liberals have a much better understanding of how the trade process works. We are not motivated simply by this subservient, servile kind of attitude that if the American Congress says it is right we simply say, "Yes, Sir, Mr. President".

There was a further amendment of direct concern to my colleague from the Thunder Bay area. On two occasions this week that new Member has brought to the attention of the House and of the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) the fact that the softwood lumber tax is now having a devastating effect upon the entire industry in northern Ontario, and that could be expanded to right across the country. That is a 15 per cent tax.

I will not tire the House with memories of Christmas past, but I do recall with some nostalgia the former Minister for International Trade who, during the election campaign, was a well paid commentator for the CBC. During the Christmas season two years ago, when faced with an American challenge on our softwood lumber products, rather than going to GATT and challenging it to prove that its law was accurate, went down to Washington to negotiate. We were hanging on every word out of Washington over the Christmas season to see what type of miracle would come forward on Christmas Eve. Unfortunately, when the cameras beamed in on Washington, the Minister was not there. She was in Hawaii on the beach negotiating in long-distance terms. The end result was clear to see. We got one of the most curious, strange and unorthodox solutions in the history of Canadian trade. The Minister emerged from a beach hut to announce a major victory for Canada. She said: "Ladies and gentlemen, we have put a 15 per cent tax on ourselves". Canadians rose up with wild hurrahs and said: "What a brilliant move by that Minister of Trade".

At that time the price of the Canadian dollar in relation to the American dollar was 75 cents. It is now 84 cents. Not only have we added a 15 per cent tax, but an extra $700 or $800 million of additional cost in lost markets to the softwood lumber industry. As a result, they are closing down.

The Minister of Trade sees no evil, hears no evil, and believes no evil. He walks around like a three-headed monkey saying: "I do not know what is going on. Why should I care?" All we suggest in our simple amendment is that Article 2009 in the agreement shall be deemed to be of no force or effect in Canada. That would simply eliminate the grandfathering of the softwood lumber tax. That means that we would have an opportunity to renegotiate or, even more importantly, challenge the United States in front of the GATT. We know full well that the trade law upon which that decision was based would be struck down by the GATT. It is an unfair trade law, and simply because the United States asserts it to be fair in its own jurisdiction is no reason why we must accept it. This grandfathering prevents us from doing it. It prevents Canadian softwood lumber producers from getting fair and proper appeal to an iniquitous tax which is forcing people out of work.

I say to Members of the House, why should we not at least move an amendment to take this out of the agreement, in order that we can put our own softwood lumber producers back in the ball game? Give them a chance, and at least get back at the negotiating table, and if that does not work, at least go back to the GATT and challenge it there. This closes the door forever and ever.

All economists predict that the exchange rate will continue to rise once the agreement goes into place because there will be pressure for harmonization. Mr. Cohen, the former Deputy Minister of Finance, stated after the election—he did not quite get to say it during the election—of course we will be harmonizing exchange rates, tax rates, and social programs. The end result will be that the type of desperation faced by softwood lumber producers in northern Ontario will be shared by British Columbia, the Maritimes, Quebec, and all other places where that most important industry is in the country.

We are only a few hours away from a Christmas season where perhaps even Tory hearts are somewhat sensitized. The Member for Thunder Bay—Nipigon (Mr. Comuzzi) points out that close to 420 workers will be affected by the Great West Forest Products lay-off on Christmas Eve, and there will be more to come.

Here we have an accommodation: no new adjustment programs, grandfathering of the softwood lumber clause in the agreement, and locking in a new negotiation on subsidy. Talk about putting handcuffs on the Canadian industry. The Government states that it wants Canadian industry to go forward and compete, to thrive, and to show its entrepreneurship. It is the Government that is putting a padlock on its fortunes. It is the Government that is putting it into a box. It is the Government that has bound the softwood lumber industry to a form of perpetual damnation in the tax system.

Those are only a small selection of amendments that we are dealing with. My friend, the Hon. Member for Davenport (Mr. Caccia), and others, will deal with the question of how it affects the environment. My friend, the Hon. Member for Algoma (Mr. Foster), will be dealing with the question of agriculture. My friend, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), will be dealing with questions of culture and communications.

Under the agreement textiles were to be a great breakthrough. I can remember meeting with the Canadian apparel manufacturing institute and others here who stated that the Government had told them if they signed the agreement that it will be open sesame, and there will be all these new markets. Once again the Government talks about having confidence in your country, go forward and multiply, be smart, and be competitive. What did the Government do in the agreement? It signed an agreement which put quotas on the amount of fabric that the apparel manufacturers could use from Third World countries, even though it knew that one of the underlying basic foundations of the apparel industry is its ability to bring in fabrics from Third World countries, process and manufacture them here in Canada to put a strong fashion imprint on them, and then be able to sell them abroad.

The Government of free enterprise and entrepreneurship has said it will not let the industry buy those fabrics, and that it will put a quota on them. If the apparel industry goes ahead and attempts to avoid any form of duty remission, the American Government will have the right to apply a penalty against our manufacturers. That is written into the agreement.

Mr. Flis: That is their concept of free trade.

Mr. Foster: They took the shirt off our back.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Then the Government states that if we go before the International Trade Tribunal maybe we will try to get a little lowering of that capping. Nothing has been heard since.

Of course, in the agreement it is open season for American garment manufacturers to come into Canada on their own products and do what they want. We will end up with the interesting and illogical position where Canadian apparel manufacturers will have to use American textiles, bring them into Canada and try to sell them back to the United States. That is a wonderful case of Tory economics.

The rhetoric is denied by the facts. The rhetoric and the reality do not match. The Government can use all the language that it borrows from Mrs. Thatcher and Ronald Reagan, but when it gets down to it in the agreement itself the Government has put a series of strait-jacket on Canadian industry and enterprise. That is why we wanted to move amendments to try to clarify and at least give the Canadian textile and garment people a fair chance.

Some Hon. Members: A level playing field.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): A level playing field is the correct term, and I thank my colleagues for that suggestion.

Before I leave, Madam Speaker, I can see that you are deeply engrossed in the examination of the Bill, I wish to recall for the newer Members of the House that we had an interesting exchange, over approximately two years, about whether culture was on or off the negotiating table. We were given assurances, including assurances by way of sworn testimony, that that would never even be considered; that it would never be accepted. But the Government then played a little sleight of hand. They said: No, we didn't negotiate culture, but we did negotiate cultural industries.

• (1550)

By changing the terminology, they make it right.

And we have, therefore, a whole series of impositions—impositions that will have a direct impact upon our printing industry, among others. We have eliminated the tax exemptions which prevail for that industry, with the result that a large amount of job printing will now take place in the U.S. The same applies to advertising, to transmission rights, and so forth.

There is a whole host of very important ingredients that are essential to the maintenance of the Canadian communications industry that have been bargained away.

Also threatened is the manufacture and production of records and discs.

And then we have Clause 2005, a clause which gives the U.S. the right to countervail and counteract any future initiatives in this area.

As we have come to learn, these are not simply dead letters in the agreement. They already have an active life. We know now that government Departments are already applying standards and judgments on various programs based upon what is in the Free Trade Agreement.

The Western Diversification Office is already screening all applications for regional development grants based upon what it considers the Americans will or will not be able to countervail under the wording of the Free Trade Agreement. And you can bet that the Department of Communications is doing the same thing in any planning that it is involved in. In terms of future cultural initiatives in this country, any planning will now have to be monitored and considered in accordance with the parameters set by the FTA.

This agreement sets up Jack Valenti as the new tsar of the Canadian cultural industry. It is no longer a question of simply saying "Yes, Mr. President". After the "Yes, Mr. President", we will be told: "Go to Hollywood and check with Jack." That is going to be the rule of thumb from now on for our Department of Communications.

It is not simply the legalese that is important; what is absolutely critical is the result.

In the amendments that we presented, we endeavoured to provide greater certainty, such that when and if Jack Valenti and his cohorts and colleagues and the other cadre of media moguls in the U.S. decide that they want to challenge a new Canadian initiative—for example, an initiative in respect of video tapes or books—we would at least have words in the legislation implementing the agreement that could be taken before the trade commission or the review panel to support our view of the law. In that way we could present our interpretation to the adjudicators in black and white.

If we had that type of wording in the legislation, we might have a better defence when we appear before the adjudicators; we might have greater ability to offset the countervail initiatives. But this Government refuses to even consider such an amendment.

For the life of me, I do not understand why it is this Government is prepared to give up so easily the defence of our own interests. It would be an easy matter to include in the legislation the words "for greater certainty". That is not the type of amendment that would do damage to the essentials of the agreement. And if down the road there is a challenge to a Canadian initiative in this area, we would at least have something written in the legislation reflecting the intent of the Parliament of Canada, reflecting the interpretation of the Parliament of Canada.

For the life of me, I cannot understand why this type of an amendment was not given honest and open consideration. At the very least, we should have had the opportunity of hearing the arguments from the government side as to why such an amendment should not be made.

Mrs. Finestone: It is because of Clause 2011.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) is quite right. Under Clause 2011 we are prevented from using many of those forms.

It is evident to me that what this Government said during the election campaign is not reflected in this legislation. There is a large leap between the commitments and guarantees that were offered to Canadians and what this Government is prepared to enshrine in the Statutes of Canada to give life, meaning and force to those commitments.

This Government has been entirely negligent in refusing this Parliament the opportunity to consider amendments which could at least give some modicum of reference to the commitments the Prime Minister so gallantly made during the election campaign.

The Prime Minister was scornful in his castigation of the church groups, the women's groups, and the Opposition generally, saying that those in opposition to the Free Trade Agreement did not know what they were talking about.

The refusal by this Government to accept this type of amendment will mean that those concerns will remain. Those groups will take no assurance from Bill C-2 in respect of the deep anxiety they feel in terms of what the Free Trade Agreement means for their future. The legislation before us will in no way satisfy their concerns.

[Translation]

One must understand that the Free Trade Agreement will have a negative impact on the cultural, farm, textile, agricultural and food sectors throughout Canada and on all organizations that made representations to the Committee and to Parliament during the last Session of Parliament. The hearing process is over, finished. There is no reason to disregard the amendments proposed by these organizations.

Also, Madam Speaker, I am appalled by the indifference of the Conservative Government vis-à-vis these organizations.

[English]

The purpose of the amendments was simply to provide some support, some succour, some sense of assurance to the organizations which have these concerns about the Free Trade Agreement—and they are in the majority.

The flavour reflected in the amendments is only one indication of the near inability on the part of this Government to understand what is going on out there.

While they like to pride themselves on being the hard two-fisted representatives of the business community, they don't understand what is going on out there. Perhaps they turned their hearing aids off as they went door to door during the election campaign. Whatever happened, they were not listening very well. They weren't listening to those Canadians who were lamenting for our nation.

These are not Canadians who are motivated by partisan feelings. Those to whom I spoke were ordinary Canadians, people not having particular ties to one Party or another. I heard high school students saying that, in the light of the Free Trade Agreement, they were mourning for their country.

When you have an 18 year old telling you that he is mourning for his country, that he is feeling that his future is being mortgaged—and those were the words they used—

Ms. Dobbie: Only because you are telling them that their future is being mortgaged.

Mr. Axworthy: I hear the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South (Ms. Dobbie) saying that they held this view mainly because of what they were being told. Well, it shows a great sense of confidence in the young people of Canada to think that they could be so easily manipulated!

I say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South that she will find out soon enough that Canadians cannot be manipulated. In fact, if any manipulation did take place, it was by Hon. Members opposite. I saw the kind of literature that she put out, and I can tell the House that she is going to pay a big price for that.

An Hon. Member: A one-time Member.

Mr. Axworthy: I saw the Chamber of Commerce literature that was flooding Winnipeg South, claiming that we have secure access—and oh, what a total lie that was; what a total fabrication that was. Talk about manipulation!

An Hon. Member: What about the stories to seniors?

Mr. Axworthy: We are hearing now remarks from the Tory back-benchers. They will not face the fact that many Canadians did turn against them. They cannot understand how it is that they lost so many seats; how it is that they lost so many cabinet Ministers. In the light of the fact that they lost so many votes across the country as a result of the Free Trade Agreement, one would think that there would be some slight twinge of conscience on their part.

The Free Trade Agreement is not an act in and of itself. The Free Trade Agreement and its implementing legislation do not stand in isolation; they are part and parcel of a new course that has been set by this Government, a course taking Canada away from its historical course, uprooting the traditions, beliefs and feelings we have held about the way in which this country can best govern itself. For some reason or other the Conservatives have seen themselves over the last two years mainly as Republicans. I guess they were sort of influenced through our media by President Reagan or Margaret Thatcher. They said: "Isn't that wonderful?" Not wanting to think about complicated matters, they followed the pattern in a simple way.

● (1600)

That is dangerous because one of the results has been that this country is being divided. This country is divided. One of the ironies is the Prime Minister saying this week: "I am the great conciliator. I am the great harmonizer". I have never seen this country more divided than it is today under that Prime Minister. Not just along traditional language or regional lines but increasingly along economic and social lines.

There is a growing underclass in Canada which feels totally unrepresented by the Government. One million children live in poverty in this country and we cannot get the Government to lift its eyes to pay attention. What is the Government's answer? Food banks. In a modern society, with the belief we have that the public sector can do something, we are prepared to tolerate widespread poverty among our children, and our only answer is to say go and visit a food bank.

That people are prepared to take food to the food banks is a wonderful tribute to volunteerism. My little boy has for four days raided the pantry for Kraft dinner and canned vegetables to go to the food bank through his daycare centre. It is a wonderful spirit. Yet that is not the way we should deal with poverty.

As Disraeli said, this is a country divided into two nations, rich and poor. What is happening here is happening in industrialized societies around the world. It is almost a revolt of the privileged. They are fighting a major action to protect their privileges and power, status and wealth, and they are not prepared to share any longer, and it is the Government that speaks for that privileged class.

Many Canadians are concerned about the role we will play in the world. I found it fascinating that one of the trademarks of the Prime Minister and others during the campaign was to talk about how this trade agreement represents Canada's coming of age, our new maturity in the world. What happened? The week after the election, the Minister for International Trade goes to GATT and gives in to the Americans. He totally adopted their position on agriculture, on trade, and we lost our role as broker. We lost our ability to provide a bridge to Third World countries. The Minister had no interest in Montreal in trying to open up links to the countries of Central or South America or East Asia. His point on agriculture was that the Americans are right, the Europeans are wrong. That is all we have heard from the Minister for International Trade and the Minister responsible for Grains and Oilseeds.

That was a signal. It means the Government is going to start snuffing out our horizons. It is inevitable that over time our horizons will shrink. The signals we send and receive will be one-way signals to Washington. Can you imagine what it will be like ten years from now?

Mr. McDermid: When you were in there the percentage of our exports to the U.S. went from 60 per cent to 80 per cent.

Mr. Axworthy: Ten years from now when a U.S. Government in the future tramples on the rights of a small country like Nicaragua or Grenada and an MP gets up and asks our Government of the day to take some stand on the fundamental rights of a small country, do you think after this trade agreement we will have the ability or will to do that?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Axworthy: They say "yes". They will not even do it now. How many times have we asked them to stand up against the economic embargo of Nicaragua and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) has refused time after time after time?

Mr. Boyer: You heard the Minister's position on ice cream today!

Mr. Axworthy: We have the Minister's statement on ice cream. It had all the quality of his campaign style, which was to go to university and tramp on a kid. I say to the Hon. Member that there is a difference between words and action.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. McDermid: I have seen you in debate before.

Mr. Axworthy: The day that Minister actually takes some action against the Americans will be a miracle. It will make the three wise men going to Bethlehem pale by comparison simply because it will never happen. It will never happen.

Mr. Boyer: Terrible analogy.

Ms. Dobbie: Listen to the Messiah.

Mr. McDermid: Pink Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: We have never seen one example of that Minister or his Government standing up. Not on shakes and shingles, softwood lumber, pharmaceuticals, film distribution or cultural industries. Not once.

Mrs. Finestone: They got knee-capped.

Mr. Axworthy: They could not be knee-capped, they were on their knees. They got hit in another vulnerable part of their anatomy. I can understand why the Minister for International Trade said this morning he has an aversion to cucumbers. I fully understand why he said that. He spent too much time sort of pulling them out of various—oh, well, that is enough.

Mr. Boyer: That was going nowhere.

Mr. McDermid: You stopped just in time on that one.

Mr. Axworthy: We recognize very clearly that the horizons of this country, its ability to really play a mature role, will be snuffed out. You cannot integrate yourself economically and socially and not begin to integrate yourself politically.

Mr. McDermid: Here we go! The American hordes are coming over the 49th parallel.

Mr. Axworthy: I read a famous old text written by a great conservative philosopher, George Grant, called Lament For a Nation. He talked about continentalism and its impact upon this country. He talked about foreign ownership. He is not a Liberal. The Tories love to trot out Don Macdonald. I am trotting out George Grant. He is probably one of the most fascinating and interesting and fertile minds in the history of this country. He even happened to be a Tory.

Last summer, before Mr. Grant succumbed to cancer, which we all regret, he had lunch with the Leader of our Party. Guess who Mr. Grant supported in the trade debate? The author of Lament For A Nation said: "I lament for my country even more in 1988 than I did back in 1964". He could see it dying on the vine. He understood what it all meant. He understood that the modern Mulroney Party no longer believes in the traditions of the Progressive Conservative Party that used to stand up for Canada. Under the leadership of people like John Diefenbaker and others, it knew what independence meant. He was not always right but he certainly knew what it meant. This particular crowd has no understanding of that concept. They have no ability to meet that kind of question.

What they are doing in this trade agreement opens the door to continentalism such that we will never be able to recover if it goes ahead.

Ms. Dobbie: The removal of trade barriers? Come on, Lloyd.

Mr. Axworthy: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South (Ms. Dobbie) is once again showing her deep knowledge of the agreement. She is saying we are just taking down a few tariffs. That is all that is in the agreement, she says. Madam Speaker, Exhibit A is the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I recommend it to the reading of the Hon. Member. She could probably get some help from the Minister of Trade who today admitted that he had begun reading it.

• (1610)

The Hon. Member has said that this is a matter of reducing a few tariffs, or words to that effect. Why is there Chapter Nine on energy with a whole series of changes to the National Energy Board and to the rules regarding the pricing mechanism? What does that have to do with energy?

There is another interesting chapter on investment. Somehow investment has now become tariffs.

Here is another part of the agreement. It is entitled "Financial Services". It deals with the application of national treatment toward banks, trust companies and credit unions. There is no protection at all under the rules for them. There are new negotiations opening up for inclusion on the list. This is the Hon. Member who prides herself, as a former President of the Chamber of Commerce, on really understanding business. Yet she does not know what is in the agreement. She does not have the slightest idea. She has not even read the index yet. She has not bothered with the fact that it relates to about 101 other items not dealing with tariffs.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

That is a difficulty in which Hon. Members opposite are being caught out in terms of their fabrications. They have tried to sell this, on the one hand, as a simple few changes to tariff duties. We have said all along that if it were simply some changes in the tariff duties then we would not be here today. No one would be opposing that. As Liberals we have a far more effective record in bringing down tariff duties than anything the Tories could think of. In the last 40 years the average tariff range was 50 per cent in our trade in goods with the United States. We brought it down by 2 per cent, 4 per cent and 5 per cent, depending on the commodity. That is a pretty good record.

We have had free trade in commodities such as softwood lumber until the Government imposed an export tax on it. We have never had any trouble bringing down tariffs, of carefully managing the ability of Canada to bring down trade barriers around the world. We have been a very successful interlocutor at the GATT meetings to make sure that that happened.

Mr. McDermid: What about the Auto Pact?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): The Minister for the homeless cannot remember the commitments made by his predecessors. Let us talk about the Auto Pact for a moment.

Mr. McDermid: The tariff rates came down on the Auto Pact, too.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I do not want to take up the time of the House to talk about the impact. The Minister for trade and the Minister for the homeless and other Members opposite have a habit, a bad habit which is sort of like falling hair, of treating the Auto Pact as if it were free trade. It was not. Any fool knows that the Auto Pact that was signed back in the 1960s was not free trade but a managed trade program. It had guarantees built into it. We retain the right to reapply a tariff as a penalty against any U.S. manufacturer who did not live up to the guarantees of that agreement.

Under the Free Trade Agreement we take away the tariffs and the penalties. We give an indication of open hunting to the U.S. North American manufacturers to blow us out of the water any time they want. That is what they call free trade.

Members opposite say that we have debated this for so long and that we have had so many meetings on it. Yet they show total and abysmal ignorance of what is in the agreement and what it can be used for.

In this kind of debate the ability or the willingness to respond with an important series of constructive amendments has been snuffed out. It has been thwarted. We lament that. We mourn that. We see in this agreement not just a series of economic and commercial matters but a fundamental change in the way the country is going to be governed. The agreement takes away the ability of the Government to provide for a way to respond to regional initiatives, new cultural programs and new agricultural requirements. Who knows what the future will bring? We know that the most precious instrument available to Canadians, the ability through their elected representatives in Parliament to take action on their behalf, has been eroded. It has been given away.

If we combine that with the type of decentralization that is going on through the Government's constitutional proposals, and the giving away of programs such as housing and regional development, we see that we are turning the country into a nation of shopping centres. There is no longer any central focus to it. There is no longer any dynamo at the centre to take initiatives to provide for the form of initiatives that are required.

Mr. McDermid: What total poppycock.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): All I can say to the Minister for the homeless is that he has become a motor mouth. If he would only start thinking and stop talking he would be a lot better off.

We have this type of fundamental restriction. That is one of the real dangers of the agreement. It is that it is giving away the substantial ability of ordinary Canadians to participate in decisions that will affect them.

Ms. Dobbie: Tell us how.

Mr. Harvard: Give her a short lesson.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I will give a lesson to the Hon. Member if she wants to know how. Let us start first with the area of foreign investment. It is very important for any country to retain some ability to manage investment flow into its own country. The flow of capital is absolutely essential, and also what happens to that capital.

Any self-respecting country would retain at least the right to intercede if it felt that foreign capital were simply being used as a mechanism for takeover and acquisition, and for stripping Canadian businesses of their technology, research or development. Every country does that. Even the U.S. under its various defence security measures retains controls in all those vital areas, something which they are debating now.

What has happened with this agreement? We have given it away. Close to 20 per cent of industries will no longer be covered. Therefore they will no longer have the right as Canadians to say: "Wait a minute", whether it is a small business firm in Winnipeg that comes up with a new product or some group from Kansas City which wants to buy it up and say: "We will take it over". We have no right any more under this agreement to say: "But keep the technology here and the jobs here". They can strip it within 24 hours, move the technology and research back and we will never see it again. That, I say to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South, is how this country is losing its ability to manage itself.

Mr. McDermid: I rise on a point of order, Madam Speaker. Will the Hon. Member entertain a question?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): No, Madam Speaker. The fact is that the Minister for International Trade was less than forthcoming this morning. We simply want to follow in the example of his leadership. The fact is that the Minister for the homeless and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South do not like what they are hearing. They cannot accept the reality of what they are hearing. They find themselves uncomfortable and uneasy. They have a bad itch where they are sitting. That does not mean to say that we will stop talking. We still have something like 36 hours, and they will hear it all. They will hear every word of it.

Mrs. McDougall: We have heard all those lies before.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, I draw your attention to a matter of privilege. The Minister of Employment has said that these are lies. That is against the rules of the House. I think we either ask the Minister to withdraw or have her withdraw from the House. I am raising that first point as a matter of privilege.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I did not hear the comment. If the Hon. Minister feels that she has said something that is unparliamentary, she will withdraw. I did not hear it personally. I cannot ask her to withdraw something which I have not heard personally.

• (1620)

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I will have the opportunity to check the "blues" or the videotapes to see what the Minister had to say. We will reserve the right on that for tomorrow. I would say that for all the lament we have raised, there are still some very important and positive things that have come out of this debate. It has been an important experience for the Liberals as a Party. I have been proud to be in this Party with the leadership of the Hon. Leader of the Opposition and the way he conducted himself during the campaign in providing leadership to all Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): That is a sign for the future. That is no temporary circumstance. The election was a rare, unique, and difficult experience. The Party was able to define clearly some very important standards and objectives for itself. We were able to understand very clearly the threat we raised and some of the new contours of this society of ours. We were able to see the visible, naked exercise of power in a way that we have not seen before.

The communications industry and the media in this country have become very concentrated. Virtually all the newspapers in the country are being run by four or five large corporate empires whose owners supported free trade. The fact that their newspapers did so may not be entirely coincidental.

That should be a sign of some danger. As a Liberal Party, we felt the wrath of that kind of corporate concentration. We understand what kind of danger it poses, not just for our Party but for all future political Parties. It puts a brand new element of power in our society that seems not to have any accountability, control or sense of responsibility. There is no law that says how it can be used.

We saw the enormous weight of that power in terms of being able to spend millions of dollars of advertising without being responsible to anybody. The tax system of Canada encourages that to happen. They can write it off. The taxpayers of Canada help pay for it. It has become so concentrated. It is in the control of such a small group of people. That is one of the new contours and new characteristics of our country that we as Liberals, who have always fought for the dispersal, accountability, and responsibility of power, will have to face in the future. We will have to take a look at the laws of competition, elections, and other areas to make sure there is a measure of accountability.

Mr. McDermid: I saw Mel Hurtig's ads. I saw Maud Barlow's ads. Good old Maudie.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): It is amazing that the Minister for the homeless is so sensitive. Now he is saying that somehow the Council of Canadians, which has an individual membership of 3,000 or 4,000 people, is comparable to Alcan, American Express, or the BCNI who have enormous corporate treasuries and a tax-exemption status to draw upon. We go back to that basic standard. Do they understand what is going on in the country? Do they have any comprehension of what is taking place? The Minister has not the slightest understanding that there is a difference between groups of private citizens in this country coming together in terms of voluntary association and the power of many corporations with vast treasuries dictating and determining what is going on in this country. That is not surprising. That is why we understand what the trade deal is all about. The trade deal is a way of establishing and incorporating that power and that privilege as far as the governing structure of this country is concerned.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): This election, in defining clearly some new issues, talked about the concentration of power and how it is now being irresponsibly used to effect political decisions. It also points out the real damage we have done to this country in terms of its entrepreneurial and economic opportunity. We are beginning to see the denial of many small businesses and regions in being able to share in the wealth of this country. The impact and consequence of this agreement will be to further consolidate power in terms of the magnetic field of the market-place. It will not ensure a fair sharing throughout this country. That is a total denial of the history of Canada.

I go back to Mr. Grant's book, the conservative philosopher, who said that in a way Canada is an exception to the rules of economics and geography, working against those rules. It has been a political entity. It has been shaped by decisions of people through their own publicly-elected, democratically-elected institutions. People have had to exercise real will to decide what kind of country they want. It is that institutional opportunity that we are surrendering and giving up.

We as a group believe we have a continuing mandate in this issue, not confined just to Bill C-2 or to this particular trade agreement, but to maintain an ability to offer a different opportunity, a different set of views and values to this country. We think they are far more in keeping with what Canadians want.

We believe that in the next four years this Government will have to look over its shoulder every step of the way, because there will always be a Question Period. There will always be a demand that it show accountability and responsibility for the act which it is incorporating in this legislation. If government Members have the slightest illusion that this is the end of the debate, that they are home free, then I say they had better go home and have a few more dreams of plum trees and Christmas trees. This is just the beginning.

We believe we have come out of this election as a stronger Party with a better definition and better able to offer Canadians a real alternative and choice for the future. We are placing this Government on notice that this is what it will face in the House.

We hope the Government recognizes that we are trustees for many Canadians who say they want Canada to come home again. They want to end the divergent, destructive course that this Government has initiated by moving into foreign waters and down pathways that it does not belong. We want to bring the country back to its roots and back to its historical traditions. We want to provide a real opportunity for all the young people who were foreign to this election, who realized for the first time they had to make a choice of what kind of country they wanted. They made a choice in large majority for the Liberal Party of Canada.

That is where young people were voting. It is that generation which will provide the next impetus, initiative, and sense of force as to where this country will go. That is why we have confidence and are fully committed to continuing to offer the kind of trusteeship for that generation to ensure the group opposite will pay the price and suffer the consequences of their actions. They will be faced with a group of people who have come here armed with far more Members and stronger voices to be able to offer that kind of comment.

By way of conclusion on this third reading, it has been a privilege for me to be a part of this debate, to help shape some points of view and to ask the questions. In light of the debate we have been through and the fact that Canadians have been denied the opportunity to have their voice heard, I would like to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), that the motion be amended by striking out all words after the word "That" and by substituting the following:

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

"Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be not now read a third time, but that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for reconsideration of Clauses 3 through 150, inclusive."

If this amendment is accepted it will give Canadians a chance once again to be heard.

• (1630)

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Robinson: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the seriousness and importance of the debate on Bill C-2, particularly at third reading, I would ask that the House grant permission to our official spokesperson, the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), to have equal time with the two previous Members who had the floor previously.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, the critic with the New Democratic Party has had private discussions with his colleagues in other Parties and requested extra time, but to grant equal time with the opposition Party and the Government is a little unrealistic. He made a certain commitment to us as to the extra time, but made it very clear to the House that he would not take advantage of that. I think we will just leave it at that.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, I think it would be proper and right that my colleague, the Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon), be given proper opportunity to express the case of his Party at third reading, and we would certainly be in agreement that he use the time allowed to him, subject to discretion.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair is in somewhat of a quandary. Is there unanimous consent to give the Hon. Member extra time, or is there a time limit? I would like the House to help me on that point.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, I suggest that the Hon. Member take his 20 minutes which he is allotted and, when that is up, ask for extra time—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: It is Christmas.

Mr. McDermid: We are following the rules of the House. Relax. At that time it will be given to him, with discretion, to which he has committed himself to us. So we will carry on as required by the orders of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do not have unanimous consent at this time. I will give the floor to the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Langdon: Madam Speaker, the last time this situation arose in the previous Parliament I was told that it was not possible to ask for extra time at the end of one's 20 minutes. That is why I make the request to the House. If you were to apply a limit of 40 minutes, I think that would be certainly satisfactory to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Whether the Hon. Member asks for it at this time or a later time, the Chair would still need unanimous consent to grant the Hon. Member more than 20 minutes, which would now be his according to our rules.

As I do not have unanimous consent at this time—

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand the dilemma facing the Speaker. I would simply propose that Parties grant unanimous consent to the Member for 40 minutes to give his speech at third reading.

Mr. McDermid: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do not have unanimous consent at this time. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon).

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Madam Speaker, I regret that the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. McDermid), despite our earlier discussions, has not giving unanimous consent to that suggestion.

I want to begin with what I believe many Canadians feel as this debate comes to a close, that is, a lament for a nation. It is a lament which was summed up not by New Democrats, not by a socialist, not by a Liberal, but by a Conservative by the name of George Grant in 1965. He said:

To lament is to cry out at the death or at the dying of something loved. This lament mourns the end of Canada as a sovereign state. Political laments are not usual in the age of progress, because most people think that society always moves forward to better things.

Lamentation is not an indulgence in despair or cynicism. In a lament for a child's death, there is not only pain and regret, but also celebration of passed good.

'I cannot but remember such things were that were most precious to me.'

Grant goes on in his opening chapter to say that he laments Canada's death as a celebration of memory:

In this case, the memory of that tenuous hope that was the principle of my ancestors. "The insignificance of that hope in the endless ebb and flow of nature does not prevent us from mourning". At least we can say with Richard Hooker: "Prosperity may know we have not loosely through silence permitted things to pass away as in a dream".

That is why we in this Party throughout this debate have refused to accept the silence which the Government has consistently attempted to impose not just on us as a Party, not just on the Opposition in the House, but on the people of this country.

It is a silence which it has attempted to impose through every possible rule in the book.

It is silence put upon the people of the House through the most Draconian use of the rules of closure. It is silence put upon the people of this country by the most constraining use of hearings across this country, which should normally in the course of a decision so vast and crucial to our country's future have been simply taken for granted and organized as a matter of course, so that every community across Canada would have had the chance to ask the questions, make the representations and put the points of view they as Canadians felt they had the right to put forward. We have faced not just an attempt to silence the voices of Canada. We have faced as well betrayals on the part of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at every stage of this debate. These betrayals have been so clear, so evident, so absolutely forthright, that they will live black throughout the rest of the history of our country.

● (1640)

In April 1987, the Prime Minister said, and I quote him exactly: "The trade remedy laws the United States cannot apply to Canada, period." Yet we find in this agreement that these trade remedy laws still apply, despite the Prime Minister's absolute commitment.

Second, quoting from Fortune magazine, the Prime Minister said, after he was elected: "If somebody wanted to buy a little of our water, somebody wants to buy some oil, someone wants to buy some wheat, hell, we're in business. That's what it's all about." Yet this same Prime Minister has claimed that he and his Party were attempting to do everything possible to stop the sale of water to the United States, despite those comments. I call it a betrayal.

Finally, perhaps the most unfortunate, the saddest, the blackest of his statements was: "Free trade with the United States is like sleeping with an elephant. It is terrific until the elephant twitches, and if it ever rolls over, you're a dead man. Canadians rejected free trade with the United States in 1911. They would do so again in 1983."

In his campaign literature, the Prime Minister said he intended to "pursue bilateral discussions with the United States in specific sectors". That is precisely the policy of the New Democratic Party, which we were consistent in following and the Prime Minister was inconsistent in rejecting, leaving to the people of Canada a legacy of betrayal.

I do not want to fight the last election campaign, tempting though it is. I want instead to pay tribute to all our new Members who have spoken in this debate. These Hon. Members, each of them from previous Conservative constituencies, have brought to the floor of the House the concerns of Canadians. The Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter) talked about the environmental problems which face our country as a consequence of this deal. The Hon. Member for Timmins—Chapleau (Mr. Samson) has talked about the problems which face the forests of Canada and the workers therein as a consequence of the Government's refusal to insist on a Memorandum of Understanding with respect to softwood lumber being eliminated before any trade deal is signed with the United States.

The Hon. Member for The Battlefords—Meadow Lake (Mr. Taylor) talked in detailed, effective terms about the agricultural problems which we face as a country as a consequence of this agreement. The Hon. Member for Prince Albert—Churchill River (Mr. Funk) talked with passion of the social problems which face our country in the future as a consequence of the trade deal.

Finally, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey), the first Alberta voice speaking from other than Conservative ranks, has spoken from this caucus and has told this House that unlike what we have heard from all the Conservatives from Alberta, the energy consequences of this deal will hurt not just Canadians in central Canada, in eastern Canada and in British Columbia, but in Alberta itself.

There is not a commitment in this deal, search as the Hon. Member for Calgary Southwest (Mrs. Sparrow) might search, to guaranteed access for Alberta energy to the American market, nor is there a commitment that in the future, Canadians will be able to count on security of supply for our energy needs. That is shameful, and I am proud that we have somebody from Edmonton East who can speak about it so effectively.

All of these people and many more I could have talked about have given their maiden speeches on this deal in the past week. All of them defeated Conservatives and, if I were a Conservative, I would want to listen and understand why and try to do something about the reasons which led to those defeats.

Instead, the Government has not listened. Its Minister said, before any amendment was even presented, that there can be no amendments to this Bill, before he even heard what was to be suggested by the Opposition. There was no chance to even present an amendment on behalf of this Party or the other opposition Party, because the Conservatives kept the debate at Clause 2 and imposed closure yet again on that stage of parliamentary proceedings.

We had amendments to help with all of these concerns, amendments to see to it that there was an attempt to set up a definition of Canada within the definitions clause, rather than just defining the United States.

A definition to deal with the override clause permits the federal Government to undercut any provincial law in the future which contradicts this trade agreement, something which will be constitutional poison in the future of this country. We had amendments to present which would have set out that there has to be something in the agreement, not just in the legislation, which prevents Canada from exporting water to the United States. We would have had an amendment to present which would have said for greater certainty, nothing in the agreement should be interpreted to adversely affect Canada's social, cultural, environmental, agricultural and regional development programs.

We would have had a very clear and explicit reference to Articles 2010 and 2011 to make it quite clear that they could not prevent social initiatives in the future as they do at the moment. We wanted to present an amendment to stop any future granting by this Government of further increases in import quotas to the United States for dairy, poultry, eggs and other marketing board products. Yet we did not have a chance to present these. We had an amendment to suggest that the Canadian Wheat Board had to be defended, that assurances had to be given by the Government, as has been requested by the prairie pools. Yet that too was not given a chance to be debated on the floor of this House, let alone the chance for representatives from the prairie pools to testify, as should have been possible on a Bill as crucial as this one to their future and to the future of all Canadians in western Canada.

We had suggestions which we wanted to present as amendments to ensure that nothing would prevent any party, provincial, municipal or federal from taking action to protect the environment. We also wanted to see to it that the subsidies negotiation was given some constraints so that the Government could not simply run off and give away more of the country as it has given away so much in this present trade deal. That was not possible to present.

We had amendments to set up a special committee of the House to oversee what happens with these negotiations in the future on subsidies. We had amendments to suggest ways in which it would be possible to set in place legislation which would give workers who were hit in vulnerable sectors, vulnerable communities, vulnerable firms as a result of the trade deal, the chance to be able to obtain special help, something which was obtained in the context of the Auto Pact, something which we fought for as a Party to get in the context of the Auto Pact and something after we achieved permitted us to accept and support the Auto Pact.

We had other suggestions which dealt with energy which said to Canadians right across this country that energy in Canada has been paid for by tax breaks from every Canadian from east to west. Everyone has paid for the development of energy in this country. We do not have the right, for the sake of our children and our grandchildren, to give away what Canadians in the past have paid for through their taxes, the right to self-sufficiency in this country before we export to the United States.

Mr. McDermid: We are not giving away anything.

Mr. Langdon: All of these commitments we would have liked to put forward in amendments, Madam Speaker. I think it is time, as the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said, to look ahead, to look at some of the questions that will be faced in the future. Very tough questions will have to be faced by Canadians over the next 10 years. These questions include the whole problem of adjustment.

What adjustment is going to be possible for workers? There has been no response. There has been no development of the program of older worker adjustment which was supposed to have been in place months ago and yet is not in place. What about the subsidies discussions?

These have not been reported to the House. We have no sense of which direction we as a country are taking on these discussions. Then there are threats to the Wheat Board. Again we have no suggestions from the Government in its response.

Since you have reached the 20 minute mark and the suggestion was that I ask for leave to complete my remarks which would go for another 10 or 15 minutes at this stage, I would now like to ask for unanimous consent to make that completion.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, if I ask the Hon. Member a question he would have another 10 minutes. Can I ask him to carry on with what he was going to explain to us about the future?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions or comments. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: I am sorry the Minister has not been prepared to see that his side give unanimous consent.

Mr. Barrett: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. Am I clear in interpreting that the Hon. Member was given the 20 minutes that he requested by asking leave of the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Once the 20 minute period expired, the Hon. Member could benefit from a 10 minute question and comment period. One question was put and the time was given to the Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor, which I have given him. We are now in question and comment period. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor has the floor.

Mr. Barrett: Madam Speaker, on a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca.

Mr. Barrett: The request by the Hon. Member was leave of the House to continue for 20 minutes. That question was not put to the House before the Minister spoke. That is the request of the Member. I suggest that be put to the House first.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): If the Hon. Member had, as I did, listened to the comment made by the Minister, it was obvious that we did not have unanimous consent of the House for the Hon. Member to continue his speech for another 20 minutes. I think this has been ruled upon. We are now into the 10 minute question and comment period. The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor has the floor.

Mr. Barrett: It was not put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The question was put.

Mr. Barrett: It was not put.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Order, please.

Mr. Barrett: The Minister stood up and made a decision before—

• (1700)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sure the Hon. Member will understand that once the Hon. Member was recognized on a point of order, it gave leave for the Hon. Member to use a 10 minute period for questions and comments to continue and finish his speech. There was no doubt in my mind that there was not unanimous consent of the House for the Hon. Member to get an extra 20 minutes, which is why I ruled the way I did.

Time is moving along. I am sure no one would like the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor to lose this very useful time. The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Barrett: That is a threat from the Chair.

Mr. Merrithew: Sit down. The Speaker is up.

Mr. Barrett: Do you not hear points of order? You did it on a supposition. You did not ask the House.

Mr. McDermid: You are in the big leagues now.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Chair has attempted to explain to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca that it was obvious from the Hon. Minister's comment that there was not unanimous consent.

Mr. Barrett: You did not put the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: I would simply echo the points made by my colleague. The usual procedure is to ask if there is unanimous consent.

Mr. Barrett: Correct.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Langdon: If there is not unanimous consent—

Mr. Mazankowski: There is not unanimous consent.

Mr. Barrett: That is what we want to know. Jackboot government, that is what you are.

Mr. Langdon: If I could respond—

Mr. Barrett: The Government brings in closure and then will not let the Hon. Members speak on top of it. That is jackboot government.

Mr. Langdon: Let me respond, if I could, to the speech of one and three-quarter hours by the Minister, and slightly longer by the Liberal critic, although the Liberals have been willing to accept a slight extension of my comments by making a number of final points.

First, one of the points the Minister made this morning is absolutely and directly inaccurate. He suggested that hospitals in Canada were government-owned. In fact, only 13 per cent of hospitals are actually owned by provinces. A further 41 per cent are owned by non-profit corporations. A significant portion of hospitals, in excess of 5 per cent, are owned by profit-making corporations. That is a reality the Minister should bear in mind.

Mr. McDermid: What is the point?

Mr. Langdon: I want to make one brief comment with respect to the Auto Pact that the Minister once again trotted out. I would have thought that dead horse was one that even this Minister would have ceased riding. The reality of the Auto Pact is that the conditions which exist within it make it something completely different from the Free Trade Agreement we are discussing today.

I wish to conclude with some final pledges on behalf of our Party. First, I want to say to the United States that it may feel that it has succeeded in capturing what it wanted from Canada. There will be at least one Party in the House of Commons that will watch every step the United States takes, every pressure which it exerts on Canada, and will fight for Canada at every stage, despite what the United States might wish to do.

I wish to make a second pledge. We as a Party may have lost this battle. However, Members on the Government side of the House should understand that the fight continues. As a Party we believe in an independent Canada, unlike either the Liberals or the Conservatives when they are in office. I believe that this must be a central fight and a central commitment for our Party.

Another pledge I want to make on behalf of our Party is that we shall watch-dog the Government as closely and completely as we can, and as relentlessly as possible, to protect our country and our people as the negotiations take place with respect to subsidies, and as the Government enters into harmonization discussions which can harm so much of our economy.

The fourth pledge that I wish to make is that this Party shall fight as hard as possible for the victims of this deal. Whether or not the Prime Minister wishes to believe that there are such victims, there will be, and they must be protected. As a country we have always done so in the past when we put trade changes into effect, and for us not to do so this time is shameful.

Finally, I want to say that, in my view, ultimately Canadians must decide in more than this election about the trade deal. I accept the fact that they have voted to give the trade deal a try. That is the nature of our parliamentary democracy. Despite the fact that only two provinces gave majorities to the Government, that is enough to give the Government the capacity to put this deal into effect.

Canadians have voted to give this deal a try, but they will also vote in an election or in some other from to give this deal a judgment when it has been tried for some period of time. I suspect that that judgment will come after many of the problems which we on the Opposition side of the House have identified as certain to flow from the trade deal.

I believe that those problems will come, and the judgement of the Canadian people will take place on the basis of the deal, on the basis of the problems, and not on the basis of the millions of dollars which big business poured into the last election campaign. Ultimately, the people of Canada will win, and I believe that it will be the New Democratic Party which will represent that victory by the people of Canada over corporate capitalism as typified in this deal. That is the reality of the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Members of the House for their vigorous participation in this very important debate, and I thank them for the courtesy of listening to me speak very briefly to an issue that has been quite thoroughly debated in this House of Commons. In fact, as of December 12, 1988, I am informed, the Free Trade

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Agreement had been debated for 331 and a half hours over the course of 64 days, and I think we can now add to that another 40 to 50 hours. The finest tribute that can be paid to Canadian democracy is the extent of debate that can take place in a free Parliament on an important issue such as this, a Parliament whose sittings have been extended to accommodate the debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Essex-Windsor on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I am wondering whether the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) can explain the number of uses of closure in this debate as part of parliamentary democracy—

Mr. Speaker: I must point out to the Hon. Member that his remarks do not constitute a valid point of order but, rather, a question, and it is one which will have to be saved for another occasion. The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, to respond to the question raised by the Hon. Member, and any implications arising therefrom, probably the most eloquent and sensible answer was delivered one month ago today by the very distinguished Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), who said, and I quote: "The people of Canada have taken a decision and Mr. Mulroney has the right to continue now with his free trade legislation."

Because the Leader of the New Democratic Party is widely regarded as a democrat, he then went on to say something that I would ask the Hon. Member to bear in mind, and it is as follows: "Given the election results, it would now be churlish and inappropriate in my thinking, right now, to say something more that should be done in terms of the law at this stage. It should pass."

Those were the words of the Leader of the New Democratic Party one month ago today. I believe the Hon. Member would agree that there has been adequate discussion. This sense of democracy was expressed as well by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), who has said many times in this House and elsewhere: "On a matter of this importance, let the people decide." And, Mr. Speaker, the people have decided.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: May I, en passant, deal with one of the more specious arguments ever raised on the floor of this House of Commons, and it is in connection with the latest theory of some Members of this House that the election was won by someone other than those sitting on the right hand of the Speaker.

The argument seems to be that the British parliamentary system no longer exists, that somehow there is a new system, a referendum/republican system in place somehow, somewhere; that it is the majority of the number of votes on the other side that counts, and not the number of seats, as we have believed since the founding of this nation.

Well, for those who hold that view—and nothing could be more spurious, or unfair, or in violation of the fundamental principles of the British parliamentary system—let me just deal with it on the basis of our most recent history.

In the Twenty-eighth Parliament, elected in 1968, a Parliament of which the Leader of the Opposition was a Member, the Government of the Day, a Liberal Government, obtained 45 per cent of the vote; in 1973, the Liberal Government of the day obtained 38.5 per cent of the vote. In 1974, an election in which the Leader of the Opposition participated actively, the Liberal Government obtained 43.2 per cent of the vote and introduced wage and price controls.

In 1980, the Liberal Government obtained 44.3 per cent of the vote and introduced the National Energy Program and patriated the Constitution, with the problems that that has given rise to. And while I disagree—

Mr. Gauthier: You all voted for it.

Mr. Mulroney: While I disagree very fundamentally with the National Energy Program, and while I disagree with some of the problems inherent in the Constitution, I never once quarrelled with the legitimacy of the Liberal Governments in those periods to proceed with those measures, the reason being that in each case the Government had received, not in terms of popular vote but in number of seats, a clear majority from the people of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I rise with pride to take part in the final chapter of this important debate in the history of our country. On November 21 Canadians expressed their confidence in Canada and in their future together. They gave our Government the mandate to take Canada proudly and boldly into the future. They wanted a government that was prepared to deal with change positively and constructively, that looked forward with confidence to the future and outward with self-assurance to the rest of the world.

I want to conclude my participation in this debate, which has now been going on for a few years, by reflecting on some statements which I consider to be important. The Free-Trade Agreement is an affirmation of a strong and sovereign Canada. The Government pledged to ensure that the continuing negotiations called for in the agreement will further contribute to making Canada a stronger and more confident and sovereign nation. Our two-track approach to trade policy puts Canada in a unique position to advance Canadian interests. Canadians are ready and enthusiastic to use the Agreement to renew and strengthen the Canadian economy.

Over the course of the election campaign, Canadians came to a momentous decision about the future of Canada.

[English]

Canadians thought long and hard about who they are and where they are going and, upon reflection, having considered it all, as Canadians do, they liked what they saw: a Canada aware of its identity, its potential, its role in the world; a Canada which has led the industrial countries in economic growth over the last four years; a Canada that has generated 1.3 million new jobs; a Canada which has provided brand new opportunities for our youth, and new trading opportunities for the future.

Canadians took a look at all of this, compared it with the alternative, and said: Yes, we want more of this for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We live next door to an energetic superpower. That is a fact of geography, and it is a fact about which we can do very little. Some people see it as a threat. We see it as an opportunity.

Canadians and Americans have lived in harmony for more than two centuries. We agree on many things. We pursue many of the same goals. We share a continent and we share a love of freedom. But we are profoundly different in many ways. Our affairs are organized and managed as a constitutional monarchy, while theirs is a republic.

• (1720)

We have a unique legal heritage of British common and French civil law. We are an officially bilingual country. We have embraced the multicultural reality of Canada. Although we are staunch allies of the United States in NATO and NORAD, we do not always view the world in the same way. In fact, we have very many important differences of policy and substance which we have expressed time and time again in fora around the world.

However, we do not believe in stridency as a substitute for policy in the conduct of our relationship with the United States of America. Nor do we see isolation as a prerequisite to sovereignty. Relations with the United States of America today are sound. Ours is a policy of building up and not tearing up. Ours is a policy of co-operating across the table and not shouting across the table.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: When neighbours quarrel, everyone suffers. When neighbours co-operate, everyone benefits. We prefer the politics of co-operation to that of confrontation. I think we are proving it works in Canada's interests.

Canada is a trading nation. Nearly one-third of all our economic activity is generated by trade, and three million Canadian jobs depend directly upon trade. Trade is one of the largest challenges facing this Government, this Parliament, and I suspect it will remain the largest challenge that will face Governments for some time to come. The world is shrinking. Nations are becoming increasingly interdependent. The internationalization of business is intensifying. We have to come to grips with these rapidly changing facts of modern international economic life. They cannot be ignored.

One way that Governments can help is to make life less uncertain through international co-operation and agreements that substitute rules for power politics, to try to bring some order out of chaos.

Canadians have long been champions of international co-operation, whether multilateral or bilateral. Few countries have Canada's institutional reach around the world, in the United Nations, in the Commonwealth, in the "sommet de la francophonie," the Economic Group and other fora of economic co-operation such as GATT, the OECD, the IMF and the World Bank.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Because we live next door to each other, Canadians and Americans have over the years negotiated a wide range of agreements with each other, either on a one on one basis or collectively with others. For example, to protect our essential security interests we both became charter members of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and of the United Nations. We also forged the permanent Joint Board of Defence in NORAD to look after the special needs of our shared responsibility for North American security.

To promote environmental protection and human health, Canada and the United States are active participants in the United Nations Environment Program and the World Health Organization. We also have bilaterally the IJC and the Great Lakes Water Quality Agreement. Just as we stayed at the table until we achieved a mutually beneficial trade agreement, one that stands, according to the G-7 leaders, as a model to the entire trading world, so, too, will we stay at the table until we achieve a mutually satisfactory agreement that will solve once and for all the problem of acid rain.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: As all Members know, the habit of bilateral and multilateral co-operation between Canada and the United States is widespread and longstanding. I think most people, irrespective of where they sit in the House, would agree it has been largely beneficial to us, to our economic well-being, and to the manner in which Canada has surged ahead economically in the world.

Over the years we have negotiated some 200 treaties and protocols and arrangements and understandings with the Americans. Yet we are still here, more Canadian, more confident, and more prosperous than ever before. I believe that years from now the Prime Minister of Canada will stand in this House of Commons and he will be able to say that because of the Free Trade Agreement, Canada, at that time, is even more prosperous, more independent and more sovereign than ever before.

[Translation]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, all these agreements, multilateral and bilateral alike, protect and advance Canadian interests. They strengthen Canadian sovereignty, for every international negotiation is an expression of sovereignty. The levers of economic management that symbolize sovereignty are not those that lead to protectionism. They are those that promote a strong and outward-looking economy. Years of experience have demonstrated that policies that discriminate, ultimately impoverish; those that allow the winds of competition to blow, result in prosperity.

The FTA eliminates the tariffs on trade between Canada and the United States, tariffs both Canadian and American, that made Canadians poorer. Throughout the Agreement, the principle is the same, and quite simple: Canadians and Americans will treat each other fairly. But in Canada, Canadians alone will decide how Canadian economic life will be regulated while in the United States, Americans will decide how their economic life will be pursued. The real levers of economic power remain fully within Canadian hands. We can be confident of more open and less arbitrary trading conditions. We will no longer have to go to Washington to plead for special treatment or exemption. We can now rely on the rule of law and a dispute settlement process in which we have an equal voice. Where then is the threat to sovereignty? The answer is simple and very direct, Mr. Speaker; there is none. Our sovereignty will be re-inforced by the dynamic expression of the modern and prosperous Canada which will result from the Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: The Free Trade Agreement continues the process of making trade more and more secure. It also provides for continued negotiation or evolution because, as the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and others have pointed out, future negotiations are more than the matter of subsidies. We will continue to work with the Americans to improve the rules and reduce barriers affecting government procurement of goods and services. We will continue to work on more rational industrial and health and safety standards.

We will continue to seek to bring greater order to agricultural trade practices which are so debilitating for farmers across Canada, western farmers and those in the East, who have suffered so dramatically because of trade distorting agricultural subsidy practices adopted at enormous expense by countries in the European economy, and responded to by the United States. These hurt Canadian farmers unfairly.

We want to build a better system to deal with discriminatory cross-border pricing practices. We both want to introduce greater protection for owners of intellectual property, as well as fairer ways to share access to new technology. This Government will pursue these issues not only between Canada and the United States under the Free Trade Agreement, but whenever progress can be made and wherever Canadian interests can be advanced.

Earlier this month in Montreal, GATT ministers reviewed progress in tackling these questions on a multilateral basis. I think all Canadians had an upfront view of just how difficult it will be on some of these complex issues to reach a broad consensus.

• (1730)

Progress in the GATT is often limited. It is always painfully slow. Sometimes, on some important issues, years go by without the slightest movement.

We have too many millions of jobs. We have too many young people crying out for economic opportunities. Unemployment is too high in places such as Newfoundland, Labrador and British Columbia. People want economic opportunity. They cannot wait year after year. They are saying yes to the kind of dynamism that comes from a bilateral trading agreement with our largest trading partner.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: That is all the more reason to draw some satisfaction from the results negotiated bilaterally by Canada and the United States. For Canada the issue of subsidies is of critical importance in both our bilateral and multilateral trading agendas. We are particularly concerned about subsidies that distort trade in agriculture. We are also pressing for greater clarity and consistency in the use of countervailing duties in free trade.

What will not be discussed in any forum is Canadian social programs. They are simply not part of the agenda. Programs such as medicare or pensions are not at risk, never have been—nor will they ever be jeopardized in any future negotiations. One of the most unfair events that ever transpired in this election campaign, or in any other, was the suggestion that some elderly person who is helpless or sick might lose her pension by voting a given way when everybody knows that Canadian social programs never were on the table, and never will be. The only thing that will happen is that they will be better as a result of the wealth that will come from more trade in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: When the elderly receive their cheques in January, February, March, June and July, and those pension cheques are going up, and when they go to the hospital and the state continues to pay 100 per cent of the freight, they are going to say after a period of time: "What were the Liberals and the NDP telling us? Why were they telling us this?" To their shame and eternal regret Canadians will remember what was said. They will penalize those who tried to abuse their trust and their confidence.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: The Member from Winnipeg said today in his speech that he had a tough time even though we had received by far the largest number of seats. He said that he had a tough time accepting the verdict, that he was not sure what Canadians meant. As Canadians watch these events unfold they will teach the Hon. Member from Winnipeg what democracy really means, if they have to give it to him time and time again until he gets it straight. When one wins an election, one has won and one has the confidence of the people to proceed with the mandate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, the election of November 21 was a ringing vote of confidence by Canadians in themselves. They voted for the future rather than the past. They chose to take up the challenge of competitive excellence. They have answered a clarion call to build a stronger nation in a new decade and a new century.

Canadians want to look forward and outward. This Government is doing that. The Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement does that. But economic renewal is not the sole responsibility of the Canadian Government. It is the joint responsibility of government, business and labour. It requires cooperation and consultation, and is very seldom successful when there is confrontation.

The challenge to government is to create a climate conducive to success. The challenge to business is to seize new opportunities. The challenge to labour, with its ideas and its leadership, is to help make it work.

If all three pull together, all Canadians will benefit as new and better jobs are created and a deeper pool of natural and national wealth results for Canada.

All experts say that over the next 10 years the Free Trade Agreement will create about 250,000 new jobs.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

This means 250,000 new jobs for young Canadians, over and above current predictions, and I think that if we can create that many new jobs for Canadian youth, it is good for Canada and we must do even more.

Parts of the Canadian economy will undergo reshaping and restructuring in order to meet the challenge of world competition and to seize the opportunities for growth, for innovation and for greater prosperity in all regions of Canada. Mr. Speaker, this challenge must be met head on and to the benefit of all Canadians.

The trade union movement has an important and constructive role to play. I believe Canada's labour leaders will take their place at the table and join the dialogue in order to advance the interests of their members and contribute to the national well-being.

I have had conversations with some of Canada's labour leaders and look forward to meeting with them in the new year. Every independent analysis indicates the FTA will create thousands of new jobs across every region of Canada, particularly in the most disadvantaged regions, if I am not mistaken.

But there will be some dislocation and change and governments must be ready to accommodate this reality in an innovative and productive way.

[English]

In general, properly handled and sensitively dealt with adjustment is a positive process indicative of a workforce that is responsive to change, seeking a better life for themselves and their children. We already have one of the most highly skilled and highly mobile forces in the world. Some four million Canadians change jobs every year. They move up. They move ahead. They move on. New and better jobs are created when positive adjustment takes place.

For those of us who represent far flung regions of Canada—and I see Members from Newfoundland, British Columbia and north-eastern Quebec, for example, in the House—as a result of new industries and new jobs created in the regions of Canada, thousands of our young people will be able to work at home rather than moving to other provinces in search of work. When we have created jobs in regions in those areas far removed from central Canada, we will have done the country a service because we will have strengthened the nation by bringing prosperity to the outer regions of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Over the next 10 years not all adjustments in the economy by any means will result from implementation of the Free Trade Agreement. It is quite to the contrary. Adjustment is going to come to this House, to all its Members and to all of us from technology, from changing tastes, from changing demands, from changing international competition and from changing policies here and around the world. The agreement was designed to accommodate some of these fundamental realities and fundamental Canadian interests and special adjustment problems.

• (1740)

Some industries, such as cultural industries and transportation, were exempted entirely. In other sectors, all current practices were grandfathered, such as the beer industry and all the service industries. Marketing boards for our dairy and our poultry producers are fully preserved, and special safeguard provisions were made for our horticultural industry.

Perhaps most important, the agreement provides for a phasing-in period of 10 years, precisely to allow time for industries to adapt and adjust; a decade, a 10-year period for labour and management and Governments of all stripes to work together to prepare not only for the changes but for the tremendous opportunities economically that can come to Canada and to all our regions.

Through our comprehensive consultations program with industry, throughout the negotiations, representatives of each sector in effect chose voluntarily the pace at which they could live with tariff reductions.

[Translation]

However, Mr. Speaker, should even the measured phasing-in of the FTA prove too difficult for some industries, its safeguard provisions allow either government to re-impose the tariff on a temporary basis. More generally, the federal and provincial governments have a variety of programs in place to ease adjustment for individuals, for companies and for communities—such as unemployment insurance and re-training and relocation programs, and so on.

In addition, The de Grandpré Commission will identify what more is needed specifically to meet the adjustment challenge of the FTA. Its primary focus is to look at the need for more people-oriented programs, training and education programs intended to ensure that Canadians have the skills necessary to compete, to produce and to excel.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

[English]

Before we entered into the trade talks, we consulted widely with Canadians, building on the consultations undertaken at the time by the Macdonald Royal Commission, chaired by the Hon. Donald Macdonald, a former Minister of Finance and one of Canada's most distinguished sons who today serves us proudly as our High Commissioner in London. During the negotiations, we consulted closely with business and other affected interests through the International Trade Advisory Committee and the sectoral advisory groups. We sought the advice of labour and Canadians, and we benefited from the participation of the Canadian Federation of Labour in the consultative process. We worked closely with the provinces.

Apart from all the meetings with the Ministers of Trade and their officials—and there were countless dozens of those—I personally had the occasion to meet no less than 11 different times with the First Ministers for meetings lasting up to 14 and 15 hours, seeking their advice and their support.

I am proud to say today that in large measure, because of the hard work that went into the consultative process in making a federation work the way a federation should, that no less than eight premiers out of ten supported then and support today the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the U.S.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Parliamentary committees studied the issues and consulted Canadians before, during, and after the negotiations. I believe the trade debate of the last several years has raised the awareness of all Canadians as to the importance of trade in the life of our country. I believe it is important for that discussion to continue, and I know that it shall.

Members from all parts of the House have indicated the intensity with which they propose to continue the debate and the vigilance they propose to exercise with respect to the application of the treaty. That is a very commendable and appropriate attitude for all Members of Parliament. I wish them well in this. I offer them my full co-operation.

I just say, en passant, that it will be interesting to look back and read Hansard some years from now, because 25 years ago, when the Government negotiated the Auto Pact, a lot of people were opposed to it then who today say that they actually fathered the same agreement. If I happened to be looking at the Hon. Member for Essex—

Windsor (Mr. Langdon) of the NDP when I said that, it was entirely by accident.

I believe it is important for that debate to continue. Government, business, labour, the universities, and public policy institutes need to co-operate in developing a wider and deeper understanding of the challenges of trade. As a step in the right direction, the federal Government will soon announce details of a special fund to help the development of greater understanding, not only of the agreement itself, but also of Canadian trade policy.

I have asked the Minister for International Trade to be in touch with officials at the University of Ottawa and at Carleton University, as well as business and labour leaders, regarding the establishment in Ottawa of a world-class Canadian centre for the study of international trade policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: We would propose that the Ottawa centre become a world-class centre for the teaching and the research and the analysis of trade issues, not only around the country, but around the world. I think all Members of the House of Commons will not only applaud and encourage this kind of initiative, but I hope they will participate actively in its building, its encouragement, its design, and in its support.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: After the next election, there might be a job as a visiting professor for the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor. There will always be a place for the Hon. Member in Canadian trade policy debates.

Mr. Gauthier: After Simon Reisman, I suppose?

Mr. Mulroney: No, Simon Reisman will be there too. I can assure you of that. Canada has all kinds of extraordinary and impressive people who have served Canada through the public service. None has been finer and none has made a more durable contribution than Simon Reisman.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I can say that about Simon, because I know he would never say it himself.

In a phrase, the Free Trade Agreement is a major insurance policy for two million Canadian jobs. It represents more secure access to the United States market and new opportunities for economic expansion.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

It is clearly a good deal for Canada, and it is a fair deal for both countries. Most important, all remaining tariffs on U.S. imports will be removed over 10 years. As we all know, about 80 per cent are gone already. Tariffs remain in value-added products like petrochemicals and finished goods like urban transport equipment, auto replacement parts, textiles and clothing. That is where the jobs are.

There is now, because of the tariff removal, the potential for substantially increased employment. The removal of tariffs means Canadian consumers and producers will pay less for American products. It is a bonus as well for production costs at plants across Canada. We will—and this is the history of all liberalized trade initiatives—be more efficient, more productive, and better able to compete. It enhances productivity. It strengthens market ties. It boosts innovation. It increases research and development. It compels us to be better traders.

Any time that challenge has been there, any time those markets have been available, Canadians have responded to the challenge, provided they get fair and secure access to those markets. What we have done is to give Canadians the kind of access they need so that the youth of Canada now being challenged and now being given the opportunity can go out and compete with the very best in the world and win, because we believe the youth of Canada are the very best in the world.

There will be no more U.S. quotas on Canadian uranium or steel exports, no more import taxes on Canadian oil or gas exports, no more customer user fees on any Canadian exports.

We will have a genuine shield against new U.S. protectionism, whether from Congress or from the administration. There will be a binding dispute settlement mechanism which ensures that United States laws are applied impartially on Canada and vice-versa. Canadians exporters will have a shield against harassment by their American competitors. This dispute settlement feature of the Free Trade Agreement is unique and has attracted the interest as well as the envy of the Japanese, among others.

It was reported in November of last year in the Washington Post that when the mechanism in the treaty was examined, the leadership of Japan, Singapore, South Korea and Taiwan all were seeking the same kind of treaty that Canada had signed with the United States, particularly the dispute settlement mechanism.

When I saw all of those countries lined up seeking the kind of privileged access that Canada had obtained, I knew what I had always known, that this kind of treaty would serve Canada's interests well.

There will be new opportunities for duty free and more secure access by Canadian exporters and more incentives to produce finished goods in Canada before export. There are new provisions regarding services which affect architects, consulting engineers and computer scientists, Government procurement and business travel, investment as well as new trade remedy rules which, together, as the Leaders of the G-7 nations expressed at the Toronto Summit, serve as a model for the trading world.

I have indicated before but I think it is probably worth repeating, at Toronto there were representatives of the seven industrialized nations, including the European Community whose economies produce 55 per cent of the GNP of the entire world. They ranged in the political spectrum from Mrs. Thatcher in the United Kingdom who is a Conservative to Francois Mitterrand in France who is a socialist. All of them together in one voice said that this Free Trade Agreement is beneficial and it is a model for the trading world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: I will be getting the translation of those remarks to my friend from Essex who has a great interest in following the evolution of socialist ideologies elsewhere. I am sure he was impressed, for example, by the recent statements of the Prime Minister of Spain with regard to their adhesion to the European Common Market and the importance for all economies to seek secure access to large trading markets.

The competition in 1992 is not down the street, the competition which, incidentally, is being led by socialist governments, is in Europe with 320 million people, which will be the largest, most dynamic, most powerful market in the world. That is our competitor and we will be there to compete with them evenly and effectively so that Canadians will win.

We will have better rules of the road for $200 billion a year in trade, which is the largest bilateral trading arrangement in history. That is a very important consideration. We will have more certain application of those rules. I believe this will ensure that our trade will be more secure. It will protect the jobs in Canada and give us larger access to jobs of the future which themselves will increase.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Something which the Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy) said in his comments today, with which I certainly agree, was that as a politician he did not like to lose. I believe all of us as parliamentarians feel the same way. Everyone of us here, I suppose, has run for election or office and has lost at some point. It is never the most pleasant experience. I think we all accept that as part of the democratic process.

I do not suppose any disrespect is intended by the voters toward anyone. They are confronted with the realities, they make up their minds. They throw them in and they throw them out. That is the way Canadian democracy has always functioned. That is the way it worked in the past and that is the way it will work in the future.

Even though I sympathize and understand the sentiment expressed by the Member from Winnipeg, in the last election Canadians indicated the direction they wanted to move. They chose the path to prosperity over a path of continued protectionism. The margin was decisive and the mandate is clear. Once this Bill is passed into law we can proceed to implement the agreement on schedule.

Somebody once said: "Let the people decide". The people have decided and all Members of Parliament, as democrats, agree with the verdict and the supremacy of the verdict of the Canadian people.

I believe Canadians chose the broad avenue of confidence over the blind alley of fear. They chose an instrument which promises more jobs and more wealth for future generations of Canadians instead of the poverty of protectionism.

[Translation]

Canadians and Quebecers alike gave it very serious consideration. They examined the matter very carefully and listened to the provincial governments. They heard various interest groups and assessed the economic impact it might have, be it in British Columbia or in Quebec. They looked at it with great care and attention. They chose greater security in our most important market, they decided that lower cost for consumers and increased productivity were more compelling than hollow appeals to anti-Americanism. Canadians know we cannot compete in the world by withdrawing from it. Canadians know we cannot claim better access for our exports while we erect walls around our own market. That is not the way it works. We are all proud of the values that distinguish us as Canadians. To remain totally distinct, we need the means to do things our way.

[English]

The Free Trade Agreement will in substantial measure ensure our prosperity and help our well-being as Canadians. Canadians have in effect decided. They want their Government and their Parliament to get on with it.

As the Leader of the Opposition said on many occasions, and I agree with him, the people are always right. The people have said yes to a more prosperous Canada. They have said yes to the international competitive challenges of the 1990s. Years from now it will be said of this generation of Canadians that we made the right choice for Canada, that we faced the future with abundant confidence in our country and in ourselves.

I believe that the next century will see a remarkable coming of age of this country, that we will be celebrated at once as a nation for our competitiveness and for our compassion. When the world looks to Canada, people will say as they reflect upon this time, the challenges and manner in which they responded: "There indeed is a nation of people who chose to build. There is a land of opportunity, there indeed, with its imperfections, is a land of tolerance".

I think and I hope it will be said of us that we kept faith, not only with ourselves, but with the place destiny has reserved for our country, Canada. Clearly, all Members of the House of Commons, irrespective of our backgrounds, irrespective of our partisan views, agree that above everything else there comes the national interest and in our own way, in our own democratic dialogue, and disagreements, each of us is promoting his or her view of the national Canadian interest.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1800)

Hon. Roger Simmons (Burin—St. George's): Madam Speaker, I want first to commend the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for recognizing the terrible gaffe his Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) made earlier today when he gave one of those nothing speeches. The Prime Minister has done a remarkable job of covering up for him.

The Prime Minister said a moment ago that this Free Trade Agreement would mean a stronger, more sovereign nation. I say to him that this country could not survive with a policy of unfettered free trade. We would be swamped. We have in many ways here in Canada a branch plant economy in certain important sectors. I say to him that all that would happen with that kind of concept would be the boys cranking up their plants throughout the United States in bad times and shutting down their entire branch plants in Canada. It is bad enough as it is. I say that to him with conviction, because I have it on very good authority.

These lines I just read about a branch plant economy, about our inability to survive unfettered free trade with the United States, these words are not mine originally. I cannot claim credit for those words. No, they were said by a fairly prominent public figure in Canada, a man by the name of Brian Mulroney, the Prime Minister, when he was Leader of the Opposition. That same gentleman who just gave us his usual guff, word for word I quote him, his 1983 version of free trade. I challenge the Minister—

Mr. McDermid: What was the date?

Mr. Simmons: It was June 1983 when he knifed the former Prime Minister. It was the same time.

Mr. McDermid: He wasn't Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Simmons: He was about to be in a day or so. The Minister for homelessness can interject all he wants. He ought instead to go out and read up on his portfolio so he can figure out what he is supposed to be doing. In the meantime, this quotation will stand the test of time. It is from a gentleman who was in the process of jumping the former Prime Minister for the leadership of their Party, and he said: "This country could not survive with a policy of unfettered free trade. We'd be swamped. We have in many ways a branch plant economy in certain important sectors. All that would happen with that kind of concept would be the boys—"

He would know all about the boys because he was one of them. He was one of the branch plant managers. He was the fellow who shut down Schefferville on behalf of the boys back in the States. When he says the boys, he says it in a very collegial way. He knows whereof he speaks. He is one of the boys. He goes on: "All that would happen with that kind of concept would be the boys cranking up their plants throughout the United States in bad times and shutting their entire branch plants in Canada. It's bad enough as it is." That was said by the very same gentleman who just gave us all these sugary phrases about a more sovereign, stronger nation. How can we believe a word he says?

He said also a moment ago that social programs are not at risk. The impression left is that because he says it, because the Prime Minister of this country says it, it therefore has to be right. That same Prime Minister, in September 1984, said almost the same words. He said, "Old age pensions are not at risk. I would never touch old Age Pensions, not me". That was his assurance then. It was a sacred trust in 1984.

It was not very sacred the following spring when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) got his hands on the idea and got his budget draft approved by the Prime Minister, the same Prime Minister who in 1984 was talking about sacred trust. Six months later, in the Budget of February of 1985, he was allowing the Minister of Finance to take the initial steps to gut the old age pension program, to deindex it. A more graphic word is "gut" but it means the same thing to the old people who do not have enough to live on now.

When the Prime Minister stands in this Chamber and gives me his assurances of a more sovereign nation, I have to hearken back to another day when he warned us about unfettered free trade with the United States. When he gives me the assurance about the sanctity of social programs, I remember another day four years ago when he talked about the sacred trust. I very quickly come to the conclusion that I can take his word just as about as much now as I could then.

The curious thing about the Prime Minister today is that he protests too much. He is still trying to convince himself that he won the election. We know he won the election. We understand that. We can read. We can count. Nobody in this Chamber is disputing that point.

Of course the Tories got more seats than the Liberals or the socialists on my left, but the point that the Prime Minister is missing or completely skating around is that there are an awful lot—forget percentages if you wish—there is a large body of people with some pretty gut-wrenching concerns about the Free Trade Agreement. At the very least, they want to be assured, not bamboozled by the Prime Minister. They want to be assured, and he could put his money where his mouth is by simply allowing an amendment to this resolution.

• (1810)

As the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy) has proposed, nothing in this agreement will invade the sanctity or will disrupt social programs. If he is as concerned about the seniors of this country as he pretended a few moments ago, let him put his money where his mouth is. Let him allow at least one amendment. We have proposed several. The Prime Minister would put a lot of minds at ease tonight if he, instead of giving blind assurances—which blind assurances have not been worth the paper they were written on in the past as we know—would allow that one amendment from the Member for Winnipeg South Centre, which would have the backing of every Member of this House I am sure. It would say that nothing in this agreement could ever touch our social program package here in Canada. He says: “Don’t worry. It is all under control”.

I represent a riding called Burin—St. George’s, with 158 communities stretched along the south coast of Newfoundland and up part of the west coast. Included in the riding are many people below the poverty line. We have many people who are aged. We have many people whose mother tongue is English and quite a few whose mother tongue is French. All of these people would be very much at ease tonight if they could have the assurance that their social programs will not be interfered with.

I find it curious that the Prime Minister and the negotiators over the last couple of years did not think it needful to protect social programs. By the way, the assurance in the negotiations that nothing will be done to impede social programs is not worth an awful lot when you realize that while these negotiators did not have time to put in a caveat to protect social programs, they had a lot of time to protect the beer and the wine industry. They had a lot of time to put in a caveat that provides a de facto factor subsidy to Americans in terms of our energy.

Do not give me this guff and puff about “Well, there was no need to protect social programs because the Americans are our friends. They have always been our friends and they would never do anything like that to us”. Tell that to the lumber people. Tell that to the people in the shakes and shingles industry. See what they will do when they get a chance and go behind your back. If there was no need to protect social programs because of that great American propensity for fair play, why was there a need to rush in to protect the wine and the beer industry? Why was there a need to subsidize our energy to the Americans?

I heard the Prime Minister talk about not believing in stridency as a substitute for policy. He does not believe in stridency. He believes in acquiescence. He would make a deal with anybody as long as that person loves him. He would give the shop away as long as he can smile through it all. It is the arrogance, unmitigated gall, to come in here with a straight face and tell us that this Free Trade Agreement is the best thing since sliced bread.

Incidentally, the Prime Minister has discovered acid rain. After four years, he has actually discovered acid rain. He is going to solve the problem. Where has he been for the last four years when our lakes have been polluted because of the industrial plants in the north-eastern United States? Our fish are dying in Newfoundland. Where has he been, Madam Speaker? Finally somebody told the Prime Minister—one of his speech writers dropped a new phrase on him—acid rain. I bet he has gone out to buy a bottle to see what it taste like.

Liberals support free trade, Madam Speaker. I am going to give you the names of a few people who did and do support free trade long before the leadership candidate of 1983 from Baie Comeau was telling us of the evils of free trade. Men like Mackenzie King, Louis St. Laurent, Lester Pearson, Pierre Trudeau, John Turner, five Liberal Canadian Prime Ministers in this country who believed so much in free trade between Canada and the United States that they among them during their respective terms of office achieved a free trade agreement with the United States whereby 80 per cent of all the goods moving between the two countries moved without barrier. That is how much we believed and still believe in free trade.

We believe so much that we have facilitated free trade movement of 80 per cent of all of our goods between the two countries. What is this fuss about? What is it that brings us here a couple of days before Santa Claus time? We would all be home with our families if we had any basic common sense. Why is it that the Pearsons the Kings and the St. Laurents of this world did not allow that 20 per cent to move without trade barriers, without tariff? They recognized, as we recognize in this Party, that the price was too high.

I say to the Prime Minister, you can have 100 per cent free trade. Nobody has ever begged that question. The question we ask is at what price. Is the price worth it to get the other 20 per cent? The answer is no.

Embodied in the answer are a lot of other questions. Yes, about social programs. Yes, there are questions about regional development. You have only to look at the plant closings, Gillette, P.G. Canada, British Footwear, Northern Telecom, Canada Packers, and Ortho Diagnostic. You have only to look at the closures since November 21—closures since November 21 in terms of the announcement but decisions made before November 21 and sat on. Get used to it. You will hear more about it, Madam Speaker. That is why we have not rushed in to give away the shop for the sake of the other 20 per cent. We realized then and we realize now the silly trade-off, the unconscionable trade-off, the unjustifiable trade-off that would be involved thereby. Yes, we support free trade in this Party because we invented free trade. We are the Party that allowed 80 per cent of our goods to trade between the two countries free of tariffs. Liberals know a sell-out when we see one. We see one.

The retired judge in Alberta Marjorie Bowker was quoted often during the election. She found in her study of the Free Trade Agreement that half of the chapters in the agreement had nothing to do with free trade at all. They talk about economic union with the United States of America.

An Hon. Member: She was a family court judge.

• (1820)

Mr. Simmons: Why this unseemly rush three days before Christmas? In real terms, why do we find ourselves in this Chamber?

There is nothing magic about the date of January 1. The whole world will not come tumbling down if the agreement does not go through the House by January 1. That is only a ruse in order that the Prime Minister can ram this legislation through when the people of the country are out buying Christmas gifts and putting up trees.

It could have been done in a much more orderly fashion, if the Prime Minister had the compassion and concern for the business and the future of the country that he endows once in a while when he comes in here. He could have had it done in a more orderly, more honest, and less hypocritical fashion if he had allowed Christmas to take its course, and then in January he could have called us all together and had a sensible debate about an issue which affects the very future of the country.

In conclusion, in many respects it is a seriously flawed agreement. I wish to mention the job that has been done on the shipbuilding industry as a result of the Free Trade Agreement. I have here an industry profile published by the Minister of State for Industry Science and Technology (Mr. Oberle). It mentions in here that the United States protects its domestic shipbuilding through the Jones Act. The following is a quote from the document that the Minister put out this week: "Under the FTA tariff barriers on commercial vessels will be eliminated over a 10-year period". That means that boats can be brought into Canada free of tariff. However, the major obstacle for the Canadian marine industry, the Jones Act, will remain unchanged.

That sums up what we have been saying about the Free Trade Agreement. It is a one-way deal. It is a win-win situation for the United States and a lose-lose situation for Canada. Nobody will feel that more than the people in Marystown in my riding.

I could also talk about my concerns in terms of the basic sovereignty issue, the regional development issue, job losses, and all this talk about job gains. They will be marginal, low quality, low-wage jobs. We will be the hewers of wood and the drawers of water for the Americans if this thing really gets rolling.

In conclusion, of course we accept the verdict of the electorate. However, we are under no obligation to accept the policies of the winning party, particularly when those policies involve the sell-out of a way of life, and the sell-out of a country. The real winners in this election were not the Tories. The real winners were big business. They bought this one and we are going to pay for it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Questions and comments.

Mrs. Finestone: Madam Speaker, I sincerely hope that following the celebrations those of us Canadians who are very interested in what is going on in the House of Commons, as we sit here on the eve of a very important holiday for the people of this country, will take advantage of this moment and re-read the well articulated remarks of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy). He outlined for all of us the type of concerns we have as Canadians, which we have every right to express in the House. They are the types of concerns which agree that, fine, the people of Canada spoke.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wanted to ensure that the Hon. Member knew that she was on questions or comments.

Mrs. Finestone: Excuse me, I was on debate. However, I would certainly be pleased to ask my colleague a question.

Does the Hon. Member feel that the absence of any clear enunciation in the Free Trade Agreement was the cause for anxiety felt by many seniors, and by many people who are concerned about the social network that we have in place in this country? Was it the absence in the agreement of any clear definition that those programs are not to be touched that caused many of those concerns?

Mr. Simmons: I thank my colleague, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone), for her question. Of course, she is correct. Let us think of the anxiety that could have been avoided had the Government and the negotiators the same concern for social programs as for the beer and wine industry.

I say to my friends on the government side, who seem to be amused that we should put the minds of senior citizens at ease, that the Government should have included a single sentence and got the signature of the American negotiator on that point. That is what it is all about. We have seen the Americans before on those issues. The shakes and shingles is the latest case.

In Atlantic Canada we saw the reaction and the manner of the Americans in terms of the fisheries issues. They told us one thing, and the next morning they stopped all our fresh produce, all our fish, at the border. In my riding alone there are 15,000 jobs—I think that the Minister of homeless is blowing again. Once in a while he comes awake and surfaces, and then luckily for all concerned he goes back to sleep.

Mr. McDermid: That is like you. Every four years you surface.

Mr. Simmons: I have been active during the last four years. I had good term in the Newfoundland House of Assembly, spent a year as the Leader of the Opposition, missed my friend from Brampton, and decided to come back and keep an eye on him.

Mr. McDermid: That is funny. You never wrote, you never called.

Mr. Simmons: My friend, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal, puts her finger on the very nub of the issue. That one sentence in the whole agreement, a sentence no longer than that which protects the beer industry, as the one that protects the wine industry, a sentence only half as long gives the Americans the whole shop in terms of our subsidizing energy so we can give it to the Americans. I say to the gentlemen opposite that a sentence that short would have relieved a lot of minds and would have avoided a lot of concern during the campaign.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): It would have meant no deal.

Mr. Simmons: My friend, the Hon. Member for Gloucester (Mr. Young), makes the point. That is exactly it. But had that phrase been insisted upon by the Prime Minister and his negotiators, would there have been a deal at all? That is what Members opposite are skating around with their fine phrases about social programs.

I ask you to decide, Madam Speaker, whether their phrases are worth the paper that they are written on, given the fact that in the September 1984 election the Prime Minister said the same type of phrases about old age pensions.

As the Hon. Member for Mount Royal so nicely pointed out, not only were the seniors concerned because of the absence of any assurance in the agreement, but they were concerned for another reason. They had had bitter experience with this Prime Minister. They had learned not to take his word, and they were not about to be led down the garden path twice in a row by the same guy.

Mr. Parent: The Hon. Member from Newfoundland was talking about the negotiations which had just taken place. I know the Member was present when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave his speech today. The Prime Minister had glowing words for our chief negotiator, Mr. Reisman. In view of that fact, would the Hon. Member comment on the manner in which the negotiations were carried on by Mr. Reisman?

• (1830)

Mr. Simmons: Hon. Members will recognize that I was not at the negotiation table. I was, however, before the television set watching the public manifestations of those negotiations.

I am not sure of the degree to which we can blame Mr. Reisman. He had his instructions. It is his political masters who ought to have hemmed him in a bit more, who ought to have told him: "Simon, you sign no deal unless our social programs are specifically protected. Simon, you don't sign that agreement if our long tradition of regional development is violated".

An Hon. Member: Simon says.

Mr. Simmons: That is the point. Who was doing the saying? Was it the political masters, or was it Simon who was doing the saying?

I want to say one more thing about Simon, whatever his credentials, and I believe that they are considerable in the area of negotiation; I will not downplay that. However, as a public servant, he has much to learn.

One of the most galling aspects of the last campaign was not only did we have to run against Canadian and American big business with their millions, with the Tories and the socialists thrown in as bystanders, we had to fight Simon as well. We were fighting the armchair expert, the person who was accountable to no one, save for the Prime Minister. We had to contend with his blow by blow analysis of what ought to be the case in terms of the governing of this country.

What a sham! The Prime Minister, had he had any understanding of the institutions of government at all, would have given the guy the flick for opening his mouth.

An Hon. Member: Give him the hook.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Elk Island, on debate.

Mr. Brian O'Kurley (Elk Island): Madam Speaker, it is indeed an honour and a great privilege to have this opportunity to speak in the Parliament of Canada during this historic free trade debate.

Before entering into my remarks in support of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, let me express my sincere appreciation to the fine people of the new constituency of Elk Island for their tremendous support of me and of the Progressive Conservative Party during the recent federal election.

The new federal riding of Elk Island was formed by combining sections of three other ridings: Vegreville, Pembina, and Wetaskiwin. Elk Island includes a special blend of agricultural, industrial and urban interests. The riding of Elk Island has a population of over 77,000 people. The people of Elk Island are a diverse, strong and vibrant people. They are hard working people, with high standards and values. Many are pioneers or descendants of pioneers who, through determination and hard work, have built the modern thriving community in which they live.

The main population centres in Elk Island are Sherwood Park, Fort Saskatchewan, and Beaumont. Elk Island also includes the communities of Lamont, Chipman, St. Michael, Bruderheim, Josephberg, Ardrossan, New Sarepta, Looma, Rollie View, and Hay Lakes.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I am honoured, Madam Speaker, to represent the good people of Elk Island, all of whom contribute to a very rich cultural mosaic. In addition to a large number of people of British descent, over 7,000 of the residents of Elk Island share German ethnic backgrounds, and nearly 6,000 are of Ukrainian heritage.

We are also proud to have a significant French component and a significant Dutch component.

We are indeed culturally rich in Elk Island, with fine people from many cultures in addition to those I have already mentioned, including Poles, aboriginal people, Chinese, South Asian, and others.

As we are in the Christmas season, Madam Speaker, let me offer to all of the good people of Elk Island, on behalf of my wife and our children, my sincere best wishes for a healthy, happy and peaceful holiday season. As well, on behalf of all of us in the riding of Elk Island, please let me extend our very best wishes to all Canadians from coast to coast for a joyous and pleasant holiday season.

It is a great honour for me, Madam Speaker, to speak in the Parliament of Canada today, and I should like specifically to express my appreciation to my parents, Nicholas and Mary O'Kurley, who helped me to develop a respect and a love for Canada.

I will be speaking in favour of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, Madam Speaker. I believe it is an agreement that is good for Elk Island, and we in Elk Island believe that it will be good for Alberta and for Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Kurley: We, the people of Canada, have just come through one of the most important elections in Canadian history. The voters in my riding, as in other parts of Canada, were faced with a major issue. The issue was not necessarily just free trade; the real issue in the election campaign was economic management. Free trade was only a part of the larger over-all issue of managing Canada's economy.

Canadians from sea to sea elected a Progressive Conservative majority Government because they believe that this Party is the one most capable of maintaining economic stability and managing Canada's economic future.

In Elk Island, 85 per cent of eligible voters turned out to deliver their message, and the message was a resounding "yes" to Prime Minister Mulroney's Progressive

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Conservative Government and a definite "yes" to free trade.

The United States is by far Alberta's largest export market, accounting for about 75 per cent of total exports. In 1985, the value of exports to the United States exceeded $10 billion, with natural gas and crude petroleum exports accounting for 50 per cent.

The Economic Council of Canada suggests that Alberta's output could increase by 3.5 per cent, more than the national average of 3.3 per cent. According to the Canada West Foundation, Alberta could have the most to gain of all of the western provinces, and perhaps of all provinces.

The Free Trade Agreement creates a long-term stable environment, an environment which will help Alberta's energy sector plan for the future. As Hon. Members will be aware, Alberta's energy sector fears the possibility of American protectionism. Under the Free Trade Agreement, the U.S. is prohibited from implementing energy import fees, surcharges, taxes, and quotas in the future. The United States, further, is committed to consultation and disputes settlement procedures on regulatory rulings.

Alberta's exports of natural gas to the United States represent 35 per cent of total Alberta production. Crude oil exports to the U.S. amount to $3 billion, or 25 per cent of total Alberta production.

Canada's energy future depends upon oil and gas projects such as the oil sands megaproject. The Free Trade Agreement will provide the assurance of access to a large market, something that is necessary to support such projects.

• (1840)

Allow me to speak briefly about agriculture. When I speak about agriculture, I speak not only about farmers. When I speak about agriculture, I speak about jobs in fertilizer plants. When I speak about agriculture, I speak about small businesses and small towns that depend on a healthy farm economy. When I speak about agriculture, I speak about farm implement dealerships, grocery stores, restaurants, service stations, and many other small businesses that depend upon a healthy farm economy. When the farmer has a dollar in his pocket, they all benefit.

Canadian farmers are among the greatest traders in the world. It is vital to our economy that agricultural producers be allowed to sell their produce in Canada, the United States, and around the world. That is why it cannot be over-emphasized that Canadian agriculture is a big winner under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. That agreement will greatly benefit Canada's farmers, food processors, and consumers.

One of every ten Canadians is involved in the food production chain. Canada exports almost $3 billion every year in farm products to the U.S., our largest export market. Including grains and oilseeds, over half of our food product exports is to the U.S.

Throughout the free trade negotiations the concerns of the agricultural community were of utmost importance to the Government. Canada went into the negotiations insisting that we would maintain our marketing boards and that is exactly what we achieved. We have ensured that our supply-management systems will remain intact. Nothing but nothing in the agreement jeopardizes the continued operation of Canada's supply-management systems, including those for dairy products, poultry and eggs. Other supply-management systems can be added, if desired, in the future, provided that they are in accordance with our rights under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

The FTA will provide more assured and predictable access to the U.S. market for Canadian agriculture and food exporters. Hog and cattle producers, meat packers, and other groups who have been the target of U.S. countervailing duties, anti-dumping and safeguard actions will appreciate the provisions that the FTA creates. For the first time a process for settling trade disputes that develop between Canada and the U.S. will be established. On that I would like to be a little more precise, so let me give an overview of some of the benefits of the agreement by sector.

For dairy producers, the made-in-Canada arrangement for producing, marketing and pricing milk, our milk marketing boards, is secure. Our import control list is secure and no increases were granted in the import quotas for dairy products. Ice cream and yogurt were added to Canada's import control list earlier this year. For egg and poultry producers, Canada retains its import quotas for poultry, eggs, and related products. For beef, veal and pork producers, access to the U.S. market for their exports is improved and secured under the FTA as both countries have agreed to exempt each other from meat import laws.

