

CIHM/ICMH Microfiche Series.

öi

0

CIHM/ICMH Collection de microfiches.

Canadian Institute for Historical Microreproductions / Institut canadian de microreproductions historiques

Technical and Bibliographic Notes/Notes techniques et bibliographiques

The Institute has attempted to obtain the best original copy available for filming. Features of this copy which may be bibliographically unique, which may alter any of the images in the reproduction, or which may significantly change the usual method of filming, are checked below. L'Institut a microfilmé le meilleur exemplaire qu'il lui a été possible de se procurer. Les détails de cet exemplaire qui sont peut-être uniques du point de vue bibliographique, qui peuvent modifier une image reproduite, ou qui peuvent exiger une modification dans la méthode normele de filmage sont indiqués ci-dessous. T to

T P O fi

O bi tr si ofi si or

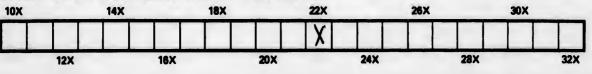

Ti sh Ti W

M di en be rig re m

	Coloured covers/	Coloured pages/
	Couverture de couleur	Pages de couleur
	Covers damaged/	Pages damaged/
ш	Couverture endommagée	Pages endommagées
	Covers restored and/or laminated/	Pages restored and/or laminated/
	Couverture restaurée et/ou pelliculée	Pages restaurées et/ou pelliculées
	Cover title missing/	Pages discoloured, stained or foxed/
	Le titre de couverture manque	Pages décolorées, tachetées ou piquées
	Coloured maps/	Pages detached/
	Cartes géographiques en couleur	Pages détachées
	Coloured ink (i.e. other than blue or black)/	Showthrough/
	Encre de couleur (i.e. autre que bleue ou noire)	Transparence
	Coloured plates and/or illustrations/	Quality of print varies/
	Planches et/ou illustrations en couleur	Qualité inégale de l'impression
	Bound with other material/	Includes supplementary material/
	Relié avec d'autres documents	Comprend du matériel supplémentaire
	Tight binding may cause shadows or distortion	Only edition available/
	along interior margin/ La reliure serrée peut causer de l'ombre ou de la	Seule édition disponible
	distortion le long de la marge intérieure	Pages wholly or partially obscured by errata
	Blank leaves added during restoration may	slips, tissues, etc., have been refilmed to appear within the text. Whenever possible, these	ensure the best possible image/
	have been omitted from filming/	Les pages totalement ou partiellement obscurcies par un feuillet d'errata, une pelure
	Il se peut que certaines pages blanches ajoutées	etc., ont été filmées à nouveau de façon à
	lors d'une restauration apparaissent dans le texte,	obtenir la meilleure image possible.
	mais, lorsque cela était possible, ces pages n'ont pas été filmées.
	Additional comments:/
	Commentaires supplémentaires;

This item is filmed at the reduction ratio checked below/ Ce document est filmé au taux de réduction indiqué ci-dessous.

.

The copy filmed here has been reproduced thanks to the generosity of:

Mills Memorial Library McMaster University

The images appearing here are the best quality possible considering the condition and legibility of the original copy and in keeping with the fliming contract specifications.

Original copies in printed paper covers are filmed beginning with the front cover and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression, or the back cover when appropriate. All other original copies are filmed beginning on the first page with a printed or illustrated impression, and ending on the last page with a printed or illustrated impression.

The last recorded frame on each microfiche shall contain the symbol \longrightarrow (meaning "CON-TINUED"), or the symbol ∇ (meaning "END"), whichever applies.

Maps, plates, charts, etc., may be filmed at different reduction ratios. Those too large to be entirely included in one exposure are filmed beginning in the upper left hand corner, left to right and top to bottom, as many frames as required. The following diagrams illustrate the method:

L'exemplaire filmé fut reproduit grâce à la générosité de:

Mills Memorial Library McMaster University

Les images suivantes ont été reproduites avec le plus grand soin, compte tenu de la condition et de la netteté de l'exemplaire filmé, et en conformité avec les conditions du contrat de filmage.

Les exemplaires originaux dont la couverture en papier est imprimée sont filmés en commençant par le premier plat et en tarminant soit par la dernière page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration, soit par le second plat, selon le cas. Tous les autres exemplaires originaux sont filmés en commençant par la première page qui comporte une empreinte d'impression ou d'illustration et en terminant par la dernière page qui comporte une telle empreinte.

Un des symboles sulvants apparaîtra sur la dernière image de chaque microfiche, selon le cas: le symbole \longrightarrow signifie "A SUIVRE", le symbole \forall signifie "FIN".

Les cartes, planches, tableaux, etc., peuvent être filmés à des taux de réduction différents. Lorsque le document est trop grand pour être reproduit en un seul cliché, il est filmé à partir de l'angle supérieur gauche, de gauche à droite, et de haut en bas, en prenant le nombre d'images nécessaire. Les diagrammes suivants illustrent la méthode.

1	2	3
4	5	6

e étails s du nodifier ir une ilmage

89 errata to

SPEECH

OF

EDMUND BURKE, Esq.

Bc. Bc. Bc.

[Price Is.]

SPEECH

OF

EDMUND BURKE, Esq.

MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT FOR THE

CITY OF BRISTOL,

On prefenting to the Houfe of Commons

(On the 11th of February, 1780)

A PLAN FOR THE BETTER SECURITY OF THE INDEPENDENCE OF PARLIAMENT,

AND THE

OECONOMICAL REFORMATION OF THE CIVIL AND OTHER ESTABLISHMENTS.

A NEW EDITION.

L O N D O N: PRINTED FOR J. DODSLEY, IN PALL-MALL. M.DCC.LXXX.

2 EENUND JUNUNEE and the subman tank to character and the set

-1.5

TOINING 10 TTO

Care in a draft drag inter a

A PERMISSION THE SUBJECT OF MICH. THE MUSIC CONSTRUCT STREET

5 F 7 P 1 A

ORCENDING EL L'ENTREET CELEUR ORCENDING ET L'ENTREET CELEUR

A REW DDITION.

LONDON: Pristis et LDONTEN, SCREET 115. MICHT

SPEECH, &c.

Mr. SPEAKER,

·····

A PL

FTT

Bar

I Rife, in acquittal of my engagement to the houfe, in obedience to the ftrong and just requisition of my conflituents, and, I am perfuaded, in conformity to the unanimous wifnes of the whole nation, to submit to the wifdom of parliament, "A plan of reform in the con-"fitution of feveral parts of the public œconomy."

I have endeavoured, that this plan fhould include in its execution, a confiderable reduction of improper expence; that, it fhould effect a conversion of unprofitable titles into a productive effate; that, it should lead to, and indeed almost compel, a provident administration of such sums of public money as must remain under difcretionary trusts; that, it should render the incurring debts on the civil effablishment (which must ultimately affect national ftrength and national credit) so very difficult, as to become next to impracticable.

But what, I confefs, was uppermost with me, what I bent the whole force of my mind to, was the reduction of that corrupt influence, which is itself the perennial fpring of all prodigality, and of all diforder; which loads us, more than millions of debt; which takes away vigour from our arms, wildom from our councils, and every fhadow of authority and credit from the most venerable parts of our confficution.

.

Sir,

Sir, I affure you, very folemnly, and with a very elear conficience, that nothing in the world has led me to fuch an undertaking, but my zeal for the honour of this houfe, and the fettled, habitual, fyftematic affection I bear to the caufe, and to the principles of government.

I enter perfectly into the nature and confequences of my attempt; and I advance to it with a tremor that fhakes me to the inmost fibre of my frame. I feel, that I engage in a bufinefs, in itself most ungracious, totally wide of the course of prudent conduct; and I really think, the most completely adverse that can be imagined, to the natural turn and temper of my own mind. I know, that all parfimony is of a quality approaching to unkindnefs; and that (on fome perfon or other) every reform must operate as a fort of punishment. Indeed the whole clafs of the fevere and refrictive virtues, are at a market almost too high for humanity. What is worfe, there are very few of those virtues which are not capable of being imitated, and even outdone in many of their most striking effects, by the worst of vices. Malignity and envy will carve much more deeply, and finish much more harply, in the work of retrenchment, than frugality and providence. I do not, therefore, wonder that gentlemen have kept away from fuch a talk, as well from good nature as from prudence. Private feeling might, indeed, be overborne by legislative reason; and a man of a long-fighted and ftrong-nerved humanity. might bring himfelf, not io much to confider from whom he takes a superfluous enjoyment, as for whom in the end he may preferve the abfolute necessaries of life.

But it is much more eafy to reconcile this meafure to humanity, than to bring it to any agreement with prudence. I do not mean that little, felfifh, pitiful, baftard thing, which fometimes goes by the name of a family in which it is not legitimate, and to which it is a difgrace;— I mean even that public and enlarged prudence, which, apprehensive of being difabled from rendering acceptable fervices to the world, withholds itfelf from thole that are invidious. Gentlemen who are, with me, verging towards the decline of life, and are apt to form their ideas of kings from kings of former acceptable for the solution of the solution with a very d has led me honour of matic affecples of go-onfequences tremor that e. I feel, ungracious, uct; and I hat can be of my own quality ape perfon or of punishre and rehigh for y few of eing imift ftriking and envy uch more frugality der that as well e feeling ; and a manity, m whom n in the ife. s meant with pitiful, me of a h it is larged . ifabled withlemen ' of life. ngs of former times, might dread the anger of a reigning prince;—they who are more provident of the future; or by being young are more interested in it, might tremble at the refentment of the successful they might see a long, dull, dreary, unvaried visto of defpair and exclusion, for half a century, before them. This is no pleafant prospect at the outset of a political journey.

ormer

[3]

Befides this, Sir, the private enemies to be made in all attempts of this kind are innumerable; and their enmity will be the more bitter, and the more dangerous too, because a fense of dignity will oblige them to conceal the caufe of their refentment. Very few men of great families and extensive connections, but will feel the fmart of a cutting reform, in fome close relation, fome bofom friend, fome pleafant acquaintance, fome dear protected dependant. Emolument is taken from fome; patronage from others; objects of purfuit from all. Men, forced into an involuntary independence, will abhor the authors of a bleffing which in their eyes has fo very near a refemblance to a curfe, When officers are removed, and the offices remain, you may fet the gratitude of fome against the anger of others ; you may oppose the friends, you oblige against the enemies you provoke. But fervices of the prefent fort create no attachments. The individual good felt in a public benefit, is comparatively fo fmall, comes round through fuch an involved labyrinth of intricate and tedious revolutions; whilft a prefent perfonal detriment is fo heavy, where it falls, and fo inftant inits operation, that the cold commendation of a public advantage never was, and never will be, a match for the quick fenfibility of a private lofs: and you may depend upon it, Sir, that when many people have an interest in railing, sooner or later, they will bring a. confiderable degree of unpopularity upon any measure. So that, for the prefent at leaft, the reformation will operate against the reformers ; and revenge (as against them at the leaft) will produce all the effects of corruption

This, Sir, is almost always the cafe, where the plan has compleat fucces. But how stands the matter in the mere attempt? Nothing, you know, is more. common, than for men to wish, and call loudly too, for a B 2 reformation, reformation, who, when it arrives, do by no means like the feverity of its afpect. Reformation is one of those pieces which must be put at some distance in order to pleafe. Its greatest favourers love it better in the abstract than in the substance. When any old prejudice of their own, or any interest that they value, is touched, they become forupulous, they become captious, and every man has his feparate exception. Some pluck out the black hairs, fome the grey; one point must be given up to one; another point must be yielded to another; nothing is fuffered to prevail upon its own principle: the whole is fo frittered down, and disjointed, that scarcely a trace of the original scheme remains ! Thus, between the refistance of power, and the unfystematical process of popularity, the undertaker and the undertaking are both exposed, and the poor reformer is hiffed off the stage, both by friends and foes.

Observe, Sir, that the apology for my undertaking (an apology which, though long, is no longer than neceffary) is not grounded on my want of the fullest fense of the difficult and invidious nature of the talk I undertake. I rifque odium if I fucceed, and contempt if I fail. My excuse must reft in mine and your conviction of the absolute, urgent necessity there is, that someshing of the kind should be done. If there is any facrifice to be made, either of estimation or of fortune, the finalleft is the beft. Commanders in chief are not to be put upon the forlorn hope. But indeed it is neceffary that the attempt should be made. It is necessary from our own political circumstances; it is necessary from the operations of the enemy; it is necessary from the demands of the people ; whose defires, when they do not militate with the stable and eternal rules of justice and reason (rules, which are above us, and above them) ought to be as a law to a Houfe of Commons.

As to our circumítances; I do not mean to aggravate the difficulties of them, by the ftrength of any colouring whatfoever. On the contrary, I observe, and obferve with pleature, that our affairs rather wear a more promifing afpect than they did on the opening of this feffion. We have had fome leading fucceffes. But those who rate them at the higheft (higher a great deal indeed than I dare to do) are of opinion, that, upon the the ho

rui fta

ou

fta

ma

W

ftr

ha

tha

16 I

ing

are

tec

lia

ma

ed

an

pr

C2

ot

th

th

I

fı

ь

r

c

)

no means tion is one diftance in it better in ny old prey value, is e captious, Some pluck int must be ed to anoown prininted, that is! Thus, fematical he underis hiffed dertaking than nelleft fenfe I underempt if I Conviclat fomeiny facriune, the not to be neceffary ary from ry from from the y do not tice and) ought gravate colourind oba more of this But it deal upon the 5]

the ground of fuch advantages, we cannot at this time hope to make any treaty of peace, which would not be ruinous and completely difgraceful. In fuch an anxious ftate of things, if dawnings of fuccess ferve to animate our diligence, they are good ; if they tend to increase our prefumption, they are worfe than defeats. The fate of our affairs shall then be as promising as any one may choose to conceive it: It is however but promising. We must recollect, that with but half of our natural ftrength, we are at war against confederated powers who have fingly threatned us with ruin : We must recollect, that whill we are left naked on one fide, our other flank is uncovered by any alliance; That whilft we are weighing and balancing our fucceffes against our loss, we are accumulating debt to the amount of at leaft fourteen millions in the year. That loss is certain.

I have no wifh to deny, that our fucceffes are as brilliant as any one choofes to make them; our refources too may, for me, be as unfathomable as they are reprefented. Indeed they are juft whatever the people poffefs, and will fubmit to pay. Taxing is an eafy bufinefs. Any projector can contrive new impositions; any bungler can add to the old. But is it altogether wife to have no other bounds to your impositions, than the patience of those who are to bear them ?

All I claim upon the fubject of your refources is this, that they are not likely to be increafed by wafting them.— I think I fhall be permitted to affume, that a fyftem of frugality will not leffen your riches, whatever they may be ;—I believe it will not be hotly difputed, that those refources which lie heavy on the fubject, ought not to be objects of preference; that they ought not to be the very first choice, to an honeft reprefentative of the people.

This is all, Sir, that I thall fay upon our circumftances and our refources: I mean to fay a little more on the operations of the enemy, becaufe this matter feems to me very natural in our prefeut deliberation. When I look to the other fide of the water, I cannot help recollecting what Pyrrhus faid on reconnoitering the Roman camp, "Thefe Barbarians have nothing barbarous in " their difcipline." When I look, as I have pretty carefully looked, into the proceedings of the French king, I am forry to fay it, I fee nothing of the character and

₿3

genius

genius of arbitrary finance; none of the bold frauds of bankrupt power; none of the wild struggles, and plunges, of defpotifm in diffrefs ;- no lopping off from the capital of debt;-no fuspension of interest;-no robbery under the name of loan ;-no raifing the value, no debasing the substance of the coin. I see neither Louis the fourteenth, nor Louis the fifteenth. On the contrary, I behold with aftonifhment, rifing before me, by the very hands of arbitrary power, and in the very midit of war and confusion, a regular, methodical fyftem of public credit; I behold a fabric laid on the natural and folid foundations of truft and confidence. among men; and rifing, by fair gradations, order over order, according to the just rules of fymmetry and art. What a reverse of things | Principle, method, regularity, æconomy, frugality, justice to individuals, and care of the people, are the refources with which France makes war upon Great Britain. God avert the omen ! But if we should see any genius in war and politics arise in France, to fecond what is done in the bureau !-- I turn my eyes from the confequences.

The noble Lord in the blue ribbon, last year, treated all this with contempt. He never could conceive it poffible that the French minister of finance could go through that year with a loan of but feventeen hundred thousand pounds; and that he should be able to fund that loan without any tax. The fecond year, however, opens the very fame fcene. A fmall loan, a loan of no more than two millions five hundred thousand pounds, is to carry our enemies through the fervice of this year alfo. No tax is raifed to fund that debt ; no tax is raifed for the current fervices. I am credibly informed that there is no anticipation whatfoever. * Compenfations are correctly made, Old debts continue to be funk as in the time of profound peace. Even payments which their treafury had been authorized to fuspend during the time of war, are not fuspended.

A general reform, executed through every department of the revenue, creates an annual income of more than

* This term comprehends various retributions made to perfons whole offices are taken away, or who, in any other way, fuffer by the new arrangements that are made,

half

h

febcti

bold frauds ruggles, and ping off from ntereft ;-- no ng the value, fee neither th. On the g before me, in the very hodical fyfd on the naconfidence-, order over try and art. od, regulaiduals, and ich France the omen ! olitics arife ureau |-- I

rear, treatconceive it could go n hundred le to fund ear, howin, a loan thousand fervice of t; no tax informed ompeníabe funk ts which during

partment ore than

ns whofe new ar-

half

half a million, whilst it facilitates and simplifies all the functions of administration. The king's household-at the remotest avenues to which, all reformation has been hitherto ftopped - that household, which has been the strong hold of prodigality, the virgin fortress which was never before attacked-has been not only not defended, but it has, even in the forms, been furrendered by the king to the occonomy of his minister. No capitulation; no referve. Economy has entered in triumph into the public fplendour of the monarch, into his private amusements, into the appointments of his nearest and highest relations. Economy and public fpirit have made a beneficent and an honeft fpoil; they have plundered, from extravagance and luxury, for the use of substantial service, a revenue of near four hundred thousand pounds. The reform of the finances, joined to this reform of the court, gives to the public nine hundred thousand pounds a year and upwards.

