HOUSE OF COMMONS

Monday, December 12, 1988

FIRST SESSION—THIRTY-FOURTH PARLIAMENT

[English]

The Thirty-third Parliament having been dissolved by proclamation on Saturday, October 1, 1988, and writs having been issued and returned, a new Parliament was summoned to meet for the dispatch of business on Monday, December 12, 1988, and did accordingly meet on that day.

Monday, December 12, 1988

This being the day on which Parliament was convoked by proclamation of Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada for the dispatch of business, and the Members of the House being assembled:

Robert Marleau, Esquire, Clerk of the House of Commons, read to the House a letter from the Administrative Secretary to the Governor General informing him that the Right Honourable Brian Dickson, in his capacity as Deputy Governor General, would proceed to the Senate Chamber to open the first session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament of Canada on Monday, the twelfth day of December, at Ottawa.

A message was delivered by The Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Members of the House of Commons:

It is the desire of the Honourable the Deputy to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada that this honourable House attend him immediately in the Chamber of the honourable the Senate.

Accordingly, the House went up to the Senate Chamber, where the Speaker of the Senate said:

Honourable Members of the Senate, Members of the House of Commons:

I have it in command to let you know that Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada does not see fit to declare the causes of her summoning the present Parliament of Canada until a Speaker of the House of Commons shall have been chosen, according to law; but this afternoon at the hour of four o'clock, Her Excellency will declare the causes of her calling Parliament.

And the House being returned to the Commons Chamber:

[Translation]

The Clerk of the House: Pursuant to Standing Order 3, I would ask Mr. Prud'homme, Member for the electoral constituency of Saint-Denis, to take the chair and preside over the election of a Speaker.

HUMAN SOLIDARITY

VICTIMS OF EARTHQUAKE IN ARMENIA

The President of the Election (Mr. Prud'homme): Dear colleagues, I happen to know that before proceeding with any strictly political activity I would meet your wish by asking you to make a humanitarian gesture concerning the unfortunate Armenian people.

In acknowledgement of the fact that human solidarity transcends Parties, countries, and even régimes, giving all men and women on earth every reason to hope, let us observe one minute of silence.

[English]

Would you now kindly rise for a minute of silence.

[Editor's Note: Whereupon the House stood in silence.]

ELECTION OF SPEAKER

HON. JOHN A. FRASER, MEMBER FOR THE ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF VANCOUVER SOUTH

[Translation]

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): Pursuant to the provisions of the Standing Orders the House will now proceed with the election of a Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Although I had signed and sent in my withdrawal form, I did not have the opportunity to be sworn in until five to nine today because the writ was not available. I did not pursue the issue since I was not eligible. Now that I am eligible to stand, I would ask the permission of the House to allow me to withdraw.

[Translation]

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): I thank the Hon. Member but, according to the Standing Orders, the list cannot be changed before the first ballot. However the House has heard the request of the Hon. Member and will certainly respect his wish.

The Hon. Member for Burnaby—Kingsway (Mr. Robinson).

[English]

Mr. Svend J. Robinson (Burnaby—Kingsway): I did submit pursuant to the Standing Order a request that my name not be considered for Speaker, despite the vigorous encouragement of my Leader that I do stand.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): I repeat, the Clerk has accepted only replies signed by Members and received by six o'clock last night. Although the list cannot be amended before the first ballot, I am sure the House has heard the Member's remarks and will no doubt respect the Member's wishes.

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): I too wrote to the Clerk asking that my name be removed, but apparently it got lost in the mail.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): I need not repeat what I just said. I am sure that the House will respect the Member's wishes, but his name will still appear.

Mr. Lyle D. MacWilliam (Okanagan—Shuswap): Due to the fact of my late swearing in I was also unavailable to have my name stricken from the ballot. I wish to have that done at this time.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): The same will apply. Members will realize that we cannot withdraw any names before the first ballot. I am sure the House will respect the Member's wishes.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Loiselle (Langelier): Eventually, Sir, I should like to withdraw my candidacy.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): Well, eventually means after the first ballot, but for the time being the name of the Hon. Member will remain on the ballot paper.

Order, please. The Hon. Members eligible to be Speaker in accordance with the Standing Orders at six o'clock Sunday in alphabetical order, were: George S. Baker, John Bosley, John A. Fraser, Dan Heap, Jean-Pierre Hogue, Alex Kindy, Gilles Loiselle, Lyle Dean MacWilliam, Arnold Malone, Svend J. Robinson, Raymond Skelly, Maurice Tremblay.

In accordance with the Standing Orders, an alphabetical list of names of all Members who notified the Clerk of the House in writing that they did not wish to have their names stand for candidacy, together with a list of names of those Members who are not eligible, has been placed on each Member's desk.

[English]

For the benefit of Hon. Members, a list of names of those Members who are eligible to be considered for election to the office of Speaker has also been placed on each Member's desk. These lists are also available at the Table.

[Translation]

I also point out that an alphabetical list of the Members eligible to be considered for election to the office of Speaker has been posted in each voting station. After the Clerk has unsealed the ballots, I will suggest to the House a procedure that will make voting easier.

[English]

After the Clerk has unsealed the ballots I will suggest a method of proceeding which will help accelerate the voting process.

[Translation]

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): Order, please. As we are about to begin voting, I take this opportunity to remind Hon. Members to print the first and last names of their candidate on the ballot.

I would now ask Hon. Members who wish to cast ballots to leave their desks through the curtains and to come to the Table using the entrances on either side of the Chair appropriate to the side of the House on which they sit. The clerk will issue them a ballot.

[English]

Upon casting their ballot, will all Hon. Members please leave the voting area in order to avoid congestion. Will all Members please proceed behind the curtains.

Baker, George S.	MacWilliam, Lyle Dean
Bosley, John	(North Island—Powell River)
Fraser, John A.	Malone, Arnold
Heap, Dan	Robinson, Svend J.
Hogue, Jean-Pierre	Skelly, Raymond
Kindy, Alex	Tremblay, Maurice
Loiselle, Giles	(Lotbinière)

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): Order. Will you kindly take your seats.

[Translation]

I would now ask the Hon. Members who have not voted and wish to do so to come forward immediately.

Order, please. All Members having voted, I do now instruct the Clerk to proceed with the counting of the ballots, once I have voted myself.

SITTING SUSPENDED

The Returning Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): Before I suspend the sitting, I wish to remind Hon. Members that, when the counting has been completed, the bells to call the Members to the House will be sounded for not more than five minutes.

The sitting is suspended to the ringing of the bell.

At 10.17 a.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 10.47 a.m.

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): Order. It is my duty to inform the House that John A. Fraser, Member for the Electoral District of Vancouver South, has been duly elected Speaker of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Presiding Officer (Mr. Prud'homme): It is with great pleasure that I do now invite the Hon. Member to take the chair.

[Editor's Note: And Mr. Prud'homme conducted Mr. Fraser from his seat in the House to the chair.]

Election of Speaker

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members, I beg to return my humble acknowledgements to the House for the honour which it has been pleased to confer upon me by choosing me to be your Speaker.

[Translation]

Hon. Members, I beg to return my humble acknowledgements to the House for the honour which you have been pleased to confer upon me by choosing me to be your Speaker.

[English]

It was just over two years ago that I had the honour of uttering those traditional first words as Speaker of the House of Commons in the Thirty-third Parliament. It is with great pride, honour and humility that I graciously accept your trust to be your Speaker for the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: First of all, I want to thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for presiding this morning over our election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Having served his riding and country as an elected representative for twenty-four years, he certainly deserves the title of Dean of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Over these many years, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis has been the friend and loyal adviser of a great many Members on both sides of the House and especially the friend and support of the succeeding occupants of the Chair, from Mr. Speaker Mcnaughton to your humble servant. I want to thank him for his friendship and support.

[English]

I want also to thank all of the Members of the House for their vote of trust and confidence. I say this because without the support of all Hon. Members, in good times and bad, a Speaker cannot adequately and properly serve the Members who elected him.

I know you would want me also to take a moment to express our appreciation to the Clerk, Deputy Clerk and other Table Officers who under great pressure and time constraints ensured that this sitting and election were conducted with sophistication and professionalism.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I want to say to all Members, but especially to new Members, that the Table Officers, as has your Speaker, have adopted an open-door policy for all Members, particularly newly elected Members, and are available for consultation and advice at all times.

The history of the speakership goes back many centuries. Some of you are aware of it and some have only heard dimly of those distant days when the Speaker was chosen by the Commons to take messages to the King. You all know that sometimes those messages were not well received. Undoubtedly the expression "Don't shoot the messenger" stems from those days. Sometimes Speakers did not return. Today, the great test is not when the Speaker goes to see the King but when the Speaker comes to see you.

As I have said in the past, this is not a Chamber for the timid. We have developed an adversarial form of government based on concepts of parliamentary democracy. This is a Chamber where the great decisions of the country are made; and it is a place where history is formulated every day.

Our great friend, the late Tommy Douglas, once said that politics is the "noblest of professions but the vilest of trades". Mr. Douglas knew all too well that men and women from across Canada fight hard to earn a seat in this magnificent Chamber, and that they arrive with great opinions and convictions on the issues facing our nation.

[Translation]

Parliament, which is derived from the French "parler", is a forum of free expression and vigorous exchanges. But freedom of expression could not prevail without a reasonable degree of order, for without it, it would be impossible for one to express oneself freely.

[English]

Many years ago a former Prime Minister and parliamentarian, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, said this about this place:

One moment it's a cathedral, at another time there are no words to describe when it ceases, for short periods, to have any regards of the proprieties that constitute not only Parliament but its tradition. I've seen it in all its greatness. I have inwardly wept when it's degraded.

As your Speaker, it will be my goal to work with all Hon. Members to ensure the greatness of this institution that we so deeply love and respect and that it be able to function no matter how sincere differences may be, and no matter how passionately views are expressed.

Although the Speaker is, above all, the servant of the House, the Speaker is invested by all of you with considerable authority. Some Speakers I know have had the reputation of being authoritarian.

The 19th Century British Speaker, Arthur Wellesley Peel, was said to be able to quell disorder by rising in his majesty and fixing the offenders with a steely glare. I have tried it, and it does not work.

Thomas B. Reed, who was the President of the House of Representatives some years ago, was also known as being authoritarian. One of his constituents wrote to him asking for a copy of the rules of the House. In his response Speaker Reed sent back an autographed photo of himself.

[Translation]

I do not believe any Speaker of the House ever went that far either in Canada or Great Britain.

[English]

The speakership throughout the Commonwealth is moulded in the British tradition. The Speaker's responsibilities are exclusively to the House and to its Members.

[Translation]

As long as they sit in this illustrious chair, the Speakers must strive to give proof of justice, equity and neutrality, among other qualities.

[English]

It is appropriate to be reminded again of those historic words of Speaker Lenthall when, in 1642, the King entered the House of Commons with an armed force and demanded that the Speaker reveal the whereabouts of some Members. The Speaker said:

May it please Your Majesty, I have neither eyes to see nor tongue to speak in this place, but as the House is pleased to direct me, whose servant I am.

On a personal note, may I take a moment to thank my constituents in Vancouver South for their continued trust, and the members of my family who, through a political career that now goes back over 20 years, have always been at my side.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I wish also to thank this House's friend and adviser, our honorary Officer at the Table, the Hon. Stanley Knowles, for being with us today.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Finally, let us remember some appropriate words from one of our country's greatest parliamentarians, Edward Blake, who said in 1873:

The privileges of Parliament are the privileges of the people, and the rights of Parliament are the rights of the people.

One hundred and fifteen years later, those words are still true—we should remember them.

[Translation]

Finally, I wish to thank again all Hon. Members of the House for their support.

[English]

I am your servant, and I will need your continued support to carry out my duties to you in this Chamber.

Let us all in the interests of the country, our love, do our duty. Thank you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[And the Mace having been laid upon the Table:]

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer you my heartfelt congratulations on your election. I am very impressed, of course, with your back-to-back majorities.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mulroney: Above all, I want to salute in you, Sir, a faithful and dedicated servant of Parliament who has guided us well through a momentous period of our recent history. Your service to the House of Commons and to all of us has been sterling and noble.

On behalf of all Members, irrespective of political backgrounds, I salute you today, Sir, as a genuine leader of Parliament and a servant of us all.

[Translation]

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, since you were first elected to this office, you have heard pressing arguments and passionate debates from both sides of the House on crucial questions for the future of Canada. Thanks to your personal qualities and your great sense of responsibility, these discussions could be held within the bounds of dignity and, at all times, of relevancy. We are all grateful to you.

[English]

We have not achieved unanimity very often here, before or since your election as Speaker, nor did we expect that we would. However, I think I can speak for all who have sat in this House during the two years that you, Sir, have occupied the presidency, when I say that you, Mr. Speaker, were a most important participant in the thorough and careful study of the important and delicate questions that have been raised by Members in this House of Commons.

The confidence just reiterated in you by your colleagues from all sides of the House is a tribute to the objective, the dignified and serene way in which you have presided over our often difficult deliberations.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, to assure you today of my respectful co-operation and that of my colleagues during the session that we are about to inaugurate. On behalf of not only Members from all sides of the House but, I suppose, in a special way, if I may say so, with the concurrence of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the NDP, on behalf of all Canadians who have come to see in you a symbol of parliamentary democracy, I thank you for your contribution and I wish you and your family well.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, that is just a prelude of things to come.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to have the privilege of congratulating my constituency neighbour, the Hon. Member for Vancouver South, on his re-election as Speaker of this House of Commons. I do that not only in my capacity as Leader of the Opposition but also as a personal friend of over a quarter century's standing. I echo in personal terms the good wishes of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) not only to you, Sir, as a gentleman of first rank, but to your family who have given you unquestionable support over the years.

Election of Speaker

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This is only the second time that we have elected a Speaker through the use of secret ballot in this House. You have every right to be very proud that in the last two years you have sufficiently impressed all of those of us in the last Parliament, and through what we have said to the newer Members who were just elected, with your skill, your calm and your judicious approach so as to warrant your re-election.

It is an enormous tribute to anyone to be recognized by his peers, certainly peers who have been elected by the citizens of Canada, to have been elected not once but twice. Anyone who has faced that ordeal a number of times knows that the second election is better than the first.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, you have earned the respect and admiration of all your colleagues in the House. Like all Members of the House, I am sure, I too am deeply more grateful that you were re-elected quickly than you were elected for the first time in September 1986. I remember getting home just in time for breakfast. But I can say that the long hours spent electing you were worth it!

I must also thank the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) for conducting this election with distinction and poise.

For a while, he seemed to be in no hurry to give up the Chair—but anyway, he did a very good job for us all.

[English]

Mr. Speaker, you recited some of the precedents of the House and the words of distinguished Speakers of the British House of Commons and the House of Representatives. You know and we know that it is not just the mastery of the rules of this place that counts—and you, Sir, certainly have that—but it is having a sense of the House, a sense of what is needed. It is because you have that sense of the House, that sense of what is the right thing to do and when to do it, that you have merited our confidence. It is also because of your fairness, your patience, your common sense and, above all, your good humour. Your Honour will not consider this a threat in any way if I were to suggest to you that you are going to need those same qualities, and perhaps in even greater measure in this current Parliament than you exercised them in the past.

You are, Sir, above the cut and thrust of partisan politics. You are the guardian of the privileges of every single Member of this House. You are essential to the freedom of expression of the Members of this place who, after all, have been elected by Canadians.

You reflect a tradition of parliamentary democracy carried down through the centuries. As early as 1376 at Westminster the Speaker has been known as an independent representative of the commoners against the King and the nobles. As you have recalled, in early days the Speaker sometimes had a very difficult job in being the people's spokesman to the King.

The scope of your position has evolved tremendously since that day. Your role, one which you have carried out with care and skill, is not to be the servant of the King, but to be the servant of the people, and to act as an impartial referee in our proceedings.

We have the most free Parliament in the world. We have the most open democracy in the world. We have a style of debate and an openness in our Question Period that forces a daily accountability of our Government. You were conscious of that. In spite of the fact that it tests your patience and endurance from time to time, it is worth it—and you know it is worth it. We have confidence that you will persist in that even-handedness which you have demonstrated throughout.

[Translation]

There will be difficult moments. I think that you had some in the last few years. Democracy can sometimes be difficult, especially when ideas and ideals conflict. But I think that with the absolutely impartial and even-handed way you guide the debates and Question Period, we have made progress. And I am sure that we will make much more progress under your leadership.

• (1120)

[English]

We may from time to time disagree with your decisions. We may from time to time put you to the test. We may from time to time be tempted to remind you that you are reverting to the original role of the Speaker and representing the King rather than the people.

As you know, we are very jealous in this place of our rights and privileges. But you have the support and co-operation of every member of my Party on this side of the House. We are very satisfied with your election and I want to wish you continued good fortune in the very important, unique role that you hold in our parliamentary democracy.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I join with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) in congratulating you on your re-election as Speaker of the House of Commons.

The reality, as you well know, being the astute man that you are, is that in this vote in which you received a substantial majority of support, indeed the overwhelming majority of support from members of the Conservative Party, the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party, a higher compliment could hardly be paid to any Canadian in public life.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It has already been said, Sir, that you are a servant of the House and not of the King, not certainly of the Government of the day. All Parties participated in the decision that was reached in 1984 to have, for the first time, an elected Speaker. It was a significant and positive step in reform that is another illustration of why, in our hardly unbiased judgment, the Parliament of Canada on balance is the most democratic of all the parliamentary systems that exist on the planet today.

You will recall what was not exactly a sweeping election victory in 1986. We went through 11 ballots in 11 hours. It was a prolonged process, a hotly contested ballot from which you emerged the clear victor. What is so significant this time around is that having had the judgment of your peers, having had the experience of your making decisions, very often tough, difficult decisions, but invariably fair decisions, the men and women who were re-elected in this Parliament plus the new Members of the House who have reflected upon your performance as they witnessed it during your period in office have given you the highest form of compliment, having voted perhaps for the first time on faith, this time voted on the basis of well deserved reputation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I would just like to say that in our experience, you are a capable, generous, warm, prudent and fair man, and I have great confidence that in the future you will make decisions as you have in the past, that is, always fairly, sometimes for the Government, when the Government is right, but also quite often for the opposition Parties!

As I said at the beginning of my remarks, as the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and also the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) suggested, all New Democrats have a lot of confidence. You will continue in the future, as in the past, to be an outstanding Speaker in the history of Canada.

[English]

I conclude by joining with others in not only wishing you well in the years ahead that you will be serving your peers in this House, but also the members of your family.

Mr. Speaker: I wish to thank the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), and the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), Leader of the New Democratic Party, for their very kind remarks. I shall keep them all in mind in the coming weeks and months.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: This sitting is suspended until four o'clock p.m., later this day, at which time the House will proceed to the Senate where Her Excellency will open the First Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

At 11.16 a.m. the sitting of the House was suspended.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 4 p.m.

OPENING OF THE SESSION

Mr. Speaker read a communication from the Secretary to the Governor General announcing that Her Excellency the Governor General would arrive at the Main Entrance of the Parliament Buildings at 3.50 p.m. on this day the 12th of December, 1988, and that when it had been signified that all was in readiness, Her Excellency the Governor General would proceed to the Senate Chamber to open formally the First Session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament of Canada.

*Speech from the ThroneSPEECH FROM THE THRONE

A message was delivered by the Gentleman Usher of the Black Rod as follows:

Mr. Speaker, Her Excellency the Governor General desires the immediate attendance of this honourable House in the Chamber of the Senate.

Accordingly, Mr. Speaker with the House went up to the Senate Chamber.

• (1630)

[English]

And the House being returned to the Commons Chamber:

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to report that, the House having attended on Her Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, I informed Her Excellency that the choice of Speaker had fallen upon me.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that when this House did attend Her Excellency the Governor General in the Senate Chamber, Her Excellency was pleased to make a speech to both Houses of Parliament. To prevent mistakes I have obtained a copy which is as follows:

Ladies and gentlemen, Honourable Members of the Senate,

Ladies and gentlemen, Members of the House of Commons:

It is my great pleasure to greet you on this, the first day of the Thirty-fourth Parliament since Confederation. This ceremony is rich in history, custom, tradition and symbolism. It is also a renewal of the vital relationship among Crown, people, parliament and government that, today as in the past, is the essence of Canadian democracy.

The people have spoken in a general election three weeks ago. Their members in the House of Commons have today claimed from the Crown the ancient rights and privileges that enable them to carry out their responsibilities.

In the election, my government sought and received a mandate for its policies, including the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States that is to take effect on January 1, 1989. The purpose of this early session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament is to seek your approval for legislation to implement this Agreement as scheduled. Similar legislation was passed by the House of Commons in August. It had also received approval in principle in the Senate and had reached the stage of Senate committee study, prior to dissolution of the Thirty-third Parliament.

My government is determined to secure the benefits of economic opportunity for this and future generations of Canadians. This Agreement reflects my ministers' confidence in Canada's ability to compete with the best in the world.

In due course, we will hold a second session of the Parliament, at which time my ministers will place before you a statement of policy for this, their second mandate in office. Meanwhile, you may be asked at the present session to consider other matters as deemed advisable by my government.

Ladies and gentlemen, Honourable Members of the Senate,

Ladies and gentlemen, Members of the House of Commons:

As you carry out the will of the people and serve the national interest, may Divine Providence be your guide and inspiration.

[English]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister) moved:

That the speech of Her Excellency the Governor General, delivered this day from the Throne to the two Houses of Parliament, be taken into consideration later this day.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt this motion?

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, there has been a long-standing practice of this House that the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne in fact is given on the day following the Throne Speech by Her Excellency the Governor General. It would seem with this initiative by the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) today that the Government is obviously making an effort to depart from this practice and is considering the fast tracking of the trade legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that the Conservative Government is more interested in a Christmas vacation than in getting on and dealing properly with the legislation that will soon be before us.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Ms. Copps: It is a legitimate debating point.

Mr. Riis: I want to say that four days after the general election the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) sent a letter to the Prime Minister indicating that the New Democrats had a number of concerns regarding the decision of the Government to proceed so quickly. At that time—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I would bring it to the attention of all Hon. Members that the Hon. Member for Kamloops has been recognized and has the floor. The Hon. Member.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, just four days after the general election the Hon. Member for Oshawa, the Leader of the New Democratic Party, sent a letter to the Prime Minister outlining some serious concerns that New Democrats had regarding the intentions of the Government to proceed so quickly.

Speech from the Throne

At the top of the list was the call for tandem legislation that would go along with this initiative to implement the trade treaty to protect those workers now numbering in the thousands who have lost their jobs as a result of this initiative.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: There was also a request made to the Prime Minister that a committee of the House of Commons, or perhaps even a joint committee, be struck to monitor the implementing legislation as it reacts to the restructuring of the economy of Canada to identify those workers who are adversely affected as a result of the trade deal and to recommend appropriate initiatives by the Government as the case may be.

Second is the whole matter of the shakes and shingles initiative. We were told during the campaign—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

An Hon. Member: That is not relevant.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops has risen in debate and has been recognized but I must ask him to put some containment on his remarks, and I will watch for relevance.

Mr. Riis: I appreciate that the motion is debatable, Mr. Speaker, and that you will be watching to ensure my comments refer to the motion before us which is to fast track this whole process.

This is only my third term of office, but in 1980 the response to the Throne Speech occurred the day after the Throne Speech debate. In 1984, under a new Prime Minister, again that same practice was followed. We assumed that it would also be followed today to allow Members of Parliament to digest thoroughly—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: —the comments made by the Governor General.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: In closing, Mr. Speaker—

An Hon. Member: You must have missed the election.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Member for Kamloops is just about ready to conclude his remarks.

Speech from the Throne

Mr. Riis: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am nearly at the end of my remarks.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier is rising on a point of order.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: I would ask the Chair to read the motion now under consideration.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps I can assist the Hon. Member. The motion—and I think the Hon. Member will know why I made some reference to relevance—is that the speech of Her Excellency, delivered this day from the Throne to both Houses of Parliament, be taken into consideration later this day.

Mr. Gauthier: Later this day. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I want to conclude my remarks by indicating clearly that a number of concerns were registered.

The initiative now that the Government has failed to take in terms of protecting the Wheat Board, the whole matter of the shakes and shingles issue, the fact that the Americans have taken this initiative and that there has been virtually no response from the Government in reacting to that very punitive tariff have encouraged my Leader to proceed and ask for a response from the Right Hon. Prime Minister on what else the Government plans to do regarding the trade initiative.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Where is Bob White?

Mr. Riis: In closing, Mr. Speaker, we were hoping for some more detailed response from the Prime Minister before we began the debate in reply to the Throne Speech, but in light of the traditions of the House we will wrap up the debate at this time and proceed to the vote.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Mulroney), which was agreed to on the following division:

WAYS AND MEANS

TABLING OF NOTICE OF MOTION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 83(1), I have the honour to lay upon the table copies of a Ways and Means Motion to implement the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

The Late John Dahmer

Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 83(2), I ask that an Order of the Day be designated for the consideration of the said motion.

Mr. Speaker: In view of the matter I must now raise, I might ask Hon. Members to honour what is not the happiest event of today.

VACANCY

BEAVER RIVER—JOHN DAHMER, BY DECEASE

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that I have received communications notifying me that a vacancy has occurred in the representation, namely, John Dahmer, Esquire, Member for the electoral district of Beaver River, by decease. Accordingly, I have addressed my warrant to the Chief Electoral Officer for the issue of a new Writ of Election for the said electoral district.

THE LATE JOHN DAHMER

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I rise today with great personal sadness to ask the House to pay tribute to a man whose untimely passing has prevented him from taking his rightful place here in this House as a Member of Parliament.

John Dahmer was the Member elect from Beaver River. He had a life-long record of public service. His ultimate dream was to serve his country as a Member of Parliament. On November 21, the electors of Beaver River gave him that honour.

Unfortunately, bone marrow cancer has taken John Dahmer from us before he was able to make his own special contribution to this very distinguished place. On behalf of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his family, my colleagues, and I am sure all Members of the House, I wish to extend heartfelt sympathies and deepest condolences to John's wife Donna, his children, family, and friends. They will all miss him more than words can say.

I knew John Dahmer as a fellow politician, as a concerned citizen, and as a friend. For many years he was active in all levels of politics, always learning, sharing, and contributing. He was committed, dedicated, and energetic. I know that he would have been a distinguished and respected parliamentarian.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the opening of a new session of Parliament, is a day filled with excitement, anticipation, and commitment for all Members, new and returning. This is my seventh such occasion and I share the dedication and resolution that fill all of us in this Chamber. I sense as well the keenness and energy of those who are here for the first time. Knowing John Dahmer, I can attest that his enthusiasm and energy today would have been boundless. He would have taken his place with pride and with an unrelenting dedication.

We will miss him bodily, Mr. Speaker, but his spirit, his sense of service and responsibility will live on in all of us throughout this Thirty-fourth Parliament. To his family and his friends, I offer again on behalf of the House our heartfelt sympathies and our deepest regrets that he is not with us here today.

Mr. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, as the Deputy Prime Minister has said, this is a very special day. All Members of this House, especially new Members, have walked into this Chamber with a sense of the pride and accomplishment of the election and a sense of the deep honour given to them by their electorate to serve this country in a public way. We share the sentiments of the Deputy Prime Minister that the untimely death of one of those who was duly elected by a constituency of Alberta has prevented him from sharing in the sense of honour and privilege that we all enjoy.

I had the occasion during the last election campaign to spend some time in the constituency of Beaver River. I know Mr. Dahmer was highly regarded by his constituents and can certainly testify to the record of accomplishment brought forward as part of his election campaign.

I also associate myself with the remarks of the Deputy Prime Minister in saying that we will not have the opportunity to enjoy the special contribution Mr. Dahmer might have brought, both in terms of his experience and in terms of representing that very important riding in western Canada.

On behalf of our group, especially the Members who come from the West and from the North, we want to express our sentiments as well to Mr. Dahmer's family and to say that we deeply regret his passing, that he cannot be here with us to share this very important day for which we know he fought and longed. We know he would have provided a great service to this country.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, those of us who knew of the reputation of John Dahmer were saddened when we received the news that he had passed away. We recognized, from comments that his son made, that he was an extremely compassionate man throughout his entire life and that his lifetime goal was to enter the Parliament of Canada. We are pleased that he at least achieved that goal, but I must say that we regretted hearing the news.

On behalf of my colleagues in the New Democratic Party, we extend our deepest regrets to his wife, his family, and his friends.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to stand for an appropriate period of silence.

[Editor's Note: Whereupon the House stood in silence for one minute.]

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

ADDRESS IN REPLY, MOVED BY MS. KIM CAMPBELL AND SECONDED BY MR. GILLES LOISELLE

The House proceeded to the consideration of the Speech delivered by Her Excellency the Governor General at the opening of the session.

Ms. Kim Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to have been given the opportunity to rise in this House today to move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Langelier (Mr. Loiselle), the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne. On behalf of the constituents of Vancouver Centre, I would like to thank the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the Government for honouring Vancouver Centre in this way.

The Address—Ms. Kim Campbell

Before I begin, however, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your re-election as Speaker of this House. I know the Members of this House will not think me parochial when I say on behalf of all Vancouverites and all British Columbians how proud we are of you, Mr. Speaker, and your contribution to this House over many years.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): In all the areas in which you have excelled, none has been a better showcase for the full range of your qualities as a person than has your tenure as Speaker of the House of Commons. Your warmth and caring have been reflected in your approach to the administrative as well as the ceremonial aspects of your position. A keen intellect has enabled you to master an enormous volume of law and precedent and apply it with fairness and insight. You are forward-looking in managing the business of Parliament but you have a deep reverence and respect for the history and custom without which this instrument of democracy cannot survive.

For all these reasons, Mr. Speaker, you have been freely chosen by your colleagues in this House to assume the vital role of Speaker. Your accomplishments are your own, but all British Columbians take pride in the recognition of such excellence in one of their own.

My constituency of Vancouver Centre is aptly named, including as it does the downtown core of the City of Vancouver. Much of what symbolizes Vancouver for visitors can be found in Vancouver Centre: miles of sandy beaches, Stanley Park, the Granville Island Market, and much of the site of Expo '86.

The west end, one of the most densely populated areas in North America, is an example of urban downtown living at its best, combining the privacy of big city life with the intimacy of small communities. Across the water by any of three bridges are the varied neighbourhoods of West Point Grey, Kitsilano, South Granville, False Creek, Fairview, and Mount Pleasant.

[Translation]

Because of changes to its electoral boundaries, the Vancouver Centre riding has lost its picturesque Chinese quarter, while preserving major parts of its Greek and French communities. As a whole, Vancouver Centre reflects rather closely the diversity of all the Metropolitan Vancouver regions, a rich diversity which expresses itself in many ways.

The Address—Ms. Kim Campbell

[English]

Vancouver Centre is the major business area of the city. Thousands of small businesses as well as many professional and corporate offices make Vancouver Centre an important area of employment. In addition, two great hospitals, St. Paul's and Vancouver General, are focal points for a large health care sector. Many arts and cultural organizations are headquartered in Vancouver Centre where theatres and galleries abound.

Vancouver prides itself on being Canada's gateway to the Pacific. In 1979, the Progressive Conservative Government established the Asia-Pacific initiative which has continued to play a leading role in fostering Vancouver's and Canada's Pacific role. My predecessor as Member for Vancouver Centre, the Hon. Pat Carney, made dramatic advances in Canada's trade with Asia during her tenure as Minister for International Trade. Our Government has continued this thrust and has supported Vancouver's efforts to play a key role here through many initiatives including the establishment of Vancouver as an international banking centre.

Vancouver Centre is the commercial heart not only of the city but of the province. In no other area is the economic interdependence of all areas of British Columbia so clearly illustrated. Much of the wealth that builds the skyscrapers of downtown Vancouver and employs an enormous service sector there is earned in the hinterlands and small communities of our province. The people who live and work in Vancouver Centre know full well the precarious position of all in an undiversified, resource based economy. Vancouver Centre is the economic pulse of the Province of British Columbia.

From October, 1986, to October 1988, I served as a Member of the British Columbia Legislature, during which time I travelled to all parts of the province.

I have come to have a deep appreciation of the energy and creativity in my province. I have come to see how often the economic aspirations of British Columbians have been thwarted by the lack of access to a large regional market. Like other British Columbians I have watched with dismay as many of our most creative and productive people have moved to Toronto or to the United States in order to find a market large enough to sustain their enterprise.

I have seen how a policy of tariff escalation in the United States has prevented the growth of value added industries in our resource based economies. As a former chairman of the Vancouver School Board I have seen how directly a recession that reduces public revenues affects the ability of a society to support its commitment to our young people without mortgaging their future.

The decision to run in this past election was enormously difficult for me requiring as it did that I resign my legislative seat. But I could not in the end stand by and watch the destruction of an agreement which would do so much to address the economic and social concerns that are so important to me.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): How can Vancouver retain its creativity and vitality without secure access to a large market? How can Canadian industries compete internationally from a protectionist base which discourages the qualities of efficiency so necessary to international competitiveness? Mr. Speaker, how can Canada continue to be a caring society and invest in its future human capital without a vibrant and diversified economy capable of paying the bill?

In the course of the recent debate about the free trade agreement, reference was made to the history of Canada and the supposed threat posed by the free trade agreement to the sanctity of that history. The vision of Canadian history reflected in this argument is a rather partial and myopic one. There is much in the 120-year history of our country which has engendered a deep-seated sense of grievance in the regions of Canada. No one who has studied the political history of Canada can be unaware of the profound impact that western resentment of the tariff policy has had on that history. The word "progressive" in Progressive Conservative was added when John Bracken—leader of the Progressive Party, an advocate of low tariffs—became the Conservative Leader.

British Columbia's grievances with respect to tariff policy result from two factors. First, the high tariffs on American imports to protect Canadian industries impose serious costs on British Columbia. That cost is estimated at $5.7 billion over the past 20 years alone.

Second, negotiations by Canadian Governments with the United States to reduce American tariffs have focused upon raw resources but left the tariff escalation on value added production in place. In British Columbia with a tiny domestic market, these barriers seriously limit the opportunity for diversification of the resource economy through value added production.

For example, our unprocessed zinc can pass into the United States with a 1 per cent tariff, but a zinc alloy incurs a tariff of 19 per cent. This phenomenon is not confined to British Columbia. On both coasts tariffs have made the development of a processed fish industry uneconomic.

It has been said in the free trade debate that since 1935 tariffs between Canada and the United States have been reduced by such an amount that 80 per cent of our trade is tariff free. Why then, it is asked, such a fuss over the remaining 20 per cent? Why indeed? Because the statistic itself is meaningless. The actual tariff free figure is 72 per cent and it refers to the existing volume of trade. It cannot reflect trade that might have occurred but for tariff barriers. Furthermore, if trade in automobiles and auto parts is removed from the equation, the figures for the remaining trade are very different. Of the remaining trade, only 58 per cent is tariff free. Forty-two per cent, almost half, incurs tariffs. Thus the auto pact area of southern Ontario enjoys the benefits of what the Leader of the New Democratic Party has referred to as the "continental market force" but the regions of Canada struggle with tariff barriers which distort their economic development.

The free trade agreement addresses the single most significant historical grievance of British Columbia in Confederation. The free trade agreement democratizes the Canadian economy by giving to the regions what central Canadian industries have long enjoyed, access to a significant regional market.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): Not only has the free trade agreement addressed the regional grievance but it has been sought by the business community in all parts of the country. Canadian businesses, large and small, have recognized that the American market can be their springboard to competitiveness on an international standard. Both the manufacturing and the service sectors have realized that the path to greater prosperity lies in removing the training wheels of protectionism.

Make no mistake, protectionism has distorted our economy to the detriment of all Canadians. In protected industries the incentives to modernize plants and engage in research and development are greatly reduced. Grantsmanship and lobbying replace entrepreneurship and good management as industries come to rely on subsidies and tariffs to compensate for an inadequate domestic market. Protectionism exaggerates the comparative advantage of the highly populated core and discriminates against the less populated regions.

The Address—Ms. Kim Campbell

Over the past five years there has been an alarming flow of corporate headquarters from Vancouver, Winnipeg, Halifax and from other regional centres to Toronto. With a population of three million—less than the population of greater Toronto—how can British Columbia hope to reverse this trend toward the centralization of the Canadian economy unless it can offer businesses a market equivalent to that of central Canada?

But it is not just our economy which is harmed by protectionism. Protectionism poses serious risks to the health of the Canadian body politic. Not only is it a major contributor to regional economic disparity, but in the ensuing competition for government spending to alleviate the effects, the sparsely populated regions cannot carry the clout of the highly populated core. From this comes the perception in the regions that they are not getting their fair share. Resentment of economic disparities feeds a sense of political impotence which spills over into other areas. Issues such as language and Senate reform come to bear an emotional colouring unrelated to their merit, a colouring derived from the deeper more fundamental problem.

[Translation]

Our trade with the United States has increased by 80 per cent over the past twenty years, and we have been exposed over the same period to an ever increasing volume of feature films, televised programs, music and books from that country. In spite of that, our feeling of Canadian identity has not been reduced. Quite the contrary. It is even stronger today.

As a matter of fact, over the past ten years, the production of books by Canadian authors has increased by 500 per cent. A great many of our most appreciated social programs have been implemented during the last twenty years.

Our self-knowledge and self-confidence increase as our foreign trade grows.

[English]

No one can define himself in a vacuum, Mr. Speaker.

In Canada we have learned to balance the onslaught of American culture with our own reality. It is that ability to balance which is one of the chief characteristics of Canadians, which is why, perhaps, a Canadian has been defined as someone who can make love in a canoe.

Address—Mr. Loiselle

The greatest threat to the survival of Canada as a nation is not trade with the United States. The greatest threat to our national survival is the perception in the regions of Canada that the cost of Confederation is too high. The free trade agreement does more for regional development in Canada than any policy in our history. The time has come to tear down the tariff walls which have kept our regional economies in tutelage. It is time for the forest products of British Columbia and Québec, the minerals of northern Ontario, Alberta's gas and petroleum, and maritime fish to enter the United States in value added form.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): It is time for Newfoundlanders and Nova Scotians to have the dignity of secure year-round employment. The distinctive cultures of the Maritimes are not at risk, and there is nothing quaint about poverty.

I came to Parliament to speak strongly for Vancouver Centre and British Columbia. But I do not advocate the prosperity of British Columbia at the expense of Ontario or Québec or any other part of Canada. As the Prime Minister has so often said, Governments do not create wealth, people do. And if Governments provide the climate, there will be new prosperity in British Columbia and Canada. I want a Canada where all regions have a chance to grow and blossom, where no regional grievances threaten to unravel the national fabric.

Since 1984 the Progressive Conservative Government has been a Government of national reconciliation, but national reconciliation must include economic justice for all regions. We cannot be a caring society if our purse is empty. We cannot be magnanimous to the aspirations of all Canadians if we feel aggrieved. We cannot embark upon the federal-provincial co-operation which is essential to deal with issues of the environment, education, and the economy if we are divided by a simmering sense of injustice.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to support the free trade agreement, and I am proud to move the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Campbell (Vancouver Centre): I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Langelier, that the following Address be presented to Her Excellency the Governor General of Canada:

To Her Excellency the Right Hon. Jeanne Sauv , a member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada, Chancellor and Principal Companion of the Order of Canada, Chancellor and Commander of the Order of Military Merit, upon whom has been conferred the Canadian Forces' Decoration, Governor General and Commander-in-Chief of Canada.

May it please Your Excellency:

We, Her Majesty's most loyal and dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada, in Parliament assembled, beg leave to offer our humble thanks to Your Excellency for the gracious speech which Your Excellency has addressed to both Houses of Parliament.

[Translation]

Mr. Gilles Loiselle (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I would first like to congratulate you on your election. You have earned the confidence and the respect of all those who have sat under your chairmanship and I know all the new Members join me in assuring you of our complete co-operation.

Mr. Speaker, I am well aware that, by asking me to support the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wanted to honour the population of the riding of Langelier.

It is also symbolic that the Member from Langelier should be asked to support the Address in reply to a speech which invites all Canadians to give their country a new impetus on the road to social and economic progress.

Indeed, under various names, the riding I represent has witnessed all the great events which have marked the building of this country and has often been associated with them. It is therefore perhaps natural that Langelier should be called upon to intervene when we are about to turn a page in our history.

It is worth noting, Mr. Speaker, that Langelier is in the historic city of Québec and therefore the cradle of Canada and of much of America. It has witnessed 450 years of our history. Not only was the country founded there, but the great discoverers who opened up a whole continent used it as their base.

As a privileged keeper of our collective memory, the population of Quebec city and of Langelier, where the first Parliament of the province of Canada was established, is profoundly conscious of the place it occupies in this country, which has, with the passing decades, emancipated itself and become a modern, independent and forward-looking country.

We saw quite clearly, in the way the people of Québec participated in the national debate on the major economic issue of the recent campaign, to what extent the whole of Québec shares in the confidence we have in our capacity to meet the new challenges involved in the globalization of trade. Massively, Quebecers joined millions of Canadians who felt free trade is the assertion of the national will to open out rather than shutting ourselves in, of self-confidence rather than fear of new horizons.

Many fellow citizens, subjected for months to the whole gamut of arguments and counter arguments dealing with free trade had an opportunity to ask themselves whether that deal should go through. But in the final analysis, at the conclusion of a campaign centered on free trade, Canadians trusted a party that embodied and still embodies free trade. Under our system of parliamentary democracy, the mandate received by this Government on that matter could not be more decisive.

The question was debated in the widest possible forum, that of a general election, and the issue was settled by the electorate. It is now incumbent upon us to ratify an agreement that we invite all Canadians to support in order that, from the day it comes into force, it may be as productive as possible, to the benefit of all groups in our society, in every area of the country.

On the eve of the 21st century, with the advent of the large trading blocks which are being formed today, this country, largely dependent on external trade for its growth and welfare, is in vital need of economic space. Such space is available with the free trade agreement, providing us as it does with the widest possible access to the American market, the most sought-after market in the world.

In that respect, free trade is the only solution within immediate reach that meets our aspirations for sustained growth. In a sense, it is also the key to doing business with the rest of the world, to the extent that safe access to the various American markets will provide our businesses with economies of scale that often cannot be derived from Canadian sales, thereby putting them in a better position to successfully meet international competition on all other markets.

Those who over these last 20 years have been closely watching the extraordinary bloom of entrepreneurship, innovation and leadership among Canadian businesses both in the industrial and manufacturing sector and in the area of services know full well we can now contemplate without any fears, doubts or reservations a free trade agreement with the United States.

What is in store is not only increased exports but also increased investments and, more generally, increased economic activity. This Agreement will benefit workers and consumers as a whole by creating jobs and increasing purchasing power.

The Agreement we are about to sign does not threaten in any way, directly or indirectly, our sovereignty. On the contrary, it specifically preserves political institutions as well as constitutional rules and regulations of each country in addition to guaranteeing full respect of the Canadian cultural identity, our way of life and our long-standing tradition of social justice.

Mr. Speaker, I will go so far as saying that the lack of an agreement would be more threatening to our sovereignty than a contract between two partners seeking together the best way to co-operate while respecting each other.

[English]

I would not want to conclude my remarks without a word on a most important issue for Québec as well as for Canada. I am referring, of course, to the necessary reinsertion of Québec within the Canadian constitutional family.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Loiselle: Under the leadership of our Prime Minister the agreement that has been reached at Meech Lake represents a unique achievement in the process of national reconciliation, and probably the opportunity of this century for our country to put to rest decades of confrontation and quarrels that have mobilized the country's time and energy.

The Meech Lake Accord sets the foundation for a new and stimulating era in which Canadians, freed from counter-productive and divisive constitutional dead ends, can start building the future. The opportunity is here now. It cannot, it must not be missed.

My very deep conviction is that the conditions and circumstances which resulted in the Meech Lake consensus and the following multipartite support of Parliament and of eight Legislative Assemblies are of a rare nature. That is why I remain confident that when all is said and done the superior interests of the country and its people will carry the day.

Privilege—Mr. Thacker

[Translation]

The Meech Lake Accord, Mr. Speaker, is a precious token of Canadians' and Quebecers' will to work together to build a common future with dignity and honor while respecting Quebec's distinctiveness. We cannot and must not miss this historical opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, I wholeheartedly support the proposal of the Hon. Member for Vancouver Centre (Ms. Campbell) relating to the Address in reply to the Speech from the Throne.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[English]

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would be prepared to continue now but in order to make it easier for yourself and the Speaker of the Senate, I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. Gauthier: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Maybe the Minister is going to say what I anticipated, but I just want to ask the Government House Leader if he could tell us what we will be dealing with tomorrow. Is he going to designate tomorrow as continuing debate on the Throne Speech?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, we will be calling the vote on the Ways and Means Motion tomorrow as the first order of business. I have suggested in a letter to the Chair, with copies to my colleagues in the opposition benches, that the House may wish to take up the procedural debate on a Notice of Motion which has been filed with the Table.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I must tell the Government House Leader that we have no notice of any letter from him today. I shall reserve on that point.

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that I have received notice of a question of privilege from the Hon. Member for Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker). I am prepared to hear at least some opening remarks. If it is going to be very lengthy it might be more appropriate for the Hon. Member to adjourn it until tomorrow.

I want, however, to be very clear to all Hon. Members that a question of privilege is just that and it receives precedence here.

PRIVILEGE

TRAFFIC JAM ON PARLIAMENTARY PRECINCTS

Mr. Blaine A. Thacker (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, a question of privilege has to be raised at the earliest moment, and in this case it relates to the actions of the green buses. I can assure Hon. Members that for urgent family reasons it was impossible for me to be here until five o'clock. I then caught a taxi in. Immediately upon reaching the Confederation Building the bells were ringing. I went to the green buses, but due to the traffic jam the bus was unable to get through.

I believe that establishes a prima facie case. I would suggest a reference to the standing committee because I am sure there are ways that security guards at this time of the day could be directing traffic. In view of the fact there is a more balanced number of Members in the House, I believe this may well be a problem and it should be looked at and solved instantly.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for raising the matter. Clearly the Hon. Member has some support. I will consider the matter with care and report back to the House at the earliest convenience.

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, maybe we can put this off until tomorrow and you can hear us on this point. I think there is a question of privilege here that could be of some importance to Members of the House.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker: I will certainly accept the Hon. Member's suggestion.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister and President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

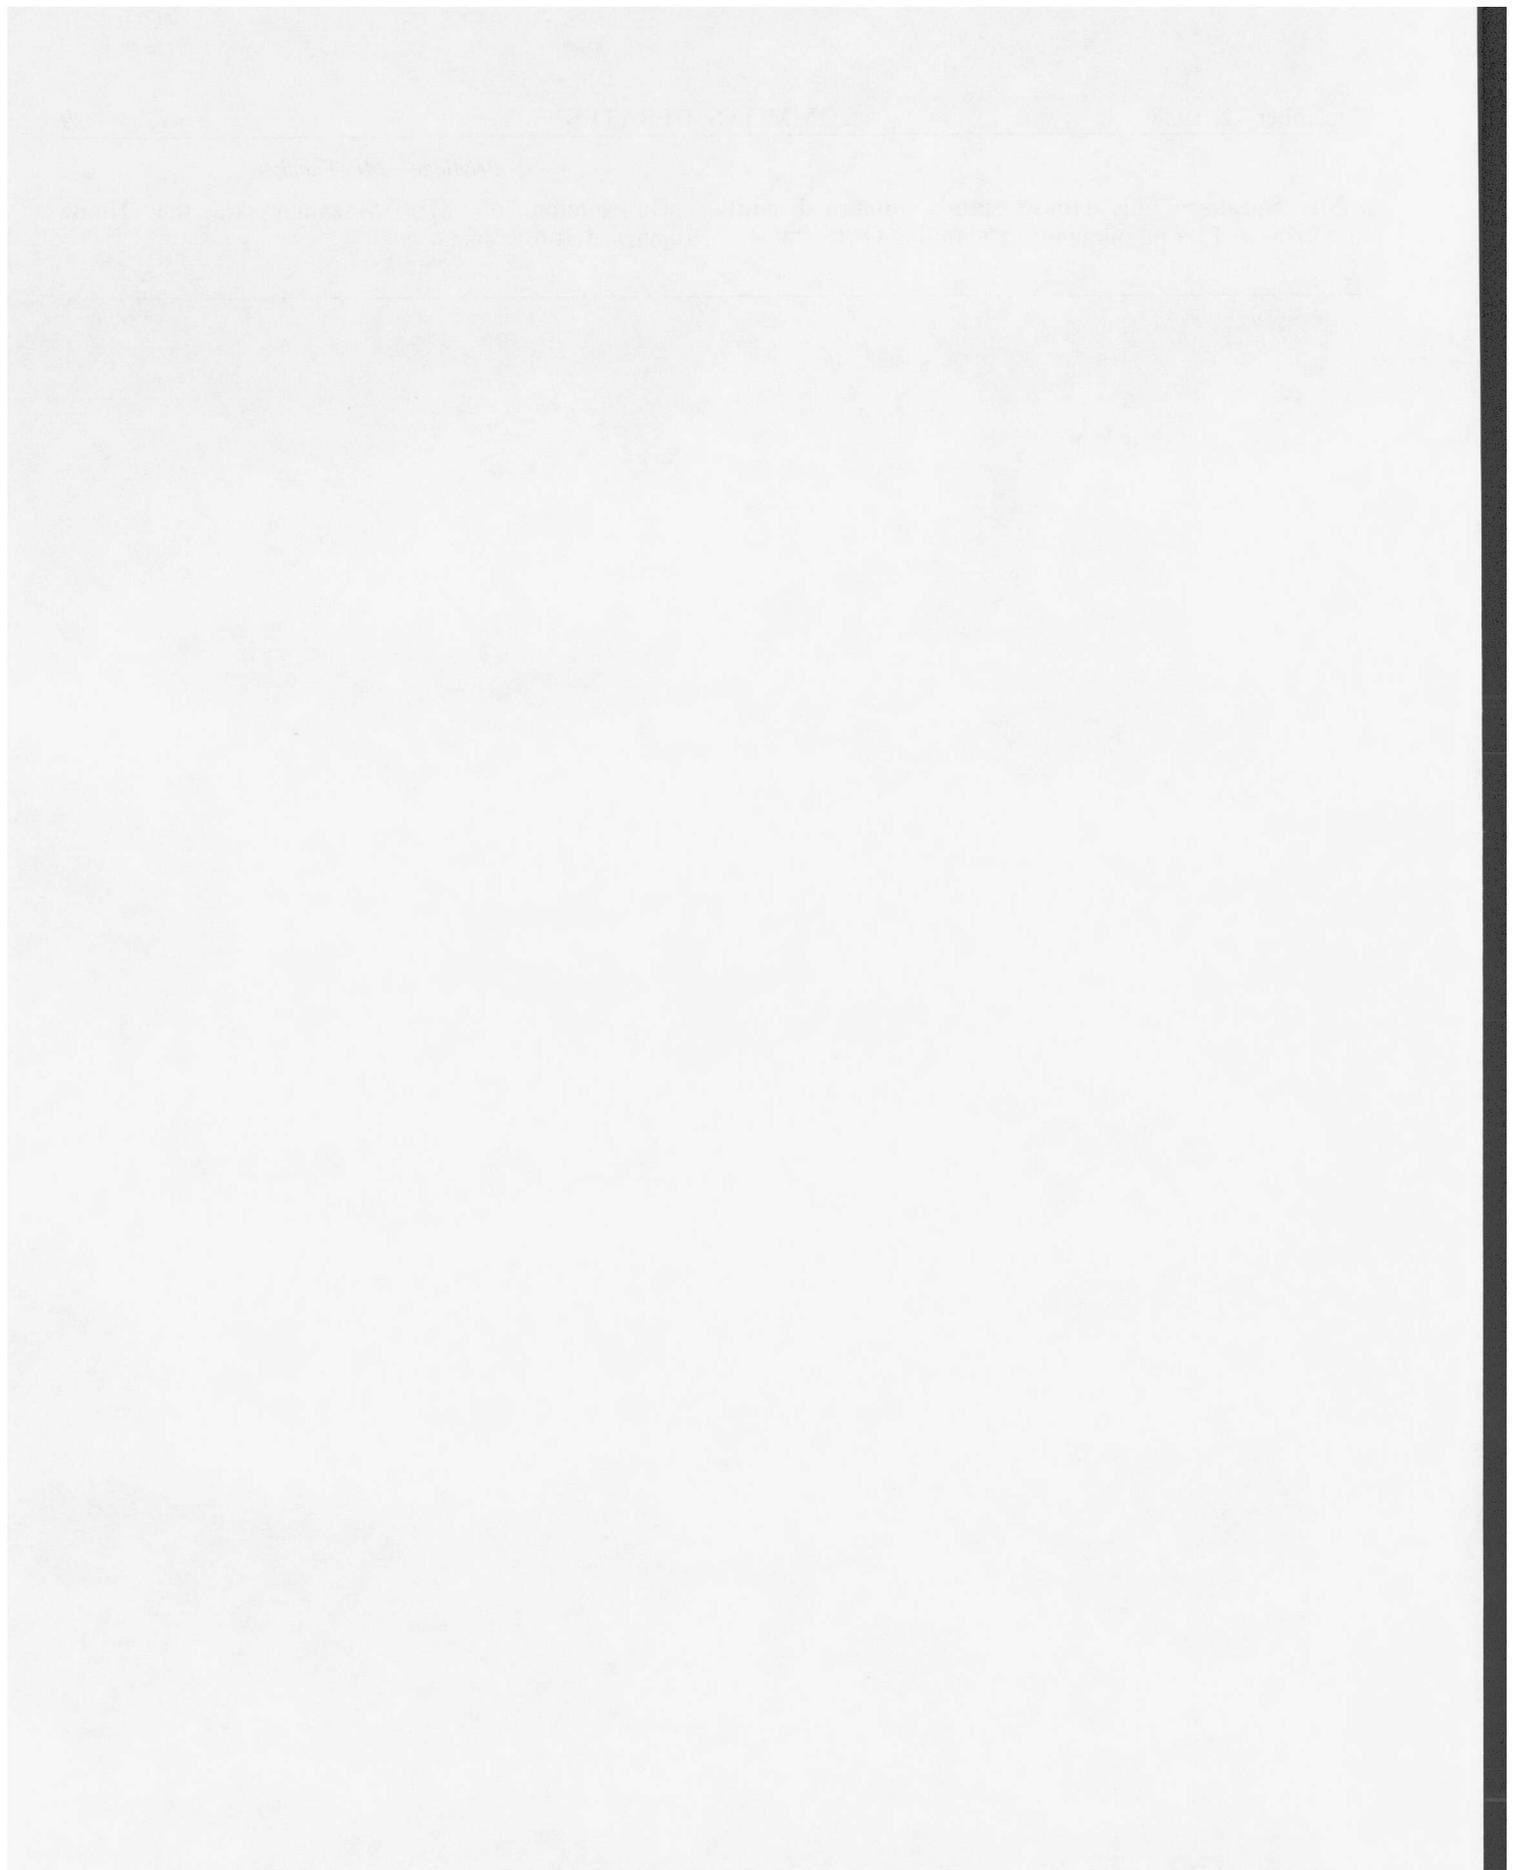

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Privilege—Mr. Thacker

Mr. Speaker: This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m. pursuant to Standing Order 24(1). On motion of Mr. Mazankowski, the House adjourned at 6.15 p.m.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise the House that there have been discussions among the Parties and the staff of the Parties as to the most appropriate order of business today. It is our wish to proceed in as orderly a manner as possible after the completion of the vote on the Ways and Means Motion.

Therefore, we are proposing to the House that we resume debate after the vote on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne in order to give the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) an opportunity to speak, and also in order to give the Leader of the New Democratic Party an opportunity to speak.

We make that proposal on the condition that the procedural debate which is on the Order Paper in my name, which we intend to call tomorrow, be completed by 7 p.m. Wednesday evening.

Mr. Gauthier: That's closure.

Mr. Murphy: Closure on closure.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, while it seems reasonable on the surface that we have the debate continue today, I do not think that it is reasonable for the Deputy Government House Leader to attempt to direct you, Sir, as to at what point the procedural debate we are sure to have on the acceptability of the Government's motion to suspend the rules should conclude. I think that any such decision as to how long debate on the acceptability of the motion will go is a matter for you, Sir, to decide. I am prepared to rely on Your Honour's good judgment in this matter.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I have two reactions to the comments made by the Deputy House Leader. The first concerns the intention to proceed with the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, something which seems to be appropriate. I would like to seek an understanding at this point that once we get to this item on the agenda that the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) will speak and, with the approval of the House, that the Leader of the New Democratic Party will follow immediately in terms of having a chance to complete his remarks immediately following the remarks of the Leader of the Official Opposition. I seek that clarification first, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister in reply.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, naturally, on the understanding that the entire suggestion is taken into account, yes, we on the government side are prepared to hear the Leader of the New Democratic Party after the Leader of the Official Opposition speaks. We want to give both individuals full opportunity to speak. Naturally, we would proceed on that basis on the understanding that, however, the procedural debate on the motion which is on the Order Paper now be called tomorrow and be completed by 7 p.m.

I am giving our undertaking that the Leader of the New Democratic Party would have ample time, the same as the Leader of the Official Opposition, to speak. We look forward to the remarks of both individuals.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, this seems to be a twist in the way the House does business. Never before have we had conditions attached to the approval for the Leader of the New Democratic Party to be allowed to complete his remarks. I am concerned that the Deputy House Leader for the Government is also directing decisions that ought to be Your Honour's to make and tying our hands as to when we can make procedural arguments and when they have to be completed. That does not seem to be a decision that the Deputy House Leader should be making but one that in fact Your Honour should be making.

I want to say that we have to consider this proposal. We are certainly prepared to consider it. But at this point I am not in a position to respond either favourably to it or against it.

Tabling of Documents

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I want to remind the House that I asked the House Leader yesterday in the House what the agenda for today would be. At that time the Deputy House Leader answered, and we will find that on page 18 of Hansard:

—we will be calling the vote on the Ways and Means Motion tomorrow—

I asked specifically if he would designate a day for continuing the debate on the address. He did not answer me. I took it that he knew what he was doing at that time, that there was either total confusion on that side or that they had a plan for today.

● (1110)

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the proposal now is that we will have this address continued today but on the condition put by the Government that we agree tomorrow on closure. That is the point. At seven o'clock tomorrow night, debate on a motion must be taken up and finished, if I understood the Minister properly. If that is the point, then—

. . . That is blackmail! That is all it is. It is bargaining in public and it does not work; it cannot work either.

I would say to the Minister that if he wants to begin the session with this kind of approach of giving, taking back, giving . . . this kind of attitude will not work.

So I ask him to be frank with the House. Today we would like to proceed with the Speech from the Throne. We ask that the Leader of the Liberals and the Leader of the New Democratic Party be heard. If he is prepared to do that, we will negotiate other matters after. But we must not negotiate the Throne Speech with such an unacceptable proposition as, "Tomorrow, we will impose closure." That does not work.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I think under the circumstances it would be best if we proceeded with Routine Proceedings. There may, of course, be further discussions between representatives of all three Parties.

I have a preliminary matter which I must bring to the attention of Hon. Members. Hon. Members will know, at least some will know, but I want to bring it to all Hon. Members' attention, especially new Members, that there is a new set of House Orders which were adopted on May 27. These copies are now available. Some of you may have been operating under the old Orders. What you will find is that basically in substance they are the same. However, the numbering is different. When Members are addressing the Chair on a procedural point, it might be advisable from now on to have a copy of the new book and keep it with you.

Some of you may find at first, because you are familiar with the old book, that you want to work with that, but as soon as possible I think it would be helpful for all to get the new book. You will find that it is an improvement. The rules are more logically set out. I do not think you will have any difficulty in using them. I do want to bring this especially to the attention of new Members.

While I am on my feet, I wish to move:

That the House now proceed to the Orders of the Day.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to seek clarification. If this motion succeeds and we go to Orders of the Day, does that preclude the request for an emergency debate being made today?

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the Hon. House Leader for the New Democratic Party that under the rules, unless some consent can be obtained, I would not be able to entertain an application for an emergency debate. It may well be that consent could be obtained, but at the moment that would be the ruling I would have to make.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the Government's interest in getting on with the daily business. I also appreciate that the Government would not want to be seen as, if you like, prohibiting a Member of the Opposition from requesting, at least, an emergency debate. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that you see if there is unanimous consent of the House to allow the Leader of the New Democratic Party to at least request an emergency debate, in the spirit of the process of healing and reconciliation.

Mr. Speaker: I think probably it would be advisable if Members discuss that matter further. I notice that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is seeking the floor.

Mr. Gauthier: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, what the House Leader just proposed and moved will cut off any chance of the Opposition Parties addressing the Speech from the Throne today. The motion says: "proceed to Orders of the Day". The only item under Orders of the Day is a Ways and Means motion, which is not debatable. It can only be put to a vote. We will vote against it, but that is it. You will have to recess after that unless you can find some solution now to address that question. I say to the House Leader, you cannot have it both ways. You allow the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) and the Leader of the NDP to address the question today on the Speech from the Throne, and do it democratically, otherwise you are cutting off debate.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, we will hear the Hon. Member for Kamloops. However, what I am going to suggest to Hon. Members is, because the Speaker is now seized with a motion, procedurally what the Speaker now has to do is put it to the House. Again, in the interest of making sure that all Members, especially new Members, understand what will take place, there will be a voice vote and then, depending on the outcome of that, there may very well be a 30 minute bell calling in the Members.

Of course, I cannot assure you of that, but that is a possibility. During that period I think Hon. Members on both sides of the House might have a discussion and perhaps the result of that discussion might assist the Speaker.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops, is there anything further?

Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

PRIVILEGE

TRAFFIC JAM ON PARLIAMENTARY PRECINCTS

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I should like to elaborate upon the question of privilege raised yesterday by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker) relating to the traffic jam on Parliament Hill.

Mr. Speaker, this matter must be referred to a committee because today we have to solve certain problems concerning access to this chamber and to committee rooms. As a rule, access is difficult enough in normal times, but the situation does get worse in winter.

Privilege—Mr. Thacker

[English]

I do not have to remind you, Mr. Speaker, but I would like to read, for the purposes of enlightening some of our colleagues in this House, new ones perhaps, what privilege is all about, because the question was put yesterday.

Some Hon. Members: Dispense!

Mr. Gauthier: No, I will not dispense. It is a very important point. The front bench of the Government takes it frivolously, but we on this side take this very seriously.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, allow me to read Beauchesne's Fifth Edition Citation 16:

Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions and which exceed those possessed by other bodies or individuals. Thus, privilege, though part of the law of the land, is to a certain extent an exemption from the ordinary law.

I go on quoting because this part is important.

The distinctive mark of a privilege is its ancillary character. The privileges of Parliament are rights which are "absolutely necessary for the due execution of its powers". They are enjoyed by individual Members, because the House cannot perform its functions without unimpeded use of the services of its Members.

Mr. Speaker, when a Member cannot come to the House of Commons because he simply cannot hear the bell—and we had an example of that today at the Wellington Building where the bell failed to ring—is that a breach of his privileges? I say it is.

If the same Member experiences difficulties because there is no adequate, rapid and efficient transportation from the Wellington Building or the Confederation Building, Mr. Speaker, again I say that the Member has a question of privilege and that, in such instance, his rights might be curtailed if he were to find it impossible to get here on time to vote or debate an issue.

Mr. Speaker, I think that a committee might be asked to consider the whole question of Parliament Hill and the means of transportation provided there.

[English]

Members should be sure that they can arrive at the House when they want and in time to discharge the duties for which they were elected. The question raised yesterday by the Hon. Member for Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker) indeed prevented him from arriving in time to exercise the right of a Member; that is he heard the bells ringing when he got into the Confederation Building, he took a bus, and he told us in his remarks yesterday, he was unable to be here because of the traffic tie-up.

Members are elected to participate in debate, to participate in committees and to vote in this House, and they should be allowed to be here whenever they have to be here and whenever they want to be here. That is my point. There are several buildings in these precincts which are not connected by tunnels. At times we have to use buses. These buses sometimes have certain difficulties.

Hon. Members will remember that many times in the last Parliament we had to ask the Speaker to hold the vote because we knew certain Members were unable to come here in due time to exercise their democratic right to vote. The Speaker has given us this understanding.

I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that the point raised yesterday is interesting because we now have a building with the offices of 23 Members of Parliament, the Wellington Building, which has no transportation facilities available at this time. Buses are not at the disposal of the Members. They have to cross Wellington Street and come to the bus stop which is on the property of the Parliament of Canada. Therefore, those Members should be entitled to come here whenever they please, whenever they have to and whenever they want to exercise their rights as Members of Parliament.

I thoroughly endorse and support the proposition that this whole question be sent to a committee for study, consideration and that action be taken thereon.

Mr. Speaker: Before adjourning the House, has the appropriate motion been made?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened to the Hon. Member for Lethbridge (Mr. Thacker), the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) and I am completely in agreement that the House ought to entertain the appropriate motion.

An Hon. Member: So moved.

Mr. Speaker: So moved. I should also say that the Sergeant-at-Arms has made arrangements with the RCMP starting this afternoon for police assistance in clearing traffic and that that matter, including the matter of the bells, ought properly go to committee.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

MONITORING BY LIBERAL PARTY

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, on this day, at the beginning of the Thirty-fourth Parliament, I thank the people of Mount Royal for once again expressing their confidence in me. I pledge my commitment to represent them to the best of my abilities. One way will be working to ensure that the Government takes full responsibility for the impact of the trade deal.

Do plant closures by Gillette in Montreal, by Pittsburgh Paints, and Catelli Spaghetti represent the wave of Canada's future? Is the trade deal making plant closing decisions such as that of Northern Telecom easier? Is that the type of future Canadians expected and voted for on November 21?

Is the Government going to take credit for plant openings because of free trade, and try to blame plant closings on some other mysterious force? The Government will have to learn that denying the connection between job losses due to the trade deal does not change the fact that workers are losing their jobs.

Liberals will be here every day watching the Government on behalf of the people of Canada, the majority of whom did not support the trade deal. We shall monitor the negotiations to ensure that the Government does not abandon its responsibility for the Canadian workers.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

EXPANSION OF CANADIAN COMPANIES' OPERATIONS

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, free trade has already opened new opportunities for the city of Scarborough.

Next month, CDA Industries, Canada's largest display company, will open an office in Atlanta, Georgia, to pursue new markets as a result of the Free Trade Agreement. CDA's President, Mr. Vince Devitta, and the board of directors, have welcomed the free trade agreement as an opportunity for their company to expand. In fact, CDA has already negotiated a $6.5 million U.S. order which will create new jobs at its Scarborough plant.

Canadian Thermos Products and Warner Lambert Canada, which are also located in Scarborough Centre, also plan to expand their operations as a result of free trade. Canadian Thermos expects to create an additional 60 jobs in Scarborough because of better access to the U.S. markets under free trade, and Warner Lambert has already built a new research centre.

CDA, Canadian Thermos Products, and Warner Lambert are proving that free trade will have long term benefits for Scarborough's and Canada's future.

DISASTERS

ARMENIAN EARTHQUAKE—CANADIAN RESPONSE

Mr. Bill Blaikie (Winnipeg Transcona): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleagues I would like to take this opportunity to express our deepest sympathies to the people of Armenia who are experiencing one of the worst disasters of this century.

I would also like to commend those thousands of Canadians who have devoted their time, energy, and resources to collecting and sending relief supplies to the troubled areas.

Unfortunately, however, it appears that the co-ordination of the Canadian response could have been better handled. Some volunteers with needed skills were not even able to get a few supplies such as tents and blankets so that they could fly to the scene of the tragedy. Other questions have been raised with respect to the lack of communication between Emergency Preparedness Canada and External Affairs. I hope the Minister will look into this and report back to the House.

In the meantime, I hope that the quake will have done one thing useful. I hope that it brings home to us that the people in the Soviet Union are real human beings. If we can be moved as we have been by their suffering in this instance we should also be moved to eliminate nuclear weapons which would visit upon the people of the Soviet Union and all the people of the earth a disaster that would make even the events in Armenia look like a picnic.

THE FRANCHISE

REGISTRATION OF VOTERS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Zoya Stevenson, Nancy Jacobi, and thousands of other Canadians in Parkdale—High Park and across Canada were disenfranchised in the federal election of November 21 because of our inefficient enumeration process.

During every election we hear horror stories of residents of entire streets and whole apartment buildings not being enumerated. Many voters were omitted because they were travelling or working odd shifts during the enumeration period. Others did not discover the omission of their names until they arrived at the polls on election day.

I urge Parliament to give speedy approval to the following recommendations.

1. Develop a registration process to establish a permanent voters list.

2. Approve election day voters registration in urban areas, the same right as given to rural voters.

The implementation of the these two recommendations would prevent discrimination against urban voters, and would guarantee Canadian voters their citizenship rights. It is our duty as parliamentarians to make it easier for citizens to vote, not place obstacles in their way.

FREE TRADE

GOVERNMENT'S MANDATE

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, first, I would like to thank the people of the riding of Champlain for putting their trust in me for a second consecutive mandate. Of course, I promise to keep on working for every man and woman of my constituency in order to improve our quality of life, attract significant investments and make the Canadian economy and that of my region work as well as in the past four years.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to remind both opposition parties that on the night they were defeated they solemnly committed themselves to let the Free Trade Agreement pass without objection or unjustified pressure. As we can see the session has no sooner begun that both parties have already reneged on their promise and simply seek to obstruct the Government in its action to prevent what Canadians decided on November 21 with their vote for free trade, for the economic development of Canada and against the regression of both opposition parties.

DISASTERS

ARMENIAN EARTHQUAKE—CANADIAN RESPONSE

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, December 7 last, the worst natural disaster to befall the Soviet Union in this century took place in Soviet Armenia.

Armenian Canadians in Don Valley North and other ridings in Canada are in a profound state of shock. While they, many thousands of Canadians, and the Canadian Government have responded with generosity, massive reconstruction efforts will be necessary.

I urge the Government of Canada to respond with the greatest generosity and compassion to this crisis and to advise the Soviet Union that Canadians would welcome such refugees as the Soviet Union may be prepared to grant exit visas to, in the face of this enormous calamity.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

SUPPLY MANAGEMENT MARKETING SYSTEM

Mr. Bob Speller (Haldimand—Norfolk): Mr. Speaker, the free trade agreement in its present form is a direct attack on the supply management system of marketing, a system that has served Canadian farmers since it was introduced in the early 1970s.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government gave assurances over the past few months that the supply management system of marketing as defined under Article 11 of the GATT will be protected under the Free Trade Agreement. But we have also heard, Mr. Speaker, that the Americans would like to see an end to the supply management system as we know it here in Canada.

The constituents of Haldimand-Norfolk, who include many supply-managed farmers, are genuinely concerned that supply management is threatened, not only under the GATT, but within the free trade deal itself. Clearly, the Bill, in its present form, does not protect these farmers.

Our Party, Mr. Speaker, has proposed amendments to this deal which we believe protect farmers. In fact, Mr. Speaker, our Party is committed to protecting all Canadians from the ill effects of this agreement. We will be the guardians of Canadian sovereignty, and we put the Government on notice that we will not stand for any decline in the farm economy.

GENERAL AGREEMENT ON TARIFFS AND TRADE

CANADIAN AGRICULTURAL INTERESTS

Mr. Ken G. Hughes (MacLeod): Mr. Speaker, last week I had the honour of attending the GATT talks as a member of Canada's parliamentary delegation.

Many Canadians involved in agriculture, including my constituents, were deeply disappointed with the lack of concrete results at the Montreal meeting.

The future of many agricultural industries in Canada is at stake in these talks. We must reduce subsidies to agriculture world-wide. Canada, as a member of the Cairns Group, as well as Japan and the U.S., were there prepared to negotiate. Where were the Europeans?

We must continue to pressure the Europeans in particular, as well as the Americans, to come to their senses and end the subsidy war.

As a new Member representing MacLeod in southern Alberta, I welcome the chance to defend aggressively the interests of Canadian agriculture.

POLITICAL PARTIES

PEOPLE'S CHOICE OF PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVES

Mr. Gabriel Desjardins (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, last November 21, Canadians had to choose the leader and the political party best suited to govern the country for the next four years.

Well, Mr. Speaker, their choice was clear and unequivocal. Basing themselves on the record of the Progressive Conservative government from 1984 to 1988, they once more chose the team best suited to lead the country, the team of Brian Mulroney and the Progressive Conservative Party, thus giving them a second majority mandate, an historic event in the Canadian political life of the twentieth century.

The environment, implementation of free trade, national unity, security for our senior citizens, these will be the priorities of the government which I represent in this House.

To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank my fellow citizens for having entrusted me with a second mandate. They can rest assured that their Member of Parliament will continue to represent them with dignity and that he will defend their interests relentlessly.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

VANCOUVER—CREATION OF NEW URBAN PARK

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I am sure my constituents in Vancouver Quadra, as well as yours in Vancouver South, and the constituents of Vancouver Centre, will be relieved and grateful that the Government of British Columbia has dedicated the University Endowment Lands as a provincial park, preserving them in perpetuity in a natural state.

This will be the largest urban park in the world at 850 hectares, twice the size of Stanley Park of which you and I have spoken, four times the size of Hyde Park in London, and the greatest preservation of land in a natural state in any modern city in the world.

I want to thank and congratulate the Premier of the province, and particularly the citizens of Vancouver who have lobbied so well and incessantly to preserve these beautiful lands for nature and for the future citizens of British Columbia.

HUMAN RIGHTS

FORTIETH ANNIVERSARY OF UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, last Saturday, December 10, marked the fortieth anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, an occasion commemorated by organizations and individuals around the world. Having just resigned as a Commissioner of the Nova Scotia Human Rights Commission in order to take my seat in this Chamber, I take great pleasure in bringing this important occasion to the attention of the House.

Recognition of and respect for human rights are the foundation stones upon which our democratic government is based.

Together with our human rights legislation and the principles enshrined in the Canadian Multiculturalism Act, the Universal Declaration stands as a model for appropriate relationships amongst individuals and the peoples of the world. It will continue to be a source of inspiration for national and international efforts to protect human rights and fundamental freedoms now and in the future.

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, for the first time in over a century a Prime Minister has been re-elected with a commanding majority. Congratulations on this remarkable achievement!

Mr. Speaker, the Right Hon. Brian Mulroney, one of whose Members I am proud to be, is the politician who did and will continue to steer the ship of state with firmness.

Our future looks promising thanks to the appropriate policies of this Conservative Government.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

CANADIAN WHEAT BOARD

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Government is fond of saying that the people “spoke” in the last election. Millions of Canadians have expressed serious concerns with the free trade deal. Grain farmers in Saskatchewan are particularly concerned with the lack of protection for the Canadian Wheat Board under the terms of the Free Trade Agreement.

Oral Questions

The Prairie Wheat Pools, the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, UPA and other farm organizations have repeatedly called for government action to protect the Wheat Board and other farm marketing boards. To date, the Government has not dealt with this concern.

American interests are continuing to pressure the Canadian Government to dismantle parts of the Wheat Board. Just last week at the GATT talks in Montreal, U.S. trade representative Clayton Yeutter said the U.S. administration will not rest until it gets its way with the Canadian Wheat Board.

The Canadian Wheat Board is vital to the survival of Canadian grain farmers. My colleagues and I will be expecting guarantees for the Wheat Board in the trade legislation to be presented in this House.

TRIBUTE TO MULTITEL OF QUÉBEC CITY

Mr. Marcel R. Tremblay (Québec-Est): Mr. Speaker, I am proud that my first remarks in the House at the beginning of this 34th Parliament should relate to a high technology firm located in my riding.

Indeed, Mr. Speaker, Quebec City's Multitel is the world's only maker of a data management and acquisition device for back-up battery systems. It has been able to show that a small local business can successfully break through on the markets of such countries as the United States and Europe.

This has been made possible thanks to the co-operation of young and old employees whose experience and modern know-how are a guarantee of the firm's challenging future.

I pay special tribute to Multitel President Léon Méthot, Operations Vice-President Gilles Huot, and all their colleagues who had faith in the future and who live up to the daily challenge brought on by know-how and creativity so that high technology may, for all of us, become a way of life where excellence prevails.

TRADE

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT— ELECTION COMMITMENTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister promised that his trade agreement with the United States would have no effect on our regional development programs, our social programs and our environmental programs, now or in the future.

Will the Prime Minister agree to put these election promises into the law itself? Will he do it in writing in the trade bill which is before this House?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, all these issues have been debated in front of the electorate.

The Leader of the Official Opposition has explained his point of view and the New Democratic Leader explained his position. I have defended the Government's interests; on behalf of the Minister for International Trade and of the Government, I said that the matters raised were not affected by the free trade treaty. I explained the reasons why. The treaty has not changed since then and I think that the Leader of the Official Opposition has every reason to be confident that the matters he raised will be well defended by the Government of Canada.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I could feel more confident if the Prime Minister were prepared to put in writing in the law itself the commitments he made during the election campaign.

UNITED STATES LIST OF CANADIAN PROGRAMS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, four days after the election, namely, on November 25, the United States trade representative issued a 17-page report to the Congress of the United States which lists 40 Canadian programs and administrative practices which the United States claims, according to Mr. Clayton Yeutter, violate the trade agreement. These include Canadian Wheat Board programs, financial services policies, auto-pact regulations, and broadcast rules.

Does the Prime Minister intend to change any or all of the programs which the United States says must be changed under the terms of the agreement?

While I am at it I ask the Prime Minister whether Canada has a list of improper trade practices and administrative regulations of the United States which contravene the agreement. If so, why has that document not been made public?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we will have to make our own report in due course as to whether we think the U.S. legislation complies with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, or whether there are any provisions of its laws which do not so comply. Under its legislation the United States has the same duty or obligation.

Of course the Americans can have their own opinions about various matters here in Canada as to whether they think they violate one principle or the other, or whatever. But that is not determinative of the situation. We have our own views of what complies with the Free Trade Agreement and what does not.

There is nothing unusual or alarming about the Americans having opinions that are contrary to our opinions. We will continue to hold ours and to put our own position forward.

TRAINING PROGRAMS FOR AFFECTED WORKERS

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, there may be nothing alarming in the mind of the Minister, but at least the Americans have a forthrightness to be public about what they have in mind for the implementation of this trade agreement. My point to the Minister is that if he has anything in mind—something which we begin to doubt—would he render public what the Canadian position is on American administrative practice and regulation?

Since the election there have been massive lay-offs announced by several Canadian industries—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: Come on! That is why you are over there.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The new Minister from Brampton is becoming just as sensitive as his colleague from St. John's.

Under the Prime Minister's trade deal with the United States will the Government of Canada be allowed to provide new training and retraining programs for these workers who have been displaced? More important, why has the Prime Minister been stalling on the introduction of any adjustment policy? All he has told the country so far is that we must await the de Grandpre Report. That might be months and months away. Does he not realize that the workers at Canada Packers, Northern Telecom, Pittsburgh Paints, Catelli, and Gillette have already lost their jobs? They cannot afford to wait for the Prime Minister.

• (1420)

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, what the Prime Minister and I and other members of the Government have made clear is that we have in place the Canadian Jobs Strategy which provides—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mrs. McDougall:—which provides an adaptable and flexible approach to job training both in terms of skill development and skill investment so that people can upgrade for the future.

We have also made it clear that we are committed to innovative and generous adjustment and retraining programs to assist individual Canadians under the Free Trade Agreement as under other economic concerns.

The Canadian economy is constantly adapting. That is why we as a nation have had such an excellent record in the past few years. There are, for example, 1.5 million layoffs in Canada in any typical year, where someone doesn't return. We are prepared to deal with that as we are with other things.

RISK TO CANADIAN PLANTS

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister in response to the answer provided by the Minister of Employment and Immigration. It is interesting to know why the Government has cut back by 32 per cent the actual expenditures under the Canadian Jobs Strategy program.

Oral Questions

We would like to know from the Prime Minister also whether the Government has examined the report from the Economic Council which it refers to as the Bible of the Free Trade Agreement. It states that over 24,000 Canadian plants are at risk if the trade agreement goes ahead. We would like to know if the Minister of Employment and Immigration, the Prime Minister, or anyone in the Government can tell us which plants are at risk, where they are located, how many workers will be affected, and what the Government is going to do—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Well, Mr. Speaker, it shows the insensitivity to all those workers in those 24,000 plants that the Government is proceeding on sheer and total ignorance of those facts. We want to know if the Government will set up a special committee of the Commons to examine the critical question of plant closures to make sure the victims of the trade agreement are properly protected.

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, my hon. colleague raises some very specific questions and I would like to answer him with very specific numbers.

In terms of announced investments in this country, since the beginning of the year—and I will spare him the details by industry but I would be willing to provide them to him—in Nova Scotia, $2.2 billion; in New Brunswick, $1.6 billion; in Newfoundland, $1.7 billion; in Quebec, $3.1 billion; in Ontario, $3.7 billion; in British Columbia, $511.1 million; in Alberta, $6.78 billion; in Saskatchewan, $150 million; in Manitoba, $10 million, a total of close to $20 billion of new investment, of faith in the future of this country and its job-creation potential.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy: I say only to the Minister that the workers who will be losing their jobs under this trade agreement cannot feed their families on the statistics given by that Minister.

FUTURE NEGOTIATIONS—REQUEST THAT PARLIAMENTARY COMMITTEE BE ESTABLISHED

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my supplementary question again to the Prime Minister. During the election campaign the Prime Minister gave guarantees that a number of essential Canadian programs would in no way be affected or touched by the trade agreement, such as the Wheat Board, the regional development programs, and agricultural subsidies. We now have a report from the United States Trade Office challenging many of these programs.

We have the Minister for International Trade himself saying that the agricultural transportation subsidies are on the negotiating table, and we have a new round of negotiations beginning on the question of subsidies and the harmonization of standards without any report or any examination as to what will be on the negotiating table.

Canadians do not want to be blindsided again. Will the Prime Minister agree to establishing a committee of the Commons to examine the new round of negotiations to ensure that the essential programs for Canadians will not be negotiated away this time?

• (1425)

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, every conceivable kind of assurance has been given to the Canadian people to that effect.

Mr. Allmand: Not true.

Ms. Copps: Your word is not worth the paper it is written on.

Mr. Crosbie: Certain personages opposite do not want to believe any assurance, no matter how many assurances are given.

Mr. Allmand: We had a bitter experience.

Ms. Copps: The Prime Minister's word on seniors' pensions.

Mr. Crosbie: My voice is not loud enough to shout out the Hon. Member for wherever she is from this time. The position is that Canada has been part of GATT since 1947, and there is a GATT code on subsidies that has been in effect since then. There has been no agreement yet between us and any other nation in the GATT or between any two nations in the GATT as to what constitutes a trade distorting subsidy and doubtless it will be a very long time before that is agreed.

If Canada and the United States, in the next seven years, can agree on that it will be a great precedent for the world. In the meantime we do not intend to agree to any definition that would in any way endanger regional development or other Canadian programs of that nature.

Oral Questions

MEASURES TO AID AFFECTED WORKERS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. We just heard three Ministers indicate that the Government is not prepared to bring in any innovative measures to aid workers displaced by the trade deal. The Prime Minister said on November 25, in complete contradiction to what we just heard, that the Government would be innovative and generous with adjustment and retraining program wherever and whenever they were needed.

Since we have had some 2,400 lay-offs—

Mr. Crosbie: Nonsense.

Mr. Broadbent: —that have been announced to be either directly or indirectly related to the trade deal since the election day—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Broadbent: —why is the Government not bringing forward those measures that the Prime Minister promised to aid workers who are affected now, not next spring?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the New Democratic Party prefaced his question by saying, I think I have it accurately, that three Ministers indicated that the Government was not prepared to bring in new training programs. That is not accurate.

Mr. Broadbent: Now.

Mr. Mulroney: Now the Leader of the NDP says “now”. The free trade agreement is not yet in effect. We already have various—

Ms. Copps: What about Gillette workers?

Mr. Marchi: Just wait until it is in effect.

Mr. Speaker: I think Hon. Members would agree that, with many more Members seeking the floor during Question Period, I have to try to be as fair and firm as I can. I would ask Hon. Members to keep their comments to a minimum so that their own colleagues will be able to have a chance to ask questions. The Right Hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, I was trying to indicate to the Leader of the NDP, in regard to a legitimate question that he raises about retraining and innovative and generous retraining programs, that at the moment we have some of the best in the world but clearly we can do better. We have invited Jean de Grandpre, one of Canada's most distinguished people, to chair a blue ribbon commission to examine the programs that exist around the world, to ensure that as the Free Trade Agreement comes into effect over a period of time, as the need emerges, if it does, we have in place the finest programs that exist anywhere. That was the commitment we made and that is the commitment we are going to honour.

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Prime Minister that unemployed workers who have already had their lay-off announcements cannot eat blue ribbons. They want action now.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTRODUCE NEW PROGRAMS

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Since the distinguished gentleman to whom the Prime Minister has alluded has said he will not have his report ready until quite possibly as late as June, I return to what the Prime Minister promised on November 25 when he said that whenever and wherever those programs would be needed, the Government would produce them. They are needed in Canada and they are needed now. Why do we not get such legislation before we recess for the Christmas break and not after?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the NDP says that the programs are needed now and he ties that statement to a quote of mine on November 25. That quote on November 25 was in regard to the Free Trade Agreement which will come into effect beginning on January 1. There is no correlation whatsoever between what the hon. gentleman says now and that, which is not to diminish the need for better retraining programs on behalf of employees in Canada.

My hon. friend refers to some of the job changes that have occurred. Some four million Canadians a year change jobs for various reasons. We have a very dynamic and mobile workforce. Retraining will always be a great challenge for the federal and the provincial Governments.

What my hon. friend should, I think, remember, is that the record of 1.3 million new jobs that have been created over the last four years, leading the industrialized world, can and will be maintained with the dynamic and modern approaches that we have adopted with the Free Trade Agreement.

Oral Questions

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, the new jobs that have been created, and the Prime Minister knows this, do not directly affect the people who are laid off at Gillette, Catelli, Pittsburgh Paint or any other industry that is making decisions in the context of free trade. That is the reality and the Prime Minister knows it.

GOVERNMENT PRIORITIES

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is very direct. The Government has expressed its intention to adjourn the House till the spring, but the workers who have lost their jobs have lost them recently. Why does the Conservative Government give priority to giving time off to its members rather than dealing with the layoffs? Is that Tory justice?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, major programs have been established throughout the country to assist workers laid off because of technological changes. It is a fact of life in industrialized societies and that situation is not about to change, unfortunately. A responsible government must therefore provide the affected workers with the most generous programs possible. That is what we have done and will continue to do.

My hon. friend brings up some problems with the Gillette company, which is a real problem. But he does not mention the $500 million investment in the Trois-Rivières region in the aluminum sector, which is going to create hundreds of jobs. He does not mention the hundreds of jobs created at National Sea Products in Lunenburg and at Hearn Harbour Terminals in Windsor.

[English]

Du Pont Canada plans to double its capital spending for 1989 to $156 million. There will be 480 new jobs at a new Cargill Limited slaughter house in High River, Alberta. There are 90 new jobs at Quaker Oats, Campbell Soup, et cetera.

[Translation]

Of course, jobs are lost regularly as a result of technological change. Many more new jobs are created because of the new climate of cooperation with the provinces fostered by this Government.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORT

CANADA-NOVA SCOTIA DEVELOPMENT FUND

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns the Report of the Auditor General. The Auditor General has chronicled case after case of questionable projects approved under the Canada-Nova Scotia offshore Development Fund. Of the $130 million approved to date, the Auditor General concludes that fully $75 million worth of projects is questionable as to their eligibility under the fund.

Will the Prime Minister now give this House and the people of Nova Scotia his assurance that a full investigation will be undertaken and, where evidence of misappropriation is found, that the Government of Canada will replenish the fund for the amounts spent which did not meet program criteria?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, for four years, this Government has operated on the basic premise that the provinces are partners with the Canadian Government in developing policies within their jurisdiction, and it intends to maintain this attitude in the present mandate.

In this spirit, an accord was signed between the Governments of Canada and of Nova Scotia to give this province the means to develop its infrastructure when offshore development occurs. The Government of Nova Scotia did what it was entitled to do, namely present us with its priorities for developing its own territory, and this Government recognizes its responsibility and treats Nova Scotia as a full partner, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

DARTMOUTH SEWAGE SYSTEM PROJECT

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Prime Minister because that answer is simply unacceptable.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacDonald (Dartmouth): The federal Minister has the responsibility to sign off on each and every one of those projects. My supplementary question deals with a specific project. I wish to know under what specific program criteria did the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources approve $2.3 million for the construction of a sewage system for Portland Estates, a private residential development in Dartmouth.

Is every private development in Nova Scotia now eligible for such funding, or has this particular project qualified solely on the basis of the developer's personal friendship with the Conservative Government of Nova Scotia?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the development of Nova Scotia's territory is primarily a responsibility of the Government of Nova Scotia. With this in mind, this Government drafted and approved . . . and Parliament approved the legislation and funds required for the development of these programs. We recognize the responsibility of the Government of Nova Scotia, and we are particularly proud that Government of Canada money was spent for the development of Nova Scotia's territory.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—REQUEST TRAFFIC BE REDIRECTED TO HAMILTON

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. Ordinarily this is a wonderful time of year for Canadians. Unfortunately, many Canadians are finding themselves frustrated and harassed by the fiasco at Pearson International Airport in Toronto, frustrated by lengthy delays, congested airways, and real danger to lives. In view of the fact that there is a viable, under-used and highly accessible airport at Hamilton, will the Minister of Transport finally take immediate action to improve the situation and redirect traffic to the Hamilton airport, or will it take a catastrophe before the Government acts?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member for Hamilton West well knows, action was taken at Pearson International Airport on Friday when we started to control the traffic flow through Pearson by the number of flights per hour. That action has been taken. Traffic moved well yesterday and it moved well today. It will continue to move over the Christmas season to make sure that Canadians will be able to travel home with the least amount of delay possible.

REQUEST FOR ACTION

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, interestingly enough, another Hon. Member from the Hamilton area on the government side of the House has indicated that he cannot condone his own junior Minister's statements of Friday.

I might point out to the junior Minister that three years ago the Liberal Party pleaded that the Government designate Hamilton airport as an under-used airport. Three years have passed. Would the Minister of Transport redirect air traffic from a paralysed Pearson to the under-used, viable Hamilton airport immediately?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the traffic through Pearson International Airport is not paralysed at this time and it is flowing.

● (1440)

As far as the Hamilton Airport is concerned we have been working over the last four years with the people there to make sure the airport is utilized.

Ms. Copps: That is a farce.

Mrs. Martin: We now have flights in and out of Hamilton.

An Hon. Member: Once a week.

Mrs. Martin: A little more than one a week, Sir. You should try it some time. Hamilton, certainly, will be part of the over-all study as we look at the medium and long-term problems within the area and as we look at the management of the airspace over southwestern Ontario.

TRADE

UNITED STATES TARIFF ON CANADIAN SHAKES AND SHINGLES

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Last week in a move that will be devastating to the shakes and shingles industry in British Columbia, U.S. President Reagan renailed the industry with a punishing 20 per cent tariff.

Does the Prime Minister recognize the seriousness of this tariff and does he intend to capitulate to this attack, or will he take action on behalf of the workers, the owners, and their families?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the free trade agreement was not in effect when—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Read the agreement.

Mr. Crosbie: I try to answer in a mild fashion, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: If I might just start my reply again. Unfortunately, in 1986 when this matter arose, the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement was not in effect. If it had been in effect the shakes and shingles decision taken in the United States could not have occurred in the form—

An Hon. Member: You are choking.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the Minister could finish his answer.

Mr. Crosbie: This is my first glass of water in 20 years, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I agree with the Hon. Member that this is a deplorable decision. It was a decision that is damaging to both the Canadian and the U.S. industries, and it is a great pity that President Reagan apparently was not advised so that he did away with the shakes and shingles action as he could have done. He did, however, reduce, as the Hon. Member knows, the amount of the additional duties that are being levied. I suppose we should be thankful for that, but this decision is harmful to the industries in both countries.

Ms. Langan: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the House that loss of jobs in the shakes and shingles industry is not a laughing matter.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Langan: I would thank Mr. Crosbie for his choking response.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Is the Prime Minister rushing through the business of this House so that we can take a Christmas holiday while families in British Columbia, in Mission—Coquitlam in particular—

Mr. Lewis: Stop ringing the bells.

Mrs. Langan: —are facing a future of unemployment? Will the Prime Minister stand up for those people, the workers in the industry, on this issue?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I rather resent the suggestion that I made a joking reply to the plight of the shakes and shingle workers. I am having difficulty with my voice because I am suffering from a cold as a result of struggling at GATT last week with 100 nations.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: We have taken action to protect the jobs of Canadians by refusing to allow cedar logs, blocks, bolts, planks and short boards to be exported to the United States. We issued an export prohibition. That was challenged in the courts. We were successful and that prohibition is now in effect. We are doing everything we can to preserve the jobs of Canadian workers.

We do not find this amusing, and I am not amused by the Hon. Member's suggestion that I took this matter lightly. We have done everything possible within Canadian law to ameliorate the effects of the action taken in the United States.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—HIRING OF TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, being a fellow Newfoundlander I have some compassion for the Member for St. John's West. I know that he is screeched out—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Tobin: It is that time of the year. We heard that he was in a sing-along in St. John's last week.

Oral Questions

Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. We have just witnessed the spectacle of a Minister of Transport, a member of this Government for the last four years, stand and tell the House that we finally began to deal with the problem at Pearson last Friday.

An Hon. Member: Question.

Mr. Tobin: Pearson is inefficient, it is frustrating for passengers, and Pearson International Airport is dangerous.

Beyond these bland assurances, what measures are being taken by the Government to hire and train additional air traffic controllers and to make the system safe so that Canadians travelling during this holiday period and in the months ahead know that Canadian airways are safe?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, as I answered earlier questions in the House today, action has been taken to ensure that traffic flows safely and more effectively through the airport at Toronto. Part of the problem that we have with some of the shortages go back to the Auditor General's Report under the former Government which said that we had—

Ms. Copps: You have had four years.

Mrs. Martin: Four years of deregulation. Regulatory reform has brought forth far more traffic at Pearson International Airport. Traffic has escalated and we are working to handle it. We will be bringing more air traffic controllers on-stream next year to help. We are handling the traffic that will be going through over the holiday season. Safety has always been number one and will continue to be number one at Pearson International.

GOVERNMENT MEASURES

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, the Auditor General's Report in 1984, as the Minister started to say but thought better of, said there were insufficient air traffic controllers in Canada. The Standing Committee on Transport of the House of Commons said at the time of the introduction of deregulation, four years ago, first that we must have more air traffic controllers. The Government in 1984 actually laid off air traffic controllers.

The current situation is dangerous. It is not just frustrating. It is dangerous. I want to ask the Minister of Transport to quit beating around the bush and tell Canadians and Members of this House what concrete measures the Government has taken concerning our air transportation system after the Government has botched it through four years of inaction.

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, action has been taken to make sure that traffic flows safely through Pearson over the Christmas holiday period so that travellers can get home for the holidays.

Meetings will be held in January in Toronto with all the interested parties. As far as the medium and long-term plans for the airport are concerned, number one is safety and will continue to be for this Government as far as air traffic flow is concerned.

FISHERIES

EEC NORTH ATLANTIC FISHING QUOTAS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, the EEC yesterday unilaterally set its own 1989 fishing quotas off the East Coast of Canada 12 times higher than those allowed by the North Atlantic Fisheries Organization. A spokesman for the Government claimed this morning, "There is not enough fish in the entire north Atlantic to satisfy that EEC quota".

Does the Government realize that 84,000 tonnes of the 160,000 tonnes of cod in that unilateral declaration will be from the nose of the Grand Banks where, Mr. Speaker, as you know, a moratorium exists on fishing activity to help rebuild the stocks so that they can come ashore and employ our people in our fish plants?

What does the Government intend to do about this further destruction of our fishing resource by foreign nations?

• (1450)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, we are delighted to know that the Hon. Member can distinguish the nose from the tail of the Grand Banks.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Siddon: The Hon. Member raises a very serious issue. It is one that Ministers, provincially and federally, have been wrestling with for the last two years, and which has led to partial results.

The point that the Hon. Member raises is the over-fishing beyond Canada's economic jurisdiction on the common property stocks of the Grand Banks. That overfishing is being pursued by the European nations, especially Spain and Portugal, contrary to the rules of the International Northwest Atlantic Fisheries Organization which sets the quotas and administers these stocks. Canada deeply regrets this outrageous abuse of these resources.

This very day I am meeting with the Atlantic Fisheries Ministers to decide how we might escalate the initiatives we have set out under a plan to end this flagrant violation of all good conservation principles. We expect to take further actions, over and above those which we have taken to deny port privileges and quotas in Canadian waters, to end this wasteful abuse of our fish resources.

ALCOHOL TARIFFS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, of course I can distinguish between the nose and the tail. I wish to tell the Hon. Minister that the EEC is pillaging our fishery on the nose of the Grand Banks, and they allow the U.S. to fish unchecked on the tail of the Grand Banks, so we are getting it at both ends.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker: I want to ask the Minister the following question. Does the Government not realize that Canada has lost respect internationally because we do not have the will to protect our fishing resources?

Will the Government today instruct the negotiators who are meeting with the EEC this afternoon on wine, beer, and spirits to tell the EEC that we will talk about tariffs on their booze when they cut their quotas on our fish?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows full well the consequences of linking a fisheries management issue with another trade issue.

The Hon. Member also knows full well that the Government has taken strong measures to end the European abuse of our fish stocks within the Canadian 200-mile zone, but the fish stocks in question are beyond Canada's sovereign jurisdiction from a management perspective.

The Hon. Member knows that we have denied port privileges, we have ended over the side sales, and we have denied any quotas of any fish in Canadian waters to these wayward European nations, and we will continue to raise the pressure in order to end these very regrettable practices by the European Community.

AGRICULTURE

DROUGHT AID PROGRAM

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture. The Minister will recall that only 10 days before the election date the Government announced a drought aid program for farmers which was supposed to top up crop insurance by 10 per cent, and cost the Government some $850 million.

Since the Government's delay in making that announcement was supposed to have been in order to make certain that the program would be ready to implement immediately, can the Minister explain why at this date there is still no program, why the drought zones have not been defined, and why the provincial Premiers on the Prairies are now being asked to contribute money to the program, money which was supposed to have already been committed by the federal Government?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I regret that the Hon. Member takes exception to the fact that we have announced a program to support the farmers in a serious drought situation.

Our record of support for the farmers, whether it was for drought, grasshoppers, depressed prices, you-name-it, has been pretty good; in fact, second to none.

We have made the commitment and we will deliver.

GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. Given that prairie Conservatives who were defeated by the farmers on the Prairies have been stating after their defeat that this means that the region will no longer get any money, can the Minister tell us whether that is in fact his Government's policy? If so, is this the reason why it has not provided the drought program to the dried out prairie farmers as promised during the election?

Oral Questions

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, it is one thing to malign a well-intentioned program during the course of an election campaign, and the NDP are experts at that. It is another thing to malign the program now that the election is over. The Hon. Member does not have to worry. His farmers will be looked after.

Mr. Althouse: The Premiers are maligning you.

Mr. Mazankowski: We go back to the days when we announced the first billion dollar deficiency payment. The Leader of the NDP said that it was borrowed money, then it was advance money, and then he was concerned about whether it was new money or old money. This money will be put on the table and the farmers will receive it as was outlined.

NATIVE PEOPLES

CONSTRUCTION OF THREE HOUSES IN CLOVA— GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of State (Housing).

The Quebec Regional Office of the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation has decided not to press for the construction of three homes in Clova this year under the native demonstration program, by citing the remoteness of that community located in Quebec's heartland.

Here is my question: Can the Minister assure the House that the Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation will immediately review that decision so that native people in Clova can get warm and comfortable homes in 1989, despite that community's remoteness?

[English]

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, first I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question. I can advise him that the CMHC officials have informed me that the municipality of Clova will be in a very good position to receive its housing under the Rural and Native Housing Program in 1989.

FISHERIES

QUOTAS ESTABLISHED BY EUROPEAN ECONOMIC COMMUNITY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans, and deals with the matter raised earlier of the quotas established by the European Economic Community.

Mr. Speaker, the Minister is no doubt aware that Eastern Canada's fishing industry already suffers from insufficient resources, especially in northeastern New Brunswick. Here is the question I must ask you today on behalf of plant workers and producers and the whole Eastern Canada's fishing industry: What steps are you expecting to take to protect the fishing industry's interests, in view of the quotas that have been set at twelve times the level recommended by NAFO?

[English]

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): First I would like to welcome my colleague, the former Minister of Fisheries for New Brunswick, to the House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Siddon: I have appreciated his helpful advice and that of the provincial Ministers of Fisheries for the five Atlantic provinces on such questions during the past three years.

Today I am meeting with the same Ministers to deal with the question of shortage of quotas within the Canadian 200-mile economic zone. We hope to have some progress to report which will be beneficial to the fishery of Atlantic Canada.

On the question of quotas beyond Canada's economic jurisdiction, we must resort to diplomatic initiatives and sanctions such as the denial of port privileges. Together with my colleagues we will continue to search for more effective ways of stopping this blatant abuse of fish stocks beyond Canada's economic jurisdiction.

CANADIAN POSITION

Mr. Douglas Young (Gloucester): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the same Minister. I recognize that the Minister stated he is meeting with eastern Canadian Fisheries Ministers. Can the Minister advise us when the Government will meet with the representatives of the European nations? What exactly will the Government of Canada put forward in terms of how it sees the situation of overfishing and the overlap that will exist if this policy is pursued?

Finally, will the Minister advise what measures Canada will put forward on the basis of retaliation? We have talked about the closure of ports. Does the Minister have any other suggestions to make to our colleagues in the European nations with respect to possible Canadian retaliation?

● (1500)

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): The Hon. Member, as a former Minister, knows that, whatever measures we contemplate putting forward, we do not put them forward in the House of Commons until such time as the deliberations have been completed.

At this stage I am not prepared to speculate as to what additional measures may be taken. I can tell the Hon. Member that the provincial Ministers from Atlantic Canada, together with their federal counterparts, now consider that we will probably have to raise this matter to the diplomatic level in a major way, which is a course of action that I am contemplating at the present time.

Mr. Speaker: I must advise Hon. Members that the time for Question Period has expired.

Privilege—Mr. Thacker

PRIVILEGE

TRAFFIC JAM ON PARLIAMENTARY PRECINCTS

Mr. Speaker: I wish to put the following motion before all Members, by unanimous consent. Mr. Thacker, seconded by Mr. Gauthier, moves:

That the question of transporting Members of Parliament to and from the buildings within the precincts of Parliament be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

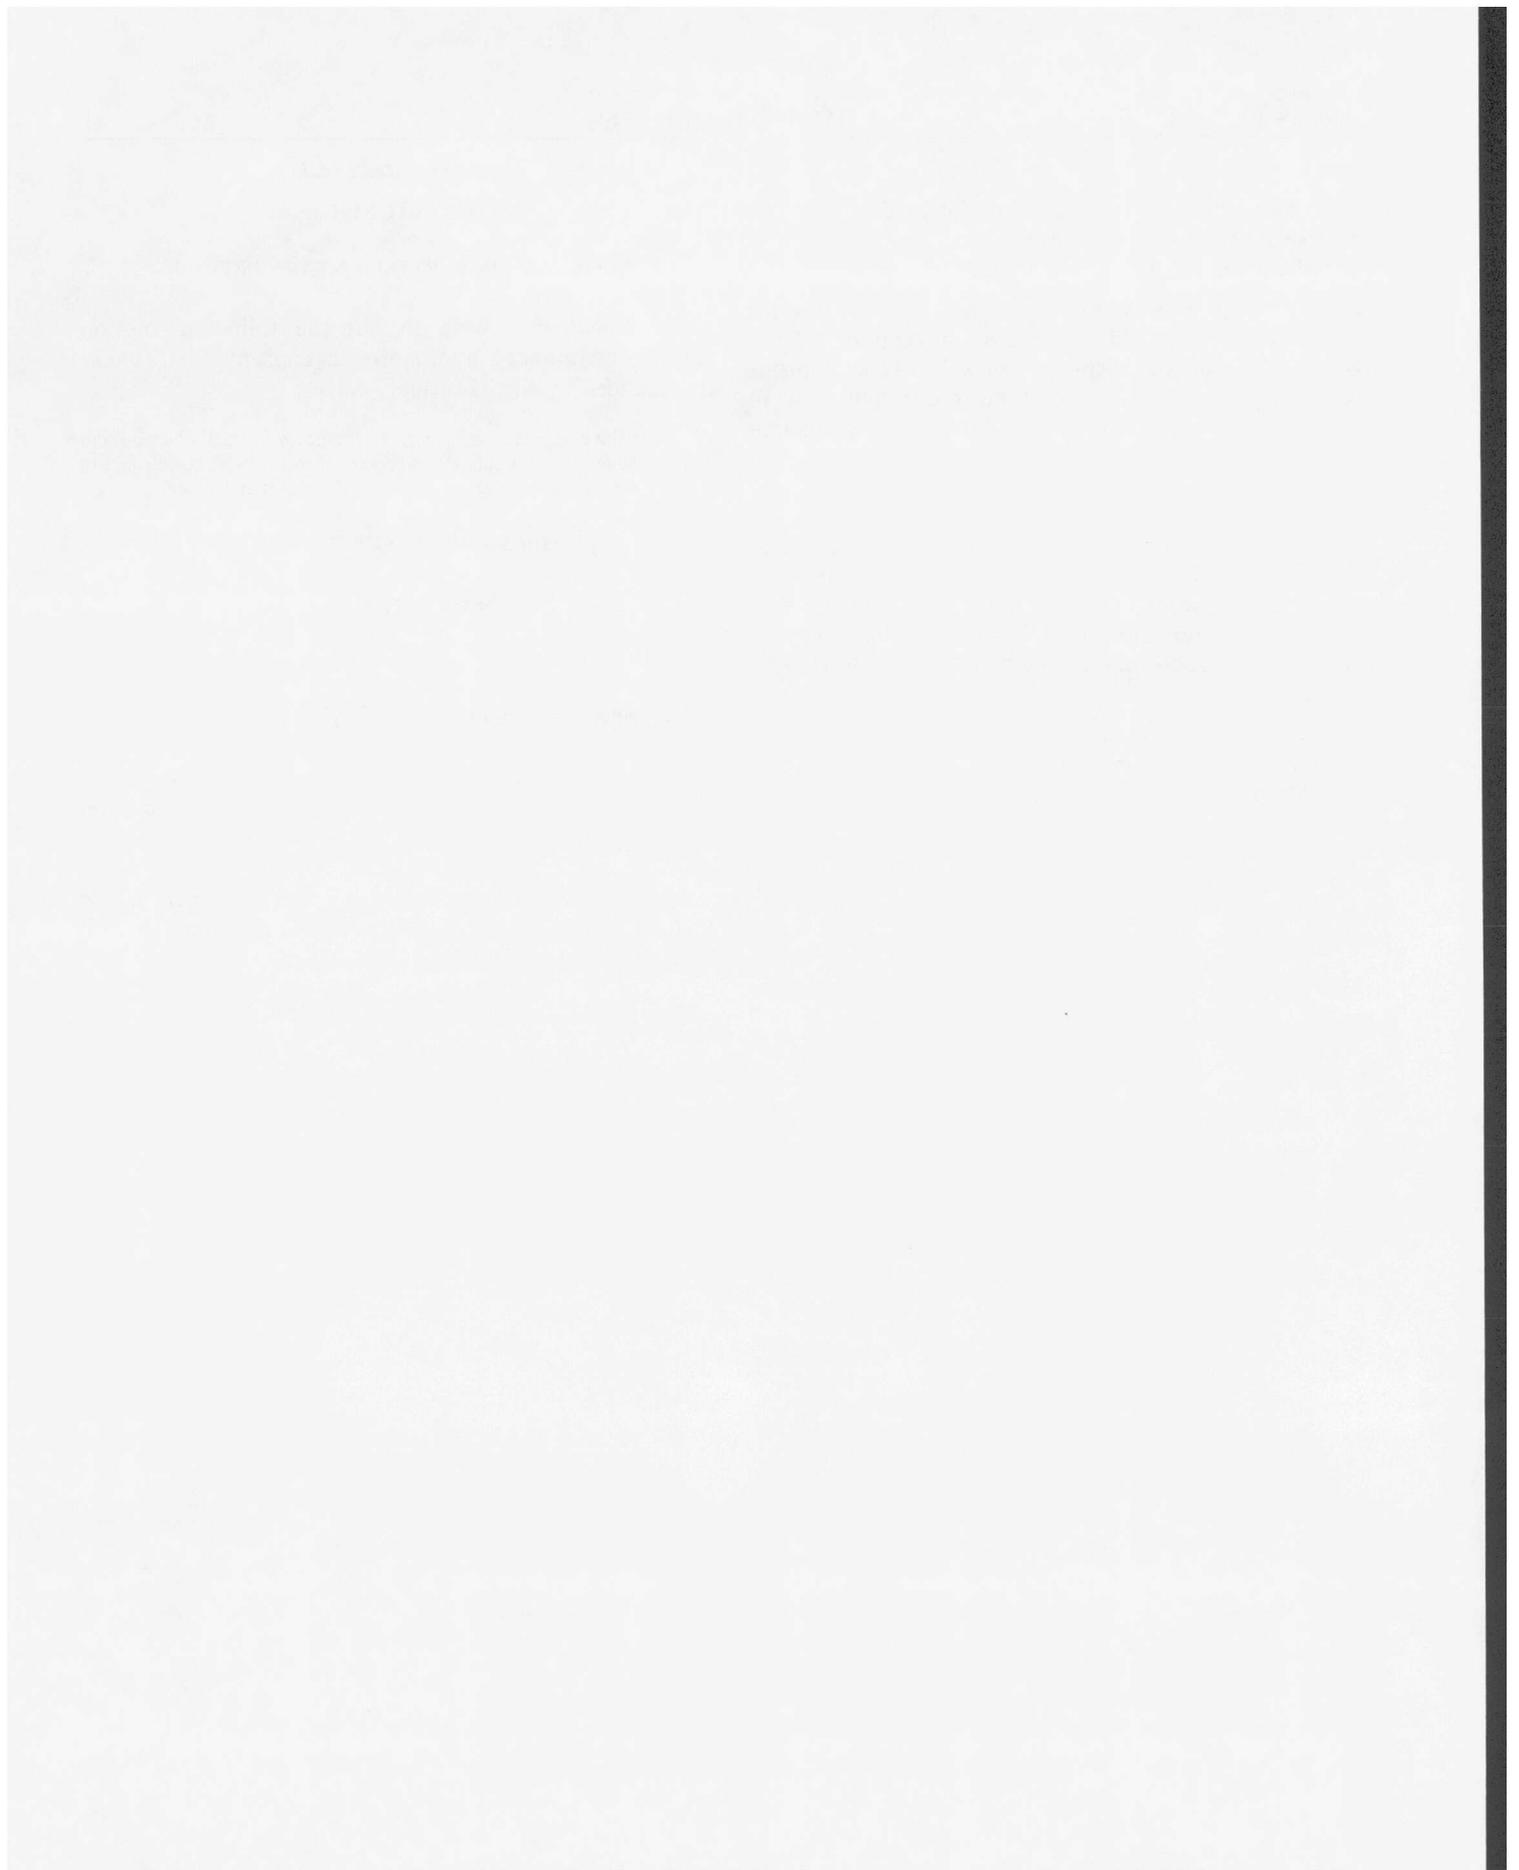

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the Day.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, under the rules of the House, it is not possible to proceed with further business at this time, without consent.

Mr. Speaker: There being no business before the House, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

THE FRANCHISE

VOTER REGISTRATION—CALL FOR AMENDMENT OF LEGISLATION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, the sound of disappointment, anger, and even despair on the part of citizens who discovered to their dismay that they were not empowered to vote on election day because the deadline for being placed on the voters' list had expired still rings in my ears.

Thousands and thousands of voters across Canada could not exercise their right to vote because they were not on the list. It is on behalf of each and all who were disenfranchised on November 21 that I urge the Government, with the co-operation of all parliamentarians, to change the Canada Elections Act to provide for registration up to and including polling day regardless of whether one lives in rural or urban Canada.

Let us make sure that Canadian citizens will never again be denied the right to vote. Our fine democratic system will thus be made stronger and fair to everybody in rural as well as in urban Canada.

FREE TRADE

IMPORTANCE OF LEGISLATION

Mr. Nic Leblanc (Longueuil): Three years ago, Mr. Speaker, the McDonald report came out strongly in favour of freer trade relations with the United States.

Today's high technology means that we need more time and money to build up our industrial concerns, so it follows that they must seek wider and longer-term markets.

Through the Liberal non-elected majority in the Senate the Liberal Official Opposition blocked our free trade initiative and forced us to call an election on the issue.

Mr. Speaker, the people gave us a clear mandate. Liberals and New Democrats, for heaven's sake show respect for democracy and the choice made by Canadians, let this House work in peace and dignity for the well being of Canadians!

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

INCREASED BUSINESS INVESTMENT

Mr. Girve Fretz (Erie): Mr. Speaker, the socialists and the Official Opposition are quick to condemn the Free Trade Agreement. They are reluctant to mention the great news of plant openings and expansions throughout Canada. Here are some examples. Campbell Soups will spend $50 million; Cargill, $50 to $400 million; General Foods, approximately $5 million; Nestle, $38 million; Pillsbury, approximately $12 million; Quaker Oats, $15 million; and Unilever, $5 to $15 million. There is more, Mr. Speaker.

In the east, Lunenburg, Nova Scotia, National Sea Products will spend $2 million; on the Prairies, High Water, Alberta, there is the building of a $50 million slaughter house. Such an operation will lead to significant export sales.

In the west, the president of Prudential Bache Securities Canada in a speech reported on December 1, said:

Investment in Canada from industrialized Asian countries is likely to increase significantly because of the Free Trade Agreement.

S. O. 31

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL POST OFFICE CLOSURES

Mr. Len Taylor (The Battlefords—Meadow Lake): Mr. Speaker, Canada Post is in the process of closing rural post offices including one in Mont Nebo, a rural community in the Battlefords—Meadow Lake constituency. In doing so it is moving the services offered to private sector contractors, corner stores, cafés, and even grain elevators.

During the past year the communities affected and the contractors involved have found the practice unsatisfactory and inadequate. One year ago the organization, Rural Dignity, was formed to protect the rights of people living in rural Canada from the uncaring attitudes of Canada Post.

I want to pay tribute to Rural Dignity today as it celebrates its first anniversary, and again request that the Minister responsible for the Post Office ask Canada Post to review its plan of operations, to commit itself to a system of strong post offices in rural Canada, and to begin the process of finding ways to improve the income side of Canada Post rather than trying to remove the postal deficit by cutting back on the delivery of services to Canadians who live in the rural areas of our country.

VICTIMS OF ARMENIAN EARTHQUAKE

Mrs. Nicole Roy-Arcelin (Ahuntsic): Mr. Speaker, as the newly elected Member for the beautiful riding of Ahuntsic I want to thank all my constituents who voted for progress and the future, namely for the Progressive Conservative Party. Their democratic action shows that they did understand our message in support of elderly people, women and ethnic minorities whose future is directly tied to the early passage of the free trade legislation.

Though my election is a source of joy for the residents of Ahuntsic who voted for me, Mr. Speaker, some of my constituents are now experiencing infinite sadness. I am referring to Canadians of Armenian ancestry who are living through yet another tragedy in their eventful history. I share their sorrow and thank my Government for rushing to their help. Human solidarity did not require anything less than that.

EARTHQUAKE IN ARMENIA—FORWARDING OF AID

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, human solidarity is fine as far as it goes, and attention-getting announcements concerning the tragic events in Armenia may be welcomed, but I think action is needed as well.

Last Friday the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) announced a $5 million donation to help the Armenian victims, but I am very disappointed by the fact that the Canadian Red Cross which is expected to deliver medical and other supplies to the Armenian people has yet to be told whether funds will be available to buy medical supplies.

[English]

I certainly commend the Government for the $5 million assistance to the Armenian people. I would suggest, however, that, as well as making the announcement, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should tell the Canadian Red Cross so it can go ahead immediately to secure the necessary medicine, dialysis machines and other machines. Five days have elapsed since the Prime Minister made his announcement. There has been no money forthcoming to the Red Cross. I ask the Government to act in the most expeditious way to address this necessary issue.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CHARLES NG—APPEAL AGAINST EXTRADITION RULING

Mr. Bill Domm (Peterborough): Mr. Speaker, the case of Charles Ng has brought to light problems in our system for dealing with fugitives who come to Canada seeking refuge from foreign authorities.

The Alberta Court of Queen's Bench has ruled there is sufficient evidence to extradite Ng from Canada to face 19 charges in California, 12 for capital murder. Ng has appealed this decision by way of a habeus corpus application. He has a further appeal to the Alberta Court of Appeal, along with other legal manoeuvres which are available to him.

Ng not only has our appeal process to exhaust but there is also the possibility that the Minister might refuse extradition because of Article 6 of the Canada-U.S. Extradition Treaty of 1976 which provides Canada with the right to refuse the surrender of fugitives who face the death penalty.

We must ensure that, in our attempt to uphold justice, Canada does not become the destination for desperate fugitives attempting to seek a safe haven here.

AIRPORTS

HAMILTON AIRPORT—CALL FOR GREATER UTILIZATION

Mr. Geoff Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament for Hamilton Airport, my attempts over the years to encourage the Government of Canada to re-route traffic to Mount Hope have been well known to successive Ministers of Transport.

• (1410)

More recently, with the crisis at Toronto International Airport, I have made public statements in my community, and privately pleaded with the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin), to regard Hamilton as Toronto's third terminal for the time being. I am delighted to see another Hamilton Member of Parliament playing catch-up and offering support in the House yesterday.

We are talking about a $52 million federal government investment. It is an hour by ground transportation from the tarmac at Mount Hope to the Royal York Hotel.

Our colleagues from Metro and the Peninsula are asking what is going on. Hamilton Airport is the best kept secret in southern Ontario.

I know the Transport Canada policy of not ordering airlines to fly into certain airports. But I am asking the Government to make an exception and make Hamilton Airport fly.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

SPECIAL LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS ADVOCATED

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, one thing that was absolutely clear in the recent election was the overwhelming support by Canadians for special adjustment programs for those hurt by the Free Trade Agreement. This was the case even among those who supported the agreement.

Earlier this year every provincial Premier requested special adjustment programs. The Economic Council and the Macdonald Commission made similar recommendations.

No one accepts the Government's response that the Canadian Jobs Strategy is adequate for free trade adjustment or that we should wait for the de Grandpre Commission next summer. Since 1984 employment and training programs have been cut by 32 per cent from $2.2 billion in 1984 to $1.5 billion in 1988. Right now thousands of Canadians cannot get into training and retraining programs and there is a shortage of skilled workers in some parts of Canada.

Already many Canadians have been hurt by the Free Trade Agreement. Gillette workers in Montreal are a good example. We absolutely need special adjustment programs for free trade disruption. When will the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) start listening to Canadians?

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

INCREASED BUSINESS INVESTMENT

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, the Opposition is determined to focus solely on any business closure, attributing all to the Free Trade Agreement.

But there is a whole lot of good news out there and once again the burden of telling the whole story falls upon the shoulders of government Members.

For example, a recent announcement by Dupont Canada, with a plant in my constituency of Sarnia—Lambton, commits a 50 per cent increase in capital spending in 1989 as a result of the opportunities the company is ready to seize under the Free Trade Agreement.

This means an additional 375 person-years of external employment in engineering, 600 person-years in field construction, and 600 person-years in equipment fabrication. These jobs are in addition to ongoing new job creation inside Dupont.

Oral questions

I want to let all Canadians know that the Free Trade Agreement will bring us new opportunities, new jobs, and a new and better future in Canada.

TAXATIONCORPORATE TAX SYSTEM

Mr. Simon de Jong (Regina—Qu'Appelle): Mr. Speaker, the Government has once again seriously misled the Canadian people. Last year the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) promised tax fairness under his tax reform. He promised that average Canadians would get a tax break and corporate taxes would be increased. Figures released by his Department last week show the opposite has occurred.

Since April of this year individuals' share of the tax burden has increased 11 per cent to $26.8 billion while corporate income tax revenues had actually decreased by 10 per cent to $4.7 billion. So much for tax fairness and the closing of corporate loopholes!

Before the Minister attempts to reduce his deficit, let me advise him to look at his corporate friends and the tax rip-offs right under his nose. Canadians will not stand for paying more taxes while rich and large corporations take advantage of a rotten tax system.

CANALSWELLAND CANAL—OPPOSITION TO SUGGESTED SALE OF CANAL LANDS

Mr. Gilbert Parent (Welland—St. Catharines—Thorald): Mr. Speaker, the Welland Canal Parkway Commission came into being in the early 1980s to develop the use of the old Welland Canal proper and the lands adjacent to the water itself.

Over the years a succession of board members, led by Mr. Willard Wright, the first Canal Commission Chairman, and Mr. Andy Carse, the present Chairman, strove to carry out this mandate.

It has been brought to my attention that the commission members will receive a report in the very near future that suggests that the canal lands, should be sold to developers so that condominiums and/or apartments can be built. Further, it is suggested that these developers be sold this land right down to the water's edge.

I am categorically opposed to the sale of even as much as one square foot of the canal lands, and I respectfully advise the House that I will be keeping surveillance on these developments and will be keeping my constituents fully informed of any attempts to sell these lands.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADEUNITED STATES TARIFF ON CANADIAN SHAKES AND SHINGLES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, in the very first Question Period of this new Parliament, as reported at page 37 of Hansard, the Minister for International Trade said that it was "a great pity", using his words, that President Reagan was not advised to do away with the red cedar shakes and shingles tariff. Why did the Prime Minister not advise President Reagan directly to do away with that tariff?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. President—Mr. Speaker—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Ms. Copps: Mr. President, that is right.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Here we go.

Mr. Crosbie: Of course that is French for Mr. Speaker.

The Prime Minister and other members of the Government made vigorous representations to the United States authorities, including by letter to Mr. Yeutter and to the President himself. We made strong representations in connection with the shakes and shingles issue, as did our Ambassador in Washington, as one would expect. Of course, there was some small improvement made in connection with that matter by the President.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): "Yes sir, Mr. President!"

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

DECISION MADE BY UNITED STATES PRESIDENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Minister for International Trade also said yesterday that the decision to impose a tariff on shakes and shingles could not have occurred under the trade deal signed by the Prime Minister. That statement is patently ridiculous. Section 301 of the agreement allows for just such tariffs.

If the Minister for International Trade were to be right, why did he not call upon the Prime Minister to explain why President Reagan did not eliminate that tariff completely from 35 per cent down to zero, when he made his decision this month? Putting the question to the Prime Minister again, does he have a commitment from the President that on January 1 that tariff will be eliminated?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, even the Leader of the Opposition has to concede that the shakes and shingles matter is entirely unconnected to the Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: It occurred in 1986 before there was a free trade agreement executed and signed. The hon. gentleman's question would have a lot more value if he were more supportive of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement, and in fact more supportive of a positive policy toward the United States of America rather than campaigning up and down the country, criticizing the United States of America for every conceivable thing he could think of.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I just want to remind the hon. gentleman that I am elected to the Parliament of Canada, not to the Congress of the United States.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROVISIONS OF CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this action of the President proves what we have been saying all along, namely, that under Article 1902 and Article 1904 of the agreement signed by the Prime Minister, to be implemented by legislation in this House, all the remedies enjoyed by the United States by way of countervail, by way of duty, by way of quota, surtax and all those remedies, are incorporated into this agreement and are still available to the American industries affected. Therefore, I ask the Minister to come clean and admit that this agreement changed nothing for Canada in terms of our exports to the United States.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is interesting to see the Leader of the Opposition ask a British Columbia question for a change. I suppose he is following the precedent that was set yesterday.

With reference to the FTA, had it been in effect the steps taken by the United States to counteract Canada's exports in the shakes and shingles matter could not have been taken. The FTA would have prevented that. In addition, we would have had a different dispute settlement regime in effect and therefore the kinds of actions taken by the President of the United States and the administration could not have occurred.

I do not have time in Question Period to go into all the details as to just what way the results would have been different but, believe me, this shakes and shingles problem would not have arisen in this form under the Free Trade Agreement.

NORTHERN TELECOM—QUERY MEASURES GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO TAKE TO AVOID CLOSURE OF AYLMER PLANT

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, when the Prime Minister visited the Quebec side of the Ottawa Valley on November 8, he took the opportunity to call me a hypocrite because I had left the Government of Quebec, which was for free trade, and joined the Liberal Party of Canada, of which I am very proud, because it was against free trade.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to tell the Prime Minister that I have always been in favour of freer trade, but not for the Mulroney-Reagan Agreement.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question now.

Mr. Rocheleau: My question, Mr. Speaker, is for the Prime Minister and concerns the Northern Telecom plant in Aylmer, in my riding, which will close its doors in September 1989. One may wonder whether the Government was not already aware of it.

I would like the Prime Minister to tell me what his Government intends to do to prevent the Aylmer plant from closing down, since it is the principal industry, and what measures he intends to take to protect the workers.

[English]

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I know Hon. Members would want to be sure that, with a larger Opposition, all of their colleagues can get a chance to ask questions. The Hon. Minister.

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would first of all like to tell you that we have been in touch with Northern Telecom and that in our opinion, there is absolutely no connection between the proposals concerning the Free Trade Treaty that are before this House and the rationalization which the company must do because of increasingly competitive world markets in order to provide Canadians jobs, to ensure that the company remains viable and one of the world leaders in its field.

We are satisfied that the company is setting up adjustment programs for its employees so that they can relocate and retrain, as much as possible.

QUERY WHETHER FEDERAL GOVERNMENT INTENDS TO PROVIDE FUNDS FOR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Gilles Rocheleau (Hull—Aylmer): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is still for the Prime Minister. One of the essential conditions of the Government of Quebec was that the federal Government recognize the need for adjustment programs for worker retraining.

That being so, does the federal Government intend to fund the adjustment programs?

[English]

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, one of the things that I think is important to note is that Northern Telecom is providing some considerable retraining assistance of its own. My Department stands by, as it always does, to assist workers in any affected area, whatever the reasons for layoffs.

Northern Telecom has been very sensitive to the needs of its employees. It has provided a $2.5 million fund to retrain its workers, to provide the kind of training that will ensure that within other industries in the area its employees will be fully competitive in their ability to get new jobs.

In addition, the industrial adjustment services are ready to stand by in case there are further needs, and my colleague, the Minister of Labour, and members of my staff have met with them. Let me say that they have been very successful in the past in retraining and upgrading employees that have had a problem, and I think we will wait and see if this program works.

INDUSTRY

NORTHER TELECOM—ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF AYLMEER PLANT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say to the Hon. Minister that the workers affected do not want to stand around and wait to see if it works. They want something that works right now.

On the same subject, the Minister will probably know that the union representing the workers affected at Northern Telecom has very strong reasons to believe, reasons which it has mentioned publicly, that the production jobs affected in Aylmer will be transferred to Atlanta, Georgia, where they are already producing a similar product for export into the Canadian market.

I want to ask the Minister, considering that Northern Telecom has a quasi-monopoly market guaranteed for its products in Canada and that it has already received from the federal Government, that is from Canadian taxpayers, millions of dollars in grants and assistance, does the Canadian Government simply intend to stand back and let these jobs be transferred to the U.S., or will the Government intervene directly to keep those jobs in Canada where they belong?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, first of all, Northern Telecom, as my colleague has said, is a globally competitive company and I think its employees are very proud of its record of job creation in Canada as well as around the world, and it intends to remain competitive.

Let me say as well in terms of the restructuring the company is doing that there will be more job reductions in the United States than there will be in Canada, so I think the Leader of the NDP should get his facts straight.

Let me say as well that there will be the creation of more jobs in Canada, in Winnipeg and Montreal, as a part of this. I said that we wanted to see how the company's program worked, and it has taken the responsibility in terms of retraining. We will ensure that their programs work because we will stand behind Canadian workers every time.

STATE OF GEORGIA ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Minister has said that the company intends to remain competitive. I say to the Minister that the company is already making a profit on those plants that exist in Canada. It is not losing money, it is making money, and the Canadian taxpayers subsidize that as well.

I have here an ad from the State of Georgia I am sure the Minister saw that appeared in the middle of the election campaign that said to such companies: "Come to Georgia because only 18 per cent of our labour force is unionized. We have no minimum wage and don't worry about the environment". Will the Government of Canada say that even with companies that are getting subsidies from the Canadian taxpayer, it will stand back and watch these jobs shift to the United States because of the trade deal? Do you care about the jobs?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this is not the first time that the Hon. Member has been taking his advice from the United States. I do not read the Georgia papers; I read the Canadian papers.

Mr. Broadbent: That was The Globe and Mail.

Mrs. McDougall: There is absolutely not one shred of evidence—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mrs. McDougall: Mr. Speaker, Nortel has 22,000 employees. It has been a growth company and it has been creating jobs in Canada for a long time and will continue to do so. The workers who are affected by these layoffs are workers we care about. The company has made some plans for them in terms of retraining. We will ensure that those plans work.

I do not know how often I have to say this because the Hon. Member clearly does not listen. If the programs Nortel has do not work, we will stand behind the workers. There is no evidence, repeat, n-o evidence that the jobs are moving to these U.S.

• (1430)

Mr. Broadbent: The workers affected do not want the Minister to stand behind them, they want the Minister to stand with them and keep the jobs in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MEASURES TO ASSIST AFFECTED WORKERS—
GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my last question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday, he spoke about the blue ribbon committee which intends to examine the situation of workers who will lose their jobs. But since this committee does not intend to present the Prime Minister with a report, and a secret report at that, until June, what does the Prime Minister say now to the workers who are losing their jobs? Do they have to wait until June?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I said that the committee chaired by Mr. Jean de Grandpré is composed of leaders from all segments of Canadian society and that its reports will surely be most interesting and most valuable for workers. Nobody is talking about waiting until June and the fact is that Mr. de Grandpré is scheduled to meet with the ministers responsible as early as Friday of this week to discuss an interim report.

ABORIGINAL RIGHTS

DENE-MÉTIS LAND CLAIMS

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs. On September 5 the Government signed an agreement-in-principle with the Dene-Métis of the Northwest Territories to settle their longstanding aboriginal claim, which included a commitment to provide additional funding to the Dene-Métis in order to conclude a final settlement in two years.

After the election, the Dene-Métis were advised that they would get only one-fifth of what was budgeted in pursuing the final settlement. If the Government is really serious in settling this claim, will it not reconsider this funding and honour its commitment made before the election and bring forth an agreement to provide the Dene-Métis with adequate funds?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification): Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the Hon. Member on her election to this House to represent her people and all the people of the Northwest Territories.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McKnight: The Hon. Member's family and I have had discussions. Part of those discussions resulted in an agreement-in-principle being signed between the Government of Canada and the Dene-Métis people. The commitment made by the Government of Canada in the agreement-in-principle was to provide funding.

The Dene-Métis asked for $1.5 million in funding for travel. Just so the House understands, Mr. Speaker, on signing $2 million was transferred to the Dene-Métis people; $1.2 million will be provided for land selection; $500,000 was sent in October to assist on debts that had been accumulated during the negotiation process, and $300,000 has been provided in response to the request of $1.5 million.

Mrs. Finestone: What does that mean in English?

FEDERAL FUNDING

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, the Minister knows that stability and progress in the North require a settlement of the Dene-Métis claim. If the Government really wants a final settlement in two years, then surely it must provide the Dene-Métis with adequate funds to prepare for that settlement.

Will the Minister make a commitment to do that today?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification): Mr. Speaker, I believe the Government of Canada and the Dene-Métis people have shown a commitment to the settlement of a long outstanding obligation so that development can take place in the Northwest Territories.

This year $4.9 million has been provided to the Dene-Métis for claims negotiations. That brings the total to $30 million that has been provided for claims negotiations during the time period in which they took place.

We believe that there is an opportunity to settle a long outstanding claim in the Western Arctic and we, the Government of Canada, and the Dene-Métis people, over the next two years I am sure will succeed.

THE ENVIRONMENT

DISPOSAL OF AMERICAN GARBAGE IN EASTERN TOWNSHIPS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the new Environment Minister. In view of the fact that the Canadian public is now aware that between 150 and 160 American garbage trucks from the Boston area deliver their loads every week to the Eastern Townships area, more specifically to Saint-Denis de Brompton and the Magog Township, could the Minister tell the House what he intends to do to prevent Canada and Quebec, more specifically the tourist oriented Eastern Townships, from becoming the garbage dump of the United States?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, the Quebec and federal governments, working closely together, are taking drastic measures in their effort to control the situation the Hon. Member has described.

We are all aware that under the shared jurisdiction which governs this type of situation, the provincial Government is responsible for the disposal of all waste on its territory, while the federal Government is entrusted with overseeing the transportation of dangerous materials.

We have the necessary powers to ensure the safe transportation of matters deemed dangerous or toxic, and the Quebec Government has the powers to control the disposal of all waste material on its territory, and especially with regard to burying it.

According to our investigations, these wastes happen to be neither toxic nor dangerous, so that we have put together a three-stage process with the Quebec Government. First, beginning with last weekend, we have been making sure that federal inspectors are permanently in the field and carry out extremely thorough and strict investigations, to make sure that the existing regulations are strictly adhered to and that the wastes presently disposed of are neither dangerous nor toxic.

Second, the Quebec Government is now trying to ascertain . . .

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Bouchard: . . . it is busy adopting legislation and devising ways and means to control the transportation of these matters in that area. Third, . . . the Government . . .

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: I feel, regretfully, that the reply is much too long. I therefore recognize the Hon. Member for Shefford.

REQUEST FOR DETAILS

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, I am most interested in what the Minister has to say, so that as a supplementary, I should like him to go on explaining his third point.

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I hope I can finish my reply.

I talked on several occasions with the Quebec Minister of the Environment. I met as recently as this morning with the members of "La Coalition de l'Estrie" and the federal Government is contemplating several legislative measures to stop the dumping of these American waste materials in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, we will make sure that Canada does not become a garbage dump for anybody.

CHAIRMANSHIP OF COMMISSION EXAMINING LABOUR ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Prime Minister informed this House of the appointment of Mr. Jean de Grandpré to a blue ribbon committee, and described him as one of Canada's most distinguished people to chair a blue ribbon committee that will examine programs that exist around the world.

Was the Prime Minister aware at the time of this appointment that among the many distinguished accomplishments of Mr. de Grandpré was that of chairman and chief executive officer of Bell Canada Enterprises? Was the Prime Minister aware of the fact that during his role as chief executive officer of Bell Canada Enterprises, Bell Canada Enterprises held 52 per cent ownership in Northern Telecom?

Can the Prime Minister tell us how can the Canadian employees of the multinational corporations expect this fox-in-the-hen-house appointment to benefit them?

• (1440)

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, only an NDP'er would think that success in the private sector represents failure in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Mulroney: Mr. Speaker, of course I am fully aware of the facts reported by my hon. friend. I am also aware of Jean de Grandpré's great achievements in his career, like those of the other members of this important commission which I think reflects the best interests of all Canadians.

So if the Hon. Member would kindly wait until Friday and then for the final report, I think that he will see the result of the work done at the national level by Canadians who seek the national welfare and who are playing a vital role for Canadian society.

[English]

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, while I thank the Prime Minister for his well worn cliché answer about what we recognize, I raise this question, in return. Is the Prime Minister still not yet able to recognize a conflict of interest when one is put before him in this House?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

COMMISSION MEMBERS

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): In the same vein, is the Prime Minister aware that the board of directors of this same corporation includes the Hon. Peter Lougheed, who was—

An Hon. Member: —who was a provincial Premier who was successful in getting re-elected.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Members for making me feel right at home. Their behaviour is as poor as that of the “Zalm” Socredits.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member will put his question, please.

Mr. Barrett: Is the Prime Minister aware that Mr. Lougheed is on the board of directors—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nystrom: Don't heckle a new Member.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, is the Prime Minister aware that Mr. Lougheed is also on the board of directors, and is he aware that the current president of Northern Telecom is the second Vice-President of the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, in which capacity he played an aggressive role in campaigning for the free trade deal; and how can the Prime Minister expect—

Some Hon. Members: Question!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of that shocking conflict of interest situation, and I thank the Hon. Member for bringing it to my attention. He may be interested to know that, along with all of the other nefarious types who are on that commission with Mr. de Grandpré, is Dr. Wagner, the President of the University of Calgary—

Some Hon. Members: Oh no!

An Hon. Member: Shocking!

Mr. Mulroney: That is shocking in itself; but worse still, an immediate cohort and collaborator of Mr. de Grandpré's is James McCambly, President of the Canadian Federation of Labour.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: You are safe, Ed. You need not fear, Ed.

REFUGEESBACKLOG IN PROCESSING REFUGEE-STATUS APPLICATIONS

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration.

If there is one policy area that was grossly mis-managed by the Government in the previous Parliament, and which continues today, it is that of Canada's refugee policy.

The backlog has increased from 9,500 in 1984 to over 70,000 today, and during all of that time the Government failed to take the necessary measures to alleviate the backlog problem.

Given the lack of concrete action on the backlog itself, irrespective of reforming the over-all refugee system in Canada, I would ask the Minister to inform the House—and, through the House, Canadians in general—when and what action the Government will take on the refugee backlog, a backlog that has grown to an alarming number and one which now threatens the viability of the entire refugee processing system.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, if there has been an increase in the backlog over the past couple of years, there isn't one person in this Chamber who doesn't know whose fault that is, given that it took two years to get the appropriate legislation through Parliament.

I am getting a little tired of the rhetoric from the Hon. Member about the refugee backlog, a backlog which began to build before we arrived in office and which continued to build as a result of opposition-caused delays in the passage of the appropriate legislation through Parliament.

Mrs. McDougall: I can report to the House that, with the procedures that will be in place on January 1 next, the process will be a much improved one. My departmental officials have worked very hard on this problem, and I feel certain that the procedures which will be put into effect on January 1 will be exemplary.

We are considering various options in respect of the backlog, and I shall report to the House on those options as soon as possible.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, the Minister fails to tell Canadians that it took three years before the Government introduced legislation, and it still, after four years in office, fails to recognize the difference between the system and the backlog, and the fact that both are in need of action at the same time.

This Minister continues to speak to the House of options—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): He thinks he is Dave Barrett.

Mr. Marchi: Take it easy, Joe; you have more than enough on your own plate.

ADMINISTRATIVE REVIEW—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I ask my question again of the Minister. Given that she has ruled out a general amnesty, something which we advocate and support—because it is not an answer; it does not distinguish between right and wrong—and given that there are rumours afloat about a mass deportation, would the Minister not agree that the most logical, humane and effective response would be to establish an administrative review process whereby refugees would be judged upon certain base criteria, with the Government retaining the option of refusing refugee status for security, health, or other reasons?

Does she not consider such a review process to be the best option?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is one of the options we are looking at, as the Hon. Member knows—and I very much appreciate his advice on how to deal with the backlog. But there are other ways to deal with the backlog, and we will consider all options.

Oral questions

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

HIRING PRACTICES AFFECTING WOMEN

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Immigration, who is also the Minister responsible for the status of women.

As the Minister is no doubt aware, Canadian employers frequently hire workers overseas using criteria which are inconsistent with the Canadian Charter of Rights. In particular, the Manitoba Fashion Institute hires female workers only if they declare themselves to be single. If they are married, they are not hired.

Does the Government continue to condone such practices, which discriminate against single and married women and which are counter to the Charter of Rights?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Government has never condoned any kind of selection on the basis of marital status in the way that the Hon. Member has described.

An Hon. Member: Come on! You sent her back. You discriminated against a married woman.

Mrs. McDougall: The answer to the question is that the Government has never condoned such practices.

REQUEST THAT DEPORTATION PROCEDURES BE STOPPED

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): As a supplementary, there are women in Manitoba who are now suffering terribly because of this practice. When the Minister refused in August to intervene, despite pleas in this House to do so, Sally Espenelli was deported. Now, Violag Juay Yong faces the same fate in the next few weeks.

• (1450)

Will the Minister stop all deportation procedures, review these cases, and address this discriminatory practice immediately?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, there are other issues at stake in this case, as the Hon. Member well knows. We review every case which comes to us on a case by case basis and I stand by the decision that was made in my office.

*Oral questionsFISHERIES*BRITISH COLUMBIA SALMON AND HERRING INDUSTRY REGULATIONS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Fisheries. As he knows, Canada will be presenting replacement regulations for the B.C. salmon and herring industry to Peter Murphy in Washington next week.

Since a number of GATT member countries such as Great Britain have import requirements that fish be graded and eviscerated for entry into their markets, will the Minister assure this House that the replacement B.C. regulations will provide for landing, grading, and eviscerating in Canada?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct, we are refining proposed new regulations to ensure effective conservation, management and quality control of fish and fish products exported from Canada. These regulations were prepared with input by a working group representing the fishing industry of British Columbia. They were submitted to my office in mid-September. They are being reviewed by trade lawyers and experts in the Government, and at the appropriate time the form of these regulations will be made clear. Further discussions are presently under way jointly with my colleague, the Minister for International Trade.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is directed to the Minister for International Trade. He must be aware that if we do not have grading, landing, and eviscerating provisions for the B.C. industry, our salmon and herring industry will be destroyed.

Will the Minister be specific and assure this House that the Government will advise the United States that we are a sovereign country and one of the rights we have is the right to gut fish, and that means to gut salmon in British Columbia?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to know that the Party the hon. gentleman represents is a tremendous supporter of the GATT system, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. That Party knows, of course, that this is a problem originating as a result of the work of a GATT panel, the organization that his Party supports. That panel found certain practices in British Columbia, in connection with the regulation of the catching and processing of fish, to be contrary to fair trade rules as enunciated by GATT.

Our response to the GATT panel will have to be GATT consistent in order to have the support of his Party. In due course he will know what that response is and I am sure that the B.C. salmon and herring industry will remain a healthy and productive one when our decision is announced. However, our decision will be GATT consistent, c-o-n-s-i-s-t-e-n-t.

AUDITOR GENERAL'S REPORTCANADA-NOVA SCOTIA DEVELOPMENT FUND

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy and again concerns the Auditor General's Report as it relates to the Canada-Nova Scotia Offshore Development Fund.

In that report the Auditor General lists the approval of funding for the Stellarton to Sheet Harbour highway as questionable with respect to its applicability to criteria established for the disposition of this fund.

Could the Minister please provide this House with the background information given his Department by the Province of Nova Scotia which led him to approve this $20 million project, which is obviously in contradiction to the legislative purposes of this fund?

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member but the question was getting awfully close to being out of order. However, the Hon. Minister may want to reply.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I understand the question correctly, the Hon. Member is opposed to the Government of Canada, in agreement with the Government of Nova Scotia, spending money to improve the infrastructure so that when offshore development takes place, Nova Scotians can fully benefit from it. Is that the Hon. Member's position, Mr. Speaker?

REQUEST FOR DETAILED REPORT

Mr. Francis G. Leblanc (Cape Breton—Highlands—Canso): Mr. Speaker, since the Minister has the responsibility to approve every one of these projects and to check that they meet the criteria clearly stated in the Act establishing the fund, will the Minister take his responsibilities seriously and provide the House with a detailed report explaining how these abuses could have occurred?

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources decides on the basis of the Act already passed by the Parliament of Canada and reports every year on the use of this fund. This Act recognizes the province's responsibility in these matters and we in this Government, unlike the previous Government, take account of the reality of the provinces of Canada and we develop the territory with them. It is in this spirit that we make our decisions, Mr. Speaker, and the Canadian people have twice expressed their agreement with this interpretation of federal-provincial relations.

AGRICULTURE

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Deputy Prime Minister.

Farmers in the three western prairie provinces as well as B.C. and Ontario suffered the worst drought in living memory recently. On November 9 the Deputy Prime Minister promised some $850 million in compensation for those farmers, based on $45 per acre. There are still no criteria, no guidelines, and no application forms have been made available.

To top that off, the Prime Minister's good friend, the Premier of Saskatchewan, Mr. Devine, as well as other prairie Tory Premiers, said they have no money for the program. Can the Minister give a commitment today that the $850 million, or more depending on the amount of damage, is going to be provided to these hard-pressed farmers?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I answered a question similar to that in the House of Commons yesterday. The same answer applies. I know the Hon. Member and others were disappointed that we announced a drought program to meet the needs of farmers who were very seriously affected by this drought.

Oral questions

As in the past, when the need has arisen for support from this Government for farmers, we have been there. We have been there in the past, we are there today, and we will be there in the future. I can assure the Hon. Member of that.

DISTRIBUTION OF APPLICATION FORMS AND CHEQUES

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that the Tory Premiers are not going to pay for the Prime Minister's election promises.

In any event, the drought occurred last spring and summer. Thousands of farmers had no crop this fall. The program was announced on November 10. When are application forms going to be made available, and can the Deputy Prime Minister make a commitment today that the cheques will start to flow by January 1 so these farmers will have the funds available this winter?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member knows this is the fourth chapter of the drought program announced for the year 1988. The first was a $12 million water related program; the second was a $153 million livestock drought program; the third was the $900 million crop insurance pay-out; the $850 million is supplementary to that.

That totals close to $2 billion. That is the kind of support this Government has given in the past and that is the kind of support it is going to give in the future.

FOREST INDUSTRY FINDINGS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for forestry. The Auditor General states that unemployment is increasing in the forest industry, that the backlog of unreforested land is increasing, and that forest resource development agreements with the provinces have few clear guidelines and little or no evaluation, citing five examples from coast to coast. What immediate action is the Minister prepared to take to address these very serious issues?

● (1500)

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology) and Acting Minister of State (Forestry)):

Privilege—Mr. Fulton

Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised at the Auditor General's findings. After all, what we were trying to do was to redress a decade of deliberate neglect of our forests.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: What we have done is we have increased by four times the federal commitment. Some regions of the country have not yet caught up with the backlog in our forest land. In my own province that is not the case. Some 250,000 hectares have been restocked there.

The question now is how quickly can we move to a more intensive forest management regime which involves not just the planting of trees but the farming of our forests. Our commitment is quite clear, something which has been demonstrated by the establishment of a full Department of Forestry.

GOVERNMENT POSITION—PROVISION OF INFORMATION

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I am shocked that the Minister is saying that he is not surprised. The question is this. What specific action is he prepared to take? I include in that information to Parliament, since there is no way that we can monitor this matter without having enhanced quality of information. As the Auditor General points out, information presented in Part III of the Estimates is inaccurate and at times confusing. Thus it is impossible for Members to monitor the expenditures adequately.

Will the Minister state what he intends to do about this specific issue?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology) and Acting Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, we must be cognizant of the fact that the principal responsibility for keeping the inventory lies with the provinces. After all, it is a provincial resource.

The federal role in this area has in the past been exercised through research, as well as assistance, protection, maintenance, and enhancement of our forests. It is in that area that we will continue to play our role in co-ordination and co-operation with the provinces.

We are negotiating with the provinces about these matters to see how best we can develop a national inventory and how best we can redress some of the serious problems that have occurred as a result of this neglect in the past.

Mr. Speaker: That will be the last question of Question Period.

I have an application on privilege. The Chair recognizes the Hon. Member for Skeena.

PRIVILEGE

ALLEGED DUMPING OF MUSTARD GAS

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Mr. Speaker, I have consulted Beauchesne's, and I believe I have a question of privilege that meets the two tests, the first being a prima facie case and the second being the fact that I am raising the matter at the earliest opportunity.

The matter involves the dumping and location of 450 tonnes of mustard gas somewhere in the vicinity of Victoria and Esquimalt. On December 5, 1988, the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) wrote to a researcher who was at that time working for the Hon. Member for New Westminster—Coquitlam, and who has subsequently been doing some work for my office. In that letter the Minister of National Defence states:

Thank you for the letter of October 4, 1988 in which you inquired about the dumping of World War II shells containing nerve gas and mustard gas in the Pacific in 1947. There is no record of such an operation.

That letter is signed by the Minister of National Defence.

There is a very brief chronology which follows that. On December 8, 1988, CTV National News reported that National Defence dumped chemical weapons into the Pacific Ocean following the Second World War.

On December 9, 1988, Colonel Conrad Mialkowski, Assistant Director-General for Research and Development, National Defence, stated that the Canadian military never dumped artillery shells containing mustard gas into the Pacific Ocean. On that date I asked for a public inquiry into the matter because of the evidence that had been given by Canadian ex-servicemen regarding this matter. I point out that these were servicemen who were at Suffield when it was loaded, who were at Esquimalt when it was unloaded, and who saw it loaded onto a scow.

On December 13, 1988, the Times-Colonist of Victoria reported that by its own account of the 1947 dumping, it contradicted the statements made by the Canadian military spokesman and the Minister of National Defence, and say not only artillery ammunition but mustard gas was dumped into the Pacific Ocean.

In a front page story on September 17, 1947, the Victoria Times-Colonist reported:

Four hundred and fifty tons of gas which was developed for chemical warfare is now lying at dockside at the government drydock, Esquimalt, waiting to be loaded aboard a dump scow which will take it out to the Pacific Ocean for dumping.

A photograph of military personnel wearing rubber gloves and loading material from a railway car accompanied the story.

On December 13, 1988, Colonel Conrad Mialkowski admitted that the Canadian military did dump shells containing mustard gas, but the new claim with the suddenly found records is that it was dumped 160 kilometres off the coast of B.C. What fails to be mentioned is the same evidence of one of the same ex-servicemen who pointed out that the scow sailed at dusk and returned at dawn. Again, this was a serviceman who was at the site. There is not a scow made, even if it was towed by hovercraft, which could in that time go 160 kilometres off Victoria for dumping.

This is a very serious matter. The Minister of National Defence advised there were no records. Senior people in his Department advised that there were no records. When they are caught by the media, caught by ex-servicemen and Members of Parliament, suddenly there are records. Suddenly, they claim that they know exactly where the mustard gas is located, exactly when it went there, and how it got there and so on.

This is a serious matter. Mustard gas that was dumped off the coast of France in exactly the same year, 1947, was subsequently picked up in fishing equipment, brought on board a fishing vessel and blinded 12 fishermen.

I would like to hear from the Minister of National Defence. Prior to doing that, I believe I have proven a prima facie case that I have been misled by a Minister of the Crown, and that I have been misled intentionally or otherwise by senior officials in the Department of National Defence. I am prepared to move the necessary motion that this matter be referred to the Standing Committee on Elections, Privileges and Procedure.

I do not think that Members of Parliament, their researchers or the media should be misled on matters that could affect the health and well-being of Canadian citizens or anyone else.

Privilege—Mr. Fulton

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence and Acting Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, what we witness here this afternoon is the Hon. Member, who was recognized during Question Period and chose to raise a question with a totally different Minister of the Crown, now getting up following Question Period, not to raise a bona fide question of privilege but rather to attempt—

An Hon. Member: Let the Speaker decide.

Mr. Beatty: Indeed, Mr. Speaker, you will have the opportunity to decide, as soon as you have all of the facts as opposed to the misinformation and partial information that has been given to you by the Hon. Member, who has a track record in that respect, as he demonstrated in the case of Suffield earlier this year.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, Hon. Members opposite might extend the same courtesy to me that I extended to the Hon. Member when he was making his false allegations.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Tell the truth.

Mr. Beatty: The Hon. Member opposite says: "Tell the truth". Let me read to you, Mr. Speaker, from the letter that was quoted by the Hon. Member.

Mr. Speaker: I remind both sides in this discussion that it is an application on a question of privilege. I am not interested in hearing allegations about each other. I hope that other Hon. members will keep that in mind.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member quoted from the first paragraph of a letter which I sent to a person who is now a researcher for him. Curiously, he ended his quotation before going on to the second paragraph. He quoted this section:

Thank you for the letter of October 4, 1988 in which you inquired about the dumping of World War II shells containing nerve gas and mustard gas in the Pacific in 1947. There is no record of such an operation.

There the quotation ends. Had he had the courtesy to continue, Mr. Speaker, you would have heard the following:

If you are aware of any evidence that such dumping did occur, I would be anxious to receive it. As you probably know, surplus Canadian World War II stocks of mustard gas were dumped in the Atlantic in 1946; the gas was not in shells but in sealed metal drums. This operation was the subject of a number of articles in the press in 1984 and I am attaching two clippings from that time. The method of disposal used was considered at the time to be the easiest, safest, and most economical means of getting rid of the mustard gas. It would not now be permitted.

As the letter very clearly indicates, we have been unable to locate anywhere in the Department of National Defence, notwithstanding the efforts which we made, any record of surplus stocks being dumped over 40 years ago into the Pacific. What I indicated to the Hon. Member's researcher was that if he had any evidence whatsoever suggesting that was the case, we would welcome it being brought forward. That continues today.

There was no attempt, nor was there any action which would mislead the Hon. Member. The facts that were stated in the letter were accurate. We had no record. We could locate no record. We have continued to search during that time and can locate no DND record indicating such a thing.

Earlier this week, the Victoria Times-Colonist was contacted by an individual who brought to its attention an article which appeared in the Victoria paper in 1947, including a picture under the headline: "War gas brought here for dumping at sea". That was the first time—and it was this week, not last week or the previous week—that it was brought to our attention that there was a document on the public record, not in DND's records, which indicated this.

The Hon. Member makes a great point of the fact that Colonel Mialkowski indicated that the dump would appear to have been 100 miles offshore. Why does he say that? He said that because the article in the Times-Colonist of Victoria on Tuesday, December 16, 1947, states that some 600 tons of mustard gas and other chemical warfare ammunition "will be sunk 100 miles off the British Columbia coast, army headquarters announced here today". Where did the Colonel get his information? He got it from exactly the same source as the Hon. Member apparently got his from, that is, the Victoria newspaper of September 16, 1947.

Was there an attempt to mislead the Hon. Member? No, there was not. The Colonel simply referred to what was in the newspaper in 1947. Did Colonel Mialkowski indicate that there had never been any dumping off the West Coast? Not according to the article I have in front of me from the Victoria Times-Colonist under the byline of Paul Mooney of the Canadian Press. The individual who indicated there probably had been no dumping of chemicals was Mr. Fred Hassell who worked as a supervisor in the laboratory at the Colwood Naval magazine during the period in question and stayed until 1973.

It was Mr. Hassell who said:

I am absolutely positive there was never anything like that (shells containing chemical agents). We had to handle everything that went through there, and we would have known about something like that.

Colonel Mialkowski did say quite correctly, and I quote this from the Canadian Press article:

Mialkowski said the Canadian Forces dumped hundreds of tonnes of high explosive shells at a site 90 to 100 kilometres west of the Strait of Juan de Fuca, in a trench well off the continental shelf.

The site was more than six kilometres deep. That is what the Colonel said. Has the Colonel confessed that we have done this or, to use the words of the Hon. Member, admitted that 40 years ago the Canadian Forces dumped mustard gas? No, what was said by the Colonel in the last 24 hours is that on the basis of the newspaper article there would appear to be reason to believe this might have happened. It was not a confession or admission on his part, but rather that it has been brought to his attention now that newspaper records of the day indicate that mustard gas might have been put in that area.

The Hon. Member also goes on at great length to talk about threats to public safety. Had the Hon. Member consulted navigational charts for the West Coast of Canada, he would know that those dumps are marked on navigational charts precisely to warn people to stay away from them.

The practice of dumping excess war stocks after World War II was quite common around the world, and that includes Canada. It would not be done today, but it was done during that period. Because it was done, navigational charts were clearly marked to indicate where those dumps were precisely to avoid the sort of incident referred to by the Hon. Member. In particular, in the two large dumps that are marked on the map, we are talking about dumps which go to a considerable depth. I think the depth is as great as 8,000 feet. It is unlikely that fishermen would have a line down that low. However, if the Hon. Member has any information with regard to that, we would be glad to get the information from him.

If, Mr. Speaker, you still believe for a minute that the Hon. Member has presented any evidence whatsoever of a prima facie case of privilege, let me simply review the key facts. The Hon. Member alleges that presumably an attempt was made to mislead a Member of Parliament. The facts indicate just the opposite. The letter that was sent to the researcher indicated that no records had been found but invited the researcher to come forward with any evidence, if he had it, so we could pursue it, as we are continuing to do today.

Second, the Hon. Member, albeit, I am sure, unintentionally misrepresents what Colonel Mialkowski said and makes an attack, a very serious attack, on a distinguished member of the Canadian Armed Forces who is not here in this House of Commons and able to defend himself. I consider that sort of attack reprehensible.

Mr. Fulton: I have two very brief points, Mr. Speaker. I think what the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Beatty) has done is worse than what this began as. The Minister of National Defence fails to point out what Colonel Mialkowski has in fact said to the press. I quote from a Canadian Press story, as the Minister of National Defence just did.

The Canadian military has never dumped artillery shells containing chemical agents into the Pacific Ocean, Forces spokesmen said Friday.

Col. Conrad Mialkowski, assistant director general for research and development at National Defence Headquarters, said Friday the Forces dumped surplus high explosive shells in the Pacific and Atlantic Oceans until the early 1970s.

But no shells containing chemical agents were ever disposed of in that way,—

He had no qualification on that. Second, in The Globe and Mail today it says very clearly:

The Canadian Forces acknowledged yesterday that shells containing mustard gas were dumped off the coast of British Columbia . . .

. . . National Defence spokesman, Col. Conrad Mialkowski said that the shells are in an ocean trench about 2,500 metres deep about 160 kilometres offshore.

From whence does the Colonel get this new information? There were no records.

Mr. Beatty: From the Victoria Times-Colonist. I just read it to you.

Mr. Fulton: Oh, he gets it from the Victoria Times-Colonist. How is it that a serviceman who was there said he loaded it in Suffield, he unloaded it in Esquimalt onto a scow which sailed at dusk in September and was back at the dock at dawn? It cannot get 160 kilometres offshore to the deep water to which the Minister alludes.

All I am asking in this case is that information that was false, intentionally or otherwise, was provided time and again to a Member of Parliament, time and again to the media in this country, and there may well be a situation where the lives of Canadian fishermen or others could be endangered. If there are no records, admit it and conduct an inquiry.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member says if there are no records, admit it. The original letter about which he is complaining said specifically that we could find no records with regard to that. What we are doing is attempting to find any information we can that is relevant to the situation. If the Hon. Member has any concrete information, instead of making wild allegations and instead of attacking the character—

Mr. Broadbent: It wasn't wild allegations. Listen to what he has to say.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister may be able to help the Speaker in deciding on a point of privilege, but it is not necessary to get into further argument. The Hon. Minister may want to close off his comments.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I quote today from the Ottawa Citizen. What the Colonel is quoted as saying today by the Ottawa Citizen, is:

"It appears that the shells are down there and although I can't confirm it, it appears they're probably artillery mortar rounds filled with mustard", Mialkowski said.

This hardly constitutes an admission that he was withholding information. What it does indicate is a recognition on his part that since the original statement, someone has brought to his attention the article from the Victoria paper of 1947 and he says that based on the information included in the Victoria article from 1947, it appears that the material is down there and it appears it is mustard, based on the article. However, the central fact still remains that to date we have been able to locate no information within Canadian Forces' files related to this. We continue to invite the Hon. Member or anyone else in Canada who has relevant information to tender it.

You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that when the Hon. Member previously made wild allegations with regard to Suffield and the work being done there, the Department set up a hot line to enable anyone who was involved with that, and who had concerns about those tests, to call in. I can indicate that in none of those calls or in none of the letters we received was any reference made to chemical dumps of mustard, for example, on the West Coast.

Again, if there is any evidence that anyone in the House or outside the House has that would be of relevance to us in searching back 40 years ago, we certainly would welcome that and would be pleased to pursue it, but all of us have an obligation not to unfairly accuse distinguished members of the Canadian Forces who cannot respond.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party rises and, of course, I will hear him. I might indicate to him that I think I have heard enough to consider the matter which, of course, I will, but I will, of course, hear the Hon. Member at least for a few minutes.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate that. I listened with care to what the Minister had to say, as I usually do. And I heard the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton). I rise at this point to respond to the last point the Minister made which is a repetition of one he made earlier, namely, if anyone has any evidence on this very important matter potentially affecting the health of Canadians, they should bring it forward.

My suggestion very concretely, and I would like to hear the Minister respond to it this afternoon before we complete this very important question of privilege which has been raised, is that there is an individual, living in Calgary today, who claims he had direct involvement and direct knowledge about the situation at hand, and he is describing his facts not relying on a newspaper article from Victoria.

He was actually there. Has his senior staff talked to him? If not, if he wants to get to the bottom of this, the truth, why does he not talk to him?

Mr. Speaker: I will let the Hon. Minister reply shortly, but I do not think any further discussion will help the Speaker very much.

I might indicate to Hon. Members that while there clearly seems to be a difference of opinion as to facts, and there may be very good reason why there is a difference of opinion as to facts, I have some difficulty seeing that it amounts to a breach of privilege. I will hear the Minister shortly.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, essentially the Leader of the New Democratic Party is extending Question Period under the guise of a question of privilege. I can indicate to him that immediately after the individual in question was on CTV—

Mr. Speaker: If the Hon. Minister can assist the Chair, I will hear him. I am not having any further arguments between the two sides.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I am trying to respond to the question that was posed to me. After the matter was raised on the CTV National News, I asked my staff to contact the individual in question. I do not know whether they have succeeded in doing it to date. They had difficulty initially reaching him. I will verify as to whether or not they have been able to reach him to date and will get in touch with Members opposite.

Mr. Speaker: I think I have heard enough. This is a question which is in the public domain. Clearly the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) received some information, and in some cases did not receive other information which came to light at a later time.

There has been concern raised by the Hon. Member for Skeena that this might have been a deliberate attempt to keep information from a Member of Parliament. If that was the case and clearly there was evidence of that, then it would indeed be a very serious matter and understandable why the Hon. Member has raised this matter in this Chamber.

However, I have listened to the Minister and I have to take what Hon. Members in the House say as clearly in accord with the facts as they can know them, as I certainly did when listening to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent).

I have listened to the Hon. Minister. There may very well be an argument under another proceeding as to what happened within the Department of National Defence. The whole question of why there were not records, if there are not, is something that can be pursued.

I must say to all Hon. Members that, in my view at least, listening to this as I have very carefully, it does not get into a question of privilege. It is essentially an argument over allegations of facts. While the matter as raised by the Hon. Member for Skeena is of course an important matter and it may be quite proper to pursue it in Question Period or at another time, I have to rule at the moment that it does not reach a question of privilege.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

APPOINTMENT OF INTERNAL ECONOMY
COMMISSIONERS

Mr. Speaker: I have the honour to inform the House that Jim Hawkes and Bill Kempling have been appointed as members of the Board of Internal Economy for the purposes and under the provisions of Chapter 42, First Supplement, of the Revised Statutes of Canada, 1985, entitled an Act to Amend the Parliament of Canada Act.

PRIVILEGE

DIVISION BELLS IN SOUTH BLOCK

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I will make my point very briefly. It concerns the bells in the South Block. It is still not possible to hear bells on the south side of the South Block. We can hear faint bells ringing in one corridor but not in the other, Mr. Speaker. I bring this matter to your attention and hope that we will not have to experience this situation again.

Petitions

Mr. Speaker: I will take the Hon. Member's intervention under advisement and will report back to the House.

CANADA REFERENDUM AND PLEBISCITE ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-201, an Act respecting referendums and plebiscites in Canada on questions of public importance.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, this Bill is one that is enabling legislation for the holding of a national referendum or plebiscite in Canada on issues of transcending national importance.

Briefly, this constitutes a complete code for the holding of such votes. Several of the provinces have legislation along this line. All of the municipalities are able to consult their citizens directly, and the purpose of this Bill would be to provide the Government of Canada with this democratic instrument for the occasional questions of transcending national importance that ought to be put directly to the people for an expression of popular will.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

CHILD ABUSE

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, it is my honour and privilege to present a petition signed by 4,500 citizens of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell who want to bring a very serious matter to the House of Commons.

They are asking Parliament to intervene in the very important issue of child abuse.

S. O. 52

Mr. Speaker: There is a motion for an emergency debate. I would ask the Hon. Member for York Centre to address the Chair.

MOTIONS TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52(1)

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 52, I ask leave to propose a motion to adjourn the House for the purpose of discussing a specific and important matter requiring urgent consideration, namely the disastrous deterioration of service to the travelling public at Canada's largest airport, Pearson International Airport, caused by the failure of the Government to do its duty to administer the airport and to make proper provision for its needs and growth. The present situation amounts to a crisis to which no adequate solution has yet been brought.

• (1700)

It is difficult for anyone to exaggerate the seriousness of this problem—and no one is more familiar with it than are Members of Parliament. Delays of up to three hours are not unknown on a daily basis at Pearson International Airport.

Given that we are now in the holiday season, and given the tremendous economic damage which has already been suffered by the municipality of Metropolitan Toronto and the surrounding region, as well as to the industries involved in carriage through that airport, something has to be done.

This is a situation, Mr. Speaker, which is clearly and totally the responsibility of the federal Government to solve. One of the considerations you should bear in mind in considering this matter is the availability of other opportunities in this session to deal with it. I remind you that although we are engaged in the Throne Speech debate, it is not necessarily the case, or perhaps even likely, that there will be days devoted to the Throne Speech debate, with the result that the normal alternative times available to discuss this crisis might well not be available during this session.

I urge upon you, Mr. Speaker, the serious nature of this crisis for the entire region of southern Ontario and to permit this emergency debate to take place.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte on the same point.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, with the Chair's permission, I should like to take a minute or two to illustrate the crisis nature of the situation described by the Hon. Member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan)—

Some Hon. Members: No, no!

Mr. Speaker: Order.

An Hon. Member: Come on, you guys. Don't you want to hear about the problem?

An Hon. Member: He is just trying to be helpful.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all Hon. Members will understand the situation faced by the Chair. While the matter raised by the Hon. Member for York Centre is a serious one, it is not in order for other Hon. Members to speak to it at this stage. While I am sure that all Hon. Members take the matter seriously, I must restrict any comments on the matter to the Member presenting the application.

I have listened carefully to the presentation of the Hon. Member for York Centre, and as I had some notice of his application, I have had the opportunity to give the matter some considerable thought.

The Hon. Member, in his presentation, states that something may or may not transpire, such that there will not be another occasion to raise the matter in the House in this session.

I assure the Hon. Member that I consider the matter to be an important one, and certainly I will watch carefully to see how matters unfold. However, I do not think it appropriate to make an order permitting an emergency debate at this time.

ALLEGED LAY-OFFS RESULTING FROM CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave, under the provisions of Standing Order 52, to move a motion calling for an emergency debate in respect of lay-offs arising out of the free trade deal.

Since the November election, Canada has witnessed some 2,400 lay-offs by a number of companies, including Northern Telecom, Gillette, Pittsburgh Paints—

An Hon. Member: And how many new jobs have been created?

Mr. Broadbent: In respect of the lay-offs in question, a case has been made that there is good reason to believe that they are the result, either directly or indirectly, of the free trade agreement.

An Hon. Member: The campaign is over, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: Also, we have now had the reimposition, by the President of the United States, of an unfair tariff on Canadian shakes and shingles going into the U.S.—a tariff which, when originally imposed, resulted in a loss of jobs in Canada, and which, if continued, will result in further job losses.

In saying that there is a case for an emergency debate, Mr. Speaker, I have in mind that, since then, we have had a Throne Speech which specifically excluded the establishment of legislation that would provide for an adjustment program in the case of lay-offs and which specifically excluded the possibility of the establishment of a committee to monitor the impact of the free trade agreement, and all of this in the context of the Government saying that once we complete consideration of the free trade implementing legislation, Parliament will embark upon an extended recess, a recess extending, perhaps, into March of next year.

I say that the workers who are laid off now, Mr. Speaker, cannot afford to wait. We have an emergency that has to be addressed now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for Oshawa for having given me extensive notice of his application. The formal application, in its written form, is much more extensive in detail than the oral summary provided by the Hon. Member, and certainly I have read it very carefully.

While the matters raised by the Hon. Member in his application for an emergency debate are serious matters, it is, I feel, premature for the Speaker to order an emergency debate at this time. Again, I am always ready to reconsider these matters should circumstances change.

There is the potential for some opportunity for Hon. Members to discuss the matters raised in the application.

To reiterate, while I consider the matters raised to be serious, I do not consider it appropriate to order an emergency debate at this time.

Orders of the day.

House of Commons

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED HOURS OF SITTING

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): A point of order—

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Lewis, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moves—the Hon. Member for Kamloops on a point of order.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think that it is appropriate if I recognize the Hon. Member for Windsor West. I think it was quite clear that he was rising on the same point of order.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

An Hon. Member: Free trade is good for Windsor, Herb.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the Government has given notice of a motion which proposes to suspend, and in fact drastically suspend, the rules of this House—

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): To summarize the motion, it appears to say that the House will sit continuously for an indefinite period, exclusive of December 26, 1988, and in fact will not adjourn on December 21 to resume in January, as is provided for by the Standing Orders. The motion also states that the House will not adjourn at 6 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays but will sit, without a break, until midnight on those days.

I point out, Mr. Speaker, that the wording of the motion does not state that the House shall sit for these hours only for consideration of the legislation to implement the Government's trade deal with the U.S.; rather, it states that the House will sit "for Government Orders". In other words, for any business that the Government puts on the Order Paper. The Government, therefore, could put anything it wishes on the Order Paper and use this motion to get it through.

Looking at the third paragraph of the motion, it goes on to state that for the duration of this session or until otherwise ordered, the provisions of Standing Order 73(1) and (2) respecting committee stage of Public Bills be suspended, and all such Bills be ordered for referral to Committee of the Whole.

What this means is that the provision in our rules calling for every Bill to be sent to a committee separate and apart from this House would be suspended. The Government, through this motion, is attempting to take away a concept that has been a part of the procedures of this House for some 20 years.

It has been a long time since Bills generally have been considered in Committee of the Whole rather than by a committee separate and apart from this House, where Members can question officials directly and summon before it witnesses from the private sector, witnesses from outside of this House of Commons.

• (1710)

I also want to point out that this paragraph is not limited to the trade legislation but applies to all Public Bills. It speaks of staying in existence for the duration of this session until otherwise ordered. I want to point out that this session does not end January 1. The way our rules are structured it can go on for several years, in fact for the entire term of Parliament.

The final paragraph of the motion says:

That immediately upon the House returning from the Senate after the first Royal Assent of this session, a Minister of the Crown may propose, without notice or debate, a motion to rescind this order.

The motion does not use the word "shall". There is no requirement that a Minister has to come into this House and propose a motion to rescind the order. If a Minister does not do that, the motion continues in effect indefinitely. Under the guise of taking a special measure to force the trade legislation through this House, it would appear the Government is bringing about a permanent and drastic change to our rules, our Standing Orders.

However, the Government now has given itself credit for the adoption of our current rules, our current Standing Orders. It has said before and likely during the election campaign that these Standing Orders are one of its paramount achievements, a supreme achievement of parliamentary reform, and has claimed it came about through its efforts, although this is not really so since it was an all-Party effort.

These reforms include confirming the House no longer sits at night. We have reasonable hours so there is quality debate and not legislation by exhaustion. This is a reform for which the Government takes credit. It has taken credit for us not sitting at night.

The reforms also provide that each Bill goes to a legislative committee for detailed and quality study, more quality study, the Government argues, than was possible in the old Committee of the Whole procedure where the House sat as a committee and witnesses could not be heard, whether they were officials or members of the public. As well, while the House sits as a committee, everything else before it is held up.

The Government has shown how little it really cares about parliamentary reform because it is saying through this motion that in order to get itself out of a tight corner, because it cannot live within the rules, the Government is ready to throw key elements of the rules out the window. Parliamentary reform means nothing to the Government so long as it can achieve its purpose of forcing this legislation through the House.

Last June the Government presented what appears to be a similar motion to this House, to suspend the rules, including those on the parliamentary calendar and the usual hours of the sitting of the House. When that motion was moved, arguments were made by myself and others that it was not in order and should be rejected by you. Of course, I have to say immediately that after hearing arguments, very patiently, with great consideration and attention, you gave a lengthy and detailed ruling in which you in effect ruled the motion was in order and debate on it could proceed.

I ask you to consider whether the motion before us now, and the motion you considered last June, are essentially the same, such that the ruling you made last June is equally applicable to the motion we are considering today. I submit this motion is different in substantial and important respects from the motion before this House last June, and therefore the ruling you made on the motion last June is not a precedent for the motion just called and which I am arguing should not be received and accepted by you.

The motion last June had a fixed expiry date, the date the House was to resume last September. The motion before us applies for an indefinite period.

Paragraph 1 of the motion before us appears to extend the days the House would meet for an indefinite period.

Paragraph 5 suspends the rules providing that Bills be considered by a legislative committee, for a period which is in effect indefinite. It has no fixed termination. You will note it also applies for the duration of this session or "until otherwise ordered".