For wheat and grain producers the agreement will not jeopardize the continued operation of the Canadian Wheat Board. The agreement by both countries not to impose import restrictions in the future will provide security of access for grains and oilseeds. Finally, both Canada and the U.S. have pledged to further their efforts to seek solutions to the ongoing international problems of agricultural subsidies through multilateral negotiations.

Both Canada and the U.S. have much to gain from an improved trading environment for agricultural products. While there will continue to be protection for producers who choose to concentrate on serving only the Canadian market, our export oriented farmers and food processors will gain guaranteed access to the biggest and fastest growing agricultural market in the world.

Farmers for Free Trade, an organization made up of 36 agricultural groups and food processors, summed it up best recently when they said: "When you produce some of the best quality farm products in the world, don't you want the freedom to sell to the wealthiest consumer market in the world?" Of course, you do. That is why most Canadian farmers and processors want free trade with the U.S. Americans will pay for that unique quality.

Alberta's largest market for agriculture and food products is the U.S. It is a key to the future development of this industry. Alberta agriculture and food product exports to the U.S. totalled $372 million in 1986.

The U.S. is a relatively small market for Canadian grain and oilseed exports. Under the FTA there is room for growth in certain areas such as rapeseed, oil, high quality oats, malting barley and wheat. The removal of U.S. tariffs on these products will benefit Canadian producers.

Canada has obtained access which is more secure and free of tariffs and other barriers for agriculture and food products of major export interest. The existing marketing systems for dairy, poultry, and egg products are maintained. The right to implement new supply-management programs and import controls under the GATT is retained. The creation of an open investment climate and a free energy market, the elimination of the damaging constraints of federal policies like FIRA and the NEP, will result in a resurgence of investment in the oil and gas sector. Furthermore, this new activity in the energy industry will stimulate Alberta's service industries. This will mean that an expanding western economy in western energy translates into more jobs for steelworkers and equipment manufacturers.

Interest in and support for the FTA in Alberta is very high. The business community is excited about the challenge and by the opportunity to compete in a more secure and open atmosphere. Albertans have known a lot of challenges in the last few years. The devastation of the ill-conceived National Energy Program was compounded by the rapid decline in world oil prices. Since 1984 Alberta's industries have been streamlining and restructuring. With the many challenges the Alberta economy faces, the free trade legislation at least offers some security in that it provides stable and beneficial bases on which to move into the 21st century.

Merci beaucoup, Madame la présidente.

Mr. Brewin: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member may wish to defer being congratulated for just a second, although I do join with his colleagues in congratulating him on his speech.

I have a question for him. I always thought that Alberta Conservatives were strong defenders of provincial rights, particularly on energy.

Given that Section 92 of the Constitution Act gives provinces control over development, conservation and management of non-renewable energy, how does the Hon. Member square what I presume to be his concerns about provincial jurisdiction with the Free Trade Agreement's clear interference with provincial rights in the energy field, particularly the restrictions that it imposes on the rights of provinces to intervene in exercising their jurisdiction under the Constitution Act?

• (1850)

Mr. O'Kurley: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his very good question. In his question he referred to our obligation to share our energy in times of declared energy shortage. What should be brought to the attention of the House is that our position with regard to Canada's obligation to share our energy in times of shortage was not established under the Free Trade Agreement. That obligation was established in 1974 by Prime Minister Trudeau and the Liberal Government in an agreement that was made with 21 other industrial countries to share energy during times of world shortages.

With respect to provincial control of resources, they still have control. We do not have to sell one spoonful of oil to the United States if we do not want to. The only thing that there is an obligation with respect to sharing is during times of a declared energy shortage.

With regard to pricing, if we have in Alberta a producer who can find a consumer in the United States willing to pay twice the world price of oil, then he can sell it. There is nothing in the agreement that limits that.

Mr. Caccia: Madam Speaker, the Hon. Member for Elk Island (Mr. O'Kurley) has spoken eloquently and at length about agriculture. I notice that he did not once mention pesticides. I am sure he is aware of the fact that there is a difference in the management and the administration of pesticides in Canada and the United States. Basically, in essence, in Canada we have a system whereby pesticides are licensed pursuant to the pest control products legislation. That legislation places the emphasis squarely on demonstrating the safety of the product on human health.

South of the border in the U.S. pesticide legislation requires a balancing of risks and benefits. In the risks are also included health risks sometimes related to carcinogenic consequences. Considering the uncertainties in terms of quantifying risks our system is a much safer one than the American one.

The Hon. Member is interested in agriculture and must know about pesticides. Would he support an amendment to Schedule VII in Chapter Seven of the trade agreement which would give the Government of Canada the powers to ban, restrict and regulate pesticides in Canada in order to protect public health? Is the Hon. Member aware of this serious shortcoming? Would he support an amendment to that effect?

Mr. O'Kurley: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. With respect to pesticides, they would fall under the environment. There is a specific clause in the agreement that states that there is nothing in the agreement that limits Canada's ability, or for that matter, the ability of the United States, to bring in any legislation that would protect the health or the environment of either country. Thus the amendment seems not to be necessary in that regard. This is a trade agreement on trade and tariffs. If we want to speak about the environment then we will have an agreement on environment.

Mr. Karygiannis: Madam Speaker, 57 per cent of the Canadian people said no to the deal, yet our friend from Elk Island stands up to try to defend it.

An Hon. Member: Is that a question?

Mr. Karygiannis: I will put the question to him. The Tories always liked for Canada to make money. They have always been supporters of profits. In the last three days of the federal election they spent millions of dollars through their friends in order to buy their mandate.

If the Hon. Member is such a great supporter of profits my question is this: Why has the Government made it impossible for Canadians to make a profit from our energy resources? Why should the Americans pay the same for our resources as we do? Why should we not make a profit from them?

Mr. O'Kurley: Madam Speaker, my assumption is that the Hon. Member opposite was referring to a differentiated price for energy. As I mentioned, we have no obligation whatsoever to sell any energy at all. If we can find a buyer in the United States who will pay twice the price for any of our energy, we can go ahead and do that.

Mr. Pagtakhan: Madam Speaker, I would like to ask the Hon. Member some short interrelated questions. Given the principle that any quality assurance program has to be monitored to study the impact on citizens, would the Hon. Member agree that when implemented the trade deal has to be monitored by Parliament to ensure that Canadians are not impacted negatively?

Second, given two honest differences of opinion in the interpretation of any legal document such as the Free Trade Agreement, does the Hon. Member not agree to the principle that a good lawyer and a common man would ask that a clarification of the agreement be put into writing?

Third, if at the end of the seven-year review of the subsidy program the United States gives Canada an ultimatum, surrender subsidization or terminate the agreement, what would be the Hon. Member's stand?

Mr. O'Kurley: Madam Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question. With respect to subsidies and the suggestion that our subsidies are threatened, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade provides protection for our social programs so that any social programs such as family allowance, medicare, seniors' pensions, or unemployment insurance are generally available.

If we learn from the fisheries case in 1985, which issue was taken to court, we will remember that unemployment insurance was challenged as an unfair trade subsidy. In fact, the case was thrown out of court on the basis of the GATT legislation which states specifically that any social program which is generally available is not considered to be a trade subsidy.

Mr. MacWilliam: Madam Speaker, with regard to the Hon. Member's comments that Canadian agriculture is a winner under free trade, I wish first to advise the Hon. Member that independent studies have indicated that in British Columbia over 30,000 agricultural jobs may be on the line with the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement. For the Hon. Member's information, Mr. Gerald Geen, who is the President of the B.C. Tree Fruits Association, has publicly stated that the tree fruit industry in British Columbia will be wiped out by the Free Trade Agreement.

There are grape growers throughout the Okanagan and here in Ontario whose crops will be eliminated once free trade is implemented. The Government has as much as admitted the loss of the grape growing industry with the $28 million subsidy applied to the B.C. grape growers so that they can pull out their vines and ease their way in to oblivion.

One of the policy advisers to the Government, when he was in the Okanagan and being pressed by farmers with regard to the impact on trade, said: "When it comes right down to it some things are more important politically than they are economically". I was there to hear the remark and I wrote it down.

My question in regard to the devastating impact this trade deal will have on the tree fruit industry, the agriculturalists of the Okanagan Valley, and the grape growing industry is: How is this trade agreement beneficial to those grape growers who are having to pull their vines out because they will no longer be competitive?

Mr. O'Kurley: I thank the Hon. Member opposite for the question. With regard to adjustments and moving from one walk of life to another, there is a normal rate of adjustment with or without the Free Trade Agreement. It has been said that if there are 100 firms or companies, 18 of those would normally change. Under the Free Trade Agreement there will be one extra. With respect to the significance of changes that will result from free trade, that is not a serious problem.

With respect to the grape growers, the Niagara fruit belt where there are many grape growers, they gave strong support to Progressive Conservative Members, which indicates that grape growers were in favour of the Free Trade Agreement. It indicates that free trade was not the major issue in the campaign.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The major issue in the campaign was that of economic management. They put their trust in the Conservative Government because they knew what the alternatives were.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The time for questions and comments has expired. Resuming debate, the Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Madam Speaker, I am glad to be back in this House participating in this free trade debate. We as parliamentarians are fulfilling our responsibilities and the honoured traditions of this House by representing the people who elected us to come back here and ask questions. The most important aspect of the exercise we are presently involved in is the need for clarification, assurances, and understanding. There is definitely no consensus out there. People are confused and concerned. People have questions.

We would be well served if the House had been of better humour. We would be well served if many of the questions posed in this House by the Opposition could get answers that would make people feel good and know that the future will be as prosperous as the Government has held it to be.

I will not argue the merits or the lack of merits of the Free Trade Agreement per se. The Liberal Party is a free trade Party. I am a free trade person by spirit, background, and training. I am a free trader from my family, my husband, and from my own inclinations.

When I sat down to study this Free Trade Agreement, many questions arose. Many concerns surfaced. It is only in the best interests of harmony, peace, justice, and equity that those questions be answered and many of the concerns laid to rest.

It is true that this is a living document. It will be defined over the next five to seven years. While that is being done, we must keep in mind the concerns that are fundamental to our future and to the future of our children.

We came to this House because we are proud as Canadians. We wish to retain that pride of self, that particularity of person, and the persona that we have developed as a result of the social and economic contract which we have developed as Canadians over the history of this wonderful land. It is a young history. It is only 120-odd years old. We are flourishing in terms of our cultural development and whole ethic of management. We have a social contract that is different from that of our neighbours to the south. I call the Americans neighbours and friends because they are. I do not particularly care for the language which indicates an anti-Americanism of spirit on any side of the House.

This country has developed a culture that is indigenous to itself. On the one side we have a scale that is held on two sides by a balance. It is that balance, the economic prosperity which is brought by good business heads, a fine labour force, by able people who are prepared to work—

[Translation]

—in both languages. It makes no difference which language is used, but the desire to work, to be proud of oneself—

[English]

That is part of our Canadian culture.

On the other side are the aspects of the life we have put together, the social contract and the social fabric that are so key. Those things are called medicare, pensions, unemployment insurance, and workers' compensation. These are perceived to be the kinds of fair balance—

[Translation]

Social equity, equality under law, an even balance. That is what Canadians want and need to express their cultural identity. That is what Canadians hold dear.

[English]

The cultural, economic, and social fabric are intimately interlinked in this country. That makes us different from our American cousins. It is that fabric that we must maintain here in Canada. It is that fabric that is being questioned. I see my colleague from Calgary where?

Mr. Edwards: That is an unkind thought.

Mrs. Finestone: Anywhere. Wherever.

Mr. Edwards: Edmonton.

Mrs. Finestone: Edmonton. I forgot about that competition. After visiting both those cities, I certainly would have an interesting choice in your fair city.

Those are the contracts that we want to assure. If you listen in a dispassionate, pragmatic, cerebral way and remove the emotion, the questions posed by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy) are well-founded, plausible questions. The recommendations he wished to present for inclusion as part and parcel of the agreement that was signed, the exemptions that would have allayed the fears, were well thought through and well-founded.

Having spent part of the summer on the free trade committee, a lot of the question marks would have disappeared had those clarifications been brought forth in the legislation. I would like to read some of them into the record. They are important. When this Centre for International Trade which the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced tonight is established here in Ottawa, I would hope that some of these matters will be carefully surveyed and supervised and that we can be assured that they will be maintained and kept in place.

Some have said that the negotiations were done by candle-light. Some were very upset when Simon Reisman, the ambassador, walked away and when the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), and Mr. Burney of the Prime Minister's Office ran down to sign that document finally and to save this agreement. The questions still remained. Mr. Reisman walked out for a reason. That reason, I hope, will be proven unfounded.

Let us look at the type of negotiations that must be kept off the table, kept clear, neat, and clean as part of the contract. This agreement must prevent, limit, and restrict the Government of Canada for allowing the exercise of loss of authority in any of the following areas: In social policy, including but not limiting the continuation and existence and establishment of new health care, unemployment insurance, workers' compensation, child care, pensions, minimum wage laws, labour law, and maternity benefit programs.

• (1910)

The Prime Minister waxed eloquent about development and people being able to live a full and wonderful life outside the centres of this country, whether in the hills of Nova Scotia, in the North, or on the islands. By what means will regional development programs be assured? We only wanted an amendment stating quite clearly that there would be an exemption with respect to regional industrial development.

The amendment concerned the use of Canadian natural resources, including but not limited to energy, mineral, and water resources. We wanted a clarification.

We wanted clarification of Canadian cultural industries, including but not limited to the performing and visual arts and new cultural technologies and forms as they may emerge.

Another concern is the maintenance and development of a viable food production and processing industry. There is the protection of the environment and health of Canadians, and any and all other matters essential to the health and security of Canadians.

The Government told us not to worry, but for the sake of assurance I would ask the Government to include it in the agreement as an exemption. The Government has not been sufficiently open-minded or concerned about the views of its constituents, if it does not understand that including these exemptions will avoid the concerns that over 50 per cent of the electorate has expressed.

I accept that the Government has a legitimate right to govern. However, the majority of Canadians did not vote for the Government, and it has a double obligation to answer to them in a clear, unequivocal way.

[Translation]

—unequivocally, by including these exemptions in the Agreement.

[English]

I want to deal with an area in which I have had a great interest in the last four years of my mandate. I am talking about the cultural sector.

The agreement should have included a much stronger clause than what is contained in Article 2005 dealing with the supposed elimination of any concerns about cultural industries. There must be a much stronger clause which expressly states that no retaliatory measures may be taken against any Canadian government initiatives in the interest of the protection or promotion of cultural businesses in Canada.

The fact that the Government has not taken such action is disconcerting.

Some of the documents produced by the American Government in this area caused great concern. For instance, let me refer to a document that I brought to the attention of the House in May, 1988. It contains the recommendations of the American Finance Ways and Means Committee to the President of the United States on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It was tabled and released on May 27, 1988.

The Senate committee chairman was the Hon. Lloyd Bentsen and the Chairman of the House Committee on Ways and Means was the Hon. Dan Rostenkowski. The report stated with respect to the relationship of the Free Trade Agreement to American federal law that in the event of a conflict between U.S. law and the Free Trade Agreement, U.S. law shall prevail. At that point the Minister was forced to remove a very obnoxious clause contained in the original Free Trade Agreement. Article 8 stated that the Free Trade Agreement would prevail over all Canadian law. Fortunately that ridiculous and poorly conceived clause was removed.

The recommendation with respect to Article 1610 dealing with international agreements was to authorize bilateral negotiations, to liberalize investment rules, to require consultation with diverse U.S. interests, and to establish certain negotiating objectives.

One was the elimination of direct investment screening, which they achieved. Another was the extension of Free Trade Agreement principles to energy and cultural industries to the extent not now covered. This suggests to me that our cultural fabric, the expression of ourselves as a people through our writers, singers, dancers, or those involved in the performing or visual arts, should not get too much exposure. We should not see more of ourselves but more of the American presence. That is not our purpose nor is the policy of the Government.

Shortly after the Americans passed the Free Trade Agreement in June, 1988, the U.S. Bureau of Public Affairs, Department of State, sent an official business communiqué which included a list of questions, answers, and clarifications.

For example, it asked: "Why aren't cultural industries included in the FTA?" The answer is:

The United States is sensitive to Canadian interests in fostering its distinct cultural heritage.

That is very nice. It goes on to say that certain cultural industries are exempt. It goes on to state:

Furthermore, the United States retains the right to rebalance concessions with measures of equivalent effect if future cultural policies are detrimental to our commercial interests.

The American entertainment industry is interested in the bottom line while here it is true that we wrap ourselves in the flag. What is wrong with that? It makes for part of our distinctiveness as Canadians. The answer goes on to state:

The agreement does not require invocation of its dispute settlement provisions in order to take such countermeasures.

Not only are we supposedly exempt, we cannot even go through the dispute settlement mechanism if we have a complaint because we are exempt from it according to Article 1607.

The next question asks: "Doesn't the cultural exception adversely affect U.S. firms?" The answer states:

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

No, the FTA improves Canadian treatment of U.S. commercial interests in the cultural area. It provides for tariff elimination (e.g., on videos, records, printed material)—

The Government should have read the Donner report. While the Government stated that it carefully listened to the SAGITs, one of the most important reports the SAGIT heard was made by the recording industry. The recording industry indicated through the Donner report why it was not pleased with what would happen to the industry.

Our smaller printing and publication industries cannot enjoy the economies of scale and therefore will lose their power to produce some of our own materials.

The answer goes on to state:

In addition, the Free Trade Agreement allows the United States to take measures of equivalent commercial effect in the event that Canada enacts additional restrictions which impair U.S. access to the Canadian market.

In other words, if our attempt to recover our indigenous Canadian culture and access to Canadian culture affects their bottom line, no matter what the industry it will be unacceptable. We cannot even make a cultural impact on the world because the Bureau of Public Affairs goes on to state in its answer:

This right should serve as a dis-incentive to the use of cultural exceptions for measures that, although nominally cultural, have significant commercial effects.

Something nominally cultural would just happen to be our films, books and music. Those are the nominally cultural things which, through the Canada Council, we have seen fit to support. Various other programs, including Telefilm Canada and programs supporting a Canadian concept to the broadcasting industry, are the things that have Canadianized us through the communications industry. Instead, we have gone to a continentalist North American approach which is totally unacceptable.

• (1920)

I know there is not agreement on the part of my colleagues with this vision. We read American documents which indicate to American businesses that they do not have to worry. I suggest that we had better start worrying pretty darn quick.

I have come to the end of what I have to say, I see. I suggest that it would have been in the best interests of this country and of the Free Trade Agreement had the amendment we wanted to propose been debated and accepted by the House. That amendment provided that for greater certainty, nothing in the Act or agreement shall limit or restrict the support of the Government of Canada for the development of cultural industries or cultural business in Canada.

I am speaking not only for myself. The artists and members of the performing industry in Canada are very seriously concerned. They have grave reservations about this Bill. Take a look at what has been done with respect to cultural industries under Article 1607.4. Investment in Canada and the purchase of Canadian cultural properties after 1992 is perfectly allowable under the deal we have now signed. I find that extremely regrettable. I cannot wait for your question, dear friend.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Speaker, it is a treat to which I had looked forward throughout the election campaign, because I had, in spite of what was happening elsewhere in Québec, very little doubt that our hon. friend would be back with us. I know that like many of us, she wondered at one point whether it would be worth doing again. We all have those moments of doubt, but I am delighted, for Mount Royal and for our country, that she is back, and I am sure she will serve very well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Edwards: Now then—

Mrs. Finestone: First some soft soap, and then what?

Mr. Edwards: I find that the artists with whom I have spoken are far more interested in access to the Canadian market than in worrying about what may be happening external to them in a continentalist approach or a commercial approach.

My friend is more precise and more honest than the vast majority of them, but many opposition critics have said that the entire artistic community is rejecting this trade deal.

Just four names come to mind of people in the visual arts field who have embraced this trade deal as having the potential to create more wealth and thereby give us better business to support the arts. They are Ken Danby, Alex Colville, Christopher and Mary Pratt, all well-known, distinguished Canadian visual artists.

To come to my good friend's question and the point that she made about the statements of Congressman Rostenkowski and others, I would ask my hon. friend opposite how U.S. legislators or the U.S. administration would react to each of the statements that have been made in this debate in the House of Commons over the last two weeks.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

If the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy), for example, were taken seriously by the U.S. administration and by the congressional leadership as being representative of a significant body of Canadian thinking, whose view might prevail, would we not think that there might be some kind of a shrinking back and horror on the part of the U.S. administration?

In fact, there are those who have asked, when they have pointed their cigars at the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre, if there is anything on God's green earth that that man is for. My hon. friend, I know, is for Canada, as I think I am, and I would like to ask her whether she sincerely believes that our Canadian sense, that sense that I know she has of being proudly Canadian, has in any way been eroded or impaired over the past shall we say 35 years during which our trade and our close relationship with the United States, largely under the regime of her Party, have grown closer and closer. Is it not true that many of the Canadian cultural and other institutions which we hold so dear have flourished and grown during that period? Is there not truly in this agreement nothing to impair that—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I recognize the Hon. Member for Mount Royal.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to try to answer in a more global sense the questions of my colleague and friend from Edmonton Southwest. At the outset, though, I would like to suggest to him that the remarks of my colleague from Winnipeg South Centre were genuine. He has a son and he is anxious to pass on to his son the same kind of love of country that the Hon. Member has instilled in his children and I have and have instilled in mine.

Over the last 35 years, there has been incredible growth and development in Canada. I said we are a young country. Through the Canada Council and our broadcast policies, we have fortunately put lots of money into trying to promote our artists and their ability to find a medium of expression, whether in the visual or the performing arts.

The Broadcasting Act allows for a great deal of Canadianization, and my concern is that that forms opinions and thoughts. If our children and grandchildren are constantly exposed to American programming, they will not necessarily turn out to be bad people, but they will not turn out to be people with a concept of a Canadian reality.

I am concerned that the capital cost allowance, which was a way to incite the private sector into investing in film distribution and production, was cut out because of pressure from Jack Valenti. The watering down of our film distribution Bill embarrassed the former Minister of Communications whose arm was twisted, as did the Baie Comeau policy and the concept of buying back our own products and distribution potential for our products. All those are now compromised.

All I wanted was assurances. I would recommend that Hon. Members look at Article 1607.3, Article 1607.4, and Article 2011. I do not want to go into the nullification clauses or the divestiture clauses. The concepts were there. The philosophies were there.

• (1930)

The Minister of Energy (Mr. Masse) did a good job. They have all tried but nothing has happened. The Government is now in a position of losing all the effort and initiative that was started by Liberals and carried on by the Conservatives. Cultural protection is an ongoing commitment of which we do not have enough in this House. If we are to be concerned about who we are, the money, support, political policy and political will—not just throwing money but having a vision of where we want to go—must be integrated into the political philosophy and the legislative action of this country. That means a film and a book distribution policy, all the policies that concern marketing, distribution, and exhibition for ourselves first. For the stranger at the gate, 97 per cent of our market they have in filming and 80 per cent they have in film distribution. I do not have to give the Hon. Member the figures. He knows them. Yes, I have serious concerns.

Mr. Brewin: Mr. Speaker, I know the time is brief. Let me just pick up the theme of the Member who has been addressing us. It seems to me that the whole thrust of the free trade initiative taken by the Government is to further commercialize Canadian life. When one discusses and addresses the cultural themes as has the Member, one has to look at the global picture in that sense as well.

What we have, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said during the television debate, is just a commercial agreement. He honoured tonight all the virtues, in particular that of competitiveness. It strikes me that we hope to have a society in Canada that has somewhat different values. One of them that we ought to be cherishing and giving a higher place to is that of a broadly based cultural policy in which all Canadians can share. The only way we can have that is to have a strong

Government that gives support to cultural activities across the board. That is undermined by this agreement.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I would say it is in jeopardy. I do not say that it is totally undermined. We need a clarification so that we can be assured that the exemptions are there. That is what I called for. I agree with what the Hon. Member said.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) on her fine intervention. Would she care to comment on the fact that this week we were not given an opportunity to put forward, discuss, examine, and vote upon amendments which could have improved the quality of this agreement in order to protect culture, the environment, and the health of Canadians?

Mrs. Finestone: I thank the Hon. Member for the question. If there is anything that has made me very sad, it is the fact that the Government has used the guillotine procedure called closure. It is totally unnecessary, not in the interests of Canadians, and is only exacerbating the great difference of opinion expressed through the vote.

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to address Parliament on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, an agreement whose prime purpose is to manage the future growth of a financial agreement that has recently grown to become of increasing interest to United States politicians who wish to save their political skins by relying on trade protectionism.

During the election campaign in my constituency of Regina—Wascana the New Democratic Party, the Liberal-Communist coalition, time after time attempted to frighten our aging population. The opposition was simply out to scare the people with emotional drama and mistruths. It just about worked. As a Progressive Conservative candidate elected from Regina—Wascana I am the first one to represent these citizens in 26 years on the side of government. It took a very special effort to become elected.

It was a very close election running against a high profile Party and a high profile individual in the form of the previous Leader of the Provincial Liberal Party. He is no more. However, I was supported with an extremely strong and well organized campaign team.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank those voters who supported my election. I wish also to assure those who chose otherwise that as a result of my election I will continue my commitment to all as I have the past nine years as mayor of the City of Regina. I commit to the maintenance of a real and genuine concern for the citizens of Regina, my birthplace, my home, and my family's home. I wish also to convey my commitment to the residents of the entire constituency, that of Regina—Wascana, the breadbasket of the world up until this past drought stricken summer.

The recent election campaign is one that I am sure most of Canada regarded with a certain degree of amazement. The campaign provided this amazement in that I am sure that, at least in recent memory, there has not been an election conducted by members of the Opposition who have their statements strongly ridiculed by the media and yet have gone unchallenged. I view this as quite appalling for people seeking public office, to make the kinds of statements that members of the Opposition have made and expect the Canadian public to have any respect for members of those political Parties.

The Opposition said, in attempting to frighten the voters, that in five to seven years our social programs would be considered subsidies. They seem to have this clairvoyant trait that eludes those who are responsible for providing government. They say that five to seven years from now these matters will be singled out and eliminated with some future agreement. If we just listen to that argument, it reaffirms that our social programs are not subject to this agreement. This agreement is what we are signing, not something which is to be determined five to seven years down the road. It is absurd that this agreement should have written into it matters not relative to it.

It is the Opposition's duty to oppose and that it did. They provided opposition to the extent that the media called much of it to task. I quote from an article printed in the Winnipeg Free Press on Thursday, November 3. On page 7 the article is headed "How John Turner misleads on trade", and reads:

The Leader of the Opposition has been lying about the content and impact of the Free Trade Agreement. Statements he makes on the subject, almost without exception—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would just remind the Hon. Member that what a Member cannot say in the House directly should not be said indirectly and I refer precisely to the word "lying".

Mr. Schneider: I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. I thought in quoting from a news article that was permitted. I will withdraw that. I will proceed:

Statements he makes on the subject, almost without exception, are fundamentally untrue.

It seems to me that Canadian citizens would have to ask themselves where is the defence of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to this statement? How can anyone call anyone else—a word I cannot use in this Chamber—in our society without having this slanderous statement pursued through the courts? Where has this pursuit been? I have not seen it. I have not heard it and, therefore, I can only conclude that the statements contained in this newspaper article, effectively, are true. In the event that someone may be under the mistaken impression that the New Democratic Party is exempt from these tactics, let me quote from another article I have entitled “Liberals and NDP wrong about trade deal: Canadian Federation of Labour”. It goes on to state:

Prime Minister Brian Mulroney has won an unexpected backing from the Canadian Federation of Labour for his charge that opposition Parties are misleading voters about free trade in the federal election campaign. Federation President Jim McCambly said the Liberals and New Democrats are suggesting things that are simply not true in their attacks against the free trade pact with the United States.

If industry and media are making these kinds of statements and telling Canadians that the Liberals and the NDP are telling the public things which are not true, are saying to the public that people are doing things that I cannot say in this Chamber, making statements that are fundamentally untrue, who are the public to believe? The Free Trade Agreement has claimed to be or will be responsible for everything from bad weather to mongolism.

The Opposition went on to say that this agreement would motivate Americans to take over our hospitals and make a profit, that we would have a two-tier health system, one for the rich and one for the poor, but we already have hospitals and health care services in Canada that turn a profit. In Ontario alone there are 16 such private profit making hospitals including Hawkesbury. Some are even owned by Americans. Extendicare, a private facility in Saskatchewan and Canada, operates more than 100 high level care homes for senior citizens.

While we are speaking of private profitable health services there is one that operates in the backyard of the Leader of the New Democratic Party with the full knowledge and support of the New Democratic Party, I trust. No, sir, I do not know what kind of deal they have made with Dr. Morgentaler.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Let us talk about why we entered this trade deal, what is in it for us, and why we should enter into a long-term contract to trade with our closest friend and neighbour. Why is it so important now that 80 per cent of our trade is already tariff-free? We entered the agreement for two reasons. We wanted to assure access to the United States for our goods and we wanted exemption from protectionism.

The Free Trade Agreement gives us both. The Free Trade Agreement places the two countries on more of a level playing field for our goods and theirs. It makes us more competitive. It tears down the barriers that inhibit trade. It gives us guaranteed and full market access to a market of 250 million people. Without it we would be the only country in the developed world without an ensured market of at least 100 million people. We would be left out in the cold. Tariffs are not the only form of protectionism. There are quotas, technical barriers, and other artificial irritants at the border.

This agreement eliminates many of these barriers and gives us a binding dispute mechanism to deal with those that are left. Some of the Canadian and American countervail and anti-dumping laws remain intact with the Free Trade Agreement, however we are now equal partners in settling disputes and have a mechanism to deal with them fairly, quickly, and impartially.

On the other hand, any new U.S. trade legislation must be submitted to Canada for formal inspection and negotiation, with the trade deal itself on the line. This was a landmark concession given to Canada by a country which always holds its cards close to its chest.

Perhaps, most important, the Free Trade Agreement exempts us from the omnibus Trade Bill. That is a frightening piece of protectionist legislation passed by the American Congress that imposes quotas and tariffs on other countries which export to the United States. If any American industry thinks that a foreign export is injuring it in any way, the President and the Congress of the United States are mandated to impose a penalty that is a quota or a tariff, unilaterally, to protect that American industry. The Free Trade Agreement gives us an exemption to the omnibus trade Bill.

The Liberals say that they believe in free trade, but that they do not believe in this deal. What would they replace it with? First, they say that they would modernize and strengthen GATT, and amend the mechanism within GATT for reaching decisions. GATT is a 96-Member agreement. How can we, as one country, achieve a modernization and strengthening to our trading arrangement of something to which 96 nations are a party. Let us be realistic. GATT has been evolving since 1947. How could we amend GATT by ourselves when we cannot cut a deal with our best friends and biggest trading partner within GATT? Come now, who would listen?

The second strategy of the Liberals would be to go after multilateral rather than bilateral agreements. Although this would involve a number of nations, my Liberal friends in Regina estimate that it could be accomplished in the short period of time of two to two and a half years.

We are already doing multilateral and bilateral deals as GATT members. The Free Trade Agreement is a model for GATT. It will help speed the GATT process along. However, how would two and a half years be feasible when some of the decisions taken at the time of the Kennedy Round of negotiations in the 1960s still have not been implemented.

Saskatchewan trades around the world. We are looking to expand those markets, particularly in the Pacific Rim. Our largest trading partner is the United States, followed by Japan. After that our next 10 trading partners, in descending order, do not even speak our language.

Third, and perhaps most significant, the Liberals trade strategy calls for sector by sector trade negotiations consistent with GATT. Unfortunately for Canada, GATT frowns upon sector by sector negotiations. It simply will not permit them. GATT considers them sweetheart deals, and they are simple unacceptable. GATT would not tolerate the Auto Pact today, if it had not previously been negotiated. However, that has been protected by the Free Trade Agreement.

What is the NDP's vision of a trade policy for Canada? Is it a call for monetary reform, again reform of a policy which involves all major nations of the developed world? If we cannot do a free trade agreement, then why would anyone in the world listen to us as the voice of reason when it came to establishing a monetary policy?

Members of the NDP state that they are against free trade. They call for managed trade on a sector by sector basis, like the Auto Pact, consistent with GATT. I have previously commented on what GATT thinks about sector by sector arrangements.

The previous Liberal Leader tried it and the protectionist wall around the United States became strong. That is why the Government initiated the Free Trade Agreement in the first place. Members of the Liberal Party say that we should reduce tariffs multilaterally. That is what we are doing through GATT. We are one of 96 nations which include the United States. However, as I said before, it is an extremely slow process that will not give us special access to the U.S. market. It certainly will not protect us from the omnibus trade Bill and growing U.S. protectionist sentiment. The policy of the NDP would inhibit foreign investment, and discourage foreign corporations from setting up shop in Canada and employing our workforce, ordinary Canadians.

A loss of foreign capital would lead to a further drop in the Canadian dollar, higher interest rates, and ultimately a larger deficit. The Free Trade Agreement will entice foreign companies to manufacture in Canada in order to take advantage of our open and secure access to the huge United States market. Foreign investment in manufacturing means jobs for Canadians.

Finally, the NDP wants us to negotiate through GATT using the GATT appeal process. That is tremendously slow and much more cumbersome than the dispute mechanism currently in the Free Trade Agreement. Even with the Free Trade Agreement we are entitled to us the GATT appeal process over the bilateral Free Trade Agreement approach, if we so wish.

In the past GATT, unlike the Free Trade Agreement, has given Canada no protection or reprieve from being side-swiped in the subsidy war between the United States and the European Economic Community. That war has forced our grain prices through the floor, and deficiency payments to farmers have cost Canadian taxpayers billions of dollars.

I have heard much in the House this past week and throughout the campaign about big business and the role that they play with respect to the promotion of the Free Trade Agreement. If one studies the make-up of the shareholders of many big businesses in Canada, one will find that the major shareholders, to good degree, are pension plans. Those pension plans belong to the average Canadian citizen.

It has been said that there has been no consultation in this process. I have documents that indicate that 59 groups appeared as part of the Saskatchewan Public Consultation Process on Trade Negotiations covering a period from August 6 to August 29, 1986, and October 21 to November 23, 1987. On 20 dates hearings were held for 20 different trading sectors. There were an additional 35 town hall meetings covering a period of November 16, 1987 to March 1, 1988.

Perhaps public opinion could best be said by the Ottawa taxi driver who drove me to the airport last Saturday morning. He said: "I voted for Brian Mulroney because Canada needs free trade and he can be trusted".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schneider: That taxi driver has the wisdom to know that wealth means sovereignty. Why do the Liberals and the NDP not have that type of intelligence?

There have been comments made that the Free Trade Agreement is bad for agriculture. Why are the Premiers of our agricultural provinces pushing so hard to get it passed? Do they know something that we do not? Why are the hog marketing boards, the stock growers, the barley, Canola and wheat growers, taking ads out in newspapers across Canada calling themselves "Farmers for Free Trade"? Do they not know what they are talking about?

The Free Trade Agreement will shelter us from American protectionism which is largely aimed at agricultural products: livestock, animal feed, Canola, and grain. Do not take it from me, take it from Fletcher's Meats, flax growers, the United Grain Growers, the Saskatchewan cattle feeders, and Farmers for Free Trade. It is their business and they are very vocal in their support. They are not big business. They are ordinary Canadians.

What about the business community? The Canadian Chamber of Commerce, the Consumers' Association of Canada, the Retail Council of Canada, the Life and Health Insurance Association of Canada, the Canadian Association of Small Business, and the Manufacturers' Association are among 31 associations that strongly endorse trade in a brochure entitled "Free Trade—Good for Canada". There is much to do about big business benefiting from the Free Trade Agreement.

I have been in contact with the owner of a small furniture business in the City of Regina. He has been in business for 25 years making hospital and hotel furniture, computer tables, and the like. He is anxiously looking forward to free trade and getting into that bigger market. Just let us give him a chance. He feels that he is able to compete and in anticipation is planning a growth strategy for the next few years. Many feel that, because the United States population is 10 times our size, we would have great difficulty competing in an open and free market.

Let me talk about Sweeprite Manufacturing of Regina, a manufacturer of street sweepers. In speaking to the owner, a Hungarian immigrant, Les Hulicsko, he advised me that in the manufacture of a street sweeper he must bring component parts into Canada from the United States and pay a duty. Once the street sweeper is completed and exported to the United States, there is another duty levied. He said that if both those duties were eliminated not only could he provide better wages for his employees but he could expand his operation, be even more competitive than he is in the United States, and create more jobs. In fact, 75 per cent of his street sweepers are already sold into the American market.

There are not many in the House who know that adjacent to my constituency is the constituency of Moose Jaw—Lake Centre previously served extremely well by Mr. Bill Gottselig in the previous Government.

Moose Jaw—Lake Centre is now left without government representation, but that does not bother me. I investigated a small clothing manufacturer in the City of Moose Jaw called CanaDay's. It is a manufacturer of leisure wear, employing some 125 people. It was suggested by the NDP Member for the riding in which CanaDay's is located that CanaDay's is fearful of the Free Trade Agreement.

• (1950)

He must have been speaking to someone other than those to whom I spoke, because the indication that I got was that the major concern of CanaDay's with respect to ability or inability to compete in the United States relates to technological advances. It seems that a major U.S. competitor of CanaDay's has acquired computerized laser cutting equipment. This laser cutting process is one that CanaDay's will have to watch closely, Free Trade Agreement or not. It is a manufacturer of quality products, and it feels that, by keeping its quality standards high, as Canadian manufacturers are known to do, it will be able to maintain its current share of the market.

The Free Trade Agreement does not pose a threat to CanaDay's.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Schneider: We also have in Moose Jaw a small meat packing plant employing 28 people. If growth continues, as is predicted under the Free Trade Agreement, that plant will have to increase its staff by 55 per cent. That is 15 union jobs generated because of the Progressive Conservative initiative as it relates to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I have a photograph of my father taken during the 1950s, at a time when he was walking the picket line. The placard he was carrying at the time had words to the effect "Protect us from Technology".

As much as that fear was in place then, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you it exists today, but not to the same degree. We have learned to work with technological advancements and to use technology to provide us with greater social benefits, a greater standard of living, and a better workplace.

The debate throughout the past few days and months has centred on who supports and who does not support free trade.

Three months ago the annual meeting of the Municipal Economic Development Officers of Canada was held. In attendance at that meeting was the Municipal Economic Development Officer for the City of Moose Jaw and his counterparts from all cities in Canada. And what did they do? Every city in Canada unanimously agreed that the Free Trade Agreement was good for Canada.

Premier Grant Devine and Mr. Fred Mitchell, President of Intercontinental Packers, in a joint statement issued recently, announced that in late January of 1989 Intercontinental Packers will embark upon a $8 million modernization of its beef processing facilities in Saskatoon.

I bring that announcement to the attention of the House today because I rather suspect that the New Democratic Party Members from Saskatoon, Regina's great sister city to the north, would likely find it convenient to overlook.

The project in question represents phase 2 of a $24 million four-phase expansion by Intercontinental Packers, which itself is one of Canada's top four meat packers and the largest industrial employer in Saskatchewan.

The modernization of its beef processing facilities, to be completed in October of 1989, will double the plant's kill and chill capacity to 5,200 head per week, creating 148 new union jobs in the process.

Intercon is the third largest pork wholesaler in California, and you can bet that it supports the Free Trade Agreement.

The media, Mr. Speaker, have contributed to some of the mistrust that exists in the minds of Canadians as well. Allow me to quote from an article produced by a research bulletin called "On Balance", a division of the Fraser Institute, a national non-partisan research organization.

The Archive sponsors and conducts research on the fidelity of the public information function performed by the national media. The methods employed to do the analysis were described by Ms. Lydia Miljan, Archive Co-ordinator, who said, and I quote:

Researchers analysed thousands of individual statements made by reporters and those who were interviewed by the Globe and Mail and the CBC. In all, statements made between 407 journalists and 1,318 interviewees were examined.

Ms. Miljan, an expert in communications noted, and I quote:

Since 70 per cent of the resulting news coverage was based on partial or clipped interviews or paraphrasing of comments by interviewees, we infer that the resulting news coverage reflected decisions made by journalists as to which clips or which paraphrased comments to include in the final news item.

The choices made by journalists about content were consistent with the views they expressed themselves. While journalists confined their comments to statements of fact eight times out of ten, CBC reporters, when they did express an opinion, presented anti-free trade statements two out of three times.

This contrasts with The Globe and Mail, wherein reporter expressions of opinions were almost equally balanced at 56 per cent against and 44 per cent in favour.

Is it any wonder, Mr. Speaker, that, thanks to the CBC and the scare tactics employed by the Opposition, the public were misinformed and improperly informed during this campaign?

Time does not permit one to vent one's frustration fully, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the process that has taken us this far, and I know I must conclude. But before I do, I must tell you and the citizens of Canada that I, as the Progressive Conservative Member for Regina—Wascana, will do everything in my power to represent a truly progressive attitude, an attitude that embraces a positive vision of my city and of my country.

I represent a strong, free and independent Canada, a country that stands on its own in the trading world. I represent a Party that believes in a strong economy, a Party that believes in strong job creation and strong investment, both of which will help pay for the caring society that we have all built together.

I and my colleagues in the Progressive Conservative Party love our cities, our towns, our villages; and, above all, we love our country. Our citizens can count on our commitment, regardless of how long it takes to shed ourselves of the dubious and negative statements aimed at preventing us from obtaining our goals.

It is our commitment to reduce our national deficit, to broaden our tax base, and to provide for the highest living standard that can be obtained by any citizen in this world.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince Albert—Churchill River on questions or comments.

Mr. Funk: Mr. Speaker, I have a number of questions for the Hon. Member who has just spoken. First of all, he was concerned about accuracy of fact. While he was speaking I went out and checked and in fact I am unable to find where Canada is exempted from the omnibus trade Bill in the U.S. In fact, I thought one of the issues was that Canada is not exempted from the U.S. omnibus trade Bill.

I would ask the Hon. Member to point out in the agreement the clause under which Canada is exempted from the U.S. omnibus trade Bill.

Mr. Schneider: Not having the agreement in hand, it would be extremely difficult for me to cite chapter and verse in that respect. However, as has been explained many times in this place, the Free Trade Agreement is a bilateral agreement between Canada and the United States, and that fact itself will exempt Canada from the omnibus trade Bill, which is aimed at those trading communities that do not have a trade agreement with the U.S.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Prince Albert—Churchill River, on a supplementary.

Mr. Funk: There are a few other questions that I would ask the Hon. Member to address. I asked the Trade Minister of Saskatchewan whether Clause 1603 of the agreement would make illegal the surface lease agreements that we have in northern Saskatchewan, agreements which guarantee 50 per cent local labour, local content. The Saskatchewan Minister was unable to answer my question, and I would ask for the Hon. Member's comments on it.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Second, I refer the Hon. Member to Clause 2010, which deals with monopolies. If in fact the Devine Government in Saskatchewan privatizes SaskPower and SaskTel, my interpretation is that we would be restricted from buying those back without compensating Americans.

Third, under Clause 1304, the procurement clause, and specifically the American appendix thereto, minority owned businesses are exempted from free trade across the border, whereas the Canadian schedule does not exempt such businesses.

I should also like to refer the Hon. Member to Clause 701, which has to do with not subsidizing into each other's agricultural markets. At page 308 there is a stand still letter in that respect.

Given the export subsidies that we have seen coming from the U.S., I would ask for the Hon. Member's comments on that.

I would also like the Hon. Member to comment on the opposition to this agreement of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool, bearing in mind that the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool represents the vast majority of Saskatchewan farmers.

Furthermore, I would ask him why Regina and Saskatoon would not take the same view as Fargo, a city of one-third their size, if it is such an advantage to be close to that American market and a part of it.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, I would be only too happy to answer the Hon. Member's questions if I could understand them. Perhaps the Hon. Member could put, in more precise form, his third and fourth questions, and perhaps even his sixth.

Mr. Funk: Are you referring to the local content question? I didn't number my questions.

An Hon. Member: Just ask your questions again, one at a time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Prince Albert—Churchill River.

I might say that the procedure is not generally that the Hon. Member who has completed his speech asks questions. However, as I understand it, the Hon. Member for Regina—Wascana is seeking some detail in respect of the questions asked.

Perhaps the Hon. Member could rephrase his questions.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

● (2000)

Mr. Funk: Mr. Speaker, should I ask them one at a time? Can I sit down between questions and continue with the series?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That can be done but only if the Hon. Member putting the question is the only Hon. Member standing up. If other Members stand up during this question and comment period, the Chair would have to go to that other Member. So far the Hon. Member has been the only one to stand up. If it continues, there will be no problem in following that procedure.

Mr. Funk: Of particular concern to people in the Prince Albert area is Article 1603, Performance Requirements, which states:

Neither Party shall impose on an investor of the other Party . . . a requirement to:

- a) export a given level or percentage of goods or services;
- b) substitute goods or services from the territory of such Party for imported goods or services;
- c) purchase goods or services used by the investor in the territory of such Party or from suppliers located in such territory or accord a preference to goods or services produced in such territory;

We have surface lease agreements in northern Saskatchewan which are very important to the economy. They require that 50 per cent of goods and services be purchased locally. To my mind that kind of arrangement is illegal under the FTA and I would ask the Hon. Member to comment.

Mr. Schneider: Mr. Speaker, in that I am expected to give an answer from memory, I defy him to ask the question from memory. In fact, the question almost seems to defy answering. If I can paraphrase the question, it essentially seems to say—

Mrs. Sparrow: Give him some help.

Mr. Schneider: He is from Saskatchewan and we help each other out there. He needs some help. He is from northern Saskatchewan. I love that part of the province. I should tell the Hon. Member, while I have his undivided attention, that the greatest fishing in the world, and the coolest, freshest water I could ever hope to find is in northern Saskatchewan, the area the Hon. Member represents. I am extremely delighted that he is here to represent northern Saskatchewan. We find it to be an extremely sparsely populated area. As a matter of fact, that area generally referred to as northern Saskatchewan occupies the top northern two-thirds of the province so it is quite a vast area. Of course, surface rights are certainly something we are all very intrigued by. Certainly we are interested in following the rights that natives have in that area. There have been gold discoveries in northern Saskatchewan.

Mrs. Sparrow: Uranium.

Mr. Schneider: Gold shares have just shot up. I know the lake I go fishing at has quartz evident right on the surface and where there is quartz there is usually gold. I think we are going to find that northern Saskatchewan in the very near future will be deemed to be the gold capital of Canada.

An Hon. Member: Then they change their MP.

Mr. Schneider: Isn't that funny? Things roll along and then they change things.

However, it certainly is in Saskatchewan's and Canada's best interest to have the right to access the world's richest uranium beds. As a result, we are able to export that uranium from Saskatchewan to the U.S. unprocessed with a minor duty. If we were to enrich the uranium, a value added component, the tariff would be at least double or triple. The Free Trade Agreement will have a tendency to alleviate that problem.

With respect to the rather wordy question that my friend attempted to float down to this part of the chamber, if one was a lawyer one might be better able to understand it. As well, I understand the Hon. Member put that question before a provincial Minister. Therefore, I would say that in his initial concept he conceded it was a provincial matter and I ask him to direct the question back to that Minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The period for questions and comments is over. Debate.

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I am really pleased and privileged to again represent Vancouver East as a Member of Parliament. I think that area is one of the most dynamic in Canada, with people from many different backgrounds, many families who have struggled with a great deal of hardship to raise their children. The vast majority of those people are, of course, opposed to this trade deal. I know they sent me back to Ottawa with a considerable majority and I thank them for that support. I know they have sent me back with a mandate to continue to oppose this deal which will be so hard on people like themselves, and particularly on many of the industries and jobs in our community.

When we tallied up the votes, the Conservatives should take note of the fact that 87 per cent of the voters in Vancouver East voted against the deal. Only 16 per cent voted Conservative.

Like many Members of this House, I have been receiving letters from constituents and I would like to have been able to read some of their comments into the record. It is the people of Canada who are saying so strongly that the Conservatives must pause, take another look at this, and at least consider amendments. One of the women in my riding said: "I do not think adjustment programs are adequate compensation for victims of the trade deal. I believe there is no way to compensate for our loss of control over Canada's economy which would result from this agreement". Another letter from an immigrant man who came here from Germany 30 years ago said: "I have learned to love this country and its people. I worked very hard in the last federal election to beat the Progressive Conservatives and their Free Trade Agreement. Please don't be discouraged by the majority of seats the PCs have won. It is only 43 per cent out of 13.5 million". He went on to say: "The sum of the anti-free trade voters is 12,195,000. That is a lot of Canadians". He says: "No, Mr. Mulroney does not have a mandate".

I hope the Government realizes that this Party has fought this deal night and day and is going to continue to fight. We are certainly going to continue to make sure that we watch very carefully for its impact on people and we will be fighting for its victims. Believe me, there will be victims.

A number of times in this House, and of course in the recent election, I have summarized the concerns we in the NDP and many Canadians have about the trade deal. First of all, the Government admits, although it does not always agree with the objective figures, that many workers will be dislocated.

Mrs. Sparrow: Some.

Ms. Mitchell: Literally thousands in the fish processing industry alone. I should say there are several thousand jobs that are at risk this month. By the beginning of the year, many, many workers will be out of work in that industry. As my seat mate, the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton), said in his very eloquent speech the other night, we know the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans is unable to even protect the rights of Canadians to gut their own fish. That Minister, and the former Minister for International Trade, have not protected the jobs of the B.C. workers in the fishing industry.

Workers in the garment industry will find themselves literally being phased out. There are a number of such industries in my riding. The women employed there are largely from Asia. Many of them do not speak English. Many of them are struggling to try and support their families. I think a lot of them are single parents. They will be without jobs. They do not have language skills and they certainly do not have adjustment programs available through the Canadian Jobs Strategy, I can tell you that, despite what the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) tries to tell us here in this House. People are becoming increasingly concerned. The whole impact of the trade deal on the service industry is of great concern to women. We have many concerns in Vancouver East, as do other workers across the country.

● (2010)

We have said repeatedly how deeply concerned we are that this deal locks Canada into a continental energy policy, something that the United States has wanted for a long time. It limits our ability to serve Canadians first and to give favourable energy prices to Canadian secondary industries. My colleagues from British Columbia and Alberta also know how important it is that we in our resource based economies are able to diversify more. This deal inhibits that potential.

The removal of restrictions on U.S. investment in Canada opens the door even wider to U.S. control of our economy. We see now some of the things that have been developing even before the trade deal is signed, sealed and implemented. Since the election, as my Leader pointed out when he asked for an emergency debate, there are at least eight major companies in Canada which are moving jobs to the United States. We know very definitely that this is the result of the trade deal.

We also know that, unfortunately, jobs in the shake and shingle industry in British Columbia are not going to be replaced. The Government made practically no protest when President Reagan said that he was going to keep the tariffs on shakes and shingles, the very item which was to initiate the trade deal and which was to end such protectionism.

We are already seeing the impact. I would like to speak a bit about social policies since I am the critic for social policies for my Party. We have a very deep concern that this trade deal will change the social fabric of Canada and that it will erode our social programs.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Some of this will happen through specific provisions in the trade deal. I think much of it will happen as a result of the long range impact. Of course, the Government continues to deny this. There is evidence right in the Bill.

I would like to mention quickly several of the sections. I refer to Chapter 14, "Services", Article 1408, which covers a long list of health care and social agencies, a total of 296 service industries that will be covered by the deal. It allows for United States profit-making companies to come into Canada to manage health services and social services. We know that this includes general hospitals, psychiatric services, nursing homes, community health clinics, home-making services, blood banks, ambulances and many other types of services.

When I was looking at this matter today I realized that most of those services were services for the elderly. We do not want our older people to be victimized by profit-making commercialized industry.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: We know that there are steps that have already been taken. I heard a Member from Alberta referring to private health services. Of course they are here. That is what Conservative Governments are encouraging, just as they are encouraging privatization of child care. We do not want an Americanized profit-making medical system in Canada. Article 1408 will lead to that.

Chapter 19, Article 1907, provides for the definition of subsidies over the next five to seven years. We all know that we have higher social benefits and universal social programs which are much better than anything that is offered to American citizens. American businesses and American traders feel that these are unfair subsidies. We have heard of businesses putting the pressure on already in this regard.

We also know that the pressure is coming from Canadian businesses. The Macdonald Commission talked about a review and a change in social programs which would have offered us guaranteed poverty.

There will be pressure from United States businesses. There will also be pressure, which has started already, from Canadian businesses, to reduce regional development subsidies and to reduce social programs and programs such as medicare, family benefits and, yes, even pensions in the long run.

Why were these programs not excluded? The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that we do not have to worry, that we should stop using these scare tactics, that we are just fear-mongers and those who do not agree with him are a bunch of liars. Why did he not put exemptions in the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: Why did he not exempt social programs? Why does he not do it now? We have amendments that would help him to do that. But, once again, the Government refuses to listen to Canadians as it does not want to listen to members of Opposition Parties. It refuses to put in the kind of protections that would help people feel that their social programs are protected. Canadians, regardless of politics, feel very serious about this.

Chapter 20 on monopolies, particularly Article 2010 and 2011, is another section that has a serious implication for social programs. It restricts Canada's right to establish Crown corporations or to introduce public social programs in the future. These would be viewed by the United States as monopolies. It means that if we had not had medicare, we would not have any opportunity at all to introduce it. We would not be able to introduce pharmacare, denticare or other programs that are universal in nature and would be regarded as monopolies.

This means that we will not be able to have a control over the development of our own social policies in the future. I will refer to that point a little later.

The level playing field, harmonization and the equal treatment concepts in this nefarious trade deal will all have a negative downward pressure on social programs in Canada, and our ability to develop our own social policy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Mitchell: I wish to make one other point before I leave the question of subsidies. There is a very interesting coincidence here. Those of us who have been working on the child care programs and have studied the government program should note that this is just a seven year program. It is grandfathered at the end of seven years. Is it not interesting that at the end of seven years the subsidy situation in the United States in our trade deal will also be decided? I think there is a very interesting coincidence here which we must look at. I would be very surprised if under the Conservative regime, locked into this trade deal was that the child care provisions would be likely to proceed beyond that. We want to go forward in terms of achieving equality. We have a long way to go yet. Women and minorities would certainly agree with that.

We do not want to go backward. We have a Charter of Rights and we are proud of it. We believe very strongly that as Canadians in a large country such as Canada we have an obligation to contribute to subsidies for the poor regions, or for the poor communities. We feel very strongly that we have an obligation to our neighbours, to children, no matter whose they are, to make sure they get a good start in life, as well as to older people to ensure that they are secure and do not have to worry about their later years.

Authorities state that this really will jeopardize regional development subsidies in the future.

It will be difficult to maintain programs on employment equity. I am telling Hon. Members that after today's report on employment equity it is evident that we must strengthen it. We do not have enforcement. In the United States there is not any type of program that is similar. Thus women, minorities, native people and disabled people in Canada will be told: "Sorry, we have to get down to that lower level playing field. It is away down in the basement". These social rights are not something that are compatible with our commitments to the trade agreement.

● (2020)

There are many different aspects. The Government refuses to amend unemployment insurance benefits to conform with court decisions that say it must change those benefits to conform with the Charter. I am referring particularly to provisions for parental leave, older workers, and spouses. Surely the Government, which said it would amend all legislation to conform with the Charter, should have immediately said: "We will do this. We will get a good start on a parental leave program." But no, it is not going to do that. The Government is going to challenge it and appeal it to higher courts. There is a definite relationship there which shows how little it cares about social programs and how willing it is to try to reduce them.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member's speech. It is an excellent speech. I am concerned that here we are in this House hearing this excellent speech, and this is a Government Bill, and there is not a single Member of the Government to hear this speech.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mrs. Sparrow: I am here. What do you mean? We are all Members of the Government.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order. The Hon. Member for Vancouver East has the floor.

Ms. Mitchell: Thank you. This is not unusual, I would like to say to my friend. Sometimes we are thankful. Sometimes it is a blessing.

If I may continue, the Prime Minister told Canadians not to worry, that he would look after them, that social programs would be protected and that the opponents to free trade were only a bunch of fear-mongers and liars. Remember how often we heard the word "lies"? I can tell you, people did not like that language.

Let us hear what is happening now. What is happening to his Bay Street friends, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association and the Chamber of Commerce? Just this week these organizations that financed his campaign are pressuring the Government to establish a royal commission to reduce social spending. Interesting, is it not? What is also very interesting is the language they use. They say they are concerned about "non-wage compensations". Does that sound familiar? That sounds like there is a real connection with the trade deal. Of course, it is part of preparing for the trade deal. Of course, the Prime Minister wants to hide that fact. Again, we have got to be watching him every step of the way.

I want to warn this Government on behalf of New Democrats, the people of Vancouver East, and Canadians across the country that we will not tolerate cuts to essential social programs. That is a given in Canada.

I see the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) has just honoured us with his presence. It is a very timely entry. I want to ask him why the Conservatives have not mentioned a very important report from the Canadian Council on Social Development which was published last September. It was not mentioned at all in the campaign, and it is very important. The CCSD says that the FTA will have far-reaching and unpredictable effects on Canada's economy, on social programs, and on the social policy process through which Canada responds to the needs of its citizens.

The CCFC is not satisfied that the FTA will safeguard Canada's existing social programs. More important, it may encumber future social policy development. They go on to talk about harmonization which will affect public policy in Canada by hampering our ability to develop social programs to respond to Canadian needs. They talk about monopoly provisions which I referred to. They talk about social programs that will be considered unfair subsidies to Canadian labour costs. They talk about a number of other things. They talk about management of social services and the rights of aboriginal people who are very worried that this trade deal will mean they cannot proceed with aboriginal treaty rights.

I want to say that everyone in this House cares very deeply about our country, Canada. It is the most beautiful country in the world. When I say beautiful, I do not mean just our scenery or the fact that we have reasonably fresh air, fresh water, and space.

The most important thing is that we are a caring society. Our people have struggled over the years. We come from many different backgrounds and continue to come from many parts of the world. We care about each other. We do not put the market-place first. We must make sure that in the future we respect these desires and social rights which I say our Party is largely responsible for. That is one of the reasons Americans do not have it in the United States.

We do not want our economy based on military spending. We do not want our social services to be privatized and operated for a profit. We cherish medicare, and we want to make sure it is extended, not cut back. We want all our citizens to have a right to decent, affordable housing, to incomes above the poverty line, and to opportunities for our children to grow. We are very concerned that the free trade deal will inhibit these goals and, therefore, we will be continuing to oppose it along with many millions of Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. White: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to welcome the Hon. Member for Vancouver East (Ms. Mitchell) back to the House. I would like to mention that we spent several years working together on the health and welfare committee in the last Parliament. I know her to be a reasonable person, so I have a comment and a couple of questions I would like to ask her.

First of all, my background is in health care. I spent 12 years working in the health care field. I would not support any agreement I thought would be harmful to health care. What is covered in the agreement and what is mentioned are health care facilities and management services; not the level of service, not the type of service, but the management of those services. The services themselves are under provincial jurisdiction and come under Government procurement by the provinces. They are outside the jurisdiction and scope of the Free Trade Agreement.

I have two questions, Mr. Speaker. According to international trade law, any social program that is generally available to the entire population is not considered a subsidy. I would like to know if the Hon. Member for Vancouver East can cite one precedent in international trade history where a social program has been successfully challenged as a subsidy.

The Hon. Member for Vancouver East mentioned that under the Free Trade Agreement there would be pressure from U.S. businesses on social programs because they would be considered unfair subsidies. I would like to point out briefly a couple of matters and then ask a question.

If one were to have a hip replacement operation today, it would cost five times as much in the United States as in Canada. If one were to have a heart by-pass operation, it would be roughly double the price in the U.S. as it would be in Canada. The cost of health care in the U.S. is 10.5 per cent of Gross Domestic Product, whereas in Canada it is between 8 per cent and 9 per cent. I ask the Hon. Member, rather than the argument she gives, would the pressure not be on the U.S. to adopt a system like ours rather than vice versa?

Ms. Mitchell: I want to thank my hon. friend who has been a very pleasant participant on the Standing Committee on Health and Welfare. I know him to have a very sincere interest in this subject. I would like to thank him for his question.

I must say, for someone involved in the health care field as well as in the political field, such a question is a little hard to comprehend because of the sheer volume of the pressure in the United States. I am sure he was paying attention to the recent American election where the idea of a minimum health program proposed by the Democrats was thought to be a communist conspiracy by most Americans.

● (2030)

That may be somewhat of an exaggeration, but there is no question that there is not the same philosophy in the United States toward the state responsibility to provide for the social need of its citizens because of the whole free enterprise market based society in the United States.

I strongly believe that the reason for the difference is that there are people like Tommy Douglas, Stanley Knowles and many other pioneers who came out of the CCF and the NDP who fought very hard for this. There are also people like John Diefenbaker and others who responded to these challenges. This has become the mores of Canada. It goes beyond political partisanship.

It would be extremely naive to expect that Americans would try to achieve the kind of social programs that we have in Canada, such as medicare. My husband recently had an accident in the United States. He was taken to hospital where he spent about an hour. He received a bill for $1,000.

There are millions of Americans who have no coverage at all. People can lose their life savings if there is an illness in the family. That is why we are concerned.

I know how Conservatives feel about privatization and profit. The committee on child care found that commercial services generally do not have as much an obligation to provide top quality services because their goal is the profit margin. Therefore, they move in at the minimum standards established by the provinces.

This Bill opens the door for much greater American style services to come to Canada. As we said earlier, we do not want that, and I do not believe senior citizens want that.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I enjoyed my colleague's comments very much. Coming from Saskatchewan, medicare is a very important topic to me. It played a major part in the campaign.

I was in Saskatchewan during the medicare crisis when the doctors went on strike. I found it interesting to say the least that many of those who opposed medicare at the time, including Senator Barootes, who was a member of the Saskatchewan College of Physicians and Surgeons and led the opposition to medicare by helping organize doctors to go on strike, and the American Medical Association which helped fund that strike, were out there during the election assuring that this Free Trade Agreement would not affect medicare.

One of the reasons why so many Government Members were defeated in Saskatchewan was because the people of Saskatchewan did not believe them. Mr. Emmett Hall made some contribution to the debate. He was described as the father of medicare. Many people have claimed to be the father of medicare. Certainly the Liberals and Mike Pearson claimed to be the fathers of medicare. John Diefenbaker and Mr. Emmett Hall claimed to be the fathers of medicare.

I was in Saskatchewan during the doctors' strike. Is it not true that the people of Saskatchewan, like Allan Blakeney, Woodrow Lloyd and Tommy Douglas and the NDP in Saskatchewan who really are the mothers of medicare because they had the birth pains of this important social innovation to North America?

Ms. Mitchell: I am not sure whether Tommy Douglas would have thought himself as a mother, but he was a caring person. I guess fathers as well as mothers can be that.

My colleague has described the situation very well. He was much closer to it than I. Certainly we are proud of the movement that started in Saskatchewan and which is now established as an institution in Canada.

During the last Parliament when the Standing Committee on National Health and Welfare reviewed Canada's health programs, something I hope we continue, I was impressed with the figures that refuted some of the myths, that our programs cost more than American programs and were not as adequate as many European programs.

We also found that the cost of medicare in Canada as a percentage of GNP is much lower. We get better value for our health care dollar. It is a very sound economic as well as social investment. We do not want it threatened by a trade deal or by the pressures that are bound to come from the huge country to our south which does things differently.

Mr. Felix Holtmann (Portage—Interlake): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed a pleasure to address the Thirty-fourth Parliament on an issue with which I have some familiarity, having been here in the previous four years.

I have made acquaintance with some Members of the Opposition. I want to welcome the new Members of Parliament from all Parties and I look forward to vigorous debate with all Members of the House in the years to come. I look forward to the kind of progressive legislation that this Government has brought forward under the leadership of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

There has been much discussion about this subject in the last two years. The Opposition complains that there is only a limited amount of debate during this, the Government's second effort to bring forward this legislation after the election. Let me explain to new Members why it was probably wise for the Government to limit the debate.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Timiskaming (Mr. MacDougall), related some of the suggestions that were made by candidates in his riding during the election concerning the effect of a free trade agreement.

I had a similar experience in my riding. Let me illustrate the kind of intelligent debate we heard from opposition Parties in my riding. At the first all-candidates meeting I attended, the New Democrat candidate stood up in front of 170 constituents and told me that on the day we sign this Free Trade Agreement the 22 million unemployed Americans in the United States today will come to Canada and take all our Canadian jobs. Talk about intelligence. That gentleman lacked some.

The Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) will recall the episode of the New Democratic candidate in Manitoba who went to a school in Winnipeg and told the young students there that if we signed the Free Trade Agreement, the United States would send the Marines to Canada to take our energy. Is it possible to imagine a New Democrat suggesting such a preposterous thing?

Another candidate, a Grit, I believe, claimed that if we signed this Free Trade Agreement, the Americans would take our blood banks. Now get this. We would probably be getting some of our blood from Los Angeles and San Francisco, probably resulting in an increase in AIDS. That is the kind of nonsense that the Liberals opposite should take a good, keen look at.

● (2040)

Here is a new one. I checked with some of my colleagues who are here today just to get an idea of what was being said during the election campaign. One gentleman who ran for the New Democratic Party claimed that young Canadians would all be drafted into the U.S. Army if we signed this Free Trade Agreement.

The opposition Parties had a concern about water, and many of us in this House recall the water problem. I think some have had water problems, as the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) indicated earlier on, but here is what Americans were going to do with our water if we signed the Free Trade Agreement: They were going to suck the Hudson Bay dry.

During the election campaign, the Hon. Member who is a New Democrat from the former riding of Winnipeg—Bird's Hill and I went to an environmental debate. I thought he had an interesting line. He suggested that because of free trade, we would have more pollution in Canada. I always considered him to be a fairly intellectual individual, but that particular campaign got to him, I am sure. His logic was that there would probably be an expansion in some of our primary industries, and as a consequence thereof, there would be more smoke-stacks and more pollution.

Let me give a more down-to-home example of what happened during the election campaign. Back home in an area I used to represent called Selkirk—my hon. friend who got elected from Selkirk is with us tonight—there is a gentleman who took on that bastion of New Democrat power. We remember him well, that bastion of the New Democrats. They said: "Come and run for us, Uncle Howard". Remember Uncle Howard? "My goodness, you are going to be in the front-benches of the New Democratic Party in the House of Commons".

An Hon. Member: In the Government.

Mr. Holtmann: In the Government? Anyway, he was the force of socialism in Manitoba, brought Manitoba to its knees, lost the Manitoba Government and ran in the federal election. Before he ran, the Prime Minister said: "Thanks, Howard, but no thanks". That is what happened to dear old Howard, and when I introduce my new colleague, I introduced him as the man who saved Canada from Howard.

In that wonderful constituency was a place called the Manitoba Rolling Mills, not Dofasco, not Falconbridge, just nice, little Rolling Mills owned by an United States company employing 700 people.

An Hon. Member: Ordinary people.

Mr. Holtmann: Last election they were average, this time they are ordinary. The suggestion was that the company would fold and another would open in the United States. I am glad you Liberals are listening because the New Democrats do not want to hear this. They promised that that plant would close and Howard would stand behind all the workers and make sure they had a compensation package. What happened? A Canadian company from Québec bought out the American company. Now are competing with these big American companies and our steel is just moving in droves southward. I am terribly excited about that.

A little earlier on, we did hear from the Hon. Member for Regina Qu'Appelle (Mr. de Jong). I notice that his riding changed. He is probably happier than the dickens about that because he got back here. Some of them rehashed what all those former Members said about free trade and about getting on with an election. I would like those new Members way across in the corner to listen to this.

The Hon. Member for Regina Qu'Appelle said on June 20:

However, if the Government did not insist on passing the free trade legislation and held it back until after an election, it could call an election in mid-September or the end of September. We could then proceed and hold an election during the campaign of which this issue would be widely debated and all the ramifications would be explained to the Canadian public and they would have an opportunity of voting and deciding upon such a major reorganization of the power structure of the country. If the electorate decided to elect a majority of members of the Conservative Party, the Government could then reintroduce this legislation—

Look at the kind of nonsense that they debated during the campaign, and they want to come down here and start this nonsense all over again?

It is amazing that we are not out shopping. I have not done my Christmas shopping but it is worth holding off for a little while because there are a couple more things that I want to tell you, Mr. Speaker, and the rest of this House, about this particular Free Trade Agreement. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) talked about McCain's. The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Member for Winnipeg—

An Hon. Member: Soft centre.

Mr. Holtmann: God bless him. The Leader of the New Democratic Party talked about McCain's in June. Before the election I happened to have a McCain's plant in my constituency. It is a big employer. We happen to have a Campbell Soup Company plant too.

By the way, our candidate in the New Democratic Party was supported by a pretty heavy labour movement. They started a little rumour in these two plants that the plants would disappear. We heard what the president of McCain Foods said at that time. Those rumours, they were nothing but rumours, all of a sudden faded away. In The Globe and Mail of December 1, I could not believe what I read about Campbell Soup. During the election, they were going to cut down, close down, slide out, slip out, no more soup for you and I, we could not even go to the soup kitchen any more according to the Liberal candidate running against me. According to the New Democrat over there, there was going to be no more soup, we were going to be on water and tea. Why are they not now saying "Holtmann, you were right," because this is what the president of the company said:

Campbell Soup Co. Ltd. will double its spending in Canada next year, and that, the chairman says, would surprise all those people who predicted the U.S. multinational would pull up its stakes after the federal election and go back home to Camden, N.J.

Exactly the opposite will happen. It will double its production, and thank goodness you folks over there can eat soup again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Holtmann: The article goes on to say:

Mr. Clark also denied persistent reports that his company would privatize the Canadian operations if the free-trade agreement with the United States went ahead.

He will not privatize anything. They will continue to manufacture and produce the best soup in the world in Portage la Prairie, Manitoba. That is what they are going to do.

Let us get on to McCain's. Yes, I understand from our good friend, the Minister for International Trade, that the McCains are Liberals and good Liberals. They are probably more sensible than any we have seen in the House of Commons.

Two days after the election, this just jumped out at me:

McCain also added its name to national advertising opposing the deal during the federal election campaign.

"We talked quite sincerely about the deal, our views were well known," Fredstrom said. "But the idea of linking this directly to the closure of any facility was not even remotely mentioned."

He said, and this was in my constituency, that he was not aware of any change or cut-backs planned for the Portage la Prairie plant. As a matter of fact, McCain's Food will do its very best and intends to expand its business under these changed conditions.

• (2050)

Don't you find that just about the most hypocritical thing that happened during this entire election campaign and free trade debate, Mr. Speaker? One would believe that the United States is taking over this country and we would have to go to the U.S. and add to the unemployment lists. In one case the Americans were coming here to take our jobs. Maybe now in the New Democratic Party they think it is great to be unemployed.

This will just rock the NDP right out of the House of Commons. Something happened just before the election. A letter was sent to me by an American. If this is offensive to anyone on the other side, he or she may leave the House of Commons. This is from one of our neighbours to the south where people will be basking in the sun about a month from now.

An Hon. Member: In 24 hours.

Mr. Holtmann: In any event, this gentleman is the president and chief executive office of a company called DOSCO, Inc. The company deals in precision machinery and manufacturing in San Antonio, Texas. I have had a conversation or two with the gentleman since but not prior. A constituent brought this letter to my attention. Let me read it into the record. It regards the Canada-U.S. free trade issue:

Dear Mr. Holtmann:

I have watched with great interest the various Canadian political parties debate Canada—U.S. free trade issues. I understand that the Progressive Conservative Party is attempting to implement free trade. Hopefully, after receiving a strong mandate in the coming federal election, your Party will be able to implement free trade between our countries immediately.

DOSCO Manufacturing, Inc. is an old time "Aerospace Manufacturer." We have a 152,000 square foot facility on 33.5 acres. We support all U.S. departments of defence weapons systems utilized throughout the free world. I have tried (unsuccessfully) to sub contract several million dollars worth of contracts in Canada over the past couple of years.

The reason that I have been unsuccessful with the Canadian firms that I have been in touch with is that these firms are not able to obtain the funding required to support my contract requirements. The Canadian banks in the past were reluctant to grant adequate "lines of credit" to these firms to support U.S. contracting requirements. Nor were these firms able to obtain assistance from the Canadian Government to assist them in start-up costs, equipment purchases, etc. DOSCO Manufacturing, Inc. is prepared to provide several million dollars worth of manufacturing contracts to Canadian firms if these firms are able to support our effort in terms of quality, on time delivery and price.

For those of you in the New Democratic Party that is probably too complicated for you to understand. This is business talking, real business. The letter goes on:

A free trade agreement with the United States will not Americanize the Canadian people. I strongly believe that it will open new markets for all kinds of manufactured and related products for both countries. All business interests in Canada and the United States must rally and support this critical effort. We must become partners and together we will prosper in the years ahead. It is in the best interests of all concerned to ensure this trade agreement is finalized. The erosion of both Canadian and American industries must be stopped. Together we must become more aggressive in our markets. We must become more competitive and place continued emphasis on the "Quality" of our products "Quality" of service we provide.

Another area you might as well close your eyes and ears to because the NDP has never understood things like that. The letter goes on:

We must take "deep professional pride" in our day to day efforts towards these goals. Canadians and Americans are survivors. We must remain strong and flexible.

The fears which Canadian businesses have of large U.S. corporations are not well founded. Located at your own constituency is a business that is flourishing while, at the same time, competing with huge U.S. manufacturers such as FMC Corporation, Hobart Bros., Stewart and Stevenson Services (the largest Detroit diesel operation in the world) and many others.

I know for a fact that in 1983 this business consisted of one man working out of his home in his kitchen and today employs probably in excess of 20 people. For more information concerning this great company, please contact Mr. Doug Eryou, President, Mid-Canada Equipment Sales. I have done business with Mr. Eryou since his company was founded. The quality of Mid-Canada's Manufacturing efforts and over all services is second to none. I have used his company "as a role model" for my own.

Mr. Holtmann, I believe in Canada-U.S. free trade and I comprehend the inherent unlimited benefits to both Mid-Canada and DOSCO. Accordingly, I wish you the best of luck in your campaign.

As I view this, there is an American company looking to Canada to find a manufacturing base for its products. We can compete. We are competing and we have done a tremendous job. We are a mature country. As the Prime Minister said earlier, we are not afraid to take on the world. We have the ability and we have the proven ability. We are not going to hide in a shell like the New Democrats and the Liberals want us to do.

Mr. Milliken: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Hon. Member and it concerns his opening comments. He extensively discussed the risk of threats and scare tactics in the campaign. He had a litany of complaints against the members of the New Democratic Party in particular, whose actions I would not pretend to justify, but also members of my Party who were alleged to have scared members of the public during the course of the campaign as though somehow that scared them into voting against the Government.

I was a candidate, as the Member well knows in the election, and I heard some things too. The Member should know that I heard of Conservative candidates saying that if the general public did not vote for this trade agreement, we would lose millions of jobs in Canada.

Mrs. Sparrow: That is true.

Mr. Milliken: And things were going to go to pieces. The extraordinary thing is I have lived in this country for a little over 40 years. We have not had a free trade agreement such as that on which we are voting tomorrow and we have not lost millions of jobs. Why suddenly would jobs disappear if we do not sign this agreement?

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Hockin: Because of protectionism.

Mr. Milliken: Does the Government know something the rest of us do not know? If so, I would invite the Hon. Member to tell us.

Some Hon. Members: Protectionism.

Mr. Milliken: They must have some secret economic studies that show the country is going downhill under this administration. That was not made public in the election campaign and we were told millions of jobs were about to be lost if we did not sign the agreement.

I would like to hear the Hon. Member explain to the House why we were going to lose all these jobs if this agreement were not approved. It is one thing to suggest that there might not be certain jobs created but that was not the statement made. The statement made was that millions of jobs would be lost. I suggest to the Hon. Member that was striking terror into the hearts of Canadians in a desperate attempt to get them to vote for the current Government. It influenced the outcome of the election far more than any scare about any risk to pensions, medicare or anything else that was mentioned, certainly more than any of the stories with which we were regaled in the early part of the Hon. Member's speech.

• (2100)

Mr. Holtmann: I am glad I have heard from the replacement of the Hon. Flora MacDonald, and, Sir, I do not think you will ever get your feet into her shoes, fill them well, or understand what you are doing.

Let me return to the subject. I wish to take the Hon. Member back and give him a little history. Four years ago in 1984 when the Conservatives were elected, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised "jobs, jobs, jobs". The Hon. Member shakes his head, obviously he remembers it well.

Mr. Milliken: We have heard it all before.

Mr. Holtmann: In every Budget brought in by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), and the Leader of the New Democratic Party rose in their places in the House and predicted the loss of hundreds of thousands of jobs. In every case they were wrong. The reason the Liberals lost the election is that they have no credibility, and the Liberal Party has no credibility because it has never predicted anything right in the House of Commons.

We have not been wrong in the prediction of jobs created by the Government in four years. We have created 1,000 jobs every day since we were elected. Canadians understood that. If the Hon. Member checks back through his campaign, it was probably his Leader they did not believe any more. It was probably the New Democrats that they did not believe any more, because it was absolutely ridiculous.

The two opposition Parties basically think that Canadians are stupid. The Member accused this Party of promising to create millions of jobs over the years to come. He states that that is fearmongering. With all due respect to the Member opposite, when the United States Marines come in to take our energy, perhaps that is a little fearmongering; or that we are going to pollute all of Canada because there might be some new primary production, that is a little bit of fearmongering. That is really grasping for some reason to oppose the Government.

That is why we do not need a long debate on Bill C-2, because it is nonsense what Members opposite have been telling the House of Commons and the Canadian people for the last week and a half. They have heard it all before, and they do not want to hear it again. It is as simple as that.

I do not know if I am allowed to make a wager, Mr. Speaker, but if we called another election tomorrow we would fill up half those seats on the other side as well.

Mr. MacWilliam: Unlike the Hon. Member on the other side of the House, my colleagues and I, including our Liberal colleagues, like to deal with facts rather than with hyperbole, inflammatory statements, and personal accusations. I wish to turn to some of those facts tonight.

The Member mentioned how good free trade will be for McCain Foods. I have an ad that was placed in major papers across the country that stated: "Free trade should be fair trade. The U.S. would not have signed the present agreement if their farm and factory workers were treated like our Canadian farmers and factory workers. There is nothing wrong with the concept of free trade, but this contract is a disaster for the agri-food industry in Canada". One of the signatories to that was a representative of McCain's.

I suggest to the Member opposite that his comments regarding the industry in Portage la Prairie may be modified somewhat. Through discussions with the representatives of The Western Producer, Mr. Archie McLean indicated that the McCain's plant may very well be closed down in that area if the Free Trade Agreement is passed.

The Member also indicated the job creation potential regarding the Free Trade Agreement. Early in the discussions on the agreement the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated that free trade would create 350,000 new jobs. He then reduced that to 250,000. I believe it was further reduced.

The Prime Minister did not indicate that more than 800,000 Canadian workers were expected to lose their jobs. He said that approximately 7 per cent of the workforce could be expected to be dislocated. That translates into 800,000 job losses. It is simple arithmetic that when 800,000 is taken away from 350,000, it is not a ringing endorsement of the Free Trade Agreement.

How can the Hon. Member justify the job creation potential of the Free Trade Agreement when, in fact, John Orr of the Council of Canadians used Statistics Canada figures to indicate that the job loss potential of the Free Trade Agreement may amount to approximately 500,000 jobs. In fact, those figures were also suggested when the Minister of Employment stated that there could be a job loss that could exceed half a million jobs.

How can the Hon. Member justify his statements regarding the job creation potential when so many Canadian workers are facing job losses with this Free Trade Agreement?

Mr. Holtmann: I will have to return to an issue that was discussed often in the House. When members of the NDP objected to the Auto Pact and suggested that that was going to cost hundreds of thousands of jobs, exactly the opposite happened. There is a very simple answer to the problem faced by the two opposition Parties. I would love it for them to predict once something that turns out right instead of wrong. It has never come out the way they have predicted in the last four years. With all due respect, through the Speaker I say to the Hon. Member that you are going about the same thing you did when you lost the election. You are trying to scare Canadians. Have a nice evening.

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, first I would like to thank my constituents of Broadview—Greenwood. This is the second time in 50 years that they have elected a Liberal in Broadview—Greenwood. I would also like to let my friends know at the Pride of Erin, where we are holding our Christmas party tonight, that the reason I am not there is obvious.

My researchers put together a pretty good speech for me about three days ago. In the last few days I have listened to so many speeches that have been repetitive that I have decided to throw most of it out of the window.

I want to talk about my Liberal colleague, the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin). Two nights ago she made a terrific speech. It was one of the best that we have heard in the House. As reported at page 369 of Hansard the Hon. Member stated:

But there are those who wish to work and live out their days as true and proud Canadians, under the protection of a Government in control of their political and economic destinies.

Without being facetious or sarcastic, I say to the Hon. Members on the other side of the House that I hope they are right. Certainly I would not object to being wrong in this instance. I do hope, for the sake of Canada and its people, that they are right.

What was fascinating was that the Minister responsible for housing, for whom I have a lot of respect, was sitting across the hall and he said: "So do we hope we are right".

It was only when I heard that comment that I began to feel there was some real sincerity on the other side of this House in connection with this whole debate.

Like a lot of members on the other side, I am a businessman, and this place, for me, represents the nation's boardroom. And while I realize that Hon. Members opposite have won the election—and I do not want to re-fight it—we on this side are also board members; and even though you on the government side control the board, we have an obligation to state what we have been told by our constituents.

We have heard statistic after statistic about the number of votes received by one Member or another. The combined vote against free trade in my riding was almost 80 per cent. In fact, 10 days before polling day, it stood at 90 per cent, and then Mr. d'Aquino rolled in with his business sponsored ads, and I must tell you that they were very effective. It was a great job of communication.

An Hon. Member: They told the truth.

An Hon. Member: Nonsense.

Mr. Mills: I am not sure that they did tell the truth, and I think the Minister of State for Housing (Mr. McDermid) alluded to that the other evening.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

My point is that we on this side have a legitimacy in putting forward in this place the views of our constituents.

Some two hours before listening to the speech of the Hon. Member for Western Arctic, I listened to the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and I must say that I could not get over the man's logic. He talked about the fact that we on this side, in not supporting this deal, are showing a lack of confidence in Canada.

There are some parts of the Free Trade Agreement that I do like. One part that I do not like, however, is Chapter 16, which deals with foreign investment in Canada. By 1992, we will have unlimited, unregulated foreign investment on any acquisition under $150 million.

From 1980 to 1984, we saw almost $27 billion in investment come into this country, and that in the middle of the worst recession in our history and in the middle of the National Energy Program. That was regulated investment, where Canadian jobs were guaranteed and where investors were obliged to put a certain amount into research and development in an effort to get a world product mandate going.

We had all sorts of investment during that period. While we lost some deals, 99 out of 100 that were put across the table from us were accepted.

From 1984 to 1988 was a period in which we had the new spirit of Investment Canada. Quite frankly, I think that Investment Canada, as a public relations gesture, was a good thing. But, in four years we had some $40 billion worth of foreign investment come into this country, almost all of it unregulated. We were still doing all kinds of business, and now we go to a trade agreement with the U.S. under which investment will be virtually unregulated.

I do not understand the logic of the Minister of Finance when he makes the statement that we on this side have no confidence. To my mind, we show more confidence when we use the leverage we have to negotiate for senior management positions, where we negotiate for R and D, versus his approach where we throw all the regulations out the window.

The Minister of Finance then went on to compare the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement with the agreement between Australia and New Zealand. I couldn't believe it. He was talking about two countries that operate under the same British law. There is no comparison to be made between the situation which exists as between New Zealand and Australia and that which will exist between Canada and the U.S., the U.S. being one of the greatest powers in the world. I simply could not understand the man's logic.

That is one of the things that has troubled me about this whole debate. This Government loves making deals. However, when legitimate arguments are brought forward, it refuses to talk about the possibility of any amendment to those deals.

I know that many Hon. Members opposite are businessmen, and I respect the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) as a businessman. I know that he has been involved in many board meetings. We all know that when agreements are being discussed in such meetings and the legal advice is that the agreement under discussion is unclear, it is suspended while clarification is sought.

Why wouldn't we suspend the Free Trade Agreement until we got that clarity? Hon. Members on the government side represent two-thirds of the board. They control the board, but almost 60 per cent of the shareholders of this country, the citizens of this country, have some concerns about this Free Trade Agreement. They are voicing concerns about it, and I cannot understand why we do not take the time to clarify some of those concerns.

Most of the people in my riding are not anti-business. If they were anti-business, I would now not be sitting in this place. Neither are they anti-free trade, nor anti-investment, nor anti-American. They are Canadians who realize that a deal can be cut two ways; that all investment in fact doesn't pay off. In any event they do not want it at any price. They want to take a look at the price.

The Minister of Finance, in his speech, said that Gerald Regan supports this deal; that John Bulloch supports this deal. I don't know whether Hon. Members opposite have looked at John Bulloch's survey, a survey to which only one-tenth of the membership responded. I have looked at it, and I can tell you that one of the first questions asked was something to the effect: "If you had the potential of increasing your business by almost 50 per cent, would you be in favour of free trade?"

Well, come on! Let's get serious. I saw that survey, and quite frankly I do not think that Allan Gregg would approve of it as being something on which one would base qualitative or quantitative analysis.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I go back to 1984, when this Government was fresh in terms of its mandate. At that time the Business Council on National Issues, in one of its research papers, suggested to the Government that it should deindex pensions. I remember the attempt by the Minister of Finance to do that, and I also recall, as Hon. Members opposite will recall, that when things hit the fan, the first to desert the Government was Thomas d'Aquino and the Business Council on National Issues. That is something that was discussed in their caucus. They didn't want to hear anything further from him.

The point is, sometimes the hurt and the pressure of big business can take us on a course that we have not fully thought through.

I have talked to many of my business colleagues about this free trade deal, and I am finding that many have not in fact read the deal; that all they have read are selected excerpts.

An Hon. Member: Not unlike the Minister for International Trade.

Mr. Mills: It is for that reason that I think we are getting ourselves into a little trouble.

The Government always refers to the view of the Economic Council of Canada.

• (2120)

I took a look at the committee hearings where Judith Maxwell appeared, and she admitted that this was a hypothetical model. She could not absolutely confirm that those 250,000 jobs would be guaranteed.

My point is that no one really knows how many jobs will be lost or gained, but we know that in the 1970s, Michigan, New York, and Ohio lost 17 per cent, 10 per cent, and 11 per cent of their manufacturing sectors respectively, while California and Texas gained 21 per cent and 31 per cent respectively.

We know of all kinds of people in this country who are looking toward those markets in the southern parts of the States where there are no corporate income taxes, no personal taxes, no payroll taxes, low unemployment insurance premiums, and so on. How will our companies compete when 12 American states paid minimum wages last year ranging from $1.40 an hour to $3.00 an hour; when nine sunbelt states have no minimum wage laws at all; and the lowest paying province in Canada, Alberta, pays $4.50 an hour?

We all know the statistics but, ladies and gentlemen, I want to make this point. I listened to the Prime Minister attentively today. He talked about our signing over 200 protocols and agreements with the United States. Why could he not pick up the phone to the President, and we know he has this tremendous access to the President, and say to him: "Mr. President, I want to talk to you about another protocol or agreement. It would go something like this. In light of our general election there are a few areas of this free trade deal where we need some simple clarification. These areas include regional subsidies, social programs, and the environment. The Minister of the Environment spoke specifically about water being excluded. We have told Canadians repeatedly that these areas are not affected by the deal, and by way of a one-page special protocol agreement attached to the Free Trade Agreement we can accomplish what we were mutually trying to do, with minimal confusion".

My sense is that the Prime Minister could probably make that happen, and I cannot understand why there is this incredible reluctance to get a one-page protocol attached to the Free Trade Agreement. I cannot understand it. We can quote selectively, repeatedly, and then we can all walk away from this. You who control the board would have done your duty, but even though we are the minor players on this board, we still speak for over 50 per cent of the Canadian public and we could at least say we have done our duty.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr. Jordan: Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate my colleague on a fine speech, one of the best I have heard in the House in the short time I have been here. He used an interesting statistic, and I wonder if I could get him to elaborate on it a little.

He was talking about 250,000 new jobs which are supposed to be created over the course of the next ten years. I wonder if he has thought how that would apply to a town of about 5,000 people. Could we put it on a mathematical basis and see how many jobs that would create? If he has not done that, I have done it for him.

If that were done for the Town of Gananoque, in my riding, we would see a total of six new jobs being created. I have cautioned the town. I said that they should not go out and expropriate a lot of new land in neighbouring municipalities because they are not going to need it on the basis of six new jobs in the Town of Gananoque, assuming we can even keep the number of jobs we currently have.

I want to ask my colleague if he has extrapolated any of those figures to any of the municipalities in his jurisdiction? If he does, I am sure he will find the figures to be exactly the same. That is not really a great reason for jubilation in the ranks of the unemployed.

Mr. Mills: Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) keeps referring to all these think tanks, economic councils, and so on. When we get into committee these people all admit that these are hypothetical situations. I have not done the calculation my colleague talked about, but I want to go back to the Minister of Finance and his speech the other day, when he said the standard of living in Canada would never be higher than after this deal.

How can he make that statement and in the same breath be constantly preoccupied with adjustment programs? It is not logical. I cannot tell you specifically, but I think we are fooling ourselves by quoting selectively.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Corbeil (Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I take part in the debate today because I know that my remarks will faithfully reflect the mandate given to me by the electors of the riding of Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies.