The minister who does these things is a great man-But the king who defires that they should be done, is a far greater. We must do justice to our enemies - These are the acts of a patriot king. I am not in dread of the vaft armies of France : I am not in dread of the gallant fpirit of its brave and numerous nobility : I am not alarmed even at the great navy which has been to miraculoufly created. All these things Louis the fourteenth had before. With all thefe things, the French monarchy has more than once fallen prostrate at the feet of the public faith of . Great Britain. It was the want of public credit which difabled France from recovering after her defeats, or recovering even from her victories and triumphs. It was a prodigal court, it was an ill-ordered revenue, that fapped the foundations of all her greatnefs. Credit cannot exift under the arm of neceffity. Neceffity strikes at credit, I allow, with a heavier and quicker blow under an arbitrary monarchy, than under a limited " and balanced government : but still necessity and credit are natural enemies, and cannot be long reconciled in any fituation. From neceffity and corruption, a free state may lose the spirit of that complex constitution which is the foundation of confidence. On $ 4

the

the other hand, I am far from being fure, that a monarchy, when once it is properly regulated, may not for a long time, furnifh a foundation for credit upon the folidity of its maxims, though it affords no ground of truft in its inftitutions. I am afraid I fee in England, and in France, fomething like a beginning of both thefe things. I wifh I may be found in a miftake.

This very fhort, and very imperfect flate of what is now going on in France (the laft circumflances of which I received in about eight days after the regiftry of the * edict) I do not, Sir, lay before you for any invidious purpofe. It is in order to excite in us the fpirit of a noble emulation.—Let the nations make war upon each other (fince we muft make war) not with a low and vulgar malignity, but by a competition of virtues. This is the only way by which both parties can gain by war. The French have imitated us; let us, through them, imitate ourfelves; ourfelves in our better and happier days. If public frugality, under whatever men, or in whatever mode of government, is national firength, it is a ftrength which our enemies are in poffefion of before us.

Sir, I am well aware, that the ftate and the refult of the French acconomy which I have laid before you, are even now lightly treated by fome, who ought never to fpeak but from information. Pains have not been spared, to represent them as impositions on the public. Let me tell you, Sir, that the creation of a navy, and a two years war without taxing, are a very fingular species of imposture. But be it so. For what end does Neckar carry on this delution? Is it to lower the effimation of the crown he ferves, and to render his own adminiftration contemptible ? No! No! He is confcious, that the fense of mankind is fo clear and decided in favour of æconomy, and of the weight and value of its refources, that he turns himfelf to every fpecies of fraud and artifice, to obtain the mere reputation of it. Men do not affect a conduct that tends to their difcredit. Let us, then, get the better of Monfieur Neckar in his own way -Let us do in reality what he does only in pretence.-Let us turn his French tinfel into English gold. Is

Edict, registered a9th January, 1780.

then

hat a mol, may not redit upon no ground England, both these

of what frances of e regiftry r any inthe fpirit war upon th a low virtues. can gain through und hapmen, or trength, flion of

efult of re you, lever to spared, Let atwo pecies leckar ion of mini-, that avour fourand n do t us, way C. --- hen

Is

then the meer c_{pl} is and appearance of frugality and good management is fuch use to France, and is the fubftance to be for mischievous to England? Is the very conftitution of nature for altered by a fea of twenty miles, that occonomy should give power on the continent, and that profusion should give it here? For God's fake let not this be the only fashion of France which we refuse to copy.

To the laft kind of necessity, the defires of the people, I have but a very few words to fay. The ministers' feem to contest this point; and affect to doubt, whether the people do really defire a plan of ceconomy in the civil government. Sir, this is too ridiculous. It is impossible that they should not defire it. It is impossible that a prodigality which draws its refources from their indigence, fhould be pleafing to them. Little factions of penfioners, and their dependants, may talk another language. But the voice of nature is against them; and it will be heard. The people of England will not, they cannot take it kindly, that reprefentatives should refuse to their constituents, what an absolute fovereign voluntarily offers to his fubjects. The expression of the petitions is, that " before any new burthens are laid upon " this country, effectual measures be taken by this house, " to enquire into, and correct, the grofs abufes in the ex-" penditure of public money."

This has been treated by the noble lord in the blue ribbon, as a wild factious language. It happens, however, that the people in their addrefs to us, ufe almost word for word the fame terms as the king of France ufes in addreffing himfelf to his people; and it differs only, as it falls thort of the French king's idea of what is due to his fubjects. "To convince," fays he, "our "faithful fubjects of the defire we entertain not to re-"car to new impositions, until we have first exhausted "all the refources which order and economy can pof-"fibly fupply."— &c. &c.

These defires of the people of England, which come far short of the voluntary concessions of the king of France, are moderate indeed. They only contend that we should interweave some occonomy with the taxes with which we have chosen to begin the war. They request, not that you should rely upon occonomy exclusively, exclusively, but that you should give it rank and precedence, in the order of the ways and means of this fingle feffion.

But if it were poffible, that the defires of our conflituents, defires which are at once fo natural, and fo very much tempered and fubdued, fhould have no weight with an houfe of commons, which has its eye elfewhere; I would turn my eyes to the very quarter to which theirs are directed. I would reafon this matter with the houfe, on the mere policy of the queftion; and I would undertake to prove, that an early dereliction of abufe, is the direct intereft of government; of government taken abftractedly from its duties, and confidered merely as a fyftem intending its own confervation.

If there is any one eminent criterion, which, above all the reft, diffinguishes a wife government from an administration weak and improvident, it is this ;-" well to " know the best time and manner of yielding, what it is " impoffible to keep."- There have been, Sir, and there are, many who chuse to chicane with their situation, rather than be instructed by it. Those gentlemen argue against every defire of reformation, upon the principles of a criminal profecution. It is enough for them to justify their adherence to a pernicious fystem, that it is not of their contrivance; that it is an inheritance of abfurdity, derived to them from their ancestors; that they can make out a long and unbroken pedigree of milmanagers that have gone before them. They are proud of the antiquity of their house; and they defend their errors, as if they were defending their inheritance : afraid of derogating from their nobility; and carefully avoiding a fort of blot in their fcutcheon, which they think would degrade them for ever.

It was thus that the unfortunate Charles the Firft defended himfelf on the practice of the Stuart who went before him, and of all the Tudors; his partizans might have gone to the Plantagenets.—They might have found bad examples enough, both abroad and at home, that could have thewn an antient and illustrious defcent. But there is a time, when men will not fuffer bad things becaufe their anceftors have fuffered worfe. There is a time, when the hoary head of inveterate abufe, will neither drawreverence nor obtain protection. If prececonftio very t with re; I theirs oufe, d unfe, is aken y as re all Imill to it is here on, arinem hat lce 'S ; ce re Id : Y

If the noble lord in the blue ribbon pleads, " not guilty," to the charges brought against the present system of public æconomy, it is not possible to give a fair verdict by which he will not ftand acquitted. But pleading is not our present business. His plea or his traverfe may be allowed as an answer to a charge, when a charge is made. But if he puts himfelf in the way to obstruct reformation, then the faults of his office instantly become his own. Instead of a public officer in an abusive department, whose province is an object to be regulated, he becomes a criminal who is to be punished. I do most seriously put it to administration, to confider the wildom of a timely reform. Early reformations are amicable arrangements with a friend in power; late reformations are terms imposed upon a conquered enemy: early reformations are made in cool blood; late reformations are made under a state of inflammation. In that flate of things the people behold in government nothing that is respectable. They fee the abuse, and they will see nothing else-They fall into the temper of a furious populace provoked at the diforder of a houfe of ill fame; they never attempt to correct or regulate; they go to work by the fhortest way-They abate the nufance, they pull down the houfe.

This is my opinion with regard to the true interest of government. But as it is the interest of government that reformation should be early, it is the interest of the people that it fhould be temperate. It is their intereit, because a temperate reform is permanent; and because it has a principle of growth. Whenever we improve, it is right to leave room for a further improvement. It is right to confider, to look about us, to examine the effect of what we have done.-Then we can proceed with confidence, because we can proceed with intelligence. - Whereas in hot reformations, in what men, more zealous than confiderate, call making clear work, the whole is generally fo crude, fo harfh, fo indigested; mixed with fo much imprudence, and fo much injustice; fo contrary to the whole course of human nature, and human inflitutions, that the very people who are most eager for it; are among the first to grow difgusted at what they have done. Then fome part of the abdicated grievance is recalled from its exile in order to become become a corrective of the correction. Then the abufe affumes all the credit and popularity of a reform. The very idea of purity and difintereftednets in politics falls into difrepute, and is confidered as a vifion of hot and inexperienced men; and thus diforders become incurable, not by the virulence of their own quality, but by the unapt and violent nature of the remedies. A great part therefore, of my idea of reform, is meant to operate gradually; fome benefits will come at a nearer, fome at a more remote period. We muft no more make hafte to be rich by parfimony, than by intemperate acquifition.

In my opinion, it is our duty when we have the defires of the people before us, to purfue them, not in the fpirit of literal obedience, which may militate with their very principle, much lefs to treat them with a peevifh and contentious litigation, as if we were adverfe parties in a fuit. It would, Sir, be most dishonourable for a faithful reprefentative of the commons, to take advantage of any inartificial expression of the people's withes, in order to frustrate their attainment of what they have an undoubted right to expect. We are under infinite obligations to our conftituents, who have raifed us to fo diffinguished a truft, and have imparted fuch a degree of fanctity to common characters. We ought to walk before them with purity, plainnefs, and integrity of heart ; with filial love, and not with flavish fear, which is always a low and tricking thing. For my own part, in what I have meditated upon that fubject, I cannot indeed take upon me to fay I have the honour to follow the fenfe The truth is, I met it on the way, of the people. while I was purfuing their interest according to my own ideas. I am happy beyond expression, to find that my intentions have fo far coincided with theirs, that I have not had cause to be in the least fcrupulous to fign their Petition, conceiving it to express my own opinions, as nearly as general terms can express the object of particular arrangements.

I am therefore fatisfied to act as a fair mediator between government and the people, endeavouring to form a plan which fhould have both an early and a temperate operation. I mean, that it fhould be fubftantial; that it fhould be fystematic. That it fhould rather firike

at

he abufe n. The ics falls hot and incuty, but es. A ant to hearer, more perate e the ot in with th a verfe able take le's of We its. Ind

on

u --

al

a I

9

at the first cause of prodigality and corrupt influence, than attempt to follow them in all their effects.

It was to fulfil the first of these objects (the proposal of fomething substantial) that I found myself obliged at the out-fet, to reject a plan proposed by an honourable and * attentive member of parliament, with very good intentions on his part, about a year or two ago. Sir, the plan I speak of, was the tax of 25 per cent. moved upon places and penfions during the continuance of the American war.-Nothing, Sir, could have met my ideas more than fuch a tax, if it was confidered as a practical fatire on that war, and as a penalty upon those who led us into it; but in any other view it appeared to me very liable to objections. I confidered the fcheme as neither fubstantial, nor permanent, nor systematical, nor likely to be a corrective of evil influence. I have always thought employments a very proper fubject of regulation, but a very ill-chosen subject for a tax. An equal tax upon property is reasonable; because the object is of the fame quality throughout. The fpecies is the fame, it differs only in its quantity : but a tax upon falaries is totally of a different nature; there can be no equality, and confequently no justice, in taxing them by the hundred, in the gross.

We have, Sir, on our establishment, several offices which perform real fervice-We have also places that provide large rewards for no fervice at all. We have stations which are made for the public decorum; made for preferving the grace and majefty of a great people.-We have likewife expensive formalities, which tend rather to the difgrace than the ornament of the ftate and This, Sir, is the real condition of our the court. establishments. To fall with the fame feverity on objects fo perfectly diffimilar, is the very reverfe of a reformation. I mean a reformation framed, as all ferious things ought to be, in number, weight, and measure .- Suppole, for instance, that two men receive a falary of £.800 a year each.-In the office of one, there is nothing at all to be done; in the other, the occupier is opprefied by its duties .- Strike off twenty-five per cent. from these two offices, you take from one man f. 200, which in justice he ought to have, and you give in effect to the other £.600, which he ought not The public robs the former, and the latter to receive.

. Thomas Gilbert, Efg; member for Litchfield, robs

robs the public; and this mode of mutual robbery is the only way in which the office and the public can make up their accounts.

But the balance in fettling the account of this double injuftice, is much against the ftate. The refult is fhort. You purchafe a faving of two hundred pounds, by a profusion of fix. Befides, Sir, whilft you leave a fupply of unfecured meney behind, wholly at the difcretion of ministers, they make up the tax to fuch places as they wish to favour, or in fuch new places as they may choose to create. Thus the civil lift becomes opprefied with debt; and the public is obliged to repay, and to repay with an heavy intereft, what it has taken by an injudicious tax. Such has been the effect of the taxes hitherto laid on pensions and employments, and it is no encouragement to recur again to the fame expedient.

In effect, fuch a fcheme is not calculated to produce, but to prevent reformation. It holds out a fhadow of prefent gain to a greedy and neceffitous public, to divert their attention from those abuses, which in reality are the great causes of their wants. It is a composition to ftay enquiry; it is a fine paid by missingement, for the renewal of its lease. What is worfe, it is a fine paid by industry and merit, for an indemnity to the idle and the worthles. But I shall fay no more upon this topic, because (whatever may be given out to the contrary) I know that the noble lord in the blue ribbon perfectly agrees with me in these fentiments.

After all that I have faid on this fubject, I am fo fenfible, that it is our duty to try every thing which may contribute to the relief of the nation, that I do not attempt wholly to reprobate the idea even of a tax. Whenever, Sir, the incumbrance of ufclefs office (which lies no lefs a dead weight upon the fervice of the flate, than upon its revenues) fhall be removed ;—when the remaining offices fhall be claffed according to the juft proportion of their rewards and fervices, fo as to admit the application of an equal rule to their taxation, when the diferetionary power over the civil lift cafh fhall be fo regulated, that a minifter fhall no longer have the means of repaying with a private, what is taken by a public hand—if after all thefe preliminary regulations, it fhould bbery is blic can is douefult is bounds, leave a he difo fuch aces as comes repay; taken ect of ments, fame duce, bw of b diality ition

idle this on-

nnr, fs n S [15]

be thought that a tax on places is an object worthy of the public attention, I shall be very ready to lend my hand to a reduction of their emoluments.

Having thus, Sir, not fo much abfolutely rejected, as postponed, the plan of a taxation of office, —my next bufinels was to find fomething which might be really. fubftantial and effectual. I am quite clear, that if we do not go to the very origin and first ruling caufe of grievances, we do nothing. What does it fignify to turn abufes out of one door, if we are to let them in at another ? What does it fignify to promote æconomy upon a measure, and to fuffer it to be fubverted in the principle ? Our ministers are far from being wholly to blame for the prefent ill order which prevails. Whilft inflitutions directly repugnant to good management, are fuffered to remain, no effectual or lafting reform can be introduced.

I therefore thought it necessary, as foon as I conceived thoughts of fubmitting to you fome plan of reform, to take a comprehensive view of the state of this country; to make a fort of furvey of its Jurifdictions, its Estates, and its Establishments. Something, in every one of them, feemed to me to ftand in the way of all œconomy in their administration, and prevented every poffibility of methodizing the fystem. But being, as I ought to be, doubtful of myfelf, I was refolved not to proceed in an arbitrary manner, in any particular which tended to change the fettled flate of things, or in any degree to affect the fortune or fituation, the intereft or the importance, of any individual. By an arbitrary proceeding, I mean one conducted by the private opinions, taftes, or feelings, of the man who attempts to regulate. These private measures are not standards of the exchequer, nor balances of the fanctuary. General principles cannot be debauched or corrupted by intereft or caprice; and by those principles I was refolved to work.

Sir, before I proceed further, I will lay these principles fairly before you, that afterwards you may be in a condition to judge whether every object of regulation, as I propose it, comes fairly under its rule. This will exceedingly shorten all discussion between us, if we are perfectly in earnest in establishing a system of good management. management. I therefore lay down to myfelf, feven fundamental rules; they might indeed be reduced to two or three fimple maxims, but they would be too general, and their application to the feveral heads of the bufinefs, before us, would not be fo diftinct and visible. I conceive then,

First, That all jurifdictions which furnish more matter of expence, more temptation to oppression, or more means and instruments of corrupt influence, than advantage to justice or political administration, ought to be abolisted.

- Secondly, That all public effates which are more fubfervient to the purposes of vexing, overawing, and influencing those who hold under them, and to the expence of perception and management, than of benefit to the revenue, ought, upon every principle, both of revenue and of freedom, to be disposed of.
- Tbirdly, That all offices which bring more charge than proportional advantage to the ftate; that all offices which may be engrafted on others, uniting and fimplifying their duties, ought, in the first case, to be taken away; and in the fecond, to be confolidated.
- Fourthly, That all fuch offices ought to be abolifhed, as obfiruct the profpect of the general fuperintendant of finance; which deftroy his fuperintendancy, which difable him from forefeeing and providing for charges as they may occur; from preventing expence in its origin, checking it in its progrefs, or fecuring its application to its proper purpofes. A minifter under whom expences can be made without his knowledge, can never fay what it is that he can fpend, or what it is that he can fave.
- Fifthly, That it is proper to eftablish an invariable order in all payments; which will prevent partiality; which will give preference to fervices, not according to the importunity of the demandant, but the rank and order of their utility or their justice.