House of Commons

Paragraph 6 of the motion says that “immediately upon the House returning from the Senate after the first Royal Assent of this session, a Minister of the Crown may propose, without notice or debate, a motion to rescind this order”.

This motion goes much, much further than the motion last June. It is drastic enough because, like the motion last June, it sweeps away parliamentary reforms requiring that the House does not sit at night, and also sits according to a fixed calendar. This motion goes further. It sweeps away not just the concept of legislative committees, something relatively new, but also entirely casts aside the concept that legislation be considered in small committees apart from this House with report stage in this House following such consideration, something which has been a fundamental part of our parliamentary process for over 20 years.

It is relevant to note, Mr. Speaker, that you pointed out in your ruling of last June, if I may summarize, that the motion did not do anything drastic to the rules of this House. However, I submit this is not the case here. Quite the contrary. As you said on June 13, 1988, as reported at page 16378 of Hansard, referring to the motion of last June:

—I should also reassure Hon. Members that its passage would not throw out the rule book, nor would it destroy the major recent reforms.

That is not the case with the motion before us. I have already pointed out that this motion would destroy a very important recent reform, that is the concept of the legislative committee.

Your ruling last June was based on two key citations from Beauchesne's, Citation No. 21 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, and Citation 10 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition. It I may quote them very briefly, Citation 21 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition refers to the rules of procedure generally:

The most fundamental privilege of the House as a Whole is to establish rules of procedure for itself and to enforce them. A few rules are laid down in the British North America Act, but the vast majority are resolutions of the House which may be added to, amended, or repealed at the discretion of the House. It follows, therefore, that the House may dispense with the application of any of these rules by unanimous consent on any occasion or, by motion, may suspend their operation for a specified length of time.

I also want to quote Citation 10 of Beauchesne's Fourth Edition which you also used as a foundation for your ruling. It says in part:

Standing Orders may be suspended for a particular case without prejudice to their continued validity, for the House possesses the inherent power to destroy the self-imposed barriers and fetters of its own regulations. It may even pass an order prescribing a course of procedure inconsistent with the Standing Orders. A motion for such temporary suspension requires notice—but in urgent cases the notice can be waived—

I draw your attention to the words “for such temporary suspension”.

You used these citations as a foundation for your ruling of last June, and I will and do argue here that they clearly apply only to a temporary suspension of the rules, a motion by the Government for a “temporary suspension” of the rules, to quote Citation 10, or a motion which is for “a specified length of time”, to quote Citation 21.

This motion today is clearly not for “a specified length of time”, or to bring about “a temporary suspension” of the rules. Nor, by the way, is it limited to dealing with “a particular case”, to use another phrase from a citation. Instead, it applies to any and all Bills that the Government may choose to put on the Order Paper.

Again, as I have said, unlike the motion of last June, it does not end after a specified length of time.

By way of conclusion, I want to say that with this motion the Government gives the appearance of trying to smuggle in a drastic change in the rules, a permanent change in the rules, under the guise of forcing passage through this House of its trade legislation.

It has done this without having first had the advice of a parliamentary committee to study the matter, which has been the case in the past, or even without any consultation with the Opposition, which has also been the case in the past. In fact, this change in the rules is a reversion to an old, outmoded process, and the Government itself has in recent months been taking credit for helping bring about its elimination.

Therefore, relying on the Standing Order requiring you to rule on the acceptability of any motion or measure before it is debated or voted on, I call upon you to reject this motion before us. I call upon you to reject this motion, not only because, in effect, it is not within the ambit of your ruling of last summer, but it is also not covered by the citations on which you founded your ruling, inasmuch as it does not deal with a specific case. Nor does it attempt to bring itself to an end after a specified length of time or last only for a temporary period.

I am not going to take the time at this stage to point out to the House, as I did last June, that if this continues to be the practice of this Conservative Government then it means that nothing is safe or sacred when it comes to the basic process of democratic government in this House.

Last June it was simply suspending the calendar of sittings. Now the Government is throwing out the window our committee process. Next we may see this Government trying to force a motion through this House to get rid of the Question Period, or any type of debate in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, you are the protector of the minority of Members in this House.

You are the protector of this institution as a foundation of our democratic process. Therefore I call upon you to be very conscious of these responsibilities in taking into account the arguments I have made and the precedents I have cited which I submit would lead to only one firm conclusion, that is, this motion is not in order and must be rejected.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, I rise today both with a sense of sadness and with a sense of outrage. I am saddened by the spectacle of our parliamentary institutions being treated as little more than an irritant or a nuisance to this Government, something which must be tolerated at best. As a parliamentarian and as a Canadian I am outraged at the unashamed arrogance of a Government that shows absolutely no respect for the rights of the duly elected Opposition, a Government that does not think it has to disguise what is an open, naked act of aggression against democracy and our democratic institutions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: With this motion the Government has once again shown its complete and utter disregard for the traditional rights and freedoms that can be exercised by opposition Parties. When it does not like what we say or do, it simply changes the rules.

This is the Marcos and Pinochet approach to democracy. As a Canadian, I find it despicable and I find it disgusting.

Citation 1 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition states:

The principles that lie at the basis of English parliamentary law, have always been kept steadily in view by the Canadian Parliament; these are: To protect a minority and restrain the improvidence or tyranny of a majority;

Clearly, what we have here is a case of the tyranny of the majority running roughshod over the rights of the minority.

As you are aware, this is not the first time that this Government has proposed suspending the rules without the consent of opposition Parties. As the House Leader for the Official Opposition has indicated, last June the Conservative Government brought forward a similar motion to suspend the rules and the parliamentary calendar, something that had not been done since March 16, 1883.

At the time, in June, the Government said: "Do not worry, this is a very exceptional circumstance. It will not happen again". It has happened again. It is just a few short months and here we are with this band of parliamentary assassins back to their old tricks. Their justification is that the Opposition has the unmitigated audacity to want a thorough and comprehensive study of the free trade legislation. We all recognize that this legislation will obviously change the very structure of the Canadian economy. All the Opposition is asking is that we have a complete, thorough and comprehensive debate and consideration of this important legislation.

We recognize of course that the Government has a mandate to govern—no one is disputing that. The Conservatives fail, however, to recognize that they did not receive a mandate to make Parliament little more than a rubber stamp. As opposition Members our role—indeed our duty—is to hold the Government accountable for those actions. We have the right and the duty to demand a full and thorough parliamentary review of this legislation, especially in view of the large number of plant closings that have taken place since November 21.

I think all of us in this House would have to admit that thousands of Canadians now find themselves facing a bleak Christmas of unemployment with the impending passage of the trade deal before them.

Unfortunately, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) sees the situation, in his own words, as nothing more than a problem. We on this side of the House see it as much more than a problem. We see it as nothing less than a tragedy. The responsibility for this tragedy must be placed squarely at the feet of the Prime Minister and his trade deal.

I must say that there are several reasons I believe Your Honour should rule this motion out of order. First, the Government has said that it requires the House to sit beyond the normal day of adjournment because the trade legislation must be passed by January 1. Leaving aside for the moment the fact that the United States implementing legislation does not require this, there is a provision in the Standing Orders at the moment which allows for the House to be recalled when it is in the public interest. Standing Order 28(3) states:

Whenever the House stands adjourned, if the Speaker is satisfied, after consultation with the Government, that the public interest requires that the House should meet at an earlier time, the Speaker may give notice that being so satisfied the House shall meet, and thereupon the House shall meet to transact its business as if it had been duly adjourned to that time.

We on this side of the House are quite prepared to let you, Mr. Speaker, make the decision whether or not it is in the public interest rather than leave it to the parliamentary assassins across the aisle.

In Your Honour's ruling of June 13 earlier this year you stated the following:

Does such a motion require the unanimous consent of the House or a simple majority decision?

There is no doubt in anyone's mind that the House can amend or suspend its rules by unanimous consent. That is a given.

Often, we do that in this House to make it more convenient for Members on rather insignificant aspects. However we are talking now about a major piece of legislation.

Your Honour went on to state in your ruling:

A review of our present Standing Orders reveals that they are, unlike those in the Australian House, totally silent on the manner of suspension.

You went on to state that if the Speaker rules that the Standing Orders should only be suspended or changed by unanimous consent of the House, the situation could arise where the House could be in jeopardy of becoming procedurally the hostage of a single Member.

You continued by saying:

The unique flexibility of the British parliamentary system, a flexibility which has allowed for adaptations to an infinite variety of circumstances, would be jeopardized. Clearly that is undesirable.

I agree that we cannot allow the House to become the hostage of a single Member, but I put to you, Mr. Speaker, that we cannot allow the House to become simply a rubber stamp where the rights of the Opposition are trampled by the tyranny of the majority.

• (1730)

I think all of us as serious parliamentarians must ask the question: Where does this stop? In over 100 years of government suspension of the rules without the consent of the Opposition has virtually never occurred. In the last six months we have now had two attempts by this Government to do just that. When will it stop, Mr. Speaker? Will we find on the Notice Paper later this week a motion to do away with Question Period? Will we find a motion to do away with committees or to fundamentally alter the process of our debate? When will these parliamentary assassins stop? That surely must be the question you must weigh heavily today.

I return to Citation 1 of Beauchesne's. A fundamental principle upon which this House of Commons rests is the protection of the minority against the tyranny of the majority.

Here we have two competing concepts: the rights of the majority and the rights of the minority. I put it to you, Mr. Speaker, that you as the Speaker, whose job it is to protect the rights of all Members, must be the final arbiter between the two competing tendencies.

In light of your decision, however, of June 13 last, and in the light of Citation 1 of Beauchesne's, I would suggest that in this case there is a clear abuse by the Government of our rights as a minority. It is our contention that given this situation you must exercise your authority and rule this motion out of order.

I want also to add that the parliamentary rules, as I indicated earlier, permit you, Mr. Speaker, the option of recalling the House at any time the Government convinces you it is in the nation's interest. However, I do now want to conclude by saying that democracy as it expresses itself in this House is not a neat and tidy thing. Oft-times it is a tiresome affair, yet it is fundamental to our system. Without the recognition of the rights of the minority, we have no democracy. It is in that spirit that I make this intervention and ask you to rule against this particular motion.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to add some comments with respect to the procedural acceptability of this particular motion. The House will know that the Government has placed a motion on the Order Paper, the essence of which is to suspend the parliamentary calendar so that the House will not have the customary Christmas recess from December through to the middle of January. Instead, the House will sit Monday through Friday with the exception of Boxing Day.

The motion also expands the hours of debate so that an extra six hours of debate is added to each of Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday. It also provides that the legislation will be sent to Committee of the Whole House rather than to a legislative committee.

The Government takes the position that this motion is procedurally correct and in accordance with the precedents established in this House. I intend to keep my argument to the procedural aspect rather than engage in any rhetoric which can perhaps more better be put in a debate on the actual motion.

I want to examine very briefly the elements of the actual motion. The first element is to suspend the parliamentary calendar. That will mean that we will sit through what is referred to as the Christmas break. It does allow for three days at Christmas. We make no apologies for trying to expedite the legislation to implement the free trade agreement. We have a commitment in the free trade treaty with the United States to pass implementing legislation as soon as possible. We like to think that no matter what Party is in government, we are a country which keeps its international commitments, and we want to keep this one.

I would suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that members on the government side are prepared to work through the Christmas break in order that we keep our commitment. I am also pleased to note comments in the media of members of the Liberal Party, to be accurate, the Hon. Member for Humber-St. Barbe-Baie Verte (Mr. Tobin) who is quoted in The Gazette of Montreal as saying: "MPs are feeling pretty aggressive". That is fair. It continues: "We have people who do not even have Christmas on their minds. Some are even prepared to stay through some crucial holidays".

The Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) made the same offer. He said: "We are not prepared to bend the rules to facilitate the Government having an early Christmas, but we are prepared to continue sitting". We took them up on that commitment, Mr. Speaker, when we drafted this special order in order to facilitate passage of the Bill which flows from the Throne Speech. I point out that there is only one Bill flowing from that speech. It is the Bill before us, the Bill which was introduced today. It is our intention to rescind this special order once the free trade legislation is passed and has received Royal Assent.

Mr. Gauthier: It doesn't say that.

Mr. Lewis: Wait for it, if you would. Out of respect for what we understand to be the conventions expected by the Chair in such motions, we have not specified the Bill in the motion since at the time of the giving of the notice of the motion the free trade Bill had not yet been introduced. To specify the Bill in the motion would have been anticipatory and open to procedural questions. The point to note, Mr. Speaker, is that this motion, like the similar motion accepted last June, is generic in its provisions.

The second element is the special House order to extend the sittings from 6 p.m. to 12 p.m. Monday through Thursday. The effect of this, obviously, is to provide an extra 24 hours of debate a week. I do not understand why any Member would object to us expanding debate time to allow them to get their comments on the record. I am prepared to offer an additional time for debate if my colleagues opposite want to get on the record. We are prepared to sit through the next weekend. We would suggest we waive the quorum requirement and allow Members, on the basis that we waived the quorum requirement—

Mr. Gauthier: He is negotiating on the floor, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Lewis: It is a comment that has already been made in House Leaders' meetings. In any event, we are prepared to add that extra fillip to allow colleagues, and I can understand it, to have their comments reported in Hansard so that their constituents will know exactly where they stand on this. We are prepared to do that and we could enter into those negotiations.

The third element of this special order is to send all legislation passed during its force and effect to Committee of the Whole House rather than to a legislative committee. That will allow all Members to participate in the committee process rather than just the seven Members who sit on a legislative committee. What could be more fair?

For those who want extensive hearings and witnesses, I would suggest that there were extensive committee hearings held last summer. Many witnesses declined to appear, and the committee sittings were actually cut short from the recorded reporting date. I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that no government Bill in modern history has been subject to so much witness testimony and was so spectacularly well covered by the media as this Bill. Day after day there were the rebuttals of expert and layman critics. Obviously it was also a matter of considerable debate in the country during the recent general election.

I would like to read into the record so there is no confusion just exactly what did happen on the subject of free trade. In the last Parliament there were eight opposition days, thirty-five hours. The Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade—

Mr. Gauthier: What has that got to do with the acceptability of this motion? Tell me.

Mr. Lewis: One might notice that I did not interrupt Mr. Gray when he was speaking, nor Mr. Riis when he was speaking.

Mr. Gauthier: You promised you would stick to the motion. Stick to the issue.

Mr. Lewis: The Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade had 24 days of consideration, totalling 120 hours. There were government motions, four days of consideration for that, some 18.5 hours. Second reading of Bill C-130 took five days, some 30 hours. The legislative committee sat for 16 days, some 87 hours. Report stage of Bill C-130 took five days, and that took 30 hours. Third reading of Bill C-130 took two days, some 15.5 hours.

Mr. Cooper: What is the total?

Mr. Lewis: I am pleased the Hon. Member asked about the total. It is a total of 64 days of committee and House of Commons time, some 336 hours.

The Bill that has been introduced and printed today is virtually identical in content to the old Bill C-130.

The procedural precedent for this House order is the Chair's ruling of June 13, 1988. The Government of the day sought to suspend the parliamentary calendar in order to complete certain government business.

The major points in the ruling, which were all answered in the affirmative, were as follows: First, was it proper for the Government to give notice under Government Notices of Motions? The answer is yes. Can the Government initiate a motion to suspend the provisions of the Standing Orders? The answer is yes. Does such a motion, if in order, require unanimous consent or simply a majority decision of the House? The answer is yes. If the motion is in order according to precedents, has the recent parliamentary reform changed our practice fundamentally and rendered prior precedents inapplicable? The answer is yes.

I submit that the motion on the Order Paper is on all fours with Your Honour's ruling of June 13, 1988. I urge that the Chair rule the motion to be in order.

In closing, I would give notice that at the next sitting of the House, immediately before the Order of the Day is called for resuming debate on the motion, that is Government business No. 1 on the Order Paper, and on any amendments proposed thereto, I will move that the debate shall not be further adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: I will hear the Hon. Member in just a moment. Perhaps all Hon. Members will let me consult with the Clerk for a moment.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, first I want to say to the House that the Minister has attempted a procedure which was to put before the House something which cannot be done at this time. The Standing Orders of the House—and they will remain the Standing Orders of this House until they manage to destroy them—state at Standing Order 57 . . .

Some Hon. Members: Ah, ah!

Mr. Gauthier: Standing Order 57, read it, take them out of your desk, the Standing Orders are there:

Immediately before the Order of the Day for resuming an adjourned debate is called . . .

So the debate must have been adjourned. In addition, the debate must have begun, but all we are doing today is beginning the debate on procedure, on the acceptability of the motion. The debate has not been adjourned, Mr. Speaker, so the Minister cannot table in the House a notice of motion concerning Standing Order 57. That is strictly against the Standing Orders and I submit to the Chair that it must tell the Minister to go back to his books, learn the Standing Orders, and then come back to the House once he has done that.

[English]

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, in two minutes I would like to comment on the submission by the Government House Leader about committee hearings and the number of hours spent. As I recall, no travelling was done. There was extreme limitation on those who could appear. Many could not appear because any hearings that were held were in Ottawa only. There is more to this country than just the City of Ottawa.

House of Commons

Let me also suggest that the Government's main reason for proposing such a motion concerns a January 1 deadline. There is no such thing. That is only a target or an objective of the Government of Canada and the United States administration.

I believe there is an understanding and an exchange of letters that the implementation date of January 1 can be a later date.

There is also much made of doing this before Committee of the Whole and of the opportunity for all Hon. Members to speak. As I understand what is proposed by the Government, it allows for one day for 295 Members to participate. Surely it is a sham, as I hope you can easily conclude, Mr. Speaker.

Finally, it is incumbent upon you to decide when the Government is abusing the rules or when the Opposition is abusing the rules as they pertain to the rights of the majority and the rights of the minority. I urge upon you that if ever there were a classical example of an abuse of the rules and the rights of the minority, this is one of those occasions. I hope you will consider that when making your ruling.

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, I want to rise briefly to make comments and to participate in this point of order. First, I want to comment on the use of Standing Order 57 which was proposed in the closing remarks of the Minister when he attempted, erroneously I submit, to cut off the debate on this motion or give notice that he wanted to cut off the debate on this motion and even the acceptability of the motion.

I submit that Standing Order 57 states clearly: "Immediately before the Order of the Day for resuming and adjourning debate is called". Clearly we are talking here only about resuming a debate which has been previously adjourned. Right now we are speaking to this point of order regarding the acceptability of the motion. We have not yet debated the motion, therefore we have not adjourned the debate nor resumed it. Of course it has not been adjourned; it has not been started. We have not seen any of those criteria. Therefore, the use of Standing Order 57 is inappropriate.

Let me speak briefly to the acceptability of the motion proposed by the Government. The Minister promised to speak to the procedure and promised to demonstrate the precedents making his motion acceptable. I submit that the Minister has done neither. First, he spoke about a variety of things, some of which had nothing to do with procedure. More important, he promised that he would demonstrate the acceptability of the motion based on parliamentary precedents. He admitted later that his motion was deficient. He chose to add further assurances to the House, hoping that it would satisfy the deficiencies that are in the motion offered to us.

Second, and even more important, there was only one precedent he utilized to make his point, which was the ruling of Mr. Speaker on June 13, 1988. Of course, the Minister failed to mention that the main criteria for that ruling on June 13 had not been satisfied this time.

It has been said previously, and you yourself said it on June 13, 1988, that Citation 10 in Beauchesne's Fourth Edition was quite specific when it talked of a temporary suspension of the rules.

When discussing the temporary suspension of the rules, it is important to read the last paragraph of the Government's motion, the acceptability of which we are discussing right now. I read to you the last paragraph:

That immediately upon the House returning from the Senate after the first Royal Assent of this session, a Minister of the Crown may propose, without notice or debate, a motion to rescind this Order.

We have to remember that there is no obligation on the Government to rescind this motion or to propose a motion to rescind this motion at any time during the session, a session which could last up to five years. There is no compulsion, no obligation to do so.

First of all, there is no obligation to propose the cancellation of the motion and, second, there is no obligation then for the government majority to accept what the government Minister proposes if indeed he proposes it to start with, and there is not even an obligation to do that, so it is very clearly deficient in those two areas.

Assuming that there was an obligation on the Government to rescind that motion immediately after the first Royal Assent, I would submit to you that this motion would still be deficient because of course the Government could move and adopt any number of Bills. It could adopt its next Budget, it could adopt the Throne Speech, or it could adopt any number of things and not give Royal Assent to any of them and then give Royal Assent to all of those put together at some point in the future, enabling it to keep this ruling in force until that time. It does not matter because the "may propose" feature is offensive to the traditions of this House.

In closing, I submit that the Minister himself has probably now recognized that his motion is deficient. He has more than recognized it; he has actually admitted it in the House by offering certain corrective measures. I submit that the motion is so badly flawed that on the basis of those flaws themselves, the motion should be unacceptable to the Chair.

The assurances that the Minister has tried to provide to the Speaker and to the House in no way make the motion any more acceptable. I know the Speaker will rule on the motion as it has been put and as it is printed in its present form, not on good intentions expressed by the Minister after the motion has been put. After all, we know the record of this Government on keeping its word, and even more important, the Speaker, of course, has to rule on what is printed and what is offered to the House at this point.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we have now added a new wrinkle to this procedural debate. When we began this, we were all aware of what the government order of business was for the day, and as you were rising, about to put the question, the House Leader of the Official Opposition and I rose, you recognized us and we began a procedural debate on the acceptability of the government business of the day. However, my recollection is that the question was never put by Your Honour, that the question itself was never on the floor.

I would contend that the Deputy House Leader of the Government cannot give notice of closure on something that we are not even debating, yet I think that is what he has attempted to do. It is further abuse of the rules, traditions, and practices of this House.

I contend that for two reasons, this is out of order. The first is the nature of the motion of the Government under government business on the Order Paper and the second is what the Deputy House Leader has just done, which is to attempt to give notice of closure on a question that has yet to be put.

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to make some very brief submissions on this matter. I would submit, Your Honour, that the motion of the Government would result in a very serious and marked departure from the rules of this House. I would submit to you, Sir, that you ought to consider in the circumstances what the extenuating circumstances are that would warrant such a serious departure from the rules of the House.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the so-called January 1 deadline is not so sacrosanct that in the event that this Parliament does not rule on the free trade agreement by January 1, the result will be serious in nature. In fact, we are told by members of the Ministry that the January 1 deadline may in fact be extended.

Having said that, Sir, I would ask you to take into consideration the rights of the newly elected members of this Parliament. As you know, approximately 130 Members of the House are newly elected. In other words, the new Members did not participate in the debate in the Thirty-third Parliament on Bill C-130. This particular issue, the free trade agreement signed by our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and the President of the United States, was a central issue in the election campaign. In fact, it was a dominating issue in the campaign itself.

The people have in fact decided. Needless to say, a majority of those who decided and who cast their ballots in fact voted against the Government, against the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. Sir, the 130 newly elected Members, including members on the government side, have a right to express their points of view and to fulfil the mandate given to them in the election campaign, that is, to speak out in a full and complete discussion of the free trade agreement here in the House of Commons. To accept this motion and to deny the new Members of Parliament their opportunity to speak and to express their points of view on this particular piece of legislation would be to deny them their right to fulfil the mandate given to them in the general election of November 21, 1988.

In closing, might I say to you, Sir, that as the Speaker of the House you have an obligation to protect the rights of the newly elected Members of Parliament and to give them the opportunity to discuss this matter. Sir, might I remind you that a few short days ago, they put their trust in you to protect their rights, so I would ask you, Sir, to keep in mind my submissions when you deliberate on this most important point.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, I originally indicated my intention to speak on the motion in the name of the Minister of State for Treasury Board (Mr. Lewis) of December 12, 1988. However, the latest effort by the Government to have closure on a debate we have yet to start, I think, enhances what I wished to say in the first place. Not only are we in a situation where the Government is willing to suspend the rules for a specific piece of legislation, but we are now in the situation where even before we start debating a piece of legislation, the Government indicates that it wishes to use the closure motion, a motion which has almost never been used in the House of Commons. Its use, historically, has been restricted to such debates as the pipeline debate of 1957, and even in 1957, there is no question but that the pipeline debate had actually started in the House of Commons.

We now have a situation where the Deputy Government House Leader is rising before we have heard one word of debate on the topic and saying: "Before you start that debate tomorrow, Members of Parliament, we are going to bring in closure".

If we do not have any defence with regard to the Government's ability to change the rules at any time, what defence do we ever have?

I recognize that it is six o'clock, Mr. Speaker. I wish to continue my remarks tomorrow.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is my obligation at the moment to close the House, but before doing so I think it is appropriate to say that I have been listening with very great care to arguments. There is, of course, an argument on the motion. There is, of course, an argument raised on the secondary matter, that is the motion for closure.

I want Hon. Members to know that I am aware there are two issues which I have to address. I shall do the best I can to return to the House as speedily as possible after proper deliberation.

It being six o'clock, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

ORDER IN COUNCIL

TABLING OF APPOINTMENT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to table in both official languages an Order in Council appointment which was recently made by the Government.

While I am on my feet, I move:

That the House do now proceed to Orders of the Day.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis), which was agreed to on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PROPOSED HOURS OF SITTING

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will recall that yesterday afternoon I entertained extensive argument with respect to the motion standing under Government Order No. 1 for today. There were two important issues raised in that argument, and I am now ready to rule on those issues.

When Orders of the Day were called yesterday, December 14, 1988, the Hon. Minister of State (Mr. Lewis) proposed to move the motion standing on the Order Paper as Government Business No. 1. This motion, if allowed to be moved, debated and agreed to by the House, would have the effect of suspending various Standing Orders. Those Standing Orders relate to the hours and days of sitting, the adjournment proceedings, and the committee stage of public bills.

Both the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) and the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) rose on points of order at that stage to object to the motion being moved, arguing that it was procedurally unacceptable. They and other Hon. Members stated that the motion should not be allowed because it would contravene the recent reform to the Standing Orders by extending the hours of sitting and adding sitting days to the recently established fixed calendar. They also put forward the argument that this motion, by providing for all Bills to be dealt with in Committee of the Whole rather than in legislative committee, would also go against recent reforms and would prevent the hearing of witnesses at the committee stage.

[Translation]

The point was also made that because this motion related to all public Bills and could be in effect for the duration of this session, it was a potential abuse of the power of the majority.

[English]

During the discussion on these various points, the Hon. Minister of State proposed to give notice of his intention to move closure under the provisions of Standing Order No. 57 on the motion in question. Argument was then put forward by the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), the Hon. Member for Kamloops, the Hon. Member for Churchill (Mr. Murphy), the Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden (Mr. Benjamin), the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria), and the Hon. Member for York South—Weston (Mr. Nunziata), that such notice was not acceptable because debate on the motion had not yet begun.

[Translation]

At 5.00 o'clock p.m. yesterday, I took the two questions raised, the procedural acceptability of the motion and the acceptability of the notice of closure, under advisement, and I undertook to study both questions and return to the House as quickly as possible with my ruling.

[English]

Overnight and this morning I have considered most carefully the arguments raised and have consulted various precedents and authorities, and I am now ready to rule.

Let me begin by addressing various points raised on the procedural acceptability of the motion. The Hon. Member for Windsor West, in his remarks on his point of order, referred to a ruling I made in the 33rd Parliament on June 13, 1988, which can be found in Hansard for that date at page 16376. For the benefit of those members who were not with us then and those who follow our proceedings, I hope the House will bear with me as I quote what I feel is the essence of that ruling. The main question before the Chair at that time was: Can the Government initiate a motion to suspend the provisions of the Standing Orders? What I said was as follows:

"In order to answer that question, we should initially look to the Canadian authorities.

First, the current Canadian House of Commons Standing Orders in number 56, paragraph (1), subparagraph (0) [now Standing Order 67(1)(0)] have at least envisaged the concept of the suspension of the rules. That subparagraph declares that motions for the suspension of the Standing Orders are debatable motions. There is no specific direction as to how such motions are to be decided but such a motion is clearly subject to the provisions relating to notice, debate and amendment.

Second, Citation 21 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition refers to the rules of procedure generally:

The most fundamental privilege of the House as a whole is to establish rules of procedure for itself and to enforce them. A few rules are laid down in the British North America Act, but the vast majority are resolutions of the House which may be added to, amended, or repealed at the discretion of the House. It follows, therefore, that the House may dispense with the application of any of these rules by unanimous consent on any occasion, or, by motion, may suspend their operation for a specified length of time.

Citation 9 of Beauchesne's Fifth Edition gives further precision by stating:

All rules are passed by the House by a simple majority and are altered, added to, or removed in the same way . . .

Beauchesne's Fourth Edition amplifies more specifically on the Standing Orders by stating in Citation 10:

House of Commons

Standing Orders may be suspended for a particular case without prejudice to their continued validity, for the House possesses the inherent power to destroy the self-imposed barriers and fetters of its own regulations. It may even pass an order prescribing a course of procedure inconsistent with the Standing Orders. A motion for such temporary suspension requires notice . . . , but in urgent cases the notice can be waived . . . Any alteration in the regular procedure may be made effective by force of a simple resolution. This is one of the characteristics of British procedure and it has contributed in no small degree to the elasticity of our parliamentary system.

Furthermore, there are several precedents of such occurrences in the Canadian House found in the Journals for March 16, 1883, June 1, 1898, April 8, 1948, April 24, 1961, and May 14, 1964. Clearly then both the authorities and our practices allow for our Standing Orders to be suspended or amended by motion on notice.

The Speaker was urged by many Members to rule on this matter by using Standing Order 1 and referring to traditional parliamentary practice in other jurisdictions, if applicable . . . the citation on page 212 of May's Twentieth Edition is worthy of repetition:

Standing Orders are not safeguarded by any special procedure against amendment, repeal or suspension, whether explicitly or by an Order contrary to their purport. Ordinary notice only is requisite for the necessary motion; and some Standing Orders have included arrangements for the suspension of their own provisions by a bare vote, without amendment or debate.

The Chair has also looked to the Australian practice as commented on by J. A. Pettifer in House of Representatives Practice. It is clear the Australian House does deal with such motions on a regular basis. Their Standing Orders specifically provide for the suspension of a Standing Order on notice. Such motions are debatable, amendable and require only the majority of votes cast to be adopted. The Chair is reluctant to use this practice as a convincing authority because it is supported in Australia by a specific Standing Order. Reference to the Australian practice does, however, demonstrate that suspension of the Standing Orders is not foreign to other Houses in the Commonwealth."

That is the end of the extract from my earlier judgment. I should now address the two major new objections of the Hon. Member for Windsor West.

The Hon. Member is, of course, absolutely right in saying that the motion differs because it suspends Standing Order 78 which relates to legislative committees. The June 18 motion also suspended Standing Order 10, now renumbered 27(1), which denied the right of any Member to move a motion relating to extended hours. In my view, both motions did indeed suspend the calendar but they also suspended other Standing Orders.

[Translation]

As far as his argument that the proposal now before us is a permanent change, I must tell the Hon. Member that I cannot agree. The motion, if passed, would alter the Standing Orders for the duration of the First Session only. The duration is finite in keeping with Citation 21 of Beauchesne Fifth Edition and the motion does provide for an earlier expiry on motion of a Minister of the Crown after the First Royal Assent of the Bill.

[English]

The concept of studying legislation in Committee of the Whole House is certainly not foreign to our practice. Since the reform of 1968, after which most Bills were referred to standing committees, the journals abound with Bills reviewed in Committee of the Whole. Since the creation of legislative committees, the House has often waived the Standing Orders and often resorted to the Committee of the Whole for expediting business. The difference between most of those examples and today is that the House proceeded by consent rather than by motion. However, as I stated earlier, both methods for reaching such decisions are valid and stand on their own, whether achieved by unanimous consent or by a majority decision.

The Hon. Member for Kamloops did refer to and agree with my June comments that any other ruling would render the House hostage to a single Member if the House was required to proceed only by unanimous consent. He went on to claim, however, that this manoeuvre by the Government was an abuse and usurped the rights of the minority. I have some difficulty in reconciling these two positions.

On the one hand he concedes the danger of tyranny by a minority, but he does object at least in this case to the role of the majority. Both the minority and the majority have rights; however, primacy cannot be given to both.

Having carefully reviewed the arguments of the Hon. Member for Windsor West and the Hon. Member for Kamloops, as well as those of the Hon. Minister of State, I must advise the House that I am not persuaded that the motion on the Order Paper is fundamentally different from the June proposal. It is therefore in order.

I said last June that sometimes hard cases make bad law. This is another hard case. I am not pleased as your presiding officer to put this question to the House; but it would be bad law to do otherwise. I said just a few days ago that I am your servant. I cannot rewrite or reinterpret the rules at the behest of the majority or the minority. I have, however, a duty that the minority be protected and heard.

Let me now address on that note the question of the acceptability of the notice of closure. Standing Order 57 reads in part as follows:

Immediately before the Order of the Day for resuming an adjourned debate is called . . . any Minister of the Crown who, standing in his or her place, shall have given notice at a previous sitting of his or her intention so to do, may move that the debate shall not be further adjourned.

[Translation]

From a careful reading of this Standing Order, it is clear that the closure motion may only be moved "immediately before the Order of the Day for resuming and adjourned debate is called".

[English]

In addition, this may only be done if notice of the intention to move closure has been given orally in the House by a Minister of the Crown at a previous sitting. While the Standing Orders specify when the motion can be moved, and how notice is to be given, it is silent on when notice may be given.

The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier argued yesterday that notice could only be given after debate had begun. Standing Order 57 does not specify this. However, a search of numerous previous instances where notice of closure was given—going back to 1913 when the rule was first introduced—has failed to reveal an occurrence where notice was given prior to debate having begun.

It can be argued that merely because this has not happened previously that that does not prevent it from being allowed in this instance; that the Standing Order does not specifically prohibit this and therefore it should be allowed.

After a very careful consideration of this point, I am more persuaded by the weight of precedent and practice. Taking into consideration the gravity of the measure to be invoked and the necessity of protecting the rights of the minority, it is my feeling and decision that the intention of the Standing Order as drafted and as it has been applied is to allow a majority to impose closure only after debate on the question has begun. This is to ensure that such debate is not unfairly or prematurely curtailed. In this instance, debate on the motion had clearly not begun when the Hon. Minister served notice.

In resumé therefore I find that the motion standing on the Order Paper in the name of the Hon. Minister of State is in order and may be moved and debated. However, I cannot accept the notice of closure on that motion as proposed by the same Hon. Minister yesterday. Such notice can only be given once debate on the motion has commenced.

Again, may I close by thanking all Hon. Members who assisted the Chair with this extremely difficult decision by offering me the benefits of their collective wisdom.

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board) moved:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House, from the day of adoption of this motion the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 24, but not on December 26, 1988.

That, during such period, the Speaker shall adjourn the House on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays at midnight and on Fridays at 3.00 o'clock p.m., and that the provisions of Standing Order 38 in relation to the adjournment proceedings shall be suspended.

That, during such period, the Standing Order respecting the daily mid-day interruption of business on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays shall not be suspended;

That, at 6.00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, or at the conclusion of Private Members' Business, the House shall proceed to "Government Orders" pursuant to Standing Order 40(1);

That, for the duration of this session or until otherwise ordered, the provisions of Standing Order 73(1) and (2) respecting committee stage of Public Bills be suspended, and all such Bills be ordered for referral to committee of the Whole; and

That immediately upon the House returning from the Senate after the first Royal Assent of this session, a Minister of the Crown may propose, without notice or debate, a motion to rescind this Order.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would like to begin my remarks, if I may, by not commenting on your ruling but suggesting that with respect to the second part we appreciated there was no precedent. We took the position nothing ventured, nothing gained. I have to say that, upon reflection, I am in complete agreement with the ruling in that everybody appreciates that closure is a measure which one does not want to use all that often. For that reason I think that your ruling, Mr. Speaker, was sound and will benefit this place for years to come.

I made my remarks with respect to this motion yesterday. While I know that my colleagues opposite will benefit from the wisdom of those remarks if I repeat them, I will not refer at too great length to them.

Let us just lay out for the House what we are doing. We have placed a motion on the Order Paper which suspends the parliamentary calendar so that we will not have the customary Christmas recess. We are going to expand the hours of debate so that my colleagues opposite will have an extra six hours a day Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday to debate. We provide in the motion that the legislation will be sent to a committee of the whole House.

Extension of Sittings

Yesterday, I kept my remarks to the procedural part of the debate. I think that my colleagues opposite will benefit from some background as to why we are debating this motion at this time.

On January 1, 1988, the Government of Canada entered into an historic agreement with the United States, an agreement which will eliminate trade barriers over the next 10 years and provide a dispute settlement mechanism. That treaty was the result of two years of hard bargaining by the two countries. We feel that, on balance, we achieved a good deal for Canada. Our opponents disagree. So we set about to draft legislation.

We introduced a Bill in the last Parliament, Bill C-130. We allowed time for the Bill to be considered by the public. The Bill was fully debated in Parliament. Committee hearings were held. One should note that they were terminated before the deadline set by Parliament. The Bill passed third reading and was sent to the Senate.

At that point the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and his Party, who opposed the Bill from the start, said to the Liberal Senators: "Please hold up the Bill".

There were several quotes, Mr. Speaker, which were made in Hansard, in which the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said: "Let the people decide". The key thing, Mr. Speaker, is that the people decided—absolutely decided.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: They decided.

What happened after the people decided? On November 23 the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition said that his Party will not block free trade legislation, the people have decided. "They want the deal", he said. Here is another quote: "The people are always right", Turner told a few hundred subdued reporters". "We will be restating our position on the matter", Turner said in Vancouver yesterday, "but you know that we let the people decide".

• (1210)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Member for York—South Weston.

Mr. Nunziata: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I know my seat has been moved, but I am down here. I am still here.

Extension of Sittings

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Well, if your colleagues would leave the room, I would be able to see you standing up. Now that I have recognized you, would you please state your point of order.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I hope you are not commenting on my height.

I hope that the Hon. Minister will not intentionally mislead the House and Canadians by saying the people decided in favour of free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Mr. Nunziata: The fact is that the people—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Lewis: I will repeat the quotation. It is from the Ottawa Citizen of November 23, 1988. "Liberal Leader John Turner said Tuesday his Party will not block free trade legislation. The people have decided". That is his quote. When can I do? It is his quote.

I want to give equal time to the Leader of the New Democratic Party because the day after the people decided, there were some quotes that should be put on the record. "The people of Canada have taken a decision and now Mr. Mulroney has the right to continue with his free trade legislation", Broadbent said". That is from the Montreal Gazette of November 23, 1988. It gets better. The Globe and Mail: "He conceded that the anti-free trade forces had been decisively defeated". "The Canadian people have taken a decision and Mr. Mulroney certainly has the right to continue with passage of free trade".

A lot of people have forgotten the word "churlish", but not the Leader of the New Democratic Party. He said "It would be churlish and inappropriate to say something should be done about that law at this stage". Churlish. So here we are. I know we have had some procedural manoeuvring, but I suggest to my colleagues opposite that we proceed to debate this motion. I can give an undertaking, if my colleagues opposite want—and I am not suggesting closure of this debate. I know my hon. friend from Ottawa Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) is ready to pounce. But I would suggest, given that the Chair has decided the motion is in order, that if my colleagues opposite wish to curtail the debate, that if everyone does not want to debate this—I was going to say "ad nauseam"—at length, then we would be prepared to vote on this immediately. We can then get on to expedite what the Leaders of both Opposition Parties have said they want to do. They want to let us get on with the legislation. Why do we not get on with debate on the legislation?

Mr. Gauthier: Bad case.

Mr. Lewis: Would that not make sense to my hon. friend?

Mr. Riis: This is dictatorial, that is why.

Mr. Lewis: I suggest to the House that given all those quotes, all those deathless quotes from the Opposition about how we had the right to pass our legislation, that we get on with the debate on this motion, wrap it up as quickly as possible, and if we wrap it up before one o'clock, we can introduce the free trade legislation at three o'clock and get on with the debate. Surely, that is what we want. Surely, that is what we want to decide. Let us get on to the debate on the Bill.

In the alternative, we can debate this and eventually come to a vote. But if my hon. friends opposite want to debate the Bill rather than this motion, why not vote on it immediately?

Mr. Harvard: I rise on a point of order. I am a freshman MP and I am just wondering whether it is fair to a new rookie like me to have to listen to this kind of drivel.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: It is a fair comment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister.

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend opposite has certainly picked up the natural arrogance of the Liberal Party very quickly.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lewis: They used to be the natural governing Party. Now they are the natural arrogant Party. I do not know exactly what "drivel" he was referring to. I referred to several quotes from his Leader. Which of the quotes from his Leader did he consider to be the highest amount of drivel? Does he want me to repeat them?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Mr. Lewis: I can quote from the Toronto Sun: "We let the people decide and the people have decided", Turner told reporters". "Having stated our case, we will let the matter proceed". Is that the drivel you were referring to, Sir?

Extension of Sittings

Ms. Copps: You are not letting the matter proceed.

Mr. Harvard: Why do you not just close Parliament down?

Mr. Lewis: I could go on and repeat all these deathless quotes, but if my friends opposite want to get to debate on the Bill, why do we not debate the Bill? I do not think the case has to be put any more strongly. I suggest that we get on with a vote on this motion. Let us debate the Bill.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday of this week you had the honour to table our new Standing Orders, renumbered and reorganized. At our first sitting of this House, you gave us a copy of the Standing Orders, explained that there was a lot of hard work put into this reorganization and renumbering. We were happy because it does make more sense and it is easier to follow. But today we have a Government that says about those Standing Orders: "We don't think they are worth very much. We are going to make them disappear somewhere into the background. We are going to reinstate our position", which is limited debate, closure on debate, bang, whang, the Opposition doesn't count. The Government has a majority and, therefore, it has its own way. Those Members call that democracy. We call that dictatorship.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, the Tories have implemented with a certain arrogance that might even be malicious . . .

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: I am getting all the little Quebeckers excited! You over there know what arrogance is—you have acted that way long enough!

Mr. Speaker, the saying they go by is, "The end justifies the means." That is a proverb you certainly know and it is the principle of brute force. According to this principle, the end sought can excuse the wrong done to the one who suffers from it. The Government does not like the Standing Orders of the House. They say that they cannot work with those Standing Orders, that they cannot even understand them, that they cannot go by them. So they drop the Standing Orders and table in the House a proposal to limit time for debate.

Unable as we also said to manage the time of the House, the Government is trying with its majority to impose a provision that would have us pass within a few days what we consider to be a bad deal for the country. So Members must not be heard criticizing the Government. No! We must not criticize! The Opposition should not criticize! It is not right to criticize the Government. We must admit, Mr. Speaker, that they won the election, but we already know that! But even so, two Opposition parties in Canada got 57 per cent of the vote and these 57 per cent of the voters say no to the Mulroney-Reagan trade agreement, no to the deal, and it is our duty to tell this Government that with 43 per cent of the vote, it cannot continue with this mean-spirited arrogance of imposing its views, its way of seeing things, its methods, of using the Conservative bludgeon. That is what it is—a bludgeon. The Government is proposing to use it.

It is being used to lessen and cut off debate. It is used to ride roughshod over the Opposition, to undo what you would maintain, Mr. Speaker, the few powers a minority can have. The Conservative majority says that they will proceed speedily and have done with this question. But we tell them, we say again to them that we want to debate the motion. We want to debate this question and we are ready to do so. I have with me 81 colleagues who are prepared to make speeches today, tomorrow, on the weekend and next week and after Christmas to make this Government clearly understand that it is mistaken in making a proposal like this one.

• (1220)

[English]

This is the third time in 100 years that the Tories have put a motion to suspend the rules in order to force their way on Parliament. The first time was in 1888. A Conservative Government put a motion to suspend the rules in order to force a Bill through Parliament.

The most recent sad episode, of course, was in the spring of this year, in June, when the Government had a motion similar to the one before us today, forcing an extension of sittings into the summer and showing with great incompetence how it could not manage the time of the House.

The Government had the House sit in July and August until 10 o'clock at night. We called it legislation by exhaustion. The Government tried to exhaust us. It did not succeed. It exhausted its Members.

Now we have a proposal that seeks to accommodate those Members whom we did not see here in July or August. They were somewhere in the boondocks, sunning themselves. Here we have the same proposal to accommodate that same gang so that they can go somewhere south and sun their buns in the sun again, in order to accomplish what I do not think is possible, namely to fix the agenda of the House according to some timetable that some Members of the Tory Party had for holidays. I tell them to have a nice holiday but when they come back the House will be sitting again. Maybe they will have missed an important part of this debate, a democratic exercise which I think is very important.

We will have none of that. We will have none of that fixing of the agenda of the House of Commons to accommodate some Tory Member who wants to sun himself in the south.

Mr. Thacker: Sheer nonsense.

Mr. Gauthier: Let us get back to the open-ended, sloppy motion that we have before us. I want to take some time because it is indeed a motion that needs to be explained thoroughly. It is true that it has some similarity with the motion we debated in June, but it has other things we would like to explain to Members.

[Translation]

The motion can be summarized as follows: it seems to provide that the House will sit without interruption for an indefinite period.

Mr. Speaker said in his ruling that for him, the session was a definite period; therefore, the motion in question was acceptable.

Mr. Speaker, I do not wish to call your ruling into question or to reflect in any way on this judgement—I accept it. But I will remind you that a session can last as long as a parliament. We have already had parliaments that lasted only one session. We had one with the Conservative Government in 1979 that only lasted one session.

So there is nothing in this motion that says that this session will end some time, in January, February or March.

So the session could last as long as the present Parliament and end some time in 1992. That is what we meant, Mr. Speaker, when we said that this motion was open-ended and not time-limited.

The motion says that the House will not sit on December 26. That is the only day; obviously the day after Christmas, Sunday, December 25, is the 26th and the House would not sit then. But it would not adjourn on December 21 as provided in the Standing Orders of the House to resume its work on January 16 as the Standing Orders specify.

The motion makes it clear that the House would not adjourn at 6 p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays, but would continue sitting without interruption until midnight. The motion does not indicate that the House would use these extended hours to study specifically Bill C-2 dealing with the Mulroney—Reagan Trade Agreement. It does not state anything to that effect.

This motion which calls for the consideration of this bill is not limited in any way by the proposal. The third paragraph of the motion states that, for the duration of this session or until otherwise ordered, the provisions of Standing Order 73(1) and (2) respecting committee stage of Public Bills is suspended, and that all such Bills will be ordered for referral to a committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker, this would make it impossible for Members of the House to move amendments, for a committee of the Whole is not a forum where a political group represented in the House could submit a series of amendments for study. This is only possible during the clause by clause consideration by a Committee of the Whole.

Also, this motion would suspend the application of a Standing Order which requires the referral of all Bills to a specific committee that is independent from the House. It would also make it possible for the Government to go against a principle embodied in the rules of the House of Commons for the past 20 years. Over that 20-year period, the House has abandoned consideration of Bills in a Committee of the Whole. It is being done now through legislative committees, which is certainly a good thing, but the Government would like to suspend the relevant Standing Order and have the matter referred instead to a committee of the Whole.

Mr. Speaker, I should like to return to each of these provisions, because, on the one hand, whether it likes it or not, the Government cannot state that it is dealing in good faith, and on the other hand, these provisions contain some absolute nonsense. I will now deal with the latter.

At present, there is not a single committee in existence. According to our Standing Orders, within the first 10 sitting days after the commencement of each session, a striking committee must be appointed to determine exactly which Members will make up the standing committees. This has not been done. There is no possibility for ordinary Members or backbenchers to introduce Bills which would be subject to a random draw. It is the Chair, usually represented by the Deputy Speaker, that is responsible for this draw to establish the order of precedence; there can be no such draw on bills because no Standing Committee is sitting at present. I suggest therefore that paragraph 5 of this proposed motion is somewhat odd and absolutely out of order.

Extension of Sittings

[English]

I want to address every one of those paragraphs. I will number them because they need to be explained carefully. In my opinion, this motion, which strangely resembles the motion in June, was drafted hurriedly and in a sloppy fashion. Paragraph one, by accident or design states that the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 24. This precludes sitting on Saturdays or Sundays because the Standing Order speaks only of Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, Thursdays and Fridays. We do not know the Government's real intentions, but it had better not try Saturday or Sunday sittings because the Standing Orders say that it cannot do so.

The Minister proposed to the House in his speech a few minutes ago that if we want to sit Saturday or Sunday, the Government is open to that kind of proposal. His own motion prevents that from happening. I cannot see how he can have it both ways. He cannot make a proposal for study by the House today which says we cannot sit any other day but the days called for by Standing Order 24, then make a proposal while on his feet saying that we can sit Saturday and Sunday. He will have to make up his mind on that one.

Paragraph two, and I will not read it because Hon. Members can follow it in the Order Paper, states that the Speaker shall adjourn the House at three o'clock on Fridays. This is already provided for in Standing Order 24. It is redundant, to say the least. It is another instance, therefore, of bad drafting by the Government and demonstrates the Government's inability to put its business before the House in an orderly and proper manner.

Mr. McDermid: You are reaching, J.-R.

Mr. Gauthier: No, I am not reaching, I am just trying to show how badly drafted this is. The Minister of housing, the Minister for the ill-housed, is trying to make a comment. I am not reaching, I am just making sure he understands that we have analysed this.

Mr. Allmand: The Minister for the homeless.

Mr. Gauthier: The Minister for the homeless, as he is called.

Mr. McDermid: That is a great filibuster.

Mr. Gauthier: It is not a filibuster. Democratically, I have time to speak on this motion. I have listened to the Minister carefully. I have limited time. If he wants me to go on for an unlimited time, I can do that as well. I have all kinds of notes and tons of things to say, but if the Minister does not mind, I would rather that he keep quiet and give me a chance to put my comments.

Paragraph four of the motion refers to proceeding to Government Orders at 6 p.m. or at the conclusion of Private Members' Business. We know that there will be no Private Members' Business because there is no Private Members' Business before the House. Why was that put into the motion? I do not know, but again, it shows sloppiness and disorder in the Government's drafting of this motion.

Standing Orders 86 and 88 state that at least two weeks' notice must elapse before a Private Members' Notice of Motion or public Bill can be taken up. Hon. Members know that there are motions and Bills on the Order Paper right now. I have a few. I think I have five or six motions on the Order Paper myself because that is what we have to do. We put motions on the Order Paper so that we will have a chance of getting at least one pulled in the draw.

You know the game, Mr. Speaker. Twenty items are called, and if I want mine to be one of those called for debate at private Members' hour, I must put 20 or 25 notices on the Order Paper so that I will get a chance to have one drawn. However, there will not be a draw for two weeks. Yet the motion deals with Private Members' Business. That again is an example of bad drafting, unless the Government intends us to sit through January, February, and March, but at least for two weeks hence. If the Government intends that, it should say so openly. It should not give us this business of saying that Private Members' Business is suspended. It cannot be suspended because it does not exist. This again is a matter of simple, common logic.

We on this side must assume that this motion was put in order to expedite the passage of the Government's so-called free trade Bill through the House. Are we also to assume that the Government intends the Bill to be before the House for longer than two weeks? I suppose that is a logical conclusion since government Members are basing their arguments for the proposal that is before us on the assumption of two weeks at least. Are we also to assume that the Government intends the Bill to proceed without any Private Members' Business being dealt with in the House, or does the Government intend the motion to be extended indefinitely, for God only knows how long? However, the motion does not say that.

Has the Government other threats or forces in store for us besides the free trade Bill? I ask what else the Government has in its little Christmas bag. Will it make us happy and give us some legislation other than Bill C-2? The Minister says, "Watch me, trust me". Well, I do not mind watching him, but I do not trust him very much.

Paragraph five of the motion suspends Standing Orders 73(1) and 73(2) respecting committee stage of Public Bills, not just the free trade Bill but all Public Bills. We had a Ways and Means Motion before the House a couple of days ago, dealing with the free trade Bill, and if this order is still in effect some weeks hence, there may also be some Private Members' Business before the House. However, the motion suspends Standings Orders 73(1) and 73(2). It is another example of some pretty sloppy drafting.

If, in two weeks hence, there is a Private Member's Bill before the House during private Members' hour, we all know that it should go to a legislative committee, but because of this order of the Government, it will not be able to. It would go to a Committee of the Whole House. That does not make any sense. We abolished that 20 years ago.

Paragraph six states that after the House returns from the Senate following the first Royal Assent of this Session, a Minister of the Crown may, and I emphasize may, propose to rescind this order. The motion reads "may", not "shall". As pointed out yesterday in debate, if a Minister does propose this, it is a motion that is debatable, amendable and votable. How do we know how those people on the Government side will vote? When they come back from their little holidays, they may want to stay here for the whole of January because it is too cold outside. They may want to stay here until February, who knows. However, nothing in the motion provides that a Minister shall rescind the order. It provides that he may. It is not very difficult to understand. It is permissive.

If the Government chooses not to have Royal Assent until some time in June or next summer or next fall, nothing will happen. The Minister would not be able to move to rescind the order, even if he thought he should move to rescind it, because we would not have had a Royal Assent.

We do not do Royal Assent for every Bill we pass in the House. We do not want to disturb the Senate too often, so we gather a few Bills together and take a little walk down there for Royal Assent when there are several Bills requiring Royal Assent. How do we know when Royal Assent will be held? No one knows that.

This motion is so poorly drafted—

Mr. Nunziata: So what?

Mr. Gauthier: So poorly drafted.

Mr. Nunziata: I thought you called it pornographic.

Mr. Gauthier: Oh, no, it could be that too, but I will let you speak to that. I will stick with the facts.

I was saying that the motion is so poorly drafted that it is not possible for members of the Opposition to know what the Government intends, in what manner it intends to proceed, in what manner it would like Hon. Members of the House to proceed. It is not clear.

It being Christmas in a few days, we must presume that the motion is simply the latest example of the Government's inability to manage its business in the House. The latest example of incompetence and sloppiness was shown yesterday when government Members tried to move closure while they did not have the authority to do so. It is not for us to tell them what to do, but we would hope that some day they would get their act together and do things as they should be done.

Today is Thursday, December 15, at least three days into the session, and we are discussing a motion that would impose the will of the majority on the minority, that would settle a dispute between 160 elected government Members and some 130-odd elected Members on this side of the House who feel that—

An Hon. Member: That is a stretch.

Mr. Gauthier: Well, 82 plus 43 is 125. I said 130, but we may win a couple of these judicial reviews that are being held. One never knows, our numbers may go up by a few.

I believe it would be less than charitable—

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hereby give notice that at the next sitting of the House, immediately before the Order of the Day is called for resuming debate on the motion that is government business No. 1 on the Order Paper and on any amendments proposed thereto, I will move that the debate shall not be further adjourned.

While I am on my feet, I wish to advise Hon. Members that immediately after Question Period, the Government intends to call the free trade legislation, Bill C-2.

Mr. Gauthier: There we have an example of a Notice of Motion that is in order. They are learning. I would hope that—

Mr. Lewis: We now have it on highest authority.

Mr. Gauthier: No, no, I just want to give Hon. Members an example of what happened prior to this debate starting, going back to Tuesday evening. We were told in the House by the same Minister who just sat down that a letter had been sent to our House Leader proposing certain ways and means of disposing with legislation.

• (1240)

I stood up and said that I did not recall seeing that letter and I did not recall my House Leader receiving a letter. I asked what the Minister was talking about and said that I would like to reserve our comments. I walked out of here and, believe it or not, we were having House negotiations by means the press—we were having as we say in French——“negotiation through the belly”.

At that point the Government could not pretend they had sent a letter. Hardly a few minutes after coming into this House, the Minister sent a letter to this Party advising us of a proposal. He then rose in this House to suggest the letter was out. That letter had not been received, although the media, outside this place, had got the letter, Mr. Speaker. They had the letter, they had the proposal. The Minister thought he might get away with this. I went to see him and told him: Listen, this makes no sense. Where is the letter?

I then got a copy. On December 12, 1988, at 6:25 p.m., Mr. Speaker, nearly some 15 to 20 minutes after he announced it in this House.

[English]

The letter in question that we got later in the evening had already been given to the media. The Member wonders why we are kind of upset sometimes with his methods of negotiation. If you want to tell me something, Mr. Speaker, I know you will tell me directly right here and that you will do it properly. You will not tell the CBC, CTV or some other media that you have sent me a letter which I have not received. You would have the decency to make sure that those to whom the letter is addressed have received it. But not the Government.

The Government wonders why we are upset. That is a heck of a way to start a session having media intermediaries tell us what is going on. We do not like it. The Government should not be doing it. It is a bad way to negotiate. The letter with that notice was not done properly and the Government has indisposed many of us by doing that.

Let us finish with this motion, Mr. Speaker.

[Translation]

This motion, well now we feel it is wrong, incomplete, utterly ill-drafted, we cannot support it because it is not at this point easy to understand. It is not correct at this point either, Mr. Speaker, because it refers to all kinds of things that do not hold together and that will not be able to hold together, because hopefully we will not proceed the way the Government intends to. I will leave it at this, since the Government gave notice and other Members may have something to say about it. I will therefore yield to speakers from the New Democratic Party. But I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, on behalf of this side of the House, that Liberal Members will oppose the proposal.

[English]

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, if you listen carefully you can hear the muffled sound of jackboots in this place this morning.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: It is the kind of sound you attach to a dictatorial government. It is the kind of sound that you expect from totalitarian regimes which do not like Parliaments, votes or listening to people with opposing views. I am very sad today as I look across the aisle in the House of Commons of Canada.

Before I begin my remarks, which are not going to be pleasant remarks regarding this Government, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that if the Government wanted to debate free trade legislation today, why did it not have the debate begin at 11 o'clock this morning? We were here. We were gathered and we were prepared to debate. The Leaders of the opposition Parties were prepared to debate. But, no, the Government pulled a little procedural trick to force votes.

Extension of Sittings

In the Standing Orders are Routine Proceedings which give some kind of order to this place so that we can run it in a business-like way, but the Government said it was going to change that and ripped out that particular page of the order book. The Government is starting to rip out other pages. Here is the section that says the Orders of the Day in terms of debate will end at 6 p.m. That page will be torn out. Then where it says we will recess during Christmas, the Government has torn out that page as well. Where does it end? If we give this band of parliamentary assassins another four years they will have every bloody page in this order book torn out and there will be no more pages. That is the kind of tyranny which this Government is pushing toward every single day.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: This is almost parliamentary madness that we are experiencing. When was the last time a government did what this group of parliamentary assassins is doing today? The Government did it last summer, but then you have to go back decades to March 16, 1883. That was the last government which said it was going to throw out the Standing Orders, rip them up and suspend them. One hundred plus years have passed. We now have another band of parliamentary assassins and the Standing Orders that govern this place and enable us to do the business of this country properly in a business-like way have now been tossed out the window.

There are still a few pages left in this book of Standing Orders, but they are disappearing by the week.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: How did we get this book, Mr. Speaker? How did all of these Standing Orders which govern this place originate? It was a fine moment of Parliament when after months and months of deliberation, thoughtful caring deliberation, Members of the Conservative, the Liberal and the New Democratic Parties unanimously agreed on the way to do business and on the way the business of the House of Commons ought to be conducted. That was done after hundreds and thousands of hours of thoughtful discussion and debate. We had a unanimous decision, which does not often occur in this place, but we did and it was a very proud moment. I remember the day. A cheer went up in the House of Commons because of the tremendous amount of work that had been done by some extremely talented parliamentarians. But that was all for naught, Mr. Speaker.

The Conservatives say that they now have a slight majority which gives them the right to abuse this place.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Riis: Why are we surprised? I know that you will remember the day which was one of the darkest, dreariest, most damning days of this Parliament when the Conservatives said: "We don't like what is going on". They stormed the Chair, your chair. You are the servant of this House and they said "We don't like what is going on so we are going to disrupt Parliament". Conservatives were there shaking their hands and their fists. I am proud to say there was not a single New Democrat.

Mr. Nunziata: There was not a single Liberal either.

Mr. Riis: And not a single Liberal. There was a whole band of these assassins, if you like, smashing their fists on the table and pushing their fists into your face.

Mr. Nunziata: Were they wearing black boots?

Mr. Riis: No, they were not. But that is not all we can expect from this group on the other side of the House.

You can remember not long ago when they decided to close this place down. The Conservatives did not want to have a Parliament of Canada. They did not want to have a Question Period or an opportunity for debate. They were concerned because of a decision the Liberal Government had taken. They said: "We are going to fix the Parliament of Canada. We will shut it down". It was shut down for one, two, three, four, five and six days while the bells rang. This went on for seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven and twelve days, day after day. The Speaker had to sit in the chair all the time. You will remember, Sir, that that is the kind of behaviour the Conservatives have demonstrated time and time again, and here today we see it once more. When I say "Listen, one can hear the jackboots coming down the hallways", that is absolutely true, Mr. Speaker. We are getting closer and closer to a form of tyranny that the country has never seen before.

The Government states that it has an obligation to pass this legislation. There is no requirement that this legislation pass before January 1. We all know that. The Americans know that, Canadians know that, and all parliamentarians know that. The Government has this silly and arrogant attitude that it is going to show the Opposition Members, and jam this legislation through—rush it, ram it, jam it.

What type of legislation are we talking about, Mr. Speaker? Are we talking about a silly little Bill? Are we talking about a simplistic order of business? No. We are talking about legislation that will profoundly alter the structure of the economy of the country. This legislation will profoundly affect and redirect the social, cultural, and political future of this country. This is legislation that we should study carefully.

There is no question that the majority exists by the Conservative Government to pass this legislation. My Leader, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has stated that the Government has the right now to introduce this legislation and proceed with it. However, there is a difference between proceeding with it in a matter of hours in some silly, nonsensical way that we are doing now rather than dealing with it in a thoughtful, positive, and caring manner. That is what parliamentarians were elected to do. They were not elected to rip up the Order Paper and toss it out, or sit here on Christmas Eve and on the day after Boxing Day late at night to 2 a.m. to attempt to debate this legislation.

When one thinks about this legislation, it will profoundly change a whole number of major statutes in our country. For example, the Bank Act, the statutes affecting agriculture, industry, regional development, broadcasting, and trust companies. One could go on and on. We are not going to have time to discuss it seriously. There will not be witnesses coming in. I challenge any single Member across the way and ask if he or she knows what this is going to do?

Mr. McDermid: What new things are you going to say?

Mr. Riis: As well as the person that is always yelling and mouthy, Mr. Speaker. Do Members across the way know what this will do to the Broadcasting Act of Canada? When I sit down in a few moments Hon. Members will have a chance to stand up and tell us. I want someone to tell us if he or she understands what this is going to do to the Bank Act.

Mr. McDermid: Yes, certainly.

Mr. Riis: I wonder.

Mr. McDermid: It's positive for Canada.

Mr. Riis: I doubt it. That is why we need the opportunity for the legislative committee to invite expert witnesses to come forward and outline what this legislation will do. Oh, no, do Members opposite want expert witnesses? No, they do not. However, Mr. Speaker, why should we be surprised that the Conservative Government does not want to hear anybody who understands this Bill? When the Government introduced the child care legislation, it brought in witnesses. Every single witness stated that it was stupid legislation. Did the Government Members listen to those witnesses?

Mr. Allmand: No, they rammed it through.

Mr. Riis: They rammed it through again. What type of place has this become where the Government invites whole numbers of experts in the area of child care, listens to them, and then ignores everything that they say. That is the way the Government does business. Why is it that the Government does not want to hear a single witness about the trade deal? Why does the Government not want to listen to a single witness about the enabling legislation? Because the Government knows that it will ignore their advice anyway. Therefore, the government Members say: "Forget about it. Let's just jam it through here".

In this business one should not make predictions, but I am going to. I predict that the Conservative Government will invoke the heavy, brutal hand of closure at every stage of the trade legislation. We have already seen the Government attempt to slip it in yesterday prematurely, and not knowing the rules of the House the Speaker had to rule it out of order, however the Speaker did it at the next opportunity so there is closure even on this debate. This debate is to tear up the Standing Orders, suspend them, throw them out the window, and allow this majority to do whatever it wants. Is that really in the best interests of Canada? Because the Conservative Government has a majority of Members in the House of Commons, it now believes that it can do anything that it wants, throw out the window the Standing Orders and the rules that govern this place. Is that the type of Parliament, House of Commons, and Government that Canadians want? I say no.

If there was a need to recall Parliament during the Christmas recess to discuss this trade deal, there is a provision in the Standing Orders that permits it. Standing Order 28(3) gives the Speaker of the House of Commons the right to recall Parliament if there is an emergency or some need. If the Government, following the traditional Standing Orders, could make a case to the Speaker who was duly elected by the Members of Parliament to be our servant, and convince the Speaker that it is necessary and in the best interests of this country to recall Parliament to deal with the trade legislation, that could be done. The Speaker has the right to do that. However, no, forget the Speaker of the House of Commons. That is what this motion does, Mr. Speaker, it states that your chair is not worth anything because your advice is not worth anything. The Government is much smarter in terms of determining the priorities than the duly elected servant of the House of Commons. The Government ignores the Speaker, ignores Standing Order 28(3), it is going to decide when the House sits and how the business is conducted.

What is the next order of business? I wonder if next week the Minister of State for the Treasury Board or the Deputy House Leader will rise and state that the Conservatives have decided to do away with Question Period. "We do not like Question Period. The questions are too tough, we look too silly during Question Period, so we are going to do away with it." Presumably that will be the next motion that we will debate. The Government is then going to say: "What is all this business about having to sit in the House of Commons all year long? We will just come for a couple of days of the year to transact some business. What about allowing Members of Parliament to speak freely in debate? We should do away with debate." The Government has the right, presumably, to do that.

One hundred years passed in this country before the Government decided to invoke this type of change of the way we do business, to set aside and suspend the rules to allow it to proceed with its partisan political agenda. If that partisan agenda now suggests that we should do away with Question Period, presumably that is what will happen. If there has ever been an example of the abuse by the majority on the minority, this is it.

I do not believe that our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) understands what parliamentary democracy is all about. I do not think the Prime Minister of Canada cares how the Parliament of Canada ought to operate. There is a role for the Official Opposition. We grant the fact that the Government of Canada was elected with a majority to govern. There are rows and rows of Opposition Members who were elected to provide thoughtful and effective opposition. That is what we are attempting to do, but we are not allowed to do it. We are not allowed to follow the usual rules.

We are disappointed that expert witnesses will not be able to come before us and explain the effect of this enabling legislation on critical pieces of legislation. We are concerned that we are now going to have to legislate by exhaustion. For some mysterious reason the Government decides that, if it can keep us here all day and half the night day after day, this is the way to jam, ram, and bash this legislation through the House of Commons.

An Hon. Member: Poor you.

Mr. Riis: I am prepared to sit here for the next six years to debate this. However, I cannot believe that Members opposite, without naming them, actually in their hearts believe that this is the way to conduct business. I cannot believe the Members opposite actually believe that this is the right thing to do. If Members opposite believe in the institution of Parliament, they cannot believe that this is an appropriate mechanism for the Government now to be injecting. I challenge government Members, if they are serious about the debate, why were we not debating this today at 11 o'clock.

I challenge those Members opposite at three o'clock to rise in their place and explain what this legislation will do to the Bank Act, the Trust Act—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Before I leave the chair, the Hon. Member will have seven minutes left in his debate, plus 10 minutes for questions and comments.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the Chair until two o'clock p.m.

The House took recess at 1 p.m.

WORLD BANK
ENVIRONMENTAL IMPACT STUDY REQUIREMENT

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, in September the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) addressed the International Monetary Fund and World Bank meeting, held in Berlin, at which time he committed Canada to the principle of sustainable development and to changing World Bank policies so that environmental impact studies are done before projects are approved.

The Minister of Finance will have an opportunity to back his words with action when, in January, 1989, the World Bank will decide upon an application by Brazil for a $625 million loan to build dams, which project will flood rain forests and destroy the way of life of native Indians.

How will Canada vote on that application?

If the Minister meant what he said in Berlin, Canada must vote against this project and lobby other nations to join us. Canada must not support further destruction of tropical rain forests.

In urging the Minister of Finance to live up to his commitment and have Canada vote against this loan to Brazil, we want to emphasize that his credibility, and Canada's, are on the line.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

MATANE PAPER-MILL PROJECT

Mr. Jean-Luc Joncas (Matapédia—Matane): Mr. Speaker, the people in my riding have learned with enormous satisfaction that the federal Government has agreed to participate financially in the development of a regional paper mill project in Matane. As our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had already promised in this House, the Conservative Government did not waste 20 years before reacting positively and supporting in a concrete fashion this major project for the enhancement of this long overlooked and disadvantaged area.

The Free Trade Agreement with our American neighbours will undoubtedly make it possible to consolidate this project and continue to encourage the inflow of foreign capital, which will enable us to process our own raw material and ensure, through job creation, a better economic future for all my constituents.

May I take this opportunity to offer my best wishes for this holiday season to my constituents and express to them my gratitude for their support during the recent elections.

FISHERIES

WEST COAST FISH PROCESSING REGULATIONS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano—Howe Sound): Mr. Speaker, if one goes to Japan and asks local residents what they associate with British Columbia, more often than not mention will be made of our fish products, with particular emphasis on the outstanding taste and quality of our British Columbia coastal salmon.

As you well know, Mr. Speaker, this is a reputation that we in British Columbia want to maintain, and that is why it is so important to have in place regulations which ensure the highest standards of quality control for all fish products.

Thus, as our Government pursues with the United States measures to replace the old fish processing regulations on the West Coast, which were found to be in violation of the GATT, we must put forward proposals which maintain controls over our fish exports, thus allowing us to ensure conservation of the resource while producing a healthy and safe product for consumers.

Only in this way can we continue to pursue new markets, confident of the quality of our British Columbia salmon.

FORESTRY

CALL FOR CREATION OF SEPARATE DEPARTMENT

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, the Report of the Auditor General points out serious problems in the Canadian Forestry Service. Five provinces were studied, including Vander Zalm's British Columbia.

In its first value-for-money audit of the Service, the Auditor General's Office found that guidelines are not being followed and that the NSR is continuing to grow.

The report points out the clear mismanagement of the Forestry Service by the Progressive Conservative Government.

I call upon the Government to create a full-fledged Ministry of Forests and to provide that Department with some legislative reality.

S. O. 31

We cannot wait until another election for a FRDA 2 agreement to be signed. We need action now to help solve the forestry problems in British Columbia and in my riding of Prince George—Bulkley Valley.

CANADA POST CORPORATION

RURAL POST OFFICES—SECOND ANNIVERSARY OF RURAL DIGNITY ORGANIZATION

Ms. Catherine Callbeck (Malpeque): Mr. Speaker, it is with pleasure that I speak in the House today on behalf of an organization that has worked diligently for the past two years for a cause which I wholeheartedly support. The organization, Rural Dignity, has concerned itself with the preservation of the rural post office.

In a rural community the post office serves as a focal point. I have spent the better part of my life living in rural Prince Edward Island and I know what a necessity the post office is to my community and its surrounding area.

Today, Rural Dignity is celebrating two years of existence, an existence which has dedicated itself to the education of government and citizens alike on the value of the post office in rural Canada. I know members of my Party join with me today as we acknowledge the second anniversary of this organization, and I invite all Members of this House to commemorate this necessary and worthy cause.

HUMAN RIGHTS

BICENTENNIAL OF FRENCH REVOLUTION

Mr. Fernand Jourdenais (La Prairie): Mr. Speaker, as a land where freedom flourishes, Canada is an oasis where individual rights are now protected by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

We are proud and happy to enjoy freedom in every sense of the word. Thanks to the French régime, we are heirs to lofty principles of freedom and equality.

In this context, we will have an opportunity in a few days to commemorate the 200th Anniversary of the French Revolution. Mr. Speaker, forty years ago, French Professor René Cassin, who now rests in the Panthéon, drafted the Universal Declaration of Human Rights together with Mr. John Humphrey, a great Canadian who played a predominant role in the fight for human rights.

Today, Mr. Speaker, my colleagues and I want to pay tribute to the recipient of the United Nations Human Rights Prize for his contribution to the affirmation and development of human rights both nationally and internationally.

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY

CONSULTATION SOUGHT ON POSSIBLE LOCATION

Ms. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, two years ago space industry representatives welcomed the news that a Canadian Space Agency would be established. A year later they were accusing Ottawa of playing politics, and dragging its heels, causing confusion, uncertainty, and investment holdbacks in space activities.

A well-established agency will create a strong international presence, keep our industry at the leading edge, and ensure every region in Canada benefits from our investment in space. The space industry is now found in all regions, from Vancouver to Halifax, supported on a foundation of research in federal Departments and agencies.

Members from Ottawa-Carleton have written the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) requesting a full briefing for all Members on this important issue of our space program. I call upon the Prime Minister to consult with industry representatives from across the country to seek their advice and to ensure that the space agency is established in the best interests of the industry and in the national interest.

ENERGY

CAROLINE, ALTA.—$600 MILLION GAS REFINERY AND SULPHUR PROCESSING PLANT

Mr. Doug Fee (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege for me today to share with this House my pleasure about an announcement made a few days ago concerning my riding of Red Deer.

The Caroline Area Gas Development Group, fourteen companies headed by Shell Canada, has announced a proposal to proceed with a $600 million development, including a natural gas refinery and sulphur processing plant near Caroline, Alberta.

Over 1,200 construction jobs will be created.

There will be permanent employment for 150 people locally and over $17 million a year pumped into our local economy.

There is no federal Government funding in this project. These 14 companies are confidently investing in their future because they believe they can compete.

With renewed confidence in government policy and more secure access to U.S. markets to be gained from the Free Trade Agreement, Canadians are going to see more projects like this one in Caroline.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

COMMUNITIES DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM

Mr. Michel Champagne (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for External Relations): Mr. Speaker, the residents of the Des Cheneaux-Mekinac region are proud and believe they can look forward to challenging social and economic development opportunities.

This is why my Government, responding to meet the aspirations of our people, has earmarked $2.3 million under the Community Futures Program.

As they carry out this project, community groups are setting up the structure and the financial mechanism which will pave the way for a more diversified local economy and, in turn, for new and permanent jobs as well as better living conditions. Mr. Speaker, this is yet more evidence that our Government believes in regional development, diversification and, above all, success

INDIAN AFFAIRS

FIRE-FIGHTING FACILITIES ON RESERVES

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, while visiting the 23 Indian communities in Prince Albert—Churchill River, I was often struck by the level of human misery which we permit in this rich country.

On November 25, seven-year old Colleen Fern died in a fire on the Fond Du Lac Indian Reserve in my constituency. Four days later, on November 29, three and a half-year old Jordan Sumner died in a fire on the Fairford Indian Reserve in Manitoba.

In both cases the available fire-fighting equipment and the training of the fire-fighters were far short of what was required.

This situation amounts to criminal negligence. Surely if the trustee relationship we have with the Indian people means anything it should mean that the Government of Canada will move immediately to ensure that Indian families in our country do not have to go to bed this winter with the fear that the fire-fighters in their communities do not have the tools to do the job.

Do any more children have to die before the Government acts?

FREE TRADE

IMPORTANCE OF IMPLEMENTING TREATY

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): On a number of occasions, Mr. Speaker, the socialist NDP leader asked that the whole question of free trade be put before the electorate. He kept saying: Let the people decide.

After the elections the socialist NDP leader stated: In keeping with our parliamentary tradition, Canadians have decided and Mr. Mulroney now has the right and the mandate to have the free trade legislation passed.

S. O. 31

Mr. Speaker, the socialist NDP leader has known for months that January 1, 1989 is the date of implementation of the Free Trade Agreement and, last November 21, the people gave the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) a clear mandate to carry it out.

TRADE

UNITED STATES TARIFF ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Mr. Len Hopkins (Renfrew—Nipissing—Pembroke): Mr. Speaker, the softwood lumber industry in many parts of Canada is in serious trouble today because of the reckless and insensitive wheeling and dealing of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and members of his Cabinet.

The Government caved in to the political pressures of the United States two years ago and imposed a 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood lumber destined for the United States. The Memorandum of Understanding signed on December 30, 1986, contained so many exceptions that most lumber enterprises were confused.

The Prime Minister and his then Trade Minister refused to give the Canadian industry a chance to fight its own case to prove that no countervail action was justified and, hence, that a 15 per cent export tax should in any way be levied.

The Prime Minister wanted a trade deal with the United States so badly that he simply caved in and sold out the Canadian softwood lumber industry. Equally as bad, he sold out the workers in the industry. The situation today, in particular in Ontario, is serious.

Because of the 15 per cent export tax and the damage that a higher priced Canadian dollar is doing to the Canadian softwood lumber industry, many less efficient American producers are taking over traditional Canadian markets as far south as Tennessee. In the meantime millions and millions of feet of softwood lumber are piling up as inventory in lumber yards across Canada.

I call upon the Prime Minister and his Government to negotiate their way out of the Memorandum of Understanding with the United States, a document which they should not have signed in the first place.

To the Prime Minister I say: Get with it and support Canadians.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

TRADE

UNITED STATES TARIFF ON CANADIAN SOFTWOOD LUMBER

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In December of 1986, the Government knuckled under to pressure from the American lumber industry and signed a Memorandum of Understanding with the United States to impose a 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood lumber shipments into the United States. The Government has incorporated that understanding and perpetuated that 15 per cent tax by reason of Article 2009 of the proposed trade agreement with the United States.

Since January, 1987, the value of the Canadian dollar has increased by over 15 per cent as against the American dollar. This combined with the 15 per cent export tax puts every sawmill in Canada in financial jeopardy and puts at risk hundreds of thousands of Canadian jobs. It is estimated that many plants will shut down over the winter in northern Ontario and central British Columbia alone.

Will the Government table its plan to meet this growing crisis? And what does the Prime Minister intend to do about it?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, once again the Hon. Leader of the Opposition brings up an unfortunate occurrence that would likely not have occurred, or could have been considerable ameliorated, if we had had the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement in effect when this incident occurred.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie (St. John's West): One has to ask oneself, if the Leader of the Opposition is genuinely concerned about these kinds of situations, why has he opposed the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement as he has? Why is he obstructing the House of Commons now in our attempts to get the legislation passed before the end of the year? Why does he not co-operate if he wishes to help the softwood industry in Canada?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious the Minister has not read the agreement even now. He says this never would have happened had we had the agreement. Article 2009 re softwood lumber reads:

"The Parties agree that this Agreement does not impair or prejudice the exercise of any rights of enforcement measures arising out of the Memorandum of Understanding on Softwood Lumber of December 30, 1986."

It incorporated this understanding into the agreement. I do not know how we deal with a Minister who is not in charge and control of his own dossier. I do not know how we deal with it.

CURRENCY EXCHANGE RATES

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Let me put a reasonable proposition to the Minister in the current circumstances. Will not the Government at least negotiate with the Americans to ensure that the change in the relative values of our exchange rates is somehow taken into account in the imposition of this tax? In other words, will the Government of Canada attempt to ensure that the tax of 15 per cent is indexed against the changing difference in the comparative values of our dollars so that the industry is not faced with a double penalty?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, frankly, I do not know how the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition could ever claim that he had read the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. If he had read it his campaign would not have proceeded in the last 10 weeks as it did proceed.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I am answering the question of a failed crusader, of course. I might point out that—

Mr. Tobin: What about the crusade in Newfoundland, John? What about Newfoundland?

An Hon. Member: Tell us about Atlantic Canada.

Mr. Crosbie: There are the crusaders. They are still crusading. They have crusaded themselves right into an unpalatable situation in the last couple of days. They cannot accept defeat. It is time they realized that the election was won by the Government.

Mr. Speaker: The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I suppose that is the best the Minister can do. You have one final strike ahead of you, Mr. Minister.

[Translation]

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, the Government's attitude is absolutely unacceptable. One of Canada's largest industries is being wiped out. The facts are there; saw mills are closing down across the country, including Quebec, and Canadians are losing their jobs. But the Government does not want to do anything.

Why is the Government of Canada including this 15 per cent tax in the trade agreement with the United States? Why does it not insist on negotiating with the Americans to exclude this tax from the agreement? Why is the Government not prepared to defend workers throughout the country, especially in the lumber industry?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, one of the virtues of the Free Trade Agreement is that it will help the forest industry of Canada tremendously in the future—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: —as testified to by the support of companies such as Abitibi Price during the recent election campaign, which made that clear in their advertising.

The FTA simply grandfathered the Memorandum of Understanding on softwood lumber which had been entered into before the FTA was concluded. The Free Trade Agreement is not retroactive, but this is a problem that can be assisted by the provinces. If there is a great problem because of the change in exchange rates, then the provinces have an opportunity with respect to their stumpage rates or other means of helping their own forest industries.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They cannot change their stumpage. You know it.

Mr. Crosbie: The forest industries of this country, of course, are the forest resources owned by the provinces. This is a situation that could have been prevented had we had our U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement earlier.

INDUSTRY

GILLETTE CANADA—ANNOUNCED PLANT CLOSURES

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, Gillette Canada has been a profitable blade and toiletries manufacturer in Canada for 85 years. It enjoys 72 per cent of the consumer market and has never missed a dividend payment. It has been a good corporate citizen until now.

Two days after the election, Gillette announced closure of its Montreal and Toronto plants, putting 600 workers directly out of work, and hundreds more indirectly because of loss of suppliers' contracts. Why did the Government not take any action to try to stop these close-downs of these two profitable plants? What message was sent to the consumers and workers of Gillette and to corporate Canada that indicates our dissatisfaction with this kind of behaviour? Is not the Government's laissez faire attitude sending a wrong message to corporate Canada?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, Gillette undertook, as many reasonable and decent companies do, a thorough review of its operations. I would like to tell the Hon. Member that those operations include 61 manufacturing plants spread over 28 countries in a very competitive, global environment, an environment in which we want to be present and active through agreements like the Free Trade Agreement.

We find that Gillette, after a careful examination of those 61 plants, decided to close plants not only in Canada but in the United States, in Argentina, in Brazil, in Australia and in Great Britain. It is to make sure that the company remains a sound corporate citizen world-wide and responsive to the needs of its employees.

Mrs. Finestone: Mr. Speaker, I did not know that the President of the Treasury Board was a member of the Gillette board of directors and was giving us the Gillette board report. I was not asking for that and the workers of Canada were not asking for that. They have been profitable workers for the company.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mrs. Sheila Finestone (Mount Royal): Mr. Speaker, why could our Government not show the same courage as the Government of France and show its disagreement with this procedure? You lack courage!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mrs. Finestone: Our Government issued no ultimatum to show its disagreement with this shutdown. Tell me, do you not think that workers and consumers find your attitude unfair? My question is: Does the Government want to make Canada an outlet for American products only?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to remind my hon. colleague who likes to quote facts from the past that I have not been President of the Treasury Board for more than a year and a half now. The President of the Treasury Board had very little to say in Gillette's decision; the President of the Treasury Board is not a member of Gillette's board of directors either.

We are concerned by this situation. We realize that there will be some lay-offs in Canada. We also realize that throughout Gillette's total system, more than 3,000 people will be laid off in foreign countries.

What we want to ensure is that our Canadian jobs remain in Canada in an industry that is competitive throughout the world. We want to maintain and increase the number of those jobs; it is with more technology, more rationalization, better management, better marketing systems that this can be achieved and that is what the company is doing, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

NORTHERN TELECOM—JOB CUTS

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, I would like to put a question to the Prime Minister. In the past 20 years Northern Telecom has received at least $43 million in grants, in taxpayers' money, from the people of Canada, and hundreds of millions in low-interest-rate loans have supported its exports. Yet it is now cutting over 800 jobs. I want to ask the Prime Minister personally if he will not intervene in this case, given all this government help, and see to it that Northern Telecom is told that it owes the people of Canada and it owes these 800 workers their employment.

Oral Questions

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, we are facing here again a question of rationalization. We are facing a question—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nunziata: Famous last words. Tell that to the workers, you dumbo.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister.

Mr. de Cotret: I would just like to elevate this debate to a question of facts. There are 650 employees in Aylmer, Quebec, and 250 employees in Belleville, who will be displaced by this rationalization move. Three hundred of them will be replaced immediately in Canada. There are investments planned by Northern Telecom of some $30 million in St. Laurent and there is another additional expenditure by Northern Telecom in this rationalization effort of $20 million for a technology lab of world class, very close by here in Nepean.

● (1430)

The company is doing its best, as it should, as a good corporate citizen to remain competitive and maintain its position in world markets for the direct benefits of its employees.

ANNOUNCED CLOSURE OF PLANT IN AYLMER

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, when the $30 million investment in St. Laurent was announced back in July—and I have here the announcement—the company stated that there would be absolutely no negative consequence for the plant in Aylmer, Quebec.

How can the Minister now stand up and justify the shut-down of that plant in Aylmer on the basis of this expansion in St. Laurent when, in fact, the company in July contradicted him flat out?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would also like to add that we are quite encouraged in our ongoing conversations with the company to see the extent to which it is concerned about the dislocation of employees. The company has put aside on its own, to supplement Government programs designed directly to assist those employees, some $2.5 million, and there is its firm commitment to maintain its research and development efforts in Canada at the same level as it has over the last number of years.

Oral Questions

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, the question is not whether people should be encouraged by the company's response but by the Government's response.

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT INTERVENE

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, will the Government finally get tough and say to this company, which has received so much in Government money and privileges in the past, that all of that is finished, all of it will be reviewed and must be paid back if these jobs are not kept in Canada for the future? This is a test case for the free trade future of Canadian workers right across the country. Will the Government not get tough and act?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, the Government will make a very serious undertaking, one that it has followed throughout its years in power. Whenever we give a grant to a company anywhere in this country conditions are set. There is a control period. The purposes of the grant are monitored and we ensure that the Canadian taxpayers' money given to a company, whether the grant be for research and development, whether it be for expansion, whether it be for job creation, is spent in the way for which it was designed. We have done that in every case, and we are doing it in this case.

FUTURE OF EMPLOYEES IN BELLEVILLE

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for Employment and Immigration. The events of the past week related to the announcement by the Northern Telecom closure of its electronics plant in Belleville as of March 31, 1989, have made it clear that industry is beginning its adjustment to the Free Trade Agreement. For my part, I am concerned with how my constituents, now and in the future, will be able to adapt to this environment.

What steps are being taken by the Minister's Department to ensure that the employees of the Bridge Street Northern Telecom plant in Belleville will be able to keep their jobs or will have equivalent jobs in their own community?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the Northern Telecom plant as in all of the plants, as the Hon. Member knows, will be provided with training programs for their employees.

I am very pleased that the company is moving ahead with this and that the Industrial Assistance Service is there to work with the company and with the employees in terms of their future plans. We have done that in the past and we will do it in the future wherever there are lay-offs for whatever reason.

ROLE OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. Lyle Vanclief (Prince Edward—Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question. That type of answer is not satisfactory to the workers in Belleville.

Some Hon. Members: Why?

Mr. Vanclief: Inaction is not accepted. I have had phone calls to my office as recently as this morning from a lady who, with her husband, has been at Northern Telecom for eight or nine years and both of them are losing their jobs on March 31. During the election you promised more.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Vanclief: Could the Minister tell us when the employees in Belleville will be contacted by her Department? As of this morning they have not had any contact indicating the help they deserve and to which they are entitled.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, my Department and my officials are very aware of what has been going on at Northern Telecom both in terms of the kind of structure that it is putting in place for training and in terms of how we plan to monitor this in the future.

The IAS is standing by ready to work with the workers, with the employees and with the employers. Let me point out that the IAS has a success rate of about 85 per cent to 95 per cent in replacing workers.

HOUSING

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—CONSTRUCTION OF HOUSES ON DOWNSVIEW SITE

Mr. Alan Redway (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Housing. Prior to the last election the Minister announced the release of some 50 hectares of land at the Downsview air base in Metropolitan Toronto for badly needed housing.

The Auditor General has had some kind words for Canada Mortgage and Housing Corporation in his report, but the people of the city of Toronto where the average cost of a house is now in excess of $250,000 believe that action speaks louder than words. When can the Minister tell us that actual housing will be built on the Downsview site and will he give us his personal undertaking that that housing will be affordable for seniors, tenants, and for young families?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the Hon. Member for his question because he has been at the forefront of the housing issue in Metropolitan Toronto. Maybe the Leader of the Opposition does not agree with that, but I think he has been.

CMHC is currently in the planning stage on the property at Downsview. We are working with the City of North York on the zoning that has to be in effect. We are hopeful that we can relocate the military personnel in 1989, with housing to start very shortly after that.

To answer the question on affordability, we will have a minimum of 25 per cent of the housing on that land as affordable housing for the elderly, the handicapped, and so on.

Paragraph 17.4 of that report shows that $600 million in tax dollars have been written off between 1984 and 1986 and, according to the information obtained by that Department, another $400 million will be written off next year.

Can the Minister justify those tax write-offs and tell us what kind of taxpayers do not pay their taxes in Canada?

[English]

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, in some cases these write-offs—if the Hon. Member is attributing them to the SRTC program—are not write-offs in the true sense. They are yet to be audited. Some of these so-called write-offs will be collected.

If my colleague is talking about collection procedures generally he will recognize, I am sure, being a fair person, that we are trying to bring a bit of equity into the system pursuant to the Declaration of Taxpayers' Rights and other procedures that allow us to consult with taxpayers and they, having a bit more equity, are utilizing it in terms of postponing their payments instead of paying the money up front as they used to have to do.

SIZE OF TAX WRITE-OFFS

Mr. Alfonso Gagliano (Saint-Léonard): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is the following. Today we see that there is a write-off of $1 billion of taxes. We also learned that in 1986, 6,250 taxpayers making more than $50,000 a year did not pay any tax.

How can the Minister justify his Department charging interest on seniors' income tax on their pension incomes when there are write-offs of $1 billion?

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, my colleague will be pleased to know that, pursuant to an adjustment recently, we have charged a bit more interest to taxpayers who have delinquent accounts, but by the same token we pay more interest to taxpayers to whom we owe money.

As the Hon. Member knows, without going back into distant history, some of the problems are attributable to some of the misjudgments made by a previous Government with respect to the greatest scam in history, the SRTC program.

Mr. Crosbie: The Liberal scam.

Mr. MacKay: All in all, I have to point out that the percentage of collectibles pursuant to total tax income in fact peaked three years ago. Although there is still more attention required to collect moneys outstanding, there has been a noticeable improvement in the percentage relative to the total tax revenue.

AIRPORTSPEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—AIR TRAFFIC CONGESTION

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, I would like to be able to address my question to the Minister of Transport, and I wish him well on his recovery. Perhaps the Acting Minister, or the Minister of State, or somebody, anybody, who knows something about transportation would respond.

Over the past five years the previous Liberal Government and the present Conservative one were repeatedly told and warned, inside and outside Parliament, about the chaos that would result from their ideological fixation about deregulation in the airline industry. That is not something I or many others relish being right about.

I would like to ask the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Go! Go!

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Benjamin: I would like to ask the Minister if the Government will reinstate regulations regarding entry and exit privileges in city pairs or whole routes and immediately prohibit—

Mr. Mayer: Send out for a pizza, it is a long question.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that if Hon. Members on the government side could constrain themselves we could speed this whole thing up. The Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, what Members on the government side do not understand is that if they do not change their ways they are going to kill somebody.

Now, will the Government immediately also prohibit any more carriers from using Pearson International Airport until the third terminal and additional runway capacity are in place, and use other modes of transportation in locations such as Montreal, Ottawa, and Hamilton in order to avoid Toronto and any other place with over-used capacity?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am the Acting Minister, and

I was afraid the Minister would be back before I got a chance to answer.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: On the Government side we are prepared to send out a search party for that question.

I believe, if I understand the question properly, that the answer is no, but I am prepared to change it when I find out what the question was.

An Hon. Member: Get serious, Crosbie.

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, if you will give me a second supplementary I will repeat it.

Mr. Beatty: No, Mr. Speaker, no.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has the floor.

Mr. Benjamin: I hope so.

TRAINING OF AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Mr. Speaker, with the short-sighted and blind hysteria about the deficit and decreasing expenditures, throwing the air transportation industry into the whims of the market forces and profit-taking, I would like to ask if the Government will make some radical changes before somebody gets killed.

Will the Minister tell us, since we are short 500 air traffic controllers who will be needed over the next two to three years to replace 275 air traffic controllers who are presently over the age of 50, and 200 positions that we are presently short, is the training of more controllers receiving top priority and sufficient funding to correct a situation that the Government created?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is asking a question about a very serious problem.

I would like to remind Hon. Members that the March, 1985, Auditor General's Report for the previous year was very critical of the Department of Transport for its considerable surplus of air traffic controllers and the costs associated with the large surplus. The Department acted in accordance with that report, unfortunately, as it turns out, because as the result of the booming economy of the last three or four years, and as a result of the deregulation policy of the Government, the air industry in this country is booming, more people are travelling than ever before at lower rates, and we now have a problem in getting sufficient air traffic controllers.

We now have a special recruitment and training program that began in the fall of 1987. We are trying to obtain experienced controllers from the United States. There are 168 students now beginning their training program.

AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS—DECREASE IN NUMBERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, there are today 400 fewer air traffic controllers in Canada than there were four years ago. There are today 20 per cent fewer air traffic controllers in Toronto than there were four years ago. The same applies to Gander, Moncton, Montreal, Winnipeg, Edmonton, and Vancouver where there are more than 20 per cent fewer controllers today than there were four years ago.

I ask the President of the Treasury Board to admit to the House that the principal reason for the drastic reduction in air traffic controllers is the system of cash lump sum bonuses brought in by the Government, bonuses not unlike the productivity bonuses introduced in the House two years ago which paid public service managers lump sums of money at the end of the year based upon budget and staff reduction targets achieved.

In fact, I ask the President of the Treasury Board to admit that one such manager received the other day over $18,000 in one lump sum payment, over and above his regular salary.

That individual is going to be flying high this Christmas. Let us hope that he stops in at Pearson International Airport.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to congratulate the Hon. Member for Gander—Grand Falls on his re-election. Had he not been re-elected, we would be faced with a lack of proper questioning from the Liberal side of the House.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: I congratulate him on his re-election. I hope he continues to fly high and that some day we will have to look up when he asks a question.

In answer to the Hon. Member's question, there has been, and continues to be, a problem in respect of the hiring of air traffic controllers. Certainly they are a highly qualified group of people and are very much to be admired.

The shortage of air traffic controllers is due, in part, to the increased economic activity in southern Ontario, leading to increased business travel, as well as to an over-all increase in travel on the part of the general public.

An Hon. Member: Why the reduction, then?

Mr. Crosbie: The Government listened to the recommendations of the Auditor General.

For all of those reasons, we are now experiencing a shortage in air traffic controllers.

I can tell the House that there will be 216 starts in 1989-90, and every year thereafter until 1995. Our plans should result in a yield of 100 qualified air traffic controllers a year. But there will be a period when we will be playing catch-up in this area, and bonus programs will be necessary.

HIRING OF AMERICAN AIR TRAFFIC CONTROLLERS

Mr. George Baker (Gander—Grand Falls): Mr. Speaker, I am aware of one young man from Gander, Newfoundland, who passed his entrance examination for air traffic control two years ago and who is yet to hear from the Department of Transport. The answer he received was that the quota had been filled.

Just this past year two young women from Newfoundland passed all of the necessary examinations, only to be told that the quotas had been filled. Once again, they have not heard back from the air traffic control authority.

There are hundreds of young Canadians who want to become air traffic controllers, and that is what they come up against.

Given the interest on the part of these young Canadians to become air traffic controllers, I ask the Minister why the Government of Canada turned around and offered jobs to more than 40 retired American air traffic controllers, offering those individuals higher salaries than those received by Canadian air traffic controllers, and I put that question particularly in light of the fact that it takes almost as long to train American air traffic controllers on Canadian air traffic regulations as it would to train young Canadians to do the job.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Acting Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is right in saying that we have had a problem in finding sufficiently trained air traffic controllers over the last few months.

An Hon. Member: It is your own fault.

Mr. Crosbie: If the Hon. Member knows of available air traffic controllers, or young people who would be suitable for that purpose, or who are having any difficulty in becoming air traffic controllers and being accepted for training, I would ask him to give me the particulars, and I will certainly do my best to see that any bottleneck in that regard is broken.

HEALTHPRESENCE OF LEAD IN SCHOOLS' DRINKING WATER

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

As he is no doubt aware, two weeks ago the CBC program Marketplace revealed that, in schools across Canada, lead is present in the drinking water at levels 10 times currently allowed levels.

What does the Minister intend to do in order to remove this threat to the health of Canadian children?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member is correct in his statement. I remind him that this Government has taken steps to remove the main source of lead contamination for Canadians in general and children in particular, namely, that which is contained in gasoline.

As the Hon. Member has correctly stated, lead levels in our drinking water supplies are unacceptably high, and that is particularly true of the drinking water supplies in our schools.

As I understand it, the schools in the city of Winnipeg were shown to have the highest drinking water lead content in the country.

In so far as our drinking water supplies are concerned, I understand that there is now in place a policy of flushing those systems. Additionally, there are some provinces which have moved toward instituting a program of lead-free solder for plumbing works, and certainly the Government of Canada supports a move in that direction.

[Translation]

REDUCTION OF PERMISSIBLE LEAD LEVEL IN DRINKING WATER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister. Is the Government and the Minister willing to reduce to 10 parts per billion the quantity of lead allowed in water, as other Western countries have done?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, that is under active consideration. As well, as I think the Hon. Member will be aware, we are working on legislation in respect of water standards.

While the Hon. Member's question relates to our water supply, the Hon. Member should be made aware that there is another source of lead poisoning that my Department is looking at, along with other relevant Departments, that being the use of lead solder in canned food containers, and particularly in respect of such containers containing food for infants.

REFUGEESBACKLOG IN PROCESSING REFUGEE-STATUS APPLICATIONS

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration.

As the Minister is aware, the backlog of 70,000 to 80,000 refugee claimants in Canada includes many thousands who would suffer undue violence or hardship were they forced to return to a situation of racial strife, civil war, or persecution, as well as many thousands who are becoming established here, often with the help of their families, and who could become contributing citizens were they allowed to work.

Will she, on humanitarian grounds, institute an administrative review to select, under relaxed criteria, those in the backlog who are either capable of establishing themselves in Canada or who would run serious risk of physical harm were they forced to return to their country of origin?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as I have said in the House on previous occasions, we are considering several options in terms of dealing with the backlog, and once we have reached a decision on which option or options to pursue, I shall be pleased to report our solution to this very important human problem to the House.

An Hon. Member: In this century?

Mrs. McDougall: Let me say, as well, Mr. Speaker, that one of the things I have said repeatedly from the very beginning is that, whatever method we choose to resolve the problem of the backlog, we will ensure that no genuine refugee will be asked to leave Canada; that no one who would be in fear of persecution will be asked to leave Canada.

REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL ACTION

Mr. Dan Heap (Trinity—Spadina): Mr. Speaker, the question of only genuine refugees, as the Minister knows, is a very limited approach to Canada's humanitarian obligations. If the Minister refuses to act on humanitarian grounds, I would ask her to act so as to relieve the considerable log-jam that is now in place, especially in the Toronto region—a log-jam that is breaking down even the regular immigration processes there.

I would also ask her to act to avoid the huge expense, legal hassle and further delay that would be caused were she to try to deport many thousands of people, particularly in view of the fact that the present and future laws have been found to be wanting by those experienced in constitutional law.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Hon. Minister to respond.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we will be dealing with those in the refugee backlog in a humanitarian way. Whatever method we choose, we will take into account the sensitive situations with which we are confronted. That is a point I have made previously. It is not new.

Of course there are problems in the transition from an old system to a new system. Had we been in a position to have our legislation in operation much sooner, as opposed to the lengthy delays we experienced in getting that legislation through the House, this problem would have been solved a long time ago.

Oral Questions

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

TREATMENT OF RADIO PROGRAM HOST, DALE GOLDHAWK

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

We are all familiar with the CBC radio program Cross Country Check-up.

As some Hon. Members may know, the program host, Dale Goldhawk, agreed to remove himself from the program during the last election campaign.

Mr. Goldhawk came under pressure from the CBC after it was revealed that he had written an article against the trade agreement in his capacity as President of ACTRA, the radio and television performers union.

After the election, the CBC gave Mr. Goldhawk an ultimatum: quit the presidency of ACTRA, or lose his job—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

An Hon. Member: Another after-dinner speech!

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Goldhawk chose to quit his job.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Harvard: Mr. Speaker, former colleagues of mine at the CBC are wondering whether this is the beginning of a witch-hunt—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Question.

• (1500)

Mr. Speaker: Given the time, I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Beatty: The Liberals want us to interfere with the CBC.

Mr. Harvard: As the Minister responsible for the CBC is not a Member of this House, I would ask the Prime Minister whether he agrees with this CBC policy of telling its employees what they can do in their private capacity as union officials?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State for Canada and Acting Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, this is the first time I have heard about those allegations and I will look into it. I take it as notice.

House of Commons

JOURNALISTIC INDEPENDENCE

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg—St. James, a short supplementary.

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, I do not think that is going to make CBC employees very happy.

The Government promised in Bill C-136 that there would be journalistic independence for the CBC. Will the Government—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Harvard: I am getting to it.

Mr. Beatty: You want us to interfere with it.

Mr. Speaker: Hon. Members will have noted that the Hon. Member's supplementary contained a very short preamble and he has now commenced his question. I ask for the usual courtesies.

Mr. Harvard: My question is very simple. Will the Government ensure journalistic independence from management in the same way it promised to ensure CBC's independence from government?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State for Canada and Acting Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we are all committed to the principle of independence concerning the activities of the CBC. As for the specific facts here, I will look into them.

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind Hon. Members that, because of the introduction of a new Member, Question Period was extended for a couple of minutes. However, it is now concluded.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

Mr. Speaker: Mr. Crosbie, seconded by Mr. Mazankowski, moves that Bill C-2, an act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America—

[Translation]

—be now read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

[English]

POINT OF ORDER

DISPOSITION OF BILL C-2

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, there is presently before the House a House order which the Chair has ruled to be in order and which would send this particular Bill to a Committee of the Whole House. It would seem that since this motion has been accepted as being procedurally correct that the House would be best to have the Bill read a second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole House.

Mr. Gauthier: No way.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): That is anticipating.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Wait until the debate is over on second reading.

Mr. Lewis: In the event that the Chair wishes time to reserve on that particular suggestion, I would suggest that we can entertain other business, but I am in the hands of the Chair.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is bad enough that the Government want to force through a motion suspending the ordinary rules of the House. Now it wants to put it in place without even having the debate completed and the motion voted upon. This is going too far.

I say that the Deputy Government House Leader's (Mr. Lewis) proposal is not only unacceptable, it is out of order and I say let him make that proposal only if and when his motion is accepted by this House.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): Mr. Speaker, it is perfectly clear that the Deputy House Leader is well aware of the Standing Orders which indicate clearly that if we proceed now, as is his wish, the Bill has to be referred to a legislative committee. I would like to think just for once the Deputy House Leader would follow the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, if I may, I think it would be very evident that the motion is in order to move second reading of the Bill in question and that we can entertain that debate once the House order is completed. If it passes successfully, it would seem that the House order would supersede the motion which has been made on the floor.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the rules of the House are clear. I know the Hon. Member and his Party do not like the rules. They do not want to live within them. They would like to get rid of them and terminate debate in this House completely. We have not got to that point yet and it is your duty to support and enforce—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): —the rules.

Some Hon. Members: Let the people decide.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Minister has moved second reading of the Bill and the usual course is, unless there was some motion that changed the rules or suspended them, that it would go to a legislative committee. As a consequence I have followed the usual form and that is what I have proposed to the House.

There is now a discussion as to the procedural acceptability of what the Minister is doing. That is a procedural matter and I am sure all Hon. Members would want the Chair to have an opportunity to hear argument.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, it is clear that you are very willing and anxious to carry out your traditional role as protector of the rights of this House and the minority of Members of this House. In view of the clear direction of this Standing Order I ask you to reject this quite unacceptable and out of order proposal by the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis).

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest that the proposal being made by the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) has no precedence. If we are now going to proceed with second reading debate of this particular Bill, obviously at the completion of that it would be referred to the legislative committee. That is the tradition. That is the Standing Order. That is the practice. There is absolutely no precedent on record of any departure from that particular course.

Therefore, I would ask you to rule this request to be totally and completely out of order.

Mr. Speaker: I have explained to the House and the watching public the situation we are in. I know the Hon. Minister wants to proceed with the Bill at this time. He has said, of course, that another matter of business could be called.

It would seem to me quite clear that until the previous motion, which if and when passed would permit this, is in fact passed, which it is not at the moment, it is only being debated, the Minister is moving prematurely.

Point of Order—Mr. Lewis

Therefore I feel that I am bound not to accept the motion at this time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1510)

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, under those circumstances the Government wishes to advise that we will revert to debate on the motion to extend the sitting through the parliamentary calendar.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I think it has been the will of people on this side of the House to deal with the substance of this matter. We have been extending every bit of goodwill to try to get down—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and I have been ready to deal with the substance of the trade Bill since Tuesday. I am going to say to the Deputy House Leader (Mr. Lewis) and to his leader, the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski), if any more games are played like this Santa Claus is going to come down the Peace Tower before he gets this thing through.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I may be able to assist Hon. Members by making certain that my comments were completely understood.

The Minister has moved a motion, and I responded in the usual way. The usual way is that it would go to a legislative committee.

If that is the motion the Minister is moving, that motion is of course in order. But when I said that I could not accept the Minister's motion, I took it to be that the Minister wanted the matter to go to Committee of the Whole. That is my point.

If that is the position of the Minister, I have to remain in the position that I indicated a moment or two ago, that that is out of order. In the meantime, the Minister has of course every right to stand and to bring about another order of business.

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, unless I have not understood properly the question before the House when you called Government Orders, it was Bill C-2. You read the motion, put the motion to the House. As far as I am concerned, that Bill was before the House.

Point of Order—Mr. Lewis

I would refer you, Mr. Speaker, to the “blues”. I would refer you to the video, or whatever you want, Mr. Speaker. But I submit to you that that Bill, Bill C-2, is before this House, until adjourned. If the Government is telling us now that it wants to adjourn that debate and proceed to something else, that is another ball game.

I am telling you, Mr. Speaker, Standing Order 73(1) and (2) make it clear that that committee, a legislative committee, is at this time where the Bill will be referred. I cannot see the Minister having it both ways in the same day.

Members opposite have to understand. They call the Bill, you read the order. The order is before us. As far as I am concerned, that order has either to be adjourned by the Government, and another order called, or that order is to be proceeded with.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have just come to the Chamber. I came prepared to enter into the debate. I just want to get clear from the Government what it has in mind.

As I understood the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) just now, he has come to the House prepared to debate one of the most important pieces of legislation to come before the Parliament of Canada, so described at one point by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) himself. I thought the Minister responsible for trade was prepared to debate that. We on this side are prepared to debate that. That is the sole subject of the Throne Speech.

I say to the Minister in charge here, for God’s sake let us come to our senses and have the debate that the people of Canada anticipated would take place after the Throne Speech. Let us get on with it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, after ringing the bells in an effort to prevent the person moving the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne from speaking, after ringing the bells to introduce the Bill, after ringing the bells for second reading, my hon. friends are finally ready to debate the Bill. That is terrific.

I submit that the motion was never fully put to the House because when that wording came into question the Speaker stopped and that motion was never put before the House in the the form in which the Speaker had it in his hands.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we have the opportunity to change the order of business and that we are now prepared to debate the motion to extend the sittings.

Mr. Rod Murphy (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, it is very evident what has happened is that the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) has lost complete control of this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Murphy: On Tuesday we came here to debate the Throne Speech, and the leaders were ready. The Government would not debate the Throne Speech. Yesterday, he tried to move a closure motion on an item which was not even before the House. This morning the Speaker had to rule against him. So he changed the order for the afternoon. We were supposed to come back here to debate free trade.

This afternoon, he again tries a procedural trick, and again the Speaker rules against him. At this time he is now reverting to a different piece of business. Mr. Speaker, if you continue to rule against the Deputy House Leader (Mr. Lewis), we will be here until the new year.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the Members of the House and the Canadian people would like to know why the Deputy Government House Leader is filibustering against its own trade legislation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): I am sure the Members of the House and the people of this country would like to know why the Government does not want to get on to debate the legislation to implement its trade deal. Is it finally coming to realize what a bad deal it is?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Has the Government finally realized that it is even worse than 57 per cent of the Canadian people in the last election said it is? If the Government is serious about this legislation, either it should get on with the debate today or withdraw the legislation and admit that its trade deal is bad for this country now and in the future.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Point of Order—Mr. Lewis

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I think it is time that saner heads prevail. This is obviously a moment of some confusion, but let me make a suggestion.

The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner) is here, having been called to debate the trade deal. The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), the Leader of the New Democratic Party, is here prepared to debate the trade deal. The Minister is here prepared to debate the trade deal. Let us get on and begin the process.

Mr. Speaker: I appreciate Hon. Members' patience. However, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition was seeking the floor a moment ago and I would of course hear him.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I am not seeking the floor on a point of order. I am seeking the floor to begin debate on second reading of this Bill.

Mr. Broadbent: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I will try to put it in the most unpolemical way that I can. I say this to the Government. Let us forget, if we can, the acts of guerrilla warfare that have taken place from time to time in the past few days on both sides of the House, in appropriate parliamentary context in a democracy. Let me put it that way. I want to simply appeal to the Government on the basis of the Government's own Throne Speech. It had one item that it believes the Government of Canada, the Parliament of Canada, should now be dealing with. The Minister responsible is here ready for that debate. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) is here. I am here. I ask the Minister in charge, or the House Leader for the Government, let us just forget, if we can, on both sides, what has gone on for the past couple of days, and I appeal to you to consider your own agenda, and call the Bill that you believe is so important.

• (1520)

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Andre: Will you agree to pass it before Christmas? That is the question.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski).

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I know there are a lot of procedural experts here discussing the matter among themselves, but the Hon. Deputy Prime Minister seeks the floor and I will hear him.

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the last day or so we have been considering the special motion which would provide a mechanism and a formula for facilitating the debate the Hon. Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) talks about. We had tried in the best interests of parliamentary democracy to work out an agreement—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: Well, Mr. Speaker, these things are normally discussed at the House Leaders' level. What I find rather strange is we know very well that the House Leaders have been trying to work out some kind of agreement where this Bill hopefully could be moved along and proceeded with. Unfortunately, they have not had the support of their caucuses in arriving at such an agreement.

Mr. Broadbent: Is that so?

Mr. Riis: That is garbage.

Mr. Mazankowski: So it is the obligation of the Government to—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: —try to put before the House a mechanism, a way in which the Bill could be dealt with.

The proposed motion that you found in order this morning, Mr. Speaker, is very germane to the further proceeding of this issue. If there is any doubt about the acceptability of proceeding with Bill C-2 prior to the adoption of the proposed motion, then simply, as the Deputy House Leader suggested, fine, we will proceed with the motion and then we will proceed with Bill C-2 in a normal fashion under the aegis of the adoption of Bill C-2. That is what I recommend that we do, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: I have listened carefully to Hon. Members. I want, first of all, to deal with the matter that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) raised, that this motion has been put to the House. I have some doubts about that. Yesterday, Hon. Members will remember with that particular motion, I began to read it. There was a clear indication from Members of the Opposition that they wanted to argue the admissibility of it, or argue about it and they rose, and the Speaker stopped reading. In this case this afternoon, as soon as the Minister heard the words Comité législatif he immediately protested. That was quite obvious.

Point of Order—Mr. Lewis

Hon. Members may note that I did not go on. I stopped at that point. I did not go on to say: "Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?" Now, it seems to me under the circumstances, the better view is that the motion has not been completely put to the House. That seems to me consistent with not only logic when one takes a look at the form the Speaker is asked to read, but also it is consistent, I think, with what happened yesterday, and on that particular occasion, of course, that was done in the way it was done as a courtesy to Hon. Members of the Opposition who clearly wished to question the propriety of the motion.

That seems to me is the situation we are faced with here. So it is up to the Hon. Minister to decide whether he wishes to proceed with this motion, and I have already ruled that if he proceeds with this motion, it would go to a legislative committee, and he has every right to do that, but he cannot, and I want to make it very clear, he cannot under the rules at the moment make a motion that would move this to a Committee of the Whole because the other motion which we argued about yesterday and which we decided upon today, which purports to give the Government that particular power, has not yet been passed.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in my original intervention, I asked for guidance from the Chair as to whether or not if the procedural motion vis-à-vis the calendar were passed prior to the motion which the Hon. Minister would move, that is to a legislative committee, if the procedural motion were passed prior to the motion being put on second reading, would that procedural motion not then dictate that that particular Bill, Bill C-2, would then go to a Committee of the Whole House rather than a legislative committee?

Mr. Gauthier: Mr. Speaker, I think we are getting along here and we could possibly find an acceptable solution to the impasse the Government got itself into. I do think one should read Standing Order 73(1),(2) and (3), and I refer you to the Standing Orders which are still with us and are still in effect the Orders of the Day. Standing Order 73(1) reads:

"Every public Bill shall be read twice and referred to a committee before any amendment may be made thereto."

Standing order 73(2) reads:

"Unless otherwise ordered, in giving a Bill second reading, the same shall be referred to a legislative committee, except as provided in section (3) of this Standing Order. A motion to refer a Bill to a committee shall be decided without amendment or debate."

And 73(3), and this is the part I think is interesting, reads:

"Any Bill based on a Supply motion—"

And this one is.

"—shall, after second reading, stand referred to a Committee of the Whole."

So the Minister can amend on his feet now with the Speaker the motion before the House and make it that that committee, a Committee of the Whole, will be the route we will follow. I do not see any difficulty with that.

Mr. Lewis: I welcome my hon. friend's suggestion, but I would ask, Mr. Speaker, if you could rule on my first question and, depending on that, we can perhaps follow my hon. friend's suggestion.

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker is always reluctant in a complicated matter to rule too quickly. I understand perfectly the point the Hon. Minister is making. The Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier), who has some considerable skill in the rules of this place and customs of this place, has made a suggestion that might be useful.

SITTING SUSPENDED

Mr. Speaker: I am going to ask the House to stand down for ten minutes and I think it might be appropriate for the House Leaders to have a discussion.

The sitting of the House was suspended at 3.29 p.m.

SITTING RESUMED

The House resumed at 4.52 p.m.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps we could come to order. I think it would be appropriate to hear first from the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, there have been discussions among the House Leaders, very helpful discussions I would add, and I want to pay tribute to the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) for his suggestion.

I believe we have reached an agreement on how we can accomplish what we are trying to do and make it more definite. I would also thank my hon. friend, the House Leader for the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), for his participation in these discussions.

When item No. 1 under Government Business which can be referred to as the motion to suspend the calendar is next called by the Government, we will be proposing an amendment to the paragraph which starts: "That, for the duration of this session".

You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that when I argued the procedural acceptability of the motion in the first place I indicated that we had not been specific vis-à-vis the free trade legislation because at the time the item was placed on the Order Paper there was no Bill, there was no Bill C-2. For that reason we felt it would be anticipatory to place a motion on the Order Paper using wording which could not be substantiated because the Bill had not been introduced.

In any event, we would propose the next time this motion is called to delete the words "all such Bills" in the fourth line of the paragraph to which I referred and which starts: "That, for the duration of the session" and to insert the words: "that Bill C-2". The amended paragraph would then read:

"That, for the duration of this session or until otherwise ordered, the provisions of Standing Order 73(1) and (2) respecting committee stage of Public Bills be suspended, and that Bill C-2 be ordered for referral to committee of the Whole; and"

That amendment will be moved the next time the motion is brought forward for debate. The motion in question will be passed before second reading is completed on Bill C-2. That is the way the Government intends to proceed.

We also had discussions among the House Leaders with respect to the debate today which we intend to propose, namely, debate on Bill C-2. It has been agreed that the House will hear three speakers this afternoon—the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), the Right Hon. Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), and the Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). The Leader of the New Democratic Party shall have sufficient time to complete his remarks in the tradition of the previous Parliament wherein that courtesy was extended. Upon completion of the remarks of the Leader of the New Democratic Party the House will stand adjourned until tomorrow.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, what the Government House Leader has said represents the substance of our discussions and, in particular, the proposal I made to help the Government get out of its difficulty.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: I cannot refrain from commenting that I was hoping the Hon. Member for Windsor West would make such a proposal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, I want to make clear the reason I say that is to assure my own caucus that it is not my practice to do things like this.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): But I have done so in order to facilitate the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), and for that matter the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), in their desire to put views on the record and to get to the substance of the matter of the Bill to implement the trade deal.

I want to say also that this amendment, when offered and proposed, will do what the motion should have done in the first place—and I do not agree with the motion—that is, limit its application to Bill C-2.

I want to say finally that I would like to have an undertaking from the Government on behalf of all of its Members that if and when Bill C-2 gets Royal Assent—and it may not—the motion to rescind the motion we are discussing will be made immediately and the support of the Government will not attempt in any way to vote against it. Do I have that undertaking?

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, in working out the wording of the motion there were several suggestions on how we might do it. We had thought of putting that particular comment in the introduction to the motion. We then decided that that might be dangerous and not acceptable. Therefore, we put in the wording that is used in the motion and it is, as my hon. friend has commented:

"That immediately upon the House returning from the Senate after the first Royal Assent of this session, a Minister of the Crown may propose, without notice or debate, a motion to rescind this Order."

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I am pleased to give my hon. friend the undertaking of the Government that such a motion will be moved immediately upon that particular Royal Assent being given.

• (1600)

Mr. Riis: I simply want to say how much we appreciate the generosity shown by all Members of the House to enable the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) an opportunity to complete his remarks this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker: I think that I should say to Hon. Members, and also to the public watching and listening, that we have just seen an example of how, given an opportunity, Members who may have very strong views about the issue being debated can find a way to accommodate the necessities of the rules of debate in the House.

I thank the Hon. Minister, the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis), and the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray). Of course, I include other Hon. Members, but I do not think anybody will think I am going too far by including the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) who I know has been considerably helpful.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Proceeding with debate, the Hon. Minister.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade) moved that Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be read the second time and referred to a legislative committee.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I have the pleasure of speaking to this Bill at second reading once more. As I said yesterday, it is almost with a feeling of déjà vu that I proceed.

First, I would like to make reference to my predecessor, the Hon. James Kelleher, who unfortunately is not with us in this session of Parliament. He was the International Trade Minister when the negotiations started between Canada and the United States in connection with the Free Trade Agreement, or the preparations for it in any event.

Also, my predecessor, the Hon. Pat Carney who did not run in the last election because of certain medical problems, will certainly be missed by her colleagues and by Members of the House. I want to, of course, refer to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and to the fine leadership he has given in accomplishing the agreement that is now before the House. I should also mention our two chief negotiators who are no longer with the Government and who have gone into the private sector in the persons of Mr. Simon Reisman and Mr. Gordon Ritchie who had so much to do with the negotiation of the agreement we will be discussing in what I hope will be a healthy and reasonably short debate.

The Government has sought to build on the system of international trade rules in a way that will create new opportunities for increased prosperity in all regions of Canada. In so doing, as the House well knows, we have been pursuing a two track policy in trade negotiations. First, we are seeking improved multilateral rules for global trade under the GATT, and we were pursuing that track last week at the mid-term meeting in Montreal. Members will know from the press reports what the results were. In addition, we sought and achieved a Free Trade Agreement to liberalize trade bilaterally with our largest trading partner, the United States of America.

Members will remember that free trade with the United States was recommended to Canadians by the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee in 1978. I need not remind the House that the majority of members of that committee were Liberal Senators. There is still a Liberal majority in the Senate, as we all realized again last fall.

Again, in 1982, the Senate Foreign Affairs Committee recommended free trade with the United States to Canada and the Canadian people. The then Liberal Government appointed the Macdonald royal commission. A former Minister of Finance in the Liberal Government of Canada, Mr. Donald Macdonald, headed the royal commission. It sat for some three years and reported in 1985. After three years of study, that commission recommended a free trade agreement with the United States, one might say after exhaustive and extensive study.

Therefore, we are taking a step, if the House passes this legislation, that has been highly recommended by a large number of members of the Liberal Party of Canada both inside the Senate and outside the Senate.

Up until the last few months the Liberal Party of Canada has always been a supporter of a free trade arrangement with the United States, but under the direction of its present leadership it has become diverted from that path on to a crusade, and we all know how the crusade ended.

Given the advice of these various bodies, and seeing an opportunity to achieve major economic benefits for Canada—and we are only proposing this legislation and this agreement because they are going to lead to major economic benefits for Canada—the Government entered free trade negotiations with the United States in June, 1986, and reached an agreement in October, 1987, which was officially signed in January, 1988. We have been discussing and debating this agreement and free trade with the United States now for the period of 14 months. The negotiations involved the most extensive consultations with private sector representatives and with provincial governments for an international trade negotiation ever undertaken in our history. As a matter of fact, the Prime Minister met with the premiers on 10 different occasions in connection with the U.S.-Canada negotiation.

I want to point out to the House what is already well known. The Free Trade Agreement itself received the support of eight of our ten provincial governments, two led by liberal premiers, Premier Bourassa of Quebec, and Premier McKenna of New Brunswick.

One of the funny things when one hears someone say that 43 per cent voted for the Government and 57 per cent voted for other Parties is keeping in mind the position of the New Brunswick Premier. He supported the Liberal Party of Canada in its national campaign, but he was also an avid supporter of the Free Trade Agreement which he confirmed again on November 10 was in the best interests of his province.

In New Brunswick tens of thousands of voters voted Liberal who are also supporters of the Free Trade Agreement, including Premier McKenna himself and all of the members of his Cabinet and Legislative Assembly. How anyone could argue that the 57 per cent of the populace who voted who did not vote PC were all against free trade in the face of that one particular fact makes an absurdity of the argument, in addition to the fact that the argument itself trashes our whole system of parliamentary democracy.

In addition to eight premiers and provincial governments, the agreement now before the House has received the support of the vast majority of organizations representing Canadian industry and exporters. All former friends and associates of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), just about all of them support this agreement.

It has been the subject of numerous independent studies that have indicated significant economic benefits to all regions of Canada. I will only refer to several—the book by Professor Crispo, the book by Professor Lipsey, and a number of other books written by economists and persons of repute in the field of trade and economics. I will not mention some of the books written in opposition, Mr. Speaker, because I do not want to send you out to the remainder men looking for those volumes.

After one of the most protracted and intensive public debates in Canadian history, the recent election was fought with the Free Trade Agreement as a central campaign issue. There has never been a matter come before this House that has been debated in so much detail and so often as the matters dealt with by this present legislation.

I have spoken many times before in the House in support of free trade. I have outlined to the House on more than one occasion the case for the Free Trade Agreement and why it will yield viable benefits for Canadians superior to any of the alternatives proposed. Yesterday at a press conference, after the Bill received first reading, these documents were made public to remind the people, for example, Benefits of the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement, A Summary, 14 pages showing the benefits to every province in Canada, the macro-economic benefits, the benefits regionally, and the benefits in various of the important economic sectors of our country. This is why we proposed the Bill, because of the tremendous benefits for Canada and for Canadians. We are hardly likely to be suggesting legislation before the House that is not beneficial for the people of Canada.

I do not want to repeat these detailed arguments, Mr. Speaker. The question of “yes” or “no” to the Free Trade Agreement was settled at the ballot box on November 21, last. That question is settled.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Crosbie: It is over; it is decided. It was: “Let the people decide”, and the people rose up and they decided, sending 170 Progressive Conservative Members to this House.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I do not wish to bore the House today, Mr. Speaker, with all of the arguments in favour of the Free Trade Agreement. It is an agreement that has been accepted by the Canadian people, despite the many thousands of attempts to derail it along the way, including the request of the Senate by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) to block the legislation until such time as a general election was called.

The real issue before the House today relates to the reasons given by the Opposition for its stand against the timely approval of the legislation to implement the Free Trade Agreement. The only argument now relevant has to do with why the Opposition continues to try to prevent the agreement from going into effect in a timely manner.

I wish to explain why Parliament should approve the implementing legislation without amendment so that the Free Trade Agreement will go into effect on January 1, 1989.

On July 20 last, when the Leader of the Opposition announced that he would use the Liberal majority in the Senate to block the implementing legislation until an election was called, he was asked what would happen in the event that the Government were returned with a majority, and he replied:

"We would agree to a speedy passage—"

"—speedy passage, recognizing the verdict of the Canadian people, and so would our Senate colleagues, that is quite clear . . . (We would) accept whatever that decision is on an expeditious basis, I think that's a democratic procedure . . . Let Canadians decide."

That is what the Leader of the Opposition said then. Well, what has happened to the "speedy passage" that he then promised the Canadian people? What has happened to the "expeditious basis", Mr. Speaker, that he then spoke of?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You are tied up in your own procedural knots. That is the problem.

Mr. Crosbie: The Leader of the Opposition was equally clear on November 22 last. The events of November 21 had clarified his mind wonderfully. On November 22 last, he said this:

"You know we let the people decide. The people have decided, so that having stated our case, well then, let matters proceed."

Well, why is it that since this House came into session, he has done everything he can to stop matters from proceeding? What is the logic in that?

Some Hon. Members: Nonsense!

Mr. Crosbie: Is the Leader of the Opposition afraid of some of the visages that we see in the benches opposite, Mr. Speaker? Have they barracked him in the caucus and made him change his position from that which he put forth on July 20, and November 22, respectively? Is the Leader of the Opposition in control of his caucus, or is he not? Does he lead and do they follow? Or, does he not lead and do they not follow?

Those are the questions that this conundrum poses.

What does the Opposition Leader say now? He says that the Government has the right to introduce the legislation but no right to expect speedy passage. But on July 20 last, that is exactly what he said he would do: Give speedy passage if we were returned with a majority.

Well, we were returned with a majority. What has happened?

There has been no explanation, adequate or otherwise, for the Leader of the Opposition reversing his position.

In any event, Mr. Speaker, in the end, that isn't what really matters; what matters is our responsibility as a Government, and that responsibility points to early passage of the implementing legislation, for two reasons: We are the Government that has been elected and, as such, we have a responsibility to see that the legislation in question is passed and to see that it is passed by January 1, 1989.

In the Free Trade Agreement, Canada committed itself to the date of January 1, 1989, in terms of the agreement entering into force and effect.

We must adhere to our treaty obligations if we are to expect others to adhere to theirs. Canada agreed, 14 months ago, that January 1, 1989, would be the date for the entering into force of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. A period of 14 months presented us with sufficient time to see that that was done. The Americans have met their obligation in that regard. We have had to have an election to ensure that we could carry out our obligation. We have had that election. We have convinced the Canadian public. Now we have to adhere to our treaty obligations and see that the agreement comes into force on January 1, 1989.

I am not aware of any instance, Mr. Speaker, where a Government of this country entered into a solemn international obligation and was later prevented by an obstructionist Parliament or by an unelected Senate from carrying out that obligation.

The second reason that this legislation ought to be in effect by January 1, 1989, relates to the conduct of business.

Canadians who are planning their business activities to take advantage of the opportunities presented by the Free Trade Agreement should be able to proceed with confidence in making new investments and thus creating new jobs—and there are hundreds of Canadian companies doing that right now. Having had to await the outcome of the election, with all of the uncertainty involved in that process, they now have the right to be able to go forward and take advantage of this agreement as of January 1, 1989.

If we are thinking of ordinary Canadians, of the Canadian business community and those who work for Canadian businesses, the ordinary men and women of Canada, we will see that the agreement is in force by January 1, 1989, regardless of whether we consider it to be a good move for Canada. That question has been decided by the electorate. It is now our duty to see that it gets a fair chance. It will only be in two, three, four or five years time that we will know how good this agreement will be for Canada, or whether any of the fears that have been voiced are justified. It is the duty of Hon. Members opposite to see that the Free Trade Agreement gets a fair chance, regardless of how they themselves feel about it.

I would not be making these comments, Mr. Speaker, had there not been ample opportunity for debate in Parliament and for discussion of the free trade deal nationally. There has been just such a debate and discussion.

The Standing Committee on External Affairs and International Trade reported on the Free Trade Agreement a year ago. That committee heard from 158 witnesses over the course of 24 days of hearings. As well, six opposition days were devoted to debate of the free trade issue at the end of 1987 and early 1988.

The implementing legislation was introduced on May 24, 1988, and was debated in this House and in the legislative committee for a total of almost 160 hours over a span of 39 days.

Do you really think, Mr. Speaker, that there is going to be one new argument put forward by Hon. Members opposite? There will not be. There will be a tiresome and boring repetition of all of the arguments that we have been hearing against the Free Trade Agreement over the last year, including a lot of the fallacious and specious arguments that we heard during the election campaign. The ranting and roaring will go on until midnight over the course of the sitting days next week.

We are allowing lots of time for Hon. Members opposite to listen to themselves rant and roar, if that is what they want to do. If that is how they feel they can best enjoy the Christmas season, let them sit here and do that. Why should we stop them?

But we are going to hear nothing new. There is nothing new to be said in this debate. We have the obligation to get on with implementing the agreement.

The earlier implementing legislation was held up for three weeks as a result of specious procedural objections raised by the Liberals and the NDP, each trying to be more macho than the other. Who is the most macho of these two Parties? That is the question. Who can have the most obstructive movements during any one particular day? Are the movements of the NDP more obstructive than the movements of the Liberal Party? Who can beat his chest with the most resonance: the Hon. Herb Gray or the Hon. Nelson Riis?

Well, Nelson is not “honourable” yet. Perhaps someday, Mr. Speaker. But, that is what we are watching in the House.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre, on a point of order.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Minister has been in the House long enough to know that he has just broken the rules of the House, and I would ask for a retraction.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Minister knows that he should be referring to Hon. Members by their constituencies.

Mr. Crosbie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

As well as the three-week delay on procedural questions, debate on the legislation was held up by recorded votes and the first reading of Private Members' Bills presented by members of the NDP, with such purposes as naming hockey as Canada's national sport or marking the anniversary of the signing of the Magna Carta. That is the kind of tactic that has been used.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

There has been ample opportunity for debate, Mr. Speaker. And then we come to the opening of this Parliament last Monday—if that is when it was. It seems like it was three months ago, but it was in fact only on Monday last.

Since the opening of this Parliament, Mr. Speaker, we have had the same specious procedural objections raised and again we have the unnecessary calling of recorded votes.

The Free Trade Agreement has been the subject of a national debate for 14 months. It has been the central element in an election campaign. It has been debated in Parliament. We have had a general election and Canadians have decided. Now we have to carry out our responsibility and decide about this legislation.

Let me turn to the Leader of the NDP. On November 22, he said: "The Canadian people have made a decision and now Mr. Mulroney certainly has a right to proceed with his legislation for free trade. I think the process has been gone through now. All the chances for amendments have been exhausted. It would be churlish and inappropriate to say that something more should be done".

Mr. McDermid: Who said that?

Mr. Crosbie: That was the Leader of the NDP the day after the election when his mind was wonderfully clarified as well. He said that it would be churlish and inappropriate to say something more should be done. Why, since November 22, has the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent)—

Mr. Broadbent: Stick around, John, and I will tell you.

Mr. Crosbie: —become churlish and inappropriate? Well, I know that Bob is jerking his string.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: What has happened since November 22?

Mr. Broadbent: You got it wrong. He said I do not listen.

Mr. Crosbie: Bob White has shown a great deal of petulance about the NDP's behaviour during the election. Shirley Carr has gone positively puce. She is quite upset. The leaders of the steelworkers' union are definitely irritated as well. As a result, the hon. gentleman has become churlish and is now attempting to stop us from going forward with this legislation.

We realize the hon. gentleman's trouble in his Party. Our Party is unified, disciplined, and we stand behind our Leader.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: It is a good thing it is Christmas, John.

Mr. Crosbie: What is the Leader of the NDP saying now? He says that amendments must be made to protect social programs, the environment, and regional development. What has happened? He has not given any adequate explanation for reversing his position. Yet in the end that does not really matter either. What matters is our responsibility as a Government.

Let me set out once more for the House and the country how it is that social programs, the environment, and regional development have been and will continue to be protected under free trade. I hope hon. gentlemen and ladies opposite are convinced of this by now.

At no time during the free trade negotiations were social programs on the table. The Government gave its negotiator no mandate to discuss social programs, and none of the provisions of the agreement affects social programs. Moreover, it is recognized by all trading countries through GATT and their own trade laws that social programs are a legitimate government activity and do not distort trade. That is why, for example, the U.S. Government rejected a claim by its fishing industry that unemployment insurance for fishermen was a countervailable subsidy. Hon. Members opposite know that, and I am ashamed that some of them went around the country pretending that somehow UI would be affected by the Free Trade Agreement when they knew of this 1985 U.S. decision.

Social programs will not be an issue for discussion during the forthcoming bilateral negotiations on subsidies and trade remedy laws with the U.S. The U.S. has not asked for them to be. If they do, we will say no, n-o. That is the position.

The concern has been raised that although the Free Trade Agreement does not deal with social programs, and this is another specious argument, competitive pressures under more open trade with the U.S. would somehow force Canada to level down its social support. Our experience and that of other countries is entirely to the contrary. For the last 40 years, as Canadian and foreign trade barriers have been reduced through GATT, our social programs have expanded and improved. That is no coincidence. Economic growth, promoted by trade liberalization, is the only sound basis for continuing expansion and improvement of social programs. That is the only way you can have improved social programs. You create more wealth so you can improve your social programs.

Like social programs, the Canadian health care system is not covered by the Free Trade Agreement. The "Services" chapter of the agreement does not cover the delivery of health care services. Why anyone would want to go around the country trying to pretend otherwise is beyond me.

This means that federal and provincial Governments are completely free to do what they wish with respect to their health care system, whether it is publicly operated, privately operated, or a combination of the two. It is up to the federal and provincial Governments. Only management services such as personnel, bookkeeping, cafeteria or cleaning which provide support to the health care delivery system are involved in the agreement. They in no way involve providing actual medical care.

As a matter of fact, this is a great plus for us because all of our management consulting firms can go down to the United States where it is open sesame. They do not have government operated hospitals and health care systems there. This means tremendous opportunity for us down there. There is very little opportunity for them up here because we have, by and large, government-owned and controlled health care systems. We are going to have a good export market in the U.S. for Canadian firms providing these support services. However, from a Canadian point of view, we are under no obligation to contract for such services with American companies. That is a procurement issue which is not covered by the agreement.

Let me tell the people of Canada again that there is no basis for any concern that American style bottom line management of health care is going to be forced on Canada by the Free Trade Agreement and thereby the quality of patient care or the publicly funded health care system could be undermined. No way is that the case under this agreement. Under this agreement, if it is the success we think it will be, the money will be there for improvements to our health care system in our own way. That is the virtue or value of the Free Trade Agreement.

Now, what about the environment? The Free Trade Agreement specifically exempts from its operations measures to protect the environment. It does so by incorporating in Article 1201 an existing GATT exemption—do you want to listen or do you want to do something else?

Mr. Simmons: We want to hear something sensible.

Mr. Crosbie: You are in the wrong Party for that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Article 1201 contains an existing GATT exemption for "measures necessary to protect human, animal, or plant life or health". As well, Article 603 of the Free Trade Agreement permits the setting of environmental standards even if such standards have the effect of inhibiting trade flows. These are sections in GATT and in the agreement, yet some people still want to go across the country pretending that somehow the agreement prevents us from setting our own environmental standards.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): All 90 independent environmental organizations.

Mr. Crosbie: I do not care what they call themselves. They have not read this agreement or they are deliberately misinterpreting it.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Every independent environmental association in the country.

Mr. Crosbie: We know the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) has been on a great crusade, just like Richard the Conqueror. He has come out of it just as well as Richard did, he got a few dents in his helmet.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You have a helmet for a head, John.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I simply am not going to get mad at the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition. It is Christmas time.

The alleviation of regional disparities is a long-standing objective in Canada and is now enshrined in the Constitution.

Mr. Simmons: You will put the blocks to it.

Mr. Crosbie (St. John's West): We put the blocks to you, not to the regions. Oh, you are the one we put the blocks to, brother.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We were not successful in the agreement in defining trade distorting subsidies. The 96 countries that belong to GATT have not been successful in defining trade distorting subsidies. That matter has been discussed in the Gatt Uruguay Round and will be discussed again bilaterally with the U.S. We are firm in our commitment of ensuring that Canadian governments have the capacity to promote regional development. We are not going to change that. Despite the fact that the agreement does not deal with the question of subsidies, the concern was raised that our regional development programs will be at risk. Do you think for one minute, Mr. Speaker, that I am going to support a free trade agreement—

● (1630)

Some Hon. Members: Yes!

Mr. Crosbie:—that would put at risk—

Some Hon. Members: Yes!

Mr. Crosbie: There are 25,000 people in St. John's West who do not agree with Hon. Members opposite. The NDP got 2,000 votes down there. I got 25,000. Apparently they believe me.

This equates a willingness to discuss disciplines on trade distorting subsidies, with some inevitable compromising of regional development. That conclusion is unfounded. No government in Canada—not a Liberal government, not an NDP government, and certainly not this Government—is prepared to give up its ability to promote regional development in order to reach an agreement on subsidies.

In the absence of such an agreement with the U.S., Canada will still have the benefit of binding dispute settlement in subsidy countervail cases to ensure that politically motivated provisions are overturned. That is a tremendous step forward compared to the situation the last Government left behind. There was no binding dispute settlement regime. There is none today. There will not be until January 1, 1989.

On January 1, 1989, when we have a dispute, which we will have, we will have this binding dispute settlement process in place. The disputes will be settled by Americans and Canadians with a neutral chairman.

Mr. Simmons: And by American law.

Mr. Crosbie: In Canada they will be settled under Canadian law. In the United States they will be settled under the United States trade law. They are not going to give up their law. We are not going to give up our law. We will have two people sitting on boards with a neutral chairman in the United States to ensure fair decisions there. When there is a dispute here in Canada the same will occur here.

This is not a one-sided agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: And snow is green.

Mr. Crosbie: If I were in full form today, I would eliminate the noise over there, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, but my voice does not permit it.

Let me deal with another objection that was raised to the passage of this legislation.

Mr. Simmons: Bring him another Duracell.

Mr. Crosbie: Duracell should listen to this for a moment. It was suggested that we lack a mandate to proceed with the implementing legislation because we did not receive a majority of the votes cast in the recent election. You will recall that, Mr. Speaker. This ignores, of course, the conventions of our parliamentary democracy upon which we choose governments and give them a mandate to govern. It also shows an ignorance of the reality of Canadian elections, since the advent of third parties. These are the people who cause all the trouble—third parties.

There were only going to be two Parties. The Leader of the NDP said that there would be only two. I thought that this would be a tremendous improvement. He said that the Liberal Party would disappear. I look across the aisle to see that there are 83 of them. They have not disappeared at all—another false promise.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Since 1921, the Liberal Party has received a majority of the votes cast only once. That was in 1940. It took a war for that to happen. On the other 12 occasions when the Liberals have formed the government they did so with less than 50 per cent of the vote.

In 1980, Prime Minister Trudeau was returned to power. I have all the figures in front of me here. He was returned to power with just about the same share of the popular vote as we received in the 1988 election.

Mr. Simmons: And he did not sell out the country either.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Crosbie: He did not sell out the country; he sold everything else.

The Liberal Party had 43.9 per cent of the vote at that time. On November 21, we had 43.3 per cent of the vote. What did the Liberal Party do under Mr. Trudeau? It brought in revolutionary policies in the energy field. It sold out the oil and gas industry right from under the people of Alberta. It brought in a new Constitution. It got Senator Machiavelli to help them bring in a new Constitution. It did not go around suggesting that it had no right to do it because 56 per cent of the people had not voted for it. Did the members of his Government now sitting in opposition say to Mr. Trudeau: "You do not have a mandate. You only have 43 per cent of the vote"? No, of course they did not. They know the system.

On November 30, 1972, Mr. Trudeau had 38.5 per cent of the vote. Did that stop the Liberals from governing? You better believe it did not, Mr. Speaker.

On November 8, 1965, the Liberals had 40.2 per cent, and so on. I could go on to give figures.

Of course the New Democratic Party has never got that high. It now appears that it never will. As the Leader of the New Democratic Party said, we will end up with two parties in this country—the leftists, or the Liberal Party, and the rightists are supposed to be us. The NDP is vanished. That is what the whole furore is. This is why Bob White and Shirley Carr are so aggravated, as one can well understand.

The Government has not only a right but we have a responsibility to proceed in what we believe to be the national interest. That is what we were elected to do. That is what we are responsible to Parliament and the electorate for doing. Those are the reasons we are bringing forward this legislation which we call upon Parliament to approve by January 1. That is why there are no substantive reasons for the Opposition's intended amendments.

I will not go into all the benefits that are listed in these documents. There is no point in repeating them. Our next step will be to implement the legislation. On January 1, when it goes into effect, our job will be to start to implement this legislation in all its—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Glory?

Mr. Crosbie: Someone supplied me with a word there. I was lost for words.

In one of these documents, Mr. Speaker, you will see listed for you what will happen. For example, tariffs will be completely removed on about 15 per cent of the dutiable bilateral trade on January 1, including on items such as fresh frozen fish, animal feed, skis and skates, whisky, furs and fur garments if they are of Canadian or U.S. origin. The cross-border temporary entry procedures will go into effect. There will be new rules in effect for wines and spirits. New rules of origin will go into effect. New service and investment provisions will go into effect. The new binational dispute settlement rules will go into effect. Our relationship with the GATT will continue.

Mr. Simmons: How about statehood?

Mr. Crosbie: I do not know what anybody says about the state of the Hon. Member's hood. I can tell the Hon. Member that it does not look to be in too good shape.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I would hate to look under yours, John.

Mr. Crosbie: The Leader of the Opposition has made a remark on recovering from his election, the condition he was in on election day. I want to congratulate him on his resilience.

Before closing I want briefly to deal with adjustment, which brings me to the Leader of the Opposition. He is adjusting to the fact that he is Leader of the Opposition again.

My colleagues, the Minister responsible for science and technology and the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), will speak more fully about adjustment later in the debate.

Study after independent study indicates that free trade will lead to growth in exports and investments, higher real incomes, and increased international competitiveness. There will be more—and not what we hear every day in Question Period—better and secure jobs for Canadians because of the Free Trade Agreement.

Those studies also indicate that the number of workers likely to be affected adversely by free trade will be low. It will be a very small fraction of the millions of Canadians who change jobs annually. I would ask you to remember, Mr. Speaker, that in the last four years there has been an increase in job creation of more than 1.3 million jobs. We hear examples picked out in Question Period concerning someone who is restructuring his company.

We never hear the Opposition mention the dozens of companies which are expanding such as Dupont which has announced that it will invest another $160 million in the next three years, creating more jobs here in Canada because of the Free Trade Agreement. We never hear them mention National Sea Products which will be expanding in Nova Scotia and creating more jobs as a result of the Free Trade Agreement. I could go on and on with the many other companies which are doing the same.

With respect to those who will be affected over the 10-year period while the agreement comes into effect, we offer a wide range of training, job search and relocation programs primarily under the Canadian Jobs Strategy to workers displaced for any reason. The Government will ensure that these services are available to all Canadians who need them.

To ensure that we are doing all that needs to be done and that there is anything genuinely further needed, we appointed the Advisory Council on Adjustment chaired by Jean de Grandpré to assist with respect to whether any further measures may be needed, and if so what they should be.

That is our commitment to Canadian workers. It is a reasoned and responsible commitment. It is fair to Canadian workers. If the de Grandpré committee or any other source is able to show or does show that more is needed to be done, then that more will be done.

Beyond any of the specifics, the controversy surrounding free trade has centred in many ways on questions of confidence. Are Canadians able to compete against Americans? That is one question. On this side of the House we say "yes" emphatically. On the other side of the House neither Party seems to think that Canadians can compete against Americans or compete against anyone else.

Another question is this: Is our sense of nationhood or identity secure enough to choose consciously to trade more freely with the U.S.? Do we have an adequate sense of nationhood or identity? We say that Canadians do. The Opposition, apparently, says that Canadians do not. Those Members think our identity is going to be threatened if we trade more freely with the U.S. Let them defend that point of view if they wish.

Another question is: Will we grow stronger as a people if we open up these new opportunities and face these new challenges? We say "yes". We are going to grow stronger as a people when we open up opportunities and face challenges. Opposition Members are afraid of the future. They are the believers in a small Canada. They do not believe in an expanding Canada. They do not have confidence in Canadians. That is their basic problem.

Let me conclude with one of the best statements on this subject I have heard recently, a statement by Robert Fulford who said:

"In this long and painful but perhaps finally healthy debate, I sympathize with all those people who fear we'll abandon our own identity. But I believe firmly that they are wrong.

I believe—"

Said Mr. Fulton.

Some Hon. Members: Fulford.

Mr. Crosbie: Fulford, not the Hon. Fulton who is in the House. Mr. Fulford continued:

"I believe we are now deeply committed to follow our own path in Canada and that we won't stray from that path just because it displeases our trading partners—"

Many of the things we like best about Canada are costly and only a prosperous society can afford them. My belief is that over the next 10 years or so the free trade agreement will contribute not only to the prosperity of Canada but to its independence and distinctiveness as well."

That is a statement by a literary figure in Ontario, a Torontorian. I suppose you might call him a member of the Toronto literary elite. It is a signal, of course, of why we did so well in Ontario during the election, because so many people from Ontario took the same intelligent view as Mr. Fulford.

I believe Mr. Fulford is right. I believe his predictions are going to be found to be true. Free trade will make Canada a stronger and more united country. That is why I am proud to move second reading of this Bill today.

That in the end, Mr. Speaker, is why it is time now for parliamentarians to act, to implement the Free Trade Agreement. As was said in a great poem by the English poet about Ulysses:

"O Come my friends tis not too late to seek a newer world."

We invite Hon. Members opposite to stop their timorous, fearful approach to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. It continued:

"O come my friends tis not too late to seek a newer world."

The New Democratic Party surely ought to believe that.

“Cast off and sitting well in order smite the sounding furrows
For our purpose holds,—”

You will remember the poem, Mr. Speaker, you are a very literate man.

“For our purpose holds, to sail beyond the sunset and the baths of all the western stars until we die. Tho much is taken, much abides, and tho we are not now that which in older days moved earth and heaven

“That which we are, we are:

An equal temper of heroic hearts, made weak by time and fate
But strong in will—”

And you have to be strong in will in this House, Mr. Speaker.

“To strive, to seek, to find and not to yield.”

Having moved second reading of this Bill, I would invite members of the Opposition to make clear that they are satisfied, to put their points in the next four or five days of debate, and to approve this legislation in time for our Christmas break. We would give the Senate the chance to come back and meet its commitments to put this legislation through so that Canada would meet its commitment on January 1, to have it in effect. The Government does not propose to start a new relationship with the United States by asking it to do us a favour, simply because our Opposition was not prepared to accept the verdict of the people of Canada in the election of November 21.

Right Hon. John N. Turner (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to address a most important subject. At this stage may I thank the people of Vancouver Quadra for once again having the confidence to put their faith in me as their Member of Parliament. I am very proud to have the privilege of representing this very representative riding in Vancouver and of sharing an unguarded border with you, Mr. Speaker, along 41st Avenue. I congratulate you once again on your election by your peers to the speakership of this great House. I would like to say, coincidentally, that we apologize for delaying what should be a happy birthday celebration this evening. We wish you well, along with your family.

Yes, the election is over. The people have spoken and the people are always right. I want to say to Your Honour as Speaker of this House that to your right is a parliamentary majority and to your left is the popular majority representing people who voted against this agreement.

There is no doubt constitutionally that the Government has a right to proceed. There is also no doubt that we have a right, reinforced by the mandate of those who elected us, to oppose and to provide constructive amendments reflecting the concerns about this agreement expressed by millions of people during the election. We intend to do that to the fullest measure of our responsibility in this House of Commons.

The trade deal we are being asked to pass, in my opinion and in the opinion of millions of Canadians, will change fundamentally the values which built this nation. These changes will not occur immediately after the deal is implemented. There will not be some huge thunder-clap and suddenly everything will be different. We never said that. What will happen will be more insidious, more deadly. It will not happen following the weeks of headlines in the papers and days of lengthy reports in the television news. Every event will not be covered by the media. It will be a plant closing here, a regional development grant disallowed there, a regulation amended in this country to conform with U.S. practice here and a government program cancelled there.

To the extent that it is humanly possible, the Liberal Party will be there and here to protect the interests of Canadians. The Government opposite has abandoned that role and that responsibility. We will keep monitoring this deal and, in particular, the question of adjustment programs, the closing of Canadian manufacturing plants, the negotiation on the definition of subsidy, and the continuing use of the American countervail duties and quotas allowed under this agreement.

[Translation]

Nobody—not the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), nor the senior corporate officials who endorsed this agreement, nor the groups of Conservative thinkers who defied logic to rationalize their support—nobody can give Canadians the assurance that this agreement is anything more than a gamble, an act of faith. In fact, nothing more concrete than hope. First, hope that our trade balance with the United States will grow, therefore that our companies will expand, and third, the most significant consideration, that such growth and prosperity will automatically benefit our country in terms of new jobs and higher profits.

Those are the assumptions upon which the agreement rests. I do not agree with that approach. But one thing is certain, and that is that the Government could not have swung this agreement without selling off some of the levers which are essential to the development of our nation, in addition to endangering a number of others. It has dropped our ability to control our own economic policies, our own social policies, our own regional development policies, our own cultural policies and, most of all, our ability to control our own future.

This trade agreement is a short-term answer to a long-term problem. It is an attempt to take a shortcut towards prosperity. However, the Government forgot that prosperity cannot be authentic and real unless everyone stands to gain, not only the select few who now have an opportunity to find themselves in a position of strength and influence to benefit from the new market forces on which this whole question is based.

Market forces alone do not account for the way this country was built up. Mr. Speaker, we have managed to build this country by resisting the natural attraction of the north-south trade axis. We built from east to west and towards the north. We built a railroad, an airline, a radio and TV network, but the Prime Minister of Canada changed that east-west movement and turned it into a north-south axis simply by signing on the dotted line. Gone are more than 120 years of unrelenting struggles to achieve better regional equality! Gone are more than 120 years of authentic social and cultural policies! Gone are more than 120 years of loyalty to a distinct and unique Canadian identity! All it took was a simple signature.

[English]

Our goal was not to be isolationist or neutralist or protectionist. We are faithful to our friends and our allies. We have worked to lessen international tensions over the years and to open up around the world an international trading system.

We believe and have always promoted an open and free country. We have always been in favour of more and better trade, not only with the United States but with all our trading partners. The proof is in the fact that since the Second World War successive Liberal Governments have lowered tariffs from an average of 40 per cent to 4 per cent. Today, without this agreement, 80 per cent of everything we trade with the United States goes across the border duty-free. We did that without sacrificing sovereignty and without giving up our ability to do things our own way.

We did it by negotiating internationally through the GATT and other international bodies, not because we did not want to talk to the Americans, far from it. We favoured the international route because we could do better for ourselves through global negotiations rather than through direct negotiations with the United States.

We have always, whether in defence matters, monetary matters, exchange matters, banking matters, or trading matters, done better with the United States in a global, multilateral framework than in direct negotiations. We have always had better leverage with the United States by negotiating multilaterally.

In global negotiations in such bodies as the GATT, the focus is solely on trade and trade related issues. While from time to time we may not like certain decisions of the GATT, and whereas Montreal demonstrated that the GATT may sometimes move slowly, the nations of the GATT do not dictate domestic Canadian policy as this agreement with the United States will do. Under the GATT we have the right to challenge American law. Under this agreement we have no such right to challenge American law.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) entered this House as a new Member a few years ago philosophically against a free trade deal with the United States. When he was running for the leadership of his own Party against the now Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson), and the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark), only the Minister for International Trade has remained consistent. Only he was for a free trade agreement with the United States, and he must take certain satisfaction from that.

However in an open televised debate with the Minister, the present Prime Minister of Canada said: "Free trade, it affects our sovereignty and we will have nothing of it". He was right then and he should be right today and should never have introduced this agreement.

We are entitled to inquire what changed his mind. He said there was a growing protectionist sentiment in the United States, but this had been a fact for several years. What really changed was that his Government had no positive economic strategy to present before Canadians and opted for the illusion of security by tying our economy even closer to that of the United States. It was because of the bankruptcy of the economic strategy of the Government that it tried symbolically to hitch its wagon to a stronger partner, even yielding control over the reins of that wagon.

We were told countless times that the whole point of entering into a free trade agreement with the United States was to get secure access to U.S. markets and thereby to immunize ourselves from United States protectionism. But, as we on this side of the House have pointed out countless times, gaining secure access to the American market meant gaining specific exemption from American trade law: the United States trade law of 1930, the U.S. trade law of 1974, and particularly the recent omnibus Bill just signed by the President of the United States.

In addition to that exemption we needed something to enforce that exemption by way of a binding, mutually acceptable dispute settlement mechanism. This is the one topic that the Conservative Government, led by the Prime Minister, never discussed during the election campaign. The point is clear. The very purpose of the agreement was never achieved, and the Americans are still free under this agreement to use the same protectionist remedies they have historically used against us. After the deal is signed there is no improvement. The deal can be passed but the same American remedies apply.

We can talk endlessly about the merits of free trade, but that is not what this deal is about. The pure, simple and unadulterated fact is that we did not get an exemption from American trade action, and we thereby do not have a free trade deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Would you exempt them from Canadian law? Would you exempt them from Canadian law?

Mr. Prud'homme: Ask him to be silent.

Mr. Allmand: Minister of the homeless.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister of Housing who we called the minister of homelessness during the campaign because his first suggestion as Minister was to suggest to the people of Toronto that they sleep on the streets at night.

Mr. McDermid: That is a lie.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Simmons: Retract.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the Hon. Minister means that he does not agree with what the right hon. gentleman said.

Some Hon. Members: Apologize.

Mr. Boudria: Withdraw.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw.

Mr. McDermid: I withdraw those remarks.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I invite all Hon. Members to refer to Article 1902 and Article 1904 of the deal. The same laws that the Americans have used to hit us on softwood lumber, as we talked about this afternoon, on potash, steel, fish, and other products are still in place. These laws still apply to our exports. Our Government's support programs will still be judged by the Americans using the same criteria they used before—the same laws, following American precedents and practice, and based on American judicial precedent.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

It is true that we now have a new dispute settlement mechanism.

Mr. Crosbie: Right.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): What is the jurisdiction of that mechanism? The tribunal cannot challenge American trade law. It can only interpret that law according to American precedent, statutes, and regulations as that law may be amended from time to time.

● (1700)

We are bound under this agreement, not only by today's American law but by any amendment that the Congress of the United States may make. We are as wide open as we have ever been, and the fundamental purpose of this agreement was not achieved. That is what the agreement says.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I am glad to get more reaction from the other side than the Minister did, and I can understand it. This is a speech dealing with the merits of the case.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Despite the fact that the Government of Canada did not obtain the essential purpose of the agreement which the Government said we would get, namely, secure access to the American market, what is truly astounding is that after it became clear that that was not obtainable we learned something else. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy), myself, the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), and others met with leading United States Senators from both sides of the aisle, led by Senator Lloyd Bentsen when he was up here and leading members of the House of Representatives from both sides of the aisle. They made it quite clear to us that in no event, under no eventuality, would the Congress of the United States ever yield its jurisdiction over American trade law.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The purpose of the agreement was not obtained and was not obtainable. Despite that, the Government signed this agreement, and as an additional measure of self-humiliation for Canadians, yielded economic levers, control over which is essential to the future of this country: our energy, agriculture, investment policy, and capital markets. This was the most astounding cession of sovereignty in the history of a free nation, and Canadians will live to regret it. That, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. McDermid: Do you want to talk about the election campaign?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I will accept that invitation. We will deal with the campaign in a minute. Right now, our side is interested in this. It may bore the other side, but I am dealing with the substance of the agreement.

That result was inevitable in any bilateral negotiation with someone or some enterprise 10 times stronger than we are, with 10 times the market, 10 times the population, 10 times the economic strength. It is inevitable that to get any perceptible entry into that market, Canadians would have to grant 10 times the concessions, and we did. This is the reason historically that we have always negotiated under the auspices of international organizations. In that style of negotiation, we can argue together as demandeur under international negotiations and cut side deals with the United States.

Look what we gave away. What about energy? The Americans have wanted secure access to our resources since the Payley report of 1956, ordered under the jurisdiction of the late President Eisenhower. The Payley Commission wanted it; it now has it.

Under this deal, we must ensure that any tax or other measure we take with respect to energy—and I am citing Article 1904—does not impose a higher price for exports of an energy good to the other party than the price charged for such energy good when consumed domestically. This means that we can no longer give any advantage to our own consumers over our own industry in competition with American interests. The National Energy Board will be turned into nothing more than a monitoring agency.

Canada also guaranteed that in times of shortages, energy shipments to the United States would only be reduced in proportion to the total supply on a prorated basis of what was shipped in the previous three years. This same proportional access regime will apply not only to energy but to all our resources. The articles of the agreement make it clear that it applies to all our resources, renewable and non-renewable, including water which is included in this deal despite the claims made by the Government.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister said that that was not important because we had done exactly the same thing when we agreed to the energy and emergency sharing system of the International Energy Agency in 1974. That agreement, as the Prime Minister should know but neglected to mention, related only to oil and only in certain well defined emergency situations. Contrast Article 904 of the trade deal which commits Canada to sharing all types of energy, not just oil, on an ongoing basis, and Article 409 which commits us to the same regime for all other resources as well.

I think the Prime Minister owes Canadians both an explanation and an apology for what he said on this issue during the election campaign because he was totally inaccurate. We have become an energy reservoir for the United States. What is theirs is theirs and what is ours has now become theirs too.

Let us turn to agriculture. Seasonal tariffs on fruits, vegetables, and other horticultural products are to be removed progressively. That protection will be progressively eliminated. Hon. Members just have to look outside the House today to know that our climate is not the same as that of California, Florida, or Georgia. Our farmers have a harsher climate, a shorter growing season, and higher costs.

Mr. McDermid: How about Minnesota? How about the farmers of Minnesota?

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They bray over there, but only a Conservative Government would sign a deal which completely overlooks the Canadian climate.

Add to that the fact that our whole agricultural supply-management system has been negotiated away. Our support systems will be brought into line with theirs.

Look at some of the programs listed which will be up for negotiation over the five to seven years. They are in the annex to this agreement. We have the Prairie Farm Rehabilitation Act, the Agricultural and Rural Development Act, the Economic and Rural Development Agreements, the Agricultural Stabilization Act, the Western Grain Stabilization Act, and so on. Virtually the entire support system sustaining our western grain economy is to be negotiated now with the Americans.

[Translation]

And since the United States, because of its size and its market, massively dominates the agricultural industry, the level of support that we will be able to give our farmers will be determined not here in Ottawa, but in Washington. The food processing industry will move to the United States where products are cheaper. Some companies in this sector like McCain's have already indicated that this is the only choice they have left. Our fishermen will also suffer. We have given up our rights within GATT to protect Atlantic and Pacific fishermen.

The Government boasts that it managed to exempt some legislation concerning Atlantic fishermen from the Agreement. But in his statement to Congress, the President of the United States clearly indicated that although the grandfather clause applies, it does not mean much because if we ever invoke this clause to protect our processing industries, the Americans will retaliate.

The same threat applies even more clearly to our West Coast fishermen. Indeed, Section 304E of the American legislation implementing this agreement requires the President of the United States to initiate proceedings within 30 days if we ever invoke the grandfather clause to protect our fishermen.

This is but one example among many others of the way we have sold out this industry in this venture, this deal, which in this case involves an exemption for our fishermen when in fact none exists; like so many other aspects of this Agreement, it is just an illusion, a dream.

[English]

Nothing has changed. Nothing will change in the American approach to Canadian exporters. They retain the same remedies, they retain the same rights on countervail, on quotas, on anti-dumping, the same remedies as they had before the deal was signed.

Look what happened in lumber. The Government pleaded guilty before the trial. It agreed to impose a 15 per cent export tax on softwood lumber into the United States in perpetuity. Why did it do it? It did not want to rock the over-all trade talks with the United States. Lumber mills are closing down. People are being thrown out of work.

The then Minister, Pat Carney, told us that when an agreement was signed, then the lumber industry would be protected, but what happened?

Quite the contrary happened. Under Article 2009 of this agreement, that Memorandum of Understanding imposing a 15 per cent export tax on our lumber into the American market, is now incorporated into and made part on a permanent basis of the trading relationship between Canada and the United States. They incorporated the lumber agreement into the trade deal, and rather than protect our lumber industry from further harassment, they protected a lumber agreement that guaranteed that our lumber industry would be harassed to the tune of a 15 per cent export tax as long as this trade deal is in effect. Some free trade deal when a whole sector is at a 15 per cent disadvantage. I have said to the people of Prince George, the people of northern Ontario, the people of Quebec—

• (1710)

Mr. Oberle: You did not get to Prince George.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister is here. He is quite right. I had to go on an open-line show to make my apologies. Weather and his hot air held me up. The Minister knows that I have been in Prince George four times in the last four years. I always regretted not seeing him there, and I always left my best wishes.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I do not argue with the people's decision in Prince George. I have the highest regard for the Minister, but he knows as that American housing market drops, as the exchange rate floats dangerously higher perhaps as an implicit part of that agreement, and as that 15 per cent tax begins to bite—and it is higher than the profit margin of any independent sawmill in the Minister's riding or any independent sawmill in northern Ontario—that that 15 per cent tax and the 15 per cent increase in the exchange rate as compared to the American dollar since the Memorandum of Understanding was signed jeopardize every sawmill in northern and central British Columbia as they do right across this country. I say to the Minister that he should count on his good fortune to have been re-elected before the industry really comes to terms with what has happened.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We have also given up on our ability to control foreign investment. Any Canadian company worth up to $150 million can be taken over and we cannot say a thing about it. There will no longer be any limit for review of indirect acquisitions. It was not enough that the Government sacrificed all its bargaining power before going to the table. It threw away its cards on the National Energy Program, whatever one may think about it. It threw away the cards on the Foreign Investment Review Act. It was the stupidest bargaining posture for a major trading nation to get into, namely, to throw away the cards before ever getting to the table. They agreed to open season on Canadian owned companies. Our capital markets are now wide open. I see the Minister of State for Finance (Mr. Hockin) here. He knows that our banking industry, our insurance industry, and our investments are now open to American takeovers.

Mr. Hockin: Be precise.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He also knows that because of the jurisdiction under American law and because of the Glass-Steagall Act we do not have reciprocal rights into the American market. He knows that.

Mr. Hockin: We have more.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): The Minister ought to read the agreement. That was probably the palpable inequality in that agreement. We threw our capital markets wide open to the Americans. They shrewdly know that the jurisdiction over banking and most of the financial institutions is the 50 states and that because of the Glass-Steagall Act our banks cannot go further into American banking. He got outmanoeuvred. We got euchred, and we really look stupid on that whole deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We are granting American industry what is called under the agreement national treatment—national treatment in Canada for American institutions and American citizens, national treatment in goods and services and investments. That means our industry in either of those domains which represents about 95 per cent of our economy can have no tax advantages, no fiscal advantages, no subventional advantages or grants, and no regional development advantages over American competitors. That means Americans will be treated the same as Canadians when those Americans operate in Canada.

Our border will virtually disappear in most service sectors. When the border is open between a country of 26 million and a country of 260 million people, the trickle sent by the smaller nation will be overwhelmed by the flood from the larger nation. For example, let us take a company here in the Ottawa Valley, in Kanata. Two or three younger people with a new idea get some financing but are unable to get any further fiscal grants, incentives, or tax advantages which are not open to an American competitor because they are against the spirit of this agreement. At any rate they get a new idea off the ground and they do well on the Canadian market. They get a penetration into the American market, but when that penetration becomes visible, any American competitor can examine the advantages given our company here in Kanata and, if any tax incentives, grants, or encouragement is given under our system which is not available to an American company, the Americans can countervail.

If that does not work, then they can come over and buy because the limit is $150 million. What happens to some of our Canadian citizens, our bright ones, instant millionaires? We have a couple of millionaires and we have 150 people out of work. Under the terms of the agreement the company in Kanata, which is now in American hands, can bring over personnel from Chicago, Los Angeles, or Detroit and run it, because that is what the agreement says they can do in terms of moving personnel across the border.

No other country as a member of the GATT has ever negotiated free trade in services. No wonder the President of the United States and the U.S. trade representative held this up as Exhibit A at the GATT meeting in Montreal. We are the first suckers. Who is next? The United States is using Exhibit A as a drill for every other country. The Mexicans were invited into the same kind of deal, but by God, they were smarter than we were. They stayed out. We have given away leadership in our own economy.

What lies ahead, Mr. Speaker? Under the terms of this deal, over the next five to seven years there is to be negotiation over what is an allowable subsidy. Real negotiations are now going to get under way. This was a subject on which there was no agreement reached before the deal was signed. In a statement to the Congress President Reagan said that there was "no higher priority than the elimination of Canadian subsidies." The Government signed the deal obligating us to enter the negotiations over the definition of subsidy without first agreeing to some parameters over that definition.

The Americans have a clear agenda. They know what they want. They come out in the open with what they want. They have said categorically, from the President to the United States trade representative to the senior Senator in the finance committee of the United States, that they want to eliminate any other programs which their companies consider unfair subsidies. That is what they have said, in black and white.

In the past they have claimed under their legislation—and it is perpetuated under the agreement—of 1930 and 1974, and the overwhelmingly broad definitions in the omnibus Bill just passed by the Congress that dozens of our regional development programs and social programs constituted unfair subsidies. Are we so naive to think that the Americans will change their minds?

[Translation]

Let us not kid ourselves, the next round of negotiations will be even more difficult than what we have experienced so far. Discussions over a five-to-seven year period will have to do with the definition of a subsidy. What is or is not a subsidy? This has now become the number one question. I do not believe the Government is fully aware of what is at stake. And quite frankly, although I already had very serious reservations about the ability of our Prime Minister to stand his ground before American pressure, I must confess that I am now ten times more worried. My concern has grown ever deeper as the days go by, for clearly the Government has not yet managed to stand up once to the Americans. This Government has kept on yielding to American pressure, totally and without any scruple whatever. Whether we are talking about lumber, foreign investment, prescription drugs, acid rain, our sovereignty in the Arctic, the President or Congress say "Jump!" and this Government slavishly asks "Where do you want me to jump?" That is the sad story we have lived through over the past four years, and I have every reason to believe that it is also the sad story we can expect to live through over the next four years.

In the course of the election campaign the Government solemnly promised that our social programs and our regional development programs will never be on the negotiation table. But the Government never did tell us what is negotiable, what are the parameters of negotiations concerning subsidies. Yes or no, are our social programs, our cultural programs, and our regional development programs open for negotiations?

This, Mr. Speaker, is a bad contract. It is an unbalanced agreement. It gives Americans control over our economic levers. And when a nation has lost control over its economic levers, the political levers cannot be far behind. History has proved that a number of times. That is why we in this Party will continue our fight.

Most Canadian men and women fully realize that this is a bad agreement, which explains their massive vote against the agreement and against the Government. As a matter of fact, 57 per cent of Canadians did not vote for this Government nor for the Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

• (1720)

[English]

I have said that the Government won a majority of the seats. The Government has the right to govern. The Government has the right to proceed with its legislative agenda. But we on this side of the House have the right, and indeed the duty, to show how the deal will hurt Canadians. That is the essence of the Canadian parliamentary system.

Last summer I asked Liberal Senators to delay consideration of the trade legislation until the people had the opportunity to consider it in an election. As I said on July 20, 1988—and the Minister has quoted only part of that declaration—if a majority of MPs in a new Parliament want the trade agreement to become law, after debate the Senate should pass the Bill quickly. I stand by what I said, and that will happen.

What has happened during this week has not been the fault of the Opposition and cannot be laid at the hands of this side of the House. We have seen the most heavy-handed, ham-handed manipulation or attempted manipulation of the House, and the mismanagement of the House.

Our House Leader and Whip had to suggest to the House Leader on the government side how to bail himself out of an impasse. We were ready to debate this on Tuesday morning, Mr. Speaker, and you know it. We are ready to debate it at any time. We will not waste the time of the House. We will put our arguments, we will put our amendments, and we will allow these votes to be taken. But we are damned if we are going to be manoeuvred by a majority that thinks it is a game, a tyranny, and has not recognized the deep lack of consensus in this country, and the concern of millions of Canadians that their jobs and their futures are at risk under this agreement.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I was invited by the Minister to talk about the election campaign, and I will yield to that temptation for a moment. The main theme of the election and the main theme of this session is the trade Bill. The election revolved around the arguments pro and con, and through the efforts of this Party in forcing an election on this issue, we managed to focus the attention of Canadians on the most important issue of our lifetime.

Yes, it is true, we did not win a majority of the seats. However, I believe that we won the hearts and minds of Canadians on this issue. We won on the merits of the case against the deal. We discussed the deal in detail, as I have attempted to do, basing myself on the document. We discussed the details of the deal and how it would affect Canada.

Members of the Conservative Party attempted to obscure the details, and one cannot blame them because the Minister in charge had not even read the deal. What happened is that we won that debate for the minds and hearts of Canadians. We were winning the election, and then two things happened. I believe that all Canadians and the House had better come to grips with it. There was the unprecedented intervention of big business with millions of dollars in an advertising campaigning in support of the deal, an advertising campaign whose spending is outside the bounds of the Election Expenses Act, an advertising campaign contributed to by individual companies across Canada which will appear on most tax returns as a deductible business expense.

In other words, the Canadian people will pay for half of that campaign. We intend to push for changes to the Election Expenses Act to put limits on third party advertising once and for all because it was abused immensely during this election campaign.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): There were also major corporations sending letters to their shareholders and letters to their employees with their paycheques in support of the deal in a campaign of fear. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, and I believe Canadians ought to ask themselves, how much was spent? I believe that we need some good investigative reporting to dig out the total figure of what was spent on this issue on the government side in terms of taxpayers' money, in terms of Tory Party money, and in terms of big business money to win this election.

While I am on the topic of the media, I think it would also be a good idea for the media to take a look at its own role during this campaign. The fact that this Party had to go to court to persuade the two major English speaking national networks to allow us to use material from the public debates in our own advertising spots is another subject that would make a very interesting topic for investigation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I think there were a lot of games being played, and I think that the Canadian public has the right to know who paid for what, and what debts this Government will be forced to repay over the life of its mandate.

The great strategists of the Tory Party are now trying to take credit for what they call "turning the election around". I read all those think pieces. But how did they really do it? Did they do it by responding to the message? Did they do it by engaging us in debate on the issue? Did they do it by arguing the merits of the case? Did they do it by debating the subject rationally across this country?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): They could not attack the message because the message was winning, so they attacked the messenger. That is exactly what they did. As Allan Gregg of Decima put it, in an unusually frank interview: "We saw the bridge between the message and the messenger, and we had to blow up the bridge. We had to destroy the messenger's credibility", so they mounted an unprecedented personal attack on my character, on my sincerity, and on my competence. This negative advertising was imported for the first time into Canada from the Government's Republican friends in the United States. It was nothing short of the Americanization of Canadian politics, as the Government wants to Americanize everything else in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It was the most vicious campaign in Canadian history. I do not for a minute mourn my own personal loss. I have perspective in the history of this country. In political life, you win some and you lose some, and you have to accept the results whatever they may be. I fully accept the results of this election. I have always said that this issue was more important than any individual. I have always said that the cause was more important than anybody arguing it one way or the other. I am satisfied that the position that I advanced on behalf of our Party will be proven by history to be correct and that we are on the right side of history on that issue.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): At the same time I know that the process itself has been damaged in this campaign by the tactics used by the Government. That is something that every Canadian will regret for some time to come. In this campaign through the tactics of the Government, we saw democracy stripped of its majesty. It was a cynical manipulation of public opinion. A power hungry reach for the lower side of human nature. The Government was playing to fear and not to the pride of a nation. I say to the Prime Minister that you have a tarnished mandate, a sullied victory. You bought an election and you sold out the country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Canadians will follow the course of future negotiations with a sense of foreboding, with a sense of unease and distaste. Canadians feel helpless as we are now about to be absorbed remorselessly into the American orbit. Canadians will mourn the loss of our sovereignty. What a mark of history for the Prime Minister. Two successive majorities, its true; two successive steps on the road to American statehood.

• (1730)

We in this Party do not intend to sit quietly while this country is being sold out. We in this Party have a mandate, and it is a mandate that is very clear. Millions of Canadians gave us their support because they wanted us to fight this deal, and we will not renege on that commitment. We will continue to lead the forces opposed to this deal. We have a mandate to push for, and insist upon, changes to the legislation, and we intend to pursue that mandate.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we shall propose amendments to ensure that adjustment programs are in place before the agreement is adopted and not after, because after, it will be too late. As the Government knows, or should know, reports Nos. 331 and 334 of the Economic Council of Canada identified no less than 23,963 factories throughout Canada that are now endangered by the trade agreement with the United States. They are threatened because their productivity is considered to be "submaximal", to use the Council's term.