I say that with conviction, Mr. Speaker, because I also know that the decision made last November 21 by the people of Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies shows how very aware they are of the importance to us in Montreal East of the innumerable benefits which will flow from the free trade deal with respect to the revitalization of our sector.

On that glorious day of November 21, Mr. Speaker, my constituents chose to spend their efforts and energy to work towards a more prosperous future by voting massively for the Progressive Conservative candidate. This is because their instinct told them there was only one team qualified to steer Canada towards the harbour of prosperity over the competitive sea of North American trade. Of course, that team could only be the Progressive Conservative Party!

Therefore I want to express my sincere thanks to the residents of the beautiful riding of Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies for honouring me with their support. I can assure them that I will work tirelessly on their behalf during this first mandate and during all the others to come.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not remind our colleagues of the Liberal Party and of the socialist Party that the riding I represent in this House is highly industrialized. In fact, in the city of Anjou where I was mayor for 15 years, there is an industrial park where more than 350 industries of various sizes are located. In the district of Rivière-des-Prairies, which is home to more than half of the total population of my constituency, there is also a lot of industrial activity.

Before making a final decision about leaving the comfort of a mayoralty which had given me so much satisfaction in the past 15 years I wanted to find out the business community's reaction to the free trade deal which was to be the main issue of the impending election.

Mr. Speaker, I met with dozens of manufacturers full of the entrepreneurial zeal typical of modern Quebec and free of any past economic inferiority complex. They are builders set out to conquer America, Mr. Speaker, not industrial barons or social magnates descending on Earth from some mysterious galaxy. They are the children of ordinary folk who worked hard to educate this new generation, a generation of determined, self-confident and dynamic university graduates, primed to take on the exciting challenges of today's world.

• (2130)

Mr. Speaker, I discussed free trade with these owners and managers of small and medium-sized businesses. Not one of them feared free trade. On the contrary, these men and women wanted to see the agreement implemented as soon as possible. The previous Parliament suffered through 350 hours of pessimistic rantings by opposition prophets of doom and gloom. These same prophets later conducted a 51-day scare campaign, a veritable assault on the minds of Canadian men and women. The people of Canada rejected their allegations with a majority vote. Now, the present Parliament is again being made to suffer through an incongruous medley of lucubrations which has lasted days already.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, the media and the public have become embarrassingly indifferent to the business conducted in the House of Commons as a result of negative ravings which have emanated from the two opposition parties since the start of the session.

In the face of this behaviour, Mr. Speaker, the people in my riding of Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies and throughout Quebec, have clearly indicated to the Liberals and the NDP that they did not believe their bogeyman stories and would never believe them.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I am particularly proud, Mr. Speaker, to be one of the 63 members that Quebec has elected to the Parliament of Canada to ensure the rapid passing of the free trade legislation. In my opinion, the men and women of Quebec showed new confidence in their ability to compete, not only east and west across this vast and beautiful country of ours, but also south to that captivating land called the United States of America.

In an effort to reassure our sorry detractors and attempt to convince them to overcome their baleful distrust, might I remind them, Mr. Speaker, that before the free trade negotiations began, our Government gave its expert negotiators explicit instructions in regard to our social and regional development programs. These programs were absolutely not to be negotiated under the Free Trade Agreement because they are distinguishing and essential features of Canadian society and constitute the fabric of our specificity.

During their many arduous meetings, the Canadian and U.S. negotiators attempted to draw up a code to regulate various subsidies and thus create an appropriate setting for healthy bilateral trade relations between their respective countries.

Since an understanding to that effect could not be reached, Section 119.07 of the deal provides that we will attempt to develop rules on the use of Government subsidies over the next five to seven years. On a number of occasions, the Prime Minister of Canada, our Prime Minister, has been extremely clear in repeating that Canadian negotiators will be under the same instructions for future negotiations of the subsidy code. In brief, Mr. Speaker, no compromise is nor will be considered concerning our social programs and our regional development initiatives. In the meantime, Mr. Speaker, either country may of course implement any internal trade laws it may pass. However, decisions concerning countervail and antidumping duties from now on will be reviewed by the binational dispute settlement tribunal. This is a worthwhile achievement because it must also be stressed, Mr. Speaker, that in order to obtain a favourable ruling on a countervail case, a country must show that the subsidies offered by the exporting country are unfair and may cause serious harm to an industry in the importing country.

We have been deluged by the sinister rhetoric from Hon. Members opposite since the beginning of this session, Mr. Speaker. Our colleagues often neglected to mention, inadvertently I should hope, that those rules are absolutely in line with those under the GATT. Because under the GATT, there are specific tests and a rigid procedure on those matters, and those structures are included unchanged in the Free Trade Agreement. A countervail case is extremely difficult to substantiate, as demonstrated by the fact that although the United States always had the right to argue that social and regional development programs were unfair trade subsidies, they could not succeed even once in proving their case. There is a whole world of difference, Mr. Speaker, between having the power to exercise that hypothetical right, and the cold reality of court decisions.

The history of current trade between Canada and the United States is ample proof of that, because we only experienced a single case of that sort. It dates back to 1985, when an action brought against the Canadian fishing industry claimed countervail duties against Canadian fishermen and the unemployment insurance program for fishermen. The action was dismissed by the lower trade tribunal of the U.S. Department of Trade.

And as supplementary information, I would stress that on May 1st, 1988, the American trade representative, Mr. Clayton Yeutter, stated he did not believe the matter of subsidies or social programs would ever become a problem. Although that question was raised in Canada by we know who, it is his contention that this was never raised at the negotiating table and should not be raised in the future. Mr. Yeutter also added that subsidy decisions must be made under the framework of what has always been acceptable at the international level. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, under international law, programs are not considered to be subsidies if they are of universal application. There is hardly any need to emphasize that our social programs, including medicare, unemployment insurance, pensions, etc., are offered to everybody in the population, which means they are in no way subject to countervail, unless in the view of certain warped minds.

Mrs. Judy Bello, Advisor to the U.S. trade representative Mr. Yeutter, also is of that view. According to her, American firms would be losing their time with such allegations of trade distorting subsidies. The Government of Canada, as a whole, and our Prime Minister, in particular, have been very clear in setting out Canadian objectives for negotiations regarding subsidies.

The Agreement shall respect our commitment to eliminate regional disparities and promote economic development throughout Canada. As the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has repeatedly stated and proven in this very Chamber, Canada's economy is remarkably flexible. It is constantly adapting to social changes, developing new approaches to remain internationally competitive and seeking new opportunities.

Over the past four years, Mr. Speaker, this Progressive Conservative Government has recorded achievements in the area of job creation which have made it the envy of the entire industrialized world.

During the last election campaign, many voters in my riding asked me about two specific points in the Free Trade Agreement. The first thing they wanted to know was what effect the involvement of U.S. firms on Canadian soil would have on the Canadian economy. Secondly, they wanted to know whether the Progressive Conservative Government could maintain the job creation record it had achieved between 1984 and 1988 if re-elected and for how long. To the first of their questions, I replied that about five million Canadians changed jobs each year and, of those, over one and a half million do not go back to their former employers. In 1986, for example, 381 plants each employing more than 100 people, were shut down, leading to 49,000 lay-offs. During that same year, thousands of new jobs were created through the opening of 326 new plants as well as the expansion and modernization of existing plants. The end result was that many more jobs were created than were lost.

• (2140)

Retraining and adjustment, Mr. Speaker, are natural occurrences in our economy. Managing change is the key to increased prosperity provided by this Progressive Conservative Government. Since our party came to power in 1984, the unemployment rate has dropped steadily, year after year.

In addition, our worker adjustment programs such as the Canadian Jobs Strategy, proved most effective in helping people laid off as a result of plant closures. All government adjustment programs are currently being reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Adjustment to ensure that they meet the needs of Canadian workers who may be affected by transfers.

In reply to the second question, I told the men and women of my riding that all of the skilled economists who had examined the various aspects of the Free Trade Agreement admitted that some foreign firms might decide to shut down their Canadian operations and others not to open a Canadian branch because of the phase-out of tariffs under the Agreement. However, each and every one of them stated that these possibilities should not be assessed through the grossly distorted prism that is created when one examines an issue with a closed mind.

Historically, foreign firms did not open branches in Canada simply to avoid high tariffs. They did so also because of the growing Canadian market, the proximity of certain U.S. markets, lower production and distribution costs and higher productivity rates of Canadian workers, and in doing so, created thousands of jobs.

Foreign subsidiaries, Mr. Speaker, are just as active in international trade as Canadian companies: they export 25 per cent of what they produce. In fact, the multinationals account for 70 per cent of trade between Canada and the United States. Furthermore, Canadian firms established in the United States buy five times more from their Canadian parents than what they export to Canada through their production facilities in the United States.

The Free Trade Agreement will afford Canada greater and more secure access to the American market and this, Mr. Speaker, will encourage plants here in Canada and foreign plants of Canadian companies to modernize their operations, to take advantage of economies of scale and to specialize to meet the needs of an enlarged market comprising over 250 million consumers rather than one restricted to 25 million consumers. And we must not lose sight of the fact, Mr. Speaker, that southern Ontario, the heart of the Canadian manufacturing industry, is closer to New York than are Detroit and Chicago.

Those who oppose the Free Trade Agreement lost no time in pointing out that it was to blame for the Gillette plant closure. However, Mr. Speaker, any honest observer will recognize that Gillette was obviously rationalizing its operations globally by closing plants in the United States, in Europe and in Latin America as well as in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, this Government expects that over 150 billion dollars in new investments will be made in Canada by Canadian businesses in the course of the coming year.

For example, Du Pont Canada has recently announced a 50 per cent increase in capital spending, which will reach 156 million dollars in 1989, in anticipation of the Free Trade Agreement.

R & M Metal of Montreal has decided to go ahead with investment plans totalling some 19 million dollars for 3 new plants in Ontario and Quebec, thus creating

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

225 new jobs. The company is doing so in anticipation of the Free Trade Agreement.

In Toronto, Canadian Thermos will create 102 new jobs by expanding one of its plants at a cost of 2.5 million dollars, also in anticipation of the Free Trade Agreement.

In La Presse of Tuesday, December 20, 1988, Mr. Jaime Benehimol, CEO of Ogivar, a Quebec manufacturer of IBM-compatible top-quality micro-computers, said, and I quote:

The Free Trade Agreement scheduled to take effect on January 1 will give my company a more secure access to the American market. I predict that Ogivar will do 15 to 20 per cent of its business south of the border.

And those are only a few examples of the kind of statements we can expect to hear in the months and years to come.

If every plant opening and plant expansion cannot be directly attributed to the Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Speaker, it goes without saying that, by the same token, the Agreement cannot be blamed for every plant closing. However, it will encourage most American-owned manufacturing companies established in Canada to increase their investments in our country. They will stay here mainly because it is a good place to do business.

It is the kind of environment that the Government led by our Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, has been creating for the past four years and it is in that direction that he intends to guide our country on the eve of the 21st century.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, for the edification of the depressed Hon. Members opposite, I invite them to read in the December 26 issue of MacLean's magazine an article written by seasoned journalist Peter C. Newman and entitled:

• (2150)

[English]

"A study in contrast between two at the top".

[Translation]

The last paragraph of that article is particularly important and reads as follows:

[English]

"It is difficult to compare two such different politicians, Mr. Mulroney and Mr. Trudeau, and Brian Mulroney's historical record is far from complete, but so far he has earned much higher political marks than his predecessor and this year-end seems like an appropriate moment to give him due credit".

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, that is why Canadians gave such strong support to the Progressive Conservative Party and why, on November 21, 1988, they decided to renew the 1984 mandate they had given to Brian Mulroney and his team, which was to steer a challenging course for this country. Mr. Speaker, our destiny is too noble to be left in the hands of mistrusting people who are unable to entertain a positive outlook. In return, the Government of the Progressive Conservative Party has asked the people of Canada to face up to the challenge of realism, dynamism and confidence.

[English]

"Let the people decide," someone said. The people have decided, so we are going to move along with free trade and build a better Canada for our sons and daughters.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) has the floor for a question or a comment.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, first I should like to welcome our new colleague in the House. Back home, the former mayor of Anjou is a well known and highly respected personality. His presence in the House is a plus.

I would like to ask him a question concerning the Gillette workers. You mentioned the fact that free trade did not have anything to do with that change, with the closing of the plant, but that it is the result of the rationalization of Gillette's work force on a world-wide scale. I agree with you.

But there are still two questions about this kind of situation. First, what is the responsibility, the political will with respect to the major companies, the multinationals which have cornered more than 72 per cent of our market? Canadian consumers like Gillette products, they readily use them, and these best selling products are made by Canadian workers.

Is it not time for the Government to express its political will to the effect that the companies which have grabbed more than 72 per cent of our market have a responsibility towards the workers who made these products, and with respect to the well-being of our society, of our workers, and that responsibility would be to keep their plants operating? That is the first part of my question, now comes the second part: What are we going to do about the 560 people who have now been laid off or dismissed? What have we done to prepare for this sudden influx of jobless people on the labour market? Do you not believe that we ought to have plans of action for the men and women who have now been laid off?

Mr. Corbeil: Mr. Speaker, whenever a plant shuts down in Canada and that Canadian men and women are thrown out of work, whatever region of the country they inhabit, it is a sad situation and, of course, our society must respond to such issues and attempt to find solutions.

However, there was a Prime Minister whom the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) would know, I am sure, and who once said that the Government has no business in the bedrooms of Canadian men and women.

I would suggest that the same thing applies at the commercial level. If the Government of Canada were to be expected to go in each plant and each company to take over management . . . And I do not think that that is what the Hon. Member for Mount Royal (Mrs. Finestone) wants because we would be forced to conclude that the Liberal Party has adopted both the philosophy and the methods advocated by the socialists. I do not believe we have reached that point yet.

Mr. Speaker, it is the responsibility of the government to ensure that businesses in Canada comply with Canadian laws. The responsibility of the government remains the same regardless of the location or size of these business, of whether they employ 10, 50, or several thousand people, or whether they belong to Canadians, Americans, Japanese or Europeans.

Sometimes a business decides that it has to close down. I do not know of many businesses and certainly not of any the size of Gillette that would close down a plant, branch, head office or sales office simply on a whim. Such decisions are business decisions the purpose of which is to avoid bankruptcy or the closure of all operations and the lay-off of an even greater number of workers.

The Government must ensure that these companies comply with Canadian laws and regulations and that workers who are temporarily laid off have access to the various social programs, such as unemployment insurance benefits and adjustment programs, which are not threatened by the Free Trade Agreement. This, the Government has done admirably. Displaced workers must have access to all adjustment programs available in Canada so that they can rejoin the labour force and maintain the dignity that comes with employment and a valid contribution to the prosperity of Canada.

[English]

Mr. MacWilliam: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member mentioned Clayton Yeutter in regard to the discussion on subsidies. I remind the Member that Clayton Yeutter, as Trade Representative, was also the individual who said after Canada signed the deal that Canadians did not understand what they had signed and that in 20 years Canada would be sucked into the U.S. economy. I think the comments he made show very clearly the U.S. agenda.

The Hon. Member commented on subsidies specifically with regard to regional development programs. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated earlier that Canada's regional development programs would remain untouched under the trade deal. That is at least a half-truth.

Admittedly, the trade deal does not name specifically these programs. It does call for the two countries to establish over the next five to seven years a comprehensive definition of just what constitutes an unfair trade practice or an unfair subsidy.

Members of the House know very well that the United States has already challenged many of our regional development programs as unfair trade practices. They are very likely to continue to do so in the next five to seven years of negotiations. Let me mention a few: The industrial regional development programs; federal and provincial agricultural programs, such as the Farm Income Insurance Program in British Columbia; agricultural marketing boards; export development programs; and even the concept of interest rebates and loan guarantees, low interest loans for small businesses.

In light of the fact that this deal has so many loose ends attached with regard to the comprehensive definition of what constitutes a subsidy, why has the Government gone into a trade negotiation when so much is left to be determined over the next five to seven years? It should have been locked up before that deal was signed.

Mr. Corbeil: Mr. Speaker, I do not pretend that I can persuade the Hon. Member opposite that the Government took the right decision since this matter has been discussed here in this House for over 350 hours in the previous Parliament. There was an election campaign that lasted 51 days during which these people carefully avoided discussing specifically about the Free Trade Agreement. Instead, they launched an assault against the very minds of adult men and women of Canada, and especially the most vulnerable people, Mr. Speaker, by using scare tactics on the issue of old age security pensions and social benefits. So, during the few minutes I have left, I will not try and persuade him that it was indeed justified. However, our Government successfully concluded this Free Trade Agreement that the Canadian Parliament will officially ratify in a few hours.

I would simply like to tell him that with respect to the negotiations—

[English]

With respect to the negotiations on subsidies, the Government has made it clear that an essential Canadian objective will be to conclude an agreement which takes full account of our commitment to eliminate regional economic disparities and encourage economic development in all regions of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, this Government is firmly committed to ensuring economic prosperity in Canada from coast to coast and to ensuring that each and every region of Canada benefits from this economic prosperity. This will only be achieved with the implementation of a free trade agreement. This is the central thrust, the cornerstone of our party's program and we will have it adopted. We only have a few hours left during which we will be subjected to the hogwash of these people who stubbornly refuse to understand.

[English]

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to be here tonight to deliver a speech on the trade Bill. Before I start that, I want to congratulate the Speaker on being re-elected to the chair. It is a position that he certainly deserves. He has done a remarkable job and has been extremely fair at all times.

I would like to congratulate you, too, Mr. Speaker, on your appointment as Deputy Speaker, and to congratulate the other two Speakers associated with committee stage. I want to say to the new Members who have been elected to this Thirty-fourth Parliament how impressed I and the Members who have been around here for a while are with the quality and the talent that has been elected to this Thirty-fourth Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hopkins: They have certainly been an example to us in this debate by being willing to stand up and express the views of their constituents. I am sure that many of them will have a good, long career in the House.

I want to say to the new Members at the outset, do not let hateful partisan politics destroy some excellent friendships that they will have the potential to build here in the House of Commons. I see at the end of the Chamber on the other side the Hon. Member from the Annapolis Valley in Nova Scotia. He was elected for the first time the same day I was. He is still here. The Hon. Member for Victoria Haliburton (Mr. Scott) was elected on the same day, as was Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grace (Mr. Allmand). I think we have carried on good friendships over the years, and we make more as new Members come into the House. I say to them, cultivate that because they will be long-lasting, valued friendships.

The new Members can build bridges in this place with a great sense of decency. When there is a crowd of people together every day, there is always room for a sense of decency. They have the power to set that example and to build decorum in the House of Commons.

I am very mindful of the time I gave my maiden speech in this House. I was followed by the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, who praised me for my remarks. As a result, I got national coverage. There was another reason why the right hon. gentleman did that. One of my uncles was a poll captain for him in Prince Albert, and I am sure that John, in his good, old political style, wanted to impress the good people to whom I was related in his riding of Prince Albert.

I think all of us have to take a look at the decorum in this House. I noticed in this debate that new Members no longer have been granted the right and the privilege to rise in the House to speak for the first time without interference or interruption. I think that is something we have to take a good look at and try to improve, because they should have that right.

Emotions, as we all know, have been riding high in this House since December 12. That is only natural, coming off the hustings and being back here with only three weeks off in between. The cooling-off period from now until we come back will, I hope, have a positive effect on the decorum in the House.

I want to comment on the heat of the election campaign and on the Canada Elections Act. The trade debate throughout the election created a lot of heat, a lot of strong debate and, of course, a lot of emotions in the business community. On Tuesday last, 30 days following the election, the Members of this House had to submit a record of donations to their campaigns. While we are all required to live within the parameters of the Canada Elections Act, we all know very well that there were millions and millions of dollars poured into advertising in the latter days of the election campaign and that those people who spent that money will not have to report that to Elections Canada.

Are we to have an elections Act that will allow multi-million dollar corporations to slap ad after ad, regardless of quality, on national television to swing elections while the candidates running for public office must themselves remain super clean? There must be a formula worked out whereby interest groups will have to either funnel their funds through one of the political parties or be accountable in some other way to Elections Canada. Otherwise we will not have fair election campaigns, regardless of what legislation we pass with regard to election reform.

I want to thank my own constituents in the Ottawa Valley in the new riding of Renfrew. In my view, it should still be called the riding of Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke because that is precisely what it is. Sometimes you have a hard time explaining this to people who make these decisions. I certainly did on two occasions.

I want to thank the people of the federal riding of Renfrew for returning me to this House. I have always taken this job very seriously. I appreciate mixing with people who are interested in the future of this nation. I have met some very interesting and intelligent people in this place.

At the age of 14 my greatest desire was to be a Member of Parliament. The people of the riding of Renfrew and the riding of Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke before and the riding of Renfrew-North, and Nipissing-East and prior to that, the old riding of Renfrew North have given me the privilege of having that lifetime wish. That makes it all the more reason that I am so grateful to them at this time.

We have a great chance as Members of Parliament to relate to the people across this nation. We have a great responsibility as we hold that public office to make them feel that we are their representative, that we are interested in their problems and in their aspirations which they express to us from time to time.

I am very concerned at this time about the path that our country is now taking. The election is over and a majority has been elected to bring in the trade deal. I still hold very deeply the concerns that lie ahead. In matters of sovereignty, in matters of regional development at which a serious look must be taken now that we are into this new process, because no matter how you spell it—I am glad the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) is here tonight—it is going to affect regional development in Canada because of that famous word “subsidization”. He knows as we do that forest industries have been affected and cannot get regional development because if they receive money to start up, it means, in the eyes of the Americans, that they were being subsidized. The Americans would complain and take action.

I suppose too, Mr. Speaker, as a Canadian nationalist I am concerned about the continentalism nature of what we are doing here in this Parliament during these two weeks. This nation was built on an east-west transportation system. Quebec itself was very anxious to join Confederation in 1867 because it did not want to be usurped by the then gung-ho American nation in its very rambunctious mood following the years of the Civil War in the United States. Quebec wanted to preserve its language, religion and culture. Quebec willingly came forward and joined three other provinces to begin the nation Canada.

Today as we see the east-west roots given up in favour of north-south continentalism, it will be interesting to see how this affects the social fabric, the culture and so on of that province in Canada.

Sectors of the forest industry are suffering because of what I would like to call the tinkering and manoeuvring of the Government in relation to trade. I am speaking here about the 15 per cent export tax placed on softwood lumber. This deal was brought in overnight without warning. The former Minister for International Trade was patting the Government of Ontario on the back saying: “Way to go, fellows. You are really hanging in there for us and putting up a good fight.” They were willing to take it to court. At midnight, on the news, the rug had been pulled right out from underneath the Province of Ontario. A Memorandum of Understanding had been signed which resulted in a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber in Canada.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Crosbie: The provinces all agreed except for Ontario.

Mr. Hopkins: The Minister is starting to shout across the floor. I am not going to get into that debate with him.

Mr. Crosbie: I am not shouting at all.

Mr. Hopkins: I have a case to present to him tonight that I think he should consider very carefully. I am delivering it to him in the sense of a representation on the floor of this House because there are several Members on this side of the House who have met with our business people in the softwood lumber industry. They are hurting, and this message has to be taken seriously.

Mr. Crosbie: Take it to the Government of Ontario where it belongs.

Mr. Hopkins: The Ontario Government did not create the problem. This Government created the problem and it better get on with solving it.

Mr. Crosbie: This Government did not.

Mr. Hopkins: If you are going to increase stumpage fees in the Province of Ontario to make up the difference of that 15 per cent export tax today, the Province of Ontario which now collects $25 million on stumpage fees per year would have to increase that to $80 million, a more than 300 per cent increase. That is totally unacceptable and unreasonable. The Minister should renegotiate the Memorandum of Understanding.

The Government, it seems, no longer speaks for Canada. The agreement speaks for Canada. The trade agreement speaks for Canada.

We had more freer trade and less small business set asides in the defence field with the United States in the 1950s than we have today. The Pentagon only allows certain contracts to go outside the United States. Supply and Services officials say nothing has changed under this agreement, that it is still the same. Americans can still bid on our defence contracts. We had more free trade back in the 1950s than we have today.

Let us take a look at the farm community. I will give just one example. I picked this one out because it deals with the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act. If my memory serves me correctly—I stand to be corrected because I am not absolutely certain—the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act is another Act passed about this time of the year. A group of us came back between Christmas and New Year's and passed the farm Bill.

This one set up the various farm marketing agencies. In any case, we had an amendment which was put off because of closure, time allocation, on second reading of the Bill. We wanted to amend Bill C-2 by adding thereto immediately after line 7 on page 4 the following clause:

For greater certainty nothing in this Act or in the agreement shall in any way diminish, reduce or alter the objects, duties and powers of the bodies established or pursuant to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

The amendment would protect national farm marketing agencies or supply-management in Canada by maintaining the authority of the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act and not give it away. The Act currently provides supply-management policy for poultry and dairy products. The Act can also be used to introduce supply-management and national marketing for other commodities if and when a majority of the producers of the commodity in question so desires.

• (2220)

I want to go immediately from that example of the farm community to the lumber issue. In 1972 the Canadian and United States Governments agreed to remove all lumber tariffs and establish common species, grade and engineering specifications for their lumber.

In the mid-1980s the United States lumber industry called for countervailing duties against Canadian lumber on the grounds of low stumpage rates—the fees that companies pay to provincial Governments for the right to cut trees on public land—were a form of disguised subsidy.

The signing of the softwood lumber agreement on December 30, 1986, also known as the Memorandum of Understanding, resulted in a 15 per cent tax on the export of certain softwood lumber products from Canada to the United States. The effective date of the export charge was then set at January 8, 1987, and that is when the problem started. However, the agreement contained so many exceptions that most lumber enterprises were confused. This confusion pushed 25 lumber manufacturers to form a coalition to sue the federal Government. That coalition claimed that it was economically discriminated against under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

The coalition stated that its members had to pay the tax, while 20 of their competitors got exemptions. It asked for damages and compensation in excess of $10 million. In that instance there were some who did not have to pay, and others who did. Obviously, that is what the Minister for International Trade calls justice, if we are to take seriously what he stated tonight.

I have here an example from one of my industrial people who stated:

You and your colleagues have certainly heard enough from the solid wood industry across Canada regarding the devastating effect of Bill C-37 on their industry. We as a company do not promote the abdication of replacement measures to satisfy the U.S. protectionists. The inequities created by this legislation can only be exacerbated by this approach. We do, however, appeal to our elected representatives to find a way to stop the bleeding in the White and Red Pine industry before it is too late. The casualties are piling up.

He goes on to state:

Our . . . operation has probably been hit harder than most because we had geared our 1976-1977 rebuilding program and product policy to the U.S. market. We developed a good customer base and distribution system in the Northeastern States.

Our volume to the U.S. has dropped from 60 per cent to 39 per cent and the effect of our redirection of volume to the domestic market has caused a glut here at home and prices have dropped to unacceptable levels for everyone.

You are giving me the high sign, Mr. Speaker. I have some other things that I would like to put on the record. Eastern white pine has a traditional distinct place in the United States market, and that is a case for white and red pine product exclusion from the proposed U.S. duty on Canadian softwoods.

I would be glad to give this list to the Minister for International Trade to help him fight the battle.

The volume of eastern white pine exported to the United States is diminishing, and in effect is insignificant. It is $72 million, over $14 billion, or one-half per cent. That is what is being fought over in the United States. It was never the intention—and this is the important thing that I want the Minister for International Trade to hear—of the petitioners for countervailing duty to have the duty applied to eastern white pine. Eastern white pine does not impact on the price of U.S. pine species. This is evidenced by the fact that the United States pine prices did not increase upon the imposition of the preliminary 15 per cent duty on October 16, 1986. Wood costs to eastern Canadian white pine mills is comparatively high, and cannot be regarded as subsidized.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there unanimous consent in the House to give the Hon. Member two more minutes to complete his speech?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Hopkins: I thank all Members of the House for allowing me to put two more items on the record.

The unwarranted U.S. duty is causing unnecessary and devastating injury to the eastern Canadian producers. The already tenuous margins in this business are eliminated and the survival of the industry is at stake. Because of the insignificant volume and co-mingling of species, red pine should also be excluded from any duty.

I thank Hon. Members of the House for allowing me to complete my speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments the Hon. Member for Okanagan—Shuswap.

Mr. MacWilliam: Although it may be presumptuous of me, as a new member of the House I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his comments regarding the challenge faced by new members in the Chamber. It has been a fairly active two weeks. Certainly, with regard to maiden speeches, it has been rather difficult for some Members to deliver those. It is a daunting challenge for all of us. I appreciate the comments made by my Hon. colleague in that regard.

I share the concerns of the Hon. Member regarding the third party advertising and political activity that has obviously taken place in this past campaign.

Mr. Crosbie: Like the union movement.

Mr. MacWilliam: The Member indicated that money does speak very loudly, and that certainly was the case in this campaign.

Mr. Crosbie: Yes, from the CLC and all your union buddies.

Mr. MacWilliam: Big money made itself very well heard in the 1988 election. In future, changes must be made to ensure that fairness does prevail.

With regard to the rather vituperative and inflammatory rhetoric that has often dominated this Chamber in the past two weeks, I am sure that many Canadians watching must wonder what they are paying us to do. When they listen to the discussions and the tenor of the debate, it gives them every reason to tend to lose confidence in the proceedings in the Chamber.

Earlier the Hon. Member mentioned that it is an honour to serve the House. It certainly is an honour for all new Members. I feel excited about it. In the election campaign many of us were called liars throughout the campaign. I agree with the Member that that type of rhetoric has no place either in the Chamber or anywhere in the political forum.

In conclusion, on behalf of the new Members, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for his comments and to reflect upon them tonight.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions and comments, the Hon. Minister for International Trade.

Mr. Crosbie: I want to congratulate the Hon. Member, certainly not on his maiden speech, but on his remarks. He mentioned a problem that is one that we certainly need to look at, which is the question of extra-curricular spending by other than political parties during the course of an election campaign.

As I remember the situation, the Government attempted to make some moves in the direction of reforming the Elections Act before the election took place, and it could not receive any co-operation from the two opposition Parties. Perhaps my memory is a little rusty, but there was no agreement between the three Parties as to what changes should be made to the Elections Act.

On this occasion the Hon. Member does not agree with the position taken by most Canadian businesses and industries with respect to the question of free trade, and because most Canadian businesses supported the Free Trade Agreement and did the right and patriotic thing by demonstrating their support, the Hon. Member does not agree with that, and he feels that it should be looked into.

• (2230)

Well, I think it should be looked into as well—not just because of abuses by the corporate community but because of the abuses by the Canadian labour movement, which forks over a large part of the dues collected from union members to the New Democratic Party, a Party heavily supported by the labour movement.

Just imagine Canadian businessmen and businesswomen daring to express their views during an election campaign. Why, if one is a business person, one shouldn't have a view at all. Business people should just creep around the country apologizing for being industrialists, apologizing for creating employment. One certainly shouldn't express one's views publicly or pay for advertisements if one is a business person. No, that would be a terrible thing to do. But one can be a member of the labour movement hierarchy in this country and do just that. The labour movement does not get the permission of its membership, the rank and file of the unions in this country, as to what it does with the funds collected.

The unions take the dues of their members, many of whom are Liberals, many of whom are Progressive Conservatives, and turn around and contribute to the New Democratic Party, and to the New Democratic Party only, for campaign spending. As well, the union hierarchy travels around the country making speeches on behalf of the New Democratic Party.

These people can be at the bargaining table with the Government negotiating a collective agreement while coming out publicly in support of candidates who are running against the governing Party.

We had Daryl Bean, the PSAC representative, involved in the election with my old friend Captain Morrissey Johnson. It is perfectly all right for the union hierarchy to get involved in that sort of thing. There is no conflict of interest involved in that. They can take the dues paid by the membership, and turn over a portion to the New Democratic Party. Yet, we never hear a word of protest from the New Democratic Party against that kind of injustice, against that kind of arbitrary treatment of moneys paid by the union rank and file in this country, moneys forked over to the New Democratic Party without any authorization whatsoever on the part of the union rank and file.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I hope the Hon. Member for Renfrew (Mr. Hopkins) will agree that when we do have a look at this, that we have a long look at the abuses perpetrated by the labour leadership in this country, the abuses perpetrated by the Bob Whites and the Shirley Carr and the Nancy Riches of this country.

Nancy Riche was threatening to come into St. John's West and run against me, Mr. Speaker. I was expected to quake in my boots that this virtuoso of the Canadian labour movement, an individual originally from Newfoundland, was going to come down to St. John's West and run against me.

An Hon. Member: Here comes the rhetoric.

Mr. Crosbie: She thought better of it, Mr. Speaker; she did not come to St. John's West. But she was everywhere else in the country campaigning for the New Democratic Party.

Who was paying her salary? Why, it is paid out of moneys paid by Liberals, by Progressive Conservatives, by Libertarians; out of moneys paid by people not interested in politics at all.

Their money is taken by the hierarchy of the labour movement and forked over to the New Democratic Party for use in election campaigns—and we see the results in the tattered remnants of the New Democratic Party that we see on the other side of the House. There are not too many of them in the House this evening because their Leader has lost all control over them. There is not even a handful in the Chamber this evening.

But, I digress.

Some Hon. Members: Ho, ho!

Mr. Crosbie: The Hon. Member for Renfrew has raised a serious point. He is concerned about the softwood lumber industry, the plight of which certainly has to be reviewed.

That industry did well in 1987, but is not doing well now, and the prospects for 1989 are not as good as one would like them to be. As the Hon. Member will understand, there was a Memorandum of Understanding entered into between the provinces and the Government of Canada, with the Province of Ontario only disagreeing. While there was not over-all agreement, it was felt that, rather than incur a countervail tariff in the order of 15 per cent in the U.S., the moneys involved, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, should be retained in Canada through the imposition of an export tax imposed by the federal Government, with the proceeds of that tax being turned over to the provinces, or an increase in the provincial royalty.

British Columbia, which accounts for 70 per cent of all softwood lumber exports to the U.S., chose to go the route of a royalty increase, and it can adjust that royalty to account for exchange rate fluctuations. If the exchange rate changes, a quarterly adjustment can be made to the royalty rate.

However, the federal export tax cannot be adjusted to take account of exchange rate fluctuations.

Ontario opted for the export tax as opposed to going the royalty route, and it now seems that it might be more advantageous for Ontario to have gone the royalty route. I suggest that the Hon. Member approach the Government of Ontario on this as well. Certainly if the industry and the provinces wish to enter into discussions to review the situation, that can be done. It seems to me that it is something that will have to be reviewed in the next month or so.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Hopkins: I am pleased to hear the Minister's offer to review it. Certainly, the Memorandum of Understanding should be reopened and discussed further. I point out that the industry was quite prepared to fight the legal battle on the countervail action, as was the Province of Ontario.

There is concern in British Columbia today because of the course of action chosen. It is not considered to be a perfect solution. There is a great deal of concern in the softwood lumber industry in British Columbia today about the course taken.

I appreciate the remarks of the Minister—and certainly I am glad I created such an interesting debate on the subject of the Canada Elections Act. It may be that we can get some action on that in the not too distant future as well.

The Minister insinuated that I was of the view that industrialists and corporate people should not have a view to express—and that is not what I said at all. Any Canadian citizen, regardless of his/her walk of life, can express a view, whether during an election campaign, or at any other time. That is a basic freedom. My point is that one should not have the right, and does not have the right, to go out and buy the views of other people during the course of an election campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Macleod on debate.

Mr. Ken G. Hughes (Macleod): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity of participating in the debate on the motion for the third reading of Bill C-2. At the outset I should like to thank the voters of the new, although historically significant, federal riding of Macleod.

It is a real honour to have been chosen by the people of Macleod to represent them in the House of Commons. It is the area in which I was born and reared, and where my family roots are deep.

I welcome the opportunity to speak in this historic debate. I look forward to sharing with my colleagues in this place some of the history of my corner of Canada, the southwestern corner of Alberta, tucked up against The Great Divide.

I share this not for any narrow political purpose but because the people of Macleod are a great example of the kind of people who will take advantage of the opportunities created by the Free Trade Agreement.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The people of Macleod share a strong sense of history with many other Canadians. But because of our history, we Albertans appreciate certain values—which we hope all Canadians will seize and once again hold dear.

We in the riding of Macleod are close to our history. As a younger man I can remember marvelling at the depth of history in other parts of this country. I recall reflecting upon the fact that buildings can be found in St. John's, Halifax, or Montreal that are hundreds of years old. The oldest buildings remaining in my part of Canada are less than a century old.

I came to appreciate the value of being so close to our own history. I grew up in the company of people who, when they were building their lives, were building the history of my corner of Canada.

The advantage we take from that history is that we have acquired the values of our immediate forebearers, and it is those values—values of practical self-reliance, of courage, of perhaps bloody-minded determination—which will carry us through the years ahead.

As the son and a grandson of cattle ranchers who built their lives in the foothills of southern Alberta, I cherish those values—values which so many of us share. Above all else, we treasure the fierce spirit of self-reliance characterized by the hunters, the farmers, the ranchers, the oilmen, the lumbermen, and the coal miners who opened up our part of the country.

Let me go back first to the people who inhabited the mountains and the plains and the foothills, those who have so strongly influenced those of us who live in the riding of Macleod. The native peoples, primarily of the Blackfoot confederacy, lived a nomadic life which today is recognized in such historic sites as the Head-Smashed-In Buffalo Jump, near Fort Macleod. With a first class interpretive centre, this location is recognized by UNESCO as a world heritage site.

● (2240)

I should add that the natives of the plains benefited from unfettered trade with their neighbours long before other races arrived on the scene. Further, after the arrival of the non-natives, our communities had free trade with our American neighbours to our mutual benefit. That was when the means of supply was oxen wagons from Fort Benton, Montana, long before the CPR arrived.

As the new Member for the renewed historic riding of Macleod I cannot fail to mention Colonel James F.

Macleod who helped lead the Royal Northwest Mounted Police to the West. On behalf of the Dominion of Canada this force established law and order. It wasn't easy. The Americans had nothing to teach us, we did it in our own fair minded but determined Canadian manner using tact and diplomacy.

After Fort Macleod was founded in the autumn of 1874, a second fort was established. This second post, which has always suffered in the shadow of Fort Macleod, is that small community on the northern outskirts of my riding, locally known as Fort Calgary. Some of you may have heard of it.

Along the Macleod Trail between these two centres grew the communities of Dewinton, Okotoks, High River, Cayley, Nanton, Stavley, Claresholm and Granum. One of the landmark events in western development was the signing of treaty seven between Her Majesty the Queen and the native peoples of our area. Today the descendants of those natives have four reservations within the riding of Macleod. The Blackfoot are at Glietzen, the Peigan at Bocket, the Sarcee near Calgary and some of the Stoney or Assinaboine at Eden Valley. These people have had a proud but at times troubled history. However, I believe they have a strong future and I look forward to working with them to build our future together.

I mentioned many communities of Macleod and they are now looking forward with eager anticipation to implementation of the Free Trade Agreement. We need the economic diversification and the manufacturing jobs. The opportunities this agreement will bring are so important to our young people. We want to give them the choice to come back to our small communities and work where they were raised.

We all know the future will not necessarily be an easy ride. It never has been easy. We recall the loss of more than 60 lives when, at 4.10 a.m. on April 29, 1903, the face of Turtle Mountain in the Crowsnest Pass came tumbling down on a sleeping mining town. Today, the Frank Slide interpretive centre commemorates that tragedy, as well as the Hillcrest mine disaster and other significant events. It also pays tribute to the people from so many diverse nationalities who suffered through the trials and tribulations, the booms and busts of international coal markets. The people of the Crowsnest Pass understand perhaps all too well what tough times are. Many look forward to the FTA which will decrease the cost of mining equipment, making our coal more competitive in international markets.

We the people of Macleod are accustomed to taking risks to pursue our future and build our dreams. It was in May of 1914, in Turner Valley, when the well named "Dingman #1" came in, establishing the first major oil and gas discovery in Alberta. It was the richness of that field which built the foundation of the energy industry in western Canada. In the years that followed, self-reliant, risk-taking Albertans seized their opportunities and the communities of Turner Valley, Black Diamond, Naptha, Hartell, Little Chicago and Little New York grew and prospered. Little New York subsequently became Longview, and I am very proud of that community near which I was raised.

My point is those oil wells were not discovered by people who tried to hide behind protectionism or subsidies. Many of those wells, and much of our oil and gas industry, were built by ordinary Canadians, using money from wherever they could get it. They dared to take the risk and they dared to be successful.

I do not have time to elaborate on the colourful history of ranching in Macleod or on the achievements of dryland and irrigated farming such as is found in the County of Vulcan where wheat is king. However, I would like to pay tribute to some of the artisan talent which flourishes in many communities such as Bragg Creek and Pincher Creek. Many Members of this House have had the pleasure of eating good Alberta beef, or perhaps Glenwood cheese from my riding. The people of Macleod look outward for markets, ideas and challenges. No better example could be cited than the hosting of the Winter Olympic ski events at Nakiska in Kananaskis country last February.

The story of the people of Macleod is a story of people who have made the best of what they were given, who have a strong belief in themselves and their neighbours, who face risks with courage and conviction. It is my greatest aspiration that all Canadians will cherish these values as have our forebears. If all of Canada does that, then the world will be ours. We will eat the Americans for breakfast, and then look up for lunch and dinner.

In my riding more than 80 per cent of the constituents voted for candidates supporting the FTA with the U.S. For the information of the socialists of two stripes opposite, that is a clear majority.

In the future, Canadians will look back on this debate, which has engaged our nation for nearly three years in one form or another, as one of great significance. It has been a watershed. It should remind us all of other great historic times in this Parliament. For example, one of the most historic steps for us in western Canada was the establishment of the Canadian Pacific Railway. That was a very positive step and this may well be the only time that I as a western Canadian politician will speak favourably of a railway. However, at the time of that great initiative in 1872, Sir George Etienne Cartier said: "All aboard for the West!" Now, in the closing days of 1988, there is a new train waiting ever so patiently in the station. It is the free trade train. It is called "The Spirit of Canada Future", not the "Ghost of Canada Past" as Members opposite would wish it to be.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hughes: That train is getting ready to move forward to the 21st century and a future of new challenges and new prosperity.

I would like to draw to your attention one of the less well known advantages of the Free Trade Agreement. In 10 short days, after it has been passed, a Canadian tariff of 9.5 per cent will be removed from a critical piece of equipment used throughout my riding. That is, a saddle. Yes, a saddle for riding horses. We, the cowboys from Alberta, cowboys from all across Canada, will ride high in our new saddles which will cost us 90 per cent of what they do now. One of the first things we are going to do is round up the Opposition, throw on the saddle, tighten the cinch, and ride them until they figure out for themselves which way the rest of the herd is going.

• (2250)

As I indicated earlier, more than 80 per cent of the voters in my riding supported candidates favouring free trade. We are on board the free trade train. We are on board the spirit of Canada's future. I know the West is on board. I know Quebec is on board. We say to the rest of Canada, to the Maritimes, to Labrador and Newfoundland, to our friends in Ontario: "All aboard, the train is pulling out".

Mr. Kaplan: Just do not take the night train from Ottawa.

Mr. Hughes: Members opposite can continue to wallow in the slough of despair and backward looking self-pity at the side of the tracks. Or they can get a ticket to the future on the train to prosperity. There is still room for all Canadians before we pull out of the station. All aboard Canada. Look out, America, here come the Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the Hon. Member if his ringing endorsement of rail transportation means that the overnight train service from Ottawa to Toronto, which is about to be cancelled without this Government taking any steps to restore it, is going to be reversed.

Mr. McDermid: Ask him if he rode the goddamn thing the odd time.

Mr. Hughes: Even though I come from the Prairies, I can recognize a red herring when I see one. I would say that that is one.

Mr. McDermid: He has never ridden it in his life. He doesn't even know where the train station is, for Heaven's sake.

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, the record may show a totally uninformed allegation made by the Minister for the homeless to the effect that I have never taken the overnight train. I have taken it. However, more important, members of my family use it, and use it frequently.

Mr. Funk: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the Hon. Member who just spoke of the train might have mistaken the light at what he thinks is the end of the tunnel for a train coming. There is a joke about a horse, but I will not tell it.

Rather, I would like to speak about the mandate from the West. The mandate the Conservative Party got from the West is restricted to the Province of Alberta. The Reform Party is nipping at the heels of the Conservative Party throughout the West. I think my Leader probably regrets by now having spoken of the two-party system. However, it might be the New Democrats and the Reform Party in the next election if the Government keeps treating western Canada the way it has been.

Mr. Siddon: You have 50 seats in the West. What are you talking about?

Mr. Funk: Twenty-two in Alberta. Take those seats out—

Mr. McDermid: Why would you take out Alberta? What do you have against Alberta?

Mr. Funk: Very little.

Mr. McDermid: The NDP hates Alberta.

Mr. Riis: What have you got against Alberta? You are devastating the economy out there.

Mr. Funk: There has been a lot of talk about mandate. It can be argued either way, that with 43 per cent there is a majority of Members. Yet 53 per cent voted against free trade, which has also been argued here. If the truth were known, neither that side of the House nor this side of the House has the absolute certainty with which we can bat each other in this forum.

After the debate we went through during the campaign, I hoped there would be some movement by the Government to set up a legitimate monitoring process that every Member in the House and every person in the country would have some confidence in, both those who support free trade and those who oppose it. I have not seen any movement toward that kind of monitoring.

If we are to get out of the impasse and the bad feelings that have been created to make this House work, then perhaps some serious attention will be paid to a monitoring process in which some people have some confidence. Hon. Members opposite might not agree with that, but if they have as much confidence in this deal as they say they have then they would want a monitoring process to demonstrate that.

My question is this. The Hon. Member mentioned that there are four Indian bands within the boundaries of his constituency. The Indian bands in my constituency were very concerned about the effect of free trade on their tax status. For example, would that be considered a benefit that could be grieved? They were worried about third party interests when it comes to settling matters such as land entitlements. They had a study done which stated that since they are at the bottom end of the wage scale they would be the first ones to lose their jobs.

What kind of assurances has the Hon. Member received from his own Party that I might pass on to the Indian people in my riding regarding how this deal would specifically affect them?

Mr. Hughes: Mr. Speaker, if I might just answer one of those 20 questions. The Hon. Member should understand that the fundamental concept behind the Free Trade Agreement is that it does not discriminate against any Canadian. It provides equal opportunity for every Canadian regardless of where they live, whether they live on an Indian reserve in my riding, a small town in southern Alberta, Calgary, Montreal or St. John's East or West, or anywhere else in the country. It provides them with an equal opportunity and equal benefit. It is up to people to take advantage of that opportunity. I know that this Government has done more in the last four years for western Canada than any other Government has done in the last 50 or 100 years.

Since we are talking about trains, I would like to share something with the rest of my friends here. I would like to talk about the beauty of the mountains we share with British Columbia. I am getting a signal from the Speaker that perhaps I should be wrapping up.

As a gesture of friendship I invite the Speaker and Members of the House out to Alberta to see the beauty of the Rocky Mountains for themselves. Perhaps they can then go on to British Columbia to enjoy the wonders there.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On the last question or comment, the Chair recognizes the Hon. Members for LaSalle—Émard.

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member has shown such incredible insight—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Martin (LaSalle—Émard): It really is a nice place, Mr. Speaker. I am having a lot of fun.

The Hon. Member has shown incredible insight into free trade interspersed first, of course, with his travelogue. I wonder if he might answer the question that the Minister for International Trade was unable to answer this afternoon, that is, in his opinion, would the Free Trade Agreement be vitiated if we were not able to obtain a definition of subsidies acceptable to Canada?

Mr. McDermid: You are so far off base. What a jerk. I cannot believe that.

● (2300)

Mr. Hughes: I do not have to answer that question. He was perfectly capable of answering the question himself. He has answered the question a thousand times across this country already. We do not need to give him one more time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle has the floor on debate.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Minister for International Trade.

Mr. Crosbie: This is a unique point of order. What I want to find out from the Chair is this: Is a Member of the House, just recently elected, allowed to make comments from Florida where he is spending a few days of repose as is reported today in Le Droit?

The Hon. Member for Hull—Aylmer (Mr. Rocheleau) is giving certain opinions from Florida. I wonder whether it is permissible, when we are here together in an emergency session debating a very important issue, the new Liberal Member for Hull—Aylmer should be in Florida giving his opinions about Herbert Marx, Clifford Lincoln, and Richard French. What are his opinions on what we have been discussing here in the House for the last 10 or 12 days? Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this matter be referred to the committee on privileges and holidays.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The matter may be one of concern to the Minister for International Trade, but I am sorry to say that is not a point of order. On debate, the Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker. I wish to participate in the debate. I know that the hour is getting late. It is the silly season, especially with the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). It is also getting late in this long debate on the Free Trade Agreement.

As Parliament continues to debate this agreement, which will be put before the House some time in the next day, one phase of this debate comes to an end. This debate will continue for many more years to come as Canada enters into a new period of its social and economic development. Due to the action of the Government, all Canadians will be concerned about the effects this will have on our nation. We will monitor it closely to determine exactly what effects the action of the Government will have on us all.

There is a certain amount of speculation. As is the duty of the Opposition, we are obliged to show the weaknesses of the Government's legislation. The Government is anxious to show the positive aspects of what it is introducing. The part I find distressing in such an historic and momentous decision is that the Government is intent to ram through this piece of legislation. The Government says and claims that this certainly has been debated enough. In the last campaign, it became the major issue. It was the major topic of debate in the previous session of Parliament.

There are some important pieces of information that the Government has never released to the public. The Government has conducted intensive studies on various sectors to determine economic impact.

Earlier this year I attempted to get copies of those studies, as did The Globe and Mail. What the Government released to us was inadequate. It was only partial information. The Government knows. At least some of its Departments have done projections to determine the impact this legislation will have on various sectors of the economy. If the Government was honest with the Canadian people, it would make that information public. It has chosen not to.

I suspect what motivates the Government is more ideology rather than economic thinking and projection. The Government is ideologically motivated with a neo-Conservative agenda which is quite different from the historic Conservative agenda. In the neo-Conservative agenda, it is the market-place that has become the primary motivating force. Earlier considerations by former Conservative Prime Ministers and leaders have always balanced the consideration of the market-place with other considerations; the social consideration, the cultural consideration, particularly as they pertain to the development and maturity of Canada as a nation.

It has been a Canadian tradition that there be an acceptance of some form of mixed economy. We have always debated what the mix should be. Former Conservative Governments have introduced Crown corporations, believing as well that the public sector has an important role to play in a country like Canada, a country with vast resources, a vast land mass, a concentration of people in few areas, next to a very powerful country, the United States. There has been an agreement among all political parties that the public sector has a role to play in order to maintain a Canadian identity. Through that, we developed the CBC, the arts board, and various cultural organizations to foster and strengthen our cultural identity going east and west.

We realized that the public sector was needed in order to have economic development occurring throughout our country so that a Canadian living in Newfoundland, northern Quebec, Saskatchewan, or British Columbia would have basically the same type of opportunities. This was a vision shared by all political Parties. With the introduction and eventual passage of the government Bill, that tradition will come to an end.

We can debate in this House whether regional subsidies and medicare are to be threatened by this agreement. Government Members indicate that there is nothing in the agreement which says that medicare has to go. They are right. There is nothing specific in there, but when we listen to government Ministers speak, they admit that with this agreement we will become more of a market oriented economy.

Mrs. Sparrow: It creates jobs.

Mr. de Jong: It creates jobs. Hear, hear!

This is the confirmation. I am not standing in the House today and saying that market factors are to be ignored. No, far from it. In a mixed economy, the market plays a very important role. It is our tradition as a country that we recognize certain hearts outside the market forces. That is why the development of health and medicare in this country has been done on bases other than just market forces.

There is a recognition that if health services were developed based on profit motives, we would have a system similar to that of the United States, an inequitable, unfair, and very inefficient system. As a percentage of the Gross Domestic Product, the health system in the United States is much higher than the one in Canada. We have developed a public system, one that is equitable, fair, and efficient.

• (2310)

Of course, our tradition has been one of mixed development in which health should remain in the public sector. Everything in the American system is market driven and market oriented.

That is also true of culture. Culture in the United States is called the entertainment industry: that which can make a buck is developed and that which cannot make a buck is not developed. The bottom line test is profitability in a pure market economy.

The health system in the United States was developed in terms of its profit capacity. The entertainment industry in the United States has developed in terms of its profit capability.

We have done something different in Canada. We developed our cultural policy with the national interest in mind, in order to maintain and foster the Canadian identity, not because it happens to make a profit. We have developed a health system in Canada that is based on human needs, not on the need to make a profit.

Conservative Members have agreed that with this agreement we will have a more profit driven economy.

Ms. Dobbie: Would that not be sad?

Mr. de Jong: Would that not be sad? Those Members cannot see beyond the ideological blinkers of the new right. It is the philosophy of Margaret Thatcher, our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and Ronald Reagan, as well as Grant Devine in my province. There is no end to where they see the eventual erosion of much of the public sector.

Margaret Thatcher is even going to privatize the sewers and the waters in Great Britain.

Mr. Malone: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Jong: The new right shouts: "Hear, hear". I maintain that the new right runs counter to the history and philosophy of this country. It runs counter to the essence of what Canada is all about. We have seen this not just with this legislation but in terms of tax reform and the Drug Patent Act. We see the elimination of the public sector, but the public has a role to play. An increasing number of the economic decisions on the Conservative agenda in this country will be made in the boardrooms, the boardrooms of multinational corporations.

Mr. McDermid: The big bogey man.

Mr. de Jong: There are very few Progressive Conservatives left on the benches. They should really be called the neo-Conservatives, or the new right.

Their vision is one in which the top 20 per cent of the population receives some 42 per cent of all personal income while the bottom 20 per cent receives some 4.1 per cent of the total income. Of course, this is acceptable according to the Conservative philosophy. If you help those at the top they will eventually create the new wealth and the new industry and direct that wealth and new industry to plants, thereby creating employment and so on.

There are alternative visions. There are two distinct economic models within the OECD countries. One model followed to a certain extent by the Japanese, and certainly by most European countries which have had social democratic Governments on and off throughout the post-war period, has been what I would call a co-operative capitalist model. In that model, capital, labour and the public sector work in co-operation and focus the energies of the nations. They receive certain social contracts within the nation and have developed one of the highest standards of living in the world.

There is a fair and equitable distribution of wealth. There is low unemployment, low inflation, low public debt in countries like Sweden and Norway.

Mr. McDermid: The highest suicide rate in the world.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, I will ignore the childish interjections of the Minister opposite.

There is that co-operative model. On the other hand there is what I would call the Rambo economics of North America. This American model which my friends opposite so slavishly worship has been totally dependent on the arms race and foreign public borrowing. The United States has become the biggest debtor nation in the world, with over $500 million per day going into paying the interest on its debt.

The Americans require foreign borrowing and, as such, require the highest interest rate in order to attract offshore capital to maintain their economy. Of course, the higher interest rate creates a strong U.S. dollar which prices them out of the market. This creates a catch-22 situation, and the American economy is indeed on very thin ice. The crash that occurred in October, 1987 is an indication of the weakness of that economy.

Mr. McDermid: Economics 25.

Mr. de Jong: My friends opposite may think it is funny. Indeed, it is funny if you have a sick sense of humour.

The American economic model has been totally subsidized by public spending, mainly on arms production, creating one of the highest deficits in the world.

The irony of it all is that the one element which might save it is Mr. Gorbachev of the Soviet Union proposing arms reductions. In fact, the visit of Mr. Gorbachev to New York resulted in the rise in the stock market. I realize that Conservatives have great difficulty dealing with that fact.

The point is that there are different economic models. The North American Rambo economic model which has created such environmental, social and economic crises cannot continue. In order for us to survive, we must begin to develop an alternative model that is based essentially on co-operation.

In preparing for our remarks, I found a very impressive document. It is "Ethical Reflections on the Economic Crisis", prepared by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops in 1983. They were reacting to the recession that had set in, yet when one reads the comments that the bishops made then they still make a lot of sense today. They said:

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We are now in an age, for example, where transnational corporations and banks can move capital from one country to another to take advantage of cheaper labour conditions, lower taxes, and reduced environmental restrictions.

Incidentally, the Free Trade Agreement further fosters that. The bishops went on to say:

We are also in an age of automation and computers where human work is rapidly being replaced by machines on the assembly line and in administrative centres. In effect, capital has become transnational and technology has become increasingly capital-intensive. The consequences are likely to be permanent or structural unemployment and increasing marginalization for a large segment of the population in Canada and other countries.

They then spoke of a new direction and an alternative vision and said:

Yet, in order to forge a true community out of our present crisis, people must have a chance to choose their economic future rather than have one forced upon them. What is required, in our judgment, is a real public debate about economic visions and industrial strategies involving choices about values and priorities for the future direction of this country. Across our society, there are working and non-working people in communities—factory workers, farmers, forestry workers, miners, people on welfare, fishermen, native peoples, public service workers and many others—who have a creative and dynamic contribution to make in shaping the economic future of our society.

The bishops talked about community control, alternate technologies and production for human needs rather than for export and for profit. They talked about an ethical society in which people worked together in harmony and with a sense of community of interests.

This is the direct opposite of the economic model of which my friends across the way are such strong advocates, an economic model of purely market forces in which the race belongs to the swift and the battle to the strong. The bishops talked about an economic model in which the economy is subservient to the meaning of human needs and not to the making of profit.

When everything is said and done about the legislation that this Government is introducing, it is not so much an economic document as a political document. What it will put into effect and help to foster is not a caring society but a society that I abhor, a society in which the wealthy will get wealthier and the masses will become poorer, a society that will benefit only a few and is not in the interests of our fellow Canadian citizens. Therefore, I do oppose this motion.

Mr. Pagtakhan: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I am using this as the entry to a discussion.

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Pagtakhan: Please do not prejudge my thought. I am asking for your help, Mr. Speaker, as a matter of privilege and parliamentary inquiry. I heard the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) refer to the absence of an Hon. Member in his remark earlier, and I would like to be guided. Is it in fact within the rules of this House to do that? As a new Member I would like to be guided.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There is a rule in the House that an Hon. Member should not talk about the absence or the presence, for that matter, of a particular Hon. Member. The rule does exist. I do not recall the incident that the Hon. Member refers to. However, I will look at Hansard, and if need be, I will return to the House on the matter.

In the mean time, on questions and comments, I recognize the Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans.

Mr. Siddon: Mr. Speaker, I have, together with my colleagues in this House, listened for many minutes now to the Hon. Member for Regina Qu'Appelle (Mr. de Jong) expound on these special theories of economic philosophy, this model that he tends to focus on which has done so much good for the world.

I want the Hon. Member to understand that I am proud to be part of a caring Government that cares for the people of Canada. I am proud that we have a caring Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and a caring Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: I think we too often hear this notion that the socialists of the country have a monopoly on caring, and that is the greatest hypocrisy one can imagine when one puts it in the context of the disinformation campaign they used throughout the preceding election campaign to confuse Canadians and to try to somehow suggest that members of this Party and this Government do not care about the future of our children in this country we all love so dearly.

We have heard the Hon. Member talk about models as if he were an academic. I would like to suggest to him that I thank the Lord that this Hon. Member is not teaching my children in a Canadian university. He is essentially saying that the models of neo-socialism—he did not use that phrase but that is what he is preaching—have somehow been the great success story of history when the exact opposite is the truth. Communism is an unnatural form of economic management, as is the form of socialism which the Hon. Member advocates.

One of the two questions I want to ask the Hon. Member this evening is: Why have these neo-socialist theories, which have been tried in Canada by several provincial Governments, led by the Party of which he is a member, and imposed upon Canada by the recent Liberal Governments of former Prime Minister Trudeau, failed so miserably to deal with the poverty and the regional disadvantages in Canada? Why is it that the more we pump regional equalization and redistribution of wealth into the more impoverished parts of Canada, the more their incentive, productivity, and economic well-being have been reduced? Why have these neo-socialist Governments driven up the deficit, creating more poverty in the regions of Canada that need help the most.

Before the Hon. Member responds, I would like to ask a second question. The second question has to do with the unprecedented turnaround in the Canadian economy which has occurred over the past four and a half year tenure of the Government of which I am proud to be a member.

I want the Hon. Member to tell the Members of this House and the people of Canada why he so denounces the very economic theories which have created the greatest increase in productivity, employment, opportunity, and confidence in our future that this country has seen in this century.

The Hon. Member is a member of a Party that came into this House in November of 1984 and decried the policies of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), saying they would produce 150,000 more unemployed Canadians. Then, in the following four and a half years, we found that 1.3 million Canadians went back to work, 80 per cent of them gaining full-time employment. We saw Canada rise from being seventh among industrialized nations—

Mr. de Jong: Are you going to let me answer? Are you going to sit down or not?

Mr. Siddon: Perhaps the Hon. Member will allow me to complete my remarks. We saw this country rise from being seventh among the industrialized nations of the world to being number one, becoming a leading member of the G-7. The second question which the Hon. Member will want to answer—

Mr. de Jong: All you are doing is giving a little speech.

Mr. Siddon: You just made a little speech yourself.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle now has the floor.

Mr. de Jong: Mr. Speaker, it is a slippery Minister we have. No wonder he is the Minister of Fisheries. What a slippery Minister he is.

Mr. Siddon: Answer the question.

Mr. de Jong: Well, many questions were asked by the Minister. Let us start off with the Minister saying that they care. The question is: What do they care about? What does this Government care about?

Mr. Siddon: People.

Mr. de Jong: He says "people". I really wonder. When the Minister for International Trade was in Newfoundland politics, when Newfoundland was trying to decide where to go, he wanted Newfoundland to join the United States. That is our Minister for International Trade.

• (2330)

The Prime Minister was the head of an American company and shut down a Canadian branch plant, so that is what the Prime Minister cares about. In Saskatchewan we have a Premier and a Tory Party. In fact, the former Leader of that Conservative Party in Saskatchewan left the Conservative Party and started the Unionist Party. The Unionist Party wanted Canada to join the United States.

We see this hidden strain within the Conservative Party that has been there for many years. What it really cares about is for us to become another state of the United States. We have seen it in the actions of the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade. We certainly know all about it in Saskatchewan where we have seen provincial Conservative Members sitting in the Legislature, starting a Unionist Party and advocating that we join the United States.

In Saskatchewan we know what those people cared about. That is why we defeated so many of them. The people of Saskatchewan did not want anything to do with what those people really cared about.

Members opposite talk about the economic wonders of the Government. Let us step back a second. When it got into power in 1984, it got into power at the end of one of the most severe recessions, a recession that had been deliberately done by the western economies in order to put an end to the high inflation. The western industrialized nations jacked up interest rates, threw their economies into reverse, which resulted in very high levels of unemployment. Of course, with the nature of Canada's economy mainly being a branch plant, and one that is very dependent on raw resources, it was one of the first to be hit by the recession. Canada was also one of the last to get out. The Tories were lucky that they came into power at the end of that recessionary cycle.

When one looks at where things are today compared with 1981 before the recession period, family income has not gone back to where it was before. The reason family income is higher now than it was in 1984 is that more families are now two-income families. In fact, the average young working family needs two incomes to put a roof over its head and supply the basic necessities of life.

There is more employment now than there was in 1984, but certainly things have not come back to where there were in 1981 before the recession started. We still do not accept levels of 7 per cent, 6 per cent, or 5 per cent unemployment. I suspect that the Tories like to have a little bit of extra unemployment, because after all it does keep wages down and it does help their corporate friends.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton, on a question or comment.

Mr. James: I wish to make a comment to the Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle (Mr. de Jong) who talked about studies not being conducted.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, on a point of order.

Mr. Siddon: I wanted to offer an observation that the Hon. Member has not answered either of the questions posed. The fact of the matter is that the Government that gave Canada good economic management is also giving Canada free trade, and he is afraid to admit it.

Mr. de Jong: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Let the record also show that what the Minister stated was not a point of order.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think we should proceed with the question and comments of the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton who has been seeking the floor for some time.

A point of order from the Hon. Member for Burlington.

Mr. Kempling: I wanted to make a comment or a question to the Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On questions or comments the floor will be given to the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton.

Mr. James: I wanted to make a couple of comments in connection with the comments made by the Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle. He made mention that studies have not been done, or that he did not receive studies. Perhaps the Hon. Member did not go over to the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion. It conducted a number of studies. One was done on petrochemicals and how they would be affected by the Free Trade Agreement. For the information of the Hon. Member, I would like to mention what the study states about the petrochemical possibilities under free trade.

It states that the FTA will have different impacts upon the gas based and oil based segments of the petrochemical industry. In addition, there could be investment opportunities for a range of aromatic products where the historically higher U.S. tariffs have prevented access to the U.S. market. It states that over all the FTA will have a positive impact on the industry. The elimination of tariffs will increase existing exports and will open the U.S. market to a range of oil-based products now excluded by high tariffs. Investment prospects for additional facilities to supply the North American market have been improved. These opportunities will include products based upon competitively priced primary petrochemicals such as polypropylene and aromatics.

Many studies were conducted by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion that indicated the positive impact of the Free Trade Agreement. I cannot imagine why the Hon. Member has not taken the time to read these important studies.

The Hon. Member also mentioned public support of our social services, our identity, and our sovereignty. The socialists never want to talk about history, but if the Hon. Member looks at the historical events in Canada from 1935, as we have ever liberalized trade with the United States, he will find that those are the very same years that the public sector introduced veteran's allowance, unemployment insurance, family allowances, old age security, spousal allowances, and medicare. The socialists never want to talk about history.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Gloucester.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Could the Chair indicate to the House whether or not we are continuing with debate on this matter, or are we still in the period for questions and comments? It seemed to me that, under the rules, there was a time limit on the period reserved for questions and comments.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member is in the question and comment period.

Mr. Young (Gloucester): What is the time period allocated for the speech, as well as for questions and comments after those speeches?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The time for the speech is 20 minutes. The time for questions and comments is 10 minutes. At the discretion of the Chair, sometimes the 10-minute period for questions and comments is extended. For instance, if a member commences in the ninth minute, the Chair does not intervene and limit the question or the time for the person to answer to 30 seconds. That is discretionary, and the Chair will do its best to make sure that the rule is enforced.

The Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton.

Mr. James: I wished to mention to my hon. friend in speaking to his concern about social policy development in Canada that through the years from 1935 to 1988 we have liberalized our trade with the United States, lowering tariffs from an average of 30 per cent down to an average of 9 per cent or 8 per cent, and have entered into additional major trading agreements with the United States—for example, the Auto Pact and defence sharing.

Over the years carrying on through until child care was introduced, at the same time as we were negotiating the Free Trade Agreement with the United States, we have ever built that social policy and that social safety net in Canada.

That has been done by the Liberals and the Conservatives, certainly not the socialists because they were never in power to do that. If we followed through those very same years we would find that the economic wherewithal in Canada has ever increased and that our cultural development has increased through those very same years.

● (2340)

Mr. de Jong: I think the point made by the Hon. Member goes against the free trade legislation, rather than supporting it.

The point I made earlier in my remarks is that this country, from the point of view of its culture and its economy, regardless of the Government in power, has evolved as a mix.

We recognize that there is a need to have both the private and public sectors involved in the economy, though there may be disagreement as to degree.

The Free Trade Agreement will restrict the public sector to a degree to which all previous Governments in this country would have taken exception. It is the economic philosophy of the neo-right, the near right, that will change the political-cultural mix of this country, and that is what we find so unacceptable. We are becoming more market oriented. Our health services and other services will be more and more determined by market forces, as opposed to a system based upon taking care of human needs, as was recommended by the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops and others in this country.

That was a statement made by the Canadian Conference of Bishops in 1983, and it is one that I think continues to be valid today.

Of course, it may be that the Minister is not at all concerned with what the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops has to say.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Crowfoot): Mr. Speaker, every Parliament has its own emotion, and certainly that is true of this the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

I concur with the statement by the Hon. Member for Renfrew (Mr. Hopkins) that this Parliament has in it some extraordinary talent. The speeches thus far have been excellent. That is obviously the result of an election campaign that had a single issue, an issue which has prepared Hon. Members for a unique session of Parliament, a session dedicated to that same issue.

Like the Hon. Member for Macleod (Mr. Hughes), I should like to start with a brief background of my riding.

The constituency of Macleod, I might say, takes its name from Colonel Macleod of the Northwest Mounted

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Police, an individual who is a part of the prairie heritage dating back to the mid-1800s. The same is true of Chief Crowfoot, after whom my riding is named.

Crowfoot was born a Blood, in what is now Montana. He migrated into the northern part of southern Alberta and was adopted into the Blackfoot tribe, becoming a chief of the Blackfoot Nation, and eventually becoming the most powerful and the wisest of the chiefs of the Blackfoot territory, taking in the full lands of the Sarcee, the Peguis, and the Blackfoot.

Crowfoot was recognized on several occasions by Sir John A. Macdonald. Because of his wisdom, his counsel was sought by Ottawa. He was a person who, in his early years, was a nomad who followed the buffalo herds.

As I said at the outset, every Parliament has its own unique emotion. We are all here to do what we can and what we feel is best for our constituents.

Perhaps before I go any further, I should take a moment to extend my sympathies to those from among us who are ill and hospitalized.

As all Hon. Members will be aware, one of the successful candidates for the Progressive Conservative Party died within days of his having been elected to Parliament. His only desire was to have the opportunity of serving his constituents and his country.

I also note that an Hon. Member from the Liberal benches is also quite ill and is in fact hospitalized at this moment.

I hearken back to the time that Colonel Macleod and Chief Crowfoot met at what is now Gleichen, Alberta for the signing of Treaty No. 7. Here was Chief Crowfoot, a person born a Blood and raised a Blackfoot, an individual who did not know the English language, and yet we can see from annals of the Northwest Mounted Police the words of wisdom he imparted to us. On the occasion of the signing of Treaty No. 7, it was recorded in the annals of the Northwest Mounted Police that he made the following remarks:

In a little while I will be gone from amongst you. Whither I come and whither I go, I do not know. What is life? It is like the flash of the firefly in the night; it is like the breath of the buffalo in the wintertime; it is like the little shadow that races across the grass and loses itself in the sunset.

Those are poetic words. And here we are as Members of Parliament with our own "flash of a firefly in the night"; an opportunity to do something in the time that we are here, an opportunity to act in accordance with the reasons for which we were elected.

I feel privileged to have served in this House during a period when our Constitution, imperfect as it might be, was patriated, and I believe that in the same way the trade arrangement that we are about to enter into with the United States of America will change the nature of our country. It brings with it for my part of the country the enormity of hope that has been heretofore lacking.

Western Canadians felt alienated from the mainstream of Canadian life as a consequence of the unfair and discriminatory freight rates favouring central Canada. Those discriminatory freight rates led to western Canada exporting its raw materials as opposed to upgrading them, enhancing them.

While the grain was grown in Saskatchewan, the flour was milled elsewhere. We had the coal, but we did not have the industries that used the coal; we had the forests, but we had no upgrading facilities. Our products were all exported in raw form.

The other major impediment to the betterment of western Canada has been tariffs. Let me give some examples that I believe can be easily understood.

Malt barley is grown in western Canada and exported to the U.S. I am one who advocates that we ought not to be exporting malt barley in the volumes that we are. All that needs to be done to malt barley is to add energy and water, and the result is malt. But why don't we export malt to the U.S.? It is because raw product attracts no tariff, whereas manufactured or processed products do.

Looking at the latest figures on that, in July of 1988 malt barley was selling for $80 a tonne. If you add energy and water, it sells for $160 a tonne. How could either a Liberal or socialist then want to give up the right to bring down tariffs?

• (2350)

What about the natural gas and petrochemical industry? When we convert the natural gas to methane and ethane products and sell them in the U.S., we have to climb over 16 per cent and 18 per cent tariffs. Natural gas is tariff-free and it is going down the pipeline to the U.S. every day. And every day along with the natural gas go the jobs of our sons and daughters. That has made us and continues to make us the producers of raw materials without the capacity to value add, to process, and to manufacture.

We have the enormous advantage of the Auto Pact which in its 23 or 24 years has seen $500 billion of foreign investment in southern Ontario. We want that kind of investment to bring stability to the western basin.

I could hardly believe what happened in the 1972 economic summit in Tokyo where Canada agreed to sell shiploads of whole logs, mostly from British Columbia, to Japan. Having detopped and debranched those trees, we loaded them on ships and sent them to Japan. Each of us knows intuitively that if the Japanese had the forest they would be selling us prefabricated homes, labelled on the side in five languages for shipment around the world.

That is the kind of advantage Canada has and must have. We are the only nation in the western industrial world that does not have a guaranteed market of 100 million people. We have only 25 million. What an unnatural market it is, stretched out across 5,500 miles. It is only in southern Ontario and western Quebec that it is a real, normal market. Yet just below Alberta, just below Saskatchewan, just below the Atlantic region, exist large markets where we can ship our value-added products.

To what purpose? My friend from Regina—Qu'Appelle talked about social programs. It is not a case of one Party caring more than another Party. We all care. However, if you are a Progressive Conservative, you can afford to care. We must have the wealth. It does one no good at all to care, to say I love these people. If you cannot generate the wealth to help those people, one is simply whistling past the graveyard.

Through the course of the election we heard all these funny arguments about how this agreement would destroy our sovereignty, our nationality, and take away our social programs. Then toward the end of the election we heard how it would ruin our environment.

I want to make the point that I believe precisely the opposite will happen. It will help our environment to have a trade relationship with the U.S. We are about 15 years from the baby boomers becoming the senior citizens of our country. When that happens, you will be able to draw a very interesting graph which will look like an upside down thermometer with a narrow column of workers and a big balloon on top of senior citizens who require social services and medicare. If we do not take our raw materials, process them, turn them into manufactured goods, thereby creating more jobs, then the only way we can shoulder the burden that will start 15 years from now is to sell even greater and greater amounts of our raw resources. We will have to cut down more trees, destroy more forests, and sell them abroad. It is time to pause and say "Let's get smart like the Japanese".

For those in the NDP who get so nervous about the notion of foreign investment, I ask them: Is Germany threatened in some way because of the foreign investment that put that country on its feet after World War II? Japan was devastated in World War II. It was foreign investment for an extended period of time that put that country on its feet. They welcomed foreign investment. It made them an economic power today.

One-third of the wealth of this nation is dependent upon trade. We are more dependent upon trade than any other nation in the world with the exception of West Germany. Unlike the beginning of this century when most of our trade was with the mother country, Great Britain, almost 80 per cent of our exports go to the U.S. Yet, when our Government came to office in 1984, there were over 400 pieces of protectionist legislation on the table in State Legislatures and in Washington which would, in whole or in part, impact negatively on Canada.

Those who like to say that the Free Trade Agreement is not the answer have to tell us what they would do for a nation so dependent upon trade for its wealth. If they do not respond to that question in a specific way, then they commit the citizens of this country to diminishing social programs, weakened sovereignty, weakened identity, and weakened culture. It is trade that allows us to grow and develop the richness of our culture.

I want to address for a moment the question of "they are so big and we are so small, therefore the U.S. will always win". First, bear in mind that in the 14 trade associations in the world, in virtually every case, the smallest country has grown the most. All the economies involved grew but the smallest one grew the most. Bear in mind that Canadians are better educated. We have better health delivery systems. If Japan is going to build a Toyota plant in North America, why would they not locate in Canada and take advantage of our education and health systems? Those systems will attract foreign investment from around the world. We raise better pork and beef, and cheaper, too. We have better telecommunications systems than the U.S. does. We produce automobiles cheaper than it does.

We do many things better than the U.S. because we are competitive. We can compete and this notion that we are so small and they are so big is exactly the same argument we heard when the Auto Pact was introduced. We were told they would run over us, and here we are exporting two out of every three cars that we build.

My time is up, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the House for giving me its attention. I apologize to the Hon. Member for Regina—Qu'Appelle (Mr. de Jong) because he did not have an opportunity to ask his question, but I do feel somewhat relieved.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from Thursday, December 22, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the third time and passed and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre):

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "that" and by substituting the following therefore:

Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be not now read a third time, but that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for reconsideration of Clauses 3 through 150 inclusive.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): Mr.

Speaker, today is an historic day. Today the representatives of the people of Canada decide whether to say yes or no to free trade. The Canadian people by choosing the Members of this House as their representatives decided in favour of free trade on November 21. What the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) did on July 20—I remember it well—was to seek to force an election which offended important conventions of Canadian Government. After listening to him in the last few days he seems not only unrepentant but proud of what he did that day. But the election having been held, the issue of free trade having been central in the campaign, and the Government having been returned with a majority, the decision has been made; yes to free trade.

Over the last two years I have been involved in the Free Trade Agreement, first, as Parliamentary Secretary, and then as Minister of State. I have travelled from coast to coast. I have been in some 100 ridings speaking on free trade.

I have been involved in debate, attending conferences both here and in the United States. It has been a fantastic experience. Not all those conferences, not all those debates were easy ones. The appearance before the labour council with 450 union workers in attendance made it very difficult for speeches that evening, but it was a very interesting and challenging experience which I shall not forget for a very long period of time.

This agreement with which we are dealing today talks to the change that is going on in the world. Change happens all the time. It has happened since the Industrial Revolution where industries have come and gone because they became outmoded. They could not keep up with modern technology. When you think that children in school today will absorb more knowledge in about five years than their grandparents did in their lifetime, that gives you an idea of the rapid change we are going through in this country.

I should like now to take a moment to talk a bit about the community that I come from.

When I was a young boy growing up in Brampton, its population was 5,000. In those days, rush hour commenced when the workers were released from the one industry that we had in town, and lasted all of one and one-half minutes.

At that time the two main employers in Brampton were Dale Estates and Calvert Estates, which were then two of the largest flower growers in Canada. In fact, in those days Brampton was known as the "flower town of Canada".

It was a one-industry town, with a population of 5,000.

We had over 60 acres under glass, and produced some of the most beautiful orchids ever produced in Canada, and of course the world famous Dale Estates rose.

Today, the flower industry in Brampton has disappeared. Dale Estates is now a real estate development company. Its property became too valuable, and it could no longer compete with what was going on in the world today, given the cost of energy, and so forth. And so that industry disappeared. But other industries came in to take its place. When Dixie Cup first came to Brampton, it was considered to be quite a revolution. As well, we had Williams Shoes and Hewitsons Shoes, both of which have closed down because they could no longer compete. But other industries came along and took their place. Today the community that I and the Hon. Member for Brampton—Malton (Mr. Chadwick) represent is the community of some 200,000 people, a community growing at 5 per cent a year.

I have in my hand a list of the businesses created just in the last 11 months—and it is a significant list. In fact, it is some 25 pages in length, and while I do not intend to read the full list, I should like to highlight a few.

In the last 11 months the businesses established in Brampton include High Frequency Systems Ltd., a manufacturer of high frequency equipment, employing six people; Presscraft Litho Finishing, die cutting, employing five people; Carleton Cards-Rustcraft, employing 600 people.

In fact, Carleton Cards-Rustcraft erected a building in my community which could accommodate five football games all at the same time without fear of one interfering with the other. It is a phenomenal operation.

We also have Palco Telcom, a company involved in the refurbishing of telephone equipment, employing 30 people; Burnemann Pumps, a manufacturer of motor pumps, employing 10 people; Warren Publishing Company, employing 10 people; JI Trimming, cabinet makers, employing 20 people—and on it goes, page after page of industries being created by entrepreneurs, people who are accepting the challenge of the future and who have addressed this thing called change.

These people are prepared to meet the challenge. They are creating jobs in Ontario.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

And we in Ontario have been very fortunate. Brampton is a 24-hour truck drive from 60 per cent of the Gross National Product of the U.S. What a fabulous opportunity! And other regions of this country want to have the same opportunities.

Hour after hour we listen to the opposition Members talk about the threat that the FTA presents for our regional development programs. Well, the Free Trade Agreement in itself is the most significant regional development program that this country has ever seen.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: To say that there are no regional development programs, or there are not going to be in the future, is nonsense. Of course there are. But this agreement, what a fabulous opportunity it presents for Canada, what a magnificent opportunity for Canadian entrepreneurs, for the creators in this country, whether it be in the arts or any other endeavour. What a fabulous opportunity for them.

We cannot do it for them. As parliamentarians, we cannot do it for them. But Canadians have indicated to me time after time after time that they are prepared to meet the challenge; that they want to develop their businesses; that they want to see their businesses expand here in Canada. They want to sell into the U.S. market.

As I keep saying to people, we are good; we Canadians are very, very good. We can compete, and we will compete. We have in the past, and we will in the future.

The kinds of things we have seen happening over the past couple of years have been encouraging. By way of example, I received the following letter from a resident of my riding. It starts out with "Dear John", as most letters directed to me do. It reads:

I have for many years, as you are aware, been active in my support of the Liberal Party.

And not only has he been active, he has been the chief bagman for the Liberals in my area. He continues:

However I believe that your party's position on free trade with the United States is the correct stance and a wonderful opportunity—

I repeat, "a wonderful opportunity".

—a wonderful opportunity that, as the Economist magazine states again this week, any country in the world would leap at.

John, you and your Party have my support and my vote for this election.

And it is signed "Peter O. Montgomery".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

S. O. 31

Mr. McDermid: I met with that type of thing time and time again as I travelled across this country of ours. People are prepared to take the opportunity, to grab the challenge, to get involved in the changes that are going on. They are not interested in being protected.

We know the opposition Parties want the industrial sector to be subservient to Government. That is their raison d'être. It is for that reason that they want to keep them in a little cocoon, only letting them out the odd time. When things go wrong, they should be running to Government to be propped up and to be coddled. The opposition Parties like that. They love to be able to pull the strings.

This Party doesn't like that philosophy. We want to see the entrepreneur, the creator free to meet the challenges that are presented by the 21st century. The Free Trade Agreement speaks to that change.

The Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka (Mr. Darling) delivered a very eloquent speech in the House the other day, a speech in which he talked about the changes taking place in his riding, where Domtar has an expansion coming on which will create 130 more jobs—and that in a part of Ontario that is well north of the Golden Horseshoe area.

Even our friend Frank Stronach is expanding his operations. Does anyone remember Frank Stronach?

An Hon. Member: Frank who?

Mr. McDermid: Frank has said time and time again how devastating this Free Trade Agreement will be for Canada, how terrible it will be. And what is he doing? Well, he is going to build another of his auto parts manufacturing plants in Bracebridge, in the Muskoka region.

The Hon. Member for Parry Sound—Muskoka is doing a tremendous job for his riding. He is attracting more and more industry to his riding. It is little wonder that he was re-elected. He is doing just a marvellous job for his riding.

Some Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: These companies have accepted the challenge of change; they are prepared to run with this thing.

I see that we are getting close to eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I will just cite the example of one other company, a company that is a prime example of a success story and one which is very supportive of the Free Trade Agreement. I refer to Husky Injection Molding Systems Ltd.

The Hon. Member for Halton—Peel (Mr. Turner) will be very familiar with this particular company as it operates within his riding. It is a company that I have followed for a number of years.

Husky Injection Molding Systems Ltd. has 1,600 suppliers world wide. In 1987, it shipped into the U.S. $64 million worth of product, representing 69 per cent of its total production. Because of the tariffs and other barriers to trade into the U.S., this company was looking at the possibility of expanding within the U.S. The Free Trade Agreement will ensure that that company stays in Canada, creating more employment and doing a bang-up job for Canadians.

I see that it is eleven o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I look forward to concluding my remarks following Question Period.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being eleven o'clock, we will now proceed to Statements by Members.

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

FORECAST OF CONSEQUENCES

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, we are closing the year with a false sense of security. The so-called Free Trade Agreement will, in essence, lead to economic union between Canada and the U.S., which in turn will mean becoming less Canadian and more American. It will mean relying more and more on the export of our natural resources, instead of adding value at home. It will mean a weakening of our environmental standards, losses of jobs, and more American investment. The list is long.

• (1100)

Equally serious is the weakening of Canadian federalism as proposed by the Meech Lake Accord. Such poor leadership has resulted in the the weakening of the respect for minority language rights. In addition, Charter rights are eroded. Prospects for native people are dim. The definition of Canada is outdated.

Ironically, we will be indebted to provincial Premiers for the demise of Meech Lake. All this adds up to one bottom line. Canadians will bring an end to this Tory regime which has done so much to weaken the fibre of this nation. Canadians look forward to doing so in 1992.

FINANCE

FLOWTHROUGH SHARES—INCREASED TAX DEDUCTION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, the Government of Quebec announced yesterday that it was increasing the tax exemption for flow-through shares, which it had reduced in December 1986, from 133 1/3 per cent to 166 2/3 per cent. The Minister of Finance of Quebec emphasized that the aim of this new increase in the deduction for investment in mining exploration was to sustain growth in Quebec's mining sector, particularly in the Abitibi—Témiscamingue region.

Individuals who incur exploration expenses will, moreover, be able to claim the additional deduction announced, even if the exploration project is being carried out under the new Canadian Exploration Incentive Program, the CEIP, which comes into effect on January 1, 1989.

Mr. Speaker, this represents a victory for the Association des prospecteurs du Québec and for all economic agents in Abitibi—Témiscamingue and I am pleased to see that our investors will benefit from this measure.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

TRIBUTE TO STAFF

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, this has been an eventful year for all of us, a year of achievement for this Government and this House. We have spent hundreds of hours in this House debating vital issues such as tax reform, abortion, language issues and, of course, the crowning achievement, the Free Trade Agreement.

None of this would have been possible without the faithful work of all those who work to make the operation of this House so successful. I think it is appropriate that all of us today pay a special note of thanks and recognition to all those who make it possible—the Pages who keep our messages going, the Table Officers who give us such good advice, the Library staff, the security guards who keep us safe, all the translators and the Hansard staff who listen to every word we say, those who work in the cafeterias and the restaurants to keep us well fed, the messengers who send our messages and, in particular, all our own office staff who keep us going.

To all of them I think we can say that, with the cooperation of the House they will be home for Christmas. To all of them a Joyeux Noel and a happy 1989.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

COMPENSATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA GRAPE GROWERS

Mr. Lyle MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Mr. Speaker, last August the federal Ministry of Agriculture announced a $28 million federal-provincial bail-out package for B.C. grape growers to help ease their way into oblivion in light of the trade deal.

As of yesterday, representatives of the B.C. Grape Marketing Board confirmed that this agreement had not yet been signed. B.C. grape producers are waiting anxiously to receive this compensation so that they can either pull out their grape vines and move into other areas of production, or get out of farming altogether.

In light of the Government's zealous commitment to ram this trade deal through before January 1, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) should also make a commitment to sign the financial compensation package for B.C. grape growers also before January 1 so that these grape growers are at least assured of some financial help in an industry that will be killed by the trade deal.

DISASTERS

CRASH OF PAN AMERICAN JUMBO JET—CANADIAN FATALITIES

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, it was with great sadness that we learned that one of my constituents, Mr. Paul Freeman, was one of two Canadians who went down with a Pan American jumbo jet in Scotland a couple days ago.

I am sure that Members of the House would want me to extend our deepest sympathies to Paul's family in Dundas, along with the many other families and friends of victims of this horrible Christmastime tragedy.

I know that the preliminary investigation into the crash is being handled by Scotland Yard and the U.S. State Department. But because Canadian citizens were involved I am asking Canada's External Affairs Department to keep us posted on the international intrigue surrounding the disintegration of Flight 103.

More immediately, I am grateful that External Affairs has already been in touch with the Freeman family. I am aware that the Government of Canada is providing all possible assistance in their time of sorrow.

AGRICULTURE

PROGRAM TO ASSIST TOBACCO FARMERS

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski) visited my riding during the election campaign and promised a $35 million redux program for tobacco farmers. This program was to begin in early December.

We have yet to see this program begin. The program is designed to assist tobacco farmers leaving the business as a result of changing social patterns and adverse government legislation and tax policies such as we saw during the last sitting of the House.

This program was promised for early December. Tobacco farmers want to know when they might expect the program. I call on the Government to start this program immediately, and assure tobacco farmers that they will continue to have a future in farming.

FESTIVE SEASON

BEST WISHES TO CANADIANS

Mr. Jean-Guy Guilbault (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, the holiday season is a special time to extend good wishes to those whom we love and appreciate. I would like to take this opportunity to extend my best wishes for Christmas and the New Year to all Canadians, and in particular to the people of the federal riding of Drummond.

We are one big family and I wish only the very best for all of us.

Together, we have accomplished some great things over the past four years and I am confident that the future will be very bright for all of us. I am proud and honoured to have represented you in the House of Commons over the years and I will continue to prove myself worthy by working on your behalf and with you.

In closing, I hope to see all of you in 1989.

[English]

God bless all of us. Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. Buon Natale. Felices Navidades.

THE DISABLED AND THE HANDICAPPED

INCOME TAX DEDUCTIONS TO ASSIST ACQUISITION OF NEEDED EQUIPMENT

Mrs. Pauline A. Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of Members of Parliament a recent government initiative which provides important tax breaks for disabled Canadians.

Eight items will be eligible for deduction under the Income Tax Act. They include electronic devices to help disabled persons control home heating and lighting, and electric track systems to enable those confined to wheelchairs to move around their homes. As well, electronic insulin pumps, and expenses involved with bone marrow and organ transplants will now become deductible.

I would like to point out that the introduction of these much needed income tax deductions has received praise from the Canadian Paraplegic Association. The Association says that these measures will help the financial burden of paraplegics and quadriplegics.