Sixthly,

f, feven luced to too geof the vifible.

to opof cortice or abo-

more overunder n and enue, venue

tharge that thers, ught, id in aboneral y his rom they its ing niade hat he

eto of of

'

a-

Sixthly, That it is right to reduce every effablithment, and every part of an effablithment (as nearly as poffible) to certainty; the life of all order and good management.

Seventhly, That all fubordinate treasfuries, as the nurferies of mifmanagement; and as naturally drawing to themfelves as much money as they can; keeping it as long as they can; and accounting for it as late as they can; ought to be diffolved: They have a tendency to perplex and diffract the public accounts, and to excite a fufficion of government, even beyond the extent of their abufe:

Under the authority and with the guidance of those principles, I proceed; withing that nothing in any eftablishment may be changed; where I am not able to make a ftrong; direct, and folid application of those principles, or of fome one of them: An occonomical conflictution is a necellary basis for an occonomical administration.

First, with regard to the fovereign jurifdictions, I must observe, Sir, that whoever takes a view of this kingdom in a curfory manner, will imagine, that he beholds a folid, compacted, uniform fystem of monarchy; in which all inferior jurifdictions are but as rays diverging from one center. But on examining it more nearly, you find much excentricity and confution. It is not a Monarchy in stricthes. But, as in the Saxon times this country was an heptarchy, it is now a ftrange fort of Pentarchy. It is divided into five feveral diftinct principalities, befides the fupreme. There is indeed this difference from the Saxon times, that as in the itinerant exhibitions of the flage, for want of a complete company, they are obliged to throw a variety of parts on their chief performer; fo our fovereign condescends himself to act, not only the principal but all the fubordinate parts in the play. He condescends to diffipate the royal character, and to trifle with those light fubordinate lacquered fceptres in those hands that fustain the ball, repretenting the world, or which wield the trident that commands the ocean. Crofs a brook, and you lose the king of England ; but you have fome comfort in coming again under his majesty, though " fhorn of his beams," and no more than prince of Wales. Go to the north, and you find him dwindled to a Duke of Lancaster; turn to the west of that north, and he pops upon you in the humble character of Earl of Chester. Travel a few miles on, the Earl of Chester disappears; and the king surprises you again as Count Palatine of Lancaster. If you travel beyond Mount Edgecombe, you find him once more in his incognito, and He is Duke of Cornwall. So that, quite fatigued and fatiated with this dull variety, you are infinitely refreshed when you return to the sphere of his proper fplendor, and behold your aniable fovereign in his true, fimple, undisguised, native character of majesty.

In every one of these five Principalities, Duchies, Palatinates, there is a regular cftablifhment of confiderable expence, and most domineering influence. As his majefty fubinits to appear in this flate of fubordination to himfelf, his loyal peers and faithful commons attend his royal transformations; and are not fo nice as to refuse to nibble at those crumbs of emoluments, which confole their petty metamorphofes. Thus every one of those principalities has the apparatus of a kingdom, for the jurifdiction over a few private cftates ; and the formality and charge of the exchequer of Great Britain, for collecting the rents of a country 'fquire. Cornwall is the best of them; but when you compare the charge with the receipt, you will find that it furnifhes no exception to the general rule. The duchy and county palatine of Lancaster do not yield, as I have reason to believe, on an average of twenty years, four thousand pounds a year, clear to the crown. As to Wales, and the county palatine of Cheffer, I have my doubts, whether their productive exchequer yields any returns at all. Yet one may fay, that this revenue is more faithfully applied to its purposes than any of the reft; as it exifts for the fole purpose of multiplying offices, and extending influence.

An attempt was lately made to improve this branch of local influence, and to transfer it to the fund of general corruption. I have on the feat behind me, the conflitution of Mr. John Probert; a knight-errant, dubbed, by the noble lord in the blue ribbon, and fent fer

m

an

th

"

66

66

"

"

"

" this ve you o

p

ice of ndled that racter arl of again l bere in that, you phere foveacter hics, con-As brdicompt fo oluhus of a tes ; reat ure. Dare urchy ave JUL to my ny IS he ng ćh e-10

t,

١t

fent to fearch for revenues and adventures upon the mountains of Wales. The commission is remarkable; and the event not lefs fo. The commission fets forth, that " Upon a report of the deputy auditor (for there is " a deputy auditor) of the principality of Wales, it " appeared, that his majefy's land-revenues in the faid " principality, are greatly diminished;"-and "that upon " a report of the furveyor general of his majefty's land " revenues, upon a memorial of the auditor of his ma-" jefty's revenues within the faid principality, that his "mines and foretts have produced very little profit " either to the public revenue or to individuals;"-and therefore they appoint Mr. Probert, with a penfion of three hundred pounds a year from the faid principality, to try whether he can make any thing more of that very little which is flated to be fo greatly diminished. " A beggarly account of empty boxes." And yet, Sir, you will remark-that this diminution from littlenefs (which ferves only to prove the infinite divifibility of matter) was not for want of the tender and officious care (as we fee) of furveyors general, and furveyors' particular; of auditors and deputy-auditors; not for want of memorials, and remonstrances, and reports, and commissions, and constitutions, and inquisitions, and penfions.

Probert, thus armed, and accoutred, --- and paid, pro-ceeded on his adventure ;- but he was no fooner arrived on the confines of Wales, than all Wales was in arms. to meet him. That nation is brave, and full of fpirit. Since the invalion of king Edward, and the mallacre of the bards, there never was fuch a tumult, and alarm, and uproar, through the region of Prestatyn. Snowden shook to its base; Cader Edris was loosened from its The fury of litigious war blew her horn foundations. on the mountains. The rocks poured down their goatherds, and the deep caverns vomited out their miners. Every thing above ground, and every thing underground, was in arms.

In fhort, Sir, to alight from my Welfh Pegafus, and to come to level ground ; the Preux Chevalier Probert. went to look for revenue, like his mafters upon other occafions; and like his mafters, he found rebellion. But we were grown cautious by experience. A civil war of C 2

paper

paper might end in a more ferious war; for now remonfirance met remonstrance, and memorial was opposed to memorial. The wife Britons thought it more reasonable that the poor wasted decrepit revenue of the principality, should die a natural than a violent death.

In truth, Sir, the attempt was no lefs an affront upon the understanding of that respectable people, than it was an attack on their property. They chofe that their ancient mols-grown caftles, fhould moulder into decay, under the filent touches of time, and the flow formality of an oblivious and drowly exchequer, than that they fhould be battered down all at once, by the lively efforts of a penfioned engineer. As it is the fortune of the noble lord to whom the aufpices of this campaign belonged, frequently to provoke refiftance, fo it is his rule and nature to yield to that refistance in all cafes what foever. He was true to himfelf on this occasion. He submitted with spirit to the spirited remonstrances of the Welch. Mr. Probert gave up his adventure, and keeps his penfion-and fo ends " the famous hiftory of the revenue adventures of the " bold Baron North, and the good Knight Probert, " upon the mountains of Venodotia."

In such a state is the exchequer of Wales at present, that, upon the report of the treasury itself, its little revenue is greatly diminished; and we see by the whole of this strange transaction, that an attempt to improve it produces resistance; the resistance produces submission; and the whole ends in pension *.

It is nearly the fame with the revenues of the duchy of Lancaster. To do nothing with them is extinction; to improve them is oppression. Indeed, the whole of the estates which support these minor principalities, is made up, not of revenues, and rents, and profitable fines, but of claims, of pretensions, of vexations, of litigations. They are exchequers of unfrequent receipt, and constant charge; a system of finances not fit for an accommission would be rich; not fit for a prince

⁴ Here Lord North fhook his head, and told those who fat near him, that Mr. Probert's pension was to depend on his fucces. It may be fo. Mr. Probert's pension was, however, no effential part of the question; nor did Mr. B. care whether he still possified it or not. His point was, to shew the ridicule of attempting an improvement of the Welsh revenue under its present establishment.

remonpofed to reafone prindeath. ht upon than it le that er into he flow , than ce, by is the ices of refifthat rehimfelf he fpit gave o ends of the robert,

refent, the retole of ove it flion;

uchy tion; le of itics, table , of renot or a nce that Pro-Mr. the reprince who would govern his subjects with equity and justice.

It is not only between prince and fubject, that these mock jurifdictions, and mimic revenues, produce great mischief. They excite among the people a spirit of informing, and delating; a spirit of supplanting and undermining one another. So that many in fuch circumftances, conceive it advantageous to them, rather to continue fubject to vexation themfelves, than to give up the means and chance of vexing others. It is exceedingly common for men to contract their love to their country, into an attachment to its petty fubdivifions; and they fometimes even cling to their provincial abuses, as if they were franchises, and local privileges. Accordingly, in places where there is much of this kind of eftate, perions will be always found, who would rather truft to their talents in recommending themfelves to power for the renewal of their interefts, than to incumber their purfes, though never fo lightly, in order to transmit independence to their posterity. . It is a great mistake, that the defire of fecuring property is univerfal among mankind. Gaming is a principle inherent in human nature. It belongs to us all. would therefore break those tables ; I would furnish no evil occupation for that fpirit. I would make every man look every where, except to the intrigue of a court, for the improvement of his circumstances, or the fecurity of his fortune. I have in my eye a very ftrong cafe in the duchy of Lancaster (which lately occupied Westminster-hall, and the house of lords) as my voucher for many of these reflections *.

For what plaufible reafon are thefe principalities fuffered to exift? When a government is rendered complex (which in itfelf is no defirable thing) it ought to be for fome political end, which cannot be anfwered otherwife. Subdivisions in government, are only admifible in favour of the dignity of inferior princes, and high nobility; or for the fupport of an ariftocratic confederacy under fome head; or for the confervation of the franchifes of the people in fome privileged province. For the two former of thefe ends, fuch are the fubdivisions in favour of the electoral, and other princes in the empire; for the latter of these purposes, are the jurifdictions of the imperial cities, and the Hanse towns For the latter of these ends are also the countries of the States [Pais d'Etats] and certain cities, and orders in France. These are all regulations with an object, and some of them with a very good object. But how are the principles of any of these subdivisions applicable in the case before us?

• Cafe of Richard Lee, Efq; Appellant, against George Venalles Lord Vernon, Refpondent, in the year 1776.

3

the

Do they answer any purpose to the king? The principality of Wales was given by patent to Edward the Black Prince, on the ground on which it has fince flood.—Lord Coke fagacioufly observes upon it, "That "in the charter of creating the Black Prince Edward "prince of Wales, there is a great myslery—for lefs "than an effate of inheritance, so great a prince could "not have, and an absolute estate of inheritance in so "great a principality as Wales (this principality being "fo dear to him) he should not have; and therefore it "was made, shi et heredibus fuis regibus Angliæ, that "by his decease, or attaining to the crown, it might "be extinguished in the crown."

For the fake of this foolifh my/lery, of what a great prince could not have lefs, and should not have fo much, of a principality which was too dear to be given, and too great to be kept-and for no other caufe that ever I could find-this form and fhadow of a principality, without any fubstance, has been maintained. That you may judge in this inftance (and it ferves for the reft) of the difference between a great and a little œconomy, you will pleafe to recollect, Sir, that Wales may be about the tenth part of England in fize and population; and certainly not a hundredth part in opulence. Twelve judges perform the whole of the bufinefs, both of the flationary and the itinerant justice of this kingdom; but for Wales, there are eight judges. There is in Wales an exchequer, as well as in all the duchies, according to the very best and most authentic absurdity of form. There are in all of them, a hundred more difficult trifles and laborious fooleries, which ferve no other purpole than to keep alive corrupt hope and fervile dependence.

These principalities are so far from contributing to the ease of the king, to his wealth, or his dignity, that they render both his supreme and his subordinate authority, perfectly are the c towns is of the orders in eCt, and low are table in

? The Edward us fince 'That dward for lefs e could in fo being fore it that might great much, and ever lity, you eff) be n; be n; ve he ut ss g. s perfectly ridiculous. It was but the other day, that that pert, factious fellow, the duke of Lancaster, prefumed to fly in the face of his liege lord, our gracious fovercign; and affaciating with a parcel of lawyers as factious as himielf, to the deftruction of all law and order, and in commences with the king. The ob-lion-prefumed to go to law with the king. The obthe parties got the better, I really forget. I think it was (as it ought to be) the king. The material point is, that the fuit cost about fifteen thousand pounds. But as the duke of Lancaster is but a fort of duke Humphrey, and not worth a groat, our fovereign was obliged to pay the cofts of both. Indeed this art of converting a great monarch into a little prince, this royal mafquerading, is a very dangerous and expensive amusement; and one of the king's menus plaifirs, which ought to be reformed. This duchy, which is not worth four thousand pounds a year at best, to revenue, is worth forty or fifty thousand to influence.

The duchy of Lancaster, and the county palatine of Lancaster, answered, I admit, some purpose in their original creation. They tended to make a subject imitate a prince. When Henry the fourth from that flair ascended the throne, high-minded as he was, he was not willing to kick away the ladder. To prevent that principality from being extinguished in the crown, he fevered it by act of parliament. He had a motive, fuch as it was; he thought his title to the crown unfound, and his poffession infecure. He therefore managed a retreat in his duchy; which lord Coke calls (I do not know why) par multis regnis. He flattered himfelf that it was practicable to make a projecting point half way down, to break his fall from the precipice of royalty; as if it were possible for one who had loft a kingdom to keep any thing elfe. However, it is evident that he thought fo. When Henry the fifth united, by act of parliament, the eflates of his mother to the duchy, he had the fame predilection with his father, to the root of his family honours, and the fame policy in enlarging the fphere of a possible retreat from the slippery royalty of the two great crowns he held. All this was changed by Edward the fourth. He had no fuch family partialities, and his policy was the reverie of that of Henry the fourth C 4 and

and Henry the fifth. He accordingly again united the duchy of Lancaster to the crown. But when Henry the feventh, who chose to consider himself as of the house of Lancaster, came to the throne, he brought with him the old pretensions, and the old politics of that house. A new act of parliament, a second time, diffevered the duchy of Lancaster from the crown; and in that line things continued until the fubversion of the monarchy, when principalities The duchy of and powers fell along with the throne. Lancaster must have been extinguished, if Cromwell, who began to form ideas of aggrandizing his houfe, and raifing the feveral branches of it, had not caufed the duchy to be again separated from the commonwealth, by an act of the parliament of those times.

What partiality, what objects of the politics of the house of Lancaster, or of Croinwell, has his present majefty, or his majefty's family ? What power have they within any of these principalities, which they have not within their kingdom? In what manner is the dignity of the nobility concerned in these principalities? What rights have the fubject there, which they have not at least equally in every other part of the nation. These diffinctions exift for no good end to the king, to the nobility, or to the people. They ought not to exift at all. If the crown (contrary to its nature, but most conformably to the whole tenor of the advice that has been lately given) fhould fo far forget its dignity, as to contend, that these jurisdictions and revenues are estates of private property, I am rather for acting as if that groundlefs claim were of fome weight, than for giving up that effential part of the reform. I would value the clear income, and give a clear annuity to the crown, taken on the medium produce for twenty years.

If the crown has any favourite name or title, if the fubject has any matter of local accommodation within any of thefe jurifdictions, it is meant to preferve them; and to improve them, if any improvement can be fuggefted. As to the crown reversions or titles upon the property of the people there, it is propoled to convert them from a fnare to their independance, into a relief from their burthens. I propole, therefore, to unite all the five principalities to the crown, and to its ordinary jurifdiction, to aboliff all those offices that produce an ufclets and chargeable feparation th

ar at u

al

p

C

ai

united when himfelf one, he he old ent, a from until valities chy of mwell, e, and d the ealth, of the t mathey not nity hạt t at hefe the t at 10ft haş to tes lat ng he 1, . y 0 s

[25]

feparation from the body of the people,—to compendate those who do not hold their offices (if any such there are) at the pleasure of the crown,—to extinguish vexatious titles by an act of short limitation,—to fell those unprofitable estates which support useles jurisdictions, and to turn the tenant-right into a see, on such moderate terms as will be better for the state than its prefent right, and which it is impossible for any rational tenant to refuse.

As to the Duchies, their judicial occonomy may be provided for without charge. They have only to fall of course into the common county administration. A commission more or lefs made or omitted, fettles the matter fully. As to Wales, it has been proposed to add a judge to the feveral courts of Westminster-hall; and it has been confidered as an improvement in itfelf. For my part, I cannot pretend to speak upon it with clearness or with decifion; but certainly this arrangement would be more than fufficient for Wales. My original thought was to suppress five of the eight judges; and to leave the chief justice of Chefter, with the two fenior judges; and, to facilitate the bufinefs, to throw the twelve counties into fix diffricts, holding the feffions alternately in the counties of which each diffrict shall be composed. But on this I shall be more clear, when I come to the particular bill.

Sir, the houfe will now fee whether, in praying for judgment againft the minor principalities, I do not act in conformity to the laws that I had laid to myfelf, of getting rid of every jurifdiction more fubfervient to opprefion and expence, than to any end of juffice or honeft policy; of abolifhing offices more expensive than ufeful; of combining duties improperly feparated; of changing revenues more yexatious than productive, into ready money; of fuppreffing offices which ftand in the way of economy; and of cutting off lurking fubordinate treafuries. Difpute the rules; controvert the application; or give your hands to this falutary meafure.

Most of the same rules will be found applicable to my second object—the landed estate of the crown. A landed estate is certainly the very worst which the crown can posses. All minute and dispersed possessions, posfessions that are often of indeterminate value, and which

ar I

F

which require a continued perfonal attendance, are of a nature more proper for private management than public administration. — They are fitter for the care of a frugal land fleward, than of an office in the flate. Whatever they may possibly have been in other times, or in other countries, they are not of magnitude enough with us, to occupy a public department, nor to provide for a public object. They are already given up to parliament, and the gift is not of great value. Common prudence dictates, even in the management of private affairs, that all disperfed and chargeable effates, fhould be factificed to the relief of effates more compact and better circumflanced.