Just a few days after the election, announcements of plant shutdowns started to come in: Gillette in Montreal and Toronto, 590 jobs; Ortho Diagnostic in North York, 16 jobs; British Footwear in Lachine, 50 jobs; Northern Telecom in Aylmer and Belleville, 870 jobs; Canada Packers in Winnipeg, 90 jobs. And rumours of other closures are pouring in from everywhere.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister promised time and again to set up labour adjustment programs. He told us that the de Grandpré Commission was working on this question. But this Commission will not present its report for many months! We have certainly seen this Government make the same kind of commitment in the past, always with its hand on its heart, so to speak. We have also seen what happened. Frankly, we do not believe that they are too serious. Therefore, this time, we want commitments from the Prime Minister in writing, directly in the legislation, in the law and nothing less! Admittedly, how often have we heard the Prime Minister and other say that our social programs and regional development programs are not affected by this Agreement. We want to see that in the legislation, on paper, in black and white. We do not want to wait four or ten years to see where these negotiations will take us. We want assurances in the legislation itself, from the beginning, right now.

[English]

We will also propose amendments to ensure that our agricultural programs are clearly protected, that our cultural initiatives are not subject to the trade deal, that our environmental protection programs are not compromised, and that Canadians are represented on any committees, panels or commissions that the Governments may create to oversee the operation of the agreement.

We shall also insist that there be comprehensive parliamentary monitoring of the agreement, and a full parliamentary review of the operation of the agreement after three years.

We do not agree with the negotiation process in respect of the definition of a subsidy. We want to ensure that the process is fully public and that Canadians are kept completely informed and aware of the issues being discussed.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We do not want a continuation of what we have had for the last three years, that being secret negotiations behind closed doors.

The only way I and my colleague from Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy), and our other colleagues, yet have been able to get any information about this deal at all is not from our Government, not from our Public Service, but from our friends in Washington. The Americans have been open and frank about this deal. We want information with respect to the negotiations on subsidies published here in Canada and made public here on the floor of the House of Commons. In that way we and Canadians generally will be aware of what is going on.

We will continue the Liberal Caucus Task Force on trade to monitor the impact of the agreement as it is implemented and to further define alternatives.

We have received the November 1988 report of the U.S. Trade Representative to Congress, Clayton Yeutter, which report makes it very clear that the Americans understand that the deal goes well beyond simple changes in law and legislation. I quote the words of Mr. Yeutter's report, as follows:

"In many instances, conformity with the FTA will require no modification of the law, but rather a modification of the regulation, policy, or administrative practice implementing the law."

In other words, the Americans are claiming now the right to tell us, not only whether or not a particular piece of legislation is in order, but whether we are administering it properly. Perhaps they will even want to comment on how we are proceeding in this House and whether or not we have the right to propose amendments to the deal.

If the Government opposite had any spine at all, it would serve notice immediately on the U.S. Government that we have no intention of allowing the American Government to dictate our administrative processes and procedures, and the scope of our own administrative practices.

Mr. Yeutter's report also serves to support a contention raised in this House a couple of days ago by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre, that being that it has been obvious from the beginning that the Americans have known exactly where they were going. They have known all along what they wanted from Canada, and they are not afraid to make it public in the report to Congress. They are absolutely frank about their objectives, about their intentions.

Where is our report? How do we respond? What are our intentions? Where is the Canadian list of U.S. practices and U.S. administrative procedures that we demand be changed? Is this going to be a public document? Will we get to see it? Or will we, as is usual with this Government, have to ask repeated questions in this House and get repeated evasive answers and stonewalling?

We should know now what the strategy of the Canadian Government is. Or does the Government intend to keep it a secret, as it has kept the whole negotiation process to date a secret?

Where is the analysis of the impact that this deal will have over time on our trading partners? Where is that report? Where is that government study?

We in the Liberal Party believe that we have always done better by negotiating trade matters internationally through the GATT and other international bodies.

As I mentioned a few moments ago, that is the process by which, historically, we have achieved the greatest success.

I favour the continuation and expansion of that international approach. I set forth our alternative five-point trade strategy in this House on August 30 last, during debate on the motion for the third reading of the predecessor Bill to Bill C-2. I proposed action in the fields of the GATT, the world economy, Canada-U.S. trade, export expansion and enhancement, and global competitiveness.

Under the chairmanship of the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre, we presented a minority report, ably seconded by the Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand).

We have set out an alternative trade policy for this country and one which historically is valid and which, historically, has been successful for Canada.

Our approach would permit us to trade with the world, including with the United States, without sacrificing our sovereignty and our independence as a nation.

There is a wider world out there. We have tremendous opportunities world-wide, particularly in the Pacific Rim and Europe. By concentrating all of our energies on the American market, we are in danger of losing, and are losing, opportunities in the new and growing markets in those countries.

We will become a part of fortress North America, in competition with other large trading blocs around the world. And, as nothing more than the junior partner in that enterprise, our role as a voice for reducing trade barriers around the world will be severely weakened and curtailed.

I believe that the Canada-U.S. free trade deal now before this House, Mr. Speaker, will prove to be an historic mistake for Canada. It will fundamentally change Canada as no other action in our history has changed Canada. It reduces our choices, and it reduces our ability to make those choices for ourselves as Canadians in our own way as a nation.

I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we in the Liberal Party will abide by the rules of this House; that we will be responsible in our conduct in this House. We will state our case, and nothing more than our case.

I want to say to you, Mr. Speaker—and, through you, to all Canadians—that the fight over this deal is not finished. It is far from over. A new battle has just begun. We in the Liberal Party will continue to lead the fight for Canadian sovereignty. We continue to speak for the millions of Canadians, the majority of Canadians, who voted against this Government and against this deal. We continue to speak for Canada.

With that in mind, Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre:

“That the motion be amended by deleting all of the words after the word “That” and by substituting the following:

That this House opposes in principle and therefore declines to proceed with Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, because that agreement, which was negotiated in a secretive and irresponsible manner and has been rejected by 57 per cent of the Canadian people, will undermine the economic, social and political institutions of Canada, because it will fail to provide guaranteed and secure access to U.S. and other world trade markets, because it will create severe adverse effects on many industries and communities and because it will endanger the economic and social fabric and political independence of Canada.”

Mr. Speaker: Before proceeding with debate on the amendment, and I will be recognizing the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) in just a moment, the Hon. Minister has a point of order.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, the normal business question was not asked today by my hon. friend, the House Leader for the Liberal Party. Therefore, I wish to advise the House that tomorrow the Government will call Item

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

No. 1 on the Order Paper, that is, the motion to provide for extended sittings. I want to offer once again on behalf of the Government an opportunity to the House to extend the sittings over the weekend. I am sure that if there is a disposition among the opposition Parties to consider that suggestion, they can get back to me.

As well, I give notice that at the next sitting of the House, before the Order is called for resuming debate on the motion for second reading and reference to committee of Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, I shall move that the debate shall not be further adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: I should say to all Hon. Members that debate will continue on the amendment. There is of course agreement and the usual courtesies for the Hon. Member for Oshawa, Leader of the NDP, and we will not see the clock until he is finished his address.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to rise on behalf of my colleagues in this House to participate in this historic debate. The motion we have before us, as Members on all sides recognize, has been appropriately described—and I do not normally agree with the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) on most matters of political significance in this country—as perhaps the most important measure the Parliament of Canada has debated since World War II.

What is at stake in the Bill that the Government has before the Parliament of Canada is the very future of this country, and it is precisely for this reason that before the election, during the election, and in the present Parliament of Canada the New Democratic Party, in all of its sections, in every province, in every council, including the federal caucus, the New Democratic Party opposes this measure.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the most useful way of understanding Canadian history is to see it as a continuing tension between those of whatever generation in the history of our land who have thought it desirable to ensure that all the instruments of power, political, social and economic, remained within Canada so that Canadians themselves would be in a position to determine their own future, and those who, on the other hand, hold a competing view, which has lasted throughout the history of our country, that of the powerful continental lure of the United States.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Our predecessors in this Parliament, our predecessors in the provincial legislatures, have fought and fought successfully to maintain political independence. However, the struggle, without any ill will necessarily being assumed on the part of the United States of America, has been a real and constant one and will go on in the future.

This struggle has changed as the nature of our country has changed, as the world has evolved. On the one hand we have the view that has dominated the 20th century in the United States, that market principles should predominate not simply in the economy, but that they should predominate in all the principal relationships in society. That view has been argued at length and is broadly accepted in the United States. However, I say, as one North American, I am glad that there is still a minor tradition against that view in the U.S. However, that view has been and is the predominant one in the 20th century.

On the other hand, the modern Canadian tradition is something quite different. Our view, especially as it has evolved since World War II, is that in social policy, in regional development policy, and in cultural concerns, community and other non-commercial values should prevail. That is the Canadian way now, and that is what we intend to struggle to make sure exists in the future of this country of ours.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, my Party and I strenuously opposed a comprehensive trade arrangement with the United States when the Prime Minister first raised the idea with the U.S. President during the Shamrock shuffle of 1985. We did so precisely for the reason that I have just indicated. We fought as a Party in the past in this country, and we fight now and will continue to fight in the future, to ensure that the modern Canadian tradition, not the American tradition, will prevail in the major decisions that are reached within our own country. That is what is at stake in this issue.

In 1985, I said that the Government had no mandate to proceed even with negotiations on such a deal because there was not the slightest bit of discussion of such a comprehensive arrangement that goes well beyond, as Members who have studied and thought seriously about this matter know, the principles of trade. The Government in 1985, I said then and repeat now, had no mandate to proceed. Indeed, the only discussion of such a comprehensive deal by members of the Government that was formed in 1984, as we have said many times in this House, the only views that had been expressed prior to the 1984 election on the subject matter by the Prime Minister, by the Secretary of State for External Affairs, by the Minister of Finance, by the Secretary of State as he became in the Prime Minister's Government, were that such a deal would be completely contrary to the interests of our country.

So there was no mandate. The Government tried to do what it did in the Parliament of Canada prior to the recent election. Following the recent election I said, and the Minister quoted part of what I had to say, that in our parliamentary system having waged a serious, tough election from one part of Canada to the other—and Canadians of good will have been on on both sides—the Conservatives having obtained a majority Government, they do now indeed have a mandate to proceed with legislation, to have it introduced, debated, and at some point to have a vote taken in the House of Commons. That indeed is what parliamentary democracy in this country and in other countries has been all about.

At the same time I say that if the Government of the day—the Government now holding the reins of power in our Parliament—has that mandate then, as it knows, the substantial majority of Canadians voted for Parties in opposition to this deal. If the Government has obtained a mandate to proceed, then we have our responsibilities in the same parliamentary tradition to raise objections that we believe are serious, to point out criticisms, to talk about alternatives, and to use all the rules and procedures that are democratically available to us to give voice to all those people who voted against this deal. We intend to do so. Nothing I said in the Minister's selective quotation following the election contradicted what I say now.

Beyond that I want to speak on one matter of important procedure here in this democracy of ours. I have had other occasions to say it. In my view, on balance, if we consider the rights of the Government and the rights of the Opposition in the Canadian Parliament, we are somewhat ahead of the other parliamentary systems in the rigour of our democracy and in the particular form of our institutions.

But I say in that context that I was shocked that immediately following the election, when the Government was given a very good mandate in our democratic system, and the Prime Minister spoke of reconciliation, that the first act of the Government should be in fact to tear up the rule book of Parliament. That is totally unacceptable. The people of Canada did not vote this Government in to do that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we believe that this Agreement will change the very foundation of our country and we are prepared to defend this foundation. Our opposition will always be firm during this session of Parliament and after. We believe that this agreement threatens our future and the future of our children. We believe that this agreement threatens our fundamental values and there are thousands of Canadians who agree with us completely. They are concerned about the possible impact on our social programs. They believe that our environment will be threatened. They believe that our commitment to develop the outlying regions will be threatened. They want measures to protect the workers who will be laid off.

Mr. Speaker, we intend to ensure that their voice is heard here in the House of Commons.

[English]

The election illustrated that whether or not Canadians support the trade deal they do care deeply about preserving and enhancing our Canadian social policy tradition from medicare to pensions. They want to maintain the possibility of industrial development in all regions of our country, not just in those regions where the market mechanism happens to be working very well. They want to be certain that Government subsidies can be used to protect our environment and not simply used to develop energy for export to the United States at the same price as Canadians will be paying.

I want to call to the attention, particularly of Members on the other side of the House, what is particularly new and important in this phase of the debate—and I am not going to go over many of the old arguments that have been made and were made prior to the election. It is that there was a new aspect to the debate that occurred during the campaign itself. It was that these messages of concern about social policy, regional development policy and environmental concerns, which will be one of the great ongoing concerns not only in this country but throughout the planet in the next two decades, were raised not simply by Canadians who voted for opposition Parties but also by Canadians who voted for the Government, even if they supported the principles involved. It is possible that their knowledge of the details was shaky, and perhaps it was not. But they differed in judgment. They had concerns about these matters as well.

The Government had an obligation when it came back to the Parliament of Canada not simply to pick up where it left off before the election but to respond in the Throne Speech and in a Bill that it brought before Parliament by indicating that it actually listened to the people of Canada. It did not do so.

Immediately following the election I wrote to the Prime Minister urging that he make his election night call for national reconciliation concrete by reaching out to millions of Canadians who expressed concerns about our future, including both those who voted for and against the Government. They wanted assurances that the trade deal would never be used as a vehicle to compromise these programs that I have said come to constitute the modern Canadian tradition.

I asked for action to ensure that our social policies would be protected. Steps could have been taken before Parliament was called back in terms of reaching a formal agreement and undertaking with the United States to have achieved that goal. I asked for legislation to protect those who would be losing their jobs, and I will return to that in just a few minutes.

I drew attention to the five to seven year period ahead of us as a country when the crucial question of the definition of a subsidy must be determined. I asked for a special parliamentary committee to monitor all aspects of the deal. There is already the equivalent of such a committee established in the United States. I did this because the people of Canada and I want to obtain assurances that over the next few years the activities of the Government, whatever the government of the day, will be monitored by an independent committee made up of government and opposition Members in the House of Commons.

Instead of responding in order to reconcile and to reassure, the Prime Minister ignored the appeal. Instead of listening to Canadians in his hour of victory, he callously dismissed their concerns. Instead of referring to new and relevant resolutions and Bills in an imaginative Throne Speech, the Prime Minister produced simply a rehash of what we dealt with in the previous Parliament.

The Government does nothing and plans simply an extended vacation—and we all need a break. However, I want to put my remarks in the context of this Bill.

What is taking place in our country right now, while the Government is planning to get this measure through Parliament as quickly as it can, is that Canadian men and women in many parts of our land, in the hundreds—indeed in the thousands—are experiencing lay-offs. I wish to digress for a minute. I am quite prepared to accept what was alluded to in the House of Commons the other day. Yes, there are some new investments coming into the country, in some parts. Yes, some of them might be attributed to the trade deal. But I am speaking right now of the other side of the equation as we sit here debating this measure. There are men and women who have been told that their jobs will not be in existence within a matter of weeks. A Parliament that is now debating trade legislation ought simultaneously to be undertaking measures to ensure that those workers, their families, and their communities which will be affected are going to be responsibly responded to by the Parliament of Canada. We should be doing that.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, ever since the free trade negotiations got under way the New Democrats have argued that pressures to harmonize as well as the very details of the agreement would lead to Canadian plant shutdowns and that the multinationals would transfer jobs south of the border. This is what the Prime Minister himself said in 1983: "What will happen with this kind of concept is that companies throughout the United States will increase production and close their operations in Canada."

Since the elections, our predictions, and those of the Prime Minister, are coming true. Let us look over the list of shutdowns since November 21. Gillette Canada was established in this country in 1906. On November 23, the president of Gillette Canada announced the closing of its plants in Montreal and in Toronto. The result being that 590 men and women lost their jobs.

Pittsburgh Paint announced they would close the plant they had been operating since World War II, and this took place although the plant was a profitable operation. In the future the company will supply the Canadian market through its American plants. Management claim they are closing their Canadian plant because it is not big enough to install the new equipment needed to make new products. Well, we believe the real reason behind their decision to leave is that they did not want to follow Canada's environment protection standards, which happen to be stricter than those of the Americans.

As we said on a number of occasions during the campaign, the trade agreement is the source of this kind of confrontation between jobs and environmental considerations. There is ample evidence to show that our ability to impose our environmental protection standards is compromised by the trade agreement. And who are the victims of such compromises? Certainly not the big companies! The victims are workers, men and women alike, and Canadians who want a healthy environment. Perhaps the Conservatives are prepared to accept that, but certainly we New Democrats are not.

[English]

The list of lay-offs continues. Ortho Diagnostic Systems, a subsidiary of Johnson and Johnson, announced a transfer of its laboratory test production to New Jersey. Those were not unskilled but sophisticated, important jobs that we thought were durable and long-range jobs. They are moving out.

Allergan, a pharmaceutical company that is a subsidiary of Allergan California, announced on December 2 that it would close its plant in Pointe Claire on January 1. Last week Northern Telecom shut down plants in Aylmer, Quebec and Belleville, Ontario, throwing 870 workers on to the unemployment lines.

I say bluntly that I was astounded at the Government's reaction to this shut-down. This is a Canadian company whose plants that were shut down are profitable. One has received millions of dollars in assistance in different forms from the taxpayers of Canada through the federal Government. It is a company that has a quasi-monopoly in terms of access to the markets in Canada. The Government of Canada, instead of responding in a determined and tough-minded way on behalf of the workers, stood idly by. A Government that cares would not have done that. A Government that cares would have intervened directly to ensure those jobs are kept here in Canada.

Also this past week the President of the United States, in what I frankly regard as a hypocritical act, kept in place an unfair tariff on shakes and shingles. This tariff, when it was imposed long before the recent election, was condemned by the Prime Minister himself, who correctly pointed out that this was totally inconsistent with everything that Ronald Reagan had said as President in terms of the deal he was allegedly negotiating between Canada and the United States. It was totally inconsistent with that. It is a matter that the President, in terms of his executive power in the American system of government, could have done something about this past week.

Instead of removing an iniquitous, unfair tariff that was imposed when Canadians were winning the competition, the President of the United States reimposed it. That is not only unfair and unacceptable to the people of Canada, particularly to the workers affected and the Province of British Columbia, it also reminds us that in this deal something which the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), his predecessor, and the Prime Minister told us was not obtained in the final settlement—guaranteed access to the U.S. markets.

What this decision demonstrates, but which the Government quickly sloughed over, is that whenever Canadians win the competition whether in lumber products, steel, plastics, or any sector of the Canadian economy, the United States has the same powers to take unfair action to stop our exports. What President Reagan demonstrated last week is what we will see in the future. Under this deal we can win the competition but the Americans can stop Canadian exports. That is not fairness. That is an unfair deal.

I say to members on the Government side that these recent lay-offs in one sense were hypothetical possibilities when we debated the deal before the election. But all of these announcements I have referred to were made since the election. They are real. They are concrete. Many of those affected are no doubt neighbours of a number of Members of the House of Commons.

While the Government believes that on balance the over-all impact will be positive and will lead to more pluses than negatives—something with which we do not agree—a caring government would have come back to this Parliament and introduced at the same time as this Bill, a Bill similar to that which was brought in with the Canada-United States Auto Agreement in the 1960s. The last time there was such significant dislocation for thousands of families, legislation was brought in to cushion the impact both on workers and communities affected by that arrangement. We should have similar legislation before Parliament at least to cushion the effect on all those men and women who will be losing their jobs over the Christmas period.

We believe that such legislation requires not only provisions that allow for human compensation to working people affected in their communities. We also need a body of experts on the commission who would determine rapidly which industries and which lay-offs were the effect of free trade.

Presently we in the House of Commons make our judgment. We do not say that they are totally conclusive. We do not say that our judgment of the plants that I just announced is infallible. However, we say that in these cases there are good reasons to believe the decisions were connected with the expectation of a free trade deal coming into effect January 1, or shortly thereafter. If the Government were sensitive it would not need to take our word for it. It ought to establish a body right now that could make a quick decision about whether any particular lay-off is related to the trade deal, if it is to make sure that compensatory action is taken.

Mr. Broadbent: That, I repeat, is a new and important aspect of this debate. Whatever side of the issue one was on during the election campaign, it seems to me that this Parliament of ours should now be dealing with that matter.

Another issue that concerns us is the next phase, assuming that this legislation is passed as it will be at some point, and we all know that. It will be passed, and when it goes into effect, as we all know, during the next five to seven years, there will be a discussion period, a period of negotiation between the Government of Canada and the Government of the United States to sort out the definition of a subsidy.

This for all of us will be a very important process. We are concerned about it, not simply abstractly concerned, or, to take one absurd argument, not because Canadians, whether members of my Party or of any other Party, are inherently anti-American. That is just nonsense. We are concerned about the previous direction taken by American policymakers within the United States on this kind of issue in terms of negotiations not only with Canada but with other countries. We are concerned, in short, about their ideological framework and about the prevailing value system that exists in the United States when it comes to be applied to such important questions as what constitutes a legitimate subsidy.

There should be no illusions about the priority that the Americans attach to the next phase. Some experts on both sides of the border have said that the most important part of the deal for the Americans was Phase 2, if I could put it that way, the five to seven-year period in which subsidies would be discussed and definitions established. Ronald Reagan himself said to Congress on July 25:

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

"The administration has no higher priority than the elimination of Canadian subsidies which adversely affect U.S. industries."

If the stated intention of Ronald Reagan is ominous, given what his definition and the definition of people like those in his administration is likely to be, past experience, regardless of the administration in the United States, is equally ominous.

To date every major Canadian regional development program, from stumpage rates for lumber, to unemployment insurance for fishermen, to regional industrial and community development grants, to agriculture and grain transportation agreements, has been cited by U.S. industry as constituting an unfair subsidy.

Simon Reisman, that distinguished Canadian, has said—I exaggerate. He is the former friend of the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). Mr. Reisman said, concerning the U.S. proposals in this domain, that they were "so onerous that they would have made it exceedingly difficult, if not impossible, to pursue Canadian industrial development programs and particularly regional development programs". Those are not the words of members of the New Democratic Party or of the Liberal Party or of other people opposed to the deal. This is a description of the American attitude coming from someone who is one of the strongest defenders of the deal for the obvious reason that he was the principal negotiator. He said that if the American view had been accepted at the time of negotiations, in effect it would have been devastating for regional development—

Mr. McDermid: That is the difference.

Mr. Broadbent: I ask the Minister to wait for the rest of the argument. That was their attitude going into the negotiations, that it would have been devastating if it had been accepted in this deal. I thought the Minister might agree with that.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): So far so good.

Mr. Broadbent: So far so good. That was the attitude going in.

Before I come to the consequences of the deal and where we are going in the next phase, I add the words of the then Deputy Minister of Finance, according to the papers the next Chief of Staff for the Prime Minister's Office, who said just after the deal was signed that as a consequence of the deal—and these are his words and not mine—we would have to change our regional development policies.

While the Prime Minister said during the election debate, and I quote the Prime Minister with pleasure in this context, that Mr. Reisman was instructed not to "accept restrictions on our ability to provide regional subsidies", signing a deal which gave away everything—and I will come to that in a minute—while at the same time leaving the definition of subsidies to further negotiations is no protection whatsoever for Canadians.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, Mr. J. G. Godsoe is the executive director of the Macdonald Commission. As the Government was wont to say very often during the election campaign, this commission advocated a trade deal.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): But not this deal.

Mr. Broadbent: But not this deal, quite correct. But this executive director of that commission actually opposed this deal. He wrote a very interesting article in The Globe and Mail, not a well-known social democratic newspaper, analysing the potential consequences for Canada of the next phase of the deal. He talked about the real problem of a negotiating team from Canada, and I use the term "negotiating team" loosely, meaning our salesmen who went down there and gave the ship away, having made all the concessions to get a signature on a deal of any kind, now being confronted with the United States, a country somewhat more populous than Canada, somewhat more powerful economically, and now having to make a case to get them to accept our definition of what a subsidy consists of.

I watched the process unfolding, as did Members of Parliament who were here at the time, of these negotiations leading up to the deal. I have no confidence at all in how we will end up with definitions of subsidies and the implications of that for regional development programs, social policy, and environmental concerns, because I saw this Government do the following. It gave the Americans what they wanted in energy. It sacrificed our pharmaceutical industry. It caved in on films. It in fact gave carte blanche to foreign companies to operate here. It in fact gave the ship away already, and I do not trust it to negotiate in the days ahead.

The Minister is obviously somewhat biased toward the other side. He thinks they got something wonderful. I profoundly believe—and a majority of Canadians profoundly believe it—that the Canadian negotiators gave away twice as much as they got in return. There is not much doubt about that. I simply want to say to the Minister: let us set that behind us and consider the future. Whose definition does the Minister really think will be accepted? Even if it is done democratically, I say that the Americans who are 10 times stronger numerically—

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. McDermid: Oh, get out.

Mr. Broadbent: He does not like this argument.

Mr. McDermid: Just because they are 10 times bigger, we cannot compete?

Mr. Broadbent: Why should an American citizen living in California or Maine or Georgia, someone who has a very different belief system than we have in Canada, ever democratically accept Canadian rules?

Mr. McDermid: You have no faith in Canadians.

Mr. Broadbent: I can tell the Minister, if I were an American, if I had that typical belief system and I knew that we outnumbered Canadians 10 to 1, I would never accept Canada's definition of what constitutes a subsidy, and I say to the Government: you should never have gotten us into this position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: I say to the Minister and to other Members in the House, New Democrats—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where is the Minister? Where is he?

Mr. Broadbent: Well, in fairness to this particular Minister, he explained to me why he is not here, and in fairness to him, there was a legitimate reason. That may not be the case for the Prime Minister who almost never turned up for serious debate in the previous Parliament. He is showing a remarkable consistency by not turning up for this important debate.

● (1820)

New Democrats will never give up the fight to keep our regional development programs secure, because we believe fundamentally as a matter of principle that regional equality is essential to our vision of Canada. As someone has already alluded in this discussion, we finally have that entrenched in the Constitution. We will not accept the possibility of an American definition overturning our regional development programs because we believe and believe with passion that a young person growing up in Cape Breton or in the interior of British Columbia, as I have said many times, ought to have the same opportunities for development as a kid growing up in Dalhousie.

I say also that New Democrats who first fought for pensions and first established medicare will never stop fighting to preserve our social policy tradition of contemporary Canada. New Democrats who have led the fight for a healthy environment in recent years will continue to fight for the definition of a subsidy that will continue to provide, if we want, governmental intervention in the economy to ensure that the environment is protected.

For all of these reasons, Mr. Speaker, a New Democratic Party government, if it had been elected this time, would have given the six-month notice and got us right out of that deal. In the meantime, we are now dealing with a Government that has a mandate and will get this legislation passed at some time.

I have already talked about the important human need for legislation to protect workers affected in certain other concerns, but we have also said that what we have to get established is an independent committee here in the House with members from all Parties to act as our watch-dog in the years ahead, and it should not be a subcommittee of the External Affairs and International Trade Committee.

I saw the wording which the Minister of Trade used. He suggested that perhaps the Government would consider the hypothetical possibility of establishing a subcommittee of the External Affairs Committee which could obtain reports from the Government and then provide reports to the House of Commons.

We want, on such an important matter, something that will go to the root of what this country is all about. As Ronald Reagan well understood, we do not want a committee that is directly responsible to the government of the day. We want to see established a monitoring committee, an independent committee of this House, to monitor what will go on over the next five to seven years and to make regular reports to the Parliament of Canada so that we can see what is going on.

In conclusion I want to say the following: we in this country of ours have created a unique nation on the northern half of this continent with quite distinct Canadian values and traditions. Canadians have a commitment not simply to individual rights. We have that, but we also have a solid commitment to the idea of community rights. We as a nation believe in a mixed economy. We believe in a healthy viable private sector, but we also believe in entities in the economy like Petro-Canada, CN, and Air Canada. We believe not simply as a matter of second choice or the worst of all options after everything else fails should you move into the public sector; but we believe—and a majority of Canadians have come to believe it—that there is a legitimate role for the private sector and a legitimate role for the public sector in the Canadian economy.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: That is different from the United States. We are a nation where pensions and health care are not regarded as simply marketable items that you can get if you can afford to get it or that you have to accept charity if you cannot afford to buy it. We in this country have come to understand that pensions and health care go and ought to go to every citizen in Canada as a human right.

We are a nation with a constitutionally enshrined commitment to regional equality. We are a nation where culture creativity is encouraged actively by government. We are a nation of two official languages and many cultures. We are a nation profoundly different and profoundly better in so many aspects of human existence than the United States, and we intend to keep it that way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Thus, Mr. Speaker, members of my caucus intend to speak against this legislation and will continue to fight against a deal that in our view would be seriously injurious to the future of our country. We will not let down those Canadians who have made this great country of ours what it is. We cherish our distinctiveness for ourselves, for our children, and for our children's children. We intend to retain the freedom for each new generation of Canadians to discover and decide for themselves what will be their path to building a better nation. We continue, in short, to plan on fighting the good fight that our predecessors have waged and that our successors will continue long after we are gone.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): It being 6.27 p.m., pursuant to agreement reached earlier this day, the House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 10 a.m., pursuant to Standing Order 24(1).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

The House resumed from Thursday, December 15, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House, from the day of adoption of this motion the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 24, but not on December 26, 1988.

That, during such period, the Speaker shall adjourn the House on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays at midnight and on Fridays at 3.00 o'clock p.m., and that the provisions of Standing Order 38 in relation to the adjournment proceedings shall be suspended.

That, during such period, the Standing Order respecting the daily mid-day interruption of business on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays shall not be suspended;

That, at 6.00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, or at the conclusion of Private Members' Business, the House shall proceed to "Government Orders" pursuant to Standing Order 40(1);

That, for the duration of this session or until otherwise ordered, the provisions of Standing Order 73(1) and (2) respecting committee stage of Public Bills be suspended, and all such Bills be ordered for referral to committee of the Whole; and

That immediately upon the House returning from the Senate after the first Royal Assent of this session, a Minister of the Crown may propose, without notice or debate, a motion to rescind this Order.

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops): This is a very sad day for the Parliament of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) at the adjournment had the floor, and he has been given the floor again. I would ask Hon. Members to give him the courtesy of listening to his comments.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, we have seen the parliamentary demolition crew on the Conservative benches at work in the last little while. Step by step Members on that side of the House have dismantled the parliamentary tradition that we have come to know in this country.

Let us just think back on the historical scenario. This was the Conservative group that held Parliament to ransom for 17 days not so long ago with the bell-ringing incident when they decided that it was in their political interest to close down Parliament, to stop debate in the one place where Canadians can hear both sides of an argument. But they decided that they wanted to close down the Parliament of Canada, which they did for day after day after day. We remember those dark days of that bell-ringing incident. That was the beginning.

Then, during parliamentary debate, we also remember that they did not like what was going on in the Commons so they stormed the chair. I remember that dark day when there was a group of Conservatives in front of the chair shaking their fists and screaming, saying that this was not the way that they wanted Parliament to proceed so they wanted to stop it.

Then, last summer, we saw the Conservatives do something that we have not seen in this House for over 100 years. They decided because of their political agenda—not because of any emergency, not because of any serious issue facing the country, but because of their agenda—that they wanted to take the rule book, the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, and tear it up. They threw it out the window. They said: "We have used this for 100 years. We developed this through all-Party discussion, and so on. We hold this as the way to conduct the business of the House of Commons properly. But we do not like it and we have the majority." So the Conservative Government of the day decided to throw this away and impose their own set of rules that would suit their own political agenda. They said at that time: "Do not be alarmed, opposition Members, because we are only going to do this once. This is very important and we are not going to do this again. Trust us, this is a once-in-a-lifetime situation".

The last time this was done was in 1883. Since 1883, until this summer they said: "We are going to have to do this but do not be alarmed because we will never do it again." They are now doing it again. Once again they broke their word. They said: "Trust us, we will never do it again". They are now doing it again. They are now taking the Standing Orders, those rules that govern the way we do business in this place, throwing them out the window and imposing their own set of rules to suit their political agenda. As I say, it is their political agenda because the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) himself just yesterday indicated that this January 1 deadline for this trade legislation is an arbitrary deadline. It can be changed. If it happened in January or February of 1989, that would be fine, he said.

Why are members of the Conservative Government ramming, jamming, bashing this legislation through the House of Commons? They say it is in the nation's interest, it is a national emergency. Mr. Speaker, you have the right as the Speaker of the House of Commons to recall Parliament. If the Government really did need to sit extra hours and into the Christmas recess, and if you agree, Mr. Speaker, that indeed it was in the nation's interest to do that, then you have the right under the Standing Orders as we know them today to recall Parliament at any time. You have done that in the past, Mr. Speaker. Rather than listen to you, Mr. Speaker, the person who is the servant of the House of Commons, they said that they have a majority, they know best and they are going to forget the rules, traditions, practices and so on of the House of Commons and they will impose their Conservative agenda.

I think we have to ask ourselves what is this Conservative agenda. They now bring in a motion which states that we are going to sit late into the night, we are going to be here on Christmas Eve to debate this motion, and perhaps on the day after Boxing Day, and so on. We are going to throw out the idea of a legislative committee so that we cannot hear witnesses. We are going to bar any experts from reacting to this legislation.

What is next? I ask Members opposite to think about this. Will the next motion the Government will bring forward be to do away with Question Period because it does not like Question Period? Will the next motion be to do away with having Standing Committees of the House of Commons because they can be embarrassing at times? I think of the Chairman of the Finance Committee and how on a number of occasions his comments have brought some embarrassment to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). So we will do away with committees.

Are we going to do away with the sittings of Parliament? It is required that Parliament must sit at least once a year. Why not change that to once every 20 years? That is how totalitarian governments begin.

I say let us be cautious. When we look at this situation step by step, there is no question that this demolition team is clearly at work in what their long-term agenda is in terms of demolishing this Parliament, something which I think we have yet to see.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENTS PURSUANT TO S. O. 31

TRADE

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, two years ago the Conservative Government entered into an agreement with the United States to impose a 15 per cent export tax on Canadian softwood lumber being sold in the United States. This was the first time in history that any country imposed such a massive penalty of over $500 million on its largest industry, the forest products industry.

In the last two years the Canadian dollar has appreciated in value from 71 cents to 83 cents to the U.S. dollar, costing the Canadian forest industry another 15 per cent on the value of its exports to the United States.

S. O. 31

The market for softwood lumber has weakened in the past several months and Canadian inventories of softwood lumber have increased dramatically. If current trends continue, we are facing lay-offs and shutdowns of many sawmills throughout northern Ontario this winter and the loss of thousands of jobs.

I call upon the Canadian Government to initiate negotiations immediately with the United States Government to eliminate this devastating tax on our softwood lumber exports to the United States which is going to cost us thousands and thousands of jobs throughout northern Ontario.

NINTH WORLD CUP CROSS-COUNTRY SKIING CHAMPIONSHIP—TRIBUTE TO ORGANIZERS

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak for the first time as the new Member for Montmorency—Orléans about a sporting event of international stature, that is the ninth Master's World Cup of Cross-Country Skiing which will be held in my riding at Mont Sainte-Anne from February 26 to March 4, 1989.

A team of volunteers is finalizing arrangements for this prestigious event which is being held for the very first time in North America, thanks to our Government's financial support.

I want to pay special tribute to the principal organizers of the event, namely Yvan Couillard, Claude Brunelle, Roméo Mailloux and, of course, Honorary Chairman, athlete Pierre Harvey.

I wish them the best of luck in staging the World Cup which should improve Quebec's standing as a tourist destination which hosts prestigious international winter sporting events!

ARCTIC POLLUTION—CALL FOR TREATY NEGOTIATIONS

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, the lives of the peoples of the far North are at risk. Uncontrolled use of pesticides, chemicals, and toxic substances in the Soviet Union and Europe has brought pollution to the Arctic which threatens the food supply of the Inuit. Action is needed now. Canada must show leadership.

In the Canada and Polar Science Report of May, 1987, it was stressed that Canadian participation in the International polar research had suffered badly from a want of consistency, preparation, and a sense of purpose. Not only do we not have a sense of purpose, we now have a crisis on our hands.

The source of pollution must be determined and removed. I call upon the Government to fulfil its commitment immediately to constitute the Canadian Polar Research Commission and to commence circumpolar negotiations for an Arctic pollution treaty.

BURMA—SUPPORT URGED FOR RESTORATION OF DEMOCRACY

Mr. Jim Edwards (Edmonton Southwest): Mr. Speaker, in recognition of the great ground swell of support for the return of democracy in the Socialist Republic of Burma and of the need for national reconciliation, I call upon all members of this place and all Canadians to voice their support for the people of Burma and their efforts to restore human rights and democracy in that country, to condemn the killings and mass arrests in Burma, and to call upon the Burmese army and police to exercise restraint and respect for human rights.

I urge the Government of Canada to continue to publicly condemn the killings and mass arrests by the Burmese army, to further encourage the restoration of democracy in Burma and an end to one-party rule, and to persist in raising the issue of human rights and national reconciliation in its meetings with Burmese officials and in international organizations.

SENIOR CITIZENS

BUSING PROGRAM ESTABLISHED FOR WINNIPEG
SENIOR CITIZENS

Mr. J. Ronald Duhamel (Saint-Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I have just received a message from Winnipeg informing me that the busing program for senior citizens set up by the last Liberal government will be cancelled shortly.

The cancellation of this program will affect thousands of senior citizens in the province of Manitoba. At this time of the year, when temperatures are hovering around -30° Celsius in Winnipeg, this announcement is hardly welcomed news.

[English]

The cutting of this seniors' program will signal the end of a very important initiative, a highly successful pilot project that had importance for seniors across Canada and contributed significantly to their quality of life.

I am led to believe that the Conservative candidate in Winnipeg South, now a Member of Parliament (Mr. Dobbie) had supported the program during the election campaign, had given it at least qualified support. As well, I am informed that the provincial Conservatives had also supported it. If my memory serves me correctly, the federal Government had previously cancelled support for this program in 1985.

I call upon the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) to find support for the seniors' busing project, to work with the province, the city, and the various volunteer groups, to find a base for the continuation of this worthwhile seniors' busing program.

TOURISM

IMPORTANCE OF CANADA'S ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, Mr. William Rowe, Chairman of the Tourism Industry, better known as TIAC, has expressed concerns that although Tourism Canada's advertising campaign is exceptional, the amount of dollars allocated to advertising is not sufficient to compete with many other tourist destinations.

Australia has done an exceptional job of tourism promotion in the past two years because that country has worked hard to co-ordinate its advertising campaign with its exporters.

As Canada's tourist industry is one of its most important in terms of jobs, I ask that the Government look closely at the importance of tourism advertising as it affects our economy, our jobs, and our relationships throughout the world.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PARTICIPATION OF PUBLIC SERVANTS IN LAST
GENERAL ELECTION CAMPAIGN

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, on July 15 last, the Federal Court of Appeal struck down the section of the Public Service Employment Act prohibiting public servants from campaigning on behalf of or against a candidate or party. On November 21 last, public servants were able to do as they wished, despite attempts at intimidation on the part of the Public Service Commission. To my knowledge, the earth did not shake, war did not break out and the sky is still blue, even if the Ottawa region voted red.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that the experience of November 21 shows the government that it must take immediate action and table a bill which will protect public servants who want to participate fully, or however they wish, in the democratic process of electing the Members of the House of Commons.

RAILWAY TRANSPORT—NOISE POLLUTION

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to be making my first statement to the House after my re-election. First of all, I want to thank the residents of Beauharnois-Salaberry for entrusting me with a second mandate. Let me assure them that I will work hard to prove myself worthy of their trust.

I also want to thank the City of Ottawa for finally repairing the Queensway. It's the first time since 1984.

Mr. Speaker, free trade was obviously a very popular topic of discussion in my riding and the central theme of the election campaign. However, very little was said about the environment. When we talk about the environment, Mr. Speaker, we talk only about water and the air and about the threat posed by different pollutants. One subject, however, that is very important to us is rail transportation. Of course, railroads were once on the cutting edge of economic development in Canada. Today, however, we would like to see railroads rerouted around the cities and town which they helped found. In the Armand-Frappier neighbourhood of Valleyfield and along Saint-Charles Street in Huntingdon, there are many instances where the large rail companies, especially Conrail and Canadian National, make a great deal of noise and are active in the middle of the night. This situation adversely affects the quality of life of the area's residents. I simply want to assure them that I am actively working on this problem and will take steps to ensure that these companies respect the environment.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE
AGREEMENTDE GRANDPRÉ COMMISSION—ABSENCE OF INTERIM REPORT

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign the New Democrats and scores of other Canadians all across the country who analyzed the trade deal pointed out that hundreds of thousands of Canadians would lose their jobs as a result of the trade deal. During the campaign and even more vigorously since the election, and as recently as the day before yesterday in the House of Commons, the Government pointed out that Canadians had nothing to fear in relation to jobs because of the free trade deal.

At the same time it was pointing this out, the Government was discussing the de Grandpré Commission which was going to be making a report. As recently as the day before yesterday it stated that there would be an interim report of that committee tomorrow.

Jay Alam of the committee has confirmed that there never was any intention to have an interim report by that commission. This confirms what we have been saying all along, during the election campaign and as recently as this morning, that the Government does not have the interests of Canada at heart. Just pointing out the concerns of the trade deal—

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has exceeded the time.

PROVINCIAL AFFAIRS

SASKATCHEWAN—BY-ELECTION WON BY PROGRESSIVE CONSERVATIVE CANDIDATE

Mr. Geoff Wilson (Swift Current—Maple Creek—Assiniboia): Mr. Speaker, we all know that by-elections traditionally go against the Party in power. This was not the case yesterday in the Saskatchewan provincial riding of Assiniboia—Gravelbourg where, for the first time ever, a P.C. Member was elected in the person of Jack Wolfe.

Because this by-election came at mid-term it was seen by the entire province as a crucial test, and all Parties put everything they had into the campaign.

The voters said yes to the P.C. Government and the able leadership of Grant Devine. They said: "We like your policies in support of the family, free trade, economic diversification and agriculture".

The voters said no to Roy Romanow and the policies of fear. They said: "We do not like the negative health scare, medi-scure, gloom and doom tactics of the NDP".

The electors of Assiniboia—Gravelbourg decided in favour of a positive commonsense P.C. Government, a Government that believes in the future of Saskatchewan and its young people.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT PROPOSED TO BAN IMPORTATION OF GARBAGE PAIL KIDS CARDS

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, the House will know that I have been attempting for over a year now to have the importation into Canada of a product known as Garbage Pail Kids to be stopped. As you know, these are cartoons depicting children being mutilated, murdered, and dissected. It is my opinion that this product should never have been allowed to enter this country.

Later today I will be introducing into Parliament a Bill to amend the Criminal Code. This Bill will change the definition of hate propaganda under the Criminal Code.

It is my hope that this Bill will be adopted and Parliament will move immediately to stop the importation of this kind of trash into our country. We certainly do not need our children being influenced by this kind of human degradation that is depicted in Garbage Pail Kids.

Mr. Denis Pronovost (Saint-Maurice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to start by thanking the people of the riding of Saint-Maurice, who expressed their confidence in me on November 21. For the first time since 1891, the voters of Saint-Maurice have elected a Progressive Conservative Member of Parliament. This is a historic gesture on their part, and I am determined to meet worthily the challenges that await me.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that I was startled yesterday to hear the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) speak of the inheritance we would be leaving young Canadians after the signing of the Free Trade Agreement, because we in the riding of Saint-Maurice already bear the burden of a heavy inheritance: the Liberals left us the loss of 12,000 manufacturing jobs over the past 20 years they were in power—12,000 jobs lost, Mr. Speaker, an unemployment rate of 16 per cent, the economic decline of a region that was economically very promising!

Today, Mr. Speaker, I commit myself to defending the economy of my riding, to fixing up the mess the

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

SUPPORT FROM RESIDENTS OF TIMISKAMING

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, first may I say thanks to the voters of Timiskaming for once again placing their trust in me and supporting our Party's progressive policies on November 21.

Well, the more things change the more they stay the same. Again yesterday we heard campaign speeches from the Leaders of the Oppositions. Once again we heard their scare tactics concerning our social programs and regional development policies.

Timiskaming residents have sent a message to Ottawa. They do not believe in NDP policies and they do not support the Liberal trade alternatives. They have voted for a far-seeing Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

I think it is a shame that the public who have supported this legislation are being held ransom by our irresponsible colleagues across the way.

I will say one thing, Mr. Speaker, I do look forward to being able to prove over the next four years, to both northern Ontarians and to the opposition benches, the many benefits Canadians will enjoy with this Free Trade Agreement.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

DE GRANDPRÉ COMMISSION—TIMING OF REPORT

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a question with the Deputy Prime Minister in the absence of the Prime Minister. Once again, even in this early session, we find the Prime Minister raising false expectations and playing loosely with the honest straightforward facts that Canadian people require.

Oral Questions

He had promised that by today the de Grandpré Commission would be giving a report on how to deal with the numbers of lay-offs that will be caused by the trade agreement to be signed with the United States. We learned today from officials that there never was any intention to table a plan or provide recommendations, and the de Grandpré Commission will not be reporting until next June. In the meantime thousands of workers will be affected.

What specific plans does the Government have in the next six months to provide direct aid and assistance to the thousands of workers who will be affected by the trade agreement, who will lose their jobs and their livelihoods in their communities? Is the Government prepared to offer any plans, now that the phantom of the de Grandpré Commission has been dispelled?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, in the first place the hon. gentleman's question is inaccurate factually. There will not be thousands of jobs affected as a result of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement. There will be thousands of jobs created, tens of thousands of jobs created. Of course it will be just as easy to claim that they will all be due to the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement.

As the Prime Minister said, this morning we had a meeting with the de Grandpré committee to review with them their progress. We had an interim report from them to us about their progress, what they find to be the situation, and what their plans are in connection with making a final report. That report will be made as soon as possible, certainly long before the month of June.

Their report to the Ministers who met with them was very positive. There are a lot of positive advantages to the Free Trade Agreement of which we should be ready to take advantage.

There was no suggestion by them that there was any emergency situation that had to be dealt with in any way, shape or form.

I can give you a list of companies that are expanding, including Swift Textiles, R and M Nickel—

Mr. Speaker: Order. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I would only say to the Minister that, rather than listening to the de Grandpré Commission, perhaps he and the Government would be advised to listen to the workers who have already lost their jobs as a result of the agreement.

REQUEST FOR TRI-PARTITE CONSULTATION ON POSSIBLE JOB LOSSES

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in introducing Bill C-2, the Minister indicated that he expected that there would be job losses and the Government would be prepared to bring in plans.

Now that the de Grandpré Commission has failed to come up with any specific plan of action, will the Minister and his colleagues be prepared to sit down with the industry and the unions, in industries like food processing, printing, clothing, and all other industries identified by the Economic Council and the Bank of Nova Scotia as sectors where jobs will be lost, to deal with a plan of action to cover the kinds of losses and dislocations they will be facing? Will the Government act now? To follow the old slogan: "Don't wait for spring, do it now".

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, that slogan uttered by the hon. gentleman certainly shows his originality of mind. With respect to the meeting that was held with the de Grandpré committee, there already is a plan in force. There are already many adjustment programs in the Department of Employment and Immigration, Department of Labour and other government Departments.

We already have in Canada a very dynamic economy in which hundreds of thousands of people, and in fact millions, change jobs every year, and those who need to be assisted in that process are assisted. That will continue.

The de Grandpré committee will be recommending as soon as possible, and we urge it to do so as soon as possible, certainly long before June, whether or not it thinks there are any additions needed to those programs. There is no emergency situation.

The Hon. Member referred to the Economic Council of Canada. Its forecast was and is that over the 10-year period there would be 439,000 jobs created, 187,000 jobs lost, for a net gain of 251,000 jobs over 10 years. The U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement has not yet commenced, and the hon. gentleman does nothing but cry wolf.

Oral Questions

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, the Minister should read the statements of his colleague, the Minister of Finance, who said yesterday that the Government is following a high interest policy to cut job creation and job growth in Canada over the next year.

REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is addressed to the Deputy Prime Minister. Last summer, the provincial premiers called for consultative mechanisms between the two levels of government, to deal with the many lay-offs and other effects of free trade. Will the Government be responding to its provincial counterparts and calling a federal-provincial conference as soon as possible, to help workers?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Government is following an anti-inflationary policy which has been most successful in inducing economic growth with the result that 1,303,000 jobs were created in the last four years. The youth unemployment rate was brought down, and 738,000 more women are working today than were working four years ago. We intend to continue with that kind of successful economic policy under the direction of the Minister of Finance and of the Prime Minister.

With respect to unemployment, the question is not whether someone is unemployed as a result of the U.S.-Canada Free Trade Agreement which is not even yet in effect; the question is how to assist persons who become unemployed from no matter what the cause, and we have in effect now a broad range of programs and we are prepared to improve those programs wherever it is seen that improvements are needed. We do not need any joint consultation with the provinces to continue with that. In the meantime, the premiers will be meeting with the Prime Minister in due course to discuss the economy, as they have every year.

CLOTHING INDUSTRY EMPLOYEES

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Thanks to the Free Trade Agreement, the needle trade, the clothing trade, is already looking at massive closings, and with them the laying off of hundreds of workers both in my riding and across Canada. The Free Trade Agreement does not consider the particular interests and needs of the needle industry, given its materials, energy and labour costs, and the intensive, competitive nature of the business. The pinch of the Free Trade Agreement is already being felt by Canadian-operated businesses.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Volpe: This may not be of interest to the Party across—

Mr. Speaker: I hesitate to interrupt the Hon. Member, but I think the Hon. Member has set the basis for his question. I would ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

Mr. Volpe: Mr. Speaker, I want to know if the Minister for International Trade has specific strategies to assist the enterprises in the clothing industry and the workers who are dependent upon that industry for employment, workers who are about to lose their jobs thanks to the FTA.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I do not think either the country or the hon. gentleman's constituents gain anything from this kind of wild scare talk about the needle trade. There has been a SAGIT, an advisory group for that industry, which advised us during the course of the U.S.-Canada free trade negotiations. The SAGIT advises us during the course of GATT negotiations. That will be continuing.

The apparel industry and the industry generally have been assisted by the programs that were announced by the Minister of Finance at the end of last March. There may be some adjustment over the next few years in that industry and if there are adjustments that require government assistance, then the government assistance will be forthcoming.

Mr. Volpe: It will be interesting to see how the priorities of the Government shake down as the pressures for assistance come from both the industry and—

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member who has a matter of some concern, and it is a serious matter, would want to use his preamble to set the basis for the question, and I ask the Hon. Member to put his question.

SITUATION OF IMMIGRANT WOMEN WORKERS

Mr. Joseph Volpe (Eglinton—Lawrence): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Employment and Immigration. Since the workers in the needle trade are primarily middle-aged immigrant women, among the most vulnerable in the labour force given their lack of education and language skills, what specifically is the Minister's Department proposing to do by way of assisting these women with limited employment opportunities outside the industry but who wish to continue to be gainfully employed?

Oral Questions

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, this Government has done more for immigrant women than any Government in the history of Canada. We have done it through—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. McDougall: That includes both language training and training programs that are specifically targeted toward immigrant women who have a particular employment need and who have problems that other people in the working community do not have. That is why we established those programs. They apply to people in the garment industry as they apply to people in other industries. However, let me say that the Hon. Member is taking the most vulnerable sector in our society and telling it that it has no future. That is wrong, and he should not be saying that.

DE GRANDPRÉ COMMISSION—INTERIM REPORT QUERY

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Prime Minister whose office told me he would be here not 15 minutes ago, I have a question for the Minister for International Trade. On Wednesday when I raised questions in the House about the effects of the trade deal on workers who are being laid off right now, not in the future, the Prime Minister said to me with reference to his blue ribbon committee that it would be most valuable for workers and that it would be discussing an interim report today, thus attempting to deflect any criticism in the House on Wednesday.

I would ask my question of the Minister since the Prime Minister is not here.

A member of the committee, Mr. James McCambly, whom the Prime Minister himself mentioned in the House on Wednesday, said there is no interim report and that such an interim report had never even been discussed by the committee, and the senior economist for the committee is quoted today in The Globe and Mail as saying that there is no plan to issue an interim report. Who is telling the truth, the Prime Minister or members of the committee?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the answer, of course, is that both the Prime Minister and the members of the committee are telling the truth. If I might refer to Hansard of December 14, the Prime Minister said this:

“Nobody is talking about waiting until June and the fact is that Mr. de Grandpré is scheduled to meet with the Ministers responsible as early as Friday of this week to discuss an interim report.”

We discussed this morning an interim report, and we concluded with the committee that there was no need for it to bring in an interim report because it made its interim report to us at this meeting. They reported that there was no emergency situation in effect. They reported they will be in a position to bring in their final report in a very reasonable period of time.

• (1130)

There is nothing that the Prime Minister has said or any member of the committee that is incorrect. That is the position. Their report will be a final report and that will be brought in as soon as possible. Their interim report was made to us this morning and we agree they do not need to put in a written interim report.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, it is very obvious to every Member of the House and to any person in Canada watching this that we on this side of the House were misled on Wednesday. The Cabinet is trying to bail itself out. That is the truth. The Cabinet has come back into the House to try to undo on Friday what it screwed up, to put it bluntly, on Wednesday. That is what it has tried to do.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Be honest, Ed.

PRIME MINISTER'S STATEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister suggested on Wednesday to the workers of Canada—

An Hon. Member: Bob White has you spooked.

Mr. Broadbent: —that there would be an interim report and that it was going to be discussed today, thus conveying a message that their concerns would be addressed now. Is the Minister not only contradicting what the committee members have said but contradicting what the Prime Minister said on Wednesday when he was trying to tell workers that, rest assured, there would be an interim report and the Government would do something? Come clean with the people of Canada.

Oral Questions

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, one understands that the Leader of the New Democratic Party is in a state of hysteria lately as a result of the attacks upon him by the official labour movement. That explains his ridiculous behaviour today.

If I might refer again to what the Prime Minister said as reported on page 49 of Hansard:

"Nobody is talking about waiting until June . . ."

That is absolutely right.

"—the fact is that Mr. de Grandpré is scheduled to meet with the Ministers responsible as early as Friday of this week—"

That happened this morning.

"—to discuss an interim report."

We have concluded an interim report is not necessary. There will be a final report within a very short period of time. There is no emergency situation. The fact that the Leader of the Opposition wants to cry wolf together with the Liberal Party, does not make an emergency situation exist. The suggestion that there has been any misrepresentation—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The Hon. Member for Oshawa.

Mr. Broadbent: I think it is wonderful, Mr. Speaker, to hear members of the Conservative Party telling people on this side of the House to be honest. That is the joke of the times.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I remind the Government it was right after the 1984 election that it began systematically to mislead the people of Canada, and now the Government is doing it all over again.

Some Hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Order, Ed.

Mr. Broadbent: It is all right, Joe. We have not won all the seats in Alberta yet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: I know the Hon. Member would want to put his question.

Mr. Dick: Be honest this time, Ed.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, the Government has now reversed itself. On Wednesday the Government was promising an interim report and now the Government is saying there will not be an interim report.

Is the Minister saying to the working people—there have been some 2,400 who have been laid off since the election—that this Government of Canada does not plan to do anything in a special way either for them, their families, or communities affected? Is that what the Government is saying?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, it is regrettable to see the Leader of the New Democratic Party slip into these kinds of tactics so early in the session. But when one looks at who is sitting behind him, one understands the pressure that he is under.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosbie: The firm of Roseworks is increasing its staff from 15 to 50 over the next two years. Du Pont is investing $240 million over the next two years. Canadian Thermos Products Limited of Toronto is expanding its plant, with 102 new jobs. Bachan Aerospace plant in Windsor is going to operate while the Detroit plant closes, for another 20 jobs. Saskatchewan Intercontinental Packers has 148 direct jobs, and the Crestbrook Forest Industries has 4,000 new jobs—4,000—

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Mr. Crosbie: And the Cargill—

Some Hon. Members: More, more.

Ms. Copps: Sit down, you dummy.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Labrador.

FISHERIES

LABRADOR FISHERMEN'S UNION CO-OP—REQUEST FOR ACCESS TO NORTHERN COD FISHERY

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, it is great to be back in a civil House at Christmas time!

Oral Questions

My question is for the Minister of Fisheries who has said no to the Labrador Fishermen's Union Co-op for a supply of offshore fish. He allows the multinationals and even foreign countries, including France, to fish northern cod, yet he has said no to the Labrador Fishermen's Union Co-op.

Why has the Minister forced the Union Co-op to buy a Canadian vessel and not allowed it to fish Canadian fish? How can he as Minister of Fisheries, the protector of fisherman, turn down this request by the Labrador Fishermen's Union Co-op?

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I was tempted to welcome a civilized question from a civilized colleague but after hearing the question, I am not so sure.

We established a new enterprise allocation system two years ago for the northern shrimp fishery in which the Labrador Fishermen's Union Shrimp Company has participated with two licences, each being worth over $2 million a year. It has done very well and we commend the company on its success. But the Hon. Member knows that the enterprise allocation system under which offshore cod, or northern cod more specifically, has made available—

Some Hon. Members: Oh?

Mr. Siddon: These folks over here did not ask the question, Mr. Speaker, but I am sure they are interested in the answer. They will learn.

The Hon. Member knows that enterprise allocations are not surplus to the needs of the established offshore users because that was clearly enunciated by industry at a meeting on the northern cod in St. John's two weeks ago. The Member knows there is no additional allocation for any one group, including the Fishermen's Union Shrimp Company.

FAMILY COMPACT ALLEGED—REQUEST THAT SYSTEM BE CHANGED

Hon. William Rompkey (Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I know there is no additional allocation, but there is virtually a Family Compact now fishing northern cod. The only people in there are the big players, the multinationals. There is no way for anybody new to break in. I am saying it is unfair to deny those people who live closest to the resource and who depend on it for their livelihood permission to fish northern cod.

You have to change the system. Will you? Will you break that Family Compact? Will you allow the Labrador Fishermen's Union Co-op in to fish, those people who live closest to the resource and who depend on it? Will you do that?

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): Think of the fishermen first; do not think of the companies.

Hon. Thomas Siddon (Minister of Fisheries and Oceans): Mr. Speaker, I know the Hon. Member is very concerned about the Fishermen's Union Shrimp Company and that is obvious as he is a representative of that area. When he speaks of a Family Compact, however, he should recall that he was a member of the Cabinet of the Government that created that Family Compact, which decided who the members would be who got quotas. That is a policy of the Canadian Government that flows from the Kirby Task Force Report which his Government approved.

Ms. Campbell (South West Nova): Change it then.

Mr. Siddon: The Member had better look back in history before he starts asking us to start changing long established policies.

DON RIVER POLLUTION—REQUEST FOR ACTION PLAN

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Minister of the Environment. The Prime Minister told us repeatedly during the last election that he was committed to the environment. Just prior to the election the Prime Minister announced $150 million to clean up the hot spots in the Great Lakes. The worst of these hot spots is the Don River.

● (1140)

Would the Acting Minister of the Environment make a commitment today to begin an action plan on this?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State for Canada and Acting Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to renew and confirm the commitment made by the Prime Minister on this subject.

REQUEST THAT MINISTER MEET AREA MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

Mr. Dennis Mills (Broadview—Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, on June 3, in Montreal, the Government committed $110 million to begin cleaning up the St. Lawrence River. That action has already begun. At the very least, would the Minister agree to meet with the Members whose ridings surround the Don River in order that we can get this project going there as well?

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State for Canada and Acting Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, of course we are devoted with equity to the depollution of every river in Canada, and there will be no discrimination, whatever the river is.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MIDDLE EAST—DIPLOMATIC CONTACTS WITH PALESTINE LIBERATION ORGANIZATION

Mr. Bob Corbett (Fundy—Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his address to the United Nations Mr. Arafat made a clear call for peace in the Middle East and a peaceful solution to the Arab-Israeli impasse. He also amplified the Palestine National Council's November 15 acceptance of UN Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338, and the PNC's renunciation of terrorism, which met the two conditions which successive Canadian Governments have set for higher level diplomatic contacts with the PLO.

Canada's American and European allies have all responded publicly and favourably.

Does Canada plan to raise the level of its diplomatic contacts with the PLO to that of our American and European allies?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs and Acting Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, we already have contacts with the PLO and with other Palestinians. Naturally, those contacts are of particular importance given the developments in the Middle East now.

We are intending no immediate change in the level or nature of those contacts, but we are naturally encouraged by developments which we think are important and positive in the Middle East, and intend to continue to look for opportunities for Canada to contribute in a constructive way to a durable and acceptable peace in that region.

AGREEMENT

DE GRANDPRÉ COMMISSION—INTERIM REPORT ISSUE

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, on page 51 of this week's Hansard there is a response from the Prime Minister to a question put by me concerning the committee reviewing the programs necessary for displaced workers as a consequence of the free trade deal.

As reported at page 51 of Hansard in response to my question about that committee, the Prime Minister admonished me to do the following:

"So if the Hon. Member would kindly wait until Friday and then for the final report . . ."

When the Prime Minister suggested to wait for Friday he was specifically referring to the interim report promised by this Government on this Friday from this committee.

Mr. Speaker, they misled the House about this interim report.

I ask the Minister of Trade is he aware that Mr. McCambly, a member of the committee, not only said that there is no interim report, but he went further and said if this report is going to be useful, it is needed right away. Did Mr. McCambly this morning say that he was mistaken, or did he insist that there is no need now for an interim report?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the Hon. Member who comes here with such a reputation engages simply in repetition and has not got an original thought of his own. The question was already asked this morning, and the answer is exactly as was given a few moments ago.

This morning we discussed with the de Grandpré committee whether or not an interim report was needed. We had an interim report from them given to the four or five Ministers who were present. It was decided that, in view of the situation as they found it, it would be better to wait for their final report, which will be coming along as soon as possible. It will not be very long before a final report is available, certainly well ahead of June. That is the way that we are going to proceed.

Oral Questions

By the way, Mr. Speaker, that committee is going to examine the possibilities for Canadian businesses and workers to position themselves to benefit from the agreement. It is not only involved in examining government programs that support adjustment. The committee has very important business to do. There are positive aspects to the Free Trade Agreement that they will be following.

Mr. Speaker: I think that the Hon. Minister is getting well away from the question. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca.

POSITION OF COMMISSION MEMBER

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, in response to my good friend the Minister, I perhaps may be subject to the accusation of not having an original idea, but I have no difficulty in recognizing water when I see it, even after a 20-year absence.

If this report is going to be useful, Mr. McCambly said that the report is needed immediately. Did Mr. McCambly change his opinion of his own free will, or was he ordered to change his opinion by the Minister this morning?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the last time I had an altercation with the hon. gentleman he had an open line show, and he is now a refugee from that open line show. This is not an open line show. This is a foot-in-the-mouth show for some people.

Mr. Speaker: It is appropriate to move on. The Hon. Member for Hamilton East.

AGRICULTURE

PRESENCE OF PESTICIDES IN FOOD—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture.

One of the most appalling disclosures in the Auditor General's Report is that food that Canadians eat every day is not healthy. According to the Report, there are pesticides on the market that 55 years from now will still not have been tested.

I would therefore ask the Minister of Agriculture what he intends to do to remedy this dangerous situation, starting today.

[English]

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Member knows, we are putting in place a full-fledged inquiry into the whole pesticide review process. That has been a recommendation brought down by a Standing Committee and by others. The terms of reference and the people who will be conducting this review will be appointed very soon. There is widespread consultation going on with interested groups and indeed the provinces.

I might say that most of the observations that have been brought to the attention of the public by the Auditor General were brought to the attention of ourselves by the systems that we have put in place. We have established a number of systems to do that. As the Hon. Member knows, we have one of the best systems in the world and we want to continue to ensure that it remains that way. We obviously welcome the Auditor General's constructive observations in this matter.

ABILITY TO CONDUCT TESTS

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I am unclear why the Minister would be bragging about a system which puts pesticides that have known cancer causing capacities on the market-place, and where permanent testing is not done until 55 years after they have been brought into the market-place. I cannot understand why he calls that a good system.

Last August a study by the United Farm Workers in the city of Toronto showed that 86 per cent of California table grapes were dusted with pesticides of a cancer causing variety.

I would like to ask the Minister of Health what he intends to do immediately to improve the testing capacity, together with his colleague the Minister of Agriculture, and to assure consumers today that the table grapes that we are now buying are not dusted with potentially cancer causing pesticides as we saw in the city of Toronto last August?

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Privy Council and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question I simply say that for dairy, fruit, and vegetables the risk assessment will be completed by March, 1989.

Ms. Copps: What about now?

Mr. Mazankowski: This was detected by the Food Advisory Board and the Agricultural Food Safety Division. As a matter of fact, the systematic process for re-evaluation is in place.

In terms of the whole pesticide registration process, it certainly did not develop over the last three or four years, but it represents some years of neglect before we came into office. We had to put into place the type of systems, checks and balances, which we did, and which have identified these weaknesses, and, Mr. Speaker, we are acting.

FREE TRADE

REQUEST GOVERNMENT UNVEIL ITS ASSISTANCE PLAN FOR VICTIMS

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, during the recent election campaign, the Prime Minister said there would be winners and losers after the Free Trade Agreement was in place. The Prime Minister never misses an opportunity to tell us who the winners will be. But he has never spelled out clearly who the losers will be.

We know there will be victims. The Government knows there will be victims.

My question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Is the Government ready to admit there will be victims? Is the Government ready to announce now, today, its assistance plan for the thousands of workers throughout Canada who have already lost their jobs, and those who will lose them, because of the Free Trade Agreement?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I wish to congratulate the Hon. Member on his election to this House.

In answer to his question, the Canadian people, as a whole, are going to be winners as a result of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the results of the election indicate that the Canadian people agree with the Progressive Conservative Party that, overall, we are going to win as a result of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

It has been admitted from the start that there will be some industries that will suffer from adjustments. All of the gains cannot be on one side. This is an agreement between two parties.

One area in which there will be the need for adjustment, as we already know, is that of grape production, and with that in mind this Government, in conjunction with the provinces in which there is grape production, instituted certain assistance programs.

While there may be other industries which will suffer adverse effects, overall we are gainers, as the figures of the Economic Council of Canada that I mentioned had indicated.

We are talking about an adjustment period of 10 years. I have in my hand a list of companies which have just announced expansion programs—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Crosbie: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the Opposition is going to bring up the case of every person in Canada who they allege has suffered a job loss as a result of this agreement, an agreement not yet in force and effect, surely we can put forth the figures in respect of job gains.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT RESPONSE

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, the unemployment insurance program is not enough for the families of the 600 workers who are losing their jobs at Gillette. The unemployment insurance system is not enough for the 900 workers at Northern Telecom. The unemployment insurance program is not enough for the 140 workers at Pittsburgh Paint.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the Minister: is this absence of a commitment by the Government all the answer Canadians are going to get?

[English]

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the answers being given to Canadians are satisfying those who are taking a reasoned approach to this question. Canadians know that there will be some losers, and they know that we are dedicated to ensuring that those who will be losers temporarily are assisted.

Oral Questions

Canadians also know that there are job gains in industry after industry: the mining industry, the forestry industry, the agricultural sector, the petro-chemical industry, the energy industry. Canadians are gainers, and more jobs are going to be created. We have the proof of that. To cite just one example, we have the announcement by Crestbrook Forest Industries Ltd. of Alberta of a $1.3 billion plant investment near Athabasca, Alberta, leading to the creation of 4,000 jobs.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, we also have an economy which, under the brilliant direction of the Minister of Finance, has already adjusted to the terrific increase in the value of the Canadian dollar vis-à-vis foreign currencies.

So, we can adjust to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. We can make whatever adjustments are needed. We have confidence in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATIONMAHMOUD ISSA MOHAMMAD—REQUEST FOR EARLY REFUGEE BOARD HEARING

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Immigration.

Yesterday an immigration inquiry concluded that Mahmoud Issa Mohammad deliberately misled Canadian officials on his immigration application, and the adjudicator further concluded, and I quote:

“Had he not claimed to be a refugee, a deportation order would have been made today.”

While I appreciate the adjudicator's decision to honour this individual's refugee claim, I would ask the Minister, given the national interest and the security implications of this case, to ask the refugee board to set this case down for hearing immediately, rather than allowing it to languish at the bottom of a refugee backlog that now numbers approximately 80,000 applications.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Clearly, Mr. Speaker, this is a case which we in the Government have followed very closely and with considerable interest.

I am neither in a position to make the request asked of me by the Hon. Member, nor would I interfere with what the immigration and refugee authorities will determine in their own processes.

We shall continue to follow this case and we will, to the extent possible, ensure that due process is followed in a way that serves Canadians.

REQUEST FOR FAST-TRACK APPROACH

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, let me clarify the question. No one on this side of the House is asking the Minister to interfere in the process or to diminish the rights of Mr. Mohammad.

My Party, last January, pushed the Government to expedite the immigration inquiry, and what we are asking today is that she expedite the refugee hearing.

Given that the Government's credibility and integrity are at stake in this case, we would request that the Minister recommend that the refugee hearing, a hearing in respect of which Mr. Mohammad will have full rights under the law, be fast-tracked, so that the interests of the system and of Canadians can be served.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, whatever one's personal views of this particular case may be, the interests of Canadians are only served when due process is followed, and the refugee board is in the better position to determine the timing in respect of this case, as with other cases.

HEALTHCIGARETTE PACKAGE WARNINGS

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Cigarette smoking endangers the life of the unborn during pregnancy. It causes lung cancer, heart disease, and chronic obstructive lung disease. As well, it is highly addictive, aggravates virtually all other respiratory illnesses, reduces the life expectancy of smokers, and causes lung disease even among non-smokers.

Oral Questions

Given that the Canadian Lung Association has urged the Department of National Health and Welfare to include all of the health risks of smoking in the labelling of cigarette packages, I would ask the Minister to inform the House as to the reasons why all of these major known health hazards are not displayed; why it is that only one of the numerous health risks involved in cigarette smoking will be displayed at a time, on a rotational basis, on each cigarette package.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, at the outset I want to congratulate the Hon. Member on his election to the House. As a result of his election to this House, we can now bring to the floor of this House the debates in which we engaged in Manitoba.

The changes that have been requested by the Canadian Lung Association, the Canadian Heart Association, the Canadian Cancer Society, and others, have been examined by my office, and some changes have been made. As a result, the information that he includes in his question is somewhat dated in terms of the kind of message that we intend to bring forward.

REQUEST THAT MAJOR HEALTH HAZARDS BE INCLUDED ON LABELS

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, given the serious implications for all Canadians of not knowing all of the major known health hazards, given that the Canadian Lung Association is an authority on this subject, and given that the Department of National Health and Welfare anticipates the implementation of this regulation shortly after the New Year, I would ask the Minister to instruct his Department immediately to require that all of the major known health hazards be displayed on each cigarette package, and displayed not on a rotational basis, one at a time, but all of the time, for the safety of all Canadians.

● (1200)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member might want to re-examine that suggestion. If all these warnings were placed on the same cigarette package, given his age and mine we might need even more help to read them all because of their size.

This Government brought in Bill C-51, which has been recognized as legislation leading the world with respect to both the message and also the space for the message on packages and cartons, as well as billboards which presently do not have warnings. These warnings have been stiffened compared to the ones originally considered. As well, there are two tranches to those warnings, which must be considered in light of our trying to get them into the marketplace for January 1, 1989.

I believe when he sees the warnings he will see they are not only in keeping with the health objectives of the Government, but specifically with the commitments we made under Bill C-51.

Mr. Speaker: There will be a single question from the Hon. Member for Windsor—Lake St. Clair.

PHARMACEUTICAL INDUSTRY

DRUG COMPANY'S OFFER OF COMPUTERS TO DOCTORS

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

According to Dan Burns, Vice-President of Squibb, in an effort to meet the promise to double research in response to the imposition of the new drug patent legislation on Canadians, Squibb and Company are offering a $2,000 personal computer to each doctor who prescribes Capoten, its expensive anti-hypertension drug, to ten or more patients.

What is the Minister's view of this transparent bribery, and what action does he intend to take?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I remind the Hon. Member that Bill C-22, which he opposed so vigorously and which he said the industry would not respond to, has been responded to through expansion of research and development exceeding $1 billion. We needed that money in this country and we needed to put ourselves on the leading edge of drug research. That has happened across the country and I am very pleased that the Bill is working so well.

With respect to the gentleman's specific question, he knows that the medical associations are self-policing professional associations. As I understand it, a letter has been sent from the OMA to various physicians involved in the program. From my Department's point of view, obviously we do not encourage any process that would be seen as inducement. We believe professionalism should be the hallmark of any action taken by physicians.

Privilege—Mr. Lewis

Mr. Speaker: I should advise the House that we have some questions of privilege to deal with. I will hear the Minister first.

ALLEGED REMARKS DURING QUESTION PERIOD

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege arises out of Question Period. I gave you a letter indicating that we are going to review the “blues” and the comments of the Hon. Leader of the NDP in his first question to see whether he used the word “deliberate”, or if there were words used which convey the allegation of a deliberate misleading of the House, which would constitute a question of privilege.

I would add that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) used the same type of language.

The Leader of the NDP was often in the grey area of privilege and was in fact once thrown out of the House for using the term “liar”. We want to eliminate that from the debate.

Mr. Speaker: The Chair is in some difficulty here. The Hon. Minister rose on a question of privilege. As I understood what he said, he is going to review the “blues”. That may well be. He sent me a note to that effect, as he told the House. However, until I have an allegation in front of me, which I do not have at the moment, I find it difficult to proceed with the question of privilege.

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I say to my hon. friend who has just raised the point that I recall vividly the incident he refers to. According to the rules, having said what I said and the Prime Minister having done what he did, everyone in the country knew, but because of the quaintness of our rules we are prohibited from saying so in blunt words from time to time.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): You are above the rules, then?

Mr. Speaker: I want to say to the Hon. Member for Oshawa that I am much indebted to him for refraining from saying so.

Mr. Broadbent: As always, Your Honour, your observations are pertinent and appropriate.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Double-standard Broadbent.

Mr. Broadbent: The Secretary of State for External Affairs is vibrating again.

Mr. Nystrom: Take a valium, Joe.

PRIVILEGE

DE GRANDPRÉ COMMISSION INTERIM REPORT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I have a question of privilege that I want to raise. It is quite serious. I gave the Prime Minister’s Office notice this morning.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Another double standard?

Mr. Broadbent: In response to a question from myself about his blue ribbon committee, in which all Canadian workers are supposed to have so much confidence, indicating that the information we had was that this committee was not to report until June, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said at page 49 of Hansard:

Nobody is talking about waiting until June and the fact is that Mr. de Grandpré is scheduled to meet with the Ministers responsible as early as Friday of this week to discuss an interim report.

He said that to me, and he also said in reply to a similar question from the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett):

“So if the Hon. Member would kindly wait until Friday and then for the final report—”

The clear implication was there was an interim report coming today—

Mr. Crosbie: There was no such implication.

Mr. Broadbent: —that was going to be discussed and the workers did not have to wait until June. Action was going to be taken on Friday. That is the truth.

It is not simply our interpretation because the senior economist of the committee responded, and presumably he was responding to ordinary language as used by the Prime Minister as well, and I quoted him earlier in my question, that there is no plan to issue an interim report.

Another member of the Commission, Mr. James McCambly, said there was no interim report and that such a report had not even been discussed previously.

My question of privilege is quite straightforward. In order to do my work as a Member of the House, I have to rely not on judgments or matters of opinion but on alleged contentions of fact coming from Ministers of the Crown, principally in this case the Prime Minister. One should be able to assume that what the Prime Minister says, not in a debating context but in a claim of facts, is the case.

What he told us was there would be an interim report. There would be a meeting about an interim report today. We all assumed on Friday that that would be the case. In contradiction of that, we have a senior staff member of the committee as well as a member of the committee who say that is not the case.

My question of privilege is simply this. The Prime Minister, inadvertently or deliberately, has misled the House. We have to have this important matter resolved in order to do our job correctly as Members of Parliament.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I wish to respond to my Hon. friend's comments.

There is no question when one reads the actual words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), and interprets them the way any normal individual would, rather than trying to draw inferences for partisan purposes which are not in the words, what they mean. What I want to do is read the words in the House so that this one time my hon. friend will be able to understand what the Prime Minister said very clearly. He said:

““Nobody is talking about waiting until June and the fact is that Mr. de Grandpré is scheduled to meet with the Ministers responsible as early as Friday of this week to discuss an interim report.”

To “discuss”, d-i-s-c-u-s-s, an interim report. There is no suggestion that there was going to be an interim report. There is no suggestion there was going to be a report in writing. It was a discussion about an interim report.

Mr. Broadbent: He did not say discuss the possibility of one, either.

Mr. Lewis: Fortunately, when my hon. friend, in a state of—well, I will not use the word “ignorance”, but perhaps in a state of confusion raised the matter in question here again today, the Hon. Minister for

Privilege—Mr. Broadbent

International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) gave it another shot to try and explain to the Hon. Member that there was discussion with Mr. de Grandpré of an interim report. Not an interim report discussed, discussion of an interim report.

• (1210)

Then my hon. friend goes to the word “June” and says: “We are not going to wait until June”. The Hon. Minister indicated that because of the discussions this morning there was no need for an interim report. That is what was discussed. The possibility of an interim report was discussed. The Hon. Minister made it very clear that in fact the final report will be presented within a reasonable length of time. Therefore there was no need for an interim report which may have flowed from the discussion.

We are talking about debate. We are talking about my hon. friend trying to twist the words that were used to get some political mileage out of them. He did not get any mileage. He did not get a foot. He did not get an inch. He did not get a millimetre.

I submit that this is obviously not a question of privilege. It is a matter for debate.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt-Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, since I too was the recipient of an answer in question here in the House, I wish to point out to the Chair that the wording in response to a similar question from me leaves no doubt of the intention of the answer of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). It states:

“So if the Hon. Member would kindly wait until Friday and then for the final report—”

I was being admonished for raising this issue because, as the Prime Minister had informed the Leader of the New Democratic Party, (Mr. Broadbent) there would be an interim report this Friday. I was reminded of it by his answer to me.

I find it curious that the Prime Minister is not here to answer these questions and to clarify them, even though he told the Leader of the New Democratic Party that he would be here.

It is my presumption, and I would ask the Chair to correct me if I am wrong, that upon hearing the word of the Prime Minister, one should be assured that that word is indeed fact. I find now that it has become a question in my mind. The people of the country are interested in the answer because their jobs were the subject of discussion in the House. Now, today, we are being given a construction of an interpretation that was obviously not meant in the initial answer.

Privilege—Mr. Broadbent

That is what the Leader of the New Democratic Party and I are raising with you, Mr. Speaker. We expect—nay, Sir, we demand—honest answers to honest questions. We have a right to hear those.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, for my own edification I would like to know, if there are rules in the House that do not require honest answers, whether the Chair would please allow me the privilege of reading that information.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to get in the middle of this NDP leadership campaign. I want to point out to my hon. friend the actual words of the Prime Minister. They are:

“So if the Hon. Member would kindly wait until Friday—”

Mr. Barrett: “—and then for the final report—”

Mr. Lewis: My hon. friend waited until Friday, asked the Hon. Minister about the meeting that was held today, got his answer from the Minister that there was no need for an interim report, that there was no emergency, and in fact that the final report will be presented in a reasonable length of time. Obviously, there is no misleading of the House, either intentional or by accident. All my hon. friend is doing is twisting the words of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) for political, partisan purposes.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask Hon. Members to pay attention to this because it is important. I let go a couple of comments earlier that might be considered imputing motives or otherwise. I do not want to be unduly harsh with the Minister. However, it does not help the Chair at all in a discussion such as this as to whether or not there is a question of privilege to be imputing motives of either side.

I am quite prepared to listen to further argument on this if other Members are rising.

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, one of the questions which comes up with respect to this is that the answers which were provided by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) were provided in French. The answers as are given in French are even less ambiguous than the translation suggests in English. In fact, if we look at the French Hansard we see that the statement which was made to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) was:

Alors, si le député veut bien attendre à vendredi prochain et ensuite au rapport définitif, je pense qu'il verra le fruit d'un travail au niveau national—

In short, there was a specific commitment that we would see “le fruit d'un travail au niveau national” in the final report, au rapport définitif.

It seems to me that there is no possible construction that can be put on those statements in French except that the Prime Minister was saying to this House that there would be a statement of the results, at least of an interim sort, of this committee on Friday, and that there would be a final definitive report later. The French phrasing makes it absolutely clear. I do not think that the Government should be permitted to start misleading the House at this stage.

Mr. Dick: They have not. That is a lie.

Mr. Speaker: With the greatest of respect to the Hon. Member, as I remember the exchange it was in the English language. I know enough about Hansard to sometimes wonder whether in English or in French there is an exact replication of all the words.

What we are facing here is—

Mr. Langdon: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: Is the Hon. Member rising on a point of order? If I made an error, I will hear the Hon. Member.

Mr. Langdon: I am quoting from the French Hansard. I could do so also from the English.

The question was put in English. It states: [Traduction] and the answer was stated in French, en français.

Mr. Speaker: I thank the Hon. Member for pointing that out to the Chair. I appreciate very much the fact that he did.

What we have here is an allegation from the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and another Member that they were led to expect that there would be a report, some sort of an interim report today from the de Grandpré Committee. I listened to the exchanges, as did other Hon. Members. I am not for one minute going to say that the interpretation that the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) puts on that exchange might not have led to the idea that there would be some sort of interim report today. I think that is clear. However, the Hon. Minister has been on his feet today and has said there was a meeting, the committee reported, but there is not an interim report in writing. What we are getting into now is a debate as to what kind of report or how substantive that report should be, or should it be published or should it be in writing. That is a legitimate item for debate and it is a legitimate item for comment.

My difficulty as your Speaker is that while it is an important matter, it is an important matter because it concerns the well-being of fellow Canadians. That is why it is an important matter. It is also an important matter because it could have been taken from that exchange which I heard, as did other Hon. Members, that there might have been some sort of interim report today, some kind of written report that could have been published or could have been submitted to the House or could have been commented upon or could have been handed to the press.

That might have happened. If it had happened, then certainly the exchange we heard would have been suggestive of that happening. It did not happen. But, as the Hon. Minister has said, there was a report of some sort. It seems to have been verbal. There was a report back to the Government. There is not now an "interim report" in written terms that can be handed to the House or be handed to the press or handed to Hon. Members.

What we are getting into—and it is an understandable thing—is a debate as to what was intended at that time as opposed to what happened today. I repeat to the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) and to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) that the Chair is not quarreling with the legitimacy of the issue. The Chair is saying, though, that under these circumstances, we have a dispute as to the interpretation of something that was said, an interpretation as some people have said, of facts, but it does not go to the point where it has affected either of the two Hon. Members from carrying out their duties as Members of Parliament.

There is a dispute, it is a legitimate dispute, it is a matter of debate, but it is not a matter of privilege. I thank both Hon. Members and the Hon. Member for Essex Windsor (Mr. Langdon) for reporting the points, and I apologize to the Hon. Member for Essex Windsor because I clearly had not appreciated fully the point the Hon. Member brought to my attention. That does not change the ruling, but I do appreciate his point and I do want him to accept my apologies. Again, I thank all Hon. Members for their submissions. The matter is for now closed.

CANADIAN ADVISORY COUNCIL ON THE STATUS OF WOMEN

TABLING OF ANNUAL REPORT

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I have the honour to table in this House, in both official languages, the annual report for the year 1987-88 of the Canadian Advisory Council on the Status of Women.

Mr. Speaker, I have a message from Her Excellency the Governor General signed by her deputy.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES (B), 1988-89

A message from Her Excellency the Governor General, signed by her deputy, transmitting Supplementary Estimates (B) for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1989, was presented by Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board) and read by Mr. Speaker to the House.

Mr. Lewis: Mr. Speaker, I may just point out to the House, and perhaps you may wish to add to it, the tradition is that when the message is from Her Excellency and signed in her own hand, all Members of the House rise. I tried to emphasize the word "deputy" because I checked with the Table and found that when it is signed by her deputy, there is no necessity for all Members to rise.

REFERENCE TO STANDING COMMITTEE

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 81(6) I move:

That Supplementary Estimates (B), 1988-89, tabled earlier this day, be referred to the several standing committees of the House as follows:

INTERPARLIAMENTARY DELEGATIONPRESENTATION OF REPORT OF CANADIAN NATO PARLIAMENTARY ASSOCIATION

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Pursuant to Standing Order 101, I have the honour to present to the House the thirty-fifth report, in both official languages, of the Canadian NATO Parliamentary Association.

CENTENNIAL FLAME RESEARCH AWARD ACTMEASURE TO ENACT

Mr. Patrick Boyer (Etobicoke—Lakeshore) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-202, an Act respecting the Establishment of the Centennial Flame Research Award to publicize the contributions to Canadian public life of persons with disabilities.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Boyer: Mr. Speaker, I have a brief word of explanation to Members of the House. In front of the Parliament Buildings is a centennial flame which was first lighted by Prime Minister Pearson at the beginning of our Centennial Year. Since that time many visitors to the Parliament Buildings throw coins into that fountain. I learned some months ago that the money gathered there is going into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. I have found it to be in excess of $1,000 a year.

The purpose of this Bill is to establish a centennial flame research award or fellowship that would be used each year under the direction of the Speaker and the House, and awarded to a Canadian with disabilities to do research on the contribution to the Parliament of Canada and the public life of Canada of Canadians with disabilities.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-203, an Act to provide interim measures respecting abortion and to amend the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosby: Mr. Speaker, the Bill I have presented to the House is entitled "Abortion Law Interim Measures Act". The purpose is twofold: First, to enact a law restricting abortion to the extent permitted by the Canadian Charter of Rights and Freedoms and, second, to require a constitutional conference to consider a Charter amendment to protect the unborn.

Following the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada invalidating Canada's abortion law, Parliament could not reach a consensus on legislative action. Nonetheless, it is clear that most Canadians support a law restricting abortion. This Bill responds to that concern by proposing an interim measure on abortion.

CRIMINAL CODE

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-204, an Act to amend the Criminal Code (hate propaganda—age group).

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the said Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Boudria: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the Bill I am offering to the House today would be to provide the application of the Criminal Code to hate propaganda that advocates or promotes physical destruction of persons of an identifiable age group. The object of the Bill is to stop the importation into Canada of a product known as Garbage Pail Kids.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS

DESIGNATION OF ROUGE RIVER VALLEY

Mrs. Pauline Browes (Scarborough Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure for me to present this petition today in the Thirty-fourth Parliament pursuant to Standing Order 36. The petition has been certified by the Clerk of Petitions. It relates to saving the Rouge Valley in Scarborough. It states that the Rouge Valley in Scarborough is a unique and precious natural area, that protecting the endangered wildlife and wilderness areas is in the national interest.

This property of the Rouge Valley is owned by the provincial government. Recently the federal Government committed $10 million for the preservation of this valley. The mayor of Scarborough, the federal Minister of the Environment, the Save the Rouge Valley System and the Coalition of Scarborough Community Associations have expressed support for this, as well as petitioners from Scarborough, Ajax, Markham, Etobicoke, Nobleton and Richmond Hill. They call upon Parliament to work with the Government of Ontario to establish the Rouge River Valley as a Canadian heritage land or a provincial park.

*Questions on the Order Paper*CANADIAN ADVISORY GROUP ON HYDROGEN OPPORTUNITIES

Mr. Bob Hicks (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased and honoured to present a petition, duly certified, signed by 101 of my constituents in Scarborough East and the senior alumni participants in the lecture series "Canadian Perspectives" recently held at the University of Toronto Scarborough campus.

We are all deeply concerned about the adverse effects on Canada's environment due to the use of carbon-based fossil fuels which results in the continuing escalation of acid rain and the greenhouse effect. These Canadians and myself call upon Parliament to implement the recommendations in the report of the Canadian Advisory Group on Hydrogen Opportunities entitled "Hydrogen—National Mission for Canada".

LABELLING OF FOOD INGREDIENTS

Ms. Sheila Capps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, they say that the more things change, the more they stay the same. This time, it gives me great pleasure to table a petition.

[English]

It is a pleasure but I hope something is done about it. I am presenting a petition from the undersigned residents on the issue of food labelling. I am pleased that the new Member for Kent (Mr. Crawford) is also taking up this issue.

The petition is signed by 4,000 people from across Canada who are calling upon the Government of Canada to require proper labelling of ingredients in restaurants so that people can realize that when they have a meal outside their home they do not have to play Russian roulette with their lives as in the case of the Chinnick family, Christian Taylor and others. I hope this time the Tories do something about it.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, with respect to the item under Routine Proceedings entitled "Questions on the Order Paper", I notice that there are no questions on the Order Paper. Is it the bad record of the Government in answering questions that has made MPs decide not to ask any more questions or is the Government trying to tell us that there are no questions to be answered at all?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, in fact it is the contrary. We are doing so well that there can be no question as to how we are governing. People said that on November 21.

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier (Mr. Gauthier) will realize that the Chair has to put the item in any event.

MOTION TO ADJOURN UNDER S. O. 52

ALLEGED LAY-OFFS RESULTING FROM CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 52 to ask leave to move a motion for an emergency debate. You will recall I moved a similar motion on Wednesday. The reason is that there have been some 2,400 announced lay-offs since election day that have been attributed in people's judgment to the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement as of January 1, 1989, or shortly thereafter. At the same time the Government has not announced its intention to bring in programs which will be designed to aid the workers and the communities affected. Therefore, there is what can only be called from our point of view an emergency or crisis situation. Men and women are being laid off. The Government has no specific programs and intends to recess the House for a couple of months. We were told that the chairman of the committee allegedly dealing with such a problem would not have anything ready until June.

When Your Honour ruled against this on Wednesday, you did so after the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had said in the House during Question Period that there would be an interim report by the committee on Friday of this week. We now know that we have no such interim report and we believe we drew the right conclusion. The Prime Minister was telling us that there would be an interim report. The Government is now contending that it was just going to discuss the report.

The bottom line is that there is no interim report and workers are being laid off. We are going to be recessing shortly for a couple of months and there are no programs in place to help the workers affected. Therefore, Your Honour, I would suggest to you that the circumstances have changed since you offered your ruling on Wednesday and that we still have a serious and urgent situation. I appeal to you to allow the motion.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) has brought this motion twice this week, and I can say to him and to his colleagues that the Speaker is quite aware of why he has done so and there has been considerable discussion, only a few minutes ago, which related to the concerns of the Hon. Member for Oshawa and, I am sure, other Hon. Members. I know that the reform committee said that the Speaker ought not to give reasons for ruling one way or the other on an application of this nature, but I think under the circumstances, it is appropriate that the Speaker say something.

I say this to the Hon. Member for Oshawa because the Speaker is as concerned as is the Hon. Member for Oshawa about the matters which he raises, because the Speaker is also a Member of Parliament. The concerns of the people who may be affected by whatever measure is being taken are concerns also of the Speaker. I want the Hon. Member for Oshawa to accept that as a Member of Parliament, I am deeply concerned about this issue. However, on Monday there will be extensive debate. I think that that debate will enable the Hon. Member and others to address these matters. If that turns out not to be so, I will hear the Hon. Member for Oshawa again.

Mr. Murphy: Mr. Speaker, I see that the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) is in the House. I wonder if he could indicate when he will be introducing some legislation on this very important matter.

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member may not get an answer, but I think the Hon. Member has made his point.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO EXTEND HOURS OF SITTING

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Lewis:

That, notwithstanding any Standing Order or practice of the House, from the day of adoption of this motion the House will meet on the days and at the times specified in Standing Order 24, but not on December 26, 1988.

That, during such period, the Speaker shall adjourn the House on Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Thursdays at midnight and on Fridays at 3.00 o'clock p.m., and that the provisions of Standing Order 38 in relation to the adjournment proceedings shall be suspended.

That, during such period, the Standing Order respecting the daily mid-day interruption of business on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays shall not be suspended;

That, at 6.00 o'clock p.m. on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, or at the conclusion of Private Members' Business, the House shall proceed to "Government Orders" pursuant to Standing Order 40(1);

That, for the duration of this session or until otherwise ordered, the provisions of Standing Order 73(1) and (2) respecting committee stage of Public Bills be suspended, and all such Bills be ordered for referral to committee of the Whole; and

That immediately upon the House returning from the Senate after the first Royal Assent of this session, a Minister of the Crown may propose, without notice or debate, a motion to rescind this order.

Mr. Jim Hawkes (Calgary West): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to rise in this Thirty-fourth Parliament for the first time. Rising in this House is a familiar position after nine and a half years, but it is a particular pleasure to welcome you back to the chair with the confidence of the House. I would also like to pay tribute to the three people who serve with you in the chair at various times on our behalf. We are in good hands. It has probably not been the easiest week in a Speaker's life, this first week of the Thirty-fourth Parliament, but we hope that with the passage of time it might get somewhat better.

I think it is unfortunate and I feel badly that we are having this debate today and that there is a necessity for it. When we left this Chamber in September, we had debated in a formal way, either in committee or in the House, the trade legislation to implement the international trade agreement for a total of 64 days. It is an agreement between two countries which our law allows us to sign. This Chamber, in its wisdom, passed that enabling legislation. An unelected part of our Parliament indicated clearly that it would not give Royal Assent to the legislation. The Opposition called for an election to let the people decide and the people have decided.

An agreement had been entered into by two nations to try to bring this agreement into effect by January 1, 1989, and we have every right and Canadian voters have every right to anticipate that all elected Members of all Parties will act in the national interest, co-operatively, to put it in place by January 1. That is what Canadians have the right to expect, and the Government has an obligation to provide the opportunity to do so.

By starting this Parliament last Monday, 21 days after the election, we have set an historic precedent. No Parliament has been convened so quickly after an election in all of Canada's history. The previous parliamentary record was 41 days. The Government had the obligation to call Parliament as quickly as possible, and 21 days was it.

The Canadian people have made some agonizing decisions about whether or not the Opposition was right in the fears that it raised. When I went door to door, I knocked on the door of a young woman who was about 20 years of age. It was nine o'clock on a Friday night. I introduced myself, and she broke into tears. She had a child in her arms and she started to bawl because she had been reading information that meant to her that if we passed the free trade deal, the very next morning there would be no ambulance coming to her door if there was an emergency in her home. That is the kind of fear that was out on the streets. For that young woman to have to decide who to vote for in that kind of an emotional situation was a trauma, and that trauma was repeated as well in senior citizens' homes again and again.

I recall seeing a cartoon pamphlet done by some group. I do not know where the funding for it came from, but it was full of misinformation designed to create fear. It was an ugly election campaign, but it is over. On November 21, it was over, and the obligation shifts from campaigning and all of the shenanigans that go on. The nasty parts of it and the deceptive tactics are behind us. The obligation shifts to us as individuals in this Chamber to act in the national interest on behalf of Canadians. We should be doing that co-operatively.

We are here today on the Friday of the first week of this Parliament and we have heard three speeches on the legislation to implement the Free Trade Agreement. On Monday, with unanimous consent, we could have begun the debate. We could have tabled the Bill, we could have done all kinds of things together, because this place can always do what it wants to do by unanimous consent. We could have debated the free trade initiative all this week. Every Member of the House could have had an opportunity to speak more than once and we could still have met the timetable. But no, we have had bell ringing about nonsense.

Yesterday we had to suspend the House temporarily, though the House Leader said right from the start that the timetable and the motion that are in place supersede the normal situation and technically everything we want to happen can come to pass. However, confusion was created and the House sitting had to be suspended. A little later today, I will move an amendment to provide greater clarity for those who are new to the House and perhaps want that clarity. One of the things we discovered is that people were not clear on this so we will give them clarity. It is not necessary to do so, but we will.

Why am I not on my feet right at this moment talking about the legislation to implement free trade? It is because I cannot, because I have to debate a motion which will have the consequence of giving us 12 days of normal parliamentary debating time crammed into five days next week. We believe that there should be 12 days of debating time. Co-operatively we could have created 20 days of debating time in the two weeks.

The Opposition's use of dilatory tactics led to the return of our Government. In some way I should thank the Opposition for wasting the time of this House over the last four years because it helped us get re-elected. Ours was the only Party viewed by the voters of this nation as capable of governing, of having the will to do what the country needed. People perceive the opposition Parties as having wasted time and of not being serious about their concerns. That will be the consequence of the kind of tactic that has been going on in this House all this week.

On average it costs $1 million a day to run this place. We have been forced into a position of spending today's $1 million debating procedural motions. We have spent $5 million for three speeches on free trade this week. Look at those three speeches. Are they worth $1.75 million a piece? Were they that well crafted and delivered? I suggest not. In the private sector you could not sell those speeches for $1.5 million or $1.75 million.

Mr. Darling: Perhaps $50 each.

Mr. Hawkes: I hear someone say $50 each.

Extension of Sittings

What should we be doing today, Mr. Speaker? I suggest that in the next 10, 15, 20 or 30 minutes or the next hour we should vote on the motion to set our timetable in place for next week. That is an option. We can do it in an hour. We can do it at 1 a.m. We can debate this motion for the next 12 hours or we can vote and we can work co-operatively. The minute we vote we could agree—and the Government is quite willing to agree—that we get on with the debate on free trade. We can set aside our quorum rules. We can set aside the possibility of votes. We can simply not see the clock until 1 a.m. and get our free trade speeches started today. Let us go to 1 a.m. If people want to go until 2 a.m., Government Members are agreeable to that. Why not start debating free trade today?

What is the logic of spending 12 more hours and $1 million debating the procedural motion? Surely Canadians are tired of our procedural motions, the little internal games. This is an issue of substance on which we have strong feelings. My feelings are probably different from a number of people on the other side.

An Hon. Member: And just as strong.

Mr. Hawkes: And just as strongly held. We should be using this Chamber in the finest democratic tradition to get our feelings and our thoughts out on the table. Why 12 hours? That is the equivalent of three parliamentary days of debating time. It is the equivalent of $3 million that we can spend on procedural speeches or we could agree co-operatively to spend that time on substantive speeches about the issue of concern to Canadians.

What choice will be made, Mr. Speaker? Our choice is clear. Members on this side of the House would prefer to talk about substance. We will probably talk about opportunity. Almost all our Members would have that characteristic. I suspect the Opposition will talk about their perception of what the problems might be. If we are going to spend $3 million worth of taxpayers money today, surely we should spend it on that debate.

According to the rules of the House the only way we can get there now is to vote as quickly as possible, set in place our timetable for next week and reach an agreement co-operatively to set aside our rules and get to the debate. So that we can make sure we do it in an orderly manner, I would like to move an amendment to the motion and, once that amendment is in place, the first vote would be on the amendment. It is in line with the agreement that we reached co-operatively yesterday afternoon.

There should be no need for a standing vote. We could pass this with a voice vote. Then we could have our standing vote, agree not to see the clock, agree not to call quorum and have no votes for the rest of the day. We could have a lot of speeches on free trade between now and 1 a.m. We could quit a little sooner if people wanted and commence on Monday morning with more speeches on second reading. Therefore, I move, seconded by the Hon. Member for Lachine—Lac-Saint-Louis (Mr. Layton):

That the motion be amended by deleting in the penultimate paragraph the words "all such Bills" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "That Bill C-2"

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I want first to acknowledge your presence in the chair and say that once again it is a pleasure to have your smiling visage and, even though you are not conditioned by Bill 101, it is nice to have you back in the House looking after these affairs.

I want to acknowledge that the amendment just introduced is an amendment that was proposed by our House Leader as a way of bailing the Government out of a situation of total and complete chaos in which it found itself. Obviously our willingness to support it would be more than apparent.

An Hon. Member: Why not vote?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I found the remarks that introduced the amendment to be most illuminating about the density by which the Parliamentary Secretary thinks about Parliament. I have here the questions he posed. Why are we here, he said? Why are we debating this motion? Why are we looking at questions of procedure as if Parliament were some kind of a sausage machine where the Hon. Member and his Ministers simply turn on the crank and churn out the legislation according to some kind of mechanical, automatic computer-like dictate without the full requirement of the Canadian people through their elected representatives to be heard.

It was an interesting commentary on the way in which Parliament is viewed by Members on the other side. This is not a place, in their view, where Members of Parliament duly elected by their constituents will have an opportunity to present their case, to have an exchange, a dialogue, to try to influence legislation or to make sure that the public can be heard in open committee hearings.

This is simply a place where you put the plug in and turn on the machine in order to get the tyranny of the majority answered as quickly and as efficiently as possible. It is the type of thing that Mussolini used to say: "Let's get the trains running on time". Now we have the Parliamentary Secretary saying: "Let's have Parliament work according to our timetable".

The Parliamentary Secretary and his cohorts, colleagues, and masters did not say that the reason we are having this debate has nothing to do with the Opposition trying to defend the rights of Parliament. It has to do with a Government that is insisting that the trade legislation, the most important Bill in the history of this country, be passed by January 1, the Government's deadline. As a result Government Members were the ones who set the timetable, set the motions to say that we will not allow Parliament to function in its normal and proper way. They are the ones who say that there will not be committee hearings so that all those industries that are presently being closed down and shut down as a result of the impending Free Trade Agreement will have an opportunity to be heard by this House and by this Parliament.

That comes as no surprise to those of us who were here for the last four years, because we realize that the whole formula of the Conservative Party is to make sure that people not be heard. Going back to 1985 the whole thesis of the trade agreement was: "Don't tell the people what is going on. Keep it hidden, keep it under wraps, and keep it under a blanket, so in that way we will be able to fool them".

They almost succeeded, until we got to the election and people all of a sudden began to understand that the agreement was more than a commercial agreement and that it would affect us in many ways. There is not one Conservative Member of Parliament who was not bruised when going door to door by questions from individual constituents who said: "You did not tell me what it was about. You did not tell me that it was going to change the way foreign investment comes in. You did not tell me that it was going to affect the way in which regional development programs can be applied".

All of a sudden Tory candidates were faced with a barrage of questions. For the first time Canadians were stating that this thing was a time bomb and that it was going to change the country. The only way government Members overcame that was to return to the old tactics and swamp the country with a tidal wave of propaganda, paid for by their friends in big business, to ensure that they could hang on by their fingernails for another week or two until the election was over. That is the way that they succeeded. They have learned nothing.

An election is not simply an exercise of raw power and how many seats the Government has. An election is also an exercise of listening. An election is being at the street corner, around the kitchen table, and at the doorstep listening to what people have to say. Canadians were clearly stating that they saw serious flaws in this agreement and that they had serious concerns about it. Yet, did the Minister of Trade in introducing this Bill or the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in setting the timetable give one, single concession to those concerns? Were they listening at all? Did we hear anything from the Minister of Trade, the Prime Minister, or the rest of that phalanx that the Canadian people have some deep-seated anxieties that deserve to be listened to? Let us bring in a Bill that responds to that. Let us change the Bill from the old C-130 to respond to those concerns. They only changed one thing. That was the date of implementation.

The Deputy House Leader, the House Leader, the Parliamentary Secretary, and all the others are now introducing into the House the most Draconian usurpation of the parliamentary rules in the history of Canada in order to meet a January 1 timetable that the Government has stated is not important. What an incredible contradiction.

The one thing that was changed in the entire Bill was the taking out of the January 1 deadline. If it was so important, why was it not left in? If it was absolutely essential to the agreement, why was it not left there? No, the Government took it out. Now we have the hijacking of Parliament in order to meet a timetable that is no longer important to the Government. Something is wrong there. Somehow the logic escapes me. Perhaps Government Members have a basic sense of masochism. They like twisting and turning the rules of Parliament for the sake of doing it. Perhaps this type of parliamentary terrorism is something that appeals to their basic psyche. Perhaps that is the basic character of members of the modern Conservative Party. Perhaps they do not like Parliament working by its normal rules. Perhaps they do not like rules, because after all it is a little awkward to have to come here and answer questions and deal with debate. Maybe we should just turn off the lights forever and turn on the computer, or have the Deputy House Leader do his high jinks.

Mrs. Dobbie: Let us talk about trade.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): We are going to talk about trade. We have lots of time to talk about it. The problem is that government Members do not even want to debate their own motion. "Get on to another topic," they are pleading. There is the new Member for Winnipeg South down on her knees pleading: "Please, don't talk about this motion, talk about something else, will you, because I can't stand the recognition that a duly elected Member of Parliament is now part of the conspiracy to erode and destroy the rules of this House". That is what is going on.

The fact of the matter is that these rules are absolutely irrelevant to what the Government wants to do. Furthermore, by imposing these rules it is going to prohibit Canadians from having a full opportunity to be heard on this legislation. By taking it into Committee of the Whole—

An Hon. Member: Since November 21, we have been heard.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Why do you not get to your feet and talk? What are you afraid of?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I am pleased that the House realizes that there are still some rules of debate liable to be followed so that the rabble simply cannot take over this Chamber whenever it wants.

One of the most important issues facing us is the one that was raised in the House of Commons today. One thing most strongly felt by Canadians during the past election was the question of jobs and the recognition, as it was exposed by various groups and various industries, that there was going to be serious dislocation. In the printing industry 10,000 jobs would be lost; the food processing industry itself said that 100,000 jobs would be lost; 24,000 women in the garment industry are having their jobs put at a risk.

Ms. Copps: They do not care. They do not care about women.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Now we see the same type of disruption taking place in softwood lumber, in shakes and shingles. Before the agreement is even signed those companies are beginning to rationalize. It is wonderful to see the new explanation. Three months before the election all the business commentators, the editorial writers, and the ministerial spokesmen said that the reason for the trade agreement was to rationalize our industries. Now that our industries are rationalizing they say: "It has nothing to do with free trade". It is somehow happening by magic. "This is something we have been planning to do for years". We know how much hog-wash that is.

What is absolutely essential now and what our Members have been saying since we arrived back on the Hill is that it is a responsibility of the Government to put in place the type of programs to deal with the dislocation of workers and communities across the country.

Instead we have reason number one from the Minister of Employment who states that he does not have to do anything because there is already a jobs strategy, even though the jobs strategy has been criticized by every independent, reputable organization saying that it is not working and that the Minister has cut back expenditures by 32 per cent. College classrooms are being shut down today as a result of that jobs strategy program. One enormous con job of the election was when the Prime Minister went to a community college outside Toronto and had a photo-op with students, showing him talking about the new world of high technology. As soon as the camera shut down the classroom was shut down. Why? It was because the federal Government had cut off funding for that program. As soon as the photo-op is over, why keep the program going? It is no longer important. The jobs training strategy is not the answer.

How does the Progressive Conservative Government resolve the situation under the Unemployment Insurance Act whereby older workers who have a right to severance are not eligible for unemployment insurance assistance and training until their final severance payment is in hand, something which may take a year or a year and a half following job loss? How does the older worker get back into the job stream when he or she is not even eligible for training grants under the Unemployment Insurance Program as a result of the amendments brought in by this Government?

Why is the Minister of Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall) not answering that kind of question?

The reason that we on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, want a proper parliamentary examination of this legislation is that, through that process, answers to those questions could be had.

Extension of Sittings

Once we got off that little fallacy, that little fable about the Canadian Jobs Strategy, we had a new big fable put forward by the Prime Minister of Canada, who is the biggest fable-maker in the history of this country—

An Hon. Member: It is a big fib.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) makes Aesop look like a piker in comparison. Some day in the future there will be a new book for children entitled Mulroney's Fairy-tales.

What we heard today is another fairy-tale. We were told that the de Grandpré Commission will solve all of our problems. Earlier this week, the Prime Minister asked us to wait until Friday, when the answers would be forthcoming. Well, we are now at Friday, and still there are no answers.

An Hon. Member: Where are the answers?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Where are the answers? Well, one answer was in a newspaper report which quoted the members of the commission as saying that they had no answers. The article quotes the commissioners as saying that they were not expected to report this soon; that they had made no commitment to table an interim report. It went on to quote them as saying that they may get around to presenting a report next June.

How many workers, Mr. Speaker, how many factories, how many communities are going to be adversely affected before the de Grandpré Commission gets around to reporting?

The only conclusion that our far-sighted Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) could come up with is: "Well, I met with the de Grandpré Commission this morning, and there is no problem out there. Nothing is happening out there".

Once again, like the giant Goodyear Blimp, the Minister for International Trade is floating high in the atmosphere, totally removed from the reality down here in the real world, where workers are today losing their jobs as a result of the Free Trade Agreement.

The Minister has a nice kitschy little breakfast with Mr. de Grandpré, with little china teacups and little petit fours, and they conclude that there is no problem out there.

An Hon. Member: The public trough.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): And after breakfast, they all get into their chauffeur-driven limousines and are returned to the House of Commons, or Bell Canada, or wherever, and we hear: "Oh, no, there is no problem out there. No, no; no problem out there", except that the workers at Northern Telecom are being laid off, as are the workers at Canada Packers. I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that those individuals do not have a chauffeur-driven limousine to take them to the UI counter, which is where they are going to be come Monday morning.

Because Mr. de Grandpré and the Minister for International Trade are unable to see a problem, there is no problem.

An Hon. Member: We were asked to let the people decide, and the people decided.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, Parliament must have the opportunity to exercise its right to examine these issues properly. The obdurate, dense Parliamentary Secretary opposite asks why Parliament should be given the opportunity to debate the issue fully. Well, that is the reason. It is only through Parliament that ordinary Canadians can exercise their right to be heard. It is only in this forum that ordinary Canadians can have their problems addressed.

An Hon. Member: Tories do not care.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, that is why this Government is moving closure; that is why this Government is proposing that the rules be suspended; that is why this Government is trying to shut this place down. It is a Government that is not interested in listening to ordinary Canadians. The great paranoia of Hon. Members opposite is that ordinary Canadians might in fact have the opportunity to be heard.

It is for that reason that we on this side are engaging in this debate. We are fighting for the right of Parliament to continue its work, to operate as a forum in which there can be an open, honest and clear dialogue on the issues facing Canadians.

In defending the rights of Parliament, Mr. Speaker, for that type of debate, we are defending the rights of all Canadians. Ordinary Canadians do not have access to the boardrooms of the nation. They do not have million dollar propaganda budgets. They do not have fancy high-powered friends. All they have is a democratically elected forum where their views can be put forth.

The real victim of the Free Trade Agreement will be this place, this Chamber. While there are people being thrown on scrap-heaps and communities closed down, ultimately the most serious casualty of the FTA will be this place, inasmuch as this Government has treated this Parliament, this House of Commons, with great disdain and arrogance—and it does so because it fears this place. It fears what will be heard in this place.

We have had four years of efforts to bring down the curtain totally and completely, to close the doors, to try to conceal and hide the real facts, and we are starting a new round.

We on this side concede that the majority opposite will exercise its will. This Government no longer has a conscience such that it is moved to respond to the kind of balance of interests of which I have spoken.

I heard one of my colleagues earlier today commenting on the privilege of having the opportunity to stand up in a civil society and debate issues. The problem we face today is that we no longer have a Government that recognizes civility. It does not recognize that Parliament works through a proper and appropriate balancing of the rules, conventions, practices, and understandings on the part of all Members. Parliament does not work on the basis of the raw, naked exercise of power. Rather, it works on the basis that political Parties will serve, in turn, in government and opposition, with the recognition that the rights of Parliament have to be protected by all in order that it can function properly on behalf of the people.

That is a lesson that went unlearned during the first term of this Government, and it is one that continues to go unlearned today.

It is for all of those reasons that we on this side are going to fight as strongly and as mightily as we can against the hijacking of this place. The Tories treat Parliament in the way that they treat ordinary Canadians; that is to say, with arrogance and with indifference. We are now going right back to where we were immediately before the election? This is a government for those of privilege and power and one which is not prepared to serve the interests of the majority of Canadians, the same majority which voted against this Government in the last election.

We will do all that we can to ensure that the rules of this House are preserved. In that way, when the day comes that there is in place a government that is prepared to act in the interests of ordinary Canadians, this Parliament will have the opportunity to serve those interests in the appropriate fashion.

We will support this amendment, and we do so because we can do nothing but have pity for the poor organization of this Government, a government which failed in its ability to manage this House yesterday and had to be bailed out. Never let it be said that Liberals are not charitable and generous, even to Tories. We will help the poor Deputy House Leader (Mr. Lewis) out of his misery and show him how to make the House work in a proper way. However I can tell you, Mr. Speaker, that the motion that caused all of this was totally unnecessary. Had the Government permitted Parliament to take its natural course, leading to a full parliamentary debate, including committee hearings, in respect of the FTA, it would not have had to resort to the kind of parliamentary terrorism inherent in its motion.

We on this side want to have the opportunity to put on the record one more time exactly what this Government is doing to distort and destroy this Chamber, a Chamber which is so essential to all Canadians.

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure and an honour to be able to stand in my place today and participate in this debate, this being the second time I have had the opportunity to participate in the debates of this House.

As a new Member, I have the greatest respect for this House. I have always considered it to be a forum for open debate and thoughtful reflection, resulting in well formed and well thought out legislation. As well, it is an institution that takes into account the rights and opinions of minority groups.

While I continue to have respect for this Parliament, I must say that, having completed my first week, I am disappointed with some of the Members, and particularly some of the Members opposite. Certainly I continue to have the greatest respect for those Members on both sides of the House who are interested in the democratic process, who are interested in engaging in open debate. I am, however, disappointed in the senior members of the Government who are ramming Bill C-2 down our throats, to use an oft-quoted phrase.

Having sat in this House for one week, I have seen the Government acting as a street bully, and this is a view of government to which I have not been privy heretofore.

● (1320)

I wish every Canadian had the opportunity, as I have, to sit in this House for a week and see it from this view. It is a different view from the one you see on television. I know if every Canadian had a chance to sit in this House for a period of time, they would have a different view of the Conservative Party. Certainly the Conservatives would be having a different view of this House because they would not be on the government side but on the opposition side and in much fewer numbers.

I have watched the games and the charades being played in this House and it is disappointing. It is disappointing to see Standing Orders being changed seemingly on a moment's notice. This action being taken by the Government not only tramples on the rights of Members on this side of the House, but on the rights of Members on all sides.

We have in this House, I believe, 127 new Members from all Parties. They wish to speak on this issue. Certainly the trade issue was the key issue in the last election. This is the earliest time, 21 days after the election, that a House has been called back. It is very difficult for new Members. First, it is difficult to get used to the rules and procedures of the House. There are new offices to set up, staff to hire, and constituency problems to address. Not only myself and other Members on this side are having difficulty; I know of new Members on the Government side who are having the same difficulty. They have not had an opportunity as in past Parliaments to establish themselves, to get their constituencies set up, and to start dealing with the problems every Member has to deal with.

Mr. McDermid: On the job training.

Mr. Laporte: It is a new and difficult experience. During the last campaign the trade issue was the most dominant issue. Certainly people in my riding have a number of concerns. They are concerned about the Wheat Board. They are concerned about the future of agriculture and what is going to happen to rural Saskatchewan in the years that lie ahead. Moose Jaw itself, a small city of approximately 36,000 people, is in danger of losing one of its manufacturing plants, that of CanaDay's. That plant employs some 150 people making dress slacks, one of only two in western Canada. Certainly when the tariffs come off textiles, when the trade Bill goes through, and our dollar at some point will very likely reach a par with the American dollar, our advantage is going to be lost. If that happens, CanaDay's is very likely to close. That is something

Moose Jaw cannot afford and something which the people in Moose Jaw do not wish to happen.

We are having a difficult time with the Devine provincial Government in attracting business to Moose Jaw, and we can certainly not afford to lose an industry of that kind. I hope that during the trade debate itself I will have an opportunity to go into detail on that matter.

There seems to me to be no need to be rushing through this legislation, to be forcing this Bill through in such a short period of time. The Americans have said that there is no magic in the January 1 deadline. The deadline can be extended a reasonable amount of time. Certainly it would seem logical to me as a new Member to follow the Standing Orders of the House, to follow the normal procedures, and to allow for an open debate, especially with almost half the House being composed of brand new Members. They would have the opportunity to deal with this debate in the House and with their new constituencies. It seems very unfortunate and I am very disappointed over the manner in which the Government chooses to proceed in this matter.

I would also like to state that I am very proud to be a member of this Party, the New Democratic Party, especially after seeing the way the Conservatives have acted this week in the House. I am very proud to be a member of a Party that had as its Members people like M. J. Coldwell, J. S. Woodsworth, Tommy Douglas, and Stanley Knowles. They believed in and stood up for the fundamental principles of democracy. They believed in fair play and open debate. They also stood up for the right of others to express different points of view. I am also very proud to be a member of a Party with a Leader like the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent) who has been following those footsteps and traditions.

In closing, I do hope that in future the Government will take a page from our Party's history book and when Members opposite look at Mr. Knowles sitting in the House, they will remember that tradition of democracy and apply it to this House in the days and months and years to come.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak today.

Mr. Albert Cooper (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to speak for the first time in this new Parliament. I want to begin by congratulating you and your colleagues who serve us so ably and so well in the chair. It is a difficult job and we as Members traditionally have appreciated it, and certainly this case is no exception.

Extension of Sittings

I also want to take a couple of moments to welcome to the House of Commons our new colleagues like the Hon. Member who just spoke. We are glad to see them with us and we look forward to working with them and against them over the next four years.

I would also like very quickly to say thank you to the people of the Peace country for returning me to this august institution for another term. I appreciate their vote of confidence in me.

I find the debate we are involved in just a bit unusual, Mr. Speaker. I do not know about you, but I watched the television on the night of the election and for the next couple of days and it was very apparent to me, as I think it was to all Canadians, that both opposition Parties indicated that the people had spoken. The Canadian people had expressed their confidence in this Government, but in addition they had expressed their opinion on the issue of free trade.

As a result, I think it was a fair assumption on the part of Canadians, as well as Members of Parliament, that we were going to proceed with the free trade debate, that things would go quite rapidly, and that we would all be home in time for Christmas, a time which is always so special for each and every one of us, a time we want to spend with our families and friends.

In reality, with a little bit of hindsight and a couple of letters that accidentally ended up in the papers, we suddenly find ourselves in a situation where we are forced to have almost a new hearing, a whole new process, on the question of free trade.

We heard comments this morning that the motion we are dealing with at this particular moment is Draconian, that we as a Government are terrible, and that we do not like the rules of Parliament. It has been said that we manipulate, twist and turn, that we do all these terrible things, and that we are hijacking Parliament. That is what the Hon. Member from Winnipeg said a little while ago.

However, Mr. Speaker, you know very well that in fact we are doing no such thing. That is nothing more than a bunch of rhetoric designed to stir up Canadians, just as much as the rhetoric we heard during the campaign was in no way based on fact but simply on emotion, which was the whole design of those particular remarks.

What about the motion that we are debating at this very instant? Is it really Draconian? Is it such a terrible document that we should all be living in fear that this great democratic institution is in some way harmed and that democracy is suffering? Not at all. In fact, I think it was in the month of June in the previous Parliament that we had the almost identical motion before us. It is a motion that has become acceptable for a Government which has an agenda that it wishes to accomplish within a certain timeframe. It is a perfectly legitimate tool for a Government such as our own to use in these circumstances.

Let us for a couple of moments look at this particular motion. If we look at the first paragraph we see that what it really states is that this House, this Government, is prepared to debate the issue of free trade between now and Friday of next week. We are also prepared to come back and debate this issue the first day back after Boxing Day. In other words, we are prepared to make sure that the House sits and allows time for this issue to go through the process which the rules of Parliament make clear that this particular Bill has to go through.

What does the second paragraph of the motion do? It is very simple. All it does is extend the hours so that we no longer adjourn in the early evening but continue on until midnight of every night. What for? It is to allow the new Members to express themselves on the issue of free trade. We are not cutting off debate; we are expanding it. We are giving more time.

Mr. McDermid: Twenty-four hours.

Mr. Cooper: My colleague reminds me that it is a total of 24 extra hours. Does that sound like a Government that is trying to cut off debate? To the contrary, it sounds like a government that has an agenda, a government that has a goal and a purpose. That is why the Government was re-elected. It was because Canadians saw in this Government a government which knew the kind of leadership and direction that it wanted to give to this country. That is why Canadians expressed their confidence in us. That is why we are once again back on this side of the Chamber, rather than on the other side from where we hear some of this complaining.

The second paragraph allows for an extension of time to make sure that all those Members who wish to speak on the issue of free trade have that opportunity.

What does the third paragraph do? Is it Draconian? Is it a terrible paragraph that limits the rights of Members of Parliament? Does it somehow destroy and undermine our democracy? No. All it really does is state that we will continue with our regular midday breaks. Is that a terrible thing for the Government to do? How terrible we are that we would allow this kind of behaviour in an institution such as this? It is a mockery. The kind of rhetoric that we heard just a few minutes ago is silly. It was said that we were ramming all these things through Parliament, that we were not giving Members of Parliament a chance to be heard. If Members want to take the time to read the motion, to look at what it says, they will see that we are giving them every opportunity to speak on this Bill at this time.

What about the fifth paragraph? Is it another terrible paragraph? As you know, Mr. Speaker, the standard way of dealing with any particular piece of legislation is to send it to a legislative committee. What happens in a legislative committee? A legislative committee has a restricted number of members. As a result of that, at the committee stage only a certain number of people will have the opportunity to participate in those hearings and in that work at that particular time.

What have we allowed in this particular motion? We have asked that the Bill be referred to Committee of the Whole. In other words, every Member of Parliament who wishes to take his or her seat in this place can participate in the committee stage of this particular Bill. Is that not a terrible thing for us to do? How terrible is it that we would treat the Opposition this way, that we would give all of them the same opportunity as would be afforded to the few if we had a legislative committee?

No, Mr. Speaker, it is not at all some Draconian measure. It is a very reasonable, responsible way of dealing with the legislation that we have before us and making sure that the legislation is passed in due time so that we can get on with the agenda that we as a Government want to present for the Canadian people.

The last paragraph deals with the question of Royal Assent and what will happen with this particular motion. Is it left wide open so that things will go on forever? Not at all. In fact, with the amendment that was just tabled by my colleague from Calgary, this particular motion will die the very moment that Bill C-2, the Bill relating to free trade, receives Royal Assent. Then, we can come back and begin once again to operate under the rules of the House of Commons. These are rules which this Government took so much time and energy reforming to ensure that Members of Parliament on all sides of the House, Members of Parliament who were not necessarily members of the Cabinet, would have an opportunity to have some real force, some power, some influence in this institution. It was this Government that brought in those reforms. It was this Government that cared enough for the back-bench MPs in this House to bring forward those reforms.

This is not a government that discards the rules. This is not a government that acts in a Draconian fashion. This is not a government which hates democracy. This is a government which has demonstrated by its actions over the last four years, and will continue to demonstrate over the next four years, that it is a Government that not only cares about the people of Canada. It wants to provide an opportunity for Members of Parliament to function in this institution and to be valuable and viable workers within it.

There is another point that has to be made on this particular situation we find ourselves in today. This is not normal type of legislation. It was not introduced a few days ago for the first time. This legislation was before this House on a previous occasion just prior to the last election. In fact, it was not that the Bill was just introduced and then totally forgotten. No, that is not the case. We took that legislation through stage after stage as is required by parliamentary tradition. That Bill went through all of the stages, I believe with the exception of Royal Assent, giving members of this institution a chance to speak to the Bill, to participate in committee hearings, and to participate in several votes. It is not a new piece of legislation. We are not going into new territory. We are not opening up new ground. We are simply repeating what has happened already.

This is a government which has an agenda, a government which has some goals for the Canadian people, a Government which wants to lead this country to a strong economy, to opportunity for our young people in areas of research and development. That is what we want to get on with. There is no need for us to go through a long, drawn out exercise just simply to satisfy the needs of the Opposition. Those are needs that exist internally, not needs that have anything to do with the subject, but of political partisan needs to which I want to refer in a couple of moments.

In fact, the reason we are involved in this particular debate today is simply because of what is happening on the other side of the House. It has nothing to do with the question of free trade. If it did, those Members would recognize very quickly that the motion we are debating right now gives them every opportunity to express their concerns and make their points. No, that is not the real reason, it is not on the question of free trade.

Extension of Sittings

You will recall what happened on the night of the election, Mr. Speaker. We had members of the Opposition, representatives of both Parties, telling the Canadian people that they accepted the decision of the Canadian electorate. Something happened between then and now that has made them all excited. It has made them say: "We have to debate this deal. What is the rush? Let's take our time. Let's drag this out". It all has to do with Bob White.

Bob White, as we have since discovered, likes to write letters. Not only does he like to write letters, he likes to put them in the mail. We have discovered that not only does he put them in the mail to the people to whom he addresses them, the person whose name is at the beginning of that letter, but he sends them to the public through the newspapers and the media. We know what happened then.

All of a sudden this secret communication, this important discussion between the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) and Mr. White, was all over the front pages of the newspapers. What was Mr. White saying? He was saying that the NDP had rolled over and played dead in the election and that the Liberals had been able to co-opt them. As a result, the Liberals have more seats than the New Democratic Party, and that will never do.

Here we have this public criticism out there where everyone can see it and suddenly the lights go on. Those Members could not come into the House and stick to what they had said the night of the election, that the Canadian people had decided.

Suddenly after this letter there was a change of heart. Suddenly we found that members of the New Democratic Party had to stand up to their full height—and it is an expression I am well familiar with, Mr. Speaker—and fight. They had to prove that Bob White was wrong, even though Mr. White was part of their campaign team and even though he sat in on all of their meetings. The New Democratic Party did not like Bob White criticizing its Leader and its Party. Now we know what has happened with the New Democratic Party.

What about our colleagues, the Liberals? What is the situation with the Liberals? Those of us who have been here for a while know that during the election they fight one another. When the election is over the Liberals and the New Democratic Party still fight each other. Would it not look terrible to see the NDP fighting tooth and nail for its constituents and its voters and the Liberals sitting on their hands? Of course it would. They could not let that happen. That could not possibly be allowed to take place. In fact we have a catch-22 situation. The NDP is going to make sure it proves Bob White wrong, and the Liberals are going to make sure the NDP does not steal the limelight as the Liberals were successful in stealing it from that Party during the election.

Fortunately, the Canadian public was watching very closely and it chose our Party because of our vision for this country. It let the other two Parties fight it out between them as to who would be the Official Opposition. That is what it is really all about.

It is about a battle that is going on within their caucus and within their Parties and it has spilled out on to the floor of the House of Commons. As a result there is the possibility that a grinch may in fact steal Christmas.

None of us want that to happen. We really want to proceed with this legislation, but we want to ensure that all the people in this House who wish to speak on the issue of free trade will have that opportunity. That brings me right back to where I began, with this motion which the Government very wisely and very generously tabled here in the House of Commons. We want all of these people to have a chance to speak. We do not like to see fights and anger within the NDP caucus. We do not like to see tension between Bob White and the Hon. Leader of the NDP. That worries us. We do not want to see that happen. We want to ensure those Members have a chance to come into this House and express their concerns on the issue of free trade.

There has been an election since the last time we dealt with this legislation. The reason we have to go through it again is that it did not receive Royal Assent. That is why we have to go through the procedure at this point to make this legislation a reality.

The Canadian people chose this Party to form the government. They chose us because of our vision for the country. They chose us because they saw us creating jobs and opportunity for the Canadian people. They saw us as the Party offering a positive direction for this country. That is why we were chosen.

In fact, we are in a majority position today, which is a very unusual circumstance. As Canadians know, it is not common to have back-to-back majorities elected in this country. When the Canadian people do that, when they elect back-to-back majorities, it is because of the confidence they see in that Party. That was demonstrated very clearly by the very fact that this Party has now formed the government for a second time.

By electing us Canadians have accepted the free trade deal. Canadians have accepted the leadership of this Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and this Government. Canadians have said: "Let's get on with free trade, let's get on with the business at hand, and let's get on with the kind of vision this Government expressed to the Canadian people".

Mr. Rey Pagtakhan (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, parliamentary procedure is an essence of our parliamentary democracy. Indeed, I am honoured and privileged as a new Member of this distinguished Parliament to be sitting in the company of Mr. Stanley Knowles.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pagtakhan: He showed us that we could use procedure to achieve the proper objective. Indeed, Parliament is to serve all our people including those who chose not to elect this Government. The people of Winnipeg North have given me their ears. They have opened their eyes and entrusted me with their minds and hearts that I may be their voice in Parliament to speak for their concerns.

Parliament is the forum, as has been said, for the voices of all Canadians, including those, I repeat, who did not vote for this Government. Any threat, therefore, to be held over our parliamentary process must be resisted and the treatment is adequate debate. It will be an historic mistake if new Members of Parliament now and in the future are deprived of the right to speak for their constituencies. If that happens, this Parliament becomes a Parliament of government, not the Parliament of all Parties representing all people across the country.

I am beginning to learn, and he who says that he knows everything, for him it is the beginning of educational death. Citation 16 of Beauchesne's the rules and forms of the House of Commons of Canada reads as follows:

"Parliamentary privilege is the sum of the peculiar rights enjoyed by each House collectively as a constituent part of the High Court of Parliament, and by Members of each House individually, without which they could not discharge their functions—"

I underscore the latter part of it. If we allow the suspension of our rules, if we do not allow Members of Parliament to speak, then we will not be able to discharge our duty to our people.

Citation 21 of the same authority provides that "the most fundamental privilege of the House as a whole is to establish rules of procedure for itself and to enforce them". I recognize the right of Parliament to suspend debate from time to time, but it must be used only seldom if there is truly a compelling national reason. That has not been demonstrated.

It is true the Free Trade Agreement was introduced and passed by the Thirty-third Parliament. We must recognize, however, that the Thirty-fourth Parliament is different. It is different for a variety of reasons. We must recognize, as well, that although the Government was returned, it was returned with a remarkable reduction in its majority, something which the Government has failed to point out honestly to the people of Canada.

On the matter of the Free Trade Agreement, which matter I would have been prevented from saying even a few words on, I would like to say that the people of Winnipeg North are very concerned, very concerned indeed, that the health care and social programs of our country, for our youth, and for our seniors, will be jeopardized. On that basis—and I call this to the attention of Government—about 75 per cent of the sum total of our constituents voted that the Free Trade Agreement not be passed.

I recognize the reality of parliamentary democracy. I recognize that the Government has been given the mandate to implement its policies, but the Government must be honest. It has to recognize, as well, the right of the Opposition to introduce amendments, to point out the evils, the vaguenesses and weaknesses that the Free Trade Agreement has been shown to have.

It was an American who said that the Free Trade Agreement was the beginning of economic union and that economic union was the beginning of political union. The inescapable conclusion is that when political union happens, we will have lost our sovereignty and independence.

It has been said earlier—and I echo the position of my Party and the position of my Leader—that we must ensure not only the success of our economy but also the economic health of our people whose jobs may be lost. Therefore, job assistance programs must be ensured.

It is the essence of any quality program that the program must be reviewed. Our Party's submission that there be a parliamentary committee and that this Parliament oversees the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement is not only sound but is imperative.

Now I would like to touch on the weakness of the dispute settlement mechanism that the Free Trade Agreement hopes and claims is good. I would like to read very briefly the words of an authority, Mr. Bruce Fisher of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in Halifax, a policy analyst in the trade policy division:

"While the dispute settlement mechanism of the Canada-US Free Trade Agreement (FTA) has been widely claimed to be the solution to bilateral trade disputes, in reality it is a complex and one-sided system which may prove detrimental to Canadian interests."

I emphasize that it is detrimental to Canadian interests. Is the Government not concerned about this? I continue:

"The maximum time allotted for the resolution of disputes is excessively long... Almost all panel decisions are unenforceable."

On the review of trade remedy laws, the same authorities states:

"A 'binational' panel is created upon the request of one party. Panelists—all of whom must be American or Canadian—are chosen from a permanent roster. The panel is empowered to review changes in countervail or anti-dumping statutes for violations of GATT laws. Although free to rule for or against either country, and with no waiver of GATT panel rights, the entire process can require as long as 195 days. Even then the offending party cannot be forced to enact changes. After an additional ninety days of 'consultation' and a 9-month waiting period, the other country is free to retaliate or to terminate the FTA with sixty days written notice."

That tells of the weakness of the dispute settlement mechanism. If I might continue—

Mr. McDermid: Which one?

Mr. Pagtakh: When his time comes, Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member may speak. On the future of redefining subsidies, the same authority states:

"Canada has committed itself to successfully negotiating a definition for 'subsidy' within 7 years... The US views these negotiations as ending Canada's extensive subsidy practices, including regional development... As a strongly litigious society, the US will never cede its right to initiate trade remedy actions. Indeed, it would be almost impossible to redefine subsidies so as to exclude Canadian assistance programs."

I would like the Government to listen to this:

"At the end of seven years, a future U.S. government could deliver an ultimatum: cease subsidization or face termination of the agreement. After seven years of industrial restructuring Canada would have little room to maneuver during the course of such negotiations... Undoubtedly, Canada's trade negotiators saw the danger in this caveat. But, strongly anti-subsidy themselves, they saw little harm in its inclusion."

• (1400)

Then we come to the worst of the status quo:

"Ironically, the FTA magnifies the flaws and errors of the status quo... " Also, "security of access" for Canadian exports to the United States remains as elusive as ever."

I continue:

Extension of Sittings

"The next 10 years will establish that the changes to the status quo are marginal and probably damaging."

I rise on behalf of the constituents of Winnipeg North. I know I have the trust of their minds and hearts. I am determined in this Parliament to speak for them and to resist any attempt on the part of the Government to violate the spirit of the parliamentary process. I will defend the right of the youth to be heard. I will defend the right of seniors to be served. I will defend the right of all Canadians to be heard and to be served.

If my privilege as a Member of Parliament is potentially threatened by a suspension of rules, then we will have surrendered democracy. Co-operation is not surrender. Co-operation is a challenge to the majority, the Government, to see the heart and soul of the minority, the total Opposition, who in this instance represent the majority of Canadians across the country.

[Translation]

Mr. Don Boudria (Glengarry—Prescott—Russell): Mr. Speaker, thank you for this opportunity to address the House today. It is my first opportunity to make a speech since the election of November 21, when the voters of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell again gave me a mandate to represent them in the House of Commons. My first words will be to express my thanks and gratitude to the voters of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell for the support they gave me in the election on November 21.

Mr. Speaker, it has often been said that it is an honour to be a Member of Parliament. The greatest honour, the greatest privilege that can be given to a Canadian is to represent his or her fellow citizens in the Parliament of our country and for me, the honour is even greater when a Member is sent to the House of Commons with the support of a large majority of the voters. The voters of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell supported me with about 74 per cent of the vote in my riding. So I am extremely honoured with the confidence they have given me.

Mr. Speaker, the voters of Glengarry—Prescott—Russell spoke in this election. It is true that the Canadian people chose to re-elect a Conservative Government, but it would be false to claim that Canadians all said yes to free trade. If the Government claims that a vote for the Conservative Party is a vote for free trade, it would therefore be equally true to say that a vote against the Conservative Party is a vote against free trade. Of course, not all those who voted for the Conservative Party are for free trade, not and those who voted for an Opposition Member are against it. But, Mr. Speaker, the fact remains that this election was almost a referendum and one must at least assume that most people who voted in this election nevertheless expressed serious concerns about this trade agreement negotiated by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

[English]

We should ask ourselves how we got into this mess in which the Government has placed us today. Why is it that we are here a few days before Christmas just starting the debate on the trade deal? We started it for an hour or so yesterday. The Government should have completed its agenda in time for the January 1 deadline that it placed upon itself.

Here is how we got into this mess, Mr. Speaker. First, the Government decided on the strategy last year that it would make the least amount of information available to the Canadian people.

An Hon. Member: Wrong.

Mr. Boudria: That is not wrong. That is entirely correct. There were leaked cabinet documents. The Hon. Member should pay attention; we will give him a copy of those leaked cabinet documents later. The documents express a strategy of communicating the Government's message while withholding as much information as possible and keeping the debate low key. That was the strategy.

What the Government failed to realize was that by keeping or attempting to keep the debate low key and by attempting to withhold information from the Canadian public, the Government achieved instead a prolonged debate because people were craving for information about the trade deal. It took longer to get information, but the people eventually got what they were looking for.

The Government meanwhile manufactured millions of dollars of propaganda through pamphlets, leaflets, flyers, and video clips. I was even sent a cute little video cassette. I put it on the VCR machine in my office and played it. It had pictures of cabinet Ministers telling each how smart they were and just how great this country would be under free trade, but not explaining anything about what was in the deal. The Government spent over $30 million on that kind of propaganda.

As well the Government printed an original or a preliminary draft of the trade deal. Sometime later there was a final version, so there was no use for the first draft. What did the Government do with all the material that had been printed? It was recycled.

When we recycle paper do you know what the converted product ends up being, Mr. Speaker? Sure enough, we have millions of dollars worth of recycled free trade material which ended up in—you guessed it—toilet paper. I raised the issue on the floor of the House of Commons. I did not get much in the way of response from the Government. Of course, I never do get much of a response from the Government across the way. Most of the time the Government does not know the answer, but whenever it knows the answer it fails to hold itself accountable to the people of Canada.

In any case Canadians wanted information. The Government was feeding propaganda through leaflets and flyers. There was little information of substance, no background studies of what the damage would be or even the alleged benefits. The Government was not giving any more information than it had to give.

Early in the summer the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) indicated to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) very clearly that the Government had no mandate to negotiate, to sign, or to put into effect this trade deal. After all, it was the Prime Minister who said in 1983, that free trade was like sleeping with an elephant. "Everything was fine until the elephant rolled over and then," said the Prime Minister, "you are a dead man."

Two years later the Prime Minister had this conversation on the way back from the Shamrock Summit. He wanted a free trade deal but he had not received a mandate from the people of Canada. Given that he had no such mandate, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition pointed out very astutely, I might add, that the only thing to do was for the Prime Minister to call an election right there and then. The Leader of the Opposition said to the Prime Minister and to his Government: "Look, folks, you want this trade deal. Go to the people now, get a mandate. If and when you come back, we will debate the Bill in the House of Commons, and the Senate will not object any further".

• (1410)

Of course, as usual the Prime Minister did not listen to anything. He did not call an election at that point. He woke up one morning in October, I believe it was October 1. Perhaps he had had a walk in the fog the night before, or something like that, but on that Saturday morning the Prime Minister took a stroll over to Government House and asked the Governor General to dissolve Parliament and to call an election for November 21. I saw it on my own television set.

Extension of Sittings

We fought the election. It was a bitter and tough one for all of us. The Government was feeding the people more propaganda, and we were telling our side of the story. People ultimately had to make their choice. Until a week or so before the election it was quite clear that the choice was going to be to defeat the trade deal.

In came the big guns to the rescue with all their money. They bought newspaper ads, many ads to attempt to discredit people on an individual basis, when they felt that they were losing. The Government, sadly I must say, won the election of November 21.

The next day the Prime Minister woke up and decided "Wait a minute, I promised Ronnie Reagan that I would have the trade deal signed by January 1. That only leaves me 41 days. What am I going to do now?" He decided that he was going to rush the Chief Electoral Officer, and everyone else to get the writs in as quickly as possible, to recall Parliament for three weeks hence, and to present what he claimed was a Throne Speech. Actually, it was nothing of the sort. It was a 90-second document in which the Prime Minister said: "I was elected, now I want my trade Bill". The Governor General read that to us, and we were called back into the House.

We listened to the so-called Throne Speech, but we are not convinced that the Prime Minister still has a mandate to negotiate the deal, to adopt the Bill in Parliament, and to do so within a seven or eight day timeframe.

Let us pretend that the Prime Minister told us the facts as they are, which sometimes is questionable. Let us pretend that he gave us all the information when he said that this is the greatest and most important trading agreement ever signed by any two countries on the face of the earth. If it is so important, would it not be true that it should be studied by Parliament for more than five or six sitting days of the House of Commons? If it is as important as the Prime Minister tells us it is, why are we not allowed to do what we would do with any other Bill?

We should have a thorough debate on second reading and send it to a legislative committee. I am sure you know this, Mr. Speaker, but for the information of some of our newer colleagues, if it were a very important Bill we would have a committee that would hear witnesses. It would hear witnesses across the country and have meetings in various provinces and the territories in order that we could listen to what the people had to say about a particular legislative initiative. If that is true of any important Bill, should it not be even more so when we are talking about this Bill which is supposed to be the most important piece of trading legislation ever signed by two countries on the face of the earth?

Obviously, the Government never had in mind to have a full debate on this issue. On the very first day the House was sitting the Government sought the consent of the House to suspend the rules duly adopted by Parliament. I have in my hand the Standing Orders of the House of Commons dated November 1988. Incorporated in those rules are the days of sitting of Parliament, the process that we must use, and the parliamentary procedure. The Government even flawed its motion and had to start it over. Today we gave consent that the Government could amend its motion. It was so badly flawed that it probably would not have worked at all to start with. There are still things in the motion brought before us that I question. For instance, it states:

"That, for the duration of this session or until otherwise ordered, the provisions of Standing Order 73(1) and (2) respecting committee stage of Public Bills be suspended—"

What does that mean? Does it mean that Standing Order 73(1) which states that we will have amendments to the Bill after second reading is now suspended? Does it mean that we could move an amendment at second reading after this motion is through, that we could actually amend a Bill at second reading stage as opposed to committee stage? Perhaps it means that we could amend the Bill at third reading on the floor of the House. The provision in the rules that has been suspended tells us where and when we can make amendments to the Bill. I say to government Members that they had better look again at that motion they brought to the attention of the House.

The Government has stated that there is a precedent for doing this, that it was done once before, but it is not quite what the Government did before. I know that the Chair has already ruled on it. Notwithstanding the ruling of the Chair which determined that this motion was in order—and I am not questioning that—I submit to the Speaker that it is far more strict, far larger in scope, and far more important than the one we were dealing with last summer.

The motion that we had before us last summer was for the purpose of one piece of legislation only and for a specified period of time. I know an amendment was introduced today to amend this badly flawed motion. The final paragraph states:

Extension of Sittings

"That immediately upon the House returning from the Senate after the first Royal Assent—"

When is the first Royal Assent? It could be at any time. The Government could pass 15 Bills, not give Royal Assent to any of them, and ask for Royal Assent on all of them at the same time. The motion further states:

"—a Minister of the Crown may propose, without notice or debate, a motion to rescind this Order."

It states that "a Minister of the Crown may propose, but then again he may not. There is no obligation on the part of the Minister to reinstate the rules we have now which are being suspended with this motion today.

Let us assume that the Minister made such a proposal. The House would not have to accept it in any event, because the Government could have a member of Cabinet move the motion to reinstate the rules and have the same parliamentary majority. In other words, if all the other Conservative Members vote against the motion that was proposed by the Minister, we could end up with a situation whereby that suspension of the rules would be here for the rest of this session of Parliament.

That is how badly flawed this motion is. It was probably written on the back of an envelope by the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis), perhaps on the way back from the men's executive washroom or wherever, trying to find a process to deal with and get rid of this Bill immediately, which is what the Government wants. Why do they want this? For no other reason than to accommodate a political agenda.

In March, 1985, you will remember, Mr. Speaker, that in Quebec City there was what we now know of as the Shamrock Summit. At the Shamrock Summit the Prime Minister promised the President of the United States that we would have a trade deal. In the beginning, it was not called the free trade deal because he pooh-poohed those words.

I have a copy of a story written by Martin Cohn, a well respected journalist who works for the well respected Toronto Star. In that article the Prime Minister is quoted as saying: "Trade enhancement I'd go along with—not free trade. Trade enhancement with all of our partners is what we want". This was stated by the Prime Minister at the Shamrock Summit.

• (1420)

As you will recall, Mr. Speaker, it was during the Shamrock Summit that we had the Prime Minister and the President of the United States appear on our television sets singing When Irish Eyes Are Smiling. My television set has not been the same since.

We heard the Prime Minister and the President of the United States agree that we should try to improve our trading relations. But even then, the Prime Minister said, and I quote: "Trade enhancement with all of our partners is what we want."

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is the position of the Liberal Party. It is our position that we should be working toward the lowering of tariffs on a multilateral basis, and not the type of binational agreement represented by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement—and a flawed one at that. It is an agreement under which we gave away the store and got nothing in return.

[Translation]

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to you that the Conservative Government did not properly negotiate this agreement, the Conservative Government needlessly put off the elections, and then in an attempt to meet its needs, stick to its political agenda and live up to its promises—the Prime Minister's promises to the President of the United States—the Prime Minister now expects us to accommodate him and give him the green light to have this legislation adopted after only a few days' debate.

Mr. Speaker, that is not what we intend to do. The Canadian people have spoken, the Canadian people have elected Government Members, but quite a few Canadians also voted for other candidates. The role of the Government is to govern, my role as Opposition Member is to oppose and to propose constructive amendments as we are wont to do. I have every intention of continuing to do just that.

[English]

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I was very proud to have been elected to this House of Commons, proud to have been given the opportunity to participate in this democracy in an active way.

The electorate of the riding of Saanich—Gulf Islands is very serious about its politics, very serious about participating in our democracy.

Extension of Sittings

I was voted in with a large majority, with a voter turn-out of 85 per cent. My constituents took the issues in the last election seriously, and they expect me to work hard on their behalf, and I intend to do just that.

My introduction to this House over the course of the past week, however, has left me profoundly disillusioned. I came to this House with the expectation that I would be taking part in one of the greatest debates in this century. And what does my first speech have to be about? It is about the arrogance of this Government in suspending its own rules of operation.

If we do not have rules in a democracy, we have nothing. The arrogance of this Government is to be deplored.

On the night of the election, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) talked about a period of reconciliation, and this is what we have now. Is this what he calls reconciliation?

An Hon. Member: Shame!

Ms. Hunter: It is certainly not reconciliation in my estimation. The motion under debate represents a brutal attack on our fundamental traditions of democracy. The more people know about it, the more they will come to understand the kind of people they have elected to form the majority in this House. It is a shame that this Government is behaving in this manner.

Some government Members have accused us of obstruction. That is the word that has been used. If "obstruction" means to provide for fair debate of the issues before this House, if that is what they refer to as obstruction, then I can understand why they can use a tactic such as the suspension of the rules of the House.

We must have debate. The Free Trade Agreement constitutes the whole reason for my becoming a candidate in the last election, and now we are not to be allowed to debate it. Closure is to be introduced.

My constituents elected me to speak out forcefully on their behalf in opposition to the Free Trade Agreement and to try to get the best deal for them.

The fact that the over-all election result meant that I would have a front-row seat to this Government implementing an agreement which I find so abhorrent meant that my election to this House was a bitter-sweet victory.

We must press this Government to adhere to the traditions and the rules that have governed our democracy. We must bring this Government to its senses.

If we do not conduct our business in this House pursuant to those rules, we are going down a very dangerous road.

Prior to my election to this House, I worked in international development, and in that capacity I had occasion to witness the violations against human rights in a number of countries, countries where the Governments had no interest in representing the ordinary citizens. I thought Canada was different from those places. Well, this week has taught me something new. It has taught me that we are not immune from the types of human rights violations that one sees in other countries. It can happen here.

We have a tradition of democracy in this country, and we have to defend that tradition of democracy. With all of my being, I will defend it. The people of Saanich—Gulf Islands elected me to speak out forcefully, and I am proud to be able to do that today.

It is my hope that the next occasion on which I speak in this House, it will be in a substantive way in opposition to the free trade Bill.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey—White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin by welcoming to the House the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter). I compliment her on her speech. While I do not agree with very much of what she has said, and while I would have preferred to have heard her predecessor, Pat Crofton, I must say that she did acquit herself well. She spoke with conviction.

In addition to welcoming to the Chamber the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands, I should also like to welcome the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Pagtakhan), who I think has provided us with one of the better speeches from the opposition side. I compliment him on what he has said.

The Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands berated the Government for its arrogance. In fact, arrogance is when the losers try to prevent the winners from tabling their legislation.

As has already been said, the election is over. The Leader of the New Democratic Party, the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), on election night, conceded that the Government had won, that it had a mandate, and that he would not try to stop it from introducing and passing its legislation.

The Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner), both on election night and the day following, made the point that the Government had a clear mandate to table its legislation and that his Party had no right to hold it up.

Extension of Sittings

That is what we heard on election day and the day following. What do we now find? We now find that those who are in the minority are saying that they want to debate the legislation, while at the same time they are doing all that they can to prevent the Government from tabling its legislation so that it can be debated.

That, Mr. Speaker, is arrogance. We do not need to be lectured by the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands about arrogance, when all that we are trying to do is fulfil the mandate given to us by the Canadian people. That is all we are trying to do. Far from what the Hon. Member for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) has said, the motion that is before us today is to apply to one Bill only. It has a sunset clause. It will expire when this legislation is passed. It is not Draconian. It is not extreme. It is functional and designed to let the Government fulfil its mandate.

As I said before, repeating what others have said, the election is over. We are now here to work and fulfil the mandate the Canadian people have given to us.

I now want to draw on our experience of a few years ago in this Chamber and the work done by the committee headed by the former Hon. Member for St. John's East, James McGrath, now the Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland. It was commonly called the McGrath committee. I was a member of that committee, as was the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Transcona (Mr. Blaikie), at that time the Hon. Member for Winnipeg—Birds Hill, and the Hon. Member for Peace River (Mr. Cooper) who sits next to me here. We did much to streamline the proceedings of this House to make it work better, create a better atmosphere, and give backbenchers a more precedent setting role. Members from all Parties agreed with the recommendations.

One of the memorable experiences we as a committee had was travelling to the United Kingdom and hearing witnesses from the House of Commons, the Mother of Parliaments, telling us their experience and how they proceeded with their work. I think all Members here realize that if ever politics were polarized, they are polarized in the United Kingdom.

It is a little like British Columbia that way. We have the Conservative Party on one side and the Labour Party on the other side, and the Leader of the Coalminers' Union is very prominent in the Labour Party. It is a polarized political scene and the practice is that each Party at election time publishes their manifesto. They line up before the electorate all the things their Party believes in and would institute if elected to office. It is assumed that when that Party is elected it is going to fulfil its manifesto. On election night the public, having elected the majority Party, expect it to bring in legislation that will fulfil that manifesto.

When we on the committee met with officials of Parliament there, the clerks and their deputies, they told us of the practice that when the governing Party brings forward its legislation, it will meet with Leaders of the Opposition Parties. They call it "talking with the usual channels", who in our case would be the House Leaders of the various Parties. "The usual channels had their discussions," they say. There is a very important phrase they use constantly in those discussions and when they report back. They say: "The Government is entitled to its legislation". The Government has presented its manifesto to the people, the people have chosen that manifesto, and the Government is entitled to its legislation. That does not mean the Opposition is not entitled to debate it, raise its opposition, and bring forward amendments. Yet the understanding among the Parties is that it will not be unduly held up.

What is the experience in the U.K.? It does not matter how important the legislation, the debate lasts at most for a few days.

Mr. Marchi: Who rang the bells in 1980?

Mr. Friesen: I will come to the ringing of the bells.

Mr. Marchi: Did you charge the Chair as well?

Mr. Friesen: When the Hon. Member has something to say, he can stand on his feet and say it.

The debates in the U.K. usually last a few days and the legislation is passed because there is an understanding. The socialist party in England, being a little bit more mature than the two socialist parties here, understands that when democracy speaks the winners are the winners. They are entitled to pass their legislation. Our two socialist parties have not understood that yet. They are still in the adolescent stage when it comes to that kind of democracy.

One of the reasons the Parties here say we are not entitled to our legislation is that we had 43 per cent of the vote, and that is not a clear mandate. Let me point out, for example, that in 1972, we had a general election in the Province of British Columbia. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett), who sits opposite me, became the Premier of British Columbia as a result of the election of 1972. He had a mandate. Did he have a mandate! He brought in auto insurance. I remember that campaign when the Hon. Member went around the province. He never said: "I will get you auto insurance for $25". He never said that. What he did say is: "The Government has a fleet of vehicles and do you know what they have? They have coverage for $25. Would it not be nice if you and I could have that kind of insurance?"

He never said that he would provide $25 car insurance, because I think he knew he could not do that. However, once he got his mandate, boy, did we get auto insurance. Not for $25, but for about ten times $25. Something like $250.

We got auto insurance on the basis of his mandate. What was that mandate?

Mr. Cooper: He had a majority.

Mr. Friesen: Yes, 39.59 per cent of the vote.

Mr. Cooper: What?

Mr. Friesen: That gave him a mandate to give us auto insurance in British Columbia. Wow! At least we did four points better than that. We got 43 per cent and that ought to give us a mandate.

Not only did he give us auto insurance, he gave us a land freeze. I remember the demonstrations around the province during that land freeze. It escalated the price of land for developers so they could make a healthy profit. Those people who are always fighting land developers lined the pockets of land developers during that land freeze. How did he do that? With that overwhelming majority of 39.59 per cent.

We had bumper stickers all over British Columbia during that time, because he ruined the mining industry, which read: "Welfare, B.C.'s No. 1 Industry". He did that all on a mandate of 39.59 per cent.

Did he have a mandate for that? Do we have a mandate today? I think the Government is entitled to its legislation.

I was elected in 1974, when we were campaigning on wage and price controls. It so happened that the Liberals were elected under Mr. Trudeau with a majority of about 43 per cent. Did that prevent him from bringing in the six and five program a year later? Not at all, even though he campaigned for exactly the opposite. I suspect the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) supported him. He campaigned on exactly the opposite. He got a mandate of 43 per cent. That did not stop him one bit.

• (1440)

In 1980, Mr. Trudeau was elected again with no overwhelming mandate. It was less than 50 per cent. What did we get out of that? The bell ringing. Why? Because of the National Energy Program. Had he told us in the campaign that he was going to give back-in provisions for Petro-Canada? Did he tell us at that time that he was going to confiscate lands? Not at all. But on the basis of 43 per cent he said he had a mandate for the back-in provisions, and to confiscate lands. That is why we had the bell ringing, by the way. It was because the Government was not entitled to legislation it had not campaigned on. The Government did not provide a manifesto that declared forthrightly what it was going to do.

I come back to what this House ought to be providing by way of tradition, and what the political system in Canada ought to do. It should be to provide a clear message to the Canadian people during the election campaign on what the issues are for each political Party. Our responsibility as political leaders in each campaign is to make sure that our electorate understands clearly what we stand for, if we are to be elected. Believe me, I think all Members in this House in this Thirty-fourth Parliament understand very clearly what they were campaigning for in this election. The public certainly understood. They knew that it was one overriding issue. That was made clear by the Leader of the Opposition when he said: "Give the people the chance. Give them the voice. Give them the choice". The people have spoken. It was one issue. It is our mandate.

Members of the Opposition have every right to stand, to debate, and to outline their principles, their objections, and what they stand for. They have not only the right; they have the duty to do that. We are trying to provide them with that opportunity.

That is why we tried to table the legislation as soon as we came into the House. That is why we cannot understand why the Opposition forced two votes at least just on tabling the Bill. That took up an hour that could have been spent on debate of the legislation. It was taken away from us. What we are saying is let us establish the tradition as has been established in the United Kingdom.

As political Parties during the election campaign we decide on our manifesto. We decide what we plan to implement, if we are elected. We must make the message clear as we did during this campaign so that when Parliament comes together after the election the people have a clear understanding of what is before them. Thus when the majority Party takes office it is entitled to its legislation with proper debate, but not obstruction, with clear statements of principle on the part of the Government, on the part of the opposition Parties, but not obstruction, not trying to hijack the system.

I say to Members: Let us debate. Let us debate free trade. Let us state our points. But let us pass the legislation because the people of Canada have decided. Free trade is the future for Canada. It is the horizon, the hope for the Canadian people. Let us have that legislation.

[Translation]

Mr. J. Ronald Duhamel (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, as a new Member from St. Boniface, of which I am very proud, what is most important for me and I believe also for all Canadians in the provinces and two territories is that every Member be able to speak on every issue that he or she feels important for his or her constituency, province and country. And that is exactly what I intend to do.

I have just arrived, I am brand new and I admit that I have a lot to learn. For example, what struck me is that the Government has greatly embellished or somewhat exaggerated many things and has sometimes been contradictory.

Let us take one example. When they talk about spreading fear, it seems to me that the Government has contributed to this situation. I remember a press release stating that two million families would suffer if the agreement were not implemented. That is fear-mongering!

I heard many times that if the Government were not elected, the dollar would fall, the economy would collapse and our links with the United States and other countries would be weakened. What I found most disturbing during the election campaign was the interference of leaders of other countries. For example, the President of the United States took the liberty to make a speech in which he referred to this agreement. This same gentleman had said after concluding the agreement with the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), that it was the realization of the American dream. And later on, the Prime Minister of England also meddled in our affairs.

I ask, with all due respect, whether they took the time to read the Agreement. Have they read the Agreement? Have they really understood it? And if they neither read nor understood it, did they have the right to interfere and make favourable comments on this Agreement?

I would point out that not only the Opposition parties have raised serious questions about this Agreement. Many groups have done so, and here are some of them: an impressive number of women's organizations from almost every part of the country, unions throughout Canada, at least 90 environmental groups, cultural groups throughout Canada and a large number of churches in Canada. I know at least five that have spoken out. Business men and women from small, medium and large companies have also done so.

We are being led to believe that business men and women are all for the agreement, that they want to support it. But that is false. And I sincerely believe that if they did not feel muzzled, they would have spoken up much more loudly about its shortcomings.

I like to believe that all these people whom I have just mentioned, and I identified only a few, are not always wrong.

[English]

During the election campaign we were told that a number of issues that we had raised were not at all being threatened, for example, our culture. This is a real concern to a number of groups, for example, our new Canadians, our northern and native peoples, les francophones hors Québec.

We were told, as well, that our environmental standards would not suffer, that the very serious problem of acid rain and the thinning of the ozone layer which has caused numerous kinds of medical problems would in fact not suffer as a result of this particular accord. We were also informed that our regional development programs would not be hampered in any of serious way. We were told that our control and pricing of our natural resources would not be jeopardized. We were also told many, many times that our social programs would in no way be negatively affected now or in the future. We were told that our working men and women would not lose better jobs than those that might be created by the Mulroney-Reagan agreement, that when they were displaced they would be entitled to assistance and retraining and/or moving and adjustment expenditures.

If all of this is in fact true then what the people of St. Boniface—and I think many people throughout Canada—are really requesting is that that be put down very simply and clearly, not in some isolated or remote section of the accord or in the appendix, but that it be written simply and clearly so that their fears can in fact be removed.

Let us tell the one million people who are unemployed today how they will be helped. Let us guarantee to them that that is in fact the case. We have more than four million Canadians who are poor and who are working at minimum wage. Out of those four million there are over one million children who are involved. How well can their condition be improved? If their condition will be improved, let us set it down clearly. How will our seniors, our youth, our women, our northern and native people, and our new Canadians profit from this agreement?

I would suggest that if the Government is really concerned about the people of Canada, the concerns which have been raised by these various groups and some of the concerns I have just pointed out need to be addressed. These concerns need to be reflected in some sort of mechanism such as legislation.

What the people of Canada really want from Government and from the Opposition is the truth about this trade deal. They want us to share honestly with them the information we have. They want copies of the studies the Government has. They want to be told clearly and unequivocally about the difficulties that lie ahead. They want to know if the definition of subsidies will cause serious difficulties. They want to understand more about what is meant by the process of harmonization. They want to identify the industries that will fall or suffer seriously as a result of this agreement.

I think you will agree that our Canadian population is, generally speaking, quite politically literate. They are really vitally interested in the politics of this nation and where we are going as a country. I think they increasingly resent what they perceive as being manipulated, not being given the whole truth, all the facts, being treated as if they are not knowledgeable enough or intelligent enough to understand what we as politicians supposedly understand. In fact, I would suggest that they are insulted and angered by such an approach. I would venture that they will no longer tolerate such treatment.

Canadians want their Government and their opposition Parties to do everything in their power to protect them. Personally, I will do everything in my power to protect all my constituents and all Canadians.

Mr. John F. Brewin (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, when I see the Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin), as I understand her position to be in the House, I am inclined to begin with a discussion of the Heliport in Victoria, but I will save that for another occasion.

The topic that we are supposed to be discussing, as I understood the Order of the Day, was the Government's decision to use its majority to change the rules of this House. I find it something of a shame that those of us who are making our first speech here are required to speak to this particular topic.

We come here with a deep sense of excitement and honour at the opportunity we have to serve our country in this place. We listened carefully to the Speaker's words yesterday when he ruled in order the motion that we have before us. I am disappointed the Government did not take the very broad hint or strong words the Speaker gave to this House. He said of the motion before us that while it is in order, he found it was a hard case. I quote from page 78 of Hansard:

"I am not pleased as your presiding officer to put this question to the House; but it would be bad law to do otherwise."

He is saying that it is in order for the Government to introduce this motion, but it is a bad motion that is being put.

Let us look at precisely what the Government is asking this House to approve. It is not asking the House to approve the Free Trade Agreement or the enabling legislation. It is asking this House to change the Standing Orders. To paraphrase the Hon. House Leader for the Government (Mr. Lewis), it is changing three rules.

First, it is extending the sittings on four days a week from 6 p.m. to midnight. It is wiping out the rule that the House would have no evening sittings.

Second, it is changing the regular House schedule by extending beyond December 22, this session of Parliament. Normally, we would rise on December 22, and return on January 15.

Third, it changes the requirement that this very complicated piece of legislation go to a smaller legislative committee and provides that it be discussed clause by clause in Committee of the Whole which gives to the Government far greater opportunity to shorten the debate.

Those are the three things that are being proposed by the Government. I come here, I admit, as a new Member, but it is my understanding that the Standing Orders are the constitution of this House. The Standing Orders have been developed over a number of years and, in particular, these provisions were the result of the McGrath reform introduced at the urging of a former member of the Conservative Party and Conservative caucus.

Extension of Sittings

What is very disappointing is that the Conservatives have so quickly forgotten what it is like to be on this side of the House. It has not taken them very long to take on the demeanour of our friends to the right in the Liberal Party, to behave as the Liberals did for so many years.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brewin: I had them with me up until now, but I will get them back before we finish, Mr. Speaker. The reforms to the Standing Orders that were adopted, as I understand it, in 1985, represented a very delicate balance between the need for legislative efficiency and the need to ensure that the business of the House had full and careful consideration. That balance was agreed to on all sides of the House. These particular rules play a very important part of that balance.

First, it was the wisdom and experience of the House that evening sittings were not sittings which gave full and proper consideration to issues before the House. All sides agreed that in normal circumstances, in fact in all circumstances apart from closure, those evening sittings were to be done away with. Second, it agreed that there should be fixed times for the House to rise, and for it to rise during the Christmas season has obvious advantages. Not only are the Members themselves in need of and entitled to a break from the business of the House, but the public is obviously not focusing on the business of this House at this time of year. It made some sense, if the public was to play its part in consideration of the business of the House that we should not be dealing with business over the Christmas season.

Finally, the earlier rule about sending matters to smaller committees was clearly aimed at having full and detailed consideration of legislation, and particularly of complicated legislation. It enabled the House to call and to hear from witnesses who might conceivably contribute to the improvement of the legislation. These rules, as I understand them, were a compromise of interests and were designed to further the public interest. It is these rules which this motion proposes to do away with.

The Government proposes to do so for two stated reasons: first, to meet the alleged deadline that the Government sees it must set; second, because the Government says there has been enough discussion. The Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock (Mr. Friesen) went on about the mandate the Government has. I certainly concede, as I understand all Hon. Members concede, that the Government has a mandate to introduce legislation, to have it considered and ultimately to bring it to a vote, but the Government does not have a mandate to set aside these important and sensitive rules and to deprive the public—not the Opposition but the public—of its right to have the details of this legislation thoroughly and carefully reviewed.

I submit that the exercise of the election campaign will have changed significantly the perspectives of every single Member of this House on the details of this Bill. The election campaign may well not have changed the over-all view for or against the Free Trade Agreement, but none of us could have gone through this particular election campaign, this exciting and dramatic election campaign, this very intensive election campaign, without having learned something from the all-candidates meetings, without having learned something from the people we argued with on the doorsteps, without having learned something from the intense public debate of all aspects of this matter. We come, new Members and veterans, informed in a very special and sensitive way to this legislation.

I would like to think that if we had the opportunity carefully to go through this legislation clause by clause, using the committee system, if we had the opportunity to go through it, not during midnight sittings but fresh and during the day-to-day sittings, if we had the opportunity to go through it when the public was in a position to pay full attention, it is possible this legislation might be improved. It will not be ultimately defeated. The Government has a mandate for passing it, but it might be improved.

The specific concerns that we all heard and to which the Government responded at least in its advertising and public commitments, concerns about social programs, about the environment, about the impact on regional programs, about the dislocation of workers, might conceivably be met by changes in this legislation. Further, there may be very specific impacts of this legislation on the tourist business, for example, or on real estate. Various sections of the legislation or the appendices, if we had a full and proper opportunity, might be improved by a proper consideration of the legislation.

Now the Government is depriving the public of this opportunity. It does so for the second reason, this alleged deadline. I know many Hon. Members have spoken of the deadline, but let us remind the House through you, Mr. Speaker, that the deadline, the short time we have to consider this, is self-inflicted by the Government.

It is the Government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) in particular who decided the timing of the election. He did so in full knowledge of the fact that he would have only eight working days of Parliament left when the writs were returned. It was the Prime Minister's choice to wait until October 1, to have the writs for the election issued, it was no one else's. He could have called the election under the new electoral boundaries at any time after July 14. He chose to do it when he did it and now he and his Government come to the House and say, "Let us push aside these protections for the public interest in the interest of trying to meet a deadline". It is a deadline which is far from written in stone.

As a new Member, sitting here in this place with some awe, I thought of some of those who have been here before us. As I began listening to this procedural debate, I recalled my first particular interest in the goings-on of this House. It was in the mid-fifties when I was at university, the time of the infamous pipeline debate about which we have already heard.

I thought of the role played by the former Hon. Member for Winnipeg North Centre who sits here as an esteemed honorary Clerk of this House, and I am very pleased on a personal level to see him here. I recall that it was the Conservatives who joined with the then CCF to stand up to a move by the government of the day, the Liberals, to change the then rules of the House in order to meet a deadline, a deadline that the then government had gotten itself into because it had mismanaged the business of the House. Having mismanaged the business of the House, the Government then had to meet this particular deadline in order to guarantee financing for the trans-Canada pipeline.

In that exciting exercise, which I remind the Government opposite ultimately brought down the Liberal Government of Prime Minister St. Laurent, it was none other than Mr. Diefenbaker who stated the words which I will now put to the Government, words which I wish it had remembered before it brought this motion, words which I suppose it is naive to hope that government Members would consider when they come to vote tonight. I quote from page 4736 of Hansard for June 5, 1956. Mr. Diefenbaker then said to the House:

"The House of Commons—with its traditions, its dedication to preserve and maintain freedom, its necessary dependence on the fact that an opposition must be able to express itself fearlessly and powerfully upon the issues of the day—requires rules that are interpreted fairly."

He went on to say:

"—the rules of parliament should not be altered, dare not be changed in order to meet the demands of an overwhelming majority. Only yesterday the Prime Minister, in the course of his speech giving one of the reasons for the action the other day which denied the rights of parliament, when the decision of the previous day was reversed in the morning, said that after all that prejudiced the government. I have his exact words, and I asked him to repeat them. "To the prejudice of the government." Is that the basis upon which the Parliament is operating? Is that the basis by which we in fact, as Members of this House, are to be attendants at the will of the Prime Minister and those associated with him? Sir, the events of the last week will be forgotten, but not forgotten in this generation will be the short-cuts through freedom that have been made by a government that has set the zero hour and then curtailed the rights of parliament in order to achieve an arbitrary date."

He referred to this as the cry of every dictator and every potential dictator in every generation. Parliament works too slowly. They want action now. The rules have been with us for generations, dump out the rules. It seems to me that this statement made 32 years ago applies precisely to the situation we have here.

Mr. Jean-Guy Hudon (Beauharnois—Salaberry): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to a lot of rhetoric this afternoon from great democrats who maintain that this motion is absolutely dreadful and that it curtails freedom of speech.

Last night, on television, Mr. Bourassa was talking about his reaction with regard to Bill 101, saying that he would introduce a bill next Monday in the National Assembly. When he was asked if he would follow normal procedures, he said no, that they would be suspended and that a bill would be passed.

Mr. Speaker, it is not anti-democratic for rules to allow us to change or abolish laws or to put forward motions of closure which enable a duly elected government to take power, because there is a difference between the two.

Mr. Speaker, when the rules allow us to put forward motions of closure, it is democratic to do so. To have in our rules special clauses which allow a government to pass a legislation is not antidemocratic.

Mr. Speaker, we have just had an election campaign, and a good many people described it as a referendum campaign. During this campaign the poll figures went up and down all the time and when they seemed to indicate a strong preference for the Conservative Party some people would take us to task—particularly those who did not share our views, of course—and say to us: Why did you not hold a referendum on this question? My answer was: Listen, I recall that in the House of Commons both the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party urged us to hold a referendum election. Well, you have one. We are in the midst of a referendum election and the outcome could very well have been quite different. However, we followed the democratic rules all along and we had a referendum election. Now we are asking the Opposition to play by the same rules and stop wasting the time of Members in the House.

We have all been democratically elected by the people. We should never suggest that someone is wasting his time here. But when I begin repeating what someone else just said, and when others enjoy repeating what they heard earlier we may well think that we are not wasting our time, but we are certainly not making very good use of it. We are going to debate until one o'clock in the morning and then vote on a closure motion. Will democracy be short-changed? And tomorrow you will see that none of the newspapers in Canada carry headlines about Parliament being anti-democratic. Most of them will say: At last the Canadian Government or the Parliament of Canada has taken action after winning the election and having been brought back into office. Nobody will accuse us of being anti-democratic because of that, Mr. Speaker. The session opened last Monday. We have been sitting since Monday. We have been here five days and have yet to debate the free trade issue. Members have been talking about procedure.

But it does not matter, I am a patient man. I am prepared to sit through the weekend, I am prepared to come back next week, not to mention between Christmas and New Year's. So what? If that is what they want for Christmas that is what they will get for Christmas. What more can I say. Democratic principles have not been breached, Mr. Speaker.

So we had an election campaign which was a referendum campaign. That is exactly what the people wanted. John Turner—this must have been before he was first stabbed in the back over his leadership—had this to say on June 22, 1988: The kind of trade deal the Government is about to make with the United States is an issue which has to be decided in Canada by Canadians, debated in Canada by Canadians. Well, that is what has happened. He said that on June 22. He made a number of other comments which I will not repeat, he even said bad things about the Conservative Party. I will skip that. On August 31, 1988, Mr. Turner told the press what his election slogan would be: Let the people decide. You know Axworthy. It is very simple, Mr. Speaker, if the Minister is in favour of democratic choice, why not the ultimate test, a general election. He said that on July 26, 1988. And the House sat through the summer as well. Let us not kid ourselves.

In view of that alarming circumstance, and I stress alarming, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) should ask Canadians for their agreement. We got it on November 21. Sheila Copps: The power lies with the people. That was a good one she hit upon. Gagliano, for once not talking about super-boxes, stated: The nation's future, and he stressed that, is sufficient reason for holding elections; that was on July 23, 1988. And so on. Even Senator Hébert took it upon himself to go on record: The Senate never suggested it would block the free trade legislation. It only said free trade was too important a matter not to allow the Canadian people to give their opinion. On November 21, the Canadian people gave their opinion, especially in Quebec. The quote comes from Liberal Senate leader Allan MacEachen, a worthy senator, on July 22, 1988. Carlo Rossi: Call an election! which we did. And won. To their regrets. They wanted an election which would be a referendum, well they got it. That is what democracy is all about.

On December 8, 1988, Axworthy said: We will not take Brian Mulroney's word, stated Liberal critic Lloyd Axworthy, the assurances he gave Canadians during the elections will now have to be inserted into the agreement et cetera. That was from one side of the Liberal Party. And the same party, Mr. Speaker, which had very solid foundations in Quebec, when we came here in 1984, there was one Conservative Member for 74 Liberal Members. That was the power base, Quebec. But there we won again. In 1984, they said it was only a glitch. We recouped seats in Quebec because people did not believe that. Because when we came in in 1984, we changed the job strategy—we changed a lot of policies in 1984 and 1985. A lot of policies and Government programs set up by the Liberals. At the time people said this was horrendous, and how many jobs would it cost? Axworthy said: What will the number of job losses be—100,000 or 200,000? He asked that on November 9, 1984, not long after being elected. He could already foresee the downturn in employment. Warren Allmand: That will result in 125,000 to 150,000 job losses. Certainly Sheila Copps must have said something on that. Yes, she did. She suggested: They will destroy 125,000 jobs. Yes.

Mr. Marchi: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. You are an experienced Member of this House as is the Member who is speaking. I have had some patience but the Member continues in his remarks to refer to a Member by name. He knows better than that. He knows he should refer to the Member's riding. I think he has continued naming Members enough times to warrant some caution from Your Honour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Belsher): I would remind the Hon. Member that he should not refer to Members by name but by their ridings.

• (1520)

[Translation]

Mr. Hudon: All right. I thought indeed, Mr. Speaker, that I may quote from documents. But if this will please you, I will change that.

And since November 4, 1984, more than one million new jobs were created in this country, because of the policies put forward by this Conservative Government that point to the economic reliability of this Government's policies.