I am sure my colleagues will join me in commending this initiative which demonstrate genuine concern to help meet the special needs of Canada's disabled persons.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

SIZE OF WORKFORCE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, many Members may recall that during the election I released an internal document of the CNR which talked about downsizing the railway from a level of 43,000 employees to 26,000 employees. At that time I was accused of being alarmist in predicting a 17,000 person lay-off.

The fact of the matter is that we are not talking about a lay-off in the traditional sense. We are talking about a systematic downsizing of the CNR. The figures that I used were used earlier in an article in the Report on Business, in an interview with Mr. Lawless, the President of the CNR. Those figures of going down to 26,000 thousand were used in that article in February of 1988. So the concern is real.

It is reinforced by an article in a magazine called Trains which talks about the scheduled delivery of locomotives in 1990, shortly after the easing of duty on imported locomotives, likely the result of the Free Trade Agreement, which would include a 15-year service contract for these locomotives.

What we are looking at is the overhaul and maintenance of locomotives being done in the United States in the future, the contracting out of this work which should be done in Canada.

I call on the Government to make sure that that kind of work continues to be done in Canada.

TRANSPORT

ROUTE CANADA—SITUATION OF LAID-OFF WORKERS

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, workers laid off by the closure of Route Canada have yet to receive any adequate satisfaction from the Government.

During the last election campaign the workers were promised by the Government that their problems would be dealt with. CN promised to do a study of costing. To date, neither the Government nor CN has done anything.

At the time of privatization of Route Canada the CN employees made major concessions in the area of benefits and rights due them in the belief that an honest attempt was being made by CN to save their jobs through the sale.

Less than one year after the sale 50 per cent of the workers were laid off. To avoid further payments for severance and hospital benefits, the company went bankrupt.

CN and the Government knew that the operations of Route Canada had been mismanaged and run down far too far to survive. The only people who did not know were the unfortunate workers who acted in good faith, and who at this Christmas season are still without a settlement.

This Conservative Government must take action for these workers. Rhetoric and words are not enough. A settlement is needed. These men need the Government to intervene to assure a just settlement for Route Canada workers.

THE ECONOMY

DEFICIT REDUCTION URGED

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, the rise of high inflation most definitely leads to high interest rates. That situation would have negative effects in Canada unless our Government soon takes steps to reduce our high budget deficit, an OECD expert on Canadian affairs has warned.

The Economic Council of Canada urged our Government in a recent report to tighten our fiscal policy and reduce our deficit, which would allow the Bank of Canada to lower interest rates.

We have had the warning signs of inflation and the Government has certainly stayed the course to curb this rise. It is now time for an all-out assault on the deficit, the EEC and the OECD tell us.

What is more important, my constituents have been telling me to reduce the deficit. Many could not or would not vote for the Liberals or socialists in the last election due to their display of indiscriminate spending plans. The free trade debate is behind us. We must bite the bullet and tackle the debilitating deficit problem.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Mr. William C. Winegard (Guelph—Wellington): Mr. Speaker, our recent elections centred on free trade. The people decided. Now let's implement the Agreement. Every argument that the Opposition has raised has been rejected. The time for talking is over and the time for taking action is now. Unfortunately, we must continue to respond to the objections raised in the House.

NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE

Mr. David Berger (Saint-Henri—Westmount): Mr. Speaker, it's a shame the Prime Minister has not arrived because I wanted to say to him indirectly that it is false to assume that Pierre Trudeau agreed to the "notwithstanding" clause in 1982 simply because it had always existed in Canada.

In our parliamentary system, governments enjoy unlimited powers in so far as they act within their respective jurisdictions. With the Charter, the Liberal Party wanted governments to defer to a higher authority, namely the rights and freedoms of Canadians. We were only partly successful, Mr. Speaker. However, when a government invokes the notwithstanding clause, we revert to the status quo ante, that is to the situation that existed before we had the Charter.

The real question we have to ask, Mr. Speaker, is this: Why did the Prime Minister not demand the withdrawal of this clause at Meech Lake, when he conceded everything to the provinces?

Mr. Speaker, there is no choice but to conclude that it's Brian's fault that we have the "notwithstanding" clause today!

THE ECONOMY

ADVANTAGES OF FREE TRADE

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, the population of the new riding of Québec-Est, which I am proud to represent, is made up of young families and of a significant number of senior citizens. The majority of these people benefit from social programs that are in place as a result of existing legislation and the prevailing economic situation.

We are all in favour of protecting, and even improving, the social programs that are available to Canadians. However, before we enhance these programs, it is vital that we protect what we already have. We cannot achieve our goals by mortgaging the country further, as the NDP and Liberal parties have suggested we do in their programs.

On the contrary—it is by stimulating the economy, by increasing productivity and by maintaining a high level of prosperity that we are going to be able to fulfill our social obligations! The Free Trade Agreement, signed thanks to the initiative of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and to a climate of confidence generated by the policies of a truly responsible government, is going to enable us to protect our existing social programs. Because more Canadian men and women have jobs, because our productivity is going up, we are spending less money on unemployment insurance, we can reduce the national deficit, a legacy of the Liberals and the NDP, and the result is that we are making the future and the value of our social programs more secure.

On November 21, the voters of Quebec-Est understood this, and today I ask you to respect their will. History will show that we are right!

THE CONSTITUTION

NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—POSITION OF SECRETARY OF STATE

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Deputy Prime Minister?

It has been a disturbing week for Parliament. We have seen rights trampled in Québec. Equally disturbing has been the Prime Minister's refusal to deal directly and frankly with the Secretary of State. That man categorically contradicts the Prime Minister on the notwithstanding clause which was used this week to override minority rights. The clause can be used in the same fashion in the future by any province, or by this Parliament.

Does the Deputy Prime Minister not recognize the signal the Prime Minister is sending to Canadians by leaving that man in that job in our country?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs and Acting Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as the country knows, there is no contradiction.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Dick: What is your position, John?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Prime Minister says he wants to eliminate the clause. The Secretary of State says the clause is essential. Yet the Secretary of State for External Affairs can see no problem. I very much regret that he is being asked to carry the can for a very indefensible case.

[Translation]

QUERY WHO WILL NEGOTIATE FOR GOVERNMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the question is more serious because the Prime Minister is talking about holding a conference with his provincial counterparts to negotiate the elimination of the notwithstanding clause.

But who will be the Prime Minister's negotiator in this matter? The Secretary of State, who doesn't believe in minority rights?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State of External Affairs and Acting Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the Leader of the Opposition is well aware of the impact that a First Ministers' conference can have, here in Canada. We had a success with the Meech Lake process. It was very clear at the time that it was the Prime Minister who was the catalyst of that historic consensus. The same will hold true of any future conference.

GOVERNMENT'S CREDIBILITY

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, does the Secretary of State for External Affairs honestly think that Canadians can really believe in a conference to negotiate the elimination of the notwithstanding clause when the Secretary of State is in favour of retaining it?

[English]

On the Prime Minister's constitutional agenda there must also be for early consideration constitutional recognition of the inherent rights of our aboriginal peoples.

How confident can the first peoples of our nation feel about success in obtaining justice as long as the Secretary of State remains in the office he holds?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs and Acting Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I assume that is a straight question, requiring a straight answer. The straight answer is they can have full confidence not only in the Secretary of State but also in this Government. I will remind the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition that it was as a result of an initiative of this Government that we came within an ace of getting agreement on those illusive and fundamental problems not very long ago.

• (1120)

Indeed, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition would know that had Meech Lake been in effect at that time, had Quebec been at the table rather than excluded, we would have achieved that type of agreement.

That is one more reason why it is so important for the aboriginal people, for language minorities across the country, and for Canadians who are interested in the integrity of the country, for us to find ways to get on with the adoption of the historic agreement reached at Meech Lake.

[Translation]

QUERY WHETHER DEPUTY PRIME MINISTER HAS MET SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister, in the absence—which is now habitual—of the Secretary of State and given the latter's offhand attitude to this matter and to the obligations entrusted to him as a Senior Minister in this Government. We as members of the Opposition have an obligation to question Cabinet Ministers in this House. In his absence, I ask the Deputy Prime Minister whether he has met recently with the Secretary of State, today perhaps, to explain to him his duty, his obligations to the House of Commons? Did he ask him to show up today, or is he too busy, as the press inform us, with his little meetings and his trips to Toronto? I would like an answer, please!

Standing Order 31

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Secretary of State is also the Acting Minister of the Environment. My understanding is that he is attending to some very urgent matters pertaining to the environment, which I am sure Hon. Members believe is a matter of major importance to the future of Canada, and very much a national priority.

MINISTER'S RESPONSIBILITY

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would remind the Hon. Minister that we had a difficult week in Canada, and the Secretary of State, the Minister responsible for protecting and promoting minority groups in this country, has been absent most of the week.

The Prime Minister has put a gag on all Members and said that he is—if we are going to believe the Hon. Member for Richelieu—the sole spokesperson on minority language rights.

The Secretary of State is quoted in the press as stating on September 20, 1988: "I want to speak with Anglophones. I would like to understand them. We have to talk to each other. They told me they had apprehensions about me".

Is the Minister trying to favour himself with Canadians by staying absent from the House, or is it not his responsibility to be here to answer questions from Anglophones and Francophones concerning this very important subject of minority rights?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I find the Hon. Member's observation rather odd, inasmuch as the Prime Minister has been in the House every day this week with the exception of today, responding in detail to all the important issues. The Prime Minister speaks for the Government, on behalf of the Government, and on behalf of Canadians in this issue.

I would remind the Hon. Member that perhaps he should heed the advice of the Prime Minister when he stated yesterday: "How we resolve this issue will clearly demand reason, fair mindedness, and tolerance".

Rather than attempting to escalate the political nature of this issue, the Hon. Member should practise what the Prime Minister told him to practise yesterday.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

MEMBERSHIP OF DISPUTE SETTLEMENT PANEL

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Given the Minister's detailed knowledge of the trade agreement he will know that Article 1901.2 provides, prior to the implementation of the deal, for the selection of a panel of some 50 individuals, 25 of whom are to be named by Canada, who will make up the roster of individuals to be used to make decisions when trade disputes arise after the deal comes into effect.

This list of names was supposed to have been announced prior to the implementation of the deal.

It is to include such people as lawyers in good standing, of good character, of good reputation, and chosen strictly on the basis of objectivity.

Since the workers at Northern Telecom, Gillette, Pittsburgh Paints, and other places will have a real interest in this list, could the Minister tell us if that list of names is available, and who is on it?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I assume that the Leader of the New Democratic Party himself might be interested. He will be looking for a job shortly. We will certainly keep him under consideration.

Under the Free Trade Agreement, and of course we cannot start to implement it until it is passed by the House, and the very questioner is a person who is preventing it from being passed by the House, there has to be a panel appointed, as the Hon. Member has indicated.

There is no decision yet as to who will comprise the 25 Canadian nominees. That is being worked on. We have sought names from across the country. These will have to be experienced people, and excellent persons who will be able to put forward the Canadian case strongly and well. That is the type of person we are looking for, but we have not yet made a final decision, nor has the United States.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, they do not all have to be appointed by January 1, but there has to be sufficient appointed so that if there is any dispute it will be resolved early in the term of the agreement and there will be panel members available.

As soon as the names are selected, we will certainly make them public.

SELECTION OF CANADIAN NOMINEES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, we have seen the meaning attached to the word "objectivity" by the Government before. We have seen the selection of Mr. de Grandpré as chairman of the blue-ribbon committee. We have seen Jim Fleck selected as a member of the trade advisory committee, and then immediately shut down jobs in Canada.

Canadians, and particularly those workers who are affected by those decisions, have an interest in knowing how they are being selected.

Will the Minister tell us who is selecting these people, and when we will have an opportunity to see the list of names? According to the agreement they are supposed to be selected before it goes into effect.

Is the Minister saying to the House that he is waiting until the House rises, and when it is in recess after Christmas the Government, noted for its partisanship in the past, will provide us with a list of names?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, one of the hallmarks of the Government has been the many appointments of opponents of the Government we have made, and the gratitude they have shown after they have served their time, such as Mr. Stephen Lewis who was our U.N. Ambassador for three or four years, and then spent the weeks following his leaving that post campaigning against the Government.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You could not buy him.

Mr. Crosbie: You could not even rent him.

Mr. Nunziata: You should have appointed your son, John. He would have been grateful.

Mr. Crosbie: He would have been a hell of a lot better than Stephen Lewis, believe me.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, for every former New Democrat or Liberal, as the Minister knows, including members of his family, we have seen 10,000 Tories.

Since the Minister has suggested that he would be open to the idea of a monitoring committee, independently to review what is happening with the implementation of this deal—

[Translation]

OPPORTUNITY TO CREATE INDEPENDENT COMMITTEE OF MEMBERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister is a very simple one: does he intend to accept the idea of an independent committee of MPs who would be responsible for overseeing who get chosen to sit on this Panel, which would give them a chance to support or contest the appointment of these lawyers? It is the Members of this House, not the current Government, who should decide whether the Panel is an objective body or not.

• (1130)

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party has fought for 14 months to prevent the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement from going ahead. Now he is showing an unusual interest in who may be appointed to serve on panels.

Mr. Broadbent: Only a Tory would see a contradiction in that.

Mr. Crosbie: The Minister of Finance and I have an extensive search under way across the country to see that we get 25 people, women and men, with first-class qualifications in the trade area to serve on these panels. When we have them we will be proud to announce their names.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

FIRST ANNUAL REPORT TO PARLIAMENT

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday the Department of Employment and Immigration released the first annual report on the implementation of the Employment Equity Act.

The report found that visible minorities make on average 93 cents for every dollar whites make, women earn 10 per cent less than men, disabled women make 4 per cent less than other women, and native people made no inroads at all into the workforce.

In other words, systemic discrimination still exists. The report tells us exactly what we already knew when the Government tabled the Act for the first time. What action does the Minister intend to take now to correct the situation?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for her question because there will be a very important process come out of this reporting.

This is the first stage following the passage of the legislation whereby there is not just sociological information, but information by companies and occupation.

The process from here on is that these reports will be turned over to the Human Rights Commission which will then monitor the progress that is made in the future. There has been a certain amount of finger-pointing in these reports, which I think has been valuable. It means that employers are now looking at their own practices and trying to upgrade them.

In the annual reports over the next few years, as the Human Rights Commission follows this, we will see considerable progress.

Ms. Blondin: Mr. Speaker, as the former national manager for Action Positif, let me say that the report proves that the Act simply does not work. That is what Liberals and every interest group in the country told the Government when the Bill was first introduced.

REQUEST FOR AMENDMENT TO REQUIRE EMPLOYERS TO MEET TARGETS

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Act has no teeth and it is ludicrous to pretend that it does something to help put an end to discrimination. Does the Minister intend to amend the legislation to require employers to meet targets, and to set timetables along the lines that we have asked for on so many occasions, or is the Government, in other words, still throwing political cotton balls that fall short of consequence to Canadians who need their help?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it simply is not true to say that the legislation does not work. This is the first stage of the implementation of the legislation. No legislation could proceed until we know what is happening, not just from some sociological study of who is doing what and what discrimination there is, but from the different companies. What will happen from now on is that it will be monitored, not by the Government but by the Human Rights Commission.

Of course, we are prepared to go further at some future point if this does not work.

We have done other things. We have the job accommodation network for the disabled. We have integrated this with other programs we have made for other clearly disadvantaged people.

We will continue to ensure that this is a better Canada as we head into another decade.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF NEW MINISTER

Ms. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Will he ask the Prime Minister, when he reshuffles his Cabinet over the holidays, to keep in mind the clear message that was sent to him by the Atlantic fishing communities who showed their complete dissatisfaction with the policies of the present Minister of Fisheries and Oceans toward the inshore fisher?

Will he ask the Prime Minister to appoint a new Minister of Fisheries and Oceans who will look after the interests of the many communities that are so dependent on the prosperity of the inshore fishery?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, neither I nor the Prime Minister share the Hon. Member's interpretation of that message.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): I cannot help it if you lost so many Members, including the former Member, because of fishing policies.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ATLANTIC MINISTER

Ms. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, considering that the fishery management plan for 1989 again favours the large offshore companies and it is clear that it will work against the inshore fisheries, will the Deputy Prime Minister ask the Prime Minister to appoint, as he did in the Canada-France negotiations, an Atlantic Minister to consider the disastrous consequences that will face the inshore fishery if the proposed fishery management plan goes into effect on January 1?

Would he ask that some Minister from the Atlantic discuss and review with Members of Parliament, no matter if they are Liberals or Conservatives, and with members of the Legislatures, and concerned communities, what will happen to the inshore communities if this management plan goes ahead?

Two trips a month—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker—

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): Appoint him. You only have a week.

Mr. Crosbie: He is the greatest Minister of Fisheries in our history, except for somebody else whom I should not mention.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I can say that I understand the problem.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I find the Hon. Member's comments most unfortunate indeed. I think all Members of the House would agree, indeed the fishing community would agree, that we have in the current Minister of Fisheries and Oceans a hard working, dedicated Minister who has worked diligently on behalf of the fishing community.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, you might want to allow the Hon. Member another supplementary so she can explain to the Canadian people what she has against western Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): A supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Standing Order 31

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY ACT

REQUEST FOR INCLUSION OF PUBLIC SERVICE

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Yesterday's employment equity annual report confirmed that systemic discrimination persists in the federally regulated workforce and that women, the disabled, visible minorities, and native Canadians are not being given a fair chance to compete equally in the Canadian workforce. Free trade will only exacerbate this trend.

Since the present Act is just a front for inaction, and since the Minister said there is no provision later for enforcement but will only monitor, will the Minister amend the Act to incorporate real enforcement measures? Will the Minister set an example for all employers by including the Government's own Public Service in greatly strengthened employment equity legislation?

• (1140)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we are the first Government ever to have taken employment equity seriously. I think the Hon. Member might also be interested in talking to some of her fellow NDPers.

Here is a comment from one of the employers: "We are a highly unionized employer, approximately 87 per cent of our workforce. Of these unionized employees, some 97 per cent are covered by collective agreements which have union hiring hall provisions. The unions operate a manpower dispatch system, thus leaving the employer with little actual control." So I suggest she join with us in helping some other segments of society to make this work.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE PAY EQUITY LEGISLATION

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, a lot of myths are being passed around this House this week, and that is another one. One thing this report confirms is that a large wage gap exists between women and men in the federally regulated sector. In light of this fundamental unfairness, will the Government bring in pay equity legislation, as has already been done in four provincial jurisdictions, to correct this basic inequity in Canadian society?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this Government has pay equity provisions and affirmative action in the Public Service, as well as employment equity. Let me tell the Hon. Member that other countries are looking at this.

We are the first country in the world to have national standards on employment equity and there are other countries looking at it.

Of course there may be other provisions that we will need, but we have to get at every sector of society and not just make rules that will be impossible for people to follow. That is what has happened in those jurisdictions with that legislation. It hasn't worked.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY IN PUBLIC SERVICE

Mr. Alan Redway (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for the Treasury Board. This morning the Minister released a report, the first report, I believe, on employment equity in the Public Service of Canada. That report indicated that visible minorities and the disabled are drastically underrepresented in the federal Public Service and that visible minorities, the disabled, women, and native people are seriously underrepresented in the senior levels of management. What do the Minister and the Government intend to do to put our own house in order?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I think it is important to reiterate that we are the first Government to set targets for employment equity for women, visible minorities, and the disabled. One aspect of the question we might zero in on is the visible minorities, and one has to remember that a large percentage of visible minorities reside in the cities of Montreal, Toronto and Vancouver, whereas the number of federal positions in those cities is correspondingly lower.

I think the important thing to remind my friend of is that we now have the first report and we can take action on the figures that flow from that report. I am sure that, when we report next year, the figures will be better.

AIR SAFETY

CONDITIONS AT PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, despite the reported near midair collision at Pearson International Airport Tuesday, only last week the Minister of State for Transport made statements to the effect that everything is now fine at Pearson. She is either unwilling or unable to take action to make sure that this holiday season remains a time of happiness and not a time of sorrow.

I would like to ask the Minister responsible what it will take for the Minister finally to do something concrete, instead of taking haphazard measures to correct this horrendous situation. Lives are in danger as we speak.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, safety is number one at the Pearson Airport as it is across the country. Yes, there have been near misses, but the legislation was brought in to ensure that the reporting system was more secure and more stringent allowing for more representation as far as responses are concerned.

Mr. Nunziata: That is nonsense.

Mrs. Martin: The nonsense is on the other side of the House today. I can assure the Hon. Member that all necessary steps are being taken, and in fact the incidents at Toronto have dropped by 40 per cent in a year—

Ms. Copps: Oh, my God, that is even worse.

Mrs. Martin: —in a year when traffic has increased by 10 per cent. Therefore we are taking the appropriate action, and we will continue to take the appropriate action.

REQUEST FOR ADDITIONAL STEPS TO ENSURE SAFETY

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister. In light of the unwillingness of the Minister to take action to bring in steps in order to avoid the four near misses in the last 50 days and to assure the travelling public of their safety, would the Prime Minister announce today additional steps to ensure public safety?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, initial steps have been taken. Future steps will be taken. Safety is number one and will continue to be number one, regardless of what the Hon. Member opposite may say.

VIA RAIL

PROPOSED RERUTING OF CORNWALL SERVICE

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Transport. The lobby group, Transport 2000, is calling for a rerouting of VIA Rail trains Nos. 58 and 59 which currently pass through Cornwall.

Train 58 is an important commuter link for many Cornwall residents who work in Montreal. It is also used by people who wish to make airport connections at Dorval. Train 59 connects Cornwall with Toronto and is an inexpensive service used by many people in Cornwall and the surrounding area, especially low income travellers. I would like to ask the Minister of State for Transport if she will guarantee that these trains will continue their present operation and not be rerouted.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his concern for the constituents of the Cornwall area, and I will certainly take notice of his question, look into the situation, and reply to him.

TRAIN SERVICE IN EASTERN ONTARIO

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Mr. Speaker, this answer is not helpful.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kilger: The Government has promised in the past to maintain rail passenger service in Canada. We have just witnessed the cancellation of overnight train service between Ottawa and Toronto. I ask the Minister of State for Transport if she will today honour the Government's commitment to preserving train service in eastern Ontario.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, I answered that question with the first answer.

HEALTH

TESTING OF NERVE GAS ANTIDOTE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Dr. Somers, the Director General of the Drugs Directorate of Health and Welfare, today confirmed that the green light has been given to the Department of National Defence for human guinea pig testing of HI-6, a nerve gas antidote.

Since we learned this fall that Canadian servicemen involved in chemical tests at Suffield were not informed of the possible side effects of tests they were involved in, will the Minister assure this House that any servicemen or civilians who participate in HI-6 tests will be fully informed? In some tests on animals, this drug caused death, and in many cases extreme birth deformities.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the assurances that the Hon. Member asks for are the assurances that the Department of National Health and Welfare required of the Department of National Defence. I believe the Hon. Member had a conversation, possibly within the last 24 hours, with officials of my Department relating to HI-6.

The situation is that informed consent will be necessary, that an ethics committee will have to be in place, that no one has to participate, that it will be used as an antidote only to test tolerance, and that no nerve gas will be involved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

CHEMICAL WEAPONS—REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Minister for that answer, but this Conservative Government has endorsed the production by the United States of a new generation of chemical weapons, and Health and Welfare confirmed today that an East bloc country has published a study in support of human guinea pig testing of HI-6.

Will the Minister give his support to the striking of an all-Party committee of the House to evaluate Canada's role in the development of nerve gas, chemical weapons and antidotes, and report those findings to the House in 1989?

• (1150)

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence and Acting Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, this is only the most recent example of the Hon. Member attempting to inspire fears among the public.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: The House will recall that the Hon. Member made very irresponsible allegations earlier in the year with regard to Suffield. When we asked him to give the Department names of individuals whom he had alleged had been affected by nerve gas or by chemical testing, he refused to do so. That was simply an irresponsible action on his part.

The House will know that I have asked Mr. William Barton, a former disarmament ambassador, the Chairman of the Canadian International Institute of Peace and Security, to conduct a full study of all of the aspects of chemical and biological research in Canada. That study will be completed by the end of this year. It will be made public. It will be made available to all Members of Parliament. If any Member of Parliament, for example, serving on the National Defence Committee wishes to pursue the issue, we will be pleased to see it pursued.

CRIMINAL CODE

WAR CRIMES—KINGSTON NEWSPAPER ALLEGATIONS

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice in his capacity as the Attorney General of Canada. On December 10, The Kingston Whig Standard, a newspaper published in my constituency, published a major investigative report which alleges that one Joseph Kirshbaum was involved in activities in Slovakia in World War II which could render him liable for prosecution under the Criminal Code provisions respecting war crimes.

When will the Attorney General make his decision as to the prosecution of this Joseph Kirshbaum?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs and Acting Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I have seen that special edition of the Whig Standard. The Hon. Member will know that these are questions about which the Attorney General should exercise care and public comment. I think in the circumstances I will not reply directly to that question here on the floor of the House today.

Mr. Nunziata: Consult your lawyer.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When will the Attorney General take seriously the allegations contained in this article?

Some Hon. Members: Come on.

Mr. Milliken: The information contained in this article has been in the public domain for some time.

Mr. Crosbie: You cannot discuss possible prosecution.

Mr. Milliken: The Attorney General has a responsibility to make up his mind. Simply, when is he going to make a decision? I think that is a reasonable question, Mr. Speaker.

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs and Acting Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I take my duties sufficiently seriously that I do not propose to discuss potential hypothetical prosecutions here on the floor of the House.

VISIBLE MINORITIES

CHINESE HEAD TAX ISSUE

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Deputy Prime Minister.

In August, 1984, the Chinese Canadian National Council received a letter from the Conservative Party which said:

The Progressive Conservative Party supports the introduction of an all-Party parliamentary resolution which would recognize the injustice and discrimination of the head tax and the Chinese Immigration (Exclusion) Act.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister live up to his promise and take immediate action to resolve this painful issue in a fair and appropriate manner?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, following the settlement of the Japanese Canadian issue which had been a dark stain on our reputation for some 45 years, we indicated quite clearly to the Chinese community that we would be very prepared to meet with them.

Indeed, I did meet the leadership of the community in Toronto. We had a very extensive meeting. We explored the situation very carefully and clearly, and the information has been very helpful.

REQUEST FOR APPOINTMENT OF ALL-PARTY COMMITTEE

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is now almost 1989 and the Chinese National Council has gone through four Multicultural Ministers trying to get some sort of action.

Would the Deputy Prime Minister promise today to the House that he will set up an all-Party committee to ensure that the Chinese-Canadian community gets a fair and just resolution to its concern?

Hon. Gerry Weiner (Minister of State (Multiculturalism and Citizenship)): Mr. Speaker, for too many years we had seen a Prime Minister and previous Prime Ministers refuse to address themselves to any previous injustices that might have existed in this country. By coming forward with our historic settlement, by redressing a wrong that we faced for far too long, we have said clearly that, if there are any other injustices, we have not closed the door to addressing ourselves to those issues. On the contrary, it gives others the opportunity. But certainly they must be examined very carefully and in an appropriate way to see if redress is necessary.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REPORTED LAUNDERING OF MARCOS FAMILY FUNDS

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. It is related to Ferdinand Marcos and also the question of laundered money.

There is a story breaking in Vancouver where a firm known as the Vancouver Securities Incorporated has been a conduit for money to be laundered by the Marcos family. As everyone knows, a U.S. federal grand jury has instructed that the Marcos funds be frozen but there appears to be a loop hole in allowing these funds to be laundered here in Canada.

Is the Solicitor General aware of this case, and are the RCMP looking into this matter that has now been exposed in Vancouver?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence and Acting Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, although I thank the Hon. Member for his question he will know that it is not practice to disclose in the House whether an RCMP investigation is under way. Certainly the RCMP read newspapers, just as the Hon. Member does.

If the Hon. Member has any information that would be of use to the RCMP, I would invite him to present it to the RCMP directly.

Standing Order 31

Mr. Barrett: Far be it for me to underwrite a subscription to the Vancouver Sun for the RCMP.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REQUEST THAT MINISTER INVESTIGATE

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, could I have an assurance from the Solicitor General that he will personally look into this matter and assure all Canadians that no funds from the Marcos family that have been frozen by the U.S. courts will be laundered here in Canada, and that Canadians will not be used as a haven for ill-gotten gains by people like ex-President Marcos?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence and Acting Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, what I will do is ensure that the RCMP are fully aware of the Hon. Member's concerns.

Further, he has every right as a Member of Parliament and as a citizen to contact the RCMP directly to bring to their attention any concerns he has, or any information that he has.

INCOME TAX ACT

AMOUNTS SPENT BY CORPORATIONS ON FREE TRADE ADVERTISING

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, nobody likes to think too much about taxes this close to Christmas but I do have a question for the Minister of National Revenue.

During the recent election campaign, advertising by groups other than political Parties really made a mockery of the election expense limits contained in the Canada Elections Act. I would like the Minister's assurance to this House that Revenue Canada Taxation will ensure that corporations do not deduct for income tax purposes amounts spent on advertising in favour of or against the free trade agreement.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with care to my colleague's question, and I can assure him that I will take it as a representation.

I think he will understand that practices are pretty well established in this regard, and let me say that so far

Privilege—Miss C. Campbell

I have not had any other representations except his. We will look into the matter.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I think the practices are established under the Income Tax Act—

Mr. Crosbie: Under the Liberals.

Mr. Manley: —and I think there are limitations on what can be deducted. It is clear individuals cannot deduct amounts which they might have spent on advertising against the free trade deal because they wanted to protect their jobs.

Mr. Crosbie: What about the unions?

Mr. Manley: Unions do not deduct for income tax purposes but corporations do.

Mr. Crosbie: They take it from their members.

Mr. Manley: Is the Minister willing to ensure that these amounts spent on advertising which have nothing to do with the business of the corporations which are advertising, will not be deducted?

Mr. Beatty: There is a lot to do with the very survival of their businesses.

Mr. Crosbie: You would have ruined their businesses if you had gotten in.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

• (1200)

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the question of my colleague. I remind him that previously the Government corrected some inequities and inadequacies in Liberal legislation, and we will continue to look at it and see if it is appropriate.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED BIAS AGAINST WEST COAST

Ms. Coline Campbell (South West Nova): Mr. Speaker, it is good to be back.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member asking me to agree with that?

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier in Question Period I was invited by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) to explain my bias against the West Coast. The Deputy Prime Minister is using what I consider offensive measures of defence to a major problem on the East Coast.

We will take any Minister of Fisheries from any coast, and we enjoyed having you, Mr. Speaker, in that role at one time. We are not biased against the West Coast because of this Minister Fisheries. We are biased against this Minister of Fisheries.

Members of the inshore communities on the East Coast are certainly showing that they dislike this Minister of Fisheries.

When Robert Stanfield came down to South West Nova and stated that the people had to accept the Prime Minister “warts” and all, I do not think that he meant that we had to accept this Minister of Fisheries. We may have had to accept the Prime Minister “warts” and all, according to the Chronicle Herald the next day, but I must say that we do not have to accept this Minister of Fisheries.

It is unfair to accuse me of bias against the West Coast when we do not like the Minister of Fisheries. Name anyone else from the West Coast. Name someone from Alberta, and we will take that Minister of Fisheries. However, we do not want this Minister of Fisheries.

Mr. Speaker: The complaint of the Hon. Member arises from a comment made by the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) which, as I remember it, was putting the question of whether or not the Hon. Member might or might not have a bias against the West Coast.

I find it difficult to find that it is a question of privilege. It is not a matter that has arisen for the first time in the House. As Hon. Members will recall, there was an exchange some months in which a similar complaint was brought by a Member the New Democratic Party concerning an alleged or imputed bias against one part of the country or the other.

I doubt if either of those are questions of privilege. However, in view of the fact that there have been complaints, I am sure that all Hon. Members would want to take this matter into account, and keep in mind that all Hon. Members in the Chamber are here to serve the entire country. Suggestions of bias against one part of the country or another perhaps ought not to be made.

I have to say to the Hon. Member that it does fall short of a question of privilege.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

ARRANGEMENTS BEFORE CHRISTMAS BREAK

Mr. Hawkes: Subsequent to the vote this morning there was an opportunity for the three Party Whips to review the balance of the day. During the course of that review we considered the arrangement we have had for the supper hour this week. It seems to have worked well. We think that there might be unanimous consent within the Chamber to adopt that understanding for the balance of today, which would be that there would not be any tactical manoeuvring, including quorum calls, or dilatory motions. The restaurant will be open this evening from 6 p.m. until 10 p.m., rather than from 6 p.m. to 8 p.m. for the convenience of Members.

If all Members are in agreement, it would allow all Members of the House, as the debate goes on today, to have a little more flexibility to do the hard work that remains to be done in their offices before the Christmas break.

I believe that you will find, Mr. Speaker, such a predisposition in the House, if the Whips have a good feel for the will of their caucuses, and that they be given the opportunity to bring their work up to date before their leave for Christmas.

Mr. Prud'homme: This Bill will be passed tonight and next week we will wait for Royal Assent. Would Your Honour see to having at least a minimum of services at the disposal of Members next week, since most likely some will stay behind. Officially the House does not adjourn until after we are called in at your request, Mr. Speaker, to go to the Senate for Royal Assent.

Therefore, I am very skeptical that there may not be as many services for those Members of the House who will stay here at the call of the Chair. Would Your Honour see to it that at least some minimum services such as those provided by the restaurant be made available to all Members.

Mr. Speaker: First, I wish to thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for bringing this matter to my attention. There has been some consideration, and I want to assure the House that I myself and others will make every effort to ensure that appropriate facilities are available for the comfort and use of those Members who are here.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I would like to get back to the matter under consideration, namely whether we can agree on a ceasefire as far as the procedural wrangling is concerned. I agree that it would be appropriate, today at least, in order to allow as many Members as possible to make their speeches, that we do not resort to any stalling tactics. We should also agree that for the lunch and dinner hours, Members should have an opportunity to use the dining room.

I would prefer, Mr. Speaker, that we agree on the length of the speeches. I would agree to limiting the length of speeches, to allow as many Members as possible to speak on such an important issue. I am always open to any suggestions from the government and, if it was possible to limit the time allocated to each Member to perhaps 15 minutes, instead of 20 minutes, it's as you wish . . . I'm open to all suggestions!

[English]

Mr. Riis: In an effort to allow Members to complete their necessary work before the break, we would certainly be prepared to agree that we will not do anything to prohibit that.

Perhaps having some services next week would be in order, because we are still attempting to think of some way to expand the debate into next week. I do not think there is any way to do that beyond the closure motion at 1 a.m. tomorrow.

As far as limiting the length of speeches, I would not suggest that we would be in agreement with that at this point. Perhaps after some further discussion, but at this point I would like to discuss it more before we agree to limit speeches.

Mr. Hawkes: I would be quite happy to undertake those discussions at an early point. In the normal course of events, and in the absence of the motion this morning, very soon speeches would have reached the 10 minute mark, and that might be the place to start discussions. However, I look forward to those discussions and we will report back to the House.

Mr. Speaker: I might take the opportunity while Members are present to indicate that later on this evening, certainly from 10 p.m. onwards, there will be a reception for Hon. Members in Room 16 which is the traditional way in which we meet with each other at the end of a busy several weeks. I invite all Hon. Members to join me at that time.

If events should so transpire in the House that it would be necessary to adjust the time of the reception, I shall of course do that in due course.

PRIVILEGE

WORDS ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR HAMILTON EAST

Mr. Louis Plamondon (Richelieu): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) uttered a word that outraged several of my constituents. I received many telephone calls about this incident.

I'm sure the Hon. Member wasn't thinking straight when she referred to an individual who was speaking French as a slime-bag.

I would just like to let the Hon. Member know that she shocked a great many people. However, I know her well enough to realize that these cannot surely be her true feelings.

Undoubtedly, the Hon. Member for Hamilton East was caught up in the emotion of the moment and, with all due respect to her, I hope that she would wish to apologize to the voters in my riding who were shocked to hear her use this word.

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, the first time I heard the word slime-bag was here in the House. I heard it from two Ministers of the Crown who used it on several occasions to characterize the goings-on in the House.

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Member claims that I was asking the Prime Minister to speak in English when he knows full well, as does the Prime Minister, that I was asking him to speak in English because he was saying one thing in French, and something quite different in English. I do not accept this kind of duplicity from the Prime Minister, no more than I can accept it from any other Member of the House.

[English]

An Hon. Member: Why don't you try apologizing for once.

Mr. Speaker: I shall refer to the Hansard record and, if necessary, report back to the House.

The Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray).

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a comment on the point of order, and in doing so I draw your attention to—

Mr. Speaker: I will of course hear the House Leader for the Opposition, if he feels that it is necessary to offer some remarks. It may be that it will not be necessary.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. I merely want to draw to the attention of the Chair and the House that there is a well established principle referred to in Beauchesne's Rules of Order to the effect that the proper time at which to raise a point of order with respect to unparliamentary language is when the words are used, and not afterwards.

If the Hon. Member opposite had a concern about language that was allegedly used by the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) yesterday, he should have raised the point of order immediately. Not having done so, I respectfully submit that the point of order, whatever the words might have been, is not valid.

Mr. McDermid: That is the only defence you have.

Ms. Copps: I learned it from you.

Mr. Speaker: I will take the matter under consideration. The incident about which the complaint has been raised has attracted considerable publicity, and it is for that reason that I urge upon all Hon. Members that restraint at times, no matter what the provocation, is probably in the best interests of order in this place.

I will consider the matter and, if necessary, report back to the House on it.

I thank the Hon. Member for Windsor West for his remarks.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, without wishing to prolong the discussion, I would like to advise the Chair that we will be reviewing the "blues" as to the recent comments of the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) in order to determine whether or not, in this latest intervention, there has been a Question of Privilege that should be followed up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCOME TAX ACT

EFFECT OF CHANGES ON SOCIAL SECURITY PROGRAMS

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I wish to inform the House that certain changes under the Income Tax Act will not have an adverse effect on the benefits paid to recipients of the Guaranteed Income Supplement and Spouse's Allowance, which are based on a definition of income originating in the Income Tax Act.

Because this definition has been changed, a consequential amendment to the Old Age Security Act will be needed to ensure that recipients with employment earnings who claim or renew these benefits in April, 1989 will be protected from unintended reductions in their benefits.

At the same time, and on behalf of my colleague, the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. Merrithew), I wish to point out that this will provide identical protection to recipients of the War Veterans Allowance.

Specifically, for purposes of these programs, the same deductions for unemployment insurance premiums, Canada and Québec Pension Plan contributions, and employment expenses will be available as before.

The necessary legislation to maintain this protection will be tabled at Budget time.

Statements by Ministers

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mrs. Speaker, the Minister's statement, brief though it may be, was only delivered to my office at 10.26 this morning.

The information contained in this release, from what I can gather, Mr. Speaker, represents a real blow to senior citizens.

What the Minister is saying, even though he is unable or unwilling to clarify it in this House, is that the Income Tax Act has been changed to redefine the definition of earnings, and that could potentially have a negative impact on 40,000 Canadians receiving the Guaranteed Income Supplement and Spouse's Allowance and 4,500 war veterans receiving the War Veterans Allowance.

In order to mitigate the impact of the changes that are going to be brought in under the Income Tax Act—which he fails to explain either by way of his release or by way of his statement—he is going to bring in enabling legislation to change the requirements specifically for senior citizen recipients.

The reason it is of concern, Mr. Speaker, is that each and every Member of this House, usually in the month of April, receives telephone calls from irate and distraught senior citizens who have not had their Guaranteed Income Supplement renewed.

In his statement, the Minister should be far more explanatory as to what income is being redefined and how it is going to affect senior citizens immediately.

He calls it a benefit, saying that an amendment will be introduced to safeguard current levels of the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

Well, who is being cut back, and what is the redefinition under the Income Tax Act which will negatively affect senior citizens and the war veterans?

The Minister states that as many as 40,000 people will be affected but that they do not have to do anything as the Department will initiate whatever action is needed.

It is simply not good enough, Mr. Speaker, two days before Christmas, to tell seniors that the Income Tax Act is going to be changed, that the definition of "earnings" under the Income Tax Act will be changed; to state that there could be a potential negative effect on 40,000 seniors, as well as 4,500 war veterans, and then to say: "In the future, we are going to bring in legislation which will vitiate against the negative effects of the changes to the Income Tax Act which we are now bringing in."

Interparliamentary Delegation Report

I think the Minister owes the seniors of this country an explanation which is far more precise. I should like to know precisely what changes to the Income Tax Act are proposed to be brought in and why it is that he is coming in with this statement at this time, a statement which is going to frighten senior citizens and frighten war veterans.

An Hon. Member: You are the one who is frightening them.

Ms. Copps: And then he says: "Don't worry about it, because the Department is going to get in touch with you individually."

Well, Mr. Speaker, we know that—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: I am sorry, but this a very important issue. It is an issue that deals with the Guaranteed Income Supplement for senior citizens. I think the Minister needs to give more information to our seniors as to the kinds of changes that have been made and how it is that we can be assured that the Department is going to be able individually to contact the 40,000 senior citizens whose livelihood depends upon the Guaranteed Income Supplement.

The Minister's statement is uninformative and needs to be expanded.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, while we agree with the intent of the Minister's statement, I can say that, like many Members of this House, I have had telephone calls and letters from senior citizens who do not understand why their benefits have been cut when they have had employment earnings—earnings that they desperately need in order to survive.

• (1220)

We certainly support the intent to ensure that recipients of old age pensions, spouses' allowance and veterans' allowance will not have their benefits reduced as a result of the income tax measures. However, I agree with my colleague that it is important to have a much broader and detailed explanation of this matter, particularly for our senior citizens. I would think it would not be too difficult to have some kind of statement sent out with the next cheque mailing. Certainly all of us in this House will be most anxious to have further information as well.

Those older people must have protection. They have planned their lives with the idea that they would receive full benefits under the existing laws and not have them reduced due to Income Tax Act changes.

I note that the Minister in his press release stated that the move is "consistent with this Government's commitment to protecting pensioners and veterans with limited incomes". Why did the Minister and his Government not have the same concern about families raising children on limited incomes? Why does the Minister continue to tolerate the reduction in family allowances and benefits as a result of the deindexation policy of his Government which was imposed on family benefits? The Tory tax system does not treat families with children fairly and I hope the Minister will be reviewing and correcting this in the next Budget.

I urge him to bring forward measures to reindex family allowances and child tax credits fully. I know veterans and other pensioners and their spouses will want their grandchildren and other children to be fully protected from poverty. Therefore, I ask him to work on those two measures which are most important to the youngest and oldest of our society.

PARLIAMENTARY ASSEMBLY OF COUNCIL OF EUROPE

HOSTING BY CANADA OF SEVENTH PARLIAMENTARY SCIENTIFIC CONFERENCE

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, as Chairman of the Canada-Europe Parliamentary Association, I would like to bring to the attention of the House, particularly in light of the fact we have so many new Members, that Canada, more specifically the Canadian Parliament, will be host to a very important conference from June 8 to June 15, 1990.

This conference is the seventh parliamentary scientific conference organized under the auspices of the Parliamentary Assembly of the Council of Europe. It is expected that 150 parliamentarians and scientists from 21 Council of European member countries, as well as the remaining six OECD countries, will be in attendance at this Ottawa conference.

The conference will give Canada an opportunity to increase the awareness of the international scientific community as to what Canada has to offer in various specific scientific fields. Quite apart from the meeting itself, we would like to focus the attention of the delegates on Canada's technological advances, and show them evidence of this around Ottawa. We really have a story to tell with respect to technological and environmental development which is unheralded and unmatched anywhere in the world.

Because of the importance with which the Canadian Government and the Canadian people regard questions related to the environment, the Canadian Executive Committee has requested that Canadian participants lead a discussion on the subject of global environmental change, focusing, among other aspects, on the problems of monitoring and evaluating and the technological adjustments urgently needed in industry, energy and agriculture. This request was approved by the Council of Europe Parliamentary Assembly last week.

This conference will further signal to the world that Canada and Canadian parliamentarians are prepared to move forward and meet the challenge presented to the Governments of the world by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at the Toronto conference in June on the changing atmosphere. The challenge: To create an International Law of the Atmosphere by 1992.

The world needs environmental leadership. Canada and its parliamentarians have responded.

PRIVATE MEMBERS PUBLIC BILL

NOTICE OF INTRODUCTION

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I understand the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata) wishes to introduce a Bill. However, we do not have it at this time.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): If I may, Mr. Speaker, it was my intention to introduce a Bill today which would have amended the Criminal Code to protect the innocent unborn. I have been advised by the Table that although the Bill is listed on the Order Paper, it is not yet at the table, which precludes me from introducing it today.

However, I am also advised that once that matter is dealt with it may be introduced later this day with the consent of the House. I ask that I be allowed to do that.

Motions

Mr. Lewis: Fair enough.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Very well.

CRIMINAL CODE

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE OF MEASURE TO AMEND

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the Parties and I think you will find there is consent to move the following two motions, which I will do one at a time, immediately without debate. Therefore, I move:

That, pursuant to Section 195(2)(1) of an Act to amend the Criminal Code (Prostitution), Chapter 51, Statutes of Canada, 1985, the Standing Committee on Justice and Solicitor General be the committee to review the Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. President of the Treasury Board have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we are disposed to accept the order but I want to draw to the attention of the House a potential problem which has just been brought to my attention.

Contrary to the rules, the Striking Committee of this House has not met. No committee has been constituted as a result. I think it should be noted that the Government has been remiss in carrying out this responsibility placed upon it by the rules. While I want to see the obligation placed on this House by the statute carried out, I think it should be noted that as yet the Justice Committee has not been set up.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, just immediately prior to your putting the motion, I would suggest to my hon. friend that we are making an effort to comply with the legislation by designating the proper committee, and we did so on that basis. The question of when the striking committee will be set up is one that will be looked at in the very near future.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

*MotionsBUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-2

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board)): Mr. Speaker, the second motion will probably be of more interest to the House. I move:

That immediately following the vote on third reading of Bill C-2, the Speaker shall adjourn the House to the call of the Chair for the purpose of receiving a message from the Senate respecting the giving of Royal Assent to the said Bill; and

That immediately following Royal Assent on the said Bill, a motion to rescind the order of the House of December 16, 1988, respecting sitting hours shall be deemed to have been moved by a Minister of the Crown and the Speaker shall forthwith deem such motion adopted and shall adjourn the House until eleven o'clock a.m., Monday, March 6, 1989;

Provided that, in the case of any other message from the Senate on the said Bill, the Speaker shall within 48 hours of receipt of such message call the House into session for the purpose of considering such message, and recorded divisions on which shall not be subject to provisions for deferralment.

While the Page is taking the motion to the Chair I might undertake to the House that since the date of March 6 will shorten the time allowed to the House to consider Estimates, I undertake on behalf of the Government that in this case we will provide an additional week to allow the House to consider the Estimates.

• (1230)

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, we have heard the motion. We have been consulted about it beforehand. As I have indicated to the Deputy Government House Leader, we are ready to accept the motion in the form it has been proposed in the light of the undertaking given by the Deputy Government House Leader.

One of the most important duties of members of the Opposition in the House—in fact of all Members—is to give due and proper consideration to the spending plans of the Government and what they say about the over-all policy of the Government. Ordinarily, the final date for submitting to this House the Main Estimates would be, I think, around March 1. If we agree without the undertaking being offered by the Deputy Government House Leader to begin on March 6, then the time offered by the rules for the studying of Estimates will have been rather seriously abridged, which I do not think would be in the interests of the House or of Canada as a whole.

Because the Deputy Government House Leader has given the undertaking that he has just made, we are willing to accept the order by unanimous consent in the form in which it has been proposed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the Hon. President of the Treasury Board have the unanimous consent of the House to move the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the terms of the motion. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

PETITIONS

REVIEW OF LAWS GOVERNING PROSTITUTION

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is particularly appropriate that I present this petition following the statement made just a few moments ago by the Deputy Government House Leader. The petition I have the honour to present comes from many residents of Strathcona, a residential community in Vancouver East which has a very large school population.

The residents of this community have said that, whereas their neighbourhood is now seriously at risk of being destroyed by prostitutes, their johns and the filth, disease, violence, crime and disturbance they bring with them; whereas they, the residents of the neighborhood, are the victims of this outrageous activity, suffering increasing break-ins and verbal abuse and threats of violence on their neighbourhood streets such as that they no longer feel safe; whereas the current laws governing street solicitation for the purposes of prostitution are completely inadequate and ineffectual; whereas victimization, destruction and disturbance of residential neighbourhoods can be substantially reduced or eliminated, and the excessive costs of policing and court processes could be more effectively applied or reduced, therefore they call upon Parliament to review the laws governing street solicitation for the purposes of prostitution, particularly in locations in or around residential neighbourhoods, day care centres, schools, churches, parks and playgrounds for the health, safety and welfare of citizens.

There are many signatures including those of many representatives of the Chinese community of Strathcona. I hope that we will get on with the review of this legislation very quickly.

ADDITION OF EGGS TO IMPORT CONTROL LIST

Mr. Ralph Ferguson (Lambton—Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to present a petition from some residents of Canada and southwestern Ontario in particular representing the hatching egg producers from across Canada who have organized themselves into a Canadian Hatching Egg Producers Marketing Agency under the provisions of the National Farm Products Marketing Agency Act in a sincere attempt to tailor their production to meet the demand of the Canadian market.

However, their efforts will be of no avail unless chicken hatching eggs are added to the import control list. Therefore these petitioners call upon Parliament and the Government to honour this commitment to the Canadian producers and announce the addition of the product to the import control list so as to provide stability for these farmers whose industry will be destroyed if no action is not forthcoming.

Please make this a merry Christmas for this sector of Canadian agriculture.

[Translation]

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be held over.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

POINT OF ORDER

APPLICATION OF STANDING ORDERS 33(2) AND 57

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a point of order, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier).

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, our Standing Orders provide that when a Minister rises and makes a statement under routine Proceedings—and we have had such a statement today—an MP from the official opposition, or from each of the opposition parties, may take roughly the same amount of time to respond.

Petitions

Standing Order 33(2) stipulates, and I quote:

A period of time corresponding to the time taken for the proceedings pursuant to paragraph (1) of this section shall be added to the time provided for government business as follows:

On Fridays, the time is added to the end of the day, and so today if we are going to respect Standing Order 33(2) we should add on the time that has been used for the Minister's statement and the response from the opposition parties.

I noticed that you did not indicate to the House that there was a provision to this effect. Normally you say so just before the call for Routine Proceedings or Orders of the Day.

I wonder, in the opinion of this House, or of the Chair, whether we are to take it that Standing Order 57, which stipulates that questions must be decided without delay, closure having been invoked, overrides Standing Order 33(2).

I would ask the Chair to direct us on this matter, so that it will be clear that when I and my caucus a few minutes ago asked the House to restrict the time allotted to each member, which is 20 minutes per speech, so that more Members would have a chance to speak, it doesn't mean we have to add on extra time tomorrow morning at one a.m. because of a Standing Order that is interpreted perhaps somewhat differently from the way I see it.

I would ask the Chair to tell us which Standing Order, 57 or 33(2), takes precedence here.

Mr. Hawkes: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member, with his usual intelligence, knows the Standing Orders, and I congratulate him. I believe his question is a valid one. From the government's point of view there is no problem regarding the interpretation of Standing Order 57, which in my opinion is the one that should apply.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier and the Hon. Member for Calgary West for their remarks.

There is indeed a conflict between Standing Orders 33 and 57. I shall take the following position: in my opinion, Standing Order 57, because this is an exceptional case, ought to take precedence over Standing Order 33. However, I think it might perhaps be a good idea if the Committee on Procedure were to consider the question, and once they have reported a conclusion one way or the other I am sure the House will act on it.

I thank the two Members for their comments.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the third time and passed; and the amendment of Mr. Axworthy (p. 640).

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing): Mr. Speaker, in the few minutes I have left to me there are two or three points that I would like to cover. I think the first point that should be made for those people who are watching this debate is that we are on an amendment that was introduced by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy). The Liberals have come back to the House to debate the Bill but have obstructed all along the way. They have called for votes for leave to introduce a Bill and first reading. It became very clear that we had to take action to ensure this legislation passed the House in a reasonable amount of time with reasonable study. That was accomplished. We are now into third reading. This amendment is another stall tactic by the Liberals. We will be defeating the amendment by voting against it. That is point one.

● (1240)

The second point is the campaign waged by the United Church against the Free Trade Agreement. The United Church of Canada, of which my father was a minister for a number of years, put little inserts in church bulletins during the campaign opposing the Free Trade Agreement. We have heard objections to corporations advertising in support of free trade, but unions such as the CLC and the CAW advertised. Mel Hurtig and Maud Barlow advertised. Did that not count?

From the proceedings of our committee on Bill C-130, let me read the position of the United Church. It reads as follows:

The United Church of Canada has found that the agreement limits our democratic ability to use our capital and resources for worthy national purposes and has declared that the agreement is not, on balance, in the overall interest of the people of Canada. It has called upon the Government of Canada to suspend further steps toward the implementation of the agreement until such time as the people of Canada may be democratically consulted.

Well, they have now been democratically consulted. I have not heard a word from the United Church supporting this move.

I went to church last Sunday, and I brought the bulletin from our church along with me today. It is interesting that the United Church is attacking the Free Trade Agreement, saying how terrible and bad it will be for Canada. The United Church's standard Christmas bulletin, "Rejoice, the Lord is Coming", was printed in the United States of America. This is the hypocrisy that has plagued this debate.

Ms. Copps: What have you got against the United Church?

Mr. McDermid: When I saw this on Sunday, I could not believe it. I am calling on the United Church of Canada to come out and support the agreement and make it work. That is all we are asking for. We will pass it tonight. We will go into the Senate next week to get Royal Assent so that entrepreneurs and creative people in this country can get on with their lives and create a better and more prosperous Canada.

I wish to thank some people for the work they have done over the last three years. The three Ministers involved, the Hon. James Kelleher, the Hon. Pat Carney, and the present Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), have spent considerable time on this agreement and have done a fantastic job. They also allowed me to participate actively, for which I am thankful.

I want to thank Ambassador Reisman, Ambassador Ritchie and the staff of the trade negotiation office who spent countless hours working on the agreement, negotiating and consulting with the sectoral advisory committees, the International Trade Advisory Committee. I want to thank myriad other people. Our bureaucrats are often criticized for being lazy and not going that extra mile. These people worked many nights and weekends. They travelled extensively to the United States during these negotiations. They are to be commended. I learned a tremendous amount from Ambassador Reisman, Ambassador Ritchie, and those in the trade negotiation office who offered such good advice.

Finally, I want to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). I want to look back at four decisions leading to free trade, four crucial decisions taken by the Prime Minister, four decisions in which he showed courage and leadership.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The first decision, taken in 1985, was the decision to seek free trade with the United States. The Prime Minister as a candidate in 1983 had given the conventional wisdom on free trade. We were too weak economically. Canadians were not sufficiently confident as a nation. It was a political graveyard. But as a Prime Minister in 1985, with all the evidence presented from a myriad studies, he realized the opportunity for free trade, the threat of protectionism without a Free Trade Agreement, and the maturity of this great country called Canada.

The Prime Minister had a choice. He said "yes", in spite of political risks. He decided in favour of what would be good for Canada.

The second choice was in May of 1986 when the Senate foreign affairs committee split 10-10 in the vote to start free trade negotiations with Canada. Politically, was this not the time to quietly bury the free trade initiative?

Again the Prime Minister had a choice and he said "yes", in spite of the political risks. He believed that free trade with the United States was what Canadians needed to grow to become stronger and more prosperous as a nation.

The third decision was in August of 1987. There was one month left at the negotiating table. Mr. Reisman told the Prime Minister that the U.S. side had not offered what Canada needed to make a good deal. The Prime Minister authorized Ambassador Reisman to break off negotiations.

That took political courage. That was one of the Government's major initiatives. Walking away rather than staying at the table to the end was risky. The decision paid off when, in the final days of negotiations, the United States side brought forward the proposals needed to make this a good deal for Canada.

The Prime Minister had a choice. He said "yes" to Simon Reisman, "Walk away", when the U.S. offer was not good enough, and "yes" to the Americans when the walk-out produced what we needed for a good deal.

The fourth decision was made during the election campaign, the day the Gallup poll came out after the televised debate. To the pundits and the political seers and seasoned observers like the head of the CLC, the Prime Minister's commitment to free trade would be his Waterloo. The Prime Minister did not buy that.

The Prime Minister knew that free trade was a good deal for Canadians. He knew that he only had a few weeks either to turn back the Opposition's baseless allegations on free trade or to try to turn to other issues. He took the Opposition's free trade allegations head on. He decided to fight on the issue, to stand up for what he believed in, to defend that which was in the national interest. He and his Party won because of it.

Those are the four crucial decisions for free trade. They were decisions by a Government and a Party, but in the end, they were the Prime Minister's decisions. He took the risks. He made the right decisions. He demonstrated courage and great leadership. Because of that, Canadians will benefit from free trade for decades to come.

I look forward to the vote tonight, to the passage through the Senate and receiving Royal Assent next week, so that Canada can be a leader going into the 21st century.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Cardigan.

Mr. Lawrence MacAulay (Cardigan): I would like to congratulate the Speaker on his re-election as Speaker to the House of Commons.

I would like to thank the people of Cardigan for the confidence they placed in me. I consider it an enormous privilege to serve as a Member of Parliament. I want to thank the people of my constituency for their recognition and to say it is an honour for me to take part in this important debate on Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, better known as the "Mulroney-Reagan Free Trade Deal".

A majority of people in this country are opposed to this deal. In my riding of Cardigan, Prince Edward Island, there was an overwhelming turn-out of about 90 per cent who voted against this deal.

Mr. McDermid: Ninety per cent voted against it?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I would ask the Hon. Member for refer to the deal as the Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. McDermid: Exactly.

Mr. Blackburn (Brant): You can call it anything you want. Wait until I get up!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: You can use the words "President Reagan", but when you refer to the Prime Minister, you must refer to him as the Prime Minister.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Blaikie: The "Prime Minister's-Reagan deal". That is okay.

• (1250)

Mr. MacAulay: This trade deal will pit Canadian farmers against American farmers for the benefit of the corporate sector. The end result is that the lowest seller establishes the market price for the commodity at the farm gate. Farmers will be forced to undercut each other and farm incomes will decline. This agreement caters to large corporations while ordinary farmers on both sides of the border will be sacrificed.

Farmers, however, are not the only ones threatened by this deal. Our fish exporters also understand the threats of their American competitors. Over the past three years, our fishing industry has had to fight American protectionism twice.

In January, 1985, the American Department of Commerce slapped a 24 per cent duty on our exports of dried salt cod. This was only a sign of things to come. In March, 1986, a duty of 5.8 per cent was levied on our exports of fresh groundfish. There is little doubt that had the Americans ruled seasonable unemployment insurance benefits were an unfair subsidy, the duty would have been at least 15 per cent. Because our unemployment insurance benefits are available to other Canadians they were not considered an unfair subsidy under existing American law. But should the Americans change those laws, our fishermen would pay a heavy price.

Before leaving the subject of fisheries, I want to quote from a press release dated February 7, 1986:

The Minister of International Trade also noted that the termination of the FVAP eliminates a program identified by the U.S. Government as a countervailable subsidy.

Of course, I am referring to the Fishing Vessel Assistance Plan which the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) cancelled. As we see, one program has already been slashed. We did not jeopardize our primary industries of farming and fishing to get 80 per cent free trade, so why in the name of common sense should we put these things on the table to get the remaining 20 per cent?

Another concern I have is for our social programs. Unemployment insurance benefits are one of Canada's social programs. Do American fishermen receive unemployment insurance benefits? No. Will Canadian fishermen receive unemployment insurance benefits after our economies are harmonized? No. These programs are not protected under the trade deal. Subsidies will be defined after the deal is signed as our economies are harmonized into a level playing field. Let us not kid ourselves, the population of the United States is 10 times that of Canada, and harmonization simply means doing it the American way.

I want to touch briefly on the potato industry. Being a seed potato farmer, I have a vested interest in the industry. I want to stress very strongly that I am opposed to potato inspection fees. Harmonization of the laws in the seed potato industry with the United States will lower our standards. For example, many states in the United States do not have proper ring rot control measures. As everyone in Cardigan and Prince Edward Island is aware, without these measures an end will be put to our offshore markets. The bottom line is that it would mean Prince Edward Island would lose its European markets.

Another concern is the dairy industry. Under this deal there will be reduction in the prices of fluid and industrial milk in line with U.S. levels.

Mr. T. K. Warley, Professor in Agricultural Economics at the University of Guelph, wrote a paper entitled, "What would Free Trade Mean to Agriculture"? In it he says that there will be a 20 per cent to 40 per cent reduction in price as Canadian prices harmonize on U.S. border-state levels. There will also be corresponding reduction in profitability and loss of about $1.5 billion in quota values, as well as an end to supply management.

With respect to industrial milk, Mr. Warley writes that the prices will fall at least 20 per cent to lower U.S. support levels. There will be lower profits and a loss of about $3.5 billion in quota value as well as an end to national supply management in provincial market sharing.

I would also like to touch on the issue of regional development. Regional development programs are of vital interest to the Atlantic Provinces. This agreement does not specify which kinds of government subsidies will be permitted.

Premier Joe Ghiz of Prince Edward Island warned that our province will not support any agreement that undermined agricultural marketing boards. A background study by the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion entitled Regional Adjustment to Free Trade had projected that potatoes would be a big loser under free trade as U.S. potatoes would be expected to grab the southern Ontario market.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

In no way does this deal protect traditional government programs for regional development. Will the free trade deal help in regional disparities in Canada? Liberal Leader John Turner gave an indication during a speech in Halifax in December, 1987:

If access to the U.S. market is going to solve regional disparity, why hasn't it solved regional disparity in North Dakota or Montana or Idaho or Mississippi? They have access to that market and they had since then joined the union and they still face very dramatic regional disadvantages.

I could stand here all day and go on about the issues involved in this debate, but I realize my time is limited.

In conclusion, as the Member of Parliament for Cardigan, Prince Edward Island, I recognize the importance of international trade. Our agriculture and fisheries, to name but two of our largest resource industries, depend on international markets. The Liberal Party has always supported more liberalized trade, but certainly not this deal. This trade deal is bad for Canada.

Canadians are proud of their culture and heritage and Prince Edward Islanders are doubly proud. Prince Edward Island is the birthplace of this great country.

I was elected to represent the people of Cardigan who voted overwhelmingly against this deal, and I pledge to uphold this right.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lee Richardson (Calgary Southeast): Mr. Speaker, I wish to extend my congratulations to the Speaker on his re-election to the House. Members are grateful for the sentiments expressed so eloquently by the Member for Vancouver Centre (Ms. Campbell) in her maiden address to the House last week. I join with her and all those who have paid tribute to the Speaker, to his contribution to our country and to his patience and dignity in bringing decorum and civility to this Chamber.

May I also congratulate you and the other chair officers. Perhaps you will allow me a particular note of congratulations to the Deputy Chairman, the Hon. Member for Edmonton North (Mr. Paproski), who in his 20 years in the House has served Alberta with distinction. That is quite a tribute coming from a guy from Calgary to a guy who played football with the Edmonton Eskimos. I would also like to thank the Table Officers for their assistance, particularly to new Members of this House.

• (1300)

I begin by thanking the people of Calgary Southeast for giving me the privilege of serving them in this, the Thirty-fourth Parliament. Calgary Southeast is a new and diverse riding reflecting the dynamism of a maturing nation, formed from parts of the constituencies, ably served in the last Parliament by the Hon. Member for Calgary Southwest (Mrs. Sparrow) and the Hon. Member for Calgary Northeast (Mr. Kindy), Calgary Southeast has inherited a legacy of exemplary service to Canada. Hon. Members will recall the strong western representation of John Thompson and Peter Bawden, to whom I am grateful for their encouragement and counsel.

My riding has also been distinguished by the service of Carl Nickle, Senator Harry Hays and Arthur Smith who have contributed so much to my native city. Notable too was the representation of the Right Hon. R. B. Bennett, former Prime Minister of Canada, and later, by Judge Manley Edwards whose son Douglas, one of my dearest friends, carries on a family tradition of service to our community.

There is a great spirit of pride, of entrepreneurial endeavour, of caring for others and of participation in the community in Calgary Southeast. We shared the pride of all Calgarians and all Canadians earlier this year in the "Best Ever" winter Olympics. We showed the world a friendly, vibrant city, dedicated and determined to strive for and achieve excellence.

My constituents know what they want and are prepared to work hard to achieve their goals. While knocking on over 25,000 doors during the election campaign, the people of my riding told that me they want to participate in the mainstream of Canadian life, that they want to be involved in the making of decisions that affect their lives and that they have the confidence to compete with the best, and over 32,000 voters in my riding said, "Yes, we want free trade".

I have listened, as have all Hon. Members, to speech after speech on the subject of free trade, each Hon. Member's speech reflecting a part of Canada, each providing a perspective of his or her riding, experience and vision of our country. There are differences to which I will refer later, but there is also a remarkable consensus. There is on both sides of the House, both sides of the debate, above the rabble, a sense of fairness and tolerance. It is to be Canadian, to respect the views of others, to consult, to debate and to find the consensus.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Canada's Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), in his speech to the Americas Society in New York last week, said:

There are times in a nation's history when it must make important and difficult choices if it is going to take charge of its economic destiny. Our recent election was just such an occasion. Canadians were given an historic choice: either to continue the march of history toward freer and more efficient trade or to slip backward toward increased protectionism.

We in Calgary know from painful experience, as our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said, what happens when we make the wrong choices, when we try to swim against the tide, for example on energy policy or investment policy, or to resist the global trend toward more open trade. One had only to walk through the western Canada of the late seventies or the early eighties to see the devastation inflicted on western Canada by the wrong policy choice in energy. That will not happen again.

During the election campaign, some argued that a vote for the Free Trade Agreement was a vote for a Canada that turns its back on distinctive cultural and social values that help to define our country. On the contrary, we believe the Free Trade Agreement will strengthen our capacity to enhance those values through increased economic prosperity and growing national confidence.

After a thorough and energetic debate, Canadians boldly opted for the opportunities and the strengthened prosperity that will accompany the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It was a decision based on our national confidence in our ability to compete and compete successfully in an increasingly competitive market-place and on our maturity as a distinct and dynamic nation.

We in Canada have debated this subject for over 14 months. Prior to that the, Macdonald Royal Commission held hearings, conducted interviews and heard from Canadians in all parts of the country. It was a healthy exercise. However, the debate has also involved hypothetical notions and hysterical emotions and has left many Canadians asking what it will do for them, what happens when the Free Trade Agreement is implemented.

When the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement enters into force on January 1, 1989, a number of changes will immediately come into effect. Among them, tariffs will be completely removed on about 15 per cent of dutiable bilateral trade. Upon entry into force of the agreement, such items as computer equipment, fur and fur garments, frozen fish, animal feed, skis and skates, and, as the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has noted, whisky, will cross the border duty free if they are of Canadian or U.S. origin.

On the same date, tariffs will be reduced by 20 per cent on about one-third of dutiable traded goods. Such goods include machinery, paint, furniture, paper and paper products, hardwood, plywood, petroleum and after-market auto parts. Each January 1, another 20 per cent of the tariff will be removed until these goods become duty free on January 1, 1993.

On the remaining goods, consisting of about 50 per cent of dutiable bilateral trade and including such items as clothing and textiles, appliances, most processed foods, footwear, drugs and cosmetics, et cetera, tariffs will drop by 10 per cent on the date of entry into force and 10 per cent each year thereafter until they become duty free by January 1, 1998. Canadian consumers will be the first to benefit.

Of more specific interest to the people of Calgary Southeast, the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement provides Canada with the opportunity to maintain control over our energy future. Canada's energy industry will flourish in a competitive environment while we maintain Canada's ability to control ownership and regulate the industry.

Today Canada has a thriving and developing energy industry. Nearly 275,000 Canadians work in the field, and that number is growing. In 1985, we produced over $60 billion worth of energy and energy products. Energy is our third largest export, and more than 20 per cent of our total production goes to the United States. In fact, we did over $12 billion worth of energy business with the United States last year.

It is simply not true and completely misleading to suggest that Canada has committed itself to a "continental energy policy". Under the energy provisions of the Free Trade Agreement, the federal and provincial Governments maintain their unassailable right to implement distinctive Canadian energy programs. The producing provinces will continue to exercise all rights of ownership, to determine rates of production and to levy royalties.

The agreement specifically allows for government incentives to industry to develop new energy supplies, to increase conservation measures and to implement policies that ensure the maintenance of a strong and viable oil and gas industry. Under the Free Trade Agreement, neither country will be able to impose an export tax or duty on energy unless the same tax is applied to domestically consumed energy. Canadian energy producers can still extract a higher price in the United States market than charged to a Canadian customer if the market will bear it.

The removal of tariffs will also have a dramatic effect on the petrochemical industry that is so important to our province. Alberta alone exports 75 per cent of our production to the United States. Canadian methanol presently faces an 18 per cent U.S. duty, and polyethylene a 12.5 per cent duty. The removal of these tariffs will provide the petrochemical industry with a major incentive to further process our raw products here in Canada for export to the United States. Further processing of our resources in Canada means a broader and more diverse economy, and that means more jobs.

Many of the past energy policies have proven to be destructive for this important industry and for the thousands of people in my riding, in Calgary and in Alberta who depend on the energy industry for their livelihood and for Canadian energy consumers. The free trade agreement is good for the energy industry and it is good for Canada.

Before leaving the subject of energy, allow me to dispel the myth that the Free Trade Agreement gives the U.S. unlimited access to Canada's energy reserves. In fact, there is absolutely no obligation under the Free Trade Agreement for Canada to supply energy to the United States on demand. Resources are owned by the provinces, and the provincial Governments will continue to decide when and how these resources are developed. Canada remains free to determine when and where to allow energy exports, to monitor and license such exports and to sell energy to the United States at whatever price the market will bear. Existing Canadian ownership policies applicable to the energy sector will not change.

Under Chapter Nine of the Free Trade Agreement, Canada has retained the right to impose export restrictions on energy for a number of reasons, including short supply, conservation or domestic price stabilization. All that the Free Trade Agreement does is to require Canada to ensure that the U.S. is provided access to its normal proportion of Canadian supply if we impose export restrictions for any of these reasons.

This is nothing new, Mr. Speaker. We have long been committed, under our membership in the International Energy Agency, to share oil in a period of short supply. This notion is also fundamental to international trade law under the GATT. Furthermore, it is only fair.

Free trade will also benefit the agricultural industry in my province with enhanced export opportunities for beef, veal and pork producers. With the removal of tariffs, prairie livestock producers and producers of grains and oil-seeds will be more competitive in the United States. Exemption from U.S. meat import laws will give prairie beef producers greater and more secure access to the U.S. market.

Under the Free Trade Agreement we have preserved the right to use our marketing board systems and we have kept intact the supply-management system for dairy, poultry and eggs that is so important to Canadian agricultural producers.

Services are the fastest growing part of the economy in both Canada and the United States. The prairie provinces are strong in petroleum, chemical and mining engineering, resource science, management consulting, accounting, computer services and insurance and banking. The services agreement guarantees the service sector its current high level of access to the U.S. markets.

For the West's manufacturing sector, the Free Trade Agreement will lead to further diversification of western industry and increase the competitiveness of the strong manufacturing base already in place. The Canada West Foundation estimates that over half a million jobs in western Canada are in industries which can expect positive benefits from the Free Trade Agreement.

The Free Trade Agreement will ensure the long-term viability for our energy sector, give our farmers a sure and equal access to the huge U.S. market and create jobs in sectors such as mining, forestry and metal production. Every reputable report from the Canada West Foundation to the Economic Council of Canada has documented the potential which the Free Trade Agreement offers Canada. The Free Trade Agreement is the type of policy which western Canadians have sought from the federal Government for years. After so many years of economic mismanagement and destructive policies, the Free Trade Agreement offers real opportunity and benefits for the West.

During the recent election much attention was paid to the divisions that seemed to open before us. Observers here and abroad claimed that we Canadians were split as we had never been split before. In the days immediately after the voting the most important question being asked across the nation was: How can the nation be healed? Like many here on both sides of this House I spent too many hours knocking on doors, talking and listening to the people in my riding to stand here this afternoon trying to minimize the serious differences we have with opponents of the Free Trade Agreement. I do believe, though we were and are divided on this most important issue, Canadians share a basic notion of themselves and their country.

This vision, I believe, emerged clearly from all parts of Canada, from all segments of our society and from those on both sides of the free trade issue. It is a vision that grows out of Canadian history. It was born with the Conservative Macdonald, advanced by the Liberal Laurier, nurtured by the Social Democrat Woodsworth and brought to fruition by men and women of their Parties represented in this House today. It is a vision of a society that takes great pride in its social programs, that believes in fairness and equity and that has combined individual enterprise and skill with caring community values in one of the world's few democracies.

We Canadians know who we are. We know we can take on the world with our brains, our drive, our energy, our enterprise and our entrepreneurship. Our culture is flourishing. Our standard of living is increasing. Our productive capacity is growing and we are becoming more united, whatever momentary setbacks we seem to face from day to day. We have flung a transcontinental nation into the teeth of adversity and we are winning the battle.

We have built one of the world's great nations not on might but on justice and tolerance. Tolerance is the basis of a civilized society.

The Free Trade Agreement is no capitulation to anyone. It is rooted in Canada's historical development and it is made possible by the pride of accomplishment we Canadians rightfully feel. It is a reward we owe ourselves because of the success we have enjoyed in rebuilding our economic strength since 1984 and in restoring confidence in ourselves.

In the recent election some of my colleagues asked the Canadian people if we can afford to go it alone, to stay aloof from the great trading blocks of the world, Europe, Japan, Southeast Asia and the United States. I prefer to put this in another way. Why should this great people deprive itself of the opportunity to compete in the toughest markets in the world? Why should we settle for second best in anything? The people of Canada answered loudly and clearly on November 21 that they should not settle for second best. We in this House have a democratic duty to accept that judgment. The people have decided.

Mr. James Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I find as the debate rages on that it is becoming more and more difficult to say anything that is very original or try to say it in an original fashion, but I will try anyway.

As a novice Member of Parliament I was hoping that we could have had a typical discussion with something as major as this Bill is to Canada and to Canadians. I was looking forward to what you might call a typical day in the House of Commons. I think after being here a week I am not sure there is such a thing, but no doubt we will learn about that.

I never deny that the Government has the power to do what it is doing. I do not question that it has that right, but I do question this urgency, this obligation it seems to feel that it has to impose upon us what it is imposing. We, however, will leave that to be judged by the Canadian people in the course of time.

• (1320)

Most Members have referred back to the recent election, and I suppose that is normal because it is current and on our minds. I think it is safe to say that in all instances we referred to the Free Trade Agreement in the last election. Most of us went to our people and told them sincerely and honestly what we thought was good for Canada and Canadians. I believe that we all did that. We did not win the election, but we went with principle about us and carried our message forward.

The questions were and still remain who is going to be helped in the free trade deal, and who will be hurt in the free trade deal. I am still looking for some answers. I will admit that I have only been here for a few days, but there are not many answers coming forward.

I want to talk briefly about the dairy industry. I come from a community not too far from here. My constituency embraces Carleton County. The dairy industry is of vital importance to the riding of Leeds—Grenville. We have done a lot of pioneering in that riding. A gentleman by the name of Talmage Stone, who made the best cheddar cheese in the world, was buried about a week or ten days ago. The late Mr. Stone did a lot of pioneering in the artificial insemination industry. He started his own farm, and when it became impossible for him to carry on because of the growth in the industry, he moved and became Eastern Breeders in Kemptville.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I mention that to illustrate that there have been pioneers in the dairy industry in the riding of Leeds—Grenville. We are trying to protect the dairy industry. The people of Leeds—Grenville sent me here, in large measure by support from the dairy industry, to speak for them.

Great advances have been made in the dairy industry. No longer is the dairy farmer the man standing under the apple tree wearing a straw hat. It is now a much more sophisticated industry. The dairy farmer no longer goes up the lane with his collie dog to bring in the cows.

I am not against the milk marketing boards. They have stabilized the industry. I know what used to happen in the dairy industry. When prices fluctuated and increased, milk flooded the markets, people got out of the industry. Then prices would escalate because too many got out, so we were on a roller-coaster. How could a man advance his industry, buy a tractor, and have any consistency in his level of income in order to pay for the tractor? The milk marketing boards have put some stabilization in the industry, although I am a free enterpriser.

I am as concerned as was the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), and disappointed that at the GATT round in Montreal absolutely no progress was made when talking about world subsidies for food. It bothers me to visualize how Third World countries will ever be able to afford basic food at the largely elevated prices. The food is too expensive for them. Perhaps we can determine some third level of pricing so that we can supply the Third World countries. In the direction we are going at the moment, I do not see how it is at all possible.

I know those who have all the answers will say that GATT protects our dairy industry. Perhaps it will. I hope they are correct. However, the Canadian dairy industry should not take on the United States dairy industry in a bilateral fashion, because the Canadian dairy industry will lose.

Two months ago yesterday six inches of snow fell in the Ottawa area. That happened on Saturday, and at 10 a.m. on Monday morning I visited a farm. I wondered why the young cattle were up at the barn and all the cows were in the barn at ten o'clock in the morning. The farmer told me that the winter season had now started, on October 22, and that he was using his winter silage as of that day. He said that his pastures had an excessive amount of moisture, and that he could not put the cattle out because they would punch the pastures full of holes, and his problems were just getting more complicated. If a farmer starts using his winter silage on October 22, he will run out of winter silage by about March 22, and then he has to use expensive grains to feed his cattle to carry them over to the time when they can return to the pastures.

Weather and soil conditions were not on the table. They were not negotiated, and they never will be. That was out of reach. That is why I am saying, do not let the dairy industry of Canada take on the dairy industry of the United States, because we will lose. Approximately 40 miles as the crow flies from where I live one could find a herd of 1,500 milking cattle. There are two international bridges in my riding approximately 40 kilometres apart, however if one wanted to travel by water one could go a little quicker than that.

The dairy industry in Leeds—Grenville was watching that situation with great care. One can approach an international bridge and be golfing in 12 hours. One can travel to where it is warm in 12 hours. No one can tell me that there is not going to be a temptation, if nothing else, to bring fresh milk over those bridges. One tank truck contains 80,000 litres of milk. With a pup trailer added, enough milk could be transported to give every man, woman and child in the riding of Leeds-Grenville one litre of milk. One truck load of milk will give one litre to every man, woman and child in Leeds—Grenville.

Members opposite cannot say that the dairy industry had no right or reason to be afraid. Of course, it had. Remember that the dairy industry is a private enterprise. Usually the dairy farmer is a small businessman. Too often I have heard it said that if an individual is in trouble because of free trade, do not worry about it, your industry will look after you. If it fails, the Government will look after you. Who is going to look after those small dairy farmers? Usually it is a man, his wife, and perhaps a son and his wife, or two sons and their wives. Without exaggeration, there are $500,000 or $600,000 sitting around that barnyard. Perhaps some other uses could be found for tractors, or some other use might be found for a truck. However, much of that equipment was designed for a special reason and it cannot be converted to other uses.

If the Government has that type of money to help people out, do not forget that the dairy farmer will need some of that assistance as soon as the deal starts to slip, and I am sure that it will.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The difficulty that I see in competition with the bilateral arrangement is not only the proximity of the United States. It does not have to spend money on storing silage, to the same degree. It does not have to spend money on ventilating barns, to the same degree. When the calves are coming it does not have to worry about heat lamps, to the same degree. Let us not get into a war in a bilateral fashion with the United States dairy industries, because, knowing enough about it, I know who will lose.

If people are going to be retrained to work in new industries, do not forget that the dairy farmer may be living in the house in which he was born. It is not the same as moving someone from one side of a factory to another and retraining that person. What is the Government going to do with a 55-year old dairy farmer? That has to be thought about. It is a very fragile industry. Much of what has been said here this week has put dairy farming in a very broad, basic category and called it agriculture.

It is a highly technical aspect of agriculture, and it has to be addressed separately. In the beef cattle business there is a little leeway. I am not sure it will come out well either, but at least the cattle can be held over a little. It is pretty difficult to hold over fresh milk.

• (1330)

While I am being told by farmers that they are not doing too badly at the moment, they do stress that they cannot afford to miss one cheque. It is for that reason that I refer to agriculture as a delicate industry. It is one about which there has been simply too much flippancy. There has been flippancy about most aspects of the Free Trade Agreement, with the Government simply saying: "Don't worry, we will retrain you. And if we don't, somebody will look after you."

Well, I can tell you that I am not going to see the dairy industry in the riding of Leeds—Grenville put at risk.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jordan: All through the election campaign we heard: "Don't worry, we can get out of it in six months."

In a conversation I had with a 58-year-old dairy farmer in my riding, I asked him how long it took him to put his holstein herd together, and his reply was: "All of my life."

If that individual loses his herd as a consequence of the Free Trade Agreement and, six months later, when the agreement is terminated, he wants to get back into dairy farming, he would not live long enough to be able to do so, and in fact nor would his children.

He now has his herd with just the right strains in it, and it has taken him his whole life to achieve that. If anything happens to his operation, there is simply no way in which, in his lifetime, he could get back into dairy farming.

So, to say that we can get out of the deal on six months notice is of no comfort to the farming community. In fact, it got to be a bit of a joke among the farming community.

It is my sincere hope that the Government is proven to be right about this whole deal. While the fact of an industry or sector of the Canadian economy being adversely impacted by the Free Trade Agreement would make for great ammunition for Question Period, it is not something that anyone would want to see happen. It is my sincere hope, and that of my constituents, and I am sure everyone in the country, that the Government will be proven right.

It is something that will have to be closely monitored, and one of the reasons that it will have to be closely monitored is the lack of a definition of what constitutes an unfair subsidy.

The Minister for International Trade, in The Globe and Mail of July 26 last, admitted that there is no definition of what constitutes an unfair subsidy. "It is too bad", he said, "we haven't been able to agree on what constitutes an unfair subsidy."

It seems to me that the whole idea would have been to get that established before entering into the Free Trade Agreement.

Hon. Members opposite are continually throwing out the name "Donald Macdonald". It may be that because he is a Liberal, he has some credibility. However, Donald Macdonald, one of the early architects of the free trade deal, wanted the agri-food industry excluded. I imagine Donald Macdonald was a long way away when the deal was signed.

During the election campaign, I had occasion to watch a televised panel discussion involving a senior cabinet Minister and two opponents of the Free Trade Agreement, and I can recall that senior cabinet Minister saying: "You know, it was twenty to twelve and we had to have a deal. It was twenty to twelve and we had to have a deal by midnight."

They were waiting for the dreaded knock at the door.

I have been dickering for a car, Mr. Speaker, for about four weeks now, and while the first dealer was ready to make a deal, and the next guy was ready to make a deal, I wasn't ready to make a deal—and I am still not quite ready to make a deal.

Imagine the pressure that was on the chief negotiator when it was ten minutes to twelve. He had to make a deal, and he had to get it through by midnight.

Where I come from, we wouldn't buy a necktie or a pair of shoelaces under that type of pressure. Yet, here we had a representative of our Government who was willing to put the nation at risk, and in fact did put the nation at risk, by entering into a deal in order to meet a time deadline.

Whether it turns out in fact to be a bad deal, only time will tell. I hope the Government is right in its view. I hope the country has not been put at risk. But only time will tell.

No right thinking country in the world would put the quality and quantity of its basic food supply at the mercy of another. It just isn't done. The first thing a country must do to get itself on its feet is to guarantee itself a basic food supply. It is not something that is handed over to another nation.

As I read the Free Trade Agreement, I think we are running the risk of putting the quality and quantity of our basic food supply at risk.

I hope that turns out not to be the case, but certainly those of us in opposition will be closely monitoring the situation and doing what we can to prevent it.

I am a free enterpriser, up to a point. I do not feel that a country's basic food supply should be subjected to the whims of the market-place. Rather, it is something that needs to be stabilized, and that can only be done through government intervention.

During the campaign I was surprised to find that high on the list of priorities of the young people of Canada is the environment. Canada's youth is very concerned about the environment; they are concerned about their quality of life.

The U.S. is the largest consumer nation in the world. It constitutes less than 5 per cent of the world's population but consumes 20 per cent of the world's consumable goods, and experience has shown that there is a direct correlation between the goods consumed and the lack of respect that one has for the environment. That is a known; that is a given.

We recently had a company establish itself in my part of the country, a toxic waste disposal company whose headquarters are in Arkansas. That company, known as EMSCO, has established itself near the international bridge in my part of the country, and it has done so because, like many Americans, it considers Canada to be a great vast land with lots of empty spaces wherein a lot of garbage can be dumped.

In taking up the fight against this company, I found its representatives to be a rather arrogant lot. It is a company that has taken out an option on some land in my area, and it is saying that it is here to stay.

This is a company that is headquartered in a foreign country—though I am not sure that they will be foreign to us for very much longer.

Here we have a company setting up in the Thousand Islands region, one of the most beautiful and picturesque parts of the world, an area which relies heavily on tourism, and its desire is to set up a toxic waste disposal plant.

Now, wouldn't that make the Thousand Islands region a great place in which to spend one's holidays? Heck, you could take the children with you. In fact, perhaps you could go and have dinner at the toxic waste disposal plant in Leeds—Grenville.

Over my dead body. I am going to ensure that that whole situation is closely monitored.

As well, Mr. Speaker, it is my hope that the Government will bring research and development up to previous levels.

A farmer friend of mine visited a food processing plant in Australia and found that, in one corner, duck feet were being processed. While we do not have a great market for duck feet in this country, I mention it to illustrate the value of research and development.

If we are going to enter into this trade deal with the U.S., we had better start pursuing world markets fiercely. We can no longer consider duck feet to be a useless by-product.

It is only through research and development that we can learn about this type of thing. Certainly, the Government will hear no complaint from this quarter should it increase research and development funding.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

If there is a market somewhere in the world for duck feet, Canadians should be going after that market. In that way, we will not end up with all of our eggs in one basket.

After the devastation of the Second World War, Japan had nothing. I understand now that it spends about 2 per cent of its Gross National Product on research and development. We spend something like .7 of 1 per cent. Looking at Japan and Canada, one can immediately see the reflection between the amount of money invested in R and D and the benefits reaped therefrom.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to appoint a full-time Minister of Agriculture with dispatch, for three reasons: to reassure the people of Canada that agriculture is important; to allay any ideas that Americans may have that they are going to corner our domestic market; and finally, to generate confidence within the farming community, permitting them to move ahead and expand their operations.

I see the Chair signalling that my time is up. I thank the Chair and the House for its indulgence in allowing me to complete my remarks.

• (1340)

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg—Transcona): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I should extend my congratulations to the new Member for Leeds-Grenville (Mr. Jordan) on his first speech in the House of Commons. This is not my first speech in this House, but it is my first speech in this House as the Member representing Winnipeg—Transcona.

As Members will recall, some with regret I am sure, at least on the other side of the House, I have been a Member of this House for the last nine and a half years. At that time I represented a riding called Winnipeg—Birds Hill. I am very happy, with all respect to the Town of Birds Hill and the name Birds Hill, to be the Member for Winnipeg—Transcona, because Transcona happens to be the name of my home town. It comprises a good third of the riding of Winnipeg—Transcona and I am particularly pleased that the name has now been incorporated into the name of the riding I represent.

I would like to take the name of Transcona as a departure point for my remarks on the Free Trade Agreement. The name comes from two sources, the word "transcontinental" and the name of Lord Strathcona who was responsible, as many of you will recall, for the first transcontinental railway. The Town of Transcona was created in 1911 as a place for the railway shops involved in the building of a second transcontinental railway, at that time the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Northern, I believe. So it is in that context that I begin by saying that for me the passage of the Free Trade Agreement puts my faith, if you like, in my self-understanding as a Canadian in triple jeopardy.

Of the three things most important to me, the first is, of course, the background from which I come, that of a railway family from Transcona, concerned with railway matters and with the future of a community which, understandably, is now not only a rail community but also a bedroom community for part of the greater City of Winnipeg.

The second is my self-understanding as a United Church person and a minister in that church. I will also have something to say about what the Minister of State for Housing (Mr. McDermid) said about the United Church earlier. The third is my self-understanding as a New Democrat. I would like to deal with all three of those things and say why, for me, this election campaign, the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, and the vote tonight are a source of, to put it bluntly, depression for me.

I feel many of the things I have valued most about the country that I live in and was brought up in are being put at risk tonight, finally and firmly, by the vote on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. I had occasion to raise in the House earlier today under Standing Order 31 a concern I have about what has happened to the railways, particularly the CNR, and what is predicted to happen even more so in the next few years. I talked about the document which came into my possession during the election which dealt with a down-sizing of the CNR to some 26,000 employees.

When I was born in 1951 the railway had 151,000 employees. The aim of the Government and of Mr. Lawless, President of CN Rail is, within a very few more years, to bring the level of employees at CN down to 26,000. That is of concern to me coming from Transcona and having a great many supporters in the CN shops, the one remaining whole back shop for the CN, because in order to do that it becomes obvious that the railway is planning to contract out work which should be done in the Transcona shops I just completely fail to see why the railway would want to put itself in a position where it had no back shop capacity of its own to do its work. Yet we read that the CNR is contemplating the purchase of new locomotives from General Electric in the U.S., and that the deal may well include a service contract. People in my riding are concerned, as I am, that that will mean that the major overhaul and repair of these new locomotives will be done in the U.S. by General Electric and not by the CNR itself. You can understand that it is a major concern to the machinists, electricians and other tradesmen who work in the CN shops.