If it be objected, that these lands at present would fell at a low market; this is answered, by shewing that money is at high price. The one balances the other. Lands sell at the current rate, and nothing can sell for more. But be the price what it may, a great object is always answered, whenever any property is transfer'd from hands that are not fit for that property, to those that are. The buyer and seller must mutually profit by such a bargain; and, what rarely happens in matters of revenue, the relief of the subject will go hand in hand with the profit of the exchequer.

As to the forest lands, in which the Crown has (where they are not granted or preferiptively held) the dominion of the soil, and the vert and venison; that is to fay, the timber and the game, and in which the people have a variety of rights, in common of herbage, and other commons, according to the usage of the feveral forests; -- I propose to have those rights of the crown valued as manerial rights are valued on an inclosure; and a defined portion of land to be given for them; which land is to be fold for the public benefit.

As to the timber, I propose a furvey of the whole. What is useless for the naval purposes of the kingdom, I would condemn, and dispose of for the security of what may be useful; and to inclose such other parts as may be most fit to furnish a perpetual supply; wholly extinguishing, for a very obvious reason, all right of venison in those parts.

The foreft rights which extend over the lands and poffeffions of others, being of no profit to the crown,

10

and

ce, are of han public of a frugal Whatever r in other with us, ide for a o parlia-Common f private s, fhould pact and

ht would ing that e other. I fell for object is ansfer'd to those rosit by tters of in hand

(where domito fay, e have other orefts; n va-; and which hole. lom, y of parts olly t of

ind rr ud [27]

and a grievance as far as it goes to the fubject; thefe I propose to extinguish without charge to the proprietors. The feveral commons are to be allotted and compensated for, upon ideas which I shall hereafter explain. They are nearly the same with the principles upon which you have acted in private inclosures. I shall never quit precedents where I find them applicable. For those regulations and compensations, and for every other part of the detail, you will be fo indulgent as to give me credit for the prefent.

The revenue to be obtained from the fale of the forest lands and rights, will not be fo considerable, I bclieve, as many people have imagined; and I conceive it would be unwife to ferew it up to the utmost, or even to fuffer bidders to inhance, according to their eagernefs, the purchase of objects, wherein the expence of that purchase may weaken the capital to be employed in their cultivation. This, I am well aware, might give room for partiality in the disposal. In my opinion it would be the leffer evil of the two. But I really conceive, that a rule of fair preference might be eftablifhed, which would take away all fort of unjust and corrupt partiality. The principal revenue which I propose to draw from these uncultivated wastes, is to fpring from the improvement and population of the kingdom; which never can happen, without producing an improvement more advantageous to the revenues of the crown, than the rents of the best landed estate which it can hold. I believe, Sir, it will hardly be neceffary for me to add, that in this fale I naturally except all the houfes, gardens, and parks belonging to the crown, and fuch one foreft as shall be chosen by his majefty, as best accommodated to his pleasures.

By means of this part of the reform, will fall the expenfive office of furveyor general, with all the influence that attends it. By this will fall two chief juffices in Eyre, with all their train of dependents. You need be under no apprehenfion, Sir, that your office is to be touched in its emoluments; they are yours by law; and they are but a moderate part of the compenfation which is given to you for the ability with which you execute an office of quite another fort of importance: it is far from over-paying your diligence; or more than fufficient for fuffaining fultaining the high rank you ftand in, as the firft gentleman of England. As to the duties of your chief justices fhip, they are very different from those for which you have received the office. Your dignity is too high for a jurifdiction over wild beafts; and your learning and talents too valuable to be wasted as chief justice of a defert. I cannot reconcile it to myself, that you, Sir, should be stuck up as a useles piece of antiquity.

I have now difpofed of the unprofitable landed effates of the crown, and thrown them into the mais of private property; by which they will come, through the course of circulation, and through the political fecretions of the flate, into our better understood and better ordered revenues.

I come next to the great fupreme body of the civil government itfelf. I approach it with that awe and reverence with which a young phyfician approaches to the cure of the diforders of his parent. Diforders, Sir, and infirmities, there are—fuch diforders, that all attempts towards method, prudence, and frugality, will be perfectly vain, whilft a fyftem of confution remains, which is not only alien but adverfe to all œconomy; a fyftem, which is not only prodigal in its very effence, but caufes every thing elfe which belongs to it, to be prodigally conducted.

It is impossible, Sir, for any perfon to be an æconomift where no order in payments is eftablished; it is impossible for a man to be an æconomist, who is not able to take a comparative view of his means, and of his expences, for the year which lies before him ; it is impoffible for a man to be an æconomift, under whom various officers in their feveral departments may fpend,even just what they please,-and often with an emulation of expence, as contributing to the importance, if not profit, of their feveral departments .---- Thus much is certain; that neither the prefent, nor any other first lord of the treasury, has been ever able to take a furvey, or to make even a tolerable guefs, of the expences of government for any one year; fo as to enable him with the least degree of certainty, or even probability, to bring his affairs within compais. Whatever scheme may be formed upon them, must be made on a calculation of chances. As things are circumftanced.

firft genyour chief for which s too high learning juftice of that you, stiquity. ed eftates of private he courfe retions of r ordered the civil e and rees to the Sir, and attempts be per-, which fyftem, t caufes digally econois imt able of his s imn va-1d, --iulae, if uch firft e a exto en atde 1)d, ftanced, the first lord of the treasury cannot make an estimate. I am sure, I serve the king, and I am fure I affist administration, by putting œconomy at least in their power. We must class fervices; we must (as far as their nature admits) appropriate funds; or every thing however reformed, will fall again into the old consuftion.

Coming upon this ground of the civil lift, the first thing in dignity and charge that attracts our notice, is the royal household. This establishment, in my opinion, is exceedingly abufive in its conftitution. It is formed upon manners and cuftoms, that have long fince expired. In the first place, it is formed, in many respects, upon feudal principles. In the feudal times, it was not uncommon, even among fubjects, for the lowest offices to be held by confiderable perfons; perfons as unfit by their incapacity, as improper from their rank, to occupy fuch employments. They were held by patent, fometimes for life, and fometimes by inheritance. If my memory does not deceive me, a perion of no flight confideration, held the office of patent hereditary cook to an earl of Warwick-The earl of Warwick's foups, I fear, were not the better for the dignity of his kitchen. I think it was an earl of Gloucester, who officiated as steward of the household to the archbishops of Canterbury. Inftances of the fame kind may in fome degree be found in the Northumberland houfebook, and other family records. There was some reason in antient necessities, for these antient customs. Protection was wanted; and the domestic tie, though not the highest, was the closest.

The king's household has not only several frong traces of this feudality, but it is formed also upon the principles of a Body-corporate; it has its own magistrates, courts, and by-laws. This might be necessary in the antient times, in order to have a government within itself, capable of regulating the valt and often unruly multitude which composed and attended it. This was the origin of the antient court called the Green Cloth composed of the marshal, treasurer, and other great officers of the household, with certain clerks. The rich subjects of the kingdom, who had formerly the same establishments (only on a reduced scale) have fince altered tered their economy; and turned the course of their. expence from the maintenance of valt establishments within their walls, to the employment of a great variety of independent trades abroad. Their influence is leffened; but a mode of accommodation and a flyle of fplendour, fuited to the manners of the times, has been, encreafed. Royalty itfelf has infenfibly followed; and the royal household has been carried away by the reliftlefs tide of manners: but with this very material difference. Private men have got rid of the eltablishments along with the reafons of them; whereas the royal household has loft all that was flately and venerable in the antique manners, without retrenching any thing of the cumbrous charge of a Gothic establishment. It is shrunk into the polished littleness of modern elegance and personal accommodation; it has evaporated from the groß concrete, into an effence and rectified spirit of expence, where you have tuns of antient pomp in a vial or, modern luxury.

But when the reason of old establishments is gone, it is abfurd to preferve nothing but the burthen of them. This is fuperstitiously to embalm a carcals not worth an ounce of the gums that are used to preferve it. It is to burn precious oils in the tomb; it is to offer meat and drink to the dead,-not fo much an honour to the deceased, as a difgrace to the furvivors. Our palaces are vaft inhospitable halls. There the bleak winds, there " Boreas, and Eurus, and Caurus, and Argeftes loud," howling through the vacant lobbies, and clattering the doors of deferted guard-rooms, appal. the imagination, and conjure up the grim spectres of departed tyrants - the Saxon, the Norman, and the Dane; the stern Edwards and sierce Henrys - who stalk from defolation to defolation, through the dreary vacuity, and melancholy fuccession of chill and comfortless chambers. When this tumult sublides, a dead, and ftill more frightful filence would reign in this defert. if every now and then the tacking of hammers did not announce, that those constant attendants upon all courts in all ages, Jobs, were still alive; for whose fake alone it is, that any trace of antient grandeur is fuffered to. remain. These palaces are a true emblem of some. governments; the inhabitants are decayed, but the governors

[30]

e of their blifhments great vafluence is a ftyle of has been, ved; and reliftlefs fference. ong with hold has antique umbrous nk into perfona! is con . spence, vial of.

gone, hen of is not elerve is to ch an vors. the rus, vies, pal. of the ho ry 1-1, t, C : S 2 governors and magistrates still flourish. They put me in mind of Old Sarum, where the representatives, more in number than the constituents, only ferve to inform us, that this was once a place of trade, and founding with "the bufy hum of men," though now you can only trace the freets by the colour of the corn; and its fole manufacture is in members of parliament.

These old establishments were formed also on a third principle, still more adverse to the living æconomy of the age. They were formed, Sir, on the principle of purveyance, and receipt in kind. In former days, when the household was vaft, and the supply scanty and precarious, the royal purveyors, fallying forth from under the Gothic portcullis, to purchase provision with power and prerogative, inffead of money, brought home the plunder of an hundred markets, and all that could be feized from a flying and hiding country, and deposited their spoil in an hundred caverns, with each its keeper. There, every commodity, received in its raweft condition, went through all This inconthe process which fitted it for use. venient receipt produced an æconomy fuited only to itfelf. It multiplied offices beyond all measure; buttery, pantry, and all that rabble of places, which, though profitable to the holders and expensive to the state, are almost too mean to mention.

All this might be, and I believe was neceffary at first; for it is remarkable, that purveyance, after its regulation had been the fubject of a long line of flatutes (not fewer, I think, than twenty-fix) was wholly taken away by the twelfth of Charles the fecond; yet in the next year of the fame reign, it was found neceflary to revive it by a fpecial act of parliament, for the fake of the king's journies. This, Sir, is curious; and what would hardly be expected in fo reduced a court as that of Charles the fecond, and in fo improved a country as England might then be thought. But fo it was. In our time, one well filled and well covered flage coach, requires more accommodation than a royal progrefs; and every diffrict at an hour's warning, can fupply an army.

I do not fay, Sir, that all these establishments whose principle is gone, have been systematically kept up for influence influence folely: neglect had its fhare. But this I am fure of, that a confideration of influence has hindered any one from attempting to pull them down: For the purpofes of influence, and for those purpofes only, are retained half at least of the household establishments. No revenue, no not a royal revenue, can exist under the accumulated charge of antient establishment; modern luxury; and parliamentary political corruption.

If therefore we aim at regulating this houfehold, the queftion will be, whether we ought to æconomize by detail, or by principle? The example we have had of the fuecess of an attempt to æconomize by detail, and under eftablishments adverse to the attempt, may tend to decide this queftion.

At the beginning of his majefty's reign, Lord Talbot came to the administration of a great department in the household. I believe no man ever entered into his majefty's fervice, or into the fervice of any prince, with a more clear integrity, or with more zeal and affection for the interest of his master ; and I must add, with abilities for a still higher fervice. Economy was then announced as a maxim of the reign. This noble lord, therefore, made feveral attempts towards a reform. In the year 1777, when the king's civil lift debts came last to be paid, he explained very fully the fuccefs of his undertaking. He told the house of lords, that he had attempted to reduce the charges of the king's tables, and his kitchen .- The thing, Sir, was not below him. He knew, that there is nothing interesting in the concerns of men, whom we love and honour, that is beneath our attention .-- " Love," fays one of our old poets, " effecms no office mean ;" and with ftill more fpirit, " Entire affection fcorneth nicer " hands." Frugality, Sir, is founded on the principle, that all riches have limits. A royal household, grown enormous, even in the meanest departments, may weaken and perhaps deftroy all energy in the higheft offices of the flate. The gorging a royal kitchen may flint and famish the negotiations of a kingdom. Therefore, the object was worthy of his, was worthy of any man's attention.

In

to it to du

pl de

til Th

9

n fi

N d c a o t

But this I ce has hinz hem down: e purpofes houfehold l revenue; antient efary politi-

noufehold, conomize ave had of etail, and may tend

d Talbot tment in into his prince, eal and ult add, my was s noble reform, ts came cefs of s, that king's ot beefting nour, ne of with nicer irin_ old, nts heft hen m. thy

In

In confequence of this noble lord's refolution, (as he told the other house) he reduced feveral tables, and put the perfons entitled to them upon board wages, much to their own fatisfaction. But unluckily fubfequent duties requiring conftant attendance, it was not poffible to prevent their being fed where they were employed — and thus this first ftep towards ceconomy doubled the expence.

There was another difaster far more doleful than this. I shall state it, as the cause of that misfortune lies at the bottom of almost all our prodigality. Lord Talbot attempted to reform the kitchen; but fuch, as he well observed, is the consequence of having duty done by one perfon, whilft another enjoys the emolu-: ments, that he found himself frustrated in all his defigns. On that rock his whole adventure fplit-His whole, fcheme of æconomy was dashed to pieces; his department became more expensive than ever;-the civil lift debt accumulated-Why? It was truly from a cause, which, though perfectly adequate to the effect, one would not have inftantly gueffed ;- it was becaufe the surnspit in the king's kitchen was a member of parliament *. The king's domestic fervants were all undone; his tradefmen remained unpaid, and became bankrupt-because the turnspit of the king's kitchen was a member of parliament. His majefty's flumbers were interrupted, his pillow was stuffed with thorns, and his peace of mind entirely broken, - because the king's turnfpit was a member of parliament. The judges were unpaid; the justice of the kingdom bent and gave way; the foreign ministers remained inactive and unprovided; the fystem of Europe was diffolved; the chain of our alliances was broken; all the wheels of government at home and abroad were stopped ;-because the king's turn/pit was a member of parliament.

Such, Sir, was the fituation of affairs, and fuch the caufe of that fituation, when his majefly came a fecond time to parliament, to defire the payment of those debts which the employment of its members in various offices, visible and invisible, had D coccasioned;

* Vide Lord Talbo:'s speech in Almon's Parliamentary Register, vold via p. 79. of the Proceedings of the Lords. occafioned. I believe that a like fate will attend every attempt at occonomy by detail, under fimilar circumftances, and in every department. A complex operofe office of account and controul, is, in itfelf, and even if members of parliament had nothing to do with it, the most prodigal of all things. The most audacious robberies, or the most fubtle frauds, would never venture upon fuch a wafte, as an over careful, detailed guard against them will infallibly produce. In our eftablishments, we frequently fee au office of account; of an hundred pounds a year expence, and another office of an equal expence, to controul that office, and the whole upon a matter that is not worth twenty fhillings.

To avoid, therefore, this minute care which produces the confequences of the most extensive neglect, and to oblige members of parliament to attend to public cares, and not to the fervile offices of domeftic management, I propole, Sir, to æconomize by principle, that is, I propole, to put affairs into that train which experience points out as the most effectual, from the nature of things, and from the constitution of the human mind. In all dealings where it is possible, the principles of radical œconomy preferibe three things; first, undertaking by the great; fecondly, engaging with perfons of shill in the fubject matter; thirdly, engaging with those who shall have an immediate and direct interest in the proper execution of the busines.

To avoid frittering and crumbling down the attention by a blind unfystematic observance of every trifle, it has ever been found the beft way, to do all things, which are great in the total amount, and minute in the component parts, by a general contract. The principles of trade have fo pervaded every fpecies of dealing, from the highest to the lowest objects ; all transactions are got fo much into fystem ; that we may, at a moment's warning, and to a farthing value, be informed at what rate any fervice may be fupplied. No dealing is exempt from the possibility of fraud. But by a contract on a matter certain, you have this advantageyou are fure to know the utmost extent of the fraud to which you are fubject. By a contract with a perion in his own trade, you are fure you shall not fuffer by?

ľ 34]

by

ma

for

teg

clo tai

the

if

wl

no

m

ev

P

Ø

is

attend every fimilar cir-s omplex ope-, itfelf, and to do with t audacious never venal, detailed e. In our of account, mother ofoffice, and th twenty

h produces, et, and to. blic cares, agement, hat is, I xperience: e nature an mind. ciples of , underperfons g with cereft in attenifle, it which comles of from s are ent's what exon-2--ud erer)¥2

by want of fkill. By a fort contract you are fure of making it the interest of the contractor to exert that skill for the fatisfaction of his employers: I mean to derogate nothing from the diligence or integrity of the prefent, or of any former board of greencloth. But what fkill can members of parliament obtain in that low kind of province ? What pleafure can they have in the execution of that kind of duty ? And if they fhould neglect it, how does it affect their intereft, when we know that it is their vote in parliament, and not their diligence in cookery or catering, that recommends them to their office, or keeps them in it ?