Mr. Speaker, the people in 1988, had to decide, and as I said during my election campaign—the major thing in the 1988 campaign is the credibility issue. Whom are you going to believe? And of course, Mr. Speaker, I was referring to the liberal party's history or record in Quebec, which explained why people did not believe them. My Liberal opponent, among others, travelled around . . . I may not name her, and please note that I prefer it this way. She drove around the constituency aboard a large van, with slogans to the effect we were selling out the country to the Americans. There were loudspeakers chanting: I love my country, I love it. How beautiful that was. American flags, the unemployment rate, the American minimum wage. That was awful. I told the people that the big van they saw is just like the Liberal Party. The Liberal Party's program is a big empty box. And they lost seats with the big empty box, Mr. Speaker, because people remembered that, Mr. Speaker.

I am not sure whether you remember the early 1970s when the Conservative Party was led by a man named Stanfield. He was not good-looking, he did not come across well on television, he spoke badly, he spoke French badly and furthermore, he was a little "wacky" because he suggested voluntary wage and price controls—5 and 6 per cent. It was awful, Mr. Speaker! It was terrible! They beat him, the man who was not good-looking, and the Liberal Party implemented his unpopular measure not long after. I reminded people how this reflected on the Liberal Party's credibility. Mr. Clark led that Government for eight months in 1979-80, Mr. Speaker. He was beaten on the price of gasoline, the 18-cent tax proposed by the Minister of Finance at the time. It was disgusting because the Liberals wanted a 14-cent tax then, and a year later, they had increased it by 54 cents.

We have started to consider free trade; we did not just start yesterday. People were saying, "It's awful. They'll tear up that Agreement." But during the election campaign, the Leader of the Opposition backtracked. Perhaps it was due to his sciatica, but he said, "Well, we won't tear it up; we'll negotiate something else." And when I saw them bring out the subject of old age pensions, that is where they put their foot in it, because people stopped believing them anymore—they remembered something. True, the present Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) did urge the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) to lower indexation, but he did not do so because it would not have worked out. The last Minister of Finance who did that was the man who is now Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), at the time he was Minister of Finance.

That is something the people remembered. It was just like a big empty box, and they did not have any alternative measure to suggest. It was a matter of credibility. Who to believe? The Liberal Party has just shown that it has lost most of its support in Quebec. What happened in 1984, and in 1988, will happen again in 1992, and 1993, because people now understand that they cannot have faith in this Party which has no policy at all. So what do you have to offer? When did we first hear about free trade? Under the previous Government, in 1982, through a royal commission of inquiry on prospects for Canada.

It was not strictly a politicians' program, for it cost $21 or $22 million. People stopped to think, Mr. Speaker. They said: Our trade and our markets are south of the border. The world is getting organized, Europe is organizing, they are talking about the Europe of 1992, about the deal between Australia, New Zealand and Southeast Asia. Here we are in Canada, 25 million producers, and apparently we cannot agree with our consumers? We export 30 per cent of our gross national product and we have no confidence in ourselves? Well, now, if we export 30 per cent it is because we produce quality goods at competitive prices, our neighbours to the south buy them. Some 85 per cent of our products are shipped south. Why should we be unable to sit down with them and sign an agreement? Well, Mr. Speaker, here again it is a matter of credibility.

Extension of Sittings

How was this country built? If you read Berton's history of Canada, he says Canada was built on two railroads. He has a point there! I come from the constituency of Beauharnois—Salaberry, right south of Montreal. Beauharnois—Salaberry is the former Beauharnois Seigniory. Troubles had started in 1837 between Lower and Upper Canada, and in came at some point a bloke from Britain named Lord Durham who said let us make the Union in 1841.

Of course, when you set up a new political structure you have to feed it with major projects. I see my colleague from Ville d'Anjou, the former mayor of Ville d'Anjou. I was mayor of Beauharnois. My colleague here behind me also was a mayor, and we also have the former mayor from Laval... with projects that put people to work, everything is fine.

So they decided back in 1841, to build the Beauharnois Canal, the one which went through the land of Lord Durham's brother-in-law's, but we'll talk about this detail another time. And they built that grand canal that was to unite Lower and Upper Canada. After that, the bets were laid on the Canadian Confederation, because it was only a matter of transportation! Look at the map of Canada. We have a huge country, ten provinces, extending from East to West, and it was said that Canada would be built on a difficult challenge, East-West trade. This is something. Figure out how much it costs to take this piece of paper and move it from Montreal to Vancouver, when we have neighbours down South who can buy it.

So we have been building ever since our trade from East to West, with the Canadian National and Canadian Pacific. Our grandparents paid dearly for those railroads. But there was a hitch—we still had to go down South. And the broker who goes down South does not live in Beauharnois nor Montreal but in Toronto.

Well, Mr. Speaker, the Free Trade Agreement will make many as well off as Toronto. Why did we get eight out of ten premiers on our side? We will leave the Premier of Prince Edward Island on his island. Why does Ontario not agree? It is like a Cherry Blossom—it cannot be shared. They do not want to share economic growth, Mr. Speaker. There will be north-south cleavages, in Saskatchewan, Manitoba and British Columbia. People are worried—that is quite normal. But there will be north-south gaps and Torontos. That is what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) wanted to show Canadians and that is why, Mr. Speaker, we have eight out of ten Premiers with us. They are not crazy. Eight out of ten are with us and even in Ontario, people were saying that Ontario—the people there are on our side. Look at the popular vote we got in Ontario. We got more than forty seats.

Mr. Speaker, not everyone is against free trade. It is quite normal and healthy that people are worried about change. But, Mr. Speaker, we are here to build the future, to build something for our children. What sort of country will we build, Mr. Speaker, if absolutely the only thing we invent, that the Liberals invented in 22 years in power, is a Canada Works project? That is what they came up with. They built their world around Canada Works. This program was cut. I too find it a shame that it was cut. But basically, when unemployment goes down, Mr. Speaker, the Government must make way for the private sector.

Now the history of our country, Mr. Speaker, shows that it was built on the future, and the facts show today that a country which manages to export 30 per cent of its Gross National Product... Never forget that Japan is supposed to be about the finest example of an exporting or trading nation in the world. It does not export more than 10 per cent of its GNP. We export 30 per cent. From 80 to 85 per cent of these exports go to our friends to the south. That represents $170 billion crossing the border every year. My father had confidence in the future and he built this country on two things: a quality product and the ability to produce it at a better price. That is why we export. And suddenly, we are not supposed to try to reach an agreement to take on the trading blocs that are organizing throughout the world. That is what will save us. If we can agree with... People lecture us. Our neighbours across the floor say that they are for free trade, but with all countries. Well, my God! If we are for free trade with all countries, let us start with our neighbour and then we will set an example for everyone. We know people, psychologists, who agree that a man and a woman get along but cannot work it out at home. I am not singling anyone out. Let us get along then with our southern neighbour.

That is what we wanted to do, Mr. Speaker. We will build a better economic world order. I am not at all worried about the lesson in democracy. The people spoke on November 21. At one o'clock this morning, we will vote on a closure motion. We will take power tonight. Next week, we will talk about free trade and be done with it and pass it before New Year's Day.

● (1530)

[English]

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I was interested in the words of the Hon. Member for Beauharnois—Salaberry (Mr. Hudon), who said the people spoke on November 21 last. And indeed he is correct. In fact, 57 per cent of the people spoke against the present Government of Canada on November 21 last.

While today we have a government that has the legal right to pass the implementing legislation in respect of the Free Trade Agreement, it has very little moral right to do so. In any event, no government has the right to suspend the rules of the House of Commons so as to impose legislation unilaterally without proper debate, without proper investigation, without study by the appropriate committee of this House. It is only through the full parliamentary process that we can ensure that the legislation in question does not destroy certain sectors of the Canadian economy, as we on this side believe it will.

And so today we have a continuation of what the Government's game plan was when it launched into its activity to integrate the economies of Canada and the United States through the Free Trade Agreement.

If one reads the communications plan of the Government, it is evident that its intention was to conduct the whole process in secret. The premiers were sworn to secrecy, with the result that they had no opportunity to talk. And while some of them have since commented on the free trade deal, it is not many.

As well, if one visited the office of the Trade Commissioner, one was sworn to secrecy. If one participated in one of the special advisory groups on international trade, the SAGITS, one was sworn to secrecy. Again, while some of those individuals have since commented on the deal, most have not.

This whole scheme has been entered into on the basis of secrecy. And that is not surprising given that the communications plan of the Government of Canada said: "Look, our proposition is so controversial and will find such little acceptance on the part of the people of Canada, our approach must be to tell the people as little as possible. We will try to sell the deal, but we will not try to explain it."

If one reads the little blue book that was sent out, a book that was produced at a cost of millions of dollars, one can readily see that the whole approach was to sell the deal.

In my 20 years as Member of this place, this is the first time I have seen a document that is designed more in terms of selling the legislation than its substantive value. Normally one would expect the details of the agreement to be spelled out. Instead, we have all of this advertising and editorial comment, all designed to sell the agreement.

That is the approach of the Government in respect of the Free Trade Agreement, and we are now at the point where this Government is going to shove it down the throats of the Canadian electorate. Over the course of next week, the Government will probably invoke closure three times.

Just imagine, here we have the most important trade document in the history of our country, and we will have debate on the motion for the second reading of the Bill closed off after one day's debate. We have now in this place something of the order of 75 new Members of Parliament who campaigned against the agreement and who were elected to represent their respective constituencies, and most will be deprived of the opportunity to speak on the motion for the second reading of the Bill.

As well, closure will be invoked during report stage. The motion that is before us today is designed to ensure that Bill C-2 does not go to a committee separate and apart from the House, with the result that those workers who are already losing their jobs as a result of the Free Trade Agreement will be deprived of the opportunity of coming before a legislative committee of their Parliament to voice their views.

And finally, a week or so from now, we will have closure invoked for a third time, with Bill C-2 then receiving third reading and being referred to the Senate for consideration.

It has been 105 years since we have seen the rules of this House so badly skewed, changed, altered, so as to ram a piece of legislation through in less than a week—and all of this in the context of an election in which 57 per cent of the people voted against the deal.

I believe that all Members of Parliament should have the opportunity to participate in the debate on the free trade legislation and to vote against it, as I expect some 125 Members will do. More important, they should have the opportunity to move amendments to it.

Extension of Sittings

If Government Members are prepared to destroy sectors of the Canadian economy—the textile sector, the electrical sector, the footwear sector, and many parts of the food processing industry, where we estimate that over 100,000 could lose their jobs—surely they should be prepared to stand in their place and vote against amendments which would preserve those sectors of the Canadian economy intact, thus giving those affected by this deal the opportunity of knowing precisely who voted against the preservation of those industries in our country.

Under the process proposed, it is questionable that the amendments that would normally be moved by those on this side of the House will ever see the light of day, let alone be passionately debated by those on this side of the House.

As has already been pointed out, 57 per cent of the electorate voted against this deal. Those people believe that Canada should maintain more of a sovereign position in terms of our trade relations. They believe that we should not integrate the North American economy into one economy. They believe that Canada should maintain its independence, while working toward the lowering of trade barriers over-all. And past Liberal governments in this country lowered average tariffs by some 40 per cent, taking them from 45 per cent to somewhere around 5 per cent. But we do not wish to turn over to the United States the fate of vast sectors of our economy.

Clearly, there are important amendments in the agricultural sector relating to supply management, relating to the dairy industry, the poultry industry, as well as to the operation of the Canadian Wheat Board, and to the fruit and vegetable industry. These are all sectors which will be not only adversely affected but practically wiped out as a result of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

It is not something that will happen on January 1 next. However, over the course of the life of this deal, and certainly over the next four or five years and beyond, there will be extremely adverse impacts on those sectors of the Canadian economy.

Perhaps no action by the Government in the last two years represents more of a microcosm of what is going to happen as a result of the Free Trade Agreement than the agreement that was signed two years ago on December 30 next, that being the Memorandum of Understanding on Softwood Lumber. If we examine what has happened in respect of that softwood lumber deal, I believe we can come to understand what will happen in many sectors of the economy as a result of the entering into of this Free Trade Agreement.

The Government of Canada entered into the Memorandum of Understanding on Softwood Lumber because it was threatened with a countervail action by the U.S. softwood lumber industry, an industry which had already been turned down in respect of a similar application heard in 1982.

The application in question was before the International Trade Commission in Washington, and that commission was about to come down with a decision. But that decision could have been appealed to the International Trade Court in New York, where Canada would probably have come out the victor—not because the federal Government was doing anything but because of the efforts of the forestry industry.

Two weeks before the decision was taken to enter into the Memorandum of Understanding on Softwood Lumber, through the usual obsequious approach, the weak-kneed approach of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), the application we had before the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade for the establishment of a panel of that body to challenge the petition brought before the U.S. International Trade Commission was pulled. Why did we pull out? Because the Prime Minister was more concerned about making a deal on free trade than he was about protecting the forest products industry. We probably would have won either at the GATT or the International Trade Court, but the Government pulled out. It withdrew the application before GATT because of the Prime Minister's usual obsequious approach to the President of the United States. He was not willing to slug it out for the Canadian forest products industry, so we have the deal and a 15 per cent export tax.

The industry was in a very strong position back then, but in the last two years what has happened? As in all things which are very strong, the market for softwood lumber eventually deteriorated. Prices dropped dramatically during the last couple of years. On top of that, the value of the Canadian dollar has risen from about 71 cents to about 83 cents U.S., almost 15 per cent, during that period of time. With falling prices the Canadian softwood industry is practically on its knees because its position today is worse by about 30 per cent. I do not know many industries in this country with a profit of 30 per cent, especially in the face of falling market prices. As a result, the G. W. Martin Company in Sault Ste. Marie, for example, has seen its position deteriorate by almost $1 million because of the exchange rate and $750,000 because of the export tax. I believe that many sawmill operators in northern Ontario, especially if they are selling into the U.S. market, are going to face drastic shut-downs and lay-offs this winter.

What is the solution? Five Members of the northern Ontario Liberal caucus met with the provincial Government, whose position is sharply circumscribed. It cannot reduce the stumpage charge. If it does, that would invite further retaliation by the U.S. It would violate the deal. The $30 million which has been collected through the export tax by the federal Government and turned over to the provincial Government cannot be channelled towards assisting the sawmill operators who are going out of business and facing shut-downs this winter. It is spelled out very clearly in the deal that you cannot do that.

As is provided for in the Memorandum of Understanding, to transfer the export tax, which is costing our producers in northern Ontario about $30 million a year, to a stumpage charge, it would have to be applied to all stumpage, whether it is lumber for export or for the domestic market. The export tax, which is now costing us $30 million in northern Ontario, would become $80 million if it was transferred to a stumpage charge.

They did something like that in British Columbia. They have a much larger industry there and it is in a terrible situation, even worse than in northern Ontario. So Ontario has practically no room to move. If it tries to reduce costs for the industry, that breaks the deal. It could invite further retaliatory action by the U.S. If it did as was proposed earlier in the agreement, transfer the export tax to a stumpage charge, the province would have to go to Washington to get permission. From then on our books are constantly monitored, audited and investigated every year.

I guess that is what frightens us. You begin to wonder who is running who. Here is the Government of Canada imposing an export tax on an industry which is primarily under provincial jurisdiction, and if they want to make any changes in their stumpage fees, forest management agreements, roads, any change whatsoever, they have to go to Washington to get permission. It seems to me we end up practically losing our sovereignty over this industry because any change we want to make to try to keep it open this winter is going to invite action by the U.S.

Normally in these situations, if you have a dispute, you can go to GATT. Within two weeks of a petition by the U.S. industry demanding a countervailing or dumping duty, the Government of Canada can ask for a decision by GATT. We cannot do that any more. Oh, the Tories will tell you, sure, in the Free Trade Agreement it is all under GATT and you can go to GATT if you have a dispute with the U.S. However, I ask any Tory over there to stand up and tell me when since 1949 has GATT ever agreed to hear a dispute between two countries with a Free Trade Agreement? It never has and never will.

The only salvation in all of this is to go and negotiate somehow to get out of the deal with the U.S. In any event, it is symptomatic of this agreement that we are totally locked in to the United States. We lose our rights under GATT. We lose our sovereignty to operate as a free and independent nation. Therefore, we will be putting forward an amendment to this deal, if we ever get to the actual Bill itself, with regard to the export tax. It is just a disastrous situation because we do not believe that the U.S. is going to back off on its export tax. We are going to see shut-downs and lay-offs this winter. We cannot go to GATT.

Clearly the Government should not have enshrined it into the free trade deal. It should be trying to get out of it. It should be trying to avoid this export tax on softwood lumber. It is a disaster for our workers in northern Ontario and I believe a microcosm of the whole Free Trade Agreement with the U.S. which I do not believe is going to create jobs. It is going to take away our sovereignty, cost hundreds of thousands of jobs, and remove our right as a free and independent nation to try and develop independently. We will not be able to maintain and develop our export potential, not only with the United States but with countries around the world, or develop our full resources, both human and natural, and that is why in my constituency the voters voted three to one against the Tory candidate. They do not think this is a good deal for Canada either.

Mr. Sergio Marchi (York West): Mr. Speaker, I take great pleasure in rising in this House, for in my case this is my second Parliament. This is also a special occasion to take the floor of the House to debate a major piece of legislation which is of utmost importance to all Canadians and to all regions of this country, and I am referring of course to the Mulroney-Reagan Free Trade Agreement. It is a question which raised a lot of interest during the election campaign. Mr. Speaker, it is a question which led our Party and our leader to force all Canadians to look at their families and at their country and ask themselves what the future has in store for this nation. Our leader and our Party raised the issue, in keeping with tradition and Canadian history as was the case with respect to the flag debate, the debate on the national anthem, the debate on the Canadian Constitution.

As I see it, history will show that our Party led the debate and, as far as we are concerned—including our leader, my colleague in the House of Commons—this debate is not over yet. We think this is just the beginning of the debate and, like the millions of Canadians who supported and voted for our Party, we think we will be on the right side of history.

[English]

The frustration that we are feeling on this side of the Chamber, and the frustration that Canadians are feeling as they watch this debate on the parliamentary channel, is with the inability to debate what Canadians had expected us as parliamentarians on all sides of the House to debate. In fact, we are debating a desire on the part of the Government, on the part of a majority which has the mechanisms at its disposal, a Government willing, wanting and demanding to change the rules, change the constitution governing our place for its own political satisfaction. We are not prepared simply to roll over and play dead.

Yes, we want to debate the question of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. But we are also not willing to step aside and allow the forum of debate for the country to be held at ransom. After all, this is not a Chamber for the Conservative Party to play fast and loose with the rules. This Chamber, Your Honour, is a Chamber for Canadians. It is the vessel of democracy.

Members of Parliament will come and go. In a few years perhaps there will be another Member standing in my place, as is the inevitable future for all of us. But while Members come and go, the House of Commons and the democratic system that we fought for, and for which our forefathers died, will remain. That is what is at the core of this debate.

I ask myself, as my colleagues have been asking themselves for almost a week, why does the Government want to change the rules? What is the Government afraid of? It has an absolute majority. In the end it will rule the day. In the end it will win the vote. I served four years in the previous Parliament. One of the greatest frustrations during that time was losing every vote. I accepted that because it was democratic. While we on the Liberal side may have lost the votes, we believe that in many of those debates we did not lose the intellectual capacity to win the hearts and minds of those who were concerned with a particular debate.

Therefore we are asking the Government what it is afraid of, what it fears from having a proper debate that would put before Canadians the issues, the challenges, the questions, the concerns and the fears about which many average Canadians on the streets of our country are asking themselves and their Members of Parliament. Yes, the Conservatives have won a majority Government. But we ought also begin to realize that this forum is not only to ram through a piece of legislation to abdicate the rules but that this House, after all, is the forum for debate. This is the forum in which various political views clash, and clash in peace, not clash in arms, in bloodshed the way we see on our television sets and read about in our newspapers. That is this forum. Through that exchange, through that give and take, through that exchange and sharing of views, we can reform, we can change. We can avoid the pitfalls that this deal has for many Canadians.

Which Party and which side is upholding not only democracy at its very fundamental levels, but which side of the House really wants to debate the issue for and with Canadians? That side wants the House to continue into the midnight hours. How many Canadians will be afforded an opportunity to sit at their television sets at midnight or at one in the morning? Most of the Canadians that I have the great honour and privilege to represent in York West have to get up between 5.30 and 6 a.m. in the morning to put food on their tables.

I can tell you one thing, Mr. Speaker. They will not be sitting up at one o'clock in the morning, as exciting as many speakers are to watch in this Chamber, to watch the parliamentary channel, with all due respect.

This Government also wants to have the Committee of the Whole look at the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. Why the Committee of the Whole? You know and I know, Mr. Speaker, that we—295 Members—are indeed privileged to be able to participate on the floor of the House of Commons. The Canadians who are watching and observing in the galleries can only do that—observe, watch, be spectators as if somehow we were only debating something that is real, alive and important just for this very select club. I beg to differ. My Leader begs to differ. We on the Liberal side, the Official Opposition, beg to differ.

This Parliament is the Parliament of 25 million shareholders. We happen to be the board of directors for four years. But the board of directors takes the charge from the shareholders. That is why we should have a committee study this so that Canadians can also come in front of that committee to express their views. In that way Canadians can tell Members of Parliament: Look, I have a stake in this country, too. This is my future as well.

Let me share with you my dream and my vision for change because I watch you guys every night and many of you are caring Canadians. But I, too, have a vision of things to come. Canadians are being displaced already by a trade deal that is not even in legislation, not even ratified. We are seeing the ravages of it already. Why can we not hear from those Canadians who have lost their jobs and their livelihoods, those Canadians whose futures have been threatened? Why can we not hear from them as well? Who are they after all?

We are asking Canadians to take note, to take a look at the real debate, because not one Liberal Member of Parliament has risen in this House and irresponsibly said to the Government: "You will not get this deal. We will not be going home. The Senate will block the deal". Have you heard one Liberal Member of Parliament say that, Mr. Speaker? Not at all. What we have been saying is, yes, the Conservative Party of Canada has won the first round and it happens to be the election of 1988, but that does not give licence to this Government to run roughshod over the traditions of this House and over the concerns that people have on the question of the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal.

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I hate to interrupt the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi), but he keeps referring to the Mulroney-Reagan trade deal. He should obey his own rule. He was up on his feet about an hour ago telling the Hon. Member for Beauharnois-Salaberry (Mr. Hudon) not to refer to a Member of this House by his or her last name. If you are referring to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), say the Prime Minister of Canada or the Hon. Member for Charlevoix, otherwise it is the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Speaker.

Ms. Mitchell: Mr. Speaker, I just wonder at the same time if you would mind reminding the Hon. Member who just spoke that one does not in this House use a pronoun such as "you".

Mr. Scott (Hamilton—Wentworth): You are right.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All three Members are senior Members here in the Chamber. Please speak accordingly.

Mr. Marchi: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I should have referred to the Prime Minister as——the little guy from Baie-Comeau, with his big American uncle.

[English]

I think it is pertinent that we also take the view with respect to the debate that we are trying to be forward looking. We are trying to suggest to Canadians and to this Government that eventually when it gets this trade deal through both Houses of this Parliament, the concerns should not stop there. The raison d'être of this session of Parliament does not end there. We have been trying in our negotiations to establish some parliamentary forum, a parliamentary committee of sorts, to monitor the future course of this country under this historic trade deal.

We have been trying to encourage the Government to act upon its rhetoric when it says: "We will retrain those who need training because of fall-out from this trade agreement". The Government says we will find new job opportunities for those who are displaced. Those are fine words, but we have the evidence of plant shut-downs, of people marching on the streets, of picketing. They are saying they have lost their jobs, but they have been met only by individual members of a Government which is led by this Prime Minister who simply does not have the time of day for those people, despite the fine speeches. It is this Party, as it was this Party during the election campaign, which will focus and lead the charge in standing up for Canada, not in the aspect of necessarily being anti-American, nor in the sense of being anti-trade, whether it be with the United States of America or with the international community, but by having a trade strategy for our country that in the end works best for our country, which is number one.

When I look at this trade deal, irrespective of political affiliation, I am saddened as a Canadian that we have allowed the United States to get us into a deal that looks to me very much like a one-way street.

In terms of our energy resources, as precious as those resources are, we will now be treating the United States of America as if it were Canadian. We cannot sell oil to the United States at a higher price than we can sell it to Nova Scotia or to another province. To me that belittles and undermines the very sovereign fact of any nation. Show me any nation on the face of this globe that sells its energy resources, its bank account, at a lower or the same domestic price, and you will be showing me a precedent in world history. Yet we have allowed ourselves to enter that kind of agreement.

There is a great deal of concern in this country with respect to financial institutions because once again we are going down a one-way street. The American business interests can come into this country and buy our banks and our trust companies, but because American banks and trust companies are controlled state by state, we cannot do that.

If one wants to get into an exchange and allow a country to buy into another's financial institutions, fine. I happen to disagree, but if that is the raison d'être, fine. But to allow one side to do it and not the other, when talking about financial institutions, what kind of leadership does that suggest? What kind of leadership does it suggest to the country? How can we engender a sense of confidence and maturity and national building with this kind of deal?

Yesterday our Leader, in a very moving, passionate and articulate statement of fact, set the individual substance for this debate in the proper perspective, that is, that we have the firm belief, not of arrogance but a deep moving, gut feeling, that we are on the right side of history. We feel that the majority of Canadians, as witnessed by the popular vote, share that feeling. As we begin to see people displaced in the factories and plants in our own backyard, that feeling will swell. It will not provide any pleasure for us to say: "We told you so". It will cause a certain anguish that the Government did not hear the calls and concerns.

We are looking forward to entering into the debate on substance. We are looking forward to monitoring the trade deal. We have every confidence that Canadians will join in our struggle, and our movement, and will stand up for the country that we not only have built and love, but a country we wish to pass on to future generations.

This forum is important. It is for that reason we are not going to let go of a debate that wishes to do away with the rules and our democratic right to speak our mind as an elected representative. We will not allow that flame to die easily.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate today on the hijacking of Parliament by the Conservative Government. It is regrettable that we have to participate in this debate today, but I look forward to further discussions as we talk about the trade legislation that this Government has brought forward.

At the outset, I would like to congratulate the Speaker on his election to the chair.

However, it is regrettable that in our enthusiasm last week over his election we are now dealing with the situation of a ham-fisted Government. I also want to pay credit to my leader who spoke last night about the concerns we have over this current trade legislation. He raised our concerns over the softwood lumber tariff, shakes and shingles, which are critical to my riding of Prince George—Bulkley Valley in my Province of British Columbia. He also spoke of the concerns we have over the environment and social programs and, frankly, our view of this country.

We are talking today about a procedural motion. We are talking about the abandonment of the Standing Orders of this House. These are the rules that govern this House and give us our guidance in our proceedings when we consider legislation, motions and other issues.

Now the Tory Government has hijacked the rules of Parliament. We are used to that under the Tories. In fact, I took the opportunity before our debate today to do a little research. Let us see just where the Tories stand in history. The Collins Dictionary states that Conservatives were outlaws who preyed upon English settlers. The Encyclopaedia of Parliament says about the Conservatives: "The word originally applied to Irish bandits". The Conservatives are preying upon Parliament and the Members opposite are bandits who have stolen the rules of Parliament.

What will they do next? The Members opposite are certainly repeat offenders and should be placed on probation, like the notion we are giving them now.

Extension of Sittings

I campaigned in my riding of Prince George—Bulkley Valley on fairness, fairness for the people of Prince George—Bulkley Valley, because we did not have that under the Conservative administration. We had 23 years of combined representation in the City of Prince George and we have seen nothing under the Conservatives.

We want to change that. We do not ask for everything. Most definitely we ask for an opportunity to have our say and our input. Many Members who represent rural ridings like I do had to deal with some of the programs that the Government brought forward and its bungling on issues like the northern tax allowance that affected my constituents in communities like McBride, Burns Lake and Houston. The only thing we asked for was an opportunity to have our say. We did not have that under the Conservatives and now, because with their hijacking of the rules, they are limiting that even further.

Through us, Canadians and the people of my riding have an opportunity to have that say in legislation and on motions before the House. However, as the Government rams this legislation through the House, we are not having that say. If we do not have that say, neither do our constituents.

As we begin to discuss this legislation next week, it is critical that we are given the opportunity to present our amendments and debate fully the legislation. January 1 is not engraved in stone. It is not a date by which we have to pass any legislation. As my colleague, the Member from Victoria stated earlier, it was the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who set the date for this election, in full knowledge of what kind of timetable he would have.

It is our responsibility as Members from all Parties and all sides of the House to express the concerns that we have over this legislation. I call upon Members opposite to abandon their ways and return the House to its normal practice of reasonable and thoughtful debate.

As an outside observer of this House and its rules for some time, I think it is a pity that it is now rare that we have an opportunity to see full debate. It is an honour that Stanley Knowles is with us in the House from time to time to give guidance about what we must debate. The most important reason why we are here, regardless of where we are from and what we stand for, is to provide input to this House and represent the views of our constituents.

I look forward to next week when we debate the substance of the trade legislation, when we show Members opposite and the Government that we are serious about representing the concerns of our constituents, the people of British Columbia and, in my case, the people of Prince George—Bulkley Valley.

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you for the privilege of addressing this House. As this is the first time I have spoken in the House, I want to thank the voters of my riding who sent me here.

My riding of Halton—Peel is one of the newly created ridings under redistribution and encompasses a number of communities. They include Bolton, Burlington, Georgetown and Acton. My riding is rural and urban. I believe that its make-up is a reflection of the complexion of Canada as a whole. Such a riding will benefit under free trade very strongly.

I believe this was indicated by the fact that the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) chose my riding to kick off his national campaign. He was able to tour a plant in Georgetown that will benefit substantially from free trade and will likely see the creation of many new jobs under the provisions of the Free Trade Agreement.

During the course of the campaign in our riding we took pains to make sure we adequately surveyed manufacturers and retailers in the community. We surveyed all the Chamber of Commerce manufacturing members and different chambers throughout the riding about what free trade will do for them. We asked if they were afraid of it, whether they looked forward to it, and what their business plans would be as a result. Well over 70 per cent of the respondents, not large corporations but small and medium sized businesses from 12 employees to 300, said yes to free trade. They said there is no question that they will benefit from free trade and will likely add employment as a result.

I want to thank the Prime Minister. I want to thank the Government of Canada for its vision. I want to thank them for looking to the future, not to the past or the status quo.

As a new Member I have been somewhat surprised over the last four days at what I have seen and heard in the House. For example, a little while ago we heard the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Axworthy) make some interesting comments. He repeated a statement in the House that he had noted on Canada A.M. yesterday. He said: "Unfortunately, an election is just an exercise in raw numbers". How can he believe that? An election is an exercise in democracy. An election is the people speaking. An election is the highest authority that we can have. When the people speak they ask us to come here and serve them. The people have done that. They have spoken and we are now their servants here in the House.

The Hon. Member also said that a lot of Conservative candidates during the election faced a barrage of questions about free trade. Of course we faced questions. We certainly faced them after the leaders of the opposition Parties ran around the country making totally irresponsible statements about the contents, influence and outcome of the Free Trade Agreement.

Because of fearmongering we were answering questions, yes. Because of scare tactics we were answering questions. We were answering them about medicare. We were assuring Canadians that there was no threat to medicare. We were talking about old age pensions. We were reassuring people who had been needlessly frightened that old age pensions would not be cut. We were answering that social programs will not be touched in this country. We were talking about the environment and how free trade does not in any way threaten our ability as a country and a society to protect our environment.

We were talking about and answering questions about energy. We were saying that in no way does the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement jeopardize our adequate and secure access to energy. We were talking about cultural protection. We were even answering questions about our water. Some of the most insane things that were said about free trade were said about our water, about the fact we had to sell it out.

I have also heard in the House today that the Conservatives kept the trade deal under wraps, that they refused to tell the Canadian people what was in it. Nothing could be further from the truth. This House saw the Free Trade Agreement debated for 15 months. We had a debate that was fully open at all times to all Canadians to participate in.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the Government of Canada, any government, is elected to negotiate complex treaties, complex deals, on behalf of Canadians. That was done in this instance. I think that the Free Trade Agreement is just as complex and just as important as, for example, the Auto Pact was, and few Canadians read the Auto Pact, few Canadians have expressed a desire to know exactly how the Auto Pact works, but it benefits Canada. It is exactly the same principle.

The Government was elected to negotiate on behalf of the people. That is the mandate. We have not hidden the Free Trade Agreement under wraps for one minute. I can speak from my own experience throughout the election campaign in the new riding of Halton—Peel where we requested from the other candidates and received a series of debates exclusively on free trade, taking place in different parts of the riding.

We did a survey of manufacturers, as I mentioned, and got very encouraging results. We undertook a canvass of all voters. We offered them consultation at every step of the way on any questions regarding free trade. We established toll-free phone numbers, a free trade hot-line that any citizen could call to talk to me directly for information.

I took the time to read and understand the agreement in its entirety, and when I did, to produce a document of my own, a guide to free trade in every-day language that citizens could use, read and understand. I know many other Hon. Members did similar things in their own ridings during the election campaign.

We also brought in cabinet Ministers to be fully accountable, from the Prime Minister on down, cabinet Ministers who explained what free trade meant and who helped people to understand. At no time was there anything to hide in this agreement, nor did we attempt to hide anything at any time.

The election campaign was won on one simple principle; that is, tell the people the truth, and when you have told them the truth, they will support you. It was not easy, but we did it because once Canadians understood free trade, they knew what they were voting for and they voted decisively, returning the Government with an overwhelming majority. So the people have elected a Government to implement free trade. That was the purpose of the election.

As a new Member of Parliament, I have been surprised by some of the things I have seen in this Chamber. I have been surprised by some of the things I have heard during Question Period. I have been surprised by opposition Members who believe the election campaign is still on. Well, they are wrong. They are wrong to blame every corporate layoff or rationalization for the next number of years on free trade without giving equal credit to the fact that the economy now is a tremendously strong engine of growth. Last month alone 66,000 jobs were created in Canada. That is 2,000 jobs a day, an awfully impressive record of achievement. The economy did that, not free trade.

Free trade has not cost us a job. It likely has not created a job so far, but the powerhouse of the economy the Government has created over the past four years has done that, with unemployment down, inflation down, the value of the dollar up and housing starts strong. Free trade is the way to continue that.

As I said, it is not the past we have to look to, it is not the status quo, but it is the future. Free trade is the future. It is the way to build upon the achievements of the past. It is the way to avoid the next recession. Free trade is the way to counter a global move toward trading blocs around the world. Free trade is the way to gain access to the world's largest, richest and most important market. Free trade is the way, for the first time in 140 years of our history of trading with the Americans, to have a dispute settlement mechanism. We have never had that. We have never had a way to take the Americans and their bad trade laws to court. Now, for the first time, we have a mechanism to protect Canadians.

We now have some protection against American protectionism. If the Free Trade Agreement did nothing more than that, it would be a tremendous success. But free trade is not everything. We are also looking toward GATT, and as the conference in Montreal showed last week, we are intimately involved in that phase of negotiations for world trade as well.

The motion we are debating is intended to expand the debate on free trade and to give us all an opportunity to get on the record. Free trade will pass. You know it and I know it, Mr. Speaker. No matter what is said about it in this Chamber, free trade will pass. That is because Canadians want it to pass and Canadians have decided.

I would like to say in conclusion that I think the silliness of this debate should end. I think we should get on with it. I think we should do what the people have asked us to come here to do, to stop being partisan, to start being constructive and to remember, all of us, that our first loyalty is always to the people who elected us. So let us get on with it. Let us do what the people told us to do.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Nelson A. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to bring to your attention what I consider to be a problem with the motion as it is before us. I would like to draw your attention to paragraph five of the motion which reads as follows:

Extension of Sittings

"That, for the duration of this session or until otherwise ordered, the provisions of Standing Order 73(1) and (2) respecting committee stage of Public Bills be suspended, and all such Bills be ordered for referral to the committee of the Whole;—"

Obviously what the Government is attempting to do here is to eliminate the requirement for a legislative committee so that the Bill can go directly to Committee of the Whole. We all understand that.

Standing Order 73(1) states:

"Every public bill shall be read twice and referred to a committee before any amendment may be made thereto."

Standing Order 73(2) states:

"Unless otherwise ordered, in giving a bill second reading, the same shall be referred to a legislative committee, except as provided in section (3) of this Standing Order. A motion to refer a bill to a committee shall be decided without amendment or debate."

In order to achieve its objective of eliminating the legislative committee stage of the trade Bill, the Government obviously had to include a provision for suspending Standing Order 73(2). However, in suspending Standing Order 73(1), the Government House Leader has, I would contend, unwittingly opened a Pandora's box. Let me briefly review once again the provisions of Standing Order 73(1) as it now stands. It states:

"Every public bill shall be read twice and referred to a committee before any amendment may be made thereto."

The purpose of this Standing Order, as I read it, is to prohibit the possibility of amendment to the substance of a Bill at second reading. The Standing Order states that the Bill must have second reading and be referred to a committee before any amendment may be made to it. This is explicit in the text of the Standing Order. Yet the motion that we are now debating, standing in the name of the Deputy Government House Leader, suspends this provision and the amendment to the motion offered this morning by the Government Whip makes no change whatsoever to this part of the text.

If this motion passes, I suggest that what the Government will have done will be to have opened up the possibility of amending the substance of the free trade Bill at second reading. If Standing Order 73(1) is suspended, what is to prevent any Member of the House from proposing a motion to make a change to Clauses 1, 2, 3, 25 or whatever? What normally prevents this from happening is the existence of a specific Standing Order preventing such motions, such as Standing Order 73(1). As I have said, if this motion passes and Standing Order 73(1) is suspended, there is nothing preventing such motions from being brought forward.

Extension of Sittings

● (1630)

In closing, I would like to refer to Beauchesne's Fifth Edition, Citation 734 which states:

"The second reading is the most important stage through which the bill is required to pass; for its whole principle is then at issue and is affirmed or denied by a vote of the House. It is not regular on this occasion, however, to discuss in detail the clauses of the bill."

Also, at page 509 of Bourinot's Parliamentary Procedure, a respected procedural authority, it states the following:

"The second reading of a bill is that stage when it is proper to enter into a discussion and propose a motion relative to the principle of the measure."

What we have here is a motion which will open up to Members the possibility of amending the substance of a Bill at second reading, something which Beauchesne's states should not happen. I do not think this is what the Deputy House Leader had in mind when he brought forward this motion. I cannot understand why he would want to suspend that Standing Order because, as I stated earlier, in order to achieve what he did to his colleagues there would be no need then to suspend Standing Order 73(1). I must say that, perhaps unwittingly, the Deputy House Leader has opened up a whole set of possibilities that would allow amendments at the second reading stage far beyond the one amendment that he would like to have made.

Hon. Herb Gray (Windsor West): Mr. Speaker, the House Leader for the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent), has made an interesting argument. I am informed exactly that the same point was raised by the Deputy Whip of the Liberal Party in his excellent speech earlier today. In particular, on this matter, why should the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) not be taken to have intended what the House Leader for the NDP has just stated? It may well be that the Government House Leader unintentionally, but in a welcome spirit of generosity, rather than take away from Members of this House their rights to the extent he has been doing all along wants to balance things by giving Members something new. That is what he has done. What is wrong with that? If we are now able, through the adoption of this motion, to offer amendments that we could not offer before on second reading of the Bill to implement the trade deal, what is wrong with that?

As I was saying, I suppose it is up to the Government House Leader to say what he had in mind. Whatever he had in mind, the clear words of the government motion do permit something that is not ordinarily permitted, and if that expands the rights of this House, I repeat, something of that kind might well be very welcome in a generous spirit connected with this holiday when you contrast it with the arbitrary and jackboot approach of the Government up until now in dealing with the rights of Parliament.

I realize I said yesterday that I would not do this again, and I say this to members of my caucus that I would not be saying kind things about the efforts of the Government House Leader but I am sorry, I apologize to my colleagues in the Liberal caucus, but I find I have to do it again. Unless I am sadly mistaken, the Deputy Leader of the Government may well have done something very generous, and why should we be against that, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Just a couple of points on this, if I may, Mr. Speaker. First, I would argue that the procedural debate on the acceptability of the motion took place on Wednesday afternoon. I felt it was a good debate. Members from all sides were heard. As is the case, often one makes one's point when on your feet. The Chair heard the argument and decided that the motion was procedurally correct.

Yesterday during that point of order on whether or not the motion for Bill C-2 could properly be referred to a Committee of the Whole House rather than a legislative committee, I made the reference to anticipatory arguments. I could have gone on to defend my argument as not being hypothetical because this motion was moved and the Bill had been read a first time. Both were before the House. I suggest to my friend that if he has a point of order, it has to be a point of order. He seems to be seeking direction from the Chair.

I have always understood that hypothetical questions and points of order are not in order. It may very well be that when we reach the second reading stage of this debate again on Monday that my hon. friend may put an amendment at second reading. I think that is the point at which the Chair should rule on whether or not my hon. friend has a point of order, at that point when the action is taken, not here in the context of this debate whether the substance of the motion should pass.

I say to my hon. friend he has an interesting point. I think it is premature and I think it is hypothetical. I submit to the Chair that it should be ruled out of order if that is the case or just perhaps taken as comment by the Chair, but I do not believe that my hon. friend has a valid point of order.

Extension of Sittings

Mr. Riis: I want to say to my hon. friend, the whip for the Official Opposition, that I was absent during his presentation and, therefore, did not have the benefit of his sage observations.

I want to suggest very clearly, rising on this point of order, that I believe the motion is, in fact, out of order. The motion itself should be ruled out of order.

Mr. Lewis: It has been ruled in order.

Mr. Riis: We have made some changes, Mr. Speaker. I suspect what the Deputy House Leader (Mr. Lewis) has indicated is that as a result of his initiative, the ability to deal at second reading stage of this Bill is improper.

An Hon. Member: Enhance?

Mr. Riis: While it is enhanced procedurally, it is improper. For that reason I think this whole matter should be ruled out of order. That was the point of my intervention.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The motion has been ruled on by the Speaker and the motion is in order.

An Hon. Member: It still is.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member would like to raise it at a future time, the House will then look at it again.

Therefore, the question is as follows: Mr. Lewis, seconded by my Mr. Mazankowski moved that notwithstanding any order and practice of this House—shall I dispense?

Some Hon. Members: Dispense.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The vote is on the amendment. Mr. Hawkes, seconded by Mr. Layton, moved in amendment thereto that the motion be amended by deleting in paragraph 5 the words "all such Bills"—

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski):—and substituting the following Bill C—A point of order. The Hon. Member for Kamloops.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, are you of the impression that there are no further speakers? What are we doing at the moment?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the amendment. I was under the impression that there were no further speakers. I was putting the question on the amendment.

Mr. Riis: With all due respect, Mr. Speaker, perhaps you should give us an opportunity to see if there are further speakers.

Mr. Dick: Nobody stood.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): If the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) would like to speak, I will recognize him.

Mr. Barrett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I did think that there were no further speakers after the Hon. Member for Kamloops (Mr. Riis) got up on a point of order. I apologize. The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca has the floor.

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I was under the assumption that perhaps the Chair would take the point raised by the Hon. Member under advisement and not put the rest of this debate in jeopardy as being totally out of order. Nonetheless, since that is not the case, I will continue in the same vein of wide range of order which the Chair has so graciously allowed.

What the Member has pointed out is that the Government in its haste to ram this legislation through the House of Commons is actually building more of a mess than what can be anticipated up until this point. We have spent this time debating a motion that has been totally and inadequately prepared. Had the Government been more responsible and moved immediately to put this Bill into committee, we would have been further ahead in all instances. If anyone is to blame for wasting time in the House, and wasting the peoples' time, it is the Government in its inadequate way of handling this whole matter.

When I came to this Chamber, I was told that this was the big leagues. With the Government's handling of this matter I have discovered that it is the bush leagues. I have discovered very quickly that there is an inadequate understanding of what this whole process is. If there had been some graciousness, some maturity, and some deep concern about the feelings of people on this legislation, the Government would have immediately moved the Bill into committee and held hearings in committee in an orderly fashion.

Extension of Sittings

This raises in people's minds a very simple question: What is the hurry? What is the hurry to push legislation on the eve of Christmas, legislation that is probably the most important that this House has debated in perhaps 50 years?

Some of the most profound arguments against this type of debate were made by a great parliamentarian, the Right Hon. John Diefenbaker, who was a Leader of the Conservative Party. If John Diefenbaker were alive today, he would be up on his feet not only condemning the Government on the free trade legislation, but on the method by which it is trying to ram it through the House.

One becomes attuned to the niceties of the process itself. As I watched the process develop, I was struck by the graciousness of the Leader of the Official Opposition (Mr. Turner). Yesterday, the Leader of the Official Opposition took his place in the Chamber when the debate was initiated on the Bill and profoundly laid out his opposition to it. During that process we received a signal of the Government's attitude toward the debate and toward the total opposition. On the Government benches, the Minister responsible for the Bill rose and apologized that he would not be here for the debate. However, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) was not present for one single minute during that particular—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): On a point of order, the Hon. Minister.

Mr. McDermid: I know that the Hon. Member is a new Member to the House of Commons. However, he is a former Premier of a province. He may not know the rules in the House, but we do not refer to the attendance of individual Members and whether they are present in the House. That is the second or third time today that we have heard that from the New Democratic Party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would hope that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) would consider that in context and please be advised not to mention who is and who is not in the House.

Mr. Barrett: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Being an ingénue I welcome hearing the rules. If it is an offence to suggest that everybody on the Cabinet benches should be here when this debate is taking place, I apologize.

After the presentation by the Leader of the Official Opposition, he sat through the whole debate of the position taken by the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent). He thanked the Leader of the New Democratic Party and continued a tradition that I think is essential to the spirit of co-operation in this Chamber.

Now that I cannot talk about a point that I wished to make, if memories are long enough to remember the point that I made, I would like to complete the argument by suggesting that courtesy is also an essential element of co-operation in the House, and there has been very little courtesy from the Government Members. Yes, you won an election, and good for you; yes, you sold your case, and good for you; yes, you are here in great numbers, and good for you. However, it is the duty of those who are elected from other Parties to stand up and represent the other point of view in this country, and that is exactly what they have been sent here to do.

There is a haste that is being pushed by the Government that does not appear to be reciprocated by the other partner in this deal. Have the Americans publicly stated that this deal must be signed by January 1? Not to my knowledge. That raises the question, have they said privately that this must be signed by January 1? Is there a deadline that we do not know about that is forcing the agenda of the Government? Is there an agreement of which we are not aware that makes it absolutely mandatory that this agreement go through on January 1?

We have no public knowledge that the Americans have taken the position that the deal will be dead if it is not passed by midnight, January 1. Is there a secret agreement that unless it goes through by January 1, it will be dead? I do not know, Mr. Speaker. Who is setting the agenda? Is it the concerns of the Canadian people that will set the agenda, or is there something else going on that we do not know about?

Far be it from me to suggest that there is a secret agenda. Far be it from me to lay that suspicion in anybody's mind. It is mighty suspicious that after winning the election the Government stated that it wanted a reconciliation and a healing process, and then comes into this Chamber and attempts to ram the legislation through, in light of the fact that there was not truly a debate in the House prior to the election on the issue itself.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: How would you know, you were not here?

Mr. Barrett: I was in British Columbia, part of this great dominion. There was no parliamentary committee in the province of British Columbia visited by Ottawa to allow ordinary citizens to present their case one way or another in front of that committee on the free trade issue.

Extension of Sittings

Mr. McDermid: Wrong.

Mr. Barrett: Were the people of Sydney, Nova Scotia visited by—in tatters and rags, I am sure because it is a long trip for these venerable gentlemen—a parliamentary committee in order that ordinary citizens could have their say? Not at all. There was no travelling committee. There was not even a subcommittee of this Chamber. It was put in this House and again closure was used. Closure was used by a political Party that, under a former Leader, promised that it would never do so.

The Government has decided that it is ruling by divine right rather than by a consensus of citizens. There are going to be disruptions from the agreement, and everybody on the government side acknowledges that. However, does the Government intend to head off the deep resentment of people who will be affected by this Bill by at least letting them have a say? Not at all. Government Members say: "Suspend the rules, we are going to ram it through, and we will have anything we want any time we want it".

I suppose that is permissible. I suppose one can do whatever one wants with the rules. Earlier I heard someone talk about moral responsibility. There is no such thing as moral responsibility with a Government that has this majority. It has decided that it will change the rules to suit its own purposes.

I suppose in another Chamber or with another attitude some Members will go to high schools or to universities and tell students to behave themselves, obey the rules of life, and they too will be a success and can join the Conservative Party and then break the rules when they get there.

These sanctimonious Tories who, in deep, serious tones, talk about their mandate to put forward this legislation without a commitment for allowing full debate, suggests the word hypocrisy. I do not know if the word "hypocrisy" is allowed in this Chamber, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Dick: It is not.

Mr. Barrett: It is not allowed in this Chamber.

Mr. Marchi: Generically, it is.

Mr. Barrett: Generically, it is allowed. Well, generically it applies to the Conservative Party. I see it as a cynical move by a Government that does not have a commitment to the total parliamentary process. Only that type of Government would bring forward the amendment we are debating today.

• (1650)

There will be anger over the legislation, Mr. Speaker, as it goes through, and the anger over its results will continue to build in this country. One of the higher points of that anger will relate to the fact that committee consideration of the legislation was done in Committee of the Whole as opposed to a legislative committee of the House.

The whole process, Mr. Speaker, is not a good lesson for new Members of this Chamber, who actually believed that they would be heard as individuals—and that is true even of government back-benchers.

The fact that the Government placed its back-bench Members in the front benches on this side of the House, where opposition Members traditionally have been, is symbolic of how this Government feels about the Parliament of Canada. The front benches on this side of the House should be allocated to the Liberal and New Democratic Parties, with the Government back-benchers then being allocated seating. But that was not to be the case. This Government returned to this House, flush with victory, and declared, through the selection of seating alone, that it did not give a fig about the Opposition; that it was going to have its way, no matter what. And that is exactly what is taking place.

Some Hon. Members: You should consider yourself fortunate to have a seat at all.

An Hon. Member: We did not know it bothered you so much, Dave.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I am thankful that I have captured the attention of Hon. Members opposite. I am thankful that I have Hon. Members opposite listening to me and that they are acting so friendly toward me. In fact, I now want to ask the Government—

An Hon. Member: Hey, windbag, when are you going to learn the rules of this place?

Mr. Barrett:—what its purpose is.

Some Hon. Members: Sit down!

Extension of Sittings

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I find some of the interjections most interesting. I really do.

An Hon. Member: That is good, because your speech sure is not.

Mr. Barrett: It is the kind of arrogance that is being displayed by Hon. Members opposite that leads to cynicism about politics in this country; and it is that kind of arrogance that will lead to the disillusionment on the part of the majority in this country in respect of what it is we in this Chamber attempt to do.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, I have been told that I should not make reference to attendance, and I will not; however, I find it interesting that there is not one voice on the Government side that is prepared to say: "Okay, we will go back to being the principled Tories we were under Diefenbaker. Okay, we will take a little more time; okay, we will hear this debate out, permitting every Member to speak, and then we will have our way."

I feel, Mr. Speaker, that there is a secret agenda, one that Hon. Members opposite are not sharing with this House. That can be the only explanation for the motion we have before us.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

The Hon. Member for Sault-Ste-Marie, on debate.

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault-Ste-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I am saddened to rise for the first time in this House to speak to an issue of little substance, to speak to a point of principle—a principle of considerable import to me, to my constituents, and to the people of Canada. While I appreciate that what I have to say will fall on deaf ears, I am obligated to speak against the kind of undemocratic heavy-handed style of this majority Government.

Before being elected to the House of Commons—something which makes me feel very proud and honoured—I was an educator, the principal of an elementary school, of some 26 years, in which capacity I had the occasion to referee many school yard disagreements. What we are faced with in this session reminds me of just such disagreements. Often, the disagreements were playground quarrels resulting from the arbitrary decision by some bully to change the rules of the game.

If I may continue the analogy, as the referee and witnesses to the event inevitably would rule against the bully, the Government in this case, being the bully, will, in the end, receive its just retribution. It will take time, but inevitably it will happen.

When one modifies the rules—or worse yet discards the rules—the effect on the rules is great; but even more dramatic is the effect on the process itself. Let us not forget the effect upon the participants.

It is no wonder that people are cynical of Government.

The bottom line for New Democrats—and, we believe, for Canadians—is that we object to the contravention of the long-standing revered traditions of Parliament, and we wish our objections to be stated and recorded. We question the abandonment of the rules. Why were they abandoned? There is no apparent reason, other than to satisfy a self-inflicted but non-binding deadline.

January 1, 1989, is not significant to the Americans, apparently; yet, the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) states that he is concerned that the Americans may request exemptions from the Free Trade Agreement if we ask for any change in the deadline. That statement only leads credence to the perception that we will soon be into a master-slave situation as a result of the Free Trade Agreement.

Once again, Mr. Speaker, let me reiterate what a major personal disappointment it is to be obligated to speak to a matter that should not be in question, rules that are enshrined to serve a particular and pragmatic purpose.

It has been a sorry beginning to this the Thirty-fourth Parliament, and we are fearful that things will continue in this fashion, unless this Government changes its pompous, inflexible attitude. The election victory was not meant to condone or endorse smugness. We are only requesting the opportunity to speak to a deal that we believe to be the death-knell of Canada as we know it.

[Translation]

Mr. Guy Ricard (Laval): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity since November 21, to rise in this House to thank all my constituents who sent me back to Ottawa to represent them for another term, and also to congratulate all new Members who came here for the first time and witness the charade that is going on today.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder how fascinated they must be by the debates going on and especially by the kind of demagoguery that has been rampant for some four days. I remember in 1984, when I was first elected and sat in this House and heard people talk, I was telling myself: "It must be fun to make one's maiden speech, to have something to say, not to utter nonsense."

Extension of Sittings

For four years I have been working with a team I think has been serving the community well, especially the Canadian electorate, because in those four years the conservative Party succeeded in reducing the deficit, in creating new jobs, in bringing provinces together. Also globally, Mr. Speaker, we succeeded in giving our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and our Canadian Government a credibility that had been lost for some years.

But having followed for four days the proceedings on the procedural matter, quite frankly I wonder what role the Opposition can play in the debate and what should that role be. Are we here to discuss a legislation that is good for the community, good for Canada, for everyone, or are we here to discuss procedure?

I feel we are wasting time, wasting the time of Canadians. They did not elect me for that. Why did they elect me? Because with the Free Trade Bill, Mr. Speaker, we have something good for their future, the future of our children. But during four days we have been discussing the procedural matter of whether we are going to speak through the night, whether we are going to discuss something? Listen now. I am not sure people in my constituency are proud of what the Opposition is doing. On this side we are so to speak muzzled because they are delaying matters. And on top of that, they rise and tell us we are delaying. On top of that, they rise and tell us we are being hypocritical, we did not act properly during the election campaign, Canadians did not vote for free trade.

Well, I will tell you something, Mr. Speaker. In the Province of Quebec . . . I was listening to the Hon. Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Pagtakhan) suggest we were asked questions on free trade during the election campaign. As far as I am concerned, I can tell you one thing: Not one question was put to me during the elections. Nobody told me: Your thing is no good, explain it to me. They all said: It is good for us, jobs will be created, go ahead. As proof, look at us Quebeckers—we were 57, I think, before the election, and now we are 63.

An Hon. Member: Laval is true blue!

Mr. Ricard: That is a fact! Laval is true blue!

So here is what I am telling myself: Why repeat that some one million plus Canadians voted against free trade and because of that, Mr. Speaker, we should start all over again holding public hearings, having committees travel across Canada, debate through mid-January or perhaps mid-February. Come on. They should be a little more serious. I think that today we should make a final decision on that, adhere to our schedule and make the decision we had proposed with Bill C-130, complete before the end of December the debate on free trade so as to be in a position in January to implement what we said we would, what is good for the Canadian community, for Quebeckers and for people in Laval.

• (1700)

[English]

Mr. Jim Karpoff (Surrey North): Mr. Speaker, I am particularly disturbed to find myself making my first speech in this House on a procedural motion.

Mr. McDermid: Then save it.

Mr. Karpoff: There are four reasons why I am unhappy about this. First, I am one of the new Members of this House. I was not here during the last debate on the free trade Bill. There are 126 other new Members who did not have the opportunity to discuss and lay before the House their concerns and those of their constituents over this Bill. I think it is shameful that the Conservative majority would try to prevent new Members of Parliament from having the opportunity to speak on such an important motion.

All the new Members of Parliament are not just on the opposition side. There are new Members in the Conservative benches who I think also would like the opportunity to stand up and say what they know about their constituents' feelings over the trade deal.

Second, I am representing a new riding. My riding is one of four new ridings in British Columbia. Surrey North was made up from parts of two ridings held for the last 15 or 20 years by Conservatives. That new riding voted solidly New Democrat because it wanted me to come to this House and speak on its behalf about this trade deal. Clearly it was unhappy and wanted changes. It wants protection for social programs and economic development. Yet, the Government is determined that we will not have ample discussion about it.

Surrey North is basically a family community. It is one of the fastest growing residential areas in Canada. Some 60 per cent of the new housing built in the lower mainland of British Columbia in the last five years has been built in Surrey North. The riding is made up of working families and they are deadly afraid of this deal. They are not the big multinational corporations. They do not sit on boards of directors. They have difficulty making ends meet. They cannot afford to risk unemployment and see their social programs eroded by this free trade deal.

Extension of Sittings

People have said the Government has a mandate. Let me tell you, in British Columbia the mandate was very clear.

Mr. Dick: Get rid of Vander Zalm.

Ms. Langan: That, too.

Mr. Karpoff: That, too. The people of British Columbia understand that the Vander Zalm Socreds and the Tories are the same people.

Mr. Dick: No, we are not.

Mr. Karpoff: That is why they will get rid of both.

In British Columbia, people understand very well that this was a vote on the free trade deal. They voted very clearly against the Government, as did the majority of Canadians. Some 53 per cent of Canadians voted against the Government and against free trade.

Mr. Friesen: It was 57 per cent.

Mr. Karpoff: It was 57 per cent. Why not 58 per cent? Next time it will be 60 per cent.

Another thing I am very unhappy about is on a personal level. Like many other people in this House, I am the son of an immigrant.

Mr. McDermid: Are not we all?

Mr. Karpoff: My father left Russia because he belonged to a minority group and faced persecution. There were no laws to protect minority groups. There were no rules to protect minority groups. There was no parliament to protect minority groups. There was nothing like Standing Orders to protect minority groups.

My father left Russia and chose to come to Canada because he thought this country was based on parliamentary democracy. He thought all Canadian governments abided by House rules, by democracy. Yet, what do we find? That is not the case. That is one of the reasons I think it is so important that this kind of suspension of the rules not go forward.

There are many people who have come to Canada because they value democracy and freedom. Therefore, we should not allow a Conservative majority, simply because it has been elected and has its own political agenda, to set aside democracy.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean-Pierre Hogue (Outremont): Mr. Speaker, my colleague from Vancouver Centre (Ms. Campbell)

quoted our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who said on a number of occasions that wealth is created by the citizens rather than by governments. And so one might add that the citizens of a country are not led by the economy, they are the ones who steer and manage the economy.

Our colleague from Langelier (Mr. Loiselle) supported this argument, and he delivered a speech which is a credit to the Conservative Party, its Members, and the vast majority of Canadians.

I quote:

"We saw quite clearly, in the way the people of Quebec participated in the national debate on the major economic issue of the recent campaign, to what extent the whole of Quebec shares in the confidence we have in our capacity to meet the new challenges involved in the globalization of trade. Massively, Quebecers joined millions of Canadians who felt free trade is the assertion of the national will to open out rather than shutting ourselves in, self-confidence rather than fear of new horizons."

Hon. Members are no doubt aware that the riding of Outremont, which I have the distinguished honour and privilege of representing in the House, is the image of our beautiful country. It is home to no fewer than 20 different cultural communities, and over 40 different languages and dialects can be heard there. We all know very well in the House that the riding of Outremont has a long and uninterrupted Liberal tradition at the municipal, provincial and federal levels. These people, representing every imaginable status in society as they do, stood up despite their traditional loyalty to a Party, despite a definitely positive perception of the overly and basically theoretical notion of social democracy. So these people stood up and voted, not to elect a particular candidate but to meet certain needs. A professional psychologist who teaches the subject and has been practicing for a little over 30 years is in a good position to single out these needs which explain why the people voted as they did in Outremont, a vote which faithfully reflects everything that happened throughout Canada.

An Hon. Member: The people have decided!

Mr. Hogue: The people of Canada thought it would be useful to bring back into office a program, a Prime Minister and a Party—

An Hon. Member: A wonderful team!

Mr. Hogue: —a team that can help our country move forward.

The Opposition, which seems to believe that its role is to oppose, is unfortunately spreading falsehoods. In every society, the Opposition's job is to promote debate, not to act as if it were at the helm. It seems to me that the Opposition resorts to demagoguery when it claims that more than 50 per cent of the population voted against free trade.

Some Hon. Members: That is untrue.

Mr. Hogue: One cannot with impunity, Mr. Speaker, distort the rules of democracy. Either we abide by the percentage of votes or by the number of Members elected. And according to the rules of our democracy, the number of Members elected is what enables a party to take power and govern.

Since the Free Trade Agreement is a treaty, it allows both parties, over a certain period of time, to normalize their relations. There can be no security in the absence of standards, procedures and limits. The same thing goes for this House, which can only function because it abides by standards and procedures. One can always indulge in histrionics and tear up pages in a book, but if the Members respect each other, they will treat this book as it should be and they will obey the rules of procedure instead of constantly bypassing them.

It is therefore, as I was saying, through standards that a people can increase its security and the Canadian people will be more secure because it will no longer depend on the whims of a huge country like our good neighbour to the south.

The people of the riding of Outremont voted for free trade because the wider the border is open the easier it will be for all cultural entities to benefit from unrestricted economic and financial exchanges. People will have more disposable income. Canadians, individually and collectively, will stand to benefit from the freer flow of consumer goods.

Mr. Speaker, I do not think that Canadians deserve this kind of treatment, and I do not think that Canadians should have to put up with the kind of incidents we have been witnessing in the House over the last few days. As a new Member of the House, I have learned that there are, to use an English expression, losers as well as winners.

It seems to me that some of our colleagues rise to express a feeling of mistrust, as if Canada stands to lose under this treaty.

Extension of Sittings

I would suggest that the Progressive Conservative Party and its Members are taking a more constructive approach, and this is why we fully support this initiative and look forward to debating such a challenging issue.

In university lecture rooms we can see how democracy works. A lecture room is not unlike this House, but after a while the students accept the authority, they get in step with the kind of authority as expressed by the vote of the people. Mr. Speaker, there have been enough speeches, the people brought the Conservative Party back into office and gave it a mandate to administer the country, so we should not waste too much time listening to demagogic comments which, as I said earlier, do not lead us anywhere.

Mr. Speaker, whatever their cultural background, I think that the people of the riding of Outremont want free trade. I must be their spokesman in this House and suggest that we ought to launch a more constructive debate at the earliest opportunity.

[English]

Ms. Joy Langan (Mission—Coquitlam): Mr. Speaker, I was elected in Mission—Coquitlam by people who oppose the trade deal. It is true that the Conservatives won the majority of seats in this House and that they formed the Government. But I believe, as many Canadians believe, that they did not win the hearts and minds of all Canadians.

What the Government's motion does is to suspend the rules and to make a mockery of what Parliament is all about. This Government is mocking those Canadians who voted for any other political Party but Tory. The Government is mocking Canadians in 126 ridings who said no to the deal and yes to Canada. The Government is mocking new Members of Parliament who came to Ottawa to represent seriously and thoughtfully their constituents. The Government, through its wheeling and dealing, is in fact frustrating the established system of parliamentary democracy and the established rules of order.

New Members in all parts of this House are struggling. We arrived two weeks ago to absolute chaos. We had no offices, no telephones—indeed there are still Members without offices and telephones—no staff, and no briefing on parliamentary process. Now, as new Members, we struggle to work our way through this book, the Standing Orders of the House of Commons.

Extension of Sittings

Members on the Government side of the House ignore this book. Members on the Government side of the House remove rule after rule. It certainly makes bed-time reading easier, but it does not help Members of Parliament to work through the process.

● (1720)

The Government should have more respect for its own new Members if not for the new Members on this side of the House. As a new parliamentarian, I am shocked, dismayed, and saddened by what I have seen in this House for the past week. I am sure the constituents of Mission—Coquitlam, no matter what their political stripe, are as dismayed and shocked as I am by the performance of the Government to date.

I ask you, Mr. Speaker, in your capacity to urge the Government to respect all Canadians and to respect other Members of the House of Commons be they honourable or otherwise, and to respect the rules and the traditions—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. There is no such thing as “otherwise” in this House. They are all Honourable Members.

Ms. Langan: I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that had we been given the rules—

Some Hon. Members: Withdraw!

Ms. Langan:—and the training, we would not be making these kinds of mistakes. My apologies.

Mr. Peter Milliken (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, it is a great pleasure for me to have this opportunity to speak in the House today. I want to express at the outset my thanks to my constituents in Kingston and the Islands who did me the honour of electing me to represent them in this Parliament. Like the speakers who have preceded me, I regret that my first speech in this Chamber is on a procedural motion, as this one is. I think it is unfortunate that the Government has chosen to take the first week of a new session of Parliament to abandon the traditional speeches that proceed in this Chamber, the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne, and try to ram through a Bill to force the Free Trade Agreement on Canadians.

The Government is the master of its own misfortune in this place, but I will turn to that later in my speech. For the moment, I would like to discuss the application of the closure rule which the Government is using to force this measure through the House.

Twice already we have had notice of closure, and today we have had one of the motions put and voted on in this House. I would like to go back to the history of that rule. It was introduced by a Conservative Government originally in 1913, and was used to ram through a certain naval Bill at that time, as I recall.

Subsequently in 1917, it was used on a couple of occasions to rig the election so the Conservatives could gain re-election in the general election of 1919. It was also used again on a more famous occasion by another government in 1956.

None of the Members who are in the House today were present on that occasion, as I understand it. They have all left the Chamber. I listened with interest to the speech of my friends in the New Democratic Party. They quoted Mr. Diefenbaker during the course of the pipeline debate. I will not repeat those words, but it seems to me that they embody the view of the Conservative Party on closure.

I note that in 1957, during the election campaign that year, Mr. Diefenbaker, who was then the Leader of the Conservative Party, although my friends opposite seem to have forgotten this fact, campaigned on a platform to abolish the closure rule in this House. Indeed, in the session of 1957-58, he introduced a motion that would have eliminated the rule, but he did not proceed with it. It was another broken Tory promise. However, I do not think Mr. Diefenbaker and his Government ever used closure. In 1964, we had, of course, closure once again. After months and months on the flag debate, the closure rule was applied by the then government to bring that lengthy debate to an end.

Mr. McDermid: A Liberal Government.

Mr. Milliken: That is correct. The person who spoke out most vociferously against the use of the rule was a person who was a member of the present administration until his resignation in January, 1987. That person was Mr. Erik Neilsen, the former Hon. Member for Yukon. He had a lot to say about the Government's use of closure in 1964. I would like to quote him because, of course, he will be fresh in the minds of many of the members on the opposite side of the House. I quote from page 11059 of Hansard of December 11, 1964:

“The procedure of closure has been repugnant to the sense of fair play of the Canadian people. My own personal view is that never in parliamentary debate should there be a muzzling of free debate. They will say they were forced into this by a fatuous opposition. Surely we had the right to debate this issue,—”

Extension of Sittings

He went on to say:

"In every single case, as Laurier said on one occasion, where closure has been imposed, the opposition has been justified."

On page 11061, Mr. Nielsen went on to say:

"There is something else I will vote against when the time comes to do so, and that is the imposition of closure in the House of Commons. I will vote against the gagging and throttling of parliamentary debate, because that is what is happening."

Mr. Diefenbaker in the same debate, a wonderful, wonderful fellow, went on to say:

"—any flag brought in by closure cannot but fly over a divided nation and a discredited Government."

He was talking about our flag, of course, and we know that he was wrong on that issue. He said further:

"The Prime Minister says that an opposition has no right to prevent a decision. Taken literally that might be true, but in actual practice one of the major features of our parliamentary system is that oppositions have a responsibility to prevent wrong decisions."

Those are the words not of Liberals. Those are the words of Conservative Members of great credibility, leaders of their own Party. Indeed, Mr. Nielsen was the Deputy Prime Minister, as I recall, before his resignation in January, 1987.

I think the record should show that during the years he was here—and I believe he was also the Government House Leader from 1984 to 1987—closure was never imposed in this House. He obviously believed what he said, and I am sure he was speaking for his Party when he spoke. What happened after he left in January? In June 1987, closure was invoked to cut off the debate on capital punishment. In June, 1988, just this past summer, on a motion similar to the one before the House today, closure was invoked to ram that suspension of the rules through as well.

In other words, the suspension of the rules and the use of closure to do it is becoming a bit of a habit. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, it is a bad habit and one the Government ought to correct at once.

I would like to turn to the question of why we are facing this particular problem today. The Deputy Government House Leader has pointed out quite accurately that there was extensive debate on this issue during the course of the last Parliament. He has given us statistics to show how many days and hours the debate raged, and that is fine. There are something over 100 new Members in this Parliament—and I am subject to correction on my figures—who have never had an opportunity to discuss this issue in this House or in committee. Surely we have a right to proceed with that kind of discussion. Surely the discussion ought not to be forced upon us by sitting through the Christmas holidays well into the night, which is the proposal the Government has put before us.

Surely the debate ought to proceed in a normal parliamentary fashion where the matter is brought forward and referred to committee for study. This committee ought to be permitted to travel the country to get the views of Canadians on this issue, and then to come back and give the matter serious deliberation, to vote on the proposals for amendment, and to have third reading debate.

If the Government knew this all along, and it negotiated the deal, why did it call the election so late in November that there were only eight or nine sitting days of Parliament left before the normal Christmas break?

In July, Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) made it clear that the Bill would not clear the Senate before an election was called. It is not as though it were a surprise to the Government that there would be a problem. In spite of that the Government sat here and introduced, beginning in June, virtually its entire legislative program. After three years of indolence it decided that since it had to go to the people within a matter of months it had better do something and pass some legislation. It introduced a whole series of major Bills, starting in May and June of this year and including tax reform, child care, broadcasting and, of course, free trade. When it found it was having trouble getting some of this legislation through, it changed the rules as it is trying to do today in order to make Parliament accommodate itself to the wishes of the Government.

It got some of its legislation through but things stalled again. We went to the people finally in November after, in the view of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) at least, the polls had changed. He is the one who told us that he did not govern by polls but governed by the great democratic tradition and his great thought process on when it would be best to let the people make a decision.

If he had not been governing by polls, I suggest that normal rational consideration of the parliamentary timetable would have taken him to the people long before November 21. He would have been there in October, and we would have had several months in which to debate this issue in Parliament and to give this major Bill the consideration it deserves. Hon. Members know how thick the Bill is. As I recall, the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) claimed he could not tear it up because it was so thick. We are expected to pass this Bill before the end of next week. It has only just been introduced this week.

Extension of Sittings

We have not had any of the usual discussions at the opening of Parliament. We have been plunged into debates on procedural matters, and now a debate based on a closure motion that was passed this morning and is cutting off this debate later today.

It is a poor way to run a House of Commons, and the Government has that responsibility. It is a poor way to run a government, and the Government has that responsibility.

I say to Hon. Members opposite that I hope that having heard the very reasonable arguments which have been advanced on this side of the House throughout the day, they will consider exercising some independence of judgment and voting against this resolution which will change and in effect abrogate the rules of this House.

We could have a full, free, honest and open debate on free trade in which all Members may participate fully in committee and at all the various reading stages of the Bill. Rather than have midnight sittings and holiday sittings, I invite those Members to exercise that judgment today and vote with us to defeat this motion.

[Translation]

Mr. Jean Corbeil (Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies): Mr. Speaker, it is a great honour indeed for me to be here today and to make my maiden speech in such an impressive forum rooted in tradition and history. As I rise for the first time as the newly elected Member for the Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies riding, Mr. Speaker, I should like, if I may, to express my sincere gratitude to all the men and women in that new riding who have granted me the privilege of representing them in this House and, together with my honourable colleagues and under the undisputed leadership of the Right Hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), to be part of the first majority government for the first time ever over the past fifty years to be re-elected for a second term.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Corbeil: Mr. Speaker, I represent a riding which is situated at the eastern limit of Montreal Island and which is made up of two Montreal wards together with an autonomous municipality, Ville d'Anjou, which I had the honour to represent as its mayor for 15 consecutive years before seeking my election as Member of the House of Commons.

The Anjou—Rivière-des-Prairies riding is very active in the commercial and industrial fields, has a population of about 100,000 people of diverse ethnic origin. It is made up of a very large Francophone majority, along with significant Italian, Haitian and Anglophone communities, as well as various other ethnic communities which have learned to live and work together in harmony.

My political progression in municipal affairs was a source of great satisfaction for me during all those years and I am grateful to all the men and women—the volunteers and community organizations, my municipal colleagues and supporters—who helped me during that period.

However, Mr. Speaker, I must admit that I was overjoyed to have been elected as a Member of this distinguished assembly and that I was really looking forward to coming to the Canadian Capital to represent the men and women of my riding, of my Province of Quebec, of my country Canada. I must admit also that this legitimate desire to come here to discuss the major issues which concern our fellow citizens has been considerably dampened by what performance we have witnessed so far during this session.

Mr. Speaker, one of the main reasons I agreed to run in the election was my conviction that free trade is the key to future Canadian prosperity. During a campaign that was long and hard for all players, we had to spend a lot of energy and effort to reassure the most vulnerable members of society, the poor and the elderly, who were told by representatives of the two parties now in the Opposition that their pensions and social benefits were threatened by an agreement which we think will bring prosperity to the whole country.

But what is distressing in this spectacle we have been subjected to since the beginning of the week and the session is to realize that the people opposite have not yet understood that this Government has been re-elected because it combines two intrinsic qualities required to form a government citizens can trust: an unchallenged leadership and a credibility built up over the years. And we have seen this week that Hon. Members of both Opposition parties are on that side of the House precisely because they do not have sufficient credibility to deserve the trust of most Canadians.

With great emotional speeches, they would have us believe that the people did not make a clear-cut decision on November 21. They seem to be pretending to ignore all the governments that led this country in recent years; they were governments that had a majority of seats, because that is how the Canadian Parliament works. And they juggle figures and use all sorts of percentages to try to show and to lead the Canadian people, whose intelligence they seem to greatly underestimate, to believe that the next government should be led by the minority.

During the election campaign, we saw the leader of a party make tearing up the agreement one of his main themes. Today, we have on two or three occasions witnessed certain Hon. Members of this august body also tear up other official documents. That is exactly how, throughout the election campaign that ended in our victory on November 21, the Members of those two parties showed the Canadian people that they were not unifiers like our leader and our party, which bring the Canadian people together; rather, they tear the Canadian people apart. They do not care about the prosperity of the country, but are more concerned with spreading mistrust among the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Corbeil: Mr. Speaker, the reason we obtained the confidence of the majority of Canadians is that we bet on their maturity and intelligence rather than on their mistrust and their fear of the future. We are convinced that the Canadian people are mature enough to have confidence in the future and to know that the Government they chose four years ago and returned to power recently is one that cares about the interests of all Canadians, men and women, one that says the same thing in all parts of Canada, and not one that says one thing in the West against Quebec, something else in the Maritimes against Ontario and something else again in other parts of Canada. The Progressive Conservative Party is a Party and a Government that says the same thing throughout Canada, that speaks the language of reason and invites the citizens of Canada to a prosperous future, based on constructive actions.

Over these last few days, Mr. Speaker, they tried constantly to avoid addressing the purpose for which Canadian citizens sent us here, that is to finalize the free trade agreement. And that lack of credibility is being shown by the actions of those people over these last few months. First, they asked for elections to be held on the issue of free trade, suggesting we had no mandate to implement free trade, there should be an election on that.

An Hon. Member: Let the people decide!

Mr. Corbeil: Let the people decide!, as I am reminded by my friend Vincent. The people decided on November 21. They decided by giving us a majority. They elected the Party that proposed signing a free trade agreement, the Party that proposed prosperity for Canada over the coming years.

The people's verdict therefore was very clear-cut, so much so that on election night and over the following days both Opposition Leaders appeared before the media and conceded they had failed to convince the Canadian people to support their cause. They realized in the days that followed the election that the issue had been settled by the Canadian people and we had to proceed with signing the free trade. But soon, perhaps by chance, the rumblings started within those two Parties and the leadership races got underway, even though the leaders are still in place, they are still on the job. The membership did not wait for the corpse to get cold before it started the leadership races, almost starting to celebrate certain departures and arrivals.

So, Mr. Speaker, this is the reason why those Parties did not enjoy the credibility that would have allowed them to form the Canadian Government for the next four years. Over these last few days they still lack the kind of sincerity that would have regained them some credibility. As we came here on Monday we had every opportunity to take the steps and make the understandings needed in order that during the first four days of this week we could sit 12, 13, or 14 hours a day. We could also have had sittings tomorrow and Sunday and also on the four or five next days of the following week, to give them the number of hours needed, even though the debate already had gone through for more than 33 hours during last Parliament. The possibility was there for each and every Member, new or old, to express his or her views on the matter. Rather, they chose to get into procedural debate, having us go in and out of the House waiting for the bell to stop ringing in order to come and vote on matters of procedure.

Mr. Speaker, the matter of closure of which we heard nothing today . . . Really the debate has raged on free trade under the guise of discussing the motion of closure. Closure is something that is provided for in the Standing Orders, and therefore a procedure that may be used when we want the majority to govern the country, majority rule rather than minority rule using procedural gimmicks to prevent the real debate to proceed, to prevent free trade from being finalized, to prevent Canada from starting again on the road to prosperity we had opened over these last few years.

[English]

Mr. Lyle Kristiansen (Kooteney West—Revelstoke): Mr. Speaker, as I was saying before I was so rudely interrupted some four years ago, I rise to oppose the arrogant behaviour of an arrogant government. The only difference between today and some four years ago, when I last rose in this House, is that the arrogant government is now a Conservative Government instead of a Liberal Government. That seems to be the only difference except in the matter of degree.

For a while that previous government, Mr. Lalonde in particular, had begun the process of weakening what was then called the Foreign Investment Review Agency, and we warned about the consequences of that. This Government has, for all intents and purposes, now wiped it out all together and attempts today enshrine in an international agreement a Conservative regime now and for all time, which would prohibit the people of Canada from exercising their freedom of choice to ensure that Canada remain Canadian in the future.

It appears that my colleagues on my immediate right in the Liberal Party have learned something from their mistakes. They have now realized that rather than let this country drift more and more into the orbit of the friendly republic to the south, they have to take a stand. They have joined with us in attempting to stop the trade deal that this debate is about, despite this particular part of the debate being about the rather nasty rules being imposed. This debate is about preserving this nation for the future and preserving the future freedom of choice of Canadians to determine what kind of society they want to live in.

I always thought things were supposed to be a little better after the second coming, but as the old song goes, I now find out that It Ain't Necessarily So. When the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) said after election day that it was now time for healing, that the battle was over, I did not know that healing was spelled h-e-e-l-i-n-g. I always thought it was h-e-a-l to which he was referring, and the newspapers and the press obviously thought that too.

But all we have heard since that time is the Prime Minister yelling "heel", and the Tories obey. He says: "heel" and they heel. He says: "heel", and they heel again. The Minister of Trade says: "heel", and they heel again.

That is not what this Member of Parliament was elected to do, and I suggest to Members opposite that it is not their duty to heel to anyone's command as individual Members of Parliament. When the Prime Minister says "heel", I suggest they check the spelling of the word because what we have seen is not the "healing" interpretation of the word, which means to get over some of the nastiness that pervaded during the last election campaign. Feelings were strong and they were sometimes bitter because they were strongly held on both sides.

Individually we all have different mandates from our particular constituencies, but we must attempt to recognize that we have distinctive mandates and that we are marching to different drummers. All wise people are not on one side of the House. We are not necessarily all-wise on this side, but we shall continue to attempt to stop this deal because that is our mandate. We shall attempt to stop it also because we have not had the opportunity to debate it in this context before. If the Government is hell-bent on proceeding with its plan, which we think is wrong, it must attempt to do so in such a way as to preserve certain essential ingredients of the future freedoms of the people of Canada in the process. It must ensure that the fewest people possible are dislocated, hurt, or adjusted whether horizontally, vertically or however the Government intends to adjust them.

The Government has a mandate. It knows it, but so do we have a mandate. We in the Opposition have a mandate. I as the Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke have a personal mandate approaching some 47 per cent, and indirectly a mandate of 64 per cent of the electors of my constituency, almost two-thirds, who voted for candidates and parties who said: "Stop the deal". That is a majority in Nelson, in my home community. It is also a majority in Trail, Castlegar, Kaslo, Nakusp, Rossland, Revelstoke, Salmo, Montrose, Warfield, Silvertown, Slocan, New Denver, and Fruitvale. In every major community of my riding there was a clear majority, approaching two-thirds of the electors and sometimes much more, who said the deal was wrong and that they wanted none of it. I have a responsibility as do my colleagues, to make sure that the Government recognizes that we have mandates too.

This kind of debate and these kinds of procedures are not the way for a civilized Parliament in a civilized country to attempt to reach rational conclusions and display some sensitivity to all those out in the country who have given us our individual and collective mandates.

The debate in the election and before, both in this House and out in the countryside was simply yes or no. Do we want this deal or not? The debate now is still yes or no, but it is also how and under what conditions and how best to protect Canadians from the effects of this deal. That debate has not yet been held. That is just one more reason why the Government's arrogant attempt to impose new, reprehensible and unjustified rules and procedures in this debate is wrong.

This is legislation by exhaustion and an attempt to achieve annexation by exhaustion or, if you choose, absorption by attrition. That is not what an assembly of supposed intelligent debate ought to be about.

My colleague, the Hon. Member for Mission—Coquitlam (Ms. Langan), mentioned just a few moments ago that those new Members in this House who have not had the dubious distinction or pleasure of having been here or of having visited this place before in an official capacity and find themselves in some consternation attempting to learn the rules in a few very short days. It is one thing to want to learn the rules, but when you have a government that insists on changing the rules to meet its whim—and that is what it is, a whim—it is wrong because there is no compulsion upon the Government to have this agreement passed through all stages by January 1, 1989, and the Government knows it.

The Government says that its credibility is at stake. It said: "We have told our American brothers that we would have this thing signed, sealed, and all wrapped up by January 1, 1989". But our friends from the republic to the south have already said that they are quite willing to extend that time. There is nothing hard and fast about it. The Americans certainly perceive it to be in their interests that this agreement ought to be concluded. Obviously the Government thinks that it is in our nation's interest, rightly or wrongly. But there is no need to rush this matter through and deny this House the opportunity to make careful examination of the provisions of the enabling legislation, particularly in view of the fact that the Government made quick, last minute changes to that enabling legislation the first time it was brought into this House at third reading.

Obviously the Government had not given good thought to it at that time, but the Tories found out after they had almost got the Bill through the House of Commons that they had made a serious mistake. They finally decided to delete the section which originally indicated that the Free Trade Agreement would take precedence over all Canadian law. They thought that was a mistake either for good, sound reasons or simply for sound political reasons.

We are not going to have time to review this carefully in the limited time the Government is giving us. By sitting all hours of the night, and very soon on a very limited and closed, set timetable, we will not be able to give adequate attention to the detailed provisions of this enabling legislation. Is it still the same, or has the Government made more changes? We do not know yet. Perhaps the Government does not know yet either. It did not last time. Does it?

Mr. Clayton Yeutter played a very key and vital part in selling the American case during the negotiations between the U.S. and Canada on this deal. In the Vancouver Province for Thursday, November 17, 1988, at page 17 we read:

"The U.S. could introduce tough new laws against imports from Canada—even if the free trade deal were in effect and the Canada-U.S. panel found them contrary to the agreement.

That suggestion was made in a letter written by President Ronald Reagan's top trade official, Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter.

In the letter, to U.S. Senator Dennis DeConcini, Yeutter spells out the wide latitude the U.S. would retain under the trade deal to penalize imports from Canada.

Canada would have similar powers. The letter was written March 28 but was unpublicized. A copy was provided to the Toronto Star.

Yeutter's assertion appears to contradict claims by Prime Minister . . . and business supporters of the proposed deal that Canada has made a major gain in circumventing U.S. trade laws.

Yeutter notes in his letter that, under the trade deal, the U.S. will continue to apply its trade laws against Canada. "We will also retain the ability to amend our countervailing duty law and to apply this amended law to Canada," he says.

Those laws permit U.S. agencies to impose countervailing duties and other penalties on Canadian imports that are taking markets away from American companies."

That item did not receive any publicity at all in this country until four days before Canadians went to the polls. Mr. Yeutter's comment in his letter of some months earlier, which was only released for public consumption in late November, very clearly stated that all that the opposition Parties, whether they be New Democrat or Liberal, had been saying during the course of the election campaign was true, that this trade agreement did not guarantee us any access at all.

• (1800)

In other stories published in the last few days of the campaign it also made clear that any idea that the binding dispute mechanism would be binding or have any teeth to it was also an argument that was thrown out of the window. There was nothing of either kind. If we did not get either of those two things then what did we get from this deal?

In 1983, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) knew exactly, and he forecasted absolutely correctly what would be happening today, and what has already happened to some 2,400 Canadians, under free trade when he stated:

"We'd be swamped. We have in many ways a branch plant economy in certain important sectors. All that would happen with free trade would be the boys cranking up their plants throughout the United States in bad times and shutting their entire branch plants in Canada. It's bad enough as it is."

It is bad enough as it is, Mr. Speaker, and it is just that bad now. The Prime Minister's forecast was absolutely accurate in this regard. What he forecast would happen is now happening. After the results of the last election the corporations involved in these practices now have no doubt that this deal is going to go through, they are going to get what they want, and in the Prime Minister's words they can now "crank up their plants throughout the United States . . . and shut their entire branch plants in Canada". These are the process that has started.

If the Prime Minister knew back in 1983, that that is what was going to happen, then why does he not have some plans in place to ensure that those Canadians who have or will be cast out on the street have some significant protection? Members opposite have been asking, why should one group get favourable treatment in relation to another group that is laid off, or had their plants closed down? Well, all Canadians who are subject to mass plant closures should have protection. However, there is a particular incumbency upon any government, whose own actions are responsible in a very direct way for such closures, and it should adopt special measures to ensure that there is as little sacrificing as possible in terms of the incomes and the means of livelihood of those workers who, as a direct result of its policies, have been cast out on the street.

In conclusion, I would like to draw attention to some remarks made by Remi J. De Roo, Roman Catholic Bishop of Victoria. During the debate on this subject very little has been said about some of the wider implications of this deal. In a section of his treatise entitled Free Trade and Global Disparities, from a presentation to the Summit Citizens Conference in June, 1988, he stated in the section entitled "Economic Militarism":

"Secondly, Canada prides herself on being a nation committed to global peace and nuclear disarmament. Yet, the creation of a North American trade bloc will further consolidate the links between Canada's economy and the U.S. military industrial complex in a global war economy.

Take article 907. It serves to tie Canada's energy exports (oil, gas, uranium) more closely to the U.S. military production priorities. If the U.S. runs short of energy needed for military production purposes, then Canada's energy sources will be made readily available. What this means, in effect, is that Canada's role in promoting nuclear disarmament will be further restricted and compromised by our role as an energy supplier for the U.S. military machine."

If one looks at what has happened to uranium production and the marketing of uranium in the years 1981 to 1986, a good portion of which time is under the regime of the Conservative Party, and a good part of it also was under the Liberal Party before it, one sees that Canada's world market share of uranium production has virtually doubled, while that of the United States has been cut in half. Is that the type of future that is in store from a Government that states it is so concerned about environmental considerations? Is that the type of future that is in store for energy production in the energy resource sector in Canada? Are the increasing wastes left over from that process the residue of this Government's policies and its trade deal? If so, it puts the lie to all of the handwringing and the anguish shown by Members opposite over their great environmental concerns.

This trade agreement is bad for the environment. It is bad for working people. It is bad for men and women. We have been challenged throughout the election to say what is our alternative to this trade agreement.

Mr. Nowlan: And you lost.

Mr. Kristiansen: The alternative is a nation called Canada, a Canada that is fair to working people, fair to the environment, and most important, a Canada that is fair to future generations who are entitled to freedom of choice.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I regret that the Hon. Member's time has expired.

Mrs. Marie Gibeau (Bourassa): First, Mr. Speaker, I would like to greet my dear constituents of Bourassa thanks to whom I am here tonight. I wish to thank them for choosing me to protect their interests and, as I promised them, I will not wait ten years before rising and speaking for them in this House.

Extension of Sittings

Tonight, I was supposed to take part in several Christmas parties with my constituents but, given the circumstances, it is much more important for me to be here to speak in their name than to celebrate with their associations.

I wish to thank them for choosing me to represent their interests. However, I am well aware that, in choosing me, they chose my Party, its program and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Since Monday, I have had the privilege of witnessing the free trade debate and, as a new Member, I am learning all the intricacies of our parliamentary system. I stand absolutely in awe of the competent people who have made this debate possible. I understand that it is through confrontation that we achieve progress in a country. Nevertheless, I deeply regret that all sorts of little schemes and tricks are used to avoid dealing with the real issues. However, we have to remember that, throughout history, the Members of the opposition have been true to themselves.

We recall, for instance, that in 1968, the Liberal Party got itself elected on the promise that it would put Quebec in its place, and we saw the War Measures Act invoked. In 1972, to be returned to office, the Opposition solemnly promised that there would never be any income and price control. However, in 1975, we were put under wage and price controls. In 1979, there were great protests because our Conservative Government had proposed a 16-cent gas tax. But no sooner was the Opposition returned to office that they doubled that tax. We must also remember that in 1979, Mr. Trudeau got a fresh mandate by promising renewed federalism, but as early as 1982, we saw once again Quebec alienated through the exclusion of our province from the repatriation of the Constitution. In 1984, the people of Quebec and the people of Canada expressed their contempt for the schemes and about-turns of the Opposition which had no strategy and rushed to borrow those of the Conservative Party.

Again this week I am witnessing all kinds of shenanigans on the part of Opposition Members who want to start a debate over again which, they know, lasted 64 days. I think people should know that my fellow citizens . . . Indeed I would draw the attention of the people of Bourassa to the fact that we are once again facing mistrust. Opposition Parties are playing games, raising and stressing issues which have absolutely nothing to do with the basic question. What we have to ask ourselves in fact is which of two possibilities are we going to choose. And here are these two possibilities: are we going to prevent a people—the Canadian people in this instance—from flourishing, under the pretence that we have to protect the weakest or most fragile among them, or are we going to protect the weakest while still allowing the stronger citizens to reach their fulfilment? As I see it, if we decide to prevent everybody from growing because we want to protect weaker people, we are headed the wrong way. Thank God, our mothers decided that such would not be the situation. Instead of keeping stronger children in check, they led us by the hand and taught us to walk so we would eventually be able to run.

When the residents of the riding of Bourassa elected me—and again I recall the fact that there had been a long Liberal tradition at both provincial and federal levels—they had decided they would fulfil their aspirations. The elderly people of Bourassa chose to vote for the future of their children and to protect the investments they had made during their years of active life. Older people have opted for free trade. Younger people have opted for better employment opportunities. Minorities chose to have faith in the people who had welcomed them and they voted for free trade. As I recall, the Opposition had said that the people would decide. The people have had their say: Vox populi, vox Dei! Free trade it must be.

[English]

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I should like to begin my remarks by thanking the people of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception for having elected me as their representative in the House of Commons. I should also like to thank my family and my team members, without whose help I would not be here today.

I am proud to have the opportunity to participate in this important debate today, and during the course of my remarks I shall endeavour to convey to the House the concerns of my constituents, as related to me during the course of the election campaign.

Given that I rise for the first time in the House of Commons, and given the time of year, I should like to take this opportunity, as a recently retired member of the Canadian Armed Forces, specifically the Navy, to remember those in Canada's Armed Forces who are involved in the protection of this country, and particularly those who cannot be home over the Christmas season.

Extension of Sittings

In fact, I note that at this very moment one of Her Majesty's Canadian destroyers is off on a rescue mission, with the object of that mission being the rescue of the oil rig team which had to take to a safety pod when the oil rig that they were on ran into difficulty.

I ask all Hon. Members to take cognizance of the work done by the members of our Canadian Armed Forces.

The riding of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception is a large one, with a population of 90,000. I can assure the House that during the election campaign, the free trade issue was prominent, was of real concern. In fact, it is difficult for me to convey to the House in words the depth of the feeling on this issue.

Time and time again, people spoke to me of the difficulty they were having in understanding the issue. From one day to the next they would hear arguments pro and con, and both would sound convincing, with the result that it was difficult to draw any clear conclusion.

The problem for the people of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception, and for me, and for all of us here today, I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, is that it is indeed very difficult for any of us to draw any conclusion in respect of the free trade issue given that we are dealing with future impacts and effects. When one is dealing with what is to happen in the future, one can never say with certainty what will transpire. In fact, it is often the case that, in trying to guess the future, one is more often wrong than right in one's predictions.

In speaking to my constituents about the Free Trade Agreement, I explained to them that we are dealing with the future and that I did not know what the future was going to bring. In fact, in respect of the stance taken by any Member of this House, it can only be said that one cannot know what the future will bring.

An Hon. Member: Prosperity.

Mr. Mifflin: In assessing the Free Trade Agreement, we are measuring a risk against a gain.

In my riding, there are 226 communities, all of which rely on fishing for their livelihood. And fishing, as all Hon. Members will know, is a seasonal occupation. As well, there are no certainties as to the catch. The fishing season, depending upon the licence one holds and the area in which one is fishing, ends sometime in August and resumes in the spring. The result is that unemployment insurance benefits, subsidies of one sort or another, and regional development programs play a major role in those areas of the country where fishing is the economic mainstay.

In those circumstances, it is little wonder that these people should be concerned about their future; it is little wonder that they should be concerned about the fact that subsidies are as yet undefined under the Free Trade Agreement; it is little wonder that there is a great concern that the impact on Canada's social programs is unclear, as is the impact on regional development programs.

In the course of the campaign, I had great difficulty in explaining to my constituents that, in the words of our chief negotiator, we ran out of time in trying to negotiate the definition of what is a subsidy and how regional development programs will be treated.

How does one explain how we could have run out of time for something so important to the people of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception and to the people of many other ridings in this country? How can you run out of time for something that important? Why not ask for more time? Why are we running out of time in this debate? Who said January 1? We are answering to the President of the United States. We do not want to offend him. That is why we are having this debate and closing it off. That is why I have to go back to the people of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception and say I could not debate the issue to the fullest because I did not have time. Once again, we ran out of time.

Why did we run out of time? Do we not control what we are doing ourselves? Is this what it is going to be like from here on in? Are we going to be second-class citizens in our own country because we are running out of time? I do not believe we should run out of time. However, it does not look as if my belief is going to hold much weight. It is a little bit like putting your hand in a pail of water and drawing it out again. The pail of water is not much different when you take your hand out than when you put it in. This is going to be very difficult to explain to the people of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception. It is also going to be difficult to explain why I just wasted that glass of water! I guess this can be allowed in my maiden speech.

Mr. Marchi: Another glass of water for the Hon. Member.

Extension of Sittings

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): No, no, save it.

Mr. Mifflin: I want to talk now about other concerns we have in Bonavista—Trinity—Conception. We have concerns about the fisheries. We have concerns about the 50-odd subsidies which have already been earmarked under this deal such as piers, development programs and unemployment insurance. There are many more and some of them are very difficult to define.

I have to go back and explain to the people of Bonavista—Trinity—Conception that there was no time to define these subsidies or the results that will ensue downstream. This is of great concern to me and my constituents and, I would say, to Newfoundland as a whole, indeed all the Atlantic provinces. That is an indication of why there are so many of us on this side of the House today from that part of the world.

I also believe there is a need to address where we go from here. What do we do when all these things happen? What recourse do we have? Are we going to be able to look at the six-month clause and say it did not work and we are going to withdraw? I suggest that is not going to be a very easy thing to do. One of my constituents, when I explained this to assuage his fears, indicated that it is going to be a little bit like taking the egg out of the omelet; very, very difficult. That clause is not a panacea to the 226 communities in my riding or to the fishermen I represent or the other professions in my constituency.

Beyond that we have the issue of other Members of this House who are unable to express their concerns, particularly those new Members of whom I am one, their fears, and the apprehension of those who are watching this debate on television who do not perhaps understand some of the finer points of the rules of procedure. They do not understand why we cannot extend this until later in the year in order to have a better discussion.

Having been through the trials and tribulations, having understood more about what is involved in free trade as a result of the campaign in which many of the issues surfaced, we should now go on and have a more learned discussion in this House on the key issues that surfaced during the campaign. At least we would all be the wiser and be able to understand some of the things that would be discussed here in the House. Yet this does not seem to be the case. We do not seem to have the time and the opportunity to express these feelings.

It is my concern, indeed my fervent hope, that as the business of this House proceeds beyond the Free Trade Agreement on to things like the nuclear submarine program and other issues of vital concern not only to the security of this country but the very well-being of all the people we represent, we will take cognizance of the rules of debate and the necessity for getting up and expressing our views, our feelings, and yes even our emotions. In that way there will be a full debate and an opportunity for a full display so that the mosaic of this country can serve as a backdrop for the tapestry of parliamentary democracy, so that people will feel their representatives have had a fair go in this House of Commons.

I am very pleased to have had this opportunity to speak here this evening and I look forward to speaking at further length, without being limited, about something that is this important now, in the immediate and the long-term future for me, my constituents, my children, and my children's children.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Mr. Speaker, it is the first time I rise in the House during this 34th Parliament, Mr. Speaker. I wish first of all to congratulate all my colleagues from this side of the House who spoke out for the first time today and let them know how great I thought they were. It is an extraordinary Quebec team which spoke out with a lot of enthusiasm and I am looking forward to four great years with them.

If I may, Mr. Speaker, I should like to take this opportunity to express today my sincere gratitude to all my Duvernay constituents who have again put their trust in me for a second consecutive term. I should like also to thank all the business and working people in my riding who supported my Government and my party not only on free trade, but who expressed their satisfaction with the good things and prosperity they have enjoyed over the past four years.

I also want to thank the people of Saint-François, Pont Viau, Saint-Vincent de Paul, Auteuil, Vimont, and most specifically Duvernay which is the very heart of my riding.

Mr. Speaker, I also wish to comment on the waste of time we have seen in the House since Monday, something my colleagues have already mentioned.

The La Presse newspaper carried an editorial this week by Mr. Dubuc, a known Montreal journalist, who remarked that the time wasted in Parliament had become a sort of procedural warfare. I think that this expression perfectly describes the situation. He also said that this type of manoeuvring has caused a loss of credibility.

Extension of Sittings

Mr. Speaker, I must confess that in the past four years I never felt that it was that bad, but our new colleagues today must be shocked when they realize the amount of time being wasted here. This waste of time and loss of credibility—it is a sort of procedural warfare and it also turns the House into a circus.

The Canadian people who have elected us, and more specifically those who elected me in the Duvernay riding, wanted a debate to deal with free trade, so that the prosperity they have experienced over the past four years may continue.

Several of my colleagues who rose before me provided a number of examples; I will not repeat them, but I should like to insist on one of them which I hold dear to my heart, that of gas. When the Right Hon. Joe Clark was Prime Minister of Canada, the Liberal Party used to criticize the Conservative Party which thought that an increase of 18 cents a gallon would put Canada back on the right track again. But they said it was too much and that it ought to be thrown out. What did they do? I would like to set the record straight about the amounts involved. The Liberal Party gave us an increase of $1.01 a gallon. As we say back home: "Hold on!"

Today, Mr. Speaker, after four years, after having abided by an international policy, a policy of cheaper prices, we pay gas 10 to 12 cents less a litre and we now pay 20 cents a litre for heating oil which used to cost 40 cents a litre because the Liberals had increased it from 5 cents a litre. With temperatures like today's, 25 below zero, let me tell you that heating oil is not a luxury in our part of the country. It is a basic necessity and the people surely remember that and they certainly thought, when they marked their ballot, that heating oil at 20 cents a litre is far better than at 40 cents a litre, especially when it used to be 5 cents a litre.

I would also like, Mr. Speaker, to talk about the question periods we have had for the past four days. The Liberal Party, the New Democratic Party keep talking about Gillette. Gillette is shutting down its operations. Here again, the culprit is free trade. Free trade is always the culprit.

I have been hearing for a number of years that Gillette was going to shut down its operations, was going to make, like all good businesses from time to time, small adjustments.

Once again, I refer to an article published in the December 9 1988 issue of La Presse under the signature of Alain Dubuc and entitled "IBM vs. Gillette". I will not read out the whole article, Mr. Speaker, but I think that this man has well summarized the situation by saying: "What is most striking is the extent to which the double standard applies." At the same time we heard the sad news concerning Gillette, we also found out about two major investments planned in Quebec: $550 million for expanding the aluminum plant in Becancourt and $225 million for building the IBM headquarters in Montreal. But none of the free trade supporters had the gall to say that those investments were due to the Free Trade Agreement. Of course, Mr. Speaker, we have to look at the other side of the coin.

I also refer to page 35 of Hansard of December 13, 1988, where the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent), leader of the New Democratic Party, the socialist party, asked a question and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) gave him this very good answer: "My hon. friend brings up some problems with the Gillette company, which is a real problem. But he does not mention the $500 million investment in the Trois-Rivières region in the aluminum sector, which is going to create hundreds of jobs. He does not mention the hundreds of jobs created at National Sea Products in Lunenburg and at Hearn Harbour Terminals in Windsor, Du Pont Canada plans to double its capital spending for 1989 to $156 million. There will be 480 new jobs at a new Cargill Limited slaughter house in High River, Alberta. There are 90 new jobs at Quaker Oats, Campbell Soup, et cetera.

Free trade supporters do not talk about that. I was listening to the Hon. Members earlier today. It is scary to hear them say: "Let the people decide!" We sit here and we vote together. It is a good thing that there is not a tenth party because they would have included it in the total! But they forgot that here it is the number of seats that counts.

But, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell the Hon. Members opposite:

• (1830)

[English]

Let the people decide. Well, the people in my area have decided. Some 54,937 people went into the little box and 61 per cent of them voted for a Tory. They voted for me. They voted for free trade.

I did not meet one person in my area who was against free trade. I campaigned for 50 days without stopping for one. I met up to 400 people per hour in shopping centres. I did not meet one person who said: "Mr. Della Noce, I am against free trade". I met a lot of people who said to me: "I am a Liberal but I want to vote for you guys because you have free trade". I said to the same people: "Well, it's a good idea. Vote for me instead of voting for a Liberal. One thing is for sure. With us you will still drive your BMW, your Mercedes Benz, but if you vote for a socialist you will drive a Lada. That is what you will drive, a Lada or a bicycle". These guys always say that everyone is equal—everybody poor. That is what they want.

Some 22 per cent of the people voted for a Liberal in my area. Some 15 per cent voted for the Associate President of the New Democratic Party. He was supposed to finish first and be the first one to run and win a seat in Quebec. He finished last—poor guy. Now he does not know if it was his fault or his Leader's fault. He will find out.

This is what the socialists are like in my area. I am sorry that they got 15.1 per cent of the vote. They should have received less than 15 per cent so as to lose their deposit.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, a committee traveled for a year. The new Members were just saying that we should consult and then see. But the committee traveled across Canada for a year, spending money. It has been consulting people for a year. The Leader of the Liberal Party and the House Leader tear up everything here. Yes, they do. They spend money to waste time. They tear up agreements. They tear up the Standing Orders. They should be made to pay for the paper they have torn up. It makes no sense to destroy other people's property. All they think of here is to tear up. It does not work. Anyway, they all say the same thing. Even if 150 of them spoke, one would say that they are all of the same school. They all say the same thing.

There is one thing they have forgotten somehow. The reason the country is broke, or almost, is that they were in power for a long time.

An Hon. Member: For 20 years!

Mr. Della Noce: So, if we had to raise taxes . . . I see the Minister of Finance in front of me. Were it not for him, the price of heating oil would be even lower. Perhaps the price of gasoline would be lower still. Gasoline costs 9 cents a litre today. The rest is tax.

Although our Minister had to tax gasoline, it still costs half as much as in 1982. That is something. Of course, no one likes taxes. No one, no politician can afford to try to get elected by increasing taxes.

But even while he raised taxes, this Minister managed to lower prices because he had a good policy. This Minister should have a statue in front of the door here. He has been Minister of Finance for four years and it has been wonderful. So this Minister should have a statue next to John Diefenbaker outside.

An Hon. Member: It would be Michael Wilson!

Mr. Della Noce: Yes, sir! Nothing like it has ever been seen.

We are talking about the motion, Mr. Speaker. If it is in the book, it means we are entitled to use it. Look, it is like giving a policeman a revolver and then telling him not to use it. Come on! It is in the Standing Orders. We can use it. Others have used it before. It is a matter of using it reasonably, at the right time.

Mr. Speaker, I say that we have been elected by the people. Even if the same people who shout in front said:

[English]

Let the people decide. Well, guys, the people have already decided.

[Translation]

It is clear, as the Liberal Party's great slogan goes. It is clear.

Yes, it is clear, all right! There you have it.

[English]

Stay there for another four years and we will see what we will do with those guys afterwards.

Ms. Mitchell: Fifty-seven to 43.

[Translation]

Mr. Della Noce: And when I hear my . . .

You are pretty, Madam, with your blue dress, but you are not in the right party. You are a socialist.

When I heard the leader, the House leader who has left, my friend the House leader say that if the Prime Minister of Canada had confidence in this approach with the Americans, why would he not call an election. You were spoiled. It is done! Do you want us to call another election?

That was the phrase the Leader of the Liberal Party had. We have 10 pages of his quotes. "I will stand by the people's judgment." The people have decided. Why do you not stand by their judgment, Mr. Leader of the Official Opposition? Why not let Canadians decide the matter? They decided it where I come from, 61 per cent in favour. That is clear. That is easy to understand. It does not take a chartered accountant to understand that. Even if we combine the votes for the NDP and the Liberals in my riding, they still have only 35 per cent. So they would still have to double their numbers. Even if I gave them 20,000 more, they would still be behind. Would you believe it?

Let the people decide, and they did decide yes, and we have to do something about it because in my area there are people already doing business with the United States and they are very happy about it. They want to continue and do more business. In my area there are people who are doing some sort of secret military pieces for the U.S. Defense Department. For example, in my area——Quebeckers. You will never be able to compete with the Americans. We are being disparaged, run down as unable to compete. Sure we can compete. We already have one up on them. I think of Mr. Péladeau, of Péladeau-Québecor, one of the greatest businessmen in Quebec. He said: "Only weaklings are afraid of the Americans. Let the Americans come. We do not fear them. We will bring them here." That is the way he talked publicly about them. He said: "I had to get involved in the election campaign because the Liberals make me look as if I were afraid." The first thing that man, Pierre Péladeau, had to do when he started a business, Mr. Speaker, was to sell his mother's piano to get his first printing done.

[Translation]

His mother asked him where was the piano when she returned. He told her he had sold it, that he had started a printing business. That is how Mr. Péladeau got started. Today, he has a turnover of $2 billion. He takes over companies, he operates in the United States. He is not afraid. Quebeckers are not afraid. If they ever were, that was before my time. They are no longer afraid. Stop saying we are unable to compete, that we are afraid. I worked in the United States and did business there. I was a leader back home. I was not afraid of the Americans. They invited me back to make speeches later on. We gave them advice on "how to sell products". If we listened to both Opposition Parties we would say that is not good, we are not able to compete and we will be swallowed whole. That is not true. We can compete.

Our workers have the ability, and if you study the hourly rates, and the trade union activities, and what not, you will see that, give or take 60 cents, we have about the same hourly rates. But as I heard someone say during the campaign, "I have a good union, but I would rather have a good job than a union membership card. I have been on strike for six months". And then I saw my good old friend Louis Laberge hugging the NDP leader, like two people in love, while the latter was campaigning in my constituency and posing as a trade-unionist. But let me remind you of something though. The NDP leader did not solve the Canadair problem. We, in the Progressive Party, did. Mr. Laberge should have been hugging Brian Mulroney. The NDP leader did not put an end to the Bell Canada strike. Mr. Laberge should have hugged the Minister for Labour here.

But, no, he hugged a politician who, to me, is the Bob Hope of politics, because they are what we called funnies. It is funny how they never tell the truth. They are scaring people. They are funnies, they put on a show. But, in my constituency, people need more than a show to live. They need money. Those people have to live, to eat, and they want some means of transportation. They do not want to pay too much for all of this, and they want a little more, because they are affluent people. They are all in favour of progress, and when they come to see me, we shake hands and say "Progressively yours". Because we always want more. As you know, Mr. Speaker, when I came to this country as an immigrant, my family had nothing. We have never known fear. We had to get rid of fear. When we first got here, we were given the worst jobs possible, jobs nobody else wanted to do. People often claimed that we were stealing jobs from Canadians.

They were wrong, they did not understand then that we had come here to build Canada along with them, and today, I am proud of the community I represent, and I take pride in saying: "Not only have we helped build this country, but we even own part of it, and proudly so". I say come to Montreal, come to Quebec City, and you will find that we lose no time in parades, marching away to the call of union leaders and for organized workers. We were in the ditch when we first arrived but we worked hard and succeeded, and today, we feel content.

Being a Canadian is a privilege, so my colleagues and fellow citizens tell me. It is truly a privilege, indeed, to be a Canadian. They were insulted to see people being admitted into Canada without having to wait in line as we had to do, for immigration admission. Today, we now are thankful to Canada for accepting us and giving us a break. I know I am speaking in the name of all Canadians of Italian background and other ethnic groups. Our message is now: "We want a little more. We are not afraid, we like it, we know what pleasure is all about and we request a little more. Give us free trade and we will go to our large customers, our friends next door, and enter the biggest market in the world".

Extension of Sittings

Mr. Speaker, I wish to call your attention to Italy, my home country. Before becoming part of the Common Market, Italy was called la pecora ch  zoppica, in other words, the lame sheep. However, since joining the Common Market, it ranks fourth only behind Japan, the United States and West Germany; it is now the fourth best producing country in the world, after West Germany, Japan and the US. This is not bad, as you know. It is like being second to Wayne Gretzky; you are a pretty good hockey player when you are second only to Wayne Gretzky. And you are not only good, you are the best. Or second to Mario Lemieux who, incidentally, played in Laval, in my riding. He is a product of my riding. My colleague for Prescott—Russell . . .

Mr. Boudria: Glengarry—Prescott—Russell!

Mr. Della Noce: . . . for Glengarry—Prescott—Russell (Mr. Boudria) will know that Michael Bossy and Mario Lemieux are both from Laval, more precisely from Saint-Vincent-de-Paul—Duvernay, in the Province of Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to end my remarks by telling my constituents . . .

Mr. Boudria: So soon!

Mr. Della Noce: I know that my colleague from Glengarry—Prescott—Russell will miss me, but it doesn't matter because his friend will be back soon and we will be able to discuss this further. It is serious business; we have to get out of here with free trade because that is why my constituents elected me with a 61 per cent majority. It is more than . . .

[English]

Let the people decide. The people have already decided. They want it and they want it badly.

Ms. Dawn Black (New Westminster—Burnaby): Mr. Speaker, at the outset, as a new Member in this House, I want to make it clear to Members on the other side, after some of the comments made by the previous speaker, that I am proud to be a New Democrat. I am proud of the Party I represent. I am proud to be here in this House representing the men and women of New Westminster—Burnaby, British Columbia as a Democrat. I am also very proud to follow in the tradition of other great New Democrats like Stuart Leggatt, who represented my riding, and Pauline Jewett, who was here in this House before me.

As a new Member for New Westminster—Burnaby, I share with new Members on both sides of this House a responsibility to the men and women who have elected me. The men and women from my constituency have entrusted in me their confidence to represent their interests here in this Parliament of Canada. It has been a difficult week for all of us, more difficult perhaps for some of us who have managed to have accidents. Perhaps it has been most difficult for the 126 new Members who have had to contend with a number of new experiences as they come here to Ottawa. It has been difficult to find office staff and to get set up, to get installed in our office. It has also been difficult to try to learn the rules of this House. So it is with a sense of sadness that I watch the Government opposite attempt to change those rules that we are all trying to learn right now.

I listened to the Members on the Government side tell us that the debate on the trade deal has already taken place. However, I would remind Government Members that this is a new Parliament. There are new Members here who have not had an opportunity to debate this major economic change, or economic disaster, for Canada.

During the election campaign, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised Canadians that social programs would not be threatened under this deal. He promised Canadians that there would be no threat to the protection of our environment. He promised that regional development programs were not threatened. But a majority of Canadians are still very concerned. There are amendments that could be introduced to this deal which may ease the deep concerns felt by a majority of Canadians. We have an obligation in this Parliament to address these and other concerns that Canadians have with the trade deal.

Canadian women have a right to know what impact the trade deal will have on them. Many of their questions are still unanswered.

I was elected by the men and women of New Westminster—Burnaby, to represent their interests here. My constituents, in contrast to what the Member opposite said, are overwhelmingly opposed to this deal, as are the majority of the people of British Columbia.

Extension of Sittings

Yesterday, the Minister responsible asked why the Opposition is stalling the passing of the trade deal. As I said earlier, during the election campaign the Conservatives made commitments to the people of Canada. They made commitments on social programs. They made commitments on environmental protection and on regional development programs. These commitments must now be enshrined in the House through this deal.

Democracy does take time. We must take the time to debate this legislation fully and to know that we have brought forward the concerns of our constituents and the concerns of Canadians.

Mr. Greg Thompson (Carleton—Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I will ask your indulgence for a degree of latitude as it is my first speech in this magnificent House. I want to thank the people of Carleton-Charlotte for allowing me to take this seat in the House. I am very grateful for their support.

Also, I want to thank the gentleman who preceded me, Fred McCain. He is a man who spent 36 years in elected office, 12 of them here in Ottawa representing the people of Carleton—Charlotte. I know that Members who are in the House today and were here in the last Parliament have a high degree of respect for Mr. McCain and the job he did, not only for his constituents but for the people of Canada. Let me point out to the people of Carleton—Charlotte that that is exactly what I want to do as a Member of Parliament in this House.

The geography of Carleton—Charlotte is unique. It is one of the most diverse ridings in all of Canada. Carleton—Charlotte is situated in southwestern New Brunswick and takes in three Fundy islands in the Bay of Fundy, Campobello, Grand Manan and Deer Island. There are many fishing communities within the riding of Carleton—Charlotte. As we walk through the riding we can go through some of the most famous farm area in our country, which is of course, in Carleton County where the potato belt is perceived as the biggest and best in the country.

Also in our riding is a very high number of forestry workers. They are very hard workers. I believe they deserve the very best from the Government of Canada, and that is what we are debating at the moment. I sincerely believe that the Free Trade Agreement will benefit our riding more than any other riding in Canada.

It is for that reason that the Premier of my province, Premier Frank McKenna, who happens to be on the other side of the political fence, is very supportive of the Free Trade Agreement. He has gone on record in the last number of years as being supportive of that agreement.

He supports that agreement for one very simple reason. It will help the people of New Brunswick. I realize this made it difficult for a number of Liberal candidates in New Brunswick during the past election, but I respect Mr. McKenna in standing up for what he believes and transcending the political barriers, which I think all honourable people in politics have to do from time to time.

When one analyses the arguments we have heard today and in the past number of days, one must ask whether they have really changed significantly from the arguments used in the last Parliament. I believe the arguments have not changed, but are the same and are based on the same shallowness as they were in the last Parliament.

Let us examine what Members of the last Parliament did in relation to the Free Trade Agreement and the hours spent on that agreement. There were 8 days, or 35 hours devoted to debate on supply motions. The External Affairs Committee spent 24 days or 120 hours in debate. It spent four days, a total of 18.5 hours, on Government motions. At second reading there were five days of debate, for a total of 28.5 hours. These debates were on essentially the same agreement.

A total of 16 days, or 87 hours, were spent in legislative committee. At the report stage a total of five days, or 27 hours, were spent in debate.

There was a total of two days or 15.5 hours of debate at third reading. In total there were 64 days of debate, or 331.5 hours on essentially the same Bill. Have the arguments changed since last summer? No, they have not. They are the same arguments and the same scare tactics that we heard on the campaign trail. The campaign is over. The opposition Parties should realize that it is over.

I want to point out to the House some of the statements that were made by the Leaders of the Opposition Parties in relation to this Free Trade Agreement. Let us begin with the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) who said: "The Government's trade deal with the United States is an issue to be decided by Canadians in Canada, debated by Canadians in Canada". It was.

The Leader of the Opposition said: "I have not requested the Senate to reject the deal". He said: "I have asked the Senate to allow the people of Canada to reject the deal". The people of Canada did not reject the deal. They voted for it, as evidenced in the Government today.

Extension of Sittings

The Leader of the Opposition is also on the record on July 21, as saying: "I am ready to stand by the judgment of the people". He said: "Why not let the people decide?" He went on further to say: "Every Canadian is affected by this deal and they have the right to decide. Why does the Deputy Prime Minister of Canada not let the people of Canada decide?" They did decide.

The Globe and Mail quoted the Leader of the Opposition on August 6, 1988, as saying: "Should Canadians decide they want this trade agreement I will accept their direction and ensure speedy passage by the Senate".

It is interesting to note what the Leader of the Opposition said immediately after the election, on November 23, as reported in the Ottawa Citizen. "Liberal Leader John Turner said Tuesday his Party will not block free trade legislation, that people have decided they want the deal. They want the deal, he said. The people are always right, Mr. Turner told a few hundred subdued supporters outside Vancouver." Again, on the 23rd, he said "We let the people decide and the people have decided. As for free trade, Mr. Turner confirmed, as he has said often during the past few weeks and in his speech Monday evening, that he would respect the verdict of the electorate."

● (1900)

"The people have made a declaration, we will therefore let things follow their course," he said on November 23. They have not added anything to this debate nor will they add anything to this debate.

Let us take a look at some of the statements made by Members of the NDP and their Leader. On August 10, 1988, the Leader of the New Democratic Party said: "Go to the people now". The NDP Leader stated on August 31, 1988, again: "Take the trade issue to the voters".

I guess the statement that really means the most and the one that really points out the lack of sincerity on the part of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) was the statement made on November 23 by the Leader of the New Democratic Party. He said he has conceded that the anti-free trade forces have been decisively defeated, the Canadian people have taken a decision and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) certainly has the right to continue with the passage of free trade.

Nothing has changed. The argument is the same and the arguments being used by the Opposition are the same. It is almost like we are going through another election campaign right here in the House.

I support the Free Trade Agreement because it is good for Canada. I support it because it is good for New Brunswick. I support it because it is good for my riding of Carleton—Charlotte. Let us get on with the running of the country. Let us get together as Parliamentarians should and hasten the passage of this Bill.

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina—Lumsden): Madam Speaker, I am delighted to take part in this debate, and I must say with certain feeling that since 1968, this is about the sixth time this has happened. Four of the previous times, it happened under Liberal governments.

I sat day after day listening to my colleagues in the Conservative Party condemning the Liberals for doing what the Conservatives are doing now. That only proves something that my Party has been saying for many years. There is no difference. The only difference between the Liberals and the Conservatives, as Tommy Douglas used to say, is that one is in and one is out. Otherwise we cannot tell the difference.

Mr. Horner: Sure can tell you guys, though.

Mr. Benjamin: I know, I hope you can.

I want first to congratulate the Speaker and all of those who are helping him fulfil the onerous task of being in the chair. I know you will continue to do a good job as you have done in the past and that you will treat us with whatever we deserve. I want also to welcome and to congratulate the new Members from all Parties.

I listened to every speech of new Member today, either in the House or in my office over television. The new Members from all three Parties, even the ones I thought were 100 per cent wrong, made excellent speeches. Other Members who have been here for a while and should know better spoke, but they were still wrong. I want to say that I am impressed with what new Members who made their maiden speeches today had to say and how they said it, whether or not I agreed with them.

I want to particularly compliment my hon. friend from Kootenay West—Revelstoke (Mr. Kristiansen) who uttered a key word about the mandate, not only of a Government but of a Parliament and the individual members of it. Each one of us individually has a mandate. I want to talk about the mandate that I have and the mandate that my colleagues and members of other Parties have as well.

Extension of Sittings

The first thing I want to mention is that all of this was totally unnecessary. No matter how the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) handles the Government's business, the Government has the elected right to decide on the order of business. There is no dispute about that. No matter what happens, though, all of us, either individually or collectively, have the right to speak on the mandate under which we are here.

My mandate from my constituents is to get the Government to agree to changes in the legislation that will put into Canadian law, not U.S. law, provisions to protect the people of my constituency and dozens of others in Canada from the bad results of the free trade deal that I and many others think are inevitable. My mandate was to express the views of an obvious majority of my constituents, even the views of those I did not agree with.

I want to say to my hon. friend from Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) that I listened to his speech and I thought he made an excellent speech. I actually enjoyed it, I really did. I want to remind my hon. friend, since we are discussing a motion about amending the rules, that before he was born, a countryman of his suspended all the rules of the Parliament in Italy. The Hon. Member should talk to the older members of his family about when that happened. All the rules of a democratic parliament under a monarchy in Italy in the 1920s, before the Hon. Member for Duvernay (Mr. Della Noce) was born, were suspended. I hope he will keep that in mind because no political Party, the Government, the Official Opposition or mine have the right or even a mandate to play fast and loose with the rules of Parliament upon which we have all agreed. I would not hold still even if it were my Party doing this. I promise you that, Mr. Speaker. When you play fast and loose with the rules that have been unanimously agreed upon, you are on a slippery slope to a one-party state and a one-party government. I kid you not. I say that in order to ask my colleagues from all Parties to keep that in mind.

I said at the outset that I have been here on a number of previous occasions since the fall of 1968. I have listened for hours while great Members of the Conservative Party have spoken and have voted against what the Liberals were doing. I had to sit and watch the same spectacle last summer, at what is being done now is even worse. The Liberals are condemning the Conservatives for what the Liberals did before. What a spectacle. I will not use the words "hypocrisy" because none of us are perfect. None of us are pure.

I can remember when the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) came here in a by-election in 1976. I can remember hearing the Tories rail against the then government of the day, a Liberal Government. They said how terrible it was when closure was brought in. My goodness. In the first place I think my hon. friends, and many of them are friends in this House—

Mr. Horner: Are you afraid of Bob White?

Mr. Benjamin: He is a friend too, especially when I argue with him. When I think of my hon. friends in the Government I would like to suggest to them that they did not, I repeat, did not need to suspend the rules or bring in closure. Some of the fault is on the two opposition Parties as well. But none of this needed to happen. Why, Madam Speaker? I will tell you why. It is because there ain't no deadline.

Mr. Friesen: You would not let us table the Bill.

Mr. Benjamin: The hon. gentleman says that we would not let them table the Bill. We could maybe stop the Tories from doing that for a day, if we are lucky. The Member knows that. I have been here longer than my hon. friend. The whole thing was totally unnecessary because the Government could have just said, "Fine. Take all the time you want", or it could have said "you have to the middle or the end of January". So what. There has already, as I understand it, been an exchange of letters between the U.S. administration and the Government of Canada. If the implementation date is not January 1, but January 31, or February 28 or whatever, so what.

The Government might have been smart to let us run out of gas. The trouble is we found out that the government Members are the ones who have the gas and have the gall to suspend the rules. I exert a word of caution. This is dangerous ground on which we are treading.

I want to return to the whole matter of a mandate which my colleague, the Hon. Member for Kootenay West—Revelstoke (Mr. Kristiansen) mentioned. The mandate that I as an individual Member have and my nine other colleagues from Saskatchewan have is not to be totally ignored whether on the majority side or the minority side. We all have to consider why each of us is here. We must not disregard those who are here for different reasons than I am. I have the greatest respect for the mandate of Members on the Government side. I expect nothing more than the same regard and respect for my mandate.

Extension of Sitings

Let us not get into the numbers game, and let us not be on the slippery slope of suspending the rules of a democratic parliament. It is not needed. It is not necessary. The Government can get its Bill whether it is next week, a month from now or two months from now. The Government still gets its Bill. Why bother? Why create all this unnecessary, unneeded activity about suspending the rules? If we do not have rules that remain in place, we can suspend rules by unanimous consent. We can make changes. We can do anything we want by unanimous consent. In the years I have been here we have done that many, many times.

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes.

Mr. Benjamin: We have suspended one or more rules on numerous occasions.

I am sad that the Conservative Government is just as dumb as the Liberal one was.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: I must say that even the Liberals did not have nerve enough to go this far. The Conservatives have now set a new distance in belabouring, impinging, upon the rules of Parliament and parliamentary democracy.

I want to say something about why we are doing this.

Mr. Prud'homme: I rise on a point of order. I know that the Hon. Member talked generally about Liberals being as dumb as Conservatives. We all have an opinion on that. Is the Member going to announce tonight that he and his Party are going to disband since his leader during the campaign said that we are entering into a two-Party system?

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Member for Regina—Lumsden.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I hope you will deduct that 20 seconds from my time but, in any event, I can recall similar kinds of remarks from various and sundry Liberals, starting with Mr. Trudeau. If my hon. friend is sensitive about the cut and thrust of the campaign before, during or after, then maybe he should go to a retirement home.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, I have another point of order. I would be delighted to retire if the Hon. Member would like to join me.

• (1920)

Mr. Benjamin: I would like to continue by expanding on something the Hon. Member for Duvernay had to say. He may well have a point. I am not sure yet. The Hon. Member agrees that we should suspend the rules of Parliament, suspend parliamentary democracy. Why? Well, because the closing of the Gillette plant has nothing to do with free trade. They have been going to rationalize that plant for the last two years. I will take the hon. gentleman at his word, but I do have a question for him and all other Government Members. If the free trade deal is so good for Canada, if it means so many more jobs, how come that Gillette plant is being rationalized? Why is the plant in Georgia not being rationalized into a plant in Quebec?

I am just an innocent stubble-jumping prairie boy. I would appreciate it if somebody would explain why I cannot find a single plant in the United States or Mexico being rationalized into Canada. Perhaps the trade deal is good, who knows. I will not condemn the Government, far be it from me. However, if it is so good, I would like somebody, anybody on the Government side to explain why the Government needs to suspend the rules of Parliament, and why these plants are not rationalizing into Canada and not the United States, or why Canadian corporations are hiring Mexicans at 65 cents an hour to make components. I would appreciate some answers, and then perhaps I might come onside. Do not bet on it, but I might.

I have a mandate from my constituency to fight to protect the Canadian Wheat Board. Our problem in Assiniboia and Gravelbourg was that the Tories got more of the Liberal vote than we did, which proves my point again: what the hell is the difference?

Mrs. Sparrow: Come on, you can tell the difference.

Mr. Benjamin: Supply management, poultry, eggs, and the Western Grain Transportation Act are down the drain. My friend, the Hon. Member for Souris—Moose Mountain (Mr. Gustafson) knows it. The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has already admitted that the ink was hardly dry on the ballots and it was up for grabs, and he knows it.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I am sorry, I must interrupt the Hon. Member. His time has expired.

Mr. Benjamin: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if I could have the unanimous consent of my good friends opposite for another couple of minutes.

Extension of Sittings

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The House has heard the Hon. Member asking for unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Yes.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I do not hear unanimous consent. Resuming debate with the Hon. Member for Gloucester—Carleton.

• (1930)

[Translation]

Mr. Eugène Bellemare (Carleton—Gloucester): Madam Speaker, it is an honour for me to address today the Canadian Parliament. Since the tender age of 10, I have been living in the shadow of our Parliament. As a child, I have often seen Prime Minister Mackenzie King walking three blocks from my home. When I was 8 or 9, I have seen him strolling by, and a few years later I had the pleasure to meet Prime Minister St. Laurent and, also, Mr. John Diefenbaker, and almost all those who succeeded after him.

I have the honour to speak for the first time in this Parliament and this is a very special occasion for me. Like several other new Members, I find myself involved in a procedural debate . . .

For almost 20 years I had the privilege of working at the municipal and regional levels, in the Ottawa-Carleton region, and procedure was often discussed, but it was quite simple.

Nobody was ever denied the chance to speak on the matter. There was always discipline. I have always noted, at both the municipal and regional levels, that people have respect for those who have the floor, that other politicians listen, because when you listen you can always learn something while, if people shout or, even worse, throw insults at each other, they admit to a certain ignorance, in the broad sense of the word. However, when one listens, one always learns something. Since Tuesday morning, I have learned a lot. But I must admit that I am still learning about procedure.

However, Madam Speaker, I would like to do exactly what my constituents asked me to do, that is go to Parliament to speak on various issues. The people who elected me are from the new riding of Carleton-Gloucester. This riding was formed by taking a part of Glengarry—Prescott, that is a section of Cumberland, the major part of the city of Gloucester, that I represented for nearly 20 years, the whole of the municipalities of Rideau and Osgoode, a good part of the city of Ottawa, all of which makes up a territory of 350 square miles with a voting population of over 77,000.

I am very proud to have been elected. I am quite touched by the fact that I was elected by 31 000 voters. I make it a rule of going door to door during election campaigns. But this time I had to cover a larger area than the City of Gloucester and I did door-to-door campaigning in every municipality in nearly every area. Two municipalities, Rideau and Osgoode, were represented by a Conservative MP, as was a large part of the City of Gloucester. As one of the main themes of my campaign, I asked people first what they thought about free trade in general, and then what they thought about that agreement. The answer was simple: everybody was in favour of free trade. They thought it was a good thing, but the public at large or the people I met during my door-to-door campaign or while speaking in public asked: What is this agreement about? How will it affect us? Does it refer to goods only? This particular agreement does not affect goods only, it also deals with services and investments.

Those two items worried people because, you see, Madam Speaker, it is a bit like buying a house and having a mortgage for the first time. A wise person will make sure to have a competent adviser check all the clauses of the mortgage or the selling agreement. Any lawyer will tell you that it is not wise to buy a house or do any other kind of deal without checking the agreement first.

During the election campaign, I had the opportunity to read a lot about free trade. There are many interesting things to know about free trade. However, what will be the impact of the deal? This worries people because they do not know what the effects of this deal will be. This is why we need a debate, Madam Speaker. We need to have someone sit down and explain what happens with this deal. We need to go further than to speak to a single politician. If you talk to many politicians representing the Conservatives who are now in government, the NDP or my party, the Liberal Party, you will get three different points of view. And I suppose there are other opinions across the country.

It would therefore be rational, wise and mostly prudent to be able to discuss free-trade and its effects.

I am told that one must have faith. I have faith, Madam Speaker, but not when I realize that this deal could have an impact on the workers of today, that it could adversely affect my own children or grandchildren or those of others. Anybody willing to keep his eyes open realizes that the philosophy and the method of operation in Canada is going to make a 180 degrees turn. Of course, if one takes only into account political aspects, one could totally disagree.

Extension of Sittings

Personally, I would gladly hear more about the motives, the rationale and the possible impact of the deal. I was here all week long, from early in the morning until the last hour, and I listened to everybody. I learned a lot, but what I heard repeatedly from the Government side was mostly that one must have faith. I would like to say to the Government Members that I indeed have faith. I do have faith in my Parliament. I do have faith in free trade. However, as far as this trade deal is concerned, you could give me a chance to listen to your arguments. I would also appreciate hearing those of the socialist party and having a chance to listen to my colleagues. To sum up, I would like to be able to go back home and to explain to my constituents that such and such a clause is a good one or that another one is weak or harmful. So I wish I could do that. For the time being, however, I cannot, because of the procedural problem, Madam Speaker. I cannot do that, because nobody seems willing to sit down with me or rise in the House to provide me with explanations.

Often what I hear, Madam Speaker, is nothing but gibberish and shouting, which astonishes me a lot. I am still looking for substance. I have not found much of it to this day. I have heard a lot of noise. Sometimes, the House reminds me of the Granby Zoo. When I look at some of my hon. friends opposite—I hope they will take it in good part, Madam Speaker—I think they look like a bunch of trained seals making a lot of noise and swinging their arms about.

I am sorry, Madam Speaker, but I am much more eager to hear arguments than noise and sounds. I hope that next week the Government will give me and my colleagues—I mean all Hon. Members, including even the learned and experienced ones—the possibility to hear arguments in full, that we may vote in confidence and follow the dictates of our conscience. The important thing is for one to be able to vote according to the dictates of one's own conscience. I know that it is necessary to inter-pact matters in accordance with one's Party, but it is a question of trust and conscience.

In view of the fact that this is my maiden speech in the House, Madam Speaker, I greatly appreciate the kindness of all the Hon. Members who are now present in the House. I wish them to know that I appreciate their courtesy and attention. I find the Hon. Members sitting in front of me most gracious and I thank them for listening to what I had to say. I promise that when I have an opportunity next week to listen to them, I will act likewise, pay very close attention to their arguments and extend to them the same courtesy of not talking during their speeches. I want to be able to tell my constituents that I voted on the basis of what I learned, understood and according to my conscience.

• (1940)

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Madam Speaker, since this is the first opportunity I have to speak since November 21, 1988, I would like first to congratulate all my Conservative colleagues who succeeded in conveying the message of this Government from one end of the country to the other. Our party is the only one representing all of Canada and for that I congratulate my Conservative colleagues.

I also want to congratulate some Liberal colleagues who owe their election to their own personal qualities since their party's program had neither content nor good sense. Among them are good people. So I congratulate them also and will abstain from making any comment about the third Party that sit on my right here in the House, Madam Speaker.

I also wish to thank the people in my riding of Lévis who elected me with a 50 per cent stronger majority compared to that of 1984.

I must tell you, Madam Speaker, that the people who elected me represent, and this might surprise some people, the union movement. During the last campaign, union leaders made speeches in my favour to the detriment of the socialist party candidate. They came out in support of the policies of my Government because they realize that, under this Government, jobs are being created and that jobs provide their livelihood, their weekly pay. I also got the support not only of business people, of workers, of consumers, but of major cooperative institutions like the Mouvement Desjardins, which manages assets of $35 billion. I therefore got the support of the co-operative movement.

I also got the support of senior citizens who understand that pensions are here to stay provided that the labour force can go on making money. There is nothing sinful about making money. The men and women in the labour force, people who are 30 to 65 years old, have to make money to pay for senior citizens' pensions, to pay for young people's education and to help those who are permanently or temporarily in need. I got the support of senior citizens.

Extension of Sittings

I also got the support of young people because the ones that leave university or college realize that there have been jobs in this country since 1984, and that is the reason why they supported me.

Finally, I had the decisive support—the kind of support all Conservatives had—the support of the community and of the people who sign the pay cheques of working Canadians, and I mean business people, chambers of commerce, those who know what exports to the United States mean. I got their support and today I want to pay them public tribute and thank the residents of my riding.

Now to get back to the issue at hand. Here we are again trying to re-open the debate of the famous question of free trade, a question we are debating for the information of new Members, a question which is the topic of debate by the House and by technocrats, a question which was raised during the last campaign. Canadians who want to listen and learn have been able to get all the facts about free trade over the last two and a half years. And before the election the Leader of the Liberal Party (Mr. Turner) had said to them: Let the Canadian people decide.

As it happened, the socialist leader shared his views and he too could hardly wait for the election call. The Liberal leader had said: Once the people have decided, the senators, my Liberal senators, the senators appointed by Trudeau and others, will say yes if Canadians say yes. The day after the election, Madam Speaker, we heard the Liberal leader say: Yes, everything is fine now, Canadians have spoken. We also heard the socialist leader say: Yes, Canadians have made their choice, we will not stand in the way of that legislation. But then something happened.

They received a letter, Madam Speaker, an eight-page letter from the man who pulls the strings, from Bob White, president of the Canadian Auto Workers, who can order them around, because he spent $2 million dollars towards their campaign. His union financed a third of the socialist election campaign, and that amount of $2 million dollars does not include all the equipment, material, stationery, telephone lines, and personnel provided. They will deny it, Madam Speaker. But you will only have to look at the report that will be tabled by the chairman of the Election Expenses Committee in a few months. They will maximize all those services provided under the table in order to get from the Government all the subsidies, that is all the money they can, to finance their election campaign. On the one hand, they pretend that they received no support from the various unions, and on the other hand, after the election, they maximize all their campaign expenses in order to be able to beg for money from the Canadian Government.

They maximize what they claim to be election expenses. So, they received a letter from Bob White which changed their whole attitude. They also got a letter from the Steel Workers' Union, the most important union in Canada. Those two unions expressed their dissatisfaction, saying that free trade will cost them their jobs. But Bob White's people are the best paid workers in Canada, the only ones who have been enjoying certain advantages linked to free trade, since 1985.

So, Madam Speaker, as you see, we got a very clear message from the electorate. On November 21st, Opposition parties said: If the vote is in support of free trade, if you Conservatives are re-elected, we will expedite the bill. But today they contest that, suggesting that the people did not all vote for free trade. Maybe the majority did not support free trade. The majority supported the Conservative Government. It told us Conservatives: Thank you for providing us with excellent management! And indeed we just saw that in the Auditor General's report the management of Government departments has significantly improved—they should be listening, Madam Speaker, because it is for their benefit that I repeat this—a significant improvement in this Government's management. Coming from the Auditor General of Canada. People thanked us for that. People thanked us also for facilitating the creation of 1,300,000 more jobs in Canada—1,000 jobs per day under a Conservative Government. They said thank you on November 21.

People thanked us on November 21 for achieving national reconciliation, Quebec's return to this great country. Everyone supported then the so-called Meech Lake Agreement. But since then the socialists' pettiness has become evident across the land because they are once more bent, on dividing the country, being dissatisfied with the elections results. They are aiming at preventing Quebec from being a living, contributing part of this country. Such is the essence of their message, the thrust of their actions.

Madam Speaker, we received a vote of thanks for Meech Lake and national reconciliation, and we hope that those people over there will rise above petty partisanship and help us complete the finalization of that matter with the two last provinces.

Extension of Sittings

And finally, Madam Speaker, Canadians said yes to free trade on November 21 1988 because free trade means sustained economic growth for our Canadian businesses. That positive response came from business people, consumers, the farming community—withstanding the position of one farming union—the farming community and I am referring to co-ops, those groups owned by Quebec farm producers. I am referring to the co-ops that said yes to free trade. And those co-ops each year in Quebec produce $3 billion in income for farmers. I would rather listen to those people than to the leader, the star of the Union des producteurs agricoles which, because it is entitled by law to collect $150 every week from its members, is meddling in the affairs . . .

An Hon. Member: Speak on the motion!

Mr. Fontaine: Madam Speaker, I am going to suffocate. I can hear alcoholic ramblings from here. I do not want to hear them any more.

Madam Speaker, cooperatives such as the Mouvement Desjardins and the big banks have supported us in our fight for free trade. We are a responsible Government and we want to meet our January 1, 1989, deadline. We want to finalize our agreement with the United States. We can tell you, Madam Speaker, that it is important because we have seen what happened last week in Montreal at the GATT negotiations. The Opposition Parties have always said that GATT was going to solve all our problems.

They have been proven wrong, as we have seen how difficult it is to come to an agreement. It is a lot more difficult with 93 countries than with two. So, Madam Speaker, we are going to govern and pass the free trade legislation. And those who claim that some businesses have closed because of free trade are wrong! And I ask the people who make those claims to explain why Du Pont has decided to invest in Canada $160 million this year and $320 million next year. I would like to hear about that. I would like Hon. Members to say that it is due to free trade because it is true. I would like to hear why Alcan has decided to invest $500 million, that is half a billion dollars, this year. I would also like to hear that, next year, Alcan's capital spending will amount to $1 billion.

Sixty plants in my riding, Madam Speaker, want to export more to the United States and need better guaranteed access to that market. In our close to 300 ridings in Canada, 18,000 small and medium businesses are best able to adapt rapidly to free trade, need that assured market in the United States and want it immediately.

That is why Canadians must be given that agreement and we must pass this legislation quickly, despite the orders of backers such as Bob White and company who are the first beneficiaries of free trade in Canada because, and this is something I am proud of, they have been living in a free trade climate since 1965. It is urgent that all Canadians and people in the riding of Lévis benefit from that climate. Thank you, madam Speaker.

[English]

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Madam Speaker, I rise to speak on the amendment to the motion before us, which may come as some surprise.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): What is it?

Ms. McLaughlin: My colleague asks what it is.

The motion before us, as you know, Madam Speaker, proposes to change significantly the parliamentary rules of this House and, in particular, to suspend the rules to ensure that there is no particular time limit concerning the specific Bill at hand. With the amendment we are talking, of course, about Bill C-2.

Under the motion we are told that immediately upon the House returning, and I quote from the motion, "a Minister of the Crown may propose . . . a motion to rescind this Order." We are therefore looking at a motion which proposes, perhaps indefinitely, to suspend the rules of the House. I think that is totally unacceptable.

By having the House sit continuously for an indefinite period of time we are not allowing, in my view, the due process as I have come to understand it, that is, the democratic process. Simply specifying that this concerns Bill C-2 only is certainly an improvement over the original motion, which was that it would include all Government Orders. However, it cannot be supported because to support the amendment would be to support the over-all thrust of the motion, which is to suspend the rules. Therefore, it is an insupportable amendment.

One of the most serious points about the motion in my view, having had the opportunity to participate in a couple of legislative committees, is that under this motion the legislative committee process would be suspended and we would go into Committee of the Whole.

Extension of Sittings

In my view, and from my brief experience in the committees, I would say that is the place where we are able to obtain information from expert witnesses, as my colleague from the Liberal Party said, as well as from a variety of groups which are involved and have information on the topic in a variety of perspectives, they being political, business and academic. In this case, since we will be talking about Bill C-2, that perspective would also include economists. Surely it is important in maintaining the democratic process and in ensuring that we respect the traditions of Parliament that Members of Parliament have the opportunity to avail themselves of the best information that is available on which to base their final decisions.

Again, since we are talking in this amendment about Bill C-2 specifically, I think there is a particularly important reason that we cannot support this motion and this amendment as it refers to the trade Bill. The Trade Committee which did travel prior to the end of the last session of Parliament was clearly inadequate. First, it did something in the order of 10 capital cities in nine days. It never even went to the Yukon and had but a brief visit to the Northwest Territories. Clearly it was not soliciting information, the type of comprehensive information on which such very serious decisions about the future of Canada should be made.

The free trade Bill is not just a simple change in legislation. It is a change in the thrust of the country. All along in the process there has been an attempt to cut short debate and consultation with the public, after which we went into the election campaign. What one saw initially, if one followed the polls during the campaign, was that there seemed to be a fair amount of support for the deal as people understood it, but the more people learned about the deal, the more that support decreased. The more the support for the deal decreased, the more we seemed to see an increase on the Government's part to speed up to close debate, to ensure that no more witnesses come in to speak about it. In other words, there appears to be a determined effort to narrow the range of information available, not only to Members who make these decisions, because legislative committees certainly have publicity, but to others.

I certainly found, as I am sure many Members here found during the election campaign, that the more information electors sought, the more confused they became. What was most clear was that virtually everyone I talked to, those who thought they were for it and those who thought they were against it, felt they did not have enough information. It is through the legislative process and the parliamentary process that not only are we able to garner information, but we are able to share it with the people who have elected us, and with the public at large.

Many of us have had information from the many reports we have read and so on, as well as from our constituents. In the legislative process we have the opportunity to hear from experts, both national and international, to question them and to fully explore the issues. Not everyone is an economist, a financial expert or a lawyer. We can read the reports, as well as the free trade deal, as I am sure many of us have. The opportunity to be able to examine a witness in a legislative committee would really provide the information on which to base rational decisions which we could convey to our constituents.

I believe that we have all come here to represent our constituents in a manner that is responsible and which shows respect for their views, as well as to share with them the information that we learn. We do that because they are the people who are most affected by whatever actions we take here. I am sure all of us share the common desire to represent our constituency and the issues in the most democratic and knowledgeable manner possible.

One of the ways we have of doing that is through the Standing Orders and the parliamentary processes which have been instituted to make this more democratic and thoughtful and to allow not just Members of Parliament to share their various views but to allow members of the public and experts to share their views as well. It is one of the few opportunities that many people in the public have to make these types of views known in this forum.

There are still many questions left to be answered with respect to Bill C-2, the Bill referred to in the amendment. It is quite clear that the Government has a mandate to proceed, but it does not have a mandate not to go forward and ensure that the public fully understands what is happening. Debates in the committee process would enhance that. This particular motion is an attempt to impede that.

● (2000)

Bill C-2 has many measures. For example, the magnitude of this Bill presents difficulties for the average citizen to understand it, just because of its length. If the Bill goes into effect, as I understand it, it will necessitate amendments to about 27 existing federal statutes, for example the Federal Court Act.

Extension of Sittings

Does the average person know what amendments that is going to require? And, it may have a lot of impact on the average life of many citizens. What about the Bank Act, the Broadcasting Act, the Customs Act, the Canada Grain Act, to name a few? This is one of the areas where we cannot say that we are just passing one piece of legislation. This will affect many pieces of legislation, as well as our relationship with a major foreign power. Surely, there is a fundamental necessity to ensure that due process through Parliament is observed.

It has been said that tyranny is always better organized than freedom. Yes, it is faster to suspend the rules perhaps under, as was said last June when the Standing Orders were suspended, exceptional circumstances. But we all know how quickly exceptional circumstances can become the norm. It seems to me that as parliamentarians one of the obligations we have to ourselves and to our constituents is to be the guardians of the parliamentary and democratic process. If we cannot even ensure that the democratic process will continue through this Parliament, what kinds of legislation we pass may in a sense become quite secondary because in fact we will have tyranny ruling. Yes, it is easier. Democracy takes a lot of time. I believe—and I am sure most Members of this House believe it—that in the end we can have reasoned decisions which will be of benefit to all Canadians.

The rules of order, as I understand them, are not simply impediments to a government and should not be allowed to be seen as such. I believe this is not at all a frivolous debate as some people have suggested. In fact, I believe it is a very fundamental debate about the democratic system. There are countries such as Chile that had a full democracy and now does not. I talked to a number of people from that country who said to me that they would not have believed that democracy in that country could have been undermined, but it was done.

Certainly, if we are not willing to fight for the democratic process to make sure the decisions we so very recently have been sent here to make are made on sound judgment, if we do not fight strongly to ensure that all the information about a particular piece of legislation is made public, we are not doing our duty. This is not a frivolous debate. This is a fundamental debate about democracy and the democratic process.

We have, Madam Speaker, a majority Government. The Government does have a mandate to govern, but to govern, I would suggest, with respect for the minority views. I would also suggest the Government has a particular responsibility to be accountable to the Canadian people. Accountability is that ability to be able to justify the decisions one has made. If this trade Bill is so good as many Members opposite believe it is, that is great. Let us hear the reasons. Let us be able to tell the Canadian people. We know that in the last election 53 per cent of the Canadian people did not vote for this Government. Surely, a Government that respects the people will also respect the democratic process which will allow those people to have the information about what is happening here.

Edmund Burke in 1771, said: "The greater the power, the more dangerous the abuse". I would suggest again that the debate we are having today and tonight is very fundamental, because it is our duty as parliamentarians to guard the democracy and the democratic principles as well as to participate in the serious debates of this country.

While Members of Parliament may disagree about various issues, and assuredly they will, any reasoned examination of the issues, it seems to me, should be supported. We cannot allow, and should not allow exceptional circumstances to arise continually. To support this amendment would be to support changing the Standing Orders. It simply is not supportable to do so. Therefore, when we are discussing the most significant and crucial piece of legislation in 50 years, I as a parliamentarian cannot say that this is an exceptional circumstance.

This is one of the most important events in our history. Surely it deserves full debate, a full legislative process, with the opportunity for all Members to speak to the legislation, for witnesses to be called, and, therefore I would urge that the motion be withdrawn and the amendment be withdrawn.

● (2010)

[Translation]

Mr. Ricardo Lopez (Châteauguay): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to be able to participate in this debate that many call historic, but which, to me, is a debate on the prosperity we will get if we can overcome the ill-feelings and the hypocrisy that has long been spread by our friends on the other side.

Extension of Sittings

First, Madam Speaker, I would like to thank my constituents in the riding of Châteauguay for their trust. Some will remember, Madam Speaker, that in 1984 I was first elected to this place with a majority of a little over 5,000 votes. But in 1988, now that my constituents know me better and have learned to work with me as I learned to work with them, they renewed my mandate with about 2,000 more votes than four years ago. This happened in spite of some comments or some difficulties that my friends opposite tried to create by campaigning in my riding of Châteauguay. This is true, but they did not succeed, and their efforts did not worry me too much. At that time, I said: Listen, they can campaign as much as they want, Canadians do not trust them because they have lost their credibility. Let them come, one, two or even fifty Liberals, they will only get me more votes because they were rejected in 1984. People will not look backwards, they will not go back to the old Liberal ways.

Madam Speaker, as you all know, I represent a rural riding mostly made up of farmers. Some say that the trade agreement between Canada and the United States will be bad for the agricultural industry. Nevertheless, we had a debate on free trade in my riding, opposing myself, of course, and the candidates for the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party who took turns trying to attack the agreement and to spread rumours to the effect that certain social programs would disappear.

They also tried to scare farmers, with the help of the president of the UPA in Quebec. It is he who came to my riding to try and sell dreams to farmers or to scare them by spreading unfounded rumours. But I am happy to inform you that in my riding it is the farmers who export some of their produce to the United States who put their confidence in me and financed my election campaign.

I did not get any financial support from any union or high finance source. I was financed and supported by the grass roots, I mean the farmers, workers and small businessmen and I am both very proud and very grateful to them for that. We even had some new municipalities. As you know, because of the new electoral boundaries, the sizes and shapes of various ridings have changed. So there were four new municipalities attached to my riding. All during the election campaign, I focussed my attention on these new municipalities, because the people there wanted me as their representative, and they followed this example of the other municipalities which are also made up essentially of farmers. They got to know me and I won their full trust.

I am proud today to belong to a Party which has always kept its promises. You will remember that during the summers of 1987 and 1988, the Opposition parties demanded an election. They wanted the Prime Minister to call an election. Sometimes, when we left the House of Commons, we would meet a number of groups on the Hill, probably organized by either one of the two Opposition Parties or even both, that were shouting and waving signs, insisting that Canadians should have an opportunity to vote on free trade.

Finally, the Prime Minister, as you know, decided to call an election. It never occurred to me that free trade would play such an important role in that election. I thought of it as one of our numerous achievements such as good government, the sound management of taxpayers' money and especially, the state of the economy, improved federal-provincial relations, the reduction of unemployment and all the positive things we had achieved during the four preceding years. But opposition parties thought that they might benefit by taking aim at something else. They all focused on free trade. They even suggested that this was a kind of referendum election. What could we do? We had no choice but to play their game and try to explain to the voters the advantages of the Free Trade Agreement.

We also promised that free trade would come into effect on January 1, 1989. And we want to act quickly to keep our word. Some people say: "Why are they in such a hurry?" These people want more debate, they want this and that. But we have been talking about free trade for three years, Madam Speaker. We talked about it in committee, we talked about it in this House, we had debates and a Bill had been adopted, Bill C-130.

But here we are again. Will we talk about free trade for the rest of our lives? It seems to me that time has come for action. Let us act now!

The day after the election, I was really glad to hear the leaders of the two opposition Parties say: "The Canadians have made their decision. The Conservative Party won the elections. We must now accept that fact and we will co-operate to have the free trade agreement come into effect as soon as possible. That is what the Canadians really want."

I was happy to hear that, thought a bit surprised, because we do not often get any co-operation from the other side of the House. But, so be it! If such is the case, they must have changed, they must have understood that we must listen to the Canadians. They must have finally understood that we live in a democracy and that the majority always wins.

Extension of Sittings

Yet, they changed their mind a few days later and said: "No, no, we will do all we can to prevent you from passing this legislation". And they are going to do that even though the Canadian population thinks otherwise. Madam Speaker, is that not an attack on democracy which proves once again how hypocritical the Liberal Party has always been? I think it is. Democracy spoke, and you said that you would listen. I am not all that surprised. When has the Liberal Party kept its word? Never. I would have been very surprised if it had done so this time. During the election campaign, our slogan was "Let us continue in the right direction". I am sure that we will continue and that the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States will be implemented as planned, in spite of all.

As you know, Madam Speaker, I was born in Europe and I had the chance to live in almost all European countries. Some years ago, 10 to 15 at the most, many European countries were importing grains and produce from Canada, United States and other countries. But at one point, they woke up; faster than the Liberals and the NDP. They understood that they had to get together, to open their frontiers to each other if they wanted to develop their trade and production. So, they created what is now called the Common Market, some kind of free trade zone made up of France, Germany and England at first, and finally, Portugal. All those countries which were once importing and poor countries have become self-sufficient one after the other. Later, they became exporting countries. Today, they are our competitors. How strange that countries which have been importing goods for decades, countries on the verge of under-development, have been able all of a sudden, and thanks to the EEC, to become self-sufficient and then to start exporting their products. Not to mention that they have become nowadays fierce competitors.

Is it not a clear signal that we should not be inward-looking? I know a country called Portugal. The only way it could open to the world was through Spain and France, two countries 10 times its size. Even so, Portugal should not fear losing its language or its culture, since, as we all know, it has not so far. The people of Portugal speak Portuguese as well as they did 20, and even 50 years ago. None of their cultural or social programs have been threatened, but they have found new wealth.

Portugal, which was not able previously to support even 50 per cent of its consumer needs, is now wealthy and more than self-supporting. It has become an exporting country.

Spain, just beside Portugal, was also an importing country for more than 50 years before joining the EEC. Spain has not lost its language, nor its culture, nor any of its social programs. The Spanish business community is not afraid of competition. Today, Spain still has one of the highest standard of living in Europe. You can imagine the turnaround they achieved! But some people in Quebec, Madam Speaker, say they are going to be swallowed up by the United States because it is such a big country. They are not yet convinced that they can compete with anybody.

We all know about Lavalin, Bombardier, Cascade Papers, the Lamarres. All those people have shown their mettle throughout the world. They are not afraid of free trade. They know what is going on in the world. They know that to get on in life, you have to open up then work, you have to have confidence in yourself. And there are many others like them, the caisses populaires, for instance, which, 50 years ago, were doing business from church basements and, having started from nothing, have today become a huge economic force. Is that not a proof that Quebeckers and Canadians are quite capable of competing with anybody? They have proved it in the past. They will continue doing so.

To withdraw from the world, Madame Speaker, is to diminish oneself. To stop is to move backward. Since, as a country, we must open up to the world, to the future, to prosperity, we cannot withdraw in a cocoon.

Economists will tell you that today a country needs at least 200 million potential consumers in order to assert and develop certain types of expertise, and certain manufacturing and marketing methods. Canada has a population of only 25 million. Although Canadians are productive, although they are clever, they cannot, with a market like ours, a very small market, compete with giants with potential markets of 200, 300 and 400 million consumers. Our Government has understood that. It has understood that, in order to really develop ourselves, we need a much greater market than the one we have now. Some say that we must gain access to the markets of Europe, of Asia, of other continents.

I have nothing against that. I quite agree. We should not limit ourselves. The farther we can go the better it is going to be for Canadians. But let us begin at the beginning, let us begin by what is closest, by our friend. First, Madam Speaker, let us begin by keeping what we already have and putting it in a more secure place. As you would know, American protectionism has been more evident in recent years, particularly last year, and there is nothing we can do about that. But with the Free Trade Agreement there will be a dispute settlement mechanism where Canadians will have the same representation as the Americans. We will be able to have our say and defend our rights. Right now we do not have anything at all.

There is one sector where, for all practical purposes, free trade is already a fact of life. I am talking about the Auto Pact which, through sheer coincidence, happens to be in southern Ontario. They enjoy the kind of economic prosperity which is the envy of all Canadians, and all regions of Canada should be in a similar situation. When I heard somebody mention the name of Bob White a moment ago, a man who spoke against free trade and who was against the Conservative Party, I am not surprised because he is an egoist who rules and says: What is good for me is good for me but only me. He already enjoys the benefits of free trade. His members are already protected under the Auto Pact, but they do not want others to have the same privileges. With the advent of free trade, within a few years the entire country's economy will be growing and flourishing just as fast as it is now in southern Ontario.

That is what Canada means, a Canada fair to everyone! I always dreamed in my youth, in my life, of being able one day to be part of this great, beautiful country called Canada. But today I am doubly proud of this great, beautiful country which is just, fair and open everywhere and to everyone because I am one of those who have such a vision of openness, of tolerance, of acceptance, of prosperity, and when I say prosperity, it is not only for us today; I am thinking of our children's and grandchildren's future. That is what I have sought in my life and what I have found in Canada.

But I am still concerned that not all Canadians have understood this yet. I am disappointed to see the Liberal Party and the NDP opposed to this boost to the economy, to this open-mindedness and free trade. I am disappointed because after all, they are Canadians, but Canadians who have understood nothing, and I hope that one day they will understand and also begin to keep their commitments and their word.

Madam Speaker, do you know that in the past, out of ignorance, I must say, I supported the Liberal Party, in a way, and I must admit—

An Hon. Member:—out of great ignorance.

Mr. Lopez:—and I must admit, it was out of great ignorance. But you know that it is never too late to learn. I found out about seven or eight years ago, but you over there have still not learned! And the way you are going, you will never understand.

Madam Speaker, in 1979, the Liberal Party campaigned on four points: deficit reduction, lower unemployment, lower interest rates and also the business of the 18-cent/gallon gasoline tax. But a few months after they were elected, they did the exact opposite of what they had promised. It does not surprise me at all that a few days ago, they said that they were prepared to cooperate on free trade and today, they have done an about-face and are saying completely the opposite. This is typical of the Liberal Party of Canada and I ask Canadians to get rid as soon as possible of a party that does not keep its word.

● (2020)

[English]

Mr. Ross Harvey (Edmonton East): Madam Speaker, I must confess to you at the outset that I stand here as, possibly, the unhappy subject of a cruel and bitter irony. It is that I, the first, and for four years, the only elected member of the New Democratic Party from the Province of Alberta, find myself seriously considering rising in this House, for the first time, to speak to some degree in favour of a device proposed by members of the government Party.

The Hon. Member for Simcoe North (Mr. Lewis) and the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes) have brought forward an amendment that would seem to address one small part of the overwhelming problem that confronts this House in Government Motion No. 1. The motion proposes to trample on the rights of committees that would otherwise consider Public Bills brought forward in this ostensibly brief session, and the amendment proposes to restrict it just to Bill C-2, the Bill which ostensibly we are here to consider, and no other. In this, it is perhaps a commendable thing, and hence my dilemma, Madam Speaker.

● (2030)

It is important, certainly, that the House defend its rights and privileges. And if in so doing—as the Government seems itself to recognize—errors, grievous offensive errors in Government Motions can be fixed, then we must seriously consider so doing. I think it is to the credit of the Members from Simcoe North and Calgary West that they have attempted, at least, to address one of these offensive errors in limiting the scope of government Motion No. 1. What makes limiting its scope a question very much before the House at this time is the Throne Speech itself which initiated this session.

Extension of Sittings

I would draw the attention of Hon. Members to the third paragraph of Her Excellency the Governor General's Speech in which she said:

"The purpose of this early session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament is to seek your approval for legislation to implement this Agreement as scheduled."

That is a goal, I will not say a commendable goal, but it is from some points of view an understandable one. But in the fifth paragraph of this self-same speech we find this sentence: while this is going on—

"Meanwhile, you may be asked at the present session to consider others matters as deemed advisable by my government."

What we have is a situation in which the Governor General has warned us that we may be facing other public Bills at this session. Hence, again, it is prudent that, if the Government is determined to trample the rights of the House of Commons, the Commons at least attempt to defend itself to the extent of narrowing that elephantine tap dance to the scope of Bill C-2 where, to quote from the motion, we will have a situation in which:

"—the provisions of Standing Order 73(1) and (2) respecting committee stage of Public Bills be suspended,—"

"And that Bill C-2", assuming the amendment to be successful, "be ordered for referral to Committee of the Whole". Thus, presumably, if we do get other Public Bills during the course of this, we have been told, brief sitting for the purpose of considering the trade legislation, we may at least reasonably consider those in the proper committee. Perhaps. The wording remains unclear in that regard, but we must assume the intent of the Government in moving this amendment to limit the effect of the motion to Bill C-2 is that any other Public Bill get the full treatment.

We have an amendment from members of the Government that I, in all honesty, must seriously contemplate supporting because anything that will limit the effect of this iniquitous and offensive resolution is greatly to be considered.

I would in this regard, if I may, draw the attention of Hon. Members to the Bill of Rights. By the way, I do not mean the Bill of Rights of our neighbour to the south. I mean our Bill of Rights, that Bill of Rights, which, by virtue of the British North America Act now the Constitution Act, 1867, granted us the rights and liberties originally taken by the British people as a consequence of the Glorious Revolution of 1688, when the corrupt and venal Stuart King was deposed, and which was enshrined in—and I believe it was the second Act of 1688—an Act Declaring the Rights and Liberties of the Subject and Settling the Succession of the Crown. I would especially draw Hon. Members' attention to a couple of sections of our Bill of Rights, for the time being at least; who knows?

First, the preamble concludes as follows:

"And thereupon the said Lords Spiritual and Temporal, and Commons, pursuant to their respective Letters and Elections, being now assembled in a full and free Representative of this Nation, taking into their most serious Consideration the best Means for attaining the Ends aforesaid—"

It is basically the rights and liberties of the subjects, if I may interpolate:

"—do in the first Place (as their Ancestors in like Case have usually done) for the vindicating and asserting their ancient Rights and Liberties, declare—"

Herein those 13 points which constitute our Bill of Rights, including point number 9 which reads:

"That the Freedom of Speech, and Debates or Proceedings in Parliament, ought not to be impeached or questioned in any Court or Place out of Parliament."

Is it so unreasonable to assert here tonight, Madam Speaker, that, in fact, the otherwise proper proceedings of this House of Commons have been questioned in a place outside of this Parliament, that place being the chambers of the Government?

Have they not decided to restrict the functioning of this House of Commons in a manner unnecessary, but definitely odious, solely for the purpose of depriving those roughly three-eighths of the Members of this House who are here for the first time of the opportunity to consider and debate fully what all sides of the House agree to be the most important legislation placed before it, certainly since the Second World War? If that does not constitute a move that falls at least within the ambit of the ninth point of our Bill of Rights, then I must confess myself greatly surprised.

I would finally point to the conclusion of that section which follows the thirteenth point in the Bill where the Parliament of the United Kingdom in this Act says:

"And they do claim, demand, and insist upon all and singular the Premises, as their undoubted Rights and Liberties; and that no Declarations, Judgments, Doings, or Proceedings, to the Prejudice of the People in any of the said Premises, ought in any wise to be drawn hereafter into Consequence or Example."

Extension of Sittings

The Government of Canada in 1988 in the Thirty-fourth Parliament is doing just that. It is drawing into consequence and example a restriction of the rights in committee of this House. That is not to be tolerated. It is certainly not to be approved by a House that has any respect for its rights and privileges.

I think perhaps I have argued myself out of my difficulties in this regard. Yes, the motion is worthy of contempt and rejection, and with all due respect to the Hon. Members from Simcoe North and Calgary West, any attempt to tinker with it, to render it somewhat the less appalling is insufficient. Only its rejection will do. Therefore, I can in conscience resume my seat arguing now against both the motion and its inadequate amendment.

Mr. Jack Shields (Athabasca): Madam Speaker, first I would like to congratulate you and your colleagues in the chair upon being re-appointed. I would like to congratulate all of my colleagues and friends who have been elected to this House. I welcome this opportunity to bring forward some of my thoughts on the present motion that is before us.

I think one must remember that immediately following the election, leaders of both Opposition Parties said that the people had spoken. An election, a very hard-fought election, took place on free trade. Both leaders clearly stated for all Canadians to see that they would co-operate and that their Parties would co-operate to bring speedy passage to this legislation. Basically they said that because we had formed a majority Government and had a mandate to proceed with the legislation now before us.

• (2040)

I would like to remind Hon. Members and perhaps inform some of the new Members in the Chamber that in the last session before the election this legislation was debated for more than 350 hours at all stages. It was contemplated at all stages for more than 60 days.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): A different Parliament.

Mr. Shields: I hear an Hon. Member say that that a different Parliament. I wish to remind Hon. Members that it passed the House after vigorous debate at all stages.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Closure at all stages.

Mr. Kempling: You were not here, you would not know.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): I was watching you on TV.

Mr. Shields: We sent the Bill to committee, we heard witnesses, and the Bill then went to the other place for Royal Assent. The Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition (Mr. Turner) directed the Liberal Leader of the other place to stop and let the people decide. That was the cry that originated with the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) and his Party and was picked up by the socialist Party. I submit that the people did decide. This Government is the first back-to-back majority Government since 1953, and the first back-to-back Conservative Government in more than 90 years. The question then becomes: Do we in the House have a mandate? Absolutely, we have a mandate to proceed with this legislation.

After the election the Leaders of the Liberal Party and the New Democratic Party were interviewed by the media. They said that our job and commitment was to go back to the House of Commons and co-operate in speedy passage of this legislation.

I wonder what happened between the time of those interviews and now. I would like to suggest that the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition is having leadership problems. He is being stabbed in the back by his Party, and he is going to be turfed out. All of this is speculation. To keep the focus of the Canadian people off what is going on within the Party, they have taken up the charge today because new Members are demanding it. Therefore, we have heard many comments about delaying this legislation and keeping it here.

Why have members of the New Democratic Party returned and changed their tune when their Leader made a commitment to the Canadian people and to all Members of the House that he would provide co-operation and speedy passage? Well, he received a letter from Bob White who said: "I do not like the way you ran the campaign. You let the Liberals get ahead of us and take the debate to the people when we should have, and we should have had more Members." The House Leader of the NDP has stated: "If they think they are going to get this legislation through the House, they can forget about it. We are not going to accommodate them so that they can have early Christmas holidays".

We heard the tone, we knew exactly what was happening, and we saw what happened when we returned to the House of Commons and attempted to seek agreement from both Parties to proceed in an orderly, co-operative manner to get the legislation passed through the House and into the Senate.

Extension of Sittings

The new Member from Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey) rose in the House and stated that it is an offensive resolution. I submit that the resolution is not offensive. What is offensive is the action of Members of the two Opposition Parties who say one thing and then come into the House and do a complete about turn and, through lack of co-operation, force the Government to do exactly what it has done.

The Government has an international commitment. We have signed an agreement that must be in place by January 1. Now we hear the argument that it does not matter. January 1 is a deadline, but we can still carry on for another couple of months. Members opposite do not recognize, will not recognize, or even admit that the delay could cause serious problems for Canada and the Free Trade Agreement because of demands that could be made by the United States Government. The delay would put us in a position that we do not want to be in.

The NDP and the Liberals have been against this legislation from the very beginning. Their members campaigned across the country. I do not say it lightly, and I do not say that all candidates did this, but I had cases in my riding where native groups were told that if the Free Trade Agreement went through they would not be able to leave their reserves. They were also told that they would lose their reserves or their treaty Indian status if the Free Trade Agreement went through because of the pressure put on by the United States. I went into a senior citizen's home in High Prairie and a lady I have known since I was a child came to me and said: "Jackie Shields, is it true that I'm going to have to find another place to live, and I'm going to lose my old age pension if the Free Trade Agreement goes through?" Those are the type of tactics we saw during the debate and during the campaign across the country.

Since the turn of the century the Liberals and the Liberal Party have been known as free traders. In fact, they lost a government over a free trade resolution not unlike this one. At that time, my Party led by Sir John A. Macdonald won an election against free trade. During the campaign not all Liberals were against free trade. However, why did the cry go out?

I submit that we saw the spectacle of a Leader attempting to save his job. I say that with some hesitation, but I felt it. I also felt it was a rallying cry. They saw that there might be a possibility that, rather than ending up in third place in the House and sitting as a rump, they could at least gain official opposition status. We saw all the old timers come back on the bandwagon when they thought that perhaps this was working. We saw the Lalondes, the Chrétiens, and the rest of them.

The old gang came back because they thought that they might just get in there.

I understand why the NDP were against it. If I were a socialist I would also be against the Free Trade Agreement, and I would have no bones about it. However, I would stand up and say exactly why I was against it. I would not use the scare tactics that I saw during this campaign that said to old age pensioners that they were going to lose their pensions, or to the people who depend on health care, that they were going to lose that, or that the United States would take over all our energy supplies and have total access to them. All of those things we know not to be true, the good solid scare tactics.

• (2050)

The NDP, being socialists, are afraid of the Free Trade Agreement. The aim and objective of that Party is to have Canada be a socialist country, and that is an aim and objective that I could understand were I a socialist. But, that is the objective the New Democratic Party has in mind. It wants big government.

We even heard the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) saying that in the event that they were to form a Government in this country, they would buy back Air Canada, along with some of the other Crown corporations that this Government has privatized.

An Hon. Member: And what about the banks?

Mr. Shields: It is a Party that believes in big government. And, yes, it wants to nationalize the banks. That is its philosophy, and one can readily understand that such an aim and objective would be difficult to achieve in the context of a Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, a country far removed from the socialist philosophy.

The other group that came out against the Free Trade Agreement is the labour movement. But of course the labour movement and the NDP are one and the same. We have Bob White, the President of the Canadian Auto Workers' Union, who is also a vice-president of the NDP. He holds that position not because he has been elected as an NDP Member of Parliament but because, as President of the Canadian Auto Workers' Union, he automatically becomes a Vice-President of the NDP. We also have Shirley Carr, the President of the Canadian Labour Congress, who is a Vice-President of the NDP. One can also look to some of the advisers to the NDP, among whom are executives of the Energy & Chemical Workers' Union and the the Steel Workers' Union. Many of the advisers to the NDP come from the ranks of Canada's unions.

Extension of Sittings

Does the labour movement control the NDP? All one has to do to find the answer to that question is to go back to the last Parliament and examine the breakdown of the votes that took place in this place. When we legislated the railway workers back to work in order to get grain moved off the farms and into the grain terminals for export, who voted against it? Surprise, surprise: the NDP.

An Hon. Member: Unanimously.

Mr. Shields: Unanimously. They did not want to offend the union. When we legislated the grain handlers back to work, again we had the NDP voting against the legislation. They do not want to offend the unions.

An Hon. Member: That is where they get their money.

Mr. Shields: Madam Speaker, I learned a long time ago that if it walks like a duck, if it looks like a duck, if it swims like a duck, if it quacks like a duck, in all likelihood it is a duck.

It is my hope, Madam Speaker, that the people of Canada recognize that we on the Government side are not going to accept an attempted filibuster, an attempted delay in getting this legislation through. We want this legislation passed so that we can live up to the international obligation that we have entered into with the United States.

We hear the criticism that we do not have a mandate to enter into the Free Trade Agreement on the basis that, in percentage terms, more people voted for the other Parties than for the Progressive Conservative Party. Yet, we formed a majority government.

Let me take people's minds back to the debate on the Constitution. The Prime Minister of the day, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, did not have a mandate to patriate the Constitution, beyond the fact that he had a majority in this House of Commons. There was not one Liberal Member of Parliament west of Winnipeg. There were two Liberal Members from the Winnipeg area, but none from Saskatchewan, Alberta, or B.C. But lo and behold, Mr. Trudeau struck a deal with the Leader of the NDP. The Leader of the NDP agreed to support the Liberal Government's initiative on the Charter of Rights and Freedoms and on patriating the Constitution, and in that way he at least had the pretence of having a national mandate for his constitutional initiatives, a mandate that he so urgently required at the time.

When the Charter of Rights and Freedoms was first tabled in this House it included a clause setting out the fundamental right to own property. That very night the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) went to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and informed him that if he did not withdraw the clause in respect of property ownership, the NDP would not support it, and the very next day the clause in question was withdrawn.

An Hon. Member: It was Peter Lougheed who wanted that clause withdrawn.

Mr. Shields: I suggest to the people of Canada that they ask the New Democratic Party Members of Parliament why it is that there is not entrenched in our Constitution the right to own property, a fundamental right that should be in our Constitution and one that is in every major constitution in the world.

It is clear, Madam Speaker, why the New Democratic Party is against the free trade legislation. It is equally clear that the Progressive Conservative Government is a government which represents every corner of this nation. We number among our Members, Members of Parliament from every province of the country. We are truly a national party and a national Government. For someone—

Mr. Prud'homme: You have no Members elected from the Province of Prince Edward Island, nor from the Northwest Territories and the Yukon Territory.

Mr. Shields: The Hon. Member is right. I stand corrected.

The Hon. Member always corrects me, and he does so in a courteous fashion.