We have seen the fruits of free trade already in the transportation sector. We already have deregulation there, which is the equivalent of free trade in transportation. We have seen that it does not mean more jobs. We have seen that it means a compromise of safety and public service as companies like the CNR and the CPR try to undercut each other, and the trucking industry in turn tries to undercut them. We know from our own experience, those of us connected with the transportation sector, that deregulation is not the wonderful thing the Government pretended it would be when it brought it in. I might add that it was started by the Liberals, as were the free trade discussions.

As I said before, I wanted to speak about three different ways in which I find myself depressed today as we move into the final hours of this debate about the end of this country as we have known it.

The second way in which I find myself morose, moved to lament rather than attack, has to do with my self-understanding as a person involved in the United Church. I go back to what the Minister of State for housing, formerly the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of International Trade, said when he got up and quoted some of the things that the church had to say about the Free Trade Agreement. He then went on, too clever by half, to say that because the United Church had asked that the people be consulted about the Free Trade Agreement and because they have now been consulted in the process of a general election, he wondered why the United Church was not now supporting the deal.

I ask him: Had the Government lost the election, would the Minister change his view of the deal? He might have said that the people had spoken against the deal and therefore the new Government had the mandate not to proceed with it. However, I am sure he would not have changed his mind about the agreement. I find it rather scurrilous of him to suggest that the United Church should somehow have changed its mind about the deal because the Conservatives happened to win the election.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The fact of the matter is that the history of the United Church, which in some sense parallels things happening in the social and political life of Canada through the CCF and the NDP, since 1925 has been to say to Canadians that the market-place does not make the kinds of decisions about human life that are called for by biblical tradition. The market-place does not and has never by itself protected the oppressed, the fatherless, the needy and all those who the prophets called upon society to treat justly if they wanted to be called a fully human community. The movement within the United Church has been to say to Canadians that the more we want to be a fully human community, the more we will make decisions based on human criteria rather than purely economic criteria, rather than purely market economics. The Member across the way from Mississagua belongs to the United Church, and I know that. I will get to him in a minute because I have him in mind.

● (1350)

The fact of the matter is that the theological leadership of the United Church—who may not always be able to penetrate the thick skulls of the parishoners like the Hon. Member from Mississagua—has been trying for decades to make this point, that the more we take things out of the market-place and allow them to be decided on the basis of human need rather than on the profit motive, the more we become the kind of community that we are called upon to be.

That is why for me and for a great many other United Church people—not all because obviously there are people in the United Church like the Hon. Member from Mississagua, the Hon. Member from Brampton and probably many others in this Chamber who have different views—we have found that we have had to oppose the Free Trade Agreement because the Free Trade Agreement elevates the market-place and makes it, in my judgment, not just an idol in the pantheon of idols that we have before us but the idol in the pantheon of idols that we have before us.

I entered politics both as a Christian and as a New Democrat because I felt that the market-place already made too many decisions. So it is absolutely inconceivable for me, both out of my religious self-understanding and my political self-understanding to have anything to do with an agreement that so changes the political and social cosmos, if you like, that we are going to live in from here on in. That is what I think a great many people do not realize.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I think the Hon. Member from Mississauga realizes it. I would have to be unparliamentary if I were to quote what I know the Hon. Member from Mississauga has said about the Free Trade Agreement. I remember him saying to me in an elevator one day: "You know, when this Free Trade Agreement comes in you socialists are—" I will leave it up to your imagination, Mr. Speaker, to determine what the expletive was that the Hon. Member then went on to use.

The Hon. Member from Mississauga, unlike some of the other back-benchers here who really do not know what they are doing, knows, as does the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and many of the cabinet Ministers—I do not think the Hon. Minister of State for Housing knows because I think he is just a kind of acolyte of others in that Government—that this Free Trade Agreement, and we ought to be frank about it, is a comprehensive philosophical defeat for everything the CCF and the NDP has stood for—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blaikie: Celebrate it if you will, but be honest about what is being celebrated. That is all I ask. Members opposite tried to pretend throughout the election that this is just about trade, or that this is just a contending among political Parties who are basically the same about contentious facts pursuant to a Free Trade Agreement. It is not that. It is a battle for the very way we understand the world. That is what a handful of Conservatives realize, particularly the Hon. Member from Mississauga. I give him credit for that. One thing I like about that Hon. Member is that one always knows what he is about. He is an honest man. He never tries to stab you in the back; he is always running right at you with his spear. I give him credit for knowing what is really at stake in this debate, and for admitting it. But what I despise about some of his colleagues is that they have not been willing to admit that this is exactly what the Free Trade Agreement is all about.

I would now like to move on to another Member of the House who spoke in this debate who is not here at the moment, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy), formerly the Hon. Member for Winnipeg Fort Garry who lamented the fact that the NDP had the nerve to criticize his Leader, the Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), in the dying days of the campaign. Why could we not have seen—those of us in the NDP—that the thing to do was to elect Liberals in order to save the country from the Free Trade Agreement? I did not hear Liberals in the early part of the campaign when the NDP was running second advising their troops to vote NDP.

One of the things we asked Canadians to remember was that it was the Liberals when they were in power who started deregulation. It was the Liberals when they were in power who started privatization. It was the Liberals when they were in power who started the comprehensive bilateral talks with the United States. It was the Liberals, had they been elected, who would have proceeded to go ahead with this Free Trade Agreement. That would have been worse than having these people over here implementing it honestly. The Liberals would have found a way to have implemented it and to have blamed it on somebody else because we know that there are many high-powered Liberals in the Senate, in the business community and in their caucus who are secretly and sometimes not so secretly in favour of the Free Trade Agreement.

Canadians decided that they could not trust the Liberals to be telling them where they were really on this agreement. That was part and parcel of the problem. There were other problems, and we all have to take some responsibility for the fact that the Free Trade Agreement will now go through. But the fact of the matter is that it was Liberals who could not be trusted. Why? Because the Free Trade Agreement is not for the Liberals what it is for the NDP. It is not a comprehensive defeat because Liberals never really had a notion of what kind of country they wanted anyway. They are always just trying to find their way in the context of: "How can we get into power in this context, or in that context"? When the context changes, they will change. No problem. By the time the next election rolls around they will be talking about the opportunities that present themselves in the Free Trade Agreement and what we need to do and what the Conservatives have not done. It is only members of the NDP who know truly what is at stake in this Free Trade Agreement because it is the NDP—and before that the CCF—who fought for the very things that are most at risk as a result of this agreement.

We talk about medicare.

Mr. Blenkarn: It is not at risk.

Mr. Blaikie: The Hon. Member says that it is not at risk. I believe that it is. I believe that it is at risk in that five to seven year period when we define what is an unfair subsidy. Of course one of the problems with the next election is that by the time it comes along we still will not have completed the five years, let alone the seven years of that negotiation. So the Government will be in a position to say: "Has anything changed"? Of course with respect to subsidy nothing will have changed because the negotiating period will not have come to an end.

• (1400)

When it comes to regulating foreign investment, managing energy resources for the well-being of Canadians instead of multinational corporations, when it comes to orderly marketing, and things threatened by this agreement, who fought for those?

Mr. Nunziata: Liberals.

Mr. Blaikie: It was the New Democratic Party who fought for those. It was the Liberals who promised them. The Liberals promised medicare in 1919 and delivered in 1966. Tommy Douglas promised it in 1944 and delivered hospitalization in 1945. That is the difference between the Liberals and the New Democrats. Had it not been for minority Parliaments and New Democrats pushing Liberals and others to do the right thing, we would not have the kind of country we have today, the kind of country we are going to lose because of this Free Trade Agreement and a deliberate plot on the part of the more intelligent Tories—Father forgive the rest for they know not what they do—to achieve through this Free Trade Agreement what they could never achieve directly if they went to the Canadian people and posed an honest question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On debate, the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton.

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your appointment. I also want to thank my constituents, the voters of Sarnia—Lambton, for my re-election. It was a decision based upon the candidate, myself, being full out and positive about the Free Trade Agreement. We have struck a decisive victory in Sarnia—Lambton and throughout the country.

I want to publicly thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for his diligence, supreme strength, and commitment to this important treaty when many less strong would not have persevered.

It is important to note some of the speeches which have been made in the House today. We had the Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville (Mr. Jordan) talking about doom and gloom in the agriculture area. I was concerned. I can imagine what he was saying in the campaign. It was almost as though somebody were coming with jackboots on to the farmers' kitchen door, to rip away their milk quotas. I have great concern for those kinds of tactics used in an election. I do not think it is fair. I also know of incidents where candidates for the Liberal Party were going to the kitchens of the farmers and scaring their wives by telling them untruths.

An Hon. Member: The wives are not necessarily in the kitchens.

Mr. James: It is less than being forthright.

The Hon. Member for Leeds—Grenville mentions talking to the farmers, so I assume he is not one. I raise purebred Holstein cattle, was raised on a farm and spent most of my life there. My brother, myself, and our company have a milk quota. We have absolutely no concerns about the supply-management system being maintained. It is enshrined now in the Free Trade Agreement. It is maintained and protected under Article 11 of the GATT. It is of concern to me when individuals attempt to scare the farmer and his wife.

I took an article from an agriculture magazine. The headline is, "Wither the Milk Business:?" It talks about a Mr. Bruce Whale, and he is described as a "bottom-line man". He knows how much milk each of his 275 workable acres produces. From feed run through his 85-cow herd, he knows he can store one and three-quarters years supply of hay and an extra half year of corn cob meal. Like most farms west of Toronto, he knows he is going to have to do things differently on his farm because things do change.

He was asked this question at a seminar: "Some farmers are concerned that Ontario may be forced to import milk from the U.S., resulting in increased pressure toward free trade in milk. Do you see our supply management system in jeopardy?" Mr. Whale said:

Not really. The drought is most serious from Toronto west. In the past, in time of shortage Quebec has been a traditional supplier. Butter (milk) powder will move. Last year there was some old powder brought in from the U.S., but that was done by the Canadian Dairy Commission. The U.S. may be taking first steps toward supply management. A joint committee of all states has been looking at the option and recommending options to Congress including another buyout program... This would be a first step toward supply management.

Why are we concerned? They are looking at supply management because they have seen how well it works in Canada.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Hon. Member for Cardigan (Mr. MacAulay) talked about this 80-20 principle. Eighty per cent of the tariffs are going and only 20 per cent are remaining. What they failed to explain to the public is that there are many other aspects to the Free Trade Agreement that eliminated other irritants at the border. I will name a few of them.

In this agreement, we will have clear rules of origin, which we did not have before. That will remove the uncertainty currently associated with the customs officers in making ad hoc decisions. By 1994, the United States will limit the use of customs user fees, which we did not have before. The right of the national treatment gives blanket assurance that the United States will not discriminate against Canadian producers in any activities covered by this agreement. Internal taxes, such as sales and excise, no longer can be used as concealed trade barriers. The agreement eliminates various non-tariff barriers to trade such as the common misuse of standard requirements. This is another aspect that our Loyal Opposition forgot to mention to the people in Canada when they talked about 80-20.

An Hon. Member: It was very convenient what they forgot.

Mr. James: That is right. They tended to forget an awful lot. They did not really know, because they had never really studied the agreement.

The United States will allow unlimited access to its U.S. market for Canadian food products containing up to 10 per cent sugar. We could not get anything with a granule of sugar in it before. They forgot about that.

The tariff agreement restrains the use of technical regulations. There are non-tariff barriers to agricultural trade, for example, relaxing U.S. meat inspection laws. They conveniently forgot to tell the farmer that.

The United States will recognize Canadian whiskey as a distinct product and will not permit the sale of any product labelled as Canadian whiskey unless it has been manufactured in Canada. They conveniently forgot to tell the Canadian people that.

Under the national treatment principle, the United States will allow British Columbia Hydro fair access to the distribution lines of the Bowville Power Administration. They forgot to tell the people in British Columbia about that.

The agreement also opens up some government procurement markets that we did not have access to before. Temporary entry for Canadian business people and service personnel is another aspect of the agreement that was never mentioned by members of the Opposition because they did not know about it or did not want to know about it.

● (1410)

I was in Peterborough some months ago where some people told me that when they had to service products which were sold into the United States from Canada, they had to pretend they were going on vacation in order to get into that country to service the equipment. That situation will be remedied by this agreement.

As well, personnel from the United States will be able to come to Canada to service equipment that we buy from them.

National treatment is extended to Canadian business enterprises established in the United States covered by the agreement, thus increasing access for those businesses where physical presence is needed.

All of these subjects were never discussed when the Opposition talked about the fact that 80 per cent of tariffs are gone and only 20 per cent remained.

During the election, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said that he would tear up the agreement. He also said he would go back and negotiate with the Americans on a sectoral basis. I and most Canadians, certainly those in my riding, would like to know what sectors he meant.

The Leader of the Opposition complained about secret negotiations. He did not even want to talk about what areas of sectoral trade he would discuss. When I was travelling with the committee on the East Coast, Mr. Gerry Regan, a former Cabinet Minister in the Trudeau Government, appeared before the Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade. He stated most emphatically that the comprehensive trade agreement was much more meaningful and workable than the sectoral policy of the Trudeau Government. While the Trudeau Government realized we needed more access to the American market, it tried to do this on a sectoral basis.

It is difficult to imagine sectoral trade in the steel industry, where the carbon steel sector would be traded off against the specialty steel sector. They would certainly have serious concerns with that type of negotiation. It would not work. It would be far too secretive, misunderstood and misguided in its application to ever work. Mr. Regan was certainly correct about that.

We talked about the importance of removing tariffs. Some people are concerned about how it would affect small business. Small and large businesses in Canada have traditionally been able to carry on in the face of the removal of tariffs. We have done that since the end of the Second World War in an ever-progressive fashion. Our industries have been able to compete in a very positive way.

Between the mid-1970s and mid-1980s, the transportation industry which had no tariffs had a net job increase of 37,977. The chemical industry, which had an average of 5 per cent and 9 per cent tariffs saw an increase of employment of 8,615.

However, when we look at the furniture industry which had a 12.5 per cent tariff, there was a decrease of 3,348 jobs. The textile industry saw tariffs of 20 per cent and a decrease of 4,000 jobs. Knitting mills had a 20 per cent tariff and a decrease in employment of 4,000. Tariffs did not necessarily increase employment in Canada.

Sarnia—Lambton is the petrochemical and refining centre of the East. We are at the end of the pipeline. The business community in Sarnia—Lambton was very enthusiastic about the Free Trade Agreement. Even union leaders, while they were fairly silent during the election, because are NDP Members and belong to the national executive, they knew the importance of the agreement to Sarnia—Lambton. In fact, Mr. Kwinter, the Liberal Minister of Industry for Ontario even came to Sarnia and stated in the newspaper that the agreement was good for Sarnia—Lambton.

Some of the companies located in Sarnia—Lambton include Esso Chemical, Esso Refinery, Shell, Dow Chemical, Du Pont, Cabot Carbon, Ethyl, Sun Chemical, Novacor, Polysar, Welland Chemical and Chinook Chemicals. They believe the five-year countdown on tariffs to the U.S. is tremendously important to our area. It gives them a better profit margin and makes them more competitive in the American market.

The people of our area remember what the former Government did to us with the national energy policy. The petrochemical industry task force in the late 1970s presented its report to this Government when we took over in 1984. The national energy policy removed 2,400 jobs in Sarnia—Lambton.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Members opposite ask for an emergency debate about job loss. I did not hear them come forward when we were losing thousands of workers in Sarnia—Lambton because of the National Energy Program.

I did not hear any concern about that from Liberals or New Democrats who were in support of the National Energy Program. When we were elected in 1984, we removed it, and Sarnia—Lambton is building and prospering again. They elected me in 1984 to fight against and get rid of the NEP. We got rid of it. They elected me in 1988 to fight for the Free Trade Agreement and put it into effect. At 1.15 a.m. tomorrow morning we will be doing that very thing.

We need it because we need jobs in our area. Sarnia—Lambton is on the border of the State of Michigan. Southwestern Ontario is within one day's trucking of 10 of the top 13 U.S. industrial markets. Fifty-four per cent of the manufacturing activity is within a 500-mile radius of the U.S. manufacturing activity. Forty per cent of the total U.S. population and 48 per cent of all retail sales are within one day's trucking of southwestern Ontario. The people of my riding are very excited, as all should be in southwestern Ontario and Ontario about this important opportunity. I have a list of those who are positive about this deal. The Sarnia-Lambton Economic Development Commission wrote me a positive letter about the Free Trade Agreement. An article states that most Sarnia area businesses favour free trade with the U.S. They include retail and service industries.

The Sarnia Construction Association, which includes the contractors and the tradesmen who do the actual work, are positive about free trade. The Chamber of Commerce repeatedly declared its support of free trade. The City of Sarnia backs the free trade deal even under some pressure not to do so by some municipalities that were less than enthusiastic about it. The college students from Lambton College were positive about free trade, according to their newspaper. Novacor, the largest petrochemical company in all of Canada promises an election boom. Jim Butler, Novacor's President, says that Sarnia's future economic outlook for this area is exceptional.

We do not have to worry about protecting people's jobs. There will be jobs for their sons and their daughters too. He was one of the several speakers who referred enthusiastically to the opportunities a free trade deal with the U.S. will mean to Sarnia. Polysar, the Economic Development Commission and the Sarnia—Lambton Chamber of Commerce were very positive. No wonder I am here.

The small business community is very positive about trade. We are interested in promoting tourism but, of course, that is not talked about by many people. The Free Trade Agreement is certainly of importance for tourism. Restrictions on travel agents and hotel managers will be removed and tariffs on the very important equipment needed for the hospitality industry will be reduced.

I want to end by saying to all Hon. Members that the voters of Sarnia Lambton have spoken and the voters of Canada have spoken after having an exhaustive debate on free trade, and they have spoken in favour of free trade. We as a Government accept the responsibility for implementing this very important agreement.

Ms. Catterall: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. I think the Hon. Member who just spoke caused some problems for all the women Members in the House. He spoke about speaking to the farmers in their fields and going to the kitchens to talk to their wives. As any farmer worth his salt, his plough or his fields knows, the women on the farms are as likely to be found in the fields as they are in the kitchens, operating the same equipment, doing the same work.

On behalf of an organization known as Women for the Preservation of Agriculture, I want to say that anyone in this Chamber with any association with agriculture knows that that organization is making an extremely valuable contribution to the recognition of agriculture as an important industry and an important way of life in Canada.

The Hon. Member's remarks were a direct reflection on my privileges as a Member of this House. During the election campaign, I suffered the indignity of putting up with a gentleman who walked into my campaign office and told me that women belonged in one of two places, in the kitchen or in bed. As long as those stereotypes of women persist, neither I nor any other woman in this House, or indeed working anywhere in Canada, can expect to be respected for her competence, her ability and her dedication to her job in the same way as a man.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The matter raised by the Hon. Member is no doubt important. However, unfortunately for the Hon. Member, I cannot consider it as a question of privilege according to the rules of the House.

Mr. Bob Wood (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the people of Nipissing for the support and confidence they have shown in me by electing me to represent them for the next four years. The people of Nipissing, like most Canadians, are not opposed to freer, more liberated trade as such. They recognize fully the benefits which have accrued to Canada because of the liberalization of trade laws between Canada and the United States. The people of Nipissing realize that they must live in the real world and cannot isolate themselves from others.

I must point out that the people I represent resent the suggestion that they are fearful and timid by nature because of their concerns regarding this trade agreement. These people are self-reliant, independent people who are quite accustomed to standing on their own two feet. They do, however, look to Government to protect and to nurture those things that are important to them, namely their jobs, their families, their environment and all aspects of their lives that are uniquely Canadian.

The concerns of the people of Nipissing are concerns directed to the great uncertainties inherent within the proposed Canadian trade agreement with the U.S.A. These people do not regard the Canadian-American trade agreement as a mere commercial treaty. They view it as a document that has the potential for going right to the very heart and nature of Canada and what it means to be a Canadian.

These concerns are not unique to Nipissing. I would point out to the Government that only two of the 11 Members elected to the House of Commons last month from northern Ontario were government Members. The concerns of the people of Nipissing and northern Ontario are very real and deeply felt. I urge the Government to recognize these concerns as valid and to take them into consideration in the upcoming negotiations with the United States.

The number one fear of the people in my area stems from the fact that the definition of the term "subsidy" has been purposely left up to negotiations with the United States. The Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said earlier this week in the House that he is still not sure if they will be successful in those negotiations over the next few years.

A succession of federal Liberal Governments has recognized regional economic development grants as legitimate economic tools for fostering economic growth in underdeveloped parts of the country. Nipissing and all of northern Ontario has benefited from federal government initiatives. Fednor is the latest example of this type of program. Even though this program has failed up to this point to make a major impact in our area, we are still concerned about the future of this and other similar programs.

Will regional economic development grants be considered subsidies? Again, the Minister for International Trade is still not sure if he will be successful in these negotiations. The problem is that we just do not know. I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that my constituents will not accept a "trust us" approach. We recognize fully that whenever an international agreement of any kind is signed, some of our sovereignty is lost. Will we lose regional economic development grants and will they be considered subsidies? We still do not know.

The quality of our environment is critical to us. Nipissing is blessed with an abundance of clear, clean water, beautiful lakes, forests and wildlife. Tourism is a major aspect of life in Nipissing and the economic benefits of tourism spread throughout the whole area. We fear acid rain. On the other hand, we welcome the Prime Minister's comments yesterday afternoon when he assured us that he is finally going to get off his "assid" rain moratorium and do something.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wood: We also fear pollution from the American heartland and from our own industries. Government programs are in place and we will be urging the adoption of others to minimize industrial pollution of our environment. Will the government subsidies to industry for pollution abatement be considered unfair subsidies? Once again, a "trust us" answer is really not good enough.

Canadians in general and my constituents in particular feel close to the land, the water and the out of doors. We want guarantees that this Government will not negotiate away any protections that we demand.

There are many job skills shortages. Skilled tradesmen are required desperately in fields such as automotive, electrical, electronic, machining and other trades associated with the mining and the forestry industries. This Government has steadily reduced the funding for job skills training in my riding. Further cut-backs have already been announced for 1989. Are we now facing the risk of losing funds completely for skills training? Will the Americans argue that this funding represents unfair subsidies to business and industry? Will this Government be able to stand up to American pressure for harmonization? I worry for the workers who will be dislocated by the Canadian-American Free Trade Agreement.

• (1430)

The Government is fond of quoting the Economic Council of Canada. The Council admits that thousands of workers will be dislocated in a wide range of industries. If workers are dislocated in Nipissing, can the Government guarantee them equivalent jobs in our area? Can the Government guarantee them jobs at all? How is the Government planning to differentiate between jobs lost because of free trade and those lost for other reasons? What specific programs has the Government in place to assist those workers who are dislocated? Can the Government guarantee the workers of Nipissing that they will not suffer?

I worry about the workers in Nipissing who have negotiated reasonable union contracts with their employers. The new buzz word, as I said before, will be harmonization. Management will argue that we must harmonize with the Americans' labour costs, that the cost of benefits must be in harmony with those in the United States if we are to compete. We will hear this argument many times over in the next four years.

What does this Government plan to do to protect workers from unjust contract stripping? The overwhelming majority of Canadians reject the Reagan-Thatcher approach whereby the only thing that matters is a market-driven economy. Canadians believe in fairness, compassion and a balance between the needs and goals of business and the needs and goals of individual citizens. Business does not exist to be compassionate. Its legitimate goal is profit. It is the role of Government to ensure that legitimate social concerns are heard in our society and at the same time acted upon.

I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, that hard-won legitimate gains by labour and others will be lost as pressure is placed on them to harmonize. I urge the Government to be ever vigilant in its negotiations with the U.S. over the next few years.

Everyone recognizes that the impact of the Mulroney-Reagan agreement will be swift and immediate. The Economic Council of Canada states that the benefits to the U.S. are immediate, that the adjustments required of Canadian workers in many industries will be immediate. Will the protection to Canadian workers also be immediate by this Government?

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) both before and repeatedly during the campaign assured us that workers affected by the Canadian-American trade agreement would be compensated. Unfortunately, in spite of repeated questioning, the Prime Minister has failed to bring forward any program to substantiate his promises. When you talk about the dislocation of workers and the adjustments required to improve our access to the American markets, you are not talking about academic abstractions, you are talking about people, workers and their families, businessmen who have invested and taken risks, workers who have contributed their labour and their skills. You are talking wages and benefits which have been justly earned.

What the Government will achieve will be achieved for Canadians and Canada. What will be lost will be at the expense of Canada and at the expense of Canadians.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I cannot recognize the Hon. Member for Sarnia—Lambton as he has already spoken in the debate.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: On a question of privilege.

Mr. James: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that I was involved in speaking to another Member and I did not realize that the Hon. Member for Ottawa West (Miss Catterall) was saying some things about women on the farm. I am not taking any lessons from the Hon. Member. My mother is 85 and she feeds the calves yet today. She has worked on the farm. She has dug sugar beets, topped them and picked potatoes. I do not need to take any sort of lesson from the Member for Ottawa West about women working on the farm. In addition to that, there was mention about the kitchen. If the Member knew anything about the farm, she would know that most meetings take place in the kitchen.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Cariboo-Chilcotin.

Mr. Dave Worthy (Cariboo—Chilcotin): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have had an opportunity to address all the Members of the House. I would like to thank the people of Cariboo-Chilcotin who gave me the honour of sending me to this House. If you will allow a pun, Mr. Speaker, I will attempt to be "worthy" of it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Worthy: I represent a population of more than 70,000 people who live in a most beautiful part of Canada. It is 40,000 square miles of plateau nestled between the coast range on the west and the Cariboo range on the east. The powerful and historic Fraser River bisects my riding. Mine is a riding well known for its gold rush and its rodeos. The world famous Gang Ranch even occupies a corner of my riding. There are many things that attract the tourist to the Cariboo—Chilcotin.

The old historic Cariboo Gold Trail winds its way primarily following the Fraser until it reaches the recently restored historic towns of Wells and Barkerville. The rivers and lakes lure thousands of fishermen. Big game hunting is very popular during the fall.

Besides tourism, ranching and mining contribute much to the economy and especially to the lifestyle of Cariboo—Chilcotin. But the primary resource of the Cariboo-Chilcotin, of course, is the forest industry. In fact, the sawmills in my riding produce over 10 per cent of all of the lumber produced in Canada. The forest industry affects either directly or indirectly everybody in the Cariboo. In fact, it affects everyone in British Columbia and I would also say probably everyone in Canada. It is important for all of us to know and understand what the forest industry is saying about the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Many would have you believe that because of the shingle and shake tariff imposed by the U.S. and the softwood lumber situation, the forest industry is not supportive of the Free Trade Agreement. Nothing could be further from the truth. It is precisely because the industry has been mugged twice already by the protectionists in the United States that it is so strongly in support of the Free Trade Agreement. This industry, better than anyone else in Canada, understands the need for the protection offered by the Free Trade Agreement.

The forest industry in British Columbia is a good industry to look at in terms of free trade. Some would have you believe that we Canadians cannot be competitive when dealing with the United States of America, but that is not true as far as the forest industry is concerned. Nobody in the world can produce lumber like they do in the interior of B.C. No one anywhere can produce as much, as fast or as efficiently. This is so in spite of many adverse conditions that many maintain. Canadians cannot be competitive because of cold weather, because of great distances from the market, because we are highly unionized, we receive high wages and because we have the best benefit packages of any forest industry in the world.

There has been so much talk, Mr. Speaker, that high wages and benefits will suffer under the Free Trade Agreement. In the forest industry the experience has been the opposite. As it has traded more and more with the United States, it has become more competitive, and wages and benefits have become better, not worse. In fact, I believe that this is the experience across Canada.

● (1440)

As we have reduced our tariffs with the United States over the past 50 years, our standard of living has gone up, not down. Reducing tariffs has resulted in increased trade. Wages and social programs have benefited. Why should this trend change? It definitely will not change. Free trade will not destroy our social programs. On the contrary, it will make it possible for us to improve them.

Although securing the existing U.S. market and protecting current jobs is the primary motivation for the forest industry, it also recognizes that the Free Trade Agreement will provide new opportunities for value-added processing. There is no doubt that over the years we will see many new plants and jobs in this area.

However, there is a more immediate opportunity for secondary industry. That will be the creation of businesses based on the experience and creativity of our own people. In spite of the fact that the forest industry in the interior of British Columbia is the best in the world at producing lumber, much of the equipment and technology comes from other parts of the world, for example, Finland, Sweden, Germany, Washington, Oregon, and California. This does not have to be. We have the people, the experience, the knowledge, and the ideas.

Many small companies in the Cariboo have struggled to establish themselves. They may be small, some companies with 10, 20 or 50 employees, but they are very important to us. They represent our opportunity for growth. They represent our future. These are Main Street Canadians from the Cariboo. They want to compete. They are confident in their abilities and are looking forward to the future.

For example, Brigden Manufacturing is a company with a unique design for a log grapple and arch which allows multiple use of the crawler tractor. It is a small company just beginning, but it has potential.

Bradeco Fab and Welding is a company with an innovative cutting head for automatic falling of trees. It is lighter, less complex, and requires less maintenance than the traditional cutting head. It has been under way for six months and currently has eight employees. It has recently received three new contracts with the United States and Oregon, and the potential is definitely there.

Exco Manufacturing is a small company that has been growing rapidly over three years. It started off producing automatic lumber and log handling systems for the sawmills. Currently it has 65 employees, and the potential is to triple that number of employees in the next four years.

Those companies all started producing for local requirements. Invariably they discovered that there was a very large market just to the south. It is the U.S. market that will produce the incentive for new growth. We need all of these companies. In fact, we should have many more. There is a real opportunity for Canada to become a world leader in development of forest industry technology and equipment. We, the Members of the House, must encourage industry to grasp the opportunity and make it happen.

There are other opportunities for my riding provided by the Free Trade Agreement. For example, totally new secondary industries assembling or manufacturing products for the U.S. market. The investors may be Canadian, but it is very possible that we will attract new investors from the Pacific Rim and Europe. It is curious that these offshore investors recognize the opportunities of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement better than many Canadians. We do not care where the investors come from. We desperately need the jobs, and we hope to have some of those jobs in the Cariboo.

A respected British Columbia Senator, George Van Roggen, was chairman of the committee conducting hearings across Canada on the Free Trade Agreement. He said: "If B.C. wants the prosperity that they enjoy in central Canada then B.C. must have the same secondary industry they have in central Canada. This is only possible under the Free Trade Agreement".

For the people in British Columbia, for the people in western Canada, for all of the people in Canada who live in areas outside the industrial belt of central Canada, we can finally say that it is our turn for fairness in economic opportunity.

I accepted the concept of the Free Trade Agreement very naturally. To me it was something whose time had come. In the same manner as a young person must eventually leave home and find his or her own way in the world, so must Canada find its way with all the industrialized countries of the world. This agreement with the United States, our closest neighbour and largest trading partner, is the natural step to take.

Our young people have no guarantees when they leave the security of home. No one can say for sure how they will succeed. However, even the most protective of parents knows that the time has come and they must do it on their own. It is for them a step of faith. So it is with us. As we step into the free trading relationship with the United States, there are no guarantees. The studies are promising, but we must make it on our own. I have total confidence that our industries can compete. I have total confidence that we will succeed.

All Members in the House recognize that this has been a unique election. Never have the electorate of Canada wrestled with such a major issue. It has created a divided population. When campaigning door to door, it was not unusual to find a husband and wife on totally opposite sides of the free trade debate. Members of the House were fiercely engaged in this election and developed firmly entrenched positions. Normally once legislation is in place that is the end of the battle, but this is not normal legislation. When it is enacted on January 1 it will not be the end of anything. In fact, it will only be the start. It will be the initiation of a new beginning for Canada. Remember that there are no guarantees. Canadians must make this work. Our businesses and industries must respond to the challenge.

I do have a concern. Surely the direction, the leadership, and the motivation should be coming from Hon. Members of the House. Yet, many Members of this House have been violently opposing the Free Trade Agreement. Their concentration and focus has been on why it will not work, why industry will suffer, and why jobs will be lost. They have been conditioning themselves and their constituents to the failure of the Free Trade Agreement. My concern is that, if they are not careful, they could find themselves with a self-fulfilling prophecy in their ridings and perhaps elsewhere.

• (1450)

When the Members of the opposition Parties in this place next address their Chamber of Commerce or Board of Trade, will they continue to put down the Free Trade Agreement? Will they, in effect, encourage their constituents to invest elsewhere, in effect telling them to relocate in the U.S.? It would be so easy to continue the fight—but at what cost? From a political point of view, it could be to their advantage were the Free Trade Agreement to fail. But at what cost to their constituents, and at what cost to Canadians?

If Hon. Members opposite take a few minutes in reflective thought, I am sure they will recognize the point I am trying to make.

There has been a lot of concern expressed in the media that those areas which did not vote Progressive Conservative will suffer. The answer, of course, is that this Government will treat all areas with fairness and equality. But, those areas which have elected a representative who, because of a lack of confidence in the Free Trade Agreement, a lack of vision, or for reasons of political expediency cannot or will not provide the positive leadership required, if we are to grasp the opportunities of the Free Trade Agreement, may have cause for concern.

I am proud to have had the opportunity of participating in this historic debate, and I am confident that the people of Canada made a good decision in their choice of Government.

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin my remarks today by expressing my sincere thanks to the constituents of the riding of Dartmouth for having afforded me the great honour of representing them in the House of Commons. I consider the privilege to be able to stand in this great Chamber and speak on behalf of one's fellow citizens to be one of the greatest honours that a single individual can have bestowed on him.

On Tuesday last, when I first spoke in this House, I felt that special sense of history, of awe and of respect that I am sure every Member feels when first rising to add his/her voice to the record of Hansard. I thank the people of Dartmouth for allowing me to experience that very special feeling. I shall never forget them for having given me that moment.

The riding of Dartmouth is one of the fastest growing regions of Atlantic Canada, and for good reason. The riding itself is comprised of the beautiful City of Dartmouth, known all across North America as the City of Lakes. It is a family oriented community, a community in which people from all over Nova Scotia and all over North America have chosen to live and raise their families.

And there are other great communities in my riding that deserve special mention, among them being the community of Eastern Passage, with its fishing traditions, located on the shores of Halifax Harbour, and the community of Cow Bay, located on the rugged shores of the Atlantic, as well as the communities of North Preston and East Preston, the largest black communities in Nova Scotia.

All of these communities add to the cultural diversity and richness which is the riding of Dartmouth.

I should also like to congratulate my colleagues from Nova Scotia on their successful election and re-election to Parliament, and as well I extend my congratulations to the Speaker on his re-election to the chair and on his re-election in the riding of Vancouver South.

For the past two weeks I have listened carefully to the debate that has taken place, first on the procedures in this Chamber and then on the substance of the Government's motion to put into effect the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.

As a new Member but not a rookie to politics, I shudder at the attempt by this Progressive Conservative Government to once again stifle a full and unencumbered debate on a Bill that would initiate the economic union of this great nation with the United States of America.

As I listened and watched, I remembered quite clearly that it was exactly this type of disregard for the House of Commons and for the people of Canada that convinced me to run as the Liberal candidate in the riding of Dartmouth. I did so because I saw a Government led by a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who cared less about the preservation of the unique fabric of this country than he did about building his so-called special relationship with the President of the United States.

I saw a Government which refused to listen to any point of view on the trade issue but its own; I saw a Government that would close down debate in the House of Commons by wielding its majority to block a full public hearing on the proposed deal, a hearing which could have taken place by way of extensive committee hearings held across this nation. I saw a Government that refused to allow its own studies dealing with the potential negative impacts of the trade deal to see the light of day.

I stand in my place today to voice my opposition and that of the people of Dartmouth to the trade legislation, Bill C-2. I, and the overwhelming majority of the people of Atlantic Canada, believe that this deal, if passed unamended, will negatively alter the very structure of this nation.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The reality of Canada, Mr. Speaker, is that it is a nation of regions, each distinct, each with its own strength, but collectively forming the unique fabric that is Canada.

Our forefathers saw the potential of what Canada could be. They believed, as I believe, that a great nation could be forged on an east-west axis, and they resisted the pressures of continentalism. They believed that there was a better way than the American way. They recognized that the vast resources and wealth of this nation could be used to overcome the obstacles of geography.

Successive Governments have used national programs and policies to redistribute wealth from the have to the have not regions of this great nation.

I and my colleagues in the Liberal Party believe that every Canadian should have the right to make a decent living in the region in which he/she chooses to live and that he/she should enjoy the same level and quality of social benefits regardless of income and choice of location.

We have used the richness of this great nation to create fairness and equality of opportunity—in the Atlantic, in the North, and in the West. In short, Mr. Speaker, we have used regional development as a tool for nation building.

Anyone who submits to the reality of Canada as a nation of distinct and vibrant regions should be concerned about the implications of the Free Trade Agreement on regional development programs. This Government is asking us to approve the Free Trade Agreement, knowing full well that it is a flawed document, a document that puts at risk the very ability of the national Government to use regional development programs to bring about level playing fields within Canada.

We have before us, Mr. Speaker, a deal that has no exemption for regional development programs, a deal that has no definition of "subsidy", a deal that trades away our very ability to have made-in-Canada policies for the future development of this nation.

It is a deal that stipulates that once we integrate our economies, the United States and Canada will negotiate the definition of a subsidy and will work toward the elimination of same. These things are all still on the table, Mr. Speaker.

How does this Government explain this outrageous deal? How many more concessions will Canada have to make? The Government says: "Trust us."

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

This is the same Government that told us that it would get a deal that would guarantee Canadians full access to the U.S. markets, a deal that would exempt our exporters from harassment under U.S. trade remedy laws, a deal that would protect our regional development programs.

How can we possibly trust this Government to negotiate for our country over the next five to seven years in respect of those matters that remain outstanding? The record is clear. What was promised is not what this Government got in this deal.

We know that the Americans are already starting to clamour for the dismantling of our regional development programs, as well as some specific programs in our forestry and our fishing industries. Indeed, the Americans have already said that some of our Government's investments in silviculture and reforestation constitute an unfair subsidy and should be countervailable. That is what they have said.

I have in my hand, Mr. Speaker, a document from the United States Department of Commerce, and it lists such things as the Economic and Regional Development Program, ERDAs—and they are not icing on the cake in Atlantic Canada. That money goes to pay for the flour that bakes the cake in Atlantic Canada. It is an important regional development tool.

Also listed is the IRDP, the Industrial Regional Development Program, a tool of nation building that was first put into place by a Liberal Government. Also listed is the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program—and I do not think there is one Member in this House representing a riding in which the fishery plays an important role who would say that the Fishing Vessel Assistance Program constitutes an unfair subsidy and should be countervailable in the U.S.

These are the types of programs that the U.S. Department of Commerce wants eliminated, and it is these very programs that will be on the table over the next five to seven years. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that these programs do not constitute subsidies; rather, they are tools of regional development, tools that we have used for years in this country to redistribute wealth and create economic opportunity and fairness across this nation.

I submit that the trade deal, if brought into force and effect, will lead to the systematic dismantling of the regional development programs in this country, thus ensuring that Atlantic Canada will never become a full partner in the economic development of this nation.

• (1500)

Simply put, we in Atlantic Canada cannot support an agreement that does not fully protect these vital programs. Already we have seen this Tory Government slash its deficit on the backs of the poorer regions. In his first two Budgets, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) cut over $1.5 billion from the regional development envelope. That is on the record. Atlantic Canada should shudder when the Conservative Government makes a commitment to maintaining these programs because its record speaks otherwise.

Time and time again Ministers opposite have shown a complete lack of knowledge of Atlantic Canada and its legitimate concerns about the impact of this trade deal. We recall the former Minister of State for International Trade, the former Member from Sault Ste. Marie who, when asked about the impact of the free trade deal on the textile industry in Nova Scotia said: "Nova Scotia shouldn't worry because it doesn't have a textile industry". This came as quite a surprise, not only to the Stanfields, a name that should be well known in the Conservative Party, but also to the hundreds of workers in Nova Scotia who are employed in the textile industry.

Perhaps the former Minister was shedding a little light on what would happen once the deal comes into force. I think he was right. Under the deal Nova Scotia will not have to worry about asking questions like that because it may not have a textile industry five years down the road. During the election he was asked about a statement made by Tom Stanfield, who said that his company would survive free trade, but it may mean that they would have to relocate their operations to the U.S.

When the Minister of Finance was travelling through Nova Scotia telling people they had to vote for the deal or they would lose thousands of jobs, he was the expert on everything dealing with free trade, and he was asked to comment on Tom Stanfield's statement, he said: "I am not an expert on textiles. Don't ask me about that". That was the same Minister who said in this House that we are not to worry, that he and his Government will protect our regional development programs. However, we saw his attack on the pensions of senior citizens after the 1984 election. After all, those pensions were supposed to be the sacred trust of the Prime Minister. I think we in Atlantic Canada have a right to be very concerned over the Minister of Finance and his commitment to protect these programs over the next five to seven years of negotiations.

I have also listened with a great deal of interest to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), the Hon. Member for St. John's West. He has a stand pat response to every question he is asked in the House. He comes back with the same phrase by rote: The people of Canada have decided and the Government has a right to proceed with this free trade deal. I am sure if you asked him where the washroom was he would give you the same answer. Perhaps he is right. The people of Canada have decided.

We have a Government in this House today debating free trade legislation. However, the people of Atlantic Canada have also spoken and even the entertaining effusiveness and huffery-puffery of the Minister from St. John's West cannot deny the fact that Atlantic Canadians have said no to this free trade deal. All you have to do is count the numbers. Twenty out of 32 seats said yes to the Liberal Party in Atlantic Canada.

As one of those Members, I made a commitment to the people of my riding that I would fight as hard as I could to ensure that the interests of Atlantic Canada are not trampled on by the Government's indecent haste to implement a deal that fully 57 per cent of the Canadian electorate said no to.

I say to the Hon. Member for St. John's West, who is not in the House, in fact I do not think there are any Ministers of the Crown to hear this particular debate today at this point, the people of Atlantic Canada saw through his cloud of smoke and they have not forgotten the comment he made in 1986 when he said that Atlantic Canada was well off compared to Bangladesh. Only that Minister could have uttered such an insensitive statement to the people of Atlantic Canada. That shows why Atlantic Canadians cannot, will not and did not rely on him to represent their concerns in Ottawa. They elected 20 Liberals out of 32 ridings to do that for them.

What has happened since the election? Have there been any attempts by the Conservative Government to allay the concerns expressed by 57 per cent of the Canadian electorate, people from northern Ontario and people from Atlantic Canada who have said no to the Government? No, and for a Government which has refused to listen, this is truly indicative of its style over the last four years.

I say its attitude is of no comfort whatsoever to Canadians. We have seen plants and factories close. We have seen people thrown out of work. All the while the Government refused to announce any assistance for those workers, none whatsoever. We hear every day in Question Period about some of the problems with industries closing down. My colleagues from Thunder Bay—Nipigon and Nipissing got up in this House and raised concerns about job losses in the forest industry, and the Government has shown it has no compassion at all.

For Atlantic Canada, however, the Government's negligence is particularly worrisome. Just last week or the week before we heard Mickey Cohen, former Deputy Minister of Finance and now a senior business executive, say this about the future of regional development in Canada: "This is not pleasant stuff. You've got to say: Atlantic Canada, you're on your own; northern Ontario, you're on your own". I submit it is the right and duty of this House to ensure that does not happen.

If the Government had the legitimate concerns of the north and east and parts of the west of this entire nation at heart, it would have allowed our amendments on regional development programs and we would have had a Bill, while still flawed, which would have at least given some basic protection for the people that do not live in the centre of this great nation.

It is no wonder that we on this side of the House wanted that type of protection for regional development programs built into the Bill. Atlantic Canada has much at stake. We cannot afford the risks of this so-called leap of faith. The Prime Minister talked about winners and losers under free trade. I believe the people who need the assistance the most in the regions most at risk will be the first to suffer and will suffer the most.

The Government has let the people of Dartmouth down. It has let the people of Nova Scotia down. It has let the people of Atlantic Canada down. It has traded the unique fabric of Canada for a few bolts of cheap U.S. cotton and a sing-along with Ronald Reagan.

I recall when the Tory Government began the trade discussions. The principal objective was to obtain guaranteed access to the American market. In Atlantic Canada we know the importance of the U.S. and our producers were concerned about harassment of our products on the U.S. market. As the Prime Minister stated in an interview with the New York Times, "U.S. trade remedy laws can't apply to Canada, period". We know he will say one thing one week and another thing the next week, depending on what the polls tell him.

Does this trade deal protect Canadian exporters from American trade remedy laws, namely their countervailing duties and anti-dumping actions? The answer is no.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The trade deal, in my opinion and in the opinion of many across this nation, is a dismal failure. Americans will still be able to harass our exporters and they will still have to fight these cases before American trade bodies. The Conservatives claimed victory when they got a binding dispute settlement mechanism. Really, what is it? Nothing more than a panel to decide whether or not Canadian or American laws have been properly applied. The Prime Minister did not win any protection from trade remedy laws.

We know some of the things the Government put on the table, but what other concessions have been made under the table? We remember Bill C-22, the drug patent legislation, a bargaining chip given away even before negotiations began. We remember the softwood lumber tax and the shakes and shingles tariff where the Prime Minister kowtowed to Mr. Reagan. In fact, this Bill goes even further than that, it grandfathers the lumber tax.

Before I conclude I want to touch on one or two other areas which show the Government was out-negotiated by the Americans. Under the Prime Minister's deal we have traded away forever the ability of the Province of Nova Scotia to use its own oil and natural gas resources as a tool for regional development.

Under this deal, should the Government of Nova Scotia encourage new business ventures through a preferred energy pricing policy on some of its own resources, the Government is obligated to offer these same rates to Americans. To make matters worse, we have guaranteed the U.S. a fixed percentage of our oil and gas production. Canada has become nothing more than a gigantic natural resources reserve for the U.S. This is deplorable and must be condemned as a sell-out of our very birthright.

The Government has agreed to harmonize, some call this a euphemism for Americanize, our technical and environmental standards. I am sure the people of Dartmouth and Nova Scotia are very concerned about their environment. They see this deal as a sell-out of our children's natural heritage. Acid rain is one commodity that the U.S. has traded too freely in with Canada and Atlantic Canada in the last dozen years.

• (1510)

Over the past four years the Prime Minister has completely failed to obtain a comprehensive agreement to combat this very serious problem. But then what can one possibly get for a bad rendition of Irish Eyes are Smiling?

The more we compare past Liberal Governments achievements and the liberalizing of international trade, the more obvious it becomes that this trade deal is a very bad deal for Canada.

I wish to conclude by telling the Government that over the next week, months and years we in the Liberal Party will be keeping a very close eye on the implementation of this deal. We will continue to fight the battle for Canada, for its independence and for its sovereignty. I serve notice that this battle has just begun.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Allan Koury (Hochelaga—Maisonnette): Mr. Speaker, first let me thank my constituents in Hochelaga—Maisonnette for putting their confidence in me on November 21. I am proud to represent these people who have shown their faith in the future by supporting the Conservative Party and thereby the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States. This Agreement, as our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) pointed out so well when he spoke in this debate yesterday, opens opportunities for all Canadians in Canada; that is, central Canada and the main urban centres will not be the only ones to benefit from it. All regions of this country will be able to benefit from it and for Quebecers, it is also recognition of the regions that will gain from this boost to the economy.

The Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Speaker, is not strictly speaking a policy like the National Energy Program which had more to do with the problems of regional representation in Canada of the previous administration than with a rational approach to developing this country's potential.

This Government is the first one in years to pursue really national interests. The interests of the West, the Atlantic provinces, Quebec and Ontario are well represented by all the Members of this Government.

Think of initiatives like the Meech Lake Accord, the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the Western Economic Diversification Initiative, the Quebec Regional Development Program and of course the Free Trade Agreement. These are a few examples which show that the Government is sensitive to the needs of Canadians and Quebecers. And these needs clearly expressed by all Canadians have remained a priority objective throughout the negotiations which led to the signing of the Free Trade Agreement.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We must not forget, Mr. Speaker, that protectionism is a threat to Canada and particularly in regions like Quebec where free trade has been a long-desired goal. The Free Trade Agreement is widely recognized as an essential element of this country's regional policy.

The natural resource sectors such as energy in Quebec and the West and fisheries on the East Coast will no doubt benefit considerably from this agreement. The manufacturing and industrial sector, so important to the development of my riding, Mr. Speaker, will benefit directly from this new economic environment in which the agreement puts us.

The fact that eight out of ten premiers have given their support to this agreement and that a majority of Canadians have returned to power the party that defended it is living proof that this agreement will provide balance in that the economy of all regions of Canada will benefit from it.

This Government also allowed the regions of this country to take charge of their own regional development. Indeed, the new regional development agencies like the one for the Quebec development plan are designed so that the sectors which benefit from the regional development programs will be controlled by those who live in the most affected areas. And it is important to point out, Mr. Speaker, that it is now possible to focus the effort of these new agencies in a way that will make the most of the agreement itself.

In the spirit of national reconciliation which this Government has pursued since 1984, this historic Free Trade Agreement will be implemented with policies to help all regions of the country tap the immense potential of the agreement. With this in mind, the Government has said from the beginning that there would be no agreement if Canada's ability to promote regional development were hindered. And we know more than anyone in my constituency that this commitment was respected. There is no restriction on the Government's power to create jobs and facilitate growth in any region of Canada. National reconciliation implies the need to face the challenges posed by this vast and diverse nation by ensuring that all Canadians benefit equally from the national potential, from coast to coast.

The Free Trade Agreement guarantees that the economic growth required to maintain our high standard of living will be shared by all Canadians. This trade agreement in no way prevents reaching Canada's regional development objectives. On the contrary, it contributes to reaching them.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, it was alleged during the election campaign that many Canadian companies, subsidiaries of American multinationals, would move to the United States because some states have no minimum wage or occupational health and safety laws. This allegation is more than misleading and my constituents were not taken in by such blatant demagoguery. For a company or an industry, the workers' pay is only one aspect of its competitive position. Closeness to markets, labour productivity and overhead such as energy costs also contribute to production costs.

A vehicle made in a Canadian manufacturing centre is within one day's travel of 150 million Americans. Canadian labour is usually more productive than American labour. Mr. Speaker, that is not mentioned often enough. Furthermore, our health insurance system helps reduce the number of working days lost due to sickness.

All these factors combined, Mr. Speaker, make Canada an excellent place to do business. The American states that have no minimum wage are in non-industrialized regions where labour is generally less skilled. Indeed, industrialized states like Michigan, Massachusetts, New York and California have a skilled work force and a minimum wage similar to ours. The industries are not going to move to and set up shop in areas with an unskilled labour force and dismal economic and transport facilities, merely to take advantage of a reduced pay scale. Mr. Speaker, this did not happen in the United States and will certainly not happen in Canada with the Free Trade Agreement.

That is exactly what the people in the Hochelaga—Maisonneuve riding understood on November 21. That is the reason why they put their trust in a responsible Government. As you know, Mr. Speaker, Canada is and has always been an exporting nation. Compared with the seven most industrialized countries, Canada is the most dependent economically on its export trade. As much as 31 per cent of its Gross Domestic Product depends on its export trade, and that is the reason why we can enjoy such a high standard of living. Eighty per cent of our export trade is with the United States which represents for us the most natural trade market. Moreover, in Canada, three million jobs depend directly on our external trade.

Faced with this reality, Mr. Speaker, the Government had to assume its responsibility to Canadian men and women. The rise of American protectionism represented a threat for the Canadian economy. With the Free Trade Agreement, the Government under our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has taken the necessary steps to obtain for Canadians a secure access to the greatest export market in the world.

In this connection, Mr. Bernard Landry stated: "Canada is practically the only major industrialized nation without a secure access, directly or through association, to a market of over 100 million people. This limits considerably its ability to compete especially for the most sophisticated products. The United States is offering us access to a market of 250 million people."

The business people in my riding have stated on many occasions that they are anxious to see this Agreement become a reality and this, because they have confidence in their ability to compete and because this access to the American market would open up for them the way to prosperity. Take for instance the initiatives taken by the Quebec business people during the election campaign to convince the people of the usefulness of this Agreement. For instance, Mr. Bernard Lamarre, President of Lavalin, stated, and I quote: "I just cannot understand how people can oppose the notion of having free excess to the American market."

In addition to providing us with a secure access to the American market, the Free Trade Agreement ensures that Canadian exporters will no longer be at the mercy of a trade bill used for political purposes. The disputes resulting from the application of anti-dumping and countervail legislation will be settled by a panel made up of Canadian and American trade and commercial legislation specialists who will rule as equals and whose decisions will be final and binding, something which will make the settlement procedure much more expeditious.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, our representatives will no longer have to go to Washington to try and settle disputes which can arise between two trading nations and be submitted to the whims of American politicians. That is another expression of our sovereignty.

It is because of our Prime Minister's perceptiveness, his confidence in the potential of Canadian men and women, and his vision of a more equitable Canada that we have obtained this Agreement. All we have to do is take advantage of this instrument to enter the 21st Century.

Mr. Speaker, today being the 23rd of December 1988, I will probably not have the opportunity to offer my best wishes to each and everyone individually. So, if I may, I should like to wish the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his family, yourself, Mr. Speaker, and your family, as well as my colleagues from both sides of the House, all my Hochelaga—Maisonneuve constituents, and all other Canadian men and women, a Merry Christmas and a Most Happy New Year.

[English]

Mr. John F. Brewin (Victoria): Merci, monsieur le président. Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I might begin by paying a special word of tribute to my predecessor from Victoria, the Hon. Allan McKinnon. Mr. McKinnon represented Victoria for 16 years with diligence, dignity, and honesty. I know that the people of Victoria would ask this House to join with them in wishing him and his wife a very long, happy, and productive retirement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Brewin: May I also take this moment to mention my father, the late Andrew Brewin, who served in this House from 1962 to 1979. I know he treasured his time here, and I honour his memory on this occasion.

This is an historic vote. I hope that tonight, we in this Chamber are not making an historic mistake. I happen to have two great grandfathers who served in this House, both of them Liberals. It shows that generations do advance as time goes on.

Mr. McDermid: Or slip back.

Mr. Brewin: I am sure the Minister responsible for housing would agree with me at least on that, although there are a few Members who appear not to agree with the proposition.

My mother's grandfather, James Lyons Biggar, who represented East Northumberland in the Canadian Assembly, had the honour of voting against Confederation. History will judge that he was on the wrong side of that issue. I truly hope history will judge that I am on the wrong side of this issue tonight, because it will be an important decision for this country.

In this debate, we have heard a great deal about the seniors in Canada and how they were terrified by the exaggerations of the Liberals and New Democrats during the election into voting against the Free Trade Agreement. Victoria has more than its share, happily, of seniors. We are the retirement capital of Canada. I had the opportunity to speak to seniors frequently during the election campaign. The suggestion that they were terrified into voting against the agreement does not do them justice. My experience is that the seniors and others in our community who came to the conclusion that this agreement was bad for Canada did so because they took the long view, the historic view of what this agreement would do to our country. It was their view, and mine, that there was a truth about Canadian history that the Government has neglected. Ironically, it was a truth that has over the years been expressed by the Conservative Party, first by one of the early Members for Victoria, Sir John A. Macdonald.

• (1530)

Sir John A. Macdonald is associated in Canadian history with the National Policy. The essence of that policy was that if we were to build a distinctive nation in Canada, we had to have an economy which was independent of the larger economy of the United States. If we were to have an independent economy, we needed to build certain protections for our business and manufacturing sectors. We had to have tariffs. We had to have other protections which included the creative use of government to assist in building an infrastructure across the country from east to west to withstand the natural pulls from north to south.

From the beginning this policy has won the overwhelming support of the Canadian people. It has been the issue in a number of elections, most famous perhaps in 1911, when the Conservatives under Sir Robert Borden, won re-election on the slogan: "No truck nor trade with the Yanks".

During the election campaign I had the privilege of meeting someone in my constituency who actually heard Sir Robert Borden in that election during 1911. She was most eager to vote in this campaign because she was not able to vote in 1911 on two grounds—she was under the age of 18 and she was a woman.

She said she had been a Conservative all her life but that she was eagerly looking forward to voting in this election against the Conservatives because she felt this agreement and this policy was a betrayal of what she believed Canada stood for.

The critical questions that underline this debate are the issues of the future and nature of Canada. As it has been said more than once in the last two weeks, we have developed a distinctive set of social and economic programs, programs which have helped us to develop a caring society. We still have a long way to go, but it is a society which has a capacity to deal with fairness, justice and equality with people in our own land, and to give us a basis for speaking internationally for social justice and compassion.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Let me address, in that context, one particular element of the agreement and the legislation before us, which has not been addressed much. That is the impact on provincial jurisdiction. This agreement interferes in a number of ways with what has traditionally been viewed as provincial legislative jurisdiction. This agreement and the legislation interferes in the area of energy policy.

Our Constitution has given to the provinces the responsibility for development, conservation and management of non-renewable energy resources. Yet this agreement, without the official consent of a single province, restricts our capacity at both levels from dealing in a number of respects with our energy resources. This agreement further makes substantial inroads in the capacity of provinces to regulate services and to develop distinctive policies for local economies.

The agreement undermines provincial jurisdiction and responsibility in the area of investment, including, for example, control over decisions as to who may even own land, a matter of great sensitivity in many parts of Canada. As a result of this agreement, the provinces are now bound not to intervene in these areas, or Canada will be in breach of the agreement.

Perhaps most significantly, the section of the agreement, Article 2010, dealing with monopolies, goes a long way to undermine provincial responsibility and capacity to deal with new social and economic innovative programs. For those of us in western Canada public automobile insurance is not a particularly innovative program. In the Province of Ontario, however, it is a very active issue.

I wish to draw to the attention of the House a report in The Globe and Mail on December 13, 1988. It states:

... Philip Dewan, director of policy in the Premier's office, says that under Ottawa's free-trade deal with Washington, the province might be obliged to compensate U.S. insurance companies for the loss of business that they would suffer if the provincial government were to create a public monopoly over auto insurance.

The Ontario Liberals are, in effect, laying the groundwork for breaking another political promise. But it does suggest how this agreement is going to be used by Conservative minded Governments to avoid doing what has been so productive over the last 50 or 60 years in this country, the expression at the provincial level of that innovative social and economic spirit of which the Member for Winnipeg—Transcona (Mr. Blaikie) spoke earlier.

We have had innovative programs like hospitalization and medicare because provinces have had the opportunity to do so. I submit that this agreement and its legislative variation Clause 6 in the agreement undermines that capacity. That is to be severely regretted.

One thing that has been instructive to me as I looked at the election results and listened to this debate is the profound division that we are building in this country on fundamental issues of the future and vision for Canada.

It has been said that only the winners in this election are properly interpreting the view of the Canadian people. But let us break that down on a regional basis. As has been said, eight of the ten provinces, taken on that view, voted against the Free Trade Agreement. If we consider which provinces and which areas of Canada voted against the agreement, we find ourselves at an historical oddity.

Traditionally it has been the regions which have tended to object to protectionism and the National Policy to the extent that they did, and it has been the so-called heartland of southern Ontario and Quebec that have tended to favour the National Policy and tariffs. Yet we have seen in the recent election results that it is the regions of Canada, including the Atlantic provinces, northern Ontario, the West and British Columbia, that have voted most strongly and forcefully against this Free Trade Agreement.

I believe from my own experience that these sections of Canada voted against the Free Trade Agreement because it was their perception that the protections which had been built in over the last 120 years for an independent Canadian economy were essential to their vision of this country. It is a matter of deep resentment, in our part of the country at least, that this has not been understood, particularly in the Province of Québec. While we may not have expected a lot better of Toronto and the Golden Horseshoe, we did hope that our brothers and sisters in the Province of Quebec might have been more sensitive to the perspective that we were offering to Canada. It is a perspective that we were prepared to pay a price to be Canadian. We are prepared to pay a price to be Canadians. We do not insist on goods at the cheapest price. We recognize that if we are to be an independent country and if we are to speak with an independence in the world, we need to have these protections. We need to have an independent economy in Canada.

It appears that within a few hours the House will pass the free trade legislation. Within a week it will become law. In doing so, we in this Parliament and in the legislatures across Canada will give up substantial rights. We will give up rights to regulate our energy policy. We will give up rights to regulate investment. We will give up rights to regulate our own economy and to develop innovative social and economic experiments. We will give up rights to have policies that favour Canadian or local businesses in Government purchasing.

● (1540)

This is to be regretted on a number of grounds. It is to be regretted because of its impact on confederation. It is to be regretted because it will leave us with only military spending as the main vehicle for regional development in Canada, to add further to militarization of our economy. It is to be regretted because in selling so much of what we have, we have failed to get the guarantees the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised. We have failed to get protection against American countervailing duties and legislation.

The Prime Minister and the Conservative Party paid a price to get this deal. During this election campaign, they were forced to make a series of commitments to the Canadian people. Chief among those commitments was the Prime Minister's view, as he said in a speech during the election campaign, that the re-election of his Government would ensure the enhancement of social programs. He made his solemn pledge again that a Conservative Government would not dismantle our social networks. That price may have gone against the grain, but it was a price the Government had to pay in order to get this deal.

We will, over the next four years, remind the Prime Minister of that commitment. If for a second time he betrays the Canadian people in their trust, the Prime Minister can count on hearing from these benches.

There will be three points of observation for us during the next four years. Under the terms of the agreement, there will be five to seven years of negotiations surrounding countervail. Those negotiations will, I hope, begin immediately. We will be watching those negotiations.

Second, the Government has again made a solemn commitment that it will protect workers who have been dislocated. The depth and generosity of that commitment, as we have heard it in the last two weeks, may yet be tested. We have heard words with no action, but we will be watching.

Finally, the Government will have opportunities to strengthen our social programs. The Government will have an opportunity to build regional economies across Canada. The Government will have an opportunity to work with the provinces to build a better, fairer and more equitable Canada.

As the Government faces those opportunities, often, we hope, presented to it by those of us on this side of the House, we will be watching the extent of the Government's commitment. If we see one part of these programs eroded, we will alert the Canadian people. It will be our responsibility during the next four years to stand as watch-dogs for Canada over the future of this country.

• (1550)

There is a six-month cancellation clause in this agreement. During the television debate, the Prime Minister referred to this as just a commercial transaction. He invited Canada to exercise that six-month cancellation clause should any of his commitments be undermined. It will be our responsibility in the months and years ahead to stand in this place for Canada and to ensure that the hope that the Prime Minister expresses for this agreement is in fact realized and that history will not regret tonight's moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Maurice Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, this is my first time to address this House since our election. First of all, I would obviously like to thank my fellow citizens from the wonderful riding of Lotbinière.

Mr. Speaker, my constituents, like those in the 169 Conservative ridings in Canada, on November 21 chose the way of prosperity by giving their support to the only political party in this country proposing a trade agreement with our largest trading partner, the United States.

Mr. Speaker, I will tell you quite humbly that I really enjoyed the last election campaign because the voters were faced with an extremely straight-forward situation.

The three parties in the race offered the people a program. On the one hand, the New Democratic Party, being for virtue, changed its policies and programs to suit the opinion polls. On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the Liberal Party in this election campaign insisted that the debate be essentially on one issue, the Free Trade Agreement.

As for us, Mr. Speaker, we had to answer for the last four years of our mandate, from 1984 to 1988, and for the next four years. Our record for the past four years was extremely prosperous and full of accomplishments. You will recall that the polls conducted at the beginning of the election campaign showed that the outgoing Government was extraordinarily popular. Never had there been so many favorable polls for a government.

Mr. Speaker, a government's role is to give the people something to strive for, a challenge. The only party in the running that had an attractive plan for the people was the Progressive Conservative Party. All the Official Opposition, the Liberal Party, could say was that what the Conservatives were offering was no good; that was negativism.

In the end, Mr. Speaker, faced with this situation, the people on November 21 realized that they had had a competent government for the past four years. Remember that in 1984, we had inherited a deteriorating, disastrous situation, with a $38.3-billion deficit, let me remind you. It was frightening!

So on the basis of these facts, seeing that we had given the country good government again, the people obviously wanted to hear what the future government could give them over the next four years. Mr. Speaker, we had achieved a most masterful agreement in the present circumstances, an agreement for prosperity. That is what our business men and women achieved.

Mr. Speaker, my riding of Lotbinière essentially is quite representative of the social and economic dimensions of our immense country. I have many dairy farmers—more than 1,100—with their wives and husbands, children and friends, and also many small and medium-sized businesses that have not only achieved tremendous economic development but also have developed an expertise that enables them to reach the markets of the United States, Europe and even Africa.

Mr. Speaker, you certainly know the Vibec Group in Victoriaville, a highly competent engineering firm, which has managed to use its expertise beyond the limits of the riding, the province and the country, by opening up new markets in both Europe and Africa.

We also have—I want to salute it now because it has just established itself in my riding—the Cascade Corporation in Kingsley Falls which is administered with dynamism by the Lemaire brothers whose leadership is only equalled by the great dimensions of this country.

There are also in my riding quite a number of furniture-making businesses which for years have had subsidiaries in the United States. May I remind you also, Mr. Speaker, that in the City of Princeville alone, there are five major boat-building firms which also must export their products to be able to prosper and create jobs for our people back home, in Lotbinière. These people have realized that by taking their cars or trucks and driving a few hundred kilometres to the south of the Lotbinière riding, they could reach a concentration of over 100 million consumers. They have managed to understand that, these businessmen and women back home. On the other hand, they have realized that by covering the same distance, not southward, but eastward or westward, they were still within the Quebec borders. In this respect, Mr. Speaker, the project proposed by the Conservative Party to our businessmen and women certainly made sense.

These men and women include Mr. Guy Boulanger, from the Boulanger corporation in Warwick which specializes in making doors and mouldings, and which in its field has become one of the most important manufacturer in Quebec, if not in Canada. These people have realized that free trade was already a "fait accompli".

The fact is that for the past twenty-five years, more specifically since 1963, which is not so long ago, Mr. Speaker, the average duties collected by our Canadian custom officers on all goods imported from the United States decreased from 10 per cent to 3.5 per cent, a reduction of over 6 percentage points. I wish to emphasize that the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement will bring about a reduction of these duties from 3.5 to 2.5 per cent, only a 1 percentage point.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, over the past twenty-five years, we have demanded from our businesses, for their modernization, expansion and consolidation much more than we are going to ask for during the next ten years following the full implementation of the so-called Free Trade Agreement. But again, that is something that the people in Lotbinière, the businessmen and women, as well as the producers fully realize.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, you certainly remember that in 1986, we were forced by the Americans to levy a 15 per cent tax on our softwood lumber. Unfortunately, at the time, there were about a dozen items which were affected by this tax. Do you know what the next item would have been? Mouldings. You can understand that the Boulanger corporation in Warwick, among others, was keeping very quiet about this situation. It was afraid that the negotiators would finally reach that item. Thanks to the Free Trade Agreement, they can breath more freely today, because they used to have no protection whatsoever against American protectionism. Thanks again to this Agreement, we now have a number of mechanism to block the extension of protectionism.

This may be a sign of the times, Mr. Speaker, but do you realize that for its mouldings, the Boulanger corporation in Warwick must purchase its raw material in the United States? It has to bring this raw material home and transform it. It creates jobs for our people and sells its finished products to the Americans.

That is the kind of ability and foresight our business people and citizens in general now have, Mr. Speaker. I would like to say here, Mr. Speaker, that we as a party never claimed that the Free Trade Agreement as such was the end of all our problems. This Agreement, Mr. Speaker, was always presented as a challenge, one that we believed our business people, our producers, and, I repeat, our workers, could meet. But that, Mr. Speaker, obviously depends on the Government being able to give them appropriate policies. So again, in the last election campaign, it was important to be credible. Now what party in recent years could show such credibility? Is it a party that was in power for 25 of the last 30 years and ran up a total debt of $38.3 billion a year, not a decade, or a government that in four years has reduced the debt by $10 billion?

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we gave our business men and women, our producers, support policies so that they could consolidate, modernize and, in short, meet the new challenges that we were offering them. And if we did so over the last four years, obviously we can continue to do so. Besides, we already have some policies in place. The Department of Industry, Science and Technology has just implemented programs to follow up the consolidation and modernization we began. That is foresight. That is what we offered the citizens, the people in my riding, and they answered yes.

Mr. Speaker, I have been listening to the various speakers for some time. Not that I claim to bring anything new, because I think that everything has been said. But you will agree with me that the Hon. Members opposite have not brought anything new either. But I would nevertheless like to point out some things that are unfair, Mr. Speaker. I recently listened to the Hon. Member for "Arctic Power", Mr. Speaker, and I congratulate her for her election, but certainly not for her positions. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, on December 19, she said, as reported on page 367 of Hansard:

During the campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated that regional development programs were not at risk.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

His attitude was one of "trust me". Many people in the North believe that they were forced to trust the Prime Minister, our federal political representative, when he met in secret in the middle of the night with ten Premiers to finalize the Meech Lake Accord. Many of my constituents believe that the Accord makes northerners second-class citizens in this country. They also state that the provincial Premiers protected their constituents, but that the Prime Minister, our sole representative, did not do the same for us.

Mr. Speaker, I think that the Hon. Member for "Arctic Power" forgot two very basic things. First, Mr. Speaker, I would respectfully remind her of the First Ministers' conference with the native people in 1985; I was there myself. This conference almost resulted in an agreement, except for internal problems with the native people themselves. Secondly, I would remind her that she belongs to the Liberal Party, Mr. Speaker, the same one—imagine—that imposed repatriation of the Constitution in 1982 without the agreement of not only the native people but also, Mr. Speaker, the Province of Quebec, the birthplace of the French-speaking people, one of the founding nations. She belongs to a party . . . She criticizes us for not having included the Indians in the Meech Lake Agreement. But back in 1982, Mr. Speaker, her own party imposed the Canadian Constitution without the consent not only of the Indians, but of the French-speaking people of Canada. That is no mean feat! That is really something! That is why the people of Quebec, in 1984, told them: "Get out! Enough is enough!" Enough is enough, indeed! In 1988, it was no fluke, Madam. Last year, in Quebec alone, the people realized that we were capable of governing them well. They realized that we were able to identify with and respond to their true aspirations. We don't have any magic solutions, but we have an open attitude, we are able to listen and to discuss. We don't impose things. We don't want to go down in history as a party which says: "This is how it's going to be. And that's that. We're the boss." A country does not work like that. That is no way to govern. But that's what the Member from "Arctic Power" tells us. Surely there are limits, Mr. Speaker.

She has forgotten, just like the Member from LaSalle—Émard (Mr. Martin). How terrible . . . He says he is going to watch us. But how long has he been a member of that party? I don't know if he remembers—in any case, his father was there at the time—when Mackenzie King actually told the Canadian people, the people of Québec in particular—

Mr. Deputy-Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to confine himself to the amendment.

Mr. Tremblay (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I am simply quoting the words of other Members and trying to show that their assertions are false and misleading.

Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, the Member from LaSalle—Émard warns us that he will keep a close watch on us as we implement not only the agreement but our policies. I want to remind him that—if he was not a Member of this House, his father was—Mackenzie King told French-Canadians that there would be no conscription. We voted him in power, and the first thing he did was to impose conscription on French-Canadians. You will recall, Madam, that, in 1972, Mr. Trudeau made fun of the then leader of the Conservative Party, Mr. Stanfield, because his French was poor. Mr. Stanfield had, in fact, proposed wage and price controls, and Mr. Trudeau made fun of him at the time. In 1975, the first thing he did was to control wages, not prices, mind you, but wages! In 1979-1980, Madam, the Opposition defeated the Clark government over an increase of 18 cents per gallon of gas. When Mr. Trudeau got back in power, he increased the price of a gallon of gas to a whopping $1.80, and during that time, he imposed the Constitution without the consent of Quebec. Imagine that, Madam. That is what Quebecers and Canadians in general have finally understood. That's why they voted like they did on November 21.

Mr. Speaker, as I was saying, and this is important, there are a lot of farmers in my riding. As you know, the United States is by far the most important market for our agriculture. And the Free Trade Agreement gives us a better access to that market while at the same time protecting our supply management systems which are essential to our agricultural sector. Remember what the leaders of the agricultural sector did, at least in Quebec. They asked for additional guarantees with respect to what was originally proposed in the agreement. We agreed with them, first by adding to the list of protected goods milk products like yogourt, ice cream, and so on. We then specifically included in the agreement article 11 of the GATT in order to protect our supply management boards. We not only protected them, we retained the right to create additional ones.

That is what our farmers in Lotbinière and in 45 rural ridings in Quebec understood because they also knew that Canadian sales of farm produce to the United States total $3,7 billion and that it is important to them to secure or increase their access to that market. That's what they voted for on November 21!

Mr. Speaker, some people want to tear up the Agreement in order to improve it! You cannot improve on an agreement that doesn't exist. The only party who had the courage, because we did not invent free trade . . . You will recall that an election was held on that issue in 1911. Fortunately, we have come a long way since then . . .

That is what we are doing again today, but we needed the political courage to do it in all sectors, otherwise . . . Mr. Trudeau was quite aware of it, he even confided in his then lieutenant, Mr. Lalonde, you remember, and he wanted to negotiate on a sector by sector basis. Imagine, we are going to put agriculture on the table! We get all the advantages, and then we think that we are going to put agriculture on the table and get all the advantages. Besides, Mr. Trudeau tried to muddle the issue at the time by appointing the Macdonald Commission because he did not have the courage to negotiate an all-sector agreement. Our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had that courage.

And that is what we have proposed to the Canadian people and what they have responded to. That is where the future stands. How could we forget, Mr. Speaker, the Armenian earthquake, a terrible catastrophe which shocked the world recently and by which few were left untouched.

I see that my time is almost up, Mr. Speaker, so I will conclude.

The only positive element, if any, about this unfortunate event is that it did show, for the first time, that all countries of the world were capable of compassion in the face of such a situation. For the first time, the Soviet Union accepted international aid from all countries! And this shows precisely that we have taken a step forward in terms of co-operation, and that is what it is all about for Canada in the economic sphere. What is true with regard to incidents or accidents is also true in terms of economy and that is what we have told the Canadian people. And that is why they gave us a massive majority on November 21.

Mr. Speaker, I will conclude briefly and to follow upon what my colleague has just said, I will take this opportunity on December 23 to wish you, Mr. Speaker, and all Hon. Members of this House, as well as all my constituents in the riding of Lotbinière, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

● (1600)

[English]

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak on this very important issue. It is particularly important for a rural constituency such as Haldimand—Norfolk. I am somewhat surprised that there are no Ministers of the Crown present, but I suppose they have taken their lessons from the Minister of State.

I wish to thank the people of the riding of Haldimand—Norfolk for giving me their support. As I stated in the election, I will work hard on their behalf and attempt to make sure their concerns are heard in Ottawa, and that the Government knows of the solutions that they want to propose, especially on the very important issue of free trade.

In this vein, I rise to talk on Bill C-2 because I think it is important for the House to hear the concerns of the people of the riding of Haldimand—Norfolk. For those Members who do not know anything about my riding, it is in southwestern Ontario. It stretches along the north shore of Lake Erie from Lowbanks on the eastern end, down through St. Williams, up through Delhi, and along to the City of Brantford town line.

My riding contains a significant number of towns and cities for example, Simcoe, Hagersville, Caledonia, Port Dover, and Jarvis. The majority of people in those towns elected me because they wanted a voice to be heard in Ottawa on the issue of free trade.

My riding is an agriculturally based riding, therefore I will talk about the effects of free trade on agriculture. Earlier, many of my colleagues spoke on how it would affect the environment, energy, and important social programs.

● (1610)

I shall concentrate solely on how it will affect the farming community, and I will be brief as there are a large number of Members who want to have the opportunity to participate in this debate.

As I travelled throughout my riding during the course of the election campaign, I heard from a large number of my constituents, mostly farmers, who were genuinely concerned how the Free Trade Agreement would affect their livelihoods.

I listened intently to the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Mazankowski), and I was somewhat surprised that he did not make reference to the concerns of the farming community in respect of the Free Trade Agreement. In fact, I was shocked that he did not seem to recognize that a large number of farmers throughout Canada were very concerned about how the trade deal would affect the farming sector.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

In the Township of Charletville in my riding there are a large number of vegetable producers, with the main crops being tomatoes, cucumbers, and the like, and all are concerned about how the trade deal will affect their operations. Many are concerned that the commitment in the Free Trade Agreement to phase out seasonal tariffs will eventually lead to the demise of the vegetable producing sector in this country.

There are some 27,000 farmers employed in horticulture in Canada, and processors of horticultural commodities employ another 24,000 full and part-time workers. We are talking about a large number of jobs and the effect that the loss of such jobs could have on employment levels generally.

With our shorter growing season, we produce very much less in the way of fruit and vegetables than is produced in the U.S. U.S. growers, under the Free Trade Agreement, will be able to sell their products into Canada. Granted, there are provisions in the agreement to minimize the effect on Canadian fruit and vegetable growers, though I do not think they will help the farmers in my community.

It is difficult for Canadian fruit and vegetable growers to compete with the American growers given the much lower cost of production in the U.S.

Archie McLean of McCain Foods Ltd.—and I do not know what his political persuasion is—has come out and said that well over 100,000 jobs in the agri-food sector could be lost as a result of this deal. That is scary.

The elimination of tariffs in this sector will, I believe, lead directly to lower returns for Canadian farmers, brought about by increased competition from American growers and producers. The only protection would be in the snap-back provisions. In order to reactivate duties for a temporary period, the formula is a complex one, and especially so in respect of fruit and vegetables.

Let me review the formula for Hon. Members, in an effort to help them understand just how complex it is. The snap-back provisions can only be activated if prices fall more than 10 per cent below the weighted five-year average for the month in question for a specific commodity for a period of five consecutive days, and our own acreage in that commodity has not increased over its five-year average.

A temporary duty can be imposed in respect of each commodity only once in a 12-month period and must be removed as soon as the price climbs.

As can be seen, it is no easy task to reintroduce duties in respect of these commodities and is not something that I think will work. In fact, it seems to me that the cost of the monitoring imports, prices, and domestic acreage with sufficient accuracy and speed, would be such that the time, effort and money would be better spent elsewhere in the agricultural industry, perhaps in agricultural research or in reducing farm debt.

The Liberal Party has proposed amendments which we feel would go a long way toward minimizing the adverse effects of the Free Trade Agreement. By way of example, one amendment would establish a government board which would review annually the impact of the elimination of the tariffs on fruit and vegetables, as well as the impact of the special provisions for fresh fruit and vegetables under Article 702 and on the food processing and horticultural industry. It would also give the Government of Canada the right to impose a temporary duty on fresh fruit and vegetables when advised by the board that a horticultural or food processing sector is in jeopardy.

We tried to have this amendment and others considered, but the Government would not accept them. For that reason, I should like to take a moment to read the amendment we had in mind. It is as follows:

That Bill C-2 be amended by adding thereto, immediately after line 7 on page 4 thereof, the following clause:

“8. (1) There is hereby established an inquiry board composed of three members appointed by the Minister and representing the Canadian horticultural and food processing industry.

(2) The Board shall review annually the implementation of Article 702 of the Agreement and the impact of such implementation on the Canadian horticultural and food processing industry.

(3) Upon the finding that the Canadian horticultural and food processing industry is adversely affected by Article 702, the Board may, with the assent of the Minister, recommend that specific measures be taken pursuant to Section 59 of the Customs Tariff in order to correct such adverse effects.”

This amendment would establish a board to review Article 702 of the agreement and, as such, minimize the adverse effects that it may have.

The Government has refused this amendment; it has refused to even consider it, and it will have to suffer the consequences.

I should like to talk for a moment about Article 706 of the agreement, the effect of which is to increase the global import quota for poultry product coming into Canada.

I have a large number of chicken and turkey producers in my riding, and in fact the whole range of the feather industry, all of whom are genuinely concerned about the impact of Article 706 on their industry.

I would think that probably half those who supported me in the election came from the ranks of the chicken and turkey producers, and they did so because of their fear about what this agreement will mean for their operations. Specifically set out in the agreement are increases in the import quotas in respect of poultry product, the increase being somewhere in the neighbourhood of 2 per cent.

As it happens, Eugene Whelan came to my riding to campaign on my behalf, and he informed us that that 2 per cent increase could translate into $70 million of product.

When quoted in percentage terms, it may not seem like all that much; but when given in dollar terms its impact is more readily understood.

We also have an amendment which seeks to preserve the right of the Government of Canada to place quantitative import restrictions on the import of poultry product from the U.S. We believe it is necessary to protect our domestic industry. Again, I shall read the amendment for the record:

That Bill C-2 be amended by adding thereto, immediately, after line 8 on page 6 thereof, the following clause:

"13. Notwithstanding anything in the Agreement, the Government of Canada reserves the right to impose quantitative import restrictions on chicken and chicken products, turkey and turkey products, eggs and egg products, as these products are defined in the Agreement."

That amendment, Mr. Speaker, would merely retain the right of the Government of Canada to protect Canadian poultry farmers. Yet, the Government would not accept it for consideration; it would not even accept it for debate. We feel that these sorts of things were needed in the deal. Again, the Government will have to pay for it.

• (1620)

The FTA provides for a one-time increase in global import quotas on poultry and, as I said, increases the levels allowed into the country. I do not know if you realize the size of the industry I am talking about. In 1986, Canadian production totalled 582.2 million kilograms of poultry meat and 491.5 million dozen eggs. The farm gate value totalled $1.4 billion. Added value for processing and retailing was $536.3 million and $628.8 million. The estimated retail value was $2.41 billion. We can see the significance of the industry for Canada, yet this agreement throws open the doors to competition.

As I said, a lot of my constituents worked on my behalf to elect me to this House and I thank them for that. I want to be able to go back to them and say that in this debate we were able to do something for them, we were able to change the Government's mind on certain things. However, I am afraid I will not be able to go back and give them a Christmas present like that because the Government has consistently refused to address these questions.

Every supply managed commodity group in this country is very concerned about this deal. Our supply-management policy was established in the 1970s in an effort to stabilize previous large variations in product supply and price. This would introduce some certainty into the market. I believe it has worked very well since the 1970s, and I am afraid this deal just throws it out the window. We cannot have an open-door policy and supply management. They are just inconsistent.

I do not know if you have been to upper New York State, but if you look at the dairy industry there, which is not supply managed, you would realize how well supply-management works in Canada and how well off our dairy farmers are compared to New York State farmers.

With this agreement, and without the supply-management system, our farmers will not be as well off. Granted, the Conservatives say that supply-management is protected in the Free Trade Agreement, but I do not believe it is. In fact, from what I have heard, the Canadian Government does not care. Even if it is in there, the Government is working with the Americans at the GATT negotiations to get rid of Article XI, throw it out the door. Eugene Whalen worked hard to get that article into GATT and every country in the world would like something like it, but it has been said by people at GATT that our Government is supporting the Americans in their effort to throw it out.

I do not agree with that. I do not think the people on this side agree with it. I think we will find that the Government will learn, probably not for four years, what the people think about how this free trade deal has been going.

If the food processing industry leaves the country, as McCain Foods has said, if they go to the U.S., the associated farming industries will go, too. I have dairy farmers in my riding who ship milk to Waterloo. It makes the milk into cheese, puts it on pizzas. Mr.

McCain says most of these people will go to the States and they will be forced to go for those reasons. What do they do with the milk? This will put pressure on the supply-management system and on the farmers to try to bring down the price in order to compete with American milk products.

We have proposed an amendment to this deal which we feel addresses the concerns of the supply managed farmers. I want to read it into the record:

For greater certainty, nothing in this Act or in the Agreement shall in any way diminish, reduce or otherwise alter the objects, duties and powers of the bodies established by or pursuant to the Farm Products Marketing Agencies Act.

The Government would not accept that. We feel something like this will help protect our supply managed industries.

I wish to conclude by repeating something I said earlier in this House. Our Party has put the Government on notice. We will be watching every little sector of our economy in order to ensure that the Government keeps its promises—and it might be one of the first times—to the farmers of this country to put programs in place to help farmers overcome the adverse effects of this deal.

Mr. Stan Wilbee (Delta): Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues have said, it is indeed a real pleasure to stand before this teeming throng today to make my first speech in the House of Commons.

I wish to extend my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) on his election as our Speaker. I had the privilege of being born and raised in his riding. As a matter of fact, I spent the first 25 years of my life on Fraser Street. He had the opportunity of running the most unique election campaign in the country this year. We are all aware that he campaigned on the basis of not having a campaign. However, I knew he was in good shape a couple of weeks prior to the election when I talked to my Uncle Jimmy, a Scottish socialist from way back. He assured me that he was going to do something he had never done before, vote for a Tory, because he was a good "man". I am sure that my colleagues in the House recognized the qualities of the Hon. Member for Vancouver South when they elected him Speaker of the House. If you would convey those greetings to him I would appreciate it.

I would also like to thank the people of Delta for electing me. It was a very hard fought campaign and I appreciate the confidence they have shown in me by electing me as their representative and the first Member of Parliament for Delta. I would like to repeat the pledge I made to them on November 21, to serve them in any way I possibly can and to the best of my ability as their new Member.

Delta is a new riding resulting from distribution. Around here when you say you are from Delta, people look at you with a very blank expression. They think that it is probably somewhere in the MacKenzie Delta, in the Northwest Territories, but it is just 17 miles south of Vancouver. Those are very significant miles in that, because of the distance from the mountains, we have only one-third of Vancouver's rainfall. We are known as the home of the sun god, and we take great pride in that.

To the south of our municipality we have a very beautiful beach called Boundary Bay. Beside Boundary Bay, which has the largest salt water beaches in Canada, we have a small area of the U.S. called Point Roberts. It is only a few square miles and completely isolated from the rest of Washington State. To the natives of Delta it is most famous for its milk, beer, and gas, not necessarily in that order.

• (1630)

On the west side of our municipality and district we have the Straits of Georgia, the Gulf of Georgia. Here is located the Tsawwassen ferry terminal, which is a major terminus for the B.C. ferry system to Vancouver Island. It makes me think of the Free Trade Agreement. I remember when that terminal was first built. Everyone predicted dire things. They said that it was foolish to build a terminus way out in the middle of nowhere, out in the country. Yet today it is one of the most successful ventures in B.C. We started off with two capital ships. We now have over 20. The ferry system is planning two more giant ferries to operate out of the Tsawwassen ferry terminal.

I suggest to the opponents of free trade that 25 years from now they will look back on this debate just as we are looking back on the debate on the Auto Pact and saying to ourselves: "What a great thing it was for Canada".

Just north of the Tsawwassen ferry terminal there is Roberts Bank which illustrates a great act of faith in the future of our country. At Point Roberts there is a freight port. The sand was dredged up and the major coal exporting site on the West Coast was established. The port has the potential of shipping over 30 million tonnes of coal every year. This is a tremendous boost to the economy of B.C.. Without it that money would not be flowing into our British Columbia economy. It has a great potential as well for the shipping of concentrates and potash. Containers can be put there, and it can be developed as required in the future.

As we see the results of free trade, greater commerce and economic prosperity in British Columbia, this port will be developed as it is required. It is also capable of receiving the lead and zinc concentrates which will be taken into the interior of the country and developed at the smelter at Cominco.

North of Roberts Bank there is a tremendous delta from the Fraser River estuary. It is an excellent environmental feature which is so important to the life of young salmon. It is important to the wild fowl of the area. Where the Fraser River empties into the Gulf of Georgia there is a very beautiful and unique island called Westhame Island. It is a very rich part of this farming area and is separated off to form the Reifel Bird Sanctuary, a wild bird refuge. Every year at this time thousands and thousands of snow geese migrate to spend the winter in Delta. They come from Siberia. As we see the great flocks of these birds we are reminded that even the goose knows a good place when he sees one.

To celebrate the return of the snow geese the small town of Ladner has a festival every year. It is called the Snow Goose Festival. Everyone is welcome to attend next year in about the third week in October.

As we go up the mighty Fraser we are reminded of the history of the whole area. As the Hon. Member for Cariboo—Chilcotin (Mr. Worthy) mentioned, this was the original traffic artery into the interior of the country. The gold seekers of the Cariboo gold-rush used it as their transport. We think of the Fraser River and the tremendous fishing industry that has been on its banks for a number of years.

As we travel along we see the evidence, the fishing boats, the fish plants, and the processing plants that are there, but there are other things there as well. A unique floating home community is being developed in Delta. The technology being developed in this floating home is now being exported to all parts of the northwest as people recognize the beauty and charm of being able to live in a first-class home. These are not shacks but first-class facilities that were built on water. They are environmentally sound, beautiful to live in, and beautiful to work in.

We also have a lot of very mixed type of industry from the heavy industries of petrochemical plants to cement plants. We also have the sawmills which are so prevalent in British Columbia.

There are two major industrial areas in Delta. First, there is the Annacis Island area. We also have the Tilbury industrial area. The residents of these industrial areas are looking forward to the advent of free trade.

Delta has three railroads. We have some excellent highway systems. There is water transport on the Fraser River with the Fraser Port Authority rapidly developing an excellent container cargo as well as a general cargo terminus. It is also the terminus for the importing of automobiles from across the ocean, as well as for the exporting of logs and finished lumber.

Just two weeks ago I had the opportunity of attending the opening of a new industry in the Fraser wharf area. What is being done in this particular industry is that we are taking alder logs which were previously burned or discarded. They are chipped up and the product is sent to Japan. Fine papers are made from it.

In the future as we develop our own capacity I would expect that these chips would be used in our country. Instead of exporting the jobs, I believe that the paper manufacturing will be done here because we will have an adequate market to make it profitable in our country.