I therefore propofe, that the king's tables (to whatever number of tables, or covers to each; he shall think proper to command) fhould be classed by the fleward of the household, and should be contracted for, according to their rank, by the head or cover ;- that the eftimate and circumftance of the contract fhould be carried to the treafury to be approved; and that its faithful and fatisfactory performance fhould be reported there, previous to any payment; that there, and there only, fhould the payment be made. I propose, that men fhould be contracted with only in their proper trade; and that no member of parliament fhould be capable of fuch contract. By this plan, almost all the infinite offices under the lord fleward may be fpared; to the extreme fimplification, and to the far better execution, of every one of his functions. The king of Pruffia is fo ferved. He is a great and eminent (though indeed a very rare) inftance of the poffibility of uniting in a mind of vigour and compais, an attention to minute objects, with the largeft views, and the most complicated plans. His tables are ferved by contract, and by the head. Let me fay, that no prince can be ashamed to imitate the king of Pruffia; and particularly to learn in his fchool, when the problem is-" The best man-" ner of reconciling the state of a court with the sup-" port of war?" Other courts, I understand, have followed him with effect, and to their fatisfaction.

The fame clue of principle leads us through the labyrinth of the other departments. What, Sir, is there in the office of the great wardrobe (which has the care of the king's furniture) that may not be executed by the D a lord chamberlain himself. He has an honourable appointment; he has time fufficient to attend to the duty; and he has the vice chamberlain to affift him. Why fhould not he deal also by contract, for all things belonging to this office, and carry his estimates first, and his report of the execution in its proper time, for payment, directly to the board of treasury itself? By a fimple operation (containing in it a treble control) the expences of a department, which for naked walls, or walls hung with cobwebs, has in a few years coft the crown £. 150,000, may at length hope for regulation. But, Sir, the office and its bufinefs are at variance. As it stands, it ferves, not to furnish the palace with its hangings, but the parliament with its dependent members.

To what end, Sir, does the office of removing wardrobe ferve at all ? Why fhould a jewel office exift for the fole purpole of taxing the king's gifts of plate ? Its object falls naturally within the chamberlain's province; and ought to be under his care and infpection, without any fee. Why fhould an office of the robes exift, when that of groom of the fole is a finecure, and that this is a proper object of his department?

All thefe incumbrances, which are themfelves nufances, produce other incumbrances, and other nufances. For the payment of thefe ufelefs eftablifhments, there are no lefs than three ufelefs treafurers; two to hold a purfe, and one to play with a flick. The treafurer of the houfehold is a mere name. The cofferer, and the treafurer of the chamber, receive and pay great fums, which it is not at all neceffary they fhould either receive or pay. All the proper officers, fervants, and tradefinen, may be enrolled in their feveral departments, and paid in proper claffes and times with great fimplicity and order, at the exchequer, and by direction from the treafury.

The board of works, which in the feven years preceding 1777, has coft towards f. 400,000 *; and (if I recollect rightly) has not coft lefs in proportion from the beginning of the reign, is under the very fame defeription of all the other ill-contrived establishments, and calls for the very fame reform. We are to feek for the second for the very fame reform.

* More exactly 6.378,616. 101. 1d. 3.

a pa ba pou if bro

of

wo

tho

jt -

app

an

me

an

of

th

re

in

m

re

c: F

the

able appointto the duty; him. Why all things betes first, and ne, for pay-? By a fimcontrol) the d walls, or ears coft the regulation. at variance. palace with dependent ving wardkift for the plate ? Its province; , without ift, when this is a lves nuher nuhments, two to he treaofferer, y great ild eivants, epartgreat ection pre-(if I roin dents, for the

[37]

the visible figns of all this expence.-For all this expence, we do not fee a building of the fize and importance of a pigeon-houfe. Buckingham-houfe was reprifed by a bargain with the public, for one hundred thousand pounds;-and the small house at Windsor has been, if I mistake not, undertaken fince that account was brought before us. The good works of that board of works, are as carefully concealed as other good works ought to be; they are perfectly invisible. But though it is the perfection of charity to be concealed, it is, Sir, the property and glory of magnificence, to appear, and ftand forward to the eye.

That board, which ought to be a concern of builders, and fuch like, and of none elfe, is turned into a junto of niembers of parliament. That office too has a treasury, and a paymaster of its own; and left the arduous affairs of that important exchequer fnould be too fatiguing, that paymaster has a deputy to partake his profits, and relieve his cares. I do not believe, that either now or in former times, the chief managers of that board have made any profit of its abuse. It is, however, no good reason that an abusive establishment should subsist, becaufe it is of as little private as of public advantage. But this establishment has the grand radical fault, the original fin, that pervades and perverts all our establishments ;- The apparatus is not fitted to the object, nor the workmen to the work. Expences are incurred on the private opinion of an inferior eftablishment, without confulting the principal; who can alone determine the proportion which it ought to bear to the other eftablifhments of the ftate, in the order of their relative importance.

I propose, therefore, along with the reft, to pull down this whole ill-contrived fcaffolding, which obstructs, rather than forwards our public works; to take away its treasury; to put the whole into the hands of a real builder, who shall not be a member of parliament; and to oblige him by a previous effimate and final payment, to appear twice at the treasury, before the public can be loaded. The king's gardens are to come under a fimilar regulation.

The mint, though not a department of the household, has the fame vices. It is a great expence to the nation nation, chiefly for the fake of members of parliament. It has its officers of parade and dignity. It has its treafury too. It is a fort of corporate body; and formerly was a body of great importance; as much fo on the then scale of things, and the then order of business, as the bank is at this day. It was the great center of money transactions and remittances for our own, and for other nations; until king Charles the first, among other arbitrary projects, dictated by despotic necessity, made him withhold the money that lay there for remittance. That blow (and happily too) the mint never recovered. Now it is no bank ; no remittance-shop. The mint, Sir, is a manufacture, and it is nothing elfe; and it ought to be undertaken upon the principles of a manufacture; that is, for the best and cheapest execution, by a contract, upon proper fecurities, and under proper regulations.

D 3

The artillery is a far greater object; it is a military concern; but having an affinity and kindred in its defects with the eftablishments I am now speaking of, I think it best to speak of it along with them. It is, I conceive, an establishment not well suited to its martial, though exceedingly well calculated for its parliamentary purpofes.-Here there is a treafury, as in all the other inferior departments of government. Here the military is fubordinate to the civil, and the naval confounded with the land fervice. The object indeed is much the fame in both. But when the detail is examined, it will be found that they had better be separated. For a reform of this office, I propose to reftore things, to what (all confiderations taken together) is their natural order; to reftore them to their just proportion, and to their just distribution. I propofe, in this military concern, to render the civil fubordinate to the military; and this will annihilate the greatest part of the expence, and all the influence belonging to the office. I propole to fend the military branch to the army, and the naval to the Admiralty: and I intend to perfect and accomplish the whole detail where it becomes too minute and complicated for legiflature, and requires exact, official, military, and mechanical knowledge) by a commission of competent officers in both departments. I propose to execute by contract,

.br

cap

th

0

Ľ

f parliament. It has its and formerly h fo on the business, as ter of money nd for other mong other effity, made remittance. recovered. The mint, lfe; and it ciples of a execution, der proper a military red in its fpeaking ith them. ell fuited ulated for treafury's governhe civil, 2. The hen the ad betpropofe en too their procivil hilate ence itary lty: tail? ginent by it, contract, what by contract can be executed; and to bring, as much as poffible, all effimates to be previoufly approved, and finally to be paid by the treafury.

Thus, by following the courfe of nature, and not the purpoles of politics, or the accumulated patchwork of occasional accommodation, this vaft expensive department may be methodized; its fervice proportioned to its necessfities, and its payments fubjected to the infpection of the fuperior minister of finance; who is to judge of it on the refult of the total collective exigencies of the state. This last is a reigning principle through my whole plan; and it is a principle which I hope may hereafter be applied to other plans.

By these regulations taken together-beside: 'he three fubordinate treafuries in the leffer principalicies, five other fubordinate treasuries are suppressed. There is taken away the whole establishment of detail in the household; the treasurer; - the comptroller (for a compcroller is hardly neceffary where there is no treafurer) the cofferer of the household ;- the treasurer of the chamber; - the master of the household; - the whole board of green cloth ;- and a vaft number of fubordinate offices in the d partment of the fleward of the boufehold ;- the whole establishment of the great wardrobe; - the removing wardrobe ;- the jewel office ;- the robes ;- the board of works; almost the whole charge of the civil branch of the board of ordnance are taken away. All thefe arrangements together will be found to relieve the nation from a vait weight of influence, without diffreffing, but rather by forwarding every public fervice. When fomething of this kind is done, then the public may begin to breathe. Under other governments, a question of expence is only a question of æconomy, and it is nothing more; with us in every question of expence, there is always a mixture of conftitutional confiderations.

It is, Sir, because I wish to keep this business of subordinate treasuries as much as I can together, that I shrought the ordinance-office before you, though it is properly a military department. For the same reason I will now trouble you with my thoughts and propositions upon two of the greatest under treasuries, I mean the coffice of paymasser of the land forces, or treasurer of the D 4 army;

army; and that of the treasurer of the navy. The former of these has long been a great object of public sufpicion and uneafinefs. Envy too has had its share in the obloquy which is cast upon this office. But I am fure that it has no fhare at all in the reflections I shall make upon it, or in the reformations that I shall propose. I do not grudge to the honourable gentleman who at present holds the office, any of the effects of his talents, his merit, or his fortune. He is respectable in all these particulars. I follow the conftitution of the office, without perfecuting its holder. It is necessary, in all matters of public complaint, where men frequently feel right and argue wrong, to feparate prejudice from reason ; and to be very fure, in attempting the redress of a grievance, that we hit upon its real feat, and its true nature. Where there is an abuse in office, the first thing that occurs in heat is to cenfure the officer. Our natural difposition leads all our enquiries rather to perfons than to things. But this prejudice is to be corrected by maturer thinking.

[40]

Sir, the profits of the pay-office (as an office) are not too great, in my opinion, for its duties, and for the rank of the perfon who has generally held it. He has been generally a perfon of the highest rank; that is to fay, a perfon of eminence and confideration in this house. The great and the invidious profits of the pay-office, are from the Bank that is held in it. According to the prefent courie of the office, and according to the prefent mode of accounting there, this bank must necessarily exist fomewhere. Money is a productive thing; and when the usual time of its demand can be tolerably calculated, it may, with prudence, be fafely laid out to the profit of the holder. It is on this calculation, that the business of banking proceeds. But no profit can be derived from the use of money, which does not make it the intereft of the holder to delay his account. The procefs of the exchequer colludes with this interest. Is this collusion from its want of rigour and strictness, and great regularity of form ? The reverse is true. They have in the exchequer brought rigour and formalism to their ultimate perfection. The process against accountants is fo rigorous, and in a manner fo unjust, that correctives muft.

The forablic fulthare in ut I am ns I fhall propose. who at talents, all thefe office, in all quently e from redrefs ind its ce, the officer. rather to be

) are d for He that in of in ofnethe it of s d muft, from time to time, be applied to it. Thefe correctives being differentiationary, upon the cafe, and generally remitted by the barons to the lords of the treafury, as the beft judges of the reafons for refpite, hearings are had; delays are produced; and thus the extreme of rigour in office (as ufual in all human affairs) leads to the extreme of laxity. What with the interefted delay of the officer; the ill-conceived exactnefs of the court; the applications for difpenfations from that exactnefs, the revival of rigorous procefs, after the expiration of the time; and the new rigours producing new applications, and new enlargements of time, fuch delays happen in the public accounts, that they can fcarcely ever be clofed.

Befides, Sir, they have a rule in the exchequer, which, I believe, they have founded upon a very ancient statute, that of the 51st of Henry III. by which it is provided, " That when a fheriff or bailiff hath " began his account, none other shall be received " to account until he that was first appointed hath " clearly accounted, and that the fum has been re-" ceived *." Whether this claufe of that flatute be the ground of that absurd practice, I am not quite able to afcertain. But it has very generally prevailed, though I am told that of late they have began to relax from it. In confequence of forms adverse to fubftantial account, we have a long fuccession of paymasters and their representatives, who have never been admitted to account, although perfectly ready to do fo.

As the extent of our wars has fcattered the accountants under the paymafter into every part of the globe, the grand and fure paymafter, Death, in all his thapes, calls thefe accountants to another reckoning. Death, indeed, domineers over every thing, but the forms of the exchequer. Over thefe he has no power. They are impaffive and immortal. The audit of the exchequer, more fevere than the audit to which the accountants are gone, demands proofs which in the

• Et quant viscount on bailliff ait commence de accompter, nul autre ne feit resceu de acconter tanque le primer qu foit assis, eit peraccompte, et qu la somme soit resceu, Stat. 5. ann. dom. 1266.

nature

nature of things are difficult, fometimes impossible to be had. In this respect too, rigour, as usual, defeats itself. Then, the exchequer never gives a particular receipt, or clears a man of his account, as far as it goes. A final acquittance, (or a quietus, as they term it) is fearcely ever to be obtained. Terrors and ghofts of unlaid accountants, haunt the houfes of their children from generation to generation. Families, in the courfe of fuccession, fall into minorities; the inheritance comes into the hands of females; and very perplexed affairs are often delivered over into the hands of negligent guardians and faithlefs flewards. So that the demand remains, when the advantage of the money is gone, if ever any advantage at all has been made of it. This is a caufe of infinite diffres to families; and becomes a fource of influence to an extent, that can fearcely be imagined, but by those who have taken some pains to The mildness of government in the employtrace it. ment of useless and dangerous powers, furnishes no reafon for their continuance.

As things fland, can you in juffice (except perhaps in that over-perfect kind of justice which has ob-tained, by its merits, the title of the opposite vice *) infift that any man fhould, by the course of his office, keep a bank from whence he is to derive no advantage ? That a man fhould be fubject to demands below, and be in a manner refused an acquittance above; that he fhould transmit an original fin, and inheritance of vexation to his posterity, without a power of compensating himfelf in fome way or other, for fo perilous a fituation ? We know, that if the paymafter fhould deny himfelf the advantages of his bank, the public, as things fland, is not the richer for it by a fingle fhilling. This I thought it necessary to fay, as to the offenfive magnitude of the profits of this office; that we may proceed in reformation, on the principles of reafon, and not on the feelings of envy.

The treasurer of the navy is, mutatis mutandis, in the fame circumftances. Indeed all accountants are. Inflead of the prefent mode, which is troublefome to the officer, and unprofitable to the public, I propose to fubftitute fomething more effectual than rigour, which Summum jus fumma injuria.

offible to ual, dea partias far as ney term d ghofts children e courfe critance rplexed neglihe des gone, This comes ely be ins to ploy_ lo rea-rhaps obce *) flice, age ? and t he exata uy as - 1 с c

1 43]

which is the worft exactor in the world. I mean to remove the very temptations to delay; to facilitate the account; and to transfer this bank, now of private emolument, to the public. The crown will fuffer no wrong at least from the pay-officers and its terrors will longer reign over the families of those who hold, or have held them. I propose, that these offices should be no longer banks or treafuries, but mere offices of administration .- I propose, first, that the present paymaster and the treasurer of the navy, should carry into the exchequer, the whole body of the vouchers for what they have paid over to deputy paymafters, to regimental agents, or to any of those to whom they have and ought to have paid money. I propose that those vouchers shall be admitted as actual payments in their accounts; and that the perfons to whom the money has been paid, fhall then fland charged in the exchequer in their place. After this proceis, they shall be debited or charged for nothing but the money-balance that remains in their hands.

I am confeious, Sir, that if this balance (which they could not expect to be fo fuddenly demanded by any ufual process of the exchequer) should now be exacted all at once, not only their ruin, but a ruin of others to an extent which I do not like to think of, but which I can well conceive, and which you may well conceive, might be the confequence. I told you, Sir, when I promifed before the holydays to bring in this plan, that I never would tuffer any man or defcription of men, to fuffer from errors that naturally have grown out of the abufive conflitution of those offices which I propole to regulate. If I cannot reform with equity, I will not reform at all.

For the regulation of past accounts, I shall therefore propose such a mode, as men, temperate and prudent, make use of in the management of their private affairs, when their accounts are various, perplexed, and , of long flanding. I would therefore, after their example, divide the public debts into three forts; good; bad; and doubtful. In looking over the public accounts, I fhould never dream of the blind mode of the exchequer, which regards things in the abilitact, and knows no difference in the quality of its debts, or the

be a

dua

tra8 grea

froi

10 car

no gr

the circumflances of its debtors. By this means, it fatigues itfelf; it vexes others; it often crufhes the poor; it lets efcape the rich; or in a fit of mercy or careleffnefs, declines all means of recovering its juft demands. Content with the eternity of its claims, it enjoys its epicurean divinity with epicurean languor. But it is proper that all forts of accounts fhould be clofed fome time or other—by payment; by composition; or by oblivion. Expedit reipublicæ ut fit finis litium. Conftantly taking along with me, that an extreme rigour is fure to arm every thing against it, and at length to relax into a fupine neglect, I propose, Sir, that even the best, foundest, and the most recent debts, should be put into inflalments, for the mutual benefit of the accountant and the public.

In proportion, however, as I am tender of the paft, I would be provident of the future. All money that was formerly imprefied to the two great pay-offices, I would have imprefied in future to the bank of England. These offices should, in future, receive no more than cash fufficient for small payments. Their other payments ought to be made by drafts on the Bank, expreffing the service. A checque account from both offices, of drafts and receipts, should be annually made up in the exchequer, charging the bank, in account, with the cash-balance, but not demanding the payment until there is an order from the treasury, in consequence of a vote of parliament.

As I did not, Sir, deny to the paymafter the natural profits of the bank that was in his hands, fo neither would I to the bank of England. A fhare of that profit might be derived to the public in various ways. My favourite mode is this; that, in compenfation for the use of this money, the bank may take upon themfelves, first, the charge of the mint; to which they are already, by their charter, obliged to bring in a great deal of bullion annually to be coined.