To get back to my remarks, this Government has a commitment to the people of Canada in respect of the Free Trade Agreement. We have that mandate. We have the first back-to-back majority governments in over 40 years. We are here to get on with the business of government, and not to put up with the delaying tactics of the NDP, who want to re-argue issues that were fully thrashed out during the election campaign.

I suggest that, with all but one Member from the Province of Alberta, we speak for Alberta, and I think the position of Albertans is very, very clear. I suggest that the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey) check with the people of Alberta before he again stands up and talks about this process being offensive. It is not offensive. What is offensive is the delaying tactics being engaged in by the NDP.

When this legislation was debated in the last Parliament, I witnessed opposition Member after Member stand in this House and read off petition, after petition, after petition. As well, they would adjourn the House and do everything they could to delay the business of this House of Commons. That is the behaviour that is reprehensible.

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Madam Speaker, it is difficult to sit here and listen to the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Athabasca (Mr. Shields)—who is the only veteran of the Korean War sitting in this place I might add—remind us of the delaying tactics that we in the Opposition use from time to time in the light of the tactics engaged in by his Party when in opposition. I well remember sitting in the Speaker's chair day after day after day while we listened to the bells ring.

An Hon. Member: For weeks and weeks.

• (2100)

Mr. Prud'homme: However, I will abstain from doing so.

I will touch on at least two points. The first is what we should be talking about, this motion. The second is the right of a Member to be heard in this House.

I have sat here for many years, as you all know, and I hope I have learned a lot. I still have a lot to learn and I am about to learn a lot more today. If John Diefenbaker, whose memory I always cherish, was to be in this House today there would be an explosion of anger. If Mr. Nielsen, with whom I disagree totally on his concept of Canada, was to be here he would use every tactic in the book, he would invent tactics, so that what we are about to do would never take place.

It is quite difficult to understand why a government which has just been elected would immediately go to that kind of tactic. I have tried, as I always do, to understand the reason why. Is there something behind the curtain? Is there a motivation? I wonder if one of the main motivations would not be to attract us into an easy trap, one into which we have to fall. We could have abstained but we have to fall in it, that is a procedural trap, by being extremely arrogant and imposing immediately at this time that kind of procedure.

In this way new colleagues will be impeded in putting to Canadians listening to us their view on a very important piece of legislation. Attract them in a procedural debate, they will have to answer, they will be totally upset, therefore we will apply more guillotine and no one is going to talk exactly about what this entente is all about.

If Diefenbaker were here, I tell you he would resent every minute of what the Government is about to do, without a shadow of a doubt in my opinion.

I hear from my friends from Quebec. In Quebec they voted for you, but I may still disagree with what we are about to do. You said, let the people talk.

Mr. McDermid: No, you said that.

Mr. Prud'homme: You said in the House time and time again that we provoke you by saying: Let the people decide. Fine. It so happened that the people of Canada have decided to vote for the Government, yes. I respect the British parliamentary system. It is one of the best systems in the world. A majority of seats was given to the Government. Fair game. However, I have to note, too, that when we said, let the people speak, let the people decide, a majority of Canadians decided otherwise.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: My dear colleagues from Toronto may disagree with me. They will have plenty of time to put their views forward. However, on a piece of legislation of this importance I have to put to you that 57 per cent of Canadians, on one particular issue since the campaign was run on it, disagree. Let the people decide, yes. It so happened that in the Province of New Brunswick the majority voted Liberal. Yes, a majority in Nova Scotia voted Liberal. Yes, in Prince Edward Island a majority of the people voted Liberal. Yes, in Newfoundland the majority voted Liberal. Yes, in the two Northwest Territories seats they voted Liberal.

Mr. Boyer: In Etobicoke—Lakeshore no one voted Liberal.

Mr. Prud'homme: In Ontario, a majority voted Liberal. Yes, in British Columbia and Saskatchewan they voted NDP. The Conservatives barely had a majority of the vote in Manitoba by 4,000, if my memory is correct, over the Liberals. That is quite a remarkable achievement for the Liberals, coming from one seat to almost a majority of the votes.

Extension of Sittings

Mr. McDermid: You now sound like the NDP.

Mr. Prud'homme: You have a majority of the votes in my province and in Alberta.

When we say, let the people speak, do you not agree with those of you who like reform of Parliament, and there are a lot of people here who believe in the reform of Parliament? I happen to disagree often with my House Leader on one of his interpretations of the House rules, and that is fair game, good debate. Yet we have here people who have just arrived in the House, so who speaks more for others? We say, let the people decide, let the people speak up, let the people take their responsibilities. These new colleagues of mine, and they are all here, may like to put forward their views in a few days.

Mr. McDermid: They will have time.

Mr. Prud'homme: And force you really to react and tell us how it is, for instance, that this or this or this is included or is not included in the agreement.

Mr. Dick: Let us get off this motion, then.

Mr. Prud'homme: You may yell as much as you want, but that is the fact that remains.

My friend from Athabasca said we used scare tactics in seniors' homes.

Some Hon. Members: You did!

Mr. Dick: That is truthful.

Mr. Prud'homme: Fine, let us say it did happen. Let us say some Members did it. If you are so sure, my friend from Portneuf, stand up now. If you believe social programs are not included, why not put it in the entente? Put it in writing.

Mr. McDermid: Should we put everything in the agreement that is not in the agreement? Get serious.

Mr. Prud'homme: I knew I was going to touch some nerves. There is the Minister of housing who made the most strange noise during the campaign about people who have no place to sleep. Yesterday he became red and full of anger because we told him what he said during the campaign.

Mr. McDermid: Because it was not true. I did not say it.

Mr. Prud'homme: He is still trying tonight to diffuse me. He will not.

Mr. McDermid: The Toronto Star said it. You get all your facts from the Toronto Star.

Mr. Prud'homme: You yell. You must be very upset. Listen to the Hon. Minister; she is telling you to be quiet.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: And to be cool.

Mr. McDermid: On a point of order, Madam Speaker. I know the Hon. Member wants a break and a drink of water so I am giving him a chance so he can get wound up again.

Mr. Prud'homme: Do not worry about it.

Mr. McDermid: There are two facts that he has had wrong so far tonight in his speech which I think he should correct.

Mr. Prud'homme: This is not a point of order.

Mr. McDermid: Let me make my point of order before you interrupt. She is the Speaker, not you, Marcel. I know you would like to be there. We all know that, but you are not, so I have the floor.

Mr. Prud'homme: On his statement, Madam Speaker, you know he cannot call people by their first names.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Della Noce: Let the people decide. Let the Chair decide.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I wish the Hon Minister would come quickly to a point of order if there is such a point of order.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Speaker, there are two points that the Hon. Member should correct. First, I did not say what he accused me of saying. A newspaper, one newspaper, made an incorrect report. Secondly, the Hon. Minister was telling me that I was doing a great job and to keep it up.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2110)

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): The Hon. Minister knows that that is not a point of order. He could certainly use some other time in debate to correct the record.

Mr. Prud'homme: You understand, Madam Speaker, that I cannot start correcting everything that was said during the campaign. I know that I do not have anything to correct. I was very careful during the campaign to describe things as I saw them. If the Minister was misinterpreted, then it is for him to correct, but certainly not at this time. He should have done so right away.

Mr. McDermid: I did.

Mr. Prud'homme: I still believe that more than 56 of my colleagues in the Liberal Party in the House of Commons have the right to put to the country in the House their views on this most important piece of legislation. It is not a tax law we are about to pass. We may be passionate. We may say that the law should not be passed. But we could live and correct it.

This is an immensely important piece of legislation about which we are talking. Our future is in this piece of legislation. It deals with the way we will be in 10 or 20 years. Should we not be allowed the time that is necessary to consider it? Is it your opinion, Madam Speaker, or is it the opinion of the people who like to listen attentively, that it takes too long to debate a major issue when there are 126 new Members of Parliament? These people must have gathered information. When knocking at doors they must have listened to some dream. They must have had expressed to them some views that they would like to put to the Minister. They might have been asked: "Would you kindly ask the Minister to say yes or no if this is in danger or not?" For example, they might have asked: "Or what is the future of the textile industry? What is going to be done by the Minister responsible for retraining?"

These are very important questions that should be answered in a very cool debate. What is the urgency? My esteemed friend from Athabasca (Mr. Shields) said it has to be done for January 1. However, we all now know that it could be delayed. If it could be delayed, then why could it not be delayed a little bit longer? In this way Members opposite could be satisfied that the House is satisfied that there have been enough explanations.

I will tell Hon. Members one thing. My experience has shown me that when a new Parliament is started in the way in which this Parliament has been, we must understand that it will be quite an unruly House for the next four years.

Extension of Sittings

I was in the gallery on May 15, 1956, when C. D. Howe arrived with a motion which is less rude than the one which is before us. It was a motion that took the Government down. According to the press and to the history of our country, the Government abused the power it had in its hands. The Hon. George Drew and Mr. Coldwell meant well for Canada, I am sure. But the Liberals at that time were impatient, as Conservatives are now impatient. At that time I was a student attending every minute of every debate for months. I was a student at the University of Ottawa. At that time there was the same arrogance, the same urgency that we see now in the Government. If a little bit more time were taken, the due process of the British parliamentary system would have been fairly put to the House.

I did not invent the British parliamentary system. That system taught me great lessons. It taught me the lesson that the House at least must be partially satisfied. The socialists will never be satisfied. Some of my colleagues will never be satisfied. But at least a reasonable group of people will be satisfied that they have answers to questions.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: I believe that the Government has made commitments to the President of the United States. The Government has said: "Don't worry, you will get it for the first of January". There is nothing wrong in delaying this measure and calling the Government of the United States to say that a few more days must be taken in order to satisfy the House of Commons and Canadians. There is nothing wrong with that.

Do Members opposite remember when our esteemed colleague from Châteauguay (Mr. Lopez) who made a speech earlier made a speech in 1984? He is the Member who wants to get away from unemployment insurance. He believes social welfare should be abolished. He believes that the Indians in his territory should be sent to Labrador. Attila the Hun is a socialist compared to him.

Perhaps he likes free trade because in the United States state after state has no protection for the worker. Maybe that is the type of society he wants for Canada. That is not the type of society we want for Canada.

I am embarrassed by debate of that type. I am past 50 like those who try to interrupt me. We are now going to give our consent to a law, immense as it is, as a colleague of mine showed to the House and to Canadians, that will determine exactly the destiny of the country of these young Canadians who come from all over the country to be pages. That is the country we are making today.

Extension of Sittings

Mr. McDermid: That is the point.

Mr. Prud'homme: At least the Minister should listen to arguments. I do not say that he will not get his law. But I would like him to convince Canadians without a shadow of a doubt that it is a good law.

Mr. McDermid: We did.

Mr. Prud'homme: I want him to convince the 57 per cent of Canadians that they may—

Mr. McDermid: Do you believe in the parliamentary system?

Mr. Prud'homme: Yes.

I am not going to make a point of order concerning the language that is being used. If someone is saying that I speak with forked tongue, I remind Hon. Members that in 1984, I did not campaign in Quebec saying that never, ever shall we deindex pensions. I wonder which Party or which person has a forked tongue in this House.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Prud'homme: Hon. Members opposite have talked about the Liberal Party being the biggest bunch of hypocrites ever. Someone said:

[Translation]

The biggest bunch of hypocrites.

[English]

For me a hypocrite is one who may be gentle to you, Madam Speaker, and then go behind the curtain and be less kind. It is someone who may give his word that he will do something and then do otherwise when he has a chance. This is why I am so upset. I will not receive lessons on hypocrisy from people who promise to do something and once they are elected do something else. That I will not accept.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: Tell us about price and wage control.

Mr. Prud'homme: The Minister is the one who claims to be virtuous—I am not. It is Members opposite who say that they are better than us. If they are better than us, then they should stick to their guns and do exactly what they said they are going to do.

I want to try to convince the Government that it has started with a kind of motion that is worse than the C. D. Howe motion. Hon. Members may disagree. Later I would like to send that motion to the Minister responsible for housing who prefers to see people out rather than in. I read the motion today and yesterday and thought that that is why it is good to have some older Members who have good memories. It reminds me of the debate on the pipeline, except that it has come the day after the election.

It is extremely arrogant for people to say: "Listen, we have been elected. You said, let the people decide. They have decided. Now we can do anything we want". It is that disrespect with which we disagree. They are not allowed to do anything they want. They were not given a free lunch to do anything they want now that they are elected. They were elected to be responsible, I put to the House and I put to Canadians. I put to Canadians that to be fair about an important piece of legislation, the Government should give ample time to new Members of Parliament who have just been elected, who have gathered information and who would like to be sure that what the Government is about to do will be the best for Canadians. But how do we know the Government is going to do its best when it takes us to a debate of guillotine instead of saying, what the hell, one week or two or three weeks? The Government will get it passed and it knows it will get it passed.

I will tell Members opposite what I did at the national caucus, and we are not supposed to talk about that. I said, surely it would be well advised for the Senate not to participate longer than the lower Chamber. We were elected and, yes, the Government was elected, but these new Members were also elected and they have a message to bring to this House because of what they feel about it. I say to the great Minister of Agriculture—no, he is not the Minister of Agriculture. He is still dependent on the Minister of Agriculture, the actual one, the one from Quebec.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I have tried to signal the Hon. Member to help him finish his speech. His time has expired. I would need the unanimous consent of all Members.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Extension of Sitings

Mr. Prud'homme: Let my colleagues tell you.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Resuming debate.

Mr. Prud'homme: Madam Speaker, on a point of order. I think I got permission from my friends.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): I did ask the House and I did hear some noes. I was quite prepared to allow the Hon. Member to continue, but I did not get unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Prud'homme: I will respect that, as Hon. Members know. I will conclude shortly and I will finish as harmoniously as I can. I remember that in 1884, I pleaded with the Prime Minister of Canada—

An Hon. Member: 1984.

Mr. Prud'homme: What did I say?

An Hon. Member: 1884.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: Well, I told you I was going to finish on a harmonious note. A great thing happened in 1884, but it will be too long to explain. In 1984, I did not hesitate in one of my speeches to call on the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) directly and say, "Mr. Prime Minister of the country, you wanted to deindex. You see the result". There is nothing wrong with backing off. There is nothing humiliating in backing off. That is the essence of Parliament. You listen, you feel passionately, you say you are going to go ahead with it, then you discover that people are not happy and there must be a reason why people are so upset. It is not because we lost the election.

Mr. McDermid: No, not that!

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Prud'homme: My dear colleagues, look at me, you will see that I am not that unhappy. So to finish on a harmonious note, why would you not reflect during the weekend as you did in 1984, when you saw that you were totally on the wrong track? The Prime Minister of Canada decided, yes, Mr. Prud'homme should be listened to a little bit. There is nothing bad in backing off or, to call it differently, harmoniously trying to accommodate to what seems to be better.

I tell you, Madam Speaker, I am totally convinced, and I will not take too much more time of this House, but I am convinced without a shadow of a doubt that the way the Government is proceeding is not going to produce a harmonious parliament for the next four years, and we will be together to see it. Therefore, it is still time for you Members opposite to change your opinion and to allow more Members to participate. I urge you to withdraw this unbelievable motion that is worse than the C. D. Howe one.

Mr. John E. Cole (York—Simcoe): Madam Speaker, I find it a little difficult to follow some of the debate today when I hear the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) say he wants to give more time to the newer Members. I happen to be one of those newer Members and he seems to want to keep going and going and going.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Cole: I guess when you have your back against the wall that is all you can do.

An Hon. Member: And he has been here since 1884.

Mr. Cole: I am proud to be able to rise in the House of Commons to represent the people of York—Simcoe. The new riding of York—Simcoe is a riding made up of the heart of the Region of York which happens to be the fastest growing region of Canada. It consists of towns like Newmarket, Sharon, Georgina, which happens to be the ice fishing capital of Canada, Bradford, Beeton, Tottenham. In addition to being the commercial centre of the area, it also includes the vegetable basket of Canada, the Holland Marsh. It has many new industrial and manufacturing facilities. It really does represent a true cross-section and is a reflection of the population of Canada.

Fortunately, or maybe unfortunately, my campaign was only four weeks long, but it seems to be going on and on. It was very evident that the people of York—Simcoe, and because that is a reflective riding, the people of Canada, have spoken. They want a government that can lead this country when there are outside forces over which we as a country have no control. They have chosen a Party to form the government which has shown leadership, credibility and, yes, ability.

The Government reached an agreement when previous governments failed. The Free Trade Agreement is all about improving Canada's access to the U.S. market. The Free Trade Agreement increases the access of Canadian producers to the U.S. market through the elimination of tariffs and most non-tariff barriers such as quotas, import restrictions, custom requirements and various taxes, and through stricter rules of origin and non-discrimination for goods and services. This will help companies like Office Specialty, which happens to be in Holland Landing, in my riding.

Extension of Sittings

There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement that will jeopardize the continued operation of Canada's agricultural marketing boards including those for dairy products, poultry and eggs. Other supply management programs can be added, if desired in the future, which is Canada's right under the terms of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade.

• (2130)

Canada's highly efficient farmers, particularly those in the Holland Marsh, produce much more than we can consume. Agriculture commodity exports amount to $4 billion a year.

The Auto Pact is improved. Not only are the already existing Auto Pact incentives and safeguards which guarantee Canada's share of production maintained, but a new North American content standard for foreign firms such as Honda and Hyundai, both new plants in my riding, will continue to fuel the growth of auto parts production in Canada. We can compete with the Americans. I really do not understand why we underestimate our ability to manufacture quality products.

Consumers are the main beneficiaries of the agreement. Tariffs on goods increase prices, limit competition, and decrease selection of consumer goods. For consumers, average savings from the elimination of tariffs on U.S. imports is estimated at $1,800 for a family of four.

There is something in free trade for all consumers. It is not fair to say it will only benefit big business. Consumers will also benefit from more competition once barriers to the U.S. market are finally eliminated.

The Free Trade Agreement provides Canadian industry with effective protection against the unfair or incorrect application of U.S. trade remedy law. The binding trade dispute settlement mechanism provided for in Chapters Eighteen and Nineteen of the Free Trade Agreement will, for the first time, give Canadian industries an avenue of appeal to an impartial, neutral panel of Canadians and Americans.

The Free Trade Agreement's dispute settlement mechanism gives Canada an equal voice in resolving trade disputes and constrains the ability of the Americans to harm Canadian trading interests.

All Government-run social programs, including child care, health care, education, unemployment insurance and welfare, are exempt from the agreement, despite what the Liberals and New Democrats told our seniors during the campaign. If they were at risk I, for one, could not have supported this agreement. However, I know perfectly well from reading the agreement that those things are not at risk.

After the Throne Speech on Monday it was obvious that the Government wished to open up the debate on the Free Trade Agreement and allow everyone, new and senior Members of the House, to speak to the Bill. Nothing else was involved in the Throne Speech, except for the Free Trade Agreement with the United States.

Despite their outcries, the Opposition has done everything in its power to avoid the debate on the Free Trade Agreement. As the Member for York—Simcoe I was hoping that we would have received the co-operation from the Opposition. How naive I am, being a new Member, in believing we could get the Free Trade Agreement discussed and debated.

I believe it is necessary to pass the Free Trade Agreement with the United States. It will be the first step in putting together future trade agreements with other countries. It will lead Canada through the 1980s, 1990s and into the next century not as a country that hides its head in the sand but as an aggressive country led by an aggressive government, sharing its confidence in its ability to compete with anyone, along with the confidence of the people of Canada who also want the opportunity to compete internationally.

Mr. Stan Keyes (Hamilton West): Madam Speaker, I too happen to be a new Member. As far as I am concerned, the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (Mr. Prud'homme) can take all the time he needs to speak ahead of me.

I want to begin my maiden speech by stating for the record that when I walked into this wonderful, time-honoured Chamber I felt as though my family, friends, volunteers who were at my side during the election campaign and the residents of Hamilton West walked in with me.

Following the election night, people asked me how it would feel to be a Member of Parliament. To be honest, I did not know what to say. As the expression goes, it had not quite sunk in.

Extension of Sittings

Let me say to my fellow Hon. Members and everyone at home that I only came to realize that I was truly a Member of Parliament when, during that first vote my heart pumped, the palms of my hands started to sweat, and my knees started to shake because I was about to vote on behalf of thousands of fellow Canadians. It is a privilege and responsibility accorded relatively few individuals in this wonderful country.

My role as I see it is to take part in the much envied, respected democratic process of this country. However, the Government's motion to suspend parliamentary rules, which are the very essence of democracy, has prompted me to stand here tonight and state in a clear, strong voice that the issue of the trade agreement deserves full debate. At the outset I must say that there are good, well-meaning Canadians on both sides of this argument.

Having said that, permit me to reveal some obvious facts. If the Government were building a new Canadian pipeline it would do an environmental impact study. If the Government were marketing a new product it would do a pragmatic, authentic, intensive impact study. If we were the Crazy Canuck ski team challenging for the Can-Am Cup at Whistler Mountain, British Columbia, we would never hit the slopes without checking out the course to ensure that it was fair in its layout and safe enough for all the competitors. Yet for a trade deal of historic proportions there is little evidence that the Government has costed out, with the critical eye of a truly responsible government, one, the actual demands financially, two, the actual impact socially, and third, the actual changes from province to province required to fulfil this agreement.

Let us consider the impact of this agreement, particularly Chapters Fourteen, Fifteen and Nineteen. I understand the Government did project a gain of 250,000 jobs over 10 years, about a 1.8 per cent increase in employment. However, was this before or after subtracting the job losses? That was never made clear.

It seems to me that Canada has entered a bold competitive series, much like an international hockey series. Let us call it the Can-Am Traders Cup. It is the economic match of the century. The organizers of this event, the promoters, have repeatedly announced the day of the big game. It is January 1. But many of this on this side are concerned that there seems to be no game plan for les Canadiens. This is beside, of course, the Americanization of the league. Now the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) says we can play with the best of them. Canadians are ready to compete, he says. Unfortunately, the puck has not even been dropped yet and the job score has the Americans out front, way out front. The coach, the Hon. Member for St. John's East (Mr. Crosbie), has given us the pep talk, our team is warming up on the ice and, oh, there is a cheap shot: November 22, Gillette, 600 jobs; November 25, Johnson & Johnson, 16 jobs; November 25, British Footwear, 50 jobs; November 26, Pittsburgh Paints, 140 jobs; December 7, Northern Telecom, 870 jobs; and the list goes on.

It appears the American team has too many players on the ice. There does not even appear to be any kind of a penalty box. This certainly is a game being played under protest.

I draw the spectators' attention to Chapters Fourteen and Fifteen of this agreement, and I am not sure if the coach has read these parts yet. In particular, let us examine Article 1502 which grants temporary entry to professional people engaged in providing services. As well, let us examine, in light of Article 1502, Article 1403 which encourages the mutual recognition of licensing and certification requirements.

Both 1502 and 1403 refer to a lengthy list of professionals including scientists, dentists, psychologists, lawyers, social workers and nurses. In 1502, there is no limit placed upon the temporary status. It is a sort of permanent temporary. It can refer to one month or one year or five years.

Now, Article 1403 eliminates Canadian professional control over standards of certification and practice. These are professional aspects essential to consumer protection and safety. Consider this very real possibility. An American company implements a medical health and safety program at its plant in Hamilton. The company imports its own nurses and psychologists. Can Canadian workers be guaranteed that this health program operates with the same quality and professional authority we have come to expect from any Canadian health worker?

Some Hon. Members: Yes!

Mr. Keyes: Can we? You can guarantee that? We have it in writing in Hansard. Surely a responsible government must ensure that any Canadian trade legislation will safeguard its citizens against low professional standards and services. Surely this legislation must safeguard the role of professional organizations to maintain those high standards of care and certification. I want to state for the record that I cannot vote in favour of a trade agreement which puts in jeopardy high Canadian standards of certification and professional care.

Extension of Sittings

Do not look now, Madam Speaker, we just pulled our goalie and we are only into the second period. But wait, the other team is giving us one of their goalies. Now that is temporary entry! An American firm installs new computerized industrial equipment. A large team of trained computer operators is brought in from the parent company, temporarily, of course. No employee retraining seems to be necessary. The farm team has entered the arena. These computer experts are three to five years temporary and outside the normal labour contracts of Canadian workers in the same plant.

These are facts. Do the rules of fair play in labour relations still apply? Are American workers on long-term temporary entry required to pay a full share of benefit costs, benefits which Canadian communities provide?

Next I draw your attention, Madam Speaker, to Chapter Nineteen. How much will it cost Canadian businesses to play the Can-Am Traders Cup? Chapter 19 describes what will happen if an American business blows the whistle on Canadian business.

If it is a situation involving GATT, there is no problem. It will take about six months for Canadian officials to obtain a resolution to a disagreement. However, under Chapter Nineteen, if a Canadian is defending his or her company against American charges, look out, Madam Speaker, the game just went into overtime.

Article 1904 of the trade deal prohibits Canada from requesting a panel until the U.S. Department of Commerce and International Trade Commission make final determinations approximately one year from the time the petition is presented, then go on to require a bilateral panel to make financial decisions within 315 days from the date it was requested.

What will it cost Canadian businesses to play in this game? Well, according to a retired Canadian trade negotiator, the cost under the trade deal would be prohibitive for many companies. They would face at least one year's legal costs while a petition is before the U.S. Department of Commerce and International Trade Commission. If the Canadian company requested a panel to review a U.S. decision, its legal bill would increase substantially. The company could be required to provide U.S. Customs with securities to cover temporary countervail and dumping duties for as long as 18 months before a panel decision.

The legislation before us makes no effort to compensate or assist Canadian businesses against American harassment through Chapter Nineteen. But then, I suppose that would be considered an unfair subsidy. You see, it is a game that we cannot win.

I have spoken with members of the business community, chief executive officers of successful Canadian companies, businesses keen to get into the game, to score in the Can-Am Traders Cup. Some of them find this legislation, though, more crippling than enabling, more rushed than encouraging. Every time they turn around—

Mr. Kempling: Who are you talking to? Give us names.

Mr. Keyes: They are coming. Have patience, my hon. friend. Every time they turn around, it is a three on one break for the American industry. They wonder why the rules are not balanced for everyone. The apparel industry is a case in point.

This trade agreement removes from our clothing manufacturers the right to use the highest quality materials from around the world. While these Canadian manufacturers do not compete in quantity, they can definitely compete in quality, until now. Powerful Washington lobbyists have won the provision that Canadian apparel exported to the U.S. must be made only with North American fabrics. This is not free trade but manipulated trade in favour of protectionist interests in the U.S. textile industry.

For example, access to the U.S. market from Hamilton's Coppley Group has been restricted by quotas and duties to 2 per cent of the U.S. market, while American companies can compete for 80 per cent of the Canadian market. We suggest that the best the Government could do for the industry is to provide time, time to upgrade and expand worsted wool fabrics, time to establish long-range contracts in the U.S., time to obtain large financial outlay.

Large American companies will score long before one can put a viable team on the ice. By forcing Canadian apparel makers to use American fabrics, this agreement limits the variety and quality available to differentiate Canadian high standards from American mass production. It is clear that the Government has no interest in the maintaining of standards of quality in clothing or in professional certification.

Extension of Sittings

Canadians have laced up their skates only to find themselves in a game in which the rules are clearly suspect and the American players have clearly been granted unfair advantages.

By voting for me, the majority of Canadians in Hamilton West said no to free trade.

• (2150)

For all the reasons I have stated here tonight the issue begs to be debated, debated fully and debated democratically.

[Translation]

Mr. Charles DeBlois (Montmorency—Orléans): Mr. Speaker, I am deeply moved to be making my first substantial speech tonight as a new Member for the constituency of Montmorency—Orléans. It might help my colleagues of the House to remind them that Montmorency—Orléans is close to the great city of Quebec. The city of Beauport forms two thirds of the riding and then there is the Côte de Beaupré. I think of all those small villages along the St. Lawrence River: Boischâtel, L'Ange-Gardien, Château Richer, Sainte-Anne-de-Beaupré, Beaupré, Mont Sainte-Anne, not to forget Île d'Orléans and, of course, the two new parishes that have just been added to the riding of Montmorency—Orléans through redistribution, Saint-Féréol-des-Neiges and Saint-Tite-des-Caps, and finally, in the northern area, the municipality of Sainte-Brigitte-de-Laval.

So I want to thank most sincerely the whole population of my Montmorency—Orléans riding—which numbers about 95,000—and all my supporters who have made it possible for me to live this experience! As you know, I worked for 15 years as a journalist for the CBC and the TVA network. I spent 15 years covering the political scene at the Quebec National Assembly. I was anxious to see from the inside what politics was all about. I had often experienced what it was all about from the outside, and during the last election campaign, I had at last an opportunity to enjoy this rich experience in human contacts and discover the men and women who are our fellow citizens.

As you must have guessed, dear friends and colleagues, this emotion was counter-balanced by the warm welcome I received from all my Cabinet colleagues, including the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all of you. I admit that the welcome I received from our great Conservative family was a great comfort to me and is helping me make the transition from journalism to politics.

I do not intend to make a long speech on free trade tonight. I will have an opportunity to deal with the substance of this issue next week. I will deal only with the motion which is now before the House and which calls for the suspension of some provisions of our Standing Orders.

Personally, it makes me laugh. I have heard some of my colleagues opposite complain that the Government is behaving like a dictator and that the Conservatives should be ashamed of their behaviour. In my opinion, leadership was one of the main issues during the election campaign. A leader is someone who, at some point in time, stops talking and starts acting. And our Leader is a man of action.

Mr. Speaker, we have been talking of free trade for three years now. The legislation before us has already been passed by this House. We are considering it again, but people have heard enough talk. We talked for two months during the campaign. People have had enough, they want action and this is what we want to give them. This is why I have a lot of admiration for our House Leader and our whip who have been negotiating with their counterparts opposite from the beginning of the session. They tried with courtesy to agree with them on some rules of debate. But it is now time to act speedily on free trade. This afternoon, I was talking on the phone with people in my riding. I was to attend a seniors meeting this evening. I have three more meetings tomorrow evening and one more on Sunday. When I said: I cannot go, I have to stay in the House for a debate on free trade, the people in my riding were shocked. They asked me: How can you still be talking about free trade?

My constituents elected me so we could have free trade. Now they ask me how come it has not been done yet, how come we are still debating this Bill in the House. I have to tell them that it is not because we do not want to settle this issue once and for all, but because the Opposition uses all kinds of tactics to prevent us from doing so, no matter what the Hon. Member for Saint-Denis (M. Prud'homme), the Hon. Member for Yorkton—Melville (M. Nystrom) and the Hon. Member for Carleton—Gloucester (M. Bellemare) say about that. They say it surprises them that they cannot discuss free trade. We want to settle this issue as soon as possible, and we introduced the motion to suspend the rules when we could not come to an agreement with the Leaders of both opposition parties. This motion to suspend the rules is not a sign of dictatorship. It is provided for in the Standing Orders and can be used when all else fails.

Extension of Sittings

And again we have been discussing free trade for three years. It is about time that we decide to move. When I saw the NDP House Leader (Mr. Broadbent) tear out the Standing Orders the other day, I was shocked. To a new Member of Parliament like me, the Standing Orders and parliamentary customs and tradition are absolutely sacred and must be respected. We are not here to give a show but to see to the collective well-being of our fellow citizens. And I am proud to be part of a team which has decided to move, to do something tangible.

Indeed, the turmoil aroused by the motion to suspend the rules makes me laugh since that motion is far from being strict and tough enough. Under that motion, discussions can go on every day till midnight, and we are being accused of gagging the Opposition. On the contrary, who has been preventing the House from discussing free trade since the beginning of the week? Our friends opposite! They have been preventing us from discussing free trade through all sorts of dilatory tactics. Let us take a concrete example. This week, when the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), the Hon. Member for Newfoundland, tabled the legislation, they asked for a vote. As we know, there usually is no vote on first reading in order to speed up the process. But our friends opposite have been asking for registered votes, all the time wasting time, half hours at a time in the halls, although we could have used that precious time to discuss the substance of the matter. So, we could not discuss free trade. This is why I feel that our friends opposite are somewhat hypocritical. I apologize for saying that, Mr. Speaker. This may be an unparliamentary term. Perhaps you will ask me to withdraw, but I feel compelled to say they are being hypocritical, bleached sepulchres.

On this side of the curtains they say they want to discuss free trade, but behind the curtains they are using every means to prevent us from discussing free trade. I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, but I find that disgusting.

I am reminded of an old latin saying I learned during my classical studies. I wonder if some of us remember those latin sentences. We used to have that beautiful saying Roma locuta, causa finita: Rome has spoken, the matter is settled. It was used in the Roman Catholic Church to mean that once the Pope had decided, the matter was settled. But in politics, the people are the pope, and once the people have spoken the matter is settled. We have no time to waste. And I can tell you something, Mr. Speaker. I did not speak much about free trade at the beginning of my campaign. But we know what the TV debate did. It spurred us on. Personally, I talked about free trade almost day and night. One of my most rewarding experiences during the election campaign was a conversation I had in the wee hours of the night around a table with about a dozen workers of Abitibi Paper, a superb industry in my riding which exports 95 per cent of its production to the United States. These workers who had been brainwashed by their union against free trade were certainly delighted to get explanations! When this brotherly meeting was over, these people were glad to know what the deal was all about.

During the election campaign, I noticed that the more we explained free trade to the people, the more they were in favour of it and understood that better economic relations with the United States are the key to progress in Quebec and the rest of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, dear friends, I will conclude with this. If I joined this Party—I must tell you that it was very difficult for me to decide to join a political party. As a newspaperman I was impartial. I kept my distances. You must realize that it was very important for me to keep my distances with the political parties. When I joined the Conservative Party, it was a matter of choice, because believe it or not, the Liberals had asked me to be a candidate for them. I had an opportunity to join either side.

An Hon. Member: You made the right choice.

Mr. DeBlois: The main reason was the leadership of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. DeBlois: The greatest quality of a leader is his ability to act. The Parties opposite would like to paralyze us . . . quite the contrary! The time to talk is over. The people have spoken, and I am anxious to address other issues. We have been considering this matter for three years. The time has come to deal with something else. Canadians and Quebecers have other issues to deal with, other solutions to seek, and I am anxious to move on to something else. I feel the matter is settled and I hope the Opposition will finally understand that the issue is settled, now that the people have spoken.

I conclude by saying how proud I am to belong to that great family of the Progressive Conservative Party. I will have an opportunity, next week, to say much more about the benefits of free trade for the small businesses, the workers, the farmers and the whole population of the riding of Montmorency—Orléans. My electors told me something about those benefits when they gave a majority of almost 20,000 votes, that is six times as strong as that of my predecessor. That makes me very proud and once again, thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to explain those facts to you and to all my colleagues.

• (2200)

[English]

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, I gave my maiden speech almost 25 years ago in the British Columbia legislature. However, my riding is different now and I am in a different place. I doubt very much that I will take part in a Throne Speech debate in the near future, so I thought I would take this opportunity, as others have before me, to briefly introduce my riding.

Had I the opportunity to draw the boundaries for the area I would like to represent, I would draw exactly the boundaries of the riding of Nanaimo—Cowichan as they presently exist. It is where I have made my home all of my life.

The area depends upon logging, fishing, and tourism. I have worked in logging camps, done some fishing, have farmed in the area, and currently have a chartered accounting firm that I will have to do something about when the House recesses and before we come back together again.

I started campaigning on May 2, the day after I was nominated by the Party. I campaigned for almost seven months and I enjoyed it. I travelled around the riding and met many people, all of whom seemed to know me. I knew a few of them, and many of them knew various of my relatives. One of them had worked in a local coal mine with my father some years ago. It was like coming home and meeting people. Although not all of them I knew, it made me feel like we were family all together. It was a good seven months and a good campaign.

There was one theme that kept recurring during the campaign. At the doorstep when the people wanted to talk, they always stated that we have to get rid of both of them. They did not use the title Prime Minister, they used the surname, which I know I am not to use in this place, but the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Vander Zalm. The people used the two of them together, it did not matter which came first. Both had to go.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stupich: The other theme that came up was the free trade deal. It was not that the people were all totally against it. The majority were worried and concerned. They did not know whether they should be opposed to it or support it. On balance they were a little afraid. They felt that they had not been told enough about it, had not had an opportunity to hear enough or read enough about it. They were puzzled, concerned, worried, and inclined to vote against the Conservative candidate because on balance they thought they had better not take a chance on supporting the free trade deal. I went along with that argument very nicely. I enjoyed that campaigning.

One of the reasons I came to the House was that I was very worried about the free trade deal, wanted to oppose it, and felt the best way of accomplishing that would be to become a Member of Parliament, take part in the discussions during the campaign, take part in the discussions here, discussions that will not end when the motion or the Bill is passed but will go on for many years to come. It will be a continuing discussion in Canada, and I hope that we will gain something from that long term discussion. I wanted to be part of that, particularly in the beginning. That is one of the main reasons I came here. I wanted to discuss it in this period of one week or two weeks, whatever period we will be here before the new year. I came here today expecting to be speaking about the free trade deal.

I notice that other Members have talked about the stalling and delaying tactics on the part of the New Democratic Party. The New Democrats have stated from the beginning that we want to have the maximum amount of time possible to talk about free trade. We did not devise the various procedural motions and discussions that have taken place. We have taken part in them, but none of them have been at our prompting. Government Members have raised these motions, and one has to wonder if they did it on purpose because, as was the case before the election was called, as was the case during the election, and as is still the case, the Government does not want too much said about free trade in Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stupich: They are afraid that if the people hear too much about it, then there will be more worry, concern, and opposition to the free trade deal that has been engineered. Therefore, we spend our time talking about procedure.

Extension of Sittings

I am not going to talk about free trade at the present time. I hope to have that opportunity later on. I am not even going to talk about the motion that is on the Order Paper, a motion that is there with the obvious intention of cutting down debate on free trade. That is exactly what it does, and the amendment makes it more certain. I would like to discuss that amendment.

Earlier, the Hon. Member for Edmonton East (Mr. Harvey) said that he was inclined to think that perhaps the amendment made it better, and perhaps he should consider supporting it. I do not see it that way at all. To me the amendment makes a bad motion worse.

The original motion dealt with anything that might come up in this session, and stated that we were going to treat everything alike. We all know that the amendment will pass. It will state that the only situation for which we will use this extreme power will be the most important issue that has ever come before the Canadian Parliament. People on both sides have said that. It is not going to be used for anything of a minor nature. It will not be used for the little things that the Government may bring up. It is going to be used in only one instance, and that is the instance that is the most important issue ever to come before the Canadian Parliament. That is not an improvement to the original motion. It is zeroing in and saying that we are here to pass this Bill, regardless of the devices to be used, regardless of the changes that have to be made to the rules of this House.

The Government is prepared to do whatever it has to do in order to meet its political agenda. Regardless of what it has to do in terms of the workings of this place, regardless of what it has to do in terms of the rights of the Members of this place, it is going to meet that political agenda.

That is one reason for putting forward the amendment. It makes a bad motion worse. Another reason for opposing the amendment is that it sends up a flag. It tells us that whenever this Government has something important, whenever it has a measure involving a political agenda, it will bring in a similar motion, a motion which will again restrict the rule changes to the one issue. In that way, it can say that it is not a course that is being followed in every case. If it is an issue that is not terribly important, it will not use the sledge-hammer approach. But when anything important comes up, it will use the biggest sledge-hammer it has at its disposal.

What this Government is saying, in effect, is that there is no limit to what it will do, no limit to the powers it will take unto itself to accomplish its political agenda.

While it is hard to conceive of the motion before us being made worse, Mr. Speaker, that in fact is what this amendment does, and it does so by revealing, in all truth, the precise plans that this Government has for this the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

I shall have absolutely no hesitation, Mr. Speaker, in voting against the proposed amendment.

Ms. Barbara Greene (Don Valley North): Mr. Speaker, by way of introduction, I am the new Member for the new riding of Don Valley North, in the City of North York, in Metropolitan Toronto.

The riding of Don Valley North is one of the most interesting ridings in Canada, with 62 per cent of the electorate being apartment dwellers and 45 per cent being immigrants. It comprises a varied cross-section of Canadian society, ranging from those living in $1 million homes to those on welfare. It has beautiful ravines and wonderful shopping plazas, and is home to many businesses, all of which make it the envy of any community in the world.

The City of North York is the home to many multinational corporations which provide jobs for many of the citizens of Metropolitan Toronto, as it is the home to many hotels. In addition, it is the home of the Metropolitan Board of Trade.

It is a cosmopolitan city. It is a city whose citizens enjoy working and who live there very successfully, and it is a city whose citizens are served well by the government sector.

I wish to take this opportunity to thank the people of Don Valley North for electing me to be their representative in the House of Commons. At the outset, I considered it to be an easy riding for me to win. It was an area in which I had been very successful in municipal politics. However, following the televised Leaders' debate and the campaign of the Liberal Party against free trade, I began to notice a change in the attitudes of the electorate as I met them at the door. People were scared. They were struggling with the issue of free trade. They were attempting to understand the issue—and I was impressed by the lengths to which they went to understand the issue. The supply of the free trade synopsis that we had in our office went like hot cakes. We distributed as much information as we had on the free trade issue, and we attempted to answer questions at the door about the issue.

Extension of Sittings

We had to cope with the premier coming into the riding and scaring the hell out of senior citizens. In my door-to-door canvassing, I came across people who were thoroughly terrified that they would lose their pensions. As well, those in Metro Housing Authority dwellings were very much frightened. It took a lot of talking to reassure these people.

People were told that free trade was good for the rich but terrible for the poor. They were told that our water would be diverted to the United States, that the lights would dim, and all sorts of other dreadful things.

The people of Don Valley North were able to see through much of the rhetoric, and today those people, if they are watching this debate, are probably shaking their heads at this very moment and asking themselves why it is that we are here this evening, the fifth day of this Parliament, December 16, and we are still not debating the substantive issue of free trade.

An Hon. Member: A good question!

Ms. Greene: The people of Don Valley North, and the people of Canada, must surely consider this situation to be ridiculous. We had an election in which the major issue was free trade. The timetable in respect of the implementation of the agreement has been well known all along. It is a date that is set out in the agreement itself. And yet here we are, their representatives in Parliament, debating a procedural matter.

We hear from the other side of the House that this is a debate about fundamental democratic processes, and so forth. To my mind, it is insane that we are here debating a procedural matter.

I was 11 years on the Metropolitan Toronto Council, and the number of times that we varied the procedures of Council, the number of times we dispensed with normal parliamentary procedures in order to deal with a given issue is countless. Any kind of parliament occasionally varies its procedures. The issue is not whether procedures should sometimes be varied; the issue is whether this particular issue deserves to have our procedures varied. And if any issue deserves to have our procedures varied, it is this issue.

The amount of debate to which the Free Trade Agreement has been subjected is unequalled. I cannot think of an issue that has been the subject of so much debate.

We had the Royal Commission on the Economy, a commission headed by a very prominent, distinguished and patriotic Liberal, recommend that a free trade agreement with the U.S. be negotiated. As well, we had the process engaged in during the course of the last Parliament, including many public hearings across Canada; literature distributed by Members of Parliament; and Members of Parliament meeting with their constituents to discuss the free trade deal. As well, we had an election called on the free trade issue, and it was an election that was called because the Opposition asked for it. During that election campaign, the public had the opportunity to listen to an enormous amount of debate on the free trade issue. The news media did an excellent job in presenting the different viewpoints. The amount of time devoted to the free trade issue by the CBC was nothing short of incredible. As well, the issue was fully debated and discussed on numerous phone-in radio programs, and other public fora.

The public had so much exposure to the issue, I feel they became truly sick of it, and I feel that they are sick of it now. Everybody knows what the issues are. Those who sit on the opposition side of this House are not going to change their minds, and we on this side are not going to change our minds. We are in a very fixed position.

In so far as adjustment programs are concerned, who knows what adjustment programs will be necessary, if any. At the moment, finding a job is not difficult for anyone living in the Metropolitan Toronto area. In fact, one can get several jobs, if one wishes. And certainly any employer offering only minimum wage will find that he will not be able to attract applicants.

An Hon. Member: Try British Columbia!

Ms. Greene: The Hon. Member suggests that one should try in British Columbia—and he is right: British Columbia really needs free trade, as does the rest of Canada.

The Liberal and New Democratic Parties, during the election campaign, tried to saddle the electorate with an almost impossible task, that of understanding free trade. As a candidate in the election, I felt it necessary that I be fully informed on it, and with that in mind I read the Free Trade Agreement in its entirety. Once I had read it for the first time, I think I understood about 25 per cent. I thought it an absolute bore. I then decided that, given its importance, I had better find out more about it, with the result that I read all of the available literature, including that of the Opposition. I struggled to find the answers to the various criticisms put forward in the literature of the Opposition, and I found them. It is my view that those criticisms are simply not valid.

Extension of Sittings

● (2220)

Many of those criticisms that were debated before will continue to be debated in the future. On the question of subsidies, we now have a committee which will sit for seven years and hopefully resolve some of the more obvious problems. Of course, various countries will always be debating the question of subsidies, one versus another.

Then we have other issues that were mentioned, things such as water. That was a completely phoney issue, in my view, when one looks at the legislation and the amendments and so on. Then there was the pension question. Pathetic, absolutely pathetic. It was alleged that social programs were going to be damaged and reduced and so on. That issue came down to a question of the indirect impact of the Free Trade Agreement.

The basic supposition was that the Tories would give away the ship. Pressures to reduce government programs are there in any country, and of course these are the things that Canadians value. I think any government that reduces social programs in Canada would definitely disappear in very short order. There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement that would cause that to happen, and fortunately the people of Don Valley North were able to see through that in sufficient numbers.

I think I would have had a much larger majority had the election gone on for another few weeks. The more I got around, the more I explained things to people, and they were anxious to learn, the more votes I won. I think on this particular issue they were very intelligent and very wonderful people to be able to see through so much garbage.

I very firmly believe that the people of Canada and the people of Don Valley North do not want this Parliament to spend another six months debating this issue. That is why I support the motion before us. This Government has a mandate to commence free trade. It does not have a mandate through a majority of Canadians, but of course no government ever has. This Government was elected on a lot more than free trade. It was elected on competency. It was elected on a regional representation basis. It has a clear mandate to proceed with the legislation it espouses. I think the people of Canada would want us to be home with our families for Christmas, and we may well be here Christmas Eve, but I certainly think we should be home for Christmas and free trade should be through Parliament. We should get on and deal with the many other issues that people are concerned about, issues such as housing, and the environment, pressing issues which are of concern to the people of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member for Comox—Alberni.

Mr. McDermid: All these provincial NDP Leaders retire to the House of Commons.

Mr. Bob Skelly (Comox—Alberni): It is said there is another House that provincial hacks retire to but we cannot mention that one here.

I am glad to have this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to take part in this debate and discuss some of the issues brought out during the long debate today and this evening. I would just like to deal briefly with some of the suggestions made by some of the Members on the other side of the House. I would like to talk a little bit about scare tactics because I understand the Tories felt a little threatened during the campaign and felt their constituents might have been a little threatened by the scare tactics that were used.

We on the other side of the country noticed that some of the scare tactics were being generated by the pro free trade party. I can recall the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) speaking to the people of Canada and suggesting that if they did not accept the free trade arrangement we were debating, the U.S. would not agree with the acid rain proposals of the national Government and we would be subjected to more and more acid rain from the U.S. The threat was there from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) that if we did not accept this Free Trade Agreement, regardless of what we thought it contained that might be damaging to the people of Canada, we would be pelted with acid rain from the U.S. That was the threat delivered to the people of Canada by the Prime Minister himself during the election campaign.

Another statement he made was that if we did not pass this free trade legislation or accept the free trade proposal with the U.S., the U.S. would retaliate against all Canadian trade and all Canadian products. The U.S. would descend into a completely protectionist regime.

Mr. McDermid: Who said that?

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): The Prime Minister of Canada said that.

Extension of Sittings

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): He said the U.S. had a very protectionist sentiment and would be attacking Canada at every possible opportunity in retaliation for our not accepting this free trade arrangement.

Some Hon. Members: Nonsense!

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Not only that, Conservative Members were saying in my constituency and throughout the Province of British Columbia that if this free trade arrangement did not pass, Canada would suffer economically and we would lose the ability to generate the finances necessary to pay for our social programs. In other words, those people across the floor said that if we did not get free trade, pensions would be threatened and health care programs would be threatened. They went around the senior citizens housing projects and made that threat and scared senior citizens into voting for this Free Trade Agreement even though it was contrary to their own interests.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: No wonder they dumped you from the NDP.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): That is the reason they dumped the Tories in British Columbia. One after one they fell like dominoes. For the first time in history we elected a caucus of 19 New Democrats from British Columbia, a majority of Members from that province, who are opposed to free trade.

Mr. McDermid: About half the strength of the whole caucus.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): They are opposed to free trade.

Mr. Friesen: I have heard it all before.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): You have been in British Columbia and you should know better.

Mr. Kempling: Tell us about how you are a national Party.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member for Surrey—White Rock (Mr. Friesen) told us that in this House of Commons there are winners and there are losers.

Mr. Epp: We are listening to the losers right now.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Mr. Speaker, everyone in this House of Commons won his or her election. No question about it. Everyone received the confidence of the constituencies in which they campaigned and in which they worked.

Mr. Friesen: Now we know why you had such a stirring career as leader.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): In fact, it can be argued that those individual Members from individual ridings all across Canada received a mandate based on the campaign they fought in their constituencies. I can tell you that virtually every Member on this side of the House, representing 53 per cent of the voting public of Canada, was given a mandate to vote against free trade and do whatever they possibly could, representing those constituents in the House of Commons, to speak against it and attempt to prevent it from being passed. A tremendous number of Canadians—in fact a majority—are concerned about economic integration with the United States. They have not wanted it throughout this century. They have not wanted it for generations. They do not want it now. They made their opinion clear during the 1988 election campaign in which 53 per cent of the voting public voted for Parties opposed to free trade while only 43 per cent voted for Parties in favour of free trade.

● (2230)

The clear majority is against free trade.

Mr. Epp: The Christian Heritage Party is for free trade. The Western Reform Party is for free trade.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): The majority of people in the country voted against free trade. They voted against it for good reason. That is because there are people in this Parliament representing that 53 per cent majority who as a result of the mandate given them by their electors have to vote against the free trade legislation as it is being presented.

My constituents voted for me for a number of reasons. They have in every year from 1972, through 1975, through 1979, through 1983, through 1986, and through 1988. They voted for me in order to give me a mandate to come here to talk to the people of Canada and to debate with the people in this House issues that they felt were important during the election campaign.

They asked me to bring a message about tax fairness. They were concerned that the Conservative Government has restructured the tax system in such a way that the rich, powerful and mighty get a free ride while those in the poor and middle-income levels are taxed to the point that they are broke. They would like to see some redistribution of the tax burden so that those who are getting a free ride will have to pay at least their fair share while those who are bearing the whole burden of taxes in the country get a little relief so they can spend, invest and make a positive contribution to Canada rather than having the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) suck one-third of their incomes out of their pay cheques every single pay-day.

Extension of Sittings

The people of Comox—Alberni sent me to this House because they wanted me to talk about an issue that is extremely important to them. That issue is regional fairness. They saw what happened under a Tory Government over the last four years. They saw that procurements by the federal Government in British Columbia over a four-year period dropped from 6.5 per cent of total procurements to 4.1 per cent, in a province where the population is 12 per cent of the total population of the country. That is absolutely unfair to western Canada. That is why we have 10 Members from Saskatchewan and 19 from British Columbia.

People have given us a mandate to discuss the issue of regional equity because the Conservatives have been sucking the West to pay off the provinces of central Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Our constituents want us to talk to the Government about child care as well. If the last Parliament had been extended by one week then we might have had a child care program. It would not have been all that satisfactory, but at least it would have been something. Why did the Government not reintroduce it in the first days of this Parliament? By doing so the Government could have shown how important it considers that issue. After all, who are to be served in terms of the child care legislation? Single parent families are being served—women. It is they who on the basis of equity want to get out and use their talents in the workforce while being assured that their children are being well taken care of. Why did the Government not put that on the floor as a priority? Why instead is the Government recognizing its obligations to Ronald Reagan before recognizing its obligations to men, women, children and families in our country?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dick: How about talking to the motion?

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): I will be getting to the motion in my next few words. Why does the Hon. Member not get in motion and make a speech on this issue?

Mr. Dick: I might.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): My constituents sent me here to talk about matters of importance to them, matters such as the environment. They would like to see a government that expresses at least a minimal amount of priority for the environment, a government that is committed to clearing up the mess it has made so far but which is also willing to prevent further damage to our environment so we can set aside something for our children, our grandchildren and future generations. There is an organization in British Columbia called the Telkwa Foundation which says that we do not inherit the environment from our forefathers, we borrow it from our children. We should be treating the environment as if it were borrowed goods that we have to keep intact, maintain, restore and turn over to the benefit of our children when we are finished with it. We are doing an unbelievable job of stewardship as far as the environment is concerned.

More than any other issue that developed during the last election campaign, more than any other issue brought to me by constituents, whether expressed in letters to the editor, letters directed to me or questions on the floor at all candidates meetings, was the issue of trade with the United States. The people of my constituency absolutely reject the idea of economic integration with the United States. They see that such a free trade arrangement so called is nothing more than a foot in the door to economic integration and, ultimately, to political integration with the United States. That is what they are concerned about. That is why we saw such an overwhelming support for the New Democratic Party in British Columbia, the Party that opposed vigorously the free trade arrangement because we did not want to see the sovereignty of our country compromised. We do not want to see the independence of our country compromised. We do not want to see through every economic door the political independence of our country compromised by a Government that wants to turn us over lock, stock and barrel to Ronald Reagan before January 1.

Mr. Dick: Do you know anything about procedure?

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): The Hon. Member can get up and speak about procedure until the cows come home.

Extension of Sittings

I want now to talk about what happened to the rest of the country. How many provinces gave a majority to the Free Trade Agreement? Did Saskatchewan which sent 10 New Democratic Party Members to Ottawa and four others?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Did Manitoba?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Did Ontario?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Did New Brunswick?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Did Nova Scotia?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Did Newfoundland?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Did P.E.I.?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Did the Yukon?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Did the Northwest Territories?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): A majority of provinces and territories, a majority of electors, voted against the Free Trade Agreement. When we talk about the people having spoken, we are absolutely right. People have spoken. The people have told legislators in this building: "Kill the deal". That is what they have said. Some people called this a referendum. The free trade arrangement won 43 per cent of the votes of Canadians, a minority.

● (2240)

Mr. McDermid: More than that.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): How much more?

Mr. McDermid: Take in the Western Party. Take in the Christian Heritage Party. They voted for free trade.

Mr. Layton: All the Liberals in Quebec.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): And the silent majority who did not vote. I will tell you something—you have 43 per cent of the popular vote, and 43 per cent of the popular vote does not constitute a popular mandate for free trade. You do not have a majority of support in this country for that free trade arrangement.

Mr. McDermid: Nonsense.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Let us look at a referendum that was conducted in Quebec recently, under the Parti Québécois. It was a referendum about sovereignty association. They got 45 per cent of the vote and they lost.

Mr. Layton: It was 59 to 41.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): Whatever. It was pretty close to what you got. At 41 per cent they still lost. You got 43 per cent and you are now saying you have a mandate to bring in free trade legislation.

Mr. Epp: This was not a referendum.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): This was absolutely wrong whether you base it on a popular vote, whether you base it on provinces. However you base it, you have a rather skimpy argument coming into the House saying that you have majority support in the House for the free trade arrangement.

One can argue that they have the majority of seats in the House of Commons. They have the majority of seats so basically they can do whatever they want whether or not they have a mandate. That is what power is all about.

Mr. Kempling: That is right.

Mr. Epp: That is why you never got it.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): That is what power is all about. I recall reading my ancient Greek history when I was at university. I recall the debate the Athenians and Mycenaeans had before the gates of Hellas when the Athenians sacked them during the Peloponnisos war.

Mr. Epp: We thought Ray was bad, but is he a shining light in that family.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): My mother always liked him best. The Athenians had a tremendously powerful army and told the Mycenaeans that because they had the power they could do anything they wanted to the City of Hellas. Therefore, they sacked it, burned it to ashes and killed all of its inhabitants.

Extension of Sittings

That is the definition of power as those Members see it. If they have 150 seats they can do anything they want. Whatever Canadians have said, or whatever they have told Canadians, they have no more regard for that than for any other promises they have made, and for whatever Canadians have said. They only consider the number of seats they have in Parliament and the power it gives them to do anything they want.

The Conservatives are attempting through this resolution to use their power in terms of numbers to ram down the throat of this House of Commons legislation that has not been accepted by the people of Canada. They used fear tactics during the last election campaign. They are using fear tactics now.

Mr. Della Noce: You cannot talk about fear tactics.

Mr. Skelly (Comox—Alberni): You attempted to use the majority you have in the House not to involve yourself in a healing process or a debate with the people of Canada, but to pass this agreement on the Prime Minister's schedule. This is the last act of submission by the Canadian Government to the United States.

It is shameful that its Parliament has to go through this kind of measure just to see the Tories submit once more to the tactics of the United States Government. It makes one wonder what kind of negotiations went on. The Conservatives went to the heel of the United States. They took orders from the United States. There was no process of negotiation.

This agreement is for the benefit of the United States, not for Canada. The Government is simply serving the priorities and requirements of Ronald Reagan rather than the people of Canada. One can see this in its priorities in the House and its efforts to get this legislation through prior to January 1. It is simply a way of submitting again and again to the United States and reducing the image of this country in the eyes of the world and the eyes of Canadians.

Mr. Ken Atkinson (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the people of St. Catharines for their support and to say how proud I am to represent the City of St. Catharines here in the Parliament of Canada.

I was interested in the comments just made by the Hon. Member opposite. He spoke of a loss of sovereignty. A similar argument was raised by the same Party with regard to the Auto Pact when it came into effect. The Auto Pact is very important to my community. St.

Catharines has prospered as a result of the Auto Pact. It is the one form of free trade we can look to as an example of how it works for this country. As the Hon. Member for Chateauguay (Mr. Lopez) said, we would like to spread it to the rest of the country. That is what the people of St. Catharines would like.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, Hear!

Mr. Atkinson: The Auto Pact has not resulted in a loss of sovereignty in Southern Ontario or St. Catharines. Obviously the argument made during the election campaign still holds true. Up to 80 per cent of the tariffs have been reduced over the years, since 1947. Canada has not lost its sovereignty as a result of that. That is a fallacious argument and should not be continued.

The motion we are debating tonight is a procedural one to extend the hours of this House in order that more Members can be heard with regard to the Free Trade Agreement. We have heard other new Members state how saddened they are because of the loss of their rights and the fact that the first debate in which they participate is on a procedural matter rather than something more substantial. I share that view.

I sat in this majestic place on Monday during the election of the Speaker. There was a short Speech from the Throne relating to one issue. When we returned to this Chamber, a motion was placed to the House stating that the Speech from the Throne be taken into consideration "later this day". That was the extent of the motion and I did not think there was anything unusual about it. We came here to do a job and why would we not consider that speech? Much to my surprise, rather than the motion passing without great difficulty, five Members rose, the bells rang for 30 minutes and we had a recorded vote.

This side of the House did not set the tone for this session of Parliament. The tone was set in the very first instance with regard to that motion. Since then we understood what we were going to face in trying to get a debate on the free trade legislation. We have still not succeeded in doing that today.

We are here discussing a procedural matter which began at two o'clock this afternoon. We are still debating whether we will pass this procedural motion to extend the hours of the House in order that more individuals can be heard on the free trade legislation.

Extension of Sitings

We have heard a great deal about the free trade legislation in the context of this procedural motion. We will probably hear more about it.

I have some difficulty understanding why we cannot get right to the free trade debate. Why do we have to go through this particular motion? Members on our side of the House have said the people have decided. The debate on this matter during the election campaign should have been sufficient. We know what we are here for, let us get on with the debate. We have heard indications that the Opposition would like to make some amendments. Certainly, let us hear what the amendments are and let us debate them.

• (2250)

There has been some suggestion that moving the legislation into Committee of the Whole would somehow be usurping the rights of Members of Parliament. It seems to me that the matter of free trade has been debated throughout this entire election campaign. We hear that the legislation should go to a smaller committee and that there should be experts look at it and give evidence. I would submit that experts have looked at this agreement. We have debated it through the election campaign. It was debated in the House prior to the election campaign. I would submit that there is enough information on which to go.

We should get to the Committee of the Whole and have every Member of the House consider the legislation. To me that seems logical. Obviously it is something that is important to everyone. We all have our opinions. We have all done a great deal of research on it. I do not think that expert evidence will add anything to that.

We want to get into a Committee of the Whole discussion. Obviously everyone has an opinion on this particular matter. If we put it to a committee of seven members who would report back, we would still have all these Members of the House wanting to speak on the matter. I have difficulty understanding why we cannot get to that point. The amendment that has been moved seems to be a reasonable one, in line with trying to get us to the point where we can debate the Free Trade Agreement. I would think that we should get to that point and get to it as soon as we can.

The thing that amazed me about the election campaign was that we did not actually discuss what was in this particular agreement, a commercial agreement. My understanding is that a commercial agreement speaks for itself. There is nothing else in that agreement, but all these extraneous issues came in during the election campaign.

We heard talk about losing social programs and the like. Social programs were not mentioned in the Free Trade Agreement. We found out subsequently that an international trade case has said that any universally available social program cannot be considered a subsidy. Only a leap of logic must be taken to possibly say that any of those universally available social programs could be considered a subsidy. We found out during the election campaign that that cannot be done.

We spoke about the environment during the election campaign. There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement about the environment. We spoke about sovereignty during the election campaign. There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement about sovereignty. We spent so much time on matters that are not even mentioned in the Free Trade Agreement that we did not get down to a discussion of the actual agreement.

Now the Opposition decides that it is time to get down to discussing the agreement. Why did we not discuss it during the election campaign? Why did we have to wait until this point in time? We should have discussed it during the election campaign, and a great disservice was done to the Canadian public by not discussing the agreement itself.

As I indicated, my community has benefited from a form of free trade. The Auto Pact has been a great benefit to our community and we have prospered. We would like to share that prosperity with the rest of Canada.

There are other sectors in the community that would also like to share in that prosperity. One that is not so noticeable is the greenhouse and cut flowers industry. It is important to this industry to have a market in the United States, and in fact, it does now, but there is a tariff on flowers. There are even rumours that the Americans would countervail against the cut flower industry. The industry does not say too much, but it is rapidly becoming the second largest industry in our area after the automobile industry. It wants secure access to the American market and it wants it quickly.

As I previously indicated, we should get to the matter of the Free Trade Agreement. We should not be going through all this. We can say more on the Free Trade Agreement during debate on the Bill, and I certainly hope that we can get past this procedural motion and get to the Free Trade Agreement itself.

Extension of Sittings

Mr. Francis G. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Madam Speaker, I too am rising to give my first address to the House, and I share with my colleagues who are here for the first time the sense of awe, pride and humility in having the privilege of representing our electorate here in this House. For my part, I am particularly proud to represent a constituency as varied and as interesting as Cape Breton Highlands—Canso.

[Translation]

I am also especially proud to be the first Acadian to represent that part of the world.

[English]

I would be remiss if I did not begin my remarks by expressing my sincere gratitude to the people of Cape Breton Highlands—Canso for their support and their confidence which enables me to be here to address the House this evening. The people of Highlands—Canso take their politics seriously. They are great teachers in the art of politics and they ensure that their representatives are constantly made aware of their concerns. They never let them forget it.

I would also like to pay tribute this evening to the previous Liberal Member for Cape Breton Highlands—Canso who, as all Hon. Members know, is one of the most distinguished Canadian Parliamentarians this House has ever known. I am speaking, of course, of the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen who has made such a contribution to this House and to Canada over his long years of service to the Canadian Government and whose guidance and friendship has been of such valuable support to me.

As others have said before me, the election campaign was a passionate debate among Canadians about one single issue, the Government's Free Trade Agreement. That issue absorbed the country as no issue had ever done before. In fact, our neighbours to the south marvelled at the extent to which we as a country were able to mobilize during an election campaign, to have intelligent conversations among Canadians about an issue that was of such deep concern to us. I suggest that if this agreement goes through, we may not have a chance to see that again because our future election campaigns may look very much like the one we saw in the United States this fall.

In my constituency of Highlands—Canso, the free trade deal was the central issue of the campaign, as it was across the country. My constituents wondered why, after arguing so strenuously against a comprehensive trade agreement with the United States, this Government was so hell-bent on entering into one even before calling an election on the issue. They wondered particularly once we started to get into the details of the agreement as the election campaign progressed.

I am prepared to look at these things dispassionately. Having been trained in economics and having studied at some of the best universities in Canada, universities like St. Francis Xavier, Dalhousie, Queen's and Université Laval, having studied economics with Professor Richard Lipsey, who I admit is one of the ardent supporters of this agreement but is also one of Canada's best economists, I was prepared to look at both sides of the issue.

Fundamentally, I am philosophically for free trade because of my university training and also because I am a Liberal, because as a Liberal, I know that it has been successive Liberal governments that have promoted free trade in Canada and have promoted the successions of agreements and international arrangements which have promoted prosperity in Canada through an extension of the reduction of our trade barriers.

● (2300)

Successive Liberal governments have been responsible for that since the war, and we have always been a Party for free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): I was even prepared to entertain the notion that a comprehensive free trade agreement with the United States might conceivably be in Canada's interests. I was willing to listen to reasonable arguments in favour of such an idea and to consider the benefits that it might have for our country. I was even prepared to suspend judgment when I kept hearing about all the flaws in this agreement and about the hastiness and the secrecy with which it had been negotiated.

I started to discover, as we did throughout the debate prior and during the election campaign, that the agreement did not provide secure access to U.S. markets. It left several key sectors of the Canadian economy like agriculture, textile, and several other industries vulnerable to being overrun by U.S. competition. There was no protection for the displaced workers before the agreement would go into effect. Our social programs were in no way protected. There was no commitment on the part of the Government to ensure that they were protected. Our oil and gas and other natural resources were pretty well laid on the table for the United States to take over.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): I was prepared to suspend judgment and look at the merits of this deal. When I encountered supporters of the deal, as I occasionally did, although more at the beginning than at the end of the campaign, I asked them: "What does this deal do for you?" Invariably I would get the answer: "The deal could always be better, but we might as well go ahead with it."

When asked the question "how will this deal benefit you", the answers were hard to come by. The more I learned about the deal, the more disturbed I became and the more concerned I was about the consequences that it would have for Canada and for our future.

[Translation]

No matter, Madam Speaker, on November 21, Canadians gave their support to the Conservative Party and gave it a mandate to proceed with this agreement with the United States. As agreed before the election and during the campaign, we said we would not prevent this agreement to go through.

So we will have our agreement with the United States.

[English]

This Government has been given a mandate to proceed with this Free Trade Agreement. We concede that, but it did not receive a mandate to ram this deal through the House. It did not receive a mandate to limit debate, to ride roughshod over the concerns of 57 per cent of Canadians as expressed by their representatives on this side of this House.

I would like to know from the Government what the rush is. I would like to know what the indecent haste is to pass this legislation and to lock ourselves into this agreement. Whose agenda are we following here?

Mr. McDermid: The Government's.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): What new initiatives does this Government have on its agenda that require that we pass this legislation within two weeks?

Mr. McDermid: Because it is our agenda.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): If there is an agenda, it was not revealed in the Speech from the Throne. Maybe the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) is trying to accommodate his friend, the U.S. President. Maybe he wants to give Ronnie one more notch in his belt, one more conquest, our Canadian resources, to finish off his presidency before he rides off into the California sunset on January 21, to retire gracefully on his ranch with a secure supply of Canadian gas to keep his and Nancy's hearth warm and cosy.

The Canadian people gave the Government a mandate to proceed with its free trade deal. Canadians also expressed grave concerns about our social programs, our regional development programs, our resources, and our future. These concerns are expressed in the election of all Members on this side of the House.

Why not withdraw the guillotine? Why would the Government not provide for a reasonable period to consider and include in its legislation amendments to improve the agreement and reassure Canadians? That would build consensus. I somehow doubt that any form of accommodation is possible. This Government within weeks of its re-election has shown its true colours. It has been affected by the disease that accompanies the unbridled lunge for power that we saw exhibited in this election. It is the idea that no one, not even Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition with 83 seats in this House, has anything to contribute to a debate on Canada's future.

We in the Liberal Party have amendments to propose. We have improvements to make. We are ready to debate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Let us go.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso): Under our able and principled leader, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner), we have articulated the concerns of Canadians about this deal. We are equipped to make major improvements to this flawed contract. That is why, although I would much rather debate the substance of this important issue—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

An Hon. Member: Come back on Monday.

Mr. LeBlanc (Cape Breton Highlands—Canso):—I have to add my voice to those of other hon. colleagues on this side of the House against this Draconian measure to curtail and stop debate in this House.

Mr. David Bjornson (Selkirk): Madam Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise as a new Member in this great House to represent the new riding of Selkirk, Manitoba.

Extension of Sittings

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bjornson: It is a great honour to represent the riding of Selkirk and the class of September, I believe it was, at the particular college I went to.

As I stand here this evening I am very uncomfortable in the fact that I am a purist as far as rules and order are concerned. I can see where the Chair is uncomfortable with the way the situation is going, and I am sympathetic.

I think it is important to speak to the House this evening about the fact that we are debating procedure and tradition somewhat. I would like to remind Members opposite that they basically broke with tradition and used their strength in other sections of the Government to slow down the passage of the trade agreement. It was that influence which caused the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) to take us out on the campaign trail.

• (2310)

The result is that the people decided what they wanted, and we are here this evening. It is also important to speak to the people at the far end of the House, and I believe the term is the rump of the House. I had the opportunity to run against the flagship of the NDP Party and the Free Trade Agreement. We worked very hard in the riding of Selkirk. The people of the Selkirk riding decided that they wanted free trade. That was widely shown by the fact that their flagship, Howard Pawley, is not sitting in the House this evening.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Bjornson: To a greater extent, there is the fact that the flagship for the Liberal Party did not receive as many votes as the NDP candidate. It is important that I say to the House that the people in the Selkirk riding do want the Free Trade Agreement. The people in the Selkirk riding want us to get on with the business of the House and discuss the trade agreement. When the vote is taken in the near future, we are going to get on with the business of getting the trade agreement through. The trade agreement is very important to the people in the riding of Selkirk. Along the campaign trail many people came to my aid for many reasons, but most of them understood the fact that we need the trade agreement for the riding of Selkirk.

The biggest single employer in the riding of Selkirk is the steel industry. It knows what can happen to it, and the people of Selkirk know what can happen to it if we do not have access to that American market.

In the northeast corner of my riding there is a fishing community. Freshwater Fish is a major exporter of fish into the U.S. market. It is the biggest market for the Freshwater Fish Corporation, and it is important to the people of the Selkirk riding.

In the bottom right-hand corner of my riding there is a large Hutterite community which works very hard in various sectors of the agricultural industry, pork being a major one. Seventy per cent of the pork in Manitoba and in the Selkirk riding is exported to the United States. We no longer need those artificial barriers because we are more efficient at raising hogs than the people on the other side of the border.

During my first few days in Ottawa in preparation to come into the House, I had the opportunity to phone home and find out that there is an industry that wants to come from the United States to expand in Canada. Dow Corning wants to come to the community of Selkirk to expand. These are jobs that will be coming our way. Members opposite are not speaking about those jobs. In our community we have the opportunity to do well and progress. The trade agreement will give us the availability to do that.

An Hon. Member: At what cost?

Mr. Bjornson: I do not want to hear negative comments from the other side of the House. If we have the opportunity to go out and work hard, let us go and do it.

I am very fortunate to have three healthy children. They are very good children. When they are finished their education, I want them to have opportunities, as I did when I finished my education. We want all our children to be able to get out and earn a living. It makes one feel much prouder to have a pay cheque rather than a UIC cheque.

I urge the House to consider the amendments in order that we can quickly get to the business of discussing the trade agreement in a good and honourable fashion. I know after Hon. Members opposite hear the arguments on this side of the House that they will agree with us and will pass the agreement.

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Madam Speaker, I wish to congratulate you and your colleagues in the chair on your re-elections to key positions in the House of Commons.

I also want to thank the constituents of the riding of Thunder Bay—Atikokan who saw fit to return me to the House of Commons as their representative. All of us fight elections. Some of us win and some of us do not. It was my first re-election, and I am pleased to have passed that threshold and have returned.

Extension of Sittings

I also want to compliment my new colleagues in the New Democratic Party who have spoken tonight. I watched many of them on television and sat with many of them in the House. I am incredibly impressed, and I am sure that their constituents must be proud of the work that they have done in choosing to send them here. That is why they are here and not their opponents. Congratulations, my friends.

I am here tonight to stand up in defence of parliamentary traditions, traditions that have been developed collectively in Canada, the United Kingdom, and elsewhere over centuries. Those protections are designed to look after the rights of the minority as opposed to the rights of the majority. I wish to quote an individual who shared that concern in a debate some time ago which dealt with an issue similar to that of closure, which is what we are talking about tonight:

"Mr. Speaker, I participate in this debate with a degree of sadness and regret having regard to the fact that we have just had thrust upon this House one of the most repugnant and most destructive devices ever perpetrated on the democratic process.

I am deeply saddened, because the debate that has taken place in this Chamber for the last 24 hours interspersed over a couple of weeks or so is perhaps the most important historic debate I have ever witnessed in my 12 years as a Member of the House. It is with a great deal of regret that I see it cut off prematurely having regard to its importance and the fact that some Members who wanted to speak will not have that opportunity.

The government's action is the result of a move that is ruthless, arrogant and, I believe, cowardly. Parliament is now succumbing, as the Hon. Member for Provencher (Mr. Epp) has said, to the tyranny of the majority.

Who was that Member of the House who spoke so eloquently? Was it a member of the New Democratic Party? No, it was not. It was a member of the then Official Opposition, now the House Leader of the Government of Canada, the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). That is what he said on October 23, 1980, as reported in Commons Debates. Some things come back to haunt people, and that is one of them.

In my experience as a parliamentarian, what we have seen over the past five days is extremely distasteful. It is extremely unfortunate for the democratic process. We have before us a Bill of major consequence. We have a fundamental disagreement in the House in terms of whether it is good or bad. That is what the House is for, to take a look at issues such as that, to debate, to argue, to propose, and in some cases to modify.

In the previous Parliament we were very successful in modifying government legislation to reflect more accurately the spirit of its intentions. We have to oppose other Bills because they are fundamental to what makes this country what it is today and we do not want to see that change happening. The future of our country is more important than attempting to rush through an important piece of legislation in time to be home for Christmas.

While it is true that this legislation has already been debated—and while I have not read through Bill C-2, I assume that it is identical, or almost identical, to its predecessor Bill—we have to remember what kind of debate it was. The debate held last summer was not a lengthy, reasoned debate. It, too, was crunched. At every stage of the process, closure was invoked. The Government was not prepared to have a full and open debate, not only on the principle of free trade, but on the nitty-gritty of the legislation.

The legislative committee charged with the detailed study of the Bill was not permitted to hold hearings outside Ottawa to enable it to hear from those in opposition or in favour of the Free Trade Agreement. It had no opportunity to travel to those parts of the country which would be negatively affected by such an agreement and hear from Canadians living in those areas. Conversely, it had no opportunity to travel to those parts of the country which would benefit from the Free Trade Agreement and to hear from the people living in those areas.

At that time we listened to a former Prime Minister of this country taking issue with the fact that the legislative committee then charged with considering the free trade legislation was not allowed to travel to various areas of the country to hear the views of Canadians on the important issue of free trade.

What has happened over the course of this past week, and continuing this evening, and which will culminate in a vote within the next couple of hours, is the tyranny of the majority, the power of the majority being used to thwart the views of not only the Members on this side of the House but the citizens we represent. We are the representatives of our constituents. Each and every one of us spent countless hours during the campaign knocking on doors and talking to people about this issue.

Extension of Sittings

Some Hon. Members: As did we.

Mr. Angus: Yes, as did Members opposite. The point is, we should then be given the opportunity to stand in our places in this Chamber and report on the concerns that we heard at the doorstep. And, yes, free trade was the issue on the doorstep. There is no question about that. I am sure Members opposite found that to be the issue as well, and particularly the new Members opposite.

It is important that we be given a reasonable opportunity to stand in our places in this place and report to the House on the views expressed by our constituents. It is not something that should be done at 11.25 in the evening at the end of a very chaotic week in the House of Commons. This past week represents one of the most chaotic periods in the history of this Chamber. We should be able to reflect upon the views of our constituents and report to the House on them in a reasoned fashion, without the pressure of time constraints.

It is our job to convince the Government that an error has been made, and we need a reasonable time in which to do that. We should have set aside sufficient time in which the Government can listen to Members on this side of the House report on the views of their constituents.

Time and time again during the course of the campaign we heard the fear expressed that the Free Trade Agreement will affect programs held dear by Canadians. There is no need for me to go into the details. We all know what they are.

This Government, notwithstanding that it constitutes a majority in this place, has the responsibility to listen to those concerns. We on this side should be given sufficient time to report on those concerns to the House and to have the Government reflect upon them. We must be given sufficient time to convince the Government of the merit of including in the enabling legislation the kinds of protections asked of us by our constituents.

It is unfortunate that the Government has chosen to ram the enabling legislation through this House; it is unfortunate that it chooses not to permit a reasoned debate.

I listened with interest to the Hon. Member for St. Catharines (Mr. Atkinson) saying that it is not the Government that has set the tone of this House over this past week. Of course, it was the Government. We have the fact that it broke from tradition in terms of the Throne Speech debate, a debate which normally commences the day following the opening. It did not permit the Leader of either Opposition Party the courtesy to deliver their traditional response to the Speech from the Throne. Debate on the Speech from the Throne was cut off.

In addition, it proposes to impose, through the invocation of closure, a schedule for the passage of the free trade enabling legislation that will make it very difficult for all Members of Parliament to participate fully, all with the aim of having the legislation referred to the Senate for passage in the period between Christmas and New Year's. The irony is that it is not legislation that has to be passed by January 1, next. The Government has admitted that. The agreement will only be implemented once the Canadian legislation is adopted. There is no need to have it passed by January 1, next. There is no need to rush it through. We need to spend a reasonable length of time discussing all of its ramifications.

We on this side of the House represent the collective voice of more than half of the population of Canada. The Government ought to keep that in mind.

This debate will take place. We will have the opportunity, albeit in condensed fashion, to stand in this place and reflect upon the views of our constituents in respect of the Free Trade Agreement. I only hope that the Government will take the weekend to consider what it is doing and return to this Chamber on Monday with a saner approach, an approach that will permit us sufficient time not only to study the legislation but to add to it the necessary protections in respect of Canada's social programs, our medicare program, and our environment. We need to have the opportunity to include the establishment of a permanent committee of this House to monitor the ongoing effects of the agreement.

The hour is getting late now, Madam Speaker, and I know that other of my colleagues wish to make some remarks. I thank you for your indulgence. Before I take my seat, I wish once again to thank the electorate of Thunder Bay—Atikokan for again putting their trust in me.

Mr. Howard Crosby (Halifax West): Madam Speaker, I wish to address the procedure inherent in the motion now before us. Before doing so, I should like to take a moment to thank the electorate of Halifax West for electing me to the House of Commons for the fifth time. I appreciate the confidence they have shown in me, and I hope to discharge the mandate that they have given me satisfactorily.

Extension of Sittings

Let me address now the mandate we were all given on November 21 last, and specifically with the procedure inherent in the motion before us.

This sitting of the House of Commons was advertised in advance as the sitting which would deal with the passage of the Free Trade Agreement, something that was talked about among Canadians in all parts of Canada for days, and weeks, and months during the election campaign. When the verdict came in on November 21, of course a sitting of the House of Commons was called for the purpose of dealing with the major issue in the election campaign, the passage of the Free Trade Agreement.

There is no reason for any Canadian to be surprised about the taking of that action. For members of the Opposition to stand in their places, as the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) has done, and say that we must follow the ordinary procedures, that we must feel our way along and do the things that we do in an ordinary session of the House, is absolute nonsense, given that everyone knows that this is a special sitting of the House of Commons called strictly for the purpose of passing the Free Trade Agreement enabling legislation. Canadians understand that. I think we are justified in proceeding with the motion now before us. I do not think there is anything to fear in terms of an erosion of the democratic processes, now or in the future.

Let me talk about the procedure for a minute. Members of this House govern its procedure. We are not subject to rules from on high or some other authority. This House of Commons is the authority. We write the rules and we can change them, and surely no one can seriously object to that.

The document we have in our desks, the Standing Orders of the House of Commons, is there to be changed. As the Speaker said the other day, we write the rules and we follow the rules we write and we do not follow anyone else's rules. Please get that through your heads, will you, because there will be many more occasions in the future that we will have to change the rules to meet the exigencies of the situation. Canadians understand that. They do not want us guided by anything coming down from a mountain. We take the responsibility and we will take that to the Canadian people. Do not worry about that, just follow the rules when they are made and you will not have any difficulty.

It has been said continuously in this debate that we do not have a mandate from the Canadian people. Speaker after speaker from the Opposition stood up and told us why we do not have a mandate. I would not expect anything less from members of the Opposition, but unfortunately journalists get involved in the act. Presumably they have some credibility beyond making their point in the House of Commons for the benefit of their readers. We tend to believe the printed word. Here is a journalist by the name of Francis Russell who said that it was not an election, that it was a referendum. How a journalist can call an election a referendum just like that, I do not know, but there it is in the Winnipeg Free Press for everyone to read. He said that the Progressive Conservative Party got only 43 per cent of the vote. We all understand that. We got only 43 per cent of the vote. Never mind we got 170 seats. Forget about that because we got only 43 per cent of the vote.

However, the Reform Party got 2.1 per cent so they are going to concede that to us and add 2.1 per cent to the 43 per cent and bring it up to 45.1 per cent. Yet that is not enough, that is not a mandate, because the opposition Parties, those people over there, New Democrats and Liberals, got 52.3 per cent of the vote. The other 2.6 per cent did not count because nobody knows why they voted or who they voted for, so we are not going to count them. They are at 52.3 per cent, not the 57 per cent they are talking about.

However, there is a little problem here. There were 17.5 million people entitled to vote in the last election. How many of them voted? Can anyone guess? It was 13.2 million, so 25 per cent of the electorate did not even vote. Do you think they woke up on November 22 and said: "Oh, darn, we did not vote. Let us get out there and re-vote this election, have it over again, and then we will vote"? Where were they on the free trade issue? What gives anyone in this House the right to stand up and say that the 4.3 million Canadians who did not vote are against free trade? I say that they are in favour of free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: I will tell you why. Because 4.3 million voters, 25 per cent of the Canadian electorate, said we are not going to vote, we are going to abide by the outcome of the election. What was the outcome of the election? Does anyone know? The Progressive Conservative Party was re-elected. We did not have 43 per cent of the vote; we had over 50 per cent of the vote because 4.3 million Canadians abided by the results of the election.

Extension of Sittings

Do not think you can go out there and tell people you have a mandate to come in here and stop the free trade legislation. You have no such mandate and even if you get the backing of journalists, neither one of you know what you are talking about.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Boudria: Do you use that kind of math, too?

Mr. Crosby: All right, you bring those 4.3 millions who did not vote into this House of Commons and find out if they are for or against free trade. If they are for free trade, then I will cross over and help you guys.

Mr. Gauthier: God forbid, Howard. You stay where you are.

Mr. Crosby: That is not enough for you? I will tell you, in case you do not know down there in Vanier, knocking on doors—I would like to know how many doors you knocked on.

Mr. Gauthier: It was 22,585.

Mr. Crosby: A few people voted on other issues in this election. Maybe the Liberals and NDP do not know about it but—

Mr. Gauthier: I counted every one of them.

Mr. Crosby: Will you tell Vanier to calm down or take the 89 bus and go home?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gauthier: What is the bus again?

Mr. Crosby: There are a few people who were concerned with other issues in this election. Maybe they did not know that in the NDP, but there are a few people in this country concerned about abortion. The NDP is not, but the people are concerned about it and a lot of them voted on it. There are defeated Members sitting out there who know it. Do not tell us what the electorate did in the election. We are here and we are in a position to tell you what the electorate did in the election.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: That is why we said that your Leader said let the people decide. The people decided and now you will not accept the verdict of the people.

Mr. Boudria: Talk to the Speaker. She will accept it.

Mr. Crosby: I am talking to the Speaker, but I am looking at you.

Let me deal with some of the myths these people perpetrated during the election. You were out there on the election trail, Madam Speaker. You heard some Liberals say: "Oh, do not deal with the Americans. Some 80 per cent of our trade goes there already. Go somewhere else. Go to the European community. You can make a deal with them".

Do they read the papers over there on the other side? If they did, they would find that that same community which they think we can sit down and make all kinds of wonderful deals with is increasing its fish take from the North Atlantic by ten times the allocated catch. They are going to clear out our codfish on the north coast, those same people they want us to sit down and deal with.

Do you know what they did a few years ago when Brigitte Bardot decided she did not like the seal hunt? They stopped the seal hunt and then said if you do not stop it we are going to ban your fish products, that is the European Common Market. They want us to throw away deals with the U.S., not solidify our trade there, and go out and take a pig in a poke in Europe. Then maybe we can go to Japan and sell our TV sets and stereos to Japan.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Crosby: That is the Liberal-NDP trade strategy. I see the Hon. Member from Kamloops (Mr. Riis) there. He is a great trader. He knows how to trade. Watch him. Listen, what he knows about international trade is not worth knowing. The man was never out of British Columbia until he came to Ottawa, but he knows exactly how to trade internationally.

The fact is that they do not know anything about international trade. They do not know how to increase and enhance trade. They do not know how to create jobs in Canada. That is why we were elected in 1984. People elected the Progressive Conservative Government because they wanted a stronger economy. They gave us a mandate to do the things that would strengthen the economy. That is exactly what we did from 1984 to 1988.

We thought we had to do something else. We had to move outside. We had to create wealth in Canada by trading abroad, and where were we going to trade? Yet they do not understand that because they do not understand the Canadian economy. They only understand giving stuff away.

• (2340)

One has to get the votes, which is why they keep talking about social programs. Do they worry about social programs? No, no, no. They use social programs to buy the electorate. We know that the Liberals did that for decades. They know how to scare the electorate, too, with social programs. That is what they did. You heard them in the election campaign, Madam Speaker. They said: "Social programs will collapse. The Americans will take away our social programs".

Have you ever met anybody from the United States, Madam Speaker, who did not admire Canada's medical care system? Did you ever meet anybody from the United States who said: "One thing I don't like about you in Canada is your social programs. You should not have those things such as unemployment insurance and medicare. They are terrible, as are your hospitals. Get rid of them"? What nonsense. The people of Canada do not believe that nonsense.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: The great thing about that is that it did not work. The people of Canada were too intelligent—I will not say anything about Prince Edward Island or some of the Maritime provinces. I have to go back there a little later. They did not accept the opposition rhetoric on social programs and other aspects of the Free Trade Agreement. They know we have to keep Canada strong economically. They know the greatest threat to social programs is a bankrupt Treasury—it is not a trade agreement. It is not something that will create wealth. If we create wealth in Canada, we will have social programs. We will have even more social programs. But they are afraid of that. Do you know why they do not want this trade agreement to pass by January 1, Madam Speaker? It is because they know it will not have the disastrous effect that they have been predicting.

When January 2, February 1, and March 1, come around and there is no disastrous effect, where will the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) be? Where will the Leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) be? They will be right where the clippings in Quorum say they will be—fighting their buddies for leadership. Bob White will be on the doorstep here every day watching the Hon. Member for Oshawa (Mr. Broadbent). That is why he does not want the trade agreement to pass. When it is passed and implemented it is: "Goodbye, Mr. Leader of the Official Opposition, and goodbye, Mr. Leader of the New Democratic Party". If they do not know it, others do, and so do the journalists.

There are a great many things that could be said at this time—

Some Hon. Members: Go ahead!

Mr. Crosby: I take special offence to the remark that we want to get home for Christmas. Are we not awful? We want to go home for Christmas to spend Christmas with our families in the traditional way that Canadians spend Christmas. We are not supposed to do that. Do the Members opposite think that the people of Canada will fall for that nonsense? Do they think that the people of Canada think we are smart Members for being up here Christmas Eve debating some issue that was already decided by the people of Canada on November 21? No. They think we are nuts.

I just want to tell the people of Canada, or those who might be listening since it is 12.45 a.m. in Nova Scotia, that I think it is nuts, too. I want them to make sure they point the finger of blame right at that side of the House of Commons, right at the Leader of the Liberal Party and at the Leader of the New Democratic Party. They are the ones who want to rehash this whole deal. They are the ones who want to distract Canadians. They are the ones who want to create a problem where there is no problem. But it would not be so bad if it did not have a potentially disastrous effect.

Another myth we heard all through the election campaign—and I am sure everybody heard it—was that we did not negotiate a good deal and that we were really dumb. It was said that we did not sit down to put the right words on the paper and get the right kind of concessions. That is terrible, terrible, terrible. What about Simon Reisman? Was it suggested that we get rid of Simon Reisman and get somebody? What about Ambassador Ritchie? As a matter of fact, I always associated those people with the Liberal Party. They were there before we were. I do not know how they got there.

What are we going to do about this negotiation? This is what the Opposition wants to do at this late date in December. They want us to go to Washington tomorrow or the next day and say: "Will you please delay this deal? We do not want to sign it right now. We want to renegotiate the deal. What concessions can we make to get that delay?" Why would the opposition Parties send a negotiator to Washington to fix up a trade deal with both hands tied behind his back? Because the first thing he has to do is ask for a delay. Does that make any sense? It may make sense to some Members opposite simply because, as I said before, they do not know anything about international trade and even less about negotiating national trade agreements. So do not come into the House of Commons and try to tell the people of Canada that you know what you are talking about. We know that you do not.

I want to say one thing about Nova Scotia because Members opposite talked about selling out energy in the agreement. They said that we will be selling Canadian energy cheaper. The Hon. Member from Cape Breton got up and talked about energy. What are we going to do with the oil and gas off the coast of Canada? Are we going to bring it into Vanier in a pipeline and sell it there?

Mr. Gauthier: Good idea.

Mr. Crosby: Let us get serious. If we are going to develop east coast oil and gas, there is only one customer and it is the United States of America. If that customer is taken away, then that oil and gas will stay in the ground under the ocean forever. Hon. Members opposite know it. If they do not, I am telling them right now.

An Hon. Member: What about your mandate?

Mr. Crosby: Talking about mandates, where was the mandate for the National Energy Program? Was there any referendum on that? Some $8 billion was spent on holes in the ocean floor and the Canadian people were not even asked if they wanted it or not. Do not tell us about mandates.

I wish to make one remark generally. We have no monopoly on good faith. But neither do members of the Liberal Party and certainly not members of the New Democratic Party. They continually suggest that they know how to treat the Canadian people. Trust them! They know how to respond to all the problems in Canada is what they say. The NDP has never formed the government, and it never will in my time or in anybody else's time in the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosby: Yet they can claim moral victories. They run Main Street. They may run Main Street in Coquitlam or some place, but they sure as heck do not run any main streets in Atlantic Canada. I can vouch for that. They do not even walk down the main streets of Atlantic Canada.

Do you know what happened to the NDP in the Nova Scotia election, Madam Speaker? It lost its deposits in 30 of the 52 seats. The Party won two seats—and talk about majorities. The two winners received 36 per cent of the vote. I would be ashamed to walk into the Chamber with only 36 per cent of the vote. I would say that it is only fair to have a recount and another election.

But do Hon. Members know what the Leader of the NDP in Nova Scotia said? She is now being thought of for national Leader. She said, guess what, it was a—

Some Hon. Members: Moral victory!

Mr. Crosby: We are not here for any moral victories. We won an electoral victory. We won it with policies that were intended to strengthen the economy of Canada. We are here to put those policies into operation and implement them for the benefit of all Canadians. We are not going to let Members opposite stand in the way.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Vic Althouse (Mackenzie): Madam Speaker, perhaps I will be closing the debate if the Government will stop putting up speakers. Tonight we are reviewing the rules of the House of Commons, using procedures that were used in this House but only once in more than 100 years. Why has this House operated at almost an impasse in the last week? It is because I believe the Deputy Government House Leader and the Government have failed to recognize the importance of 300 years of British Parliamentary practice. During 121 years of Confederation we have developed British Parliamentary rules for this country, but the Government fails to recognize the importance of that tradition.

• (2350)

It is a fact of recent history that most governments in this country have not had a majority of support of the people of Canada. Yet they have managed to rule the country quite adequately.

There have been times when the Opposition did represent a majority of the country. Yet the Government proceeded through carefully and succeeded in getting a majority of the country to accept its particular proposals.

The Government seems to have forgotten examples provided by previous governments, both Conservative and Liberal. While a government may have had less than a majority, it persevered slowly and carefully, using the rules and recognizing the rights of both sides of the House and that all were attempting to represent their constituents. It eventually got its way in a manner that was accepted by the country because it used the democratic process.

Extension of Sittings

The process involved in this House is extremely important in holding the country together. This is disparate land of differing opinions from east to west, north and south. It is important that time be taken for the process to work. The Government and its Deputy House Leader, acting on behalf of the Government, failed miserably and totally this past week to follow those procedures and recognize their importance in the continuation of this country.

Whether it was the flag debate, the constitutional debate or the pipeline debate, governments of the day finally were forced to recognize that time was needed and healing must take place. Any Government which refused to learn that lesson was promptly defeated in the next election. That is what happened in the pipeline debate when the government absolutely refused to take the time necessary for the country to accept the proposition before it.

The issue before the country today is equally important. The Government did not clearly get a mandate. That has been discussed ad nauseam today and I will not go further into it. I am talking about the process and the ridiculous and unnecessary motion before us.

Government Members are well aware of the process involved with the Speech from the Throne. On the first day we hear the Speech from the Throne. The second day is normally devoted to the speeches given by the mover and seconder of the Speech from the Throne. As well, the Government usually presents its urgent legislation. Day three would have resulted in a leader's debate and day four, Thursday, would have been the beginning of the debate on Bill C-2. The Government would have been well into its agenda, but that was not good enough for the Government.

If it has learned anything about parliamentary procedure in this country, it will know that one makes haste slowly. It may be unhappy about the length of time consumed by following the proper procedure, but the fact is that it works. We have proved again that if it ignores the process it will not work.

The person who has thrown the roadblocks in front of this process all the way has been the Deputy Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis). No roadblocks were thrown in the way by Opposition Members because he threw them first. We did not have to erect roadblocks.

The Deputy Government House Leader insisted on attempting to speed the business by disrupting the process on the first day. He insisted on disrupting the process on day two, which prevented the leaders from making their speeches on the Speech from the Throne. How marvellous. It was not a moral victory on this side of the House, but one for the Deputy House Leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and all his backbenchers. What a great victory in stopping the two Opposition leaders making their speeches on the Speech from the Throne. What a great day for Parliament.

The Government claims that it knows how to manage but it cannot even manage the House of Commons. It purports to be able to manage the economy. It cannot make efficient use of time. It has wasted the time of the House.

The Government has continued to ignore the rules of the House, the lessons of history, the lessons of Parliament, and continued to display its ridiculous incompetence. At the same time it has made righteous speeches about trying to protect the country from the horrible Opposition.

We are only responding to their blatant attempts to break the rules and traditions of the House, and to change the Parliamentary process under which this country has operated for 121 years. What a stupid thing to do to this country.

At the same time that the Government House Leader has been putting roadblocks in the way of due process, he has been claiming that we must get on with the business of running the country. At no time during this debate has the Opposition indicated it was not willing to get on with it, given an opportunity. There was no opportunity for the usual Leader's debate, which is a long-held tradition. There was no opportunity to debate the legislation that the Government alleges it has called us back for. There was no preparation for a debate.

The Deputy Government House Leader threw enough roadblocks in the way of the House that even he could not extract us from it. We had to adjourn the House temporarily yesterday. It was the Opposition Parties, not the Government that got us out of that predicament. We eventually reached all-Party agreement to allow the two Opposition Leaders to begin debate on Thursday.

Extension of Sittings

This morning we came to the House prepared to work again. However, we were faced with this motion which, according to the Government, is meant to speed things along. While Members are ready to debate, we cannot do so because we must fight a motion that is almost unprecedented in the history of this House.

The Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby) demonstrates the attitude we have heard all week. He said: "We have the majority, we write the rules, and all you have to do is follow them". That completely rewrites more than 300 years of British parliamentary tradition. It is utter arrogance. It is complete stupidity. It is totally unacceptable to this Parliament.

I think this House, in the interests of maintaining that tradition of parliamentary control, should vote against the motion that is before us and the amendment to it. We should then be able to continue on with the normal parliamentary process which is much less hazardous than this and gets much more work done than this Government has been demonstrating it can do this week. I say let us have the vote. Let us revert to correct parliamentary process. Let us reject this motion and allow the House to function as the House was meant to function.

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Madam Speaker, my hon. friend opposite says that this debate is about the rules. This debate is about getting on with the business of Canada. That is what this Government has been attempting to do for some time.

In as much as this is the first time that I have risen to participate in debate in the House, I would beg your indulgence to allow me to compliment you on your appointment, Madam Speaker, and indeed your colleague, the Hon. Mr. Speaker, on his election. At the same time, I would like to pay tribute to the man who preceded me as the Hon. Member for South Shore, a man who served this Parliament, this country, and indeed Nova Scotia from June 10, 1957, until November 21, 1988, the Member of Parliament for South Shore for 31 years, five months, and 11 days, the Hon. Lloyd Crouse, PC.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McCreath: Lloyd Crouse served the House of Commons with great distinction for many years. He is a great Canadian. He is a very much beloved Nova Scotian. He is the most popular man on the South Shore, and that is a reputation that is much deserved.

I would like, if I may, also to thank the constituents of the South Shore who have elected me to represent them in Parliament and to assure them that I will do the best I can to do that effectively. That is why I wish to speak in this debate on the motion.

The people of the South Shore are people who like to get on with the business of life. They are people who like to see economic growth. They are people who are self-reliant. They are people who believe in getting on with the business of the day.

It is an historic time for those of us who are new Members to enter the Chamber and to participate in the debates of this House. What we have in the debate that is before us and in the business before the House this week is a logical follow-up to the economic growth and development that the Conservative Government has brought to our country during the course of the last four years.

This new agreement represents an opportunity and a challenge for Canadians. It strengthens our entrepreneurship, it strengthens our identity as Canadians, and it is a sign of the self-confidence that we have developed as a nation moving toward the twenty-first century.

This debate, as I said before, is about time. The time for talk has passed. We have had enough talk. The people of the South Shore have had enough talk. The people of Nova Scotia have had enough talk. The people of Canada have had enough talk.

Contrary to what I have heard from the other side of the House this evening, Canadians in my part of the country and, I suspect, right across this country are ready for Parliament to deal with this Bill so they can get on with the other business of Canada. Really and truly, what this debate is about are the perceptions that Canadians have about Canada.

Clearly, during the last few months Canadians have been presented with two alternatives to the approach to governing this country. One Party has offered positivism, an upbeat approach and confidence in the country and in our future. The alternative presented has been negativism, fear, and disconsolation. This governing Party is the Party that has offered positive leadership to the country, and that is why Canadians opted for this Government on November 21.

This Government is one that leads the way. I would like to say that the South Shore joined in supporting this Government. By electing the Progressive Conservative candidate, it chose to go along with positive leadership.

Extension of Sittings

The South Shore typifies the best of Canada. It is beautiful country. There is no riding in Canada more beautiful. There is no riding that has the beaches, the forests, and the hills that we have. It is a wonderful place to live, and I look forward to returning there very soon.

It is an area that has a wealth of resources, ocean resources, forests, fields and so forth. It is an area that has marvellous people. The 77,000 constituents whom I now represent are a self-reliant people. They are a hospitable people, as the Sikh refugees found out when they landed on the shores of Charlesville which is in the South Shore riding last year. They are a compassionate people as well as an optimistic people. They cherish their values. They are industrious and self-reliant.

We have on the South Shore in Nova Scotia a very proud history. We have a history of European settlement that goes back 350 years, and throughout that period our best times have always been the times when our trading links have been the strongest and the best with the people to the south in the United States. Many Nova Scotians share personal links with the New England area through their friends and relatives. I myself have a grandmother who came from New England of whom I am very proud.

The Free Trade Agreement will be good for Canada but it will be particularly good for Nova Scotia and for the South Shore. I was pleased to hear the previous speaker from this side, the Hon. Member for Halifax West (Mr. Crosby), make this point. I perhaps better than anyone in the House know what an outstanding Member and representative he has been here for the last decade, and I compliment him on his remarks.

Debate on this resolution is not waiting to take place. It has been taking place since the negotiations began in June of 1986. I suggest that Canadians want to get on with what they know will be a good deal for Canada.

Why will it be good? It will be good because of the access it will provide us to American markets. It will be good because of the impact and the benefit that will come from the gradual reduction of tariffs. It will be good because of the greater investment that will flow. Such investment has been so valuable to the Province of Nova Scotia as have the jobs it has created, including, for example, the 6,000 jobs that have been created through Michelin Tire plants and through Bowater and the various other industries that we have.

We will benefit from the dispute settlement mechanism that will address the problem that has been created by countervails put up against various products over the years, and as Canadians we will all benefit from lower consumer prices. In 1986, $2.1 billion was paid by Canadians in taxes to the United States through tariffs.

I would like to comment briefly on the impact that this legislation, getting on with it through this motion, will have that will benefit the people in the South Shore. By far our biggest industry is the fishery. South Shore is the biggest constituency in Canada in terms of the fishing industry. Approximately 60 per cent of the people of the South Shore are employed directly or indirectly in the fishing industry.

Fishing, of course, is a great industry for Canada, and the fishing industry must be represented as a valuable resource for all Canadians. Sixty per cent of Canadian fish are exported to the United States. Seventy-five per cent of Nova Scotia's fish exports go to the United States. In fact, 62 per cent of all fish caught by Nova Scotians end up going to the United States. That is one of the main reasons why this agreement is so important to us in the South Shore and is so potentially valuable to all Nova Scotians, and indeed to Canada.

All elements of our fishing industry will benefit from this agreement. Fishermen will benefit because there will be guaranteed access for the fish that they catch, and indeed the increased demands for Canadian fish will inevitably lead to better prices down the road. Our processing industry will benefit because of the reduction in tariffs and the jobs that will be created as a result.

I could not help but be amazed, as I went through the various fish plants in my constituency during the campaign, that there are over 200 fish plants in South Shore. In one area alone, Barrington Municipality, there are 110 fish plants. I went into most of them during the election campaign, including Bon Portage Fishery in Shag Harbour, for example, as well as those in Woods Harbour, Doctor's Cove, Bear Point, Clark's Harbour, Centreville, Southdale and Newellton.

Time and again I heard plant operators telling me that the Free Trade Agreement is important to them because it will mean an opportunity for expansion. It will be an opportunity to sell their fish, whether they are selling processed fish or saltfish or more cooked fish. In any case, all of them were looking forward to the opportunities that this agreement presented to them.

I was amazed when I walked into fish plants and heard plant operators saying to me: "I have been a Liberal all my life, but for the first time I am going to vote Conservative because there is no way I can vote against this agreement because it is so good for our industry and so good for our products".

Extension of Sittings

● (0010)

One of the greatest fears that fishermen in Nova Scotia have had for many years is that Americans will get the right to come back and fish on the Canadian side of Georges Bank again. The fact that we have reached this agreement which gives us access to American markets without giving them access back to the Canadian side of Georges Bank is probably the single most important thing we get from this agreement that will benefit the fishery in the South Shore. That is probably the main reason why Senator George Mitchell of Maine so vigorously opposed this agreement at all stages. We do not very often hear about him in Upper Canada.

The reduction of tariffs will mean the creation of jobs for Nova Scotians. We look to the creation of anywhere between 300 and 500 new jobs over the next four or five years. National Sea Products alone estimates that it will mean 200 jobs in its various plants in the South Shore. Clearwater talked about another 100 jobs and, as I mentioned earlier, many other fish plants see possibilities. Because of the growing demand for fish sticks and consumer ready-cooked dinners, this will mean job opportunities and expansion for Nova Scotians.

The dispute settlement mechanism will prevent some of the phoney claims that are presented in courts and will quickly lead to a resolution of others. There was a lot of talk about social programs and a real effort made in Nova Scotia to terrorize fishermen into thinking they would lose their unemployment insurance because of this free trade deal. That is nothing but bafflegab. Thank goodness the people recognized it and elected a Conservative Member to represent them, because it indicated their support of the agreement.

The United States Commerce Department already in 1987, said what the score was with respect to UIC when a countervail was brought against Atlantic ground-fish. The U.S. Department of Commerce threw that claim out and said, of course, Canadian unemployment insurance is not a subsidy because it is universally available.

Much talk was directed to our social programs throughout the campaign. It scared a lot of people in the South Shore. I found it very distressing to go into senior citizens homes to find people who were terrorized into believing that their senior citizens assistance or their pensions and so on would be affected.

Nothing in this agreement whatever imperils social programs that are so much a part of Canadian life and are so important to Canadians. That matter was never on the table. That would never be put on the table by a Tory Government and no government that I am a part of, and I am proud to be a part of this Government, will ever have any part of impairing in any way things like medicare and unemployment insurance that are so important to Canadians.

The real protection for social programs comes from a strong economy. It comes from having an economy that will grow and generate more revenue for the Government of Canada. That in the long run will give the Government more money to improve the quality of social programs. That is what the people in the South Shore are in favour of. I could go on at some length about the fishery but I am not sure you really want to hear me, Madam Speaker.

I do want to mention two or three other things. Forestry is a major industry in Nova Scotia, particularly in the South Shore. We have one industry, Bowaters, Mersey and Liverpool, that employs close to 1,000 people. Eighty per cent of the product of that plant goes to the United States. It recognizes the value of the free trade agreement.

We have in Nova Scotia a $50 million Christmas tree industry that employs 3,500 people; 70 per cent of them are in the South Shore. If this agreement did not go through, the U.S. developing Christmas tree industry in New England would be looking to put tariffs up again that would destroy that Christmas tree industry. It is not something we want to see happening. My opponent during the election campaign suggested that we should develop new markets in Asia for our products. I can see selling Christmas trees in Hong Kong, Singapore or Thailand.

We have a Michelin Tire plant that employs 1,500 people. Michelin in Nova Scotia employs 6,000 people, and 95 per cent of its products go to the United States. Michelin is looking at expansion that will create several hundred more jobs because the agreement is going through.

I can talk about ABCO and Lunenburg. I could talk about ABCO plastics in Mahone Bay. I could talk about the beef and pork producers who would be exempted from meat import laws and look forward to new marketing opportunities. I could talk about culture. There is nothing in this agreement that imperils Canadian culture. Canadian culture has never been so strong.

We as Nova Scotians have a sense of our identity. Newfoundlanders have a sense of their identity. I saw the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) earlier. I am sure the Mennonites in Manitoba have a sense of who they are, and the Ukrainians have a sense of who they are, and on and on. We as Canadians have a very proud sense of who we are. We have confidence in who we are.

One could talk about sovereignty. If we are imperilled in our sovereignty going into this agreement, goodness gracious how has Luxembourg survived in the European Economic Community over the last several years?

I could go on, but the hour is late and I will draw to a conclusion. It is very clear what we are here to talk about. We are here to talk about getting on with the business of Canada. We are here to choose between a Government that offers strength, confidence and optimism in the future of Canada, and an Opposition that offers timidity, weakness, fear and pessimism.

Canadians chose Brian Mulroney and the Progressive Conservative Government because they opted for leadership that will develop this country in the 21st century. We are not here to stifle debate. The debate has gone on. When we get home this weekend Members will find out that Canadians do not want to hear the free trade debate anymore. They want us to get on with this legislation, get on with the business of Canada.

I am proud and I will be proud on behalf of the South Shore not only to vote in support of this motion but to vote in support of Bill C-2 when it comes before the House.

Mr. Bob Kilger (Stormont—Dundas): Madam Speaker, I am honoured to be able to make my first speech in this Chamber especially on an issue which is of such importance to Canada and to the people of Stormont—Dundas. I represent a riding which has both a rural and an urban mix. I can tell you that whether or not my constituents are from Cornwall or from some small town in Dundas county, people showed on the night of November 21, just how they felt about free trade.

There are farmers in my riding who fear how free trade will affect their livelihood, how it will affect supply management and how their markets may erode before their very eyes.

In my riding I have several large food processing plants. We were told before the election by the major food processing companies themselves that they will relocate in the United States if free trade comes into effect. If they do, and this exodus includes those plants in my riding, then the economic tragedy to those workers and to the riding will be substantial.

I wish to take this opportunity to thank the electorate of Stormont—Dundas who put their faith in me as their representative in the House of Commons.

[Translation]

I shall do all I can to maintain their trust and to represent them to the best of my ability here in this House.

I was elected because the good people of Stormont—Dundas lost confidence in the Conservative Government, but I also believe they elected me because they did not agree with and did not trust the free trade deal proposed by the Conservative Government.

[English]

They did not approve of this deal because of fear but because they felt the deal was inadequate. I certainly agree with their assessment. As the representative of Stormont—Dundas and as a Canadian I strongly disagree with the free trade deal. I cannot let the concerns of my constituents be ignored and I cannot let this debate go by without registering their concerns in this House. I take much pleasure and pride in speaking tonight in this debate, but the seriousness of this issue must not be lost.

The unemployment figures in Cornwall are already high. As well, Cornwall ranked ninety-ninth out of 100 Canadian cities in terms of income. The free trade deal will, I believe, only add to the economic woes of Stormont—Dundas. We cannot afford plant closures in Stormont—Dundas. We cannot afford the destruction of the family farm and we cannot afford the elimination of small businesses, Canadian small businesses.

The electors of Stormont—Dundas cannot afford the free trade deal. The voters in my riding, like many others in eastern Ontario, showed that they cannot afford to put their future in the hands of the Conservatives.

I will monitor the factories and businesses in my riding. I will monitor the agricultural and agri-food industries, and I will monitor the textile plants. I will not tell my constituents how sorry I am that they face layoffs and dismissals. I will tell them that they can lay the blame at the feet of the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney).

Extension of Sittings

Mr. McDermid: Will you give the praise to him when the new plants come in?

Mr. Kilger: I say to the Hon. Minister of Housing that, yes, I would look forward to the day that I could stand in this Chamber and tell him and his colleagues that the trade deal has brought the prosperity that we would look forward to in Stormont—Dundas. I look forward to that day.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): Try today.

Mr. Kilger: Should it not come, I will rise and we shall reopen that same discussion.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): How about today?

Mr. Kilger: Today, I have no reason to give that credit until you are worthy of it.

I will tell them to lay it at the feet of the Prime Minister, a Prime Minister who by this deal shows how little concern he has for Canadians.

The Government has been slow to tell Canadians how those who will be adversely affected by free trade will be looked after. I for one see this as another example of the Conservatives' lack of concern for the people of Canada. I am appalled that the Government is content to put through free trade without considering the negative impact that it will have on many Canadian workers and their families. The Government is merely intent upon implementing a trade deal. Why should it give any consideration to those who will feel the agony from its actions? The Prime Minister called for a healing in the country. I believe that the Prime Minister is the one who requires healing.

I implore the Government to reconsider its naive actions and cancel this deal. It has received no mandate to inflict pain on Canadians. It has a mandate to provide good government, not government for those individuals the Government perceives to be good.

In conclusion, I would like to congratulate members of my Party who were re-elected to the House. I especially would like to congratulate my colleagues who are new Members. Those Members represent ridings whose voters could not support free trade, and their voices can now be added to those of many other Canadians. I hope that the Government is prepared to listen.

Mr. Jim Fulton (Skeena): Madam Speaker, I am pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate to speak against the motion and against the amendment. There are many Canadians watching who are interested in this debate who know that the Tories and their big business friends bought their way back to government. We still do not know how much big business threw into the coffers in buying newspaper ads in my riding, and in many others, who bought radio ads, who bought TV ads, and porked all the money over to the Tories to buy their way back into government.

However, let me spend a moment on the motion before the House and what has gone on during this week. Since 1913, this is the first time we have seen a government come before the House and attempt to move closure before a debate had even begun. There are many Canadians who understand what type of a jackboot Government has been re-elected.

The rules under which we operate have been in place since 1883, untouched. The Government comes in and hoists the Standing Orders, and hoists our opportunities to have the minority voices of Canada heard in the House. The first thing the Government does is try to dispose of those. Of course, we have the Government House Leader (Mr. Lewis) who requires the assistance of the two opposition Parties even to get his motion before the House so that he can carry on the debate before the House today.

Let me digress for a moment and deal with the Minister of Fisheries and Oceans (Mr. Siddon) and the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) on fish, because we see the type of deals involved. We know how the Government gave away on drug legislation. It gave it over to the United States. It got rid of generic drugs in Canada and made all Canadian consumers pay higher prices, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars a year. That was just one of the little cards that the Government handed over to the United States. There is also the film industry, and many other things.

I am glad to see that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is present. I remember his remarks when he was in British Columbia and the fishing industry asked him about that industry. What did he have to say? "Oh, sorry, you guys lost. You were sold out in the negotiations". Who is protected under Article 1203 supposedly? Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia—

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): That is false, Jim.

Mr. Fulton: He is trying to stand up for it now.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Tell the truth, Jim.

Extension of Sittings

Mr. Fulton: The five Maritime provinces think they are protected. The Minister for International Trade sent off these cozy little letters.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Try a novelty, Mr. Fulton. Try the truth.

Mr. Fulton: The Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) is a little tender about this.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): I am tender about the truth.

Mr. Fulton: They are trying to sell out our fishing industry, our herring and salmon industry which is worth $750 million a year. They will try and sell it out on Monday and Tuesday of next week in Washington. Peter Murphy is the negotiator for the United States. We are sending down Howie Wilson. What is he going down with?

Cabinet yesterday decided for British Columbia that landing requirements are all that are required for British Columbia for our herring and salmon—no grading requirements, and no evisceration requirements. If we do not have a right to gut fish in British Columbia, what type of a government have we got over there? They are giving the whole thing away. They are gutless, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and the whole works. What are they doing over the weekend? They are bringing Mr. McRae back from France and getting everyone together over in Hull to have a summit meeting.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Tell the truth, Jim. Try the truth.

Mr. Fulton: They are going to decide that we are going to have A sockeye and B sockeye. We are going to have dark chums, and we are going to have this, and we are going to have that. They think that they are going to have it ready by Monday to take down to Washington. I know what Peter Murphy is going to say. The Minister for International Trade has said to Howie to go down there. "Don't worry, there is no herring fishery until March, but offer Peter Murphy the opportunity to negotiate with Canada with a December 19 deadline." Why is there this short deadline?

The Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) receives a call from Brian Peckford. He receives calls from the East Coast. They say that they are worried about the fishing industry and do not want any retaliatory action against the east coast fisheries. "Give away the West Coast." We know that the Government gave away the West Coast fishing industry during the negotiations on the Free Trade Agreement. Why were the B.C. regulations not protected? We know that Mr. Vander Zalm did not do anything. He finally sent a letter today to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). He said: "We want full regulations. We want landing requirements. We want grading requirements. We want evisceration." A deathbed repentance by Mr. Vander Zalm.

An Hon. Member: He supported free trade.

Mr. Fulton: That is right. He is a big supporter of the Free Trade Agreement, like Mr. Bourassa. Five Liberal Premiers favour it and four are opposed. We are starting to get the swing of things here. Mr. Vander Zalm comes in right at the tail end.

Let me come back to what they are doing over the weekend. They are working on the grading regulations. They are saying that Cabinet is going to claim just landing requirements for British Columbia. We will designate certain places where chum, sockeye and spring—things that the Secretary of State would not even know about—are going to have to be landed in certain places, but no grading requirements, no evisceration requirements. This week in the House I stated to the Minister of Fisheries that GATT countries like Great Britain and many other countries have import controls—

Mr. McDermid: Import.

Mr. Fulton:—GATT consistent on graded fish and eviscerated fish from British Columbia. They have to be graded and eviscerated to get into Great Britain.

• (0030)

And what does the Minister for International Trade say? "Oh, the U.S. doesn't want B.C. to have grading, or evisceration requirements. We will get rid of those."

An Hon. Member: It is the same as with the GATT.

Mr. Fulton: It is just another trade-off to the United States, Madam Speaker.

Well, let us take a look at what the implications are. It means that offshore buyers will be able to come into Canada and buy our fish, and they will be able to gut them and can them, and short freeze and ship them to markets all over the world.

One has to ask oneself why it is that B.C.'s fishing industry is known around the world as number one; why it is that B.C. fish products are number one around the world. Well, it is because we have in place comprehensive quality of product controls. It is because we in British Columbia, unlike the U.S., understand stock management and stock conservation.

Extension of Sittings

We heard the Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. McCreath) talking about the Georges Bank decision. That is a decision that was made by the World Court. My friend the Secretary of State for External Affairs has told me to my face that this Government would like to negotiate 54/40, the AB Line, the fixed entrance.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fulton: He wants to negotiate that with the U.S.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Tell the truth, Jim.

Mr. Fulton: It is a preposterous proposal.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fulton: Here we have the richest fishing grounds in the whole of Canada, and they want to give it away.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): If you are going to quote me, tell the truth.

Mr. Fulton: The Secretary of State for External Affairs says that what I say is not true. He said it to my face. We have heard similar kinds of statements from the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). The Prime Minister, on Wednesday, said to my friend from Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett): “Oh well, there will be an interim report on Friday. You will see it on Friday. Don’t worry about a thing.”

An Hon. Member: It is now 12.30 a.m. on Saturday morning, and we have not seen a thing.

An Hon. Member: Tell the truth, Jim.

An Hon. Member: We have waited until 1 a.m., and still nothing.

Mr. Fulton: They had a little meeting. A couple of Ministers got together with Jean de Grandpré, who has stepped down from his $1 million a year job at Bell Canada to head up the blue ribbon committee to look at the impact on displaced workers.

Let us look at what the U.S. Congress has done. There they have insisted upon 60-day notice of plant closures for any plant with more than 200 workers. The U.S. Congress considers that to be a good idea.

This Government has had two and one half years in which to put into place retraining and assistance programs for displaced workers, and it has done nothing.

All we hear about are interim programs, interim studies, and final studies.

We have to wait until next May or June before we find out what this Government is going to do. It is absolutely preposterous!

What has this Government done for the displaced workers at Gillette, for the displaced workers at Catelli, for the displaced workers at Northern Telecom? Nothing. And what is it doing in relation to the B.C. fishing industry? Nothing. It will be giving it away on Monday and Tuesday. Mark my words. Here we have Howie Wilson—who is a nice guy and an excellent public servant, going down to Washington with a full set of regulations in hand to deal with Peter Murphy—and in the person of Peter Murphy we do not exactly have your naive “short pants” negotiator.

Howie Wilson will arrive in Washington and present the landing requirements for B.C. to Peter Murphy. It will be a case of Howie saying: “Oh, oh, Mr. Murphy, here are the landing requirements for B.C.”

There is no exemption under Article 1203. There is no protection there. And when British Columbia falls, Newfoundland falls, Prince Edward Island falls, New Brunswick falls, Nova Scotia falls, and Quebec falls. Those fishing regulations aren’t worth salt. Read Article 1205.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Tell the truth, Jim. For a change, try telling the truth.

Mr. Fulton: The Secretary of State for External Affairs has never even read Article 1205.

Let me deal now with forestry. We have heard a lot of drivel from the other side of the House. I remember only too well the former Member for Vancouver Centre, the past Minister for International Trade, going down to Washington to deal with the U.S. on a countervail action in respect of softwood lumber—and this at a time when there was absolutely no reason whatsoever to even deal with the U.S. on that countervail action. Canada had been found absolutely innocent. There was no need to change any forest policy, any stumpage policy in any province or the territories of Canada.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): What dishonesty; what rampant dishonesty.

Mr. Fulton: There was no need for any change in U.S. or Canadian law.

An Hon. Member: Tell the truth, Fulton!

Mr. Fulton: We send down to Washington a Minister with no backbone whatsoever. And what do we get?—“Oh, oh, I am going to make a one-time only 10 per cent offer.”

The Americans go: “This is incredible.” And that is precisely what Murphy is going to say next week in respect of fish. These idiots go down to Washington and offer to give away a $750 million herring and salmon industry.

They will not get away with it in so far as British Columbia is concerned. I have already told the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) that if they do that, the Minister of Fisheries will be crabmeat in British Columbia. And his reply was: “So what.”

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: Well, while he may not like the Minister—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: Well, Madam Speaker, we in British Columbia are simply not going to accept that kind of giveaway. But let me finish my point on forestry. The Minister for International Trade in the last Parliament goes down to Washington and says: “Oh, oh, I will make this 10 per cent one-time only offer.” And the Americans go back to their offices and they belly laugh until they are almost sick. They are laughing. They are going: “Oh, oh, oh; this is really incredible. These Canadians are incredible. They want to tax themselves.”

So, they say: “Listen, Madam Carney, you slap it on at 15 per cent, and we will be your pals.” She comes back and gathers this magnificent Cabinet together and they say: “Oh, Pat, 15 per cent! We are only going to tax ourselves to the tune of $650 million a year. That’s great. That’s great.”

Who are these people, Madam Speaker! They are giving away the country. They have given away our pharmaceutical industry; they have given away our film industry. These are the same people who tell us that we need not worry about our social programs. These are the same people who gave away our largest industry, our forestry industry, an industry that, directly and indirectly, employs one million Canadians.

Look at what they are doing to B.C. Look at what the Auditor General has had to say.

I am glad to see the Minister of State for Forestry (Mr. Merrithew) in his seat. Not a single contract under FERDA is being properly administered.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fulton: NSR is growing in the whole country.

Some Hon. Members: What a mess!

Mr. Fulton: Our forestry lands are not being satisfactorily restocked. Our forests are being overcut. Everyone in the country knows it.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fulton: Bill Vander Zalm replaces the 15 per cent countervail with a $800 million stumpage fee increase per year. Yet, he does not put one thin dime back into reforestation.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fulton: The Tories condemned the Liberals for putting less than 10 cents on the dollar back into reforestation. Yet here we have the Tories putting less than nine cents out of every dollar back into reforestation in this country.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Fulton: It is absolutely shameless what is going on. And let us talk about shakes and shingles for a few moments—

An Hon. Member: Shake them up, colleague.

Mr. Fulton: We have to get right down to it. I was speaking earlier this evening to a person who is very knowledgeable about the shakes and shingle industry, an individual by the name of Mary who lives in Point Grey in Vancouver. She has a great deal of knowledge about the shakes and shingles industry.

We had a 35 per cent countervail imposed on shakes and shingles, without any legal basis whatsoever. And what does this Government do? “Oh”, it cries; “Oh, oh, oh”. We had thousands of workers put out of work. And then this Government said to the U.S.: “Oh, oh, take it off.” And then they say: “Don’t worry. Had the free trade deal been in place, this never would have happened. And once it is in place, it will disappear.”

Extension of Sittings

And what does President Reagan do? The Canadian dollar, between 1986 and 1988, increased in value by 17 per cent vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar, and President Reagan drops the countervail to 20 per cent. "Oh, thanks, President Reagan; thanks."

Once you add on the 17 per cent increase in the Canadian dollar, the countervail amounts to 37 per cent. It is worse now than it was in 1986! It is worse now!

These guys are absolutely incredible! Absolutely incredible.

An Hon. Member: And they negotiated a free trade deal.

Mr. Fulton: The Hon. Member for South Shore (Mr. McCreath) made his first speech in this place this evening, and I do not intend to be too hard on him. He talked about a disputes settlement mechanism.

That was the Prime Minister's (Mr. Mulroney) bottom line—a binding disputes settlement mechanism. We were told that if we do not get that, there would be no deal signed.

There is no binding disputes settlement mechanism in this deal. There is diddly squat in the deal, Madam Speaker. Anyone who can read, anyone who knows about fish, anyone who knows about forestry, anyone who knows about agriculture, about manufacturing, knows the difficulty we are in.

And what about plywood? What happened this week about plywood? "Oh, Canadian knots are too big. Ooooh!"

Some Hon. Members: Ho, ho, ho! It must be Christmas time.

Mr. Fulton: Canadian knots are too big. "Oh!"

Let me tell you a story, Madam Speaker. You need to hear a story. We took a Canadian two-by-four. We have what is known as SPF No. one, a product made in my constituency—

An Hon. Member: It probably fell on your head.

Mr. Fulton: We took that two-by-four to a meeting in Washington, an eight footer, and we picked up an American southern yellow pine two-by-four and carried out an experiment on the two.

Well, Madam Speaker, as you can see, I am not very big. I weigh 100 kilos. I went metric some time ago in an effort to keep my weight down. Yet, with a mild swipe of my hand I was able to break that American southern yellow pine two-by-four. No problem.

An Hon. Member: I have news for you, it would not work on the Canadian two-by-four.

Mr. Fulton: I am coming to that. A good solid Canadian two-by-four, whether produced in the riding of the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan (Mr. Angus) or on Vancouver Island, or in the interior of B.C., or in my own great riding of Skeena, there is no man or no woman in this country who could break that two-by-four; not in any way, shape or form. "Oh!" What do the Americans—

Some Hon. Members: Ho, ho, ho!

● (0040)

Mr. Fulton: So what do the Americans do? They say we cannot compete with you. That is what they say in every industry.

Mr. Kempling: What is the punch line?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Fulton: Our workers and our mills are more productive. Do you know what they are doing now on shakes and shingles? They are keeping the 20 per cent on in order to allow the roofing industry to figure out ways to replace our shakes and shingles. If we are beating them on anything they slap on a tariff.

The Tories do not seem to understand that. They claim we are trading to the marketplace. Those guys cannot run a popcorn stand. They really cannot.

Mr. McDermid: But guess who got re-elected!

Mr. Fulton: Oh!

Mr. McDermid: The little red rump is still in the same place.

Mr. Fulton: I knew they would come around again.

Mr. McDermid: A moral victory! We know, we know.

Mr. Fulton: We know who put them in. Who paid for all the big ads?

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kempling: The unions.

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): Bob White.

Mr. McDermid: Shirley Carr.

Extension of Sittings

Mr. Fulton: Oh, the unions paid for the Tories' ads?

Let me deal with a few other things. The Tories say the Americans are so progressive on social programs. Some 40 million Americans have no medical coverage of any kind, and 20 million of them are children.

Mr. McDermid: A terrible shame.

Mr. Fulton: The Minister of Housing says in a humorous way, oh, isn't that terrible?

Mr. McDermid: Do not impute motives, my friend.

Mr. Fulton: It is unfortunate for anyone who actually goes into a constituency and knows what the real impact of poverty is, who knows what the impact of being out of work for a long time is. That is a Government that forgets in the countervail case against east coast fish that unemployment insurance was found as a counter-available subsidy.

Some Hon. Members: No way!

An Hon. Member: The Commerce Department threw it out.

Mr. McDermid: And you know it. Now, tell the truth.

Mr. Fulton: It was found as a countervailable subsidy.

Some Hon. Members: It was thrown out.

Mr. Fulton: Let us talk about a few other things.

Mr. McDermid: Yes, get off that one because you are not telling the truth.

Mr. Fulton: They do not like to hear the truth.

What about the Maquiladora zone? There are 150,000 Mexican men and women working there for $6.25 Canadian a day. Some of the products they are making will find their way into the Canadian market.

What about the 12 States with no minimum wage? What about the nine States with a minimum wage below $3 Canadian an hour? Those Tories are trying to tell workers over here in Aylmer, in Belleville, in Arnprior, out in British Columbia, in Alberta, Yukon, the Northwest Territories and the Maritimes: "Do not worry, we will lower our wages and get rid of our social programs." It is Canadian companies that will bring pressure to get rid of social programs, not just American companies.

This deal is stupid. It cannot be described as anything else. The bottom line that the Prime Minister wanted, a binding dispute settlement mechanism, is not there. We know what the Secretary of State had to say about the Free Trade Agreement. We know what the Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) had to say. We know what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) had to say.

Some Hon. Members: Time!

Mr. Fulton: They were all opposed to a Free Trade Agreement because they all said "if it affects our sovereignty, we will have none of it." It does affect our sovereignty, and we will have none of it!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Madam Speaker, I appreciate having an opportunity to close this debate on the motion before the House. It is important that those watching us are reminded of what we are debating tonight.

We are debating something very straightforward, but the first point made by the Members opposite is that the Government is hijacking the rules of this House. They say we are doing that because we want to get legislation passed without the rules of the House. That is simply not correct.

The fact is that it is only within the rules that any government can get any temporary changes such as we have in this motion. It is a very restricted motion with respect to time and the issue it covers. It is done under the rules. In fact, it is so clear it is within the rules that the matter was put before the Chair for a ruling. The Chair clearly ruled that we were within the rules and the Government was sustained in the position it took.

There has not been any hijacking of the rules. There has not been any changing of the rules. It has been done within the rules, and I think that is the first point people listening should be aware of.

What we are discussing now is simply the amount of time for debate and we will decide in about 15 minutes time not only to confirm the rightness of the Speaker's decision, but to sustain the rights of the majority in this House.

Mr. Gray (Windsor West): You do not vote on Speakers' rulings. You are 20 years out of date.

Mr. Epp: The second point is also interesting. It concerns the matter of a mandate. We have heard a lot during this debate about the Government not having a mandate or the moral right to bring forward free trade legislation. Let us look at that position.

Extension of Sittings

First of all we have a parliamentary system. That is interesting to note because Members opposite have been arguing both sides of the issue at the same time. On the one hand they talk about the traditions and practices of the British parliamentary system. That system is based on majority government. It is based on the ability of any government, majority or minority, as long as it enjoys majority support, to put forward its legislation. If it is sustained in its legislation, it continues to govern. If not, someone else governs or an election is called. That is the parliamentary system.

Members opposite say this is a hijacking and it would never happen in Britain. If they look at the rules in the British House they will see they have a method of determining how much time will be spent on each piece of legislation. It is pre-determined even before they debate the legislation. Here they are trying to say on the one hand this is a violation of the system, but they should go back and look at the rules in that system right now.

There is an even more interesting point. They said we did not have a referendum. Well, we do not have a referendum system. We have the British parliamentary system which is very clear. If a prime minister, such as ours, has the support of the majority of Members in the House, he has the ability and the right to put forward legislation and the right to expect it will eventually be voted on and determined by the House. That is what we are asking in this motion.

The Opposition talk about a mandate. They say we do not have 50 per cent of the votes cast so we do not have a mandate. Obviously if that were so this Party would not have a mandate after the 1988 election. What about 1984? Then with the largest majority in the history of Canada, our Party did not have in a technical sense a mandate. It had 49.9 per cent of the popular votes cast. In fact, we have to go back to 1940 to find a Party which formed the government and which had more than 50 per cent of the votes cast. I guess it was only in 1940 that that government had a mandate to do anything.

● (0050)

Let us take a look at what happened in 1972. In 1972, a number of us came into the House. It was a minority government. There was a difference of two seats. What happened? The NDP with the smallest number of Members in the House every day was demanding another deal behind the curtain. They had no mandate.

They had no position. In fact, it was an incestuous relationship.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: In fact, the symbiotic relationship was so close that under any other terms it would have been covered by the pornography laws.

Liberals did not have a mandate. Yet what did they do? During that period of time they brought in the National Energy Program. They brought in price and wage controls. They repatriated the Constitution. They changed the Constitution. They did all those things. And not at one time did they have above 50 per cent of the votes cast. What kind of poppycock are they trying to throw out on the floor of the House of Commons?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Let us take a look at another point. It is rather interesting. I know that I cannot put hold up displays in the House so I will not do it.

What is interesting to note is what happened to the individual Members in terms of the number of votes cast in the last election. Did they have 50 per cent of the votes cast? Do they have a personal mandate? Let us take a look at the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner). Let us look at the riding of Vancouver Quadra in British Columbia. The numbers might not be totally accurate after an official count but they are so close that they still make my point very valid.

John Turner had 20,704 votes. Bill Clarke received 14,235 votes. Gerry Scott received 10,304. I could go on. There were over 24,000 votes for the last two. Mr. Turner received less than 50 per cent. Does he have a mandate?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Epp: What kind of mandate does he have? That has been the argument of Members opposite. The point is very clear. On the one hand they argue that if one does not have 50 per cent of the votes cast then one does not have a mandate. But on the other hand they are saying that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) does have a mandate. They should get their act together.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Let us take a look at the Leader—

Mr. Keyes: Madam Speaker, I rise on a point of order. As a new Member I am not too clear on this point. I thought that we were not supposed to refer to Members by their first names. Is that not so?

Extension of Sittings

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): It is not a common practice for Hon. Members to refer to other Members by their names. They are normally referred to by title or by the name of their riding. Even though the Hon. Minister was quoting he should have found a way to express himself differently. I think that he knows that. I thank the Hon. Member. The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, if Members opposite do not want me to use the name of their Leader then I will not.

What about the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent)? Let us take a look at that person. I will not use that Leader's name.

The Leader of the NDP won the vote in Oshawa—and, no, it was not Bob White. Nor was it Shirley Carr. This unnamed Member received 18,410 votes. Nancy McLean received 14,040 votes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Ed White, the Liberal candidate, received 8,379 votes. The Leader of the NDP does not have a majority either. He has no mandate to speak.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Let us take a look at the great riding of Charlevoix.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!!

Mr. Epp: I am sorry that I cannot name the Leader of the Government, my Leader and the Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party (Mr. Mulroney). We all know who he is.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: It says on what I have in my hand that Brian Mulroney received 33,729 votes. The Liberal candidate received 5,983 votes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: The NDP candidate received 1,829 votes.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: The Leader of the Progressive Conservative Party has a mandate.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: He received 81 per cent of the votes cast—now that is a mandate!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Thus the Leader of the Government decided to let the people decide. That is what the Leader of the Opposition said. How many times before the election was called on October 1, did he say: "Let the people decide"? He would stand and say passionately: "Let the people decide". Would somebody please tell that slow learner that the people have decided?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, I must tell you this. During the election campaign from time to time I had to go to various places. Twice I met the Leader—no, she is not the Leader of the NDP yet, she is just working on it—Shirley Carr. It was interesting to watch her. She went across the country wearing a huge orange button. It stated: "This time, Ed". Every time I would see her she would be wearing this button. I saw her the other day. She is not wearing the button any more. There might be a reason for it. The reason I take it is that Bob White said to Shirley: "This time, Bob". Probably Shirley has said: "No, this time, Shirley".

I ask members of the NDP what has happened to your campaign? What happened when they said that there should only be two Parties? Does that mean that they are going to leave after this day? Does it mean that they have no mandate whatsoever, or now because they are number three they will not only have to try harder, they will have to look first to see whether or not they have any credibility?

What is the position of those Hon. Members? Where is their power? They went across the country making all types of statements and yet the people did not sustain them. That is why the Member from Selkirk (Mr. Bjornson) is here. He defeated Howard Pawley. That is why long-standing Members who were in the House are not opposite any more. It is because the people did not give them the mandate; they gave the mandate to the Leader of this Government.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: Madam Speaker, if you really get down to the bottom line tonight we see that there is another problem that they have. From time to time I must admit, although I am not very pleased to do it, that sometimes we ran into a similar problem in opposition. Members opposite have become prisoners of their own rhetoric. On the one hand they said: "Let the people decide", and when the people decided, they did not like that. On the other hand they said: "We will fight them in the House of Commons. We will fight them on Main Street. We will fight them on the beaches". That is where they all want to go—to the beaches. I say to them, what you really want is for the Government to pass this motion. You want the Government to pass free trade so that you can go home and whine and cry, saying that you could not do anything about it but you sure put up a good fight. That is what you really want to do.

Extension of Sittings

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Epp: It is time to put forward the rules so this House can in fact pass the legislation for which the people have given the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) a mandate. It is time to get on with that deal and time to pass the Free Trade Agreement. We have done that once before in the House. We will do it again. We will do it, starting now.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 57, it is my duty to interrupt proceedings and to put to a vote forthwith all questions necessary to dispose of the amendment and the main motion now before the House.

[English]

The question is on the amendment standing in the name of the Hon. Member for Calgary West (Mr. Hawkes). Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the amendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those in favour of the amendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Hawkes), which was agreed to on the following division:

ROUTINE PROCEEDINGS

[English]

FOOD AND DRUGS ACT

MEASURE TO AMEND

Mr. Nelson A. Riis (Kamloops) moved for leave to introduce a Bill C-205, an Act to amend the Food and Drugs Act, cautionary label on alcoholic beverage containers.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to introduce this Bill. This is the season when there tends, unfortunately, to be an excessive amount of drinking and associated driving. This Bill would simply require that any alcoholic beverage in Canada or imported into Canada would be required to have a cautionary label that would say: "Excessive drinking impairs one's driving ability".

There might be further amendments to indicate perhaps the contents, whether wine, beer or spirits, because of growing interest and also a warning that excessive drinking is injurious to one's health.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

ELECTORAL DISTRICT OF MARKHAM

MEASURE TO CHANGE NAME OF CONSTITUENCY

Mr. Bill Attewell (Markham) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-206, an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Markham to Markham-Whitchurch-Stouffville.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the Hon. Member have leave to introduce the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Attewell: Mr. Speaker, I rise to introduce my Private Members' Bill, which is an Act to change the name of the electoral district of Markham to Markham-Whitchurch-Stouffville. The new federal riding of Markham came into being in the summer of 1987 when redistribution created 13 new ridings in Canada.

The Markham riding is comprised of the entire areas of two towns, the Town of Markham and the Town of Whitchurch-Stouffville. Their new boundaries came into effect on January 1, 1971, following the passage of the Region of York Act which was enacted in May, 1970.

I believe the name change will be welcome news to the residents of both Whitchurch-Stouffville and to Markham as it will not only create a unique new riding distinct from the provincial riding named Markham but it more appropriately recognizes the residents of Whitchurch-Stouffville.

Motion agreed to, Bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

POINT OF ORDER

APPOINTMENT OF STRIKING COMMITTEE

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I rise not in any way trying to delay proceedings, but I would like some information from the Government. Standing Order 104(1)(a) reads:

At the commencement of the first session of each Parliament, a Striking Committee of seven Members, the membership of which shall continue from session to session, shall be appointed—

I want from the Government some assurance that, indeed, within the next few days this committee will be struck. We have had a series of Estimates that were referred to standing committees, but the committees cannot sit if they are not struck. I ask the Government if it could see fit this week to have this striking committee meet and proceed.

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I submit that the operative words are “within the first 10 sitting days after its appointment”.

Mr. Gauthier: That is to report.

Mr. Lewis: That is to report. I would assure my hon. friend that there is no intention to delay this particular matter and we will get on with it as soon as possible.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that all questions on the Order Paper be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: Shall all questions be allowed to stand?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

MOTION THAT DEBATE BE NOT FURTHER ADJOURNED

Hon. Doug Lewis (Minister of State and Minister of State (Treasury Board) and Acting President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I move:

That the debate on the motion for second reading and reference to a Committee of the Whole of Bill C-2 and on any amendment or sub-amendment thereto shall not be further adjourned.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed to the motion will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the yeas have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the Members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Lewis), which was agreed to on the following division:

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE
AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed from December 15, 1988, consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie (Saint John's West) that Bill C-2, An Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States, be read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole House; and of the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 127).

Hon. Pierre H. Cadieux (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, as I said on the evening of November 21, "How sweet it is!". On November 21 of this year, the Progressive Conservative Party once again won the confidence of the Canadian people, and was re-elected with another majority. The choice of government that we offered the electorate was a clear one: The best team of men and women to run the country as the 1990s dawn, and the cornerstone of the program we offered them was of course the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I am proud to rise once more and say to all Canadians, and especially to the voters in my riding of Vaudreuil, how proud I feel to be able once again to serve my country.

[English]

—proud but also privileged to take part in this historic debate, for a second time I might say, and to witness the implementation of what I would describe as the most comprehensive Bill ever presented to this House in terms of the future well-being of this country, namely the Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement.

[Translation]

I have often said, Mr. Speaker, that the Free Trade Agreement crowns the many efforts made by Canadians and Americans for over a century to improve the framework within which their trade and economic relations are administered, to administer in a special way the trading partnership that our two countries have for a long time had with each other, without hampering the process of liberalizing international trade that we are pursuing under the GATT. This is what we call a "two-track" trade policy.

A short time ago, Montreal hosted a ministerial conference as part of the eight round of GATT negotiations, known as the Uruguay Round, which was launched in 1986 and is scheduled to conclude in 1990. Canada is taking part in these negotiations in a spirit of openness and a real desire to improve the flow of international trade.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement

As we could see during that week, these negotiations have been slow and wearisome. They have been going on in the broad context of 96 member countries defending interests that are too often divergent, with the result that reaching a consensus has sometimes been difficult. We only need to think of agriculture, Mr. Speaker, to realize that.

The point I particularly want to make, Mr. Speaker, is that the forum for negotiations that the GATT provides does not entirely reflect the dynamic of our trade with the United States. It would have been hard for Canada to derive the same benefits that this bilateral Free Trade Agreement is giving us, from the multilateral GATT.

• (1200)

[English]

Our first commitment as a responsible Government entering difficult negotiations was to protect and enhance Canada's access to its largest export market, keeping in mind the growing trend toward world trade. We have done so and achieved major economic benefits for Canada without jeopardizing our distinctiveness and our sovereignty.

[Translation]

It was not by chance, Mr. Speaker, that we initiated this Agreement with the United States. Nor did our government invent this mechanism for establishing better trade relations between our two countries. No, Mr. Speaker, history showed us the way and we have chosen to follow it. We wanted to provide a more logical framework for the biggest trading partnership in the world.

For Canada and for the United States, the Free Trade Agreement is a giant step into the spirit of freer trade that is gaining ground in the international economic community. Trade is not something you carry out on a small scale, Mr. Speaker. Just think of the European Economic Community, of COMECON, of the free-trade zones between New Zealand and Australia and between Israel and the United States. Canada was the only large industrialized country not to have access to a market of more than 100 million people. With the Free Trade Agreement we have remedied that. What is more, we are not only giving our firms and businesses an opportunity to excel at the international level, we are also ensuring that we have the financial means to maintain all our social programs and regional assistance programs, just as we are protecting the range of policies that make us distinctive and envied, both as a people and as a country.

But we are aware that during the recent election campaign there were people who expressed fears about the effect the Free Trade Agreement would have on certain of our programs. I am sure you will allow me, Mr. Speaker, to discuss some of these areas, so that the facts, which were all too often twisted by campaign oratory, can be re-established, and so that people with concerns about the future of our programs can be reassured. First of all, a reality that is too often silently glossed over is that, on the one hand, the negotiations that led to this Agreement were carried on in accordance with the rules provided under the GATT for bilateral agreements of this kind, and, on the other, this Agreement will operate within the framework of the GATT's rules and regulations.

But I have to go into this matter in some detail, because it was unfortunately presented in a manner that I would describe as warped. Let's start with social programs. As the "father of medicare" in Quebec, Mr. Claude Castonguay, stated during an interview, only a strong country can bear the costs arising from its social policies. Not coincidentally, we have developed a range of social care programs, Mr. Speaker, while at the same time increasing our trade with the U.S. And the reason for this is that our prosperity is closely tied to our ability to export to the U.S. We have staunchly maintained that there is nothing in the Agreement that threatens the viability of these measures and we have consistently refused to discuss them at the negotiating table. That's the truth, Mr. Speaker.

Furthermore, the laws of all trading countries recognize, as do the GATT regulations, that universally accessible social programs such as medicare and old age pensions are legitimate government activities that do not impede international trade. That's one of the reasons why the U.S. government rejected its own fishing industry's demand to consider the unemployment insurance benefits paid to Canadian fishermen as a program subject to trade reprisals.

Mr. Speaker, such eminent people as Justice Emmett Hall, one of the pioneers of medicare in Canada, Claude Castonguay, whom I mentioned earlier, Pierre-Marc Johnson, Quebec's former Minister of Health and Social Services, Thérèse Lavoie-Roux, Bernard Landry and even Quebec Premier Robert Bourassa, along with scores of others, Mr. Speaker, have categorically stated that there is nothing in this Agreement that poses a threat to our social programs.

With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to quote Claude Castonguay:

I disagree completely with those who say that free trade threatens our social programs. On the contrary, with the Canada-U.S. Agreement, our social programs have a better chance of being maintained, and possibly even improved.

[English]

Mr. Castonguay was not the only distinguished Canadian once involved in the establishment of our medicare system to echo those remarks. I mentioned Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, the one man who can claim to be the father of medicare in Canada. Mr. Hall was straightforward when he stated:

I got the document, and I can tell you this, that if I had found . . . provisions which would damage medicare, or certainly destroy it . . . I would have opposed the agreement.

[Translation]

These people, Mr. Speaker, have all worked to build this country. They have devoted their time, energy and intelligence to the service of this nation. They are great Canadians who value the integrity of that which they helped to build and no one can question their judgment and good faith; the residents of this country have faith in them, in us and in the future of Canada. Last November 21, they endorsed what they believed to be fair and right for them.

Some people have expressed concern about the quality of health care in Canada once the Agreement is implemented. Let me say again to them, Mr. Speaker, that as with social programs, the provisions of the Free Trade Agreement do not extend to health care services. This means that provincial governments remain completely free to operate their health care systems as they wish, regardless of the Agreement's implementation.

However, for the benefit of detractors, I have to say that mention is made in the Free Trade Agreement of management services dispensed in the normal course of hospital administrators' duties. However, there are no specific provisions pertaining to bookkeeping, computer systems, pay systems or hospital services.

These management services, Mr. Speaker, are administrative services and they in no way reflect the quality of the health care provided by an institution.

Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement

However, if certain provincial governments were to decide to privatize some of these services, again, there is nothing in the Agreement that would force them to deal with U.S. companies. Therefore, there is no need to be afraid that the American style of management will be forced upon us with the implementation of the Agreement, or that the quality of our health care services is threatened.

Another issue that was raised, Mr. Speaker, was the environment. However, once again, we did not often hear throughout the course of the campaign that environmental programs are clearly exempted from the Agreement's provisions. This exemption is made possible by the inclusion in Article 1201 of a GATT provision stipulating that nothing in this Agreement shall be construed to prevent the adoption or enforcement of measures, and I quote:

. . . necessary to protect human, animal or plant life or health.

Moreover, the Agreement specifically provides for the establishment of environmental standards, even if these standards result in a trade slowdown.

Let us now move on to regional development, Mr. Speaker. Alleviating regional disparities has always been a government priority, regardless of that government's political affiliation. I would even remind you, Mr. Speaker, that this is one of the fundamental goals recognized in our Canadian Constitution. Despite this de facto recognition and despite the very positive record of this Government during its last mandate, some people have intimated that the Agreement threatens everything we have done for Canadians living outside central Canada.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, they contend that our desire to seek out clearer and fairer trade regulations by discussing business subsidies with our U.S. partner is tantamount to abandoning our regional development policies.

Such a conclusion is totally baseless. It's true, Mr. Speaker, that we were unable to agree on the definition of subsidies that impede smooth trade between our two countries. However, negotiations on this matter are planned under the terms of the Free Trade Agreement and within the framework of the GATT talks.

And as our Prime Minister emphatically stated on several occasions, the Canadian Government would never sign an agreement which could jeopardize our ability to promote regional development policies, and that, Mr. Speaker, is a very firm commitment.

Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Without such an agreement with the United States, however, we would still preserve the possibility of referring our trade disagreements to the settlement mechanism provided for in the agreement, in order to protect us from decisions motivated as a response to political pressure.

• (1210)

[English]

We all know indeed that we have not necessarily chosen the easy way to prosperity, as there is no way such way, Mr. Speaker. We have to work hard and perhaps harder. This country was built on the relentless efforts of our ancestors who always had the full knowledge of their responsibility toward their peers.

[Translation]

And as builders, Mr. Speaker, we did not shy away from our responsibilities through a lack of knowledge and information, as some have claimed. We are prepared to help the people who will have to face changes of a vocational nature or who will need help to adapt to a changing labour force, as we have always done.

Mr. Speaker, some of my colleagues will provide you with an opportunity later on during this debate to conclude with me that we have already implemented programs to meet the needs of the workers who will be affected by these changes.

It is important to realize that our Government is already equipped with a sound structure in the area of manpower and industry adaptation, and that this structure is very effective indeed because it already meets the needs of some 5 million workers who are transferred each year by offering training programs and real adaptation possibilities.

But to be really sure, Mr. Speaker, we have created the advisory council on adaptation, chaired by Mr. Jean De Grandpré, whose purpose is to help the Government ensure that Canadian men and women will benefit fully from the new opportunities resulting from the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement. Job losses or manpower transfers are not the only indicators of a society's mobility. There is another factor that is just as real but too often neglected, Mr. Speaker, and that is job creation. And in the area, of job creation this Government has a proud record.

This is another highly significant factor that determines a government's ability to adapt to economic change in the country it is governing, and to date this Government, has been able, Mr. Speaker, to adapt in a quite conclusive manner. That is the hallmark of a responsible government.

And on the matter of responsibility, Mr. Speaker, what about the responsibility of the Leader of the Opposition who liked to suggest before the elections were called he was ready to accept the people's verdict, he was ready for "speedy passage", to use his own terms, of the Free Trade Bill. He even repeated the same comments the day after the election, when he recognized the electorate had decided and the Government had received a clear mandate to proceed with its proposal.

[English]

Wasn't he the same one who was saying before the election to let the people decide?

Let me remind him as he is probably suffering from amnesia about his own words of November 22 when he said:

You know, we let the people decide. The people have decided, so that having stated our case, well then, let matters proceed.

[Translation]

What about the responsibility of the Member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Turner) who appears to have suffered from a sudden stroke of amnesia, Mr. Speaker, because he is suggesting the Government received the right to re-introduce the Bill, but not to expect speedy passage through this House. For what reasons, Mr. Speaker, did the Opposition Leader change his mind?

I would not try and find an answer to that puzzling question because something more important really is this Government's responsibility to meet its treaty commitments. We must honour our commitments if we want our partners to be able to reciprocate.

And we also have a responsibility to those Canadians who already are planning their operations in anticipation of the benefits of free trade. They must be in a position to do so in full knowledge, Mr. Speaker, and I see you are signaling that my time is almost up.

I would have liked to remind Hon. Members of the comments of the NDP Leader, but for want of time this will have to wait for another occasion, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Questions and comments. The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have some questions for the Hon. Minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my mistake. There are no questions or comments. On debate, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre.

Hon. Lloyd Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for recognizing me either by way of comment, question or debate. As the Minister has just said, this is an historic debate, but it is too bad the Government itself has not recognized that fact. It has introduced closure and is restricting debate to a 24 hour period of second reading.

It was only a short while ago in this House when we were debating a motion brought forward by, I think it was, the junior Minister of Finance to raise the tax revenue on dog food that we had seven or eight debates on second reading on that important issue. Yet the Government cannot quite find the same amount of time to debate this issue dealing with the most important document facing Canada in a century.

I agree, we are not going to fight the election again but what we do have to debate in this House in the short time remaining to us is what is happening in Canada today. What is happening as a consequence of the election? What are the results, not just in terms of the raw power of a parliamentary majority which the Government happened to achieve, at least in two provinces, but what about the millions of Canadians, literally millions, who are seized with a sense of anxiety or who are distraught and feel alienated by this Government and who feel they have been abandoned in terms of a trust or a sense of a trusteeship?

I should say that I have more mail on this issue since the election than I had before from Canadians who feel that this agreement will be a disaster for Canada.

Let me just read a letter from a young woman in Edmonton. Edmonton is not known as a hotbed against free trade, but let me read what she wrote:

Dear Mr. Axworthy:

There are only a few days until Christmas. I should be out shopping for presents for my children; I should be cleaning the house and decorating; I should be baking and preparing for friends and relatives to visit; I should be singing carols with others at hospitals and nursing homes; I should be writing cards to friends and relatives; I should be but I can't.

I can't stop writing letters to parliamentarians because I cannot stop thinking about the disastrous free trade agreement; I cannot stop thinking about 600 workers laid off by the Gillette company;

I cannot stop thinking about the 800,000 workers which the Canadian Labour Congress predicts will lose their jobs when the Free Trade Agreement comes into effect; I cannot stop thinking about the one to six children in Canada who live below the poverty line and whose numbers are soon to increase; I cannot stop thinking about Mr. Wilson's regressive federal sales tax; I cannot stop thinking about how Mulroney and Co. won the last election by lying and cheating and propaganda and a host of other dishonest tactics.

We should be charitable towards everyone at this time of year, but the kindest thing I can say about Mr. Mulroney is that he is an unrepentant Scrooge who has ruined Christmas.

I believe that the only exception I take is that I have always thought that Mr. Mulroney was more of a Grinch than a Scrooge.

That letter represents the deep set feelings of people right across this country. It is up to the Government to respond to it.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) on election night took what I thought was the proper stand when he said it was time to heal the nation. I think he was right. He has the responsibility to undertake the procedure. Is this Bill before the House the way to do it when the Government totally ignores all those concerns, when the Government is totally indifferent to the kinds of commitments which were made during the election to protect social programs, regional development and to provide guarantees against the kinds of encouragement and transgression of these rights, when it has been totally and completely blind to the interest of thousands of workers already affected by this agreement? Is that the manner in which to heal an issue?

• (1220)

Is there anything in this Bill which would give any sense of support, any sense of comfort, or any sense that at least the Government is reaching out to the 54 per cent of Canadians who voted against it to say that it wants to attempt to understand their concerns, bridge the gap, and bring those Canadians in as part of the country? Is there anything at all in this legislation that makes the slightest gesture toward those millions of Canadians?

An Hon. Member: Absolutely nothing.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): My colleague just answered. I went through the Bill with a fine tooth comb. I had the distinct displeasure of having to read Bill C-130 last summer. I said: "Surely, now that we have been through an election, some lessons have been learned". Surely the Government would have understood how deeply felt this issue is, and that there would have been things contained in Bill C-2 that were not in Bill C-130. There was only one change, and that was to cancel the date of January 1 as an implementation date. That was the only change that could be found between the previous Bill and this Bill. Is that what one would consider to be a form of attempting to broaden, heal, and bring together?

In his remarks, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Cadieux) showed that same indifference. He demonstrated the fact that he has not learned a lesson, nor did his colleagues, the Minister of International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), and the Prime Minister. They have learned no lessons at all from that very difficult period.

Is there a Member of Parliament in the House who, when going door to door or standing on a street corner, did not hear from the citizens of this country about their concerns? Is there one Tory Member of Parliament who can honestly state that when he or she went to knock on a door someone did not say to them: "What about unemployment insurance? What about adjustment programs? What about regional development programs?" Did they not learn a lesson from that experience? Did they not learn anything from dealing directly with their own constituents who raised those types of questions?

They obviously have not, Mr. Speaker. It would have been easy to respond to those questions in this legislation. It would have been very simple to bring in an amendment to Bill C-2 that stated: "For greater certainty there will be nothing in this agreement that will endanger present or future social programs". Why would that have been important? It would have been important because the Americans, in passing their legislation, have already written into the agreement that they intend to tackle those programs. They have already given instructions to the President of the United States to challenge regional development, investment programs, and a whole range of subsidies. It would have made good sense, and it would have been an honest effort to have at least written into our own law a statement of principle and a statement of commitment on behalf of our own Government to say that nothing in this agreement shall touch future social programs. I looked carefully, and it was not included.

Yet a number of distinguished Canadians have raised those questions. The Minister of Labour cited Mr. Justice Emmett Hall and Claude Castonguay. I cite the Canadian Council on Social Development, which represents every major social and health organization in the country. What did it state in its latest bulletin? "Canadians should be concerned about the issue, if for no other reason than because the statements of the Government have been contradictory, even misleading".

It discusses the inclusion of the health management services as part of the national treatment programs of its services, which raises a whole series of questions about the delivery of our health and social programs. It raises the major problem that will be caused by harmonization, and problems caused by the requirement that there be a standardization of technical standards and in programming. Those are legitimate concerns raised by a council that speaks for many Canadians. What does the Government do? Il s ne font rien. Nothing at all.

In a valuable piece of work examining the trade agreement, Derek Hum, an economist at the University of Manitoba, wrote compellingly. He stated that the major problem being faced is in programs that are directed to individuals. Mr. Hum stated:

The most troublesome policy area is likely to be that of individual income maintenance programs, especially those designed with the working poor in mind.

He points out that, under their own trade law, the Americans have established the right to challenge any trade program or any domestic program in Canada that delivers a program specifically to individuals. He enunciated how that would have a major effect on those special programs under unemployment insurance that are directed especially to fishermen in the Atlantic area, and to pregnant women. He points out that those could be interpreted under countervail U.S. law as being a direct subsidy to workers.

Let us say that at some point a more liberal and progressive-minded government than the present one decided to bring in a guaranteed annual income whose primary purpose would be to deal with a problem of the working poor, but would be interpreted under U.S. trade law as a subsidy to workers and could therefore be challengeable.

One way to offset that question would have been to write into our legislation a statement, commitment, or guarantee from the Canadian Government in law that the trade agreement does not affect such opportunities or initiatives for Canadians. At least when it came up for dispute settlement arbitration, or for examination, a future Canadian Government could state that that was written into the law that was passed back in 1988 showing the will of the Canadian parliamentarians at the time. However, without that type of statement in the legislation all we have to go on is the rhetoric used by the Prime Minister during the election when he stated that no social programs will be touched, and the Americans who are pretty smart will say: "Show us that in writing". It is not in writing in the Bill.

Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Government has the opportunity to change that. We will bring in amendments to respond to that particular concern. All the Government has to do is to agree to them. It will not change the basic content of the agreement. It will not do damage to the agreement. But it will give an insurance policy to Canadians.

One can say the same thing about the adjustment programs. Here is an interesting observation, what I call watching the pinball theory of the Tories trying to pass the buck. When we talked about adjustment for workers the Prime Minister said: "Talk to the Minister of Trade and the Minister of Employment". The Minister of Trade and the Minister of Employment have said: "Well, you are going to be hearing from the Minister of Labour". We just heard from the Minister of Labour, who spent the sum total of 78 seconds dealing with the question of adjustment. That shows how deep set their concerns are for Canadian workers that the Minister managed 78 seconds of his total treatment of the subject on the record. The sum total of the Minister's remarks were: "Wait for my colleagues to talk about it somewhere further in the debate". They are just bouncing the ball around.

One reason that they have not yet 'fessed up to why the Government is not bringing in any new adjustment programs, and one of the reasons that the de Grandpré commission is in deep freeze is that they know that under this agreement adjustment programs will be challengeable by the United States Government. They are not prepared to admit to that.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Fortunately, we have on the record the statement of a more honest interpreter of the agreement, Mr. Gordon Ritchie, the former deputy trade negotiator. In committee hearings last summer he admitted that adjustment programs are vulnerable and challengeable under the new U.S. trade law. That is the reason that the Government is dancing on its Gucci shoes all of a sudden. It knows that it does not have the power.

I say to the Minister of the homeless, who is responsible for keeping people freezing on the streets in downtown areas of Canada, if he has such a big mouth then let him put his money where his mouth is and put something in the legislation. Is he afraid? I challenge those two Ministers today, if they have any sense of honour or dignity then they have a way to live up to their word. Let them put something in the Bill.

We know what the answer will be on that one. We know that once again they are providing a smoke screen. It is a subterfuge. They will be passing the buck around from the de Grandpré commission, to the Ministers, to the private sector, all because they are once again showing their fear and trepidation of doing anything in this agreement that will raise the ire of our new American partners.

The same thing holds true for questions of the environment. The Minister cited Section 603 of the agreement which states that nothing will touch it. That section only talks about technical standards. It does not mention the environment at all. During the campaign, 93 environmental groups stated that this agreement represents the greatest threat to Canadian environmental standards. And is the Government responding in any fashion in terms of this legislation? Once again, for greater certainty, the reasonable approach to take would be to introduce an amendment stating that nothing in the agreement would affect the ability of the Canadian Government to provide for new laws in relation to the protection of the environment.

Is there any such clause in the legislation? No.

And, of course, we all know why none of the important guarantees of which I have spoken were included in the legislation. The fact is that this Government had the election bought for it by its friends in the business community, who realize that this trade agenda is only one small part of a much, much broader agenda, that being to put a strait-jacket on the Parliament of Canada, to put handcuffs on the Government of Canada to operate and effectively govern with the interests of ordinary Canadians in mind. This agreement results in a transfer of power out of the hands of the Parliament of Canada. That is the real agenda!

The real agenda of the Free Trade Agreement is part and parcel of a much larger movement aimed at restricting and eviscerating the ability of the federal Government to provide for responses to the concerns of ordinary Canadians, those who do not sit in the boardrooms of the country and who do not have available to them millions of dollars for high-priced, high-powered advertising programs. Ordinary Canadians can only rely upon the Parliament of Canada, rely upon their elected representatives, to reflect their concerns.

But, Mr. Speaker, we know that this Government is one that is not very much interested in the concerns or interests of ordinary Canadians. The Free Trade

Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Agreement is a major part of the right-wing agenda of this Government, this North American continental market-place agenda, an agenda which states that the Government of Canada has no obligation or responsibility to all of its citizens; that it is responsible only to the wealthy and the powerful, to those who have status and rank. "Oh, we will respond to those; but we are certainly not going to respond to the concerns of ordinary Canadians." And it is the ordinary Canadians who rely upon the political system to provide them with the answers that they need.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, we as Liberals consider this debate to be not merely a debate about Bill C-2 and the Free Trade Agreement but a debate about the much broader agenda of this Government. Flowing out of the Free Trade Agreement, we will see not just the direct consequences for trade but the largest generational tidal wave of takeovers, of mergers, of business acquisitions—and this in a country that is already too much concentrated in terms of economic power. We are going to see it multiply multi-fold times over the next several years. The rules are no longer in place. The investment rules have been taken off. The competition legislation put into place by the last Parliament is now a weak and ineffectual instrument. As a result of the changes brought about by the FTA, we are going to see a major concentration of economic power in this country, far more than we see today. We are going to see a tremendous change in the whole ability of Government to be able to re-allocate resources from one region to another. It will be the market-place that dictates and determines the flow of goods and services in Canada.

We will not be able to provide the kind of counterbalance that Canadian Governments have historically been able to provide. That ability, under the new trade regime, will be limited. That, again, is a part of the larger agenda.

In terms of our foreign policy, our representation abroad, we will no longer have the kind of independence we have had to date. One needs only to look at what happened at the GATT meetings held in Montreal two weeks ago for the proof of that. It was absolutely crucial for this country to try to work out a deal on agricultural subsidies. And what did we see? We saw the Minister for International Trade and the Minister responsible for the Wheat Board simply aping and echoing the statements of the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture, whose standard was that of clobbering the Europeans. As a result, Canada's ability to play the broker's role, the honest middleman role in bringing about agreements, was lost.

We lost our ability to build bridges into the Third World, into South America, into Asia. We lost the ability to play the kind of conciliator role that Canada has played in international trade fora since 1948, a role offering to all of the parties an alternative, a different way of doing things.

Within a week of the November 21 election, this Government had abandoned that historic role.

Some Hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): As a result, Canadian farmers, to say nothing of people generally around the world, lost an important voice in international trade fora. We have lost the ability to engage in that kind of exercise at international trade fora; we have lost that "middleman" role, a role we played so effectively for over 40 years.

The consequences of this Free Trade Agreement, Mr. Speaker, are long range and long-term, and certainly they are much broader than simply the commercial trade pronouncements.

Let us look for a moment at our service industries. One of the great disappointments for me during the campaign is the fact that the Government was never able to describe to Canadians precisely what the FTA meant for our service industries. If one looks at the agreement, one will see that it now provides open opportunity for private American educational firms to challenge the educational role of our community colleges and universities, and our other educational institutions. We are going to undermine the whole capacity, through the Canadian educational system, to provide our own distinctive way of supplying educational services—and this at a time when it is absolutely essential that we have control over the whole worker retraining process.

One of the things that we can all agree on is that we have lost, or are going to lose, in terms of world-wide competition because of a lack of skills, and one of the primary vacuums that exist in Canada today is the lack of an effective strategy to deal with the upgrading and the improvement of the skills of Canadians.

The Minister of Employment (Mrs. McDougall) stands in her place and speaks of the Canadian Jobs Strategy. What she does not tell Canadians is that every year expenditures under that agreement have been reduced by $200 million. We are spending close to $500 million less today than was spent in 1984.

An Hon. Member: There are more people working today.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Community colleges are being closed down; classrooms are being shut down as a result. And there has been no initiative to try to provide a new formulation.

And in the future, our ability to provide direction and initiative in that area will again be hamstrung and limited. Why? Because we have signed an agreement which, as it relates to the service sector, gives away the power of the provincial government to set those kinds of standards.

Ms. Copps: A "Made-in-Washington" policy.

An Hon. Member: That line didn't work during the campaign.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, every time one turns around, one bumps into the hard reality that the ability of Canadians to make decisions relating to their own interests, their own priorities, their own judgments is completely hamstrung. We find ourselves handcuffed. We find that we no longer have the same range of opportunities.

And that, Mr. Speaker, is why we as a caucus believe that this debate today is important. Future generations will be looking at this agreement and this debate. They will be trying to understand the kind of lunacy that took hold of the Government of the day to sign the agreement. But they will also be looking for an alternative, for another judgment—which is one of the reasons why we think that an appropriate amendment, an amendment which we hope this Government would have the sense to accept, is that which would require a three-year review, a sunset clause.

If Hon. Members opposite think the agreement is so good, I invite them to put it to the test. Accept an amendment calling for a three-year parliamentary review of the agreement. And if it does work to the benefit of Canada and Canadians, they get the applause; and if it does not, then the people, in the subsequent election, will have the opportunity to reject it.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): I submit to you, Mr. Speaker, that that is a fair deal.

Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Do the Hon. Members opposite have the courage to put their agreement to the test of open parliamentary scrutiny?

In that way, during the next election campaign, the people of Canada will be able to decide based upon the full information.

I ask the Hon. Members opposite to accept the challenge, to put the agreement to that type of test. Accept the amendment.

We on this side of the House, Mr. Speaker, believe that our trusteeship is on behalf of the millions of Canadians who voted against the agreement—and not just to those who voted against it today but to their children and subsequent generations. We want those people to know that there is an alternative, that there is a different way of governing this country, that there is a way of using government in a constructive and positive way to bring about a civil society, a compassionate and caring society. We recognize that the public sector must be heavily involved and deeply involved in caring for its citizens.

That is the choice that Canadians will have to make four years from now.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, as our Leader said during the course of his remarks on the motion for the second reading of Bill C-2, this debate is not the end of the matter; it is just the beginning. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that we Liberals have just begun to fight.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (1240)

Mr. David Barrett (Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca): Mr. Speaker, I want to say at the outset that I feel compelled to take a few moments in my maiden speech to make a number of very personal comments which I think are appropriate considering my own history.

I want to put on the record my deep appreciation to the voters of Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca who were so willing to put their trust and confidence in my hands. I hope I will be able to serve them well in this Chamber, although I think I would have been able to serve them a lot better if I was closer to the Chair or, preferably, on that side of the House.

Mr. McDermid: We do not want you.

Mr. Barrett: Nonetheless, as always in politics, looking to the next time, we will leave that to the next election.

Canada—U.S. Free Trade Agreement

On a personal note, I want to express on the record the fact that my achievements are essentially those of my parents and my wife's parents. They went through the Depression and struggled to provide their children with a better life. In that sense, my father, who served in the Manitoba 44th and was wounded at Vimy, dreamed that some day his family would be a more equal and more obvious participant in Canadian society. It took a long time but many of the restrictions on the basis of race, creed and culture were finally somewhat diminished and I am happy to take my place, in that regard, in this House.

I now want to turn to the free trade debate. I must say I was impressed with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy).

Mr. McDermid: You are easily impressed.

Mr. Barrett: My father was born in Winnipeg but it was Winnipeg North, as you will understand.

I was impressed by the logic of his arguments and the persuasiveness of the examples he gave. I was also impressed by the position taken by the Leader of the federal Liberal Party who apparently may not be long for this Chamber. I want to say in all sincerity that he and I have been personal friends for some time. Although we disagree politically, he is one of the finest people I have met in the years I have been involved in public life.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Barrett: The Leader of the Liberal Party was the Minister of Finance during that brief period of time we had power in British Columbia. He was a man of his word. He was a man of principle and conviction, and I am sorry we may be losing him from public life.

I want to comment on the way he was treated during the election campaign. It is important to understand the forces at work in this country supporting the Free Trade Agreement.

The Leader of the Liberal Party took a position, against his own philosophical background, as a vociferous opponent of the Free Trade Agreement. He did it on the basis of logic, reason and principle, and the immediate response was abuse from the establishment media on the editorial pages.

Mr. Tobin: And from Ed Broadbent.

Mr. Barrett: We will come to that in a moment.

Ms. Copps: Please do. I thought it was Ed who was dead.

Mr. Barrett: Even though his own Party was divided and a group were meeting behind his back to cut him to pieces, he still stood his ground and as a matter of principle fought through to the point in the campaign where his own Party recognized his position.

He was vilified in the editorial pages of newspapers in every part of this country. He was vilified in the backrooms by his own Liberal colleagues in every part of this country.

Mr. Rodriguez: Including Sheila.

Mr. Barrett: I want to deal with that because it is important to understand exactly where the Official Opposition stands. They stand right on the fence. We have seen the Liberal Party play both sides against the middle for their own purposes time after time after time. They are now going to lose the best spokesperson they have against the free trade deal as he goes down into history.

Why is that happening? Because the Liberals understand, as stated by Michel Robert, President of the Liberal Party of Canada, who said, "Unless we change our position on free trade we will never win another seat in Quebec". It will be interesting to watch as the debate goes on—

Ms. Copps: Ed is dead.

Mr. Barrett: —and those with a philosophy, attachment and commitment to opposing the free trade agreement will stand up—

Ms. Copps: Ed is dead. Ed is dead.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, is there a screeching crow in here?

Mr. Rodriguez: No, it is just Sheila.

Mr. Barrett: Oh, well, we will watch how the Liberal Party divides on this issue and find out who really calls the tune as the Party is split right down the middle on supporting or opposing the Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Nystrom: Shrieking Sheila.

Ms. Copps: Point of order, Mr. Speaker. The news of my Leader's demise is greatly exaggerated. I am very disappointed that the NDP, instead of dealing with the trade issue, is doing the same thing it did in the election, cutting up the Liberal Party. No class at all.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Mr. Barrett: Mr. Speaker, even that Member knows that that is not a point of order. However, I had to get that on the record because as events unfold we will watch the Liberal Party abandon the position taken by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre, abandon the position taken by its current Leader, and shift to the big business orientation it temporarily left during this campaign.

Who will lead that shift? Other Liberals. Mr. Bourassa, Premier of the Province of Quebec and a Liberal, is a strong supporter of free trade. Other Liberal Premiers are supporters of free trade.

Ms. Copps: Why don't you stick to the free trade deal if you really care about it?

Mr. Barrett: Have we heard one word of condemnation of those Liberal leaders from the Liberal Party? Not a peep. Not a sound. Not a whimper. Nothing except constant chatter from a bird in the background who is obviously distraught by this analysis.

Ms. Copps: Fight the real fight.

Mr. Barrett: In spite of that chatter, the Liberal Party is playing politics on this issue at the provincial level on one stage, and at the federal level on another stage. I find that more hypocritical than what the Government is doing.

Having said that, I want to go on to a continuing story of hypocrisy. Let us deal with the hard, tough words of the Government when it comes to the Free Trade Agreement and let us focus on the history of the shakes and shingles countervailing duty issue.

Earlier this spring, when the countervailing duty was imposed on shakes and shingles, we were going to have a demonstration of how tough and how aggressive the Government would be when that great big American colossus would stamp its foot down on poor little Canada. Do not worry, folks, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and his Cabinet would fight back. I refer you to page 13559 of Hansard, May 23, 1986:

EDWARD BROADBENT (OSHAWA): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It goes back to the incredible decision made by President Reagan himself to sacrifice some 4000 jobs in British Columbia as a result of an unfair duty imposed by the President himself. Considering that the duty had nothing to do with unfair trade practices and that it was imposed by the President himself, and having nothing to do with Congress, is the President not sending a clear message to the Prime Minister, namely, where Americans cannot compete with Canadians, then Canadians will not be allowed by the Americans to have access to their market?

This is the reply of the Prime Minister.

RIGHT HON. BRIAN MULRONEY (PRIME MINISTER): Mr. Speaker, I would not disagree with that construction.

That was an admission by the Prime Minister that in the case of shakes and shingles, where Canadians could compete and beat the Americans, the Americans moved in with a countervailing duty and said, "If you beat us that way, we are going to hammer you with a countervailing duty".

The questioning went on. There was a question as to whether or not the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark) phoned the President or Mr. Shultz, the Secretary of State. There appeared to be some ambiguity about whether or not anyone had been phoned, but nonetheless, as reported on page 13560, the Prime Minister said:

The Secretary of State for External Affairs spoke directly with Secretary Shultz. We have conveyed our views, and we will be doing so again. We hope that we will be able to take some actions ourselves.