Our people are getting geared up to take advantage of the free trade movement. During the recent election campaign we heard a great deal about an industrial park in Bellingham, which is just across the border from us. It was being said that property was being sold to Canadian companies which were planning on going down there to take advantage of the low labour rates, et cetera. I suggest, and I believe it is true, that any exodus that we may see at the present time would be nothing to the exodus that would occur if the Free Trade Agreement was not put into place. The trade barriers would go up. Tariffs would be put on Canadian goods and there would be no way that we could compete in the American market. Rather than an industrial exodus from our municipality, we will see an industrial influx with the Free Trade Agreement.

We have three prime residential areas called Tsawwassen, Ladner, and North Delta. In between these three residential areas we have a very large natural bog which was mined for years for its peat products. We also have a very large agricultural area. Because of this variation in the soil from the peatmoss to the clay in the Fraser River, we have a vast variety of crops which we can grow in Delta. I will speak on the agricultural subject in a few moments.

The types of products that we can grow in Delta are products such as cranberries, blueberries, raspberries, and strawberries. We have poultry and dairy farms. There are riding stables. There are all the horticultural crops that one can think of. We have peas, beans, corn, Brussels sprouts, cabbages, cauliflowers, and potatoes. We are also developing a tremendous greenhouse industry in Delta. We have been very successful in using waste wood products to heat them and the latest hydroponics and chemical techniques. These greenhouses are making a real inroad into the market for tomatoes, cucumbers, and various types of plants.

I would like to talk about a few specific areas that I think have been badly abused during the whole election campaign in areas which I am working. The first is health care. I first ran into the fear campaign that had been mounted by the Opposition at a senior citizens' complex in North Delta known as Kennedy House. We were attending a sod turning ceremony for some co-op housing. The elderly people in this community expressed to me the fact that if they voted for a Conservative candidate they were voting for the Free Trade Agreement and that because of that they were going to lose their medicare, their pensions and all the other social benefits which they have. There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement that could back up these arguments which they have been made. Simon Reisman, the man who wrote the agreement, has said that health care is not included in the Free Trade Agreement. Justice Emmett Hall, that noted Canadian father of medicare, has looked at it. He said that there was no way medicare was threatened by the Free Trade Agreement.

● (1640)

As I listened to all-candidates meetings to find out why they said our health care system was in jeopardy, the ultimate explanation was that the Americans would say that this was an unfair subsidy to the producer. In other words, because we received so-called free medical benefits in Canada, this would be considered a subsidy to the producer. It is a well proven fact in American and Canadian law that something universally available to all citizens is not considered a subsidy in any way.

That argument does not wash, so they had to flip it over. Instead of being an unfair subsidy, they say that Canadian producers would complain that it was an unfair penalty. The Canadian producer would say that because he had extra costs as a manufacturer in Canada he was being penalized.

The fact is that Canada spends only 8.6 per cent of its Gross National Product on its health care system. In the United States, 11.4 per cent of its Gross National Product is spent on health care. The Canadian producer, instead of being punished because of our medical system, is paying 3 per cent less than our American neighbours. There is no valid argument to suggest that our health care system is in jeopardy.

The second area that they have talked about is our hospitals. I have worked in hospitals for the last 35 years. I loved it when the opposition members mentioned this topic in the all-candidates meetings, because they did not know what they were talking about. I could never get them to say why our hospital system is threatened. They would tell us horror stories they heard about indigents who could not access the American hospital system—if we vote for free trade, that is what will happen in the Canadian system. They gave us horror stories about exorbitant costs that our American friends contend with in their hospital system. If the Christmas story was written today, the fact there was no room in the inn would be attributed to the Free Trade Agreement.

Hospitals in Canada are under provincial jurisdiction. Our method of operation of hospitals is entirely different from that in the United States. Hospitals in Canada are non-profit organizations. There is no reason why the Americans would want to be involved in our hospital system.

There are provisions in the Free Trade Agreement which say that services can be contracted out, such as laundry, cleaning, and food services. The American companies can bid on this. At the same time, Canadian companies have an equal opportunity in the United States.

A few years ago, every hospital in Vancouver had its own laundry. This was tremendously inefficient. In my riding, we now have one hospital laundry for the greater Vancouver regional district. Many services offered there can be contracted out at a great saving to the taxpayers of Canada.

Another area dealt with by the Free Trade Agreement is that Americans can come to Canada and open nursing homes. They can work in this area. If they are providing a service which we as Canadians are not providing, we should welcome them.

The last area I would mention relates to blood transfusion services in Canada. We have heard horror stories of what would happen. The Canadian Red Cross has provided the best possible services. Blood is not a commodity. In Canada, it is freely given. It is freely received. It is not sold. It is not bought. The medical community, as well as the community as a whole, would rise up in arms if there were any change to that system.

There has been a problem in Canada with haemophiliacs who have received blood. After the session resumes, I intend to make a statement in the House on that particular subject. I believe it is of significance to the whole country.

As a family physician of 30 years, if I thought there were any threat to our health services, I would certainly not endorse the Free Trade Agreement.

I would like to say in closing that I have four grandchildren. Their future is the future of Canada. If free trade was not good for my grandchildren, it would not be good for Canada, and I would not support it. It is not a panacea, but we as Canadians must recognize that we are living in a changing world. If we are living in a changing world, we must change with it. We must be willing to change. We must be willing to work and work hard. We must be creative. We must use our natural resources to the best of our ability.

One of the best tools we have is the Free Trade Agreement. Let us use it wisely. Let us use it carefully to craft a better Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Hon. Member for Sudbury.

Ms. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Monsieur le président, I would like to thank the people of Sudbury and tell them I appreciate the trust placed in me. I want to say to my children, who are here in the gallery today, "It is nice to have you here and to be able to speak to you". To all my colleagues here, it is great to be representing Sudbury.

The people of Sudbury have given me a strong mandate to come here and speak on this trade deal. It is the trade deal we are talking about. We are not talking about free trade per se. We are talking about this flawed trade deal. My riding voted over 75 per cent against the deal. That is a mandate. One may say that the people of Canada have spoken; in my riding they have spoken.

Yesterday I was listening to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speak on third reading, and I honestly thought I had died and gone to heaven, things are going to be so great in Canada. Honestly, he must have thought he was Santa Claus, we are going to have so much money. I really want to believe this. I am so happy.

In Sudbury, we want things like four-lane highways. We need a new intermodal transportation system. We want a new federal building, which had been promised before and has not come about. I am thinking how great it is going to be. We are going to have so much money. We are going to build all these roads and have all these trucks. We are going to ship the money up and ship the goods out.

Come on. Who are we kidding? It is not going to be that great. The deal is flawed. When one thinks about it, one has to go south of the border to the United States. Life is not heaven down there. When you are poor in the United States, you are very poor, and there are many very poor people there.

• (1650)

I want to talk a bit about Sudbury. Sudbury is a very unique place in this country. It has a very unique history. It began as a resource based town with minerals like nickel and copper in great abundance. It developed a boom and bust type of economy so that when the demand was high there were jobs and money. When the demand declined there were no jobs; there was unemployment and a massive exodus of people. This has happened a number of times in the last 100 years.

Today Sudbury has a sustainable urban economy. People find this so unusual because they have never seen such remarkable turnaround in an economy. It was not easy but we did it. Today Sudbury is booming. We no longer rely on two major employers; we have an industrial base of which we are proud. That is what has made us different. People from all over the world come to our city and ask how we managed it. We did it because we worked together and we worked hard, with all levels of government, with business, and with unions. The people of Sudbury are gutsy, tough and hard working people.

On November 21, in northern Ontario, there was a massive Tory sweep. One seat was held by the Tories, and that was retained by a margin of less than 800 votes. Believe me, in northern Ontario we know what free trade and this particular deal could do. We have experience behind us.

I want to deal with what happens in a resource based economy. I was born in Kirkland Lake, another mining town. At the turn of the century and the early 1920s and 1930s, Kirkland Lake was another boom town, with lots of people. There was gold mining. Mine shafts were everywhere. One could not walk down the main street without seeing a mine shaft.

When the ore became more difficult to extract, the demand lessened and the money left. One can guess what the people of Kirkland Lake were left with—the shaft. Those mine shafts have since disappeared.

Cobalt is another mining town that had the same problems. The same is true for Elliot Lake. We know what happens when there is no industrial base. The question that was always asked when these towns faced those problems is: Why did you let it happen? It is as if the people knew what was happening to them. The fact is that we had no control over our economy.

The people of northern Ontario are concerned that we are giving up control of our economy with this particular trade deal. That is what is happening.

If there had been a way to retain a measure of control, the deal would have been much more palatable. That is what bothers us the most. We know the difficulty in creating jobs. We know what happens when resources are shifted to the south. The jobs were not created in our town when we had the resources; they were created elsewhere. We are telling Canadians that this is what will happen now. The jobs will be shifted south and that is what worries northern Ontarians, especially the people of Sudbury.

There is no doubt that the deal is flawed. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said that he did not get a definition of subsidies but would work on it. He did not know whether he would be able to get a proper definition of subsidies because that has never been achieved.

The Government has signed a contract without being able to negotiate a certain part of it. It concerns the definition of subsidy, about which no one in history has been able to agree, yet the Government says that it will do so in the next five to seven years.

It is my understanding that a Progressive Conservative is usually a business person. I submit that any business person who signs a contract without finalizing a clause like that would be gone. A contract containing a clause like that eventually comes back to haunt you. I am worried that the clause in this deal will come back to haunt us.

The Conservative Government asks us to trust it. As parents, we do not tell our children to trust everybody. We ask questions and make sure before we trust anyone. I do not want to trust the Americans. They are not bad people, but they are like us. They want what is best for themselves. I want what is best for my children, my family, and my town. There is nothing wrong with that.

Sudbury has gained good control of its destiny and has been able to do so with the help of all sectors in our town. If we are turning our destiny over to the Americans, which is essentially what is happening, I beg the Government to be especially careful and helpful to those regions that will be affected.

I believe that when the definition of subsidies is discussed, our regional programs will be judged unfair. The pressure will be on the Government to cut back on the subsidies. We must be firm.

The Government has given us guarantees. The Prime Minister gave us all kinds of guarantees in his election speeches. He said: "Trust us, we guarantee there is nothing in the trade deal that will affect social programs". The problem is that there is nothing in the deal.

We asked the Government to include some amendments. If it is clear that nothing will affect our social programs, would it have been so difficult to include a clause stating as much? The Government stated throughout the election campaign that there was no problem. The reason it would not add an amendment is that it knows it cannot do so because it does not have permission from the Americans.

The Free Trade Agreement will make regional subsidies a thing of the past. This must not be allowed to happen. All regions in our country must be given the opportunity to prosper.

• (1700)

[Translation]

Why would the multinationals ever want to continue operating in Canada if they can have the same benefits elsewhere? Think about it. In Canada, businesses have to pay the cost of all our social programs, we have minimum wages, all sorts of things. We take all those programs for granted. We say: Yes, we have them, all our very own.

In Canada, corporate taxes are used to finance bilingualism. After all, one thing is clear, we are a bilingual country.

Do you think that, given the choice, businesses will want to locate here instead of in the United States, where they could avoid those taxes and costs.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

[English]

Think of what happens in terms of control over our gas and oil. We have given the Americans unlimited access to our gas and oil in good times, and in bad times, they still have access to our oil and gas and we cannot even give ourselves a better deal. How will we attract all these industries that will create all these jobs if we do not charge them less than the others if they locate in our country? That is a good incentive to set up a plant in Canada. Why should they bother coming to Canada now? They can go to the States and get our energy at the same price as we sell it to ourselves without paying any social costs whatsoever.

If I were in business and looking for new territory, I would not bother expanding into Canada; I would expand into the States. The reasons are all there. I could then sell my goods both in the States and in Canada.

Let us face it, we did not get the security of access that we were promised either. The Americans will still levy all their countervailing duties and other subsidies against us. There is no doubt in my mind about that. Look what happened with the softwood lumber industry. We have just elected a Government that got the mandate to implement free trade, but did it bother taking the extra tax off? No, way. Hey, it does not care. So long as things go its way, it is great for the Government.

This deal should have been amended to build in the missing guarantee that would allow us to retain control over our destiny. The Hon. Prime Minister, during the election campaign, through the multi-million dollar ad campaign financed by the large American and Canadian multinational corporations, guaranteed Canadians that there would be no problem with protecting social programs. He guaranteed that there would be no problem with protecting regional subsidies. He guaranteed that there would be a quarter of a million new jobs created, that there would be unprecedented growth, and that there would be programs in place to protect the people who lost their jobs.

Now is the time for the Hon. Prime Minister and his Government to make a New Year's resolution; that is, to guarantee to keep that promise. We have all been aware in the past of nice promises made but never kept. It was quite easy during the election campaign to say one thing but do another. We got that throughout the last four years, and I am just worried we might get it again next year.

Now is the time. It will soon be the beginning of a new year. We realize that the free trade deal will be passed tonight or tomorrow morning some time, and I would like the Government, before it passes the deal, to make that New Year's resolution and to keep that New Year's resolution. In this country, the people should come first, and all regions of the country should come first. I will hold the Prime Minister and his Party to task if they do not.

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, I am very glad to have this chance to point out the basic flaws in Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States. I do thank the voters of Trinity—Spadina who sent me back to Parliament to help defend Canadians against this bad deal.

We New Democrats oppose this so-called trade agreement, Free Trade Agreement, because it will not only cut the real incomes of wage earning and salary earning Canadians and the incomes of many self-employed Canadians as well, but it will also increase the expenditure on war preparations and the risk of war. It in fact chiefly serves a dictatorship, a dictatorial economy ruled by a few great owners and managers of investment capital, essentially for the goal of profit, the sort of people just referred to who spent millions of dollars advertising the trade deal during the election.

I am here to say that this is not the only way that we can go, and not the way we should go.

There are in fact a great many Canadians who would prefer a quite different way, a way that extends the principle of democracy which we have in our political institutions, extends that principle into everyday working life, into the economy, and into international affairs. This way is traditionally called in western Europe and North America democratic socialism, and it is, I am proud to say, the way to which the New Democratic Party is committed by our constitution. I will explain that further in a few minutes.

As to the trade deal, more than anything else, this trade deal is an affront to the kind of democracy that Canadians are still trying to build in Canada. We built it part way and we have a long way to go, and this trade deal is an attempt to stop us.

The trade deal is not fundamentally about trade or about increasing the efficiency of the economy. It is primarily about seizing power to lower wages, to reduce the quality of working conditions and working life, and to transfer costs from the owners of certain industries and the recipients of profit to the general public including, of course, their employees. It is secondarily but quite importantly also about strengthening the power of the largest corporations to increase their profits through investments in war preparations and in active war as is going on in the southern hemisphere where a good many of our arms will go.

The direct lowering of wages and working conditions through this trade deal will be made easier by transferring jobs to low wage, non-union areas of the United States, primarily in the south. It is hard to beat a $1.74 minimum wage in Texas or no minimum wage in some other States.

During the election campaign, we saw an ad from the State of Georgia which said to our companies: "Come to Georgia because only 18 per cent of our labour force is unionized, we have no minimum wage, and we don't worry about the environment". That is the direct wage lowering and that is what James Fleck followed except that he carried it to a further logical extreme. He went down to Mexico where it is a 50-cent wage. He did that during the election campaign while he was telling us how many more jobs would be created in Canada.

The indirect lowering of wages will be pushed by using the threat of rationalization, the runaway shops, to blackmail Canadians into accepting wage cuts. This is particularly noticeable in my own constituency of Trinity—Spadina, especially among the workers in the factories making women's clothing. There has been an unprecedented rate of shutdown as the trade deal comes closer, banks, for example, refusing loans because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has said that this is not one of the industries that is expected to do well.

It will wipe out Canada's tariff and non-tariff import restrictions so that Canadians must compete with workers in the southern U.S., as I said, whose wage is very often $2 or less. You may be able to live in Georgia on $2, but you cannot live in Canada on $2 a hour because, for one thing, we have some heating problems here.

In fact, Mr. Nygard, the millionaire manufacturer of clothing who was the Government's chosen chairman of the SAGIT, the committee for negotiating in that industry in the trade deal, has quit the chairmanship of it in protest earlier this year because as the deal came out it was a bad deal for Canada, so he said, and bad for his industry.

• (1710)

The trade deal, in fact, is intended to protect the power of the owners of these industries by making it more difficult for any future Canadian Government to act so as to create a democratic, full employment economy. That is why the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) went to Alberta a year ago to tell the executives of the oil companies that this trade deal would protect them from a future NDP Government.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

In other words, this agreement is to protect the profit and the power of the owners of industry operating in Canada from the Canadian workers who produce that profit and who might vote for a political program that would get them a better share of it. Another indirect way of lowering wages is to transfer production costs to the public. Economists have a nice word for this. They call it externalization. It is: "Don't let our company pay for it. Let someone else pay. Let the taxpayers pay."

Reducing environmental standards is an example of externalization. We have barely begun the struggle in Canada to make the polluters clean up the poisons which they dump into our rivers and lakes and other parts of our country. Low health and safety standards are another way of transferring the costs of doing business to working people, so also is low severance pay. The pressure to transfer costs from owners to workers will increase with the trade deal. Harmonization, as Chapter Six lays it out in the Free Trade Agreement, will be the chief means of lowering both working and living conditions for Canadians.

The second round of the so-called free trade negotiations will begin to establish common standards from everything from the quality of plywood used in housing construction, to health and safety requirements for pesticides and food additives. It is only reasonable to expect that the business dominated Governments of both Canada and the U.S. will choose the cheaper standard for each country. The American law is to balance profit and health. If it is a danger to health, the Canadian law is: do not use it. We will get the American standard. The Americans will get the profit. We will get the danger to health.

In this country there are two sources of power. There is the power of ownership and wealth and the power of the workers through their unions and political movements. The Free Trade Agreement advances the power of the owners over the power of the workers. It has more to do with promoting unrestricted mobility of investment capital than with trade. Increased mobility of capital is only a means to an end. The end is decreased wages, externalized costs, and increased profits. That is why Chapter Sixteen of the Free Trade Agreement opens our investment industry to control by U.S. corporations.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Recently Thomas D'Aquino spoke in the United States arguing that the U.S., by which he means U.S. workers, must accept a decrease in their living standards to solve the economic problems facing the U.S. We are going to unite with a country, according to D'Aquino, that has to decrease its living standard. Thomas D'Aquino is the head of Business Council on National Issues. That organization is promoted by the American Ambassador and is a leading advocate of free trade in Canada, spreading the lie that it will defend or increase the living standards of Canadians. The same man tells the Americans their standard will go down but promises Canadians that ours will go up if we join them.

That is what the free trade is all about. Who shall have the right to decide the future of Canada? Does the Canadian economy exist to serve the drive for profit or the needs of people? During the campaign it became fairly evident that the Liberal Party does not seriously offer an alternative different from this on the trade deal. The Liberals' alternative is a slightly different route to the same end. For example, trading with more countries than just the United States.

A free trade agreement with more of the specifics nailed down, or with more countries, is simply another way of encouraging the dominance of our lives by the logic of profit. Whether we sell to the United States, Japan, Europe, or Chile, the rule will be the same: cut wages, working conditions, and living conditions directly or indirectly. In other words, cut anything that stands in the way of profit.

There is no basic difference between the convictions and principles of the Liberal Party and the convictions and principles of the Tory Party.

The only real alternative to this is democratic socialism.

That is why Canadians have created a democratic socialist Party through which to defend ourselves from the kind of big business control this trade deal would impose. Democratic socialists oppose the economic system that puts the needs of people second to the goals of big business that says: "What is good for General Motors is good for Canada". Instead, we recognize that we have to put the needs of the working people first.

Our Party's constitution has a preamble which sets out our principles as follows:

The New Democratic Party believes that social, economic and political progress of Canada can be assured only by the application of democratic socialist principles to Government and the administration of public affairs.

It goes on to set out some of the principles:

That the production and distribution of goods and services shall be directed to meeting the social and individual needs of people and not to the making of profit.

To modify and control the operations of the monopolistic productive and distributive organizations through economic and social planning. Towards these ends and when necessary the extension of the principle of social ownership.

Another principle reads:

The New Democratic Party holds firm to the belief that the dignity and freedom of the individual is a basic right that must be maintained and extended.

By the way, we pledge respect for individual human beings, not the fictitious corporate persons so beloved by corporation lawyers. The third principle reads:

The New Democratic Party is proud to be associated with the democratic socialist Parties of the world and to share the struggle for peace, international co-operation and the abolition of poverty.

Upon these principles, Mr. Speaker, we base our programs which can be grouped roughly under three general heads: programs for full employment, programs for social efficiency, and programs for world peace. These are not the goals of the great corporations which provide the drive behind this trade deal. The Deputy Prime Minister said a year ago that the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal would protect the owners of large corporations by blocking the people from voting in a democratic socialist program. Let me give some examples.

Under full employment we aim to ensure that everyone able to work has the opportunity to make his or her contribution to work under good conditions and to be recognized with fair pay and a share of responsibility for the conduct of the enterprise, be it public or private. This would require intervention by publicly elected representatives, federal, provincial or municipal, such as this trade deal would either prohibit or hinder.

• (1720)

The New Democratic Party demands that the direction of our country be shared among Canadian Governments, public institutions, employers, unions, and communities, without having to ask the permission of multinational corporations or the Government of the United States, as this trade deal in many cases would require.

Our next principle is social efficiency rather than economic efficiency. We aim to be redefine the main goal of enterprises by social efficiency. Neither profit nor Gross National Product alone or together can truly measure the health of our country and economy. They do not tell us whether the goods and services are distributed fairly so as to maintain the health, well-being, and morale of the people, without which no economy can last for long.

We must have a democratically responsive program of training and retraining and mobility grants, in order to help workers progress from the declining job opportunities to the growing and better ones. This is what the Prime Minister promised before the election and during the election, and now he wants to forget that he promised it because he does not believe in it. We do. This is why we are committed to working people and we accept their support.

Security of income, as it is practised in Sweden, is needed to give workers confidence that they will not be victimized by long spells of unemployment. Past United States attempts to attack Canadian programs for unemployment insurance, social assistance, health care, and regional development warn us that the trade deal will further endanger these necessary measures of justice.

The New Democratic Party demands that capital which is generously produced by Canadian labour in Canadian enterprises be mobilized under either elected Canadian representatives or localized representatives in Canada to meet Canadian needs. We need the legislative ability to control foreign exchange, to control foreign investment in Canada, and to control the conduct of employees' pension plans. All those controls would be subject to foreign attack under the investment provisions of this trade deal with the United States.

Under the heading of world peace the New Democratic Party follows the ancient teaching of Jews, Christians, and any others that there can be no peace that is not founded on justice. We cannot enjoy the benefits of a democratic socialist society in Canada unless we are actively supporting the same principles and goals for the peoples of other countries.

For example, in the age of nuclear and other indiscriminate weapons of mass slaughter, we must nourish and build the principle of common security. We must negotiate with our political opponents, or our enemies, to find political solutions. We must abandon plans for offensive armaments such as nuclear powered submarines. We must withdraw from threatening alliances such as NATO and NORAD which are locked into the type of thinking that governed warfare in the years before the Hiroshima bomb.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We must make Canada a nuclear weapons-free zone and negotiate with other Arctic neighbours a nuclear weapons-free, pollution-free Arctic. We must withdraw from the obscenely profitable arms export trade in which a few people seek to grow rich and powerful by helping the peoples of Europe's former colonies slaughter each other, or by increasing the danger of nuclear war between NATO and the Warsaw Bloc. We must ban the export of Canadian uranium and nuclear reactors which continue to be used for purposes of war.

All this runs against the thrust of the trade deal with the United States.

The trade agreement, by threatening attacks on unfair subsidies in Article 1907 but expressly exempting defence contracts in Article 2003, would encourage investors with Canadian Government subsidies to fill Canada's regions of low employment with projects in military goods and services. You call that a nifty solution to unemployment, Mr. Speaker? I do not. Hitler did that in the thirties and led the German people into a savage dictatorship and horrible deaths for millions of people, not to mention for tens of millions in other nations.

Therefore, we reject the trade deal, partly because it would tie Canada's economic growth to what President Eisenhower called the military industrial complex, and what the Tory Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) calls the North American Defence Industrial Base.

There are other important concerns to cover, if I had time, such as the environment and the people of the former colonies in Latin America, Africa, and Asia who are being destroyed by the external debt system. I believe that the Canadian people will find themselves more and more in the same boat as those people, and we will have to join forces with them against the people who promoted this trade deal.

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Brampton—Malton): Mr. Speaker, recently I accepted the challenge to serve the people of the riding of Brampton—Malton. Before redistribution the Brampton—Malton area was represented honourably by two well-known Members of Parliament, colleagues who now represent the ridings of Brampton and Mississauga West. It is my hope and intention to serve the constituents of Brampton—Malton in an equally responsible and conscientious manner.

Today, on behalf of the people of the twin communities of Brampton—Malton, I wish to go on record in favour of the Free Trade Agreement.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Brampton—Malton represents a large workforce made up of diversified industries as well as large employer industries. It encompasses a large commercial and transport centre, including the Canadian National marshalling yards of Brantford and Pearson International Airport.

With all this considered, the people of Brampton—Malton wish it to be known that they are in favour of the Free Trade Agreement and that they want the prosperity that free trade will bring to them.

The people of Brampton—Malton are not afraid to meet the future. They are not afraid to meet new challenges and to benefit from these efforts. I am proud to say that the people of Brampton—Malton are a fine example for the rest of Canada, for they know that the Free Trade Agreement will keep a bright and prosperous future in sight.

Perhaps the confidence my constituents and I share in the Free Trade Agreement comes from the fact that a deal with the United States is not new to us. Many of my constituents are auto workers, and like myself are card carrying members of the Canadian Auto Workers Union. We are very familiar with another U.S.-Canada agreement, a forerunner of the Free Trade Agreement, the Auto Pact.

That agreement between Canada and the United States successfully provided incentives and safeguards which guaranteed Canada's share of production. That agreement continues to fuel the growth of auto production in Canada. That agreement has not sold Canadians down the river as the NDP and Liberals threatened it would. That agreement is a perfect example of Canada's ability to maintain a strong identity while standing face to face with the largest industrialized country in the world.

Auto trade is essential to Canada's over-all economy. From 1985 to 1987, $3 billion was invested in auto assembly and parts plants in Canada. More than 140,000 Canadians earn their living directly from the auto industry. Many work for firms that supply auto makers with steel, rubber, textiles, plastic, and glass.

In fact, for Ontario, auto trade with the United States is the province's biggest export, amounting to over $30 billion per year, some 50 per cent of Ontario's exports to the United States, cars, trucks, auto parts, tires, and trailers make the automotive sector Canada's biggest single business. Much of this prosperity stems from 23 years of success under the Auto Pact.

The opposition Parties would have Canadians believe that the Auto Pact has been weakened. The opposition Parties would have Canadians believe that free trade does not increase access to the U.S. market. The opposition Parties would have Canadians believe that Canada will not be able to adjust to free trade with the United States. By misleading the Canadian public under the thin guise of truth, it is my belief that the opposition Parties have put Canada in jeopardy more so than a trade deal with the United States will ever do.

• (1730)

The truth is, the Auto Pact and all existing safeguards remain in place. The Big Three must maintain a one-to-one manufacturing-to-sale ratio in Canada in order to qualify for tariff-free imports of vehicles and original equipment parts.

Once the Free Trade Agreement is phased in and the tariffs have been eliminated on products of U.S. origin, the Big Three will have to continue to exceed the safeguard levels so that they can bring cars or parts into Canada from third countries duty-free, a provision worth $300 million annually and growing rapidly. That means big business for Canada's highly efficient, productive and competitive parts manufacturers. The Free Trade Agreement enhances the Auto Pact. That is what it does.

Another myth which I feel needs to be dispelled is that free trade does not increase access to the U.S. market. The truth is, the Free Trade Agreement is all about improving Canada's access to the U.S. market. The FTA increases the access of Canadian producers to the U.S. market through the elimination of tariffs and non-tariff barriers such as quotas, import restrictions, customs requirements and barriers taxes, and through stricter rules of origin and non-discrimination for goods and services.

It makes that access more secure by imposing further limitations on the scope of U.S. safeguard actions against Canada and by exempting Canada from American protectionist measures aimed at goods of other countries.

It will also ensure the fair and equitable settlement of trade disputes through the creation of a binding trade disputes settlement procedure.

Finally, the Free Trade Agreement will add to the security of access, requiring continued consultation between Canada and the U.S. on the issue of subsidies—a process that would have been unlikely without the Free Trade Agreement.

Critics have suggested that Canada did not gain exemption from U.S. trade law. But, it should be noted that the U.S. did not get an exemption from our countervailing and anti-dumping laws either. However, the trade liberalizing provisions of the Free Trade Agreement will ensure that American protectionism will not be used to hinder Canada's competitive advantage.

Finally, I should like to address the myth that Canada will not be able to adjust to free trade with the United States. The truth is that the adjustment to free trade will be a key feature of the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement over the next 10 years.

This Government has a proven commitment to job creation and of easing the process of employment adjustment. Since 1984, over 1.3 million jobs have been created, and the Economic Council of Canada predicts that another 250,000 new jobs will be created due to the Free Trade Agreement. This Government has also established the Advisory Council on Adjustment, which will make recommendations to the Government on the effectiveness of these programs and advise as to what changes may be necessary as the Canadian economy adjusts to meet the challenges of free trade.

The federal Government will also work closely with the provinces to ensure the effectiveness of Government programs and to ensure that Canadian workers and business take full advantage of the new opportunities provided by the Free Trade Agreement.

I know, and the people of Brampton—Malton know, that with new challenges we can expect change. I am proud to say that the people of Brampton—Malton are not afraid to meet that challenge.

If the Free Trade Agreement means prosperity for Canadians—and I believe it does; if the Free Trade Agreement means more jobs for Canadians—and I believe it does; if the Free Trade Agreement means a more secure future—and I believe it does, then we need the Free Trade Agreement implemented immediately.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour for me tonight to rise in the House as Member for the Gloucester riding. First of all, I want to thank my Gloucester constituents for having put their trust in me. I must admit that I am somewhat disappointed, as we are dealing with such an important issue, not to have been able to move amendments to a Bill which will have such a tremendous impact on the future of Canada. We have, of course, discussed several items of this bill over the past few days, but always with the same response.

Before dealing with the ideas which I wish to express on behalf of my constituents, I wish to pay tribute in a particular way to Mr. Roger Clinch who preceded me in the House as the Conservative Member for the Gloucester riding. May I take this opportunity to offer him and his family my best wishes, for we all know that political life is always difficult and, in his case, he was a worthy representative of the Gloucester riding. He has always represented all the groups in the riding in a reasonable and responsible manner.

[English]

I want to say that my predecessor in this House, Roger Clinch, deserves a lot of credit for the gentlemanly manner in which he conducted himself and the exemplary manner in which he represented the people of Gloucester.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Young (Gloucester): Politics is never an easy career, and with that in mind I want to express to Mr. Clinch's family the best wishes of all of us here. As well, with Christmas so near, I wish to extend the best wishes of myself and those in this place to the people of Gloucester County, the City of Bathurst, and the Acadian Peninsula. With Christmas so near, I know that they have many things to think about besides politics, but I hope that, after we have gone through this process, the people of Gloucester and the people of Canada will be the better for it.

In listening to Hon. Members on both sides of the House discuss the Free Trade Agreement with the United States, it became apparent that there is a general belief that because one votes for a given candidate, one believes in everything put forward by that candidate.

That is not my experience. In my experience, one does not necessarily agree with all of the positions put forward by the individual for whom one casts one's vote. One can think of a great many issues that have come before this august Chamber in the past, and will come before it again, such as abortion and capital punishment, on which there is a great divergence of views.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I believe that the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the U.S. falls into that category, a category in respect of which people have to address the issue on the basis of their own individual beliefs.

When I hear people discuss the Free Trade Agreement from the perspective of business, it makes me nervous. I understand as well as anybody why the Thomas d'Aquinos of Canada, why big business in Canada came down in favour of the deal—and I do not blame them for that. I am not one who believes that big business should be prevented from speaking out. I am always disappointed when I hear my friends to my left talk about their fear of profits. I believe in profits; I believe in business. But, I also believe in Canada. I believe it is a charade to suggest that anyone who questions the free trade deal as constituted in its present form is somehow letting down capitalism, is somehow letting down the market-place and the businessmen and businesswomen who make this country tick. I do not believe that for a moment, and with that in mind I want to address my remarks to those who believe that fear was an element in this campaign, fear generated by the Parties sitting to your left, Mr. Speaker.

I want to assure members of this House, through you, Mr. Speaker, that I never once had to raise the question of fear during the campaign.

When I decided to leave provincial politics and be a candidate for a seat in this place, I had already had a number of people speak to me about their fears. It was not an issue that I had to raise. My experience in the campaign was that people asked me to explain the free trade deal and address the question of whether their fears were founded, or not. That was the question. The fear was there. But why was it there? Who put it there? What brought that fear to the fore? It was mainly fear on the part of those in Canada who would be the most vulnerable under this type of a trade arrangement.

I think it is a shame that we were not able to address those fears over the course of the past two weeks. All we have done is to fan them. I do not think that any man or woman sitting in this House now wants the free trade deal to fail. I cannot conceive of people who hold themselves out to be servants of the people and want to do what is best for Canadians who would now get the smallest pleasure out of seeing one person lose their job or one business close because of the Free Trade Agreement.

What I believe we must do, and obviously we are not going to get a chance today or tonight, over the next year or two is to ensure that does not happen. We have to ensure every effort is made to support business in Canada, to ensure that people recognize that Canadians will stand up for our rights, for our traditional values, and we will fight those elements and concerns which have caused fear among our population.

The reason people in New Brunswick have fears is perhaps because we are not as dominated by The Globe and Mail, Southam and other news services, and those who interpret the news and politics in this country, as other parts of Canada may be. The Bangor Daily News today has an article in which Republican Senator William S. Cohen congratulates Democratic Senator George Mitchell on his election as Senate majority leader, one of the most powerful positions in the western world. The President of the United States is powerful but the Senate majority leader is also extremely powerful. He is from the State of Maine, a state with which we in New Brunswick are very familiar. Senator Cohen, who also happens to be, by virtue of the American system, a very influential senator, said, in response to a question about the Free Trade Agreement, that he and Mitchell will continue to lobby the new administration to start negotiations immediately with their Canadian counterparts about reducing Canadian subsidies.

I have listened for days to people on both sides of this House tell me that medicare is not a subsidy and regional development agreements are not subsidies. What I want is what I think most people in Canada want; I want the Government to tell me what a subsidy is. It is incredible that a sophisticated lawyer and successful businessman, such as the Prime Minister of Canada is, can really believe that I and others can accept that we can enter into a deal where the single most fundamental element of the deal with respect to the Canadian social fabric is undefined.

It was suggested that the chief negotiator for Canada, and I will come to him because I am reserving some time for him as he reserved it for me in the campaign, would not have the time to conclude some of the negotiations because of a limitation imposed probably by the people who paid his bills. That is legitimate because when you are given a mandate and time frame and you have a job to do, you must do it. However, we are being told we must accept a deal that was put together in two years, with last minute withdrawals by the chief negotiator and a rushing to Washington by senior elected government representatives, and then we should wait for both parties bilaterally to decide what subsidies are for five to seven years.

Throughout the American election campaign the Democratic presidential candidate and the vice-presidential candidate, who incidentally was thoroughly familiar with the purported free trade deal, never once to my knowledge, and I doubt any Member of this House is able to say otherwise, raised the issue of free trade. Even though the Democratic ticket was in a desperate situation they never once said the President or the Vice-President, now the President elect, were taken to the cleaners by the Canadian negotiators. Yet we fought an entire election campaign on it in Canada.

I know Canadians are good. I know we are strong. I know we are competitive. I know we can get things done with the best in the world. However, would you not think that at some point someone would have suggested that maybe, just maybe, there was some kind of a flaw in this agreement as it relates to the U.S.? Michael Dukakis or Lloyd Bentsen could have said this is not as good a deal as it appears for the U.S. Not a peep, and I think that is worrisome to Canadians, as it should be.

The fact of the matter is that we have to go on from here because one o'clock tomorrow morning this Bill will be passed. It will become the law of the land. Then it becomes a question of what do we do with it. How do we ensure that what we have put forward as legitimate concerns will be addressed? Are we going to leave it, for example, to someone like the chief negotiator for Canada?

When I run an election campaign, I am prepared to confront legitimate argument. I believe the participation of the chief negotiator for Canada during the election campaign was absolutely atrocious and irresponsible. I think Simon Reisman did a disservice to the Public Service of this country. He was paid by the taxpayers of this country for years and years. He worked in the most sensitive of positions, and was given a mandate to negotiate a deal. All of that is legitimate because he had been given those kinds of mandates before. However, to come back into the give and take and the heat of an election campaign and sit there in a mean-spirited way and defend his own work as a Public Servant of this country on the payroll of the Government of Canada was one of the most despicable actions ever undertaken by a Public Servant in the history of this nation.

Many of us know how little tolerance the chief negotiator for Canada has for people who oppose his point of view on anything. We know what he thinks of anyone who does not agree with him. We know what he purportedly thought of the chief negotiator for the U.S. He was a little red-headed kid still wet behind the ears. In years to come a hard assessment will be made of the disservice that Simon Reisman did to this country. If he behaved in the negotiations on behalf of Canada as irresponsibly as he behaved during the election campaign, we can only fear the worst.

I have some difficulty with the perception which has been created, that to question the free trade deal is to drive business out of Canada or discourage Canadians from continuing their entrepreneurial spirit, or that somehow those who question how this deal will impact on our way of life are letting down the side from an economic point of view. The fact is that Canada, regardless of the Free Trade Agreement, will have to continue to act multilaterally. If everyone to your right believes we should have all our eggs in the American basket, I think that is a very dangerous road to follow.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said that Canada could not survive without this deal, at least at the level to which we have become accustomed. Yet in the same breath he painted a glowing picture of his and his Government's accomplishments on the economic front over the last four years. It begs the question as to why we had to move bilaterally when traditionally nations like Canada are always safer and better served when dealing, in trade and other matters, on a multilateral basis.

• (1750)

The fear Canadians have is not just a fear that has been raised that senior citizens are concerned about their pensions. Senior citizens have a commitment to the country that they feel viscerally. They understand. They comprehend. They have been through it. I think it belittles senior citizens in New Brunswick and in Canada to suggest that because legitimate concerns and questions are raised that they are not able to make a serious judgment based on their own knowledge, their own capacities and experiences. Senior citizens have always understood the necessity to protect the vulnerable in this society because that is the way that Canada has developed for many, many years.

The Prime Minister and the free trade negotiator have promised prosperity in our time. They have returned from Washington with a document. All we can hope is that prosperity in fact will be the result. There was no will on the part of the Government to recognize that maybe in the haste there were some mistakes or some oversights. My hon. colleague proposed, as have many others, a series of amendments that we would like to put forward, to have them discussed and responded to. That has not been possible.

We have made those comments and suggestions in the light of what we perceive to be a need to ensure that there be some bench-marks, some capacity on the part of ordinary Canadians to assess where we are going, to be able to judge for themselves whether or not the free trade deal is unfolding as the universe should.

In closing, I would like to say this. I wish to be clear on it. I have tremendous respect for people who are loyal to their friends. I have had the pleasure and honour of knowing the Prime Minister since we were both boys. He is a man who values friendship, who gives it, who respects loyalty and values it as well. In the case of this Free Trade Agreement I would only point out that the chief negotiator may have had an agenda of his own. I do not know what it was. I hope that the Prime Minister and his Government do not feel that they are honour bound or in some way restricted in their capacity to assess on an ongoing basis what this Free Trade Agreement is doing for and to Canada.

With all due respect to Peter Newman and the people who quoted the article in Maclean's magazine about the assessment of the performances of recent Prime Ministers, if this free trade deal is a good thing for Canada and for its people, business people, senior citizens, the poor, the working people, then everybody in this House and everybody in this country will be very happy. Most likely, as with most deals, there will be good sides to it and less interesting sides to it.

I ask for the Prime Minister and the Government to make sure that mechanisms are in place to take into consideration many valid concerns raised not just in the House but more and more on a daily basis outside the House by thoughtful people. They must ensure that regardless of what Peter Newman thinks, when history judges the Prime Minister and this Government on free trade that in fact it is a forward-looking and progressive instrument of economic development, and that his contribution to history be remembered in a positive light and that he not go down as another R. B. Bennett. When one does not have the economic tools, when one does not have the economic capacity or the economic sovereignty, it is difficult to maintain the social programs that has made Canada a distinct and a great country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Willie Littlechild (Wetaskiwin): Mr. Speaker, it is certainly with the greatest of pride that I rise in this Chamber today. First, because it is with great honour that I can thank the Great Spirit for this historic occasion. It is an occasion that allows me to serve as a Member of Parliament for Wetaskiwin, but especially as the first treaty Indian to be elected to this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Littlechild: As it is my first speech, I would like to add on behalf of our constituency belated congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker, and to your colleagues for being re-elected to a very important job.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to on this very special occasion for me and my people say a few words in Cree.

[English translation from Cree]

Thank you very much to my family: Omahikan Pimotayo, the late Chief Dan Minde, Mrs. Justine Littlechild, Oskinikee's brothers, sisters and other relatives for continued support throughout this new challenge.

I would also like to thank all the leaders and members of the Four Nations, especially the elders for their guidance and prayers.

This is a great day. For the first time we will be able to have direct input into matters that affect us. I am proud to represent Hobbema.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Littlechild: At the outset, I want to take this opportunity to thank all of those people in Wetaskiwin who made a positive statement by their support and confidence. Thank you to all my campaign volunteers, a team of winners like the Wetaskiwin Relics. This is a responsibility, Sir, that I take very seriously.

Also, I thank my family: Helen, Teddi, Neil and Megan. On their behalf I want to wish all our constituents in Alberta, Indian country and all of Canada, the very best of the Christmas Season and, certainly, the very best in the New Year.

If I may I would like briefly to introduce to Hon. Members my constituency of Wetaskiwin, one that has been very ably served for four terms by my predecessor, Mr. Stan Schellenberger. I want to register our sincere thanks for his service and dedicated leadership during that time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Littlechild: Westaskiwin is a microcosm of Alberta. When one thinks of Alberta—oil and gas, agriculture, hard-working optimistic westerners come to mind, people of all ages, cultures and ambitions, optimistic ambitions, which leads me to a second reason why I believe my first presentation is one of very great honour. Our riding is a rural, urban and multicultural constituency with major centres including Leduc, Wetaskiwin, Ponoka and Lacombe.

I am particularly happy to address Bill C-2 and present for the record my support for the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. This agreement, like everywhere else in the country, became the central issue in the election campaign.

Let me then make some comments on how we perceive freer trade. The election was one of determining our future. It presented us all a challenge to shape a stronger economic future. We welcome that challenge. As previous Members have stated, trade with the U.S. is very important for Alberta. The U.S. is by far Alberta's largest market, accounting for about 75 per cent of its total exports. Much of this is in the energy sector, both natural gas and crude petroleum.

A part of our constituency includes Leduc No. 1. Since that time energy development has become a very vital source of our livelihood. It is important, then, for our constituency to develop a freer, more predictable and secure relationship with our single largest and most important trading partner. The Canada-U.S. agreement presents us all with potential economic growth.

Let us look closer for a moment at the petrochemical industry. With 75 per cent of Alberta's exports going to the U.S. duty-free entry will be advantageous. The proposed elimination of tariffs over five years will be a significant factor. It will help the industry remain competitive.

● (1800)

This House has heard from the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) and other colleagues—Members from Red Deer, Wild Rose, and Calgary Southwest—during the past few days about the Joffre gas plant. I am happy to say that the Joffre gas plant is in my constituency. It currently employs 500 people and 100 contractors. With freer trade, they will expand business and hire 250 more people and 30 more contractors. There is potential for even more from the spin-offs that will result in the various products that can then be marketed in the United States. They will save $40 million this year from tariffs, money they can invest locally.

In Wetaskiwin, Denim Drilling Ltd., a company involved in exploration and seismology, anticipates the implementation of the Canada-U.S. agreement because they know freer trade will benefit their company.

In Leduc, Mr. Brian Hughes, a businessman in the oil and gas industry for 25 years, and the owner of the Leduc Inn, believes "that freer trade is the best thing to happen in 100 years". He believes that his oil business will benefit due to his trading with the United States. In addition, with regard to the hotel industry, he believes that tourism will also have positive benefits.

In Nisku, J.L.M. Tanks and Equipment Ltd., a company that competes internationally, now feels it will be better able to negotiate and compete with the United States.

These are but a few examples of constituents who are looking forward optimistically to passage of the free trade legislation. The conventional oil and gas exploration and the related service industries are vital to the economy of our constituency.

Agriculture, from a business perspective, whether it is farming, cattle, dairy or poultry, must have a fair shot at surviving. The new Canada-U.S. agreement will greatly benefit the Wetaskiwin area farmers. Some recent American actions have hurt our agricultural exports.

Under the Free Trade Agreement, the new Canada-U.S. Trade Commission and special panels will be a place to solve such disputes quickly and fairly. Benefits like the greater access to U.S. markets that farmers will enjoy will, in turn, benefit consumers.

I want my constituents to be able to take advantage of the opportunities under the Canada-U.S. agreement. I want my constituents to become involved in a positive development of our economic future in Canada.

People like Mr. Ken Pohl, who is in the cattle business in Ponoka, and hog producers in the Lacombe area feel their companies will benefit from freer trade as they buy and sell cattle and hogs to the United States. Mr. Pohl says it will be easier for him to deal with the United States.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Throughout the debate, we have heard many comments on mandates. In the constituency of Wetaskiwin, it was a tough election, and a tough decision had to be made. Although there were other very serious concerns like the environment, deficit reduction, job creation, the criminal justice and parole system, all of which I am sure this House will address in due time, the major question was the Free Trade Agreement. On November 21, Wetaskiwin decided. The Progressive Conservative Party lost one poll, tied one and won 170.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Littlechild: I believe I have a mandate, as we won more votes than all of the other six candidates combined.

Let me now address a matter of which I am particularly proud to mention. A small but important part of my constituency, 6 per cent in fact, includes the Four Nations of Hobbema. I am a member of the Ermineskin Tribe of Cree Indians in Hobbema.

During my first campaign, I referred to a quote by one of our country's greatest patriots, Chief Dan George, when he said:

Let me humbly accept this new culture and through it rise up and go on. Like the thunderbird of old, I shall rise again out of the sea; I shall grab the instruments of the white man's success—his education, his skills. With these new tools, I shall build my race into the proudest segment of your society. I shall see our young braves and our chiefs sitting in the houses of law and government, ruling and being ruled by the knowledge and freedoms of our great land.

One of the great leaders of the Four Nations of Hobbema, Chief John Samson, started this dream along the path of reality in the early sixties when he hitchhiked here to Ottawa with Mr. Stan Daniels to bring native concerns to Canada's attention.

I would like to indicate that many of those concerns, for example as they relate to energy, health, agriculture and others, are very similar to areas outside of the Four Nations of Hobbema. I must, however, indicate to the House that I was dismayed, to put it politely and mildly, when anti-free traders came to our reserves. They came to scare our people, as they did in other areas, whether it was about social programs or sovereignty.

An Hon. Member: What a lot of rubbish.

Mr. Littlechild: On the reserves they said: "You will lose the Indian Act. You will lose your treaty rights if you support the Free Trade Agreement." This was proliferated without any substantiated arguments whatsoever. Perhaps it was because they knew that the Constitution Act, Section 25 and Section 35, entrench those treaty rights, and the Free Trade Agreement has nothing to do with that whatsoever.

The Four Nations of Hobbema have been doing business in the United States for the last eight years at least. They have not lost their sovereignty. They have not lost their social services. They have not lost their treaty rights. They now have a chance to continue maximizing on those economic opportunities in the United States as they work toward self-reliance.

With the mandate expressed in Wetaskiwin, including Devon, Calmar, Thorsby, Warburg, Breton, Bentley, Rimbey, Buck Lake, Alder Flats, Ferintosh, Mulhurst, Ma-Me-O, Nisku and all points in between, we want to register support for the Free Trade Agreement and, in particular, Bill C-2.

Last, I want to refer to youth because a significant part of our population is 25 years of age and under. As future employers, employees and consumers, we should provide as secure an economic environment as possible. According to the Economic Council of Canada, the Canada-U.S. agreement will lead to the creation of an additional 30,600 jobs in Alberta. I want to ensure Wetaskiwin gets its share. The Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said in this House on October 5, 1988:

We go forward with confidence in our future, confidence in our country and, most of all, confidence in the youth of Canada . . . We have set a course for a stronger, a more united and a more prosperous Canada.

We want to ensure to those youth in the Wetaskiwin constituency that there will be a positive opportunity for them to become nation builders, nation builders as all of our elders, parents and senior citizens have been in the past.

In conclusion, I would ask the pessimists of this agreement to consider: What if it works? Are we as Canadians afraid of success?

An Hon. Member: If it works, that is fantastic.

Mr. Littlechild: As a Golden Bear, I learned early that the only limits we have are those we place on ourselves.

I want to return with a gift to my constituency this Christmas season: Yes, Wetaskiwin youth, you can have those jobs because you can compete. Go for it, Hugh Denim, Derrick Thorne, Ralph Vold, Four Nations, because you can compete. The Free Trade Agreement will allow us to shape a stronger economic future. Madam Speaker, Wetaskiwin supports Bill C-2.

[Translation]

Finally, Madam Speaker, I want to thank the Progressive Conservative team with which I am anxious to work towards making our native land a strong and united Canada.

• (1810)

[English]

Mr. Jim Peterson (Willowdale): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on the eve of this trade deal becoming law. It is now cast in stone. It has been made evident to us that no amendments will be permitted and that no amendments can be debated.

In spite of my tremendous misgivings about this deal, all of us in this Chamber and all Canadians hope that it will work. We hope that the expectations of those supporting it are met, and we hope that their promises to Canadians about this deal are kept.

We remind the Government of what its promises concerning this deal have been: More jobs, better jobs, secure access to the American market, greater prosperity for all Canadians, security for our social programs including medicare, unemployment insurance, health care, and pensions.

The Government promised an adjustment and retraining program. It has promised us that our programs to create regional economic opportunities in Canada will be protected. It has said that we will maintain our ability to preserve and promote Canadian culture. The Government has indicated that we will be able to create new social programs, such as child care and maternity leave.

Canadians are watching. Canadians will not let the Government forget its promises. They will keep these promises tacked to their refrigerator doors.

Because further negotiations are continuing with the United States concerning the implementation of this deal, it is important that the Government does its homework. It is important that it does its homework much better than it has in the past.

For example, the Americans have already created this long list of what they consider to be Canadian trade practices that they find offensive under the terms of the deal. Where is our list? We have undertaken with the Americans to review their laws and our laws in terms of trade to see if they might be harmonized. I hope we bargain astutely.

There is also the important definition of subsidies. We implore the Government to do its homework. We do not want these issues negotiated as if they are just the closing of one more Canadian branch plant.

According to this deal, I think Canadians will find themselves in a different type of business world. First, American firms are given national treatment here in Canada. They must be treated the same as Canadian firms. We can no longer require that subsidiaries here in Canada produce jobs, hire Canadians, create exports or do research and development here. We can no longer require productivity gains that come from procedures such as world product mandating.

What will happen to our plants here in Canada? Already we have more foreign ownership of our industries in Canada than in any other developed country in the world. Under this deal we will see further rationalization of branch plants on a North American basis, such as with Gillette, Catelli, and Northern Telecom, where the plants move out of Canada. We will see them being phased out in Canada because the bigger plants in the United States can simply put on a few extra runs, a few extra shifts and service the entire Canadian market.

An even greater concern is where new plants will be established in order to take advantage of this new North American market. Let us pretend that we are rational business people and the board of directors of a company that is called upon to make this type of decision. Let us consider the advantages that the United States has as a base for these new plants.

First, the U.S. climate is more amenable and construction costs are less. Second, establishing in the United States means being closer to the biggest part of the North American market. Third, wages in the United States, in many cases, are much lower than here in Canada. In nine U.S. States the minimum wage law is $3 or less per hour and 12 states have absolutely no minimum wage laws.

In addition, if we establish in the United States, we have the advantage of a free trade zone with Mexico, the so-called Maquiladora Region. It is a band three kilometres to four kilometres deep that runs along the entire border inside Mexico. Goods produced in that area come into the United States totally duty-free. The wages paid in that Maquiladora zone are less than 80 cents U.S. an hour.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

General Motors has 24 plants in the Maquiladora zone of Mexico, employing 27,000 workers. If we are talking about a level playing field, that is not it.

Let us look at another advantage. Industries which relied on cheaper Canadian energy, industries that are energy intensive, no longer have to come to Canada to get it either for the consumption of energy or for the transformation of energy into a further by-product. They can now take our abundant Canadian energy and use it to produce and sell back the finished goods into Canada.

We have given up one of the great advantages we were given at the time of creation. While we got the distances and the cold weather, we were given the energy. But we have now given away that one advantage.

When we consider further as a board of directors where we would locate our new plant, we must consider, as more of our Canadian financial institutions are taken over by American firms, whether we would want to be closer to the head offices where the real decisions are made.

Finally, we have not defined subsidies under this trade deal. U.S. trade law will still apply so that we have no exemption from Section 301 of the 1974 trade Bill and no exemption from the omnibus trade Bill. The U.S. trade laws can still apply, and will apply, as they are amended by the Americans from time to time. We did not get that exemption.

If we are going to establish our plant, we are going to put it in the United States so that if Canada applies its trade laws we would lose only one-tenth of the market. It will not be put in Canada where the U.S. can still apply its trade laws and wipe out nine-tenths of our market.

I despair under this trade deal as to whether we will get those new jobs, those new industries that have been promised to us.

I think we have an even greater challenge in Canada in terms of our economic destiny. Canada is largely a resource based economy. In 1930, Argentina, a country similar to Canada in many ways, had the fourth highest standard of living in the world. It is now thirtieth.

Are we going the way of Argentina? How do we learn to compete head-on with the great manufacturing powers such as Japan, Korea, Taiwan, Malaysia, Singapore, the Common Market countries and the United States? They did not do it simply through trade deals. In Canada it will require a concerted effort and a new way of looking at things. Simply allowing the market-place to determine the types of jobs we have in Canada will not give us what we need. I suggest that to be world leaders in this fight for competitiveness, Canadians, over the next few years, will have to start looking 20 and 30 years down the road to see where we want to be. We will have to start planning what type of economy we will build.

For those in the House to whom planning is an anathema, take a look at successful businesses. They plan their futures. They have five and 10-year plans and work toward them. If we are to be successful the way many of the newly-emerging industrialized countries have been, we too will have to plan. We will have to put together our best management, labour, entrepreneurs, financial institutions and educators, and set directions for where we want to be and then work toward those plans.

One very major component of anything we will achieve has to be education. We in Canada are falling behind our major world competitors in the way we educate our people. We have the fewest scientists and engineers being graduated of any industrialized nation. In terms of skills training, only 30 per cent of the people who graduate from high school either go on to post-secondary education or have actual skills training. That means that 70 per cent of our young people are going into the workforce untrained. We have to address this problem immediately.

I commend to Hon. Members of all Parties the National Apprenticeship Council that was recommended in our platform for this election, bringing together Government, business, labour and educators to set in place a national apprenticeship program. I believe that we can learn extensively from Local 183 of the International Labourers Union and Local 506 of the Operating Engineers Union, which in Toronto have entered into cooperative arrangements with the businesses they work with. The unions and businesses are working very closely together to set up their own training programs to meet the needs that are not being met in any other fashion.

On September 16, Jean de Grandpre the head of the Prime Minister's Industrial Readjustment Council, indicated in a speech to the Montreal Neurological Institute that in Japan, 8.6 per cent of the Gross National Product is spent on education. In Canada, it is about half that at 4.8 per cent. No wonder Japan has had such spectacular economic success.

Another aspect for incorporation into our planning is the need for research and development here in Canada. We know that technological innovation is the single greatest factor in determining economic growth. In the 1984 election, the Government promised to double research and development here in Canada by the end of its first term in office. In fact, the level of research and development in Canada has actually decreased. It is now at the abysmally low rate of 1.35 per cent of Gross National Product.

In Canada, through Government support, we provide for 20 per cent of the industrial research and development that is done. In the U.S.A., it is twice that rate at 40 per cent. Again, as leaders such as Jean de Grandpre have said: "And to continue the bad news for Canadian technology, Government support last year was less than it was the year before". There is great concern over the Budget that has again cut incentives for R and D.

Last, we have to look at the new approaches in many other countries that have succeeded in creating productivity and competitiveness. In Japan, for example, through MITI and other institutions that co-operate with financial institutions, labour, the Government and business, they have a plan whereby robots are leased to businesses so the businesses can afford them. In Taiwan, a Dr. Casper Shih, a Canadian, has been running a program which has targeted 1,500 small businesses. They send in experts at government expense to study how they can increase productivity and exports. The businesses, if they accept these suggestions, can pay for the new products they require, such as computers or robots, out of increased productivity, and that is the only way they pay for them. It is an imaginative approach which has worked tremendously well in that environment. Programs like these are worthy of study.

In addition, we will need financial support. A person in my riding of Willowdale told me the other day that he wanted to start a new business. He was prepared to put up farmland in eastern Ontario as collateral. The financial institutions would not lend on it because they do not want farmland in that part of the country. This is a travesty.

We have to set our own course to create an economy in Canada which is competitive and strong. The trade deal will cause us some problems in setting our own economic course and our own economic goals.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Because of the provisions regarding investment, we can no longer require performances on exports, R and D and jobs in Canada from certain firms. Our energy is no longer an advantage to us alone. We have given up the right to use certain types of tariff policies such as drawbacks in order to assist the establishment in Canada of competitive world-class manufacturing operations. We can no longer have any sort of managed trade such as the Auto Pact, lauded by all sides of the House as a deal that worked for the benefit of Canada. It was not free trade, it was managed trade. One car had to be produced in Canada for every car brought into Canada duty free.

In conclusion, we on this side say to the Government, Canadians are watching. They expect the Government to honour its promises. We beg of it, in the continuing negotiations with the Americans on implementation of this deal, negotiate better than it did in forming the deal.

Start with the real issues. The issue is not who we trade with, the real issue is what we trade with. Start with education. Start with research and development. Start planning a national approach for the benefit of all Canadians. That is what Canadians expect. That is how we are going to get our economic growth through the years.

It is a great honour for me to sit again with you in this Parliament.

[English]

I am very pleased to once again be the Member of Parliament for Willowdale. It is a honour for me to have returned and a great pleasure to be with you.

Mr. Al Johnson (Calgary North): Madam Speaker, I am honoured to have the opportunity to address this House on an issue of such national significance as the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America. The agreement will play a vital role in the development of my constituency of Calgary North as well as the whole of Canada.

• (1830)

As so many others have done, I would also like to extend my congratulations to the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) on his well deserved re-election as Speaker. His reputation as a member of this house for fairness, wisdom, and effectiveness is known to us all. It is with pleasure and respect that I recognize him as Speaker and you, as his representative, in this venerable House today, Madam Speaker.

It is with a complex mixture of humility and pride that I have taken my seat in this Chamber and with which I address you today. I am deeply indebted to the people of Calgary North for the confidence they have placed in me and for the overwhelming support they gave me on election day. I intend to ensure that they are effectively represented while I have the opportunity to serve them here.

I would like to extend my warmest congratulations to the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet for the outstanding leadership they provided in the recent election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnson: It was leadership that Canada needed, leadership that Canada wanted, and leadership that Canadians once again have. I am proud to be a part of the Progressive Conservative team that will lead Canada into the 21st century. I would also like to thank members of my family who worked so hard to help me achieve my lifetime goal of being a representative here. My sincere appreciation to June, Cynthia, David, and Thomas; to Keith, Mark, and Nickie.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Johnson: Calgary North is one of the oldest constituencies in Alberta. It has its roots in the original constituency of Calgary East, and it was created by redistribution in 1952. The citizens of Calgary North have shared the Progressive Conservative vision for more than 40 years, having been represented by Mr. Paul Gagnon who, as you know, brought clarity and integrity to the deliberations of this House for the last four years.

It is an honour to follow in his footsteps and those of such other dedicated servants of the people as Bill Wright, who represented Calgary North with determination after succeeding Eldon Woolliams, who is still remembered on the Hill as an outstanding member and a hard-working contributor to the activities and committees of this House. This vital Canadian constituency was first represented by the late Hon. Douglas Scott Harkness, who made a substantial contribution to this House and to the nation as the Minister of Agriculture in 1957 and later as the Minister of National Defence in the early 1960s.

Calgary North is essentially a residential constituency and the people who live there are ordinary Canadians who, under the leadership of dedicated Members of Parliament, have, as I have indicated, guarded the Progressive Conservative vision of Canada for more than 40 years. These people work in the oil and gas industry as geologists, engineers, geophysicists, technicians, drillers, foremen, technologists, secretaries, clerks, accountants, lawyers, administrators, salesmen, rough-necks, and labourers. They work in the oil and gas service industries providing computer services, well logging, consulting, catering, well serving, pipeline construction, operating and maintenance services. They teach in schools and universities, such as the University of Calgary and the Southern Alberta Institute of Technology. They operate day care centres, work in stores as sales clerks, supervisors, and managers. They serve in restaurants and motels. They drive trucks, build homes as carpenters, electricians, dry wallers, and labourers. They work for the telephone and communication companies, for newspapers, and for printing companies. They work for Governments providing social services, health care, and administrative support. They process meat and agricultural products. They sell real estate and insurance, and they provide financial services and computer support for industry. They work in a wide variety of manufacturing industries; most important, in manufacturing high-technology products.

Calgary North is a constituency that makes people welcome. This is demonstrated by the great diversity of ethnic and cultural backgrounds that are represented in our communities. Calgary North is home to native Canadians, to people of British, French, Irish, Japanese, Korean, Vietnamese, Indian, Chinese, Czechoslovakian, Italian, Hungarian, Yugoslavian, and German backgrounds. Indeed, Madam Speaker, virtually every culture, ethnic group, and race is represented in this community where all thrive and share the vision of a land of opportunity.

These people are the quintessential ordinary Canadians and free trade is important to them. It is fundamental to them in achieving their vision of Canada. On November 21, they decided what course they wanted their future to take.

It is with the vision and convictions of my constituency that I address this House today. Not only am I privileged to represent Calgary North with its heritage of hard work, hospitality, and free enterprise traditions, I am also proud to be a member of the Progressive Conservative team that has developed a vision for Canada that is consistent with this heritage; a team with great leadership already in place and ready to start implementing its decision by implementing the Free Trade Agreement.

This is a vision which sees a nation bold enough not only to compete with the best in the world but to allow people the maximum opportunity to act freely and reach their full potential. It is a view of Canada as a caring society, one which provides a safety net for all those who fall, but a safety net which is taut enough to allow them to bounce back. It is not a socialist vision of a country so complicated by government regulations and bureaucracy that the very people it tries to help become entangled in its mesh, their lives and opportunities smothered in debilitating red tape.

The Canada which I and my constituents envisage cannot come about unless we have a healthy, dynamic economy. The Free Trade Agreement is a fundamental cornerstone in making this vision a reality. This agreement promises a nation which is sovereign, competitive and resourceful. It releases Canadians to trade freely. It permits Canadians to hone and perfect their skills. It allows Canadians to prosper.

Let us take a look at why the Free Trade Agreement is so important to the people of Calgary North. For the oil and gas industry, the Free Trade Agreement provides assured access to our largest export market. Calgary North has suffered too often from boom and bust cycles. Once the Free Trade Agreement is in place, we will no longer have to worry about waking up one morning and discovering that our exports have been cut off or that we have a made-in-Canada price for oil, a made-in-Canada price that sucks $60 billion out of the Alberta economy. That is right, Madam Speaker. Hon. Members on the other side may be upset that this Progressive Conservative Government has put a stop to the practice of ripping off Alberta. They are not happy with the concept of market prices for our resources, but the people of Calgary North have made their position clear.

During the recent election as a newcomer to politics I was shocked at the depth to which the opposition Parties would stoop. I had numerous calls from elderly constituents, some of them literally in tears because they had been told they were going to lose their pensions and their medicare. There is nothing which can excuse the development of this abject fear in our senior citizens. The stories we have heard, that we cannot compete with the U.S. because of our medicare costs, are completely ridiculous. It costs a Canadian company only $18 per month per employee for complete medicare. An American company trying to compete would have to pay up to $100 or more for the same type of coverage. Even if there were such a condition in the Free Trade Agreement, there is no way that we would have to consider lowering our programs in order to be competitive.

• (1840)

The Free Trade Agreement means a stronger economy and the ability to work on eliminating the deficit and reducing the national debt. It is only then that we will be able to pay for better services, not only for pensions and health care, but for education where there is a real need for expanded programs and the development of enriched curricula.

For the people of Calgary North who work in the retail and wholesale trade, the Free Trade Agreement means increased economic activity, greater consumption, growth in sales, and more jobs. Under the Free Trade Agreement, with the elimination of tariffs, there will be a better selection of goods and lower and more competitive prices. Not only will owners, managers, and employees in the retail and wholesale sectors benefit, but the ultimate beneficiaries will be ordinary Calgaryans and ordinary Canadians.

In manufacturing, the larger market provided by the Free Trade Agreement will mean opportunities for increased efficiency and product specialization. This is particularly important in high-technology industries, such as the manufacture of telecommunications and electronic components.

In the petrochemical industry 75 per cent of our products are exported to the United States. At the present time tariffs on polyethylene are 12.5 per cent and 18 per cent on methanol. Under free trade these will be removed. I can assure Hon. Members that we will see significant expansion and diversification, and many more jobs for people in Calgary North in this important oil and gas-based industry. This is an important point. It is essential to have diversification and expansion of industries that process and upgrade our natural resources, if the people of Calgary North are to avoid the boom and bust cycles I mentioned earlier.

The Free Trade Agreement will also contribute substantially to increases in construction activity. The increased economic activity will require more residential and more commercial building. This will mean more jobs for our carpenters, electricians, and trades people. Less expensive materials will be available and therefore there will be opportunities to purchase buildings and building materials at lower prices. I could go on. However, from my perspective the most important thing about the Free Trade Agreement is what it says about Canada and the world.

The world is changing. Many trading blocs have been and are being established. We are all familiar with the European Economic Community, OPEC, and the Australia-New Zealand pact. It is not that simple. Other informal blocs exist or are forming, and they will eventually become formalized. For example, Canadian coal companies do not have a free market in Asia. There is an informal agreement that every year no country in the Pacific Rim will discuss coal purchases until the Japanese have met with Canadian coal producers and hammered the price as low as they can get it. Then other customers, such as Korea, Taiwan, and Hong Kong will come in and negotiate their terms. These tactics, and many others, conspire to isolate Canada to its disadvantage.

South American and Malaysian countries are also discussing the establishment of trading blocs. This is the new regime in international trade, and Canada must develop its own alliances. In my view, the Free Trade Agreement is the first step in this process. Canada is a trading nation with some 30 per cent of its GNP directly related to trade, as compared with approximately 15 per cent in Japan and 10 per cent in the United States. We have 25 million people strung out like a string of beads across the Arctic Circle. They cannot afford to be isolated from world trade and the substantial market these new trading blocs represent.

Unlike the EEC agreement, the Free Trade Agreement with the United States does not prevent us from negotiating similar deals with other countries. This must be our future goal, but first let us get on with the Free Trade Agreement.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, as I said earlier, my riding of Calgary North is a most friendly and neighbourly area. The ordinary Canadians who live there are the same who were hosts last Winter to the world during the 15th Olympic Games. In my opinion, these people are far from being self-centered, because several thousands of them worked as volunteers to entertain the world during this prestigious event. They show the same kind of friendship and enthusiasm whenever they welcome other Canadians in their midst, no matter their race or colour, not only to live and prosper together, but to share their hospitality.

We are an open and warm community with diverse origins and traditions. We believe that the Free Trade Agreement with the United States is a concrete manifestation of our openmindedness and desire to meet the world community on an equal footing.

[English]

The people of Calgary North have decided. They have a vision of Canada that embraces not only free trade with the United States of America, but one which looks outward to the whole world, and a vision that within Canada there would be less regulation and more freedom and opportunity.

In closing, Madam Speaker, may I take this opportunity to wish you and your family, and most particularly the Right Hon. Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), the Hon. Leader of the NDP, all my colleagues in the House, my constituents, and their families, all the blessings of the season.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Madam Speaker, I am pleased that the people of New Westminster—Burnaby have given their confidence to me to represent them here in the House of Commons. My constituency has a long history of sending men and women from the New Democratic Party here to represent its interests.

In fact, a portion of Burnaby was once represented by a great parliamentarian, former Leader of our Party, and distinguished Canadian, Tommy Douglas. It was Tommy Douglas and the CCF who had the courage to lead the political fight to bring universal medicare to Canadians and Canadian families.

In recent years the new riding of New Westminster—Burnaby was ably represented by the present Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway (Mr. Robinson) and by a woman who has been at the forefront of the struggle for world peace, Ms. Pauline Jewett.

The overwhelming concern of the people in the riding of New Westminster—Burnaby is the trade deal that we are debating tonight. This is an historic debate for Canada, a debate that will affect the future of our country. The men and women who came here before us have ensured that Canadian social and cultural values were protected and have built our country on a co-operative model.

In contrast, the society in the United States has been driven mainly by market principles. We in the New Democratic Party are simply saying that our Canadian traditions, our social policies, and our values should prevail. We must maintain our own political independence.

• (1850)

The major industries in New Westminster—Burnaby are fishing and forestry, and there is fear in the hearts and minds of the men and women who work in those industries because of this Free Trade Agreement. They have watched, as we all have watched, the President of the United States reimpose the unfair tariff on shakes and shingles, and they know that the Progressive Conservative Government in Ottawa imposed an unfair 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber. There is no protection in this legislation against further punitive action by the United States.

B.C.'s fishing industry, according to the B.C. Fisheries Council, generates $733 million a year in sales and employs up to 8,000 men and women.

The trade regulation exempts regulations in respect of the east coast fishery. Why not for the west coast fishery? Where is the fairness in this deal for British Columbia?

The Fisheries Minister is now asking for new regulation that will only provide for landing. The Fisheries Council has already said that some of the major employers in British Columbia will move to Washington State if there are no proper grading or gutting regulations to ensure that Canadian fish can go to Canadian ports and plants to be processed. Thousands of B.C. men and women will lose their jobs. Where is the fairness for B.C. workers and their families? Next week Canada presents this proposal, and it must protect the B.C. fishery.

While a majority of Canadians stand to be hurt by this trade deal, Canadian women will suffer disproportionately. This Tory Government has given no consideration to the economic crisis facing Canadian women today.

Working women are concentrated in the very sectors that will be hardest hit by the trade deal. Almost 85 per cent of working women work in the service industries: health, education, telecommunications, and computer services. All are directly affected by this deal.

The pressure to compete on a level playing field will also put pressure on our minimum wage laws. Canadian women will pay the price, because too often they are concentrated in jobs that pay as little as the law requires.

Women's organizations from across Canada have told this Government of their very real concern. But once again, Canadian women have been ignored by this Progressive Conservative Government. Where is the fairness for Canadian women?

I have listened again and again, and most recently to the preceding speaker, to government Members saying that we New Democrats frightened Canada's older citizens during the recent election campaign.

I find this to be a very patronizing attitude toward our seniors. Older Canadians built this nation. Older Canadians have defended Canada in two world wars; older Canadians struggled through the Great Depression and the hungry 1930s; older Canadians, Madam Speaker, can and do think for themselves.

One Voice, the Canadian Seniors network, made a presentation last July to the legislative committee considering the trade deal. I should like to read the closing paragraph of that presentation. It is as follows:

One Voice does not want us to close without stating that Canada's seniors, some 2.7 million persons, have a huge stake in this country. They have worked, fought, argued, voted, volunteered, saved and enjoy Canada. They don't want it to remain the same. They see it as a vibrant, progressive, evolving, participatory nation with sound basic principles stated through our provision for those who need special consideration, recognizing differences in regions, cultures and experiences. This Canadianism is worth protecting. It is our identity and seniors want to remain independently, uniquely Canadian.

Those are the words of the seniors. I do not think that we frighten them.

My final point relates to the issue of subsidies. The Government failed to reach agreement in this most critical area. During the next five to seven years the Governments of Canada and the United States will negotiate what constitutes a subsidy. Already Ronald Reagan has told the U.S. Congress that his administration has no higher priority than the elimination of Canadian subsidies which adversely affect U.S. industries.

Of course our social programs are in jeopardy, if not directly by the Americans, then indirectly as Canadian big business demands lower costs in order to compete on the so-called level playing field.

Already, only one month after the election, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association is calling for a royal commission on social programs.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

This confirms the prediction by New Democrats that business groups will apply pressure to reduce social spending in Canada. But there is one exemption on subsidies. If any government subsidy is "sensitive to the defence of the country" it will be permissible. The result of this exemption may well mean an increased focus on military industries. This is not what the majority of Canadians want for our country.

A former Deputy Minister of Finance recently made other points about the negotiations, as reported in the Financial Times of November 28, 1988. I quote the words of Mickey Cohen, a former Deputy Minister of Finance:

We will face greater pressures to harmonize, either because the Americans are asking for it or because our own businessmen are saying, "If we're going to compete, we have to look more like the guys we're competing with. Our cost structures have to be more sound." That all along has been the valid criticism of the responsible people in the Liberals and the NDP. The problem isn't in the four corners of the agreement. It's in the pressures that will come indirectly from it.

It is not just New Democrats who are concerned about this disastrous trade deal; it is health care workers, nurses, older Canadians, teachers, church groups. In fact, a majority of Canadians are opposed to this disastrous trade deal. The Government must listen. This Government must address the deep felt concerns of Canadians.

New Democrats in this place and New Democrats right across Canada will continue the fight to protect our social programs; will continue to push for environmental protection; will continue the fight for fair regional development programs now and after the implementation of this deal.

Hon. Charles Mayer (Minister of State (Grains and Oilseeds)): At the outset I should like to congratulate the Speaker of the House on his re-election as Speaker, as well as his re-election as a Member of Parliament. As well, I should like to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your reappointment as Deputy Speaker of this place, an office you discharged so well in the previous Parliament.

I also want to thank the people of Lisgar—Marquette, a new constituency arising out of redistribution, who saw fit to elect me as their representative in the House of Commons of Canada.

It was the fourth time that I sought election to this place and the fourth time that I have been successful. Given that it was a new riding in which I offered myself for election for this Parliament, I want to express a particular note of thanks for those who supported me in that election.

I believe that I found support among the voters for several reasons. Elections are not simple affairs. People in general pay a lot of taxes to government, which governments use, in turn, to provide more and more services to the people of the country, and elections are held so that people can pass judgment on the performance of government and what it proposes for its next mandate.

• (1900)

There were many issues in the last election. I do not think very many of us would disagree that one of the most important issues, if not the most important, was trade. That is why we are here tonight. That is understandable because Canada is very dependent on trade.

It has been said many times but I think it bears repeating. Roughly 30 per cent of everything Canada produces has to be traded. Agriculture, which is part of my responsibility in this Government and has been my life as a farmer and continues to be, is very obviously part of that. In fact, somewhere between 40 cents and 50 cents of every dollar a Canadian farmer earns comes from trade. Trade is very important to us.

That tells you a couple of things. It tells you first that we produce in surplus, and we have to be thankful for that. Second, when we export that much, it tells you that we better be good at what we do. In fact, we are. We export about 80 per cent of the wheat we grow because it is high quality and because we are reliable suppliers with a good reputation. We export, on average, close to 70 per cent of all the Canola we produce, either in raw form or as oil. We export something like 50 per cent of the barley we produce. We export 40 per cent of the hogs we produce, so you can see from those numbers that agriculture is very dependent on trade.

What this trade agreement with the U.S. does is simply provide us with an opportunity to continue to be able to sell into the largest and richest market in the world on a more secure basis. It is just that, an opportunity. It is not a guarantee. It is not a perfect deal. It provides us with a much better opportunity to continue to sell in that market.

To use Canola as an example, people have talked about the fact that we lose the Western Grain Transportation Act immediately with respect to that product shipped into the U.S. through the West Coast. On the other hand, tariffs on Canola oil going into the U.S. are being phased out over a ten-year period. Those people say that that is not right. We should not have signed the deal on that basis. That is an example of where we did not get everything we asked for and would have liked to have had. They are right, it would have been better to phase out our transportation assistance over the same ten-year period.

However, if you look at the numbers you will find that after three years we are net beneficiaries so that we have the next seven years we enjoy a net gain. In fact, from the figures I have, the Canola industry stands to benefit to the tune of $25 million over that ten years. Even though it is not a perfect deal, you can see that on balance we are better to have the arrangement than to be without it.

We firmly and freely admit, up front, that it is not a perfect deal, but it is much better to do those kinds of things with that agreement than not to have it and face the possibility of the Americans using one of the sections of their Agriculture Adjustment Act to restrict us even more.

The Hon. Liberal Member for Willowdale (Mr. Peterson) talked about planning. We are going to have to plan. We agree with him. Certainly one of the things we must have when we plan is certainty. If we are to sell into a market, one of the things that gives us certainty is a set of rules. That is what this arrangement is. He asked: "How are we going to get our own agenda if we do not have certainty of access?" This agreement provides us with much more certainty of access than we would have without it.

The Opposition says we cannot compete. The Americans have a longer growing season than we do. They are able to produce two crops a year. Their yield per acre is higher than ours. In some cases they are right but understand that because of our climate and because of the shorter growing season, we have long days and cool nights during the summer which allow us to produce a different and we like to think a higher quality product. It is for that precise reason that Canola is in demand in the U.S. We should not be fooled by people who say that we are uncompetitive because of our northern climate. It is exactly the opposite.

We produce probably the highest quality milling wheat in the world. Last year the Americans bought almost one million tonnes of wheat from Canada. I understand, as well, that last year the U.S. was the largest wheat exporter in the world. It exported over 40 million tonnes. Why would they buy from Canada at the same time that they are exporting 40 million tonnes? Not because we are good fellows and they want to do us a favour, they bought it from us because we produce a high quality product.

If you read the agreement it provides that we shall have more certainty of access to that market. That gives us a chance to plan. It gives us a chance to invest for a more certain return over a long period of time.

The Opposition has said that the U.S. will put our vegetable growers out of business. Again, do not be fooled by that. People should know that there are substantial food processing industries in Wisconsin, Michigan, and New York State. You would think if anyone was going to put those three states out of business it would be California. Look on the map. Compare the latitude of southern Ontario to that of Wisconsin. It is roughly the same. In fact, southern Ontario is farther south than the northern parts of Wisconsin. You want to know something? Some 25 per cent of the canned vegetables in the U.S. come from Wisconsin. That does not mean we are going to have any kind of guarantees in that market, but it sure tells you that with a better set of rules we will have more certainty of access.

We did not elect any Members from Prince Edward Island. That province is well known for growing potatoes. I come from Manitoba and we like to think we produce some pretty high quality potatoes. We do. Yet, I think it is fair to say that P.E.I. has a reputation for producing probably the highest quality potatoes in Canada. I visited the province during the election campaign and went into the Cavendish Farms processing plant. They told me that 30 per cent of their production went to the U.S. They want the trade agreement because it gives them more certainty of access to that market. Look at the map again and figure out how far it is from Charlottetown to New York and then compare that with the distance from Charlottetown to Toronto. Look at the population down there and the tremendous potential that represents for a high quality product to be processed here and sold in the U.S.

If you look at the value added side of agriculture, in percentage terms Prince Edward Island has the most value added agricultural sector in Canada. That means investment, jobs, transportation. If you are in Prince Edward Island and produce a high quality product, which they do, and you have a large market closer than Toronto, the largest market in Canada; if you have a market in the U.S. which is larger than the biggest market in Canada and you are closer to that U.S.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

market, does it not make sense to put in place an agreement that provides a set of rules that gives you more certainty of access to that market? That is all this agreement does.

When you start looking at some of the things we are doing in this agreement, it makes you wonder what the people in the Opposition have been saying. Why should we as Canadian farmers—and I speak as a Canadian farmer—be afraid when we have a product second to none around the world?

• (1910)

As I said, 40 per cent of our hogs are exported. That is a pretty impressive record. It speaks to the quality of the product that we export. There is an outfit in Saskatoon called Intercontinental Packers. It began selling into the U.S. market four years ago. To be more specific, it began selling to the California market four years ago. At that time it had very little product moving into the United States.

During the election campaign I had a chance again to visit with one of the people who manages the company. He told us that they, out of 28 brands, are now number three in the California market. This company has 200 jobs in Saskatoon. It is a value-added type of situation. The hogs are produced in the province, as is the barley. The barley is fed to the hogs. The hogs are taken to the slaughtering plant. They are processed and then shipped to California. That is good for us. He thinks that within five years, with the trade agreement, he can create an additional 500 jobs in Saskatoon selling what we produce in Canada to the United States. The agreement gives him certainty of access, or more certainty of access, so that he has the confidence to go to talk to his bankers, to expand his production, and to buy more hogs from farmers. The farmers buy more barley from their neighbours. It is good for us. Members have talked about being hewers of wood and drawers of water. This is an example in agriculture where we do not have to do that any more. We can provide jobs.

There are other opportunities in the United States. We produce in Canada the highest quality Durum wheat in the world. It is pasta wheat. It is used for making noodles, for lasagna, spaghetti, and those kinds of things. The United States has a $1.5 billion market for noodles. I wonder what is wrong with the noodles sitting on the other side of the Chamber when we hear some of the doom and gloom that they come up with.

That pasta market from 1972 until 1984 grew at a compound rate of 11.6 per cent per year. Do you know what Canada's share of that market is, Madam Speaker? It is two-thirds of 1 per cent. Italy sells three times as many pasta products to the United States as do we. Japan and China together sell as many pasta products to the United States as do we. Why? It is incredible when we look at the quality of product. We have the best quality wheat, good people, and good transportation. This agreement provides security of access to that market. It will encourage our people in Canada to build plants to produce these products to send to the United States.

In 1986, there was a $6.8 billion market in the U.S. for cookies and crackers. Imports grew at 13.2 per cent over the last 12 years. I ask Hon. Members to think about that. It is not 2 per cent or 5 per cent. It is over 10 per cent per year on the import side. Canada's share is 1.1 per cent, yet we produce the best quality wheat in the world. There is a rich market next door to us. This agreement gives us more security of access, a better opportunity for us in the West to grow things we are good at growing, to process, and to provide jobs, yet the Opposition is against it.

We are not saying that there are any guarantees. All we are saying is that there is an opportunity. That is why people came to the country in the first place to farm. They did not come here with a guarantee. They came because there was an opportunity. They had some vision. They were willing to work and sacrifice. It was the same thing with my family. I am the first generation in my family born in this country. Why did my parents come here? They came because there was an opportunity. They did not come because there was a guarantee. They believed in themselves and the country. They worked hard and they have made it what it is. That is what we are doing today—providing more certainty of opportunity to give not only this generation but the next a better opportunity. That is simply what it is.

We face a large accumulated debt in Canada. There are two ways to get out of it. We either produce our way out of it, which means packaging it, transporting it, and marketing it. A big part of what we market, especially in agriculture, means export. Or, we print and we borrow it. We know what printing and borrowing have done to us. They gave us 22 per cent interest rates in the early 1980s. It does not work.

What are Members opposite proposing as an alternative? Instead of standing up to say that we think this part is bad, but this is good, they say that everything is bad. Tell us what the options are. They say: "Go to the GATT".

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I spent 10 days, as did the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. McDermid), at the GATT. Some of us were down there. We know what that is like. It is very difficult to deal with 95 countries to get agreements. We provided an opportunity for members from the Liberal Party and the NDP to be part of the process. They are such enthusiastic supporters of GATT. We never heard a peep out of them. We could not find hide nor hair of them. Where were they?

Mr. Nunziata: That is not true.

Mr. Mayer: They did not show up. We would have done everything we could to have made them part of the process. I asked about them. Where were they? They did not come near the place.

What are their alternatives? Do they want to print and borrow it? There are 25 million people in the country. Better access and more secure access—and I am talking about agriculture and other areas of opportunity to us—that is what this agreement is all about.

The NDP members want to tear up our NATO agreement and our NORAD agreement. They want to ignore or to pretend that we do not have allies in defence and that we do not need them.

The Liberals want to tear up the trade agreement. I do not understand why these people are afraid of our allies. Why should they be afraid of our allies? There is a large country to the south of us with which we have very good relations. It does not mean that we will always have everything our way and that there will not be disputes. Sure, there will be disputes. When as much trade is done between Canada and the United States as we do, there will be disputes. But, with the dispute settlement mechanism in place we are provided with a much better opportunity to deal with disputes in the future than we have had in the past.

Mr. Nunziata: It is not binding.

Mr. Mayer: When there is a large market, the agreement provides us with better access and more secure access.

Mr. Nunziata: It is not guaranteed.

Mr. Mayer: I did not say that it was guaranteed. There are no guarantees. When there are better opportunities to deal into that market on a more secure basis, why are Members opposite so nervous about entering into the agreement?

What I find discouraging about the process that we are going through here tonight, and we have been going through it for almost the last year, is that there are no alternatives offered. It is an interesting ploy that when one cannot offer an alternative one stands up and misrepresents, distorts, twists, and exaggerates. One tries to frighten people. One says that everything will be awful and that everyone will lose their pensions and their identities. They say that the Americans will come up here to take our medicare cards out of our pockets. When people are afraid hopefully they will do what is wanted of them. That is not what we are as Canadians. We are good at what we do. We are good in so many areas.

Mr. Nunziata: It was Brian Mulroney who tried to deindex pensions.

Mr. Mayer: The Hon. Member has mentioned pensions. One of the reasons we can have those kind of programs in this country is that we generate wealth. We produce. A big part of our production has to be exported. With the agreement we have a much better opportunity to continue to generate the type of wealth that we need to go on with our social programs.

As I pointed out, the only alternative that we have ever heard from the opposition benches and in their being critical of this deal is to print the money and to borrow it. We know that that does not work. We know that this country was not built like that. It was built by people who wanted to make the country productive. It was built by people who came here for an opportunity to make it productive. That is what this agreement does. It provides us with an opportunity to continue to be productive by giving us better and more secure access to a large market. That is what the agreement does.

I look forward to the results of this agreement. In terms of agriculture we have protected our marketing boards. There is nothing in the agreement that in any way changes the way the Canadian Wheat Board will operate. There is nothing in the agreement that does anything but provide a better opportunity for our farmers to sell. With the high quality product that we produce, that has to be of a benefit to farmers. If it is of benefit to farmers, it is of benefit to the whole country. Farmers are important to this country, which is why this agreement is so important as far as agriculture is concerned. The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) who negotiated this deal did it on the basis of providing opportunities. We in agriculture have very significantly improved our opportunities to sell into the U.S. market with this agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tom Wappel (Scarborough West): Madam Speaker, it is with a sense of pride, coupled with humility, that I rise to address this House for the first time. I am deeply thankful to the people of Scarborough West for having considered me worthy of their trust and confidence. Indeed, for me it is quite literally the fulfilment of a life-long dream.

• (1920)

Scarborough West is one of the five federal ridings comprising the City of Scarborough in the Municipality of Metropolitan Toronto. In my view, it is a classic microcosm of urban Canada, containing upwardly mobile professionals, blue collar workers, many generation Canadians, immigrants, low income families and a large population of senior citizens.

During the election campaign, as I am sure most if not all Members did, I spoke with many thousands of people, although, with a population of over 90,000, it was unfortunately not possible to meet with all. I promised the people of Scarborough West that, if elected, I would represent them forcefully and with honesty and integrity.

The people of Scarborough West know that I hold strong convictions on most issues which affect us all and that they can count on me to make those convictions known in the House.

One of those issues about which I hold a strong conviction is this trade agreement, not free trade as a concept but this Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Gustafson: Be sure now.

Mr. Wappel: I am 100 per cent sure. During my quest for my nomination and during the election campaign, I made it crystal clear that I am opposed to this agreement. I do not oppose it for partisan reasons. Rather, I believe it is fundamentally a bad agreement. Why? Because the foundation of it is anchored in weakness, and thus, if the foundation is weak, the agreement built on it is fragile at best.

As a new Member, I listened carefully to the proceedings in this Chamber last week. However, I did not partake in the procedural debates which I felt were a waste of the time and the money of the Canadian people, a waste forced on us by the arrogance of a Conservative Government which, heady with an election victory, refuses to acknowledge the great schism in Canada between those in favour of this agreement and those opposed or unsure. This arrogance caused the procedural wrangling which has been perpetuated by the petulance of the Members of the NDP.

To return to the weak foundation of this agreement, I want to point out to Hon. Members the three weaknesses upon which I believe this agreement is founded. First, the Government which negotiated this agreement is led by a Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who, while campaigning for his Party's leadership, was an outspoken opponent of free trade with the United States.

He has never explained to Canadians why he did a complete about face. Was he forced to change by big business and some of his colleagues, almost pushed into the deal? It appears so to me, since he never told any of us why he changed. What kind of commitment from the top is that to this agreement?

Second, it is a cardinal rule of negotiation technique that one outlines the objectives to be obtained and makes no concessions unless those concessions are returned with the ultimate goal of obtaining the objectives.

The Conservative Government had two very clear and public objectives: first, to obtain an exemption from United States protectionist law; and, second, to obtain a binding dispute settlement mechanism included in the agreement.