In the next place, I mean that they fhould take upon themfelves the charge of remittances to cur troops abroad. This is a fpecies of dealing from which, by the fame charter, they are not debarred. One and a quarter per cent. will be faved inftantly thereby to the public, on very large fums of money. This will be

be at once a matter of æconomy, and a confiderable reduction of influence, by taking away a private contract of an expensive nature. If the bank, which is a great corporation, and of course receives the least profits from the money in their cuftody, fhould of itfelf refuse, or be perfuaded to refuse this offer upon those terms, I can speak with some confidence, that one at least, if not both parts of the condition would be received, and gratefully received, by feveral bankers of eminence. There is no banker who will not be at least as good fecurity as any paymaster of the forces, or any treafurer of the navy, that have ever been bankers to the. public : as rich at leaft as my Lord Chatham, or my Lord Holland, or either of the honourable gentlemen who now hold the offices, were at the time that they entered into them; or as ever the whole eftablishment of the mint has been at any period.

Thefe, Sir, are the outlines of the plan I mean to follow, in suppressing these two large subordinate treafuries. I now come to another fubordinate treafury; I mean, that of the paymaster of the pensions ; for which purpose I re-enter the limits of the civil establishment-I departed from those limits in pursuit of a principle; and following the fame game in its doubles, I am brought into those limits again. That treasury, and that office, I mean to take away; and to transfer the payment of every name, mode, and denomination of pen-fions, to the exchequer. The present course of diverfifying the fame object, can answer no good purpose; whatever its use may be to purposes of another kind. There are also other lifts of pensions; and I mean that they fhould all be hereafter paid at one and the fame place. The whole of that new confolidated lift, I mean to reduce to £. 60,000 a year, which fum I intend it shall never exceed. I think that fum will fully answer as a reward to all real merit, and a provision for all real public charity that is ever like to be placed upon the lift. If any merit of an extraordinary nature should emerge, before that reduction is completed, I have leit it open for an address of either house of parliament to provide for the cafe. To all other demands, it must be answered, with regret, but with firmnels, " the pub-" lic is poor."

[45]

I do

weight

difficu

lefs,

tion 9

admi

a tri

tive

thou

hard

jud

mc wc

gr fil P

Th

I do not propofe, as I told you before Chriftmas, to take away any penfion. I know that the public feem to call for a reduction of fuch of them as thall appear unmerited. As a cenforial act, and punifhment of an abufe, might anfwer fome purpofe. But this can make no part of my plan. I mean to proceed by bill; and I cannot ftop for fuch an enquiry. I know fome gentlemen may blame me. It is with great fubmifion to better judgments, that I recommend it to confideration; that a critical retrofpective examination of the penfion lift, upon the principle of merit, can never ferve for my balis.-It cannot anfwer, according to my plan, any effectual purpofe of æconomy, or of future permanent reformation. The process in any way will be entangled and difficult; and it will be infinitely flow : There is a danger that if we turn our line of march, now directed towards the grand object, into this more laborious than ufeful detail of operations, we fhall never arrive at our end.

The king, Sir, has been by the conflitution appointed fole judge of the merit for which a penfion is to be given. We have a right, undoubtedly, to canvals this, as we have to canvals every act of government. But there is a material difference between an office to be reformed, and a penfion taken away for demerit. In the former cafe, no charge is implied against the holder; in the latter, his character is flurred, as well as his lawful emolument affected. The former procefs is against the thing; the fecond against the perfon. The penfioner certainly, if he pleafes, has a right to fland on his own defence; to plead his pofieffion; and to bottom his title in the competency of the crown to give him what he holds. Poffelfed, and on the defensive as he is, he will not be obliged to prove his fpecial merit, in order to juffify the act of legal difcretion, now turned into his property, according to his tenure. The very act, he will contend, is a legal prefumption, and an implication of his merit. If this be fo, from the natural force of all legal prefumption, he would put us to the difficult proof, that he has no merit at all. But other queftions would arife in the courfe of fach an enquiry; that is, questions of the merit whenweighed weighed against the proportion of the reward ; then the difficulty will be much greater.

The difficulty will not, Sir, I am straid, be much lefs, if we pass to the perfon really guilty, in the queftion of an unmerited penfion ; the minister himself. I admit, that when called to account for the execution of a truft, he might fairly be obliged to prove the affirmative ; and to ftate the merit for which the penfion is given ; t himfelf, fuch a procefs would be though on the 1111 nination we proceed methodically, hard. If in this c and fo as to avoid all fufpicion of partiality and prejudice, we must take the pensions in order of time, or The very first pension to which merely alphabetically. we come, in either of these ways, may appear the most grofsly unmerited of any. But the minister may very poffibly thew, that he knows nothing of the putting on this penfion-that it was prior in time to his administration -that the minister, who laid it on, is dead; and then we are thrown back upon the penfioner himfelf, and plunged into all our former difficulties. Abuses, and grofs ones, I doubt not, would appear; and to the correction of which I would readily give my hand; but, when I confider that penfions have not generally been affected by the revolutions of ministry; as I know not where fuch enquiries would ftop ; and as an absence of merit is a negative and loofe thing, one might be led to derange the order of families, founded on the probable continuance of their kind of income. I might hurt children ; I might injure creditors. I really think it the more prudent course, not to follow the letter of the petitions. If we fix this mode of enquiry as a bafis, we fhall, I fear, end, as parliament has often ended under fimilar circumftances. There will be great delay; much confusion; much inequality in our proceedings. But what prefies me most of all is this; that though we should flrike off all the unmerited penfions, while the power of the crown remains unlimited, the very fame undeferving perfons might afterwards return to the very fame lift : or if they did not, other perfons meriting as little as they do, might be put upon it to an undefinable amount. This I think is the pinch of the grievance.

For

For these reasons, Sir, I am obliged to wave this mode of proceeding as any part of my plan. In a plan of reformation, it would be one of my maxims, that when I know of an eftablishment which may be fubfervient to useful purposes, and which at the fame time, from its diferetionary nature, is liable to a very great pervertion from those purposes, I would limit the quantity of the power that might be fo abused. For I am furc, that in all fuch cafes, the rewards of merit will have very narrow bounds; and that partial or corrupt favour will be infinite. This principle is not arbitrary; but the limitation of the specific quantity must be so in fome measure. I therefore state f. 60,000; leaving it open to the house to enlarge or contract the sum as they shall see, on examination, that the diferction I use is feanty or liberal. The whole amount of the penfions of all denominations, which have been laid before us, amount, for a period of feven years, to confiderably more than f. 100,000 a year. To what the other lifts amount, I know not. That will be feen hereafter. But from those that do appear, a faving will accrue to the public, at one time or other, of f. 40,000 a year, and we had better in my opinion to let it fall in naturally, than to tear it crude and unripe from the ftalk. *

There is a great deal of uncafinefs among the people, upon an article which I muft clafs under the head of penfions. I mean the great patent offices in the exchequer. They are in reality and fubfiance no other than pentions, and in no other light fhall I confider them. They are finecures. They are always executed by deputy. The duty of the principal is as nothing. They differ however from the penfions on the lift, in fome particulars. They are held for life. I think with the public, that the profits of those places are grown enormous; the magnitude of those profits, and the nature of them, both call for reformation. The nature of their profits which grow out of the public diffrefs is,

It was fuppoled by the Lord Advocate, in a fubfequent debate, that Mr. Burke, becaule he objected to an enquiry into the penform lift for the perform of accommy and relief of the public, would have it withheld from the judgment of parliament for all purpoles whatforver. This learned gentleman certainly mifunderflood him. His plan flows that he withed the whole lift to be easily acceffible; and he knows that the public eye is a finite a great guard againft abufe.

itfelf

itself inv

tion. tion.

perty.

dren; they have

law ref

nience

longer

of po no lo

it is

atten

outru

ture

fity, all l

com

mal

int

the

ral

ca

w

itself invidious and grievous. But I fear that reform cannot be immediate. I find myfelf under a reftric-These places, and others of the fame kind, tion. which are held for life, have been confidered as pro-They have been given as a provision for chilperty. dren; they have been the fubject of family fettlements; they have been the fecurity of creditors. What the law respects shall be facred to me. If the barriers of law fhould be broken down, upon ideas of convenience, even of public convenience, we fhall have no longer any thing certain among us. If the diferetion of power is once let loofe upon property, we can be at no loss to determine whose power, and what discretion it is that will prevail at last. It would be wife to attend upon the order of things; and not to attempt to outrun the flow, but fmooth and even courfe of nature. There are occasions, I admit, of public necesfity, fo vaft, fo clear, fo evident, that they fuperfede all laws. Law being only made for the benefit of the community cannot in any one of its parts, refift a demand which may comprehend the total of the public intereft. To be fure, no law can fet itfelf up againft the caufe and reafon of all law. But fuch a cafe very rarely happens; and this most certainly is not fuch a cafe. The mere time of the reform is by no means worth the facrifice of a principle of law. Individuals pafs like shadows; but the commonwealth is fixed and stable. The difference therefore of to-day and tomorrow, which to private people is immense, to the state is nothing. At any rate it is better, if possible, to reconcile our æconomy with our laws, than to fet them at variance; a quarrel which in the end must be deftructive to both.

My idea, therefore, is to reduce those officers to fixed falaries, as the prefent lives and reversions shall fucceffively fall. I mean, that the office of the great auditor (the auditor of the receipt) shall be reduced to \pounds . 3,000 a year; and the auditors of the impress and the rest of the principal officers, to fixed appointments of \pounds . 1,500 a year each. It will not be difficult to calculate the value of this fall of lives to the public, when we shall have obtained a just account of the prefent income of those places; and we shall obtain that E

[49]

weather-be

malice of

and the in

fons, whi

ftate, hay

little, if

means o

power i

reach of

bad rew

of cor

receive

When

the pi

rable

theng

fette

chey

tude

tho

(1)

ca

aff

w

I we harbour.

account with great facility, if the prefent poffeffors are not alarmed with any apprehenfion of danger to their freehold office.

I know too, that it will be demanded of me, how it comes, that fince I admit thefe offices to be no better than penfions, I chofe, after the principle of law had been fatisfied, to retain them at all? To this, Sir, I anfwer, that conceiving it to be a fundamental part of the conflictution of this country, and of the reafon of flate in every country, that there muft be means of rewarding public fervice, thofe means will be incomplete, and indeed wholly infufficient for that purpofe, if there fhould be no further reward for that fervice, than the daily wages it receives during the pleafure of the crown.

Whoever ferioufly confiders the excellent argument of Lord Somers, in the banker's cafe, will fee he bottoms himfelf upon the very fame maxim which I do; and one of his principal grounds of doctrine for the alienability of the domain in England * contrary to the maxim of the law in France, he lays in the conftitutional policy, of furnishing a permanent reward to public fervice; of making that reward the origin of families; and the foundation of wealth as well as of honours. It is indeed the only genuine unadulterated origin of nobility. It is a great principle in government; a principle at the very foundation of the whole The other judges who held the fame docftructure. trine, went beyond Lord Somers with regard to the remedy, which they thought was given by law against the crown, upon the grant of penfions. Indeed no man knows, when he cuts off the incitements to a virtuous ambition, and the just rewards of public service, what infinite mifchief he may do his country, through all generations. Such faving to the public may prove the worft mode of robbing it. The crown, which has in its hands the truft of the daily pay for national fervice, ought to have in its hands also the means for the repose of public labour, and the fixed fettlement of acknowledged merit. There is a time, when the

* Before the statute of Queen Anne, which limited the alienation of land, weather-beaten

are heir

how

tter

had

5 I t of l of

re-

bm-

ofe,

ice,

t of

ent

otlo;

the

the

tu-16-

ni-

0-٥đ

1....

e

L 51 1

weather-beaten veffels of the state, ought to come into harbour. They must at length have a retreat from the malice of rivals, from the perfidy of political friends, and the inconstancy of the people. Many of the perfons, who in all times have filled the great offices of ftate, have been younger brothers, who had originally little, if any fortune. These offices do not furnish the means of amaffing wealth. There ought to be fome power in the crown of granting penfions out of the reach of its own caprices. An intail of dependence is a bad reward of merit.

I would, therefore, leave to the crown the poffibility of conferring fome favours, which, whilst they are received as a reward, do not operate as corruption. When men receive obligations from the crown through the pious hands of fathers, or of connexions as venerable as the paternal, the dependences which arife from thence, are the obligations of gratitude, and not the fetters of fervility. Such ties originate in virtue, and they prom te it. They continue men in those habitudes of fine dihip, those political connections, and those policid principles in which they began life. They are annulotes against a corrupt levity, instead of caufes of it. What an unfeemly spectacle would it afford, what a difgrace would it be to the commonwealth that fuffered fuch things, to fee the hopeful ion of a meritorious minister begging his bread at the door of that treasury, from whence his father difpenfed the æconomy of an empire, and promoted the happiness and glory of his country? Why should he be obliged to proftrate his honour, and to fubmit his principles at the levee of fome proud favourite, fhouldered and thrust aside by every impugent pretender, on the very fpot where a few days before he faw himfelf adored ?-obliged to cringe to the author of the calamities of his houfe, and to kifs the hands that are red with his father's blood ?- No, Sir, - Thefe things are unfit-They are intolerable.

Sir, I shall be asked, why I do not chuse to destroy those offices which are penfions, and appoint penfions under the direct title in their flead? I allow, that in tome cafes it leads to abufe ; to have things appointed for one purpose, and applied to another. I have no great great objection to fuch a change : but I do not think it quite prudent for me to propofe it. If I should take away the prefent establishment, the burthen of proof refts upon me, that fo many penfions, and no more, and to fuch an amount each, and no more, are neceffary for the public fervice. This is what I can never prove; for it is a thing incapable of definition. I do not like to take away an object that I think answers my purpole, in hopes of getting it back again in a better shape. People will bear an old establishment when its excefs is corrected, who will revolt at a new one. I do not think these office-penfions to be more in number than fufficient : but on that point the Houfe will exercife its difcretion. As to abuse, I am convinced, that very few trufts in the ordinary courfe of administration, have admitted lefs abuse than this. Efficient ministers have been their own paymasters. It is true. But their very partiality has operated as a kind of juftice; and still it was fervice that was paid. When we look over this exchequer lift, we find it filled with the defcendants of the Walpoles, of the Pelhams, of the Townshends; names to whom this country owes its liberties, and to whom his majefty owes his crown. It was in one of these lines, that the immense and envied employment he now holds, came to a certain duke*, who is now probably fitting quietly at a very good dinner directly under us; and acting high life below flairs, whilft we, his mafters, are filling our mouths with unfubstantial founds, and talking of hungry æconomy over his head. But he is the elder branch of an ancient and decayed house, joined to, and repaired by the reward of fervices done by another. I refpect the original title, and the first purchase of merited wealth and honour through all its defcents, through all its transfers, and all its affignments. May fuch fountains never be dried up! May they ever flow with their original purity, and refresh and fructify the commonwealth, for ages !

* Duke of Newcastle, whose dining-room is under the House of Commons.

Sir, It clearly, a formation rules of 1 the ftare. intermed fpccific reductio If I kn exorbit of redu not. betwee that ft in the were 1 do 1 he ov whic thof the jeet ìs, W en di ha fe ſ

r

[52]

Sir,

ink it d take proof more, re nen nen. I fwers better en its I do mber l exnced. ninicient true. juſn we 1 the the s its It vied ce*, linirs, rith my nby he th ts S ir

53 J E

Sir, I think myself bound to give you my reasons as clearly, and as fully, for ftopping in the course of reformation, as for proceeding in it. My limits are the rules of law; the rules of policy; and the fervice of This is the reason why I am not able to intermeddle with another article, which feems to be a fpecific object in feveral of the petitions; I mean the reduction of exorbitant emoluments to efficient offices. If I knew of any real efficient office, which did poffefs exorbitant emoluments, I should be extremely desirous of reducing them. Others may know of them. I do I am not possessed of an exact common measure between real fervice and its reward. I am very fure, that flates do fometimes receive fervices, which is hardly in their power to reward according to their worth. If I were to give my judgment, with regard to this country, I do not think the great efficient offices of the flate to be overpaid. The fervice of the public is a thing which cannot be put to auction, and flruck down to those who will agree to execute it the cheapest. When the proportion between reward and fervice, is our object, we must always confider of what nature the fervice is, and what fort of men they are that must perform it. What is just payment for one kind of labour, and full encouragement for one kind of talents, is fraud and discouragement to others. Many of the great offices have much duty to do, and much expence of reprefentation to maintain. A fecretary of state, for instance, must not appear fordid in the eyes of the ministers of other nations; neither ought our ministers abroad to appear contemptible in the courts where they refide. In all offices of duty, there is, almost neceffarily, a great neglect of all domeffic affairs. A perfon in high office can rarely take a view of his family-house. If he fees that the flate takes no detriment, the flate must fee that his affairs should take as little.

I will even go fo far as to affirm, that if men were willing to ferve in fuch fituations without falary, they ought not to be permitted to do it. Ordinary fervice must be secured by the motives to ordinary integrity. I do not hefitate to fay, that, that flate which lays its foundation in rare and heroic virtues, will be fure to have its superstructure in the baseft profligacy and E 3 corruption. An honourable and fair profit is the beff fecurity against avarice and rapacity; as in all things elfe, a lawful and regulated enjoyment is the best fecurity against debauchery and excess. For as wealth is power, fo all power will infallibly draw wealth to itfelf by fome means or other : and when men are left no way of afcertaining their profits but by their means of obtaining them, those means will be encreased to infinity, This is true in all the parts of administration, as well as in the whole. If any individual were to decline his appointments, it might give an unfair advantage to oftentatious ambition over unpretending fervice; it might breed invidious comparisons; it might tend to deftroy whatever little unity and agreement may be found And after all, when an ambitious among ministers. man had run down his competitors by a fallacious fhew of difinterestedness, and fixed himself in power by that means, what fecurity is there that he would not change his courfe, and claim as an indemnity ten times more than he has given up?