What action? Was it a sneeze? Was it a whimper? Was it a letter saying: "Naughty, naughty"?

• (1250)

I will quote further from the same page, Mr. Speaker, to make the point. The Prime Minister went on to say:

We believe that freer trade will bring about greater economic opportunities, which is why we will resist this type of protectionism. We will try to prepare an appropriate response for the American administration which will convince them of the folly of this kind of action directed either against a great friend such as Canada or anyone else. This kind of thing is bad news.

That was said in May of 1988.

Within the last month the United States, through its President, continued its countervail on shakes and shingles. But it was after the election. There has been no comment from the Secretary of State for External Affairs. There has been no comment from the Prime Minister. They did not phone Mr. Shultz. They did not phone the President. They did not phone the water boy. They just rolled over and played dead.

Once the election was over and the Prime Minister was confronted with the very thing he said his campaign on free trade would eliminate, it was rammed down Canada's throat. No one in the Government stood up for Canada and told the Americans, as the Prime Minister said, that this is totally unacceptable.

We have an illustration, Mr. Speaker, of exactly the point made by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre. A political agenda is being met here. That political agenda cynically started to lock in publicly as soon as the election was over. If this Government had one whit of commitment to the people of my Province of British Columbia, if this Government had one whit of commitment to the word of the Prime Minister, why was there not a telephone call to Reagan saying: "This deal is off unless you lift the countervail on shakes and shingles"? Instead, the signal was: "It is okay, U.S. President, you can do anything you want. The election is over and we will not put up a squawk."

I challenge any of the Tory Ministers to come out to British Columbia and explain to the public of British Columbia why the Prime Minister said in May that he would phone the President, but after the election there was not a peep, not a murmur, not a whimper. I know that it is just British Columbia and one can write off British Columbia because the Tories did not win a majority of seats, if that is the level of the cynicism. But when will they move when it hits Ontario? When will they move when it hits Quebec?

I warn the people of Quebec that this is the first step in the balkanization of Canada to fit into a political and economic agenda of international forces as described by the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre. I also make this observation. The greatest danger to the culture and national identity of the people of Quebec is not in language; it is in this Free Trade Agreement that will ultimately homogenize the culture of Québec into one greater Cajun remembrance of some history in North American continentalism. The people of Quebec will be subject to the same forces of continentalism that will sweep right across the country. A greater danger to their culture and to their identity than the language issue is the economic integration that will be the consequence of this Bill.

It is no mistake that the Government and its members were financed by big business throughout the whole campaign and had massive support in overwhelming third person intervention in the campaign. I found it interesting that they used that in their campaign editorial comments from newspapers which are essentially in non-competitive ownership in this country. There is no longer a free competitive press on the editorial pages. The press on the editorial pages responds to a centralized ownership that was first identified by the Kent Royal Commission set up by a former Liberal administration.

We are moving toward a gradual absorption by the United States. It is a titillating thing to some American politicians, so much so that they say and suggest: "Just leave them alone and they will fall like ripe fruit off a tree into our hands". The deal on energy alone is a submissive deal to another sovereign nation of our own sovereign resources here in this country. If the Government thinks that this debate will be over with the passage of this Bill, it is wrong. As the consequences of how this deal has affected their lives sinks into the regions, the municipalities and the people's minds they will not stand still and allow this country to be destroyed as they know it and as they want it to be.

I will make another prediction. In the past I have been wrong with my predictions, but sometimes I am right. I predict that within four years this will be the most hated Government in the history of Canada. In four years this Government will be thoroughly disliked as the consequences of the Free Trade Agreement sink in those regions. It will be the most distasteful and unacceptable part of our political history. I may be wrong, but every indicator tells me that this Government will be distrusted and hated before its four-year term is up, in a way that no other previous Government was.

As we move toward this Orwellian picture of an integrated social and economic order in North American continentalism we will indeed lose the option we have of being an honest broker that was erstwhile and fostered by previous administrations of this country with the tacit, if not the obvious, support of other political Parties under previous administrations. We are going to be laughed at now when we start talking about Third World needs and options concerning their economies. We are going to be ridiculed if we suggest that there is a role for Canada in allowing those sovereign nations to develop. Our friends and our hope in Central America and South America will be abandoned by this agreement because we will be viewed as the same people who agree with the day labour coming in from Mexico, working for starvation wages and then returning home.

Canada will be the supplier of the Braceros of the north. We will be reduced to emulating the same competition that Mexico is reduced to on the border levels. It was Mr. Campeau, a former Liberal supporter, who rubbed his hands in glee and said: "With the Free Trade Agreement we can have the best of all possible worlds. With Canada's resources, the United States' money and Mexico's labour we can create a whole new economic scene in North America." Do you know the chaos that that will bring, Mr. Speaker, as workers are displaced right across the country? Now the Government says: "We are going to fight back".

I repeat, there was no phone call made to the President about shakes and shingles. There was no protest made by the Minister other than a "tut-tut, I am sorry they did it." If this Government had any guts at all it would stop the debate right now, get on the phone to the United States and say clearly as an example: "If you continue this countervail on shakes and shingles we will cancel all negotiations on the Free Trade Agreement". By not doing it the Government is saying clearly that the U.S. can do anything it wants as it goes along in this agreement.

I know my time is up, but just temporarily. I intend, I hope, to participate in future debates in this House. But I will say this. Probably this debate is one of the more important debates that this House has heard in 50 years. It will not be over today because my Leader and the Party that I belong to intend, as a united force not split by anything else, to fight this deal right down the line to defend the interests of Canadians in every walk of life.

• (1300)

I want to say clearly in my wind-up remarks that those Liberals who find that they will be abandoned by the power brokers in their Party as this debate takes place, as they move toward new leadership, can, with some washing, join the New Democrats and continue the fight in principle.

As for the right-wing Liberals, let them join the Tories with whom they belong. But let us not have the Liberals playing both ends against the middle.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I say this seriously and soberly, I want to point out, I am sure on behalf of all Members, that it was a huge disappointment coming from a former Premier.

Mr. Barrett: I was not disappointed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock this day.

At 1.02 p.m., the House took recess.

SENATE REFORM

ELECTION ADVOCATED TO FILL VACANT ALBERTA SEAT

Mr. Scott Thorkelson (Edmonton—Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, Meech Lake is an historic achievement. It brings Quebec into the Constitution and allows us to reform the Senate.

I urge the Premier of Alberta, the Hon. Don Getty, a great Canadian, to hold an election to fill Alberta's vacant Senate seat. I also urge him to require that the nominee submit a letter of resignation effective six years from the date of appointment.

A Senate election would focus attention on the Senate and add impetus to the movement toward Senate reform. An elected Senator would give the Senate a degree of legitimacy. From there, we could move toward making the Senate equal in representation and effective in power.

After Albertans elect a nominee, I urge the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), a great nation builder, to accept the people's recommendation in the spirit of Meech Lake.

TRANSPORT

PROPOSED FIXED LINK CROSSING BETWEEN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND AND MAINLAND

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I rise today on behalf of my constituents of the riding of Hillsborough, Prince Edward Island, a province that voted overwhelmingly in support of the Liberal Party in the recent federal election.

On January 17, 1988, Prince Edward Islanders voted in support of a fixed link crossing between our province and the Province of New Brunswick. Now Prince Edward Islanders are waiting with bated breath for information from the federal Government on the status of the environmental review and federal government initiatives in the area of compensation programs for

S. O. 31

Marine Atlantic employees should the fixed link become a reality.

Given that the fixed link would have a major impact on the Island economy, Prince Edward Island would like an update from the federal Government.

With the unanimous support of Prince Edward Islanders, my Liberal colleagues and I are determined to "fix" the missing "link" of federal representation in Ottawa, representation that is active, forceful and effective, to reflect the concerns of our constituents, of which the fixed link is one.

THE ENVIRONMENT

REQUEST THAT GOVERNMENT REGULATE IMPORTATION OF ALLEGED NON-TOXIC WASTES

Mr. Yvon Côté (Richmond—Wolfe): Mr. Speaker, as a Member of Parliament for the constituency of Richmond—Wolfe, I would like to apprise Hon. Members of a new development that is both a concern and a matter of indignation to my constituents.

This is the open, free and therefore legal import of solid wastes, mainly in the form of building materials. Because those wastes are presumed to be non-toxic, no federal Act unfortunately can regulate or forbid their trade between American and Canadian business people.

Under its previous mandate to try and improve the quality of the environment, the Canadian Government should regulate that so-called "commercial" activity, which is now creating an unacceptable situation to the residents of Richmond—Wolfe and the whole Eastern Townships area.

I therefore propose to call upon Members in this House to enact specific regulations governing the import of such wastes.

I would like in conclusion to thank the Minister of State (Youth) and Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mr. Charest), the Secretary of State of Canada and Acting Minister of Environment (Mr. Bouchard) and the Minister of State (Agriculture) (Mr. Blais) who already are giving the matter favourable consideration.

FORESTRY

SCHEDULED EXPIRATION OF FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL AGREEMENTS

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault-Ste-Marie): Mr. Speaker, I should like to bring to the attention of the House a situation which bears immediate attention by the Minister responsible for forestry. Six provincial federal agreements will expire in March of 1989. These cost-sharing agreements are essential to all aspects of our forestry industry including research, reforestation, and site preparation. I am most familiar with the Ontario-Canada Agreement which was for $150 million over a five-year period.

Informal negotiations have gone on for nine months but, to the despair of provincial negotiators, the federal negotiators have no mandate to consummate any deal. This lack of mandate has been verified in discussions with staff of the Minister. This has already detracted from research initiatives. It also seems to reinforce some of the critical attention given forestry by the Auditor General.

I would ask that the Minister endorse immediately, at the very least, an extension of these agreements and send out a positive signal to the six provinces presently in limbo with regard to these agreements.

BANKS AND BANKING

FINANCING PRACTICES AFFECTING WOMEN BUSINESS OWNERS

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano—Howe Sound): Mr. Speaker, it is well known that women start up small businesses at five times the rate of men and are more successful. Thus, it was very disturbing to read in a recent report made by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business that banks may be providing less favourable financing to women business owners than to men. Particularly highlighted in this report was that the requirements for collateral for lines of credit were much higher for women, security of up to 300 per cent often being demanded from women business owners.

I would urge my cabinet colleagues, the members of the Finance Committee, and the banking community to undertake further investigations into the reasons these differences exist and to implement measures to ensure that such discrimination does not continue. Otherwise, significant business opportunities may be missed and the rapid growth of female-owned businesses slowed. Neither would be in the interests of the pursuit of equality or economic prosperity.

LEEDS—GRENVILLE

CONCERNS OF CONSTITUENTS

Mr. Jim Jordan (Leeds—Grenville): Mr. Speaker, I want to use this brief occasion to thank the constituents of Leeds—Grenville for the confidence that they expressed in me on November 21. It is normal to have a Member of Parliament from Leeds—Grenville but what is not normal is to have one sitting in my caucus.

The last Liberal MP from Leeds-Grenville was John Matheson. Senior members here may remember Mr. Matheson who was largely responsible for the Canadian flag which flies so proudly wherever there is a Canadian presence in the world.

During the election campaign I got a good deal of support from the dairy farmers of my riding who have very strong reservations about the free trade deal and how it will impact on their livelihoods. I hope to address that concern in this Parliament.

Of equally important concern to the citizens of my riding, which is contained largely by the Rideau and St. Lawrence system, is the matter of the environment. I hope to address these concerns and others during the life of this Parliament.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

VOTING STATISTICS

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, during Votes Nos. 8 and 9 at 1 a.m. Saturday, December 17, 1988, 144 Conservative Members were here with their Leader, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney). On the Opposition side, there were only 20 Liberal Members present out of 82 and 16 Socialist Members out of 43.

Mr. Speaker, where were those 89 Opposition Members and their Leaders who were conspicuous by their absence?

HOUSING

METROPOLITAN TORONTO—CONSTRUCTION OF AFFORDABLE HOUSING

Mr. Neil Young (Beaches—Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, Canada's present housing Minister is the Marie Antoinette of Canadian politics. During the election campaign when he was asked about Toronto's homeless, he denied that they existed. The Housing Minister (Mr. McDermid) is now going further. He is setting out to gut federal help in the city.

The former Housing Minister promised 7,000 non-profit units for Toronto. Now federal spending ceilings mean that we will lose 1,300 of those units. I call on the Minister to meet his predecessor's commitment to 7,000 units to be completed this year. Anything less will be a heartless betrayal of Canada's most desperate people.

The Government should be adopting a housing first policy for surplus Crown lands and it should be stating clearly what its intentions are for the development of affordable housing at the Downsview Airport site. The Minister says he has to do more studies. Canada's homeless do not need more studies. They want housing they can afford, and the Government should get on with the job of providing that housing.

PRESERVATION OF BRITISH COLUMBIA GIANT SITKA SPRUCE

Mr. Robert Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, the former Minister of the Environment, the Hon. Tom. McMillan, is no longer with us in the House of Commons but he—

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wenman: The new Member has big shoes that I doubt he will be able to fill.

S. O. 31

The former Minister left a living legacy in British Columbia in the form of Moresby Island Park and the Pacific Rim National Park. His legacy will continue to grow when the Government keeps his commitment to negotiate a Memorandum of Understanding between the Government of Canada and the Government of British Columbia to preserve the tallest trees in Canada, the tallest Sitka spruce in the world, to the benefit of both this and future generations.

These trees stand in a silent, pristine wilderness, cathedral-like giant pillars holding up the sky. The Government must respond to national and international calls to preserve this magnificent forest.

There is a void in our current law that makes wilderness preservation difficult, and I am therefore announcing to the House today that it is my intention to introduce in the near future a Private Member's Bill entitled the Canadian Wilderness Act. The Act, now in draft form, will assist the provinces in protecting and preserving Canada's wilderness heritage. I look forward to winning the support of all Members in all Parties in this House for the Wilderness Preservation Act during the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

PUBLIC SERVICE

WAGES OF FEDERAL DOCKYARD WORKERS IN HALIFAX-DARTMOUTH AREA

Mr. Ron MacDonald (Dartmouth): Mr. Speaker, one of the major issues in Nova Scotia during the recent federal election campaign was the discriminatory wage rates paid by the Government of Canada to federal dockyard workers in the Halifax-Dartmouth area. Under this practice, these workers in Nova Scotia are receiving lower wages than their counterparts in British Columbia for doing exactly the same work. The only difference is the location of their place of residence. This is outright discrimination. It is no less abhorrent than wage discrimination based on race, the creed or the sex of a worker.

• (1410)

While the federal Government has made a commitment to the principle of equal pay for work of equal value, it is still paying wages based solely on the region in which a worker lives. The Government cannot have it both ways, Mr. Speaker.

I call upon the federal Government to alter this policy immediately which is deeply offensive and unfair to federal dockyard workers and other federal employees in my riding. The time for action is now.

MEMBERS OF PARLIAMENT

ELECTION OF FIRST CANADIAN MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT BORN IN GREECE

Hon. John Bosley (Don Valley West): Mr. Speaker, all of us have strong memories of our first election to this place and of our first few days here, so the extensive article this weekend in The Toronto Star about the new Member, the Hon. Member for Scarborough—Agin-court (Mr. Karygiannis), I am sure, had special meaning for all of us.

In addition, Sir, as I represent the riding wherein is located the Greek cultural centre I am aware of the special significance of that particular Hon. Member's election. The only flaw in the article of consequence, and I mean this with no disrespect to the Hon. Member, is that he is not the first Canadian born in Greece to be elected to this House.

I hope it is only oversight that The Toronto Star would fail to remind Canadians that the first Canadian elected to this House of Commons born in Greece was elected to this House in 1972 and still sits here, the Hon. Member for Bruce—Grey (Mr. Mitges).

UNITY

TIME FOR NATIONAL RECONCILIATION

Mr. Ken G. Hughes (MacLeod): Mr. Speaker, in the spirit of the season I would like to extend to my colleagues my warmest sincere best wishes for the weeks ahead.

We should all reflect on the gifts which Canadians share, peace, health, goodwill, democratic and open government, and a wealth to be envied by many peoples around the world. Let us set aside our differences and be thankful for those aspects of the nation we have already built together. Let us also look forward.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), in the wake of the recent election, has suggested that this should be a time of national reconciliation and a time for healing. It is also in that spirit that I call on all Members, on behalf of the people of MacLeod, to set aside differences and focus on working together.

SOCIAL AFFAIRS

MEETING NEEDS OF THE HUNGRY—TRIBUTE TO NORTHUMBERLAND VOLUNTEERS

Ms. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, I would like to highlight Article 25 of the United Nations Declaration to which Canada is a signatory. It states:

Everyone has the right to a standard of living adequate to the health and well-being of himself and his family, including food, clothing, housing.

Today and throughout this week in Canada there are thousands of Canadians, the majority being children, who are experiencing hunger. Across Canada, food bank volunteers and concerned supporters are struggling to meet the needs of hungry Canadians.

In my own riding of Northumberland, I am grateful to the many volunteers who, for over two years, have given devoted service to providing support to our hungry through such organizations as Fare Share, the Northumberland food banks project.

However, we know the food bank recipients need and want decent job opportunities and adequate affordable housing. They need and want dignity, the opportunity to shop like you and I, for their own basic food needs. Food banks should only be an emergency service.

Policies and programs targeted specifically to providing decent jobs and affordable housing are required. On behalf of the hungry in my riding of Northumberland and throughout Canada, I implore the Government to make a concerted effort to provide all families and individuals their basic right to food, clothing, and housing in 1989.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MINESWEEPERS—PORT OF SHELBURNE SUGGESTED AS BASE

Mr. Peter L. McCreath (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, last week the Government announced the purchase of two auxiliary minesweepers to be put into service during the spring of 1989 by the Canadian Naval Reserve. By 1993 there ought to be 12 such coastal defence vessels, eight assigned to the East Coast. A permanent base must be established for this fleet, and crowded conditions would suggest that the dockyard in Halifax is not an appropriate site.

The Port of Shelburne offers a large harbour, convenient to all East Coast areas. There is a large ship repair facility, space for expansion, and existing military infrastructure.

The town of Shelburne, on Nova Scotia's climatically moderate South Shore, offers pleasant living year-round and a variety of necessary living services. The whole of Shelburne County would benefit significantly from the jobs and economic impact of the reserve and minesweeper bases.

The determination of Shelburne as the site of this unit would serve well both the interests and needs of Canada's naval forces and a region of Nova Scotia in need of a more diversified economy.

Accordingly, I strongly urge the Government to consider this proposal seriously and to locate Canada's new East Coast mine countermeasure fleet in the Port and County of Shelburne, Nova Scotia.

CHARTER OF RIGHTS

SUPREME COURT DECISION ON LANGUAGE PROHIBITION IN QUEBEC

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister or, if he is not here, the Acting Prime Minister, whomever that may be.

Considering that Premier Bourassa intends to move quickly to override the Supreme Court decision on signs in Quebec, and since in the past the Prime Minister said he dislikes the use of the notwithstanding clause, I would like to know if the Prime Minister, or whoever is acting in his place, will call Mr. Bourassa today and ask him to reconsider his position and to respect the federal Charter, the Quebec Charter, and the Supreme Court decision.

As the Prime Minister or the Acting Prime Minister knows, the Supreme Court said it would accept the priority of French in Quebec but not the prohibition of another language. Will the Government do that today?

Right Hon. Joe Clark (Secretary of State for External Affairs and Acting Minister of Justice and Attorney General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the question, and the House knows that this is a matter of very real importance to all Members of the House. The House would expect the Government of Canada to consider very carefully any response that we would want to make.

As I think the Hon. Member may know, while it was planned this morning to table the legislation in the Quebec National Assembly that had not occurred as of a couple of minutes ago. I think the Government of Canada would want to reserve any action or comment on the question until we have the opportunity to see the legislation actually tabled in the Quebec National Assembly.

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, as the Hon. Minister knows, the Premier of Quebec made his intentions known yesterday although he had not tabled the legislation.

PROTECTION OF LINGUISTIC MINORITIES—
GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce—Lachine East): Mr. Speaker, we must remember that Section 2 of the Meech Lake Agreement stipulates that linguistic minorities must be protected. And Section 42 of Bill C-72 stipulates that the federal Government, with the provinces, must support the protection of linguistic minorities in Canada. Under these circumstances, is it not true that the federal Government has the responsibility to communicate with the Government of Quebec concerning the measures proposed by Mr. Bourassa yesterday?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Indeed, Mr. Speaker—and I apologize for being away for the first question—I already communicated with Mr. Bourassa yesterday and I told him the position of my Government and of this House on such a matter. I expressed the desire, the wish, that the Government of Quebec could find a formula, as the Supreme Court suggested, whereby the preponderance of French at all times in Quebec would be assured together with the respect of minorities and their freedom of expression, as the Supreme Court wanted and the Quebec Charter states. That was the wish and the desire that I expressed to Mr. Bourassa yesterday, no doubt on behalf of all Hon. Members. I have not yet seen the Bill that will be brought forward, but we will no doubt see one in the coming days.

[English]

UNIVERSAL DECLARATION OF HUMAN RIGHTS

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, if I understand correctly, the Prime Minister has done what I asked the Secretary of State for External Affairs to do. I want to make sure that I understand correctly. He seems to have said that he did ask the Prime Minister of Québec to consider implementing legislation that would respect the judgment of the Supreme Court.

I want to bring to the attention of the Prime Minister that nine days ago we celebrated the anniversary of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights which, in Article 19, declares “freedom of expression” as a basic fundamental freedom. As I just said in my previous question, the Canadian Charter, the Meech Accord, and Bill C-72 all provide for the protection of language minorities.

If these documents mean anything to the federal Government, then surely it should approach the Québec Government to have them respected.

[Translation]

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the long and noble tradition of the fairness of Quebec to its English-speaking minority is well known. I think that the situation of anglophones in Quebec could in many respects serve as a model for the other provinces in the treatment of their French-speaking minority.

That being said, we showed leadership with Bill C-72 and the Meech Lake Accord, which protect the rights of minorities wherever they are, and I conveyed this feeling to Mr. Bourassa. The Hon. Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce knows very well that Mr. Bourassa has been deeply troubled by the conflicts which he went through. I told him that I hoped his Government would find a way to respect the two elements or parts of the Supreme Court decision. That was our position and I think it remains the position of this Parliament. We shall see what comes out of the Bill that will be presented. But it is important to stress that Quebec has no lessons to learn from anyone about how it treats its linguistic minorities.

We always hope for even more generous treatment for all minorities throughout Canada, but I think that

Oral Questions

Quebec is still the leader in this field. We shall see what the Government of Quebec does with the Supreme Court decision.

PRIME MINISTER'S RECOMMENDATION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, in answer to my colleague the Prime Minister said that last night he conveyed the position of his Government to Premier Bourassa. I want to be clear. The Prime Minister said that he expects the Quebec Government to abide by the provisions of the Supreme Court ruling. In his conclusions, did the Prime Minister recommend resorting to the notwithstanding clause, or did he ask that only public signs and primacy of the French language be considered?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Personally, Mr. Speaker, I have always thought that the notwithstanding clause is inconsistent with a charter of rights. This is why I was adamantly opposed when the previous Government included that clause in the 1981-82 Canadian Constitution. It matters little at whose request this was done. The fact is that the clause was made part of the Canadian Constitution. Personally, as a citizen, I think the two are incompatible and I did not urge Mr. Bourassa or any other Premier to use it. I was expressing the hope that, despite his difficulties, Mr. Bourassa might come up with a formula which would respect the two basic options of the Supreme Court ruling.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Jean Lapierre (Shefford): I should like to give the Prime Minister an opportunity to say more about these two options. Does the Prime Minister agree with the Supreme Court position concerning the primacy of French inside and outside, or does he favour the other position, French outside and bilingualism with French primacy inside? What is the position of the Government of Canada . . . I want to know . . .

An Hon. Member: Ask Bourassa!

Mr. Lapierre: The Minister might refrain from commenting on such a basic issue.

I am asking his leader the Prime Minister who conveyed the position of the Government of Canada: Does the Government of Canada agree with full implementation of French primacy inside and outside, or does it agree with the position of the Quebec Government? Just what is the position of the Government of Canada?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): First and foremost, Mr. Speaker, I should think we ought to wait to know the position of the Quebec Government. I have been told that the Bill has not yet been introduced. We will see, it looks as though they are arguing over procedure. We will see. The Hon. Member would want us to act prudently. Still we will have to wait until the Bill is tabled. Now, as far as I know the Supreme Court did refer to promoting the use of French and Quebec's French character. Of course we approve! And we are asking Quebec lawmakers to respect this French character while taking into account the reality of Quebec's Charter of Rights. Such is the challenge facing Quebec lawmakers as a result of the ruling of the Supreme Court of Canada. The Bill will indicate how the Quebec Government responds. I expressed the wish—on behalf of all parliamentarians, I think—that both would be reconciled in a Bill whose effect would be to respect fully the French dimension of this Quebec reality, while at the same time respecting the basic values in the Quebec Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

CHILD CARE

FEDERAL STRATEGY—NATIONAL COUNCIL OF WELFARE REPORT

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Health and Welfare, and it concerns the very important question of child care in Canada.

Today the National Council of Welfare, which the Minister knows is a government appointed non-partisan body, issued a report on child care in which it urged the Government to make major improvements in the federal child care strategy, including a phase-out of tax breaks which would allow at least another $2 billion to be invested in child care services.

In view of this study and many other studies that have been done with adequate research, will the Minister assure the House today that he will redraft the child care legislation, and that this will be better legislation that will meet the needs of Canada's children today and in the future?

Oral Questions

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in response to the Hon. Member's question, I have looked at the report that was made available to me by the National Council of Welfare. There are a number of issues that I am examining.

In direct answer to the question of the Hon. Member, the Government's child care plan was quite clear. We presented it in the last Parliament. It was only blocked by the Liberal-dominated Senate in the last moments of that Parliament, and we intend to reintroduce it.

COUNCIL'S RECOMMENDATIONS

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, surely the Minister, who I know has some feeling for children and families in Canada, will not be so pigheaded as not to reconsider that legislation.

The past is the past and the Minister now has a golden opportunity to bring in more progressive legislation that will go beyond seven years, and which will help to meet the real needs of children.

Since the National Council of Welfare advocates the creation of 750,000 new spaces over the next seven years with no fixed ceiling on funds, and also a system of affordable fees which will make child care available and accessible to families regardless of income, does the Minister agree with these principles? If he does, will he take a look at the legislation, consult with the council and other groups, and with provincial people, if necessary, and come in with a program of which we can be proud in Canada?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I want to re-emphasize the underpinning of the Government's child care strategy, and that was choice. There was going to be choice for those parents who wanted their children in child care, choice for those parents who wanted their children in child care spaces related to the industry where those parents worked, and choice for those parents who decided that they wanted to stay at home with their children. That is the manner in which we approached the child care issue.

I say to the Hon. Member that, just as I am analyzing the report a little more fully, possibly the Hon. Member would also want to do that. The Hon. Member will discover that the recommendations assume a number of things, not least of which is that some of the greatest benefits go to families in the higher income brackets. Possibly the Hon. Member has not looked at that quite as carefully as she might want to do now.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT—REQUEST FOR EXTENSION OF PARENTAL LEAVE

Ms. Margaret Mitchell (Vancouver East): Mr. Speaker, if the Minister would look at it carefully he would see that that is exactly why we want those very regressive tax measures removed.

I would like to ask the Minister and his colleague, the Minister of Employment, in view of the importance of parents having choice to remain at home with young infants, will they now convince the Cabinet that it is extremely important to introduce parental leave of 15 weeks, and also that the Government not contravene the Charter of Rights by refusing to change the law, as was required by the courts of this land? That extension is needed and it is a right under the Charter that there be 15 more weeks of parental leave under the Unemployment Insurance Act.

• (1430)

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the Hon. Member's question, the Government will make a decision in respect of parental leave. As the Hon. Member points out, there has been a court decision. The Minister of Employment and Immigration has chief responsibility in that regard, and she is working on that aspect of it.

A point that I would make to the Hon. Member is that, in all of the discussion on child care, she and her Party have taken a very singular role, that being that it should be a system dominated and run by government—

Ms. Mitchell: Not true.

Mr. Epp: In the Canadian context, that would mean a system operated by the provincial Governments.

That is not a system that this Government has adopted, nor is it a system that Canadian parents accept. In fact, it is not a system which has favourable support among the Canadian public generally.

If anyone should be rethinking their policy on child care, it is those who sit on the opposite side of this House.

SINKING OF ROWAN GORILLA OIL RIG—SEAWORTHINESS INSPECTION QUERY

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, my question, which I shall come to in a moment, is for the Minister of Energy.

I know that all Members of the House breathed a sigh of relief and offered a prayer of thanks when the 27 crew members of the oil rig Rowan Gorilla were brought home, after spending 24 hours in a survival capsule at sea. I know, as well, that my colleagues in this place will join me in wishing those crew members and their families a very special Christmas this year.

Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: I should like to ask the Minister of Energy whether he can confirm today that, notwithstanding the fact that over 90 per cent of the crew aboard that U.S.-flagged rig were Canadians, no Canadian seaworthiness inspection or permission was required before the Rowan Gorilla left Halifax Harbour in an attempt to make a 30-day crossing of the Atlantic, under tow, in severe winter conditions.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the Hon. Member has expressed the feelings of all of us in the House toward the people who went through great hardship a few days ago. But I want to tell the Hon. Member that as far as the Energy Department is concerned and particularly COGLA, the regulatory body that is responsible for those matters, according to the information I was given, the Government's responsibilities end the moment the platform leaves the drilling area where it was operating.

Inspections were made, as was reported in the newspapers, especially by the Coast Guard. Since they were not made in a regulatory context, the Government could not legally intervene because it has no authority in that matter.

[English]

REQUEST FOR REVIEW OF REGULATIONS APPLICABLE TO OIL RIGS

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, in February of 1982, 84 people lost their lives when the Ocean Ranger went down while operating under winter drilling conditions. The Royal Commission on the Ocean Ranger disaster recommended that all aspects of the operation and movement of drilling rigs be covered under the Canada Shipping Act. The Government rejected that advice. The fact remains that this rig required no seaworthiness inspection by Canadian authorities, nor any permission whatsoever to leave Canadians waters in its attempt to make a 30-day crossing of the Atlantic.

The only consultation was that as between the rig owners and its insurers.

That is not good enough, Mr. Speaker, given the experience of February of 1982 and the loss of 84 lives.

I should like to ask the Minister of Energy whether he is, today, prepared to undertake a review of the current regulations covering both the operation and movement of oil rigs, and whether he will see that all vessels, including foreign-flagged vessels, are covered by the strict safety standards of the Canada Shipping Act, and whether he will initiate, in light of this near disaster, that review immediately.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Masse (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it should be very clear. The platform belongs to an American corporation. The incident occurred outside Canadian territorial waters and safety control is the responsibility of my colleague the Minister of Transport, who would like to give additional information.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

EFFECT OF COMPANY SHUT-DOWNS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade.

The closing of Gillette Canada has already resulted in a ripple effect on Hamida Textiles Inc., a company located in my riding of Parkdale—High Park.

With the possible passage of the Free Trade Agreement, better known as the Sale of Canada Act, small and medium-sized companies will be the first casualties in so far as production and employment levels are concerned.

Oral Questions

What studies has the Government undertaken or completed to monitor the chain reaction, or the ripple effect—and I stress, Mr. Speaker, the ripple effect—of large company shut-downs on small manufacturing companies as a result of the passage of Bill C-2, the Free Trade Agreement?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, there is no valid suggestion of which I am aware that any reduction in employment on the part of Gillette Canada is due to the Free Trade Agreement.

I can pick out of the air, as the Hon. Member opposite seems to what to do in respect of job losses, companies that are expanding their operations as a result of the Free Trade Agreement.

I have in my hand a statement by the President of Novacor Chemicals Ltd., a statement to the effect that the company stands to save $30 million a year in tariffs on its exports of polyethylene and methanol. That will ensure that the company will invest in a third ethanol plant near the central Alberta community of Joffre.

Another plant means more jobs. Mr. Feick, the President, estimates that it will create 200 permanent positions.

So, for every alleged example the Hon. Member wishes to bring forward of some company closure or lay-off flowing out of the Free Trade Agreement with the U.S., an agreement which is not yet in effect, I can produce two, three, four, five, ten examples of expansions and job creation throughout this country as a result of the possibilities presented by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Flis: Mr. Speaker, that was the attitude of my predecessor, and I ask the Minister to note where he is now.

Mr. Crosbie: It is where you were four years ago.

TEXTILE COMPANY WORKERS

Mr. Jesse Flis (Parkdale—High Park): Mr. Speaker, Hamida Textiles Inc., which employs 36 people, mostly immigrant women, has already lost a contract because of the Gillette Canada plant closing.

The owner told me just this weekend that there is no way that his company, a company which pays its workers $6.50 to $8 per hour, can compete with a South Carolina textile company which pays its workers $3.50 per hour.

My question, Mr. Speaker, for the Hon. Minister is this. What kind of assistance or adjustment programs does the Government have for the Hamida Textile workers who will be unemployed if this Free Trade Agreement goes through?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, this is a pointless exercise. Just let me give the Hon. Member opposite this statistic. In 1986, 381 plants of over 100 employees each closed down, putting some 49,000 people out of work.

Within that same year, many more jobs were created, both by the opening of 326 new plants and through the expansion and modernization of existing plants.

We anticipate, Mr. Speaker, over $150 billion of new investment by firms in Canada over the next year. Now, while we do not claim that all of this good news in terms of investment in Canada is caused by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, much of it is.

It is just sterile to have these silly suggestions made across the House in Question Period every day, in the light of the economic facts.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Copps: You've got a fertile imagination, John.

INDUSTRY

NORTHERN TELECOM—POSSIBLE TRANSFER OF JOBS TO GEORGIA

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the Minister persists in seeing nothing but rosy skies ahead. He fails to see, for example, the reality of almost 900 people who have lost their jobs at Northern Telecom because of this shift for which he is responsible.

In view of the fact there are only two parts of the Northern Telecom empire producing DMSU-IU equipment, one in Aylmer and one in Georgia, and the one in Aylmer is being shut down, how can he possibly justify any suggestion this is not a transfer of jobs to Georgia which is taking place?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman says I see things as rosy in the future. Yes, we see things much rosier in the future with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. All the hon. gentleman can see is the rosy crucifixion. We see the rosy future.

Northern Telecom is one of the foremost companies in the technological future of Canada and it has had to make some adjustments. That has no connection whatsoever with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. The facts are that American Telephone and Telegraph, the largest company in the world in that business, is making the same kinds of adjustments. It is laying off more people in the U.S., double the number, than they are laying off here in Canada. It has no connection with the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement whatsoever.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steven W. Langdon (Essex—Windsor): Mr. Speaker, the very plant which the Minister suggested last week, as an answer to this problem, was expanding, has in fact given pre-notice of lay-offs to 757 of its 4,500 person workforce.

Given that, does the Minister not finally realize it is important, necessary, even crucial that he get up and give a signal to Canadian workers that they are going to be protected and defended by his otherwise weak-kneed Government?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member can get on with his fictitious cries of gloom and doom every day but the facts are here. I will give this estimate of the Economic Council of Canada again. It says over ten years the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is likely to create 439,000 jobs and there may be 187,000 jobs lost over the ten-year period, for a net gain of 251,000 jobs.

The hon. gentleman, getting up in the House and pretending that every close-down and lay-off in this country over the following months is due to the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, is making an attempt to fool and cod the Canadian people, and they will not be fooled and coddled, as they showed on November 21.

TOURISM

EXTENT OF CANADA'S ADVERTISING CAMPAIGN

Mr. Ken James (Sarnia—Lambton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Small Business and Tourism. My constituency of Sarnia—Lambton is diligently working to promote our area as an attractive tourist destination. As well, the Minister knows I have a great interest in tourism nationally.

As the Minister also knows, concern has been voiced by the industry that our Government's commitment and the direction provided to Tourism Canada's advertising campaign may be insufficient to allow effective competition with other countries such as Australia.

Could the Minister offer his assurance that this situation will be closely examined by his Department and every effort will be made to examine the many fine suggestions put forward by TIAC just this last month?

Hon. Bernard Valcourt (Minister of State (Small Businesses and Tourism) and Minister of State (Indian Affairs and Northern Development)): Mr. Speaker, this is the first Government to have undertaken a strategic marketing campaign of Canadian tourism products in the U.S. and abroad. Since 1985 we have increased and enhanced our budget for marketing Canada overseas and in the U.S., with impressive results. We intend to continue that thrust.

SOFTWOOD LUMBER EXPORT TAX—CANADA-UNITED STATES MEMORANDUM OF UNDERSTANDING

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. This House was advised last week of the disastrous effect the 15 per cent export tax is having on sawmills and sawmill workers, not only in northern Ontario but in other lumber producing provinces. Article 9 of the Memorandum of Understanding which imposes the 15 per cent tax states that either Government may terminate the Understanding at any time upon 30 days written notice.

Is the Prime Minister prepared to take the necessary steps to save the jobs of the Canadian lumber industry, and make a commitment to meet with representatives of the industry to develop a strategy to terminate this Memorandum of Agreement pursuant to Article 9?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we have had no requests, at least none I am familiar with, from the provinces for a change in or termination of the agreement on softwood lumber. The Memorandum of Understanding is grandfathered in the FTA. If the FTA had been in effect in 1986 we would not have been in the position we found ourselves in. We were left in that position by the negligence of the Government that preceded us.

REQUEST FOR GOVERNMENT-INDUSTRY MEETING

Mr. Joe Comuzzi (Thunder Bay—Nipigon): Mr. Speaker, the Minister is correct. This item is grandfathered under the Free Trade Agreement. It is imperative, however, that the tax be phased out before the deal becomes law.

I repeat my question. Is the Prime Minister prepared to meet with members of the softwood lumber industry to eliminate the tax and give this vital industry a chance to operate on a level field?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, we are always prepared to meet with the leadership of any industry in Canada that requests a meeting. If the softwood lumber industry requests a meeting, of course either the Minister responsible for Forestry or the Minister for International Trade, or whoever, will meet with them. We will do whatever we can to assist them, just as we did in working out this Memorandum of Understanding which was far better for the industry and the Government than the situation would have been had it been left alone.

DEFINITION OF SUBSIDY

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, the Minister will know there are millions of Canadians who have deep and genuine concern about those negotiations yet to come on resolving the subsidy issue under the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

Will the Minister avail himself of this opportunity to indicate to the House and those millions of Canadians the position of the Government of Canada on this particular issue, when it instructed its trade negotiating team on that position, and whether it will now table that particular memorandum on the floor of the House of Commons for Canadians to examine and consider?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm once again, as we have done repeatedly, that there is absolutely nothing in the agreement that places any new constraints on the ability of the Government to promote regional economic development.

When the negotiations commence in the subsidies committee on the question of what are trade distorting subsidies to see whether we can get a commonly agreed definition, Canada will not agree to any definition that would place in jeopardy our ability to continue what is already in the Constitution. One of the prime objectives of the Government of Canada, the overcoming of regional inequalities, will remain our objective and nothing in any definition we ever agree to will interfere with that ability. That is our position.

CANADA-UNITED STATES NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): My supplementary question is addressed to the same Minister. Canadians know that the Government gave away the store on pharmaceuticals, disregarded the limitations on foreign investment, and gutted the National Energy Program, all in the name of assisting their dear corporate friends south of the border.

Canadians wish to know from the Government what programs of the Government of Canada are on the table with regard to the definition of subsidy? What is in? What is out? Tell the Canadian people.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, for seven weeks the hon. gentleman opposite and another several hundred candidates with him attempted to put this crass suggestion across to the Canadian people, who did not believe it. They did not believe it then. They do not believe it now. It is not going to happen. It did not happen. It is not going to happen. That is the position.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, ever since 1947—

Mr. Dingwall: What about water?

Oral Questions

Mr. Crosbie: Does the hon. gentleman want to listen? I know that he will learn nothing, but ever since 1947 there has been a subsidies code and a subsidies negotiation in the GATT. Why did he not spend the last 40 years going around trying to frighten the Canadian people while those negotiations were going on?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

HEALTHPOLLUTANTS IN ARCTIC FOOD SUPPLY

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In yet another example of the consequences of the lack of consultation and involvement of northerners in scientific research that goes on in the North, the Inuit learned last week that their staple food supply is in jeopardy owing not to a one-time environmental event but to the accumulation of deadly toxins over a long period of time, an accumulation that could have benefited from the ongoing monitoring that we know needs to be done in the Arctic.

What is the Minister intending to communicate with the Inuit about the research that has been done and is now showing up pollutants in their food supply? What will he do to establish a comprehensive testing of food supplies in the Arctic?

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first, the Hon. Member is not correct when she alleges that the Government has not done anything. In fact, I point out to her that it was three years ago that the Government began to assess the extent of organic pollutant contamination in Arctic food sources. In fact, it is that interim response that forms part of the body of information that has now been made public.

In my discussions with the Secretary of State for External Affairs there has also been a suggestion for consideration of a circumpolar conference on Arctic pollution. Obviously, if that request comes forward we would consider it very positively.

PROVISION OF INFORMATION TO INUIT

Ms. Audrey McLaughlin (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is this. The Minister of Health, I believe, misunderstands what I said. I did not say “none” has been done. I said that there has been no consultation with the Inuit who are obviously anticipating a lot of anxiety and confusion over reports they get to read in the paper—not from the Department but in the paper—because they have not been involved in the research.

What specifically is the Minister prepared to do to let the Inuit people know about their health? It is their food supply that is in jeopardy here.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I point out again that the survey was specifically pin-pointed to Broughton Island. The survey has been co-ordinated not only by a number of federal Departments, including the Departments of Indian Affairs, Environment, Fisheries and Oceans, and my own Department, but with the Government of the Northwest Territories.

I point out to the Hon. Member as well that the Government of the Northwest Territories has certain responsibilities in particular since the April last transfer of health care to its jurisdiction. Notwithstanding that, we will use whatever consultation methods we have, along with other Departments, principally the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, to make this information available.

I think that what all of us in this House should be careful of is this. While we want the best information and want to see how we can correct that which now exists, we should also not over-emphasize some possibilities because at this moment they are not yet confirmed.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENTOTTAWA—STATEMENTS ATTRIBUTED TO MEMBER FOR MISSISSAUGA SOUTH

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Two days after the election the Conservative Member for Mississauga South was quoted as saying: “Ottawa voters will be punished for not having elected Conservatives to Parliament on November 21.” He later said that other regions would also suffer for having voted Liberal. Canadians of all Parties are appalled at this horribly cynical attitude and approach to government.

Will the Prime Minister do the honourable thing and stand in this House, denounce the Member’s remarks, and dissociate the Government from them? Will he suggest to the Members of his Party that this Member should not be elected Chairman of the House Finance Committee in this Parliament?

Oral Questions

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to confirm to my hon. friend that all regions of Canada, irrespective of how the citizens may have voted, will be treated with the same degree of justice and equality as any other.

The fact that the citizens of the general region of Ottawa returned more opposition Members than government Members matters not at all in terms of the fairness and consideration that we will continue to bring to the matters that affect the well-being of the citizens of Ottawa.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

STATEMENTS BY MEMBER FOR MISSISSAUGA SOUTH—
GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a supplementary question. When he threatened Ottawa, the Member for Mississauga South also said that jobs would be cut in the Public Service. He added:

Who will care about civil servants in Ottawa who lose their jobs?

Can the Prime Minister tell us what the intentions of his Government for the Public Service are? How many other public servants will lose their jobs, and in what departments?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the answer, obviously, is the same in English as in French. We will treat all citizens of Ottawa, including of course members of the Public Service, justly and fairly. That was the situation in the past. Whether public servants live in Ottawa, Vancouver or St. John's, Newfoundland, they are entitled to first-class treatment and that is what they will receive from the Government that I have the honour to lead.

AIRPORTS

PEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—SAFETY CONCERNS

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister and concerns safety at Pearson International Airport. To date, the Government has not adequately addressed the lack of comprehensive funding for this facility which has led to such serious problems as a shortage of air traffic controllers, inadequate fire-fighting equipment at the airport, and the continued use of a dated back-up generator system for the radar control tower. Instead, it has introduced temporary stop-gap measures which sadly do not inspire a great deal of confidence.

When is the Government going to address the long-time concerns about safety and underfunding at Pearson International Airport?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the concerns about Pearson International Airport are being looked at, as was stated in this House earlier last week. The long-term planning and medium-term planning are taking place early in the new year. The temporary measures have been working at Pearson International, and the planes are flying with limited delay.

Ms. Guarnieri: The air transportation policy of this Government could best be described as flying on a wing and a prayer.

• (1500)

BACK-UP POWER SYSTEM

Ms. Albina Guarnieri (Mississauga East): Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago the back-up generator at Pearson failed. Last Thursday the Mississauga-Brampton area, which includes the airport region, suffered an eight and one-half hour power black-out. If that broken down, old back-up generator at Pearson had failed at the same time, radar and computer systems could have crashed without warning, leaving the airport without guidance. Will the Government give a commitment right here and now to the much needed funding to ensure the safety and security of air travellers?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): Mr. Speaker, the security and safety of air travellers in Canada have long been the No. 1 issue as far as the Department of Transport is concerned. The needs of the airport are being looked at closely. The generator problem that was brought forward by the Hon. Member is certainly part of that program.

Mr. Speaker: A single question, the Hon. Member for Thunder Bay—Atikokan.

EMPLOYMENT

THUNDER BAY LAY-OFFS—ADJUSTMENT PROGRAMS

Mr. Iain Angus (Thunder Bay—Atikokan): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister responsible for Employment and Immigration. This past summer, in anticipation of the massive lay-offs in Thunder Bay in the grain industry, the Minister indicated in the House that adjustment programs would be put in place. The lay-offs have now occurred. A thousand people are out of work. More are to be laid off within weeks. Will the Minister indicate what adjustment programs she has been able to provide?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question and his interest in this ongoing difficulty. It is something that my Department will be working on. We will be looking at the industrial adjustment service and some other services that may be provided. I will be happy to keep the Hon. Member informed.

PRIVILEGE

CLARIFICATION OF REMARK

Mr. Don Blenkarn (Mississauga South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. Earlier in the Question Period the Hon. Member for Ottawa South (Mr. Manley) alleged that I made certain remarks that must have caused him great embarrassment, suggesting that I somehow was going to punish all of the citizens of Ottawa.

I do not know whether he had in mind that I was going to use whips or truncheons or something of that nature.

If he is the kind of Member that believes in the press then he is totally wrong. I have not got a copy of the Privilege—Ms. Copps

“blues” yet to go over exactly what he said, but I want to say to the House that at no time did I ever suggest that Ottawa would be punished. But I did suggest that Ottawa was awfully well served by Messrs. Tupper, Daubney and Turner. They did a fine job in representing the interests of Ottawa and the citizens of Ottawa, better than the citizens of Ottawa have ever been represented before. I suggest to him that unless he works awfully hard and gives the citizens of Ottawa the same kind of representation they had before, he may not be back after the next election.

Mr. John Manley (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to afford the Hon. Member the opportunity of reviewing the press clippings of his comments which I have in my office. He will note in the wording of my question that I did say he was quoted as saying what he said.

He has had much opportunity in the time that has passed between November 23 and now to seek a withdrawal of the quotations by the newspapers. I also suggest that he was heard on radio in the Ottawa area making similar statements.

Mr. Speaker: It may well be that the Hon. Member for Mississauga South (Mr. Blenkarn), having seen the “blues”, will want to return on this matter. For the moment, I think we will leave it in abeyance.

ALLEGED OBJECTIONABLE REMARK

Ms. Sheila Copps (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, in the course of Question Period the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie)—I use the word “honourable” advisedly—caused a slur on the crucifix by making a statement about the “rosy crucifixion”. I think the Minister may seek to review and withdraw his comments because they certainly do not enhance the flavour of this House.

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, one gets used to this kind of intervention by the Hon. Member. The Rosy Crucifixion happens to be the name of a book by Henry Miller, sold around the world. The Rosy Crucifixion. Nobody has brought Henry Miller before the bar of any parliament to ask him to apologize for calling his book The Rosy Crucifixion.

Ms. Copps: That is not the name of the book.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An Hon. Member: Send her a copy.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

An Hon. Member: Let's hear it, Sheila.

Mr. Speaker: I wonder if Hon. Members would stop to consider for just a moment. A complaint was raised. It may or may not have been a matter about which the Hon. Member is complaining. The reference may have been to something else. But the Hon. Member felt that it was a reference to something which is sacred to many of us, and I think that I dealt with it as it should be. I would ask other Hon. Members, especially in this week, to let the matter go.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Crosbie that Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America, be now read the second time and referred to a Committee of the Whole; and the amendment of Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra) (p. 127).

Hon. Don Mazankowski (Deputy Prime Minister, President of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada and Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to participate in this very important debate. At the outset I want to extend to you, Sir, my personal congratulations and the congratulations of the electorate of the constituency of Vegreville for your re-elevation to the high office of Speaker of the House. You have distinguished yourself in a very exemplary way and I know that you will do equally well in the Thirty-fourth Parliament.

I also want to add my congratulations and best wishes to the Deputy Speaker and Chairman of Committees who joins you in the affairs of the House.

I want to deal with four issues in the course of my speech today. First, I want to deal with the mandate and whether in fact the Government has a clear mandate to proceed with this legislation. I want to refer briefly to the opposition tactics. Then I want to talk about the impact and the benefits that this deal will have for western Canada, particularly agriculture.

First let us deal with the issue of the mandate. I find it strange that the Opposition is putting a peculiar interpretation on the outcome of this election. It seems to me that when a Party gets a majority of seats it indeed has the right to govern the country and put in place its legislative program.

I was drawn to the December 5 editorial in the Winnipeg Free Press which I think puts this into a very clear context. It said:

The purpose of an election is to provide the winning party with a mandate to govern the country for a limited period of time.

The Mulroney government won that mandate on November 21. So long as it continues to enjoy the support of a majority of members of the House of Commons, it has a legal and moral right to exercise that mandate—to legislate, to raise and lower taxes, to administer the country and to enter into treaties.

I believe that this pretty well summarizes and puts the issue into context. What the Opposition is injecting into this debate is the 50 per cent rule. If we applied the 50 per cent rule we would have some 80 Conservative Members elected to the House, 30 or 32 Liberals and 10 or 12 New Democrats. As the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) pointed out the other night, we probably would not have the Leader of the Opposition or the Leader of the New Democratic Party in the House.

What kind of convoluted interpretation is that? We should get off it. If we go back to 1965, the Liberal Party which was the governing Party of the day garnered 40 per cent of the vote. In 1968, it had 45.5 per cent and that was considered to be a landslide. In 1972, it garnered 38.5 per cent of the vote. I do not know if the Liberal Government had a mandate to proceed with the establishment of Petro-Canada. Liberal Members certainly did not talk about that during the election campaign. Notwithstanding that fact, they brought in Petro-Canada and a great deal of legislation that was repugnant to western Canada and to other regions of Canada.

• (1510)

In 1974 the Liberals got 43.2 per cent of the vote, and then in 1979 they lost the election. In 1980 they got 43.9 per cent of the vote, at which time we changed the face of Canada. There was no talk about constitutional reform during that election campaign. The issue was 18 cents a gallon. The Liberals said they would not bring in an 18 cent a gallon tax. I suppose they were quite right. It was closer to 70 cents or 80 cents a gallon. However, they did not talk about a national energy program that would devastate the West, they did not talk about a

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Charter of Rights and they did not talk about constitutional reform.

In 1974, the Liberals clearly did not have a mandate to bring in wage and price controls. They had campaigned against it. Remember that vicious election campaign in which they engaged? This is absolute nonsense, and I am sure that all they are trying to do is to mislead the Canadian people. It is quite consistent with the tactics that they used during the course of the election campaign.

The Opposition has an obligation to live up to its word. These quotes have been put on the record before, but I think they bear repeating. The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) had indicated the following, back in June and then in July, as reported in Hansard at page 17792 and 17793:

The issue is a simple one for the Prime Minister. Let the people decide. Why does he not call an election on this trade matter and let the people decide?

He went on to say on July 21:

I am ready to stand by the judgment of the people.

In the July 21 issue of La Presse, he was reported as saying:

"If a majority of the elected Members of the new Parliament want the trade deal to be implemented, the Senate should pass the Bill quickly", the Liberal leader said.

On August 20, this was reported:

"Indeed, unless Mr. Mulroney wins a majority, the (trade) deal will not go through".

He said on August 30:

I am asking for an opportunity to decide. If the Prime Minister wins he can still meet the deadline imposed upon him by the United States of January 1, 1989.

That is exactly what we are trying to do. He said:

I think that this is a pretty straightforward proposition. Call an election now. If Canadians vote for the Prime Minister, then he has his trade deal. If Canadians vote for me, then there is no trade deal. All I am saying again is: Let the people decide.

He said that on August 30, 1988.

What did we find out after it was all over? He challenged the Opposition to use all the procedural weapons at its disposal. As reported in The Globe and Mail of December 8, he said that the Government has all the weapons it can call upon, and we are doing that. The Liberal Leader told a news conference that although they may have lost the first battle, the war is far from over. He then went on to say that just as the Tories won a mandate in an election to introduce the free trade legislation, the Liberal Party won a mandate to oppose it. It was then reported that the Leader of the Opposition, tanned and looking fit after a week's vacation, hinted that the Government might have to use closure. Members of the Opposition are inviting us to use closure. They are talking about jackboot democracy and about parliamentary assassination. They have simply said, "You have the procedural tools to do the job, get on with it", and that is precisely what we are doing.

Members of the New Democratic Party are much the same. As a matter of fact, they use the same line. They say one thing before the election, another thing during the course of the election campaign and then still another thing after the election. They asked the people to decide but then they did not like the decision. That is what is troubling them now.

Members of the Opposition are putting a convoluted interpretation on the election. They want to abandon the traditions, precedents and practices of this House and engage in nothing but procedural delay and nonsense. They are bleating and complaining about the tactics that are being used.

What I find so contemptuous is the fact that members of the Opposition are treating the decision of the people with such contempt. I think that is really sad. Quite frankly, I think the people who are watching these proceedings are wondering what is going on.

We have tried to work with the opposition Parties to find a way to extend hours, to put limits on speeches so more Members may speak. We offered to sit on weekends and we offered to do a whole host of things. However, they will not sit down and negotiate. We had no choice. One really wonders whether they are sincere.

I know it is somewhat inappropriate to comment on votes, but opposition Members are in the fight of their lives. Yet on Friday night, they could only muster 20 Liberals and 16 NDPers. They bleated all over the airwaves and said to their constituents "Oh, isn't it awful, legislation by exhaustion," and they put up speaker after speaker. It is also interesting that the two Leaders who are engaged in the fight of their lives, fighting to save Canada, were not here for the vote on Friday. Where were they? They were probably doing their Christmas shopping. Some of us will have to forgo Christmas shopping this year because we are here working, trying to get this Bill through.

We all know that there is internal Party strife. The NDP is having its problems and the Liberal Party is having its problems. The Canadian people are being dished up a plate of hypocrisy and duplicity.

We debated this issue fully in the Thirty-third Parliament. I picked up a copy of an article from Vancouver's The Province which said:

The people want and need substantive debate. Instead they got senseless procedural wrangling from the opposition, with two recorded votes needed before leave to introduce the bill was approved.

Do you know what date that was published, Mr. Speaker? That was published on May 25, 1988. What is new? What happened this time? Members of the Opposition called for a vote on leave to introduce the Bill and they called for a vote on first reading, things which are normally done in a perfunctory way. That is what we are up against.

This issue has been debated for 64 days, 331.5 hours. Let me go through the chronology of it dating back to March 24, 1982, when the Senate Standing Committee on Foreign Affairs issued the third volume of its report entitled Canada's Trade Relations with the United States. Then in November of 1982, the Hon. Donald Macdonald was appointed to head a royal commission, and a lot of people overlooked that. It was a $24 million, three-year study about economic prospects for Canada, and the commission came up with a clear conclusion. This royal commission travelled back and forth across Canada. It was made up of participants from every walk of life and every political affiliation. The participants looked at this matter in a very objective and analytical way and came up with a recommendation.

On August 13, 1983, the then International Trade Minister, Gerald Regan, responded with a document entitled Canadian Trade Policy for the 80s. In March of 1985 in Québec City, a meeting between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan resulted in a declaration on trade to seek to resolve irritants and explore possibilities for enhanced trade. In August, 1985, a special joint committee on international trade released an interim report. In August of 1985, the report of the royal commission was introduced. Since then, there has been committee study, various debates in the House, Senate debates and Senate study. Throughout it all, all we have seen from the Opposition is inconsistency, from both Liberals and New Democrats.

Even last week on December 7, the Hon. Member for York West (Mr. Marchi) and the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) said they thought it was unlikely that the Party would attempt to delay the Christmas recess. The people have spoken, they said, and whether they like it or not, to debate it between Christmas and New Year's would be folly.

• (1520)

I am glad to see my good friend from LaSalle—Émard in the House. He is a free trader. He is quoted as saying that he is a free trader. He said:

Well, Liberals are conceptually in favour of free trade. I certainly am.

I am glad he is here and I hope he might talk some sense into some people who are opposed to it.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Martin: This is in free trade. This is a garbage deal and badly negotiated.

Mr. Mazankowski: I will quote another Liberal, Mr. McKenna who said:

We took the position in a calmer atmosphere with a great deal of reflection. It is not easy bucking everyone else, but we did it for the right reasons.

That is supporting the free trade deal.

Mr. Martin: If he were here he too would tell you it was a garbage deal.

Mr. Mazankowski: Senator George Van Roggen is a very distinguished Senator. He has put his money where his mouth is and called a spade a spade. He resigned and he said:

I wish to resign because I want to speak in favour of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

There is a person who has studied this thing and made it his life. In the last 10 years he has probably devoted more attention to this issue than any other single issue.

Then we have Mr. Don Johnston. If he had anything to do with the deal he would negotiate a broad free trade agreement with the United States.

What about Mr. Gerry Regan, former Minister of Trade who said:

It is economic weakness rather than strength which would undermine our future sovereignty.

My experience as Minister of Trade convinced me of two facts. The first is that given all fair conditions, able Canadian exporters can compete against anyone, anywhere.

He talked about the need for a comprehensive free trade agreement rather than the sectoral approach that was taken by the previous Government.

Then we have another Liberal, a prominent Manitoba Liberal who supports the free trade group. His name is Mr. Rose, the MLA for St. Vital. He is reported:

I am for free trade. I guess we Liberals are free traders, Rose said, adding that he didn't campaign for any federal candidates because of his support for the deal.

Let me go to the New Democratic Party now, Mr. Speaker. I have a very interesting book here called Free Trade—It's a Good Deal for Canada written by William Gearing who, I understand, is a founding member of the New Democratic Party. He had some interesting things to say. The first chapter of his book is entitled "We All Love Canada. Why am I writing this book? Because I care about Canada." Let me quote a couple of passages, Mr. Speaker. He is a life-long NDPer: He writes:

Opponents of the Agreement are predicting a lot of disastrous consequences without any solid, supporting evidence and some of them have been playing fast and loose with the truth.

He is certainly right there. He goes on to say:

I believe many Canadians are being misled by these unscrupulous propagandists.

And so I decided to speak out. I am one those "ordinary Canadians" that Broadbent talks about. Except that I don't think Ed has been representing us ordinary Canadians as well as he and some friends in the media like to pretend. Especially on the free trade issue.

It's about time someone challenged the absurdities, the insults, and the untruths spread by the anti-free trade camp, and if exposing them means making some cutting remarks in return so be it.

I say Amen. Thank goodness for some honest reflection. Quite frankly I think this little document did not get the kind of attention that some of the other ones did, which is rather strange. I guess in this particular campaign there were certain types of books that got some recognition and others did not. Mr. Gearing goes on to say:

Our cultural and political strength is not at stake. We will continue to be masters in our own house, forever Canadian. The dynamic efficiency of free enterprise can be reconciled with the Canadian social philosophy. Indeed our social goals will be better served by the prosperity generated by free trade with the United States.

He goes on and on and on, Mr. Speaker. It really is refreshing. We have another renegade NDP Member backing the Mulroney free trade deal, Mr. John Richards, now a professor at Simon Fraser University. He is a member of the British Columbia NDP. He said:

—He hopes the trade agreement is put in place so that the "left" in Canadian politics turns its attention to more critical matters than the NDP needs to address.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

In terms of union workers, for example, Denis Abernot, President of Local 2251, one of the United Steelworkers of America, said that he:

—is disappointed that the annual conference of the Canadian Steel and Trade Employment Congress has failed to address the single most important issue facing its members.

Local 2251 welcomed the federal Government's initiative on free trade—

Mr. Jim McCambly has come out solidly in support of the agreement because it is good for industry. It is good for all regions of Canada. It is good for workers and it is good for creating a much stronger and vibrant economy in our country. I say to the Opposition, "Stop the shenanigans. Get your act together and let's get on with the job. Stop hijacking Parliament. Let us get working. Let us stop fooling around." As far as western Canada is concerned this is the most important initiative brought forth and considered by this Parliament in my lifetime. There is no question in my mind.

I want to go back to 1973 to the Western Economic Opportunities Conference. This conference was held as a result of the recognition of western Canada which needed some initiatives and policies to allow it to expand, prosper and develop like all other regions of the country. A submission was presented at that time which reads as follows:

The most obvious and most important market for Western Canada is the United States. The lowering of the United States tariff walls could provide the breakthrough for western Canadian industries to become important both nationally and internationally. While general tariff reductions such as those associated with the GATT negotiations are important, their impact on Western Canada would likely not be sufficient to provide our industries with an easy entry to United States markets.

It goes on to say:

Western Canada could support a world scale petrochemical industry if we had better access to the United States. If the tariffs between the U.S. and Canada were equal then western Canadian plants would enjoy a large export market in the United States.

It goes on to outline the discrimination that occurs because of the high tariff walls that have been put there affecting our manufacturing and our value-added industry.

That quotation was read from a document which was presented to the WEO conference by the following people: The Hon. Peter Lougheed, Premier of Alberta; the Hon. Allan Blakeney, Premier of Saskatchewan; the Hon. Dave Barrett, Premier of British Columbia, and the Hon. Edward Schreyer, Premier of Manitoba. What is significant about that, Mr. Speaker? Three of those Premiers were NDPers. We have one of them sitting in the House now taking a completely different position from the one he took in 1973, only because it is politically advantageous for him to do so. That is all. Let him start being a little consistent. He was challenging the Prime Minister for being inconsistent the other day. I ask him to be consistent. That is the most he can do in this House of Commons and thereby be an honourable Member.

Mr. Maurice Foster (Algoma): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have a chance to speak on second reading of Bill C-2. Clearly, 57 per cent of Canadians are opposed to this Bill and they said so in the general election of November 21. This is why we hear the ho, ho, ho's on the other side. They are like little Santa Clauses who want to sweep under the carpet that which the vast majority of Canadians opposed in this general election. Even the Gallup polls which took place during the election showed that people opposed the deal.

In fact, most Canadians want liberalization of trade. A lot of Canadians did not know what the deal had in it. If they had known, even fewer people would have supported it. It is very interesting to listen to the Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski). He certainly does have a vast, extensive clipping service. I did not hear many new ideas, just a lot of quotes from newspapers. He certainly was pleased to gloss over the fact that the vast majority of Canadians were opposed to the Government in the general election. The Government has a legal right to implement the legislation. We have never said otherwise. However, I do not think it has a right to limit discussion at second reading of the Bill to less than one day. That is what is happening in the 24-hour period that we are in right now.

The Deputy Prime Minister talked about opposition tactics. If there ever was a Government that deliberately tried not to tell Canadians what was in the most important economic document to come before this Parliament in many years, that was the strategy in this case. It was set out very plainly and clearly in the communications outline that the Government would spend millions of dollars trying to sell the document, but not attempt to explain it to Canadians. If we heard once, we heard hundreds of times during the course of the election campaign: "I do not know what is in it. I do not know what it is about". In spite of the Government spending some $30 million attempting to sell the deal, it did not attempt to explain it.

This morning when I listened to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett), about whom the Deputy Prime Minister said a few moments ago that he was one of the former Premiers of British Columbia, I could hardly believe the words, because he was talking about what a great Party of principle they were, and how determined they were to oppose to the free trade deal. Yet, during the election campaign, one would think that the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) was the one who was promoting the free trade deal because during the last three weeks the Government was being supported by some $5 or $6 million from the private sector, none of it going through the Election Expenses Act, while the Leader of the NDP (Mr. Broadbent) was hammering away at the Leader of the Opposition as if he were selling the free trade deal. It was very interesting to listen to the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca talking about that this morning. I was very confused as to what he was talking about. I do not think he really knew, because clearly during the election campaign his Leader was fighting those in the Liberal Party, and its Leader, who were opposing this legislation.

This afternoon the Deputy Prime Minister said that he was going to talk about the benefits of the free trade deal to western Canada. For his benefit I would like to put on the record some of the problems of the free trade deal, since as well as being the Deputy Prime Minister, he is also the Minister of Agriculture. Agriculture was singled out as an area that was going to be exempt from the free trade deal, at least that is what we heard from the former Minister of Agriculture. Clearly they are implicated up to their ears in this deal. Even the MacDonald Commission recommended that agriculture not be included in the deal.

This afternoon I would like to talk about the impacts of the free trade deal, Bill C-2, on agriculture. I believe that, in the long haul, agriculture will be hurt very badly by the deal. The grape and wine industry has been almost decimated before the deal was anywhere near implemented by legislation in the House. Grape growers in British Columbia and in Ontario were not able to get lines of credit last April, which is at least nine months before the deal was implemented.

During the past week we have seen announcements that some 2,000 industrial workers have been laid off. The wine and grape industry was affected far sooner than that. Now it is supposedly being assisted through a very inadequate program. I believe that in the Niagara area the program's net benefit to the industry is something around $80 million, while actual costs and losses are estimated, if only half of the industry is lost, at $154 million. It is clear that that program will be inadequate.

The same types of problems are heard in B.C. regarding an industry being sold out by a Prime Minister who is totally committed to making a deal at any cost. That seems to be the hallmark of the Prime Minister. He sets out to make a deal, he makes a deal at any cost, and then gets busy spending taxpayers' money to try to sell the deal after he has made a bad deal. That industry is left with loss of markets, reduced income, and in serious difficulty. The alternatives are very few. For example, the fruit and vegetable industry, which is almost in as rough a shape as the grape industry as a result of the free trade deal, is not a viable alternative.

The key move in the fruit and vegetable industry is the removal of the tariff over a ten-year period. More important than that is the removal of the seasonal tariff of approximately 12 per cent that comes on during the peak season for fresh fruits and vegetables. That tariff has been changed to something called the snap-back provision. If the industry can show a loss of price of 90 per cent over a five-day period, giving a couple of days more for implementation, the seasonal tariff which runs down over a ten-year period can be snapped back to position.

It does not take much imagination for a person who shops at the grocery store to know that, if the price breaks on fresh fruits and vegetables over even a 48-hour period, it cannot be snapped back with a seasonal tariff or anything else. If the price breaks, the price is gone. Certainly, it is gone after seven days.

Last March I had the opportunity to attend a horticultural meeting in Ottawa. I heard nothing but doom and gloom. The industry is constantly hit by the difficulties of the competition with American imports which come in earlier in the season and have a devastating impact on price because they hit the market three or four weeks sooner. In this legislation we would like to see action taken at the committee stage to put in place amendments which would overcome those difficulties, if we find that the snap-back provision does not work. We do not believe that it will. I do not know of anyone in the industry who believes that it will work effectively.

I was hoping that the Deputy Prime Minister would get to the section in his speech where he is going to tell us about the benefits of free trade for western Canada.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

All he was able to quote from was the Western Economic Opportunities Conference of a few years ago. I would like to quote from a statement made by the Advisory Board to the Canadian Wheat Board. The Advisory Board to the Canadian Wheat Board is very concerned about the free trade deal. It is concerned that, in the long haul, the Americans are bound, bent, and determined, as soon as this Bill is passed by Parliament, to destroy the Canadian Wheat Board. If they do that, they will do it to the Ontario Wheat Marketing Board and to all the wheat marketing boards in eastern Canada.

The industry has lost some $280 million right off the top on the two-price wheat system. In statements made by the American administration it is obvious that it is determined to reveal the selling price by the Canadian Wheat Board. It is setting in place an investigation of the Canadian Wheat Board with the idea of destroying it. It is interesting to reflect upon what the Advisory Board to the Canadian Wheat Board had to say. This board is made up of a group of farmers who are not Tories, Liberals, or New Democrats. They are people elected from the various Wheat Board areas throughout Canada to advise the Canadian Wheat Board. The following is a resolution that they passed at a meeting on July 28, 1988. The resolution states, in part:

After careful review of the proposed Bilateral Canada-U.S. Trade Agreement including Chapter 7 of the United States Statement of Administration Action, The Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee considers the proposed Free Trade Agreement will:

1. undermine the ability of The Canadian Wheat Board to be an effective marketing agent on behalf of Canadian grain producers.
2. create an environment in which it will be increasingly difficult to maintain the quality and uniformity of Canadian grains.
3. not provide enhanced and secure access to the U.S. market.

I did not hear the Deputy Prime Minister talk about that resolution, Mr. Speaker, a resolution passed by the Canadian Wheat Board Advisory Committee. But clearly that body is not happy with this agreement.

● (1540)

Mr. Simon Reisman, that great negotiator, said that we Canadians showed the Americans how to negotiate. He said that the Americans negotiated like a Third World country. Yet, just look at the deal that he struck in respect of Canadian oil-seeds and canola going to the Pacific northwest markets. Under that deal, a tariff of 7 per cent is removed over a 10-year period, with the western grains transportation assistance removed immediately. As a result, canola and canola meal are cut out of the Pacific northwest market.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The removal of the tariff over a 10-year period provides the industry with a $22 million benefit in terms of market access but takes from it $44 million in transportation assistance for that same Pacific north-west market.

Under the agreement, we essentially lose the Pacific northwest market. We give it away. And that is so because the tariff is phased out over a 10-year period, whereas the transportation assistance is lost immediately as of January 1, 1989.

That is the kind of great negotiation we got from Mr. Reisman and his team!

The whole strategy of this Prime Minister is to make a deal at any cost. One has to recall that, when he entered into this deal with the President of the United States, his Party was at 23 per cent in the Gallup poll. He had to have a deal, regardless of the fact that he was giving away our energy, our financial markets, our water. He was willing to give away anything to make a deal, and then he turned around and spent the taxpayers' money to prove what a great deal he made.

That is essentially what happened in respect of canola and oil-seeds. That is exactly what happened in terms of the weakening of the Canadian Wheat Board and other agricultural boards. The concern in respect of the Canadian Wheat Board is very great throughout the West, and in fact is reflected in the election results coming out of western Canada.

There is no area that is going to be more hurt, in the long haul, Mr. Speaker, than the Canadian farm products marketing system.

I was a Member of Parliament in 1969 when we put into place the National Farm Products Marketing Board legislation, legislation which allowed Canadian farmers to put in place a marketing system which ensured that they received an adequate return on their investment, on their labour, on their input costs, on their management skill, on their entrepreneurship, and so forth. And I believe that it has been a remarkable success. It enjoys broad support within the industry.

While it is not without its difficulties, it is a model, compared to what they have in the U.S.

By way of example, if there is overproduction in the U.S. dairy sector, the U.S. Government spends a couple of million dollars over a couple of years to kill off a portion of the dairy herds so as to reduce production. And, of course, it is a system that is unsuccessful, to say the least.

In any event, our National Farm Products Marketing Board has been most beneficial to our agricultural industries, and we on this side of the House believe—and those on the opposite side of the House who are knowledgeable in this area know it is true as well—that, in the long haul, our farm products marketing system will be destroyed by the free trade deal.

One need only look to the election results in southern Ontario, eastern Ontario, southwestern Ontario, and other parts of the country, to appreciate how the electorate feels about this. Many ridings, for the first time in their history, voted other than Tory, and the reason is that the farmers in those areas believe that their marketing boards, their supply-managed system of marketing, will be destroyed should the Free Trade Agreement be implemented.

Mr. Blais: That is false; that is untrue.

Mr. Foster: There are two methods by which the marketing system is being undermined—it has been very skillfully done. The Tories do not want to take political responsibility for destroying the farm products marketing system, although many of the Tory candidates in the last election were held responsible for it and paid the price of electoral defeat.

What the Tories are doing is they are taking the tariffs off processed foods; and as those tariffs, which range from 7 to 16 per cent, come off it will not be possible to compete with the processed foods coming in from the United States which have supply-managed products as an ingredient—eggs, butter and poultry meat.

One does not have to be a genius to understand that. If one can buy U.S. poultry meat at one-half or two-thirds of the price that one has to pay for Canadian poultry meat, it becomes apparent that Canadian food processors cannot compete with their U.S. counterparts.

The Special Advisory Group on International Trade said to the Government “Look, if you are going to do this, the way to save this industry is to put all of the processed foods involving supply-managed products on the import control list.”

The Government didn't do that and the Government, I predict, won't do it.

The recommendation in respect of processed foods was that anything that had 10 per cent or more by dry weight of a supply-managed product in it be put on the import control list. That was not done. When it was attempted in respect of yoghurt and ice-cream, about which there was such a hullabaloo in the UPA and by Mr. Page in Quebec, the Americans immediately objected and instituted an action against Canada before the GATT.

The Government has now agreed to join in an application before the GATT to remove all farm subsidies.

To the Americans, supply management and marketing boards constitute subsidies. As a result, even in respect of those products which pass between the two countries freely now, beef and pork, problems abound.

The Americans, under their omnibus Trade Bill, moved to provide a countervail mechanism that will apply to pork as well as to live hogs, in total contravention of any understanding, any interpretation that one could put on the free trade arrangement.

I believe that we are facing a terrible situation in the agricultural sector as a result of the Free Trade Agreement. I believe that any Government that gives up its ability to be self-sufficient in terms of the country's food supply, to the extent that that is possible—admittedly, northern countries such as Canada cannot be totally independent—follows a foolish course of action. To embark upon a course that would lead to the dismantling of the Canadian Wheat Board and the farm products marketing system is foolish indeed. To sacrifice these bodies for the sake of a free trade deal with the U.S. is total folly.

I believe that the Canadian Government, in the long haul, will have to withdraw from the arrangements now in place in Canada in respect of food production, leading to a devastating impact on our agriculture industries.

I thank Hon. Members for their attention.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, we have come through an election, a unique democratic exercise, which saw a stimulating, free-flowing exchange about free trade and its impact on Canadians in the future. What has been communicated, in my opinion, is a national expression of our commitment to preserve the essential elements of our life in Canada, with a determination to embrace new challenges to enhance that standard, which I believe is second to none.

It is encouraging to contrast today's spirit of co-operation and growth with the insular pessimism of the 1930s when international trade barriers closed markets, reduced production and slashed employment. That is a terrible memory for many Canadians, and in the intervening years we have gone back to our roots as traders, the reason for the founding of our country, to look outward rather than inward, and to seek markets beyond our border for the benefit of all Canada.

[Translation]

The closer we get to the turn of the century, the more our prosperity will depend on international trade. Right now in Canada one job out of three and close to 30 per cent of our gross domestic product are tied in with our foreign trade, and these figures can only go up. As trade exchanges have grown more dynamic, adjustment in one form or another has become ever more a way of life for Canadians. Both small and large companies constantly renew their products and their production systems to remain competitive. Workers as well understand that they will be trailing behind if they fail to recycle themselves.

[English]

Change is intimidating to many Canadians. Most people like to see the status quo and they like to know that at the end of the day the world is the same as it was at the beginning. However, the world is not like that. It changes imperceptibly every single day. While change can be intimidating, it is clearly an opportunity. I do not know that I would be in this House today if I buried myself away from the unmistakable realities of the world we live in, and the change and turmoil that creates opportunities.

A lot has been said and written about "adjustment" over the past few months, as though it were something new. It is not. "Adjustment" is not a mystery, neither is it something to fear. Trade adjustments cannot be exclusively isolated from other adjustments in our labour market or any other. Technological change, the growing importance of women in the workforce, labour-management relations, new environmental standards, these factors and many others affect the workplace and they all involve and require some adjustment.

Our labour market is clearly in a state of constant change. Individual Canadians understand this. They understand that work patterns, skill demands and training needs are radically different from those a few years ago. There are some 5.2 million job changes every year in Canada. Given that environment, it is essential that the federal Government respond to and anticipate changing demands, including but not confined to those generated by free trade.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Contrary to much what has been said by opponents of free trade, we do have in place already a number of mechanisms which can meet the new challenges presented by this agreement or other changes in the future, and the good news is that they work. Our Canadian Jobs Strategy is proving to be an effective instrument for meeting the challenges presented by labour market adjustment.

I think it is important, particularly for new Members, that I outline the principles and objectives and how the Canadian Jobs Strategy works. First, there are two important underlying objectives. One is to provide assistance where it is most needed at the local or industry level. The second is to provide assistance to individuals so their skills meet real and current labour market needs.

In 1985, when we introduced the Canadian Jobs Strategy, we knew we needed a flexible approach that could address change in the labour market, change in the future. This strategy is the very antithesis of the short-term, piecemeal, so-called "make-work" philosophy which for so long dominated the federal response to human resource management and adjustment.

An important aspect of our approach is flexibility, which allows us to meet the emerging labour market requirements of women, aboriginal peoples, visible minorities, the disabled, and social assistance recipients because our society is full of groups which are unique, have particular problems, and are therefore not the same as other groups.

In the Canadian Jobs Strategy we established fair and realistic target levels for participation of those groups within the strategy's component parts, as opposed to creating separate, isolated programs which do not work together to help our labour force and individuals within it to deal with changing conditions.

The component programs of the Canadian Jobs Strategy are well designed to plan for the future and provide flexibility. The six component parts are, first, the skill shortages program which helps train Canadians in skills that are in short supply and provides mobility assistance. Second, skill investment allows employers to train workers in new technologies. Third, the Community Futures Program helps create business and training opportunities in communities across Canada suffering from chronic unemployment or economic dislocation. Fourth, job entry provides integrated training and work experience to help young people and women make the transition to the labour market. For some that is a very difficult transition. Fifth, job development is designed to enhance the employability of the long-term unemployed of any age, young or old, if they have been unemployed for a considerable period of time. They, too, have particular needs. Sixth, and finally, the innovations program encourages the testing of new projects and ideas that will improve the functioning of Canada's labour market.

[Translation]

Last year more than 400,000 Canadians benefitted from these six programs and nearly 90 per cent of them feel that their participation in Jobs Strategy programs did enhance their long-term employment prospects.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, flexibility is what makes Jobs Strategy different from any other program. Special programs for the young unemployed, language courses for immigrants, and other assistance measures for older workers are just a few of the adjustment assistance measures featured under Jobs Strategy programs.

If courses in a community college enable us to meet the needs of certain workers, we can make them available thanks to employment planning. If on-the-job training is what is needed, we can offer it with the co-operation of private sector employers.

[English]

Co-operation is truly another key to the Canadian Jobs Strategy since it involves in varying degrees the provinces, the private sector, community groups, labour organizations and educational institutions. However, let me cite some specific Canadian Jobs Strategy projects to demonstrate that not only is our approach working, it is working well. Manitoba Rolling Mills in Selkirk, Manitoba is one of North America's foremost mini steel mills. Quality control and technological adjustment are fundamental to its success. To maintain its competitive edge, it built a training centre, purchased $18 million in new equipment, and developed a training regime for 650 employees. The company did that itself. With the help of the steel investment program a training trust fund has been established which allows workers and employers to select and monitor training packages designed to address changing industry conditions.

The skill investment program allows management and labour to set their own agenda for training. In this project, the company contributed $1.1 million over three years, while Employment and Immigration added another $400,000 in funding.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement[Translation]

Free trade will offer new opportunities to the industry. In some cases the only factor preventing a company from expanding is a shortage of skilled workers. Thanks to the employment planning skilled labour shortage program, Quebec's Bécancour aluminum plant has so far trained 97 employees in computer assisted design.

The skilled labour shortage program provides financial assistance for employers seeking to train workers in trades where skilled labour is not readily available and for which demand is stronger. It was under this program that the aluminum plant could apply for a full repayment of all training expenditures and 50 per cent of the wages of workers.

[English]

Another traditional area of concern in labour market adjustment is single industry or resource-based communities experiencing hard times. In Revelstoke, B.C. the unemployment rate currently stands at 10.3 per cent, which is still too high, but it is down from 15 per cent a year ago, and from 20 per cent two years ago when that area was selected under the Community Futures Program. Since then this labour market has mobilized itself for a come-back.

Community Futures Options build on the existing strengths of the community by emphasizing entrepreneurship and worker adjustment. The Business Development Centre Option, for example, has offered potential small businesses, technical and marketing advice, as well as start-up capital. Although the Business Development Centre has been operating for less than one year, some 46 new full-time jobs in this city have been created, and 55 more jobs are anticipated in the coming year. Now, that is success.

Increasingly, we are finding in areas of high unemployment that it makes sense to help people to come up with their own job opportunities. Helping people on unemployment insurance or social assistance move into self-employment is another element of Community Futures' support. As well, Community Futures offers relocation assistance and training through community colleges.

Across Canada we have approved $300 million under this program for some 200 community areas. In total, we are committing $1.7 billion this year to facilitate adjustment from coast to coast under all Canadian Jobs Strategy programs. It is no surprise to us—and we are very proud of the fact—that the OECD in 1988 singled out our Canadian Jobs Strategy, the Canadian Jobs Strategy of our country, of this Government, as a good example of an initiative that seeks local solutions to local problems by tailoring measures to local and individual needs.

Just as the Canadian Jobs Strategy helps individuals and communities cope with change in the labour market, the Industrial Adjustment Service assists Canadian companies in need of support. As a co-operative model for helping workers and management deal with technological and market change, the Industrial Adjustments Service's reputation is second to none.

Under IAS, labour and management set up joint committees to work with an outside labour market consultant. Together, they establish an action plan to resolve particular human resource problems, problems that may be unique to their company but where other experience can help them. To cite an example of its effectiveness, IAS recently helped focus the energies of 1,300 employees at the Firestone Tire Company in Hamilton after permanent closure had been announced. You remember how we were harangued in this House, Mr. Speaker, about this closure? The joint committees set a goal finding comparable jobs for every worker. Firestone paid the salaries of 10 full-time people on the adjustment committees. These committees surveyed thousands of employers, placed resumés on cable TV and worked closely with the local Canada Employment Centre. The result was a placement rate of 85 per cent with continuing efforts to find jobs and training for the remainder. Just in this week's paper there was an interview with some of the employees saying how well that system had worked.

The IAS solution, it must also be emphasized, applies as well to companies that are experiencing rapid expansion, not just those that are experiencing lay-offs. Mohawk Oil in Burnaby, British Columbia, used an adjustment committee to help it establish a human resource plan to complement its aggressive expansion plan.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, it must be pointed out that for some time now the Industrial Adjustment Service and its advantages have been known in international circles. A number of American states and spokesmen for the European Community have sent senior officials to Canada where they will attempt to determine how IAS principles could apply in their respective countries.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Such services attest to the spirit of co-operation we have been able to create in trade union circles, industry, education as well as at other Government levels.

[English]

Members of the House are well aware that structural problems exist in our labour market that have to be addressed. Our level of unemployment is still too high in the regions. We are still producing skills that do not match demand. The relationship between the productivity of workers and their education is a question that continually preoccupies policy makers, and particularly this Government.

We must continue to take advantage of our resources and apply Canadian know-how and expertise so that our educated workforce will be tuned in to the realities of today's labour market. It will call on the involvement and co-operation of Canadians from every sector to participate and accept some responsibility in that. This Government is totally committed to ensuring that Canadians have the best possible labour market programs. We have programs already in place that are working. We anticipate whatever advice Mr. de Grandpre and his committee will present. We are prepared to act on their recommendations.

Adjustment means change, but it also means opportunity. What Canadian workers must know is that we will draw on the resources not just of the Government but of all the communities of Canada to help Canadian workers take advantage of opportunity, to help them when they are in need of change after a lay-off and in need of assistance. All of us must be there for our workers to ensure that they can take advantage of opportunities, to ensure that, in troubled times, we are there to help them. Adjustment does mean change, but the Government must help with the opportunities that are. We intend to ensure that we will be there for Canadian workers, rather than waste time trying to decide whether an opportunity or a problem comes from free trade, comes from technological change, or comes from labour-management relations. What is important for Canadian workers to know is that whatever the circumstances, whatever their region, whatever the product their company makes, whatever future they want for themselves, this Government is there hand-in-hand with the company, with management, with the unions, with the provinces, for Canadian workers. We will continue to be there for them.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. Paul Martin (LaSalle—Émard): Mr. Speaker, on June 18, 1936, the new Member for Essex East spoke in this House for the first time. His name was Paul Martin.

I can do no better than to begin here with his words, and I quote, "I feel conscious of my responsibility and trust that my remarks will meet with the approval of my constituents."

[English]

My father had been in the House a year before he spoke that I have been here less than two weeks. Times have certainly changed. But as that young Member did 52 years ago, I would like first and foremost to thank the voters of my riding for their trust without which I would not be here.

[Translation]

The riding of LaSalle—Émard has two waterways of historic importance for our country. They are the Lachine Rapids, a unique ecological entity, from which the exploration of the North American continent began, and the Lachine Canal, which has contributed so much to the economic development of Quebec.

Together, my constituents are a microcosm of the Canadian mosaic, an enthusiastic and dynamic community. I would like to say here that I am proud to be their representative.

[English]

I cannot count the number of times as a young boy I sat in the galleries above and watched the debates below. In recent years I have had the occasion to visit the legislative chambers of a great number of the world's democracies. Some are older than ours; some are more famous; and many are larger. But I remain convinced that none is more representative and more true to the character of its people than this House.

• (1610)

I have worked in the corporate world where members often believe the real power over the country's destiny resides with them. I have visited the offices of the Ministers and great bureaucrats who dwell in this city. There, too, I have been told that it is there and not here that the real power lies. In both cases I have never believed it.

For me, elected office is one of the highest callings a citizen can have. As such, I deeply believe in the traditions and dignity of this House of Commons, although I sometimes wonder whether that view is as deeply held today as it was once. I hope so, for it is here over the next four years that the future of Canada for generations to come will be determined.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, we have just been through an election campaign during which, thanks to the leadership of the Leader of the Opposition, Canadians at last began the necessary process of thinking together about their economic future and therefore about the kind of country in which they wanted to live. This process is far from over.

Mr. Speaker, I am proud to be part of the new wave of Quebec entrepreneurs. This Government has nothing to teach me about the benefits of freer trade, but I tell you—

[English]

You want a job? Is the Minister of homelessness still talking? The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) referred to me as a free trader. I am a free trader. But we are not debating free trade here; we are debating trade disarmament.

[Translation]

What was the purpose of the negotiations, if not secure access to the American market? Did we get it? No. The Government's strategy failed and the results of this failure will be felt by generations to come. The resulting agreement is neither fish nor fowl, a sectorial agreement with all the advantages of a comprehensive agreement, one in which the Government has almost set aside its role in the economy for years to come. Our problem was and is that the Americans refuse to accept our subsidizing our industries, while they refuse to admit that they subsidize theirs.

[English]

The Government sought greater access to the American market, but in fact by failing to come to an agreement on the definition of subsidies before signing, it lost ground. By putting off that decision, the Tories have jeopardized whatever possibilities of success might have existed. Second, they have effectively negated the ability of the Canadian private sector to work with its Government as does the private sector of virtually every other modern state in the world.

Mr. McDermid: Why is the private sector supporting us?

Mr. Martin (Lasalle—Émard): Why do you not try to listen, you might learn something.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. McDermid: Why is the private sector supporting us? What a silly statement.

Mr. Martin (Lasalle—Émard): Are you telling me? I have been in the business world for four years while you have been—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I would like Members to address their remarks through the Chair.

Mr. Martin (Lasalle—Émard): I am sorry, Mr. Speaker. It is hard when faced with ignorance.

[Translation]

The problem is that the Conservatives do not understand the mechanisms of the world economy as we near the end of the century and that is why the next four years will be decisive. That is why the Liberal Party will play a key role. That is why we will be there to see how subsidies are defined.

[English]

We will be watching to see if the Government fights for a definition of subsidy that simply does not protect existing programs but provides for new ones so that new opportunities can be created in Atlantic Canada and so that the western base can be diversified.

[Translation]

Yes, we will be there to minimize the harmful effects of this Agreement on our social programs, our agricultural sector, our cultural industries and our environment. We will watch the American takeover of our small and medium-sized businesses, because without these companies, we would lose any possibility of creating our own multinationals. We will be there to see whether the Government allows the Americans to say that our subsidies are unfair, while their billions for Star Wars, as part of their industrial policy, are not.

[English]

We will be watching to see if the Government allows the Americans to continue to restructure their economy by using the unique Chapter Eleven bankruptcy provisions and claim that that is not a subsidy while claiming that our modernization grants are a subsidy.

We will be watching to see if the Government allows our export subsidies to be restricted while the Americans use massive domestic subsidies to prevent our exporters from gaining a foothold in their market.

We will be watching to see if the Government adopts the American model of industrial development which works for them but which cannot work for us if we are to have any ambition beyond being enveloped in the American cocoon.

We will be watching to see if the Government has a trade agenda for Canadian entrepreneurs who want to go not just to Pittsburgh but to Panang, who want to go not just to San Diego, but to Sao Paolo.

We will be watching to see what new steps the Government is prepared to take in terms of R and D and procurement policy to ensure that Canada's manufacturing base is not hollowed out and given away.

We will be watching the dispute settlement mechanism to see if it evolves beyond the Congress' rubber stamp into a truly bi-national body that serves the interests of both countries.

We will ask that the Government not allow the Americans to simply apply American law and American practice to our exports. When Congress refuses, we will ask of the Government why it signed the deal in the first place.

Finally, we will ask about plant closings. Every day the Government denies any linkage with the Free Trade Agreement. Does it not understand that due to the rationalization of industry in the United States the burden of change will be and is being felt primarily by the Canadian subsidiaries of American companies and that this agreement has eliminated much of the protection we previously had?

During the debate the Government kept pointing to the agreement and saying nothing in it touched our social programs when the problem was that there was nothing in it to protect them. The fact is that there is nothing in this agreement that allows us to prevent closings such as Gillette's. There is nothing in this agreement that would allow us to do as the French Government did when Gillette sought to close their plant in Ance. That is the problem. Canadians have been misled in this agreement and anyone who has been in the business world more than five minutes understands it. That is why—

Mr. McDermid: Oh, come on.

Mr. Martin (Lasalle—Émard): Within two days of the signing of this agreement, chief executive officer after chief executive officer admitted that our social programs are in jeopardy—

Some Hon. Members: False.

Mr. Martin (Lasalle—Émard): —because of the need to harmonize with the United States. If Members opposite deny it then they are simply demonstrating that they may well have been clerks in the business world but never had to make a decision in their lives.

Mr. McDermid: Be careful. You are not the only businessman in the House.

Mr. Martin (Lasalle—Émard): I ask Members opposite: Why do they deny facts that the whole business world knows are true?

An Hon. Member: Get serious.

Mr. McDermid: There are a lot of business people in this House. You are not the only one.

Mr. Martin (Lasalle—Émard): I have not seen very many. I spent a long time in the business world. Let me say that I have not seen any of the Members opposite anywhere.

You do not have to be a businessman and have a lack of compassion. The business community has it and understands it. It may well be that the businessmen who do not have compassion become Tory Members of Parliament.

Where are the worker adjustment programs? Where are the policies and strategies to deal with the thousands of Canadians who have lost their jobs? The answer is that there are no such programs. If Members opposite think there are, they ought to go to the streets where the Minister of homelessness has put the people who have lost their homes to find out.

[Translation]

The problem will not disappear simply because the Minister or the Conservatives refuse to admit it exists. If the Conservatives think that existing programs are adequate with or without free trade, they should go to my constituency and tell it to the 2,000 people who have lost their jobs since 1984.

An Hon. Member: The employees of Voyageur!

• (1620)

[English]

Would you like a bus pass?

Mr. Blais: No, no.

Mr. Martin (Lasalle—Émard): Well, we wouldn't allow certain people on. We really do have standards.

Canada is not a delicate and fragile plant needing to be kept in a hothouse, but no country can survive in a globally competitive world without business and government co-operating to invest in people and in their futures.

We are entering into a new era in the international economy. Our country will not prosper in the global market-place simply because it has a captive market. It will prosper because its workers are prepared to accept change, and they will not if the rewards of change are to be enjoyed elsewhere and they are compelled to shoulder alone the burden of sacrifice.

[Translation]

Where does the road to our future lie, Mr. Speaker? We must, of course, continue to sell to the United States, but we must also be able to sell our environment protection technology to Japan, penetrate the European market by 1992 and sell our management techniques to the Third World.

In order to achieve these future goals, the public and private sectors will have to co-ordinate their actions. But that co-ordination requires that the Government determine the definition of the term "subsidy", thereby setting the boundaries for co-operation between the state and industry.

Mr. Speaker, this debate is about more than free trade. Indeed, in this House, there are deep philosophical differences that run deeper than the wording of any bill, even deeper than partisanship.

To my left are the NDP, who think that Canada should keep to itself, disregard major world trends and shy away from international involvement.

The Conservatives, on the other hand, Mr. Speaker, still firmly believe in an obsolete free market theory and a timid hands-off approach to the future.

The Liberal Party sees the future in another light.

[English]

I simply ask you in conclusion, Mr. Speaker, what would Canada have looked like if, over the last 50 years, we had had a federal Government as crippled by its own lack of will, vision and purpose, and I must say common decency, as this one? I simply ask you, Mr. Speaker, what sort of a country will we have in the future if the industrial governance of Canada is left to 10 aggressive provinces confronting a do-nothing centre with our economic policy being cabled to us from Washington?

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We are at an important crossroads. We can either become an economic force with which to be reckoned, with our private sector working in concert with a strong national government, or we will die a slow death as a branch-plant economy with a central government to match. That is what this election was all about. That is why the next election will be fought on the ashes of this agreement. However, the next time, the Canadian people will not buy an illusion and a snare.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise today to briefly describe the benefits of the proposed Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement and the Canadian business reality.

I think all Hon. Members will realize as well as I do the exceptional growth of the Canadian economy over these last few years, a kind of growth that brought employment to a record level, with job creation that surpassed that of any of the various countries of the European Economic Community, and which in percentage terms has been higher than in any industrialized nation, the 1.3 million new jobs created having led to a rapid decline in the unemployment rate which had become unacceptable. Also over the period Canada experienced a reasonable and above all a stable inflation rate, and in real terms growth surpassed not only that in European countries and the United States but also in Japan, which gave this country the highest real economic growth rate in the world. That is the Canadian economic reality! A reality created by the excellence, expertise and productivity of our human resources and by the abundance of and demand for our natural resources on the international markets.

Mr. Speaker, despite our achievements over these last few years, the Canadian Government cannot afford to become complacent. More and more we are dealing with a strong international market, an international market where there is daily evidence of the impact of rapid technological change on the flow of goods and even services between businesses and individuals of various countries. An international market that is constantly changing, a market that is becoming increasingly global, a market that results in the creation of larger and larger, stronger and stronger trading blocks.

And therein lies one of the basic reasons for the Canadian Government and for Canadians as they did on

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

November 21st to enter into a Free Trade Agreement with our most important trading partner, the United States of America.

This is in order to gain access to a market that compares to the European market or the Asian market. It is in order to gain secure access to that market that is so important, and also to gain the ability to solve our differences on a bilateral basis, on a final basis, so as to minimize the negative impact of disputes that can arise in day-to-day trade.

Mr. Speaker, naturally the free trade deal applies to the big companies. But the provisions of the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States also apply to the small businesses, and, I should add, to the very small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, growth for all these businesses is what the Canadian Government, along with the people of Canada, wants to ensure by signing this historical free trade deal with the United States. We also want, Mr. Speaker, to ensure our future, and the future of our children, within a constantly changing global economic environment.

Today, I would particularly like to address four major issues. I shall speak first about industrial development, second about regional development, third about the impact of the free trade deal on the development of the science and technology industries, and finally about the adjustment process, an issue the Opposition has raised several times.

Let me start by responding to some of the comments heard from the Opposition. They have claimed that the Free Trade Agreement meant the sellout of the Canadian economy, that the Americans could, at any given time, buy any company they wanted and americanize it. Mr. Speaker, people realize that during the past century Canada has been blessed with economic growth precisely because a lot of men and women from abroad came to invest in a country with a promising and challenging future, a country with opportunities to create jobs and wealth, in short a country which had a lot more to offer than they could ever hope to find in their countries of origin.

The free trade deal does not change anything to that fact. It will certainly make it easier to attract the capital investment we need to create jobs in the immediate future, as we have been doing over the past four years.

But more particularly we realize that these investments from abroad contribute to our own expansion.

They come not only from the United States but also from many other countries which will follow in our footsteps towards freer trade.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, some people say that is all very nice, but by doing that we are selling off our sovereignty, we are selling off our economy, we are selling off our very identity. Mr. Speaker, I can tell you that history indicates that this kind of investment does not threaten anything we have in Canada. Canada's trade practices, Canada's standards and Canada's criteria will be fully respected as our country continues to face up to the economic challenge of the coming century. The quality of life and the working conditions of the Canadian industrial labour force is not threatened, and the very survival of Canada's industrial sector is no longer in doubt.

In terms of investment, Mr. Speaker, that is what the free trade deal means. The deal tells our American colleagues that they are welcome to share in Canada's economic development and economic future as long as they are prepared to abide by our laws and respect our standards.

Now a few words about industrial development.

• (1630)

[English]

The Free Trade Agreement with the United States will benefit small businesses as well as big businesses in this country. As for the 1986 census, over 4 million Canadians were employed in businesses employing fewer than 100 persons. This represented approximately 41 per cent of total private sector employment in Canada. As we all know, it has been the small business sector which has shown the greatest rate of job creation over the past few years.

In a recent Canadian Federation of Independent Business survey released in September, 1988, which sought to elicit the opinions of small businesses on the impact of the FTA, a full 40 per cent of the survey respondents expect the impact to be beneficial to their businesses. Only 7 per cent of member firms indicated they might be adversely affected by the FTA. I believe that speaks eloquently for the projection that the small business community in this country and, as I mentioned earlier on, the small, small business community in this country, will benefit from the Free Trade Agreement.

We now turn to regional development. We have heard a lot of stories about regional development over the last few months on the campaign trail and even before.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

In regard to regional development in the FTA, arguments have been put forward in the House, and on the campaign trail to the effect that through the Free Trade Agreement we have somehow given up our right to utilize regional development programs. Now, no responsible government, especially not this one of which I am proud to be a part, is going to give up or jeopardize its ability to promote and sustain regional development in any way, shape or form.

Quite the contrary, Mr. Speaker, this Government has put in place regionally based economic development and diversification agencies, backed them with a budgetary clout and resources to deliver effective programs and services. They are working, and they are working very well, so well that the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) said during the campaign that he would retain them, albeit in a somewhat altered state. He recognized the potential of the Western Diversification Agency of FEDNOR, of the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency and of the Canada—Quebec Economic Regional Entente. Perhaps he also recognized that given the problematic history of regional development in Canada such program initiatives must be sustained over a prolonged period in order to be effective. Short-term fixes do not work in this game. We believe the answer lies in sustained regionally based and delivered programming within the regions.

There is nothing in the Free Trade Agreement, nothing, that limits our abilities in this regard. The FTA does not limit Canada's rights to use subsidies in the promotion of regional development.

As we have explained so many times in this place and elsewhere, regional development programs are not mentioned in the agreement and do not come under the rules of the GATT. It is in accordance with GATT that both we and the U.S. retain the ability to take action against unfair subsidies of another nation if such subsidies arm competing industries in the other nation. That is how it was before the FTA. That is how it will be during the FTA and that is how it would have been had the deal not proceeded. So nothing has changed. We will continue to be able to put forth responsible regional economic development programs. None of this prevents us from making available to our businesses both big and small regional development programs, regional tax breaks, and industry-specific initiatives so long as they are generally available and consistently applied.

I would now like to say a few words about another topic that has come up time and time again, that of adjustment. I wish to start off on the question of adjustment by making a very fundamental point, a point that is often overlooked in this House and certainly more often than not overlooked by our colleagues opposite when they are out of this House.

There are two sides to the adjustment coin. Obviously there may be some downside adjustments, and there are downside adjustments in this economy every year and have been for decades. There are programs to deal with those. Those programs have generally proven to be quite efficient. But as we look beyond the end of this decade, as we look to the next decade and into the next century, as we look to the Free Trade Agreement, what we must look at without forgetting the potential for downward adjustment, is the potential for upward adjustment. We have opened a very wide door. We have opened for ourselves a door to a market of 250 million people. We have opened for our people, our young people, for our business people, small and big, opportunities that have never existed before. We have given them the chance to become more productive, more competitive, more globally oriented, and to participate fully in a rapidly expanding world economy.

• (1640)

What are we going to do to help them cross that door? I would like to quote very briefly from the terms of reference of the Advisory Council on Adjustment, the de Grandpré Commission. Its terms of reference were to point out the extent to which we believe Government can play a role in upward adjustment as well as in all other adjustments that may be required. The first item in the terms of reference reads as follows: "The Council's terms of reference include the following: one, examining the possibilities for Canadian businesses and workers to position themselves to benefit from the agreement".

That is a very positive statement which clearly indicates the will of the Government to assist Canadians from coast to coast to seize this opportunity to cross that door and become the type of world citizens they really are, and to benefit fully from the opportunities that lie in a market-place of 250 million to 275 million people.

[Translation]

On the topic of adjustments, Mr. Speaker, I would like to talk about another adjustment mechanism that the current Government has set up to prepare employers and employees and enable them to benefit fully from the many opportunities that will be provided by the new Free Trade Agreement with the United States. I refer here to the new Department of Industry, Science and

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Technology, whose mandate is to ensure the international competitiveness of Canadian industry and promote a high standard of business excellence.

Why such a mandate? Because we need to feel secure in Canada and because we must be assured of our role as a leading industrialized nation on the international market. More and more, we must turn to research and development and new technological applications, as well as maintain our traditional strengths in the areas of investment, management, human resources and marketing.

The Government, industry and the academic and research sectors will have to work more closely together, Mr. Speaker. The new Department of Industry, Science and Technology has begun work in three key areas which will form the very basis of all its activities and enable Canadian businesses to become more competitive on world markets.

They include the provision of aid to strategic technologies and to initiatives to improve the competitiveness of industry, and the provision of information and development services to businesses.

Strategic technologies are particularly important to the new Department because they affect a wide range of industries and businesses. In addition, the Department has set aside significant funds for the creation of alliances between businesses, business groups, research institutions and Canadian business groups and their foreign partners. Such alliances, Mr. Speaker, can help to plan and carry out precompetitive research and development work or develop state-of-the-art technological applications.

[English]

These initiatives already under way seek to put our industries on a competitive footing with our major trading partners. We in this country have the brains and resources to enable us to compete with anyone and everyone in the world. This Government is committed to putting into action the best of what we have in terms of technology to meet the challenges ahead. I can only tell you, Mr. Speaker, with the commitment of our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), with the commitment of this Government, with the brains, the know-how, the willingness, the productivity of Canadians, and particularly with their hope for the future, we shall succeed.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rod Laporte (Moose Jaw—Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I feel privileged to have the opportunity to rise in the House today and participate in my own small way in one of the most, if not the most, significant debates the country has faced this century. Bill C-2, the free trade Bill, will set the country on a different path which in the long run, I am afraid, will be detrimental to this great country.

I wish to make one point clear at the start. It is a point which has been made many times before, but because of the Conservatives, it must be made again. During the campaign and since, certain members of the Conservative Party have misled Canadians by stating that it is the only Party in favour of free trade. That is simply false. We in the New Democratic Party are not opposed to free trade. We believe in free trade as much as anyone else. Free trade is a motherhood issue, and we take no dispute with the concept of free trade. It was a conscious effort on the part of the Conservative Party to mislead Canadians to believe that if Canadians did not vote Conservative, trade with the United States would collapse.

In the Province of Saskatchewan, the Conservatives collaborated with Premier Devine, who indicated that if Canadians did not elect a Progressive Conservative majority government, the doors to trade with the United States would be slammed shut. They were very strong words. The Conservatives, including Premier Devine, were quick to accuse New Democrats of scare tactics. The rhetoric carried on by Mr. Devine, especially in his capacity as Premier of Saskatchewan, was not only unfortunate but outrageous, and a disgrace to the office he holds.

We heard more of the unfortunate rhetoric that has been taking place from the Hon. Member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski). A few moments ago the Deputy Prime Minister indicated in the House that the Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett), the former Premier of British Columbia and now a member of the New Democratic caucus, had changed his views on free trade. The Deputy Prime Minister pointed to an agreement in 1973 whereby the four western Premiers had supported free trade.

The Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca has not changed his position on free trade. He is for free trade, as is every other member in the New Democratic caucus. We are not opposed to free trade. We are opposed to this Bill, the Prime Minister's trade Bill. In fact, if anyone has changed his or her opinion, it has been the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). In the past he indicated that he was opposed to free trade. Every major cabinet Minister in the Government was opposed to free trade except the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie).

Members of the Government entered into personal attacks during the campaign. They brought politics to the base and disgustingly low levels that American politics have reached in the recent past. They have attempted to Americanize Canadian politics, and they are attempting to Americanize Canadian society. They have done a disservice to Canada on both counts.

● (1650)

Since the end of World War II we have been moving progressively toward free trade. In fact, 80 per cent of Canada-U.S. trade is tariff-free. Since its formation in the late 1940s, GATT, the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade, has succeeded in moving closer and closer to free trade. We in the New Democratic Party are not opposed to GATT. GATT, with its membership of over 90 nations, is supported by the New Democratic Party as a means of moving toward freer trade.

Why are we opposed to Mr. Mulroney's trade deal? We are opposed to it because it is not in the best interests of Canada, and particularly of western Canada, which is where my concern lies. And it is not in the best interests of western Canada as it will severely restrict regional development programs.

We are opposed to the deal because of the possible detrimental effects it will have on the Canadian Wheat Board. We are opposed to it because it fails to achieve guaranteed access for Canadians to the American market, something which the Progressive Conservative Party said was essential if we were to sign a free trade deal. We are opposed to this deal because it establishes a disputes settlement mechanism which is nothing more than a toothless tiger.

Western Canadians, Mr. Speaker, have always been concerned with the lack of influence that we have had in this country, given the power and dominance of central Canada. Under the Free Trade Agreement, we will have even less influence, given that the decisions will be made less and less in Toronto and Ottawa and more and more in New York and Washington. It is for those reasons, Mr. Speaker, that the free trade deal is not good for western Canada, and that is why we in the New Democratic Party stand opposed to it.

I should like to focus on a couple of areas that are of particular concern to the riding of Moose Jaw—Lake Centre. Agriculture is a primary industry for the riding, and one of the key elements in the agricultural sector in western Canada is the Canadian Wheat Board, as it has been since its establishment in the 1930s. Contrary to what many believe, the Canadian Wheat Board was originally established by the Progressive Conservative Party—and today we have a Progressive Conservative Government that is putting the future of that board in jeopardy.

It is well known that, for a long time, the Americans have been desirous of seeing the Canadian Wheat Board eliminated. Regardless of whether Bill C-2 is passed, the Americans are out to dismantle or at least shackle the ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to effectively operate.

Bill C-2, the Free Trade Bill, simply gives the Americans one more opportunity to attack the Canadian Wheat Board. The actions of the United States very much place in doubt that country's commitment to the spirit of the agreement, as is evidenced by the U.S. Omnibus Trade Bill and the recent decision by the U.S. to retain the tariff on shakes and shingles.

One issue of concern in respect of the Canadian Wheat Board has to do with whether or not that board will be seen as a subsidy. The Americans do not like the fact that a farmer is given an initial price and then later, depending upon what the grain is ultimately sold for, a final payment. The Americans consider that to be unfair. They do not like it. They will be pressing to have the Canadian Wheat Board operated in the same way that any private grain marketing company would be operated.

If the Americans have their way, the Canadian Wheat Board will be forced to offer a single price to the farmer, and it will be the farmer's choice to take it or leave it. Such a policy will restrict the ability of the Canadian Wheat Board to market grains abroad.

A second concern in respect of the Canadian Wheat Board relates to loss over quality control. Once subsidy levels in both countries are harmonized, Canadian import restrictions on wheat, oats and barley must be removed.

Canadians have a world-wide reputation for high quality grains, a reputation much better than that of the U.S., and it is inevitable that some inferior American grains entering Canada will end up in Canadian export markets. Once the Canadian Wheat Board restrictions are removed, it will be difficult to have them re-imposed.

The provisions dealing with end use certificates in respect of grains imported into Canada are designed to protect Canada in that respect. However, the Free Trade Agreement does not make end use certificates mandatory; it simply states that end use certificates may be employed. If it is not a requirement that end use certificates be employed, American grains coming into Canada will end up in Canadian export markets.

I want to make it clear to the Prime Minister and to the Progressive Conservative Party that I and my colleagues in the New Democratic Party are not about to sit idly by while this Government allows Americans to remove the Canadian Wheat Board as an effective marketing tool for western Canadian grain producers. We shall continue to speak out on this subject, both in this House and elsewhere in the country.

I should like to now focus on a specific industry in Moose Jaw, Mr. Speaker, an industry for whose future I greatly fear. The company I have in mind is CanaDay's, which is one of only two dress slack manufacturers in western Canada.

Located in Moose Jaw, CanaDay's was originally owned by an American conglomerate which, a few years ago, decided to close its Moose Jaw operations. Some local residents invested their own capital and took a risk when the American company left Moose Jaw high and dry. The CanaDay's plant, Mr. Speaker, employs approximately 150 workers, many of whom are single parent women. A plant of that size is significant in terms of a city of less than 36,000 people. I am afraid that, with the passage of Bill C-2, the Progressive Conservative Government, like the American conglomerate before it, will be leaving Moose Jaw high and dry.

CanaDay's now has two advantages: A Canadian tariff that is imposed upon similar American-made products coming into Canada and the lower Canadian dollar vis-à-vis the U.S. dollar. Under Bill C-2, that tariff will be eliminated; and it is a very good bet that, as the so-called level playing field takes shape, the value of the Canadian dollar will rise to parity with the American dollar.

When that happens, CanaDay's very likely will be unable to compete with American products. And this is not because Canadian workers are inefficient vis-à-vis U.S. workers or that the CanaDay's plant is inefficient; rather, it is because American plants located in close proximity to cotton fields will have a distinct economic advantage. As well, working conditions and wages are far superior in Moose Jaw to what they are in the southern United States, where many of the states have no minimum wage whatsoever.

The potential loss of 150 jobs in a city the size of Moose Jaw is very serious indeed. As for the investors, they will simply be out of luck. This is what the Conservatives call free enterprise.

What about the workers? For months now the Prime Minister has been bragging about what he calls his blue ribbon committee, a committee with a mandate to provide assistance for workers adversely affected by the Free Trade Agreement. The Prime Minister has stated that his Government will provide some of the finest programs anywhere. He further stated that this blue ribbon committee would table an interim report on December 16, 1988.

As it turned out, that report was not forthcoming. In fact, it has now become clear that this blue ribbon committee has done little since it was first appointed over 11 months ago.

When Gordon Cummings, the Chief Executive of National Sea Products Ltd. and one of the members of this blue ribbon panel, was asked how that panel was going to help workers get off their feet, he said that Canadians "should get off their butts". That, Mr. Speaker, will be of little comfort to the workers of CanaDay's, many of whom are single parent women, women who are doing what they can to hold on to their families, to hold them together, while at the same time bringing home a pay cheque.

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, Mr. Cummings' remarks constitute an insult to hard working Canadians right across this nation.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Laporte: These women and other workers at CanaDay's are not sitting on their butts. They are working hard and hoping that their jobs do not disappear.

The attitude of this blue ribbon panel, and that of the Prime Minister, is indicative of the lack of concern that this Government has shown, not only toward the workers in CanaDay's, but for people throughout the Province of Saskatchewan and the entire country.

• (1700)

It is not the workers at CanaDay's who should get off their butts. It is the Government that should get off its butt. It is the so-called blue ribbon committee that should get off its butt. They should be providing proper assistance for these and other workers. If the Conservatives, both federally and provincially, got off their butts, the economies of Moose Jaw and other communities in Saskatchewan would not be in the sorry state they are in today. The lack of concern the Government has shown toward Saskatchewan has been noticed by Saskatchewan residents. They made that very clear on November 21 when 10 of the 14 Members of Parliament elected from Saskatchewan to this House were New Democrats. I think that speaks volumes about the record of the Government.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I would like to conclude by saying that, as with the Canadian Wheat Board, my colleagues and I in the NDP will be doing whatever we can to ensure that neither the workers nor the investors in CanaDay's are unjustly or unfairly dealt with. The Government may refuse to listen to the Opposition. It may refuse to entertain amendments to provide greater security for western Canada. However, we in the NDP will be monitoring this Bill and doing whatever we can to limit as much as possible the unfortunate effects we know it will have on many Canadians. We will suggest and promote measures where appropriate. In that light I move:

That the amendment be amended by adding immediately after the words "industries and communities" the following:

"and because events since November 21st, including unilateral U.S. decision on shakes and shingles, and the many announced plant shutdowns, have demonstrated these serious political and economic losses,"

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The Chair will take the amendment under advisement for now and we will proceed with debate with the Hon. Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to return to the House of Commons, having been re-elected by one's fellow citizens in one's riding. I want to commend you and your associates in the chair for the high honour bestowed upon you, and I wish you well.

I want to continue the dialogue on the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, a dialogue which has been going on in Canada for some period of time. This dialogue was taken up by Canadians from coast to coast in the last federal election. The vigour and passion of this national debate gave Canadians the opportunity to explore some of the important issues we as parliamentarians must deal with as we approach the next century.

Front and centre in the debate has been Canada's social programs and our ability to introduce new ones while maintaining the integrity of those we already have in place. I feel it is important to address these issues even though Canadians have clearly indicated what vision of the country they prefer. Through the tradition of parliamentary democracy, Canadians have considered the options and given a historic second mandate to this Government. Nevertheless, as a responsible Government, it is incumbent upon us to respond to the concerns which motivate the Canadian public.

The immediate answer for those concerned about our social programs is that the Free Trade Agreement leaves Canadians free to follow the same independent path they have always chosen on this key policy matter. However, such an answer, while factually correct, does not recognize the legitimate motivation behind the concerns expressed. This is a legitimacy not necessarily arising out of an intimate familiarity with the provisions of the FTA, but a legitimacy founded on concern for the fundamental values which have helped distinguish the character of our country.

Canadians are proud of their unique heritage and the sovereign choices Canada has made over the past century. This heritage is built upon certain basic principles. If one of these principles is exclusively pursued at the expense of other equally important issues, then we start to unravel the fabric of our society rather than strengthening it. So our reputation as world class traders and, equally, as a compassionate and caring society, are basic components of our national character. To pursue one of these at the expense of the other is to weaken our national identity. We trade and become wealthy for it. However, if we pursue this goal while sacrificing our social policy, then we forfeit an essential aspect of our identity.

Therefore, I would like to set the record straight today and fully air those concerns expressed over our sovereign ability to follow any social policy deemed best for Canada by Canadians.

Canadians have built one of the most compassionate societies anywhere. Our system of social programs is something we are rightly proud of and naturally anxious to protect. Certainly no Canadian politician could advocate the weakening of these programs for the sake of a trade deal and still entertain the reasonable hope of attaining the right to govern in this country.

The reason we must pursue a fair trade policy is because Canada is a trading nation. The purpose behind trade negotiations is to create a stable environment for investment decisions. That is the express purpose of GATT and the central purpose of the Free Trade Agreement. GATT rules, which form the basic premise of the FTA, are not only concerned with the role trade barriers play in determining the level of imports and exports, but how the rules of trade allow the business community to plan for the future.

The effect of subsidies on trade and the application of countervailing duties by national Governments often hinder these plans and are among the most controversial trade issues of the 1980s. That fact has been marked in this House in the past year as I am sure it will be in this Parliament as well.

During the course of the FTA negotiations, Canada and the U.S. attempted to establish a subsidies code but an agreement has not yet been reached. However, under Article 1907 of the agreement we will seek to develop more effective rules and disciplines concerning the use of government subsidies over the next five to seven years. Such rules would go a long way in settling the shifting sands of what can or cannot be countervailed as an unfair subsidy. Nevertheless, the ground upon which these negotiations will be built already has an undeniable degree of stability.

Many Canadians have expressed concern that in the negotiating of this list Canada will be forced to do away with some social programs because they would be earmarked as unfair subsidies. A review of the facts surrounding the nature of the subsidy then goes a long way in reassuring Canadians that social programs are safe from receiving the label of unfair subsidy.

Under the subsidies code in the GATT, Canada, the United States, and other members of the international trading community have agreed that domestic subsidies are permissible if they are not specific to a given industry or company. That is, if those programs, in the words of the GATT, are generally available to the citizens of the country. Therefore, programs generally available to individuals are not countervailable because they are not targeted to a specific industry or enterprise. That means the U.S. Department of Commerce and Revenue Canada equally can legitimately countervail only those subsidies specific to an industry or group of industries. That has been the case under GATT since 1947. Canada's social programs are generally available to individuals in Canada. They are, therefore, both historically and presently, not countervailable.

In the bilateral context this issue was examined in 1985. A countervail action was brought against Canadian groundfish because unemployment insurance payments to Canadian fishermen were considered an unfair subsidy by some Americans. The U.S. Department of Commerce ruled against the American complaint and held that because unemployment insurance was generally available to fisherman, it could not be considered an unfair subsidy. Judy Bello, chief legal adviser to U.S. trade representative Clayton Yeutter has recently confirmed the very basis for this decision and it is important that we take note of it.

Obviously, medicare, like all social programs, such as unemployment insurance, education, child care, old age pensions, workmen's compensation, and family allowances, just to name a few, are not industry specific but are generally available. Therefore it follows that under the GATT, or under the FTA, these services cannot be considered unfair subsidies.

• (1710)

Given the fact that social programs are not prohibited subsidies, Canada refused to discuss them during the negotiation of the Free Trade Agreement. Canada does not expect the U.S. to raise social programs during the next five to seven years when we sit down to attempt to define better trading rules. If, however, the Americans should attempt to argue that social programs should be the subject of negotiations, Canada will take the same position we have in the past—we will say no. That no is based very clearly both on the GATT and on historical and legal precedents.

Canadians can rest assured that when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) signed this historic agreement he was fully satisfied, as were his Ministers, in particular the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that nothing in the agreement could be a threat to our sovereignty in the area of social policy.

Beside the future negotiations on subsidies, some Canadians have expressed concern about the actual agreement. They have seen certain individuals point to passages of the text of the Free Trade Agreement as "proof" that the agreement threatens Canada's social programs. Of course, on reflection, these individuals were simply seeking justification for their own opposition to the agreement and not relying on careful analysis or credible policy advice.

One person who has the ability to give both credible policy advice on health care and understand the text of the agreement is the former Supreme Court Justice who headed the task force that recommended medicare, Justice Emmett Hall. When Justice Hall called a press conference to explain why nothing in the agreement endangers medicare he stated: "I can tell you this, if I found that there was in the Free Trade Agreement provisions which would damage medicare or destroy it as is being argued I would have opposed the agreement”.

This conclusion is also supported by the members of the Canadian College of Health Service executives who sponsored a working session on the impact of free trade on Canada's health care system. In a national survey, those executives revealed that the only effects that could be anticipated from the Free Trade Agreement were indirect at best, and favourable.

I remind my hon. friends opposite that in 1983 their Government and my immediate predecessor in this portfolio put forward exactly such a plan in the Hawkesbury model. I find it passing strange that in 1983 it was no threat to social programs or our health care delivery system but suddenly in 1988 it is.

Most of the detractors of the agreement have stopped waving copies of it around and now concede that there is nothing in the text of the agreement that endangers social programs. It was interesting to watch that shift during the election. The part of the text that originally caused so much excitement is the reference in Chapter 14 to “health care facilities and management services”. These include services such as laundry, cleaning, food service, payroll and inventory to name a few.

Those who are still concerned over the provisions of Chapter 14 should take the time to look at Chapter 13. This chapter excludes provincial procurement from the trade agreement so that the national treatment requirements do not apply to the provincial procurement of health care management services. These services are mentioned in the agreement because Canadian negotiators wanted them included because our high level of expertise in this area gives us an advantage in the open American market. American hospitals tend to be privately run and tender for private sector management. Canadian hospitals are generally not private and will not tender for private management services unless—and this is the key phrase—provincial authorities first approve such a move. That is on the basis of any reading of our Constitution.

Moreover, in the event that a Canadian hospital was authorized to grant service contracts to private management, medicare as a policy and medical care as a service would not be affected in any way. Furthermore, there is nothing in the agreement that could force any provincial Government to privatize any part of its health care system, again, unless it chose to do so. Even then it would have to conform to the Canada Health Act in relation to public administration.

Even if a provincial Government decides to permit the private sector to perform a health care management service, that province has the right to allow only Canadian firms to bid on the contract. Clearly, if one reads the document one is forced to conclude that there is simply no basis for the allegations that medicare will be eroded by the Free Trade Agreement. The Canada Health Act, which reaffirms the principles of medicare, such as universality and accessibility, is in no way compromised by the Free Trade Agreement.

Finally, when all else fails detractors of free trade attempt to stir up concern among Canadians by pointing to some vague, unseen force, a political poltergeist which will force Canadians to abandon the foundations and institutions of our compassionate society in favour of a nebulous common denominator rising across the 49th parallel. However, any examination of Canadian history leads us to a different conclusion.

During the last 50 years Canada has been lowering its trade barriers with the United States. Today, 80 per cent of our trade with the United States is already duty free. Yet Canada has not been forced to cut back on its social programs. In fact, quite the opposite has happened. During the last half century while we have been moving toward free trade with the U.S. our economy has flourished. A strong economy has enabled Canada to establish a caring society with social programs such as medicare and old age pensions.

What is the bottom line? The bottom line is that the Free Trade Agreement does not oblige us in any way to harmonize existing policies with the United States. Any such attempts would be unacceptable to the Canadian people and unacceptable to this Government. Nor does free trade threaten those institutions which have served the Canadian health care system so well.

During the heated debate concerning the agreement, many allegations were made. A characteristic allegation concerns how free trade will affect Canada's system of blood supply. It is quite remarkable that some individuals believe that the Government would sacrifice an institution like the Canadian Red Cross for a concession in international commerce. As I said at the outset, it is my responsibility to lay to rest those concerns which Canadians have expressed.

Let me state quite unequivocally that Canada's non-profit system of blood collection and supply is not at any risk under free trade. In Canada in fact the current system of blood collection and supply administered through the Red Cross is not for profit. This system can be maintained and enhanced. There is nothing in the agreement that places any obligations on the Government with respect to not for profit activities. But what I must remind Hon. Members of is that we buy approximately 70 per cent of our blood product supply right now. In order to be able to do that, obviously, there has to be the protection between the two countries from where most of the supply comes.

Perhaps some confusion has arisen because the commercial operation of private blood banks is covered by the services chapter of the FTA. This is not particularly surprising as private blood banks are currently allowed to operate in Canada. One has been operating in Montreal since last January, and an Australian blood bank firm has incorporated in Canada. But the role of these commercial enterprises is distinct from the role of a not for profit institution such as the Red Cross. Private banks are used by individuals who wish to store their own blood over longer periods of time than the Red Cross can accommodate. So the Government is free to regulate privately run for profit blood banks in any manner Canadians desire, as long as it does not discriminate against American service providers.

This means that if for some reasons Canadians decided that for profit blood banks were undesirable, the Government could prohibit them as long as the prohibition affects both Canadian and U.S. enterprises equally. This is not only fair, but it does not in any way threaten Canada's not-for-profit system of blood banks. The agreement imposes no obligations on provincial governments in terms of the purchase of blood products. Therefore the Red Cross may continue as the sole supplier to provincial governments in Canada's health care system.

As Minister of National Health and Welfare, it has been a privilege to see how strongly Canadians feel about our system of social programs. Concern over the system's integrity is natural when considering their importance to our society. The Free Trade Agreement was negotiated with this importance clearly in mind. Nothing was allowed on to the negotiating table that might diminish the role social programs play in Canada.

The agreement is about commerce. It was negotiated out of a belief that Canada can compete. I know that in my province Manitobans are looking forward to the opportunities this agreement will bring. Free trade will not come as a surprise to Manitobans. As a province of entrepreneurs, manufacturers, farmers who know the benefits of international trade and what it can bring, we are experiencing and adjusting to new situations and evolving international economy. We have to keep in mind that we are only approximately one million people.

• (1720)

Obviously it goes without saying that our domestic market is too small to in any way absorb the kind of production we are capable of in Manitoba. I think that would apply in most provinces across our country.

This agreement will be phased in gradually over a 10-year period, allowing sufficient time for Manitobans and Canadians to adapt to changing market conditions. Canada already has adjustment programs in place with a proven capacity to meet the adjustment requirements free trade may bring. These programs demonstrate the Government's commitment to assist in economic adjustment as Canada continues along the path of trade liberalization.

We are keen to continue down this path in Manitoba. Our trading heritage is evident in the fact that 56 per cent of all that Manitoba exports goes to the United States. The Canada West Foundation has concluded that over 48,000 jobs in Manitoba are in industries which will directly benefit from secure enhanced access to the U.S. market.

During Question Period Members said that only 250,000 net jobs would result according to the Economic Council of Canada, and that this is not significant. It is approximately the same number of jobs as exist in the entire City of Winnipeg. When we put it in those kinds of practical terms, I do not think anyone would suggest the elimination of those jobs or say that they are not significant.

Under free trade, not only will jobs be secured and enhanced, they will be created. This means more jobs in the key sectors of Manitoba's economy.

For example, I opened a curling rink just the other day. That may not be very important to some people in the House but in rural Manitoba curling is important. The gentleman told me that his business was building strand steel types of buildings. He said that during the election campaign he had a cancellation of one of his buildings. After the election campaign and the result, the commitment was renewed. The gentleman clearly said that the Free Trade Agreement is essential to his expansion.

I know what is needed in Manitoba to enhance free trade. It is, for example, the completion of a highway to combine us with the United States highway system in order to have a transportation system that will take advantage of the opportunities that exist. Those are the practical matters we must address in a free trade agreement.

I am talking about sectors such as mining in northern Manitoba and communities such as Thompson, Flin Flon and Lynn Lake, forestry in The Pas or Swan River, or hydroelectric power throughout the North. In the City of Winnipeg the FTA will benefit workers employed in the transportation, equipment, machinery, communications and computer equipment industries.

I had a study done by our counsel in Minneapolis in order to have a practical demonstration of what it might mean to be living right next to the U.S.-Canadian border. What will free trade mean for us? The advantage was a 15 to one ratio. Do Members opposite think that any of us would be responsible as Members from Manitoba if we do not pursue that kind of free trade agreement with such advantages?

The Free Trade Agreement is good. It is good from a commercial point of view. Equally important, it is good for us from a social policy point of view. As I meet with my counterparts throughout the world, especially in the Commonwealth, I see that countries which do not have the social programs are the countries not generating enough economic growth and enough economic wealth. There is no secret to it: The greatest threat to social programs is the inability of a society to develop the economic growth and wealth in order to have the kind of social programs we have in place now.

The real issue is whether the Free Trade Agreement affects social programs. The answer is yes, in a positive way. It gives us economic growth and the stability not only to maintain present programs but to expand them. That is why, as Minister of National Health and Welfare, I am proud to support this agreement.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Earlier this afternoon, the Chair received an amendment moved by the Hon. Member for Moose Jaw—Lake Centre (Mr. Laporte). The Chair finds the amendment to be in order. Resuming debate on the amendment.

Mr. Brian Tobin (Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte): Mr. Speaker, first I want to take this opportunity to congratulate you on your re-appointment to the chair. Indeed, I want to extend my congratulations to the Speaker who was re-elected a few days ago in the House. I want to offer my congratulations to all Members of the House, particularly those who are coming to Parliament for the first time.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp). The Minister gave his usual speech to this Chamber. He addressed himself, as he always does, directly to the people of Manitoba. He assured the people of Manitoba, this House and through it all Canadians that now that the election is over they ought to relax and breathe easy. They ought to be content as we move into Christmas, knowing that no grinch will steal their Christmas and, indeed, their country, and that free trade is all the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) promised it to be and more.

I thought the Minister delivered those remarks with a great deal of passion and sincerity. I sat in my chair and found myself almost wanting to applaud. Then I had a great sense of déjà vu. I remembered when he assured us this was free and fair trade. I remember the day he stood in the House and said: "You can count on a free and fair bidding system".

I am sure many in the Province of Manitoba hear the Minister, as chief spokesman for the Tory Government tell them during the election that they should trust the Tories, they had a sense of déjà vu as well. They remember the Government saying: "Trust us on the CF-18". The people of Manitoba know what happened to the Province of Manitoba and the CF-18. They were shafted by the Government. They heard the same pious remarks by the Minister. That is why the people in the Province of Manitoba spoke. They spoke by sending the new Member for Winnipeg—St. James (Mr. Harvard). They spoke by sending a Liberal Member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. Axworthy), the Liberal Member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Walker), the Member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Pagtakhan) and the Member for St. Boniface (Mr. Duhamel). Five Liberals in the House of Commons. The people of Manitoba have heard the syrupy, soothing words of the Minister of National Health and Welfare before. They have spit them back and delivered unto the House of Commons five righteous Liberals, here to serve the cause of Canada and reject this free trade deal.

I would be remiss if I did not take this opportunity to thank my constituents in the riding of Humber—St. Barbe—Baie Verte for the confidence they showed in me. It was a tough campaign.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Just as in Manitoba where the Minister of National Health and Welfare was providing the people of Manitoba with the virtues of free trade, we had in Newfoundland the Government's chief salesman on free trade. The Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) led the charge for the Government in the Province of Newfoundland. He told Newfoundlanders they could burn their boats and go home, for the new industrial factories would be built in the morn and never again would Newfoundlanders have to struggle, clinging on with their fingers to the rocks on the edge of the salt water to earn a living from the fishery. New industrial factories were being built everywhere because, God bless us, we have free trade.

As usual, Newfoundlanders demonstrated common sense. In Newfoundland they elected five Liberals out of seven.

It is time to set the record straight. Minister after Minister and Member after Member on the Conservative side of the House stood in their place, straightened their backbone, puffed out their chest and said "We want". It is as simple as that, and on we go with free trade.

The reality is that in the election just fought in this country the Government won a mandate under the British parliamentary system. They won the most seats in the House and under the British parliamentary system it no doubt gives the Government not only the right, but the power by virtue of its majority. When they pull off the silk glove, when they close their eyes to the silky carpet and the posh surroundings and do away with the notion of tradition, it is power that the Government won, parliamentary power, to proceed with free trade. However, it did not win the hearts, minds and souls of Canadians. Fifty-seven per cent of Canadians said no to the trade deal.

My arithmetic is very good. We on this side of the House are here to speak for a majority of Canadians who have rejected the sell-out of this country and want to go on sailing our own ship in the international sea, masters of our own fate, captain of our own vessel, fastening our sail, and not becoming a tugboat tied on to the American vessel being chartered around the world.

Canadians have said no to the trade deal. In eight of ten provinces, including the province of the Minister of National Health and Welfare, a majority of Canadians said no to the trade deal. This country has not given the Government a mandate to sell out the nation.

Had we had a referendum, we would be saying today that the Government's vision for the future of this nation had been decisively defeated. The last time we saw a great referendum in this nation was in 1980, and in that referendum, 60 per cent of Quebecers decided. That was considered to be a decisive vote about the future of Quebec.

Fifty-seven per cent of Canadians have voted against the trade deal. Yet the Government is using closure, announcing in advance that it will not consider any amendments, announcing in advance it will not hear at all the views of those 57 per cent of Canadians who have properly participated in a democracy, who have sent their representatives and who have asked that their voices be heard and their amendments be considered. The Government has said, even in advance of seeing the amendments, that it will not listen. It will shut down debate. How much longer is it before we hear the sound of jackboots in the distance, coming to close down any semblance of democracy in this place? The Minister of National Health and Welfare laughs.

Mr. Epp: At you.

M. Tobin: He chuckles, he thinks this is funny. Yes, indeed, this is the same Minister who, though he found today the courage to stand after the election to defend this deal, could find neither the breath, the backbone nor the spine to stand in his place when his province was subjected to the most blatant act of political opportunism, when the people of Manitoba were denied the air contract, a contract they had won fair and square.

I was amused today by the Hon. Member for Esquimalt-Juan de Fuca (Mr. Barrett) a former Leader of the NDP in the Province of British Columbia, a former premier, making his maiden speech. I expected that a former premier might want to share with us his views about the trade deal, and in particular, how the trade deal supersedes any Act not only of the Parliament of Canada but any Act of any provincial legislature. In other words, once this deal is passed and is law, this Chamber will be nothing but a pale echo of the real view of Canadians while those views are held subservient to the terms and conditions of the trade deal. The same applies to any provincial legislature, but we heard not a word from the new Hon. Member for Esquimalt—Juan de Fuca, not a word about the substance of the trade deal, not a word about how sovereignty, both in provincial legislatures and in the House of Commons will be lost. Instead, we heard what I thought was a ridiculous speech. We heard from a Member of the NDP who lamented the Liberal Party's position on the trade deal during the election campaign.

It was not the Liberal Party that opened up the general election with a press conference and said not a word about the trade deal. That was the Leader of the NDP. It was not the Liberal Party that tried to pretend that the election was not about the trade deal. That was the Prime Minister in the first few weeks of the campaign and the Leader of the NDP. It was not the Liberal Party that had a meeting last weekend to try to figure out why our Party was more interested in personal power than in the future of this country. That was the NDP. If Hon. Members do not believe me, they should read Mr. White's letter.

While the Leader of the Liberal Party of Canada was standing up for Canada, was standing up to be counted, saying where he stood on the trade deal, the Leader of the NDP was having night-time fantasies about being Leader of the Opposition. Members of the NDP do not need two special task forces to find out why they failed. They failed because Canadians recognized that this was a Party more seized with the lust for power than with the love of country. Shame on you.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: There is another cynical player in this whole piece. It is not just Members of the NDP who forgot their raison d'être. There is a third party that needs to be addressed here and that is the Canadian business community.

I belong to a free-enterprise Party. We support the free-enterprise system. We believe in rewarding individual success. We believe that the free enterprise system generates the most wealthy society and we also believe that government ought to be prepared to move in to redistribute some of that wealth so that we all get a fair share. However, the Canadian business community took advantage of a court decision affecting the Canada Elections Act to move in this election in an incredibly cynical manner. This is a loophole that this Parliament, if it has courage, integrity and guts, will close before there is another election.

The Conservative Party did not win this election in the normal sense of the word. No, the Canada Elections Act was brought in for one reason. It was brought in to ensure that any Member who wanted to come into this House would come because of the power of his or her ideas and the conviction and courage with which he or she were prepared to apply those ideas. It was meant to ensure that Parliament would not be the preserve of the powerful few but would be the voice representative of the many in society, that whether you came from Newfoundland and were a fisherman's son or whether you came from a privileged background, Canada's north or an ethnic minority group, you would have at least an equal opportunity to sit in this place and make your voice on behalf of constituents heard. That is what the Canada Elections Act is all about. Its purpose was to prevent this from being a posh private club belonging to a trendy and wealthy few.

What happened during this election campaign? The Act was perverted because the business community entered this campaign with a $3 million advertising campaign in the last 10 days of the election campaign. With $3 million, it bought this election for the Conservative Party. We had better have the courage to say it and we had better make up our minds now that we will close that loophole so that that kind of abuse, that kind of chicanery, that kind of hijacking of democracy, can never, ever happen again in this country.

Mr. Andre: No confidence in the people.

Mr. Tobin: I have every confidence in the people when the people are left to make their decisions.

Mr. McDermid: You just accused them of being bought. You don't have confidence in them at all.

Mr. Tobin: Mr. Speaker, we have across the way a gentleman who has so much empathy, understanding and compassion for the ordinary person that he actually claimed during the course of the election campaign that those who live on our cities' sidewalks, those who live under bridges, those who have neither roofs over their heads nor food for their bellies are there because it is a lifestyle and they like it. What the hell do you know about ordinary Canadians, the Minister of homelessness?

Mr. McDermid: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think the Hon. Member would probably want to retract those statements because they are totally untrue. If the Hon. Member is using as his source the Toronto Star, then I would suggest he get a better research department.

• (1740)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think we should close that part of the debate and let the Hon. Member continue.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Tobin: I am sorry to get so excited and use such strong language. But those people who are sitting out there trying to find heating vents to stay warm on December 19 when we sit here in this splendid House are not here to speak for themselves. If the Canada Elections Act is not fixed, they will never be here or have a representative to speak for them. I want to advise the Minister for homelessness that they are out there, and not by choice.

In Newfoundland 40 years ago we had an opportunity to fight this kind of an election campaign or at least participate in this kind of a democratic process.

An Hon. Member: You were not born then.

Mr. Tobin: That is right, I was not born. But it is important, it is relevant, it is history. The whole world is not made up of just what is in today's newspaper, I advise the Minister of homelessness. History is a very important teacher. We should pay attention to it.

Newfoundlanders made a fundamental choice 40 years ago. The Hon. Member for St. John's West cast his first vote 40 years ago as a young Newfoundland. He cast a vote for economic union between Newfoundland and the United States. There were two forces, one led by the father of the Hon. Member for St. John's West.

Mr. Cooper: And Don Jamieson.

Mr. Tobin: And Don Jamieson, that is correct. And one led by Joey Smallwood.

One group said that Newfoundland's future interests will be served by having economic union between Newfoundland and the United States. That group was funded and supported by a clique of Water and Duckworth Street merchants who wanted to keep things the way they always were. Fishermen brought in their fish. They were given a bit of molasses and flour, which fed them for the winter. They drove up their bills and, by God, they had to sell us their fish again next year because we had them in something we called "in collar" in Newfoundland. It was wrapped right around their necks. As long as we kept feeding their families, they would have to keep selling us their fish. That was the system and it was a cosy system.

The Water Street merchants looked at Confederation and said: "Well, that is a different system up there. I do not think our feudal system can survive the niceties of Confederation. So we will opt, finance and support a campaign for economic union with the United States".

The Member from St. John's West is proud to say that he cast his first vote for economic union with the United States.

It was an incredible campaign. It is referred to now as the battle for Canada, as we look back. Joey Smallwood, with the seat out of his pants, with nothing but the raggedly you-know-what artillery behind him went out and he took on those forces and he won the battle for Confederation. A referendum turned in a result that said Newfoundlanders would choose Canada. So we fought that battle 40 years ago and those who believed in Canada and the values of a tolerant, caring, and sharing nation won that battle.

Near 40 years later, last month, the battle was refought in Newfoundland and I am pleased to say refought with the same result. Newfoundlanders again said no to economic union between their country, Canada, and the United States.

Some Hon. Members. Hear, hear!

Mr. Tobin: They said yes to a strong independent nation. Why did they do that, Mr. Speaker? Because they know that when we talk about nationhood and when we talk about country, we cannot look at just the boundary lines and say that defines us as being different from them. We cannot just look at our flag and say we have a different flag than theirs and so that makes us different. We cannot just sing our national anthem and say we have a different song so that makes us different.

Newfoundlanders instinctively know that what defines us are not symbols of nationhood but the way we govern ourselves, the ability to be independent and not have to seek permission from anybody else when we make decisions for ourselves. Newfoundlanders opted again for a compassionate society, a free enterprise system—yes, we subscribe to that—but a government that is prepared to intervene to equalize opportunity across this land. That is the kind of Canada we believe in, a Canada that can reward success by one individual and celebrate it but yet would never hesitate to stoop down to help those who fall between the cracks and without whom this nation would not realize its full potential because they too should have their opportunity in this society.

Newfoundlanders believe that nationhood is defined when you have the ability to chart your own course, when you are truly masters in your own house, if I can equate the nation to the ship of state, and when you can fasten your own sail and move in whatever direction is appropriate for your land.

This Bill may pass this House in the days ahead but it does not represent the end of the debate. It represents the beginning of the debate about what kind of Canada we are going to have. As long as 57 per cent of Canadians say no to the Prime Minister's subsidiary vision of Canada—he was president of IOCC an American subsidiary now he wants to be Prime Minister of an American subsidiary—as long as Canadians say no to that, I tell the Government the battle is not over. The battle has only begun. When the battle roars we in this party, the Liberal Party, will be on the front lines fighting for a strong, independent, proud Canada and we will continue that fight until we win.

• (1750)

[Translation]

Hon. Lucien Bouchard (Secretary of State and Acting Minister of the Environment): Mr. Speaker, we find ourselves again in this Chamber after Canadians have unequivocally renewed their support for this Government. Of course, this support was first and foremost given to the Right Hon. Prime Minister and the policies put forward by his Government and to the vision we proposed to Canadians.

The election campaign that we have just been through was based mainly on one issue that gave rise to heated exchanges. This debate also gave Canadians the opportunity to consider two options for the future, to look at themselves in terms of their true identity and to choose the one that they considered most promising for the development of the country. The electorate showed that developing the national identity was not incompatible with openness to the world—far from it. Now that the people's verdict has democratically decided the question of free trade with the United States, it is up to us legislators to carry out the will of the people. On this side of the House, we want to do so calmly and respectfully, by once again explaining our choices, the underlying principles and the reasons why we believe that this treaty is an act of maturity, far-sightedness and deep faith in the future of Canada.

Our country's economy, whether in metropolitan areas, towns or outlying regions, is heavily dependent on exports. We are 25 million people on a vast territory, and most of us live on a narrow strip along the American border. Throughout our history, this geographic and demographic reality has forced us to be competitive, to be better than the rest if we hoped to succeed. We still want to meet this challenge that we face every day, which we have always faced until now, so much so that our people do not just sell raw materials in the United States, Mr. Speaker. They invest, they create jobs and make profits there; they go after their share of this huge consumer market.

Furthermore, we live in an era when the economies of the whole world are tending to band together in increasingly close-knit and powerful blocs. This is true of the twelve European countries that in 1992 will constitute a unified body of 350 million people. It is true of the Asian countries that are beginning the same kind of process, while respecting the national independence of individual countries. Confronted with the rise of these major economic powers and the liberalization of international trade, Canadians have to choose between a weak-kneed and so illusory recourse to protectionism, on one hand, and the challenge of openness and confidence in our abilities and talents, on the other.

We never claimed, Mr. Speaker, that free trade with the United States would be a rose garden. But we said, and we continue to believe firmly, that Canada's best development opportunities are in that direction. This message that we have been conveying to Canadians for many months was understood, as the results of November 21 attest. When the benefits of free trade will begin to be felt, more and more Canadians will realize that the Agreement is the road to our future. Not only will we provide guaranteed and stable access to U.S. markets, and, in the process, maintain and create hundreds of thousands of jobs over the next few years, but we will have done so at no cost to Canada's identity.

Canada is a country of great resources, a trading nation whose people enjoy one of the highest standards of living in the world. It is also a country which has, over the years, developed one of the best social systems. We are a caring society and we believe that government will and must have a role to play in reducing the disparities between the rich and the poor, men and women, regions rich in natural resources and regions with few natural resources.

In the last few months, and especially in the weeks before the election, defeatists cropped up everywhere and predicted nothing less than a national catastrophe if Canadians said yes to the Free Trade Agreement. Some people believed these prophets of doom and gloom. As we review this Agreement which is again before us, our role is to provide reassurance and information to stay any fears that may still remain about free trade.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We said it before the election and again after the election: Canada's social programs are here to stay. If we had had the least doubt in that regard, we would not have signed the Free Trade Agreement.

Besides, why would our social programs be threatened? Starting in 1935, trade tariffs were gradually removed and now 80 per cent of our trade with the United States is tariff-free. During that period, Canadian trade with the United States continued to grow. Nevertheless, it is in the last 53 years that the bulk of our social programs has been established. That never affected in any way our capacity to compete. Why should things be any different today? Why should continuity in our trade relationships bring about a break in our social and cultural traditions?

The villifiers of free trade are especially worried about those five to seven years during which we will define with our American partners what is a subsidy and which subsidies will come under the new rules developed by the task force.

According to them, that period of negotiation will result in the abolition of almost all our social programs, from old age security to unemployment insurance benefits through regional development assistance. They either ignore or forget to mention that we already have sure indications of the way those negotiations will go. Already, under the auspices of GATT, Canada and the United States recognize that internal subsidies are legitimate means to promote, for instance, economic and regional development. GATT does not limit the right of its members to use internal subsidies to reach such goals. What that clearly confirms is the capacity of Canada, within the free trade framework, to keep on fighting against regional disparities and allocating as many billions of dollars as we are putting into it now.

On the other hand, in 1985, the American Trade Department had rejected the claim of East Coast American fishermen that unemployment insurance benefits paid to Canadian fishermen were subsidies liable to countervailing duties.

Invoking more or less the same arguments, and taking advantage, it ought to be pointed out, of the Canadian people's interest in the issue, the opponents of free trade have tried to make us believe that the agreement would be a disaster for our environment. As the Prime Minister has entrusted me temporarily with the environment portfolio, it behooves me today to respond to the assertions made by certain groups opposed to the Free Trade Agreement. By signing the agreement, we have not given up an iota of our sovereignty either in the field of social programs or with respect to our ability to maintain strict environmental protection programs.

During our first mandate, we passed environmental protection legislation which ranks among the most exacting in the world. We took vigorous measures to reduce chemical pollution. We invested millions of dollars for cleaning up our waterways, whether it be the Great Lakes, the Saint-Lawrence or the port of Halifax, to name only a few initiatives.

Canada has adhered to the concept of "sustainable development", which entails that economic development must be subordinated to environmental considerations. We set up a task force on environment and the economy, further to the suggestion made by the United Nations Commission on Environment, whose Chairperson Mrs. Brundtland, Premier of Norway, underlined Canada's contribution as a world leader in the fight for the protection of the environment.

All those actions were actions by a sovereign nation aware of the gigantic steps that remain to be taken for its citizens to have purer air and cleaner water.

To suggest that the Free Trade Agreement with the United States will affect our ability to do that is sheer speculation and, as much as I regret to say, demagoguery.

Some groups also stated the Agreement would force Canada to harmonize its environmental standards with those of the United States. Nothing could be farther from the truth! Quite the opposite, the Agreement recognizes our right to maintain and create environmental conservation policies. As a matter of fact, the Agreement includes no requirement of any kind for the harmonization of standards.

Others further submitted that under the Free Trade Agreement, Canada could no longer provide financial assistance to industries wishing to reduce their emissions of pollutants. That is false! Because the GATT, Mr. Speaker, recognizes environmental protection as a legitimate goal governments may promote through subsidies. Therefore governments, both federal and provincial, will continue to financially support industries undertaking clean-up measures.

One of the most evident signs of ignorance and bad faith exhibited by some critics of Free Trade, Mr. Speaker, deals with that alleged treaty obligation for Canada to export our water to the United States.

Those absolute lies are still being propagated even after the Minister of International Trade had an amendment passed to Bill C-130 to specify the Free Trade Agreement did not apply to water.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

In that area also, the Agreement is in line with provisions under the GATT that allow a country to take necessary steps to protect the environment. Section 1201 of the Agreement is clear on that.

In fact, the only provision in the Agreement that deals with the matter of water concerns the elimination of tariff on water which we import from the United States.

Our lakes and rivers are not for sale, and Canadians know it. That type of export on the other hand is specifically excluded both by the federal water policy and the Canadian Water Preservation Act.

Canadian sovereignty in that crucial sector—as in all others—is altogether unassailable.

Mr. Speaker, the environmental question underlies the notion of sovereignty. Had the Free Trade Agreement in any way restricted our freedom to act in this field we would not have signed for any consideration whatever.

Over the next few years there will be an unprecedented number of new measures to protect our environment. This happens to be one of the basic commitments we made to Canadian men and women during the election campaign. You may rest assured that this Government will live up to them.

Whether we are talking about cleaning up our rivers or fighting against the depletion of the ozone layer and against every type of toxic emissions, free trade or no free trade, the Canadian Government can take action in all fields related to environmental protection.

During the election campaign the Prime Minister also promised that before the expiry of his second mandate he would sit down with the United States and negotiate a comprehensive agreement for a common effort in fighting acid rain. The new American administration has already indicated it is prepared to undertake such negotiations. Canadians can be assured that, as in the case of the free trade deal, this agreement will be negotiated in the best interests of this country and its citizens.

In our societies, never has so much concern been expressed over our environmental heritage. The United States has responsibilities in that respect, we have ours. And we share common responsibilities. And Canadians can rest assured that we will live up to them competently and energetically, while asserting our full sovereignty.

[English]

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to rise in this House for my first address. It is with a great sense of pride that I stand in this place as the representative of the people of Winnipeg—St. James.

At the outset, I wish to thank the people of Winnipeg—St. James for the trust they have placed in me in choosing to have me represent them in this the Thirty-fourth Parliament. I shall endeavour to be worthy of that trust, and I promise to serve them to the best of my ability.

Might I also take this opportunity, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate you on your re-election to the chair of this House. I am certain that Members may rely upon you to continue to preserve and safeguard the great traditions of this House.

The constituency of Winnipeg—St. James comprises the western-most portion of the City of Winnipeg, north of the Assiniboine River, and is predominantly urban.

If one travels to Winnipeg by air, one lands at the Winnipeg Airport, which is located within the boundaries of the riding. The Winnipeg Blue Bombers, the Grey Cup champions, play their games in the Winnipeg Stadium, which is located within the boundaries of the riding of Winnipeg—St. James. As well, the Winnipeg Jets—who I am confident will one day, in the near future, win the Stanley Cup—play their home games at the Winnipeg Arena, which again, is located within the boundaries of Winnipeg—St. James.

Like the Prairie people in general, the people of Winnipeg—St. James have a strong belief in fairness, a strong belief in what is right. They are willing to place their trust in others. However, when that trust is betrayed, when that trust is violated, when that trust is left in tatters, they do not forget. While they may not show anger, they will get even. This Government learned that lesson on November 21 last when its shafting of the people of Winnipeg—St. James in respect of the CF-18 maintenance contract came back to haunt them.

The theft of the CF-18 contract was a gross injustice. It was an attack on the voters of Winnipeg—St. James; an attack on their integrity. In fact, it was an attack on the integrity of the City of Winnipeg and the Province of Manitoba.

I note that when the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp) spoke a few moments ago, a man from my home Province of Manitoba, he did not say one word about that act of grand larceny, the theft of the CF-18 contract—and that is exactly what it was. And it was done for cynical political purposes.

The people of Winnipeg—St. James can rest assured that I shall never betray their trust, as this Government did in respect of the CF-18 maintenance contract. And that is why, Mr. Speaker, I rise today in this House to oppose the Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Harvard: The people of Winnipeg—St. James have entrusted me with the task of fighting this deal, and to fight it every inch of the way. I cannot betray that trust, and I will not. I know that Hon. Members opposite would like us to come into this Chamber and simply roll over and play dead.

Well, Mr. Speaker, we know too much of what has happened in the past. Where I come from, they say: "I did not come down the river on a bale of hay." In other words, one is not naive.

We do not trust this Government, Mr. Speaker; we do not trust this Government any farther than we could spit upwind. That will not change. There is simply too much at stake. The future of this country is at stake. We are going to watch this Government. We are going to watch every move it makes; we are going to listen to every word it speaks. That is our responsibility, and it is a responsibility that we will live up to.

My quarrel with the Free Trade Agreement, as it was throughout the entire election campaign, is based on the fact the vast majority of trade between Canada and the United States is free of tariffs, free of duty, without this agreement. We on this side of the House believe in freer trade among all nations. It is for that reason, Mr. Speaker, that successive Liberal Governments consistently worked toward the reduction of tariffs.

I know that during the last election campaign Members opposite endeavoured to spread falsehoods about the position of the Liberal Party with respect to trade. We are not against freer trade; we are not against lower tariffs. We have worked toward that goal for many years. What we are against, and remain against, is this rotten, abominable deal.

While we desire freer trade with the U.S., we also desire freer trade with other countries. We are concerned that in getting the tariffs and duties removed on the remaining 20 per cent of trade with the U.S., we have given up the ability to run our own country in the way that we want to run it. In other words, this trade agreement jeopardizes our sovereignty, undercuts our sovereignty.

We know all about the supposed special relationship between the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and Mr. Reagan, the outgoing President of the United States. That special relationship got us nothing in a period of four years but photo ops and a silly sing-song in Québec City.

The Prime Minister was desperate for something to show for this special relationship, and perhaps that is the reason for his conversion to free trade. After all, it was in 1983 that the Prime Minister said: "Don't talk to me about free trade during the leadership campaign, or at any time in the future." Why did he change his mind? Why at this point does Canada wish to become tied more closely to the economy of the U.S.?

We should stand back for a moment and consider whether it is not more prudent, while seeking freer trade with the U.S., to continue to pursue the policy of tariff reduction through multilateral means such as the GATT. Instead, this Government has chosen to put all of its eggs into the American basket. It has abandoned the policy of a multilateral focus to trade policy. We are now faced with the uphill struggle of further negotiation and dispute settlement on a bilateral basis with an opposing party that is 10 times our size, with 10 times the economic strength. Hardly an even match.

Let me turn now to the question of subsidies.

Under the terms of the Free Trade Agreement, what constitutes an allowable subsidy will be negotiated over the next five to seven years. This phase of the negotiation is of greatest concern to me. Canada enters the negotiation without any parameters in place in respect of the definition of a subsidy. In the past, the Americans have claimed that our regional development programs and social programs constitute unfair subsidies. I repeat: unfair subsidies. We have no indication that they have changed their minds on that score.

When these programs are raised in the negotiations, will this Government defend them? Or will they buckle under to U.S. pressure, as they have done so frequently in the past? Do not hold your breath, Mr. Speaker.

Here is the danger, as I see it: The Americans will claim that goods and services being imported from Canada enjoy the benefit of unfair subsidies such as unemployment insurance and pensions. As a result, under the threat of countervailing duties, Canada's social and regional development programs will come under pressure.

We on this side of the House believe that this will lead to a gradual erosion of these programs. That is the greatest threat of all under this agreement. If the Tories had any brains at all, they would have sought a specific exemption to make it absolutely clear that social and regional development programs were exempt under the agreement, especially when we look at historical claims by the Americans that these programs amount to subsidies.

• (1810)

Looking at this agreement from a Winnipegger's perspective, perhaps one should not be surprised that the Tories would sleep while regional development programs are eroded. After all, regional development in the Government's eyes is just another cynical means to buy votes. We in Winnipeg know about the Government's lack of commitment to regional development. Again I refer to the CF-18 maintenance contract. We in the Province of Manitoba, particularly in the City of Winnipeg, had the opportunity to strengthen the aviation industry on the Prairies, to develop a diversified industrial base in a part of the country which suffers the effects of the boom and bust cycle inherent in a resource and agricultural based economy. The Government turned a blind eye to that opportunity. That was the case even though the Winnipeg contractor concerned won the contract on an equal footing with its competitors. With the lack of commitment to regional development shown in the CF-18 contract, little wonder regional development was not specifically exempted under the trade agreement.

On the question of social programs, we know all too well the Government's lack of commitment to pensions, unemployment insurance and medicare. As you know, we watched the Government try to deindex pensions during its first term. That reflects its commitment to social programs. Those who fear the erosion of these programs may rest assured that we will defend them at every turn. We will watch over the negotiations on the subsidy definition very, very closely.

We should also ask ourselves why the Government did not get specific exemptions for social and regional development programs. Maybe we should not be surprised that the Tories would place the fortunes of the brewing industry above those of seniors struggling to make ends meet. Not that I was unhappy to see the brewing industry exempted, but I think seniors deserve a better break from the Government.

We on this side of the House insist on a specific exemption for social and regional development programs. It is our duty to do so, placed upon us by the millions of people who supported us and oppose this deal. We cannot stand by while the Government endangers the social safety net which we on this side of the House have worked so hard to construct. We do not wish to see the erosion of social programs as we have witnessed in the fiefdom of the Prime Minister's ideological mentor, Mrs. Thatcher, who so eagerly rushed to his assistance during the last election campaign. In fact, it was interference in Canadian affairs.

Is this agreement another step by Canada away from the caring society that we on this side of the House built toward a Thatcher Britain where two countries now exist? On the one hand you have the wealthy region surrounding its largest city in the prosperous south, and on the other the impoverished north. Is this our model of the future, regional disparity and a growing gap between rich and poor? We on this side see the warning signs. We do not like them and we are going to fight on.

Again on subsidies, what will be the fate of such programs as PFRA, ERDA and the Agricultural Assistance Act as well as the Western Grain Stabilization Act? Those programs are of specific concern to westerners whose economy is still to a large extent reliant on agriculture. All those programs are in the annex to the agreement. All will be negotiated over the next five to seven years. Our support systems will be brought into line with theirs. Our supply management system will be endangered.

From a westerner's perspective, we are concerned about the question of resources in general, including the question of energy. Producing provinces have always held dearly control over their resources as a means to enhance development of their economies. Indeed, the transfer of control over resources to the western provinces was one of this country's first regional development programs. We in the West are certainly not keen on guaranteeing the supply of our resources to the Americans. Indeed, it is surprising that the Americans were given secure supply over energy without anything in return. The United States of America will merely take all the oil and gas Canada can supply, provided it cannot get it cheaper elsewhere. Furthermore, we have virtually abandoned the goal of energy self-sufficiency by committing ourselves to share our oil and natural gas even as our supplies become depleted, this with no obligation to buy from Canada should cheaper supplies be available elsewhere. The bottom line on energy under this agreement is that we have become an energy reservoir of the United States.

Time does not allow me to touch upon all the concerns flowing from this trade agreement. However, I would like to briefly repeat my concerns. We have not gained secure access to the U.S. market, as my colleagues have outlined in some detail. Our social and regional development programs are indeed threatened. People who do not believe that, particularly Members opposite, might as well believe in the tooth fairy. In fact, I have several bridges that I could sell them right now if they do not believe that. Have they not heard of harmonization? Have they not heard of the integration of the two economies?

I said it during the election campaign and I will say it now. What is the point in consummating this agreement if things are just going to be the same afterwards? The fact of the matter is that things are not going to be the same. We are going to have a continental economy. We are going to have a continental energy regime. There will be harmonization, and I can assure you that they will not be harmonizing with us. We will be harmonizing with them because it comes down to a matter of power and size.

The Americans are aggressive. I can assure you that in the tough days that lie ahead it will be Winnipeg bending toward Minneapolis. It will be Toronto bending toward Washington. It will be Vancouver bending toward New York. That is the lesson we have to learn from the trade agreement. It is a lesson that has been learned on this side of the House, but it has yet to be learned on that side of the House. Will they ever wake up?

I also would like to point out, as I have already said in some detail, that our agriculture sector is threatened as well. We have given up the ability to conduct an independent energy policy. It is for those reasons and many, many more that when the time comes I will stand up and vote against this trade agreement.

Mr. Ross Reid (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to first congratulate you and your colleagues on your election to this House. It is indeed a great honour and I think you and your colleagues, as you have shown in the past, will show in the future that you justly deserve it.

I rise today to speak on the great and historic free trade agreement before us. With your permission, however, I would like first to speak of my constituents in St. John's East. I would like to thank them for the confidence they have placed in me by electing me to this place and assure them that I will serve them with dignity and distinction.

• (1820)

In this election campaign my constituents were asked to consider many things. I believe in the end they made the decision based on those that were important to them, things that mattered to them, to their children. It ultimately was a decision that involved the future, a decision based on opportunities, employment and leadership, a better tomorrow for all Newfoundlanders and, indeed, all Canadians.

I am well aware of the honour bestowed upon me to stand in my place in this House. With your leave, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention four others who have gone before me representing my province, the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, in this place. First I mention the Hon. W. J. Browne who was a Member of Parliament here many years ago, known variously as Judge Browne or Billy Browne. Today, at 92, as the dean of my Party in Newfoundland and Labrador, he remains active and involved. I would like to mention the Hon. James A. McGrath, a man known to many Hon. Members, a distinguished parliamentarian, a great reformer in this House, a great representative of his constituents, and today the Lieutenant-Governor of Newfoundland and Labrador. I mention the Hon. Don Jamieson, a renowned broadcaster, parliamentarian, and diplomat who to many of my age is remembered particularly at this time of year. Also, if I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to mention the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) with whom I came to this place some 12 years ago and with whom I served for five years. I would like to say it is indeed an honour to serve in this House with him today.

My constituency stretches from the Town of Cupids on one end around Cape St. Francis to St. John's. Cupids is the oldest English speaking community in North America. Georgetown and Brigus, the home of one of the world's greatest explorers, Bob Bartlett, are new to the constituency in the riding of St. John's East. I would like to welcome them and pay tribute to them.

Mine is a district of fishermen and of fish plant workers, a district of ironworkers, boiler makers, and other skilled tradesmen who have worked on every major project in North America and built most of the major buildings in Canada and the United States. Mine is a constituency of entrepreneurs, owners, and operators of small business, people who create jobs and who lead others to create jobs with them. Mine is a constituency of people who serve through the Government, through the utilities, and through the service sector in a vibrant capital city. These are the people to whom free trade matters. These are the people who said to me: "Go to Ottawa and speak on our behalf for free trade".

Many in the district of St. John's East continue to struggle with unemployment, continue to struggle to create the opportunities that they need for work, to be able to live in Newfoundland with their families. I mention particularly the people of Bell Island where, 25 years ago, the iron ore mines were closed. Since then they have struggled with minor success to find the real opportunity which will provide them with the employment that is so important to them.

Mine is a district of communities faced by the tremendous burden of debt but also challenged by the increasing cost to provide the very basic services that the residents demand.

Despite hardship and adversity, the constituents of St. John's East are focused on the future. The constituents of St. John's East are most concerned about the opportunities that will give the jobs that they need. They are most concerned about the opportunities that are provided under the Free Trade Agreement.

We have a growing but small high-tech industry, a high-tech industry that knows the opportunities provided by free trade.

In the district of St. John's East and in the City of St. John's we have three post-secondary education institutions. Memorial University and the Marine Institute are world-class centres for research, centres that focus on the opportunities provided by the sea, the sea that we have lived by and from for so many years. We also continue to await the benefits of the offshore oil and gas resources below our shores.

Those are the opportunities that face us in the future, but we have had a history of ups and downs in the economy of Newfoundland and Labrador—minor successes and major failures. What we as Newfoundlanders have always asked, the only thing that we have demanded, is for the opportunity to create for ourselves, our families, and our communities the opportunities that will allow us to build a better tomorrow so that we can live and work in our homes, the opportunity that we have not been provided in the past.

My hon. friend talked earlier about what we as Newfoundlanders want as the ability to control our own destiny, but without the opportunities to do that we have not the chance. He talked of ships of state and charting our own course. What we have with the Free Trade Agreement, what we have with the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, what we have with the Hibernia understanding is the ship that he wants to get into and chart his own course. Without those opportunities there is no ship. The Free Trade Agreement is a part of an attempt for the first time to develop an economic program that allows Atlantic Canadians generally, and Newfoundlanders in particular, to make decisions for themselves, to create the opportunities for themselves, to say that we can and will have the tools that we need in our hands to do exactly that.

Too long we have been forced to take what we can get. We have been forced to have our resources exported from our shores with the minimum of production, with the minimum of value added to them. Too long we have been exporting cod blocks and frozen fillets. But why? Because of tariffs. We have been unable to get to our natural market in the United States, except with the barest of resources, because of the burden of tariffs. If we want to take a piece of fish and for some unknown reason we want to add a few corn flakes to it, or we want to put a little cheese on it—I cannot imagine why we would but people in this part of the world like to do that—we could not do that because there is a tariff on it. Our exports are of raw product, fine, there is no tariff on it. But on anything else there is a tariff. We are in an immediate disadvantage.

With the Free Trade Agreement that burden is removed. The same applies to our forest industries. The same applies to our minerals. Instead of exporting the bare bones, now, with the tariffs gone under this agreement, we have the ability to create the jobs in Newfoundland and in the Atlantic Provinces so that it is our people who are putting bread crumbs on fish and not people in Massachusetts who are putting bread crumbs on fish. It is our people who are taking wood products from wood and turning them into windows and doors, not people in the United States.

Those are the opportunities of free trade. Those are the things that will be our future. Those are the things that we have wanted for so long, that chance to create the jobs and the opportunities for ourselves.

I would like to talk briefly about social programs. Medicare will not be threatened by this deal. Pensions will not be threatened by this deal. Unemployment insurance will not be threatened by this deal. Despite what others have said in the last couple of months, it will not cost women between $5,000 and $15,000 to have a baby under the Free Trade Agreement. Despite what has been said in the past about whom to vote for and whom not to vote for, not voting for the Government will not cost you your old age pension. The unemployment insurance for Atlantic fishermen has been challenged before. It was rejected by the United States Department of Commerce. We have been through that.

Unfortunately, what many people in Newfoundland voted against—and I regret that my hon. friend from Humber is not here, he did his own analysis of the election results—was a Cronenberg horror fiction that had been created by the Liberal opposition during this election campaign.

They did not vote against free trade because, unfortunately, they were not given the full opportunity to vote against free trade because the whole issue was clouded by doom and gloom, horror fiction, and negative views of a situation that will not exist in this country.

The ultimate difference between the Government and the Opposition is a difference of attitude. The federal Government will not roll over and die when the Free Trade Agreement is in place. The provinces will not roll over and die when the Free Trade Agreement is in place. GATT does not cease to exist when the Free Trade Agreement is in place. If we continue to focus absolutely on the negatives we will not see the positives.

Our Government and our Party chose to maximize the benefits of this agreement and to ensure that the negative effects are minimalized. We are told that we cannot compete. We are told that under the Free Trade Agreement we will be swamped because of lower wage rates and economies of scale. My constituents do not believe that we cannot compete. All my constituents want is the opportunity to compete.

I suggest to the House that if we cannot compete with the barriers down we will never be able to compete with the barriers up. I know that Canadians, with the imagination, entrepreneurship and ability to be productive and compete, can take on any American company and any American product and do well, can increase their ability to do more and the opportunities that go with that.

We can do better. We will do better. We are faced with a world that is changing very quickly. We are faced with a world that is not strictly focused on the United States, but a world that is becoming more technically adept, that is trading 24 hours a day, and that tells Canada to keep up or be left behind.

What I resent most about those who are against the Free Trade Agreement is that they speak of the status quo. As a Newfoundlander, and I am sure all Newfoundlanders and Labradorians will agree, the status quo is not something that has served us particularly well. I fear in this world that status quo is in a sense a fallacy. If we do not move ahead we will fall behind.

Canadians have a certain standard of living and quality of life. We expect the level of services provided by our Government to be of such high quality that we must keep up, we must continue to move ahead. It is with the Free Trade Agreement, with progressive and imaginative economic policies of this Government which we have seen in the last four years that we will be able to keep up.

The status quo was something that has hurt many of us. The status quo is something that we cannot accept. The Free Trade Agreement is an opportunity for us to enter a market under conditions that are predictable and secure, to enter a market ten times our size, knowing that if we run into difficulty we have a mechanism we can participate in for the first time to solve our problems and deal with our conflicts, under a code that is predictable.

I certainly speak for my constituents. I suspect that at the end of the day I speak for all Newfoundlanders and Labradorians. The Free Trade Agreement is something we must have. When we consider the nature of our resource based economy and the nature of the opportunities before us, if we are denied the opportunities under the Free Trade Agreement, we may never see them again. Canada will fall behind and I suggest the country will have missed an opportunity that we can never replace. I think we can all stand in shame if opportunity is not taken now. We should move ahead to ensure the benefit for all Canadians.

Mr. Cid Samson (Timmins—Chapleau): Mr. Speaker, it is with great pleasure that I make my first speech to this honourable Chamber as the Member for Timmins—Chapleau. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the Speaker on his re-election as Speaker of the House of Commons. I also want to thank the people from my riding who supported me. I express to them my total commitment to work on their behalf for this term and many terms to follow.

It is very fitting that the subject of this speech be the Mulroney trade deal, as it is the voters in Timmins—Chapleau who sent me here to oppose this deal, which was the primary reason for my victory and the Conservative loss on November 21.

Timmins—Chapleau is the third largest riding in Ontario by area. It stretches from Iroquois Falls in the east to White River in the west, from Timmins in the north to Gogama in the south. It is a riding of miners, trappers, loggers, railway workers, and many others. It is also a riding of hard-working, honest families who love their country.

The communities which make up our riding are resource-based communities. When the mine closes or when the mill lays off workers, when the railway becomes automated, or there is a slump in demand for our forest products, the economic heart of our communities die. Resource-based economies are the ones which suffer first during an economic downturn. They are the ones which are the last to recover, if they recover at all.

That kind of area needs the support of the federal Government through regional development programs. However, over the long run we need to diversify the economies of these communities to offset the boom or bust cycles which have devastated all northern areas of our country during bad economic times.

In order for this to happen, the federal Government must have the ability to direct public support to these areas. It must have both the political will and the required legislative tools to give support to the North. This deal takes those powers away.

With the FTA in effect, over the next decade the Government will have to find levers of economic power but will not be able to use them. Under the Free Trade Agreement, if the mill in Iroquois Falls were to close, the Government would not be able to bail it out, keep the workers working and the families prospering. The Government would be bound by this deal under which regional development is likely to be considered an unfair subsidy. Those workers in Iroquois Falls would be sacrificed to the Conservative ideology of keeping the Americans happy at all costs.

This deal will not produce a high-tech manufacturing boom in my part of this great country. The deal does not have a lot of winners in Timmins.

The Free Trade Agreement is already causing victims. Late last week Algoma Steel in Sault Ste. Marie announced lay-offs. I believe these lay-offs, like the layoffs at Gillette, Northern Telecom, and Pittsburgh Paints, are a direct result of the corporate plans to streamline operations in preparation for the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The iron ore for the specialty steel produced for Algoma is mined in Wawa, Ontario and railed or shipped down to Sault Ste. Marie. As Algoma lays off workers, lay-offs can follow in Wawa. This deal will mean further lay-offs in Timmins—Chapleau when the current subsidy for the Algoma Central Railway is also terminated as an unfair subsidy. Rail lay-offs will inevitably follow in Wawa and Hawk Junction.

All that this deal does for the North is make victims. The Government likes to use fancy words like “streamlining” or “downsizing” or “winners and losers”, as the Liberals first said under Pierre Trudeau. These are all statistics for the economists in the Department of Finance or the bureaucrats in External Affairs. However, they are all people who are losing their jobs, and their families cannot be fed on fancy words of reassurance from the Conservatives about adjustment programs or the unemployment insurance program.

The victims have received a very cruel present from Prime Minister Scrooge. They have lost their jobs, only to be given vague promises about how they will benefit under free trade. I would never put vague promises under a Christmas tree for my kids.

• (1840)

Another aspect of this deal which I find unbelievable is this notion of an unfair subsidy. I do not need to have some American bureaucrat tell me what he or she thinks is fair and unfair. I know what is fair and what is not. Creating jobs in my riding is fair, and this deal, costing the good people in my riding their jobs is unfair. One does not have to be a lawyer or a high-priced consultant to figure that out.

The Americans want to keep their jobs and capture our markets. With this deal, we walked into a trap, and I fear that it will be working people in Timmins—Chapleau who will suffer from the Government's misguided policy.

Our Government has been manipulated by the Americans into walking into an ill-advised negotiation with a list of concessions, not a list of bottom line protections. I cannot imagine going to buy a car with a list of options that I am prepared to give up drawn up before I go into the showroom to see if the car is safe and comfortable. This deal is like a car with no engine or brakes. The strangest thing of all is that this Government has bought that car.

During the election campaign, I knocked on thousands of doors in my riding. The overwhelming message that I kept receiving from the people to whom I talked was that this deal has got to go, we do not trust this Government with our future, we love our country, and we do not want to see Canada Americanized.

The people in northern Ontario are a tough bunch. The climate is not the most hospitable. As a matter of fact, White River has had the coldest temperature in Canada, and that was -72F. We have come there to work and we are good workers. We have stayed and we have built ourselves strong communities of which we are proud. We are proud to raise our children in the North. We are proud to raise them as Canadians. We have fine traditions and community spirit and are tolerant of others.

These values are valuable, but for our communities to survive and flourish, we have to keep our economic base strong. We cannot survive government policies which throw us into the deep end just to see if we will sink or swim. In this deal, we as a country have given up far too much and have received far too little in return.

[Translation]

Mr. Gabriel Fontaine (Lévis): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I too would like to take the opportunity to thank my constituents who voted for me on November 21, 1988 and also to thank all my colleagues who were elected. Now we Conservatives are the only party in Canada to represent all parts of this great country. The other parties have become much more regional. So congratulations to all our colleagues who were elected. Thanks to those who put their trust in us and who appreciated our management over the last four years.