The negotiations failed on both these counts. We did not get an exemption from American trade law, and the so-called binding dispute resolution mechanism is a toothless tiger. It is a mechanism without prescribed remedies in the event of default.

Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, of which I am a part, has tried to move that the agreement be amended to rectify this latter situation by adding to Bill C-2, immediately after line 29 on page 36 thereof, the following:

Notwithstanding any provision of this Act or the agreement, Canada may refer a bilateral trade dispute with the United States arising out of the implementation of the agreement to the dispute settlement mechanism of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade to which Canada and the United States are a party.

Under the present interpretation of the agreement, Canada is not allowed to have trade disputes ruled on by the GATT. Article 1801 proposes that this agreement will deal exclusively with U.S. trade laws, laws which our U.S. counterparts may revise and/or strengthen at any time, now or in the future.

Under this provision Canadians are linked to U.S. trade law. I suggest that Canadians do not want to be tied to American law and thus the amendment proposed by my Party is a reasonable and constructive proposal which the Government should consider. It has not done so.

The third weakness in the foundation of this agreement, in my view, is that it commits Canada to negotiations over the next five to seven years to define the definition of subsidies. How can anything so uncertain lead to stability?

The Government of Canada expected the Members of this House, and indeed the people of this nation, to sign an agreement that does not contain set definitions.

I would ask the members on the government side if they would purchase a house and have the lot size determined later, or perhaps purchase and pay for a new car and have the dealer later decide on the model, make, and colour. I do not think it is unrealistic to say that no intelligent individual would enter into such an agreement. Why would the Government of Canada expect Canadians to sign an agreement that contains no definition of such a contentious topic as a subsidy?

The Prime Minister had, as one of his intentions, that a free trade agreement with the United States would provide certainty and stability to the Canadian economy. To this proposal I say bravo. However, as the Bill now before us stands, it requires polishing by way of amendment to provide the utmost certainty.

We know this Bill will pass at approximately 1.15. But what is so frustrating and irritating is that we have put forward literally a bookful of amendments which this Party believes would be helpful in protecting the concerns of Canadians. Those amendments have simply been totally ignored by the government side. Is the Prime Minister not big enough to accept the amendments or at least some of them proposed to the House? No. Instead, he allows himself to be outnegotiated and refuses to correct his mistakes or even admit them.

The true nature of this agreement was deliberately hidden from the Canadian people. The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Turner) pointed this out during the election campaign. Now we are seeing first-hand the Government's attempt to blur the true focus of this debate by holding hostage this legislative Chamber right up until literally the day before Christmas and by constantly invoking closure to limit debate and constructive criticism.

In my view, this is a poor example of democracy. An excellent example of democracy is that of the election results in Scarborough West, where the Progressive Conservative incumbent met defeat by a margin of almost two votes cast against him for every one cast for him. The people of Scarborough West issued a stinging rebuke of this agreement. As their representative, I have the privilege and the duty to deliver their message to the House.

Government Members have been quick to point out what they perceive as the virtues of this agreement. Yet, as the deal comes under closer scrutiny, the risk far outweighs the return. Original employment projections by the Economic Council of Canada have been drastically reduced to the point where it is now projecting estimates of 250,000 jobs newly created by the year 1998. That is an impressive figure, no doubt, at first glance, but one must understand that, to achieve this figure, manufacturing productivity must increase by 3.6 per cent per year.

Is the Prime Minister trying to tell Canadians that they do not work hard enough already? If productivity does not increase, then the Economic Council predicts that an increase of only 76,000 new jobs may be possible over a 10-year period. That is what we have given up.

Contrast this to the projections of a study done by the University of Maryland which states that Canada could very well experience a loss of up to 131,000 jobs by 1995 under the trade deal. This projection is not difficult for me to believe as we have already seen mass lay-offs at several plants across this nation. To date, if the figures have not grown since yesterday, over 1,800 Canadians have been laid off. It will not be a very merry Christmas for some.

• (1930)

During the election campaign, the Government told Canadians that this agreement would save every household $800 a year in consumer expenses. That sounded like a very attractive offer. However, the Government did not tell Canadians that this suggested saving is calculated on items that are very, very infrequently purchased, such as refrigerators, stoves, air conditioners and the like. The Consumers Association of Canada disagrees with this estimate. It insists that individual savings are not likely to exceed one-tenth of 1 per cent of a person's annual income. Surely this negligible gain is not worth the larger price paid, namely the sellout of our country.

During the election campaign and indeed in the House since, Members on the opposite side have scoffed at the suggestion that our social programs are in jeopardy. Yet, if they are so sure that our neighbours to the south do not wish to tamper with these programs, why will they not commit this to writing in the agreement?

Yes, we have heard the argument from the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) that universal social programs are protected under GATT. However, pressure from big business will be felt by this Government. There will be no need for the U.S. Government to force an end to our social programs. Big business has already proven itself capable of forcing the Prime Minister's hand.

My riding contains a large number of senior citizens. These are the people who worked to make Canada what it is today. They are entitled to a reward for that hard work and legacy. They are entitled to a secure knowledge that our social programs are not in jeopardy.

We have heard Hon. Members opposite orally guarantee that seniors are not in jeopardy, but talk is cheap and broken promises are the motto of this Government and its predecessor. What seniors in my riding and indeed all Canadians want is a guarantee in writing placed in the agreement, a few words to ensure peace of mind, but the Government will not listen.

My Party has proposed that the following be added to the Bill in order to complete the initiative of the Government. Let the Bill clearly and succinctly state "that for greater certainty, nothing in this Act or in the agreement shall be interpreted so as to affect the continuation of existing or the establishment of new Canadian social programs, including the health care system, unemployment insurance, child care, pensions, minimum wage law, labour law and maternity benefits". By adding this important amendment to the Bill, social programs are thus removed from the bargaining table and the Canadian social safety net remains intact.

Why will the Government not listen? Its philosophy is, "Our way and you pay". The attitude appears to be that any agreement is better than no agreement at all. I say to the Prime Minister and his Government, amend this deal to reflect the initial goal desired, or, since we have already cast aside all the amendments that were suggested, at least introduce legislation to protect those Canadians who will suffer as a result. We have already seen Canadian companies announce over 1,800 lay-offs because of this poorly negotiated deal and yet it is not even in force. What will happen in the future?

This is far more than a commercial document, as the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has called it in debates. Indeed, this is more than just a trade deal. It is a resource sellout.

The Government has guaranteed that the U.S. will have access to Canadian oil and gas, even in times of Canadian shortage. That cannot be disputed because it is there. Canadians should have the first claim and the full control over the use and disposition of our own resources.

Mr. Mayer: They do.

Mr. Wappel: It is in the agreement. The Prime Minister has bargained this away.

In closing, I would like to thank the Ministers of the Crown for their spelling lessons of last week. On Wednesday last, the Minister for International Trade stated that he would like speedy passage of this Bill, s-p-e-e-d-y. On Thursday last, he told us of consistent decisions, c-o-n-s-i-s-t-e-n-t. During our marathon session of last Friday, the deputy Government House Leader told us that the Prime Minister was going to discuss an interim report, d-i-s-c-u-s-s. Today, I would like to return the favour by telling the Ministers and this House what the people of Scarborough West say to this trade agreement, and that is no, n-o.

Mr. Micheal O'Brien (York North): Madam Speaker, I would like to preface my remarks by saying from the outset that unlike my friend opposite, I am far more optimistic about the future of Canada. I find the statement of the Hon. Member opposite about saying no to the Free Trade Agreement somewhat ludicrous given the current circumstances as I stand here on the day before Christmas Eve and a few hours before passing this agreement.

Getting back to optimism, I would like to relate to the House and to all Canadians some facts about my riding of York North. It is a pleasure and an honour to speak to this House and the people of Canada on this historic occasion. My riding of York North, where I have lived for the last 32 years, is Canada's most populous electoral district, consisting of four large townships and a population of nearly 180,000 persons who live in a unique blend of urban and rural regions.

For many years, York North has been a bedroom community to the City of Toronto, but now the people of York North have begun to employ themselves in their own communities. Hundreds of burgeoning small businesses have grown to the point where they now each employ up to 700 local persons. These businesses have flourished and prospered within their chosen Canadian market sectors. They are modern, specialized, market-driven operations, run by Canadian entrepreneurs who are today seizing more opportunities and creating more wealth and more jobs than ever before, but they must continue to grow.

Having achieved success in their own market niche, the next step is to expand their business plans to include larger markets. The most sensible target market is the one that most closely matches their own home market-place in terms of culture, language, consumer attitudes and the monetary system. That place is, of course, the United States, and many independent businessmen in York North have already taken a decision to explore U.S. markets. The Free Trade Agreement is responding to that new direction by removing impediments like protectionist tariffs and non-tariff barriers that have hindered necessary growth.

Businessmen in York North have been disappointed in the past when they found that it is easier to cross the U.S. border wearing Bermuda shorts and carrying a tennis racket than it is to venture on a trade mission wearing a business suit and carrying a briefcase filled with samples of their companies' products.

When they arrived at their prospective customer's doorstep, many found that although they were presenting samples of fine competitive products those products had become burdened the minute they crossed the U.S. border. They were not competitive and were not able to win the sales order because of protectionist tariffs blocking their success.

That scenario in simple terms, Madam Speaker, explains the problem from the businessman's perspective and describes a phenomenon that has come to plague Canadian enterprise. This is a phenomenon which has had serious repercussions. Trade barriers have made us export only the things that others want, like our natural resources, for example, and has restricted the more sophisticated products which we prefer to manufacture and sell. Soon those barriers will be removed. They will be lifted by the Free Trade Agreement. Our businessmen and their employees will benefit from the free flow of their goods and services into a market area that represents up to 10 times the sales opportunity they now enjoy.

The Free Trade Agreement is a good deal for Canada, Madam Speaker. It permits Canadian enterprise to take the next best step for market development and continued prosperity. Given that the best and the brightest of our Canadian businessmen and trade specialists were brought to the endeavour of creating this agreement, and given the fact that the Canadian people have decided in favour of the Free Trade Agreement, I believe it is now time for those opponents of the Free Trade Agreement who apparently live in a philosophical dark age, who apparently are not aware of the requirements of Canadian enterprise—many of whom sit opposite in this House—cease their outrageous tirade. They should now stand aside to let Canadians seize this new opportunity and begin the journey toward new wealth, new prosperity, enhanced employment opportunities and modern skills development. They should stand aside and allow Canadians, under the Free Trade Agreement, to build a stronger Canada.

The Free Trade Agreement establishes a set of rules, rules that work to eliminate foreign political imperatives that have hitherto been damaging to the free flow of Canadian exports. It is a commercial agreement covering trade, and no more than that. It is a crucial agreement for Canada. Over three million Canadian jobs are linked to export trade, of which two million depend on our trade with the United States. This country exports 30 per cent of its output. That is more than any other nation in the world and is why the Free Trade Agreement, a deal with our best friend and nearest neighbour, is important and valuable to all Canadians.

Industry experts agree that the Free Trade Agreement is good for Canada. It is in the national interest. For businesses in my riding, it is the next best step to ensure their future prosperity. The Free Trade Agreement is important to York North enterprises like the members of the machining and metal working industry. In an August 1988 editorial in their trade journal, Canadian Machinery and Metal Working, editor Jim Barnes expressed his greatest fear about the November election. He said referring to the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner):

If Mr. Turner is elected and delivers on his threat to renege on the Agreement, the effects on our international reputation as a reliable trade partner will be catastrophic, completely apart from whatever we lose by cancelling (the Agreement) itself.

That is what the experts say, Madam Speaker.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Even within that Liberal bastion we know so well in York North, The Toronto Star, economist Richard Lipsey wrote about free trade:

Consumers of Canada unite. You have nothing to lose but your high prices.

The Free Trade Agreement achieves four significant objectives for Canada. It eliminates the remaining tariffs over the next four years and reduces non-tariff barriers. The Free Trade Agreement liberalizes investment flows between the two countries. The Free Trade Agreement allows Canadian and American service industries to compete on favourable terms within the two countries. It establishes effective and impartial procedures for the resolution of future trade disputes, something we have been wanting for years.

The Free Trade Agreement will preserve existing jobs in York North, especially those which are dependent on trade. The Agreement will lead to more and better jobs for York North constituents, paying higher wages, putting more money in the pockets of more people and providing more and better priced goods for purchase by consumers in York North and throughout Canada.

I believe that this agreement is truly about Canada's future and today's youth. With the national debt as high as it is we all know in this House and in this country when we have a large debt to pay we have to do one or both of two things we either decrease our expenses or we increase our revenues. The Free Trade Agreement will work toward that imperative, the paying down of the national debt as we increase revenues for Canadians.

The future prosperity of our nation will some day rest in the hands of our children. I believe that the Free Trade Agreement will provide them with the foundation they need to accomplish great things and, as it should be, to benefit themselves from their own accomplishments. People create prosperity, not governments. But government must provide the people with free access to the markets they need. This Government has done that, Madam Speaker. This Government has acknowledged that Canadians are traders, that Canadians are innovators and that Canadians are winners.

For the opportunities that the Free Trade Agreement provides enterprising Canadians in York North and Canadians throughout the nation I want to thank the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), all their colleagues and negotiators and this Government. This is the best next best step for developing our local businesses, our industries so that the people in York North, formerly living in bedroom communities can now begin to employ themselves.

We have all heard the Opposition's arguments against the Free Trade Agreement. Time and time again we have heard the same tiresome chant about water, social programs and subsidies and about a lot of things not in the Free Trade Agreement. While the recent past election was an arduous and emotionally inflamed affair, I am, nonetheless, pleased that the matter has been given a complete airing.

Never before has an issue been so intensely debated, and now the people have decided. The people have decided that if you cannot get along with your closest neighbour, you cannot get along with anyone. The people have decided that the time has come to protect Canada's economic future and to end the trade war with the United States. The people have decided that a more secure access to U.S. markets allows us the confidence and the opportunities to enrich our manufacturing industries and increase the amount of processing we do to our own raw materials. The people have decided that Canadians can compete in the U.S. market because when it comes to export marketing, Canadians are the best in the world.

We do have industries in this country that do have the know-how and the record. Some of our industries export up to 85 per cent and 90 per cent of their output. From my perspective as a former international trade journal publisher and from this vantage point in the far corner of this House, I believe that I have found the true reason that the two opposition Parties are trying to outdo each other in their anti-free trade tirades.

• (1950)

I go back to the commencement of the last election campaign. As a journalist and publisher, I examined the machinations of the three Parties going through the process of attempting to decide what their platform would be. I believe that my colleagues on this side of the House also know that the real motivator is fear. Members of the opposition fear that the Free Trade Agreement is so good, that it will make Canada so strong, that Canadians will become so prosperous and thankful that they will elect a Conservative Government for the next 20 years. That is the real concern of the Opposition.

Representatives of industry, businessmen, and the people have spoken in favour of free trade, and given that it is a commercial trade agreement, those are probably the people to whom we should listen, We should take it from the hands of parliamentarians and give it back to the people who will do that job, the people in whom we have confidence to do that job. I believe in their hands, as they have capably shown in the past, lies the future and prosperity of this country.

I do believe that the debate has ended. Now it is time for healing and for preparing to lead Canada into the 1990s, and for that we all have a responsibility.

I am sure that each Member in the House wants the best for his or her constituents, and is willing to work hard to achieve that end. My goal and pledge is to make certain that the people of York North have a Member who, regardless of any partisan views, strives for the benefit of the people of the riding. As new opportunities for prosperity unfold, as new quests for learning arise, and when adjustments are to be made, I will bring the maximum extent of my abilities to their endeavours. I am sure that all Members will do the same in bringing Canada into this new and exciting era.

To you, Madam Speaker, to the staff of the House of Commons, and the Members here, I wish you all a Merry Christmas.

Mr. George S. Rideout (Moncton): Madam Speaker, may I take the opportunity to thank the people of Moncton for the confidence that they have placed in me by electing me as their representative. Like many other new Members in the House of Commons, this is our first opportunity to speak in the Chamber, and I do so with a great deal of emotion knowing that both my mother and my father have stood in this House and given a maiden address.

The issues of their day were also issues of great nation building. They dealt with such issues as the flag debate, medicare, and the B and B Commission back in the 1960s, to name a few pieces of legislation going on then. Now it is my time and again we are dealing with an issue of major importance for our country.

The Government's trade legislation and the manner in which it has been handled since day one of this debate is indicative of the manner in which the Government has approached many crucial issues. There has been no information, no discussion, and little debate in the hope of quick passage of the legislation.

The people of Moncton were given an opportunity to speak on the free trade deal. In fact it was their first opportunity to vote on the deal with the result that I am very proud to be standing in the House representing the riding of Moncton.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The bilingual riding of Moncton is a centre for education, transportation, communication, and manufacturing. Its geographic location in the heart of the Maritimes makes it a natural distribution point into central Canada, Atlantic Canada and, as we say, the Boston States. We are also a tourist destination point with Magnetic Hill and the tidal bore, to name a few of the many attractions in our area.

The country we know and love as Canada was built on the twin strengths of agriculture and the railroad system. Moncton is no exception.

The future prosperity of Canada depends on a fair and equitable distribution of Canada's wealth. We must protect and support our agricultural sector, maintain our social programs, and provide the conditions for strong economic growth in all regions of Canada. The passage of the free trade deal jeopardizes these important issues.

The agricultural community has been ignored and abused by the Government, and its concerns are at the bottom of the Government's agenda. My view, and that of the Liberal Party, is that Canadian agricultural producers have not been taken care of by the Government.

The Canadian food processing industry has been taking a beating under this deal. Its concerns, expressed over and over, have fallen on deaf ears. The food processing industry processes raw materials, in this case, Canadian eggs, Canadian cheese, Canadian meats, and Canadian fruits and vegetables produced all across Canada. Under this deal, the processing sector will be trapped between the Canadian farmers and their American counterparts.

Canadian supply-management programs have stabilized production, supply, and the price of agricultural commodities for our farmers. However, the price we pay is moderately higher for basic dairy and poultry commodities in Canada than it is in the United States. Not only can American owned plants buy from American farmers cheaper than they can from Canadian farmers, certain other structural differences give these firms a definite advantage.

American owned plants can take advantage of significant economies of scale. Their plants are large and the production runs longer. Canadian based plants face certain climatic difficulty. Canada can be a cold and harsh land, albeit beautiful. The realities of our climate lead to a shorter growing season and lower crop yields. The American sunbelt growing area can deliver year round supplies of agricultural commodities.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

What are the choices facing Canadian food processing plants? Well, they can go out of business. They could rationalize their production runs and supply the Canadian consumers from their existing U.S. plants, in other words close their plant operations in Canada. They could decide to only buy from those Canadian farmers who will sell their produce at the same low price levels as their American counterparts, severely hurting and harming the Canadian farm community.

Could our Canadian farms survive this blow? Are we as Canadians willing to pay this price? The Canadian food processing plants and farmers cannot afford to wait for the Government to react to the dislocations and job losses that will occur. The Government's response to the factory closings over the past 10 days do not inspire confidence.

The people of Moncton have had a first-hand experience with the manner in which the Government deals with economic restructuring and the resulting job losses. It is easy to sit in Ottawa and forget how the closing or rather the rationalizing of a plant affects communities across Canada. The Moncton riding has already felt the harsh cold hand of rationalization with the closure of the Moncton shops. The Government promised no massive lay-offs at CN shops. It was correct in one respect, there were no lay-offs. This was closure. A small riding must now deal with the reality of the loss of 1,100 job opportunities in its future. That is not an easy task.

A similar job loss occurring in a city such as Winnipeg would put 8,500 people out of work. Could one imagine the Government tolerating that situation? This gives one an idea of what my riding has faced and will face.

When the 1,100 jobs were cut, what was the response of the Conservative Government? It gave the community $2 million initially to create replacement jobs, and once the election was called and the hand-out of money began, we received a further $1.6 million, the so-called final chapter in that story. If that is all Canadians who suffer job loss as a result of the Free Trade Agreement can expect, they have every right to be concerned and suspicious of this Government.

• (2000)

Earlier today I spoke about the raw deal that Route Canada employees received at the hands of this Government. Can we trust this Government to look after Canadians who are dislocated in the workplace as a result of free trade? Can we trust this Government to deal with the social costs of free trade?

We have seen what appears to be the inequitable application of compensation to workers, to communities, and to provinces. The CNR Shop was the largest of its type of facility in New Brunswick, and the total compensation received was $3.6 million. The Newfoundland Railway closure compensation amounted to $860 million for the loss of 650 jobs. As well, the CNR workers in Newfoundland received larger exit packages and better benefits than did the workers in Moncton.

I am not trying to pit the CNR workers in Newfoundland against the CN workers in Moncton. However, the inequity in that situation has to be dealt with. Only in that way will Canadians know exactly how this Government intends to deal with the "rationalization" of jobs.

Given that record of neglect, the people of Moncton are rightly concerned about this Government's word that it will "look after those people who will be adversely affected by this trade deal".

Another key area is that of infrastructure. If Canadians are to compete and continue to export successfully under this trade deal, we must have a modern transportation system in place. It would appear that the railroad in Atlantic Canada will be shut down. The highways in New Brunswick are old and in need of major upgrading.

Is this Government prepared to take under active consideration Premier McKenna's request for a four-lane Trans-Canada Highway? Another question which has to be asked is if the new Trans-Canada Highway is to be built, in which direction should it go?

Canada's traditional links have been east and west. Under the Free Trade Agreement, Moncton should perhaps no longer distribute goods and services, or its raw materials, west to Toronto and Montreal but south to Boston. So, will this Government contribute to the construction of the trans-Boston highway?

Substantial sums of money must be spent by this Government in other transportation areas as well. The Moncton Airport needs to be expanded and upgraded. More freezer and cold storage space is needed at the airport to facilitate the shipping of fish and agricultural products to markets in the U.S. and around the world.

Canadians do not want to return to the days when we were hewers of wood and drawers of water. Canadians do not see themselves as just exporters of raw materials to be processed elsewhere. We want to compete and we have been competing successfully in a wide variety of sectors. The Free Trade Agreement will prevent us from doing that. It is the smaller Canadian-owned plants that will be hardest hit by this deal.

We have heard time and time again that the American plants can rationalize their production. It is the Canadian worker and his/her family who will face job dislocation. We have to deal with the inadequate employment programs put into place by this Government, or go through the Moncton experience.

Behind words like rationalize, relocate, employment dislocation, and government job retraining lies a harsh economic reality. These words and their effect on communities across Canada will appear more and more often in the economic dictionary of the new unwelcome environment that this deal will bring.

Canadians also do not want to see an entrepreneurial drain into American head office plants. If we are only to become a source of raw materials for the U.S., our young energetic entrepreneurs will move to where the action exits.

This could have very bad consequences when one looks at the long range effect. This is exactly what happens in Atlantic Canada with the brain drain to Upper Canada—although Upper Canada is fortunate that we are there to keep it going.

This Government must provide the producers and the consumers of Canada with specific guarantees that the adverse effects of this deal will be dealt with, and dealt with adequately and equitably for all Canadians.

By the time we are ready—and it may be already too late—we must have in place the transportation links and the other essential infrastructure. Otherwise, we will be going into this arrangement with one hand tied behind our back.

I have heard time and time again that the FTA opens up a market of 250 million consumers. But that does not deal with the reality that that market is already open to us, with 80 per cent of it being available tariff free. So, what did we give up to get tariff-free access to the remaining 20 per cent? I think we gave up a lot. I do not think we got what we bargained for. It is to be hoped that this Government will reconsider its decision.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Terry Clifford (London—Middlesex): Madam Speaker, I am very honoured to be here this evening and to be making my first speech in this the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

I should like to begin my remarks by expressing my gratitude to the voters of London—Middlesex for re-electing me to the Parliament of Canada. I might say, it is the first time London—Middlesex has returned the incumbent to Parliament. Having been re-elected by my constituents, I now have a responsibility to stand in this place and speak out on their behalf.

The November 21 election was an historic one inasmuch as it provided Canadians with the opportunity to express their feelings on the vision that they see for Canada. I think it was worth the fight—and indeed it was a fight. Up and down every street in the riding and out on the concession roads, there was a battle for votes. Clearly, it was an election in which Canadians had to make a decision about this country's future. The question was whether they would reflect upon the economic record of this Government and choose its vision for the future of this country. Clearly, the voters of London—Middlesex made their choice, and I stand in this place today to represent them.

I think it important to reflect upon why the voters chose the Progressive Conservative Party as their Government.

In the election of 1984, the concern of Canadians had to do with the lack of jobs and the lack of opportunity for our youth. Those were the important issues. When Canadians reflected upon the record of the first four years of Progressive Conservative Government, they could see that this Government clearly delivered on its promises to do something about those two main concerns, and it did so through the very innovative Canadian Jobs Strategy Program and by bringing about decreased inflation and lower interest rates.

As a consequence of this Government's management of the economy, investment was fueled and jobs created for our youth. In fact, over the course of its first mandate, this Government created 1.3 million jobs in Canada. Clearly, that provided new hope for Canada's youth, and when it came time to vote in the 1988 election, Canada's youth did not forget what this Government had done for it.

When one reflects upon why Canadians made the decision that they did, one should look at the riding of London—Middlesex, because it is a microcosm of Canada. London—Middlesex represents all that we can find in this great nation of ours. When the people of London—Middlesex considered what the Free Trade Agreement was going to do for them in terms of the workplace and their place in Canada, they responded in a positive way. The business community responded positively to the policies of this Government. We saw major success stories—something which the Opposition doesn't like to talk about. One can see them cringe when reference is made to firms such as General Motors Diesel, a company which, in 1984, had tremendous problems, with few prospects for the future. That company took advantage of this Government's policies, took advantage of the strong economic environment created by this Government and began to build on that, to the point where it now has a North American mandate for the manufacture of locomotives.

• (2010)

This is a success story. This company makes locomotives and competes with the finest in the world. That was recognized by General Motors management when they closed the plant in the U.S. to enhance the operation in London—Middlesex. Now, of course, with more than 2,000 workers and many small businesses involved, we are starting to see what free trade will mean to Canadians. Companies will grow and prosper and provide a future for Canadian workers.

Some people on the streets say to me: "Terry, you are right, but that is big business. What is going to happen with small business? I work at a little company. Where is my future?" That is a very good question and a very real concern because the majority of Canadians work in small companies. Indeed, we have already heard from the Canadian Federation of Independent Business which indicated a majority of the owners and managers of its membership supported the agreement, but what happens on the street? What happens to the ordinary worker?

In London—Middlesex we have overwhelming evidence that the small business cannot do anything but prosper. As a matter of fact I have one example, Knechtel Mill Works. A small company in 1984 with under 20 employees, it had some innovative technology, an innovative Government that provided the proper economic parameters to operate within, and now has over 100 employees. The business has gone sky high and there are opportunities for many, many people. The company is taking advantage of this agreement because 80 per cent of its trade is with the U.S. and it is looking for more because it knows it can compete.

That company was able to train workers to use the new technology in window-making. The Canadian Jobs Strategy provided that training and the company in turn became very competitive and innovative and went into that market and provided jobs and opportunities and futures for many, many Canadians.

It is not just big companies that this agreement is good for, it is good for little companies that will grow and prosper and provide futures for our young people.

I think those are two reasons why the electorate in London—Middlesex said, when it got right down to the crunch, that we had better be with this Government because it has a vision for the future which ties in with our beliefs, and so they voted for the Government.

Along the way I was a little disappointed because the election campaign became so involved with the free trade issue that one of the most important issues to the electorate in my riding, indeed Canadians everywhere, the environment, was hardly discussed. Clearly our Government has delivered on the environment. It has only just begun to deliver.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Clifford: I am glad the Opposition is finally awake. I want to talk about some of these things. There is page after page of achievements. Some Members opposite are new to this House. I do not know if they have done their homework, but it is very significant that the first effects of the International Conference on Ozone Depletion will be felt on January 1, 1989. We are going to see the results.

An Hon. Member: Tell us about acid rain.

Mr. Clifford: I am coming to that. We have already seen in the Environmental Protection Act some bold new steps. We have seen a reduction and will see a further reduction in the amount of lead in gasoline. We have taken hundreds of steps that will add to the quality of life for Canadians. This was all forgotten in the election. Maybe the Opposition did not really want it to come out.

Some people recognized the situation. Norwegian Prime Minister Brundtland, who chaired the UN World Commission on Environment and Development, paid tribute to Canada's leadership in June when she addressed the Canadian Government's International Conference on the Changing Atmosphere in Toronto. She said:

I thank the Canadian Government, in particular Prime Minister Mulroney and Environment Minister McMillan, for their commitment and for the example they have been setting for other industrialized countries.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Clearly Canada has shown leadership. We are out front, not behind.

Dr. Noel Brown, North American Regional Director of the UN Environment Program, said:

If there were ever to be a Nobel Prize for leadership in exploring the complexities and intricacies of sustainable development, then my submission is that Canada would have to be a candidate... the leadership that you are asserting in this field is extremely important and the world is watching.

I am pleased to see the Opposition is watching. We want them to watch. We do not want them to set fear among Canadians. Canadians had a dose of that and clearly they chose the alternative. I think it is important for the Opposition to remember that.

A couple of myths that were perpetuated in the election dealt with the environment. The FTA will in no way force us to lower standards or change our focus on preserving our environment. We have heard the fear-mongers and we are hearing them again, claiming the agreement will force us to accept American standards on products like pesticides. I am glad to say that Canada has high standards of safety and control on pesticides higher than the U.S. Will we lose the right to maintain our higher standards? Of course not. One simply has to look at the agreement.

Article 603 states that both countries maintain the right to set product standards whose purpose is to protect health, safety, essential security, the environment or consumer interests. Clearly the example has been set and high standards will prevail. Not only will we not allow Alachlor to be used in this country, any products with Alachlor will not be allowed to enter Canada. Everyone remembers when Alachlor was ruled unacceptable in Canada. Clearly this Government acted responsibly. Our officials determined it is harmful to Canadians and it is gone.

At the same time, in London—Middlesex, which is the hub of most activity in Canada, a recently built agriculture research centre, to be officially opened this spring, is currently doing work on biological control and natural methods to deal with pests. Their work will not be affected by the FTA in any way, shape or form. Their approach promotes common sense farming, where agricultural production costs are reduced while using sound environmental farming practices. Our standards will not be lowered. American producers of pesticides wishing to sell their products in this country will have to meet our stringent standards.

It is very important that that point be made clear. The Opposition has said almost all the time that we have to accept the lowest common denominator when not only is that objectionable to Canadians, it is objectionable to Americans and those who share the global environment with us. When one looks at what is going on in Europe in the common market as they struggle toward union in 1992, in every documented case of their working on harmonization of standards they have chosen the highest standard. It is the highest common denominator, not the lowest.

I know the fearmongers find that hard to accept. They would just as soon be able to capture that fear as they tried so hard and diligently to do for 51 days during the election. Clearly it did not work then and it will not work now. The people have decided.

• (2020)

One month after the election, one month after the mandate that Canadians have given to our vision of the future, particularly as it pertains to the environment or the doomsayers all said that Canada would not be a fit place to live—what are they saying now? As reported in The Gazette of Montreal: “Free trade could help the environment”. That was written by Lawrence Solomon, the author of The Conserver Solution, research co-ordinator of Energy Probe. Clearly now that the people have decided these agencies and organizations have started to see the wisdom in what the people have decided upon. I hope that it can carry across the House.

All those trips up and down the streets and the concession roads were well worth it. Those people in that riding and the others across Canada had an opportunity to reflect on what this Government has done. They have decided that they want to be part of that vision of the future. They see it as the alternative. When they see that Canada is showing leadership, it has been acknowledged that it is moving out with other countries of the world. It is not a shell any longer. It is a country whose place in history and time has come.

It is particularly fitting for the young people of our country that they do not now have to sit back and apologize for their elders' timidity. They can now say: “Gee, my Mom and Dad, my grandparents, cared about me. They included me in their vision in voting for a vision of Canada in which I will have and be able to take my rightful place. I will be able to compete. I will be able to challenge with the best in the world, in fact to make the world a better place”.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I think that this is a monumental and historic occasion. In three or four hours from now we will have an opportunity to put closure on this motion and bring on the new prosperity, the new hope, the new vision for the young of Canada who in fact are going to carry all of us into a very pleasant retirement. By that time Canada will clearly have taken its place as the leading country in the 21st century in the world.

Mr. Stan J. Hovdebo (Saskatoon—Humboldt): Madam Speaker, across the country tonight there are many, many constituents of ours who are saying: "Forgive them for they know not what they do". They are saying that because they are knowledgeable, intelligent people who have made the effort to find out what this free trade deal is all about. They are a group of men and women who wonder why we cannot recognize that economic union with the United States to which we are committing ourselves is a change in the basic philosophy of Canada, a basic change in what Canada is all about.

This agreement alters the basic tenet of what makes Canada different from the United States. The United States believes in the supremacy of the market. The economy of the United States is basically driven by the market. Over the years in Canada we have decided that certain things which are provided by the market in the U.S. should be available to all Canadians, available even if they do not have the ability to get them in some other way. They should be provided not by the market but by the country regardless of the ability to pay or to get it from the market.

I am sure that everyone here tonight can think of an example of how Canada is different from the United States. We have chosen the Canadian way of providing service to all, not just to those who can pay for it. In this regard medicare is probably the best example. We believe that the best possible care that we as a nation can provide should be available to all. In the U.S. the best care is available only to those who can pay for it. Some 36 million Americans have no medicare insurance. Therefore only minimal care is provided for them and even then it is considered welfare. If one cannot pay for it then one cannot have it unless someone is there to give it to you.

Unemployment insurance is another good example in this regard. We make it available in quantities much greater than the contributions that were made by people to the plan.

Our public pension plans are another example, as is family allowance. These are familiar programs that we have in place which are not in place in the United States of America. These programs are directly funded and are available to Canadians outside the market-place. It is not surprising that these are also the programs or the types of programs to which the Americans refer to as subsidies when they impose a countervail on our products. They do not understand our philosophy that everyone should have a part of the good life and that it should not only be available to the privileged few. Their philosophy is you get only what you can afford and if you cannot afford it then that is too bad.

This so-called trade deal will require the harmonization of our economies. What will that do to these programs? Does it mean that they must be harmonized as well? Nobody has said "Yes" to that question. And no one has said "No". If the Americans think they are subsidies, as they have indicated on a number of occasions, then they will demand that our levels in these programs be lowered or theirs will have to be raised. I ask Hon. Members to figure out which one will happen.

One of the main issues with respect to this deal is whether or not it threatens our sovereignty. Again, nobody can come up with a convincing "No". The Government has pointed often to the European Economic Community saying that the countries there have not lost their sovereignty. This is different. We are quite different. Why are we different? First, there are only two countries in this agreement. One of those countries, the U.S.A., is 10 times larger than Canada. Trade with the U.S. already takes up 75 per cent to 80 per cent of Canada's exports. Much of Canada's industry is foreign-owned. These are differences between us and the economic community in Europe.

Canada and the U.S. share a common language. Our nearest neighbour aside from the United States is 1,500 miles away, not just across the border to the East or to the West.

Canada's history has been one of resistance to absorption by the United States. Strong measures have been necessary in the past to stop that absorption. In 1812 the Americans attempted absorption by invasion. We fought them off. In 1867 Confederation was a response to American expansion after the Civil War.

• (2030)

The expansion was to the west and the north under the American slogan "54-40 or Bust", which would have taken in most of the western Prairies and British Columbia. Confederation was in response to that American expansionism, and it worked.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The railways that we built across Canada were expensive responses to deal with American attempts to absorb Canada. They were built to help settle and develop the West through immigration, as well as to bring British Columbia into closer contact with central and eastern Canada.

Tariffs that were in place 100 years ago were established in response to American attempts to move into our territory. They were an attempt to force east and west movement of trade rather than the north-south flow. Again, they worked.

I know that many government Members believe the CBC is an expensive way of resisting American pressure, but it was put into place to fight the predominance of American media on the airwaves. In a sense, Air Canada and the Trans-Canada Highway were used to bring Canada closer together.

We have been successful in resisting absorption by the Americans until now. It has been costly on occasion, but we have resisted. Can we continue to do so?

Until World War II we had a counterbalance to American domination. It was the Commonwealth, or British Empire as it was known then. The Right Hon. John Diefenbaker often spoke about how the Commonwealth counterbalanced the U.S. impact on Canada. He believed that the connection between Canada and the Commonwealth should be strongly supported in order to keep the American counterbalance at bay.

Shortly after the war we ceased to be British subjects. We no longer flew the Union Jack, which is something else John Diefenbaker fought against for many hours in the House. We no longer had the Commonwealth trade preference and moved to the point where we can now amend our own Constitution.

While all these are progressive steps making Canada independent, it also made us much more vulnerable to the drawing card of the United States. That Commonwealth connection was replaced by the American media. Ninety per cent of movies that we watch in Canada are from the United States. Much of the time our children spend watching television is on American programs. Some 90 per cent of music recordings sold in Canada are American, 77 per cent of the books sold in Canada are American, and 75 per cent of the magazines in Canada are American.

Our prospects for survival even before the trade deal were rather doubtful because most of our daily activities are influenced by the United States.

The United States provides more post-graduate education to Canadian students than all the other countries put together. We are already strongly influenced by the United States.

I and some 53 per cent of Canadians oppose the Government's free trade proposal. I know that over 50 per cent of my constituents do not believe in it because they elected me instead of the previous Conservative Member.

However, let us assume for a moment that the Government is right in believing we will increase our wealth. Will we win the other battles for sovereignty? Will we remain politically separate from the United States? Will we remain socially separated from the United States? Will we remain culturally separated from the United States?

We are already awash in U.S. companies, awash in U.S. investment, awash in American culture and media. Economic control is being lost in Canada. If this continues will we be able to remain Canadians?

What will happen when Canadian businesses begin complaining that the taxes they pay for environmental, regional and social programs are too high? Will the Government gradually reduce the emphasis on those social, environmental and regional programs? I believe the more dependent these companies become on the U.S. market, the more policies like medicare and unemployment insurance will have to be changed.

The pressure will come from Canadian companies that want to compete and from American branch plants that could threaten to go back to the United States where they can produce goods cheaper. Even American based companies that do not have a branch plant in Canada will start complaining because the playing field is not level. They will suggest that Canadian workers receiving family allowance, medicare, and unemployment insurance are getting an unfair advantage. They will threaten to withdraw, to refuse Canadian products unless the Canadian Governments do something about it. The pressure to maintain or increase the number of jobs in Canada will force the Government to drop those programs that make Canada different from the United States. Sometimes I wonder if we will have to return to the use of Fahrenheit, pound, feet, and miles as a result of harmonization.

Once the harmonization of economics and ideas occurs, there is little point in claiming that we can reverse it. The six-month cancellation clause becomes more useless as harmonization increases. Besides that, as we become more dependent on the the U.S. market, it will soon be so important to us that we will not be able to back off without disastrous effects to our own economy.

• (2040)

Most of the adjusting to this deal will be done by Canadian companies. It takes only a 10 per cent increase for a U.S. industry to take over the entire Canadian market, but it takes a 100 per cent increase for a Canadian industry to take over 10 per cent of the U.S. market. We will be doing the adjusting here in Canada.

In many cases, those U.S. companies can probably supply our market with their surpluses. We know right now, for instance, that the U.S. can supply us with all the dairy products we use in Canada with the surplus they pour down the drains in the United States every day.

As the deal becomes entrenched, there is no way we will be able to back off. The six-month cancellation clause is a laughing matter. Ask Hawaii. Hawaii signed a 10-year trade deal with the United States, and when the 10 years was up, the United States said: "Well, there is not much in this deal for us, we are going to back away from it". After 10 years, Hawaii could not back away. It begged to become part of the United States.

Perhaps there will be an increase in trade, but where will it come from? Jacques Parizeau says that it will come from the provinces. In fact, all the hurt will go to them. He says that that is why Quebec will be able to separate. It will no longer be dependent upon the domestic markets of Ontario and the Prairies to sell its products.

I spared only one facet of this deal, the impact on sovereignty. There are many other facets of it that need to be explored. Government Members tell us that all the adjustments will be good, that it will be a win-win situation, and that Canada will always remain strong and free. I hope they are right.

Like the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin), I have to say that if the deal has to go through, I hope I am wrong and that the 53 per cent of Canadians who voted against this deal are wrong as well. I would not object to being wrong in this instance, as the Hon. Member for Western Arctic said. If we are right, the disaster that will occur and the fact that we will no longer be Canadian are something we do not want to have to face in the next few years.

Mr. Ross Stevenson (Durham): Madam Speaker, I am deeply honoured to be here in the House of Commons of Canada, representing the great riding of Durham. I appreciate the opportunity and the trust the people of Durham have put in me. I will certainly do my utmost in the months and years ahead to justify the trust they have given me in sending me with such strong support to the House of Commons in Ottawa.

When compared to many other ridings in central Ontario, the riding of Durham is a relatively large one. It consists of the regional municipalities of Uxbridge, Scugog, Newcastle, the rural part of Whitby, and the north part of the City of Oshawa.

In this riding are some of the best agricultural lands in Ontario. There are parts of Lake Ontario and Lake Scugog and the beautiful hills and ridges that run north of Lake Ontario, all across the central part of the Province of Ontario.

We have a strong agricultural sector. We have a vibrant manufacturing and service industry. Of course, most everybody knows that in the Oshawa area, there is a very strong automobile manufacturing and auto parts industry.

Here this evening, as we debate the free trade Bill, we are discussing much more than just this Bill. We are really talking about opportunities for Canada, opportunities for our young people as they look for jobs in the future, opportunities for our business people and workers to excel in a strong Canada of the future, and indeed, opportunities for Canada itself as it plays an ever growing leadership role in the economic well-being of the western world.

We have seen, of course, that Canada has obtained entry into the G-7 nations. The economic leadership shown by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and by the Progressive Conservative Government of Canada is exemplary when compared to that of other nations of the world.

I want briefly to review some parts of the free trade Bill we are discussing at third reading stage and relate some of the significant parts of that Bill to the great riding of Durham. As I stated earlier, there is a very strong auto sector in that area. A great many residents of my riding earn their living directly or indirectly from the auto industry.

To some degree, the free trade Bill was born out of the Auto Pact or, as it is officially known, the Canada-U.S. Automobile Products Trade Agreement. This is one of the most successful trade agreements ever negotiated anywhere in the world. The residents and businesses of Durham have thrived as a result of that trade agreement. It is more than interesting to note that Simon Reisman, who negotiated the Free Trade Agreement we are discussing tonight, also negotiated the extremely successful Auto Pact.

I think it is also interesting to note that manufacturers in the Canadian auto industry shipped a total of $38 billion worth of products in 1987, and $34 billion of that total was sent to export. In the Province of Ontario, $30 billion worth of exports, essentially 50 per cent of the exports of the whole Province of Ontario, came from the auto sector. That is how important it is to the economy of Ontario, the economy of Canada, and most certainly to the economy of Durham.

Over 160,000 people work in the auto sector. In the 1980s, there will be approximately $13 billion of investment from automobile manufacturers and parts manufacturers put into the economy of Canada. That is a phenomenal amount, and a significant proportion of that was in and around the area I represent.

● (2050)

The Auto Pact has allowed automobile producers and parts manufacturers to rationalize, specialize and increase their productivity, and to sell on both sides of the border. In fact, some of them in my area are exporting auto parts to Japan. This is very clearly a tremendous success story. Yes, the Auto Pact is somewhat different from free trade. We have heard that many times from the opponents of the Free Trade Agreement.

Still, it is a clear indication that Canadian workers and Canadian companies can compete on an international basis. They have done that extremely successfully. The people of Durham know that we can compete in many other sectors by the strength of the majority with which the voters of that area sent me here to the House of Commons.

We will see that auto sector grow in the future, undoubtedly, particularly the auto parts section. In 1982, we manufactured only 9.8 per cent of all auto parts in the North American market. In 1987, that number was up to 14 per cent, almost double, and the trend will continue. It is a trend from which the manufacturers of Durham riding will benefit. They know it and they have made that positive statement.

We have auto parts manufacturers in the riding of Durham located in Uxbridge, Port Perry, Bowmanville, and several other towns and villages in the area. Those companies give jobs, very stable jobs, to the people of our area. They have grown to appreciate the industry and know just how important trade is to the local economy and their own livelihoods. Durham has much more than just an auto sector. We have a thriving manufacturing sector outside of the auto industry.

The Durham Region Manufacturers' Association has organized itself into an exciting group of people. Its members have marketing seminars for their several hundred members. They assist each other with management and export seminars. They have seen first-hand from the auto industry how aggressive salesmanship can help their companies. They are exporting now on a much wider scale than just in the auto industry. They have seen how the automobile industry has rationalized, specialized, and increased production. Believe me, that will continue to happen at an even greater pace as we go into the Free Trade Agreement.

I also stated earlier that agriculture is an important industry in our part of the country. We have some excellent farm land. Some farm families have been in the agricultural business for generations. Indeed, some of them have been there as long as Canada has been in existence as an organized country as we know it. We have seen, of course, the great debate in the agricultural sector relating to free trade. The attention in most of the daily media has been directed to those who were opposed to the deal, but a great many farmers are in favour of it.

This evening, in other speeches, members have shown the tremendous support that is in existence for the Free Trade Agreement speaking on behalf of the agricultural sector, particularly the red meat, grains, bean farmers, fruit and vegetable sectors. All of them have been very strongly supportive of the agreement. It is interesting to note that the soybean growers of Canada recently met with their counterparts in the United States and agreed to ask their respective Governments to withdraw all tariffs immediately from soybeans and soybean products moving back and forth across our borders; they do not want them phased out over 10 years. They want them reduced immediately. That is the other side of the story in the agricultural industry, one that has had very little attention in the daily media. Most of our urban people do not realize the tremendous support that exists for this agreement in the agricultural area.

We have heard at great length what is going to happen to the food processing industry in Canada.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Basically that it is going down the drain is what the doomsayers have been saying for several months.

I would like to draw to your attention, Madam Speaker, just what some of the companies in the food processing and the agricultural industry are doing in this country right now. Cargill, for example, which is the biggest privately owned corporation in the United States, is investing massive amounts of money in Canada this very moment. That is not being done for the Canadian agricultural industry. It is not being done because Cargill thinks the industry is going down the drain or the food processing industry is going down the drain. Cargill knows that we are going to benefit from this deal. It is a building a large new processing plant in Alberta at present. It has just bought Cyanamid and the grain division of Maple Leaf Mills.

Very clearly, multimillions of dollars of investment has been made in Canada in 1988, getting ready for a very vibrant agricultural industry that will exist here in the future. Gainers, Canada Packers, and Cold Spring Farms are all currently modernizing or building new meat processing plants here in Canada. General Foods, a major international food processing company, is going to invest $25 million in Canadian food processing plants in 1989. Campbell's Soup is doubling its investment to $15 million. Quaker Oats is going ahead with a $15 million expansion of its plant in Peterborough to process more Ontario and Canadian-grown oats to send breakfast cereals into the United States market.

It is quite a different story than the one heard hour after hour from the people on the other side of the House. The Opposition is saying that the food processing industry is going to leave Canada. Much of the industry is saying exactly the opposite. We will see precisely what we have seen in the automobile industry, I suggest. We will see them, and I repeat the words I have already used twice in my speech tonight, they will rationalize, specialize, and increase their production here in Canada to markets around the world.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stevenson: I want to draw to your attention, Madam Speaker, just briefly a report that came out in December, 1988. It is entitled The Road Not Taken. Maybe a better title would be "The Road Not Yet Taken—An Opportunity For The Canadian Grains and Meat Industry". The report says that we must sell wheat as bread, as cookies, and Durum wheat as pasta. We do not need to sell them as grains any more. We now have the opportunity to merchandise those products in a value-added form and keep some of the jobs that are now outside our borders and inside our borders.

That is the future at which the Canadian food processing industry is looking, not the sort of story we have heard from the Opposition at great length. If there is such a thing as a resources sell-out, that is what we have today. We will see in future the production and processing of our resources into products, food products, furniture, petrochemicals and the processing of our fish here, as we have heard from many Progressive Conservative speakers all across the country. They have stated that our raw materials are going out of the country in raw form. In future we will see them going out as value-added products and giving jobs to Canadian people.

● (2100)

I firmly believe that supply-management commodities which have received so much attention are protected under the Free Trade Agreement. At the moment a new supply-management marketing board is being developed in Canada. That system of laws that allows farmers to determine what marketing system they want to select is still in place. They have used it in the past and, if they wish, they can use it in the future. Canada is acting to increase the strength of Article XI under GATT which allows us to have that supply-management marketing system.

Our laws still exist in agriculture which will allow us to protect all areas of that marketing system, whether one is talking about the Canadian Wheat Board or supply-management for dairy and poultry products.

It is also interesting to note that in the whole resources area, agriculture and otherwise, every single group that has had a trade dispute with the United States over the last several years is in favour of the Free Trade Agreement and the dispute settlement mechanism which exists under the free trade Bill. It is not perfect, but it is far better than what those groups have had to deal with in the past. Broad support from lumber, agriculture, fisheries, and steel clearly indicates that we have a Bill here which is a great improvement over what was available in the past.

In summary, I believe that the real issue in all our discussions tonight, and over the last days, is the fear of the future. We in the Progressive Conservative Party do not fear the future. We look at the future as challenges and opportunities. Unlike the other Parties we have confidence in our leadership. We have confidence in the men and women of our Party. We have confidence in the business people and the workers of Canada. Most important, we have confidence in the youth of Canada who are coming along and who will be prepared to accept the challenges and the opportunities in the future.

Tonight, in approximately three hours, we will take a major step in the history of Canada, a major step into the future. I am proud to be part of that action. I look forward to the future of Canada. If we want a strong and vibrant Canada, we have the opportunity to have it. If we want a strong business community, we have that opportunity. If we want an independent Canada with our own unique culture and identity, a country with tolerance and compassion for everyone, we too will have that opportunity. The future is up to us. We can face it without fear. I am proud to be part of that future.

Mr. Derek Lee (Scarborough—Rouge River): Madam Speaker, as I commence my remarks here tonight in what I believe is a truly historical evening, I want to extend to the Speaker of the House and the Clerk of the House my appreciation for their courtesy and efforts to assist in the settlement of new Members of Parliament in what has been a relatively short period of time. As important, I want to thank the constituents of Scarborough—Rouge River for their electoral support that permits me to speak to the House tonight.

The riding of Scarborough—Rouge River is a constituency of urban Canadian multiculturalism. It is a riding where, thanks to the laws and institutions created by our people in this Parliament, the mix and interplay of culture are laying the groundwork of cultural understanding and tolerance which we hope will serve our nation in the decades to come.

My riding is one part of the country where we see at work the great Liberal principles of opportunity, tolerance, and reform. These principles are minimum government contributions to our society under what I could call the social contract that we have entered into in the Canadian parliamentary democracy. Opportunity is what trade agreements are all about. Liberals in the western world are no strangers to the concept of free trade. Liberals have been free traders for 200 years. North America was built on the principles of classic Liberalism.

In speaking of the subjects of opportunity and trade, I want to note sadly the death this week of Mr. Arthur G. Simpson, a man who manifested in my riding the opportunities present in our country with or without trade agreements. Through his company, A.G. Simpson

Ltd., Mr. Simpson operated five automobile parts manufacturing plants in Scarborough, Oshawa, Cambridge, Oakville, and Windsor. He employed more than 1,700 people. His success and that of his workers is testament to the opportunities present in our country. Mr. Simpson was an industrial builder who needed no lessons in how to think smart, manufacture, and export. He will be missed.

Economists generally accept the theory that if barriers to trade are lowered trade will increase. If trade increases then enhanced economic activity and related economic growth will occur. These principles are contained in every basic economics text.

Let us look at exactly how much trade liberalization is contained in the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement for Canadian exports. First, there are the two general types of barriers to trade. There are tariff barriers and non-tariff barriers. The principal non-tariff barriers are anti-dumping duties, "buy American" legislation, countervail duties, and regulatory barriers.

These types of tariff barriers were initially described as the chief motivating reason for entering into negotiations for a trade agreement with the United States in the first place. Exporting to the United States was beginning to become a minefield of non-tariff trade barriers. Under the proposed trade agreement they still are.

Our softwood lumber export position is deteriorating because of non-tariff barriers. Even though the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) vaunts in glowing terms the prospects that this trade agreement will bring about, it does precious little to remove non-tariff trade barriers. Not the countervail, not the anti-dumping, not the regulatory framework; only U.S. federal purchasing regulations will be changed but not the state or municipal.

The Government's negotiating team brought back the equivalent of a consolation prize. The Government claims it has created a non-binding dispute settlement mechanism. I submit that this consolation prize is a lifeless, toothless dead fish. The Hon. Minister for International Trade will know what that is all about.

With respect to actual trade barriers, how much trade liberalization did we achieve in this area? Only one-fifth of our current U.S. trade is now subject to tariffs. While I would not underestimate the significance of this portion of our trade, the actual measure of tariff relief was small. The actual bottom line total of trade liberalization was as follows: tariff reductions to zero for only one-fifth of our U.S. exports, no relief from anti-dumping or countervail or the regulatory NTBs, and only a partial rollback of pervasive U.S. buy America legislation.

• (2110)

The Government has presented this to the country, saying that these benefits constitute opportunity; and more than that, an economic blueprint for the future.

The Government states that out of these marginal trade gains will come the so-called winners and the prosperity promised by it. We shall see.

Let's look at the price we had to pay to get these so-called winners. We have given up all our tariffs, tariffs which have protected Canadian industry for decades. This is the so-called "cold shower" of competition envisaged by the pundits.

Out of this cold shower will appear our losers—industries and firms which are important, and even fundamental, to Canadian communities but which will fail to survive and, by their failure, throw thousands of Canadians out of work. We have given up our right to control for Canadians our energy sector. In this vital area of our economy, an area where already we are dominated by and subjected to a high degree of non-Canadian control, decisions on who, where, and when we develop our resources will, without question, and in total deference to corporate America, be made in the boardrooms of Dallas, New York, Chicago, and Los Angeles.

However, the boardroom table in Calgary, in Montreal, in Toronto will sit empty, with only a vase of wilted flowers, a two-week old copy of the Wall Street Journal, and perhaps a fax machine for communicating with head office.

Shame on the Parliament or the legislature that abandons the worker, his spouse, and his children in Lloydminster or in Campbellton to the unrestrained business decision of a person or group outside Canada, someone who knows nothing about that man, his family, his city, his pride, or his dreams, and who has absolutely no interest in the regional and national goals of this country.

That is abdication of our responsibility as legislators, and that is what this Government is doing under the guise of the Free Trade Agreement. Not only do we give up control of the boardroom, we have agreed to pool our energy with that of the U.S.A. We have had to give up our right to decide for Canadians how and when energy resources are exploited and marketed. Washington will now help us decide, and Washington has a guaranteed share.

We have given up our right to control our capital markets for Canadians. Now decisions on credit worthiness, commercial viability and discount rates will be taken in New York and handed down to the suitcase banker. Decisions on how and when capital is invested, and even how the non-bank savings of Canadians are reinvested, have now, by this agreement, been effectively exported to wherever the Lear jet has been parked. Canadians resent this Government permitting this fundamental tool of nation-building to be tossed into the tool box of corporate America.

In one of the more cruel ironies of this agreement our negotiators set out to claim some form of exemption for our cultural industries. Well, they got an exemption in Article 2005, but there was a price tag, a price tag defined as "measures of equivalent commercial effect".

This means that if an American enterprise is prejudiced or harmed by cultural initiatives or our Government, that enterprise will have to be compensated.

The net result is that, where our cultural initiatives stray from the American commercial norm and it costs an American money, we must compensate that American; in effect, pay a royalty.

The Canadian people, Mr. Speaker, will never pay a royalty to Americans to enable us to foster our cultural initiatives. I call this price tag the Jack Valenti royalty.

As one example of the many giveaways in this trade agreement we have agreed, in a related cultural industry provision, to remove from our Income Tax Act the provision which has influenced Canadian advertisers to place their buys with Canadian magazines and publications printed in Canada.

This provision has sustained and given new life to the Canadian periodical publishing industry, and this new life is now to be placed in jeopardy.

And what about the losers, Mr. Speaker? They are there, too. All sides of this House recognize that there will be losers under this deal. Entrepreneurs will lose their businesses; workers will lose their jobs in bankruptcies; workers will lose their jobs in branch plants when those plants close following head office decisions south of the border, decisions made because the protective tariff is gone and the fact that just one extended production run in Cairo, Illinois, or Columbia, South Carolina will produce all that is required to serve the whole of the North American market.

The one thing that the working men and women in Canada will agree on is this: if this Government is going to commit this country to an economic course paid for with the jobs of our workers, then this Government had better have the programs to assist in the adaptation and retraining of those workers, or it won't be the Government for long.

One very interesting element of this trade negotiation with the United States has been the need to look closely again at the unique relationship between our two countries, a relationship that has preoccupied Canadians for two centuries, primarily because of our relative closeness geographically and culturally.

It is, I think, because we are so close to the United States of America, because we cast a shadow on each other along the border, that we have difficulty measuring our relationship objectively. It is that confusion over our relationship which hinders our ability to address this trade agreement objectively.

It is precisely because we are so close to each other that we resist being drawn closer together under this trade agreement. This is not anti-American. This is healthy Canadian self-interest. The closer our two countries get, the more we sweat. Under this agreement we will pull our country closer to the precipice, and all on the promise of a few dollars more, a few jobs more.

I am saddened to hear some Hon. Members on the other side of this place describe this agreement as the key to prosperity or the ticket to the future, without realizing how close we are to abandoning our tools of nation-building.

If we are to maintain and improve our society and increase our prosperity, it will occur because Canadians work hard for it and not because we deal or barter for it.

My conclusion, Mr. Speaker, is in reaching this agreement we have given up far more in the bargain than we have obtained. If this trade agreement was just the mutual elimination of tariffs, which it could have been, we could freely address the future proudly as a nation. But such is not the case. This agreement is much, much more. It is that way because the Americans bargained for those other things, and we gave them away.

If we are to have this agreement, then we will not abandon our workers, we will not pay royalties to exercise our cultural sovereignty, we will not neglect rural and agricultural Canada and native Canadians, we will not permit erosion of needed social programs, and we will never abandon or sell our independence to continue to build this country and provide its citizens with the opportunities essential for their future.

I know that if this legislation is made law, all Members on both sides of the House will address the 10 years of transition to full implementation with those objectives in mind.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2120)

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Hogue (Outremont): It is as the first representative of the Progressive Conservative Party ever to sit in the House of Commons as a Member for Outremont in this century that I humbly rise again today. On this occasion, I wish to address my first remarks to those men and women whom I have the honour to represent in the House. I wish to thank the individuals who, through the exercise of their democratic rights, gave me a majority during the recent election campaign.

They represented every walk of life and reflected the exceptional diversity of Canadians and Québécois which we can find everywhere in our great country. My Outremont constituents have nothing in common with the nincompoops our honourable friends opposite like to describe. On the contrary, they are quite vibrant. They can breathe, think, they are intelligent, they can assess, weigh, and they have needs which they try to satisfy either individually or collectively.

As I said, the men and women in my Outremont riding resemble those you can meet in all the other provinces of Canada. They know what is good for them. They can put things into perspective. They are tolerant. That is why when the chips were down, in the evening of November 21, they chose Mr. Mulroney and the Progressive Conservative Party. Like the rest of Canada, they gave the country more representatives from our party than did the other two parties together. People have decided and they gave the Government a clear mandate to govern. They elected a leader they could trust. They rejected all the candidates who did not know where to stand or who, for lack of a definite program, were involved in a witch hunt.

I want to thank them also for electing a majority government, thereby clearly expressing their support for the agreement we are debating today.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The election of a Progressive Conservative Member in the Outremont riding was not an accident of history which brought yours truly to the forefront. In fact it reflects a new orientation, a new trust and consensus which have their roots among the very diverse groups which live in that riding.

I have been able to witness that beyond the deep-rooted prejudices fed by many generations of a so-called elite, my Outremont riding is undoubtedly the most representative of our Canadian mosaic.

The Quebec men and women who live there represent the two founding nations of our country, together with representatives of about twenty ethnic groups who speak some forty languages and dialects, in addition to one or the other of our official languages. These cultural communities were particularly sensitive to what was at stake during the election campaign and they listened with their ears and hearts to the debate during these seven dramatic weeks.

My Outremont constituents expressed what a majority of Canadians from every corner of our great country wanted. These Quebec men and women expressed their confidence in the future of our country and favoured a still greater opening to the rest of the world. I should like to repeat part of what I said the first time in the House, and I quote: "My colleague from Vancouver Centre (Ms. Campbell) quoted our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who said on a number of occasions that wealth is created by the citizens rather than by the Government". It could reasonably be said also that it is not the economy which governs the men and women of a country, but that it is they who govern the economy.

Our colleague the Hon. Member for Langelier (Mr. Loiselle) spoke in a manner which is to the credit of the Progressive Conservative Party, its leader and members. We can bear witness, through the manner in which all Quebecers participated in the national debate on the most significant issue of the recent election campaign, that Quebec fully shares this confidence in our capacity to meet head on the new challenges brought about by the globalisation of trade.

Quebeckers in large numbers joined their voices with those of millions of Canadians who feel that free trade is an expression of national affirmation based on openness as opposed to withdrawal, on self-confidence as opposed to cold panic in the face of new horizons.

Unlike the people in other parts of Canada, they were not afraid of jeopardizing their national identity. They had the opportunity earlier in this decade to reassert their identity. To Quebecers, the enhancement of our trade relations with our southern neighbours in no way means a harmful loss of national identity.

The debate in Quebec did not amount to an identity crisis as it did in the rest of the country. I have said it before, the people of Quebec went through that earlier, during the independence debate. Nowadays, they do not fear an American invasion. Their identity is not centered on the risk of losing their language or their political status within Confederation. The issues about the French language, Meech Lake, Bill 101, or the sign language are not based on hostility, fear, withdrawal or weakness . . . as some people would like to think.

Nor are they based on a bellicose attitude, or a superiority complex, or aggressiveness against the other founding nation.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the battle of the Plains of Abraham is over, and has been over for some time. Some people may still be a little sensitive. Some people may still feel a little frustrated, but, on November 21, the people in Quebec wholeheartedly approved free trade and its impact. That was not the action of an impulsive and neurotic people.

On November 21, Quebec was not boasting. Quebec does not go around bragging and boasting. What is happening today in Quebec cannot be qualified as unrestrained emotivity or bragging. Quebec has not responded to meaningless slogans, such as the "c'est clair et net" message of the Liberal Party. Quebec has not responded to the theoretical and harmful social democracy of the NDP. Quebec responded to the Right Honorable Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), who urges us to work hard, harder and hardest.

Allow me to digress a bit, Mr. Speaker, by saying that this same Québec is defining itself with respect to signage. It still thinks Québec. It still thinks Canada. It is not hostile, aggressive, ungrateful or hateful. It does not want to be insolent. It is what it is, not more, but not less. It is different. It is more and more conscious and more and more certain of its individual and collective future.

In 1984, it voted for Mr. Mulroney and it wasn't a fad. It was a clear choice. Québec had had enough of the Liberal government's haughtiness, intolerance, pedantry, theatrics and arrogance. It had attained a maturity which gave it enough self-confidence, autonomy and flexibility to be able to say no to separation, no to this mockery of a constitution, no to schizophrenic dreams. It said yes to Mr. Mulroney just as it said yes to Mr.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Bourassa, who was once contemptuously called a "hot-dog eater".

In 1988, once again and this time more loudly, Quebec said yes to the Progressive Conservative Party and to Mr. Mulroney because Quebec is not arrogant and because it recognized our party's sincerity, simplicity and sense of values.

Today the people of Quebec have confidence in their ability to compete culturally and economically with the best in the world.

The wrenching doubts of our anglophone compatriots are due to the fact that they have steadfastly rejected all liberalization of the ties which link us to our mighty neighbour to the south. On three occasions in the past 100 years, Canadians were consulted on the possibility of free trade with the United States of America. And twice, in 1891 and in 1911, they rejected such a proposal. No truck or trade with the Yankees, as they used to say!

On those occasions, Quebec expressed its agreement with the rest of the country and defeated one of its greatest Prime Ministers, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Note that since 1911, no federal political party or leader has had the courage or ambition to return to the question of free trade between the two countries. And for a good reason. However, Mr. Speaker, on September 26, 1985, the Prime Minister, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, rose in this House to make the following announcement: Mr. Speaker, I rise to inform the House (and the country) that I have today spoken to the President of the United States to express Canada's interests in pursuing a new trade agreement between our two countries. We seek to negotiate the broadest possible package of mutually beneficial reductions in tariff and non-tariff barriers between our two countries.

Two years later, after difficult negotiations between the representatives of our two countries, a free trade agreement liberalizing the sectors that were not yet subject to a treaty was presented in this House. All of Canada then had a trade treaty that sheltered our leading industrial sectors from American protectionism and gave us wider access to the market considered to be the world's most important. With such an accord, it became possible to steer and guide discussions between the two countries and to limit unilateral actions that are harmful to our industries.

• (2130)

[English]

What the people on this side of the House spelled for Canada was a map of our future commercial relations with our neighbours to the south. In terms of Canadian nationalism, this treaty has been arrived at because of the political will of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to forge ahead and build an even stronger nation.

The response of Canadians has been termed an act of faith. It is more than that. I see the results of the November 21 election as a reaction to common sense and of common sense. As a nation we cannot withdraw from international trade. We depend on it in a large measure and continue to do so in an increasingly competitive world.

Those who work against the Free Trade Agreement seem to have failed to read the consensus among Canadians. Their fears were immediately related to their own sectoral or personal concerns.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the opponents of free trade as it is expressed in this historic agreement have tried everything to spread fear and to trouble our fellow citizens. We witnessed what was really like a hostage-taking when we heard that the most vulnerable citizens were threatened with losing their pensions, their unemployment insurance or their medicare.

What low-mindedness, what panic they showed by such actions, Mr. Speaker. It does not take much to see in such speeches repeated ad nauseam during the election campaign contempt for the voters' intelligence. We saw a determined, often dishonest attempt to shake the nation's self-confidence.

In this House are many Opposition Members who even today raise the spectre of our country being absorbed politically, of the progressive dismantling of our social programs, and what else besides! If they have not yet understood or accepted the Canadian people's verdict, let them at least, Mr. Speaker, refrain from subjecting us to their senseless idle talk and nonsense! They tried to make the Government take the blame for their lack of programs and alternatives. It did not work.

Their hysterical scare tactics have not passed the test of reality and they are now starting all over again as if Canadians, who have the last word, had not realized what they were up to. I have no intention, Mr. Speaker, to deprive the Hon. Members of the right to express their opinion. However, I wish they would stick to constructive criticism of the Bill under consideration. Otherwise, they would have to bear the weight of a totally unacceptable rejection of Canadian public opinion.

To the new generations of Canadians, the rearguard fight led by the Hon. Members opposite will make them look like people from another century. We specifically want to give our future leaders a legacy of confidence in the future and openness to the world.

Those who don't think our culture can resist the American giant simply don't recognize the cultural vitality of this country with two flourishing languages and cultures that extend well beyond our borders.

It is easy to attack the winner and talk of arrogance, but by making such a judgement, we say that the people have elected candidates who are not up to the task. It is insulting to all voters.

At the economic level, we find the same vitality and influence beyond our borders. Isolation, introspection and an underdog mentality have long been the norm in this country. Either after Quebec went through that stage of its cultural and social development despite the demographic reality or, more recently, through the national position taken on the Free Trade Agreement, Canada has changed.

The change was for the better. Canadians are pre-occupied with real issues: quality of life, conservation, environmental upgrading, preventive health care for our elderly, technological change for our industries. Canadians of all origins want to move forward, to grow as individuals. They want closer ties with each other. They demand a healthier financial situation and a stronger economy for the benefit of all those who are a part of it.

Whatever preoccupations associated with the introduction of any treaty of this nature can be overcome. There is an implementation period for the agreement, there is a tribunal to ensure continuity in the exchange of views and to provide a forum for dispute arbitration. These features ensure that the gradual implementation of this treaty will have no dramatic or unilateral impact on the Canadian economy or one sector in particular.

Those who voted for us showed their support for the new economic opportunities which are now within our reach. And they did not do so with their eyes closed. Canadians realize in fact that adjustments will be required and that interim measures will change present habits and certainties. Change means adaptation. It will be the role of Government to manage this process of change and the task force headed by Jean de Grandpré has the mandate to outline appropriate measures and to identify priority sectors needing assistance in the months and years to come.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to stress that in polarizing Canadians on this issue, the debate has provided an opportunity for Canada to cross a hurdle and take a great step forward as a nation. The notion of belonging to a vigorous and sovereign nation, one open to its own people and to the world, is one that can and must be nurtured.

And finally, I would remind those who see this period of history as critical that the Chinese symbol for crisis is made up of two characters, one of which stands for "danger", the other for "opportunity". We are free to believe that the present debate endangers our country, or that it offers the best opportunity to make another step forward in our nation-building process.

The people from Outremont who elected me to this Chamber realized they were offered an opportunity to go ahead and find a new prosperity. The act of faith the people from Outremont made was an act of faith in themselves, in their capacities and their desire to move forward. In that, Mr. Speaker, they resemble the rest of the Canadians composing our national mosaic. In that, Mr. Speaker, they expect from their elected Members that we quickly bring into effect the wishes they have expressed.

What is at stake in this debate goes beyond the jobs to be created, maintained or replaced, the new markets that will open up for us to take advantage of, and even the positive trade balance that will follow.

For the third time in this century, Canadians were invited to express their views on their trade relationship with the United States and, for the first time, they chose to embrace the future without losing sight of the reality. They thus indicated which road to follow, an historical road that we now have to explore, lay out and open up. In the same way that the transcontinental railroad was, section by section, conceived as a unification symbol of our Canadian nation, this agreement can be used to help Canadians reach together new feats.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I wish to remind Hon. Members the well known words written by Calixa Lavallée:

Car ton bras sait porter l'épée, Il sait porter la foi, Ton histoire est une épopée, Des plus brillants exploits . . .

I am convinced that with the Free Trade Agreement, our epic is unfolding and the most brilliant feats are still to come for of all Canadians to see.

Mr. Réginald Bélair (Cochrane—Superior): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the opportunity to speak on this historic Bill C-2 on behalf of my constituents in Cochrane-Superior, whom I thank for giving me their confidence on November 21.

Need I point out that this northern land is very welcoming; it is an ideal place to relax, to fish, to hunt, to go cross-country skiing or ice-fishing, etc. It has wide open spaces that ease the mind and challenge us to get to know nature better.

• (2140)

[English]

This great huge riding stretches from Hudson's Bay to the north shore of Lake Superior. Combined with the Kenora—Rainy River riding, they are more than half of Ontario. Indeed, we are on the map.

Before getting into the subject, let me just say that I would have preferred the witnessing of an agreement on the curbing of acid rain with its devastating effects on our forests and lakes. Some 14,000 lakes are already polluted in Canada.

There was some hope that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan would have struck a deal at the Shamrock Summit in Québec. It flickered out when Reagan flashed the Free Trade Agreement in front of the Prime Minister's eyes. We all know that afterwards the environment was no longer a priority.

President-elect George Bush allotted a mere 10-second clip on the environment issue in 15 months of campaigning. There are some reasons to be alarmed because with the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement we stand to lose a lot of ground on this issue. With the Americans having unlimited access to our natural resources, and considering their low standard on the environment, one can seriously doubt the condition in which they would leave our land once they have exploited its richness.

The natives are also seriously concerned about the possible disruption of their hunting, trapping and fishing grounds. Like any other group of Canadians, they should have a say about the economic development of their regions as much as they have a right to control their own destiny.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

[Translation]

The Mulroney-Reagan agreement, Mr. Speaker, refers many times to harmonizing the two nations. What does this mean? There is a significant imbalance between our two countries today. Canada has a just, humane, compassionate society. American society concentrates on profits, leaving aside the welfare of working men and women when it comes to wages and fringe benefits.

And what about the impact of the agreement on social programs? Let us just say that the Prime Minister told the Financial Times that unemployment insurance and social programs might be renegotiated in the coming years.

Which country do you think will adjust to the other, Mr. Speaker? Because the Americans are extremely rich in capital, since they have ten times the population we do, it is easy to see that we will end up subject to their influence and submitting to their demands. We will suffer this harmful influence because might will make right. It will be the law of the jungle.

Mr. Speaker, rest assured that I and all my colleagues in the Liberal Party will be extremely vigilant; we will speak up vigorously every time our Canadian workers are affected by job losses due to free trade. We will see to it that the benefits they have acquired over the last 40 years will be protected, in order to preserve and maintain family well-being.

It must be borne in mind, Mr. Speaker, that 40 per cent of our workers are unionized and the benefits and protection they have acquired since the 1930s must not be eroded over the coming years. We must keep in mind that nine American states have no minimum wage law and that twelve states have a minimum wage of three dollars an hour or less.

It is also easy to conclude that fringe benefits are not a priority for their political and economic leaders.

[English]

Regional development is also a great concern of mine. The DRIE program is now considered by the United States to be a subsidization program and, therefore, existing industries which wish to adjust to increasing competition are not eligible for government help.

In relation to the forestry industry, when one compounds such an action with the 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber, sawmills across Canada find it extremely hard to remain competitive. Their profits are greatly reduced because of a substantial increase in stumpage fees and therefore the incentive, the motivation to contribute to Canada's economy is not as ardent. They question their future and, by extension, the workers do as well.

Since the Memorandum of Understanding was signed on December 30, 1986, four sawmills have closed in my riding.

What is the Government prepared to do to compensate for these losses? Is it prepared at least to screen American investment in Canada? Has it set up a mechanism where undue, unwanted and unwarranted competition would be controlled? Has the Government thought of negotiating with the Americans a system whereby the latter would have to re-invest some of their profits in Canada?

To summarize, we should not let the Americans muscle their way into Canada and do as they please. They should respect the fact that Canada is huge geographically, and since jobs are concentrated in the larger urban centres, rural areas do indeed depend on regional development incentives in order to remain competitive, and in the end, to survive. Survival can be achieved in other ways than open frontier economic policies with the United States, therefore limiting our exporting capacity to one country only. One should learn from one's past. The Government should expand its exporting markets to the European Economic Community, to China, to Hong Kong, to the Middle East and to the Soviet Union.

• (2150)

Let us not permit history to repeat itself negatively. Canadians know better. I hope the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) will at least consider selling Canadian products elsewhere than the United States.

Hon. Members opposite say that it would be advantageous to limit exports to the American market only. We are already doing 80 per cent of our trade with the United States. Is it worth unleashing American corporations, allowing them to take over our industries, for the remaining 20 per cent?

Out of respect for ourselves, let us keep Canada Canadian. Let us be the masters of our own destiny. Let us diversify our trading partners in order to ensure that American countervailing action not be undertaken. Let us not give them the opportunity to do so. Let us not adhere so blindly to the North American economic constitution.

[Translation]

I could not conclude my remarks, Mr. Speaker, without referring to the omnibus bill regarding the entry of foreign products in the United States and to the fact that Canada is not exempt from it. How can we consider free trade with the Americans when this protectionist bill aims at controlling foreign competition with American industries and small businesses! The Secretary of State, Mr. Schultz, admitted, during his visit to Canada last spring, that it would be ridiculous to talk about free trade if Canada is not exempt from it. And what are we to think of the record speed with which the American Congress passed its bill on free trade with Canada. We must infer that the Americans firmly believe that the agreement is largely favourable to their interests. Americans never lose out when they do business with a foreign country.

All in all, conscious as I am of the impact this agreement will have on our society and bearing in mind the uncertainties which Canadians will be facing, it is my duty and my moral responsibility to vote against this bill in accordance with the mandate given to me by the people of Cochrane—Superior on November 21 last.

[English]

To my constituents, and to the staff and Members of the House of Commons, a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year.

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, the hour is late, the Chamber is understandably sparse, it is nearing Christmas Eve, and Mr. Speaker is beginning his traditional réception de Noël. I am honoured to draw a speaking slot of 9.55 p.m. Eastern Time, 11.25 p.m. in Newfoundland, to address the subject we have been debating for weeks, indeed for many months, the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

My position reminds me of a story that the great former Prime Minister John G. Diefenbaker used to tell as only the Chief could tell it. Long ago, there was a similar marathon debate. Practically everybody in the House had spoken on the same subject and it fell to one rookie MP to bring up the rear. Well, this Hon. Member had made the mistake of giving the text of his remarks to the press in advance, so he had to forge ahead.

I will let the former Right Hon. Member for Prince Albert tell about this MP's maiden address. He went into the history of his riding dating back to biblical times. He even referred to the paternity of the dogs of his constituents. By now the sounds of tinkling glasses and the singing of carols were heard coming from the corridor of the Speaker's chair. Hon. Members began leaving the Chamber by twos, and then by fours, and then in droves, until there was one lone MP sitting across the aisle.

The new MP on his feet kept talking, fixing his gaze on the lone MP, and when he finished his speech, he crossed the floor, and with tears in his eyes shook the man's hand and said, "I want to thank you for your presence. It gave me that something, that inspiration to carry on. Your attention made it possible. Thank you from the bottom of my heart". The man said, "Don't thank me, I'm the last speaker!"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): I dedicate that story to my predecessor and friend, Father Sean O'Sullivan, whom we all wish Godspeed during these difficult days at this time of year.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): I want to thank the people of Hamilton—Wentworth for electing me for the fifth time. Without their trust and their confidence in me, I would not be here.

I also want to say congratulations to you, Mr. Speaker. You too have the confidence of this whole House of Commons, of Members from all sides of the House, in the position that you occupy, and you are doing a fine job, Sir.

Let me, in the spirit of Christmas and ecumenism, say congratulations to all the new Members on all sides of the House for the excellence of their maiden speeches. At least the parliamentary television groupies across the country can testify that there is a lot of talent in this Thirty-fourth Parliament, and for some of us who have been observing and participating in this place for several years, it is good to hear strongly and freshly held and expressed views in this Chamber.

I am proud of my Leader, the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), for achieving history with this Free Trade Agreement. I am proud of his great salesman for the Free Trade Agreement, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). I am also proud to say a few words during this debate on behalf of the city that I represent and love, Hamilton.

We in Hamilton are especially proud of the fact that we are Canada's fifth largest city and we are famous for the industry that stands to benefit most heartily from the Free Trade Agreement. We make steel, very good steel.

This Free Trade Agreement that the House of Commons will pass a little more than two hours from now signals the beginning of a shiny new era for Canada's steel industry. Perhaps that is why we have not heard during these long hours of debate a whole lot of mention by the opposition Members of the quality steel and quality people we have in Canada. That is why we never hear about the security of Hamilton's 23,000 jobs which are directly related to the making of steel, or of the tens of thousands more indirect jobs and spinoff products that benefit from the steel industry. I am not surprised. This is one of the innumerable and irrefutable good features of the Free Trade Agreement.

• (2200)

We in Hamilton and in Sault Ste. Marie are producing the world's finest steel. Nowhere will you find a more classic example of an industry where we not only can compete with the best in the world but we already produce the best in the world. Now we will have a market to prove it. Of course, the opponents to the Free Trade Agreement do not like to point this out, but this Free Trade Agreement will be as strong for the Canadian economy as the strength of steel itself.

Let me just turn to an article by Ken Romain of The Globe and Mail. He put it as succinctly as anyone could:

Because of the strength of the Canadian economy and persisting demand, the companies are operating at near capacity. The market is tight and orders from customers are on an allocation basis. The steel makers are squeezing every last pound of steel they can from their plants.

Mr. Romain goes on to quote William Wallace, executive vice-president and chief operating officer of Dofasco:

In our view if you look at our business and that of our customers, it is a really good picture. We have got customers doing a lot of really good and gutsy things.

But we have to develop and maintain the capability that keeps us in business with them and to provide value, quality and price in the product. We see the whole thing as a process of globalization.

We have got to be good enough at what we are doing and our customers have got to be good enough at what they are doing with the product that we sell them to be able to withstand the South Koreans, the Japanese, and the West Germans and the French, who also use excellent products, and are turning it into good automobiles, for example.

Going on in this article we find:

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Stelco, the country's largest integrated steel producer, has called a halt to its major spending. In the past seven years, it has invested $1 billion in new plant and equipment.

Chairman and chief executive John Allan has said the major portion of the company's program is now completed.

Last year, it began operating two continuous casting units, which cost $350 million, at its Hilton works in Hamilton.

All of this heavy capital spending by the industry was planned well in advance of the negotiations for a Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, and without any reference to what might happen after it is ratified by both countries. Under the Agreement, steel tariffs will be eliminated over the next 10 years.

The industry fully supports the pact. "We see it as part of globalization that is taking place and driving us in the direction that we are going". Bill Wallace said, "We ultimately have to be world competitive and that includes our relationships with the United States".

The Canadian steel industry does not have the capacity to make a major export drive into the United States under free trade because all of its planning in the past has been based on meeting the demands of the Canadian market. Mr. Allan told Stelco's recent annual meeting that the Canada-U.S. Agreement prevents either country from imposing import quotas on the other.

He said that the fortunes of steel companies are directly tied with those of their customers. Many of those stand to gain from the Agreement.

For example, the energy industry which buys steel pipe, gets a secure market in the United States. Steel customers in the manufacturing sector will also gain from the new U.S.-Canada relationship under free trade.

"Steel makers, therefore, stand to benefit not only from their own direct participation in the U.S. market, but also from that of their customers' participation," Mr. Allan said.

You can see, Mr. Speaker, that the steel industry is looking at a glittering market and very much welcomes the opportunity to remove the present barriers to trade. Although Canada is the only country which was exempted from the U.S. voluntary export quotas on steel, we did agree to limit our share to 3.5 per cent of the American market. The American steel industry has continued to complain about Canadian competition, although our actual share of that market has ranged from 3.0 per cent to 3.3 per cent, while the U.S. share of our steel market has risen from 4.5 per cent in 1986 to 7.5 per cent in the last quarter of 1987.

Now American firms have modernized and become more competitive in the export market in the face of stiff competition from the highly efficient and technologically advanced Koreans and Japanese.

The binding dispute settlement mechanism has also been hailed by the industry. It has been the target of a number of U.S. trade actions. Increased economic activity under the Free Trade Agreement is expected to increase demand for primary iron, steel and aluminum products, for example, steel piping and tubing for the petroleum industry. The Free Trade Agreement will also reduce input equipment costs.

Currently the U.S. Department of Commerce is engaged in an anti-dumping and countervailing investigation against steel rail exports from Algoma and Sydney Steel on behalf of Bethlehem Steel of Pennsylvania. In fact, Algoma and Sysco's rail exports have been declining. Here is what the executive vice president of Stelco, Mr. John Hood, has to say about the Free Trade Agreement and steel.

If we fear our ability to compete against a nation with a broadly comparable cost structure to our own, how in the world do we expect to compete against such low-cost producers such as Brazil, South Korea, Taiwan and Singapore?

I think that goes to prove that when we are talking about the free trade arrangement between Canada and the United States it is that, it is an economic trading arrangement. It cannot just be Canada and the U.S. alone. We do have to live within a market, a world market, and the steel industry is a classic example of how an industry can thrive and survive in a world market.

Here is what Daniel Romanko, managing director, of the Canadian Steel Producers Association, has to say:

Under the Agreement, the steel industry can continue to expand its markets both in Canada and internationally, secure in the knowledge that access to its largest export market, the United States, will be less vulnerable.

Here is what Mr. Milton Harris had to say:

After four intensive years of experience fighting off protectionist forces in the American steel industry, I was appalled to watch a TV replay of John Turner figuratively tearing up the Agreement.

That was Milton Harris, President of Harris Steel and a former Chairman of the Liberal Party National Executive Finance Committee.

Here is a quote that I draw to the attention of my friends to the left:

If there were no deal, I believe the U.S. would tighten the screws on us. When there's a glimmer of light, we have to grab on to it. We have a lot at stake.

That was said by Dennis Abernot, President, Local 2251, United Steelworkers of America, Algoma Steel, Sault Ste. Marie.

Here is what Mr. Robert Varah of Dofasco had to say. He dismisses the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition's (Mr. Turner) sectoral approach to the whole free trade proposition:

There aren't enough sectors on which you can have a balance. So you have to go with the broad approach.

Clearly the sectoral approach will not work in this industry.

I have saved one of the best for the last. This comes right from the heart of the Niagara Peninsula, deep in the heart of Welland, Ontario, from Atlas Specialty Steel, Canada's largest manufacturer of stainless steel. The article reads:

Atlas Specialty Steel, Canada's largest manufacturer of stainless steel, believes so strongly in the free trade deal that it has invested $10 million in each of the past two years to make itself more globally competitive.

Incidentally, this is an article from The Toronto Star. The heading is Steelmaker Sees Free Trade Opening Huge Markets. That is The Toronto Star. The article is buried. You would never hear about it from the Hon. Member from Welland (Mr. Parent). I am just quoting for the record.

Bruce Hamilton, general manager of the Niagara Peninsula plant, Atlas Specialty Steel, says:

And that's just the beginning—"I'm talking about that rate every year—

Meaning $10 million in each of the past two years:

I'm talking about that rate every year—

He says removing trade barriers between Canada and the U.S. will open huge new markets for Atlas, a Rio Algom subsidiary with 1,500 employees in Welland.

"Those (investment) rates are here to preserve and maintain this operation as a viable specialty steel mill in North America. We have the capability, certainly, of hiring more people but I think the main thing we're trying to do is maintain the jobs for the people that we've got."

• (2210)

That is a good place to start. The point is that it is happening. Those jobs are locked in, secure, and if anything they will be increased under this agreement. The article further states:

Without trade, the Canadian economy will wither. It's an economic truism perfectly mirrored by Atlas Steel.

"We have to be an internationally competitive mill. If we're not that, we're dead."

That statement was made by Bruce Hamilton.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Canada faces a clear choice in the free trade debate. Either we accept the challenge to compete, or we retreat like a third place athlete to defeat by default. That does not describe the Canadians I know. It does not describe any of the Canadians sitting in this Chamber who were out to win on November 21.

The type of negativism that we have been hearing from our friends in the Liberal and New Democratic Parties is beyond me when they went out and fought like hell to get their seats in the House of Commons. They made it. They were winners. They are Canadians. Canadians are winners. We can compete. That is why we have to pass the free trade Bill into law by tonight and get Royal Assent by January 1, 1989. We have to do that, and we have to win for our children, their children, and the future of this great country.

In closing, let me wish you, Mr. Speaker, a Merry Christmas, Joyeux Noel. I also say that to my parents in Vancouver, and special holiday wishes to all the good people of Hamilton—Wentworth.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair.

Some Hon. Members: Howie, Howie!

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, I should tell my colleagues on the government benches that I am seldom called Howie, except by my most intimate friends, and only in the most intimate circumstances.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McCurdy: First, I wish to express my appreciation to the voters in my riding of Windsor—Lake St. Clair for having extended me the opportunity to sit in the House once more and represent them.

The fact that I was elected to the House in the riding of Windsor—Lake St. Clair reflects the fact that in Windsor approximately 80 per cent of the voters voted against the Conservatives. Although it cannot be argued, and I quite gladly admit this, not all people who voted against the Conservatives were necessarily expressing themselves specifically against the trade deal, nor would I submit the argument that all of those who voted for New Democrats or Liberals were voting against the deal. But in Windsor those who voted 80 per cent against the Conservatives most certainly were voting against the trade deal. There is a reason for that.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

In Windsor we have a much more intimate relationship, and I would say a deeper understanding, of the character of American society than do many other Canadians. That is not to imply a fundamental anti-Americanism, as I am sure you have heard me say before. Most of us in Windsor have American relatives and are engaged in constant commerce between Windsor and Detroit. We like Americans. However, we do not want to be American. We know that their society is quite different from ours. It is a society that we do not want to see replicated in Canada.

It is not only a question of experiencing those differences. We have felt the impact of the subsidiary syndrome in Canada. We have had an intimation of what will happen in this country insofar as it concerns those subsidiary plants that are owned by American multinationals. Nobody in Windsor doubts that efficiency and rationalization will mean a loss of Canadian jobs. There is no doubt about that.

I know there will be a Member on the other side, in typical ignorance not having read anything, and most particularly not having read the trade deal, who will say once more that the Auto Pact was a nice example, a prototype of this trade deal, and we ought to appreciate that what we are doing here is expanding the benefits of that type of relationship with the United States to the rest of Canada. Ignorance cannot be penetrated on that side of the House to convince those Members that the Auto Pact had within it guarantees that ensured Canadian jobs.

Insofar as it relates to something I am going to say later, there was one aspect of the Auto Pact that has not yet been sufficiently attended to in our debate. While it is true that the Auto Pact did ensure some measure of job production in Canada and a rationalization of the industry that assured production in Canada, one of the unremarked features of the Auto Pact was the loss to Canada of engineering, designing, and management. In other words, it was fine for Canadians to work on the factory floor, but not to work in the laboratories, design rooms, and offices of the Big Three. That is very important in respect of this trade deal.

I think that it is necessary to call attention to the fact that when the Government talks about competitiveness it has disregarded the importance of science and technology, and the impact of the trade deal on our ability to compete to the extent that we are able to develop the resources of development for us that will permit us to compete, not only with the United States, but with the whole world.

Let me return to the notion in Windsor, shared by many Canadians, that the inevitable result of this deal will be that Canada will become much more like the United States. Even Simon Reisman had the good sense, in one rare moment, to recognize that fact. He said that it was inevitable that a country with the population of Canada, very much smaller than the population of the United States, would inevitably become more like the United States. The implications of that are very significant.