This rule, like every other, may admit its exceptions. When a great man has fome one great object in view to be atchieved in a given time, it may be abfolutely neceffary for him to walk out of all the common roads, and if his fortune permits it, to hold himfelf out as a fplendid example. I am told, that fomething of this kind is now doing in a country near us. But this is for a fhort race; the training for a heat or two, and not the proper preparation for the regular ftages of a methodical journey. I am fpeaking of eftabliftments, and not of men.

It may be expected, Sir, that when I am giving my reafons why I limit myfelf in the reduction of employments, or of their profits, I fhould fay fomething of those which feem of eminent inutility in the flate; I mean the number of officers who by their places are attendant on the perfon of the king. Confidering the commonwealth merely as fuch, and confidering those officers only as relative to the direct purpose of the flate, I admit that they are of no use at all. But there are many things in the confitution of effablishments, which appear of little value on the first view, which in a fecondary and oblique manner, produce very material advantages.

e beft hings feculth is itfelf b way of obinity, ell as is apbitenmight ftroy ound tious thew that lange more tions. view

utely

Dads,

as a

this

s is

ind

fa ts,

y

f

company. They are fo elevated ove all the reft of mankind, that they must look upon all their fubjects as on a level. They are rather apt to hate than to love their nobility, on account of the occasional resistance to their will, which will be made by their virtue, their petulance, or their pride. It must indeed be admitted. that many of the nobility are as perfectly willing to act the part of flatterers, tale-bearers, parafites, pimps, and buffoons, as any of the lowest and yilest of mankind can poffibly be. But they are not properly qua-The want of lified for this object of their ambition. a regular education, and early habits, and fome lurking remains of their dignity, will never permit them to become a match for an Italian eunuch, a mountebank, a fidler, a player, or any regular practitioner of that tribe. The Roman emperors almost from the beginning, threw themfelves into fuch hands ; and the mifchief increased every day till its decline, and its final It is therefore of very great importance (proruin. vided the thing is not overdone) to contrive fuch an establishment as must, almost whether a prince will or not, bring into daily and hourly offices about his perfon, a great number of his first nobility; and it is rather an ufeful prejudice that gives them a pride in fuch Though they are not much the better a servitude. for a court, a court will be much the better for them. I have therefore not attempted to reform any of the offices of honour about the king's perfon.

There are, indeed, two offices in his flables which are finecures. By the change of manners, and indeed by

E 4

It was on full confideration that I deadvantages. termined not to leffen any of the offices of honour about the crown, in their number, or their emoluments. These emoluments, except in one or two cases, do not much more than answer the charge of attendance. Men of condition naturally love to be about a court; and women of condition love it much more. But there is in all regular attendance, fo much of conftraint, that if it were a mere charge, without any compenfation, you would foon have the court deferted by all the nobility of the kingdom. Sir, the most ferious . "ichief would follow from fuch a defertion. Kings are . stally lovers of low by the nature of the thing, they must be fo; I mean the feveral keepers of buck-hounds, ftag-hounds, fox-hounds, and harriers. They answer no purpose of utility or of fplendor. These I propose to abolish. It is not proper that great noblemen flould be keepers of dogs, though they were the king's dogs. In every part of my fcheme, I have endeavoured that no primary, and that even no fecondary fervice of the state, should fuffer by its frugality. I mean to touch no offices but fuch as I am perfectly fure, are either of no use at all, or not of any use in the least assignable proportion to the burthen with which they load the revenues of the kingdom, and to the influence with which they opprefs the freedom of parliamentary deliberation; for which reafon there are but two offices which are properly flate offices, that I have a defire to reform.

The first of them is the new office of third fecretary of state, which is commonly called fecretary of state for the colonies.

We know that all the correspondence of the colonies had been, until within a few years, carried on by the fouthern fecretary of ftate; and that this department has not been fhunned upon account of the weight of its duties; but on the contrary, much fought, on account of its patronage. Indeed he must be poorly acquainted with the hiftory of office, who does not know how very lightly the American functions have always leaned on the fhoulders of the ministerial Atlas, who has upheld that fide of the fphere. Undoubtedly, great temper and judgment was requifite in the management of the colony politics; but the official detail was a trifle. Since the new appointment, a train of unfortunate accidents has brought before us almost the whole correspondence of this favourite secretary's office, fince the first day of its establishment. I will say nothing of its aufpicious foundation; of the quality of its correlpondence; or of the effects that have enfued from it. I fpeak merely of its quantity; which we know would have been little or no addition to the trouble of whatever office had its hands the fulleft. But what has been the real condition of the old office of fecretary of ftate? Have their velvet bags, and their red boxes, been

I mean fox-۶, ofe of bolifh. keep-In hat no of the touch either flignload with deliffices defire etary for

nies the nent t of acacow iys ho at nt a been fo full, that nothing more could poffibly be crammed into them ?

A correspondence of a curious nature has been lately published *. In that correspondence, Sir, we find, the opinion of a noble perfon, who is thought to be the grand manufacturer of administrations; and therefore the beft judge of the quality of his work. He was of opinion, that there was but one man of diligence and industry in the whole administration-it was the late earl of Suffolk. The noble lord lamented very juffly, that this statesman, of fo much mental vigour, was almost wholly disabled from the exertion of it, by his bodily infirmities. Lord Suffolk, dead to the ftate, long before he was dead to nature, at last paid his tribute to the common treafury to which we must all be taxed. But fo little want was found even of his intentional industry, that the office, vacant in reality to its duties long before, continued vacant even in nomination and appointment for a year after his death. The whole of the laborious and arduous correspondence of this empire, refted folely upon the activity and energy of Lord Weymouth.

It is therefore demonstrable, fince one diligent man was fully equal to the duties of the two offices, that two diligent men will be equal to the duty of three. The bufinefs of the new office which I shall provofe to you to fupprefs, is by no means too much to be returned to either of the fecretaries which remain. If this dust in the balance should be thought too heavy, it may be divided between them both; North America (whether free or reduced) to the northern fecretary, the Weft Indics to the fouthern. It is not necessary that I should fay more upon the inutility of this office. It is burning day light. But before I have done, I shall just remark, that the history of this office is too recent to fuffer us to forget, that it was made for the mere convenience of the arrangements of political intrigue, and not for the fervice of the flate; that it was made, in order to give a colour to an exorbitant increase of the civil lift; and in the fame act to bring a new accession to the loaded compost heap of corrupt influence.

There is, Sir, another office, which was not long

* Letters between Dr. Addington and Sir James Wright.

fince,

fince, clofely connected with this of the American fecretary; but has been lately feparated from it for the very fame purpole for which it had been conjoined; I mean the fole purpole of all the feparations and all conjunctions that have been lately made—a job.—I fpeak, Sir, of the board of trade and plantations. This board is a fort of temperate bed of influence; a fort of gently ripening hot-houfe, where eight members of parliament receive falaries of a thoufand a year, for a certain given time, in order to mature at a proper feasion, a claim to two thoufand, granted for doing lefs, and on the credit of having toiled fo long in that inferior laborious department.

I have known that board, off and on, for a great number of years. Both of its pretended objects have been much the objects of my fludy, if I have a right to call any purfuits of mine by fo refpectable a name. I can affure the houfe, and I hope they will not think that I rifk my little credit lightly, that, without meaning to convey the leaft reflection upon any one of its members paft or prefent, — it is a board which, if not mifchievous, is of no ufe at all.

You will be convinced, Sir, that I am not mistaken, if you reflect how generally it is true, that commerce, the principal object of that office, flourishes most when it is left to itfelf. Interest, the great guide of commerce, is not a blind one. It is very well able to find its own way; and its neceffities are its best laws. But if it were poffible, in the nature of things, that the young fhould direct the old, and the inexperienced inftruct the knowing; if a board in the ftate was the best tutor for the counting-house ; if the desk ought to read lectures to the anvil, and the pen to usurp the place of the fhuttle-yet in any matter of regulation, we know that board must act with as little authority as skill. The prerogative of the crown is utterly inadequate to its object; because all regulations are, in their nature, restrictive of some liberty. In the reign indeed, of Charles the first, the council, or committees of council, were never a moment unoccupied, with affairs of trade. But even where they had no ill intention (which was fometimes the cafe) trade and manufacture fuffered infinitely from their injudicious tampering. But fince that period, whenever regulation is wanting wanting (for I do not deny, that fometimes it may be wanting) parliament constantly fits; and parliament alone is competent to fuch regulation. We want no instructions from boards of trade, or from any other board; and God forbid we should give the least attention to their reports. Parliamentary enquiry is the only mode of obtaining parliamentary information. There is more real knowledge to be obtained, by attending the detail of bufine's in the committees above stairs, than ever did come, or ever will come from any board in this kingdom, or from all of them together. An affiduous member of parliament will not be the worfe instructed there, for not being paid a thousand a year for learning his leffon. And now that I fpeak of the committees above stairs, I must fay, that having till lately attended them a good deal, I have observed that no description of members give so little attendance, either to communicate, or to obtain instruction upon matters of commerce, as the honourable members of the grave board of trade. I really do not recollect, that I have ever feen one of them in that fort of business. Poffibly, fome members may have better memories: and may call to mind fome job that may have accidentally brought one or other of them, at one time or other. to attend a matter of commerce.

This board, Sir, has had both its original formation. and its regeneration, in a job. In a job it was conceived, and in a job its mother brought it forth. It made one among those shewy and specious impositions, which one of the experiment-making administrations of Charles the fecond held out to delude the people, and to be substituted in the place of the real fervice which they might expect from a parliament annually fitting. It was intended alfo to corrupt that body whenever it fhould be permitted to fit. It was projected in the year 1668, and it continued in a tottering and ricketty childhood for about three or four years, for it died in the year 1673, a babe of as little hopes as ever fwelled the bills of mortality in the article of convulled or over-laid children, who have hardly ftepped over the threshold of life.

It was buried with little ceremony; and never more thought of, until the reign of King William, when in

h fe-

the

₿; I

all

-1

This

t of

bar-

cer-

on,

and

ior

eat

lve

ht

nc.

nk

n-

its

ot

if

e,

'n

-

đ

the

the strange vicifitude of neglect and vigour, of good and ill fuccess that attended his wars, in the year 1695, the trade was diftreffed beyond all example of former fufferings, by the piracies of the French cruifers. This fuffering incenfed, and, as it fhould feem, very justly incenfed, the houfe of commons. In this ferment they fruck, not only at the administration, but at the very conftitution of the executive government. They attempted to form in parliament a board for the protection of trade; which, as they planned it, was to draw to itfelf a great part, if not the whole, of the functions and powers, both of the admiralty, and of the treasury; and thus, by a parliamentary delegation of office and officers, they threatened absolutely to separate these departments from the whole ivitem of the executive government, and of course to vest the most leading and effential of its attributes in this board. As the executive government was in a manner convicted of a dereliction of its functions, it was with infinite difficulty, that this blow was warded off in that feffion. There was a threat to renew To prevent the effect of the fame attempt in the next. this manœuvre, the court opposed another manœuvre to it; and in the year 1696, called into life this board of trade, which had flept fince 1673.

This, in a few words, is the hiftory of the regeneration of the board of trade. It has perfectly anfwered its purpofes. It was intended to quiet the minds of the people, and to compofe the ferment that then was ftrongly working in parliament. The courtiers were too happy to be able to fubfitute a board, which they knew would be ufelefs, in the place of one that they feared would be dangerous. Thus the board of trade was reproduced in a job; and perhaps it is the only inftance of a public body, which has never degenerated; but to this hour preferves all the health and vigour of its primitive inflitution.

This board of trade and plantations has not been of any use to the colonies, as colonies; so little of use, that the flourishing fettlements of New England, of Virginia, and of Maryland, and all our wealthy colonies in the West Indies, were of a date prior to the first board of Charles the fecond. Penfylvania and Carolina were settled during its dark quarter, in the interval between the extinction of the first, and the formation of the the fecond board. Two colonies alone owe their origin to that board. Georgia, which, till lately, has made a very flow progrefs; and never did make any progrefs at all, until it wholly got rid of all the regulations which the board of trade had moulded into its original That colony has cost the nation very conflitution. great fums of money; whereas the colonies which have had the fortune of not being godfathered by the board of trade, never cost the nation a shilling, except what has been so properly spent in losing them. But the colony of Georgia, weak as it was, carried with it to the last hour, and carries, even in its present dead pallid vifage, the perfect refemblance of its parents. It always had, and it now has, an establishment paid by the public of England, for the fake of the influence of the crown; that colony having never been able or willing to take upon itself the expence of its proper government, or its own appropriated jobs.

The province of Nova Scotia was the youngeft and the favourite child of the board. Good God ! What fums the nurfing of that ill-thriven, hard-vifaged, and illfavoured brat, has coft to this wittol nation ? Sir, this colony has ftood us in a fum of not lefs than feven hundred thoufand pounds. To this day it has made no repayment—It does not even fupport those offices of expence, which are miscalled its government; the whole of that job ftill lies upon the patient, callous fhoulders of the people of England.

Sir, I am going to state a fact to you, that will serve to fet in full funfhine the real value of formality and official superintendance. There was in the province of Nova Scotia, one little neglected corner; the country of the neutral French; which having the good fortune to escape the fostering care both of France and England, and to have been thut out from the protection and regulation of councils of commerce, and of boards of trade, did, in filence, without notice, and without affiftance, increase to a confiderable degree. But it feems our nation had more skill and ability in destroying, than in fettling a colony. In the laft war we did, in my opinion, most inhumanly, and upon pretences that in the eye of an honeft man are not worth a farthing, root out this poor innocent deferving people, whom our utter inability

and the

ffer-

fuf-

in-

hey

ery

ation felf

wnd

rs,

hts

nď

Rt-

nt

cas W

of

to bf

ł

[62] or to reconcile, g

inability to govern, or to reconcile, gave us no fort of right to extirpate. Whatever the merits of that extirpation might have been, it was on the footfieps of a neglected people, it was on the fund of unconftrained poverty, it was on the acquisitions of unregulated industry, that any thing which deferves the name of a colony in that province, has been formed. It has been formed by overflowings from the exuberant population of New England, and by emigration, from other parts of Nova Scotia, of fugitives from the protection of the board of trade.

But if all of these things were not more than sufficient to prove to you the inutility of that expensive establishment, I would defire you to recollect, Sir, that those who may be very ready to defend it, are very cautious how they employ it; cautious how they employ it even in appearance and pretence. They are afraid they should lose the benefit of its influence in parliament, if they feemed to keep it up for any other purpofe. If ever there were commercial points of great weight, and most closely connected with our dependences, they are those which have been agitated and decided in parliament fince I came into it. Which of the innumerable regulations fince made had their origin or their improvement in the board of trade? Did any of the feveral East India bills which have been fucceffively produced fince 1767, originate there? Did any one dream of referring them, or any part of them thither? Was any body to ridiculous as even to think of it? If ever there was an occasion on which the board was fit to be confulted, it was with regard to the acts, that were preludes to the American war, or attendant on its commencement : those acts were full of commercial regulations, fuch as they were;-the intercourfe bill; the prohibitory bill; the fifthery bill? If the board was not concerned in fuch things, in what particular was it thought fit that it fhould be concerned? In the course of all these bills through the house, I observed the members of that board to be remarkably cautious of intermeddling. They underftood decorum better; they know that matters of trade and plantations are no bufinefs of theirs.

There

the

inte

and

Sta

we

au

fo T a b There were two very recent occasions, on which, if the idea of any use for the board had not been extinguished by prefeription, appeared loudly to call for their interference.

When commissioners were fent to pay his majesty's and our dutiful respects to the congress of the United States, a part of their powers under the commission were, it feems, of a commercial nature. They were authorized in the most ample and undefined manner, to form a commercial treaty with America on the fpot. This was no trivial object. As the formation of fuch a treaty would neceffarily have been no lefs than the breaking up of our whole commercial fystem, and the giving it an entire new form ; one would imagine, that the board of trade would have fat day and night, to model propositions, which, on our fide, might ferve as a basis to that treaty. No such thing. Their learned leifure was not in the least interrupted, though one of the members of the board was a commissioner, and might, in mere compliment to his office, have been fupposed to make a shew of deliberation on the subject. But he knew, that his colleagues would have thought he laughed in their faces, had he attempted to bring any thing the most distantly relating to commerce or colonies before them. A noble perfon, engaged in the fame commission, and fent to learn his commercial ru-diments in New York, (then under the operation of an act for the universal prohibition of trade) was soon after put at the head of that board. This contempt from the present ministers of all the pretended functions of that board, and their manner of breathing into its very foul, of infpiring it with its animating and prefiding principle, puts an end to all difpute concerning their opinion of the clay it was made of. But I will give them heaped measure.

It was but the other day, that the noble lord in the blue ribbon carried up to the houfe of peers, two acts, altering, I think much for the better, but altering, in a great degree, our whole commercial fyftem. Thefe acts, I mean, for giving a free trade to Ireland in woollens and in all things elfe, with independent nations, and giving them an equal trade to our own colonies. Here too the novelty of this great, but advous

of

d

e

t

duous and critical improvement of fystem, would make you conceive that the anxious folicitude of the noble lord in the blue ribbon, would have wholly deftroyed the plan of fummer recreation of that board, by references to examine, compare, and digest matters for parliament-You would imagine, that Irifh commiffioners of cuftoms and English commissioners of customs, and commissioners of excise, that merchants and manufacturers of every denomination, had daily crowded their outer rooms. Nil horum. The perpetual virtual adjournment, and the unbroken fitting vacation of that board, was no more diffurbed by the Irifh than by the plantation commerce, or any other commerce. The fame matter made a large part of the business which occupied the house for two sessions before; and as our ministers were not then mellowed by the mild, emollient, and engaging blandishments of our dear fister, into all the tenderness of unqualified furrender, the bounds and limits of a reftrained benefit naturally required much detailed management and politive regulation. But neither the qualified propositions which were received, nor those other qualified propositions which were rejected by ministers, were the least concern of theirs, or were they ever thought of in the business.