I now want to stick to today's subject, namely the new debate on free trade that has been made necessary because the Liberal and socialist politicians have not kept their word. We are forced to start over what we spent months on. We discussed free trade here for 350 hours, but we have to start again, Mr. Speaker, because they do not keep their word.

So, once and for all, what does free trade mean, so that Canadians can understand it exactly? Where does free trade fit in? What does it mean for the 27 million Canadians who live here? What does it mean for the 12 million Canadians between 30 and 65 who are in the labour force, who work, compared to younger Canadians, to older Canadians on pension, to Canadians who cannot work because of certain circumstances like illness or injury?

Twelve million Canadians work and what they produce every year is called the Gross National Product. In 1987, it was $500 billion. That is the sum total of Canadian products. It includes a pencil, a piece of paper, an automobile and an airplane. It includes medical services which are provided each time a health insurance card is used. All that amounts to $500 billion. And Canadians export one-quarter of that—that is $125 billion of Canadian goods and services. That means that 3 million jobs out of 12 million, one out of four, are linked to exports. But it goes further than that—84 per cent of Canadian exports go to the United States, in other words $95 billion of our exports go to the United States. This means that in Canada one Canadian out of five has a job because we are able to sell in the United States. This is what the Free Trade Agreement is all about. It means work for one out of five Canadians who are now employed, because we sell to the United States.

• (1850)

What parts of Canada do those goods originate from? There are $60 billion out of $95 billion—a significant proportion—$60 billion that come from Ontario, a province that fought free trade, especially the Liberals—Ontario Liberals opposed free trade. Well, their share of our total $95 billion worth of exports to the United States is $60 billion.

The second largest exporting province is Quebec, with $16 billion. You see the difference—$60 billion's worth of exports to the United States come from Ontario, as against $16 billion's worth coming from Quebec, and another $19 billion from all the other provinces together.

What province fought free trade? Ontario. Ontario Liberals, who paid for part of the Liberal Party of Canada's election campaign.

And why was that Agreement needed? It was needed because since 1985 the Americans, faced with an enormous trade deficit, were becoming very protectionist—they were blocking, restricting their purchases from other countries. And as suppliers to the United States, we were affected. Then there were some disputes. For instance, all Canadians heard of the difficulties encountered by a number of producers—hog, hog carcasses, fish, shingles and shakes producers. In each and every case the Americans said: Now, let us restrict those Canadian exports. Let us put up barriers, temporary tariffs, temporary taxes, red tape hassles.

The Americans could tell us, for example, that the pork and the hog carcasses we sell them must no longer contain growth hormones.

That was a way of stopping our pork exports to the United States. The Americans were then taking all kinds of measures to reduce our exports, thus jeopardizing our industry.

It must therefore be stressed that the Free Trade Agreement aims at stopping the Americans from taking protectionist measures which were reducing or would have reduced Canadian exports to the United States.

The other advantage of the Free Trade Agreement is of lesser consequence because 80 per cent of the 95 billion dollars worth of Canadian exports to the United States is presently free of tariffs. There are tariffs on 20 per cent of our exports.

The Agreement therefore provides for the phasing-out of all these tariffs over a 10-year period. For about a third of these products, the tariff will drop to zero starting on January 1 1988. For another third of these products, those of industries which need a little more time to adapt to the competitive situation created by free trade, the tariffs will be phased out over a five-year period and, in all other cases, they will be phased out over a 10-year period. The second advantage of free trade is therefore elimination of tariffs.

The first advantage of the Free Trade Agreement, I repeat, is the protection it affords us against American protectionist measures. The second advantage is the phasing-out of tariffs on approximately 20 billion dollars of our exports to the United States.

Another major benefit will be the dispute settlement panel. That is one of the most important elements of the Agreement. What will this dispute settlement panel mean? Let us take the situation which existed for our lumber exports to the United States in 1986, where the Americans claimed that we, as Canadians, were unfairly subsidizing lumber producers through stumpage fees which were insufficiently high, where the Americans claimed that we were subsidizing them. So they said: "You are subsidizing them; that is why we are going to impose a tax on your imports". They called them compensatory duties against our lumber exports or other items. "From now on, we are going to charge a 35 per cent duty on your exports. We are doing that because we feel that you are involved in unfair competition. You are subsidizing these corporations". In the case of softwood lumber, it was a 35 per cent duty.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

What could Canadians do when Americans decided to impose such a duty? The remedy which was available to Canadians was to appeal to the United States Trade Tribunal. It meant that a Canadian firm with its head office in Toronto, Montreal, Québec City or Lévis, had to call in its lawyers and tell them to go to the American Trade Tribunal to defend its position and demonstrate to the judges that the American Government was wrong to impose an "x" per cent duty on its products. So its lawyers had to go to the United States to appear before an American tribunal and defend its position on the basis of American legislation. The burden of proof was enormous, the more so because the judges on this American trade tribunal were themselves American.

Whenever the courts are called upon to rule, it is because something is questionable and unclear. There is a gray area. So whenever they appeared before the tribunal, each party had to make representations, but the ruling belonged to the American judges who, even when they wanted to be absolutely fair and objective, used to rule more often than not against our Canadian firms.

What is the nature of the change? Now, Canadians no longer have to deal with the American Trade Tribunal when a dispute occurs. There is a new dispute settlement panel which is now made up of five individuals, including two Canadians, two Americans, and a fifth individual accepted by both parties. That is the main difference. Essentially, the other procedures remain the same, but those who disagree with an American decision aimed at blocking our exports would no longer be required to appeal to an American tribunal, but to a binational panel made up of two Canadians, two Americans and a fifth individual acceptable to both. Which means that the ruling would not be at the mercy of five American judges. Under these conditions, the fact you are American or Canadian will be less significant, and that really is the big difference in the dispute settlement body: This binational panel will be there to ensure a better interpretation of the applicable legislation, both in the case of Canadian exports to the United States and American exports to Canada.

In short, the Free Trade Agreement will reduce American protectionism, eliminates the remaining duties and taxes, and ensure a much more secure access to the American market. During the election campaign, representatives of the Opposition parties did not provide this information to the Canadian public. They went from door to door, visited Golden Agers' clubs, one after the other, wherever they could find people who might be receptive to a message of fear. The Liberals and Socialists were there to tell pensioners in all the homes for the Aged: "If free trade passes, you are going to lose your pension."

We saw former Ministers from the Trudeau era say the same thing and meddle in that scare campaign. Fortunately, we got the best of them because we told people the truth and proved to them that we were right. We told them: "It is your children or your parents between 30 and 65, the people who work and pay taxes in Canada, the industry, trade or business people who are aware of the need for access to the American market. It is those people who want free trade and you, who are older, younger or weaker, do not trust them. It is those people who pay taxes and give the country the money it needs to pay for your pensions." How do you think we can keep telling the needy that the country can pay for their pensions? A nation can pay for pensions in two ways. Together with the Socialists, the Liberals have found an original way to do it.

Their original solution was to borrow money and today our country owes $335 billion because of the Liberals' mismanagement and their co-operation with the Socialists. So in order to pay out benefits, they took out loans. It is not politically dangerous to borrow money because those who are going to pay won't be voting on election day. Those who are going to pay are our children, grandchildren and even great-grandchildren. Because the Liberals have always understood that principle, they were able to get elected. They understood that if you can make others, but not voters, pay for your mistakes, you can get re-elected and continue to spend.

But our message appealed to reason. We proved to Canadians that, together with members of the workforce, we could and should continue paying for our pension systems because sooner or later we must set a limit on collective debt. It was necessary that our businesses made money. And we told people: Those who are employed must make money. It is not a sin to make money. It is important. When you make money, you pay taxes, with money earned not money borrowed. People understood, they got our message. They understood also the message of the men and women who supported us during the campaign, because free trade is a collective issue that concerns Canadians and not the issue of the Conservative Party only. It is the issue of Canadians. It is, for instance, the issue of the Prime Minister of Quebec, Robert Bourassa, and his team who say that free trade is crucial for Quebec. The Quebec Government took position in an official manifesto in favour of free trade in all its aspects.

We also could count on the support of the Desjardins co-operative movement. And I am proud to talk about those things specifically, because the Desjardins movement was born in my riding 88 years ago. It is not a capitalist movement. It is a co-operative movement that today manages $35 billion in assets. Two Quebecers out of every three, for million out of six million Quebecers are members of that movement. In a March 1988 manifesto, it formally took position for free trade and declared the signed agreement in particular a good one for jobs, for Quebec, for businesses, for social programs.

We also received, on the free-trade issue, the support of the Chambers of commerce of Canada and their 170,000 members, business people who sign pay cheques.

We also got for free trade the support and endorsement of a reliable body par excellence, the Economic Council of Canada. Closer to home, in the province of Quebec, we have received the support of the Dutil family and CanamManac in Beauce County, of Laurent Beaudoin and Bombardier and of former ministers from another political party. There are two political parties in Quebec. We have received the support of Bernard Landry and Rodrigue Tremblay, former ministers in the Quebec Government. We have received the support of Hervé Pomerleau, an extraordinary entrepreneur in Saint-Georges-de-Beauce, and Bernard Lamarre, who manages businesses worldwide and who is glad to be exporting to the United States. There are those who talk about small and medium-sized businesses. There are 80,000 small and medium-sized businesses that belong to the Canadian Federal of Independent Business.

In June 1988, the CFIB surveyed a number of small and medium-sized businesses—the corner confectionery, local gas station and small manufacturer—to identify their position on free trade. Because the Liberals and the socialists will say that small businesses are penalized.

In June, 80,000 questionnaires were sent out and 18,000 replies received. This is an extraordinarily large sample, considering that Gallup polls in Canada are based on a sample of 1,200 Canadians out of 27 million. We obtained 18,000 replies out of 80,000, and of these 18,000, 4.7 per cent were against free trade.

So I will tell those who say to us that small business is against free trade that they are wrong!

Mr. Speaker, I conclude, because time is flying. I would like to appeal to the intelligence—

An Hon. Member: That's impossible!

Mr. Fontaine: Right you are. That's impossible. Thank you. I would like to appeal to the Liberals' and the socialists' intelligence to tell them that this Bill must pass because our businesses need to make money. I appeal to their intelligence, but also perhaps to their credibility, in a way, because the two leaders said before the campaign, "Call an election and we'll see!" We held the election and we won. The next day, they said, "All right. You won your free trade, we'll vote for it."

But there's a little guy, namely the president of the Ontario auto workers' union, Bob White, who sent a little letter to the leader of the New Democratic Party (Mr. Broadbent) saying that the NDP leader had not fought hard enough against free trade and that they were mad at him for it. They forced the NDP leader and his team, who are the unions' lackeys, who grovel before organized labour . . . and they came back on the attack against free trade. This is costing Canadians dearly and you will have to answer to them. Besides, you are still in the Opposition, that is how you answer for it, and I hope you stay there forever.

Mr. Speaker, free trade is important and we will pass it despite the positions of the two Opposition parties. We will take the time we have to. We will spend night after night here. You can leave at 11 o'clock, but we will go on and pass free trade.

[English]

Ms. Christine Stewart (Northumberland): Mr. Speaker, before I begin to address this urgent matter of the so-called free trade agreement, a deal that will cause hardship, loss of livelihood, and a way of life to thousands of Canadians in different sectors of our economy, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the people of Northumberland for having put their faith in me to be their representative. I am honoured and proud to serve as the Member of Parliament for the riding of Northumberland. I will do all that is within my power to fulfil the mandate with which I have been charged. It brings me here today to participate in the debate on the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States.

I am very concerned about the effect that the Mulroney trade deal will have on the rural life across

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Canada, and especially on the riding of Northumberland on the shores of Lake Ontario, which I have the honour to represent. If this trade deal is approved in its present form, the effects will prove devastating for many of my constituents and thousands of others across Canada.

One of the hardest hit areas will be the agricultural sector. This Mulroney trade deal has not given sufficient consideration to the dangers posed to the Canadian farmer. I propose to discuss some of those dangers, in the hopes that Hon. Members of the House will realize the great harm that will be done to family farms and food processors in Canada if this agreement is implemented without the necessary amendments.

We in the Liberal Party are not, nor have we ever been, opposed to freer trade with the United States and other countries. However, we are opposed to the Mulroney trade deal because of the adverse effects it will have on our Canadian way of life, not only in the agricultural industry, but in energy, resources, health and social programs, and the environment. As my time is limited I will be addressing the profound ill effects this deal will have on agriculture, and I must leave those other issues to be debated by my able colleagues. However, whenever the occasion arises, I will want to speak to the other issues as well.

We all know that trade in agricultural products between Canada and the United States is quite substantial. The United States is a major market for Canadian producers of live animals, beef and pork, while Canada is an important market for American producers of fruits, vegetables, and oilseeds.

Both Canada and the United States have a long tradition of protection and support for agriculture but have done so by completely different means. Canada has relied heavily on the marketing board system, while the United States depends more on direct financial aid to producers. It should be noted that American farm income supports are among the highest in the world. The differences among government programs in both countries, the intractable problems farmers must face, and the fact that, to a large degree, agricultural problems are international, point against putting agriculture on the table. Yet, the Mulroney Government did so, buffet style.

I would like to emphasize that Canada, in my opinion, should never be dependent upon other nations to provide its essential food needs. European nations know this only too well. Here in Canada, despite some national and geographic disadvantages, we are able to feed ourselves.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We must not forfeit our agricultural independence in the false pursuit of illusory lower American prices.

Food prices will sky-rocket out of control once the American vertically integrated megacorporations put our family farmers out of business. With our farmers will go many of our rural communities and a respected way of life with its particular values and social and economic structures.

The United States has a major balance of payments deficit which the Reagan administration has been under tremendous pressure to reduce. The decline of American exports in the agricultural sector has been a serious domestic problem. Between 1980 and 1985, U.S. exports fell from $47 billion to $31 billion. By expanding opportunities for increasing food and agricultural exports to Canada, the American Government hopes to help solve both its balance of payments deficit and redress the problems of its agricultural sector.

The goals of the American Government in the bilateral trade talks are well known. First, it wishes to remove all tariffs in the food and agricultural area. The Americans are anxious to see a removal of duties on potatoes and onions, and seasonal tariffs on fresh fruits and vegetables.

A second major goal is to remove non-tariff barriers to trade, both federal and provincial. This includes protections for the wine and brewing industries, provincial procurement policies, and provincial marketing boards for agricultural products. The Americans placed a high priority on the removal of import quotas from the Canadian supply management boards, the Canadian Wheat Board, the Canadian Dairy Commission, and the Poultry and Egg Marketing Boards.

The American Government demanded an end to various federal and provincial subsidies for agriculture and processed foods. These include provincial farm subsidy programs, assistance to food processing plants, and freight subsidies under the Western Grain Transportation Act and the Feed Freight Assistance Act.

The over-all aim of the negotiations in the agricultural area was to create a level playing field, eliminating or harmonizing government programs and income support systems. However, agriculture and the food industry in Canada cannot compete on an equal footing with American counterparts because of a shorter growing season, lower levels of population density, greater distances for transportation, and higher construction and energy costs.

Unfortunately, it seems that the Americans are having their way with our agricultural sector. Under this agreement, the Mulroney Government did not secure the supply management or quota system under which milk, egg, poultry, and other agricultural commodity productions are regulated in Canada. The supply management system guarantees fairer incomes through price stabilization. Removal of these and other protective tariffs applied to grain, fruit, and vegetable crops, will threaten the survival of many family farms, not only in the riding of Northumberland but in every riding across Canada.

If the Mulroney trade deal is passed without amendment, the agricultural sector in Canada will have to compete on a very uneven playing field, given the importation of lower priced U.S. farm products.

Further, in a recent Bush-Dukakis debate, Mr. Bush adamantly declared his opposition to any form of supply management programs in agriculture.

In Canada, the stable areas in farming remain those which have orderly marketing programs, with fair prices established on a cost of production basis, and that includes such sectors as poultry, broiler chickens, eggs, and turkeys.

Fair priced regulators are seriously threatened by this trade deal and may very well be wiped out.

In Canada, there are 2,000 egg producers. In the U.S., just two companies can out-produce the combined efforts of all their Canadian counterparts.

Dairy farmers want assurances that the milk industry will be protected from U.S. competition under the Free Trade Agreement. They want to see, in black and white, an agreement that allows them to have a supply management system in place controlled by marketing boards.

Quotas constitute a significant benefit for family farmers and they cannot be allowed to disappear.

I have met with dairy farmers from my riding of Northumberland, who have expressed their fears to me about the devastating impact that the Mulroney trade deal will have on their family farms.

Mr. Mulroney, on behalf of farmers like Glen Cole and his family, and Jim Tunney—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would ask the Hon. Member to refer to Hon. Members by their riding and not by name. If you are referring to the Prime Minister, he may be referred to as "the Right Hon. the Prime Minister"; or, in the case of the Hon. Member for Kamloops, as the House Leader of the New Democratic Party, and so forth.

Ms. Stewart: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Prime Minister, on behalf of farmers like Glen Cole and his family, and Jim Tunney, who are representative of the countless other dairy farmers in Canada, I implore you to put in place the necessary safeguards in this deal so that these farmers may continue contributing to our marvellous country by maintaining their way of life.

As well, fruit growers associations have expressed their concerns about the fact that, without a doubt, a part of the soft food industry is definitely going to be hurt. Fresh B.C. peaches and cherries will become a rarity. They will be supplanted by imports. Soft fruit such as cherries, peaches, apricots, and pears are covered by a 10 per cent seasonal tariff that protects production from less expensive U.S. imports. Seasonal import tariffs have protected producers from being swamped by cheaper U.S. products during the short Canadian growing season.

Canada's shorter growing season limits our ability to grow fruit and vegetables relative to the United States. Consequently, fruit and vegetables are generally in larger supply and can be obtained at lower prices in the United States than in Canada.

In horticulture, the southern farmers have a major competitive advantage. Because of the warmer climate and longer growing season, they can often get two crops per year, and up to a 40 per cent heavier yield per crop than can farmers in Ontario, thus cutting their cost of production below that of the Canadian grower.

An acre in southwestern Ontario can grow 19 tonnes of tomatoes in one year; in Quebec, it grows only 10 tonnes.

In California, the same amount of land will produce 31 tonnes. New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island yield 11 to 13 tonnes of potatoes per year per acre; Quebec, 9 tonnes; and Manitoba, 6 to 7 tonnes.

In the State of Washington, the average yield is 26 tonnes per acre.

One does not have to be a mathematical genius to figure out that American tomatoes and potatoes are a lot cheap in the market than are ours.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The fact of the matter is that Canadians farm in the top half of the continent, the cold half. The Free Trade Agreement, left in its present form, will penalize the Canadian farmer.

A big loser in the trade deal is the horticultural industry. According to Article 702, the removal of all tariffs in agriculture and food products includes the 10 per cent seasonal tariff on fruit and vegetables.

It has been stressed that under this agreement, Article 702.1, for the next 20 years the Government may reinstate the 10 per cent seasonal tariff should prices fall below 90 per cent of the average monthly import price as calculated over the preceding three years, provided that there had been no increase in total acreage planted to the specific crop in question.

Surplus fruit and vegetables that are grown in the southern United States can be shipped to Canadian markets at far less cost than Canadian farmers can even produce them. Yet, experience has demonstrated that the lower cost of production for these products is not always passed on to the consumer. Moreover, because Canadian food processors pay higher prices for Canadian than for U.S. fruit and vegetables, by eliminating the tariffs on fruit and vegetables the free trade deal will put pressure on processors to relocate their operations in the United States, closer to the source of cheaper supplies.

The Canadian food processor associations have also voiced their concerns about the free trade deal. They have said that the "current free trade contract will negatively affect three-quarters of a million Canadians who earn their living in farm production and the food processing industry". They anticipate that over 150,000 jobs will be lost.

After surveying the member companies on the impact of the Free Trade Agreement, the vast majority fear that they cannot compete because of higher labour costs and the higher cost of Canadian farm products. They predict that under the Free Trade Agreement there will be a net loss of jobs in Canada, with many American branch plants pulling back across the border. Moreover, they indicate that future expansion by Canadian based food corporations would most likely be in the U.S.

Hence, the plants that are most vulnerable to the threat of increased American competition will be the smaller Canadian-owned plants. The larger conglomerate food companies have the best chance of survival, and the majority of these are American.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The President of Quaker Oats of Canada, Jon Grant, has also pointed out that "there will be tremendous pressure on the Canadian agricultural community to reduce prices to compete against American products".

The free trade deal pits farmers against food processors. As tariffs come down, farmers will lose control over sales to the food industry, with marketing boards inevitably losing their ability to set prices as cheaper American imports move into Canada.

At this point, with the income supports from the boards in danger, the viability of the Canadian farming community will be compromised.

Indeed, this explains why the American Farming Bureau, the largest American farm organization, strongly supports this Free Trade Agreement. When Canadian tariffs are eliminated on processed goods, then baked goods, chicken, turkey, eggs and milk-based products can enter Canada more freely from the U.S., and Canadian supply management will be effectively undermined, leaving the Canadian farmer to rely upon the mercy of market forces.

It is interesting to note that while the U.S. can limit the imports of further processed products containing sugar from Canada, we cannot limit the import of most further processed products containing grain, poultry, eggs, horticultural and dairy products from the U.S. This is particularly difficult to understand when the export of U.S. sugar and sugar-bearing products to Canada has increased 500 per cent since 1983.

The Progressive Conservatives maintain that the Canadian supply management policy is left intact in the agreement with the U.S. They fail to admit to the realities of our supply management policy, which results in moderately higher prices for basic dairy and poultry commodities in Canada than in the U.S. As a result, Canadian food processors have stated that they will move to the U.S. in order to take advantage of lower basic commodity prices should this agreement be implemented.

It is extremely important to address the fact that not only do Americans produce chickens more cheaply but they have no government imposed cleanliness standards. Consequently, U.S. chickens are more prone to disease so antibiotics are routinely administered. They also use dangerous growth hormones which can have very harmful side effects, especially affecting our children. Under this deal product standards in both countries will be made the same, and I doubt very much that U.S. standards will be brought up to the Canadian level.

This trade deal will pit Canadian and American farmers against each other. They will be forced to undercut each other's prices and thereby lower farm incomes. The level playing field, as I earlier stated, is simply not possible in agriculture because of the unequal primary conditions between the two countries.

The Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) admits that his trade deal will cause some disruption and says new programs will have to be found to retrain displaced workers. The family farm is in great danger of being part of that disruption if the trade deal is approved in its present form. I say to the Prime Minister: Canadians do not want mere reassurances. They want guarantees in writing.

Finally, I would like to address the fact that the Government's attitude has been that we do not need a plan; let the market solve all the problems. However, we need an over-all vision with strong policies if the farming community is to survive. It is obvious that the Prime Minister has been mesmerized by the U.S. free enterprise economic development theory. Well, Mr. Prime Minister, if you have not noticed, Canada has never been exclusively a nation of private enterprise. The Canadian experience has balanced public policies and private enterprise, keeping to the tradition of serving the interests of the national community and the individual. Public policies and enterprise are in part a product of Canadian nationalism. In order for Canada to survive as a nation there was a need for large public investment, hence economic activity in Canada has taken place in a comprehensive social context rather than as a pursuit for gaining individual profit.

This country was not built on the motto of life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, but on peace, order and good government. I put it to you that the Conservative Government is not living up to these responsibilities, not demonstrating good government, and is turning its back on the fundamental values which built this nation.

Mr. J. W. Bird (Fredericton): Mr. Speaker, as all Hon. Members will understand, I feel a tremendous sense of honour, privilege and responsibility in standing to address this House of Commons for the first time. While I have had the good fortune on previous occasions to speak in other legislative forums, such as the city council of Fredericton as councillor and mayor, and the Legislative Assembly of New Brunswick as a Member and Minister of Natural Resources, both experiences which I cherish with pride and satisfaction, at no other time in my life have I been seized with such profound and mixed feelings of humility, potential, and fulfilment in being a Canadian citizen as I do today.

For the reality of being here I must again express my appreciation to the citizens in Fredericton and the surrounding area of York—Sunbury for their confidence and support in the recent election. I want them to know, each one, that I come to this House on their behalf with keen awareness of the responsibilities and opportunities which exist to be of service to them and to all Canadians. To the best of my ability I shall seek so to serve, to discharge those responsibilities, and to seize those opportunities as fully as possible at all times.

It is a special pleasure for me to have participated in the re-election of Mr. Speaker to the chair. He is not here this evening and I hope the Chair will convey these sentiments to him. I want to express my congratulations to him upon the well deserved honour and respect which he has been accorded by all Hon. Members. Hopefully he may recall another occasion, in New Brunswick, when I was privileged to participate in an event which honoured him. In that case it was for his contribution to management and conservation of Atlantic salmon. I want him and this House to know that he remains held in high esteem by New Brunswickers, as by all Canadians, for his long history of service to our country in so many ways.

Had he been here I was going to say directly to him that he would know from his own visits to the rivers of New Brunswick that our province is a land of beauty and serenity, containing a special quality of life which is becoming increasingly rare throughout the world and not easily found even in many parts of Canada any more. In my view it is that quality of life in New Brunswick, in fact throughout Atlantic Canada and abundant in my own riding of Fredericton, which is our most undervalued and underrated asset. I believe it constitutes a key resource for development and realization of our unique future potential.

Let me be clear. New Brunswick's quality of life is not just comprised of such features as its beautiful landscape and superb salmon fishing. It is much more than that. Indeed, first of all, the quality of life in New Brunswick springs from its human resources, its people.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, as all Hon. Members will recognize, New Brunswick is the best concrete example in Canada of an officially bilingual society living and working in harmony. Men and women of this province clearly demonstrated that tolerance of and respect for one another can contribute towards the enrichment of the Canadian mosaic. The same qualities are reflected in our appreciation of the ethnic and cultural diversity enjoyed in New Brunswick.

With the new legislation on Canadian multiculturalism, there now exists in New Brunswick a dynamic trend recognizing the richness of the various cultures found in our province. Furthermore, numerous discussions have taken place regarding the implementation of multicultural programs as proposed in the new legislation.

[English]

Those rich human resources of New Brunswick, coupled with its abundance of natural features, are the essence of our attractive way of life which is so well exemplified within the boundaries of my own riding of Fredericton, the capital city area of our province.

I want to emphasize that in New Brunswick, indeed the entire Atlantic region, there is an important correlation between our quality of life and our economic potential; between the attraction of living in our region and the prospects for prospering offered by free trade; between the desire of so many of our young citizens to make their lives in the Maritimes; and the increased opportunities which the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement will bring to them to find productive carriers in their home area of Canada.

There is no region in Canada which has more potential to benefit from free trade than Atlantic Canada. While we have always possessed the human and natural resources to prosper, and in fact prior to Confederation the Maritimes was arguably the most prosperous area of Canada, during the subsequent economic evolution of our country, however, markets became centralized in Quebec and Ontario to the unfortunate disadvantage of Canada's extremities, particularly the Maritimes. In fact, Confederation itself helped to extinguish the flow and pattern of north-south trade on which the Maritimes had built its early prosperity.

Therefore, the Free Trade Agreement is an opportunity to rectify, or at least moderate, a major adverse side effect of Confederation, a side effect which has become an unfortunate and lasting phrase of frustration in Canada's economic language, "regional economic disparity".

At long last we have before us on the economic horizon virtually a new frontier, one which holds real promise for an eventual and lasting solution to regional economic disparity in Canada. That new frontier is to be found in the Free Trade Agreement, as will gradually be expressed in the removal of tariffs, elimination of quotas, phasing out of countervailing duties, anti-dumping laws and discriminatory regulations, and the improved process for settlement of disputes. In Atlantic Canada these will encourage and should lead to restoration of original north-south trading patterns and dramatically increased trade with the vast markets of the United States eastern seaboard.

• (1930)

Just imagine, Mr. Speaker, the opportunities to be contemplated in a market which is more than 20 times as large as the immediate domestic markets of the Maritimes themselves and which is less than 24 hours trucking distance away from any point in the Maritimes. For example, the population of Atlantic Canada is approximately 2.3 million people while the combined population of the northeastern United States, including the New York and Pennsylvania markets, amounts to 50 million people. These market population statistics are important to emphasize for the regions away from the centre of Canada, perhaps particularly for the Atlantic region.

While the U.S. market in total is 10 times larger than the Canadian domestic market, that differential is greatly magnified. In fact, it is doubled when applied to the U.S. markets which are reasonably accessible to the Atlantic region. Similar differentials exist with regard to the percentages of trade which are presently duty-free, and potentially duty-free.

While the amount of 80 per cent is frequently quoted as the proportion of all present trade between Canada and the U.S. now duty-free, and some people insist that that figure is really less than 75 per cent, it must be recognized that the percentage of duty-free trade in the Atlantic region is substantially less, perhaps no more than 60 per cent. Therefore the potential for growth by removing tariffs is proportionately much greater for the Atlantic region than is expressed by the Canadian average. In fact, these statistics of existing duty-free trade can be very misleading even on the national average. They tend to understate and underestimate the potential for increased trade which should result from the removal of existing duties over the next 10 years.

A recent special report from The Financial Post states that the amount of trade that is already tariff-free as a proportion of the trade we could have once all tariffs are gone is probably closer to 50 per cent or 60 per cent. That report suggests that the free trade deal gives us the potential for double the amount of tariff free trade than we have now—not merely 20 per cent more.

If that is the case for Canada on average then, again, just imagine, Mr. Speaker, the size of the potential for Atlantic Canada in terms of increased trade opportunities from our present base levels. Surely, I am not overstating the case to call free trade a new frontier on the economic horizon of Atlantic Canada.

Surely, also, it is not an overstatement to suggest that free trade truly offers a chance at long last to address creatively the chronic case of regional economic disparity in our country. For too long I believe we have reluctantly yet habitually accepted regional disparity in parts of Canada as a characteristic illness about which precious little could be done. To be sure, we have tried our best with special development programs to create economic growth in the Maritimes, for example, and we have met with both success and failure. However, we have not been able to do much more than moderate disparity, and up until now we have not been able to find a direction which might eventually eliminate disparity.

There are many reasons for this, but mainly we have never had adequate access to markets readily available for the products that we do manufacture, nor, more important, for the products we could manufacture from locations within Atlantic Canada. We have generally never been able really to contemplate a prospectus for economic equality because we have never been able to contemplate the reality of a market potential.

One of our most prominent and most successful New Brunswick industrialists has expressed the frustration for many Maritimers when he said recently, and I quote:

For as long as I have lived and for as long as any of us can remember, free trade with the United States has been a dream unfulfilled, an opportunity lost. It has cost Canadians dearly. It has cost us countless billions of dollars, it has cost us untold numbers of jobs, and it has cost us the chance to grow as a country—all because we have been denied access to that huge consumer market to the south. We have been cut off by unnatural trade barriers that have prevented us from even approaching our potential as a trading nation. We have been sent into a viciously competitive ring of international trade with one hand tied behind our back. And because of all this we have taken a beating.

For the first time in my own life there truly will be light at the end of the economic tunnel for Atlantic Canada. Now, for the first time since Confederation, a location for manufacture in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia could well be a market advantage and not a disadvantage as historically has been the case. The free trade deal opens the opportunities for dramatically improved access to 50 million people living in the north-east area of the United States, the largest single regional market in the world, and located only one full day of trucking from the Maritimes, a market that is larger, richer and closer. Now, with free trade, it is more readily accessible than any other domestic or foreign market ever has been to the Maritimes.

To quote again the words of that New Brunswick industrialist:

Now, the Government of Canada is about to knock down those trade barriers with a bold move that will change the economic face of Canada forever. In the process, some Canadians and some Canadian companies will be hurt in the short term. Some of our firms will face new and difficult challenges. But at least we will be unshackled—and for the first time in modern history we will have a run at markets where millions upon millions of consumers will be ready to buy our goods.

He concluded by saying that these are indeed exciting times, and we have unprecedented opportunities to make them even better. "Soon," he said, "we will see the borders opening up to trade that we have been denied for generations". While it may not be an apt analogy in a technical sense, I do instinctively believe that free trade for Atlantic Canada will eventually equate to the beneficial impact which the Auto Pact has had for Ontario.

That may sound like a great leap of faith, but free trade truly does represent finally a prospectus for success in our region of Canada. I am genuinely confident that over the next decade and beyond we shall see economic self-sufficiency emerge within the Atlantic region, and free trade will be the vehicle for such dramatic development.

[Translation]

Mr. Speaker, do not think that I am not taking any interest in my region. On the contrary, I take Atlantic Canada as an example because I want to show you that free trade could provide vast opportunities for all of Canada. If my wishes come true for New Brunswick and neighbouring provinces, just imagine what benefits the rest of the country could rake from free trade. For instance, if we succeed in stabilizing the Western economy by stimulating exchanges with the huge markets of the American Sun Belt and the Pacific States, just imagine the renewed balance the Canadian economy would gain.

[English]

It would be a sweet irony, I realize, if regional economic subsidies might eventually become reduced in

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Canada, not as expressed by the fears of free trade in a negative context but because the fruits of free trade have helped to eliminate regional disparity in Canada and consequently the need for such subsidies. That may sound like a dream, but Canada has been built on great dreams by people who had the courage and conviction to believe they could be attained. I want to say that I believe that our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) has expressed such a dream and is such a man.

To balance Canada's prosperity across this country eventually, and to bring an end to regional economic disparity ultimately, is really more than a dream. It is a vision, one which was placed before the Canadian people in the recent election. It is a vision which the Canadian people have strongly endorsed by returning the Prime Minister and this Government with a solid majority. Now, Mr. Speaker, our challenge and that of succeeding Governments in Parliament is: It will take time over more than one or two terms to fulfil that vision working together for and with Canadians.

• (1940)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Notre-Dame-de-Grâce): Mr. Speaker, as you know this is not my first intervention into this discussion in the House. I had the opportunity to make several speeches on the subject before the House was dissolved for the election.

This afternoon, when the Hon. Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) rose to answer a question, he once again reminded us and other Canadians that because the Conservatives won the election they could do just about whatever they pleased with respect to this Free Trade Agreement. His attitude was one that they won the election, never mind our positive proposals and suggestions, because they will do what they want.

Others have reminded the Government and the Minister, but I will remind them again that although his Party won the largest number of seats in this election they did not win the popular vote of Canadians. Some 52 per cent of Canadians rejected this Free Trade Agreement, while only 43 per cent supported it. I wanted to remind government Members of that because they have a tendency to forget it.

We know that the Government will ram this Bill through by using closure every day, but it would be worthwhile for it to be a little more sensitive to the concerns of the majority of Canadians. Not only did the Government not win the popular vote throughout the country, the Conservatives lost the popular vote in eight out of ten provinces. They got more than 50 per cent of the vote only in the Provinces of Quebec and Alberta. They got less than 50 per cent of the vote in Ontario, Saskatchewan, British Columbia, and all the Atlantic Provinces, while there was a tie in Manitoba.

The Government has become an expert at using closure, as it will do to ram this Bill through. While it has used closure more than any other Government since the Second World War, and will do so again to ram this Bill through much to our displeasure, I ask it to be more sensitive to the concerns of Canadians as expressed in this recent election. During the election campaign there was almost unanimous support, even among those who supported this Free Trade Agreement, to have special adjustment programs for workers and firms that will be hurt by this agreement. Yet, the Government is refusing to give us any special adjustment programs.

Not only was the electorate, including those who voted for the Government and the agreement in favour of that proposal, all 10 provinces during a federal-provincial conference last spring in the West requested special adjustment programs. There was somewhat of a dispute within the Conservative family between the Premier of Nova Scotia and the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney), a western premier and the Prime Minister, and the Premier of Quebec and the Prime Minister because he simply rejected any special adjustment programs for those to be hurt by this agreement.

Not only did all 10 provinces request special adjustment programs, the Macdonald Commission which started this whole thing, unfortunately, and asked us to make a leap of faith—

Mr. Winegard: A good Liberal.

Mr. Allmand: It was a royal commission made up of Liberals, Tories, and maybe even a New Democrat. I know the former Member of Parliament from my riding, who was a Conservative Minister under Diefenbaker, was also on that royal commission chaired by Mr. Macdonald. They recommended not to proceed with free trade negotiations unless special adjustment programs were provided. They had an entire chapter setting out special adjustment programs. They referred to the common market and other free trade zones which had these programs and suggested they should be in effect here.

However, the Government ignored that advice. It plowed ahead, negotiated this agreement, and did not provide for any special adjustment programs.

The Economic Council suggested special adjustment programs, as did the C.D. Howe Institute. Nearly everyone who examined this subject with some sincerity and objectivity recommended special adjustment programs. Yet, the Government continues to reject any suggestion put to it for special adjustment programs.

Liberal Members of the House have been recommending these programs since we started these sittings. We have seen the example of Gillette and Northern Telecom. I believe those companies have closed their doors principally because of the agreement.

Members on this side have been asking the Minister for International Trade, the Minister for Employment and Immigration (Mrs. McDougall), the Prime Minister, and others for special adjustment programs. They continue to refuse. They continue to be insensitive to the great majority of Canadians who voted against the agreement; even though those who voted for it but who wanted special adjustment programs.

Initially the Government said that special adjustment programs were unnecessary because of the Canadian Jobs Strategy which will be able to handle all the dislocation caused by the Free Trade Agreement. Already there are many examples where the Canadian Jobs Strategy cannot even retrain those who want to be retrained now. It cannot even provide training for those who now want to get into training programs.

During the election campaign there was television footage at an institution in Hamilton, where there was a long line of people attempting to get into retraining and upgrading, but could not do so because of a lack of resources. That was what was happening before the Free Trade Agreement.

The Canadian Jobs Strategy will not be effective. The Government cut employment and training programs by 32 per cent since it came to power in 1984. Before we left office in 1984 we had a budget of $2.2 billion for training and employment programs. This year the budget is $1.5 billion, a cut of 32 per cent since 1984. Yet, the Government is asking us to rely on such a program for the readjustment of workers hurt by this Free Trade Agreement.

The other answer given to us is that a blue ribbon committee has been set up under Mr. de Grandpré of Montreal. The Government tells us that this blue ribbon committee is studying the adjustment needs that will be required under the Free Trade Agreement. It will report to the Government and the House some time next summer, and then we will have some action.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

That is too late. It will not help the people who have been put out of work at Gillette or Northern Telecom or other firms that are closing their doors. It is a bit sickening to listen to members of the Government telling us that new jobs are being created here and there in the country. That does not help those who are losing their jobs. Jobs will always be created, whether or not we have free trade. We need adjustment programs to help those being put out of work specifically because of this agreement. There will be many of these workers and the Canadian Jobs Strategy will not be effective.

The de Grandpré Commission is too late. We need something now, and I ask the Government, the Prime Minister, the Minister of Employment and Immigration, and the Minister for International Trade to begin to have some sensitivity for those people who voted against this agreement and those who want special adjustment programs.

We in the Liberal Party also propose that there be an ongoing committee of the House to survey the implementation of the Free Trade Agreement, to watch on a day-to-day basis what is happening in the implementation of the agreement. It could check alleged failures and alleged benefits.

For example, such a committee could call the union and workers from Gillette, as well as the management, to find out what really took place. The same thing would apply to Northern Telecom. We could also call some firms which say they are gearing up because of free trade.

We want a special committee that will survey the implementation of this agreement, in order to make sure it lives up to the promises made by the Prime Minister and other Ministers during the election campaign. They certainly made many promises with respect to this agreement. According to them, this agreement will give us heaven on earth. We have already seen the results, and they are not too pleasing.

When we predicted that the agreement would hurt regional development, the Government denied it. We said this agreement would hurt our environmental programs because there are subsidies involved in environmental programs. The Government said that the agreement would not hurt environmental programs. When we said that it would hurt our labour standards and unemployment insurance, the Government said that it would not. When we said that it would hurt our social programs, the Government said that it would not. We want them to put in writing what they said on the hustings during the last election campaign. We know that the words of the Prime Minister are not enough.

• (1950)

During the election campaign of 1984, the Prime Minister said that social programs and pensions were a sacred trust, but within one year his Government was deindexing the old age pensions of senior citizens. I thought it was rather farcical during the election campaign when the Prime Minister had his mother with him at one of the meetings in Quebec and he said: "Would I ever do anything that would hurt my poor old mother and her pension?" He said the same thing during the election campaign of 1984. He said, with his hand on his chest, that social programs were a special trust and he would never touch social programs.

This election campaign was a replay. It was like a replay of a football game, something with which you are familiar, Mr. Speaker.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member Notre-Dame-de-Grâce has the floor.

Mr. Allmand: The Prime Minister was doing a replay of 1984, saying that he would never do anything to hurt his poor old mother. He said the same thing in 1984 and then went about deindexing old age pensions. It was only because a mass of senior citizens came to Parliament Hill and accused him of breaking his word that he finally backed down and did not deindex pensions. Of course, we in the Opposition led an attack day after day, but when the senior citizens reminded him of his promises, he backed down.

We want the promises that the Prime Minister made during this election campaign, promises that the agreement would not hurt regional development, environmental programs, labour standards, unemployment insurance, social programs, and hospitalization, written in the agreement. We want the exact words of the Prime Minister in the agreement. He said them, let him live up to those words and agree to having them put in the agreement. If he really believed in them, he should not object to that.

I remember when we debated the earlier Bill on this matter last summer. For two weeks, we said that water was touched by the agreement and we asked the Government please to put a clause in the Bill and in the agreement which would exclude water. Day after day, the Prime Minister and the Minister for International Trade said that water was not touched by the agreement and that they did not have to put anything about it in the agreement. When the hearings started, more and more expert evidence was heard to back up our point of view. Finally they did put a clause in the agreement. However, it took weeks of debate.

It was bad enough last summer when the Government put on time allocation and rammed the Bill through. However, it did not do it as quickly then as it is doing it now. The point is that to make this impact in the House of Commons, it often requires days and weeks of debate to get through to these people and to impact on the public opinion which develops outside the House.

Just as we were successful to a certain extent in getting the Government to agree to exclude water from the Bill and, through the Bill from the agreement, though we would like to see it excluded in the agreement itself, we want the Government to live up to the statements it made during the election campaign and exclude regional development, the environment, labour standards, unemployment insurance, social programs, and hospitalization. Government Members say that these things will not be hurt by the agreement. Fine, let them put that in the agreement.

As I said, the Government will ram this Bill through in any event. We will vote on second reading tonight at 1 a.m. I suppose tomorrow we will go into Committee of the Whole, another closure motion will be put on that stage and government Members will ram it through in a day or two. Then we will get to third reading, and they will ram that through. This is from the gang that gave us parliamentary reform. They are the ones who said that one of their great achievements was parliamentary reform. As a matter of fact, it was hard to keep from being sick while watching the Prime Minister on television during that great debate claim parliamentary reform as one of his great accomplishments, while they had suspended all the rules of the House last summer to ram through all the Bills they wanted to ram through. They have done so again in this particular debate.

Whenever the Government cannot put through something it wants to put through, when it cannot play the game under the ordinary rules, it simply suspends those rules. It is too bad that the Toronto Maple Leafs could not do the same thing. They might win the Stanley Cup. They could change the rules to suit their own team and their own purposes. They should follow the example of the Government.

This is going to be rammed through in any event, but if we are to have it, let us at least have some wording in the legislation that will exclude the matters to which I have referred. Let the Government announce, before we have a final vote on this Bill, that it will set up special adjustment programs.

On the night of the election, the Prime Minister said that he had won the election, he had won a majority Government, and he was now going to work on reconciliation because the election had been a very divisive one. We have been waiting for the programs that would bring about this reconciliation. The Prime Minister can start by showing us a special adjustment program for the workers and the firms that will be hurt by this agreement.

[Translation]

Hon. Pierre Blais (Minister of State (Agriculture)): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have the opportunity to take part in this debate on the historical Free Trade Agreement with the United States. I am almost tempted to tell my colleague, the Member for Notre-Dame-de-Grâce (Mr. Allmand) that the most obvious benefits we got from the parliamentary reform is the election of two Progressive conservative governments in a row, an event unheard of in the last hundred years, and which has been most beneficial to Canada. This is probably why the people of Canada has given us a second mandate. By giving us a vote of confidence on November 21, the population in general, and the farming community in particular, have undeniably shown their support for the decisions we have taken in recent years, all in the interests of Canadian farmers.

Our commitment to these people is very clear, and I am glad that it was recognized.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, how happy I was on November 21, the night of the election, to realize that the farming population of Quebec, with whom I have worked more closely in the last 15 months, understood and accepted our message. We won in all the rural constituencies of Quebec, except one, but I haven't lost hope there, Mr. Speaker! In some next election, we will get all 45 seats, and that would make me very happy.

In the last few days, the Opposition has often mentioned that the Government has not received the mandate to go ahead with the free trade deal. I thought that was a bit cranky, so I looked at some of the figures, mainly those for Quebec. Mr. Speaker, I simply examined my riding where the president—everyone knows that the leaders of Quebec's farm community were not in favour—and I did say the leaders—the leaders of Quebec's farm unions were not in favour of this free trade deal and they urged their members to follow them and not vote in favour of free trade. However, we could rely on a real army of candidates and Members who for weeks and months met with farm producers to tell them all about the economic benefits that would flow from the trade agreement. It was not easy!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I would like to pay tribute to my colleagues who toured the various provinces, particularly Quebec where I saw them meet farm producers at home and explain to them what it was all about. It stands to reason that farm producers were somewhat concerned because fears had been raised for over a year. Well, Mr. Speaker, I represent Bellechasse and was given a mandate by my constituents. My majority was 10,000 in 1984, but this time around it is in excess of 17,000 votes, which represent 65 per cent of the people. I am talking about 2,300 farms, the second riding in Quebec in terms of number of farms. The first is the riding of Beauce where the 5,000 majority in 1984 swelled to 22,000. Does the Hon. Member for Beauce (Mr. Bernier) have a clear mandate? Does the Hon. Member for Bellechasse have a clear mandate? I can mention others. The region of Saint-Hyacinthe with its 1,900 farms had a 1,200 majority in 1984 and it is now up to 9,000. Does the Hon. Member for Saint-Hyacinthe have a mandate? They will have to stop distorting the facts. I could list them all, Mr. Speaker. Those were just a few examples to show that Quebec and Canadian farm producers have just given a clear and strong mandate to our Government.

As my colleague the Minister of Agriculture said, Mr. Speaker, agriculture is a major aspect of the free trade deal, which goes to show that the federal Government is quite aware of the importance of agriculture in terms of the Canadian economy, not to mention our external trade. Canada's agriculture produces in excess of $20 billion in annual income and, this bears repeating often, it accounts for one out of seven jobs in Quebec. I do not have the statistics for all of Canada, but in Quebec, one out of every seven workers is employed in the agri-food industry. This key industry is absolutely vital to all constituencies, both urban and rural.

Quebec farmers and farmers across Canada will reap profits from the Free Trade Agreement through wider markets. If I may, Mr. Speaker, I would like to pass on a few comments that were made to me. Some people might accuse me and other members of my party of talking at length about our respective constituencies, so I will only pass on a few comments made to me by people working in the agri-food industry. At the outset, we made firm commitments to maintain marketing boards. And we have honoured those commitments. Marketing boards will be maintained to enable milk, egg and poultry producers to remain competitive and to protect their domestic markets.

I have a few examples of this, Mr. Speaker. First, there is the Quebec Federated Co-operative. As you know, Quebec farmers have banded together in producers' associations and co-operatives. On February 26, 1988, the director of the Quebec Federated Co-operative said, "Render unto Caesar what is Caesar's." The Federal Government has already taken major steps to make sure that the Free Trade Agreement enures to the benefit of the agri-food industry in Quebec. The final wording of the Agreement contains an explicit reference to Section 11 of the GATT. As requested, yogurt, ice cream and certain other dairy products have been put on the list of controlled imports. We made a commitment, Mr. Speaker, and we honoured that commitment. We kept our word.

Also Agrinove, an important dairy co-op in Quebec, just as Agropur is, and its General Manager said: "Although UPA suggests the agreement threatens our farming industry, Mr. Forcier, General Manager, stated during a press conference that free trade is good for our dairy industry. There is nothing in the agreement that threatens the major Canadian and Quebec policies and programs, including milk supply management."

These are dairy people speaking, Mr. Speaker, not politicians! These are people who are engaged in the day to day sale, production and marketing of agri-food products. I think we can trust them.

Also, Quebec's Minister of Agriculture and Quebec's Premier went on record as totally supporting the Free Trade Agreement. As often happens at the provincial level, sometimes there are dichotomies or opposition between major partners . . . and also opposition parties in Quebec, including Mr. Jacques Parizeau who is still President of the Parti québécois. I am quoting him on agriculture matters. Former Minister Jacques Parizeau "felt that the farming sector exaggerates the impact of the agreement doing away with farm tariffs. Stating he agrees with Mr. Bourassa on that matter, he pointed out that all support programs dealing with that sector remain unchanged."

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Therefore, provincial support is of real significance when both parties within one legislature are in agreement, Mr. Speaker and this indeed should make the farming industry feel secure.

I have here a whole list of people from various sectors. I felt it would be useful to quote them, so as to avoid the accusation that we politicians are reveling in our own rhetoric.

Yves Saint-Vincent, Chairman of the Quebec Joint Committee on Slaughter Breeds, expressed support, Mr. Speaker. And I am quoting a Holstein producer, Mr. Louis Desaulniers from Saint-Boniface, who said something I remembered; I will quote his words because they come quite directly from the bottom of his heart: free trade is something that motivates me! Competition makes our product better, and when we have a superior product it becomes easy to compete with our American neighbors. When you play hockey in your own backyard, you feel you are good. If you compete with the big leagues, then you learn something. It is motivating. That is what free trade is all about, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Fortin, an economics professor at the Université du Québec in Montreal, on another aspect also said: "It's crazy to say that social programs are threatened. Just look at Sweden. That country is the most pro-free trade of all industrialized nations and it is also the most advanced in terms of social programs. The two are not contradictory; they go together." Mr. Speaker, that is yet another example from the academic community.

Another sector, Mr. Speaker, is very important. In many ways, it is considered a leader of Quebec's economy, namely the Caisses populaires Desjardins. The president of the Mouvement des Caisses populaires Desjardins, which has billions in assets, said this fall that the future of Quebec's agriculture was fundamental to the economic health of the province and that the Agreement in its present form would allow it to continue to grow.

The president said that after requesting a full report on the whole agri-food sector.

Mr. Speaker, I could give some more quotes, but what I want to stress above all is attitude. Yes, the attitude that our Government wanted to instill in Quebecers and Canadians, Mr. Speaker!

I listened to the new Member for LaSalle—Énard (Mr. Martin), who probably had to read a speech prepared some thirty years ago instead of another one—perhaps he searched through some old records. I was horrified by what he said. He dared to say that our Party had no vision. That is the most awful thing! I jumped in my seat! We know that for the past year and a half Members opposite have been taking a negative approach. Not satisfied with fighting among themselves, their most original recommendation to Canadians was to tear up the trade deal. But in our case, Mr. Speaker, we threw a challenge to young people, to women, and to agricultural producers who are not people who feel sorry for themselves and mope all day long, unable to face competition. No, Sir, over the years these people have turned their industry into a prosperous growth-oriented undertaking which is not afraid to tackle any market in the world. That is what we needed, Mr. Speaker, a Party with a leader, the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) who did not fail to instill in the nation a vision of the future and pave the way towards the 20th century. He did not look in the rear-view mirror, scared of his own shadow like Members opposite who would drag us back 50 years into the past.

I think we were able to... and Canadians did understand that last November 21. They gave us a fresh mandate. They gave a fresh mandate to Canadians who know where they are going. That is what we needed, that is what Canadians needed so badly. Mr. Speaker, I am convinced that we will reach our objective and do so with the Canadian people. They are with us, Mr. Speaker. That is what we need and I am sure that we will be able to get where we are going and that Canada's farm community, like Canada generally, can look forward to the prosperous future it deserves.

• (2010)

[English]

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I wish to begin by thanking the people of Saanich—Gulf Islands for the trust that they have placed in me by electing me as their Member of Parliament. I am proud to be the representative of Saanich—Gulf Islands, a riding blessed with breath-taking beauty and a gentle climate. The riding is bracketed by the campus of the University of Victoria at one end and by the Gulf Islands at the other. In between, the riding is comprised of wonderfully distinctive neighbourhoods and rolling farmland reaching down to the ocean.

All of the people of Saanich—Gulf Islands care deeply about the character of their communities, whether they are families who have lived there for generations, or those who have moved there because of the area's beauty and gentle climate.

The trade deal that we are debating tonight threatens the character of Saanich—Gulf Islands. This deal tells the farmers of my riding that they are expendable. How can the family farms of Saanich—Gulf Islands compete against the U.S. agri-business of Washington, Oregon, and California, agri-business which is backed by multinationals such as Exxon? The farmers of my riding are up against all that capital clout that such multinationals can wield against their competition, as well as by the year round growing season of California.

The Government states that there will be some dislocation by the Free Trade Agreement. That is Tory talk which means that those farms will be out of business, that the people of Saanich—Gulf Islands will be buying their fruits, vegetables, and dairy products from California and not from farms in their own communities.

In my work in international development I have seen what happens when a country becomes dependent upon a foreign power for its food supply. It leads to increased vulnerability. That is what the Government is inviting with this trade deal.

When the farmers of Saanich—Gulf Islands go out of business, the semi-rural character of our communities will be lost. It will not be cabbages and cauliflowers which will be growing on the Saanich peninsula, it will be condominiums.

This deal is more than a trade deal. It is more than about jobs, although I have already seen the detrimental effect that this deal will have on Canadian jobs.

In Saanich we are faced with American competition for computer contracts at the University of Victoria library. With this deal we are buying into a system that many of us find abhorrent.

In the recent election the issue of the environment was second only to the trade deal in importance. The two issues are intimately connected.

This trade deal is far more than a trade deal. It is an enormous step to the right to a more market-driven economy, away from the mixed economy that Canada has historically enjoyed. We have seen what the market has done to the environment in the United States, the market where the bottom line determines how the nation proceeds, where cost effectiveness is the primary criteria for a course of action.

We have seen the same mind-set in operation in British Columbia where clear cut logging the cost effective way is the way of doing things. We can no longer afford this type of cost effectiveness. This Bill demonstrates the Government's naivety over confidence in market forces to cure all our ills.

Government Members assure us that this Bill is only a commercial arrangement. Do they consider that we are as naive as they? Do they not understand that a closer economic relationship leads to a closer political relationship; that adopting a market view of the world will lead to a fundamental shift in our values; that it will see the withering away of the independence of our foreign policy and the increased militarization of our country? I do not see this agreement in isolation from other policies introduced by the Government. It is dangerous to see this Bill in isolation. It is part of an agenda.

I want to assure the House and the people of Saanich—Gulf Islands that I will work strenuously to ameliorate the worst effects of this trade deal, to protect the farms, the environment, and the jobs in Saanich—Gulf Islands, and elsewhere in Canada, and to bring the Government the type of amendments that will make sense for all the people of Canada.

Hon. Michael Wilson (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have this opportunity to participate in what I think is a very historic debate on the free trade agreement. I view this agreement as both a culmination and a new beginning.

It is a culmination by the fact that we have been working in this country for the last 40 or 50 years on the elimination of trade barriers between Canada and the United States, our major trading partner. Starting from the original bilateral agreement in the 1930s and the formation of the GATT, through the GATT, and in other ways such as the Auto Pact, we have been developing ways in which we can trade more securely and in a more open way with the United States over the course of the past 40 years.

It is also a new beginning because it will give us an opportunity to take advantage of being a part of the largest, most prosperous, and most advanced market in the world today. I have talked to a number of people in different parts of the world at meetings of finance Ministers, and at other international meetings. The one thing that comes through clearly and positively is that people are saying that this is an opportunity of a lifetime for Canada. People see this as an opportunity for which they and other countries in the world would give their eye teeth.

I listened to the previous speaker, the Hon. Member for Saanich—Gulf Islands (Ms. Hunter), demonstrating the lack of confidence in our country, and the fear that she and others have been spreading during the course of the past election campaign.

This runs counter to the history of many countries that have been involved and are now involved in free trade agreements. I wish to remind the House that today 71 countries are part of a free trade arrangement of one sort or another. It also runs counter to our experience over the past 40 years, during which time we have seen a progressive breaking down of the trade barriers between the U.S. and Canada.

● (2020)

Had Canadians, in 1946, 1947 and 1948, the time we started moving toward multilateral reductions in tariffs, been told what in fact was going to happen in terms of the reduction of trade barriers, they would have been frightened. But we can look back now and appreciate what that policy of working toward the reduction of trade barriers has meant to the Canadian economy. We can see today what it has meant in terms of the prosperity of Canadians, a prosperity that we can, in many ways, link directly to the trade liberalization policies that have been in place since World War II.

Gerald Regan, the Minister for International Trade in the Trudeau Government, a former Liberal Premier of the Province of Nova Scotia, made the following statement in respect of free trade: "In the trading history of the world, it is hard to find any case where free trade has led to disaster or where either of the parties repudiated an arrangement because of adverse economic results flowing from such an agreement."

Mr. Crosbie: Right on.

Mr. Wilson (Etobicoke Centre): It is that type of experience that we should reflect upon as we stand before our constituents, as we stand here in the House of Commons today addressing the Free Trade Agreement.

We need to be able to look ahead to appreciate the benefits that will flow to Canada from the Free Trade Agreement. If we do that, Canadians from coast to coast will accept the Free Trade Agreement with enthusiasm.

That is precisely what we saw during the latter part of the election campaign. As people got over the fears, over the myths, over the distortions and the half truths about the Free Trade Agreement and came to understand the benefits that would flow to their communities, to their businesses, they voted in favour of it.

I listened very carefully to what the small business community has to say. Listening to what Bell Canada or the Steel Company of Canada have to say is all well and good, but I can tell you that I listen with particular care to the small business community, to those individuals who employ anywhere from 10 to 100 people. These are the people who risk their own money, their own livelihood on how the economy performs, and as such they are going to reflect very carefully on what the Free Trade Agreement will do for them or to them. If they make a mistake and support an agreement that is going to hurt their businesses, it is not only their jobs that are at stake but their bank accounts and their homes.

It is for that reason that I listen carefully to John Bulloch, the representative of the small business sector in Canada. Mr. Bulloch tells me that the small business sector supports the Free Trade Agreement by a margin of six to one. Given that Mr. Bulloch's group represents people at the grass roots level right across Canada, I consider that to be a significant statistic indeed.

A number of points have been raised during the course of this debate in relation to the Free Trade Agreement. I should like to reflect for a moment on some of the broad economic results that we expect. And when I say "we", I refer not just to the Government of Canada but to the major think tanks in this country, all of which have come to the conclusion that the Free Trade Agreement will improve our competitive position, it will increase our standard of living. We are told that the Free Trade Agreement will result in an increase in the income of the average family of four in this country in the amount of $1,800. We are also going to see an increase in manufacturing output in this country of 11 per cent.

These are not temporary blips. We are talking now about a permanent increase in the over-all standard of living of Canadians.

As we increase our standard of living, as we increase our economic strength, as we increase our competitive position, we are going to be able to support more effectively such social programs as unemployment insurance, medicare, old age pensions, and so forth. Not only will those programs not be destroyed by this Free Trade Agreement, our capability to support them will be enhanced.

I cite by way of example the increased support we already see for Canadian culture. Over the past 20, 30, 40 years we have seen a real surge in the strength of culture in Canada, a surge that has been brought about as a result of private sector as well as public sector support. In addition to taxpayer support, such organizations as the National Ballet of Canada, the National Gallery of Canada, the opera companies find great support from the private sector, from individuals and corporations, all because there is more money in the pockets of Canadians. With the increase in disposable income, Canadians, both individually and corporately, gladly lend their support to the cultural sector, and we will see more of that type of thing as a result of the benefits that will flow from the Free Trade Agreement.

Looking forward, we can see a very exciting future for Canada. It is a future that is going to bring Canada further along in terms of its strength and influence in the world, just as we have seen over the last 40 years the increased influence that Canada has experienced in such fora as the United Nations, the Commonwealth, the Francophonie, the G-7. In all of these fora we have been able to improve our position, and we have been able to do so because of our increased economic strength.

I remind Hon. Members again that this is the view of all of the major think tanks; this is the view of all of the major business organizations. That is precisely what the small business, medium sized and large businesses are saying. All can see opportunities as a result of the Free Trade Agreement that are not available today.

It is that type of thinking, that type of opportunity that will increase the economic strength of Canada, making us into a more outward-looking, more exciting, more prosperous nation.

I have no problem in standing before my constituents, as I did during the course of the election campaign, and saying to them that, based upon the studies conducted by this Government, based upon the studies done by non-governmental organizations, and looking at the real life experience of other countries, the Free Trade Agreement will be good for Canada.

Let me discuss for a moment the situation of Australia and New Zealand. In 1983, those two countries entered into a Free Trade Agreement, and the results have been very exciting. But what is of real interest to us as Canadians is the fact that this past summer the Trade Ministers of New Zealand and Australia agreed to accelerate the transition toward a free trade environment by five years. And which country was pushing the hardest? Not great big Australia, but little old New Zealand. And why? Because they have seen the opportunities that have been opened up to them. New Zealanders saw their economy being transformed in a very exciting way, such that they could compete with Australia, and they were anxious to expedite the whole process.

In May of this past year I had occasion to meet with the Minister of Finance for New Zealand. I asked him what was being discussed in 1983 in New Zealand in relation to the proposed New Zealand-Australia agreement. His reply was: "Exactly the same sorts of things as you are hearing in the debate that is going on in Canada."

The citizens of New Zealand were scared. They saw great big Australia over there just waiting to come in and roll over their economy and change things in New Zealand in a way that they would not like. What has happened in real life is that New Zealand has risen to the challenge. Its citizens have taken advantage of the opportunities offered by the Free Trade Agreement, and they now feel confident enough in their own capability to move into the Australian market in a more aggressive way and they have accelerated the transition to full liberalized trade by five years. Five years is not an insignificant time in terms of such agreements.

We can take a good deal of comfort from the New Zealand-Australia experience, as we can from other free trade arrangements around the world. Almost invariably, the smaller country of the two benefits the most from liberalized trade. That is the message we are getting when we see such countries as Portugal, Spain and Greece agreeing to join the European Economic Community.

Why should the smaller countries not feel somewhat overpowered by the Germans, the French, the English, and the Italians? It is because they have seen countries like Holland, Belgium and Luxembourg also benefit greatly from being part of a broader marketplace.

● (2030)

This is the wave of the future. This is the reason why so many people came around to our way of thinking during the election campaign. They said if there are 71 countries out there which are part of a free trade arrangement, why should Canada not be? Canada is the seventh largest country in the industrialized world. We have a strong economy. We are not one of these smaller countries which are part of a free trade arrangement. We are one of the strongest economies in the world today.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

That is why I have a hard time understanding why Members opposite cannot grasp this and understand its significance. Why can they not see the benefits that can come to our country by taking advantage of what has happened in many, many other countries of the world today? We are not pioneers here. We are not doing something other people have not done. That is why I think it is important that Canadians understand that the benefits are there if we have confidence in ourselves. I believe this is a challenge we are facing and if we prove to ourselves that we can take advantage of it and succeed, when we look back in five or ten years and understand the benefits it has brought to our country, what it will do is give us greater confidence to take on more challenges.

Canadians have risen to challenges. We have seen this over the past four years when we changed the direction of our country. Yes, we did make it a more market oriented economy. The results are there, they speak for themselves. During this period of time when we became a more market oriented country, we led the major industrialized countries in economic growth and job-creation. We should not shrink from these challenges because we know we can win when we take advantage of the opportunities that are there. This is what we will see when we look back in 5, 10 or 15 years time. We rose to the challenge and we showed ourselves that we can win.

We are going to take on greater challenges after that and the only thing that will happen to us is that we are going to become better people for it. We are going to become a stronger country. We are going to be able to do more of the things we want to do as individual Canadians. That is the excitement I gain from being a part of this tremendous surge into the future as our country takes advantage of the Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dave Dingwall (Cape Breton—East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I will begin my remarks this evening with the traditional congratulations to you, Sir, on your re-election to the Parliament of Canada, as well as to the Speaker of the House of Commons on his re-election to Parliament and his re-election as Speaker of this great chamber.

I want to take this opportunity in this my first speech of the Thirty-fourth Parliament to convey my sincerest wishes and best regards to the electors of Cape Breton—East Richmond for returning me to Parliament as their representative for the third consecutive time. I thank them most sincerely.

Mr. Crosbie: You fooled them again, did you, Dingwall?

Mr. Boudria: Wise voters.

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, I also want to thank the Hon. Member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who really made it possible for me to achieve one of the largest majorities any Liberal received in this election. I thank him personally for that.

I begin my remarks in this historic debate on free trade by recalling for those Members of Parliament on all sides of the House a view of this concept of free trade which has been shared by many Nova Scotians, indeed many other Canadians across this great country. I am not opposed in any way to the concept of free trade. In fact, I recall the words of the great former Liberal Premier of Nova Scotia, one of the longest reigning premiers in Canadian history, the late Angus L. Macdonald. In 1932-33 he commissioned a study on the tariff policies of Sir John A. Macdonald. He appointed an individual who served Canada well not only in that particular capacity but indeed when he later went on to become the Deputy Minister of National Defence, Mr. Rogers.

That commission clearly spelled out that the tariff policies of Macdonald were a hindrance to the economy of Nova Scotia, indeed the other Maritime economies. He talked about our natural resources and the difficulties we have had as a region, not only in exploring and developing our resources, but with respect to the difficulty in finding domestic as well as international markets for those resources.

A long time has passed since 1932-33. A great deal of good things have happened to Canadians because of successive Governments of different political persuasions. Today we as Canadians enjoy perhaps the best social safety net in the world. I speak about unemployment insurance, old age security and medicare. These programs affect the lives of real Canadians, whether they live on Bay Street, Main Street or in the great riding from which Mr. Speaker comes. Those programs are needed and they are appreciated by Canadians in those areas of the country.

However, when one looks at the concept of free trade, we have to be able to distinguish between the intellectual arguments and what we have in front of us. We are not dealing with a thesis prepared by some student in a graduate program. We are dealing with a legally binding contract which will affect the lives of average

Canadians in every corner of this country. It is not an abstract intellectual idea being discussed by academics in post-secondary institutions. We are dealing with a specific contract which I suggest imposes certain obligations upon Canada and certain obligations upon the U.S.

In examining that contract we have to be mindful of what the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) alluded to not only in this chamber but across the country. It was he, not I, who said on national television that when anyone enters an agreement with a sovereign nation such as the U.S., yes, it is very obvious that you must give something in order to get something back. The question Canadians have asked is: How much have we given and what have we received? Those are the issues.

In my region of the country we have overwhelmingly, 20 out of 32 ridings, rejected the government line that this is the panacea that will enhance economic opportunities in Atlantic Canada.

Mr. McDermid: Oh!

Mr. Dingwall: I know there are some Members opposite who do not share that particular view.

Mr. McDermid: You were going around saying they would lose their unemployment insurance.

Mr. Dingwall: Even the Minister of the homeless has to recognize the real facts in Atlantic Canada. In community after community, city after city, town after town, in all four provinces, we as a region said no to the Mulroney trade deal, and with justification. It was the Prime Minister who said repeatedly in this Chamber, but more importantly he stated it outside as well, that the major thrust of this particular agreement was to have secure access to the United States market of 225 million to 235 million people.

• (2040)

On April 1, 1987, he told The Wall Street Journal, and I quote: "Unless we get secure access there will be no deal". That was the raison d'être of the Prime Minister. That was the raison d'être of the Government. By anyone's calculations they have failed, and failed miserably.

Prior to entering the negotiations for the purposes of this comprehensive trade deal, the United States enjoyed the right of countervail and the provisions of anti-dumping as it affected the Canadian economy. One would have thought in view of the objective of the Government of Canada as enunciated by the First Minister that that objective of having access to the U.S. market would be achieved. But the provisions of countervail and of anti-dumping which prevailed prior to the consummation of the process of this particular agreement are still now in effect.

So much for the major economic objective of the Government of Canada as it tells corporate Canada, small business and the regions of the country. It has failed to achieve that major objective.

What is happening? We have in our midst the Bethlehem Steel Company, as an example, which has initiated some 15 claims against Algoma Steel and the Sydney Steel Corporation in Nova Scotia. But this was the law, the deal that would stop that kind of action.

Mr. Crosbie: Nobody said that.

Mr. Dingwall: Now we hear a voice from the past, a voice of a Minister, I might add, who assisted every Member of Parliament in Atlantic Canada in adding anywhere between 5,000 and 7,000 votes to their particular majorities. Again I thank him.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dingwall: In Atlantic Canada they do not believe this Minister or the Prime Minister when they talk about this comprehensive Free Trade Agreement. This is an agreement which even a former Deputy Minister of Finance and a former Deputy Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said would force us to cut regional development programs, and that we have to say to Atlantic Canada that they are on their own and to northern Ontario that they are on their own.

It is obvious that on the major objective of this agreement the Government has failed. We cite the example more recently in November of Bethlehem Steel which under the provisions of countervail issued 15 claims against two Canadian companies to wipe out income tax credits, regional development incentive programs and industrial regional development programs, programs for export market development, federal expansion and development for northern Ontario. All those programs are to be given away if the Americans have their way. With regard to secure access, we have failed.

What about social programs? This is a Government which in the dying days of the campaign said to Canadians: "Social programs are not affected by this particular deal". I guess we were supposed to ignore the provisions of Chapter 5 when it talks about national treatment in terms of the level playing field. I suppose we are supposed to ignore that there are provisions within the agreement today as it now exists to exempt certain other items. But it could not exempt the social programs.

There is one part of this particular deal, Article 1204, which exempts what the Government believes to be the most important aspect of this comprehensive trade deal.

Do you know what it exempts, Mr. Speaker? It exempts beer. Why did the Government not have the intestinal fortitude to say to our counterparts in the United States or have the foresight to write into this agreement that social programs are exempt? Why did it not do that? It exempted, of all things, beer.

A businessman has certain additional costs that are not enjoyed in the United States.

Mr. Crosbie: Nonsense.

Mr. Dingwall: They do, Mr. Speaker. Canada has a better minimum wage than does the United States. Every Canadian province has a minimum wage while nine states of the United States have no minimum wage. Even the Hon. Minister could comprehend that. Twelve other states have minimum wages of less than $2 an hour. How does one compete in Restigouche, New Brunswick, by paying $4 minimum wage when, in the United States, in some instances they pay less than $3 per hour?

Canada has a better health care system than does the United States. Ninety-two per cent of Canadians have their hospital bills paid by public funds while only 55 per cent of Americans do. Such costs are less expensive under our system. For an open-heart surgery bypass in the United States one would pay $4,000 while in Canada one would pay $1,200.

Our unemployment insurance system is better. The average unemployment benefit as a percentage of the average wage is 8 per cent in the United States and 40 per cent in Canada.

Our pension system is superior to that of the United States. A Canadian earning $20,000 receives 30 per cent more pension than an American making $20,000. Supporting these programs means high costs for business operating in Canada.

The minimum wage is $1.40 in Texas. I guess that is what the Conservatives believe when they talk about the new era, the new frontier, the new economic Canada, that we here somehow want to revert to what is being done in the United States by lowering our minimum wage to $1.40. Is that what the Hon. Member has talked about? That is precisely what Members opposite want. I suggest that is not the objective of this Party, nor is it an objective which the Canadian people would want to endorse at all.

Social programs under the provisions of Chapter 5 over a period of time will receive undue pressure from the United States from Canadian business.

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't you put on your Frankenstein mask, Dingwall, or is that a mask you have on now? You could really frighten the public.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not know what has happened but in the last five minutes it has become a little noisy. I would like to hear the Hon. Member for Cape Breton—East Richmond.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

• (2050)

Mr. Dingwall: Mr. Speaker, you can understand the difficulties of the Hon. Minister. He is the only one who preaches the benefits of the Free Trade Agreement without having read the document. When he hears an Hon. Member opposite giving him the true picture, he cannot take the heat. That is the problem with the Hon. Minister.

In essence, this document lacks many items. The Government has referred to the Macdonald Royal Commission as the so-called authority for entering into this particular comprehensive agreement. The Macdonald Royal Commission recommended to the Government that a major adjustment program be put in place before entering into that comprehensive agreement.

Let me quote from the Macdonald Royal Commission:

Commissioners are certain that an extensive adjustment assistance program will be needed as an integral part of any free trade arrangement both to assist factors of production leaving declining industries and to promote their rapid absorption into expanding sectors. Since investors, workers and managers will begin to plan their strategies for adjustment even before a final agreement is reached, it is essential that both nations accept an over-all adjustment-assistance framework well in advance of concluding a formal treaty.

This agreement is void of any major adjustment programs for Canadian workers, Canadian business and Canadian communities.

How in good conscience can Canadians and Members of Parliament stand in their place to vote in support of this particular agreement without that major provision?

Even the negotiator, Simon Reisman—

Mr. Crosbie: Let us hear it for Simon Reisman.

Mr. Dingwall: —said in 1984 to the Brookings Institution that a trade disruption insurance program would go a long way to removing fears about commercial policy instability that inhibit investment and trade.

Where is the adjustment program? There is none. This agreement has a major flaw and individuals to whom Members opposite point as authorities on a comprehensive Free Trade Agreement say there is a major omission, yet Members opposite refuse to take action. It is irresponsible behaviour on the part of the Government.

An Hon. Member: You are full of wind.

Mr. Dingwall: We are supposed to allow the Government to take our concerns to Washington and debate with the United States the limitations and definition of subsidy. When I asked the Minister today for the position paper of the Government of Canada with regard to the parameters of its position on the definition of subsidy, all we heard was a huff and blow scenario from the Minister. There was no substance or detail. There was absolutely nothing.

However, Canadians somehow are to trust the Prime Minister and the Government opposite. They are the same ones who told Canadians to pass Bill C-22 and drug prices would not rise one cent. There is conclusive evidence throughout the country that drug prices have gone up substantially. It is the same Government we are supposed to trust which said it would privatize Canada Post. Yet, it is privatizing Canada Post. It is the same Government and Prime Minister who said in 1987 that we need secure access to the American market. Yet we do not have secure access in 1988. They talk about adjustment programs one day but the agreement is devoid of any adjustment programs. It is no wonder—

An Hon. Member: What are you going to do?

Mr. Dingwall: It is no wonder that Canadians, including people from Atlantic Canada, rejected the major economic thrust of the Canadian Government with regard to free trade. I call upon the House to reject this agreement outright. It is bad for Canada and bad for the Atlantic region.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Dionne: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought it has always been a principle of the House that one had to be in the House in order to speak. I suggest that those who are making a racket from behind the corner cease and desist or go out in the lobby.

Mr. McDermid: That is the first speech he has made in 10 years.

Mr. Crosbie: That Hon. Member was outside the lobby for four years. He better watch it or he will be out another four.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I do not know what has happened. The debate has proceeded quite well in the last 20 minutes. There is still four hours to go. I can see that some have caught a second wind. I will recognize the Hon. Member for Capilano—Howe Sound.

Mrs. Mary Collins (Capilano—Howe Sound): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to participate in the debate. First I want to compliment you and the others as our Speakers of the House. You have an onerous job as we get into these late night debates. We know you will be successful.

It is also my first opportunity to thank the voters of Capilano—Howe Sound for their confidence in me and for their reaffirmation.

Tonight feels somewhat like déjà vu. It is the same old voices singing the same old songs of doom and gloom rather than the songs of joy and prosperity and the songs of Christmas we should be singing tonight. Hopefully we will sing those Christmas carols before too long.

It was only a few months ago that I rose in this Chamber to speak on second reading debate of the Bill. I recall going through that second reading debate and sitting with my colleagues during the summer listening to all the witnesses on the free trade Bill before coming back here for third reading debate.

The House will recall that there has been something in the order of 331 hours of debate on free trade, which is 64 days during which we have heard the arguments over and over again. I hope we can now get on with the job of assuring that free trade is brought to fruition so Canadians will know they have these new rules in place to ensure our future prosperity.

In addition to those weeks spent debating the free trade legislation, my colleagues and I have spent seven weeks on the campaign trail knocking on doors, speaking on the telephone and debating the issue. It was different from the 1984 campaign because people really wanted to know. Canadians wanted to know about free trade and how it would affect their futures and their lives. I found the campaign exhilarating and a tremendous opportunity to explain both the rationale and the opportunities the Government's initiatives would provide our young people as they head into the 21st century.

Let me return to why we brought forward this proposal for a free trade agreement with the United States. Being from British Columbia, I look at it from a West Coast perspective. I look back to the history of my province and my forefathers who came from the Maritimes as traders. They came to the West Coast to enter into trade. My father was a trader with the Pacific Rim. That has been our history in Canada and British Columbia. We have developed tremendous capabilities in the field of trade with our resources, and central Canada has been able to turn many of its resources into manufactured goods.

One of the problems on the West Coast has been that we got left out somewhere along the way. We have tremendous resources including oil and gas, forests, fish and coal, but because of the rules that had been in place, we never got much of an opportunity to change those resources from their raw form into a processed form by adding value, thereby adding jobs, to those resources. Just about the time when British Columbia as a society had matured and would have thought about getting into the manufacturing and processing industries, we were faced with horrendous trade barriers through tariffs.

My colleague from Vancouver Centre who so eloquently spoke on the Address in Reply to the Speech from the Throne last week talked about the fact that Cominco in Trail, British Columbia exports raw zinc which is subject to a 1 per cent tariff rather than processing it by turning it into an alloy because alloys are subject to 19 per cent tariffs. It has not made economic sense to bring that kind of processing into B.C.

Tariffs that were developed to protect the industries of central Canada work to the disadvantage of the growth of processing and manufacturing industries in B.C. I think that is why many people in B.C. view the Free Trade Agreement as being an opportunity finally to grow up.

Let me use an analogy which I find really rather appropriate as a woman and a mother. We protect our children when they are young and vulnerable and need that protection. In our history as a country, perhaps we needed that kind of protection 100 or even 50 years ago, but as our children mature and reach adolescence, we let go of those barriers. Finally, when they come to maturity, we expect them to be able to stand on their own and make their own decisions, to be able to compete in the world at large. I would like to think that as Canadian business people, we have reached that stage of maturity. We do not need artificial protection. We can compete with the best of them.

We in British Columbia have shown that we can compete. We have shown that in the lumber industry. In 1981, we were faced with a very serious economic downturn in the lumber industry. We made changes and we become a highly competitive industry. We can compete anywhere in the world.

Let me bring this even closer to home, to my own riding. I would like to share a story with Hon. Members. When I was in my riding two weeks ago, I had the opportunity to participate in the dedication of the new Whistler Express. My colleagues will have to get used to me talking about Whistler a lot in the House because it has come into my riding. It is the best place in Canada to go downhill skiing. We now have the Blackcomb Wizard and now the Whistler Express, the fastest and longest gondola in North America.

The Whistler Express has been built over the past season in half the time it has taken to build a similar gondola anywhere in the world. The company that builds the gondola cars, which hold ten people and are very comfortable, contracted out to a company in Squamish which is also in my constituency. This company built the cars there. What took people in France 150 hours to do, to make one car, took 50 hours for those in Squamish to do one-third of the time.

Mr. McDermid: But we can't compete, Mary.

Mrs. Collins: No, we can compete. We showed that our workers can compete. In fact, representatives of the parent company was so astonished by this that they thought something was wrong, that perhaps there was no quality control. They came here and investigated and found that it took so little time because of the productivity of the workers in Squamish and their commitment to getting the job done. I think that is a commitment which exists not only in Squamish but right across the country. We have the best workers in the world, workers who can compete with anyone in the world, and we do not need artificial trade barriers.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Collins: Why do we need free trade? Again, I think we have to look at the global perspective. Where is the world going? We can no longer afford trade barriers.

I had the opportunity, thanks to our very kind Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie), to be an observer at the GATT meetings in Montreal recently. Those were very, very difficult meetings. Perhaps we were not able to get everything we wanted, but as I talked to my colleagues from the American Senate and Congress, from the Japanese Diet, and from the European Economic Community, I found that there was a recognition that things had to change, slowly in some areas, perhaps, but with the increasing globalization of the economy we cannot have artificial trade barriers.

Obviously GATT is one mechanism through which we can reduce artificial trade barriers, but as we all know, it is a very slow and ponderous mechanism involving 100 countries. To try to get consensus among 100 countries is extremely difficult.

The Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement is an example of how two countries together can do away with artificial trade barriers and each country can win. I see this agreement as being a win-win situation for both countries. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Wilson) spoke a little while ago about the Australia-New Zealand trade agreement. We know what has happened with that agreement. My colleague, the former chairman of the finance committee, was in New Zealand earlier this year. New Zealand is growing and prospering and in fact is accelerating the reduction in tariffs and trade barriers between the two countries. We know that this will be an example for the future. If we are not a part of that change, we might as well go back and be like the Opposition, the Luddites who tore up the looms at the beginning of the Industrial Revolution and were afraid of change.

We are now at the brink of a transformation in our own society, a more global society, and we have to be leaders in that new kind of society. Of course this means adjustments, of course it means some will fail and some will prosper. However, those are adjustments that we have to make as a society if we are to grow ahead rather than creep behind the curtains of protectionism.

In my own riding my people are getting ready for this. That is what we should all be doing. We should be helping the industries and the entrepreneurs to get ready for the FTA. I saw an advertisement on television recently about the new common market of 1992, preparing the business people of France and Germany for that. We need to do that. There are some changes in thinking which business people will have to make to be prepared for this.

When I have spoken to some of the business people in Vancouver, I have found that they are very excited about the prospects of free trade. Not too long ago, during the election campaign, I had dinner with a gentleman who is the president of a cheese company. I thought that he might have a problem, that cheese might be a little difficult. This man makes the finest quality Italian cheeses and sells them under a variety of labels. He is so excited about the prospects of selling in the United States. As those import quotas come down, he knows that he will have a market for his cheeses. He has written to me and sent me all this information and he is gung ho about it.

Hon. Members may notice that the women in this House are extremely fashionably dressed these days. We all like to wear Canadian designer clothes. One of the best Canadian designers, Mr. Jax, is in Vancouver. We are all familiar with Mr. Jax clothing. It is high quality women's clothing. Mr. Jax has not had access to the California market because of high tariffs. He too is excited because as those tariffs come down, he knows that he has a quality product that he can sell in the United States.

The list goes on. The people in the electronic industries and the computer industries and the business people in my community will not have all those hassles at the border, pretending they are carrying golf-bags instead of business documents when they go to do business in the States. We are excited about those prospects. We just want January 1 to come so we can see the reductions in those tariffs on both sides or the border. Skis and skates being one of the first items on which tariffs come off.

It was really frustrating. Actually it was much more than that. It was dishonest when my colleagues scared the elderly people in my riding and in ridings across the country. They told the elderly that free trade was going in some way to hurt them, hurt their social security and their medicare. I have never seen such a shameful thing in my life.

We all know when you instil fear in people it is very hard to change, particularly in older people. As you get older you become more concerned. You are not perhaps as independent. You do not have as many opportunities, and you are more reliant upon security and the social security which this country provides. To perpetrate those kinds of falsehoods to the people of this country was shameful.

We know members of the Opposition have paid for it. They lost the election. Canadians finally realized the Opposition was wrong, and they were being sold a bill of goods which was a bill of dishonesties. I want to say once again to the elderly people in my constituency and in constituencies across the nation that the Free Trade Agreement does not affect pensions. It does not affect medicare or future security. Instead, it creates a new prosperity which will ensure that this Government and future Governments can afford those programs, that we can afford to improve them and have our security assured in the future.

Then we heard about water. I was always hearing about how the United States was going to drain us dry. During the election campaign in British Columbia it rained non-stop. There were days when I felt like saying "Come and take the water, we don't want it any more". But as I was out at the bus stops in the mornings with my umbrella, I told my people that the Americans were not going to take our water. I have a few companies that are selling drinking water and that is fine. But to perpetrate falsehoods and myths that the Free Trade Agreement would result in the raping of our resources, our water and energy, was totally improper, incorrect, and we all know that the opposition Parties will pay for that for years to come.

What does the Free Trade Agreement finally come down to for all of us?

Mr. Foster: It is a sell-out.

Mrs. Collins: No, it is not a sell-out. It is about opportunities and confidence. That is what is so exciting, after so many years of rejection. During the campaign, I had an elderly gentleman who had been through the 1911 election come into my office and say "It is like déjà vu again". But this time Canadians did say: "Yes, we are confident. We know we can compete. We know there are opportunities out there that we will take advantage of as a result of the Free Trade Agreement". Canadians said yes to tomorrow, yes to our own capabilities, and yes to free trade.

Ms. Ethel Blondin (Western Arctic): Mr. Speaker, I want to commence by congratulating Mr. Speaker on his re-election to this House and to thank my electorate for their support.

I will be addressing the House partly in my aboriginal language, Slavey, which is one of the Dene languages of the Northwest Territories. This is with the assistance of an interpreter, Mrs. Eleanor Bran, from the Language Bureau, Government of the Northwest Territories in Yellowknife. Before addressing the House, Mr. Speaker, I have some background information in order to put my remarks into perspective.

The Northwest Territories has a population of approximately 52,000 people. The Northwest Territories constitutes 36 per cent of the Canadian land mass, a resource rich land mass at that. Now I will go into my aboriginal language.

Native people, Dene, Métis, and Inuit total slightly over half of the population, most of whom live in small communities. Fifty per cent of the population is located in major regional centres. A small dispersed population and a relatively underdeveloped transportation system result in high shipping costs and limited access to market. It also means that we have the highest cost of living in Canada. Yellowknife, our capital city, is linked to southern Canada by roads, but the cost of living is still 50 per cent higher than in Edmonton.

At first glance we can say the Northwest Territories economy is doing well. The average growth of the territorial economy over the past five years has exceeded 20 per cent, but this figure is misleading. Seventy-five per cent of territorial income in 1986 was received by people in the seven largest communities. There are, in fact, over 50 communities in the Northwest Territories. Income and employment problems persist in small communities. Unemployment in Yellowknife has remained around 5 per cent, and the per capita income is $18,100. In Rae-Edzo, which is only 70 miles from Yellowknife, unemployment is 30 per cent and the per capita income is $4,600. Proximity to larger centres does not guarantee prosperity. In the smaller communities there is a greater need for and dependence on government transfer payments. The distribution of wealth is a problem. The Government of the Northwest Territories is to be commended for its efforts in this area.

I now go back into Slavey.

Our population is the fastest growing in Canada. There is also an increasing preference for wage employment in the communities. Job opportunities are very limited and the population is not as mobile as that in the larger centres or in southern Canada.

We are not in an area that is highly industrialized, booming with branch plants, factories, and so on. Therefore, we do not experience a massive influx of people nor do we attract foreign investment which might greatly boost the service industry of the North. Like all developing areas we export raw materials such as minerals and fur. We also import finished goods.

On the question of what the Free Trade Agreement will do for northern Canada, as I walk through the stores at home I notice that most products come from Canada or the Far East so I do not anticipate a great reduction in the cost of living as a result of lower tariffs.

Free trade may reduce the cost of imported mining machinery and oil field equipment which will reduce exploration and production costs. However, when the U.S. is getting our oil and gas at Canadian domestic prices where, may I ask, is the advantage for Canada? After all, we all know this has been the primary goal of the U.S. for a long time. The Americans have clearly achieved both goals in terms of price and guaranteed access.

My second point on this matter is that our principal export is production from mining. Having a so-called secure market for our minerals does not guarantee any benefits. Commodity prices not accessed to markets is what determines how well our mining industry does. Over all it appears that there will be little direct benefit to northerners from this deal. From my perspective this deal jumps the gun. It is a presumptuous, insensitive and uncaring deal.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Blondin: I say this because this deal was signed before negotiations were finalized. Canada and the U.S. will still have to determine what constitutes a trade distorting subsidy. Even as a political neophyte I can see that this represents a leap into the dark. Is it not foolhardy in the extreme to leap into the dark? This cavalier attitude has many Canadians, including northerners, concerned.

• (2120)

In the North we are truly at a critical political and economic crossroads. Understanding, co-operation, and a firm commitment will assist us in going the whole distance, not the domination of our economy by third party interests especially by the highly market-driven forces of the United States.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Evidence in the North clearly shows that the private sector alone cannot develop our economy. An active government role by way of federal investment in the North is needed.

In the Northwest Territories the private sector creation of 3,000 jobs over the last five years has been impressive. Most of the growth has been in the larger centres.

We are fearful in the North that much needed regional development programs are at risk. We do not have the numerical strength to influence government or to affect an election in regard to the direction in which this country is headed. We know that we are vulnerable and susceptible to the will of government.

During the campaign the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) stated that regional development programs were not at risk. His attitude was one of "trust me". Many people in the North believe that they were forced to trust the Prime Minister, our federal political representative, when he met in secret in the middle of the night with ten Premiers to finalize the Meech Lake Accord. Many of my constituents believe that the Accord makes northerners second-class citizens in this country. They also state that the provincial Premiers protected their constituents, but that the Prime Minister, our sole representative, did not do the same for us.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Blondin: The people whom I represent ask: "How can we consciously subscribe to this 'trust me' attitude when our fundamental rights as Canadians have been ignored on more than one occasion?" People in my riding do not understand why the Prime Minister voted against perfectly reasonable amendments to Meech Lake put forward by the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner), amendments which would protect the rights of northern Canadians.

I hope that the Prime Minister will not let us down a second time by voting against any Liberal amendments to the free trade deal which would protect Canada's regional development program.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Blondin: During the election the Prime Minister promised that regional development would not be affected by free trade. All I am asking him to do is to put that in writing as part of the free trade legislation.

In the North we are not equipped to compete with the American business sector and are clearly no match for its keen, sophisticated, predatory, and economic sense in business tactics. The Government of the Northwest Territories gives northern suppliers and contractors a preference to encourage the development of business and to create a level playing field for northerners.

Will this be able to continue, I ask? Will northerners still be given an edge until they are truly in a position to be competitive? With the push for provincial jurisdictions to conform to the Free Trade Agreement, will this preference policy be viewed as a non-tariff barrier?

I would like to give an example of where new regional development initiatives are required in the North. Last year 2,000 trappers, most of whom were not full-time trappers, shipped $5.6 million worth of raw furs outside the Northwest Territories. When the fur is sent out nothing more is added to the local economy.

We need to build a secondary industry around this traditional economy of hunting and trapping that will allow for the extensive training of personnel to process hides and to design, manufacture, market, and distribute products derived from local resources. This will create employment and boost the service industry. Given the time, resources, and opportunity, northern Canadians can achieve that goal and not let it fall into the hands of shrewd entrepreneurs to the south.

Northerners are also concerned about the indirect effects of the Free Trade Agreement on the environment. Environmental standards are higher in this country. Consequently, regulations are more stringent. Our clean environment is a result of an exacting environmental management regime. In the North we understand the fragility of our ecosystem. We know that we cannot build walls or shields against global pollution. However, we depend upon the strength of our Government and legislation for protection.

Our concerns come from the need to harmonize policy on both sides of the border to create the so-called level playing field. The Canadian Government will be pressured by Canadian industry to lower standards in order that it will be more competitive with American firms conducting the same business.

I ask, with jobs at stake, will Governments be able to resist lowering standards? Our environment is at risk. Need I appeal to and overstate the case for a clean environment to this slate of expert legislatures, this powerful force of Canadian protectors?

I think that the same can be said about our social programs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I would like to bring to the attention of the Hon. Member that she has another 10 minutes for her speech.

Ms. Blondin: Since the mid-1940s this country has built a social net that ensures that those who need help can get it. This is a service that is shrouded in controversy from time to time.

However, our Canadian democracy is one that stands by its mandate to care for and serve all people equally. Subjecting the existence of our social net to indirect pressures from outside forces is viewed very dimly by Canadians. A similar proposed move to deindex pensions also met with much public outcry and resistance.

At the very least, the social programs will be stretched and strained because of massive lay-offs, job losses, and dislocations. I do not for a moment believe that all those people will be retrained, relocated, or rehired. What exactly does the Government mean when it states that social programs will not be affected?

I look across the floor and I see the winners, the majority, the confident. I say to myself every day, as I look into their eyes and at their faces, surely they know what is best for the country. Do they believe, in their hearts and minds, that this is really what is best for Canada? Will this huge step taken now come back to haunt us in years to come? Will it be when we have no other recourse but to comply?

I ask, Mr. Speaker, do I see the world so differently that I cannot be convinced that this is good for all Canadians, not only for a few—the privileged, and established. Am I so beholden to my political philosophy of Liberalism that I am blinded, and that my mind is shut to another view or opinion? I say no.

I am a fair person. I am not a single focused visionary, nor am I backward. I, too, want a slice of the pie for myself and for my northern peoples. We do not want to sabotage success. Those are false accusations. Nor do we want to be unappreciative. That is also a false accusation. However, my innermost and strongest political intuition draws me back. I am not convinced.

Government Members have not been able to change my mind with a promise of great wealth and a secure future at the expense of our political independence as a nation. Nor do government Members have the jurisdiction over my mandate or integrity as an individual chosen to represent the northern peoples, many of whom fear this deal. It was the Government's duty to inform the public, to win the confidence of the public, and to leave the public as secure and confident as they appear to be.

There are many here who, like me, stem from common roots, who will never know or feel the realities of that promised wealth meant for a select few.

• (2130)

But there are those who wish to work and live out their days as true and proud Canadians, under the protection of a Government in control of their political and economic destinies.

Without being facetious or sarcastic, I say to the Hon. Members on the other side of this House that I hope they are right. Certainly I would not object to being wrong in this instance. I do hope, for the sake of Canada and its people, that they are right.

Mr. Speaker, I have given you my thoughts, from my heart, on behalf of the northern peoples.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology) and Acting Minister of State (Forestry)): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this historic debate—and I refer to it as “historic” for a number of reasons.

Most Canadians are of the belief that this debate was held some time ago. This House of Commons, after all, dealt with the implementing legislation in respect of the Free Trade Agreement some time ago and referred it to the Senate for consideration, and here we are holding that debate all over again.

It is historic because there was an election fought on the issue of free trade, and most Canadians watching the debate now are of the belief that they decided the issue on November 21 last. But again here we are spending all of this time rethrasing the whole debate.

The 1988 general election will no doubt be recorded as being historically significant. At no time in my political experience, nor indeed in the history of Canada, have Canadians expressed such emotion about their love for their country, about their love of their way of life. Never before did Canadians express such sentiment of protectionism in respect of those things we hold most dear, those things that are most distinctly Canadian. Never before did Canadians express such fear of change—and while fear of change is a natural trait, it is not one that fits the Canadian psyche. Canadians have never been afraid of change. We came from other shores to seek change, to build new lives in this great land.

The election campaign forced us to focus on our institutions, to see that they continued to function in the way that they were intended to function.

The Senate was being looked at, with Canadians asking themselves whether it played its rightful role in holding up the free trade deal.

The Canadian people had decided they wanted the deal. The House of Commons had decided that it was necessary.

We had talk about a two-party system. In fact, most Canadians would have thought—and certainly I did when I came to this place—that some arrangement would have been made by the Leader of the New Democratic Party to be absorbed by the Liberal Party. After all, half way through the election campaign we heard that he was going to absorb the Liberal Party; that there was going to be a two-party system.

What is this business all about? What is all this rethinking about? Is a two-party system no longer something that the socialists espouse?

The election was historic inasmuch as it forced us to look at ourselves in a fundamental way.

As Hon. Members know, I come from British Columbia, a region which will be more affected than any other region by the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, an arrangement which will come into effect on January 1, 1989. There is also no region of this country where the free trade issue became more polarized. There is no region more in need of diversified economy, no region more in need of a lessening of our dependence on our traditional industries—mining, fishing, and agriculture—that is British Columbia. The Provinces of British Columbia and Alberta need to lessen their dependence upon central Canada markets.

There is no province or region in this country more experienced in the results of socialist and centralist planning, the type of regime that the Opposition seems to offer, than is British Columbia.

Yet, some in B.C. sought comfort in protection; some were swayed by the fear tactics that the Opposition engaged in throughout the country. Some reached back to the good old David Barrett days. In fact, Mr. Barrett was even elected to the House of Commons.

Those were the good old days of high tariffs and discriminatory freight rates. The socialists, led by Mr.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Barrett, the former Premier of British Columbia, inflicted more damage in the 18 months that they were in power than the Liberals did in 18 years federally—and we all know what that meant: 18 years of Liberal-socialist coalitions.

It was just awful. Investment overflowed the province. No one had any confidence in the ability of British Columbia to play its rightful role in the larger scheme of things in Canada.

Those were the days when all we had was the opportunity to slash our forests and sell our resources in raw form, the only form in which the buyers would take them from us. Those were the days when there were a lot of ordinary people in British Columbia. Well, we are sick and tired of that ordinariness. We have different plans for Canada. We have different plans for the West, and different plans for British Columbia. We want to be a part of what has been experienced in Ontario in terms of the auto industry; we want to be part of the great things that are going on throughout the world. And we fully intend to play our rightful role.

There are no “good old days”. We in B.C. know that best. The lumber industry in British Columbia knows that best.

Trade with the United States is the life-blood of the forest industry, and the forest industry continues to be the largest industrial employer in Canada—not just in British Columbia, where it accounts for 45 per cent of all manufacturing output.

Canada's forest industry is the biggest contributor to Canada's balance of trade. In 1986, we exported over 50 per cent of our forest products, adding some $16 billion to Canada's trade balance. Last year, $18 billion was earned by the forest industry in foreign exchange.

The U.S. bought 75 per cent of our forest products exports. As a result of the overwhelming importance of trade in this key industry, some of the strongest support for the Free Trade Agreement comes from that particular sector and its employers. The forest sector knows first hand the devastating impact of American protectionism, or protectionism wherever it is found. It knows what protectionism costs in terms of jobs, in terms of cash flow, in terms of investment, and in terms of productivity.

As we all know, in recent years two countervail investigations were launched against Canadian softwood lumber and the shakes and shingles industry. As a result of those actions, our trade with the U.S. was adversely affected. The U.S. forestry industry brought pressures to bear, and the politicians reacted and imposed tariffs on our products.

Given the value of the trade in goods and services between Canada and the U.S., amounting to some $200 billion a year, there is a need to normalize that trade and solidify our relationships.

We in Canada have built a world-class industry around our trees, around our forests. We have built 350 cities and towns around this particular industry, with 8,000 businesses, large and small, now dependent upon our forests for their viability. Close to one million Canadians, directly and indirectly, derive their livelihoods from this important industry.

• (2140)

We did this believing, perhaps innocently, that we can always rely on this great market in the U.S. to buy our products in whatever form we wanted to ship them. Of course, there were cycles, with housing construction being up and down in both the U.S. and Canada. Of course, there were currency fluctuations which from time to time adversely affected us as we were moving along. We learned to cope with these kinds of things. However, all of a sudden a tariff was applied and our most important industry is threatened, not just in its present configuration, but in all of its future prospects.

We know our forest industry is very limited, given its present configuration, in its prospects for expansion. The fibre is all committed. Even in British Columbia there are very few areas where there is room for expansion and additional fibre available. We know we have to work hard and diligently to restock our forests and replenish those areas which have been overcut. Therefore, our best prospects for growth lie in value adding, not just to our minerals and forest products but to all of the things we have shipped in the most primitive form in the past.

That has been threatened as well. Every time we add value to our products, the higher the tariff goes. That is why it is so important for us in the regions, East and West, that we enter into this trade deal. As we all know, those of us who have been in business, if there is no room for expansion or growth, your industry becomes stagnant and dies.

All of us know, of course, this tariff had nothing to do with the stumpage fees or economic rent that was assessed by the provinces on our trees.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

In 1983, when the first round of countervailing action was launched against us, it was found clearly that our way of assessing economic rent was not in any way a subsidy to the industry. Nothing changed between 1983 and 1986, except that political pressure in the U.S. intensified. The heat was put on and the way the American system works, politicians react much more swiftly and energetically to the kinds of pressure they get from their people. That is why we have the countervailing duty and a 15 per cent tax on our softwood lumber and a 35% tax on our shakes and shingles.

We see in this free trade deal not only a reduction of tariffs, but also the establishment of new rules. There will be a mechanism to administer these rules. That is why the dispute mechanism is perhaps the most important element of this deal. The analogy has been made by many about the elephant and mouse. It is said that when the elephant takes a deep breath, we feel the pinch, sleeping so close to the elephant. When he rolls over we could be squashed. For the first time this great elephant sat down with one of its trading partners to agree to a set of rules so that every time he breathes we will have to be notified. If we do not like it, we can tell him to move over a bit just in case we are going to be pinched by his expansion.

All these analogies are interesting and worth reconsidering. There is now a judicial process under which our trade will be regulated and within which it has to be conducted. A free trade deal is the best prospect we have for bringing stability to our most important industry, to revitalize it, to add greater value to it, and to expand and diversify it.

The industry sees it this way as well. Let me just quote from a letter from the Fraser Valley Independent Shake and Shingle Producers Association sent to the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney). You will remember the NDP over there, these great defenders of all that is good and beautiful, speaking out on behalf of the industry. This association said to us: "We urge you to pass the Free Trade Agreement as soon as practical so that others, when faced with similar actions by the U.S., will have a definite course of action available to them that will lead to a more timely and more objective solution. We strongly agree with your opinion that had the Free Trade Agreement been in place in 1986, this specific Section 201 action by the U.S. against us would not have been implemented."

That is what the shake and shingle people are telling us: please pass this free trade deal, please do not listen to the NDP, they are not telling you what we think is important to our industry. They are telling us not to be swayed by the doomsayers, those who live in the last century. They tell us to get on with implementing the deal which they see as being a crucial and necessary imperative for them to plan their future. Do not worry, we have no intention of being swayed by the doomsayers.

I have followed this debate closely in the House and watched it on my monitor. To listen to some of these speakers from the Opposition you would almost think that they only heard about this free trade deal for the first time yesterday, that it is something we just dumped on them and are bulldozing through the House just a few days before Christmas.

Yet this House held over 300 hours of discussions. Sixty-one days were spent in this House over the last year and a half discussing the free trade deal with the U.S. That came after a royal commission had spent $24 million of the taxpayer's money travelling throughout the country examining the economic prospects for Canada. Its principal recommendation was that we should enter into a free trade arrangement with the U.S.

Then we had the Liberal Senate. Its committee held over 100 hours of hearings, chaired by a great Senator from British Columbia, and a Liberal, too. It came to the conclusion that the best prospect for Canada was to enter into a deal with the U.S. that would have a dispute mechanism, open the border, reduce tariffs, and create new opportunities for the regions to open North-South trade links. That is what the Senate said in its most prestigious committee about this deal.

I sense that even some people in the Opposition know what needs to be done. They know there is no status quo. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) kept saying: "We are for free trade as well. We are very anxious to see free trade, but we do not like this deal". In fact, he said he would go down to the United States and ask them to negotiate another deal with him. The Americans were holding their breath waiting for him to come down to negotiate another deal. Can you just imagine the reception he would have got down there? Yet he just does not like this particular deal. Is that not strange? What deal does he like?

We have everything we asked for. We have a dispute settlement mechanism. We have lowering and elimination of tariffs. We have time during which this deal will be implemented.

He said that the Americans would receive him with open arms. They are the best friends we have. They are nice people. They will understand that Canadians would not want this particular deal but they would want his. Then he turns around and says: "If you sign this deal, tomorrow morning the Americans will turn into monsters. They will come up and take the false teeth out of our senior citizens and run around in their wheelchairs. They will deprive us of all the things we have worked for." Obviously Canadians saw through that kind of charade. Canadians decided what was good for them and what was good for Canada.

It has been said this deal is a leap of faith. We like to think, instead, that this deal is an act of faith, an act of faith in our country, in Canadians, in the woodworkers in British Columbia and Alberta, as well in the fishermen on the East Coast, and even in the auto workers in the riding of the Leader of the NDP.

• (2150)

This deal is good for all of Canada. It is the best prospect we have for new growth and vitality. We have no intention of depriving future generations of Canadians of their opportunities to make this the greatest country in the universe and to position themselves with the leaders of the world, competitively, with enthusiasm and with pride as we move on toward a new age and a new century.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ray Funk (Prince Albert—Churchill River): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour and a privilege to stand here in this House as the representative of the people of Prince Albert—Churchill River. As I stand here I am very much conscious of the fact that the electors of Prince Albert—Churchill River have sent some very distinguished Canadians to this House. Sir Wilfrid Laurier was elected by the electors of my constituency, as was the Hon. William Lyon Mackenzie King, and the Hon. John Diefenbaker—

Mr. McDermid: Now you're talking.

Mr. Funk: —and most recently the current Hon. Member for Saskatoon—Humboldt (Mr. Hovdebo). I would just like to say in tribute to him that his honesty, his common sense approach, and his record of service to his constituents are examples to all of us. That made it much easier for me as an NDP candidate in that seat.

I would also like to extol the virtues of my constituency and the good people in it. However, since the constituency covers over half the geographic area of Saskatchewan, and since it is so diverse with 48 per cent of the electors in the City of Prince Albert, 22 per cent of the voters in the rural communities around Prince Albert, and 30 per cent in the North, you would call me out of order a long time before I would be done talking about all those groups and all those areas, Mr. Speaker.

It is politically dangerous not to mention everybody. However, I would like to say to the Members of this House that for those who see only the stereotype of Saskatchewan, the broad prairie which I love very much, there is another half to Saskatchewan which has some of the nicest lakes, trees, forests, and historic communities that can be found anywhere in the country. I would like to invite all Hon. Members and their families to come to visit.

We have heard a lot about mandates in this House during this debate. I would like to say that the voters of Prince Albert—Churchill River sent me with a mandate, too. I have a mandate from 56 per cent of the voters in my constituency to "fight free trade with Funk". That is what I intend to do. In so doing I feel that I am inheriting the legacy of one of my predecessors who I mentioned already, the late Hon. John George Diefenbaker.

It became a bit of a game in our campaign to see who could invoke John's name the most often. I think that we conclusively won that debate. I would like to show Hon. Members why. The most effective piece of literature that we had was a Xerox copy of five pages of Diefenbaker's book The Years of Achievement in which he discussed Canada-U.S. trade relations. I quote:

The policies of foreign-controlled industries are determined by the interests of their parent companies; so far as they reflected a national interest, it was not Canada's. Frequently, Canadians were excluded from participating in such enterprises either through the purchase of equity stocks or, as employees, through management positions. Occasionally a United States parent company would take over export orders which had first been explored by Canadian trade officials. Sometimes American-owned industries failed to play their appropriate part in Canadian life through contributions to cultural and charitable organizations. Furthermore, these companies, given the resources of their parent companies, frequently had advantages in exploration and development over those enjoyed by their Canadian-owned competitors. More important, excessive foreign control reduced the control a Canadian Government could exercise in attempting to stabilize our economy and further the process of balanced economic growth. Had the Conservative Party been content to remain hewers of wood and drawers of water as a supplier of raw materials to the United States, these problems might not have loomed so large.

I want to tell the Hon. Members opposite that they have turned their backs on the legacy of John Diefenbaker.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Funk: The first people to realize that were the voters in my constituency where the Conservative candidate only got 26 per cent of the vote running on this Government's policies.

Let me now turn to the reasons why a majority in every sector of that constituency rejected the trade deal, rejected this Republican version of Canada's future.

First, there are agricultural producers in my riding. I think it is quite clear by now that the Canadian Wheat Board is under threat. The farmers are not reassured by the wimpy response to Clayton Yeutter which they got from the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) who I think is also doubling as the trade commissioner for the State of Georgia. Then, there are supply management programs and all the stabilization programs, crop insurance, and so on. Certainly, they are not attacked directly.

Farmers in my constituency see this as a gradual erosion of all the things that are there to protect the family farms, a takeover of our Canadian agricultural industry by interests that are promoting corporate farming and an agri-business approach to farming. Our family farmers recognize that. They rejected it.

In the City of Prince Albert it was very clear to the people who work there that the reason the big business lobby was so interested, so excited about seeing this trade deal come through was that it meant two things: lower wages and less benefits. The people in Prince Albert had seen, too, what happened when our assets fell into the hands of foreign owners. The pulp mill in Prince Albert had been taken over just prior to the election, had in fact been given away by the Saskatchewan Government to Weyerhaeuser Corporation from the United States.

What happened in the year that followed that takeover? The small producers, the people who had made their living in the bush, and the native communities lost their place in the forest industry of Saskatchewan. People had seen that happen and they rejected it.

Then there were our social programs. Earlier this evening we heard from the Minister of deindexation of pensions, a gentleman for whom I do have some respect in that I share a common heritage with him. People were not reassured by that because look what happened.

First, we saw this Free Trade Agreement. As I was reading through it—I did read it; I read it four times—I got to page 204 under Services and there are some very innocuous looking numbers about what is affected by this deal. In order to find out what that was, one had to find standard industrial classification numbers set out in Statistics Canada's Standard Industrial Classification, Fourth Edition, put out by the Department of Supply and Services in 1980. That is not an easy job to do in Prince Albert because our library does not have those documents, so I wrote to the Government for its information. I got a nice glossy brochure on services.

Was there a word about what was in these indexes? No. What is in those indexes? Those numbers refer to hospitals, general hospitals, rehabilitation hospitals, extended care hospitals, mental hospitals, and so on. That is why the people of this constituency have no confidence in the Government's ability to protect our social programs.

Then we turn to the effect of the free trade deal on the people of the North. I want to pay tribute and compliment the Hon. Member for Western Arctic (Ms. Blondin) on her eloquent remarks.

In this regard I would like to point out that I almost jumped out of my chair and asked to be heard on a question of privilege when I heard the Deputy House Leader the other day refer to the fact that they held committee hearings and essentially nobody came.

I would like to tell the Hon. Members here that on July 7 I wrote to that committee as a private businessman, as the owner of Spruce River Research which had done a lot of work in northern Saskatchewan, wishing to appear before that committee to ask questions about things such as secondary benefits from non-renewable resources, development of integrated economy through regional development programs, development of a functional infrastructure, protection of northern ecology, the evolution of self-government and the importance of the safety net.

Did I hear back? Did I get to appear? They said that there was all kinds of time when nobody was there to speak. I did hear back. I heard back 10 days after the committee hearings ended in a letter which stated that there were so many people who wanted to appear and that they did not have a chance to hear these concerns about northern Saskatchewan.

I want to raise now a few of the points that I had planned to raise before that committee. One was with respect to the whole question of the processing of resources. We have heard a lot about how we are going to have secondary benefits and how our resources are going to be processed. In northern Saskatchewan we have attempted to do that. We have something called surface lease agreements that require local content, local hiring, and the use of local businessmen.

What do we see in this deal? We see very specifically in Article 1603 that those things would not be allowed any more. Thus people are very worried about how in fact we are going to enjoy secondary benefits if we do not have the tools to ensure that that happens.

Then there is the threat to our regional development programs. We have been told that they are not threatened. However, just last August the Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion announced the closing of the DRIE offices in La Ronge and in Prince Albert in my constituency. When I checked out why that was happening, Western Diversification Fund officials in Saskatoon suggested that they were bringing their programs into line with the free trade environment. This meant that the Department of Regional Industrial Expansion was abandoning northern Saskatchewan entirely.

Another issue is the protection of the northern ecology. We were told that water would not be affected. This summer people in the North were surprised to read that the Hon. Graham Taylor, Minister of Privatization in the Saskatchewan Government said:

I don't think it is unthinkable that we could bring water from north of La Ronge to the top end of Last Mountain Lake, then use that more than hundred mile gash to bring water southward, and then connect the flow to the Souris River system.

Some may not know the geography of Saskatchewan. Such a scheme would bring the water 16 miles from the American border to fill a reservoir about which the Minister of the Environment of the federal Government would not hold hearings because it is common knowledge there is not enough water in the river system to fill the reservoir. The people of northern Saskatchewan saw that the water would be diverted to the south, 16 miles from the American border and decisively rejected the free trade deal.

It was not only the resource producers in Prince Albert-Churchill River alone who rejected this deal. The free trade deal was rejected by a majority of Canadians living in resource based regions of the country. The Hinterland-Metropolitan dynamic is one of the bases of historic debates in this country. It concerns the interaction of those who control the finances in the cities of this country and those who produce the resources. In an attempt to analyse this dynamic in the context of the election, I measured the resource base as the land devoted to such things as mining, lumber and agriculture and compared that with the financial resources in the big cities and communities. The comparison is quite shocking.

In the last election, the area represented by Tories who were elected equals 919,509 square miles. The area represented by Liberal and New Democratic Party Members who were elected is 5,188,588 square miles, which works out to 15 per cent for the Conservatives and 85 per cent for the Liberal and New Democratic Parties who oppose the deal. I do not believe there is any better indication that the people in the industrial areas of the country have ganged up against the resource producers.

The stewards of our resources representing 85 per cent of this land said no to this sell-out. They said yes to developing our resources the Canadian way.

The phrase that will dominate the debate in the months and years to come will be "the six-month clause", which is no relation to Santa Claus, for the benefit of Members opposite. That is how we will get out of this deal.

While the Government may not have enough confidence to monitor this deal, it will know that Canadians will be watching. When Canadians see us lose control of our resources, watch our jobs disappear, see our family farms disappear and our distinct way of life vanish, they will band together in a movement like this country has never seen to see this deal disappear and this arrogant Government vanish. This Party and this Member will be front and centre, leading the movement to save the soul of this country.

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, thank you for giving me the privilege of addressing the House tonight. This is my first speech since the November 21st election, in which people in the great constituency of Abitibi sent me here for a second term.

My first words are to thank people in Abitibi for that support they gave me on November 21st. Abitibi said yes to free trade, and I would like to take this opportunity to speak directly to them of the Agreement as it concerns Abitibi, Quebec and Canada.

The Canada—US Free Trade Agreement, signed by the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) and President Reagan on January 2, 1988, is an epoch-making achievement, the culmination of the efforts made during this century by Canadians and Americans to establish a better framework for managing their economic and trade relations.

The agreement provides us with a historic opportunity to open up a new and more prosperous avenue to the most important and prosperous trade relationship in the world, involving as it does $200 billion a year. The positive aspects of the history of freer trade and the enormous volume of economic analyses have convinced Canada of the benefits of free trade, namely increased economic growth, a higher level of income and higher employment levels.

On November 21st, Canadians gave a second mandate to the Progressive Conservative Party, thereby supporting the Canada—US Trade Agreement.

The agreement provides for the elimination over ten years of all tariffs and other trade restrictions, along with a strengthening of the rules governing trade management.

What does free trade entail for the constituency of Abitibi? Percentage wise, we know that Government, education, social services, and health services workforce is 22.79 per cent; retail sales for Abitibi are 12.33 per cent; manufacturing industries are 11.55 per cent; mining is 10.66 per cent; transportation is 5.30 per cent; construction is 4.73 per cent; forestry, 3.96 per cent, and finally wholesale sales are 3.29 per cent.

Concerning Abitibi, Mr. Speaker, for trade in non-metallic minerals such as cement, sheetglass, claybrick and fiberglass, tariffs never were a significant barrier. That industry competes with American manufacturers and should benefit from the Free Trade Agreement.

In terms of our agri-food products, a more secure access to a wider market, no tariffs on wrapping materials, food ingredients and machinery will help the industry, and access to the American market will inevitably make us benefit from economies of scale and opportunities to enhance specialization.

With respect to first grade meat, we can certainly look forward to higher exports. In other words, the dairy and poultry industries will still be protected through controls over imports and will not be directly affected.

As regards my own riding where pulp and paper is a leading sector, our companies will gain easier and more secure access to the American market and this will open up new development opportunities for economies of scale in manufacturing and more specialized products.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Canadian firms will be in a better position to produce enhanced-value pulp before exporting it and more promising growth prospects. The transition period will give producers time to adjust to new competitors, and the dispute settlement mechanism will make it easier to solve any trade arguments that might arise.

As far as Abitibi is concerned, we will be able to talk about primary pulp and paper products. Now duty free, the pulp industry will have a more secure access to the American market under a more stable investment climate and with lower investment and production costs.

The newsprint sector is now duty free and will also enjoy lower production and investment costs, which is another way of saying it will find it easier to deal on the American market, another plus factor.

Producers of specialty papers made from mechanical wood pulp (uncoated) are already internationally competitive and will find new opportunities on the American market. Competition on Canadian and U.S. markets for paper products such as facial tissues and bleached kraft pulp will increase.

The same goes for wood products like structural lumber. Access to U.S. markets is guaranteed by a dispute settlement mechanism and strict standards for the implementation of safeguard measures under the Free Trade Agreement. The elimination of tariffs will enable Canadian producers to become more competitive by lowering investment and production costs.

Exports of wood products such as particleboard, waferboard and veneer panel will increase when tariffs are eliminated. Competition will be stiff in regard to plywood.

Processed wood products: Increased competition in Canada has resulted in the elimination of high Canadian tariff barriers. Products affected include kitchen cupboards, prefabricated houses, windows, doors and wood crates. Some streamlining will be required. The elimination of equally high U.S. tariffs will provide new opportunities for the more efficient producers.

Mr. Speaker, I would have more to say on this subject and on education, health and social services. Government services are not covered by the Free Trade Agreement. All governments are free to set up services in sectors of their choice. The economic growth generated by the Free Trade Agreement will provide a solid financial base and will enable the government to maintain and improve its services.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

In the mining sector, for example, which is important to the Abitibi region, the investment climate and the mining industry's ability to compete will improve thanks to the more secure and predictable access to the American market which the Free Trade Agreement provides.

The metals sector will benefit from a more secure access to the American market and from lower investment and production costs thanks to the elimination of tariffs on certain manufactured products.

The minerals sector will get a wider and more secure access to the American market. Investment and production costs will decrease thanks to the elimination of tariffs on certain manufactured products.

Reduced formalities at the border for temporary visits will help Canadian companies specializing in geological and engineering services. This means that new opportunities will be created for Canadian mineral exploration and production companies. In this connection, one often thinks of a big region like ours, the Abitibi, which is one of the largest ridings in Canada and the largest in the ten provinces.

Transportation is mentioned. The Free Trade Agreement does not explicitly cover transport services. Demand for these services is expected to increase as a result of increased economic activity in Canada and greater circulation of goods between Canada and the United States.

Employment is expected to increase in the manufacture and maintenance of vehicles, locomotives and railway cars and in loading operations. Carriers are expected to incur lower equipment costs, thanks to the elimination of tariffs on transportation equipment.

Increased business travel means more demand for bus services, air services and passenger trains.

Construction: We know that many manufacturing companies export a great deal of lumber. Increased economic activity will generate new opportunities for home building and renovation. Eliminating tariffs in itself will result in lower production costs and the clauses of the Agreement affecting services will yield new openings for construction and for building trades in the American market.

In conclusion, we shall speak in the same vein about forestry. The elimination of tariffs and the dispute-settlement sections of the Agreement will give forest products more secure and wider access to the American market. This new access will increase American demand. As a result, there will be more job creation, more new investments and more profits in the forest industry. Increased forestry activity will also encourage technological progress and thereby improved productivity. Forestation and forest management will continue under the Agreement.

So, Mr. Speaker, during the election campaign, the Socialist candidate in Abitibi stated that under this Agreement there was no manpower adjustment assistance. We have a surprise for this Socialist candidate! We had developed such a program a long time before the election, which means that under the Free Trade Agreement, the Canadian Government is responsible for ensuring that Canadian workers can fully avail themselves of the new employment opportunities, which is what it does at present.

It is estimated that 5.2 million Canadian men and women change jobs every year. The Canadian Jobs Strategy, with $1.7 billion in the 1988-89 Estimates, exists to help these workers change jobs. Last year, of the more than 400,000 Canadian men and women who took part in Canadian Jobs Strategy programs, 80 per cent were able to secure employment or join in the labour force.

Under the Free Trade Agreement, the five Canadian Jobs Strategy programs which are relevant deal with employment development, job entry, skills investment, manpower shortage, and community futures programs. As far as the Community Futures programs are concerned, we had provided for the cost a long time before the Free Trade Agreement.

I was able to obtain six Communities Futures programs for the Abitibi region which will benefit Senneterre, Barraute, Lebel-sur-Quévillon, Joutel, Matagami, Malartic, Val d'Or, Amos and surrounding areas, Chapais, Chibougameau and Villebois, Beaucanton and Val-Paradis. In Abitibi, we are ready for the Free Trade Agreement.

In March 1988, a long time before the election campaign, Mr. Landry came to discuss free trade. That former PQ Minister praised the virtues of free trade. His remarks were very well received by the business people in Rouyn-Noranda and Senneterre. Mr. Bernard Landry had come to deal with an issue he knows very well and which is close to his heart. He felt that Canada has at least two good reasons to seek free trade, including the free circulation of goods between Canada and the United States. For that matter, with a domestic market of 25 million people, it is in a weak position when faced with international competition.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Canada is about the only country of the world which does not enjoy a secure access to a market of over 100 million consumers.

Also, Mr. Landry mentioned in his speeches in Senneterre and Rouyn-Noranda the rise of American protectionism which threatens the economy of Canada and Abitibi. It is jeopardizing trade as a whole between Canada and its greatest economic partner.

In March, long before the election campaign, Bernard Landry also rejected offhandedly the apprehensions of those who feared for the survival of social programs.

We heard Bernard Landry speak with commentator Pierre Pascau in a program that was rebroadcast during the election campaign, that so many listened to back home, all over Quebec and that gave us such tremendous help.

Let us not forget also the contribution and support of the Prime Minister of the province of Quebec, Robert Bourassa, who gave us a hand in such a masterly way.

I would like to conclude, Mr. Speaker, by noting that free trade will not put our small and medium businesses at risk. There is no reason to believe that the small and medium businesses of Quebec will all of a sudden be eaten up by big American corporations once free trade will be in place with the United States, claimed Mr. Tom Peters, one of the most famous management gurus. He said in an article, and I quote:

But for every business, no matter where on the planet, the basic question is not whether it is changing but whether it is changing fast enough, in an environment that has become totally unpredictable.

Mr. Speaker, during the last federal election campaign in Abitibi, the Liberal candidate told the people that Quebecers were going to be squashed by the American elephant. Today, Mr. Speaker, the future belongs not to the elephants but to the gazelles!

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to express my support for the Free Trade Agreement.

[English]

Mr. Mac Harb (Ottawa Centre): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to address my new colleagues in the House tonight. I would like to take a moment to express my gratitude to the people of Ottawa Centre for the support and encouragement that I received throughout the recent election campaign. I want to thank them for believing in the Canada that I believe in, a Canada that is strong and free, a Canada that respects the individual and provides opportunity.

• (2220)

On November 21, the voters in Ottawa Centre put their faith and trust in me. I am committed to honouring that trust by representing all the people of my riding. It is because of this commitment that I am standing before you tonight.

When I made the decision to seek election as the Member for Ottawa Centre, I did so fully aware that as a federal representative I would be dealing daily with matters of a national and international nature. But, I must admit, I never dreamed that my first speech in the House of Commons would be in defence of our economic, cultural and social identity. I am, of course, referring to the issue before us tonight, the Government's proposed free trade legislation, legislation which, in my opinion and in the opinion of more than 50 per cent of the Canadian people, threatens our very nationhood. Never has there been an issue which has so dominated an election campaign or the lunch hour or dinner table discussions of a nation. Never has there been an issue which has so divided Canadians.

We are well aware that no nation will ever be completely self-sufficient. Therefore, it follows that no nation can survive without some degree of international trade. The basic needs and wants of our society are better served through the exchange of goods and services across the borders. For as long as people have been exchanging goods there have been others discussing the best ways and means to achieve it. The 19th century economist David Ricardo advanced the theory of comparative advantage to explain the economic basis for world trade. His theory hinges on the relative advantage any one country has over another in the production of specific commodities.

For example, the United States can produce automobiles more cheaply than Brazil. Brazil, on the other hand, can produce coffee more cheaply than the United States. In this instance, it will benefit the United States and Brazil to trade with each other.

Why does Canada trade with the United States? Why does the United States trade with Canada? Obviously, it is because each country has something the other country wants. Unfortunately for Canada the United States wants our raw materials. When our final trade barriers go down, American branch plants located within our borders will be tempted to pack up and go home.

Mr. McDermid: Why?

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Harb: Canadians firms will also migrate to the other side of our southern border. They will have to. The advantage that the United States has over Canada compels companies to do just that.

Mr. McDermid: Why?

Mr. Harb: Lower labour costs, longer growing seasons and a market 10 times the size of ours are advantages that any firm anxious about its bottom line cannot ignore.

Mr. McDermid: Why haven't they done it before?

Mr. Harb: These obvious results of the legislation concern me as they concern millions of Canadians. Issues such as this trade deal force us to take long hard looks at what it means to be Canadian. We are proud of our country, and we should be. We are proud of the compassionate quality of our social and regional programs. We are proud of having a political system which allows our government to be a catalyst, stepping in to encourage and support those individuals who need help most. We are a nation with a heart.

Liberal governments have played a major role creating and maintaining a system which protects the rights and interests of all Canadians. I am worried about the fact that we are giving the Americans national treatment in our goods, our services and our investments. No other Government has ever negotiated free trade in services. We know why, Mr. Speaker. Because it will have a devastating effect on those Canadians in the service industry. This is a vulnerable group which includes a high proportion of women and new Canadians. Yes, we are worried.

We must recognize that the Government's majority means that this deal will be approved despite our opposition. But that does not mean the work is over. The Government faces an incredible challenge, a challenge that it must meet if it is truly representative and responsible to the people of this country. It is the challenge of this Government and future Governments to ensure full and secure access to the American market, a goal that our friends on the other side of the House went into negotiations to obtain and emerged without. This Government must ensure the protection of our social and regional development programs.

It is the challenge of this Government to provide our industries with the tools necessary to adjust to the new economic realities created by the Free Trade Agreement. This Government and future Governments must ensure that our birthright, and the birthright of our children and our children's children, the energy and natural resources which make our country great, are not given away at the cost of our future.

Our day-to-day lives once this deal is implemented will be changed. I am concerned that we will not be prepared for this change. Our farmers, our fishing industry, the millions of Canadians employed in the service sector and the textile industry—the hit list goes on and on. To compete in a free trade environment is a difficult task for a country one-tenth the population and the economic base of its partner. It is especially difficult for Canada because of the fundamental flaws contained within this particular deal. To be competitive, it is vital that we begin with a well trained and productive workforce. Production is a function of efficiency. Efficiency is a function of knowledge and knowledge, logically, is a function of education.

[Translation]

As Canadians, we are intelligent, creative and dynamic. The list of Canadian contributors to research and development is very long.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, we have heard a lot about the exodus to the South of our best experts in technology. We have to stop that brain drain which threatens the excellence we have maintained as our objective at the university level as well as in our research and technology institutes. We also have to create an environment that encourages innovation and creativity. That's what we want for our country.

[English]

To this end the Government must set up a national strategy on educational retraining. As a Canadian, Mr. Speaker, I feel it is a tragedy that in an advanced and industrial society as ours there are over five million people who are functionally illiterate. That has to change, and it is going to change. Our future as a nation depends on it.

Canadians have worked hard to achieve the economic and political standing we now enjoy in the international arena. The Government owes it to Canadians to ensure that this standing is not weakened as a result of the trade deal. The Government must not contribute to the polarization of the western world economy.

• (2230)

There is a great deal of work ahead. I want the Government to face up to its responsibilities now and deal with the problems that this trade deal will create. There is too much at stake to do otherwise. This is a challenge facing the Government. Because of those concerns, and many others, I cannot support this deal.

Hon. Elmer M. MacKay (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, since we may be spending Christmas Eve in this Chamber, in the spirit of the season I would like to extend best wishes to all of our colleagues here today, old and new. At the same time, Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate you on your appointment, and also the Hon. Member for Vancouver South (Mr. Fraser) upon his re-election to be the Speaker. All of the compliments which he has received he has richly deserved. I am sure all Members will agree that he will do his usual exemplary job in this Thirty-fourth Session of Parliament.

I would like to congratulate all new members, including my colleague, the Hon. Member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Harb) who has just spoken so eloquently. It is a great thing to have facility in both our official languages. J'aimerais pouvoir parler français. Malheureusement, c'est impossible.

Unfortunately, I cannot speak in French. However, I am struck by the beauty of the French language, particularly with respect to certain phrases, such as déjà vu, plus ça change, and plus c'est la même chose.

By coincidence, the other day, when I was pondering this important measure I thought it would be interesting to put it in perspective. Therefore, I looked up some of the speeches from bygone Parliaments, including the speech of a great Canadian Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. Would you believe, colleagues, on March 7, 1911, Sir Wilfrid Laurier was talking about a form of free trade in the Parliament of Canada. Would you believe that he was talking about shingles and saying, as the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) said today in this Chamber, if we had duty-free status on shingles we would have no problems. Talk about déjà vu, Mr. Speaker.

Those of us who sat in this Chamber during the Thirty-third Parliament would agree that this measure has been debated. For the newer members, I can understand their alacrity and eagerness to get on with this and debate it. To quote the late Ogden Nash, one thing that Canadian politics might be very much the better for would be a more restricted use of simile and metaphor. We have heard a tremendous of debate on this measure. With the indulgence of the House, perhaps it would be useful to put this in perspective.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I have spoken about a great Canadian Prime Minister, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. On Page 4751 of Hansard for March 7, 1911, he stated:

Our object today is to open the door . . . of a nation of 90,000,000 which has been closed to us for the last 50 years . . .

Think of that, Mr. Speaker. This was a Canadian Prime Minister who, in those days, was saying that the 20th century would belong to Canada, and he was seeking new ways to broaden our economic prowess and open new vistas for us. In those days he talked about a nation of 90 million. Today, as we know, our neighbours to the south are almost three times that in population, and I dare say that the opportunities are three times as great.

We know that in 1854 there was a form of reciprocity between our two countries which did not survive the hostilities of the conflict between Britain and the United States, and later on the Civil War complicated things even further.

Various efforts were made in the 1870s, 1880s, and 1890s to proceed to return to the free trade ideal. However, these floundered because neither side was really ready until, as I mentioned, Sir Wilfrid Laurier made the attempt in 1911.

In the following two decades Canada and the United States learned to their regret what could happen without free trade. Passion and protectionism ruled supreme and the two nations built ever higher tariff barriers between them.

The spiral of ever-increasing protectionism was finally broken in 1935 when the two countries negotiated a modest but historic Most Favoured Nation Agreement. This accord marked the beginning of a bipartisan effort in Canada to expand trading opportunities for Canadian entrepreneurs. It was started by the Conservative Government of the late R. B. Bennett. It was concluded by the Liberals under Mackenzie King. Three years later the agreement was enlarged and improved, and it confirmed the commitment of both Governments to more Liberal trading conditions, a commitment that was pursued for the next 50 years.

As early as 1947, as some of us who are a bit long in the tooth will recall, a comprehensive free trade agreement was being negotiated between our two countries, but before the pact could be ratified, Prime Minister Mackenzie King concluded that the country was not ready for such an agreement and satisfied himself that GATT would serve for the time being.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

About that time, if I am not mistaken, when these GATT negotiations were in their embryonic stage, there was a young gentleman present by the name of Simon Reisman. He was in a junior position at that time, although it is difficult to imagine Simon Reisman being in a junior position.

In 1965 the two Governments concluded the Auto Pact, which is an important form of sectoral free trade. Again, we had Mr. Reisman, this time in a more prominent role.

Early in this decade the increasingly protectionist atmosphere in the United States threatened Canadian markets again. We know that the Government of Pierre Elliott Trudeau sought ways to attempt to improve this condition. That Government concluded that something more than reliance on GATT was required. We have seen why, because recently in Montreal the GATT process which was espoused by the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) proved to be less than adequate. Nonetheless, it was an initiative that was tried at that time.

To return to the evolution of economic progress and the manner in which most economic progress has been marked by the dismantlement or rearrangement of tariff barriers, those of us who remember the 1950s, including the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition no doubt remembers Paul Henry SpOak and his espousal of Benelux when he talked about a United States of Europe. This evolved into the Common Market which is perhaps one of the greatest economic engines of growth that the world has yet seen.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver—Quadra): You were making a good speech until you got diverted.

Mr. MacKay: Nevertheless, diverted or not, I say to my right hon. friend that he has made some commitments that were very much on the record. Perhaps since he is in the Chamber I should remind him of them. On August 30, 1988, as reported in Hansard, the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition stated:

I am asking them (for) . . . an opportunity to decide. If the Prime Minister wins he can still meet the deadline imposed upon him by the United States of January 1, 1989. I think that is a pretty straightforward proposition. Call an election now. If Canadians vote for the Prime Minister, then he has his trade deal. If Canadians vote for me, there is no trade deal. All I am saying is: Let the people decide.

Well, the people decided. It is not two out of three, three out of five, or four out of seven. The people did decide.

The Leader of the New Democrats said, after the election—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Why don't you make your own speech? Have you any material of your own? How about a little material of your own?

Mr. MacKay: Some things never change with the Liberals. Before the right hon. gentleman came in, I was talking about a Prime Minister whom I think the Leader of the Opposition would like to emulate, Sir Wilfrid Laurier. In the 1911 Farmers Almanac, which is another great record, there is a poem that I love to quote. Talk about déjà vu, Mr. Speaker. It is as appropriate today as it was then. It goes like this:

"Look upon, the Grits the grimy, grizzled Grits.
What a woebegone expression across their faces flits.

For they are thinking, thinking deeply, how to run the country neatly,
And they wonder how in thunder that it's going to be done.

But the voters, those who matter, paid no heed to their idle chatter,
Those grimy, grungy, grizzly, grumpy, old Grits."

I look upon them tonight, Mr. Speaker, and they are friends of mine and friends of ours, but I believe that really they should take cognizance of the fact that the debate is over. As the Leader of the Opposition would say, and I know he is a great fan of Rudyard Kipling:

"The tumult and the shouting dies, the captains and the kings depart, but still thy legacy remains, a humble and a contrite heart."

I do not see any humbleness or contriteness on the other side of the House, Mr. Speaker. I suppose that is too much to ask of politicians—even those on this side of the House. But I should think that the Leader of the Opposition would be willing to concede that the debate has been a good one; that it has been extensive—

• (2240)

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Until now.

Mr. MacKay:—and it is now time to get on with the job.

A lot of Canadians over the years thought about free trade, people as diverse as Gordon Milling, who was a research economist with the United Steelworkers of America. In the historic town of New Glasgow, Nova Scotia, some 20 years ago, Mr. Milling espoused the idea of free trade, saying that it might be a very good thing; that a reduction in tariff barriers—and he was talking about DOSCO, a company then operating in

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Nova Scotia—might lend to greater access to U.S. markets for Canadian steel products.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Did he vote for you, Elmer?

Mr. MacKay: He probably did, and certainly others did. However, I did not have a candidate of the Rhinoceros Party running against me. Given the way the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition has been skating around since the election, I think it is safe to say that he learned something from that skate-boarding champion.

Coming back to those who have earnestly espoused free trade, I think of the great American President John Kennedy, who in addressing this Chamber—and I believe the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition may have been here when President Kennedy addressed the Canadian Parliament—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): I was here.

Mr. MacKay: President Kennedy had some very interesting things to say, some of which bear repeating.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): He said that good fences make good neighbours. That is what he said.

Mr. MacKay: He also said that we share common values from the past. He spoke of our common defence line for the present and our common aspirations for the future; and then he said—and I am sure the Hon. Leader of the Opposition will remember this: “Geography made us neighbours; history made us friends; economics made us partners; and necessity has made us allies.”

I think those words bear repeating today.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Can you give us your own stuff tonight, Elmer; tell us what you think.

Mr. MacKay: Since the Leader of the Opposition has been good enough to ask, let me respond. I think that the Free Trade Agreement that we have concluded with the U.S. is an excellent one.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: I think that it is an agreement that is good for the country. I think it will make Canada a more self-reliant, a more prosperous, a more outward-reaching nation.

If we might make comparisons again—and I apologize for going back into history this evening. However, I do think that there are lessons to be learned from making comparisons.

Let's look for a moment at Argentina, a country that in many ways resembles Canada. It is a country that, in the 1930s, had about the same GNP as Canada then had. It is a country that, sadly, has been betrayed in many ways by its politicians.

Argentina, like Canada, is a country that does not have access to a large trading bloc. It is a country that has the same kinds of resources that we do: Wheat, oil, cattle. Argentina is a country that is looking for a future. Canada, because of its proximity to Europe, our relationship with the U.S., our history, has far outstripped Argentina. But, we still need access to global markets.

I ask the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): This is your own stuff, Elmer, so I am prepared to listen.

Mr. MacKay: I know that the Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not like to depend upon the “stuff” of other people, but perhaps, in the light of the results of the last election, he should. It may be that had he had more than one issue during the last election campaign, his Party would have won more seats. But then again, perhaps not.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): We didn't do too badly in Nova Scotia.

Mr. MacKay: The people of Nova Scotia are, of course, very tolerant. It is a province that reacts—

An Hon. Member: Slowly.

Mr. MacKay: —that reacts more positively, and perhaps more slowly. Had the polling day been one week later, there may be even more Members sitting on this side of the House.

An Hon. Member: Or a lot more Liberal seats.

An Hon. Member: Don't you bet on it.

Mr. MacKay: The people of Nova Scotia, partly because of economic policies espoused by centralist Governments, have become dependent upon payments of various types, on subsidies, with the result that they were more receptive than they perhaps should have been to some of the allegations that were made during the election campaign.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Generally, that type of allegation is made behind closed doors. But in this last election, some of the candidates actually had the temerity to say to people that if they voted in the Progressive Conservatives, they would lose their pensions; that they would not be able to stay in their nursing homes. All we had was the gloom and doom.

Fortunately, that did not work over-all, and I am sure that the Liberal Party, in the years ahead, will come to regret those intemperate statements, particularly when the manifest falsehoods become apparent. I am sure that those Liberal candidates who were elected by Nova Scotians in this last election will have a rather heavy burden to discharge when the electorate calls them to account for some of the statements made.

It seems to me that the more one looks at the trade deal, the more one realizes that it is an idea whose time has come—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Where did you get that phrase?

Mr. MacKay: I can say that I did not get it from the Leader of the Opposition. It is far too good and too resounding to have as its source the Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): It is a real grabber.

Mr. MacKay: The Free Trade Agreement will be in place for many, many years. The question I have for my friends opposite is: Why are you looking at this agreement as though it were some sort of a doomsday arrangement?

The Leader of the Opposition knows very well, as does the Leader of the New Democratic Party, that implementation of the Free Trade Agreement will extend over the next decade. It will be a gradual implementation. And if there is anything that is unsatisfactory about it, assuming it cannot be modified, assuming we are looking at a doomsday scenario in fact, the arrangement can be terminated. The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows that—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): “Just another commercial contract.”

Mr. MacKay: Well, the Leader of the Opposition says that it is “just another commercial contract”—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): That is what your Leader said.

Mr. MacKay: It is a sovereign treaty, but treaties can be changed.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Isn't that beautiful.

Mr. MacKay: The Auto Pact has operated to the benefit of Canada, but that notwithstanding, the Liberal Government that implemented the Auto Pact took a lot of abuse from the Opposition, and particularly from the New Democrats—

An Hon. Member: And the Tories.

Mr. MacKay: It was said by the Opposition that the Auto Pact would mean the end of the auto industry in Canada, that part suppliers were going to be ruined. The Government of the Day even set aside support payments.

Those support payments were never needed. The Auto Pact has worked very well. But, as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition knows, the Auto Pact is not sacrosanct; it can be cancelled—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): And it is not a free trade agreement either.

Mr. MacKay: Well, if it is not a free trade agreement, it is a sectoral agreement—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): You've got it.

Mr. MacKay: —and we all know that sectoral agreements were tried and did not work.

We all know how a former Liberal Minister of Finance, the Hon. Donald Macdonald, feels about free trade. We know how many of the leading lights in the Liberal Party feel about it—and that is the puzzlement.

Laurence Decore, one of the leading Liberals in the West, supports free trade; eight of the ten provincial Premiers support free trade; Senator Van Roggen supports free trade.

The Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition does not support it. He feels it is wrong. Perhaps he is right. But I tell you, most Canadians do not think he is right—and this is why I cannot understand why we are here, with Christmas approaching, debating the issue.

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let's not forget that 57 per cent of the Canadian electorate voted against you.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. MacKay: What is this nonsense about a mandate? What is needed for a mandate is 50 per cent plus 1.

Did the former great Liberal Prime Minister, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, have a mandate on that basis for the NEP? Did he have a mandate for the patriation of the Constitution? Of course he didn't. He brought those measures forward and we debated them. But, no one ever claimed that he did not have a mandate.

How many Governments in this century have had 50 per cent plus 1 of the popular vote? Very few. Certainly, Pierre Elliott Trudeau, for all of his legendary political prowess, was never able to put together back to back majority Governments. He never got the votes that the present Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) got, and no one ever suggested that he didn't have a mandate.

To say that we do not have a mandate is ridiculous. I suppose they want a referendum, which is essentially an American device.

Let me say this: I hope that the Canadian people in watching this debate this evening—

Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra): Let him say anything that is original, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. MacKay: I only wish that the Canadian people had fuller coverage of this debate. We should ask ourselves why it is that we do not have television coverage of the type we would see when it is a convention or a sporting event that is being covered. The television perspective that goes out over the air waves from this House of Commons is not representative of what goes on here. Probably if it were, if we had reaction shots, if we could pan the House, if we could have split screens, we would see how much real determination there was in the Opposition to oppose this.

• (2250)

This is kicking the entrails around after the event. Both opposition Parties are trying to do now what they failed to do in the election. I hope we will all have a little sanity, go home and get on with the new agenda, in a new year, in a new Parliament. It is only 4,000 more days to the 21st century and it is not going to do us much good to be rehashing the past when there is so much to do in the future.

Mr. George Proud (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, first I want to congratulate you on your appointment. I feel you are doing a tremendous job with the discussions I have heard going on across the floor for the last two weeks.

It is with great pleasure that I take this opportunity today to join my colleagues in the first session of the Thirty-fourth Parliament of Canada to participate in this debate on the legislation aimed at implementing the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States.

I represent the federal constituency of Hillsborough, Prince Edward Island, a constituency steeped in rich Canadian tradition. I decided to re-enter public life because it has always been my desire to serve the community in which I live and work. I want to at this time thank the people of the riding of Hillsborough for electing me and putting their confidence in me.

We, as Canadians, pride ourselves in protecting our sovereignty; our right to choose how we want to live and under whose control, be it political or economical. Prince Edward Islanders generally, and my constituents of Hillsborough specifically, voted overwhelmingly against this trade deal. With over 85 per cent voter turn-out, the Liberal Party swept the four federal seats on Prince Edward Island. This was a resounding "no" to the trade deal.

As a Member of Parliament from Atlantic Canada, I am fully aware of the importance of liberalized trade. The Liberal Party has long supported international trade. This is a reality in Canadian economic life and has been for years. Historically Canadian Governments, including Liberal Governments, have been successful in lowering our tariffs. As a result 80 per cent of our exports to the United States are presently duty free. The remaining 20 per cent of tariffs, under this agreement, are to be phased out over the next 10 years, but to achieve this I believe we have given up too much to our neighbours to the south.

As I travelled throughout the constituency of Hillsborough, I was overwhelmed by the voices of concern; concern about our regional development programs, social programs, fisheries, farming, food processing and energy. These concerns have not changed since the federal election. My constituents still want their concerns heard. That is the mandate I received.

Proof of this is that since the election I have received numerous letters from Canadians across this country who have voiced their objections about the trade agreement. From British Columbia to Newfoundland, the concerns, although sometimes regional in nature, have a national thread. It is important to note that the Government was only able to attract 43 per cent of the over-all final vote. Of the Territories and the 10 provinces, only Québec with 53 per cent and Alberta with 63 per cent secured a marginal majority of the popular vote. All others were against this trade deal. Atlantic Canada, 57 per cent; Manitoba, British Columbia and Saskatchewan, 58 per cent; and the Territories, 67 per cent.

Although the Government has secured a parliamentary majority, it is clear that Canadians supporting this trade agreement are in the minority. Legally the Government has a right to proceed with this agreement, but those of us elected have the moral right to not ignore constituents who opposed it and elected us on that basis.

Since the election on November 21 we have seen what is potentially the immediate effects of this agreement. Major businesses closing, such as Gillette, Pittsburgh Paint, Northern Telecom and Catelli Spaghetti, could indeed be the beginning of Canada's economic future. What about protection or retraining programs for these hundreds of Canadian employees affected by these plant closures? The Economic Council of Canada's recent research indicates that up to 250,000 jobs could be created in Canada by 1998, but this number represents the over-all net increase of employment opportunities. Even so, approximately 44 per cent of these jobs are earmarked to be in the lower paying service sector field, specifically in the manufacturing sector.

We have been told that the Government will be considering measures to offset the downside of this trade agreement. However, no plans to establish programs or assistance to workers such as the aforementioned are being considered. What about workers in their forties and fifties? Can they be retrained or just given the golden handshake? Or, do we just let these and future unemployed Canadians sign up for existing worker retraining programs and job-creation programs already in existence?

With reference to job-creation programs, it is important to note that funding for the Canadian Jobs Strategy for fiscal year 1988 is $1.8 million, down from $2.1 million in 1985. They can even wait for the recommendations of the federal Government's advisory committee on adjustment which are not due until June, 1989. However, this is a hard pill to swallow for people who have given the better part of their working lives to their chosen field.

Social programs are another major concern for Prince Edward Islanders. We have repeatedly been told that our social programs are not affected by this agreement, yet Canadians are concerned about our safety net. American businessmen will increasingly want to play in the same ball park as Canadians. Bill C-22 is a prime example. To cite a background study commissioned by the Macdonald Commission: "Canadians would be required to make wage and tax rates and welfare policies conform to American practice and to follow all important changes in the United States with virtually identical changes in Canada".

Social programs and tax requirements on Canadian corporate interests could be perceived as an unfair handicap if Americans believe that Canadians are getting the better of the deal. Given that the Government has been less than firmly committed to strengthening our social programs, an example being the deindexing of old age pensions, our social programs could be in jeopardy.

Given that the Government is proposing a continental approach to trade it would be difficult not to do the same in other activities such as social programs. The net result is that Canadian workers' income expectations would have to be substantially lowered to offset the maintenance of our level of social programs. Americans will be demanding that we cut these programs because they will judge them as unfair subsidies, thus giving us an unfair edge in this hypothetical free trade market.

Unemployment insurance benefits have drawn chronic complaints from the Americans. It is important to note that under combined state and federal programs, plus extended and supplemental benefit plans, only 25 per cent of unemployed Americans receive insurance benefits compared to 85 per cent in Canada. There is a strong concern in my province that fishermen's benefits could be considered as an unfair subsidy by our American counterparts and thus subject to a countervail suit.

What assurances do the Prince Edward Island fishermen have that, for example, what happened to the softwood lumber industry in 1986 will not happen to them in the next five to seven years? What will constitute an unfair subsidy? Can the Government assure the House and the Canadian people that unemployment insurance will be exempt under this trade agreement? If so, let us put it in the legislation. Over the next five to seven years Canadians will be entering negotiations on what is an allowable subsidy, yet the Government has not set any guidelines on this very important issue.

With respect to regional economic development programs, what protection do Canadians have if United

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

States industries initiate countervail actions? More than 50 federal and provincial programs presently provide subsidies which under American trade law could be penalized. For Prince Edward Islanders their potatoes, fish, hogs, and manufactured goods are still subject to U.S. trade remedy laws. What assurances do Canadians have that every time federal assistance is allocated to a region the United States will not claim foul under its trade remedy laws?

• (2300)

I have presented the concerns of my constituents, Canadians who take great pride in our Canadian way of life. We are not against freer trade, just this trade agreement. We do not have secure access and our subsidies will be continually harassed by the United States until we have harmonized with the American way of life.

I was elected to represent the concerns of my constituents. I will fight to ensure that their voices are heard. Canadians need responsible representation in Parliament. I pledge to uphold that right.

Prince Edward Islanders know that 43 per cent of the over-all popular vote does not constitute agreeing to this agreement.

Mr. Garth Turner (Halton—Peel): Mr. Speaker, we are sitting here once more long into the night in the name of partisan politics. The debate we are involved in now, one which we have been involved in for some period of time, is really going to contribute nothing to understanding free trade, really knowing what it is or what it will accomplish. The debate has been extremely exhaustive thus far.

The House has talked about it for 15 months. We have been through a seven-week election campaign. Frankly, I think Canadians are more or less fed up with the free trade debate and would like us to move on. The whole point of why we are here and engaging in the partisan politics of the moment is so some opposition Members can get on record. I think it amounts to little more than that.

The Liberals are free traders. The Liberals have always been free traders. They have had a history of trade liberalization with the United States for decades.

The Liberals can take a great deal of the credit for having brought us to the point where 80 per cent of our trade with the Americans is free of tariffs, something for which the Liberals can be proud. However, it is astonishing to me now that they are going against the record of trade liberalization which they have accomplished in the past. I think that the Liberals should embrace free trade. I think there is no question about it. If they do not embrace free trade, I think that the Liberal Party is being extremely hypocritical.

After all, there are many prominent Liberals who are solidly behind the free trade deal. For example, there is Premier Frank McKenna, Lawrence Decore, and a lot of the business community behind free trade, which is evident in the financial situation of the Liberal Party.

I think all the Opposition Leader does not really like about the Free Trade Agreement is that his name is not on it—and it will not be on it, either. We have the obligation to ask the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) some questions. We have gone through an election campaign in which the Opposition Leader is saying that this was the cause of his life, that he had to crusade for Canada against free trade. In the last Parliament I believe that the Opposition Leader missed two of three votes that were held on free trade. Where was John? Last Saturday at 1 a.m. we sat here in this Chamber after debating a motion on free trade all day. There was a vote. I believe the results were 144 to 36. Where was John?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The Hon. Member is a new Member. I must advise him that we do not use the first name or the second name of an individual but his title, such as the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Arseneault: Mr. Speaker, I believe we do not comment on the presence or absence of Members in the House.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): That is right.

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): There have been accusations with respect to Conservatives ramming through the legislation for free trade now that the election is over and the House has resumed sitting. I feel that there is a strong suspicion of hypocrisy here. We should look back to the Auto Pact to see how the Liberals dealt with the last major free trade initiative which was brought into the House.

It is beneficial to us to remember that in May, 1966 the legislation for the Auto Pact was introduced into the House. There were no public hearings when that legislation was brought into the House by the Liberal Government. Some 15 months after the legislation had been signed was the first time it was brought into Parliament. There were no committees involved in looking at that legislation.

In fact, the legislation was enacted by Order in Council, just to show Hon. Members how arrogant the Party of the day felt about Parliament.

In fact, I would like to read the motion that introduced the Auto Pact legislation. It stated:

That it is expedient that the houses of parliament do approve the agreement concerning automotive products between the government of Canada and the government of the United States of America, signed on January 16th, 1965, and that this house do approve the same.

That was introduced into Parliament in May of 1966, 15 months after the Government had signed the Auto Pact agreement.

We heard a little earlier today the Hon. Member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray) speaking in impassioned and eloquent terms concerning his opposition to the Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Turner (Halton—Peel): It would be beneficial to listen to a few of the comments that the same Hon. Member made when the Auto Pact legislation was first brought in, that is, the free trade legislation regarding automotive products. About increased opportunity, the Hon. Member for Windsor West had this to say:

The point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker, is that rather than lessening the benefits to Canada, the aim of this treaty is to increase benefits through increasing production and employment for Canada.

That is what the Free Trade Agreement seeks to do now. The following is what the Hon. Member had to say concerning gaining access to a larger market: "We should note, too, that one of our most important aims is to give the Canadian automobile industry access to the vast United States market which, because of its larger population, obviously affords much greater opportunity than is available in Canada". That is precisely what the Free Trade Agreement now seeks to do.

This is what the Hon. member for Windsor West had to say concerning the mandate the Government had to introduce such legislation:

I suggest that this order in council was put into effect under powers which had already been given to the executive by parliament when it passed the Customs Act giving the administration power to vary tariffs and schedules without reference to parliament. In other words, the government was using a power which parliament had already given to it to make changes of this type.

This is what the Hon. Member for Windsor West had to say regarding closure:

At this time I believe we have had reasonable opportunity for discussion. Certainly so far as I am concerned the industry, either from the point of view of individual firms or trade organizations, has had full access to the minister and individual members to put forward their positions. As far as I am aware they will continue to do so, and I am certainly willing to assist them in this regard insofar as I am able to as a private member.

Finally, the Trade Minister of the day had this to say about not seeing the importance of bringing the Auto Pact legislation to a committee of Parliament: "If a parliamentary committee is going to endeavour to ascertain from the manufacturers whether they endorse the agreement which they have already done in the form of letters tabled in the House, I do not believe that anything will be gained to be quite frank".

That is the legacy of the Liberal Government when it introduced a major trade initiative. It is a pale shadow of what this Government has done in order to engender public debate.

• (2310)

There is no evidence in the history of a free trade document being brought into this House that the Government has in any way, shape or form tried to ramrod the legislation through. That is just not the case.

The critics of free trade are afraid of change. Ironically, it is the only inevitable thing that will happen to this country. If we do not have free trade, what will we do to cope with the changes that will occur?

There has been a real lack of specific information in the debate so far about what the critics would do. How will they deal with the future? What will they do when the world forms coalesces in trading blocs? What will they do in the world without a Free Trade Agreement to protect us against American protectionism? What will they do about dwindling markets for Canadian products? What will they do about the inevitability of a recession if we do not have the stimulus of increased trade? What will they do to fund our social programs in the future?

What new impetus can Canada get? What new source of cash flow can we get into this country if we do not trade more with our largest trading partner? Are our social programs not inherently threatened by a willingness to stick our heads in the sands of the status quo as our critics would have us do? I believe that is the greatest threat we face.

If we do not do more business with our greatest and, more important, most loyal trading partner, we run the distinct risk of increasing our national deficit even more. That is a mortgage on our future that all of us on all sides of the House have a real stake in bringing under control.

If free trade did nothing else but give us a dispute settlement mechanism, it would be worth it. It would be worth it for Canada to embrace free trade simply to get the creation of a Canada—U.S. Trade Commission. It is a very important step in our relationship with the Americans. It is tremendously important for us to have a mechanism in place so that when a trade dispute erupts we can strike a panel of five members, Canadians and Americans, under a mechanism that has distinct, separate, and spelled out time limits and that within eight and a half months of any dispute coming to light there will be a settlement. That is very important.

I do not believe that Canadians put any credence in the free trade critics or their arguments. We can see that all around us. We can see it in the results of the November 21 election and the fact that we have a clear mandate. We can see it in the public gallery. There are four people up there tonight for the historic debate. While I cannot see the Press Gallery from here, I doubt if there is a person up there. Canadians are tired of the free trade debate. They want to move on.

We must ask whether we will be any wiser after this week is over and after we have sat here until one o'clock Saturday morning, until the inevitability of the free trade legislation being passed. Members on both sides of the House agree that it is inevitable that the Bill will be passed. I do not think we will be any more illuminated on what is in the trade deal. We will still have the same arguments we made during the campaign.

I believe Canadians are sick of this so-called historic debate. I think we are doing it for ourselves and it is probably time to stop.

As was stated on Friday, it is costing $1 million a day to keep this Chamber open. I do not believe any Member should feel good about $1 million a day of our constituents' money being used this way.

A Canadian author, Bruce Hutchinson, said: "For we are young, my brothers, and full of doubt, and we have listened for too long to timid men". I believe there are a lot of timid men and timid women in this Chamber. It is time to stop being timid and afraid of the future. It is time to rise to the challenges of a changing world. We must realize that we are involved in a situation in which we must have evolution. Evolution means changing or perishing in a changing economic world.

The status quo is not an option. The past is not an option. Building walls is not an option. Free trade is the only option and the sooner we get on with it, the better.

Mr. David D. Stupich (Nanaimo—Cowichan): Mr. Speaker, when I spoke in this Chamber last Friday, about an hour earlier than now, I did not take advantage of the opportunity to congratulate Mr. Speaker on his re-election to that position. Although we did not hear the result of the vote, I suspect he had a majority that we would all envy. It is a reflection of the feeling of Members, including new Members, of the record of the Speaker in that office. I congratulate those who are working with him as well.

While I spoke a bit about the voters in my riding, I did not express my appreciation to them for putting their trust and confidence in me. They sent me here to talk about one issue more than anything else, the free trade issue. After approximately a week of procedural motions and debate we are finally getting into the meat of the issue. The concern felt by the voters in my riding, and I suspect many others, was over the scarcity of solid information about the free trade deal. There was much talk about the deal by both those supporting and opposing it. However, the supporters of free trade did not have much information to offer, other than to say that it was a deal that would be great for Canada once put into effect. However, there were no definitive arguments in favour of the deal itself.

When the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) opened the debate at second reading, I thought we would discover what is good about the deal and what is good for Canadians. The Minister spoke for some 45 minutes, and whatever he said about the trade deal itself could have been said in about two minutes. The remainder of his speech was political rhetoric, having very little to do with the substance of the free trade deal.

The Minister made a few comments which did not give me the reassurance I was seeking and hoping to take back to my constituents. My constituents, even those strictly opposed to the deal, wanted some reassurance about what would happen. They asked what could be done in view of the fact they believed a majority Government would be returned to office. It was my opinion that similar arguments were being raised by people throughout the country, whether they were going to vote NDP, Liberal or Conservative and were sufficient to warn the Government that there was real concern among Canadians. I fully expected the Government to react by making some changes to the legislation to show that it recognized people had concerns about it. I believed that it would try to convince them that the Government was looking after their interests. That did not happen.

In the previous Parliament an amendment to the Bill covered water export. We know that unless that is included in the agreement signed between the two nations it does not mean anything. At least it attempted to show that the agreement recognized the concerns some had about the export of water in a tangible way by putting it in the legislation. I expected, hoped, and told my constituents that I thought the legislation that would come before us when we met would also reflect the concerns of people all over the country. We know it does not. There is nothing in it to reflect those concerns at all.

During the speech of the Minister for International Trade I made notes. I do not have Hansard with me, but I made notes of his speech. Near the beginning of it he said that the U.S. had not asked for social programs to be on the bargaining table. That makes me worry more than ever about social programs. The Americans have not asked for social programs to be on the bargaining table yet. The Minister did not say "yet", but that does not change the meaning. He then went on to say, "if they do", so he is leaving the door open for the Americans to ask for social programs to be on the bargaining table. It is wide open. They can be put on the bargaining table any time the Americans want, but the Minister then said: "We will say no".

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, of one of Tommy Douglas' stories about the elephant dancing with the fleas and saying: "Every man for himself". When it comes to saying no at the bargaining table, is it the elephant or the flea that will carry the weight? Which one will win the day?

By saying that the Americans have not asked for social programs to be on the bargaining table and then going on to say that if they do, the Minister for International Trade means when they do. He anticipates that they will, and he will argue it at the time. By that time he hopes that people will have forgotten that he promised to say no.

The Minister said that health care was not at issue and that we would be able to do whatever federal or provincial governments wanted to do. There has already been talk indicating that parts of our health services may well be privatized. When the Minister says that it will be up to federal and provincial Governments, it does not reassure anyone from British Columbia, and I am not sure about those from other provinces.

An Hon. Member: Saskatchewan.

Mr. Stupich: Saskatchewan has been mentioned and that is one that I had in mind as well. I know that in the Province of British Columbia, the Premier suggested that one way of getting rid of line-ups in hospitals was to set up a separate hospital system so that those who could afford to pay for it themselves would not have to stand in line. That would be a great system. Are we content to leave our health services to Premiers like that? Now we have the protection of the federal Government. I do not know what the Minister for International Trade had in mind when he said we would be able to do whatever federal and provincial Governments wanted to do. Did he mean the Governments separately or together? I do not know the answer to that, but I hope he will answer it.

I do not know if things work the same way here as they do in the British Columbia Legislature. During second reading, the Minister is either present or has notes taken so that he can deal with questions when he winds up the debate. That may or may not be the case here. If it is not, I am sure that there will be other opportunities to ask questions, but those are two questions I would like to ask.

The Minister then went on to say that Article 1201 of the agreement specifically exempted measures necessary to protect the environment. That is good news. We are increasingly concerned about what is happening to our environment. There can be no doubt about that. However, I wanted to read the article just to see how good it was and how strong I felt it would be in the way of protection.

You may have had the experience that I had as a youngster, Mr. Speaker, when I was attending school. At times, I tried to find definitions of words. I looked up a word and then saw words used to explain that word, then I looked those words up in the dictionary, and I kept going around like a ring in a rosy until I was back where I started and still did not know what the word meant.

Let us see what Article 1201 means. The Minister for International Trade was talking about the environment when he mentioned that article. The chapter is headed "Exceptions for Trade in Goods", and Article 1201 is headed "GATT Exceptions". I do not know what that has to do with the environment, so I kept looking. It says that subject to the provisions of Articles 409 and 904, provisions of Article 20 of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade or GATT are incorporated into and made a part of this part of the agreement.

As one who is worried about the environment, I was not yet reassured, so I continued my search. Article 1201 refers to Article 409, so I looked up Article 409. The Chapter is headed "Border Measures". Again, I do not know what that has to do with the environment, but I looked at it in any event. I will not read Article 409 because it goes on for a whole page, but it is headed "Other Export Measures". It says that either party may refer to GATT if there are any questions, and the second paragraph says that with respect to the implementation of provisions of this article the parties shall co-operate in the maintenance and the development of effective controls on the export of each other's good to third countries. We have had some pretty bad examples of exports to third countries when it comes to the environment. That in itself is not reassuring.

There was one more place to look. I was also referred to Article 904, so I looked at Article 904 which is headed "Other Support Measures". What that has to do with the environment, I do not know, but I read it thoroughly and I saw no reference to the environment.

If everything the Minister tells us about the Free Trade Agreement is as reliable as his statement that Article 1201 specifically exempts measures necessary to protect the environment, I do not take much reassurance from anything the Minister says.

Some Hon. Members: He hasn't even read it.

Mr. Stupich: He admitted that at one point, yes. Whether that has changed since, I do not know.

Trade distorting subsidies are not defined, but then the Minister reassures us by saying they will be defined over the next five to seven years. The flea will be bargaining with the elephant. That is not reassuring to me.

We now have a binding dispute settlement mechanism. It would be great if that were so, and if I could be reassured that it were so, then I would feel a little more at ease about what is going on. However, the Minister did not give us any references to prove that in any way.

I know the machinery involved in binding disputes settlement mechanisms. How can either country impose a binding settlement on the other? How can any committee do this? What force or power will it have? What will the penalties be if the parties do not react properly? In the case of Canada, the penalty could be that we would give the United States six months notice that we were getting out of the deal. Right now, 75 per cent of our exports go to the United States. If the free trade deal improves that, the figure might rise to 85 per cent. We could say to them that the only real market we have in the world will be cut off voluntarily because we do not like what they have done to us. That is not realistic. We could never enforce a decision of the binding dispute settlement mechanism committee in any way at all.

On the other hand, the Americans could say that they would not import any single good that we want to export to them, and we would be on our knees begging them to import our goods. The binding dispute settlement mechanism works very well one way. It works well for the Americans but it does not work at all for Canadians. It is a one-sided agreement. The Minister said that it was not a one-sided agreement but he should have left out the word "not".

Today, in answer to a question I believe the Minister said that there would have been no countervail if the free trade Bill had been in effect. He is a bit of a humourist. He likes to make jokes. I looked around to see if there were people laughing when he said that. I thought it was one of his jokes.

The countervail was imposed on British Columbia because the Americans said we were giving unfair subsidies to the logging industry. They made that decision. They said that it would be fair and proper that there should be a 15 per cent duty on the import of Canadian lumber to the United States, and particularly on lumber from British Columbia. They made that decision and told us that is what it was going to be. The forestry industry was not prepared to accept that. While not admitting the possibility of a subsidy, they suggested, just in case there might be a subsidy in some way, sometime, that perhaps 3 per cent or 4 per cent might be more appropriate. That was the figure they wanted to fight for. But the politicians, federally and provincially, took it out of their hands and said: "We agree to 15 per cent". The industry was shaken by this, but it had little option when governments made the decision for it.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

● (2330)

For the Minister to say that with the Free Trade Agreement in effect the Americans or the Canadians, depending on which way it was going, would not have the right to examine subsidies and to reach a decision that a subsidy was being given to something being exported and imported, depending on which side of the game you are, is total rubbish. Everyone here knows better than that. They know that is what the whole agreement is for. It depends so much on the subsidies that are yet to be defined over five to seven years. The Minister was not giving us any solid information about the free trade Bill when he talked about the safety that would be given to our exports of lumber in the Province of British Columbia.

The Deputy Prime Minister (Mr. Mazankowski) spoke; here I was looking for something better. I was reasonably sure I would get it, but there was no information, no assurances. He did not even come as close as the Minister of Trade. He did not try. During the campaign my constituents were desperate to get through to the Tory Government so I tried to reassure them. The Tories reacted positively, as I said before, in response to the concern about the export of water but they have not acted positively with respect to any of the other concerns.

We wanted a free trade deal. The Americans needed it. Currently we are running a surplus in our trade with the Americans at some $17 million a year. The Americans are running a trade deficit of almost 10 times that amount world-wide. They have to change that. Ten years ago the U.S.A. was the world's greatest creditor nation. Today, the U.S.A. is the greatest debtor nation. The Americans had to change that and the easy mark, they thought, was Canada. They wanted this deal to reduce the trade deficit with Canada.

Article 2002 comes as close as anything in the agreement to explaining to my mind. For those who do not happen to have a copy of this agreement with them, I will read part of Article 2002. In effect, the two Governments agree that should either find it necessary to apply exchange controls or take trade actions such as a surcharge or quota to counteract a serious deterioration in its balance of payments position, it will do so. What is serious? That is up to the nation that is experiencing the situation to determine, I suppose. There is no definition. It will do so in a manner consistent with these multinational agreements. These multilateral agreements refer to the obligations under GATT, the International Monetary Fund, and the OECD Code of Liberalization of Capital Movements.

In other words, international capital will make the decision. If they want to impose quotas, surcharges, anything at all to stop imports from Canada, the international bankers will make the decisions, the very people who expect benefits from the free trade deal. The big companies will benefit. They have no loyalty to any country anywhere. They will shut down plants in Canada, Mexico, the Philippines, or anywhere else. They will do anything in the interests of accumulating capital internationally. There is no loyalty to any country and the people who are getting such fancy salaries out of them no doubt will pay taxes in Bermuda or somewhere like that, where there are no income taxes.

We have placed ourselves almost totally in the hands of such people by going ahead with this agreement. We have given control of our country in almost every aspect over the long run to people who have no loyalty to Canada and, frankly, not even any loyalty to the Americans. No loyalty to anyone save for themselves. I do not fault them.

After all, we are handing Canada to them, saying: "Here, help yourselves". Of all the things that I have seen there is one cartoon that I thought carried the message best. It depicted a little beaver walking with Uncle Sam, saying: "We will give you everything you want, Uncle Sam, but that is our final offer". We gave them everything, but we are going a little further and saying that if there is anything at all that you can think of in the future, you can have that too; our country is yours to control, as you will, for your benefit. If we get something out of it, that is fine, but it is for their benefit and for the benefit of the international corporations.

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, let me first congratulate you on your re-election. This trade agreement became a dominant force in the past election. It was the object of discussions, of course. A vote has been taken. We know the result. On this side of the House we are glad to report to you that the people who elected us did not have confidence in the substance nor in the process by which this agreement was reached. I will try, in the limited time available, to explain why this conclusion was arrived at by Canadians who voted for the Liberal Party.

First, Canadians saw in free trade a misnomer. It did not take them very long in the campaign to arrive at that conclusion. We had the debate in which the Leader of the Liberal Party did so well. As a result of public meetings and hearings in the ridings, and as a result of the input provided by a number of experts in the field, people realized that this was actually an economic union that the Government of Canada was proposing.

It was more than just a question of trade because what was being proposed and what the Bill before us contains is a measure that deals not only with tariffs and therefore not only with commerce and goods on which a tariff is subjected or not to a certain tax. It also deals with energy, with the environment, with investments, even with equivalency of standards, and with a number of ramifications from those measures.

In the end Canadians concluded that what was being proposed was a measure that dealt with economic union between the economies of the two countries. It therefore dealt with the question of Canadian identity, with political and economic independence. Those who expressed a vote in the negative with respect to this measure felt that we should not go down that road.

The debate this week is a legitimate one and is one that is perfectly understandable if one looks at the percentage of the vote cast for the two parties in the Opposition.

From the examination of the events over the past two years it becomes clear that this Government did not understand the impact of trade on the environment. As a result it failed to do its homework in advance of the negotiations. I will explain, Mr. Speaker.

● (2340)

The Canadian Environmental Advisory Council, which reports to the Minister of the Environment of the day, raised a number of concerns in January, 1986. It stated to the Government that what was needed in anticipation of the negotiations was a series of public consultations whereby we could receive public input on the environmental implications of trade. Unfortunately, this proposal went by unnoticed.

In January, 1986, the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council proposed to the then Minister of the Environment that in Canada we needed comparative data that would compare environmental programs being carried out in Canada and in the United States, for reasons that would become clearer as time went by because we would know how to compare programs in the two countries. Unfortunately, that suggestion went by unheeded.

The Canadian Environmental Advisory Council also stated that we should study the experience of other nations on trade arrangements and environmental protection. Evidently, it was referring to the experience in the European Common Market. It was, perhaps, one of the most sound recommendations that was ever made in relation to the impact on the environment by trade. Unfortunately, once again that recommendation was received with silence.

The Canadian Environmental Advisory Council also proposed a measure that would give the negotiating team for Canada some environmental principles that would serve as a guide during the course of the negotiations. That recommendation went by unheeded.

Finally, the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council proposed that the negotiating team for Canada be given a list of non-negotiable items where the environment was concerned. Unfortunately, again that proposal was disregarded.

Those are the reasons why, on this side of the House, we have to say that the Government of Canada did not do its work, although it was advised to do so by the Canadian Environmental Advisory Council in January, 1986. It failed to do its homework, and it ignored sound advice from people who had been appointed to give the Government advice. So much for listening to an advisory body on the environment. So much for the claims on the part of the Government that it believes in the principles of the environment and that it practises what it preaches.

During the negotiations it was interesting to note that the Canadian negotiating team did not have one environmental expert. It had experts from any discipline one could think of, however not one person on that team who could advise it on environmental matters, and on matters that would relate the matter of trade as it impacts on the environment.

At the same time, in April, 1987, the Government found it possible to endorse the Brundtland Commission report which clearly established the link between trade and the environment. That report called for energy efficiency. It even went so far as recommending a reduction of 40 per cent of North America's energy consumption by the year 2000. While it was negotiating the Government applauded the outcome, the report of the Task Force on the Environment and the Economy. Yet, having done so, it failed and continues to fail to recognize the link between trade and the environment. We had to conclude, and we still do, that one hand of the Government did not know what the other was doing. It did not make sense to see the Government embrace the Brundtland Commission report, make high-sounding declarations on the content of the Task Force on the Environment and the Economy, and at the same time proceed in these negotiations on trade with the United States without any experts on the environment, and without taking into account the content of the Brundtland report.

After the negotiations the Department of the Environment continued to remain silent. Almost every major Department of the federal Government produced a study and made public its findings in glowing terms proclaiming the advantages of the trade deal. That was done in cultural terms, in commodity terms, you name it, Mr. Speaker. Almost every Department that had anything to say did so, and did so by way of a massive public relations effort. However, one Department remained silent, and that was Environment Canada. Although it is a well-known fact in that Department that there is a link between the environment and trade, as established in the Brundtland report which was embraced and continues to be supported by the Government, they were treated as separate entities: the environment over here, and trade over there, as if one would not have an impact on the other.

Therefore, for the reasons that I have given you, Mr. Speaker, Canadians are entitled to conclude that the Government has avoided recognizing, and deliberately so, the relationship between trade and the environment. At the same time during the election we had the scurrilous picture of the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney) making a ringing declaration on the commitment of the Government to the cause of the environment. That we did hear. When one looks behind the facade, the performance and the actions of the Government did not support its claims.

The Government practises environmental exploitation. It relies on market forces. It relies on deregulation, and on mining our resources such as forest, fisheries, and top soil. It concludes signing an agreement which exempts beer instead of water from the trade deal. It found it politically possible to identify a commodity, beer, to be exempt. However, it did not find the courage, the foresight, or the sensitivity to value something about which Canadians felt so deeply, that of identifying water as a commodity and as a resource that should be exempted from this trade deal, if perhaps not for this generation, for generations to come. Why not, Mr. Speaker, I ask you?

This Government found it possible to sign an agreement which accepts equivalency in pesticides—and that, on first blush, seems a very innocent, matter of fact commercial undertaking. Why not accept equivalency for pesticides? We know what they are, and “equivalency” strikes one as a harmless enough word. But then one discovers that accepting equivalency in pesticides means that more chemicals will eventually enter the Canadian environment, given that there are seven times more such products in use in the U.S. when compared to Canada. As a consequence, Schedule 7 of the agreement, dealing with pesticides, constitutes a very important measure and one with long-term implications.