Most Canadians have a notion of our country that it is in many respects superior to the United States. It is much more civilized and much more humane. All one has to do is live in Windsor and look across at Detroit and see the poverty and the manner in which the poor are treated, to understand that Canada is a much more humane and civilized country, and we want to keep it that way.

We do not believe that we have to sacrifice those characteristics in order to prosper. Indeed, we think that we have an experiment going in this country that would demonstrate that prosperity and social justice could go together, make us successful in the world, and make us just as able to compete as anybody else without doing it on the backs of those who are poor, deprived or oppressed.

Not long ago I had occasion to discuss the trade deal before an audience celebrating the annual meeting of the North American Black Museum in Amherstburg. I have to tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I was surprised at the passion of reaction to the notion of the trade deal. Those of us who came to Canada from the United States to escape slavery do not want to see that society replicated here. There is serious potential for harm to minority groups, because the minorities in this country who have not yet achieved equality will not achieve it in a society whose primary imperative is market forces.

● (2220)

It is not only New Democrats who have called attention to the inevitability of Canada becoming more like the U.S., and the consequences which flow therefrom. Tom Stanfield expressed it in appropriate terms when he said: "It is the cost of government, the cost of energy, the cost of human resources that will allow us to compete or not to compete, and therefore we will slowly adopt the American way, with very few modifications. Why is it that manufacturing is largely located in the southern United States, rather than in the northern which is more comparable to Canada, when it comes to cost structures and a way of life?"

That comment is a very interesting one. It calls attention to a very interesting fact. Those who say to Albertans or to Maritimers that they will be enriched by this deal have not looked at Wyoming, or North Dakota, or South Dakota, or Maine—all of which have suffered as a result of U.S. industry fleeing to the south and to Mexico. U.S. industry is cutting back on its cost of production at the expense of the citizens of the northern states.

Let me cite one other view of the consequences of the inevitable homogenization of Canada and the U.S. I quote the words of Mickey Cohen, as reported in the Financial Times of November 28, 1988. He had the following to say: "I guess I would have to go after regional development and universality. I would cut out most of the industrial support and the individual industrial programs, particularly the ones geared to the regions. I would go after universality and cut unemployment insurance. I would raise the taxes as well, and I might skew the tax system back towards investment. I think we have to tax more and spend less."

That comment implies the inevitable evolution that will take place. But what has not been recognized is that it is the deliberate intent of this Government and its cohorts in the multinationals to make Canada more like the U.S. It is no accident. And the clues were there when, early in the life of this Government, it began to attack the social programs in this country. It attacked the indexation of old age pensions. It attacked the indexation of family allowances. It then proceeded to eliminate the National Energy Program and FIRA, putting Canada up for sale. Mr. Speaker, who can forget this Government's action with respect to the drug patent legislation?

Well, we were begging for an opportunity to get into this deal at that stage of the game. We wanted to show Mr. Reagan just how committed we were to giving the country away and becoming more like the United States. But that wasn't good enough. And so, Mr. Speaker, what we have is a Government that is absolutely committed to the notion that this country should have its society, its politics, its economy determined exclusively by market forces. It is no accident. This Government wants Canada to become more like the U.S., and that is why we are struggling against this agreement.

It is quite obvious, Mr. Speaker, that this Government has a mandate. And while we have had promises from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that the fears that many Canadians have about the need for adjustment programs, and so forth, that the concerns that Canadians have about the threats to regional development programs and the like, will be taken care of by this Government, will be addressed by this Government, one has to bear in mind that guarantees were given that social programs would not be affected, that workers who were displaced would be treated well, to use the kind of phraseology that the Prime Minister is accustomed to using.

And when we engage in this debate—not to defeat the free trade deal, because we know we cannot do that, but to get the Prime Minister to fulfil his promises—we get instead, as my House Leader put it, jackboot democracy. I would refer to it as puerile pettiness, to the extent that my colleague from Essex-Windsor, notwithstanding that it had been intimated by the Minister of State for International Trade (Mr. McDermid) that he would be given extended time, was not given the opportunity to complete his remarks.

I have never seen such niggardly behaviour in this place in my life, and that coming at the Christmas season. This Government should be ashamed of its behaviour.

We do not apologize for trying to get this Government to fulfil the promises that the Prime Minister made during the election campaign at least to address the fears that Canadians have in the face of the inevitability of this deal.

But, I digress from the focus of what I want to say.

One of the core claims of this Government is that it is trying to give Canada the opportunity to compete internationally and to do so effectively.

I will not digress again into the question of access to American markets and whether we really have that, or whether the disputes settlement mechanism will work or not. But let's consider the elements of competitiveness in the modern world economy.

It surely cannot be a part of increased competitiveness for a country that spends more money on its energy than any other country in the world, both for industrial purposes and domestic purposes, to give it away, in effect, when in fact our energy resources could be a comparative advantage.

Clearly there is something else afoot among those who suggest that we are going to be more competitive if we say that some of the comparative advantages we have will not be comparative advantages, as energy resources otherwise might be.

It is clear to anybody who wants to examine the elements of competitiveness in this the tail end of the 20th century that the very core of competitiveness is the ability to produce new technology and new knowledge; that the core of economic survival for industrial nations such as Canada is research and development.

And yet, Mr. Speaker, this country has a pitiful record in respect of research and development. Only one-half as much of our Gross National Product is spent on research and development as is spent by the other industrial nations against which we must compete. And one of the reasons for this is that so much of our industry is American owned. In fact, if one looks at those industries that are Canadian owned and their commitment to research, it can be seen that they commit the same proportion of their sales to research investment as characterizes the other industrial nations, and our real problem is our foreign ownership.

One of the elements of the trade deal that has not been discussed in any great detail is in fact the ownership or investment rules. In respect of this signal fact, every single company in Canada worth less than $150 million is open to acquisition by Americans without any review at all. None. No conditions with respect to performance; no conditions with respect to employment; and no condition that would say that, once acquired by the Americans, a company even has to stay in Canada.

And what characterizes those industries? What characterizes those industries is the fact that almost every single new net job produced in Canada in the last 10 years has been produced by companies worth less than $150 million. Most important, virtually all Canadian research and development was done in companies worth less than $150 million. We have put up for sale the very core of our competitiveness, assuming we understand that research and development is important to our future competitiveness. Certainly that is clear.

• (2230)

How do you stimulate research and development? You do it by subsidies, at least in part. You do it by grants to industry, at least in part. You do it by procurement. We face five to seven years in negotiations on subsidies and you know damn well that the result is not going to permit the Canadian Government to invest specifically in Canadian industry to stimulate research and development. That is going to be unacceptable. You cannot count on it. Yet half of all research in the U.S. is paid for by the American Government.

Some $65 billion a year is spent by the American Government on research, and two-thirds of that is for defence. In other words, the Americans have an area of subsidization for research that is not accessible to Canadian industry. And I am not even going to talk about the subsidies at the state or city level that will never be attacked. I am talking about a heavy duty investment in research by the American Government that we will not be able to duplicate and which is closed off to us.

We say we are going to make Canada more competitive in the American market. Nonsense. We put up our research and development intensive industries for sale. We are in a deal in which the Americans can subsidize their research in ways in which we cannot.

Furthermore, we have procurement rules. Oh, we have a nice level playing field in the procurement rules. Procurement is one of the most powerful methods of stimulating research and development. Do you know that our $150 million or less industry is where one would expect to have research taking place, yet they are wounded by this agreement. Do you know that the Americans have protected their small business by a set-aside rule? There is a whole gob of contracts that the American Government puts out that will not be accessible to our industry because it is closed off to favour their industry. We will not even talk about the minority set-asides. So procurement is unlikely to be the weapon it ought to be in stimulating research and development in Canada. The importance of this aspect of this deal is such that I am tempted to ask you for extra time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCurdy: However, I know the Government would not tolerate that because of course it does not want to penetrate the cloud of ignorance which has propelled speeches from Members opposite so far.

Let me say in closing that I know you enjoyed this, Mr. Speaker. I wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year and I look forward to seeing you again next year.

Mr. Pat Sobeski (Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for the privilege of addressing this House. As this is the first time I have spoken in the House of Commons I must first thank the voters of my riding who elected me to continue the tradition of strong federal representation for Cambridge. As many in this Chamber know, Chris Speyer served this riding and this country as a skilled legislator. I am honoured to be the beneficiary of the contribution he made to my riding. He has established an excellent standard for me to duplicate.

The riding of Cambridge encompasses a number of communities: the City of Cambridge, comprised of the former Cities of Galt, Preston and Hespeler; the Township of North Dumfries and the addition, as a result of redistribution, of the south ward of the City of Kitchener. The riding is a combination of urban and rural, and a reflection of the nation as a whole.

This riding has benefited for the last four years because of the economically sensible policies of this Government. The voters of this area remember five years ago under the previous Liberal Government when the unemployment rate was in the 17 per cent range. Over the four years of Conservative Government the unemployment rate in the riding fell to 2.9 per cent or, to put it another way, 97.1 per cent of the working population was employed.

The workers of this region recall that, at the start of the first mandate of the Conservative Government, it established a long-term plan and agenda for economic renewal, and it is clear from the confidence expressed by Canadians that that plan is working. I am proud to represent a Government which created the economic environment that delivered jobs for the riding.

With this record of accomplishment in this riding, a riding which was experiencing one of the fastest growth rates in Canada, why would the voters elect a supporter of the Free Trade Agreement? If there was any riding that wanted to maintain the status quo, it should have been the Cambridge riding.

However, the voters listened during the three years of this debate and on November 21, when they were asked to decide, they decided on me and a second majority mandate for this Government.

Let me review for the House a few facts that convinced the voters of my riding to get on with the job of building a stronger Canada. The Macdonald Commission informed the Canadian people that we do not have unrestricted access to a market of 100 million people as do members of the European Economic Community, Japan, and the U.S. As well, the U.S. has a wide range of non-tariff barriers and regulatory procedures which prevent Canadian firms from having secure access to the U.S.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We have witnessed the growth of U.S. protectionism with over 800 protectionist measures on the books that would have had a negative impact on plants, which means a loss of jobs. However, the workers of this riding knew that even if the riding of Cambridge was doing well, tearing up the Free Trade Agreement would not continue this golden status quo.

The strongest U.S. opponents of free trade are the United Auto Workers and the politicians from the auto producing States who want a much more aggressive negotiation on the Auto Pact to Canada's disadvantage. If we tear up the Free Trade Agreement we expose the Auto Pact by itself to a fresh and dangerous challenge. The Auto Pact has enriched and strengthened my riding and the citizens want to continue to build on free trade, not only in Waterloo region but in the rest of this nation.

Hon. Members opposite are also aware that any arrangement entered into with the U.S. must be compatible with GATT and acceptable to our trading partners. The only arrangement acceptable is a free trade area under Article 24. The Opposition has suggested it would attempt to negotiate a series of trade agreement with the Americans which are limited in scope to specific industrial sectors, the so-called sectoral approach. However, this approach was tried by the Liberals earlier in this decade and it did not work.

• (2240)

Members of the Opposition say that the Free Trade Agreement is no big deal as only 20 per cent of our exports still face U.S. tariffs. The critical point is that those remaining tariffs are primarily on manufactured and processed goods. The tariff structure makes it cheap to export raw materials and expensive to export finished or processed products made from those raw materials. Eliminating remaining tariffs gets rid of this disincentive to do more with our resources in Canada. As the President of the Canadian Federation of Labour said, or put it simply: "More pre-export processing means more jobs".

Members of the Opposition have made claims that companies will locate down to the southern States where there are no minimum wages laws. If that were the case, then why would the automobile industry invest so heavily in Ontario in the last few years? Why would Honda locate in Alliston? Why did Toyota pick Cambridge? Why did GM-Suzuki pick Ingersoll?

The answer is, first, that the Canadian labour force is well educated and capable of operating the sophisticated equipment of modern industry. Second, in the Province of Ontario and in the communities of Alliston, in Waterloo Region and Oxford County, there exists a tremendous work ethic. When education is combined with work ethic one gets greater productivity. We recognize it. The workers recognize it. More important, industry recognizes it, too.

The companies are willing to pay higher wages here because of the greater productivity of Canadian workers, and that makes it a good investment for these companies. Canadian workers should be congratulated for the well-earned reputation they have achieved in the international community.

I suggest that where wages are low productivity is low. I suggest that where wages are low quality is low. In other words, one gets what one pays for.

I want to say a few words about Canada's aerospace industry that stands as a concrete example that free trade can and does benefit Canadian companies and Canadian workers. The aerospace industry is one of the only Canadian industrial sectors to have firsthand experience with and to operate a multinational free trade agreement.

The Civil Aircraft Agreement is a multinational trade agreement signed by the participating countries of the GATT which came into effect January 1, 1980, and virtually eliminated all tariff duties on commercial aviation products, including aircraft components and parts.

What have been the results between 1980 and 1987? The aerospace industry has greatly benefited under this agreement, allowing the Canadian aerospace industry to add more than 14,000 new jobs—a 30 per cent increase since 1980. In comparison, the remainder of the Canadian economy added new jobs in those seven years at the rate of 11.5 per cent.

The Canadian aerospace industry is proof that international agreements, whose purpose is to encourage export trade, can and do work. Canadian companies and their employees can and do win.

I would now like to be more specific as I review a few companies in the riding of Cambridge.

Com-Dev Limited is part of that aerospace industry that exports most of its products to the United States. The company predicts the current work force of 260, composed of young men and women from our universities and community colleges, will double over the next five years.

Com-Dev Limited is a Canadian company that sells a high tech product to the United States, Europe and Japan. This Cambridge industry is a study of excellence that is another example proving Canada can compete with the best in the world.

The textile industry also has a presence in Cambridge. Let us look at Tiger Brand, a successful Canadian company. Tiger Brand is an example of the kind of restructured and modernized garment plant that will succeed under free trade. As the president of that firm indicated:

The Free Trade Agreement is just a simple transaction between two countries. It will help this company to employ more people by expanding our share of the U.S. market. The fact is that there is not a single 'modern' sewing machine collecting dust in Canada.

This company does not make the $1.50 T-shirts. It wants no part of that market. Let the developing countries manufacture that product.

Tiger Brand markets a high quality, colourful, fashion-oriented sportswear that is aggressively sold in the competitive North American market-place. This is a progressive company, willing to move with the times. Yet, at the same time, it has established a child care centre to assist the employees working there.

Another firm, Allen-Bradley, a major player in the industrial electrical field, supports the Free Trade Agreement because it will protect and expand its access to the large U.S. market. In fact, the president of the firm has indicated that: "When duties are removed from our medium-voltage products, we will be in an even better position to compete in the United States. By increasing our exports, we will be creating many more jobs for our area. Our Canadian employees can compete with American employees in any state, now and in the future."

Allen-Bradley is also committed to the long-term development of business in Canada with its employees. During the past two years it has spent $14 million to improve its facilities and equipment. In 1989, it plans to spend at least $7.4 million on new capital projects.

I might add that Allen-Bradley's record of community involvement is a model of good corporate citizenship.

Canadian General-Tower Limited is a medium-sized vinyl manufacturing Canadian company located in Cambridge, Oakville and Etobicoke that ships 50 per cent of everything it makes to the United States. According to its Chairman, the prospects of free trade have enabled the firm to increase its factory capacities substantially and that means prosperity for the community, not only in taxes paid but, more important, in the jobs that will be sustained and created.

He continues:

The Canadian market is simply not big enough. Worse, without free trade, U.S. protectionist policies will limit and erode Canada's export potential. An alternative for our firm may be to service the American market from plants located in the U.S. And that loss would invariably be deeply felt by those local retailers who currently serve our 1,000 employees.

As these examples illustrate, the Free Trade Agreement will continue to bring more and better jobs to the residents of Kitchener and Cambridge.

In June of this year Prime Minister Thatcher spoke to Parliament. I want to remind Hon. Members of some of her comments. She said:

Britain has learned that it is not Government which creates wealth, but people, provided Government has policies which encourage them to do so.

We have also got away from the debilitating concept of the all powerful State, which takes too much from you to do too much for you, constantly substituting the politician's view of what the people should have, for the people's own view of what they want.

Later in the same address she said:

Protectionism is not the lifebelt which keeps an economy afloat. It is a millstone that drags you down and penalizes consumer and workforce alike. Subsidize the inefficient and soon that is all you have; you lose the competitive edge to export abroad and keep prices down at home.

In my riding of Cambridge local industries and companies have continually emphasized the need for improved productivity, with dedicated and innovative people, the superior application of technology and the new opportunities offered by the Free Trade Agreement. I am confident that the future of the riding of Cambridge is strength and growth, within a truly independent Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Karygiannis (Scarborough—Agincourt): Mr. Speaker, it is an honour to stand to speak for the first time in this House on behalf of my constituents of Scarborough—Agincourt. I want to thank them for giving me the opportunity to come here.

Last weekend when I was in my constituency the people I met were continually asking about the free trade deal. One business man I know, a man who is a well known Conservative supporter, wanted to know what the fuss was all about, why didn't we Liberals just let the Bill pass and get it over with.

• (2250)

I am sure that many of my colleagues across the floor are wondering the same. I asked the man: "Would you sell or buy a house of any kind, or any kind of property without first studying the terms of the contract and discussing it with your family? Would you venture into a major business deal with another company without first making sure that all the cards were on the table and that credit was good at the bank and that all your business partners knew what was going on? That is what we are doing." There was no argument.

I explained that as an informed businessman he may have a good idea of how the present free trade pact might affect his business. What about those Canadians who have very little or no working understanding of international trade and business? Do they have any less right to know or feel assured? What about the small local storeowners or textile factory workers who work long hours just to make ends meet, who cannot afford to pay a mortgage and may never own their own homes? What has the Government said to them, either to inform or assure them that they will benefit from free trade, other than there would be some fall-out from the gains made by multinational corporations which will be the real beneficiaries of the deal?

Again there was no argument because this gentleman knew, as we all know, that the Conservatives nearly lost the election because they arrogantly and mistakenly thought that the less the public knew about free trade the better. They wanted to believe that it was a non issue.

Before the beginning of the election campaign, I believe that 99 per cent of Canadians knew nothing about the GATT negotiations, much less their connection with free trade.

I told this man that the track record of the Government is that it has never said once, from beginning to end, what its real intentions in proposing this Bill have been. It has never come clean with the public or the House, to spell out in simple terms who will really benefit and who will really lose once the trade Bill becomes law.

Many are bewildered that our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) now hails this deal as Canada's salvation when, prior to 1984, he insisted that he did not even want to hear mention of a free trade pact since it meant the loss of Canadian sovereignty.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Why does a loss of Canadian sovereignty no longer concern the Government? Did the Prime Minister have to go along with free trade to obtain a membership in the exclusive trading club known as G-7? Perhaps the Prime Minister was told in no uncertain times that the Auto Pact would be cancelled and a new arrangement renegotiated under GATT unless he played ball with the U.S.

What will be the impact on national markets all over the world when one of the world's richest resource nations, Canada, becomes intimately linked with the world's largest debtor nation? It is absolutely incredible. It is outrageous. Where and when has the Government, either in the House, on the campaign trail, or in any of its publications ever addressed these issues or attempted to satisfy these kinds of questions with a reasonable response?

It falls upon us, because of the unwillingness of the Government to provide the public with any sort of useful information, to make sure that all the questions are raised and every answer checked so that every opposition Member is satisfied that a reasonable accounting can be given on the issue of free trade to the people of their own constituencies who are now purposely being kept ignorant by the Government.

We have the right to ask and a right to know, but most of all we have a responsibility to the Canadian public to inform them fully of every possible consequence to their future which will result from this Bill.

Our Party has said that we would not impede the passage of a free trade Bill and we will of course hold true to our word. However, the election of the Government was hardly an overwhelming endorsement of free trade.

A better measure of the Canadian feeling on this issue was taken by pollsters immediately following the national debate among the three Party Leaders. At that time, the big corporations spent millions of dollars in advertising, buying the election for the Government.

Why was this done? Were the millions spent because free trade would benefit the average Canadian? Even the most naive would not believe that big business suddenly developed this touching concern for the little guy.

Why did most of the big business community so strongly support the Free Trade Agreement? In the past few years we have seen a number of Canadian corporations transferring their operations to the United States, or buying on a large scale existing U.S. business enterprises. None did so because they would have access to a larger market, they did it because there are fewer effective government interventionist policies in the United States, that bastion of free enterprise where what is good for General Motors is good for the U.S.A., as a former U.S. Cabinet Secretary put it.

Yet these corporations, which one former Party Leader called corporate welfare bums, are usually in the front line at the trough petitioning the Government for special favours and hand-outs.

The concern of my constituents is over what protection the Government will afford its citizens when corporations in Canada insist they cannot compete with U.S. firms as long as they are forced to contribute to the social programs which constitute the safety net that provides a decent minimum standard of living for so many of our citizens.

Are our social services, pensions, tax system, health insurance and other programs to be changed more like those in the United States where the gap between the rich and the poor is steadily growing? For example, in Canada, over 80 per cent of unemployed workers receive unemployment insurance benefits of 60 per cent of their weekly wage for up to one year. In the United States, only one-quarter of the unemployed receive unemployment insurance benefits, getting less than 40 per cent of their weekly wage for only six months.

In Canada we have universal medicare. In the United States, 36 million people, one-third of them children, have no form of medical insurance.

Welfare assistance is readily available for all Canadians but only one-third of poor American families receive any public assistance. It is no wonder there is such a high crime rate in the United States.

Yet the Americans claim that our social programs are unfair subsidies and want compensation for profits lost to American companies if and when Canadians create new social programs like dental care or public automobile insurance.

That is blackmail, extortion and robbery.

My Scarborough—Agincourt constituents have other concerns. They want progressively higher standards in the areas of environment protection, occupational health and safety, consumer protection and minimum wages.

With respect to minimum wages, several of the states have no minimum at all and most others have pegged minimum wages well below Canadian levels. Surely if free trade is going to make Canada a wealthier nation we should be able to afford higher standards.

Surely no one is going to be so bold as to suggest that in order to keep in world markets we must poison our environment, maim and injure our workers and consumers, and pay poverty wages to our workers.

These are legitimate concerns not only of my constituents but of most Canadians.

When Canadians were concerned that our precious water resources were being jeopardized by the Free Trade Agreement, the Government reluctantly reacted by amending the agreement. Surely since the concerns I have raised on behalf of Canadians are serious and the Government claims the agreement will not have these impacts, then the Government should be prepared to accept amendments which will reassure Canadians that their concerns and reservations on this Free Trade Agreement have been addressed.

Any attempt by the Government to limit legitimate debate and proposal of amendments will be a betrayal of the trust of citizens who have been lured into voting for the Government by the massive big business propaganda barrage.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mrs. Pierrette Venne (Saint-Hubert): Mr. Speaker, as a proud representative of the residents of my riding in this Chamber, and having the privilege of speaking on their behalf, I rise today to participate in this third reading debate on the Bill implementing the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States. Mr. Speaker, I must take this opportunity to extend my thanks to the voters of my riding of Saint-Hubert who elected me on November 21. They can rest assured that I will always be listening to them, as I did during the 51 days the election campaign lasted.

Mr. Speaker, I have no pretension of bringing to this Chamber a completely new point of view on the Free Trade Agreement.

This is partly because, as one of my colleagues indicated earlier, an extremely impressive number of hours have already been devoted to this proposal during the thirty-third Parliament and since the opening of this session, thus allowing many of us to express their wise opinions. However, Mr. Speaker, the Opposition Parties have repeatedly mentioned the fact that the numerous newly-elected Members of the House had not participated in the previous debates. First of all, Mr. Speaker, Opposition Members seem to have forgotten that thanks to them, and because of their lies and the fearmongering that went on, the last election was centered on free trade.

As the new Member for Saint-Hubert, I wish to state very clearly that the residents of my riding support the Free Trade Agreement.

On November 21, they clearly indicated their consent, giving me a 10,400 vote majority.

Last week-end, I went to a few Christmas parties in my constituency, and the people were both surprised and amazed that the Opposition would try in the House to delay the passing of the free trade Bill. I could see amazement, Mr. Speaker, as they asked questions, and voiced their obvious dissatisfaction with the Opposition who does not want to admit that, on November 21, the people decided, and as one of my colleagues would say, vox populi, vox Dei.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to briefly describe the industrial structure of my constituency of Saint-Hubert. We have mainly small, but excessively dynamic businesses which have earned for themselves a good share of the market. Some of them are already exporting to the United States and other countries.

There is a variety of manufacturing industries in my constituency, making a wide range of products, including plastic mouldings, coffee-makers, lab equipment, steel wire, stairs and ramps, condensers and evaporators, kitchen furniture, clothing, and steel and aluminum containers.

In Saint-Hubert, we also have a Pratt & Whitney plant, building engines for airplanes and helicopters. You can also find in my riding the best aeronautics school in Canada, which offers courses in manufacturing, maintenance and aviation, and creates, with the Saint-Hubert airport, a unique infrastructure ensuring our economic development in years to come.

The Free Trade Agreement can only contribute to the expansion of this industrial complex which well deserves it. Mr. Speaker, the concept of free trade between Canada and the United States is not new. As a matter of fact, it has existed since before Confederation, having been founded in 1854. Since then, many successive attempts have been made to secure comprehensive agreements, including one in 1911 proposed by Sir Wilfrid Laurier. It is only after the Depression in 1935, that Canada and the United States would go about signing a whole series of treaties favouring free trade that would evolve in the course of the following 50 years.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The average custom tariffs decreased between 1930 and today from 38.5 per cent to more or less 5.5 per cent. This liberalization of trade occurred under the GATT and mainly under the Auto Pact.

Mr. Speaker, the Members of the Opposition, those especially of the socialist persuasion, do not like us to mention the fact that a free trade agreement already exists in the car manufacturing industry. Who would dare rise in the House and claim that Canada could have done a lot better after 1965 without the Auto Pact?

Since World War II, Canada and the United States have worked together to encourage the greatest expansion of world trade in history, and the Free Trade Agreement represents the logical conclusion of this long process.

In 1982, faced with the slowness of GATT and a succession of protectionist measures passed and the United States Congress, the Liberal Government of the time created, at a cost of $23 million, the Macdonald Royal Commission to analyze our country's economic perspectives.

Having spent $23 million and three years studying the matter and consulting, the Commission recommended, in August 1985, that Canada seek a bilateral trade agreement with the United States.

Liberal Senator van Roggen, who used to chair the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs and who had recommended the signing of a Canada-United States trade agreement in 1978 and in 1982, resigned to protest the attitude of the Liberal majority in the Senate at the end of the 33rd Parliament. During the recent economic summit which was held in Toronto, our main trade partners demonstrated their support for the Free Trade Agreement and remarked that it could be used as a model for the changes to be made to the GATT.

Mr. Speaker, these concrete facts did not escape the attention of the Canadian people on November 21. The Opposition's attitude goes against reality. To my mind, they are reacting out of frustration at their electoral defeat.

The Free Trade Agreement, although much publicized, is an integral part of the legislative program put forward by the Government since it took power in 1984. It is part and parcel of a series of crucial measures aimed at economic renewal and national reconciliation along with the Meech Lake Agreement, the tax reform, the national child care policy, the Québec regional development plan, competition legislation and privatization.

Mr. Speaker, this country is undergoing a process of change, of adjustment, of preparation for the twenty-first century. And I am honoured to take part in the debates in this House, in the parliamentary process leading to the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, Canada's economy is based on our capacity to export. I now wish to enumerate certain indisputable facts in order to enlighten the Opposition and perhaps alter its attitude which can only be one of stubbornness, of frustration, of lack of respect for the Canadian people. How could it be otherwise when they refuse to accept the following facts:

1. Thirty per cent of Canada's Gross National Product is made up of exports;
2. Canada is the only major country which does not have a market of 100 million consumers;
3. Seventy-eight per cent of Canadian exports are destined for the United-States;
4. Canada ranks second among the world's industrialized countries with 26 per cent of its Gross Domestic Product being composed of exports, in comparison with 28 per cent in the case of West Germany, which was the greatest exporting country in the world in 1987.

The world economy is increasingly interdependent and in the Canadian economy growth is linked to the constraints of changing international markets and even more so to interdependence with the American market, since no other two countries in the world have closer economic ties.

These are the facts, Mr. Speaker, and they should convince the liberals and socialists across the way.

The FTA will have the following beneficial effects: In the energy sector, opening up to the American market will encourage the search for new energy reserves and will ensure greater energy production in the medium term, thus making Canada less dependent on world reserves.

Increased direct investment in the United States by Canadian companies in recent years will be rechanneled to Canada, given its access to the American market and proximity to energy sources. Trade liberalization will force firms to upgrade equipment and improve productivity and this will bring about increased exports to other countries.

Mr. Speaker, we never hear the Opposition mention the benefits which the Free Trade Agreement holds in store for consumers. The truth is that the cost of tariffs is borne by the consumer, just as the cost of any other indirect tax. With the elimination of tariffs and with increased market access, the Canadian consumer will be paying less for a wider variety of products.

During the election campaign, Mr. Speaker, the Opposition has rallied around the threat of curtailment or loss of social services in Canada. It will be noted that having practically flogged to death the issue, they have considerably toned down their attempts to intimidate the Canadian public this week and last in the House, and the reason is, Mr. Speaker, that the Free Trade Agreement will in fact ensure enhanced social services for Canadians in the future. In the past, like in the period after the war, collective enrichment was translated into a more equitable distribution of wealth in social services, unemployment insurance, health insurance and car insurance.

Before redistributing wealth, we must create it. And the best way to be able to afford our social services is not to increase personal income tax as advocated in the electoral platform of the Socialist Opposition.

The search for incentives to stimulate the economy, such as access to the American market, will generate additional resources to pay for our social programs, even with our rapidly aging population.

[English]

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, our great nation on the eve of the twenty-first century can only benefit from the Free Trade Agreement.

Ms. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, the people of Ottawa West have entrusted me with an important mission, to speak out on their behalf, to bring their views to this Parliament, and to the governing of this society. It is a trust I do not want to betray no matter how late the hour or how enticing the prospect of a Christmas holiday. It is a trust I do not limit just to those who voted for me but to those who voted for someone else. It is a trust I hold on behalf of all my constituents, and it is a trust we all bring to this House.

We talk about participatory democracy and consulting the people. This election has had to be the granddaddy of all consultations.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

[Translation]

I suppose that all my colleagues here spent 50 days and more, as I did, going door to door and personally meeting millions of people in their ridings.

[English]

Perhaps never before did a Parliament have such an opportunity to debate a major issue of public policy in full awareness of the views, the aspirations, and the hopes of all Canadians. It is a chance I think we have blown.

[Translation]

In our democratic system, the big question is to what extent we will be able to incorporate in the Free Trade Act everything we learned and heard so that the Agreement can be more acceptable to a greater number of Canadians.

[English]

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked about reconciliation. He talked about healing the nation. We had the opportunity here in the last 11 days to draw on every shred of wisdom everyone of us in this House has gained to make the best possible deal we could, and we did not do it. We had the opportunity to implement those values that unite us as Canadians, not those that divide us.

The Government has chosen not to take that path of reconciliation but to block by every means at its disposal amendments that would have satisfied and eased the concerns of millions of Canadians. The Government has chosen instead to stifle the expression of those views by limiting debate through every procedural means at its disposal, to cut off the 120 new Members who were elected to this House and who have never had the chance to speak on behalf of their constituents before.

It is not enough for a Government to say "we won the majority of seats" or for others to say "we won the majority of the popular vote".

There was, as I heard it, no impenetrable wall that separated those that voted for the Government on this issue and those that voted against. On either side of the argument there were deep concerns about this deal and what it means for the future of our country. Those who voted for the Government, and presumably for the trade deal, and those who voted against it, with few exceptions, both want to see our network of social programs maintained.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

They want the Canadian Government to retain the power to implement new programs in the future to meet new and emerging social needs. They want to know that we will continue to pursue the Canadian dream that one should be able to live in any of the diverse geographic regions of this country and not be disadvantaged by it. It is a goal that we are far from achieving, that goal of regional equality. It is one we continue to strive for. We want to be able to continue to use the wealth of the more prosperous parts of our country to invest in wealth and prosperity for the rest of our country. We do not want that investment to be considered a trade subsidy subject to retaliation.

The environment is important to all Canadians however they voted on November 21. We live with vast open spaces with lakes, forests, rivers and oceans. We want to know that we can legislate high standards of environmental protection. We may even want to compensate businesses for the extra costs of meeting those standards and still keep them competitive. We should be able to do this without being punished by our trading partners for what they may consider unfair subsidies.

We believe as Canadians in a dramatically changing economic climate, with or without this trade deal. Workers who are displaced by forces beyond their control should have access to retraining and to new job opportunities. They should have the support of their society in adjusting. We know that with this trade deal there will be winners and losers. What does that mean? It means there will be some jobs gained and a lot of jobs lost. Much personal hurt goes along with that. I have some suspicion that most of the big winners, those less than 30,000 jobs a year, less than .1 per cent of our total employment changes in the year, will be created for those who are able to interpret it and carry this trade deal into court, not for ordinary Canadians.

Who are the victims? We know who the victims are. Every study that has been done has told us who the victims will be. They are women, under educated, visible minorities, and the disabled. Those will be the real victims.

During the election the Minister of Multiculturalism and I were on a panel before the National Association of Immigrant and Visible Minority Women. We heard of about 600 women in Toronto who have lost their jobs. The Minister told those women: "It is because we want to give you better jobs. We do not think that minimum wage jobs are good enough for you". Tell that to those women now when they are attempting to buy a turkey for their family at Christmas.

Did the Minister return from that panel and find out what is happening to those women? Did he talk to the Minister of Employment and Immigration and say: "What can we do for those women?" The Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) has told us time and again this week that the Government is taking no pro-active role in helping displaced and dislocated workers. It is sitting back and waiting to see, standing by.

A good adjustment program plans for change and anticipates change. It involves the employers and the businesses in predicting change so that the Government can help people to adjust to that change. Why wait until they are out of work to provide the training that they need? That is the whole new approach needed.

These values are common values held by a vast majority of Canadians. They cross Party differences, and they cross regional differences. They are the values that the Prime Minister assured Canadians were not affected by the trade deal. The Canadian people took the Prime Minister at his word.

My Party lives by those values. That is why we prepared amendments to be introduced in the House, to attempt to reconcile the views of those who voted for the deal and of those who voted against the deal, to ensure that those fundamental freedoms of a sovereign nation are not at risk. We have been prevented from putting those amendments. Why has the Government refused to put on paper the promises that it made to the people of Canada during an election campaign? There is only one answer.

The Canadian public knows that over the years Liberal Governments have taken every opportunity to expand trading links throughout the world. This remains the case today with our Party. We want to look beyond our borders, to look at bold and imaginative plans to open up huge new markets in Mexico, Central and South America, and in every corner of the globe. We should be able to do this without jeopardizing the various development and social programs which enrich life for Canadians.

During the election the Prime Minister assured Canadians that social programs were not at risk. If that is the case, why did the Government refuse even to allow an amendment to put those assurances in writing? What is so dangerous about an amendment that would have stated that nothing in the agreement shall be interpreted to affect the continuation of existing or the establishment of new Canadian social programs? Is that not precisely what the Prime Minister stated the deal was all about and that those things were not threatened?

[Translation]

If the Agreement does not call into question our sovereign right to create new social programs to respond to the needs of our growing number of senior citizens, for example, or to set up a universal day care program, if that is our decision, nothing prevents us from saying so clearly in the Agreement.

[English]

The Prime Minister assured Canadians that our ability to legislate and implement environmental protection is not threatened by this deal. If indeed that is the agreement with the Americans, amendments to make it absolutely explicit should be no problem. However, the Government refused to allow us to introduce the "dangerous" amendment that nothing in the agreement applies to existing or future programs and policies to protect the environment, reduce pollution, or conserve the land, resources, and water of Canada. Now, is that not a dangerous amendment? We could not bear to have it see the light of day in the House it is so dangerous to the trade agreement.

The Prime Minister assured Canadians that regional development programs were not in jeopardy in the negotiations to come. Yet we find in the agreement that only two specific regional development programs are exempted from being considered unfair subsidies and therefore countervailable.

We are concerned about all the regional development programs. That is why we put forward a amendment that stated that nothing in this agreement would prevent the authority of Canada in any of the following areas, and I will mention only one, economic development of all regions of Canada on an equitable basis. What is the problem with that amendment, if that indeed is what the agreement allows?

The Prime Minister assured Canadians that there will be ample adjustment and retraining programs to cushion the negative effects of employment dislocation. Yet, the Government refused and prevented amendments coming to the floor of the House that would have ensured that no interpretation in the future would minimize that power of the Government.

There were other amendments to clarify the protection of our water resources and our control of water.

There were amendments to allow monitoring in order that we could put in place those adjustment programs. There were amendments specifying the sovereignty of Canada. In all those areas they were amendments not to change the agreement, but simply to put in writing what the Prime Minister said.

I shall vote against this Bill because I believe it to be fundamentally flawed on three major points. First, it does not secure free trade, it does not secure assured access to the American market, it does not secure exemptions from protectionist American trade laws, and it does not secure a binding dispute settlement mechanism. Second, there is no conclusion in this agreement on what is a subsidy. Future considerations may be an all right term in hockey contracts. It is not an all right term when the stakes are your country. Third, this is not a free trade deal when it gives away the strongest bargaining tools we have to go into those five to seven years of negotiation. What else do we have to trade with? What else do we have to negotiate? We have given up control of access and pricing of our energy, investment in Canada, and control of our financial institutions.

As I read this deal and talked about it through the campaign, I kept thinking about Kenny Rogers. I wished that he had been standing at Simon Reisman's elbow or at the Prime Minister's elbow as he signed this agreement. He said: "You got to know when to hold, and you got to know when to fold up, know when to walk away, and know when to stay". Mr. Reisman knew when to walk away, and the Prime Minister sent him back to sell a little bit more of the country.

I believe that the sell-out of investment is particularly damaging, and it puts small businesses in this country on the auction block, and not necessarily to the highest bidder. I believe that investing in Canada with its rich resources and vast potential is a privilege, a privilege that should bring with it economic opportunities, not ownership of Canadians.

The riding I represent is touched by all these issues. It is diverse and represents the full richness of urban living in Canada. I represent very wealthy Canadians, middle-income Canadians, low-income working families struggling to make ends meet, and thousands who live below the poverty line. Many are single parents raising their children on public assistance. I know the inadequacy of the present social and training programs to meet the needs of these families to raise their children and to live with dignity and hope for the future.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement[Translation]

My riding has more senior citizens than perhaps any other in the country. During this election, I did not try to frighten them, but I was there to hear them tell of their fears about their pensions and health care and future housing and home care programs.

● (2330)

[English]

My constituents include many public service employees, people dedicated to the competent, impartial and professional delivery—in many cases right across Canada—of the programs mandated by the Parliament of Canada. My constituency includes representatives of the many and rich cultures that make up Canada.

We have in Ottawa West some of the densest urban development in North America—but we also live with the historic Ottawa River along our northern border, with beautiful parks and woods, and the world famous Experimental Farm.

We are reminded daily of the importance of protecting our environment.

My riding has a diverse and healthy business community, ranging from the very small entrepreneur to those employing hundreds of workers. In Ottawa West, appropriate to the season, we produce everything from hand-carved shepherd's crooks to sophisticated equipment for space research.

I cannot speak for the farmers, or the fishermen, or the miners, or the foresters of this country; but I can, and will, listen to their representatives when they speak, and I had hoped that the Prime Minister and the members of this Government would have done the same.

We have not been through a high stakes poker game, Madam Speaker, or a corporate takeover, or an exercise in pure market forces competition where it's "winner take all and damn the consequences for the loser"; we have been through a democratic process, a process involving not only who gets elected but what the people out there have to say and how we can best bring that wisdom into our decision making in this Chamber. And it doesn't start at 57 per cent or 43 per cent; it starts with the desire to listen to all of the citizens of this country and synthesize what they have said and reflect it in the laws that we pass.

The Prime Minister, during the campaign, gave the people of Canada verbal assurances, and he now refuses to put those assurances in writing, and he does so because he knows that Head Office in Washington will not back up his guarantee.

I had hoped that we were not coming here simply to watch the Government ram through its legislation while ignoring the legitimate and accommodatable concerns of the many who do not support it. They may have the power; but that does not give them the right to do it.

The people have decided, yes; but the people also spoke. They spoke to all of us, whether they voted for those on that side of the House or those on this side of the House. They spoke to us about their love for a country that is different, a country that is more just, more compassionate, and more tolerant. And they do not want to lose that, regardless of how they cast their votes.

We in this House have failed in the last 11 days to accommodate those deeply held concerns. We have missed a rare and golden moment in history, a moment we could have seized coming so soon after the campaign itself.

We still would not have a deal that I or my Party think is good for the country, but we would have had a better deal, and I am sorry that we have missed that opportunity.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rob Nicholson (Niagara Falls): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to address the Chamber and say a few words on the Free Trade Agreement. I think it appropriate, on the occasion of this my first speech in this Parliament, to thank the people of Niagara Falls for choosing me as their representative for a second term.

Of all of the riding names represented in this Parliament, I should not think that there is one that is more famous than that of Niagara Falls.

I had occasion to visit Russia with the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), and during that visit an official from Leningrad, on hearing that I was from Niagara Falls, said to me, through a translator—and for once nothing was lost in the translation—that while Niagara Falls is in the middle of the continent, it is heard all over the world.

I am very proud to represent the riding of Niagara Falls, a riding which has in it the city of Niagara Falls, the city in which I was born. In addition, it has the town of Niagara-on-the-Lake.

Niagara-on-the-Lake boasts the only Lord Mayor in Canada. It was the first capital of Upper Canada—and there are those who say that the capital of this country should have been Niagara-on-the-Lake. I say that with all respect to the Ottawa Chamber of Commerce.

I want to thank the 17,000 voters who returned me to Parliament. As well I thank—

An Hon. Member: That is a mandate.

Mr. Nicholson: That is a mandate, yes. I thank the grape growers who sent me back to Parliament; I thank the peach growers; I thank the sour cherry producers. I thank all of those in the agricultural community who sent me back with an overwhelming majority. In fact, I extend my thanks to the agricultural community on behalf of all of the Progressive Conservative Members from that area.

I see the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) in the Chamber. She, too, benefited from the votes of all of those agricultural producers, individuals who once again stuck by the Party that has been so good to the agricultural community in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, Niagara Falls is a riding that has approximately twice as many senior citizens as is the Canadian average, and I thank those senior citizens for choosing to send me to the House of Commons. They did not listen to those who were telling them that they were going to lose their pensions and that medicare was going to be wiped out. I thank them for not believing those kinds of comments and for casting their votes in my favour.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nicholson: I also want to thank the working men and women of Niagara Falls, the members of unions, those individuals I saw at the plant gate and who whispered to me as they were going by that they were not listening to the union management and that they would vote Progressive Conservative.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nicholson: To the members of the New Democratic Party, who purportedly represent Main Street, I can tell them that they lost the Main Street poll in Niagara Falls as well. If you want to see the people who are representing Main Street right across Canada, they happen to be on this side of the House, and I am proud to sit with them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Nicholson: Madam Speaker, the people have spoken. The Progressive Conservative Party won overwhelmingly.

From the night of the election on, there have been all kinds of articles and quotes by members of the Liberal Party as to how well they had done; that they had gone from 38 seats to something like 82 seats.

All I can say to them is that if they are happy about the way they did in the election, then we are happy for them as well.

An Hon. Member: It sounds like an NDP win: a moral victory. A moral victory in an immoral campaign.

Mr. Nicholson: A moral victory, yes. I say to the people of Canada, if you want to see a moral victory, check out the win of the Hon. Member for Lincoln (Mrs. Martin). She had a moral victory on election night and she should be very proud of that.

Madam Speaker, we all know what a difficult election this was. Everyone who participated knows that those who oppose the Progressive Conservative Party and who oppose the Free Trade Agreement used every tactic at their disposal in an effort to defeat us. But it didn't work—and I think that reflects very well on Canadian democracy. When all was said and done, The Toronto Star didn't get to pick the next Government of Canada. The people of Canada got to decide that.

For those who like to analyse these things, let me try to describe where I think the Opposition went wrong. I am quite sure they are not going to take advice from a Progressive Conservative but I am going to give it to them anyway because it is the truth.

• (2340) •

I admit there was a point in the election where they had many people scared. Why they lost it was, that on each successive day of the campaign they said something more and more outrageous. That played into my hands and the hands of every other Conservative candidate. As they did that, after a while people said: "That is impossible, we do not believe the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) or the scare tactics of the NDP". In the last two weeks the support built up over the campaign by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) returned to where it belonged, the Progressive Conservative Party. When the Opposition have their policy conferences they should think about that. They could not scare people enough to have them reject a deal which is very good for them.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The approach was always the same. They came up with a new scare tactic saying: "Say this is not in the agreement. Show us where in the agreement it says this is so". I remember in the last week of the campaign there was an article in a very famous Canadian daily newspaper which said: "Tenancies are threatened. Nowhere in the Free Trade Agreement are tenancies protected, therefore the Free Trade Agreement must threaten them". That was the logic but that is obviously not the case. We could say there is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement that says Christmas comes on December 25, therefore that must be threatened as well. I suppose you could say there is nothing in the FTA that says the Liberal Party will ever win another federal election, therefore they must be in a position to lose the election.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Probably true.

Mr. Nicholson: The Hon. Member has been in politics longer than I, so I bow to his opinion on that.

Then after digging up these scare tactics they would say every time that we should go to Washington and get assurances that our social programs and so on would not be touched. I would be ashamed to be part of a Party and Government that went to Washington or anywhere else to have our social programs guaranteed. That is not necessary for a sovereign country like Canada.

The election brought out fundamental differences between our view of the country and the view of the Opposition. Just prior to the election the former Member from St. Catharines, Joe Reid, a man who served his country ably in war and peace in his years in this House, invited me take part in a debate in St. Catharines. The subject was the Free Trade Agreement. A union leader from the area was a speaker. We were talking about the Auto Pact and he made the point that the reason the big three automobile producers were locating companies in Windsor is because of the threat of tariffs under the Auto Pact.

There is a minimum production requirement in Canada in the Auto Pact. What you probably have not heard in this debate is that the production of automobiles in Canada far exceeds the minimum requirement. As a matter of fact, nearly 30 per cent of all automobile production in North America now takes place in Canada. However, it was the belief of the NDP, in this case through the union leader, that tariffs were forcing that production in Canada. That is absolutely wrong. That would be a terrible reason to start locating plants. Plants should be located where they make sense.

The practice of the NDP is to underestimate fundamentally the kinds of products we can produce and our competitiveness. I said then and I will say again that the reason plants locate in Canada, and I am speaking about the area of the country I know best, the Niagara Peninsula, they locate there because it makes sense, because we have reasonably priced power, we are well situated in the North American market, we have a skilled workforce, and we build a tremendous product. Yet you do not hear that in the debate from the other side. All they want to do is tell you how in some American states the minimum wage is $4; then it went down to $3 and $2. I guess they are working for free somewhere in the U.S. now.

That kind of thing ignores the facts. I will tell you the facts because I know you have not heard them too often with respect to automobile and parts production. It is less expensive to build automobiles in Canada than to build them in the Great Lakes states. It is considerably cheaper to build them in Canada than it is to build them in the southern U.S. You have not heard that tonight. They continue to underestimate our ability to compete. We are asked by the Liberals to believe that we cannot compete with a people with whom we have successfully competed for 200 years. It is just not so.

Let me talk about some of these big bad American companies. I listened to some members of the NDP talk about how terrible the American corporations were. I will say to them what I said once to the Leader of the NDP. If you do not want foreign investment in your ridings, send it down to Niagara Falls. We will welcome it in the Niagara Peninsula. I know the NDP are people of principle, so tell these companies the truth, you do not want them, and you can send them down to the Niagara Peninsula. We always welcome new industry because it is a tremendous area in which to locate.

Recently, the Secretary of State for External Affairs visited my riding and we went to Thorold and visited one of the auto parts plants there. Because of all of the statements by the Liberals and the NDP about our ability to compete I asked people in that company if they thought the auto parts that they were making can compete with the Americans. They said: "Not only can we compete with the Americans, we compete with the world. Do not listen to all that nonsense about how we cannot compete in the world". Yet that is completely lost on members of the Liberal Party who are here tonight. There is nothing second-class about Canadians or the products we produce.

If anything, this debate has set the course for the next four years in this Parliament. The Progressive Conservative Party is talking about the future and what we can do. The members of the Opposition have served notice that for the next four years their job is to seek out every negative on the Free Trade Agreement. No matter how small or spurious, that is their mission. That is what they will be doing.

Mr. Nunziata: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Della Noce: Go out for a haircut. You want my comb?

Mr. Nunziata: In the spirit of Christmas—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: It is almost the day before Christmas and I was wondering if you could ask the Hon. Member, in the spirit of Christmas, if he could be just a little less partisan than he has been.

• (2350)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I am sure the Hon. Member will take heed and listen to the Hon. Member.

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, I was just saying that members of the Opposition have served notice of what they will be doing for the next four years, that is, concentrate all their efforts on seeking negatives in the Free Trade Agreement no matter how small and how spurious. I guess that is why they are there and we are here.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nicholson: I bless them if that is what they want to do. Go ahead and do that for the next four years. However, whatever else it is, it is not vision. It is not courage. I say particularly to the new Members in the House, if they want to see vision and courage start to listen to the speeches of the Prime Minister of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nicholson: Mr. Speaker, on that note I would like to close—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Nicholson: Before I do I would certainly like to thank all those individuals who came all the way from the Yukon to hear me speak. I certainly appreciate that.

I would like to conclude my remarks by quoting the words of a great Canadian Prime Minister who said this—

Mr. Nunziata: Pierre Trudeau?

Mr. Nicholson: —on March 16, 1987, about the Free Trade Agreement. He said: “This is a building block of greatness. What the House is considering today is the future of Canada. It is an act of faith in Canada. It has often been said that young men have visions and old men dream dreams. This is the day for Canada. This is a day both for visions and great dreams. It is a commitment to the future of Canada. It is a commitment to the youth of Canada, to our unity and to our integrity as a nation”.

With those words I entirely agree.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to rise in the spirit of Christmas to talk about the subject matter that is before us, that is, the Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Before I start I wish to thank the residents of Surrey North for their support and their faith in me. Surrey North is one of the four new ridings in British Columbia. It is a riding created out of parts of two ridings previously held by Conservatives. It is a typical suburban community. It has a higher proportion of single-parent families than any other area in the Lower Mainland. It has lower average incomes than other communities on the lower Mainland. It has a large ethnic community, particular of Indo-Canadian background. It is a community that has been changing dramatically in the last five years.

Some 60 per cent of all the growth in the Lower Mainland of British Columbia in the last five years has been in Surrey. It used to be a community that was made up of homeowners. Now, north of 104th, 44 per cent of the people are renters. Between the Newton area and 104th Avenue 40 per cent are renters. It includes the old neighbourhoods of Newton, Walley, South Westminister, Bridgeview, Johnson Heights, Fleetwood, Pinehead and Port Kels. It has some industry, but basically it is a residential community. It is very typical of Canadian suburban communities.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Let me tell you, Mr. Speaker, that community elected me because the people living in it are diametrically opposed to this trade deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Karpoff: People in the community are vulnerable to this trade deal. They are not the big multinational corporations. They do not sit on the boards of directors of multinational corporations. They do not own them. The industry that is there is mainly lumber mills and small manufacturing. They were frightened of this trade deal.

Somebody said that consumers will not be hurt by this trade deal. Let me just read to Hon. Members some excerpts from a letter I received over the course of the last four days from a business in my community, Western Cablevision. Western Cablevision has 111,000 subscribers, not only in Surrey but in Langley, Clearbrook and Abbotsford. It also has the areas that cover Fraser Valley West and Fraser Valley East. I have not seen the Members from those ridings raising this issue in the House.

With the free trade deal what will happen is that the cost to those television subscribers will go up. It will go up because the free trade deal insists that they must compensate the American broadcasting systems for distinct signals. What is so peculiar about this, which we in British Columbia are beginning to understand, is that the Tories developed a definition of distinct signals and included it in the trade agreement. It means that Toronto does not have to pay. Montreal does not have to pay. None of the eastern regions have to pay. Just British Columbians will have to pay.

One of the reasons that 19 New Democrats were elected in British Columbia is because that is one of the major things in this trade deal. There will be a negative impact on British Columbia. Any benefits will be to Ontario and Québec.

I wish to talk about a fundamental part of the trade deal. The trade deal will curtail our ability to be involved in the direction of our economy. We can no longer direct and influence foreign investment. We no longer will have the ability to decide what is going to take place in our country in terms of economic decisions. These decisions will be made in American boardrooms, not in Canada.

We have to begin to look at some fundamental facts about Canadian job creation and Canadian industry. I want to read to Hon. Members some of the statistical information with respect to job creation in the last number of years. Between 1978 and 1985 there were 872,300 net jobs created in Canada. Of those 849,000 were contributed by Canadian-owned firms, while at the same time the American firms contributed to a loss of 8,900 jobs. Other foreign companies contributed to a loss of 14,400.

Let us go back to consider the statistics. Canadian firms created 849,000 jobs. American firms lost us 8,900 jobs. Other foreign firms lost us 14,400.

● (2400)

That is a fundamental change that will take place as a result of this trade deal. We will no longer be able to control capital which will be used to take over our firms and fold them as in the past.

Another interesting aspect of job creation is to compare small business and large business. Out of 845,000 jobs, 99 per cent of them were created by small businesses, which are businesses employing less than 19 people. Large firms, those with over 100 employees, had a net loss of 50,000 jobs in that same period. The free trade deal will benefit large corporations, particularly American multinationals, and will be a disaster for small, independent Canadian businessmen.

The arrogant Tory Government has done nothing to deal with the question of dislocation. It simply said that it will form a blue ribbon committee to make some recommendations on adjustment programs. However, that blue ribbon committee has become a blue ribbon bust because it has done nothing.

The workers who will be mostly affected by dislocation will be older workers. If we recall the downturn in the economy in the early 1980s, we will know that older workers did not get back into the workplace. There are no adjustment programs for them now.

As well, women with families will not have the capability to retrain, go back to school or move to different locations. If you lose a job in North Surrey, you cannot move a family to get a job in Courtenay.

The Government said it would support job strategies. Its record is different because the budget of the Canadian Job Strategy since 1984 has dropped from $2.2 billion to $1.7 billion. There has been a cut of about $500 million, which, in real dollars, is a loss of nearly $1 billion since it was elected. Yet it still says it is committed to readjustment programs.

We must also consider one of the hidden problems in this trade deal. There will be tremendous pressure on the Canadian Government to equalize the American and Canadian dollar. It has already begun. The Canadian Manufacturers Association—a group that no one can say supports the NDP—conducted a survey of manufacturers about the competition they would be facing based on the rate of exchange between the Canadian and the American dollar. With an 80-cent dollar, 31 per cent said they would be at a competitive disadvantage. At 82 cents on the dollar, 36 per cent said they would be at a competitive disadvantage. At 85 cents on the dollar, 67 per cent said they would be at a competitive disadvantage.

Mr. McCain of McCain Foods in New Brunswick is someone who knew this very well. He said that all those talking about free trade with the United States may be singing right now when the dollar is at 80 cents, but when it goes to 82 cents or 83 cents they will be closing down their businesses. He also said that since he owned a big multinational corporation he could move his capital elsewhere, and he has already begun to do so. But he went on to say that, unfortunately, his workers and his agricultural producers could not move.

As a result of this trade deal we have lost the ability for the Government to participate in the direction of the economy. We hear much talk about the strength of the Japanese economy. The Government is a major player in economic decisions within Japan. In fact, it directs industry as to where it will invest and what it will develop. It directs industry about how it will compete nationally and internationally.

I had the opportunity to live in Japan on a couple of occasions. In 1980, the Japanese Government became concerned that American and West German computer companies were getting the upper hand. It announced that it would put $865 million toward the industry and directed the industry to match that grant toward developing a computer within five years that would be 10,000 more times powerful than the existing computers. That is how we got the personal computers. The initiative and direction came from the Government. It was not a free market direction.

This trade agreement will mean that capital will flow to where profits can be maximized. The businesses do not care about social costs. They do not care about social responsibility. They do not care about the impact on workers, their families or the community. If a company in Canada is making a profit of 50 cents but can make 52 cents by going to the States, it will do so. The fact that a whole community is put out of work or the country is seriously disadvantaged will mean nothing.

We have heard about the impact on social services and health care. My background is in administration in social services and health care. I have been a special consultant for the last number of years and I can say that anyone who tells me there will not be a negative impact on social services and health care is simply not telling the truth.

Marshal Cohen, President of Molson's and past president of Olympia and York Enterprises, former Deputy Minister of Finance, is reported in The Globe and Mail as stating clearly:

... of course the free trade agreement will affect Canada's social programs, and will force the Government to cut back or drop some.

That is what people who are knowledgeable about the issue are saying.

There are three areas in which free trade exposes our social services and health care programs to attack. The first is that American corporations will attack programs as an unfair subsidy. We are left with defining subsidies over the next five to seven years. Americans have already said that they want our regional programs, our social programs, unemployment insurance and medicare defined as subsidies. The Government tells us to trust it, those items were not on the table and it would never surrender our social programs.

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): That is right.

Mr. Karpoff: When the Government was negotiating the trade deal it said it had two objectives it wanted to achieve. One was a guaranteed access to the American market—

An Hon. Member: We did.

Mr. Karpoff: You did not get it because you are still under American countervailing laws and future American countervailing laws.

The second objective was a binding dispute settlement mechanism. It did not get that.

An Hon. Member: We did.

Mr. Karpoff: How does the Government expect Canadians to believe it when it asks them to trust it with respect to subsidies? I guess not.

An Hon. Member: You are a windbag.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

● (2410)

Mr. Karpoff: I would rather be a windbag and be truthful than be dishonest about it.

There is also pressure from Canadian companies to cut social programs and health care. I just want to tell Hon. Members a few little things about what the Chamber of Commerce has done, that great friend of socialism. The Chamber of Commerce, in a letter written during the election campaign to the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) with regard to regional development and social programs, said that this agreement would not affect its existing programs, and that the Chamber of Commerce has no fear whatsoever that our social or developmental programs will be affected by the FTA, and it has said so repeatedly.

A week after the election, what happened? The Canadian Chamber of Commerce says, of course we have to have a commission to look at the high cost of our social programs, and it called on the Government to reduce spending on social programs in order to reduce the debt.

The Canadian Manufacturers' Association has said the same thing. It said that Canadian manufacturers face tough battles with foreign rivals who pay lower wages and do not have to pay unemployment insurance premiums. Canadian corporations, during the election campaign, were saying they would not put any pressure on the Government to reduce social spending or programs. Within a week after the election, they were demanding that the Government cut social programs and spending as a way to reduce the deficit. We in the New Democratic Party have better solutions for reducing the deficit, including not spending $20 billion on nuclear submarines.

Mr. Dick: The people didn't buy it, though.

Mr. Karpoff: In Surrey, British Columbia, they bought many things.

The third area in which there will be an impact on social programs and health care is privatization. One of the things that we in British Columbia are beginning to understand, and all Canadians will begin to understand, is that with a right-wing Premier like Bill Vander Zalm, the leading edge in privatization, followed by Grant Devine, soon to be followed by many other conservative people right across Canada, the B.C. Premier has been privatizing highway maintenance and such things as health care and social services, including our mental hospital.

Under Article 1402 and 1403, American corporations have a right to run those services here, and they also have a right to bring their personnel here. Not only will the for-profit American corporations come up here to run our health care and social services, but we will lose jobs because they will be bringing up their own personnel.

The Conservatives keep saying that the agreement does not affect social services, but let me just read a list of the professionals who can come here without proper visas. They include accountants, engineers, scientists, physicians, dentists, nurses, psychologists, teachers, economists and social workers, and they will take jobs and turn—

Mr. de Jong: The lawyers were able to exempt themselves?

Mr. Karpoff: That's right. They were able to exempt themselves. This free trade deal, coupled with the drive for privatization, will take our health care system into a whole new area.

I have had the opportunity to travel around the world to look at health care systems, and I know what the American health care system is like. We want nothing like that in Canada.

Another thing I have told the residents of Surrey North is that I will not be like the silent nineteen from B.C. for the Conservatives—

Some Hon. Members: Time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order. I recognize the Hon. Member for Manicouagan.

Mr. Karpoff: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I would like to thank the Canadian public.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I know it is Christmas Eve, and it may be that the Tories are in a more giving mood. I was hoping that the Hon. Member for Manicouagan (Mr. Langlois) might let me have a chance to make a speech since I did not complete my maiden speech in this Parliament. I know that the previous Hon. Member for Manicouagan would have given way to me.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Manicouagan has the floor.

Mr. Charles A. Langlois (Manicouagan): Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Hon. Member that my speech will be short, so he will have a chance to speak after I do, tomorrow morning at four o'clock.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to tell the House what the men and women of my riding of Manicouagan think of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States. It is a fact, Mr. Speaker, that on November 21 the people of Manicouagan voted to give the Conservative party a renewed mandate. In 1984, voters in the riding had given the Prime Minister a majority which was more than comfortable by any standard and they did so again this time, and just as resoundingly. The riding of Manicouagan, Mr. Speaker, stretches westward to the town on Franquelin and along the Côte Nord to the town of Blanc-Sablon, also encompassing Ungava Bay communities to the north of Kujuuak.

Manicouagan then, Mr. Speaker, is a riding of vast expanses and those who live there are hard working people who, over the last 35 years, have contributed to the nation's economic development. Through their work in iron mines, in the forest and fishing industries, they have contributed, over these years, hundreds of millions in personal and business income tax dollars. These hard working men and women have met challenges in the past . . .

[English]

—and they are ready now to face a new challenge in strongly supporting free trade.

[Translation]

In my riding, Mr. Speaker, three sectors will benefit from the Free Trade Agreement: these are mining, forestry and fisheries.

The mining sector, iron mining more specifically, has been the engine of economic growth in the western part of my riding. Year after year since 1953, Mr. Speaker, millions of tons of iron ore extracted from Mont Wright, in Quebec, and Wabush and Labrador City, in Labrador, are shipped to steel mills in Canada and the United States. In the last few years, iron ore shipped from the ports of Sept-Îles, Pointe Noire and Port-Cartier has met with heavy competition from Brazilian ore.

[English]

The Free Trade Agreement will first contribute to protect our exports of iron ore to the United States. Second, large tonnages, millions of tonnes of iron ore, are shipped from Sept-Îles, Pointe Noire and Port-Cartier to the Canadian steel mills of Sidbec at Tracy,

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Quebec, and to the mills of Stelco and Dofasco at Hamilton, Ontario.

We all know that every year our Canadian steel industry sells great quantities of its steel product to the United States.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we also know that the Americans regularly apply special tariffs and quotas on the steel products they import when they feel that their own steel industry is threatened. Most of these measures are aimed at steel goods from Asian countries in Asia but these restrictive measures also apply to Canadian steel.

The Free Trade Agreement will protect our Canadian exports against these restrictive measures and quotas imposed by the American Government. The mechanism provided for under the Free Trade Agreement will exclude our steel exports from the special tariffs imposed by the American Congress. They will make it possible for us to increase our steel exports to the United States, because our products are more competitive. By selling a greater amount of their products to the United States, our steel industry will use more iron ore from the North Shore, thereby ensuring more stable jobs and additional new jobs for the young people in my riding.

• (2420)

[English]

As mentioned earlier this week the danger to our iron ore and steel exports to the United States does not come from some small non-unionized mills located in the southern United States but from large non-unionized steel mills operating in Korea, Japan, India, and pretty soon now from China. That is from where the dangers are coming, not from the United States. Stelco, our largest and oldest steel manufacturing firm, knows that. Dofasco also did not hesitate to purchase the Algoma plants at Sault Ste. Marie. These people are not afraid of free trade. Members of the Liberal and New Democratic Parties from the Hamilton and from the Sault Ste. Marie areas should know about that, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

The workers in Havre-Saint-Pierre also voted massively for the Free Trade Agreement. Mr. Speaker, these people from the North Shore know that the titanium ore which they mine from the Quebec soil near Allard Lake is used in the manufacturing of a great many products, including paints and alloys.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

[English]

Where is the biggest and the closest market for those products? South of the border, Mr. Speaker, that is where it is. The workers of Hâvre St-Pierre know that, and that is why they strongly supported us on November 21.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, my constituents who are employed in the pulp and paper and forest industries all voted for free trade. They saw in this Agreement new opportunities. The pulp manufactured in Port-Cartier is used to make products for hygienic and medical purposes. The Free Trade Agreement will open wide the doors to the American market by eliminating tariffs on these products. These tariff reductions will make our products more competitive, thereby consolidating the jobs for the Cascades plant workers in Port-Cartier, as well as forest workers in my riding.

Mr. Speaker, the Free Trade Agreement will also benefit the fishing industry which is very important in my riding. The fishermen, the operator and workers of the fish processing plants see new opportunities in the Free Trade Agreement. They are already considering setting up new processing units for highly specialized products in the area of preserving, vacuum packaging and deep freezing fish ready for retail store shelves. I understood the concern expressed by the fishermen in my riding when I heard the half-truth spread by the Opposition parties about the impact of the Free Trade Agreement on the fishing industry. But the fishermen have come to realize that the Agreement is not a threat for their industry, but that it will increase its growth potential.

Mr. Speaker, they know that their industry is world class, Canada being the greatest exporter of fish and fish base products in the world. They also know that the United States absorb in full 60 per cent of our fish exports.

The Canadian fishing industry employs more than 120,000 people and plays a key role in the economies of our coastal provinces, of certain areas of Quebec, of Northern communities and of the coastal communities of Manicouagan.

In the Atlantic provinces and Quebec, for example, approximately half of the 1,300 fishing communities rely exclusively on the fishing industry. In the Northwest Territories, communities have come to rely almost exclusively on commercial fishing. That is the case, Mr.

Speaker, in the area of my riding which lies between Kégaska and Blanc-Sablon.

There is no doubt that the Free Trade Agreement will benefit the Canadian fishing industry and that it will have a beneficial impact on communities which depend on this industry's prosperity.

Through the Free Trade Agreement, Canada and the United States have agreed to phase out over a 10-year period the tariffs which presently apply to fish products, thus giving Canada a considerable advantage over its major competitors. As customs tariffs are phased out, Canadian processing industries will be able to increase their production of finished products. We will then no longer export only raw or semi-processed fish, since we will be able to produce finished products at competitive prices, thus creating jobs.

Consequently, many regions in this country will be able to fully develop their natural resources. Product diversification and processing activities give rise to new jobs and create a strong economic base for the many fishing communities which are presently in a vulnerable situation.

The Free Trade Agreement will increase the value added to products by processes such as canning and preparation of ready-to-eat foods. Since the market for processed foods is growing rapidly, this sector represents new potential for growth and job creation that will result from the expected increase in exports of these products.

Mr. Speaker, the Opposition has tried many times to make our fishermen believe that many of our social programs like unemployment insurance will be affected by this Agreement. The Free Trade Agreement has absolutely no effect on social programs in Canada.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, even the Americans recognize that social programs cannot be subject to countervailing duties and when they tried to take such action against the unemployment insurance program, from which most fishermen benefit, their own trade tribunal threw the case out.

These social programs were never on the negotiating table and never will be in the future. Canadians attach as much importance to universal programs as our Government does.

[English]

The Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) has been very firm concerning our social programs during the negotiations. He has on several occasions made the commitment that Canada will never sign an agreement that will endanger our social programs. Even if the Americans wish to discuss this matter during the next round of discussions, they will be told that this subject is "off limits".

[Translation]

The Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States will benefit fishermen as much as processing industries.

The economic viability of a fishing industry depends on the availability of resources, the quality of the raw material and a good return on investment.

As the processing industries gain a larger share of the American market, Mr. Speaker, demand for processed fishery products will increase. This greater demand in turn means a higher return on investment from fishing.

This Agreement meets these concerns and gives the Canadian fishing industry an opportunity to strengthen and improve the vital role it plays in the Canadian economy.

[English]

New jobs and new opportunities are there around the corner for the fishermen of Manicouagan, for their families and for the future of their children. Opposition Members from the Maritimes and Newfoundland also know that, but political blindness prevents them from seeing the real benefits of the Free Trade Agreement for the fishing industry.

• (2430)

We have heard through the debate the question of mandate.

[Translation]

My mandate in the riding of Manicouagan is very clear: there were 36,000 on the electoral list, of whom 28,000 voted. The NDP received 4,000 votes, the Liberal Party 6,000 and the Progressive Conservative Party 18,000, Mr. Speaker.

That is my mandate to support the Free Trade Agreement. Tomorrow, I will return to my riding and I will meet my fellow citizens over the holidays with my head held high and with pride. I will speak to them proudly about the historic decision made here tonight by the Government of Canada in ratifying the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. I will speak to them with pride for having participated in this historic event by supporting Bill C-2 without reservation.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

[English]

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I rise in the House tonight at 12.30 a.m., on December 24, one of the last speakers to take part in this great debate, a debate and discussion that will probably go down in history as one of the longest and greatest debates ever to take place in Canada. This debate has and will likely shape the future of Canada.

I come here with mixed feelings. First, I would like to reiterate the feeling of probably most of the new Members who came to Parliament in the last few weeks, and all of us in the House, the feeling that we have after winning an election, and the feeling that we have walking up to the front of this great building, not as a tourist as many of us have in the past, but as a Member of Parliament. But when I returned to the riding of Prince Edward-Hastings I said to my constituents that it was a feeling to which I could not put words. I know everyone else who sits in the House has felt the same way at one time or another.

It is a pleasure to rise in the House tonight to represent the constituency of Prince Edward—Hastings. It is a unique riding. It has a large agricultural base, a large industrial base, a large tourism industry, and we have in our riding the Air Transport Group headquarters for the Canadian Armed Forces. We are also fortunate to have the Tyendenaga Indian Reserve, a reserve of 1,500 to 1,600 Mohawks belonging to the Bay of Quinte Band.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the voters in Prince Edward-Hastings for placing their trust and faith in me to represent them here in the Thirty-fourth Parliament. I promise to fulfil that trust and faith with honesty, integrity, and enthusiasm.

My riding is made up of all of Prince Edward County in Ontario, the City of Belleville, and the three southern townships, including the County of Hastings.

I happen to live in Prince Edward County, and I suppose that I am a little biased, but it, as well as the whole Quinte area, is a great place to come from. We are cut off by a man-made canal in Prince Edward County, and frequently are mixed up with Prince Edward Island. We are also proud of Prince Edward Island, and this Party is really proud of Prince Edward Island now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vanclief: We in Prince Edward County have shared ourselves with different constituencies over the years, sometimes to the east, sometimes to the west, and sometimes to the north, as we are now. I note with pleasure that it has not been since the year 1908 that the Prince Edward County portion of my riding has been represented in the House by a Liberal. That is 80 years, and I am proud to be the Liberal they chose to break that span.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Some Hon. Members: hear, hear!

Mr. Vanclief: We live in a great country, one that is envied by everyone else in the world. We have a tremendous resource of many nationalities, and a geography and climate that provide us with one of the most varied bases of natural resources, agriculture, fishing, manufacturing, mining, and logging. Many countries in the world cannot boast of all of those.

I would like Hon. Members to take a moment and think about my next statement. No matter what we sit on, no matter what we wear, no matter where we are, and no matter what we look at, there are four creators of wealth in the world. Those are fishing, mining, logging, and agriculture. There is nothing on the face of the earth that did not come from one of those. We have all of these in Canada, and it is our background and privileged duty as Members of the House of Commons to protect the strength of all of them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vanclief: If all of these are not strong, our economy will not be strong. I do not have the time tonight to discuss all of them, but I would like to discuss some of the concerns of the people in Prince Edward about how some of these are connected to the Free Trade Agreement that we have been debating for the last two weeks. I know that it is too late to make changes, but I wish to express their thoughts. I promised I would. They asked me to, and I would like to take a few minutes to do so on their behalf.

We have been told that this is a commercial document, that it can be changed in six months if it does not go well. Is this any way to instil confidence in the people of Canada? If this deal does not work, it will be very difficult to correct. I liken it to scrambling an egg and attempting to get it back in the shell.

I say to Members opposite that it better work, for the sake of Canada.

Donald Macdonald recommended further trading arrangements with the United States. He did not recommend this one. He said that there should be no deal unless we had the protection from further ability of the United States to place countervail duties on Canadian goods entering the United States, and that we should have a level playing field. I agree with him. I would not be as concerned about this deal if we had that, but we do not have a level playing field. Unfortunately, this deal does not provide us with that benefit.

I have had a fair bit of experience in my life with the process of negotiations. I do not feel that this agreement was well made. From my experience, no matter how hard one party works to make a deal or an agreement, if another group or party looks at it, they look at it with different eyes, and they look at it in all fairness. There is always room for improvements. There is no such thing as the perfect deal. However, we have been told that this is a perfect deal. The Government has stated that it is a perfect deal, "trust us".

About a year ago now I attended a meeting in my riding chaired by the former Member for my riding who sat on the other side of the House. We had a considerable discussion about the agreement. It was a good discussion.

● (2440)

However, he continued to tell us that there really wasn't anything wrong with the deal. I finally said: "Fess up, Jack. There is no such thing as a perfect deal. There is no such thing as a one-sided deal."

However, I guess I must have been mistaken, because the U.S. Congress took less than a day to pass it. They think it is a good deal. The answer back from Mr. Ellis, on my asking whether there was anything wrong with this deal for Canadians, was: "Well, I can only make one comment, Mr. Vanclief. The grape growers in Canada are S.O.L." And I think, Mr. Speaker, that stands for "sure out of luck"—but I am not sure.

That type of answer, Mr. Speaker, did not then nor does it now, assure the residents of Prince Edward—Hastings or the people of Canada generally that good times are ahead, as we are being told by the Government of the day. We want some reassurance, and not just the statement: "Trust me."

In fact, we see very little in this deal that is concrete enough to make us feel reassured.

And then we hear people like Clayton Yeutter, the U.S. Trade Representative who negotiated this deal, make the following statement, and I quote: "The Canadians don't understand what they have signed. In 20 years they will be sucked into the U.S. economy."

Canada is already the most foreign-dominated of any industrialized country in the world. With the FTA, we give up the right to screen any new American investment. Under this agreement, by 1992 we will not be able to screen or control takeovers of any corporations in Canada of a value of less than $150 million. And I note, Mr. Speaker, that that would include nearly 90 per cent of the corporations in Canada. We have handed the U.S. a Gold Card and told them to charge it. They will buy Canada. They will own Canada—and we will have lost control of our own country.

Big businesses like this deal. Why wouldn't they? It is full of the loopholes which corporate Canada had in mind when they encouraged it, when they pushed for it—and pushed for it they did, especially in the last few days of the election campaign, when they realized that the majority of Canadians had seen through their scheme and had realized that their corporate success in the future in North America—I didn't say Canada; I said North America—was going to be on the backs of the average Canadian.

That is when they started to buy the ads; that is when they started to buy Canadians. And that is when they, in the short run, bought Canada, and Canada will suffer for that in the future.

We all know what economic union means. It points to an economic build-up in certain areas of that union. History has shown that where economic power goes, political power will follow—and that has been true for centuries the world over. It may not happen for three years, or five years, or ten years, but it will happen. Mark my words, eventually it will happen. And the centre of the economic power in North America will not be in Canada but somewhere in the United States; and the centre of the political power will not be in Canada but in Washington.

I am sure that there are some in the U.S. Embassy right across the street looking at us right now and saying: "Give us time, we will have that building, too."

They did it in Hawaii starting in 1876, and finishing the process by making Hawaii a state in 1950. They did it in Puerto Rico starting in 1927, and now they control all aspects of Puerto Rican's defence, its foreign policy, its postage, and even its currency.

Is that what we want?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Vanclief: No, not ever.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. McDermid: Tell us about Alaska, then.

Mr. Vanclief: I should like to now say a few words about energy. We are told we can compete. Yes, we can compete—but how successfully can we compete?

Mr. Della Noce: Read Luigi's letter.

Mr. Vanclief: The one main thing we had over the U.S. in terms of being able to compete successfully was our supply of energy. We had it. They wanted it. And they got it.

They do not have the resources to draw on; they need ours. That bargaining point alone at the negotiation table should have gotten us a better deal on the environment, and perhaps even an acid rain treaty.

An Hon. Member: We didn't have good negotiators.

Mr. Vanclief: We have agreed to share our energy with the U.S. They have not agreed to buy it. They will only buy it if they cannot find a cheaper source anywhere else in the world.

An Hon. Member: It is called world price.

Mr. Vanclief: Once our energy sector gears up to supply the U.S. market, who is going to hold them at ransom?—the U.S. buyers.

I would like to have a little more time in order to discuss the other concerns, including the concerns that my constituents have about subsidies. And I know they are more concerned after the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) yesterday, when questioned on subsidies, said: "We don't know whether the negotiations to find a definition of 'trade distorting subsidies' will be successful or not. In the history of the world, there has never been a successful negotiation to that end. But we will give it our best effort."

We sure hope that he will be successful, Mr. Speaker. If he isn't, this deal will not be successful. It rides on that.

Let me turn now to a few comments about agriculture. As I said earlier, it is the largest single industry in my riding.

I should like to state at the outset that I am a firm believer that as goes agriculture, so goes the economy of any country. The dairy farmers and all of the farmers in my riding are concerned and worried. They are being told that their supply management marketing board is protected. That they don't quarrel with. But what they also know is that the market that they supply is not protected—and that is really what it is all about.

They know very well that raw products, dairy products are cheaper south of the border than they are in Canada, and they know that as time goes by and the duties are eliminated, those processed products can come into their markets and compete directly with them.

While their marketing board may be protected, if there are fewer demands for what they have to sell, what good is their board?

We wanted to propose numerous amendments to the free trade legislation, with the hope that the guarantees inherent in those amendments would provide our farmers with answers to their concerns. The Government wouldn't allow those amendments. It moved closure.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Vanclief: First it closed its mind, and then it closed the House.

We wanted to propose amendments that would ensure the continuation of our marketing board system, the protection of the Canadian Wheat Board, the protection of our supply management system, control over the importation of processed product so as to protect our poultry and horticultural industries.

All of the proposed amendments, if adopted, would have buffered the approaching shocks that will be faced by Canadian farmers. But no way. We couldn't even be heard, let alone vote on them. The Government doesn't want to consider any amendments. It wants to let the chips fall where they may, and it says again: "Trust us."

Well, I guess we are going to have to do just that. We only have 11 more minutes in which to debate this measure. But I promise Canadians, and I promise the constituents of Prince Edward—Hastings, that we are going to watch and we are going to keep track.

I am proud to be a Member of this place representing the voters of Prince Edward—Hastings. As a Liberal, I am for further trading arrangements, but not for this deal. I had hoped that, at the very least, our amendments would have been adopted so as to help ease the pain that is about to be inflicted on many sectors of this country.

We didn't get that, and so we will watch and we will monitor. As we have said, this part of the debate has only begun.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

● (2450)

Mr. Mayer: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, we are getting very close to Christmas and it is a tradition in this House that we take a moment to pause and say thank you to all the people who work so hard to serve this place so well. I would like to do that.

We have a new group of Pages who have served us very well. We have the Table Officers, all of the protective staff, our Hansard people, those who do the camera switching, our lobby staff, office staff. They have all been working very hard for the last two weeks and we need to recognize the contribution they make and that, without their efforts over the many hours we have been here the last two weeks, none of us would have been able to perform as well as we have.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pappas): The Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: Point of order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pappas): The Hon. Member for Mississauga East (Ms. Guarnieri) on a point of order.

Ms. Guarnieri: Mr. Speaker, I am a new Member from Mississauga East, and since the Government has declared closure I will not have the opportunity to speak.

Some Hon. Members: Oh!

Ms. Guarnieri: I would like the unanimous consent of this House to deliver my maiden speech.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some Hon. Members: No!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Pappas): The Hon. Minister for International Trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr.—

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I heard an extremely reasonable request—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) on a point of order?

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I heard an extremely reasonable request from—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: —a new Member from Mississauga. I did not hear the Chair. Perhaps the Chair did not—

Some Hon. Members: Your light is off, Sheila!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I heard a “No”. I did hear a “No”?

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Would you like to hear it again? The Hon. Minister for International Trade.

Mr. McDermid: That is the biggest bunch of sore losers I have ever seen. Sour Grits!

Ms. Copps: Scrooge!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): 'Tis the season to be jolly.

Ms. Copps: You are not going to be heard, Crosbie. Let the Hon. Member for Mississauga East (Ms. Guarnieri) speak.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade has already spoken for an hour and forty-five minutes in this debate. I would like to support—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. The Hon. Minister is speaking on the amendment.

Ms. Copps: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister for International Trade.

Mr. McDermid: Sit down and shut up, Copps.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Hamilton East on a point of order.

Ms. Copps: Mr. Speaker, I move that the Hon. Member for Mississauga East be now heard.

Some Hon. Members: Out of order!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Minister had begun his speech and the motion cannot be heard. The Hon. Minister for International Trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Tobin: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin) on a point of order.

Ms. Copps: It is a votable motion.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McDermid: Now we understand why you lost the election.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Now that the Member is in his seat I will recognize him.

Mr. Tobin: Of course, Mr. Speaker, every Member of the House always respects the Speaker's wise rulings because he has demonstrated over the last number of years in the Chair his great fairness in this Chamber. I submit, and I am sure the Clerks can verify this, that the Minister for International Trade had not yet said a single word. A proper motion has been put that the Hon. Member for Mississauga East (Ms. Guarnieri) now be heard. The Minister had not yet uttered a single word in this place. I submit the motion is in order.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon) on a point of order.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, could I comment—

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Some Hon. Members: No!

Mr. Langdon:—on this—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I will come back later to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy). The Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I think it first should be noted that a motion such as that which the Hon. Member for Hamilton East made cannot be moved on a point of order. I would therefore suggest that the motion is out of order. However, I would also suggest that the request from the Hon. Member for Mississauga East (Ms. Guarnieri) to speak was a request for unanimous consent from the House—

Mr. McDermid: And you did not get it.

Mr. Langdon:—to be heard. I ask that the Speaker put that question to the House of Commons for the sake of fairness since the Minister has already had one hour and forty-five minutes to express his point of view.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre on a point of order.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to try to help you out of a difficulty.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I notice there is not a disposition to allow a Member from our side to speak. I also notice that the Secretary of State (Mr. Bouchard) is finally in the House and I would like to move that perhaps he be now heard.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. With reference to the point of order, Mr. Speaker, I would call it one o'clock.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 57, at this time it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings and put forth with all questions necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the Bill now before the House. Accordingly, the question is the following one:

Mr. Crosbie, seconded by Mr. Lewis, moved that Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America be now read a third time and do pass.

In amendment thereto, Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre), seconded by Mr. Gauthier, moved:

That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word "that" and by substituting the following therefor:

Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be not now read a third time, but that the bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole for reconsideration of clauses 3 through 150, inclusive.

The question is on the amendment. Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre)), which was negated on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the motion carried.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the third time and passed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to the Order the House adopted earlier this sitting, this House stands adjourned to the call of the Chair for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America.

The House adjourned at 1.50 a.m.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Friday, December 30, 1988

The House met at 4.40 p.m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a message has been received from the Senate informing this House that the Senate have passed Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, without amendment.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I have the honour to inform the House that a communication has been received as follows:

Rideau Hall,
Ottawa,

30 December, 1988

Sir,

I have the honour to inform you that the Honourable Antonio Lamer, Puisne Judge of the Supreme Court of Canada, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, will proceed to the Senate Chamber today, the 30th day of December, 1988, at 4.45 p.m., for the purpose of giving Royal Assent to a Bill.

Yours sincerely,
Léopold H. Amyot
Secretary to the Governor General

POINT OF ORDER

MR. PRUD'HOMME—QUORUM IN HOUSE

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I wish to raise a point of order.

For many years, I have tried to follow the Standing Orders very closely. There is a very clear rule regarding the quorum. There are exceptions, so I would ask my colleagues not to get too excited about it. There are exceptions! But we must still clearly follow the Standing Orders!

We have been summoned, the bells have rung. We were proceeding as for a real sitting of the House, because you said the customary prayers for a real sitting of the House.

I would like to submit the case to you, so that in future we can deal with this question in the committee that considers the Standing Orders and clarify this matter completely. I have always objected to the House sitting without a quorum.

There is only one exception that I could find in the Standing Orders that can justify our sitting today. We suspended the sitting and the House receives a message from the Governor General or her deputy, one of the nine judges of the Supreme Court, to the effect that there will be a special sitting in the Senate for the purpose of giving Royal Assent. Citation 215 of Beauchesne says that when we receive a message from the Governor General asking us to go to the Senate for Royal Assent, that means we can sit regardless of the number of Members present. I can go along with that.

But it is not clear; when the bells ring, we are not aware that we have just received a message. Given this lack of clarity in our Standing Orders, I submit to you—I do not want to be difficult today; I know that everyone is eager to go—that confusion arises. We might one day have great difficulty because of this ambiguity in the Standing Orders.

I take the opportunity to point this out today, because what we are going to the other House for is very important. And since it is very important, we should make quite sure that everything has been done legally.

Therefore I submit to you again that when we were called, Mr. Speaker, we should have . . . And now, I see that you are receiving notices . . . or you should have sat in the Clerk's chair and waited to receive the message from the Governor General. In such a case, the Standing

Royal Assent

Orders provide that the Speaker or presiding officer sits in the Clerk's seat. And we wait. Then all of a sudden, there is a noise that goes on for some time; it is a message from Her Excellency the Governor General telling us that whether or not we have a quorum, we must go to the other place. Mr. Speaker, you should then have been sitting in the Clerk's seat and have gone to the Chair where you are now sitting and called the assembly to order. You receive the messenger and we go to do what he came to us for. But I don't know that . . . In principle, we don't know that officially. We come back and you return to the Chair.

So I submit to you, since the Standing Orders were not followed exactly, in my opinion, although I shall not elaborate further, I will not say that this sitting is out of order. But given the importance of what brings us here today, I would like, at a future meeting,

[English]

When we meet again to revise the rule, we will put it once and for all very clearly that what we are about to do can be done. My esteemed colleague and long-time Member of the House was the first one to be present, but there are only eight or nine Members here. I do not see a quorum. I do not see one Member from one of the three Parties, and I will not mention which one.

It is not clear in the minds of long-serving Members of Parliament, because there are contradictions between certain articles, as to what we are about to do.

I do not want to prolong matters. We have a high esteem for you, Mr. Speaker, and the Table Officers. I wish them all a Happy New Year. I would hope that you will take notice that at a future meeting of this House my colleagues and I will raise it as a point of order to be submitted to the appropriate committee.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for bringing up this procedural argument. I would like to mention to him that, under Standing Order 29(5), "when the Sergeant-at-Arms announces that the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod is at the door, the Speaker shall take the Chair, whether there be a quorum present or not."

I appreciate what the Hon. Member has raised as far as Beauchesne's Fifth Edition is concerned, on page 73, Section 215. I will not read the citation. It is a very good point that should be brought to the procedural committee. I would hope that at an early occasion the Hon. Member will bring that to the procedural committee. I do want to thank the Hon. Member.

THE ROYAL ASSENT

[English]

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, the Honourable Deputy to the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

And being returned:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski) informed the House that the Deputy Governor General had been pleased to give, in Her Majesty's name, the Royal Assent to the following Bill:

Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America—Chapter 65, 1988.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Pursuant to Order of the House adopted on Friday, December 23, 1988, a motion is deemed to have been moved and carried rescinding the order of the House adopted on Friday, December 16, 1988, concerning the extended hours of sitting.

Pursuant to order of the House adopted on Friday, December 23, 1988, this House stands adjourned until Monday, March 6, 1989, at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

At 5.04 p.m. the House adjourned, pursuant to special order.

The First Session of the Thirty-Fourth Parliament was prorogued by Royal Proclamation on February 28, 1989.

GUIDE TO THE USERS

The Index to the House of Commons Debates (Hansard) is a cross-referenced subject-based index. Each issue is recorded by date and range of pages; this list may be found under the heading "VOLUMES, DATES and PAGES" on p. xxiii.

The Index provides general subject analysis as well as subject breakdown under the names of Members of Parliament indicating those matters discussed by them. In addition, under each bill there is a listing of all Members that took part in debate. The numbers immediately following the index entries refer to the appropriate pages in the Debates; oral questions are denoted by the abbreviation "o.q.". The Index also provides lists, eg. Bills; Divisions, recorded; Procedure; Speaker, rulings and statements; Supply motions, etc.

All subject entries in the index are arranged alphabetically; procedural entries pertaining to the passage of legislation are arranged chronologically; numerical entries may be found at the end of the index. A typical entry may consist of a main heading followed by one or more sub-headings, for example:

Women

Wife battering, housing, 100, 150
Information, family allowances, o.q., 200, 250

The Index is extensively cross-referenced. Cross-references to a first sub-heading are denoted by a long dash, for example:

Housing see Women—Wife battering

Cross references to a second sub-heading are denoted by a comma, for example:

Family allowances see Women—Wife battering, Information

The most common abbreviations found in the Index are:

1r, 2r, 3r, = first, second, third reading Amdt. = Amendment g.r. = government response
M. = Motion o.q. = Oral Question qu. = Question on the Order Paper
R.A. = Royal Assent r.o. = Return ordered S.O. = Standing Order S.O.
21 = Statement under Standing Order 21

Political affiliations: L = Liberal PC = Progressive Conservative NDP = New Democratic Party

The Index has been prepared by the Index and Reference Branch of the House of Commons