And what does this Government agree to in respect of the energy sector—and this despite the protestations of Ministers of the Crown in previous debates. It signs an agreement pursuant to which the National Energy Board is no longer free to deny an export licence. And I challenge any Member opposite to refute that fact. And if that were not enough, the National Energy Board can no longer apply a surplus test, as has been its practice.

Anyone knowledgeable in environmental matters knows only too well the impact the various types of energy can have on the environment. The energy section of the Free Trade Agreement is, therefore, of utmost importance, and the reduced role of the National Energy Board should be of extreme concern to all of us.

During the course of the negotiations on the Free Trade Agreement, this Government agreed to the inclusion of a clause exempting and subsidies incentives in respect of oil and gas exploration. Those incentives go untouched by the Free Trade Agreement, and that means that our dependence on fossil fuels will become greater in the decades to come.

Such increased dependence on fossil fuels makes no sense at all. Last June, as Hon. Members will recall, an international conference on the changing atmosphere was held in Toronto. The conclusion of that conference, a conference attended by scientists from all over the world, was to recommend that, by the year 2005, there be a reduction of 20 per cent of CO₂ emissions, carbon dioxide emissions, which are produced when fossil fuels are burned.

If we want to reduce the warming climate trend globally, we have to burn less oil, burn less gas, burn less coal. In other words, we have to decrease our dependence on fossil fuels.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

What credibility can this Government have in the international community when, on the one hand, the Prime Minister and the Minister of the Environment endorse the findings and conclusions of the conference of which I have spoken, including the recommendation that carbon dioxide emissions be reduced by 20 per cent by 2005, and at the same time an agreement is signed with the United States pursuant to which incentives for oil and gas exploration are exempted. Where is the consistency in those two policy statements? They are in conflict, one with the other. It simply makes no sense. They run counter to each other.

The consequences of the Free Trade Agreement in relation to the environment, and particularly the clause that exempts the incentives in respect of oil and gas exploration, is that Canada will become an even greater part of the problem instead of becoming a part of the solution.

We know that trading patterns do have environmental impacts. There is no doubt about that. It is difficult to accept the fact that this Government ignores that basic fundamental point.

At this stage the least that the Government of Canada can do would be to establish the resource capital that we have on this side of the border, identify the environmental pollutants that exist in our system, and provide the data whereby, 10 years from now, we will be able to determine whether the situation has improved or deteriorated, or remained static; in other words, whether our resource capital has diminished or has increased.

Many of us fear that with the Free Trade Agreement and our consequent heavy reliance on the export of natural resources, Canada will use its natural resource capital, rather than exporting the interest from that capital—and this at the expense of the long term and, therefore, at the expense of future generations.

We do not wish to wait until the Government of Canada invokes the six-month clause as a result of its concluding that the Free Trade Agreement is no good from the point of view of our environment and from the point of view of its effect on our natural resource capital. Rather, we would prefer to see Canada move in a manner which would protect the environment, not just by uncorroborated words but by concrete policies and definite programs.

What we are debating at this time is not just a trade deal, and it is not just a free trade deal—we all know that nothing is free. In this particular instance, we are not debating trade, but our national independence and sovereignty; we are debating how we want our environment to be, an environment that we wish to protect for future generations of Canadians. Bearing in mind those goals, we feel that this Government is failing Canadians badly.

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I am indeed honoured to be participating in this most important debate. I am pleased, once again, bearing in mind the best interests of northern Ontario, to participate in the passage of the free trade legislation.

Having participated in this same debate in the Thirty-third Parliament, having been a member of the legislative committee which heard witnesses on the predecessor legislation throughout the summer months, and having campaigned in favour of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement, I am happy to be a part of this process, a process which will lead to the Free Trade Agreement going into force and effect on January 1, 1989.

I must say that although I am pleased to be able to take part in this debate tonight, we should not again be debating the principles of the Free Trade Agreement, particularly in this week before Christmas. We have already done it a number of times. Yet here we are in the House again tonight rehashing what we have said before.

We in this House discussed and debated a free trade agreement after the 1982 Senate report. We did the same after the 1985 Macdonald Royal Commission report and during the two-year negotiating period. Of course, we spent days debating the principles of Bill C-130 in the last Parliament. This House has debated the principles of this agreement for 64 days in total, or over 300 hours. The legislative committee sat for 16 days or nearly 100 hours, last summer, hearing witnesses and conducting clause by clause study. Debate over Bill C-130 dominated the last Parliament. That does not even take into account the time spent on this idea outside the House in the campaign.

I would like to get away from the subject of Bill C-130 for a few minutes. If I am not mistaken, and perhaps my colleagues will back me up on this, last year, whether it was May, June, July or August, we heard one little signal. That signal was: Let the people decide. Liberals were wearing big buttons which said: Let the people decide. An election was called in October and the people decided in November.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

I know a lot has been said about free trade in the seven weeks of that election. I would ask my colleagues if there was anything in the agreement about blood. Does it say anywhere in this agreement that Canadians are going to lose their blood under free trade?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. McDermid: It drew a little Liberal blood.

Mr. MacDougall: You are right about that, but nowhere in this agreement is there anything that says we are going to lose our blood. Guess what, though? Get ready now. The first debate I had with my Liberal opponent, we were all lined up together and he got up and said: "Oh, oh, we have problems here". This was to a bunch of high school students. We were talking about the future of Canada to the young people who are going to build that Canada in the future. He said if we go through with free trade we will not be able to have blood in Canada. I said to myself: "I did not read that". Well, we let that go because we figured it was early in the campaign and he will have time to read the agreement.

Second debate. We are going right along and the first thing you know my Liberal opponent gets up and says—

Mr. McDermid: What are we going to lose this time?

Mr. MacDougall: You will not believe this one. I did not.

Some Hon. Members: We will believe it.

Mr. MacDougall: He said to the audience that if the Free Trade Agreement goes through we are going to have more murderers here in Canada than they have in Detroit. Was that in the agreement? I do not think so. Yet that was the Liberal version of the Free Trade Agreement. That is two debates down.

Mr. Belsher: Tell us about the third one.

Mr. MacDougall: Now we are going to talk about water. I turned to this individual who wanted to take my job away and said: "Show me where in this agreement we sold our water. Let me know where our water is gone". He could not show me. Do you know why? Because water is protected. Yet do you know what he wanted to do in our fifth debate? All of a sudden he said: "I am willing to sell water to the United States". That is what he said. I never said that. This Government never said that. Yet he was prepared to sell water to the U.S.

Strike three, but we were not finished. We had a few more debates. Then we get into agriculture. It went on for three hours. We brought our book in, we sat there and listened. The first thing you know, all our marketing boards are finished. There will never be another marketing board in Canada. That is what he said. Was there anything in here about that? No.

Then supply management was going. I looked in the book again and, no, I am sorry, supply management is covered. Then he said dairy products were going out the window, but we protected dairy products. What can you say? Strike four, but it continued along that line.

I am pleased to see that the Liberals are listening to me. I know if they had the opportunity they would want to be over on this side, but unfortunately they cannot be.

We finished all those debates, but do you know what part of this election hurt me more than anything else? If I ever thought the day would come that I would have to win an election by terrorizing senior citizens, let me tell you that is the day I would not run. Unfortunately, that was the mood and that was the way some candidates tried to defeat sitting Members of the Conservative Government. It is unfortunate, it was uncalled for, and it should not have happened but it did. It is a shame to think that would happen.

So much for the Liberal candidate. I would like to say a few words about what I think is very important. I reviewed the number of days and hours we discussed this issue. We have had a lot of arguments about it, time and time again, whether it was in the campaign, immediately previous to the campaign, or in the last two years. We won the election. Yes. We have been through the debates. We were able to show Canadians that this Government listened to Canadians.

• (0010)

There is no doubt that future Canadians will be looking back on November 21 as the day the electorate once again supported a PC Government with a clear vision for the future of our great country. I believe November 21 will be viewed as a milestone in our country's history. We were not dealing with an election to pick a government Party for the next four years. What we were dealing with was an election for the future of this country to give Canadians a chance. Canadians had a vision. They chose a Party that had a vision for the future of this country.

Last summer, as the legislative committee on the Free Trade Agreement was winding up I had a chance to jot down some of my thoughts, my own personal reflections on what the free trade deal in which we were dealing with our neighbors meant to me. I sensed that the Free Trade Agreement was taking a bold step which was taking our nation into the 21st century. Most important, we were taking this step as a mature country confident of ourselves and with our sights on a stronger, more prosperous country for the future.

The benefits of freer trade will make Canada stronger. We can be more Canadian, more independent and more sovereign. The more our nation produces, the more we earn. The more we earn the more we can afford for Canadian arts and culture, education and research, social and medical services, programs to resolve our regional economic disparities. All Canadians will benefit from a freer trade agreement because Canada will be made stronger through this agreement.

I would like to say something about the opponents of this deal who spent a great deal of time over the last six months running around the country presenting their senseless arguments and saying that the Government had sold the country to the Americans. As a word of caution I say to you, Mr. Speaker, because you have made your statements loudly and often, that it does not make them any more valid going around in the manner they did.

Senator George Van Roggen, Emmett Hall, the Canadian Federation of Labour, and Mr. Hamel from the Canadian Chamber of Commerce have all told you, Sir, that these statements and arguments against this Free Trade Agreement are pure falsehoods. These statements we have heard against the deal are nothing more than the Opposition's idea of political power play, to blur out the facts and confuse the public.

One such falsehood that presented itself during this last election, one that everyone in northern Ontario is concerned about, is the effect that this agreement will have on regional development policies in northern Ontario. The Opposition stated that our regional development programs, like Community Futures and FEDNOR, have been destroyed or disbanded. This is pure nonsense.

Let me present the facts. The Free Trade Agreement will not affect government subsidies to business or regional development programs. Canada's right to provide assistance for job creation and economic expansion in less developed regions of the country remains unaffected. Articles 8 and 11 of the Subsidies

Code of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade read:

Subsidies are used by governments to promote important objectives of social and economic policy . . . among such objectives are the elimination of industrial, economic and social disadvantages of specific regions.

Those who have been saying that regional economic expansion or development are not there are wrong. As we all know, the Free Trade Agreement was negotiated under the terms of the GATT. It incorporates certain provisions of the GATT, and includes the GATT subsidies code. This means that Governments in Canada continue to provide for economic growth and development. What was discussed in terms of regional development during the free trade negotiations was a refinement of these existing rules under GATT. There is a clear agreement that assistance can be provided for regional development, as long as it does not distort the trade agreement.

The fact is that federal and state Governments of the United States make liberal use of regional economic development programs. Canada's Government can continue to do so as well. Government agencies such as the Atlantic Canada Opportunities Agency, the Western Diversification Office and FEDNOR in northern Ontario will continue to be free to offer creative economic development and industrial assistance packages.

They will be able to pin-point areas in which Canadians have the competitive edge, and assist in developing export markets. This spells good news for the growth of regions, our region in northern Ontario—goods news for northern Ontario.

Since 1935 Canada has pursued a course of eliminating tariffs between our two countries. This current agreement deals effectively with the remaining 20 per cent of the trade that still suffers from these trade barriers. Although this agreement may not be perfect, it is a step in the right direction for it provides Canadians the opportunity to build on, extend and improve in our trade with our largest trading partner.

As someone who comes from northern Ontario, I see this agreement as a good one. In our region where more than seven out of ten jobs depend directly on trade, the Free Trade Agreement secures access to our largest and wealthiest market. More important, it ensures our region's future growth and stability. No longer will we have to transport raw resources from our area. We will now be able to process right here in northern Ontario and not worry about the tariffs and the trading barriers which have for so long limited our growth.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We will be able to diversify, build up our secondary industry and make our region's economy stronger and more stable. The Free Trade Agreement is a good agreement for northern Ontario. As I pointed out, it is a good agreement for stability and continued development in northern Ontario.

As a Canadian I see this agreement as a good one. For a country which has three-quarters of its exports going south, this agreement has taken steps to deal with the threats of American protectionism. We have sought and got better and more secure access to the United States. No longer will we have the threat of protectionist trade measures hanging over our heads. The door to the American market will never again be shut to us.

This Free Trade Agreement offers our nation a more secure relationship with our neighbors. We can plan into the future, strengthening and diversifying our economy, and in turn strengthening and securing our social programs and the very fabric of our country.

Mr. Speaker, may I finish my remarks by saying that from Sir John A. Macdonald's determination of stretching our horizons west by rail, to John George Diefenbaker's Roads to Resources policy to develop the northern regions of our land, the Progressive Conservative Party and the Progressive Conservative Government has always presented the people of Canada with a vision of the future of our country. It has always been a Party to build upon the strengths of our land and our people. I am very proud to be part of the Progressive Conservative Government which later this week will once again provide a better, stronger country for all Canadians, one that can grow and prosper for centuries to come.

Mr. David Walker (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to enter this debate following another person from northern Ontario. I grew up there. I was trying to recall where he must have grown up as compared to where I grew up.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Under a rock.

Mr. Walker: The problem is there are no rocks any more.

If there is one part of the country whose politicians should be opposing the free trade deal, it is in northern Ontario where one multinational company after another has ravaged the area. That is where acid rain began. There is no protection left at all for northern Ontario.

Yet that Member stands up to talk about it. Shame on him. The best thing he can do is put it in his householder so his constituents can read it. There will be no need for an election next time because you are history.

The Tories have been talking about majorities during this debate. Let us talk about majorities in Winnipeg. When we talk about a majority in Winnipeg, we are talking about Liberals. To use Tory logic, I am now speaking for Winnipeg and I want to explain why people from Winnipeg are opposed to free trade. They oppose it because it is destroying the economy of the city.

During the entire campaign the Winnipeg Free Press stated that concern about free trade was only negative thinking. One business leader after another encouraged support for free trade because it would be great for Winnipeg. The headline in the Free Press this weekend stated: "No New Jobs in Winnipeg for 1989". Once you remove all the rhetoric from the campaign you are left with nothing for the workers in Winnipeg, no new funds or investment.

The Opposition also likes to talk about how we are negative thinkers. Where is their game plan for the future of Winnipeg? They do not have one.

Winnipeg built its reputation throughout the world as a world trader. Whether one talks about grain, the garment industry or finance, Winnipeg is a fantastic city of traders. The Government is saying we do not need the protection of the Wheat Board and is removing it. They are telling us not to worry about jobs in the garment manufacturing industry. Who is going to speak for those 7,000 workers? Those are real jobs. It is not a question of negative thinking. It is a question of people's lives that are at stake. Someone has to stand up and try to protect them.

We have been told that we are going back to the principles of the debate which have already been settled. During the campaign the Conservatives kept saying they would protect workers. Where is that protection? If there has been one thing totally fraudulent on that side of the House it is the protection of workers.

While the Conservatives keep asking Canadians to trust them, they take 32 per cent of the funding for job creation in Winnipeg. There has been no money in the city.

We are told to stop going over old debates, but that is what we must do to protect workers. While we may ask for committees to investigate, we are told that committees are not necessary. We have to watch those Conservatives in the next four years because they are derelict in their duty.

The people of Manitoba spoke against free trade because they have worked for generations to build a city of world renown. They have worked closely with the federal Government on one program after another. In the last four years the chair was kicked from underneath them and the people are very sensitive that the Government is not paying attention.

Liberals were elected in the city because they have shown themselves to have a plan of action to protect workers and to further the interests of the city. The reason why Tories cannot get elected in the city is that they have nothing to say about our future. They keep making vague promises which have no meaning in people's lives.

An Hon. Member: Jobs, jobs, jobs.

An Hon. Member: When, when, when?

Mr. Walker: Just like in 1984, we are still waiting for one job in the City of Winnipeg that can be attributed to one act by the federal Government. When we see it we will applaud it.

The Free Trade Agreement has failed to convince anyone in Winnipeg that there will be any benefits for our city. We will continue to oppose this agreement until the Government assures us that the workers in the textile industries, processing industries, agriculture and transportation will have jobs as this agreement takes place.

The Government should show good faith by forming a committee that will present ideas about how jobs will be protected and the interests of Winnipeggers furthered under this agreement. In the absence of any such proposal we will continue to oppose this agreement.

Mr. Brian L. Gardiner (Prince George—Bulkley Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to speak at second reading of this trade legislation. I want to use the opportunity to make a few comments about my riding. Prince George—Bulkley Valley is an exciting and diverse riding, stretching from the border in the west with the Hon. Member for Skeena (Mr. Fulton) and in the east against the Alberta border where the present Member is the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Clark).

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

It is a riding dominated by the forestry, mining and resource industries. Unfortunately, it is a riding that was ignored so long by the Tories.

Now it is a riding threatened by the trade deal. My concern over this trade legislation is primarily over what we may end up with during the period when the definition of a subsidy is determined. The Government has already sold out the forest industry in this country, especially in my Province of British Columbia. It caved in to American interests by signing the Memorandum of Understanding that was met with joy by the Premier of British Columbia, Mr. Vander Zalm, but condemned by the forest industry.

Adam Zimmerman, not a member of the New Democratic Party, was quoted as saying on December 31, in the Vancouver Sun: "It is bizarre. It is sickening. It is every nasty adjective for an industry person". Zimmerman, also chairman of the Forest Industries Council, said in an interview: "In one step it creates an industrial paraplegic out of a lumber industry".

We have heard reports that some forest companies are operating at a loss due to the provincial and federal Governments caving in to U.S. interests. It is important to note that nothing has changed due to the Free Trade Agreement we are being asked to approve here today. A similar action can be taken again. In fact, when the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) visited Prince George during the election campaign, he made no commitment to our area let alone any promise that he would deal with the Memorandum of Understanding.

I am concerned about this Government and its attitude toward the forest industry. The Auditor General has criticized the Government for its sloppy administration of the various forestry agreements between the federal Government and the provinces. British Columbia was singled out in this area and it is no doubt considering the inadequacy of the Vander Zalm Government.

I am concerned that if we do not have written assurances from the Government and the Minister, we will not have a federal-provincial forestry agreement. My part of British Columbia has the highest NSR in the province. Will federal and provincial spending in forestry be allowed under the trade deal, depending on what is defined?

This afternoon there might be a ray of light. The Government is like a chocolate bar, it is thick. We must get our point across a couple of times before it understands. In today's Question Period I was pleased to note that the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie) has invited representatives from the forest industry to meet with him to discuss the Memorandum of Understanding. This afternoon I was in touch with some representatives of the forest industry in our province and I urged them to take the Minister up on his offer for a meeting, a meeting that we hope will happen as soon as possible. Perhaps, with some luck, we will get some sense out of the Government.

• (0030)

What we need is nothing less than an opportunity as parliamentarians to review how these negotiations are undertaken. We need a full and complete committee reporting independently to the House. We need a trade monitor similar to the Auditor General who can report independently the activities of the negotiations that are taking place. The committee should have the power to travel, to hear witnesses and to take evidence under oath. In the true sense of democracy, give us the opportunity to review the negotiations openly, not behind the closed doors of government.

I do not see why Hon. Members opposite cannot give us a chance to see what is going on. They will have a chance to have their witnesses appear as well. If we do not have this committee, I am afraid that we will see another backroom deal. The Tories will cut out the programs that will cut the guts out of Canada. That is what I and other Hon. Members of my Party fear will happen if we leave the negotiations to Hon. Members opposite and to them alone.

There are many other areas of concern about the trade deal, the environment, social programs and water policy to mention a few. I call on the Government to support the motion put on the Order Paper by my colleague, the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor (Mr. Langdon). If the Government has the courage of its convictions, I know it will support our efforts to represent the interests of our constituents.

In closing, I would like to thank the voters of Prince George—Bulkley Valley for the trust they have put in me as their Member of Parliament. I will continue to work, and I started to do so some time ago. I look forward to the next few years as being an exciting and productive time for my riding and for my constituents.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is as follows—

Some Hon. Members: Debate.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I recognize the Hon. Member for Essex—Kent.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jerry Pickard (Essex—Kent): Mr. Speaker, this being my first speech in the House, I would like to thank my constituents for the faith they have shown in me.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Order, please. I would like to bring to the attention of Hon. Members that there should be a little civility when the Hon. Member is making his maiden speech. Maybe we can get it over with in a hurry. I recognize the Hon. Member for Essex—Kent (Mr. Pickard).

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Pickard: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I very much appreciate that. I would again like to thank very much my constituents. I promise I shall work to the best of my ability to represent them and their interests and concerns.

My riding is Essex—Kent. It is a small riding located in the most southerly portion of Canada in southwestern Ontario. I believe that my riding is the most diverse agricultural riding in Canada. We produce a very wide variety of agricultural products including multi-million dollar greenhouse industries, grapes, wine production, soft fruit industry, horticultural products, dairy products, eggs and soybeans, to name just a few.

My riding also has a wide variety of food processors located in it, Heinz being one. There are several other food processors there that will be affected by the trade deal and its impact on agriculture. As well, some concerns have been brought forward by the manufacturing industry in my riding. Plant closures may be the result in the manufacturing industries which are closely related to the auto industry.

I have great concern for the people of Essex County with regard to the negative impact this deal will have on them. This is a difficult deal for them to face. As a matter of fact, it is a deal from a stacked deck.

The Macdonald Commission suggested that agriculture would be best left out of this agreement. The Government decided not to follow that advice, though it cites the Macdonald Commission when discussing impacts on other sectors. The GATT talks in Montreal seemed to fall apart over agriculture. Yet agriculture is touted as being a frontliner in this agreement. I suggest that agriculture should have been exempt. Since this is not so, many facets of the agriculture industry will be in jeopardy.

The family farm in southwestern Ontario has been under a great deal of stress lately. In the past few years, hundreds of farms have gone bankrupt and hundreds of families have been facing a great deal of difficulty. Certainly we can see the 14 per cent interest rate through the Farm Credit Corporation as being one of the things that has created that difficulty. The unpredictable climate and our weather conditions that cause drought, frost and storms have certainly been a problem for farmers. This is an additional burden faced by producers in Canada.

Many family farmers have had to leave the farm to seek second incomes just to make certain their farms can survive. Wives are working in stores and men are working in the auto factories or other plants in order to receive second incomes to keep the farms alive. Now we are adding the Free Trade Agreement to all this, an agreement that will devastate our agriculture community.

This deal creates an unfair advantage for our neighbours to the south. I will try to explain this advantage. My colleagues across the way have suggested that certain factors have not been specifically mentioned by the agreement. Let us consider the climate factor. Long days, warm weather and a long growing season are a real advantage to the farm community. It takes away the concerns that our farmers have over frost and adds stability to production. It creates a higher acre production. For example, in southwestern Ontario, farmers produce approximately 20 tonnes of tomatoes per acre. In some areas of the United States, production is in the area of 40 tonnes per acre with the same capital investment. This agreement does not take that into account. Certainly it leaves our farmers with an unfair deal. I believe we have the best farmers in the world, but I am also realistic. If the cards are stacked against us, we cannot win.

Labour adds another dimension to this stacked deck. Only 25 per cent of American families receive the social and medical benefits and hospital services that 75 per cent of Canadians enjoy. Someone has to pay the bills for those families with social benefits. The Canadian farmer will be one who will have to carry that bill and make the payments. This appears to me to be a bit unfair if we are talking about a level playing field.

The minimum wage in Canada is much higher than it is in many states in the United States. This puts the Canadian farmer in another stacked deck situation. Will we in Canada lower the minimum wage to be competitive and on an equal footing with the United States farmer? Since the trade deal will be driven by the holy dollar sign and since certainly control of that dollar sign will be the market, the Americans will be able to sell their products if they can compete on any basis less economically than we can.

I believe that too much has been given up for our farmers to survive. The Canadian Government has shown wisdom and foresight in developing policies that protect our environment. Many insecticides and herbicides that are used legally in the United States are not legal to use in Canada. They pose a great deal of danger to the environment and to the people. These pesticides and herbicides which are banned in Canada are not allowed to be used by Canadian farmers. However, they put the American farmer in a much better dollar and cent situation.

The Americans can produce much easier with the kinds of sprays they are allowed to use. Are we going to lower our standards to be competitive or are United States farmers going to raise theirs by not using such pesticides and insecticides? I doubt very much that we will see them change their products.

We have struggled long over acid rain and pollution of air and water with them. The environment will not change. The Americans will continue to use their products, so our farmers will be faced with another obstacle, another stacked deck, that of unfair environmental laws.

Marketing boards have been placed on the block and their powers will be chopped just like the turkey's neck at Christmas. I realize it is being suggested that the powers will remain in place, but think about a marketing board controlling Canadian prices and supplies while American products not controlled are shipped to our markets to compete. I find that scenario ridiculous.

A spokesman for Heinz, a large food processor in our riding, in discussing the reduction of tariffs on tomatoes made it very clear that if tariffs are removed, the company must take counteraction to balance the loss if it wishes to remain competitive. If the 10 per cent tariff is removed, either the farmer will have to take a reduction in his price of the product, or the worker will have to take less money for his labour, or the social plans will have to be cut so they can survive.

Negotiations in these situations will go very quickly in trying to deal with the farmers, suggesting that they receive much less per tonne for tomatoes. The workers will be caught in a bind with negotiations as well suggesting that their wages should be held or lowered. The company may well leave the country. That is a possibility as well. If the difference is too great for the producer, he will leave Canada. I feel because of the trade deal agriculture will be the big loser.

Why agriculture was ever considered in this agreement is beyond me. Since it has been, the agreement has the potential to devastate the industry. Without question I feel that the agricultural industry has been sold out. If you look at southwestern Ontario you will find not one person on the Government side from that area.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): Mr. Speaker, may I begin tonight by congratulating you and your colleagues in the chair on your re-election—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, no.

Mr. McDermid: I welcome your support. It is wonderful. I also want to thank the electors of Brampton for returning me for the fourth time to the House of Commons. It is a real pleasure to represent such a great community.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): As I said previously, this is not a Minister's maiden speech but I would like to have a little civility. We are getting very close to putting the question. The Hon. Minister has the floor.

Mr. McDermid: I can understand the Opposition's concern when I get up to speak because I tell the truth about the Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: The Opposition Members can natter and heckle all they want for the next 15 minutes, but I am going to speak on free trade and tell the truth about it. Before I get into it, I want to thank the electors in Brampton. My good friend the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Turner) kept yelling across the House at me to get back to Brampton and work on the campaign because I was in deep trouble. I want him to know, just for his own edification because I know he has not yet had time to check the figures, that I did win by over 52 per cent of the vote.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. McDermid: I understand his reaction for those people who could not see it on television, Mr. Speaker. He is not easily impressed and I understand why. I will get to him a little later in my remarks.

I am sharing the great City of Brampton with my colleague from Brampton—Malton. Because our community is growing at such a rapid rate, it has been divided into two ridings. I share the responsibility with the Hon. Member for Brampton—Malton (Mr. Chadwick). He is a very old friend of mine and I am very honoured to be here in the House of Commons with him to represent our great city.

The last two years have probably been the most interesting, rewarding and exciting two years in my life because the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) appointed me Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister for International Trade (Mr. Crosbie). In that period of time I followed the negotiations on the Free Trade Agreement very carefully. I have seen an agreement come to fruition. I have followed the debates and participated in them over that period of time. I have seen the legislation develop and come before this House twice now, and we are debating it for the second time here.

I listened with great interest over the last couple of days to the new Members of Parliament speaking freely and saying that they were not given an opportunity to speak. I do not know how you can have it both ways—standing up in the House of Commons and complaining you cannot speak. What are they doing? They are here speaking and they are speaking on the Free Trade Agreement. They have the freedom to speak. As a matter of fact, the Government has given them an extra 24 hours of debate to speak on this agreement. The Government offered them last weekend to speak on the debate. Not only did they not take up the opportunity to speak on the Free Trade Agreement, but only 36 Members showed up to vote on Friday.

Some Hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. McDermid: I want the House to look. The Leader of the Liberal Party is left alone. The Members have abandoned him again.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. McDermid: In those two years of negotiations there has probably not been a broader cross-section of representation from the Canadian public giving advice on these negotiations. The International Trade Advisory Committee had representation from all walks of life in Canada, including the Consumers Association of Canada, the Labour movement and so on. In conjunction with the International Trade Advisory Committee were the 15 sectoral advisory committees involving some 500 Canadians, again from all walks of life and all sectors of our economy giving advice to this Government on the trade negotiations. They actively participated. I have listened to chapter and verse from the Opposition saying this was done in secret, that nobody knew what was going on. What total nonsense that is. There was never as much consultation with the Canadian public as there was with this Free Trade Agreement and the Government is to be congratulated on that.

Mr. Foster: There were never any public hearings.

Mr. McDermid: Here is my friend who says there were never any public meetings. He did not appear before the Macdonald Commission to give his opinion. He did not appear before the Standing Committee. He did not appear before the Senate Committee and he is telling us there were no hearings. There were all kinds of hearings in this country and the Hon. Member knows that. Such nonsense. What total, total nonsense. Then we got the agreement. The agreement was in the public domain—

• (0050)

Mr. Foster: There were no public hearings on the final text across the country and you know it, McDermid. Tell the truth.

Mr. McDermid:—for a period of time and then the legislation was brought forward in May. You will remember, Mr. Speaker, that we spent a tremendous amount of time on procedure, whether we should bring it in, and was it in the right form. This went on for a long period of time. Then we got into the debate of it which went on through June, July, and August. It was finally passed in this House at the end of August and went on to that great august body in the other place where they said: "We are not going to pass it. We are not going to have anything to do with it".

We all remember that the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition called the election. He called the election: "Let the people decide". I can remember the T-shirts and the balloons. I think it was on a Wednesday, if I am not mistaken, and everybody was saying: "That's my boy. He's calling the election". They were all in the gallery, and it was an exciting day for everybody. The Leader of the Opposition called the election and said: "Let the people decide".

Mrs. Finestone: A little respect wouldn't hurt you, you know.

Mr. McDermid: Then what happened? Well, the Opposition Leader now refuses to accept the verdict of the Canadian people given on November 21.

I wish to quote some of the things that the Leader has said recently. By the way, he did say that he would give "speedy" passage if the Government was re-elected and given its mandate. I wish to refresh the House's memory. He stated: "I believe that we won the hearts and minds of Canadians on the issue. We discussed the details of the deal and how it would affect Canadians. We were winning the election and then two things happened. There was the unprecedented intervention of big business . . ." I might add small business, medium-size business, and people from all walks of life. As my friend from Oshawa would say, "ordinary Canadians".

Then the Leader of the Opposition said: "They mounted an unprecedented attack on my character, on my sincerity, and on my competence". I would say that two out of three they did not. I do not think that they attacked his character or his sincerity. I would not question his character, and I would not question his sincerity, but on his competence, we have to question that one, and so did the Canadian people. The hon. gentleman is correct there, they did question his competence.

Then he said: "It was a cynical manipulation of public opinion, a power-hungry reach for the lower side of human nature". Therefore, everybody who voted Conservative are the lower side of human nature. Isn't that nice? Aren't those wonderful words from the right hon. gentleman? He finishes off his comments by saying: "The Government was playing to fear".

He talked about the negative commercials. I know that the right hon. gentleman was extremely busy on the campaign, and he did not have a chance to see his own commercials. I remember when the first commercials came out from the Liberal Party. They were the negative ones. They were the ones that attacked. They were the ones who were wiping out borders, and they were the ones with the Prime Minister kicking a soccer ball.

The hon. gentleman stands in the House and states that we had negative commercials. Boy, I want to tell you that that is the pot calling the kettle black. I cannot believe that the Hon. Member would stand up here and try to make those types of excuses.

I think of Morley Callaghan, that great old man of letters. Morley Callaghan described the right hon. gentleman beautifully, and I quote: "For the sake of their own souls most men live by pretending to believe in something they secretly know isn't true. It seems to be a dreadful necessity". That is what Morley Callaghan said, and I think that the Leader of the Opposition is such a man. I honestly believe that.

The facts are the opposite of those my hon. friend says, and he knows that. First, the Liberals did not win the hearts of Canadians by discussing free trade. They struck fear into the hearts of Canadians through baseless allegations. There is no question about that.

I remember the televised debate. The right hon. gentleman did pretty well in that debate, and I have to give him full marks, until he said: "This trade deal will wipe out our social programs". Those are the exact words that he used. He knows full well that that is not true. I will give him the benefit of the doubt. In the heat of debate that just slipped out, because he really does not mean that.

Secondly, business, large and small from all walks of life—and the right hon. gentleman knows this as well—spoke out in favour of free trade. During the campaign they came to the point that they were upset with the misrepresentations that were being made by both opposition Parties, and they felt that it was time to stand up and be counted. There is no question about that.

Mr. Nunziata: Sober up, McDermid. Let's go home.

Mr. McDermid: Well, they say that they didn't spread fear. They compared the business community to the Ku-Klux-Klan. Senator Kirby, that great Liberal who was somewhere involved in the campaign, although we have not seen him since the campaign, compared the business community to the Ku-Klux-Klan. Magnificent. Who said they did not spread fear?

I mentioned that the ad campaign from the outset was an attack upon the character.

Mr. Rompkey: Tell us about John Crosbie attacking students.

Mr. McDermid: What would the Opposition Leader call the conduct of his candidates going into old folks homes and telling senior citizens that they will lose their pensions? That is what they were doing. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman did not know his candidates were doing that. They were going into old folks homes and telling them that they were going to lose their pensions, until the Hon. Member for Hamilton East (Ms. Copps) caught by camera from CHCH-TV, admitted that they were not going to. It was part way through the campaign that she finally admitted that pensions were not going to be affected by the free trade deal.

I was very upset with what the right hon. gentleman did during the campaign on free trade. It was probably one of the most crass, mean-spirited type of campaigns in which I have ever been involved. Quite honestly, I do not want to go through it again, ever. I am sure the right hon. gentleman does not either. I think that he looked very uncomfortable doing what he was doing. The Canadian people saw that too.

Mr. Nunziata: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Marchi: A point of order on humanitarian grounds.

Mr. Nunziata: I hate to interrupt the Member in mid-arrogance, but I would ask the Speaker to recognize the clock which indicates one o'clock. I understand at this point in time the Speaker is required to put us out of our misery and call the vote.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): There are still approximately 15 seconds remaining, if the Hon. Member would like to continue.

Mr. McDermid: Honesty and truth won out in this campaign. The facts won in this campaign. The Free Trade Agreement is a good deal for Canada. It will lead us into the 21st century as a prominent trading nation throughout the world. I am proud to be part of that agreement. I look forward to seeing its passage expeditiously by the end of this week in order that it can go to the other place and receive Royal Assent by next weekend.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Is the House ready for the question?

Some Hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): The question is on the subamendment.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the subamendment?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Some Hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those in favour of the subamendment will please say yea.

Some Hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some Hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five Members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Call in the Members.

The House divided on the subamendment (Mr. Laporte), which was negatived on the following division:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): I declare the subamendment lost.

Mr. Riis: Mr. Speaker, I suspect you would find unanimous consent in the House to apply the vote that we have just taken against the original amendment and reversing that vote for the main motion.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Paproski): Does the House agree to apply the vote just taken to the amendment of the Right Hon. Leader of the Opposition and in reverse to the motion for second reading of the Bill?

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

The House divided on the amendment (Mr. Turner (Vancouver Quadra)), which was negated on the following division:

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE
AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT

MEASURE TO ENACT

The Acting Speaker (Mrs. Champagne): Pursuant to Standing Order 100, I do now leave the chair for the House to go into Committee of the Whole.

House in committee on Bill C-2, an Act to implement the Free Trade Agreement between Canada and the United States of America—Mr. Crosbie—Mrs. Champagne in the chair.

• (1150)

On Clause 2—Definitions

Mr. McDermid: Madam Chairman, I want to put a few opening remarks on the record before we get into the study of Clause 2. Bill C-2 implements the free trade deal by approving the agreement and amending those laws necessary to meet our obligation under the agreement.

The Free Trade Agreement was considered on six opposition days and by the Commons Committee on External Affairs and International Trade, which heard 158 witnesses over 24 days. Those witnesses represented millions of Canadians.

Legislation to implement the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement was first introduced in Parliament on May 24, 1988. That legislation, Bill C-130, was given second reading on July 6, having been debated for more than 28 hours.

Bill C-130 was given consideration by legislative committee from July 11 to August 4, during which time 59 witnesses were heard over more than 87 hours. Again, the 59 witnesses represented millions of Canadians.

That legislation was given third reading on August 31, having been debated for more than 14 hours.

Today, Committee of the Whole begins consideration of Bill C-2. This legislation is similar, except for some technical amendments, to Bill C-130. Essentially, detailed clause by clause examination of the legislation was carried out earlier this year. The opposition Parties want to amend the legislation, they say, to protect social programs, regional development, culture and the environment. The Government feels that no such amendments are needed because free trade poses no threat to these.

Social programs are not affected by the agreement. We remain as free as ever to support regional development. Cultural industries are exempted from the agreement. The agreement specifically exempts from its obligations measures to protect the environment.

The Opposition has asserted to the contrary, but this is based on their misreading and distortion of the agreement. They made those assertions in the recent election campaign and alarmed many Canadians. But the alarm that was raised makes the Opposition's assertions no more valid.

In the end, the Canadian people put aside these alarms and returned this Government with a majority. We are now prepared to examine Bill C-2 in Committee of the Whole over the next period of time. I look forward to the questions.

I might say that the Minister for International Trade will participate in the clause by clause discussions at a later time today. We will be spelling one another off during the period of time we are studying this Bill clause by clause. I look forward to the discussions.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Chairman, let me say at the outset that I note one small but significant improvement in the consideration of this legislation over the examination we had last summer. It is that the Hon. Minister for housing suggested that his colleague, the Minister for International Trade, may join us for the proceedings from time to time. That will certainly be a refreshing change from what we had last—

Mr. McDermid: Point of order. I think it should be pointed out to the Hon. Member that I am also Minister of State for International Trade.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Chairman, the woeful performance of the Minister with that duty demonstrates how little people know of the role he plays and the responsibility he carries. It is a sign of just how bad his job is.

Let me repeat that his senior colleague, the Minister for International Trade, is deigning to join us from time to time during these proceedings. It will be most refreshing indeed. In fact, it will probably be refreshing for the Minister for International Trade. He may finally get to know what is in the Bill, after all these months of not having the literacy to perceive it.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

When the Hon. Minister introduced the committee stage, he tried to leave the impression that somehow the exercise we are beginning this morning is just a further sequence in an open, honest, forthright examination that is giving Canadians the opportunity to be heard. The fact is that most Canadians feel frustrated, angry and indignant at the way in which their opportunity for proper examination of this very crucial legislation has been denied over the last several years.

When one considers that the Government's purpose in presenting the trade legislation and its program, as indicated clearly by its own Cabinet paper, was not to inform Canadians but to sell them, we now know why one of the most common complaints heard by every Member of Parliament and candidate in the last election was that Canadians did not know. They had not been informed. That was very much a consequence of the way the Government treated the whole initiative of the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement.

It refused to provide decent research reports as to what the agreement would mean. For example, one of the more ferocious debates during the campaign concerned the impact on the service industries, including health services, financial services and other forms of services. The Government never provided a single piece of paper to analyse what the impact of the agreement would be on health services.

While the Government protested mightily that the Opposition was making false claims, the Government itself refused to provide any evidence, any examination of the impact of the agreement. It tried quite deliberately to hide that information. That information may be locked in the vault of the Minister for National Health and Welfare or some other colleague, but it was never given to Canadians.

Similarly, we were never given any serious research on the impact the agreement will have on such service industries as data processing, telecommunications, banking and financial services. The Macdonald Royal Commission did not provide it. The Economic Council did not provide it. The Government has not provided it.

We are entering into total integration with the United States in an area that provides 70 per cent of the jobs for all Canadians, yet no institution of the Government provided Canadians with the slightest whit of examination or analysis about the meaning, repercussions or impact of the agreement. The Government tries to claim it will share knowledge and information.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Minister tried to leave the impression that Parliament had been given fair opportunity to examine the matter. Let me review the record for the Minister. First, the all-Party joint committee that was struck in 1985 unanimously recommended that before the Government initiated negotiations it should bring the matter to Parliament for debate so that a set of terms and references could be established and Canadians could know what should be negotiated and not negotiated. The Government absolutely refused to follow through on those recommendations from its own Members.

The External Affairs Committee, also composed of Members from both sides, unanimously recommended that if the Government was faced with American omnibus trade legislation passing Congress the Parliament of Canada should reject the Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement. Again, that was a unanimous recommendation by all members of the committee, which the Government totally rejected. It was totally indifferent to those recommendations.

We then got into the farcical, katzenjammer, Keystone Kop operation in which the Government struck a committee to examine the proposed agreement without giving us the final agreement. A committee of the House crossed the country without having in its hands the final document. The Government gave us the comic book version, which described the general principles. People who came before the committee to testify had to say what they thought might be in the agreement because they did not know for sure. Again we went through this fatuous exercise. A committee of Parliament was forced to open itself up for public examination without having a legitimate document in its hands. Is that really a fair and proper way for the senior forum of debate in Canada to conduct its business?

• (1200)

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Axworthy: The Minister tries to suggest that this has been discussed openly. It was openly discussed but we did not have the document to discuss it with. We did not have the proper information before us.

Then we go to the next claim made by the Minister. When the legislation, Bill C-130, was finally produced in the House last summer, the Government provided this great opportunity for examination, he said, but he failed to mention that the majority on the committee, the Conservative members of the committee, turned down a motion I moved that the committee be allowed to travel across Canada. As a result, we were required to sit only in Ottawa. Citizens from the Pacific Coast to the Atlantic Coast, from Newfoundland to British Columbia, were denied the opportunity to present their views. We were held in house captivity here in Ottawa, subject only to the representations of major national lobby organizations. We were denied the opportunity to hear individual Canadians.

I recall very well receiving a letter from a farmer in the Okanagan. He said very clearly that he was the first farmer to lose his farm. The bank had turned down his extension of credit because of the trade agreement. He wanted to come before the committee and make his points.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Axworthy: Madam Chairman, do you hear a rumbling in the hall? Do you think we have scratched a sensitive area? The fact is that that farmer was denied the right to a hearing by a majority on the committee. He was denied the right to appear before the committee in his own part of the country and he was denied the right to appear before the committee in Ottawa.

Again, the Minister is trying to claim that somehow Canadians had fair and open access. I do not know what kind of restricted world the Minister lives in, but I can say that Canada consists of an awful lot more than the City of Ottawa. There are an awful lot more people in it than those represented by lobbyists in this city. Canada consists of thousands of Canadians who wanted to be heard and were deliberately denied that opportunity by the Government.

Once again, we are faced with a piece of trade legislation and this time the final Draconian step has been taken, the final insult to Parliament and to Canadians. Canadians do not even have a chance to appear before the committee.

This is the most important legislation facing Canadians in generations. We have gone through a hard fought election. All kinds of groups and individuals have raised serious questions about this issue. The Minister says that it was those nasty people in the Opposition who challenged the Government on social programs. It was the United Church of Canada, the Lutheran Church of Canada, the Roman Catholic Church of Canada and the Presbyterian Church of Canada that challenged the Government. It was the Canadian Council of Social Development that challenged the Government to give those answers. It was 93 environmental groups that challenged the Government on the impact of the Free Trade Agreement. It was also all the womens' organizations in Canada.

Members of the Opposition were simply reflecting the deep concern and anxiety of millions of Canadians. Once again, those very same Canadians who raised those very same questions are being denied the democratic opportunity to appear before a committee of Parliament to make their concerns heard, to have their questions answered, and, most important, to provide to Parliament their best evidence, judgment and wisdom about how the legislation could or should be improved.

We are being forced through closure in this committee to give nothing but short shrift to legislation with hundreds of clauses covering 26 other Acts of Parliament, having an impact on every single sector of our economy. No Canadian is being allowed to appear. The door has been shut on Parliament. We have turned out the lights as far as Canadians are concerned, simply to follow once again the basic maxim of this Government which is to keep Canadians in the dark when it comes to the trade agreement, to deny them the opportunity to know what is going on and to deny them the opportunity to make their voices heard.

There has been a sad history of the rights of this Parliament and of Canadians being usurped. It has been a history of finding a way to simply ramrod and railroad a piece of legislation through without having it subjected to fair, honest and open public examination. We ask the Minister to try to justify the claims he made in his opening remarks when he said that this is simply a trifle, we will just have this legislation passed and get it through before Christmas so that we can all go home in despair simply to meet the Government's timetable. Of course, the irony is that the only change in the legislation the Government made was to change the timetable.

The Parliament of Canada is being put into forced overdrive, is having its rights stripped away, all to meet a timetable which the Government says is no longer important because it has been taken out of the legislation. That to me represents probably the most absurd example of a Government that has simply lost any sensitivity to the House and to the rights of Canadians. It has turned logic on its head. The only amendment that has been made to Bill C-130 is to take away the timetable which the Government now says is the reason why this Parliament is being put into a forced march. Let us think about that for a moment.

I suppose that if there were something sacred and sacrosanct about the January 1 deadline, it would have been stated in the legislation as it was in Bill C-130, but it has been taken out. We can only assume that there is some flexibility there because the Government itself admits to it.

At the same time, we must talk about what happens as a consequence of this legislation. We have put forward a number of suggestions that we believe are both constructive and useful to ensure the proper implementation of the agreement. We do not agree with its implementation, we have fought against it, but we recognize and acknowledge that the Government has a majority and will eventually pass it. Surely the Government should recognize the necessity of a continuing, open examination of how the agreement is working and being implemented.

Let me cite, for example, a statement made when the report was tabled in the U.S. Congress by the American trade representative, Mr. Yeutter, in December. He said that in many instances, conformity with the Free Trade Agreement will require no modification of the law but rather modification of regulation, policy or administrative practice implementing the law. He then goes on to list a whole series of proposed changes in regulations and to such bodies as the CRTC, the Department of Finance and the National Energy Board, many of which are not covered by the legislation. The Americans themselves have now said that there will be an open, continuing demand for changes in Canadian regulation, practices and policies as the consequence of the trade agreement.

I pose this question to you, Madam Chairman, and to Hon. Members: How will Canadians find out about this? How will they know what kind of changes are made to regulations? How will they be able to examine in detail the consequences of a change to the National Energy Board or the fact that some discretionary power has been taken away from the Minister of National Revenue? How will we find out if customs inspectors are applying the rules of origin dealing with goods being manufactured in Mexico but stamped "made in the United States"? How will we find out how that is working?

How will we know if Canadian businesses are being subject to unfair competition because the Americans are manufacturing goods in the Maquiladora strip in Mexico, moving those products into the United States, stamping them made in the U.S.A. and then competing with Canadian goods, even though the wage rate in Mexico is 70 cents an hour? That is a very important consideration from a Canadian business point of view.

I make the case that it is absolutely essential that we have the opportunity to monitor that, to have a watchdog over that kind of practice so that we can know when it is happening and understand very clearly what the impact will be. How will we know what is on the table when the Government begins its negotiations for a new form of subsidy? How will we know what kinds of new concessions and giveaways the Government is prepared to offer?

• (1210)

One of the most crucial amendments required in this legislation is the establishment of an on-going committee. It should be given full power to examine the implementation of the trade agreement, to examine changes and regulations so Canadians will know what is happening. It should be able to look at the whole problem of adjustment, dislocation and plant closings to understand whether the argument put forward by the Government that all will be sweetness and light is right or the argument put forward by many groups and industries, such as the printing industry, the food processing industry and the agriculture industry, that disaster is in front of us is right. Surely Canadians have a right to know. Surely there should be a place in this Parliament where Canadians can come forward to make their case. Surely there should be a place for industry to be heard when it finds itself being ravaged by unfair competition or rules under the trade agreement.

I say to the Government, for the sake of decency and fairness one of the amendments that should be and must be accepted by this House before we retire is an amendment establishing an on-going committee. It could be a standing committee or it could be a special committee. There should be a clear reference to that committee with a full mandate to oversee, to watch and to monitor the full implementation of this agreement and all of its consequences.

Similarly, Madam Chairman, I say to you it is also important that a form of sunset clause be built into this legislation. This agreement is a dramatic rupture in the economic and social fabric of this country. It is wrenching the entire economic structure of Canada from an east-west focus to a north-south one. There will be major rationalizations of industries. There will be major alterations in the way we do business. Both sides of the House can see and understand that.

I believe, and our caucus believes, that Canadians must have a chance to choose ultimately whether that has been the right move. Certainly there must be an opportunity for Canadians to judge whether or not this agreement has been in their best interests. We say that that judgment cannot be made unless there is full and open disclosure and full opportunity for the people of Canada to understand what is going on. That is why we have again presented an amendment that would require a full parliamentary review after three years based upon the findings of the committee so that Canadians will fully understand and see for themselves what the full consequence of this agreement should be. Then a judgment can be made by this Parliament whether or not to continue in the agreement. I think that is fair. If government Members believe as strongly as they say they do in the value of this agreement and its benefits, they should be prepared to put it to the test. They should be prepared to say it is right for Canadians to examine.

It would be fair to accept our proposal that there be a three year review by this Parliament.

Mr. McDermid: Where are the amendments?

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): We will be presenting them as soon as we have the opportunity in the proper place. At the next election Canadians will then have the right to decide who has been right about the consequence of this agreement. It will be based upon a full, open and honest disclosure.

Is the Minister prepared to accept the proposal we have just made for a standing committee to examine this agreement and for a three-year review so that Canadians will know ultimately whether it has been in their best interests? Are the Tories prepared to act in a sense of decency and fairness to Canadians by giving them this opportunity? I pose that final question to the Minister.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Chairman, I listened very carefully to the words of my hon. friend. Again, as is his habit he puts words in my mouth by saying that I said a number of things that I did not say at all. He does that quite often and did it again today. It is unfortunate he does so because he distorts what has been said in the House of Commons by individual Members.

I listened to the Member talk about negotiations and trade-distorting subsidies. I found that rather interesting. Those negotiations are going on now in the GATT. The Liberals want to put all their eggs in one basket, the GATT basket. They are great supporters of the GATT.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mrs. Finestone: Aren't you?

Mr. McDermid: Those negotiations are going on now in GATT in what is a trade-distorting subsidy as we will be negotiating with the United States in the future. I like hearing the Hon. Member provide the examples he does from the United States. He dumps on our American friends all the time but he wants to change our system to the American system. I find that rather interesting in the proposals that he brings forward.

I will take a look at the amendments and see what he has to say. The standing committees of the House of Commons, as the Hon. Member knows full well, are in charge of their own agendas and can make certain decisions as to what they want to look at and what they want to examine. I would say to the Hon. Member at least have the courtesy to send over the proposed amendments so we can take a look at them and give them due consideration.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Madam Chairman, I have a point of order. I want to say to the Minister that we fully intend to present our amendments to the House. He knows that under the rules of the House, those kinds of amendments would not be admissible by the Chair, in Clause 2, which is the interpretations clause.

Mr. McDermid: I said send them over.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): If the Government wants to get us to Clause 3 where we can present them, we will be glad to do so.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Chairman, let me start if I could with a few general comments as we enter this stage of the debate. I think with clause-by-clause analysis of this Bill there are, in fact, a series of very significant problems which the Government could address and, in addressing those problems, could demonstrate some of the so-called spirit of healing which the Prime Minister talked about on election night.

Mr. McDermid: It takes two to engage in that process.

Mr. Langdon: Instead, the Minister who introduced the debate, and I am pleased to see the Minister—I am not sure whether it is the Minister from Georgia or the Minister for International Trade—

Some Hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Langdon: —who is finally in the House but I am pleased to see him here. I would like to make the point that to stand up at the start of a speech, as the Minister of State for International Trade did, and say point blank, without even hearing the amendments which might be posed by the Opposition, and say they do not see the need to accept any amendments is, first, extremely arrogant and, second, is par for the course in the way in which the Government has proceeded with this subject throughout the entire history of the development of the trade agreement with the United States.

Those amendments which we certainly intend to pose will deal with a wide range of concerns. Let us have a bit of realism on the government side. This is a Government which lost a significant number of seats, which does not have a majority of seats from more than two provinces in this country—

An Hon. Member: What is the matter with Ontario, British Columbia, Quebec and Alberta?

Mr. Langdon: A Government like that should listen and consider some of the points that have been put forward in the campaign and some of the points that are put forward on the floor of this House of Commons. The fact is that the opposition Parties in the House won a majority of the seats in eight of the ten provinces. That is something which any sensitive Government—

● (1220)

Mr. Andre: You do not believe any of this nonsense, do you Steve?

Mr. Langdon: Count them up, Harvie.

The point is that a Government that had some sensitivity or some concern for some of the widespread fears and uncertainties which were expressed by Canadians throughout this country in the past election would at least listen to the amendments that were put before standing up and saying that there is no need for any amendment whatsoever in this Bill.

I said that this was par for the course with the Government with respect to how it has dealt in the past. For new Members of the House especially it is important that the record be made absolutely clear. In its previous term the Government attempted to keep secret, even from the Commissioner of Information, all of the material which had been prepared for the purposes of these trade negotiations, despite the fact that this information had a great deal of significance for millions of Canadians in communities across the country.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

We had to go to court, with the assistance of the Information Access Commissioner, to see to it that the Government finally released many of those secret documents. The Government released them not in whole, but with many sections excised from the reports. That is a first piece of reality.

The second piece of reality is that the Government likes to talk about the committees that have been set up to look at this whole set of questions around the negotiations. I have been a member of each of those committees. The committee in 1985, which was a joint committee of the House and the Senate, was completely ignored by the Government with respect to each detailed recommendation that it put forward. For instance, it suggested that the Auto Pact should not be considered whatsoever in these negotiations. Yet, it was considered.

Mr. McDermid: Not even to improve it?

Mr. Langdon: It suggested that agriculture should not be considered whatsoever, and yet agriculture was negotiated. I could go on and detail each of the specific recommendations of that committee that were simply ignored by the Government, despite the fact that these were recommendations that came from a majority of the Conservative members on that committee.

Then there was the committee of late 1987 which made certain recommendations. For instance, it made recommendations with respect to the omnibus Trade Bill and what we should do as a country if the omnibus Trade Bill were accepted in the United States. In that case the committee said that we should withdraw from any agreement with the United States, because the omnibus Trade Bill, as it passed, would put us in a much weaker position than we have been in the past as a country vis-à-vis the United States. Despite that recommendation, once again it was ignored by the Government.

Finally, we should talk about the 1988 experience of the committee that was established to review the original version of this legislation. There was a decision made right at the start of that committee's work that it would not be permitted to travel across the country and to hear Canadians. People in each and every individual part of the country were not given a chance to speak about this Bill or about this agreement now that the agreement had actually been published. That reality should be recognized—

An Hon. Member: Tell us about your action in committee.

Mr. Langdon:—in order to have the committee see the sense of listening to people. What the committee did not do was to listen to people. What it did not do was even to permit provincial organizations to come to Ottawa and testify with respect to the legislation.

For instance, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture had serious concerns, and it continues to have serious concerns about the deal. It wanted to come and talk, but it was not permitted to do so because it was not a national organization. In my view, that type of closing off of witnesses is simply, in my view, anti-democratic, unacceptable and, as I say, par for the course for this Government in the past.

The election was a tough election for many Members. It was a hard election for the Conservatives, a hard election for us, and a hard election for the Liberal Party. After the election took place I and many others had hoped that the experience of that election would have brought people back to the House with some willingness to take a second look at this legislation, and to see that the problems with the legislation had to be addressed. Yet what does the Parliamentary Secretary, now elevated to a Minister of State for International trade, do? He stands up and right off the bat says: "No amendments whatsoever".

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: It is absolute arrogance, and the Conservatives applaud that arrogance. They applaud, and say it is wonderful that we should be able once more to get back to the arrogant habits of the past. I tell this Party across the way that this is a sure recipe to hit 22 per cent once more in the polls.

The point is not that the Government should make the decisions. The point is that Parliament should make the decisions. The right of Parliament is to put amendments forward and to have those amendments considered seriously and to see to it that there is a possibility of a significant, intelligent, and civilized debate in the House, instead of a set of blinkers right from the start, a mask which the Conservatives wear that claims that they and only they are the repositories of wisdom in this country. It is sheer nonsense and a sure recipe for future disaster.

• (1230)

We have prepared a series of amendments, Madam Chairman. We had hoped to be able to put these proposed amendments on the Order Paper but were prevented from doing so by the Government. Had we been able to do so, all Hon. Members would have had the opportunity to review the proposed amendments. Some relate to the protection of Canada's social programs—

An Hon. Member: How many amendments do you have?

Mr. Langdon: There are a total of 20—not a total which is incredibly out of line given that we are now embarking upon two days of debate.

These amendments would do three things: First, they would solve some of the major gaps which exist with respect to the agricultural sector.

We in the New Democratic Party—and I am sure the same is true of every Member of this House—have received from the prairie pools a very clear indication that it is their view that this legislation, this Free Trade Agreement, threatens the future of the Canadian Wheat Board.

That is something that has to be addressed by way of an amendment. It is something that has to be addressed to make the free trade legislation in any way acceptable to the wheat producing areas of this country.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Langdon: Secondly, there has to be a recognition on the part of this Government that a special committee of the House is required to play a watchdog role in relation to the five to seven years of negotiations still to take place.

I point out to members of the Progressive Conservative Party in this place, many of whom have simply read the synopsis of the trade deal as opposed to the deal itself—

An Hon. Member: You don't know that.

Mr. Langdon: I know that that was certainly the case in so far as the Progressive Conservative candidate in my constituency is concerned. In fact, that individual lost his deposit.

Mr. Dick: And he is not here.

Mr. Langdon: He certainly isn't in this place, and there is good reason for that.

I suggest that there has to be a special parliamentary committee to act as a watchdog in respect of the ongoing negotiations, negotiations that will be dealing with every single aspect of government subsidies, including regional development grants, unemployment insurance assistance to fishermen, transportation assistance, and so forth. All of those aspects of government assistance in this country will be included.

That is clearly set out in Article 1907 of the agreement, and the legislation before us endorses the agreement.

At the very least, we need a committee to oversee the negotiation process; we need such a committee so as to ensure that the interests of Canadians from coast to coast are protected.

And finally, there has to be a series of amendments put forward whose objective would be to protect the key sectors of the economy which will be adversely affected by the Free Trade Agreement. And any serious thinking Member of this House, regardless of his or her Party affiliation, will recognize that there will be sectors of the economy that will be adversely impacted by the Free Trade Agreement.

The Government may in fact be correct that there will be more winners than losers. We on this side may be correct that there will be more losers than winners. But regardless, the fact is that no one in this House would pretend that there will not be victims of the Free Trade Agreement. There may be victims on the West Coast as a result of the fish processing clauses; there may be victims in Atlantic Canada as a consequence of the efforts on the part of the U.S. with respect to assistance to potato growers; there may be victims—and in fact I think we have seen some already—in the industrial sector of Quebec and Ontario.

Amendments must be put forward to protect the victims of the Free Trade Agreement, and certainly this Government has to consider seriously any amendments aimed at addressing the plight of the victims of the agreement.

I would ask the Minister to start this debate off on a different footing, and he can do so by standing in his place and withdrawing his statement that he will not accept any amendments which are put forward by the Opposition in this debate. I would ask him to consider the amendments on their merits. If the Government chooses to turn them down, that will be its decision; but to do so before they are even put is a measure of total intolerance and arrogance, something which cannot be acceptable even to the Minister himself, I hope.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Minister of State for International Trade.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. McDermid: Thank you, Madam Chairman. I want to assure the Hon. Member that my statement that I will not accept amendments in this debate has nothing whatsoever to do with arrogance; rather, it has to do with the fact that we have in place a Free Trade Agreement which was signed well over a year ago.

Bill C-2 implements the Free Trade Agreement. That is what the Bill is all about.

Madam Chairman, we went through 100 amendments put forward by the Opposition the last time we examined the Free Trade Agreement enabling legislation. Each one was gone into point by point in terms of why it was not necessary that it be included in the Bill.

The Opposition wants to state explicitly in the agreement everything that is not to be included in the agreement.

When a person disposes of a piece of property, the agreement sets out strictly what is involved in the transaction. One does not state in the agreement that the wife and children are included, or that the family automobile is included. The agreement simply sets out what is included in the transaction, and that is it, and it is precisely that way with the Free Trade Agreement and the legislation that we are talking about today.

An Hon. Member: That is nonsense.

Mr. McDermid: The amendments that they wish to bring in have absolutely nothing whatsoever to do with the Free Trade Agreement. The Hon. Member knows that.

Throughout last summer we went through the amendments proposed by the Opposition, and we went through them point by point. We, along with the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South Centre, worked on the Free Trade Agreement enabling legislation all of last summer, and we went point by point through all of the amendments put forward by the Opposition.

• (1240)

I want to touch for just a moment on his comments on agriculture. Never in the history of this country has the agricultural community been so well taken care of. When there were problems, whether it was drought or unfair pricing in world markets for some agricultural products, this Government was there to help the farmers. That is not going to change. The Hon. Member says we should not have discussed agriculture in a trade agreement. We ship $5 billion worth of agricultural products to the U.S. You do not discuss that in a trade agreement? What absolute nonsense. What absolute poppycock. It is one of our biggest trading units. Why would you not discuss it in a trade agreement? Why would you not make it better for our farmers to trade? That is exactly what we are doing.

We are also doing it in GATT, as the Minister reminds me. It was at Canada's insistence that agriculture was put on the agenda for the Uruguay round of negotiations. Sure they are having problems. By the way, we missed the Hon. Member in Montreal. He was invited and did not show up. We are sorry he did not make it.

Mr. Crosbie: Too busy, not interested in the GATT.

Mr. McDermid: That is too bad because he might have learned something down there.

Mr. Langdon: Point of order, Madam Chairman. The Minister just suggested I received an invitation to attend the GATT meetings in Montreal. That is simply incorrect. I did not receive any such personal invitation and I ask him to withdraw that comment.

Mr. McDermid: I am not sure if the Hon. Member was away on holidays after the election or what, but I can tell you that invitations were offered to both Party critics. His name was on the registration list.

Mr. Crosbie: It went through his chairman, but his chairman would not approve him.

Mr. McDermid: Oh, through his chairman? He had better check with his caucus on that.

Mr. Crosbie: Check with Bob White.

Mr. McDermid: It is too bad they did not notify him of what was going on.

Mr. Crosbie: Maybe Shirley Carr.

Mr. Langdon: Point of order.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: As president of this committee I think we are getting away from our chartered course. We should be discussing the Bill. I will hear the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor.

Mr. Langdon: Madam Chairman, one of the rules of the House, as I understand it, is that the word of a Member of Parliament, especially on as specific a point as this, is accepted—

Mr. Andre: It works the other way, too. You have to accept that an invitation was sent. He said so.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Mr. Langdon: Since I was the person involved, Harvey, it might be—

Mr. Andre: All you can say is that you did not receive it. You cannot say it was not sent.

Mr. Langdon: I happen to know that the invitation was not sent to myself, nor was it sent to the chairman of our caucus. It was sent to the Leader of our Party—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Langdon: —and was not passed on until the conference had begun. I would ask the Minister to simply accept that.

Mr. McDermid: You have problems in your caucus. I understand.

Mr. Langdon: No, as the Minister knows, I was at the last GATT conference which I do not think the Minister attended, and I have very considerable interest in what takes place in that organization and in this round of trade negotiations which we supported, with some exceptions including agriculture.

Mr. McDermid: Madam Chairman, I feel very badly that the Leader of the NDP did not pass on the invitation to his trade critic. However, he knew the GATT meetings were on. He might have inquired as to whether or not he was welcome.

Mr. Crosbie: He would have been welcomed with open arms.

Mr. McDermid: With open arms. We were all looking for him down there. I wanted to take him to dinner in Montreal, for heaven's sake, but he did not show up.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Order, please.

Mr. Flis: Point of order, Madam Chairman. The constituents of Parkdale—High Park sent me here to debate the trade Bill, not whether or not someone got an invitation.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member for Winnipeg South.

Ms. Dobbie: Thank you, Madam Chairman.

Mr. Axworthy (Winnipeg South Centre): Point of order, Madam Chairman. I realize this is a wide open debate, but we have just had the Minister make a comment and you then recognized the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South. Would it not be appropriate that someone from the opposition side be recognized rather than having the Minister followed by a Member on the government side? I submit it would be proper to recognize now a Member from the opposition side.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: The Hon. Member has suggested that the way the chairman of this committee is recognizing Members is not correct. The way I saw the exchange was that the Hon. Minister simply answered a question put forward by the Hon. Member for Essex—Windsor. I agree that we went into quite a long exchange that was not exactly addressing the Bill or answering the question. However, I think it would be quite correct now for someone from the government side to express his or her view, and then someone from the opposition side can have the floor, which is the normal understanding.

I recognize again the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South.

Ms. Dobbie: Madam Chairman, thank you again. I am very proud—

Mr. Langdon: Point of order. A question was asked and I do not recall the Minister dealing with it.

Mr. McDermid: What, on amendments?

Mr. Langdon: Yes.

Mr. McDermid: Yes, I did.

Mr. Langdon: I did not hear it.

Mr. McDermid: You were not listening.

Mr. Nunziata: Point of order, Madam Chairman. I have been listening to the proceedings this morning and noted that members of the Opposition have been asking questions of the Minister and he not only tried to answer the question but went off on a discussion of his own.

I simply seek some direction from the Chair with respect to what is permitted when questions are put to him. I would simply request that the Chair restrict the Minister's comments to answering the questions put by the Opposition rather than editorializing on every point we make.

Mr. Crosbie: Why don't you do up the speeches for us from now on? This is a new rule. No freedom of speech in committee.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I am sure the Hon. Minister will attempt to be as brief as possible in answering a question so that as many Hon. Members as possible can express their ideas.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Never twice without three times, the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South.

Ms. Dobbie: Madam Chairman, I am very proud today to rise for the first time in this House to take part in these proceedings and this ultimate discussion about the Free Trade Agreement with the U.S. I am also proud to be here on behalf of my constituents in Winnipeg South, many of whom are vitally interested in the opportunities presented by this agreement. Some of these people are business people whose livelihood depends on trade and on the security of access to markets in the United States. But there are others who are individuals who depend on salaries and wages and who support the free trade initiative because of the employment options that it will open up for them in the future.

• (1250)

All of them have shown a keen interest in the agreement. The fact that I am here today is evidence of their support for free trade. I am very proud of the people of Winnipeg South for their intelligent assessment of the deal. This is in spite of the vociferous attempts by the Opposition to distort repeatedly the real facts about the Free Trade Agreement.

I must say that I am also very proud of all those other Canadians who so enthusiastically endorsed the agreement in the recent election. I have to commend our Prime Minister and his Government for having the vision, the courage and the leadership to pursue the Free Trade Agreement to its conclusion over the past year or two.

The Free Trade Agreement marks an achievement that will go down in history as a turning point for our nation. It will be seen by our children and by our children's children as the day that Canada came of age, the day that Canada reached its maturity. This coming of age, this new maturity is being marked even now by the nations around the world upon whom we depend for additional trade and upon whom we depend to act as our allies from time to time in various causes. I believe that this signal is vitally important to our future in the global community. Its message will help to determine how we Canadians are positioned in future negotiations affecting Canada's prosperity and well-being.

The Free Trade Agreement is a symbol of Canadian strength. It is a symbol of a new confidence in ourselves as a society with an intrinsic identity. We need not fear competition in a nation of strong, capable and secure men and women who boldly seek out new opportunities. Opportunities are what this agreement is all about—opportunities to sell our hydroelectric power from Manitoba; opportunities to expand our beef, hog and oil-seeds production; and opportunities to increase our exports in aircraft parts, textile and clothing.

For those of us who do business from Manitoba, from Winnipeg, the Free Trade Agreement provides us with a freedom to pursue a prosperous future. We view this freedom, this opportunity, with a great deal of optimism and a great deal of excitement.

In Winnipeg we have a diverse industrial base. We manufacture a tremendous variety of products, all looking for market options that simply cannot be realized in Manitoba's population of just over one million people. We have the potential to produce much, much more.

Currently, about 12 per cent of our labour force is employed in manufacturing. Our local industry is already gearing up to double that number. That is why it is so hard for me to understand the negative and contrary remarks made by members of the Opposition, and that they continue to make about the Free Trade Agreement. Surely, these Hon. Members cannot be serious in opposing an agreement that is filled with so much hope and so much promise for the vast majority of Canadians. I cannot believe they do not care.

In my province there is already a tremendous amount of activity as companies prepare to take advantage of the new opportunities opened up by this Free Trade Agreement. This activity is not confined to Winnipeg. In southern Manitoba, in communities such as Winkler, Steinbach and Altona there are literally dozens of small businesses that see the Free Trade Agreement as their ticket to being big businesses. These people are novices in the world of international trade. Many of them depend right now on exports to the United States to sell their products. They know that the Free Trade Agreement will enhance their opportunities while removing the insecurities presented by a growing protectionist attitude in the United States. These things are true right across western Canada. While Manitoba probably has the largest variety of industries expecting to benefit directly from free trade, the other western provinces have just as much to gain and more.

In the West, we need free trade.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Dobbie: In 1986, our exports to the United States totalled $12 billion. That represents one dollar out of every five in our western economy. One can see that the threat of increasing protectionism in the United States presents a terrifying prospect for our 7.5 million people.

On the other hand, liberalized trade opens the door to expanded markets. Think about Alberta and B.C., which are practically next door to California with its population of over 25 million nestled conveniently in a 4,000 square mile radius. I personally have done business in California.

If anyone thinks for one moment that we Canadians cannot compete in that market or that our products and our services cannot find markets there, then they should think again.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Ms. Dobbie: I have found Californians to be more than receptive to Canadians. In fact, being a Canadian actually gave me an advantage in many cases because my California customers had a very deep-seated respect for Canadian quality and Canadian productivity.

Furthermore, many of them were intrigued by the idea of dealing with a Canadian company. They attached a certain glamour to our foreignness. The same held true for my experience in Washington, D.C., for my experience in Maryland, and for my experiences in New York. Canadian business people have a tremendous opportunity in these markets. Let me tell you, Madam Chairman, our American counterparts are no smarter, no sharper or no tougher than we are in business.

While I am at it, I would like to dispel some of the Opposition's myths about unfair competition from cheaper labour in the United States. In my personal experience it costs as much, and more, to employ people in California as it did in Manitoba, as it did in Ontario, as it did in Alberta or as it did in B.C. Contrary to some of the statements we have heard in this House, American workers are covered by most of the same benefits as are our workers in Canada. Instead of the state subsidizing these costs the burden falls directly on the employer. That means that his bottom line direct labour costs are often higher in Canada than they are in the United States.

The fact is that in the majority of cases, in real terms, labour is not cheaper in the United States. This is not just my experience. A constituent of mine in Winnipeg South who owns an export business with a large distribution network tells me that the hourly rate that he pays for a warehouse worker in Minneapolis is $26.75. Those are U.S. dollars. Another local company which just bought a branch plant in Georgia to complement its local production—and Georgia is the one we hear so much about—soon discovered that labour costs offered absolutely no advantage to doing business there. When the wages and benefits were added up and compared there was very little difference from what it cost to employ workers in Winnipeg. So much for the myths that we have heard perpetrated in this House.

So what an opportunity being next to California presents for British Columbia, where one out of every four jobs has the potential to be affected positively by the Free Trade Agreement. What a tremendous opportunity for Albertans to sell beef and to secure markets for their oil and gas. For Saskatchewan, free trade provides security for agriculture, for petroleum and mine exports. It creates a future for that province's small but diverse and steadily increasing manufactured output.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I apologize, but I must interrupt the Hon. Member at this time.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being 1 p.m., it is my duty to rise, report progress, and request leave to consider the Bill again later this day.

Some Hon. Members: Agreed.

Progress reported.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

CONCEPTION OF PUBLIC INTEREST

Mr. Guy St-Julien (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the landslides that followed the earthquake of November 25 and that forced the interruption of rail traffic on the Senneterre—La Tuque subdivision, the Abitibi region is isolated.

No passenger train has served communities along the line. CN freight trains have been rerouted to Ontario, resulting in a very long detour of 1,300 kilometres.

Mr. Speaker, why not use the Franquet-Chapais line, which is 700 kilometres long, and thus save 600 kilometres of travelling!

CN is not helping Abitibi and Témiscamingue by continuing to ask for the abandonment of the Franquet-Chapais subdivision.

Mr. Speaker, what is the public interest for Canadian National in Abitibi-Témiscamingue and in Quebec?

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

CONCERNS OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLANDERS

Mr. Joe McGuire (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the people of Egmont for the tremendous demonstration of support and confidence they showed in me November 21. I want to assure my constituents that I will do my utmost to vindicate their judgment.

The people of Egmont in particular, and indeed of P.E.I. in general, showed a very serious mistrust of the Free Trade Agreement and a quite legitimate fear of its impact on them. They demonstrated their concerns by voting solidly Liberal during the campaign.

Local issues were also prominent in the campaign. Residents of Summerside have become extremely upset over the past couple of years by an offensive odour which emanates from the Summerside harbour from decaying seaweed, and it is particularly revolting at low tide.

In a deathbed conversion, the former Minister of the Environment acknowledged his sin of omission and committed the Government to solving the problem. In The Guardian of November 16, my Conservative opponent was quoted as saying that the Minister had committed his Government to finding a solution to Summerside's west end odour problem. Summerside residents fully expect the new Acting Minister of the Environment (Mr. Bouchard) to honour the commitment made by his predecessor, and I hope the Government will not choose to ignore this obligation because the voters of Hillsborough decided to terminate Mr. McMillan.

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY

REGINA SUGGESTED AS SITE

Mr. Larry Schneider (Regina—Wascana): Mr. Speaker, I wish to offer a solution to a problem currently causing a split in the federal Liberal Party. In the December 16 Ottawa Citizen, it was reported that "Ottawa-area Liberal Members of Parliament have asked the Prime Minister to locate the new Canadian Space Agency near the National Capital, even though their Leader says it belongs in Montreal".

As I know our Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) would like to contribute to the resolution of this Liberal embarrassment, may I offer the capital city of Saskatchewan—Regina—the sunshine capital of Canada, the city of lots of space, as the site for the new Canadian Space Agency center.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and have a good Christmas!

THE FRANCHISE

VOTING BY PROXY—COST OF MEDICAL CERTIFICATES

Mr. John Harvard (Winnipeg—St. James): Mr. Speaker, Canadians are strong believers in democracy, and we abhor anything that stands in the way of the right to vote.

During the recent election campaign I became aware of a problem facing some disabled voters in my riding of Winnipeg—St. James. Due to their disabilities, these individuals chose to exercise their right to vote by proxy.

However, when these voters attempted to secure a medical certificate, which is a requirement for a proxy vote, they discovered that doctors charged up to $15 for this service. This is not an overwhelming sum, but it is an impediment to the right to vote.

I urge the House to give serious consideration to an amendment to the Canada Elections Act. Voters should not have to consult their bank accounts to determine whether they can afford to vote. Voting is a sacred right in this country, and as parliamentarians we have an obligation to remove any barrier, large or small, that prevents even one Canadian from voting.

VOLUNTARY ORGANIZATIONS

ARMENIAN EARTHQUAKE—TRIBUTE TO SASKATOON RESCUE GROUP

Mr. Ron Fisher (Saskatoon—Dundurn): Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my congratulations and the congratulations of all the people of Saskatoon to the members of the Canadian on-site rescue effort who returned from earthquake devastated Soviet Armenia yesterday.

Their courage and selflessness are a fine example of the long and proud Canadian legacy of humanitarian service on the international stage. As a nation, we have always tried to be quick to respond to human suffering wherever it might be found, and it gives me great pride to know that Saskatoonians have helped to add another page to that legacy.

But, Mr. Speaker, I must confess that I am deeply disappointed in the shamefully inadequate levels of support provided to these individuals by the Canadian Government. Critical supplies such as water and tents were not made available, and organizers were told to put their rations on their Visa accounts.

I urge the Government to take up the challenge offered by the Canadian volunteers and to set up a crack team that could be put on a disaster site anywhere in the world within hours of a crisis, and to ensure that the experiences and expertise of the rescue veterans of Armenia and Mexico City are properly utilized.

SIMCOE CENTRE

AN INVITATION TO ENJOY HURONIA HOSPITALITY

Ms. Edna Anderson (Simcoe Centre): Mr. Speaker, it is indeed an honour for me to rise for the first time in my place as the elected representative of the constituents of Simcoe Centre. I stand today in thanks for the privilege of serving them.

The great riding of Simcoe Centre is a collection of farmland, rolling hills, and streams, nestled between two beautiful bodies of water, Georgian Bay and Lake Simcoe. Tourism, agriculture, and a healthy manufacturing sector serve to provide meaningful employment to a majority of our people.

Allow me, Mr. Speaker, to invite and encourage all Members to enjoy Huronia hospitality and recreational services the residents of Simcoe Centre so willingly provide, particularly now in this season of winter sports.

EMPLOYMENT EQUITY

PUBLIC SERVICE EMPLOYMENT PRACTICES

Ms. Lynn Hunter (Saanich—Gulf Islands): Mr. Speaker, I would like to draw the attention of the House to the hypocrisy of the Conservative Government which claims to support employment equity and fair employment practices for women, the disabled, native Canadians, and visible minorities, and yet is not willing to apply these same principles in its own workforce. The under representation of these groups in the Public Service, particularly in management and professional positions, is so serious that the Canadian Human Rights Commissioner, Max Yalden, has called on five major government Departments—External Affairs, National Defence, Revenue Canada, Transport Canada, and Fisheries and Oceans, to account for their discriminatory hiring and promotion practices.

How can the Government expect the private sector to take its Employment Equity Act seriously when the Government refuses to include the federal Public Service in this legislation and refuses to enforce fair employment practices in its own workforce?

I urge the Government to amend the badly flawed employment equity legislation to include federal public servants and to include real, meaningful and effective enforcement measures, and I urge the federal Government to set an example for all employers by taking real steps to reverse the traditionally discriminatory hiring practices in the Public Service of Canada.

FREE TRADE

ULTIMATE FINALITY

Mr. Michel Champagne (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, the ultimate purpose of free trade is to improve the quality of life of Canadians through stable, long-term job creation.

The Canadian people gave us on November 21st a specific mandate to change our producers' thinking and restore their belief in guaranteed access to a consumer market of 255 million people.

As a responsible Government, we understood that as long as that assurance of perpetual access to a large market is not engraved into the minds of our entrepreneurs, as it is in the United States, Japan or Western Europe, they will reason on the basis of a limited market and will not be able to think really big. They will go and expand somewhere else.

Northern Telecom and so many others companies that invested heavily in the United States over these last few years would not have had to make that strategic move had we had free trade. The jobs would have been created here.

Contrary to the Opposition which is attempting to find replacement programs for those who lose their jobs, this Progressive Conservative Government will go on creating new jobs, and this is the reason why we are in office.

REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT

EXPECTATIONS IN RESTIGOUCHE

Mr. Guy H. Arseneault (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank my constituents in Restigouche for the confidence they showed me during the last election.

There has been a large number of cases of injustice in my constituency, and a definite commitment from this Government is needed to remedy the situation.

[English]

The injustices suffered by the people of Restigouche include the following. Not one part of the riding qualifies for the northern tax allowance benefit; no economic or job replacement strategy was proposed or introduced in my riding to replace job losses due to CN layoffs; the facilities for our fishermen are still not receiving adequate funding from the federal Government; our rural post offices are being threatened by Canada Post's policies.

[Translation]

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the small community of Madran has been awaiting for too long already the renovation of its obsolete bridge. The province of New Brunswick and the CN are committed to share the cost of the project with the Canadian Government, which is still beating around the bush.

• (1410)

I urge the federal Government to take appropriate action to help the citizens of the Restigouche riding and others with similar problems.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT

AUTO PACT PROVISIONS

Mr. Ken Atkinson (St. Catharines): Mr. Speaker, the Free Trade Agreement between the United States and Canada contains an enhanced Auto Pact. Not only have trade irritants been resolved, the Auto Pact now covers replacement parts and tires, and contains a requirement for auto manufacturers to have a 50 per cent Canadian-U.S. content in the cars they produce in order to have duty-free access to the United States.

Auto producers and auto parts manufacturers in the city of St. Catharines are enthusiastic about these provisions in the pact. General Motors and companies such as Hayes-Dana and Thompson Products realize that these items in the Free Trade Agreement will provide them with access to a much larger market and result in stronger companies and more employment in the city of St. Catharines.

The people of St. Catharines and the Niagara Peninsula are very aware of the benefits that will flow to their area as a result of the Free Trade Agreement, and they made this clear on November 21 of this year.

AIRPORTS

HAMILTON AIRPORT—SUGGESTED USE TO HANDLE PEARSON OVERFLOW

Ms. Beth Phinney (Hamilton Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by thanking the residents of Hamilton Mountain for electing me as their representative to Parliament. I promise to represent the interests of my constituents with the utmost attention and devotion.

The point I want to make today concerns the traffic congestion and the insufficient number of air traffic controllers at Pearson International Airport.

The Hon. Minister of State for Transport (Mrs. Martin) told the House that traffic is being well handled through the holiday season. However, yesterday Pearson International reported at least 14 cancellations and lengthy delays, delays of up to 137 minutes, with an average of between 60 and 70 minutes for Air Canada alone.

Hamilton Airport is open for business, with a full and qualified staff ready to handle the overflow from Pearson International. We hope in the interest of air travellers and their safety, and with the full co-operation of the City of Hamilton, that the Minister will take action to redirect the overflow to Hamilton Airport.

Mr. Gilles Loiselle (Langelier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to thank the people of Langelier for the trust they showed in me on November 21st and tell them how proud I am to be representing them in this House.

Mr. Speaker, please allow me to pay tribute to the hundreds of volunteers whose hard work and devotion made my victory possible. I would like to stress, and I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that all of my colleagues will agree with me, the vital role played by these Canadian men and women within our electoral system and also

NATIONAL ENERGY BOARD

NATURAL GAS SUPPLY AND DEMAND STUDY

Mrs. Barbara Sparrow (Calgary Southwest): Mr. Speaker, I want to pay tribute to the National Energy Board, so ably chaired by Mr. Roland Priddle. In March, 1985, the signing of the Western Accord marked the beginning of the end of the disastrous Liberal National Energy Program.

This Government deregulated oil in June, 1985, and we started deregulating natural gas in October, 1985.

On December 15 this year, the National Energy Board released its first natural gas market assessment report on the market based procedure for assessing natural gas export applications. I congratulate the board on its excellent study with respect to supply and demand of natural gas but, more important, I reinforce its strong message that limited pipeline capacity may pose the most serious concern in the near term.

ROLE OF FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

Mr. Alan Redway (Don Valley East): Mr. Speaker, for years and years immigrants and native-born Canadians alike found their jobs on our farms, in our forests, and in our mines. Today, however, both old and new Canadians migrate to our cities because that is where our jobs are now. Our cities have become the new Canadian frontier.

Most Canadians now live on our urban frontier. But, like all frontiers, our cities have their problems, problems with housing, with the environment, transportation, day care, race relations, drugs and the parole system.

The federal Government has a role to play in solving all of these problems, and just as soon as the free trade

THE CONSTITUTIONMEECH LAKE ACCORD

Hon. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, former Prime Minister Trudeau's words were prophetic when he wrote in May, 1987:

Those who have never wanted a bilingual Canada—Quebec separatists and western separatists—get their wish right in the first paragraphs of the Accord, with recognition of 'the existence of French-speaking Canada . . . and English-speaking Canada.' Those Canadians who fought for a single Canada, bilingual and multicultural, can say good-bye to their dream: We are henceforth to have two Canada's, each defined in terms of its language. And because the Meech Lake Accord states that 'Quebec constitutes, within Canada, a distinct society' and that 'the role of the legislature and government to preserve and promote (this) distinct identity . . . is affirmed', it is easy to predict what future awaits anglophones living in Quebec and what treatment will continue to be accorded to francophones living in provinces where they are fewer in number than Canadians of Ukrainian or German origin.

If the Prime Minister (Mr. Mulroney) meant what he said in February, 1984, about the rights of Francophones in Manitoba, then he better awaken to the fact that Meech Lake is not the vehicle to ensure minority language rights in Canada. If he will not, then his words are hollow.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[Translation]

CHARTER OF RIGHTSQUÉBEC ANGLOPHONES' RIGHTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I would like to come back to Bill 178, which I see aims to restrict some rights of the Anglophones in Quebec. My question is for the Prime Minister. Yesterday, he told us that he had not had the time to read the Bill. It is only three pages long; surely he has had the time to read it! Could we know what his position is today?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my position is the same today as it was yesterday. It is exactly the same position as I expressed in the House following questions from the Hon. Member for Shefford and others. There has been no change.

NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—POSITION OF PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is playing hide-and-seek. We will try to get some clarification. On one hand, we have the Secretary of State who supports and advocates the use of the notwithstanding clause. Yesterday, if I understood correctly, once again the Prime Minister in his speech here in this House told us that he was against this section, this notwithstanding clause. Could we know who speaks for the Government, the Prime Minister or the Secretary of State?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I said yesterday that in my opinion, the notwithstanding clause was incompatible with a Charter of Rights and Freedoms. That is a position I have always defended. There is no change in that position. The position I announced yesterday is the Government's. It so happens that since 1981-82, since the Constitution of 1981-82, the provinces now have a "notwithstanding" clause that was granted as part of the constitutional process in 1981-82. The Hon. Member mentions it, he decries it, and I think that he is quite right. But the position that I announced yesterday is the Government's.

USE OF NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE—PRIME MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Jean-Robert Gauthier (Ottawa—Vanier): Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister is still playing hide-and-seek. Is this Government for using the notwithstanding clause? This seems to me to be a very simple question. We have a Secretary of State who is responsible for protecting and promoting minority groups in all provinces, francophones outside Quebec and anglophones in Quebec. The Secretary of State advocates using the notwithstanding or "opting out" clause. The Prime Minister says no, this clause should not be used. I want to know this from the Government: When the Prime Minister says that this clause should not be used, is he speaking for the Government, is he telling the Canadian people that he is for language rights throughout the whole country, wherever they live, that we have rights as minorities, whether we are francophones outside Quebec or anglophones in Quebec?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend's question is troubling, because according to the answers given yesterday and published in Le Devoir:

"Mrs. Finestone congratulated Brian Mulroney for defending minority rights yesterday. Mr. Allmand concluded by saying that he was satisfied with the Prime Minister's statement that the decision of the Court and the two leaders, federal and provincial, should be respected."

That is the very clear position I announced. I communicated with the Premier of Quebec before the decision was made, to tell him that my position is that of the Government and, I thought, of the federal Parliament. The position was . . . It is hard for me to answer since I am being interrupted by the Member for Hamilton East. If you want me to continue on a sensitive subject, Mr. Speaker, I shall try.

So the position I announced yesterday is exactly the one I defend today and the position was hailed and applauded, if I am not mistaken, by the Hon. Members for Mount Royal and Notre-Dame-de-Grâce, who are Liberals, of course, because the position I defended is exactly the one that I have defended since I first entered the House.

Now I call on my friend, the Hon. Member for Ottawa—Vanier, to read carefully not the conclusions that may be drawn from some statements of the Secretary of State but the text of his statement, and the text of this statement in no way contradicts the position I had the honour to announce yesterday.

The position of the federal Government is very simple. We hoped that the Government of Quebec could come up with a bill that would respect the two important aspects raised by the Supreme Court in its decision. That is what we wanted and that is what I said to Mr. Bourassa and I presume that is the position of all Hon. Members.

● (1420)

NOTWITHSTANDING CLAUSE

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should just like to quote to the Prime Minister a statement made in October by his Secretary of State. This is a quotation from La Presse:

This clause . . .

. . . referring to the "notwithstanding" clause . . .

. . . is one of the powers Quebec has kept and it is essential for its survival.

Is the Prime Minister saying he does not agree with that and that he is prepared to correct the Secretary of State? "This clause is one of the powers Quebec has kept and it is essential for its survival." Can one reject that?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I would have to see the text of my friend. Is it the same text indeed? What I see here—

Mr. Kaplan: This text dates back to October.

Mr. Mulroney: If you are referring to a text published in October, I did not see it.

If the Hon. Member would let me look at this text of October or September I will do so and respond in due time.

QUÉBEC TRADITION OF JUSTICE TO ANGLOPHONE MINORITY

Hon. Bob Kaplan (York Centre): I will gladly raise the question tomorrow. Yesterday, however, he spoke with truth of the long and noble tradition of Quebec's justice towards its Anglophone minority. I just want to ask the Prime Minister whether he considers the proposed legislation as being part of that tradition?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): I said yesterday, and I repeated today, what I as Prime Minister of Canada would like to see in that legislation. I mentioned that quite clearly. My suggestion, my position has been endorsed or acclaimed by the Liberal Members because it is indeed a position . . . So the Hon. Member is asking me a question.

Mr. Kaplan: That was before!

[English]

Mr. Mulroney: Apart from commenting on this matter which is a very important matter, the federal Government and Parliament have also taken very important steps in regard to the promotion of English and French minority language rights across the country, which we have done through either the Meech Lake Accord which preserves and enhances very substantially minority rights, or Bill C-72. My hon. friend was a member of the House that dealt with that.

I bring to my hon. friend's attention a comment that we received from Alliance Quebec, and I think it is important because it refers to our responsibility and the commitment of all Hon. Members of the House in regard to the protection of official languages and minorities across Canada. It says:

Oral Questions

Bill C-72 is a major achievement for the promotion of a bilingual vision of Canada. On behalf of Alliance Quebec, I would like to congratulate you and your Government for having worked so hard to ensure passage of this legislation.

Alliance Quebec has supported this Bill because we see in it the beginning of a process to secure the vitality of the official language minority communities across Canada . . .

Again on behalf of the English speaking community of Quebec I would like to express our gratitude for your efforts.

Sincerely,
Royal Orr,
President, Alliance Quebec

QUERY WHETHER PRIME MINISTER SPOKE TO MANITOBA PREMIER

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. Yesterday at the Legislative Assembly the Premier of Manitoba withdrew his constitutional resolution. As a result of that action we are now facing a constitutional crisis. Did the Prime Minister of Canada speak directly to the Manitoba Premier? If so, what did the two heads of Government talk about? Is there a plan to pursue the constitutional reform process?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Naturally, Mr. Speaker, I deplore the decision made yesterday by the Premier of Manitoba to act as he did without formal notice. However, I do not agree that the situation can be described as a crisis. There is no crisis in Canada, but we do have serious difficulties caused by linguistic tensions. And such was the situation in the early days following our country's foundation 121 years ago. One hundred years from now, whoever happens to be Prime Minister of Canada will also have to deal with linguistic tensions and difficulties. The stakes and the challenge for all of us is trying to do our utmost to find a fair and honourable way of settling these linguistic tensions and challenges for all Canadians.

[English]

FIRST MINISTERS—REQUEST FOR EARLY MEETING

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I do not disagree with the words that the Prime Minister has used, and I suspect all Hon. Members of the House would agree with him, but to be frank it seems to me that they are beside the point at this moment. I do not want to quibble about the use of the word "crisis". I said that there is a certain crisis. The reality is, as I am sure the Prime Minister understands, that we have what can certainly be called an impasse in the constitutional reform process that could rapidly become extremely serious. Let me put it that way.

Given the commitment of the Prime Minister and of all Parties in this House to serious constitutional reform being proceeded with on a thoughtful but speedy basis now that we have been involved in it for the past few years, has the Prime Minister, in his conversation with the Premier of the Province of Manitoba, requested, for example an early meeting of the First Ministers so that we would get the very important matter of constitutional reform back on track?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is Canadians who exercise positions of leadership in this area who seek to conclude a constitutional process, and my hon. friend supported the Meech Lake Accord as did the Liberal Party. We know full well that Canada is incomplete as long as Quebec has been left in the role of a bystander. That is why we have all worked so hard to try to find a formula that would bring Québec back into the Canadian constitutional family so that the family could then grow and prosper together.

It is, therefore, important that leaders resist the temptation outside this House to blame everything on the Meech Lake Accord. What happened in Manitoba yesterday, the suggestion that there is a tie-in between what happened elsewhere on the Meech Lake Accord, is very regrettable and very misleading because there is no tie-in. In point of fact, under the Meech Lake Accord, Canada's linguistic duality will be recognized in the Constitution for the first time.

The existence of French-speaking and English-speaking Canadians living together throughout the country will be affirmed as a fundamental characteristic of our federation. As a result, the Constitution, including the Charter of Rights, and linguistic and educational rights in particular, will have to be interpreted in light of this fundamental reality.

I remember comments from both sides of the House. One of the reasons it was so strongly endorsed by all Members of the House of Commons was that members of all Parties believed very strongly that by bringing Quebec into the Canadian Confederation we did so in a manner which strengthened the rights of minorities across the country.

There will always be challenges. There will always be attempts to vitiate those rights and that is why this Parliament, the Leaders of all Parties, have been particularly vigilant in this regard, as we ought to be.

Ms. Copps: That is not what you said in the election campaign, Mulroney.

Mr. Mulroney: I come to my friend's question. When I was obliged to roll over the First Ministers' Conference that had been foreseen for Calgary, I wrote to the Premiers on October 7 indicating my intention to convene a meeting of First Ministers early in the mandate. I expect that such a meeting of First Ministers will take place in the first quarter, probably in February or March, and clearly this will be a matter of important consideration.

MEETING OF FIRST MINISTERS IN NEW YEAR

Hon. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, if I understood the Prime Minister's last words, that is an encouraging sign.

Just so we are clear on this, the Premier of the Province of Quebec has made a statement—if he was quoted accurately in the last 24 hours—that he would not be attending a subsequent meeting until the Meech Lake Accord had been approved. On the other hand, we have had the Premier of Manitoba making rather extreme statements.

Given the constructive role that all three federal Parties have played in this constitutional process in the last few years and hoping that that will continue, do I understand the Prime Minister clearly when he says there will be a meeting in the new year and that will be or will have as its central concern constitutional reform process?

Second, has he had an undertaking, for example, from the two Premiers I have just mentioned that they would be willing to attend such a meeting?

Right Hon. Brian Mulroney (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. I have no undertaking from the Premiers. I wrote to them in October. My expectation is that if they were invited to attend a constitutional conference they would likely attend.

It is very clear for anybody who cares to see that until Quebec is brought back into the constitutional fold there shall be constitutional paralysis in this country. There shall be no justice for our aboriginal peoples. There will be no Senate reform. There is a whole series of events that will be beyond the reach of this Parliament and this country, beginning with the basic justice that ought to be brought, for example, to our aboriginal peoples.

Oral Questions

That is why so many Members of this House worked so diligently to try to build a formula, imperfect though it was, that would heal the wounds of 1981-82 and make Canada whole again. That is exactly what we sought to do. This is exactly what the Meech Lake Accord did, and this is what we hope the philosophy of that Accord will ensure in the future. I know that I will have the support of my hon. friend and the Leader of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition in pursuing those objectives with the Premiers of Canada.

CANADIAN SPACE AGENCY

DAVID FLORIDA LABORATORY—NEWSPAPER'S ALLEGATION

Ms. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. On December 14, 1987, the Minister of State for Science and Technology said that the Government would create a space agency to act as a co-ordinator of the research and scientific space projects of the line Departments of the Canadian Government. One of these is the David Florida Laboratory in this region.

In the Citizen today we see that, contrary to the Minister's assurances, the Government is planning to break up and uproot the David Florida Laboratory, one of the cornerstones of Canada's space program, at a cost to the taxpayers of $200 million, the entire annual budget of the National Space Program.

Will the Prime Minister explain to the House the contradiction between the Minister's statement and the plan revealed today to move the David Florida Laboratory?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, first, if I am not mistaken, it is the Liberal Party's position and the position of its Leader to have the space agency located in Montreal.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. de Cotret: It has been announced by the Leader of the Opposition on a number of occasions, although no decision has been made by the Government.

As to the second issue, I would only advise my hon. friend to search for the facts rather than for fiction. We never had any intention, we do not have any intention, we never had any plans nor do we have any plans to move any part of the laboratory to Montreal. That is pure fiction created from who knows where, from some report, that was never asked by myself or my colleague in the Department of Science and Technology.

Where the story that appeared in the media this morning came from is really more a the figment of the author's imagination than from any kind of government decision or action contemplated in the past, in the present, or in the future.

GOVERNMENT POSITION

Ms. Marlene Catterall (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, that is not very satisfying to the workers—

Some Hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has the floor.

Ms. Catterall: There may be a legitimate argument—I do not accept it, but there may be—about where the space agency as a co-ordinating body should be located, but there is no debate that uprooting—

Mr. Beatty: What is Turner's policy? Do you support your Leader?

Ms. Copps: How is your nuclear submarine program, guys?

Mr. Speaker: The Hon. Member has been given the floor. I would ask that Hon. Members extend the appropriate courtesies to the Member. The Hon. Member will proceed with her question.

Ms. Catterall: There is no debate that uprooting and dislocating space research could set back the space program in Canada by three to ten years. The Prime Minister said yesterday—

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Ms. Catterall: —that there would be no Blenkarn bulldozer ploughing jobs out of this region.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Ms. Catterall: He said that public servants would not be victimized for voting.

Some Hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Andre: Section 359 of Beauchesne's, read it.

Ms. Catterall: My constituents want to know if the Government is even considering this senseless and destructive move of families and jobs. How far will it go to punish the people of this region for voting against the Government?

Some Hon. Members: Sit down.

Ms. Catterall: How many jobs is it prepared to move?

Hon. Robert de Cotret (Minister of Regional Industrial Expansion and Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, it is so obvious that the supplementary question was written before the answer to the first question. It is difficult to answer twice.

There is absolutely no question of uprooting. There is no question of moving any facilities from Ottawa to Montreal. I have said that very clearly. There is no question. It was never on the Government's list. It was never even studied. We did not look at it. We did not think about it. It is absolutely not in the cards.

• (1440)

There is no delay in the space program. We have just renegotiated with the European Space Agency for a further ten-year membership in that agency. We are participating in the Hermes program. We have just signed new agreements with NASA to participate in new programs in space.

We are moving ahead rapidly and effectively in this area. We will not uproot you. There has never been any question about uprooting you. Don't worry about it.

Ms. Copps: Don't be so patronizing.

PAROLE

TORONTO INQUEST FINDINGS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Solicitor General and it concerns the coroner's inquest into the brutal rape and murder of Tema Conter in Toronto.

In his charge to the jury Chief Coroner Ross Bennet criticized the federal Government for ignoring crucial recommendations made at a similar inquest three years ago into the murder of Celia Ruygrok in Ottawa. At the inquest the Chief Coroner said: "Tema Conter could be alive today if the Government acted on those previous recommendations".

Oral Questions

Would the Acting Solicitor General explain to the House and to the family of Tema Conter why his Ministry failed to adopt and fulfil the recommendations coming out of the Celia Ruygrok inquest three years ago?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence and Acting Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to do so, because it is a very important issue.

I can inform the House and the Hon. Member that, of some 39 recommendations that were made in the case of the Ruygrok killing, some 25 of those recommendations have been implemented to date and some 14 are in progress at the present time. As I pointed out, most of the recommendations have been implemented. The remainder are being actively worked on, but are not yet complete because of their complexity, and in some cases we needed to co-ordinate our efforts with provincial Governments and with the private sector.

RELEASE OF PSYCHOPATH ON UNESCORTED PASS

Mr. John Nunziata (York South—Weston): Mr. Speaker, I repeat that the Chief Coroner said that Tema Conter would be alive today had it not been for the negligence of the Government.

Can the Acting Solicitor General explain to the family of Tema Conter how it was possible for a convicted murderer, a convicted rapist, a diagnosed psychopath, to be on a 48-hour unescorted pass while in the middle of a 25-year sentence for his crimes? Can the Minister explain to the family of Tema Conter how it was possible for that man to be walking the streets?

Hon. Perrin Beatty (Minister of National Defence and Acting Solicitor General of Canada): Mr. Speaker, as I indicated earlier, the majority of the recommendations that were made by the coroner's jury in the case of the Ruygrok killing have been put in place. The others are in train at the present time. It obviously takes time to do it, because of the importance of co-ordinating those actions with private sector authorities and also with authorities at the provincial level.

We will be studying very closely all of the recommendations from the jury in the Tema Conter case.

Mr. Nunziata: We have heard it all before, Perrin.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, the Hon. Member asked a question and does not give me the courtesy to respond. I wonder whether he would show the same courtesy to me as we extend to him.

We will be studying all of the recommendations in the most recent inquest. We will be making a report during the time period prescribed by the jury. We will be taking every appropriate action to ensure that public safety is maintained, at the same time as we try to ensure that the best aspects of the correctional service and the principle of the National Parole Board be maintained.

Mr. Nunziata: We heard the same things three years ago. It's all rhetoric.

INDUSTRY

NORTHERN TELECOM—RECRUITMENT OF ENGINEERS TO WORK IN ATLANTA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister for International Trade. Northern Telecom has denied that the closure of its highly profitable Aylmer plant reflects a shift of Canadian jobs to its money-losing Atlanta plant, and apparently the Government believes that denial.

We have recently learned that 12 engineers from the Aylmer plant were actively recruited and have since in fact moved to the Atlanta plant and are working there. Is the Minister aware of this fact, and what action does the Government intend to take in response?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, I was not aware of the piece of information that the hon. gentleman is sharing with the House.

Northern Telecom is a privately owned company. It is not government owned. I do not see that the Government is in any position to order it as to where it should transfer its employees, or where they should operate or work from, or what is best for the productivity or efficiency of the company. I will see that inquiries are made to get the exact plans of the company.

DEVELOPMENT OF TECHNOLOGY IN CANADA

Mr. Howard McCurdy (Windsor—Lake St. Clair): Mr. Speaker, as the Minister knows, Northern Telecom is not an ordinary company. As a matter of fact, yesterday the Minister stated that it has become one of the foremost companies in the technological future of

Oral Questions

Canada, largely because its research and development have been heavily subsidized by Canadian taxpayers and telephone subscribers.

Is this to be the Canadian future under the Free Trade Agreement? Will the technologists and technology developed in Canada at Canadian expense instead of sustaining jobs in Canada produce jobs in the United States, or will the Government act to change these circumstances, such that Canadians will have the jobs in Canada which ought to be produced here by the technology for which Canadians paid?

Hon. John C. Crosbie (Minister for International Trade): Mr. Speaker, Northern Telecom is one of the foremost of our privately-owned Canadian companies. I notice that 11 per cent of its sales goes to research and development, which is a great precedent and example for companies in Canada, either publicly or privately owned, to follow.

This is a country that basically has a free enterprise sector and a privately-owned sector outside the control and operation of the Government. That is the way we want to keep it. Northern Telecom has to decide for itself, just like AT&T or any other company, what it has to do to stay competitive and efficient, and to press forward in order that it can employ more people here in Canada and abroad. These are decisions that it has to make.

Mr. McCurdy: Move to the States. That's what the FTA is all about, right?

Mr. Crosbie: In the meantime our programs to assist with its retraining or whatever might be required for employees will supplement its program. I believe that the company itself is going to spend $2.5 million to retrain in both Canada and in the United States. These effects on Northern Telecom have nothing whatsoever to do with the U.S.—Canada Free Trade Agreement.

Some Hon. Members: Oh, no! Oh, no!

FORESTRYFEDERAL-ONTARIO RESOURCE DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENT

Mr. John A. MacDougall (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Minister of Forestry. In March, 1989, the five-year federal-provincial forest resource management development fund will be coming to a conclusion with the Province of Ontario.

Can the Minister tell the House, and those who are involved in the industry, what plans the Government has to sit down with the province to come up with another five-year proposal?

Hon. Frank Oberle (Minister of State (Science and Technology) and Acting Minister of State (Forestry): Mr. Speaker, preliminary discussions have been ongoing for some time with the Province of Ontario and five other provinces whose agreements expire at the end of this fiscal year.

Presently we are considering the best and most effective way to deliver on the strong federal commitment to forestry, whether that is through a future generation of FRDAS or in another way. In all cases we would want to insist that any resources that will be generated by the federal Government will be incremental to that of the provinces. We want to ensure that future agreements are consistent with the traditional role of the federal Government in terms of research, and the renewal and protection of our forests. I am certain that with the response we are receiving from the provinces we will achieve our objective.

TRADEU.S. MARINE MAMMALS PROTECTION ACT—PROHIBITION ON IMPORTATION OF CANADIAN PRODUCTS

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiaq): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister for International Trade. An important trade injustice for Canada's Inuit people is the United States Marine Mammals Protection Act of 1972 which prohibits the importation of sealskin, polar bear skins, ivory, ivory carvings, and whale bone into the United States from Canada.

The Free Trade Agreement has not changed the situation. Northern and native businesses still cannot export such products into the United States. Can the Minister tell the House whether the Canadian negotiators tried to obtain an exemption from this law during the trade negotiations?

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western

Oral Questions

Economic Diversification): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the Hon. Member to the House. His question is an important one for those citizens of Canada who have traditionally relied on that resource as a source of their income. It was not within the ability of the negotiators during the free trade discussions with the United States to have an exemption to the Marine Mammals Protection Act.

• (1450)

As the Hon. Member knows, this Government, in cooperation with parliamentarians in both opposition Parties, has strongly, throughout Europe and in the United States, made representations to support that important economic industry for Canadians, both those north and south of 60.

REQUEST THAT CANADIAN GOVERNMENT SEEK EXEMPTION

Mr. Jack Iyerak Anawak (Nunatsiak): The Minister will be aware that the native people of Alaska are exempted from this Act, and the Canadian native peoples need a similar exemption.

What steps is the Government prepared to take to remove this injustice to Canada's native peoples? Will it commit itself to raising this issue on an urgent basis with the U.S. Government?

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Bill McKnight (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and Minister of Western Economic Diversification): Mr. Speaker, this issue has been raised with the Government of the United States, as it has been before the European Parliament and the Parliament of the U.K.

The matter of trade in those species is not just a question of trade for the native peoples of Canada but for Canadians generally. Canadians are denied access to that market in the U.S.

Mrs. Finestone: The Alaskans have it.

Mr. McKnight: I hear the Hon. Member for Mount Royal saying that the Alaskans have it. They also happen to be American citizens.

Mrs. Finestone: If they have it, we should have it.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE ACT

NEWFOUNDLAND FISHERMEN—REQUEST FOR BENEFITS AMENDMENT

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Employment and Immigration and has to do with bringing about more equitable treatment under the Unemployment Insurance Act for Newfoundland fishermen, and other fishermen.

Inshore fishermen throughout Newfoundland and Labrador are finding it more and more difficult to accept the rather unique and different manner in which they are treated under the Unemployment Insurance Act whereby they receive unemployment insurance benefits for a specified period and not when they are in fact out of work.

For a specified period starting in mid-November and lasting through until May, they receive unemployment insurance benefits.

They believe, and with good reason, that this is discriminatory.

My question for the Minister is this. Will the Minister pursue the relatively simple matter of amending the existing regulations so as to make fishermen eligible for unemployment insurance at the completion of the normal fishing season, when in fact they are out of work?

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I thank the Hon. Member for his question on this very important subject.

Let me say at the outset that we have made a real effort to assist the fishermen of Newfoundland, and in fact that is one of the reasons why there is a differentiation in the entrance requirements for those fishermen from 14 weeks to 10 weeks. We have also come up with a special program for the fisheries sector in that when there has been a problem with the catch, they are eligible for assistance.

We are in constant communication with the Department of Fisheries, the industry and the Government of the Province of Newfoundland in connection with this whole area, and we will continue to engage in that type of consultation.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Fred J. Mifflin (Bonavista—Trinity—Conception): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the Minister to tell the

Oral Questions

House when something positive will be done in respect of this particular situation, a situation which the inshore fishermen find terribly irksome, and difficult if not impossible to understand.

Hon. Barbara McDougall (Minister of Employment and Immigration): This is an area on which we are constantly working. Every year we deal with whatever the difficulties are in the fisheries industry. If difficulties arise, we endeavour to address those difficulties.

It is not something that is simply dropped off the table. It is something that we are constantly working on, and when there is a situation that requires our attention, we immediately act on it.

HOUSINGONTARIO—SHORTAGE OF SUBSIDIZED HOUSING

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault-Ste-Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Housing. Despite his statements during the recent election campaign that there are no homeless in Toronto—and I trust he will not add Ontario and Canada to that list—there is a desperate shortage of subsidized housing in Ontario. In some areas there is a two-year waiting list, and that list will grow unless the Government acts immediately.

I would ask the Minister to reaffirm his predecessor's commitment—I repeat, commitment—to increase, by 7,000, subsidized housing units in Ontario immediately.

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): Let me say at the outset that my predecessor did not make a commitment to add an additional 7,000 subsidized housing units. That statement is factually incorrect. What my predecessor did do was to set a new budget for social housing in Ontario, calling for expenditures this year of well over $500 million, with almost $250 million of that being spent in the Metropolitan Toronto area.

That money has been taken up by the Province of Ontario, and they are back now asking for more money.

The Government of Ontario made commitments knowing that the money was not there, and now it is blaming the federal Government for the lack of funds.

Once the provincial Minister of Housing begins to feel any heat on this issue, she turns around and blames the federal Government for the lack of funds.

An Hon. Member: Oh, come on!

An Hon. Member: She is absolutely right.

MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Steve Butland (Sault-Ste-Marie): I am reminded of a line from a favourite Christmas poem: "I have promises to keep and miles to go before I sleep."

Mr. Clark (Yellowhead): A Christmas poem!

An Hon. Member: That is not a Christmas poem.

Mr. Butland: I suggest that the Minister offers just a half a promise.

The Minister's answer to the homeless, then, is "no". And in the Christmas spirit, shelter for people—this is not a Christmas wish list; it is a necessity. It is housing for those without homes.

My supplementary question for the Minister is this. What specific answer does he have for the homeless in this country, and when will his Draconian attitude toward the homeless change?

Hon. John McDermid (Minister of State (International Trade) and Minister of State (Housing)): First of all, I suggest that the Hon. Member get his facts correct. My statement was that the homeless need permanent homes, not temporary homes. The goal of this Government is to provide the homeless with permanent homes. That is the goal of this Government, the goal of our Prime Minister, and the goal toward which we will be working.

It is a multi-faceted problem, a very serious problem. It is a health problem; it is a family problem. It goes much deeper than just providing temporary shelter, as the Hon. Member knows. Our goal is to find a permanent solution for the homeless.

An Hon. Member: Meanwhile, let them freeze.

AIRPORTSPEARSON INTERNATIONAL AIRPORT—PEAK HOUR FLIGHT PATTERNS

Mr. Harry Chadwick (Brampton—Malton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Transport and it relates to the situation at the Pearson International Airport.

In the light of the announcement by the Ministry that flight patterns during peak hours at Pearson International Airport would be changed to effect a dual runway system effective May 8 of this year for a six-month trial period, I would ask the Minister to let us know the outcome of that trial. And further, will the system continue, and for what period of time?

Ms. Copps: How long will the chaos continue?

Hon. Shirley Martin (Minister of State (Transport)): I thank the Hon. Member for his concern in respect of this particular matter. I can confirm that the trial system of which he speaks was put in place in order to increase runway capacity at Pearson International Airport. I can also confirm that it has been successful and will remain in place.

DAY CAREOPPORTUNITY TO INTRODUCE BILL WITHOUT LIMITS ON FEDERAL FUNDS PAID TO PROVINCES

Mrs. Diane Marleau (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

Thousands of Canadian children have been neglected by the Conservative Government.

During their previous mandate the Conservatives attempted to create a day care system under which a ceiling would be set on funds paid to the provinces by the central Government.

Mr. Speaker, does the Minister intend to introduce day care legislation which would not set a limit on funds earmarked for such services in this country?

[English]

Hon. Jake Epp (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, let me first make the point that this Government has not neglected children, and any statement to the effect that it has is an absolutely incorrect statement.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The fact is, government moneys going to families with dependent children have increased over the life of the Progressive Conservative Government in this country.

We have heard the criticism that family allowance payments were partially deindexed in the past. However, the critics do not factor in the child tax credit. Once the child tax credit is taken into consideration, one finds that total benefits in 1986, as a result of budgets brought down by this Government, have increased. To cite some figures, family allowance payments amounted to $780.48, and that, added to the child tax credit, a credit which is fully indexed to inflation, translates into total benefits of $1,578. For 1987, that increased to $1,642.40; and in 1988, it increases to $1,714.16.

So, the argument that this Government has done nothing for Canadian families, for Canadian children, is patently false.

In answer to her question in relation to the bringing in of a child care program that has no limits to it, I say to the Hon. Member, with all respect, that I do not think that any Government will come in with a child care program that does not have some spending requirement and some spending projections. That is absolutely important for proper fiscal planning, whether it be by the municipal, provincial, or federal level of government.

● (1500)

It was an expensive program that we came forward with, and if she and others feel the only way to solve this issue is through unlimited funds, I do not think that is in keeping either with the fiscal framework of the Government or the fiscal ability of Canadian taxpayers.

CANADA-UNITED STATES FREE TRADE AGREEMENT IMPLEMENTATION ACT*MEASURE TO ENACT

The House resumed consideration in committee of Bill C-2, an Act to enact the Canada-United States Free Trade Agreement Implementation Act—Mr. Crosbie—Mrs. Champagne in the Chair

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: When the committee was interrupted at one o'clock p.m., Clause 2 of the

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Bill was under consideration and the Hon. Member for Winnipeg South had the floor.

On Clause 2—Definitions

Ms. Dobbie: Madam Chairman, to continue, this free trade deal is vital for western Canadians. The agreement offers us the opportunity to escape from the limited role we have enjoyed for such a long time as farmers, loggers and miners. It does that while securing our agricultural marketing systems, including our supply-management schemes, for as long as we want them. The Free Trade Agreement allows us to develop our manufacturing base, confident in the access we have secured to the huge American market which is so geographically close and which makes so much sense for us as a place to access new customers.

In Manitoba there are literally dozens of companies who compete internationally and feel free trade will give them the opportunity they need for growth. That opportunity is simply not available right now. I know of a printer of lottery tickets, for example, who has just about reached his maximum potential for sales in Canada. Currently he supplies a small but growing international market, but his largest sales opportunity is south of the border. He claims he could double his size by accessing the Chicago market alone. He knows the sales are there because he has the only installation of its kind in North America and his product has proven absolutely secure and reliable. Yet without the Free Trade Agreement, that opportunity will remain unexploited. His product is currently barred from entering the U.S. This is an old and entirely reliable printing firm and it looks to the Free Trade Agreement for its future in spite of assertions that printing is an "at risk" industry.

There are many other similar stories. In the textile industry, another industry supposedly at risk, the president of a local Winnipeg firm tells me that over 90 per cent of his product is already being exported. Free trade will simply magnify his sales capacity, and his only regret is the lengthy phase-out period of U.S. tariffs on the products he produces. Outside Winnipeg, in the tiny community of Steinback, there is a window manufacturer, the third largest in Canada. He is currently expanding his plant, gearing up for greatly increased production. He, too, looks to Chicago as the natural target for his first sales expansion.

These are comparatively small businesses and we all too frequently hear this agreement is a deal for big businesses, its benefits will accrue to the giant multinational corporations. This is simply not true as I know from first-hand experience. Last year I served a term as President of the Winnipeg Chamber of Commerce. Over 85 per cent of that organization's 1700-member firms employ fewer than 15 people. Yet the membership is overwhelmingly in favour of the Free Trade Agreement and has been since the idea was first announced.

Small manufacturers, small business, small service people, all see the opportunities for expansion if only to supply the medium to large-size firms that will access the trade opportunities in the U.S. on a first-hand basis. Everyone, from the fellow who supplies the ink to my printer constituent, to those who service his computers, can grasp the concept that his growth will magnify their own business potential.

I guess that is enough on business because we tend to overlook the consumer, the ultimate winners in this deal, the man in the street, our friend and neighbour, the worker, the everyday people our opponents like to talk about all the time. Those people are what this agreement is all about: a better lifestyle for all Canadians. That will be achieved through more jobs, lower prices, and access to a wider variety of goods of a higher quality as competitive market forces work their magic.

The source opportunity for price reductions will come from the removal of the tariffs themselves. On certain consumer products this can be a very substantial amount, 20 per cent to 25 per cent for clothing and footwear, for example. Yet the real savings will grow out of competition in the market-place. Business, which can readily understand the economies of scale, will find ways of reducing costs in order to meet competitive pricing in the race to increase sales volume. Increased sales volume means more product, which means more people working to produce the product, which means more money to make more purchases, and so on.

I know this is pretty simple stuff for many of my hon. colleagues, but the debate we have listened to over the past few days would indicate there are those among us who do not comprehend that the free market system is the ultimate answer to prosperity for the majority and a better life for all.

In real terms, the consumer, our friends, neighbours and associates, will reap substantial financial benefits from the Free Trade Agreement. For example, the Department of Finance model places real income gains at 2.5 per cent, while the Economic Council of Canada estimates these gains may go as high as 3.3 per cent. In dollars and cents, according to a January 1988 Consumer and Corporate Affairs study, this will mean $450 a year for low income families and as much as $800 a year for middle and higher income families.

These are some of the tangible, quantifiable benefits we can see and touch. Harder to estimate are the secondary benefits resulting from increased purchasing power and higher consumption in a more affluent society. Who can measure the social benefits that will flow from a society capable of shucking the burden of debt we inherited four years ago? Who can predict the cultural advances that will emerge in a new era of economic stability and confidence?

This is an exciting time for Canada, a time of hope and a time of progress. This agreement exemplifies the kind of Canada we will have tomorrow. It will be a Canada where the promises of opportunity and prosperity which brought our immigrant forefathers to this northern land will be fulfilled.

Let us grasp the opportunities provided to us by this agreement and use them to claim the 21st century for Canada and for our children.

• (1510)

Ms. Callbeck: Madam Chairman, it is with the greatest humility and respect for the traditions of this House that I rise today in the first session of Canada's Thirty-fourth Parliament. I feel truly privileged as a Canadian to have been chosen by the people of the district of Malpeque, Prince Edward Island, to represent them and to bring their concerns to this House.

Parliament is the living heart of our democracy. It is the place where great decisions are made that affect the course of our history as a country. It touches the lives of every individual Canadian.

I am conscious of my responsibility as a parliamentarian to weigh every issue in terms of the effects on my country and in terms of the effects on the lives of the people of Malpeque. Those people are my special responsibility. I see it as my duty to serve their interests.

My district has been blessed by nature. It is bounded by the waters of Northumberland Strait on one side and by the Gulf of St. Lawrence on the other. In between lies some of the finest farmland in Canada, the rolling fields of fertile soil where the potatoes are the prime agricultural crop and dairy farms with herds of purebred cattle. Family farms for the present generation struggle to maintain an existence on landholdings that may go back 200 years.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

On both of Malpeque's coasts fishing villages dot the coastline. The boats go out each day that weather permits in the fishing season. They go for lobster, herring, mackerel and groundfish. Theirs, too, is an uncertain existence in the face of fishing quotas, declining stocks and on-shore markets.

The farm communities and the fishing villages are the sturdy backbone of our rural society in Malpeque. They have a deep and lasting bond with the land and the sea. They depend upon our natural environment to return a living to them year after year.

It is the unspoiled and tranquil nature of our environment that attracts many people working in Summerside and Charlottetown to live in Malpeque. It is the same natural beauty that attracts so many summer visitors to Cavendish and the other magnificent beaches on our north and south shores.

But now the people of Malpeque are threatened. They and all that they hold dear have been threatened by the trade agreement signed by the Government with the United States of America.

On November 21, the people of Malpeque, like the majority of Prince Edward Islanders and the majority of Canadians, said they did not like the trade deal. They said they wanted none of it. They said that their future as Canadians working and living in a sovereign nation was imperilled by the agreement. I am well aware that the Government won enough seats in the election to carry out its trade agreement through this House. So I suppose that is what will happen.

But my concern and the concerns of the people of Malpeque lie not only with what is included in this agreement but also with what is not included, for example, a definition of what constitutes an unfair subsidy. Up to this point that definition seems to have been set by the Americans. It goes this way: "What we do is perfectly acceptable, and what you Canadians do is not". That seems to be the essence of the Mitchell amendment. Actually, the Senator from Maine may have done us a service by signalling what the future will be like if the Americans have their way with us in the coming negotiations over subsidies.

Senator Mitchell has targeted 35 government assistance programs to our farm community which he says constitute unfair subsidy. He wants us to get rid of all of them. He wants our country to become a dumping ground for surplus American farm commodities—never mind that those commodities are produced with assistance from the United States Government, and never mind that it costs our farmers more to produce farm products because they have to contend with much more severe conditions in climate.

The potato farmers of Malpeque are justly proud of the quality of their product. They sell their crops in Canada, in the United States and around the world. Prince Edward Island potatoes are second to none grown anywhere else. But this trade agreement suggests that the present duty that each country imposes will be removed over 10 years. That is fine, but the Americans want more. They are not satisfied with that clause. Now they have issued implementing legislation which authorizes the President to negotiate import quotas on Canadian products and Canadian potatoes. That is a clear signal to me and to the farm people of Malpeque that as soon as we achieve any level of success in exporting potatoes to the United States they are ready to put the clamps on us.

Senator Mitchell's amendments also go after the fishermen. Our fishery and theirs operate from two different philosophies. We manage our fishery; they do not. We assist our fishermen because we manage our fishery. We tell them when they can go fishing. We tell them how much of which kind of fish they can catch. We recognize that in an era of high costs our fishermen are limited to what kind of living they can make by man-made and natural restrictions. But that is not the American way; it is our way of dealing with a Canadian situation.

The fishermen of Malpeque and of the Atlantic provinces are entitled to Canadian solutions to Canadian problems. They will settle for nothing less. They will not accept the American way of doing things in Canada.

The question of what constitutes fair government assistance to agriculture, fishermen and other industries in the Atlantic area is a central issue in this agreement. After two years of negotiations with the Americans the Government was unable to reach an accord, even though it was one of the main objectives of the entire exercise.

We are about to see this trade deal become a reality in Canadian life. We still do not know how this central issue will be decided.

We need regional development programs in the Atlantic region. We need them so that we can help ourselves. We need them so that we can have the opportunity of participating in the prosperity of more favoured regions of the country. We are entitled to those programs because, as Canadians, we are entitled to the benefits of belonging to Canadian society stretching from east to west from one ocean to the other and northward to the Arctic.

Already there is evidence that the regional development programs are being shaped to fit the American view. Senior civil servants have said so. I have no reason to disbelieve them.

That cannot be allowed to happen in subsidy negotiations. We must preserve the right to shape our society as we see fit. We must be prepared to fight for Canadian solutions to Canadian social and economic problems.

There is every indication that it will be us Canadians who will dance to the American tune in the name of harmonization. It is this prospect that alarms the Leader of my Party, my peers in the opposition benches and Canadians across the country.

It is not just a simple matter of retraining our people. It is not even a matter of compensating them in some way or other. It is a matter of a fundamental right as a Canadian to be able to live, work and enjoy the benefits of the Canadian society we have built over the last 120 years.

The people of Malpeque, like the people in other parts of Atlantic Canada, want no more than what is their right by virtue of being Canadian. This Government has negotiated a trade deal that puts those basic rights in peril.

The performance of the Government in protecting our social programs and defending our right to enact assistance programs as we see fit will be watched by every Canadian. I believe the trade agreement is a bad deal for Canada and for my district. The people of Malpeque said so when they chose me as their representative in this House. I see it as my duty to protect their interests as the full impact of the trade deal becomes apparent.

This is what I intend to do as one individual Member of the Parliament of Canada.

• (1520)

Mr. Cooper: Madam Chairman, I am pleased to have an opportunity to enter into the debate this afternoon on this very important issue, this issue that has been the focus of attention for Canadians for several months now. As we go into this particular stage of the discussion on this Bill, it is interesting to look back and find where we were before. We sat at committee stage on this subject, the subject of free trade, a total of 16 days in the legislative committee. It was 24 days in the External

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

Affairs Committee. Those committee hearings added up to 300 hours. As a result of that, the issue has been very much the focus of Canadians. We are repeating that process again today. We repeat it simply because we have gone through an election period. We, as a Government, have received a mandate to proceed on this particular piece of legislation, because it was the central issue of this last campaign.

I have been surprised in the debate over the last couple of days to listen to Members from the Opposition who say time and time again that a majority of Canadians said "no" to free trade, that this Government has no mandate. Yet if we as Members in this House are to apply their rules of mandate that they seem to be using in their particular arguments, we would find that very few people in this House of Commons have a mandate to be here to represent their people. There are very few people in this room today who have over 50 per cent of their electorate backing them. Does that mean that they do not have a mandate to speak for their people? Does that mean that they do not have a right to come in here to represent their constituents by way of voting in this institution or speaking in this House of Commons? Of course not. It would be the height of absurdity if we were to accept that kind of an argument.

Then why should the opposition Members expect the Canadian people to swallow that argument hook, line and sinker all of a sudden because we did not receive over 50 per cent of the vote in this last election? This Government does have a mandate. It has a mandate by every fair standard that has been applied in the country and throughout the history of Parliaments that have existed throughout the world.

I want to touch on three or four items that I think are essential to the debate. The perspective that I want to bring to the discussion is that of the Member of Parliament for the riding of Peace River, an Albertan and a western Canadian. I believe that this particular debate is an issue that has been absolutely fundamental to western Canadians for a long time. If I were to stop and ask western Canadians what has been the one issue that has been a frustration, a point of anger, not in recent weeks and months but for years and decades, they would say that one problem that they have lived with all this time has been the question of tariffs. Those tariffs were never seen as being put in place to protect the people of Peace River or the people of Alberta. They were never put in place to protect westerners. They were put in place to protect industries that were not located in that part of our country.

I really do believe that this issue is fundamental to western Canadians. It is fundamental because of those tariffs. We have wanted, since the beginning of Confederation, since the western provinces became a part of this country, to work on a level playing field. We have asked for equal opportunity. Give us equal opportunity. Give us an equal chance. We believe that we can compete successfully with any competition that exists. Instead, as long as those tariffs have remained in place, we have been confined to the role of hewers of wood and drawers of water. Why? Because those tariffs have never been fair to our products. It is very simple reasoning. It is not just the Americans.

It is the Japanese and the Europeans. In fact, it is the Canadians as well. We are quite prepared to let other peoples' raw materials come into our country with a very small tariff if we can process those goods, but if they want to ship us processed goods, then we want a high protection. That is exactly what has been happening in western Canada for decades. It was quite easy for us to sell the raw oil, the raw natural gas, the raw lumber, but when we wanted to start processing those products, then immediately they faced a much higher tariff barrier than the raw material. As a result, there is a frustration that is very deep-rooted within western Canada.

We have wanted to diversify our economy. That is why this Government has developed programs like the Western Diversification Program. Why? Because we want to broaden our base. We want new opportunities for western Canadians. We do not simply want to be producers of raw materials. We want also to be the producers and the manufacturers of those raw materials. We want to create those jobs and that investment, and we want to keep it in the Provinces of Alberta, British Columbia, Saskatchewan, and Manitoba. We do not want to export those jobs to the United States, to Japan, to the European Common Market. We want to keep them at home. Why? Because we want a future for our young people. I really believe that that is one of the fundamental issues in this debate.

There is another little bit of history that I think western Canadians particularly want to talk a little bit about, and that is the history of being afraid of the Americans. Speaking from the perspective of an Albertan, I think that oil and gas is an important part of our economy. Not only is it an important part of our economy, but it has taught us a good deal about how we can relate to our American neighbours. When we develop that oil and gas, we do it with the co-operation and the help of the American people. It was they who provided us much of the capital that we needed in those early days. It was they who provided us with the equipment. It was they who provided us with the technical knowledge and the understanding that we needed to develop this product that has since become so fundamental to our economy. That taught us that we did not have to be afraid of the Americans. We did not have to run and hide every time we heard the word "American". We did not have to be cowards.

• (1530)

We learned that we could work with them, compete with them and in fact could teach them some things they needed to learn. For example, within the oil and gas sector in western Canada today there are several western Canadians involved in training Americans in the latest technology and techniques. That is why western Canadians have a lot of confidence in our ability to compete with the Americans and other countries throughout the world.

Let me explain some of the benefits I believe the Free Trade Agreement will bring to the West. My riding is essentially a perfect snapshot of western Canada. That area has a strong agricultural base, a strong and developing forestry industry, and a strong energy industry both in oil and gas. We also have the shale tar sands project which involves us in the synthetic oil industry. My riding, which includes all those fundamental resource economies that exist in western Canada, is probably one of the best examples to illustrate what will happen to the region as a result of free trade.

The Canada West Foundation conducted a study of every riding in western Canada to examine the impact of the Free Trade Agreement on each constituency. The study on Peace River resulted in the astonishing statistic that 99.5 per cent of all the jobs within the riding of Peace River would have either a positive or a neutral impact as a result of free trade. I cannot think of a single investment opportunity or program that could give better prospects for the people of the Peace country than that. It is absolutely astounding that such an initiative could result in a positive impact on 99.5 per cent of the jobs in the area.

It is understandable why this initiative is so important to the people in the Peace country and, I believe, to the rest of western Canada. When one considers such an impact on my riding, which I suggest is a snapshot of western Canada, it is obvious why the debate we are engaged in today is so important.

One of the difficulties we face in Canada is that this is a big country with a small and scattered population. Anyone who wants to develop successfully a large industry obviously needs a large market. In Canada, that large market exists primarily in the so-called Golden Triangle of Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto. In order to gain access to a big market one must be able to reach that market. We in the West are isolated because that market is some 4,000 miles away. The cost of servicing that market is incredible.

The Free Trade Agreement provides another opportunity for western Canadians, including Albertans in my area, that did not previously exist to the same degree. That opportunity is the market in California. It comprises roughly the same population as that of all of Canada, some 26 million. That market is only 1,500 miles from my constituency, which is half the distance to the major market in Canada.

One gas pipeline from the Elsworth gas field in my riding to the State of California and Los Angeles would have the same effect as my riding gaining access to the entire Canadian market from coast to coast. It is no wonder that we believe this initiative is so important. It is a market that gives us an opportunity to move away from our traditional role of being hewers of wood and drawers of water. Suddenly we can see the potential to become the processors of our goods and materials. We can begin to develop the secondary industries that we have longed dreamed of.

The Free Trade Agreement will also be of great benefit to consumers in my riding. During the last election I decided to buy a new pair of cowboy boots—a requirement of every Albertan—to replace my worn out pair. Since we were in the middle of an election that involved the free trade debate, I thought perhaps I should wait and buy the boots after free trade is adopted because of the difference in price. In fact, when I learned of the tariffs that applied to goods like those boots, I was tempted to wait until January 2 to buy them.

The gentleman who sold me the boots said that there was a tariff of approximately 40 per cent on boots, saddles and all his leather goods. The agreement will have a major impact on his operation. We can multiply my experience as a consumer thousands of times each day of the week to realize the goods we will have available to us without the restriction of a quota.

A retailer in my constituency once told me that he wanted to increase his quota of cowboy boots because he could easily sell what he had. However, he could not obtain any more because of the restrictions placed on him by the quotas. We as consumers will see those goods available at a cheaper price as well as in greater quantities. That is very important.

In my riding the Free Trade Agreement will have a positive or neutral impact on 99.5 per cent of the jobs. That means those jobs will be secure and will continue to exist. In addition, those of us who are working will have other goods available to us at cheaper costs.

We should also consider just what are the alternatives to the Free Trade Agreement. I was surprised that while there is much discussion about this agreement we did not see the Liberals or the New Democrats come forward with well defined alternatives. The Leader of the Opposition said that his solution was to tear up the agreement and proceed on a sector by sector basis. However, the Liberal Minister responsible for that area prior to 1984 said that the sector by sector negotiations did not work. That was not an alternative.

What is the other alternative, to let the tariffs continue to exist? As a western Canadian, I would say that that means our opportunity to succeed, to grow and to develop has been delayed that much longer. It is no alternative to leave the existing tariffs in place. It is no alternative for us to think that we as a country can survive, grow and develop by putting fences around ourselves. That is not the kind of world we are living in today.

The world that we are living in today is a world based on competition, a world based on adjustment and a world based on confidence. I think that is what this agreement is all about. It is our perception of ourselves as Canadians. Are we confident that we can compete with the American and other economies throughout the world? Are we confident that we can adjust and change to the dynamics of a changing, growing, evolving economy? Are we confident in ourselves? Are we confident in our country? Are we confident in our ability to compete with the Americans?

Canada is a very young country, a country with a tremendous future, a country that is prepared to take risks, a country that is full of dreams and visions and a country that has ambitions. I believe that the real bottom line to our success in the last election was that we talked about those visions and we showed Canadians how free trade could give them those opportunities. That, I think, is why this Government has been given the mandate it has today to proceed on the question of free trade.

Mr. Anawak: Madam Chairman, it is a great honour and privilege for me to rise in the House of Commons today to deliver my first speech as the Member of Parliament for Nunatsiak. I will be delivering some of my speech in Inuktitut, and there is an interpreter present ready to translate it.

I would like to thank the people of Nunatsiak, the beautiful land, for having placed their trust and confidence in me. I want to assure them that I will work on their behalf with sincerity and dedication, in unity and co-operation, toward improving the quality of life in the North, and I hope to represent them in future Parliaments as well.

The Prime Minister's haste to accommodate the President of the United States in passing the free trade legislation prevented me from taking my seat in this House along with the other elected Members on Monday, December 12. In recalling Parliament so soon after the election, the Prime Minister neglected the North, and consequently, my riding of Nunatsiak, as he has done for the past four years.

I can assure the Government that the time of taking the North for granted, as was done in the Thirty-third Parliament, is over. All too often, the concerns of northerners have been neglected, ignored or overridden, and I intend to remind the Government constantly, in co-operation with my colleague from the Western Arctic, that the people of the North deserve to be treated as Canadians and should be able to access the services southern Canadians take for granted such as medical, dental, travel and banking services.

There are 33 communities in my riding, and some of them receive a dental service visit twice a year if they are lucky, a plane once a week, weather permitting, and a pediatrician once every six months. I am sure you are getting the idea, Madam Chairman, of how isolated the North is. We have just two banks in the entire area and one of them does not even offer computerized services.

Perhaps a short geography lesson would be helpful. Nunatsiak is the largest constituency in Canada. It covers an area of approximately 1.3 million square miles or 3.3 million square kilometres. It stretches from Tuktoyaktuk, which is almost directly north of Vancouver, British Columbia, to Pangnirtung, almost directly north of Fredericton, New Brunswick. It encompasses three time zones, Eastern, Central and Mountain.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

During the election campaign, I travelled approximately 20,000 miles, give or take a couple of hundred miles.

Nunatsiaq, which means the beautiful land, is not, contrary to popular belief, bleak and barren. Its scenery can compete with any world tourist attraction. If you do not believe me, Madam Chairman, I invite you to come up to Auyuittuq National Park and Pangnirtung, the Kazan Falls at Baker Lake, or to canoe down the Coppermine River.

Northerners do not want hand-outs from the Government. All we want is a chance to compete with southern businesses in our territory and to become self-sufficient.

The Government must understand that the North is very wary of the Free Trade Agreement. We are worried that we will not be able to compete with American firms which, because of their size, can undercut us, and certain tenders that are over $33,000 will be fair game for the Americans.

The economic future of the Northwest Territories should not be approached by focusing on the problems of the area: long distances, harsh climate, limited services and a small population base. The Northwest Territories should not be considered a burden on the rest of Canada.

We in the North focus on the opportunities and the potential of our area, emphasizing the wealth of resources, the beauty of the land and our strategic position in Canada's claim to Arctic sovereignty. We encourage the Government to take the same approach. The Northwest Territories is an asset to Canada, economically, socially and politically. We can make a great contribution to the prosperity of this nation if Canada will invest in us.

Development of policies which address changes in regulatory regimes, tax structures, fiscal policy, grant programs and the provision of appropriate supportive infrastructure will go a long way toward ensuring prosperity for the Northwest Territories and hence for Canada. The North must have access to programs and policies similar to the ones used in the initial development of our provinces. We require incentives, subsidies and rebates that will put us on an equal footing with the rest of Canada.

This requires substantial input, but this must be viewed as an investment, whether it is promoting tax measures and reward incentives, developing a resource base of qualified northerners to satisfy the workforce requirements of our expanding northern economy, encouraging northern participation in the non-renewable resource base industry via publicly traded companies, or exploring linkages between the mining industries and other industries such as tourism and arts and crafts. (English translation from Inuktitut:)

In the area of tourism, more work should be done in education and training, and this should be public sector driven. In the area of transportation, we need an improved and expanded road system and our airport facilities need to be upgraded.

• (1550)

We need to equalize costs with southern markets for transportation, communications, wages, housing and CMHC mortgages. We have to resolve the ownership of land, streamline and consolidate existing government programs and develop a one-window approach.

The people of Nunatsiaq have a very high unemployment rate. Seal hunting and carving are used to supplement incomes. However, we all know what happened to the sealskin market because of Greenpeace and Brigitte Bardot. The collapse of this market destroyed the economy of many Inuit communities as well as that of Newfoundland.

Less widely known is the effect of the United States Marine Mammals Protection Act on the northern and native economy. Passed in 1972, this Act prohibits Canadian northern and native people from exporting sealskin, ivory, whalebone or polar bear skins into the United States.

An exemption from this Act should have been obtained by the Canadian Government during the Free Trade Agreement negotiations. Such an exemption would have a very beneficial impact on the northern economy. But the exemption was not achieved and it seems the Government was not willing to pursue it. Was it because the North did not have enough influence or economic muscle that this issue was not pushed harder?

The Inuit will not be any better off with the passage of the free trade legislation. Why is it that the Alaskan Inuit are exempt from this Act but the Canadian Inuit are not? It certainly is not because the seals or walrus are endangered. The quotas for polar bear hunting are strictly enforced. So the polar bear is not endangered in the world. What is it that the Government is going to do to help Inuit who rely on hunting to sustain themselves? I am certain that the Government of Canada would want to see the Inuit self-sufficient and not totally dependent on social programs. The Canadian Government must put pressure on the American Government to exempt Canadian native people from the Marine Mammal Protection Act.

The Government of Canada and the Inuit are in negotiations toward a land claims agreement which could establish the Inuit as the largest landowners in Canada. Let us hope that the resources upon which their economic prosperity depends are not diminished by the Free Trade Agreement.

Mr. Butland: I thank you, Madam Chairman, for the opportunity to speak on this issue for the one-hundredth time but for the first time in this House. People in my constituency of Sault-Ste-Marie, 29,000 strong, voted against my predecessor and the only issue of which they spoke was the Free Trade Agreement.

Our major industry suggested that 1,000 jobs would be lost if the Algoma Steel employees did not vote Progressive Conservative. The President of Dofasco said there would be no expansion if the Free Trade Agreement did not come to pass. The Chamber of Commerce and the media openly endorsed the Free Trade Agreement and predicted doom if Sault-Ste-Marie did not support free trade. A whole series of Cabinet Ministers, many of whom are across the aisle, including the Prime Minister, came into Sault-Ste-Marie. These were powerful forces at work, but the people of Sault-Ste-Marie did not listen and said in a democratic way, "We do not believe you. We do not trust you. We are troubled by the Free Trade Agreement".

I campaigned long and hard against the free trade and I believe it in my heart, my head and most of all in my gut that this is a bad deal.

Mrs. McDougall: Are you going to read us some more American poetry?

Mr. Butland: As I say, I hope against hope that the deal will bring prosperity to my community. I must because I care for my city and its people, I hope that all the promises of prosperity will come to fruition because it will be of little consolation for me to say, "I told you so". I hope this leap of faith will, indeed, be a leap which will land us somewhere and not in to an abyss. I prefer to believe Leo Gerard who said, when addressing the steel industry.

They'll ship on their subsidized barges and their de-regulated trucks and then over our border on free trade.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

This steel will originate in non-union mini mills in the southern United States. The acceptance and endorsement of this deal is the most dramatic turnaround in political history, and that prompts anyone to ask why. What changed all of these people's minds? Who are these people and which Party do they espouse? I suggest it is a very notable list.

The Prime Minister, who said, "It affects Canadian sovereignty and we will have none of it"; the External Affairs Minister, who said, "Unrestrained free trade with the United States raises the possibility that thousands of jobs could be lost in such critical industries as textiles, furniture and footwear"; the Minister of Finance, who said, "Bilateral free trade with the United States is simplistic and naive"; the former Secretary of State, David Crombie, who said, "Our natural destiny is to become a global leader, not America's weak sisters"; ex Veterans' Affairs Minister, George Hees, who said, "A clear indication of a move toward free trade with the United States would not be a good thing for this country"; the Ontario Conservative Leader, Andy Brandt, who said, "Taking a multilateral route in trade negotiations is the best long-term way for Canada"; former Ontario Leader, Larry Grossman, who said, "I contend it would be a mistake for anyone to have excessively high expectations about the results of any trade arrangements with the United States." It goes on. Then there was Tory strategist, Hugh Segal, but the pièce de résistance was former Ontario Premier Bill Davis, who said: "You will not get me". Six months later he said: "What a courageous course of action by the federal Government".

Did a bolt of lightning strike in so many places at once as to profoundly affect the way such so-called learned politicians read into such an agreement? It makes anyone wonder about the credibility of people who espouse the deal now but who were vehemently opposed just a few scant years ago.

Have we not precluded ourselves from the international world of business?

Some Hon. Members: No.

Mr. Butland: I believe we have. We have tied Canada to a unilateral market, one that will indeed swallow us up, as Mr. Yeutter has said. The Government has cut back on the very budget that could rescue us from economic domination, and that is research and development.

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

The Right Hon. Prime Minister in his book, Where I Stand,—he stands in many places—but where he stood, said:

The starting line for me is the technological dimension. Either we go into the game and become important players in this major league or we become a nation that will, during its entire lifetime, play in the Junior B circuit . . . Research and development, and the resulting innovations are the lifeblood of a successful economy and country.

So the Prime Minister called for a 20 per cent funding increase for the National Research Council and he promised to double Canada's research and development debt by the end of his first mandate. What did he do? He decreased the amount.

Some Hon. Members: False.

Mr. Butland: It is not false. What of the reconciliation, the healing process of which the Prime Minister speaks? There was no thought to entertaining any amendments to the Free Trade Agreement no matter how innocuous. Specifically, our Amendment No. 14 to Bill C-2 states that the Bill should be amended immediately after line 7 at page 4. For greater certainty the Government will bring immediately trade adjustment legislation for those dislocated as a result of the agreement.

• (1600)

The tribunal that we would form should be made up of representatives from government, business, workers, communities, and other interested groups. The tribunal shall receive and investigate representations from groups of companies and workers who believe that they are or are likely to be adversely affected by subsidized U.S. imports, including those provided by the U.S. Defense Department. The tribunal shall report annually to Parliament on the status of adjustment to the agreement and make recommendations for improving the process. None of this will be heard in the appropriate forum.

The wounds are only deeper as a result of this process that we are going through. We are speaking to be heard, but I am sure that no one is listening.

Professor Ross A. Rotstein of the University of Toronto said it perfectly when he stated: "Sometimes I suspect that members of the free trade camp are so intoxicated by the classical free trade rhetoric that they find it hard to come down to earth and look at the specifics of the agreement".

Let me look at the specifics. For example, Article 1602—national treatment of Americans; Article 604—harmonization of laws; Article 1902—either party can change anti-dumping laws or countervail duties at any time.

The bottom line will be the loss of our unique Canadian identity. This will happen over time. One does not lose one's identity over a short period of time but over a long period of time. I believe that it will happen. If we will not monitor changes as they occur, put on the blinders and ignore what is happening, it surely will happen. In some areas it will be imperceptibly, and in other areas it will be dramatically. We are genuinely fearful. It indeed is a leap of faith rather than a leap of trust. When one takes a leap one ensures that there is a safety net or a cord to keep him or her from straying too far into whatever abyss there is. Neither is provided by the Government.

In conclusion, I hope Members opposite are correct. If they are wrong, they will have committed the ultimate treason. It will be small consolation that history books will condemn them. I pray Members opposite are right for the sake of Canada.

[Translation]

Mr. Vincent Della Noce (Duvernay): Madam Chairman, I would also like to take part in this debate. For some days we have been hearing the Opposition pretend they are protecting the people, they are protecting Canadians. I would rather call that confusing the people, confusing workers, and this is what I have to say to Opposition Members: If you are serious, get on with the work, because business people are paying taxes and in order to pay taxes they must work.

While politicians are talking, Madam Chairman, business people must pay taxes. In order to pay taxes, they have to do business. If no taxes are paid, we are in for a frightening deficit first as it was under the Liberals.

Corporations, business people have a responsibility to manage well their businesses and make profits. I know Socialists condemn profits. The same thing for everybody, everybody poor, everybody on the same footing. Everyone with a Lada. That is their business! I remember that during the election campaign my former friend and colleague Phil Edmonston was the only one who declared the Lada the car of the year. That was really something. As a garage operator with some 20 years' experience, I can tell you that if there is one car you should stay away from, that is it. We even refused to gas it up, so bad it was. Those people declared it the car of the year. And now they pretend they will to protect Canadians!

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

An Hon. Member: What are they driving?

Mr. Della Noce: I noticed that some of my colleagues have very beautiful cars.

An Hon. Member: The Socialists?

Mr. Della Noce: Yes. Others ride bicycles they tie up here on the side. To show they are poor. But I am sure they take the same salary as we capitalists here do, on this side of the House.

Madam Chairman, I would like to say at the start that free trade is something important to us, Quebecers—it is vital for Quebec. It is vital because as we know, more than 75 per cent of our exports go to the United States.

An Hon. Member: Did Mr. Edmonston know that?

Mr. Della Noce: Mr. Edmonston comes from the United States. We have been stuck with him for 20 years.

In 1986, the value of exports reached $16 billion. Quebec's exports are mainly composed of the following. Listen to this, because it is important. Newsprint cars, aluminium, telecommunications equipment, ore, ore concentrates, iron concentrate, timber, softwood pulp, rail equipment, urban transportation, machines, machinery and, of course, hydro-electric power in Québec.

Now, I would like to quote one of my colleagues who spoke on Friday, as I liked what he had to say: How could it be said that the people have decided? Even now, I hear that we received a greater number of votes, more than . . . Their calculations are so bad that I only made a cursory analysis. Let's look at the vote counts for the three party leaders—I chose the three leaders because they are the most widely known and got the most coverage nation-wide. First, the leader of the NDP, who likes to use figures and vote counts. As my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Epp), said the other night, the leader of the unofficial opposition received 18,400 votes. The Liberal candidate got 14,000 votes and the leader of the NDP, 18,000 votes. The other candidates got 14,000 and 8,000 votes respectively. If you add those two figures together, you get 22,000 votes.

So the leader of the New Democratic Party should not be sitting in the House. He should go home.

The leader of the Official Opposition only received 20,400 votes. He was the one who said: Let the people decide! The Conservative candidate running against him received 14,235 votes and the NDP candidate, 10,000. If you add these two figures together—which does not require the assistance of an accountant—you get a total of 24,500, which means that in view of the 20,000 votes he received, the Hon. Leader of the Opposition should not be sitting here.

So I go on to the third example, our leader, the Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Mulroney), who had 33,729 votes; the Liberal got only 5,900 and the poor NDP—it is true that they are not strong in Quebec—just 1,800. This means that if there is a leader and if the people have decided, well, we have a leader who got 81 per cent of the vote. That means something.

That is why, Madam Speaker, I would like to refer to the fine words that my colleague said in Latin. I am sure that when you were young, you studied humanities and took courses in which you certainly heard some great Roman sayings. I am originally from that village, that great village which is Rome.

My colleague used a very apt quotation when he said, and I quote page 242 of Hansard, Roma locuta, causa finita. This means that when Rome has spoken, the matter is settled. That used to be applied only to what the Pope said. When the Pope, the head of the Catholic Church, speaks in Rome, that's that, it's done.

Well, here in Canada, the final authority is the Canadian people and when they speak, that's that. Why waste time? Why complicate matters? Why tell us stories?

Madam Speaker, I also want to quote a letter that I received. But pay attention—it is quite something.

It was sent by messenger to me in Montreal, by a great citizen, a businessman from Montreal in the Province of Quebec, a Canadian of Italian origin, a prosperous businessman who can work anywhere in the country because for him, Canada is important, and Canada is not just Quebec City or Vancouver, but the whole country. He wrote to me, "Dear Mr. Della Noce: . . ." I would like this to be on record; I want it to be there for my friends opposite to know about it.

• (1610)

[English]

I am a Canadian with strong ties to the Liberal Party of Canada and it is not easy for me as a Liberal to write and tell you that I agree fully with one of your party's policies.

I refer to your party's policy on free trade which I support heartily for the following reasons:—

Canada-U.S. Free Trade Agreement

And he then set out nine reasons. He is a businessman, and not a socialist. He is a businessman. He makes money. He pays taxes and he creates jobs.

When we arrived in Ottawa after the 1984 election, I recall the Opposition saying: "You promised jobs, jobs, jobs."

Well, we have created jobs, jobs, jobs. We have created 1.3 million new jobs. We no longer here the Opposition talking about jobs.

Let me quote the writer's reasons. They are as follows:

- 1) Free trade should, in my mind, be universal and thus must begin within one continent.
- 2) When two countries like Canada and the United States are so complementary, free trade can only be good for both.
- 3) To me, Canadian trade policies have for too long been protective with the result of an artificial economic environment: damaging productivity and creativity. Thus Canadians have been denied the opportunity to compete and succeed better.
- 4) As a Canadian I look forward to more opportunities and when access to consumers goes from one to ten, so do the opportunities.
- 5) Culture is hard to define. Canadian culture is in constant evolution. We must face the fact that survival as a people and as a country would not be attained by isolating ourselves economically.

And those sitting on the other side of this House do not know what the word "economically" means. To those in this country in business, it is an important word.

He goes on:

- 6) I have faith in my fellow citizens and in their ability to adapt and succeed. When opportunities are offered, Canadians who are ready to work, learn, compete and prosper will mold the future of this country.
- 7) Canadian consumers are now paying a premium on a great number of products. The liberalization of economic activities through free trade can only result in lower product costs and an improved standard of living. The Canadian consumers will profit from free trade.
- 8) True, some sectors are doomed and some jobs will be lost in them. However, for one job lost, two will surely be created in new or enlarged sectors.

This person knows what he is talking about.

- 9) Canadians of Italian descent appreciate what their fathers have done. Like most Canadians, our ancestors left their country looking for opportunity in a new land where a future could be built for themselves and their children. Let us not lose the guts and the initiative of our ancestors. I have not lost them; I am for free trade.

And he signs, "Sincerely yours"—though he should have signed "progressively yours". The writer's name is Luigi Liberatore.

This is an individual who once said to me: "Though I am a Liberal, I like what your Party is doing. This time, I think I am going to vote for you." And I said to Luigi: "If you vote for me, you vote for prosperity." And what kind of a car does he drive today?—a Mercedes Benz.

And he is going to keep driving a Mercedes Benz. He will continue to be prosperous. His business will continue to grow.

I told Luigi that a vote for me would mean that the country would go forward and prosper. I told him that my Leader needed all of the seats in Quebec that he could get.

We have seen the "57-43" buttons worn by members of the New Democratic Party. They think that if they add the votes cast for the Liberals to those cast for the NDP, that that somehow constitutes a victory for them. Well, we in the Quebec caucus should all be wearing "63-0" buttons, because you guys got zero in Quebec. And if that is not a majority, what is?

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I am sorry to point at my socialist colleagues all the time, but they were the ones who came to sow fear in our area. They thought they could gain their first seat in Duvernay. I commend the people in Duvernay for having made the right choice, because it would have been a terrible thing to live with a NDP seat in Quebec. And my comrade Agnaieff or the other one, I can tell you they tried very hard to scare people, to scare businesses. They told them: Vote for me, they are going to tax your profits. What a nice, a smart thing to say! But they did not even get 15 per cent of the votes. They did not finish first, they finished third.

And I would also like to quote another important person in Quebec who is awaiting free trade, someone many of my colleagues know—Mr. Péladeau, Québecor's president. Look at what Mr. Péladeau said—Weaklings will complain that the Americans are coming here, but it is us who must go to the United States. He is not a weakling, he started from scratch. You know how he started, I explained it again here in this House the other night. For the benefit of those who are absent: He was $2 000 short when he wanted to establish his first printing shop. Two thousand dollars was not the end of the world ten years ago. Imagine, while his mother was away on holidays, Mr. Pierre Péladeau sold his mother's piano to get his first cash flow. When his mother came back she asked: Where is the piano, Pierre? He answered, I needed money, Ma, to start my first printing shop and I sold the piano because we are not using it anymore, we are working.

But now, Mr. Péladeau has a $2 billion sales figure. That's right, $2 billion in Quebec! It would be bad if he would close his business because a lot of people work there. And then you would have reason to complain that Péladeau, Québecor closed down. You would do like Gillette. It is funny you do not mention the good things. You referred to Gillette. You are late, because people have been talking of Gillette's closure for years.

You could look up La Presse of December 9. Alain Dubuc, I think, one of Quebec's major columnists, described it very well when he wrote: It is beyond me that people would still be talking about closures like Gillette's, because we know that Gillette has been closing down plants around the world, including the United States, including France. You should be listening, Opposition Members—the tremor that happened at the other end was caused by free trade once more! Come now! Talk about IBM, talk about the other investments. But you don't take people . . . It would appear that you no longer have any respect for the people who elected you because those people said: Go for free trade, no matter what. Go for it. The figures don't matter, even when they are higher. What you need to represent the people of Canada is a seat.

When I look at all that was said during the election campaign, by the leaders and others . . . I'll just quote a couple of them who were here. They wanted an election, and one was held, but unfortunately, they are no longer here. Lynn McDonald, for example, said: We want an election. Consult the people of Canada right now by calling an election. Well, she got what she wanted and now she's gone, gone somewhere where the air is fresh and clean. The people have decided and she has decided. Her decision has brought some good people to this side of the House. Another member, who is still with us, said: Call an election. Let's go to the people. And that is what we did. Then, there was the former mayor of Ottawa, Mrs. Dewar, who said recently: An election must be called immediately to let the people of Canada decide on this issue.

An Hon. Member: She had an election.

Mr. Della Noce: She had an election. She got her chance, she had an election, she is no longer here, she is gone. People said to themselves that they wanted prosperity in Ottawa. Canadians are not stupid, they are capable of reaching a decision, they are intelligent enough. It does not matter what happens between elections.

I checked around my constituency when the polls favoured the NDP. People had a mild reaction. The NDP thought it would make a clean sweep of all ridings.

I met one of them during the election campaign and he asked me what I and my Quebec colleagues would do after losing the election. Another one kept repeating that our days were numbered. Yet a third one boasted about winning a majority. Another one was sure he would be a Minister, so he had already re-awarded the frigate contracts. He had taken them away from New Brunswick and given them to Montreal. He too is no longer here, but we all know he wanted an election, he was from Ottawa Centre.

That is what we hear from the other side every day, but they forget to talk about the basic issues, projects to help Quebec or another province. Other provinces stand to benefit, not only Quebec.

I should like to refer to the Economic Council of Canada report released on April 13, 1988 which commented on the various aspects of free trade and featured a regional breakdown of increased employment opportunities. Here are the figures concerning Québec. For example, they predicted a 1.8 per cent increase in the number of new jobs, up 58,000; 94,900 new jobs in Ontario; 50,900 in the Prairies; 17,700 in the Atlantic Provinces, and 28,900 in British Columbia.

Madam Speaker, I am saying to these people: You wanted an election, you had one! Perhaps it did not quite turn out as you expected, but that is the way it goes! Now that the people have decided, have faith in them and tell them you are here to help them, not to make life tougher for them.

Members opposite are acting as if they were saying: Protect Canadians, but they are holding them back, dragging them 20 years back.

You know, if I were on the other side I would probably not be smiling as my colleague on the other side is doing as he signals to me. He can hardly wait for me to shut up. I understand that hurts! But my hon. colleague should understand one thing: Not only has the Liberal Party prevented the country from moving forward . . . He knows that well because he is of the same origin as I am; he is of Italian origin and his party prevented Italy from selling Italian shoes in Canada. They imposed quotas . . . Now he is leaving—I understand why. It must be embarrassing to do things like that!

We in the Conservative Party said that we like competition and that Canadians can be competitive because Canadians and Quebecers are not afraid. They are eager to do business in the United States. But listening to them, sometimes I look at myself and wonder whether I am really as good as that, because they do not stop defending us by saying that we will be in for trouble and that it will not work. We will come up with a new name for their party. Their party should be called the “Won’t Work” Party. Why try? My friend Jean-Marc Chaput always said so! It won’t work, we’ll stay as we are, say nothing, get hit on the head and say nothing.

But stop saying that it won’t work. It will work, we are already the best. We look at ourselves in the mirror every morning and say, “We Quebecers are not afraid of taking on the United States.” I have been going to the United States for 20 years. I worked in the States, I was a racing car mechanic and we went as fast with 307 engines as the Americans did with 327’s. The Americans would come to see us and ask how we did it. Besides, we did not have money. Well, we tried to get the most out of our production and we did it with our hands and our head. And we told—I know, Madam Speaker, I must conclude—the Americans:

• (1620)

[English]

We work harder than you and we try to do better than you because you are very rich and that is the only way in which we can compete, try to get the maximum for our energy.

[Translation]

Madam Speaker, I would like the House to do the impossible, to give a chance to the Canadians who elected us so that we can pass this free trade bill. Let the socialists stop frightening people, because they will always drive Ladas and we want to ride in Mercedes. That is the difference.

[English]

Mrs. Gaffney: Madam Chairman, I stand here today as one of the newly elected Members of Parliament. It is a great honour and privilege to represent my riding of Nepean in this most prestigious House. I would like to thank those constituents who gave me such a strong mandate, and I hope I can also earn the trust of those who did not.

As an elected member of Nepean City Council and also Ottawa-Carleton Regional Government for the past ten years, one of the things I quickly learned is that the concerns, the thoughts, the wishes of the people are the ones that elected officials should never ignore. Through this, my maiden speech, it is appropriate to take advantage of the time allocated to me to convey the concerns of the constituents of Nepean.

Those constituents who elected me did so for many reasons. Their overwhelming opposition to this trade agreement, however, was far and above the major reason. Time and time again at doors across my riding I heard one thing: “I am against this trade deal as it is written”.

We all know the trade deal will probably pass this House and be ratified. However, I hope that the newly elected Government of Canada is a compassionate Government and will recognize that the agreement is not perfect, it has weaknesses, that loopholes must be plugged, safeguard measures should be implemented, and that this Government has been elected to serve not only those who voted for it but also those who indicated a great deal of trepidation about this agreement.

This debate should not be considered to be a waste of time. Far from it. This debate is as crucial as ever because the debate and the speeches on this side of the House reflect not only our responsibility towards those who elected us, but are a form of notice to the Government that we are watching and we want it to be sensitive.

The mandate I received from the riding of Nepean is all the more remarkable for two reasons. First, because Nepean, or to be more precise the former riding of Nepean—Carleton, is traditionally a Conservative riding. Second, the proponents of the deal have expressed the conception that Nepean is the kind of riding that has the most to benefit from this trade agreement. Yet despite those two facts, the residents of Nepean voted against the Government and against its trade deal.

Why? I believe the overwhelming majority of Nepean residents voted against this deal not because of any particular animosity toward the Government, but because the residents of Nepean—who, by the way, are a most representative group of Canadian constituents—looked at the deal, examined it and the information pertaining to it, and made up their own minds. The residents of Nepean, as did 52 per cent of all Canadians, decided the deal was not good for Canada and not good for Nepean.

That was and is the position of the Liberal Party of Canada. However, Liberals oppose this proposed deal because we believe when you examine it and scrutinize it in detail, you come to the conclusion it is not good enough for Canada. We believed and still believe that the costs outweigh the benefits, as do the residents of my riding.

The majority of senior citizens in my riding oppose this deal. The majority of youth in my riding oppose this deal. The majority of public servants in my riding oppose this deal, as do the majority of small business people. The majority of women in Nepean oppose this deal.

The senior citizens of Nepean oppose it because as much as they like the United States of America, they do not want to become part of it. As much as many of them enjoy spending some of the cold winter months in Florida, they remain and want to remain Canadian, for our pension plans, our medicare, and for our more caring society. The youth of Nepean oppose this deal because they have pride in their country and enough confidence in themselves to decide their own destiny. What they want from the Government of Canada is increased funding for our educational institutions and new job training in skills development areas.

The Public Servants of Nepean oppose this deal because they know that their ability to formulate independent domestic policy is hindered by it. The small business people of Nepean oppose it because at best it detracts the Government from their concerns.

This leads me to the second major fact I wish to discuss—the clear misconception on the part of the Government that the free trade deal is a good deal for Canada's high-tech industry. I am correct in using the term "misconception" because Nepean, as most people know, is Canada's high-tech capital. And Nepean voted against this deal.

I ask for the attention of my colleagues opposite because I know Canadian companies are competitive in world markets. This deal will do more harm to our future international competitiveness than any other piece of government legislation in the history of our proud and growing nation. My hon. colleagues on the opposite side of this House must come to realize that Members on this side of the House oppose this deal precisely because we have faith in Canada's ability to compete.

Canada's corporate success stories have become success stories partially because of government financial assistance, the type of assistance that is now precluded by this trade deal. Many Canadian companies have become successful because of heavy investments in R and D, excellent products, the foresight to take advantage of market opportunities when they arise and belief in Canadian companies by the Government of Canada.

Now that they have made it, these corporate people, it is all well and good for major corporations to be in favour of this trade deal because they have transcended national boundaries. These corporations are now multinationals. For them, anything that removes barriers to the free flow of capital components and workers, anything that gives more flexibility to respond to world markets, is a good thing.

Unfortunately, what this Government fails to recognize is that what is good for Canada's successful multinationals is not necessarily good for Canada or Canadians. What Canada needs is more corporate success stories. Sadly, this deal is going to make this much harder to achieve, not easier.

What I ask my fellow Hon. Members to ponder is how we are going to help to create the corporate successes that we had of yesterday and how we are going to create them tomorrow when we have willingly tied our hands behind our backs. How are we going to become world leaders in fields such as environmental technology when with the other hand we have slashed government R and D and corporate R and D tax incentives, and are then left helpless to designate a Canadian company as a preferred supplier, or give preferential treatment to companies in certain sectors or certain regions of the country? I do not know. What terrifies me is that I do not think that the Government knows either.

I for one am not of the opinion that either my constituency or my country are best served by reliving the election here. Neither am I one who subscribes to the view that this deal is an unmitigated disaster that will destroy Canada tomorrow. I am enough of an optimist to hope that the present Government may realize the folly of its ways and take the measures to correct them.

What I sincerely hope for is that in the second phase of trade negotiations which relate to the definition of subsidies the Government works harder to protect Canadian interests. I hope the Government of Canada realizes that Canada needs a true industrial strategy, and that we need to maintain enough of the levers of our own economy to make it possible.

I hope that the Government realizes that, as it stands, the trade deal puts us head-to-head with the U.S. Defense Department's $35 billion annual R and D budget, a budget specifically excluded from the terms of the deal which, to remain competitive, will tend to lead us to an even more militaristic economy. To avoid this we need to ensure that the few R and D incentives that Canada has will not be declared unfair trade subsidies, and also devise a realistic and permissible strategy for boosting research and development in areas of our own choosing.

I hope the Government re-acquires the right to use its purchasing power to foster and give a leg up to selective Canadian industries. I hope the Government reserves the ability to implement programs such as the national stock ownership plan suggested by the Liberals in the election that would increase ownership of Canadian firms by Canadians and not leave us totally at the mercy of foreign investment.

I hope the Government holds firm to its commitment that our social programs and regional development programs remain sacrosanct. Furthermore, I hope that the Government does some of the things it should have done long before even contemplating a comprehensive bilateral trade deal with the U.S.

I hope the Government takes measures to reduce interprovincial trade barriers. I hope the Government negotiates with its provincial counterpart—I am speaking particularly here of Ontario—for the construction of a much needed and long overdue four-lane highway south of Ottawa to Highway 401. The completion of Highway 416 is of great economic importance to the National Capital Region.

I hope the Government simplifies red tape for small businesses ensuring that they can get start-up capital, good employees and good advice.

It has been a great pleasure to speak in this House today. I have appreciated the opportunity to express my hopes as a Liberal and to express my hopes for the federal Government of Canada.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: Madam Chairman, I am delighted to have the opportunity to participate in the debate today. I am not a new Member of the House. I want to thank the electors of the great riding of Parry Sound—

Muskoka for returning me for a sixth term to the hallowed halls of the House of Commons.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: One cannot hide one's age if one is in public life, especially if one lives in a rural area. Of course I have to admit, and am proud to admit, that I am from that very illustrious class of 1911, and still going strong.

I might have had reservations four or five months ago when the election was going to be announced. As my colleagues will know, we were not the highest in the polls at that time. I think we were running third. But a great many of the very influential people in my riding came to me and said: "Well, Stan, we think you can win the riding despite our being low in the polls. We want you to throw your hat in the ring". As a result I am here today.

I have listened with interest to a great many of the speeches. I want to congratulate all those new Members of Parliament, even though I suppose my tongue is in my cheek concerning certain ones who replaced some very dear colleagues of mine who went down to defeat. But that is politics, and that is the way it is.

As I was thinking back I remember in the last election some of the very vociferous members of the Liberal Party, two of whom are no longer here. They were speaking in most derisive tones of the many Progressive Conservative Members from the Province of Quebec. They were saying: "You're surfers. You're here one time and then you're gone". Early in the mandate of this Government I thought of that and I said: "Well, by golly, it is tough in Québec, and it is unusual". But lo and behold two of those who were most vociferous are gone. Instead of our 57 Members from la belle province we now have 63. Some pretty high-priced help and high-profile Liberals went down to defeat.

Some Hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: I have heard a great many of the new Members saying that they are here for one reason only, and that is to speak on the free trade issue and voice their opposition to it. That is the reason they are here. They are going to do their best to filibuster it. Some have in some ways tried to stop the inevitable. The Leader of the Opposition, the Right Hon. Member for Vancouver Quadra, said day after day after day last July, August and September: "Call an election. Let the people decide". That great exponent from Oshawa who believes in free trade only for Oshawa and not for any of the other parts of the country reiterated the same thing: "Call an election. Let the people decide". In the British parliamentary system, a majority is the way they decide. We have a majority Government here. We have the mandate to bring in free trade and to bring it in by January 1, 1989. We certainly intend to do it despite all the ranting and raving from the Opposition.

• (1640)

Do the new Members want to debate past history in the House? Bill C-130 passed the House of Commons, and it is now before the House in the new form of Bill C-2. In the previous Parliament we debated some very important legislation, including Bill C-51 and Bill C-204 which dealt with smoking restrictions, and I say amen to that. Maybe some of them would like to rehash that. A lot of them may have strong views on immigration, Bill C-55 and Bill C-84. They passed this Parliament, so they are finished. I am wondering about that.

There is also one other issue that some of them may be interested in, and an important resolution which was debated a year ago, the debate on capital punishment. That debate did not go the way I wanted it to, and in that particular case, I might welcome it being brought back into the House, if the new Members are able to do that.

Free trade, despite all that has been said, will benefit more than it will hurt. We have heard the previous speaker from Nepean stating that she had grave reservations for this great riding that she represents. She feels that free trade will be harmful. I have heard other members of the Opposition speaking, including the Hon. Member for Sault-Ste-Marie. Deep in their hearts, they want something that will be good for Canada. I am sure that it will. Deeper in their hearts is the fact that if it does turn out to be a bonanza for Canada, they will end up as one-termers and will go back to their previous jobs, down the pike, whenever the Prime Minister, in his wisdom, decides to call an election. I can assure you it will not be before that.

The Conservative Government has stated that this Free Trade Agreement is best for Canada. What is the alternative to free trade? In 1983, the Prime Minister and other prominent Members of our Government voiced opposition to free trade. It is a different ball game now.

The Americans are in a tough position as far as their trading situation is concerned. I am sure all of my colleagues are aware that they are facing and have faced over the past couple of years a trade deficit of $170 billion. That hurts not only their Yankee pride, but sure as hell hurts their pocket-books as well. They will do something about it and are doing something about it, as we have found to our dismay, with certain legislation that they have brought in. I do not have to repeat that with regard to shakes and shingles and softwood lumber. We know, as has been mentioned by many on our side, we have to do something to protect ourselves. Canada is the only major trading country that does not have a special trade agreement with some other country.

We know the European Common Market consists of some 15 countries. I will tell you, they are a tough bunch of nuts to try and compete against with the subsidies that they are providing, especially in their agricultural production. It is tough to crack that market.

Some of my colleagues on the other side are asking why we do not trade with the Pacific Rim or with Japan. Japan is a pretty tough nut to trade with too, unless we want to sell them lumber and coal. Just try to sell an automobile in Japan, and I will bet you can count the American cars and probably other European cars on your fingers and toes. There is no doubt about it. Japan is a pretty tough nut when it comes to trying to crack that market. They are our second best customer, if my memory serves me correctly. I am not belittling how important Japan is. They are also the second most important trading partner to the United States as well.

We must have trading barriers that will come down and let us trade. The idea of us being afraid to trade in the open market, that we have to be a little, protective country, those days are past. We have outstanding firms and multinationals in our own country. We have small firms that are anxious and willing to compete. I hear members of the Opposition saying that everybody is against it. Everybody cannot be against it.

There are a lot of people in my riding who were against free trade for the simple reason that they were scared to death by the Opposition. The NDP went around saying that their old age pensions would be cut, that hospitalization benefits would be reduced considerably, and they believed it. It is absolutely ridiculous for many of those people, many of whom I have known for many years, to believe that. In my own riding, a lot of them did not vote against me, but they stayed home. That happened in all our ridings. That is why some of our majorities were cut.

Four years down the pike, I would like to go back to these senior citizens and say "Are you still getting your old age pensions? Are you still getting the very best of hospitalization? Are all these various subsidized things that senior citizens get, housing and so on, senior citizens' homes, are those available to you?" I am quite sure that the answer will be yes.

My riding of Parry Sound—Muskoka is a rural riding and does not have great up curves and down curves in employment. It is an area which is made up of a high percentage of senior citizens and a lot of small business. Tourism is a very important industry in my area, and the Tourist Industry Association of Canada has stated categorically that the tourist industry is one of the top industries that will gain tremendously if the Free Trade Agreement goes through. There are also many small and larger industries in my area.

● (1650)

The great boggy man opposite has been telling us about industries closing and Canada going to hell in a hand basket. We are facing gloom and doom. Plants have been closing on a regular basis since time immemorial, and it will probably continue. By and large, new plants will step in to take over from them.

For example, there is an article in the Huntsville Herald with the headline: "$65 million expansion is a boon, says Clarke". That is not the illustrious Secretary of State for External Affairs, but the mayor of the great town of Huntsville. Domtar has announced a $65 million expansion in Huntsville, with 129 new jobs.

Another example comes from the Bracebridge Examiner which, I might say, has not been my greatest supporter through the past 16 years. Despite them, however, I have managed to get elected.

The headline in the Bracebridge Examiner states: "Top Magna brass has some good news". Lo and behold Frank Stronach, a very prominent Liberal candidate, has announced a new plant for Bracebridge. I will admit that the land was bought a few years ago and put on hold, but the article states:

Magna International Inc. has big plans for its 820 acres of land in Bracebridge, it was reaffirmed at the auto parts manufacturer's annual Christmas buffet last Thursday in Toronto.

Some 2,000 people were invited, including Mayor Jim Lang, town clerk Ken Vietch and other industrial people in the area. There is certainly great expansion, even in a rural area.

I can think of another small plant in the town of Gravenhurst. This individual is an entrepreneur who worked for a big firm for a number of years. He left and started a small business in Gravenhurst called Gravenhurst Plastics. He started with some 10 or 12 people and is now running two shifts. He is running two shifts. One of the greatest products he is manufacturing is garden hose. He cannot keep up to the market. He has been to the United States and has received orders which he says he cannot fill at the present time with 50 employees.

I can assure Hon. Members that if an area like Parry Sound—Muskoka, which is not a great industrial area, can produce like this, other areas will certainly do the same.

Colleagues are aware that I have been greatly interested in the environment and acid rain. I had the privilege for the last two or three years to serve as chairman of the parliamentary committee on acid rain. My area of Parry Sound—Muskoka is probably one of the most environmentally sensitive areas in the world. If I thought for a minute that anything in the agreement would damage that most magnificent area, the paradise of all vacation lands in Canada, I would certainly be up and saying in no uncertain terms "no to free trade".

It is stated in the agreement, and has been reiterated by our former Minister of the Environment that the Free Trade Agreement in no way will mean an open door for polluting industries to begin. First and foremost, there are tough regulations in effect now. As most Members know, or should know, regulations and controls on the industry are under the jurisdiction of the provincial ministries of the environment. I will give marks to the Minister of the Environment for the Province of Ontario and his Department as well as to the Minister of the Environment in the Province of Quebec, the Hon. Clifford Lincoln. I only hope he will remain in that position.

These jurisdictions are the watch-dog of the environment. Despite the scare tactics put up by the Opposition, there is no way polluting industries will be allowed to come here. Free trade will make no difference whatever on any additional pollution or other waste.