It is therefore, Sir, on the opinion of parliament, on the opinion of the minifters, and even on their own opinion of their inutility, that I fhall propofe to you to fupprefs the beard of trade and plantations; and to recommit all its bulinefs to the council from whence it was very improvidently taken; and which bulinefs (whatever it might be) was much better done and without any expence; and indeed where in effect it may all come at laft. Almost all that deferves the name of bulinefs there, is the reference of the plantation acts, to the opinion of gentlemen of the law. But all this may be done, as the Irifh bulinefs of the fame nature has always been done, by the council, and with a reference to the attorney and folicitor general.

There are fome regulations in the household, relative to the officers of the yeomen of the guards, and the officers and band of gentlemen pensioners, which I shall fhall pofe

muq

trol

to

me

fev

th

bi

th

fhall likewife fubmit to your confideration, for the purpole of regulating establishments, which at present are much abused.

ke

or (s, 1-

ht le

le

h

I have now finished all, that for the present I shall trouble you with on the plan of reduction. I mean next to propose to you the plan of arrangement, by which I mean to appropriate and fix the civil lift money to its feveral fervices according to their nature; for I am thoroughly fenfible, that if a difcretion, wholly arbitrary, can be exercised over the civil lift revenue, although the most effectual methods may be taken to prevent the inferior departments from exceeding their bounds, the plan of reformation will still be left very imperfect. It will not, in my opinion, be fafe to permit an entirely arbitrary difcretion even in the first lord of the treasury himself : It will not be fafe to leave with him a power of diverting the public money from its proper objects, of paying it in an irregular courfe, or of inverting perhaps the order of time, dictated by the proportion of value, which ought to regulate his application of payment to fervice.

I am fenfible too, that the very operation of a plan of acconomy which tends to exonerate the civil lift of expensive establishments, may in some fort defeat the capital end we have in view, the independence of parliament; and that in removing the public and oftenfible means of influence, we may increase the fund of pri-vate corruption. I have thought of fome methods to prevent an abuse of surplus cash under discretionary application ; I mean the heads of fecret fervice, special fervice, various payments, and the like; which, I hope, will answer, and which in due time I shall lay before yoù. Where I am unable to limit the quantity of the fums to be applied, by reafon of the uncertain quantity of the fervice, I endeavour to confine it to its line; to fecure an indefinite application to the definite fervice to which it belongs; not, to ftop the progress of expence in its line, but to confine it to that line in which it profess to move.

But that part of my plan, Sir, upon which I principally reft, that, on which I rely for the purpose of binding up, and securing the whole, is to establish a fixed and invariable order in all its payments, which

•

it.

it shall not be permitted to the first lord of the treasury, upon any pretence whatfoever, to depart from. therefore divide the civil lift payments into nine claffes, putting each class forward according to the importance or justice of the demand, and to the inability of the perfons entitled to enforce their pretenfions; that is, to put those first who have the most efficient offices, or claim the justeft debts; and, at the same time. from the character of that defcription of men, from the retirednels, or the remotenels of their lituation, or from their want of weight and power to enforce their pretensions, or from their being entirely fubject to the power of a minister, without any reciprocal power of awing, ought to be the most confidered, and are the most likely to be neglected; all these I place in the highest classes : I place in the lowest those whose functions are of the least importance, but whole perfons or rank are often of the greatest power and influence.

In the first class I place the judges, as of the first importance. It is the public justice that holds the community together; the ease, therefore, and independence of the judges, ought to fupersed all other confiderations, and they ought to be the very last to feel the necessities of the flate, or to be obliged either to court or bully a minister for their right: They ought to be as weak folicitors on their own demands, as firenuous affertors of the rights and liberties of others. The judges are, or ought to be, of a referved and retired character, and wholly unconnected with the political world.

In the fecond class I place the foreign ministers. The judges are the links of our connections with one another; the foreign ministers are the links of our connection with other nations. They are not upon the fpot to demand payment, and are therefore the most likely to be, as in fact they have fometimes been, entirely neglected, to the great difgrace, and perhaps the great detriment of the nation.

In the third clafs I would bring all the tradefmen who fupply the crown by contract, or otherwife.

In the fourth class I place all the domeftic fervants of the king, and all perfons in efficient offices, whofe falaries do not exceed two hundred pounds a year.

In

In t

to giv

T wou

jesty's queen

purfe

duty

dred

pen

k in

per

ch

fic

Ŧ

Pa

I

I

In

In the fifth, upon account of honour, which ought to give place to nothing but charity and rigid juffice, I would place the penfions and allowances of his majefty's royal family, comprehending of courfe the queen, together with the flated allowance of the privy purfe.

In the fixth clafs, I place these efficient offices of duty, whose falaries may exceed the sum of two hundred pounds a year.

e

t

In the feventh clafs, that mixed mafs the whole penfion lift.

In the eighth, the offices of honour about the king.

In the ninth, and the laft of all, the falaries and penfions of the first lord of the treasury himself, the chancellor of the exchequer, and the other commisfioners of the treasury.

If by any poffible mifmanagement of that part of the revenue which is left at diferetion, or by any other mode of prodigality, cafh fhould be deficient for the payment of the loweft claffes, I propofe, that the amount of thofe falaries where the deficiency may happen to fall, fhall not be carried as debt to the account of the fucceeding year, but that it fhall be entirely lapfed, funk, and loft; fo that government will be enabled to flart in the race of every new year, wholly unloaded, frefh in wind and in vigour. Hereafter, no civil lift debt can ever come upon the public. And thofe who do not confider this as faving, becaufe it is not a certain fum, do not ground their calculations of the future on their experience of the paft.

I know of no mode of preferving the effectual execution of any duty, but to make it the direct intereft of the executive officer that it fhall be faithfully performed. Affuming, then, that the prefent vaft allowance to the civil lift is perfectly adequate to all its purpofes, if there fhould be any failure, it must be from the mifmanagement or neglect of the first commiffioner of the treafury; fince, upon the proposed plan, there can be no expense of any confequence, which he is not himfelf previously to authorize and finally to control. It is therefore juft, as well as politic, that the loss fhould attach upon the delinquency.

F 2

[67]

Ŧ

If the failure from the delinquency should be very confiderable, it will fall on the clafs directly above the first lord of the treasury, as well as upon himfelf and his board. It will fall, as it ought to fall, upon offices of no primary importance in the ftate; but then it will fall upon perfons, whom it. will be a matter of no flight importance for a minister to provoke-it will fall upon perfons of the first rank and confequence in the kingdom; upon those who are nearest to the king, and frequently have a more interior credit with him than the minister himself. It will fall upon masters of the horse, upon lord chamberlains, upon lord ftewards, upon grooms of the ftole, and lords of the bedchamber. The houfehold troops form an army, who will be ready to mutiny for want of pay, and whole mutiny will be. really dreadful to a commander in chief. A rebellion of the thirtcen lords of the bedchamber would be far more terrible to a minister, and would probably affect his power more to the quick, than a revolt of thirteen colonies. What an uproar fuch an event would create at court ! What petitions, and committees, and affociations would it not produce ! Blefs me ! what a clattering of white flicks and yellow flicks would be about his head-what a ftorm of gold keys would fly about the ears of the minister-what a shower of Georges, and Thiftles, and medals, and collars of S. S. would affail him at his first entrance into the antichamber, after an infolvent Christmas quarter. A tumult which could not be appealed by all the harmony of the newyear's ode. Rebellion it is certain there would be; and rebellion may not now indeed be fo critical an event to those who engage in it, fince its price is fo correctly afcertained at just a thousand pound.

Sir, this claffing, in my opinion, is a ferious and folid fecurity for the performance of a minister's duty. Lord Coke fays, that the ftaff was put into the treafurer's hand, to enable him to fupport himfelf when there was no money in the exchequer, and to beat away importunate folicitors. The method, which I propofe, would hinder him from the neceffity of fuch a broken ftaff to lean on, or fuch a miferable weapon for repulfing the demands of worthles fuitors, who, the noble lord in the blue ribbon knows, will bear many hard blows blows C

they ar

furnish

anfwer

them o

« are ss for

46 me

cc at

66 m

66 la

ss th

. A his

of 1

felf

efta

bec

wi

œ

fe

th

tÌ

tl

i

ŗ

blows on the head, and many other indignities, before they are driven from the treafury. In this plan, he is furnifhed with an anfwer to all their importunity; an anfwer far more conclusive, than if he had knocked them down with his ftaff—" Sir, (or my Lord), you " are calling for my own falary—Sir, you are calling " for the appointments of my colleagues who fit about " me in office—Sir, you are going to excite a mutiny " at court against me—you are going to effrange his " majefty's confidence from me, through the chamber-" lain, or the mafter of the horfe, or the groom of " the ftole."

As things now fland, every man, in proportion to his confequence at court, tends to add to the expences of the civil lift, by all manner of jobs, if not for himfelf, yet for his dependents. When the new plan is established, those who are now suitors for jobs, will become the most strenuous opposers of them. They will have a common interest with the minister in public occonomy. Every class, as it stands low, will become fecurity for the payment of the preceding class; and thus the persons, whose infignificant fervices defraud those that are useful, would then become interested in their payment. Then the powerful, instead of oppressing, would be obliged to fupport the weak; and idlenefs would become concerned in the reward of industry. The whole fabric of the civil æconomy would become compact and connected in all its parts; it would be formed into a well-organized body, where every member contributes to the support of the whole ; and where even the lazy flomach fecures the vigour of the active arm.

This plan, I really flatter myfelf, is laid, not in official formality, nor in airy fpeculation, but in real life, and in human nature, in what " comes home (as Bacon fays) to the bufinefs and bofoms of men." You have now, Sir, before you, the whole of my fcheme, as far as I have digefted it into a form, that might be in any refpect worthy of your confideration. —I intend to lay it before you in five bills *. The plan confifts, indeed, of many parts; but they fland · Titles of the Bills read.

F 3

upon

[69]

be tly

bon

to

the

it.

ni-

the

nc-

hi-

fe.

on

er.

ldy

be.

ion

far

ect

een

ate

ia-

er-

Jut

he

nd

lđ

r,

h

ł

)

upon a few plain principles. It is a plan which takes nothing from the civil lift without difcharging it of a burthen equal to the fum carried to the public fervice. It weakens no one function necessary to government; but on the contrary, by appropriating fupply to fervice, it gives it greater vigour. It provides the means of order and forefight to a minister of finance, which may always keep all the objects of his office, and their state, condition, and relations, distinctly before him. It brings forward accounts without hurrying and diftreffing the accountants : whilft it provides for public convenience, it regards private rights. It extinguishes fecret corruption almost to the possibility of its existence. It deftroys direct and visible influence equal to the offices of at least fifty members of parliament. Laftly, it prevents the provision for his Majefty's children, from being diverted to the political purpofes of his minister.

These are the points, on which I rely for the merit of the plan: I purfue æconomy in a fecondary view, and only as it is connected with these great objects. am perfuaded, that even for fupply, this fcheme will be far from unfruitful, if it be executed to the extent I propose it. I think it will give to the public, at its periods, two or three hundred thousand pounds a year; if not, it will give them a fystem of acconomy, which is itself a great revenue. It gives me no little pride and fatisfaction, to find that the principles of my proceedings are, in many respects, the very same with those which are now pursued in the plans of the French minister of finance. I am sure, that I lay before you a scheme easy and practicable in all its parts. I know it is common at once to applaud and to reject all attempts of this nature. I know it is common for men to fay, that fuch and fuch things are perfectly rightvery defirable; but that, unfortunately, they are not practicable. Oh ! no, Sir, no. Those things which are not practicable, are not defirable. There is nothing in the world really beneficial, that does not lie within the reach of an informed understanding, and a well-directed purfuit. There is nothing that God has judged good for us, that he has not given us the means to accomplifh, both in the natural and the moral world.

[70]

If

[71]

If we cry, like children for the moon, like children we must cry on.

We must follow the nature of our affairs, and conform ourselves to our fituation. If we do, our objects are plain and compassable. Why should we refolve to do nothing, because what I propose to you may not be the exact demand of the petition ; when we are far from refolved to comply even with what evidently is fo? Does this fort of chicanery become us? The people are the mafters. They have only to express their wants at large and in gross. We are the expert artists ; we are the skilful workmen, to shape their defires into perfect form, and to fit the utenfil to the use. They are the sufferers, they tell the fymptoms of the complaint; but we know the exact feat of the difeafe, and how to apply the remedy, according to the rules of art. How shocking would it be to see us pervert our skill, into a finister and fervile dexterity, for the purpose of evading our duty, and defrauding our employers, who are our natural lords, of the object of their just expectations. I think the whole not only practicable, but practicable in a very fhort time. If we are in earnest about it, and if we exert that industry, and those talents in forwarding the work, which I am afraid may be exerted in impeding it.-I engage, that the whole may be put in complete execution within a year. For my own part, I have very little to recommend me for this or for any tafk, but a kind of earnest and anxious perfeverance of mind, which, with all its good and all its evil effects, is moulded into my conffitution. I faithfully engage to the house, if they choose to appoint me to any part in the execution of this work, which (when they have made it theirs by the improvements of their wildom, will be worthy of the able affiftance they may give me) that by night and by day, in town, or in country, at the defk, or in the forest, I will, without regard to convenience, ease, or pleasure, devote myself to their fervice, not expecting or admitting any reward whatfoever. I owe to this country my labour, which is my all; and I owe to it ten times more industry, if ten times more I could exert. After all I shall be an unprofitable servant.

akes of a vice. ent; fereans hich their him. difblic thes kiftal to ent. bils of herit iew, I will nt I its ar ; ich ide 0th :h u v

At

At the fame time, if I am able, and if I shall be permitted, I will lend an humble helping hand to any other good work which is going on. I have not, Sir, the trantic prefumption to fuppofe, that this plan contains in it the whole of what the public has a right to expect, in the great work of reformation they call for. Indeed, it falls infinitely flort of it. It falls flort, even of my own ideas. I have fome thoughts not yet fully ripened, relative to a reform in the cuftoms and excife, as well as in fome other branches of financial administration. There are other things too, which form effential parts in a great plan for the purpose of reftoring the independence of parliament. The contractors bill of last year it is fit to revive; and I rejoice that it is in better hands than mine. The bill for fuspending the votes of customhouse officers, brought into parliament feveral years ago, by one of our worthiest and wifest members, * (would to God we could along with the plan revive the perfon who defigned it.) But a man of very real integrity, honour, and ability will be found to take his place, and to carry his idea into full execution. You all fee how neceffary it is to review our military expences for fome years paft, and, if poffible, to bind up and clofe that bleeding artery of profusion : but that business also, I have reason to hope, will be undertaken by abilities that are fully adequate to it. Something must be devised (if possible) to check the ruinous expense of elections.

[72]

Sir, all or most of these things must be done. Every one must take his part.

If we fhould be able by dexterity or power, or intrigue, to difappoint the expectations of our conflituents, what will it avail us? we fhall never be firong or artful enough to parry, or to put by the irrefiftible demands of our fituation. That fituation calls upon us, and upon our conflituents too, with a voice which will be heard. I am fure no man is more zcaloufly-attached than I am to the privileges of this house, particularly in regard to the exclusive management of money. The lords have no right to the difpolition, in any fence, of the public purfe; but they have gone further in † felf-denial

* W. Dowdefwell, Efa; chancellor of the exchequer, 1765.

+ Rejection of Lord Shelburne's motion in the Houfe of Lords.

2

than

than our utmost jealousy could have required. power of examining accounts, to cenfure, correct, and punish, we never, that I know of, have thought of denying to the House of Lords. It is something more than a century fince we voted that body ufelefs : they have now voted themfelves fo. The whole hope of reformation is at length caft upon us; and let us not deceive the nation, which does us the honour to hope every thing from our virtue. If all the nation are not equally forward to prefs this duty upon us, yet be affured, that they all equally expect we fhould perform The respectful filence of those who wait upon it. your pleasure, ought to be as powerful with you, as the call of those who require your service as their right. Some, without doors, affect to feel hurt for your dignity, because they suppose, that menaces are held out to you. Justify their good opinion, by shewing that no menaces are neceflary to ftinulate you to your duty. -But, Sir, whilft we may fympathize with them, in one point, who fympathize with us in another, we ought to attend no lefs to those who approach us like men, and who, in the guife of petitioners, speak to us in the tone of a concealed authority. . It is not wife to force them to fpeak out more plainly, what they plainly mean. - But, the petitioners are violent. Be it fo. Those who are least anxious about your conduct, are not those that love you most. Moderate affection and fatiated enjoyment, are cold and refpectful; but an ardent and injured paffion, is tempered up with wrath, and grief, and thame, and confeious worth, and the maddening fenfe of violated right. A jealous love lights his torch from the firebrands of the furies .- They who call upon you to belong wholly to the people, are those who wish you to return to your proper home; to the fphere of your duty, to the post of your honour, to the manfion-house of all genuine, ferene, and folid fatisfaction. We have furnished to the people of England (indeed we have) fome real caufe of jealoufy. Let us leave that fort of company which, if it does not deflroy our innocence, pollutes our honour : let us free ourfelves at once from every thing that can increase their fuspicions, and inflame their just refentment : let us caft away from us, with a generous fcorn, all the lovetokens and fymbols that we have been vain and light enough to accept ;-all the bracelets and fnuff-boxes, and

er-

her

the ins

et.

ed,

wn

ive

me

.....

eat

ar-

re-

le,

s, ur

We

ed

i-

ea

to

d,

of

•,

e

k

and miniature pictures, and hair-devices, and all the other adulterous trinkets that are the pledges of our alienation, and the monuments of our fhame. Let us return to our legitimate home, and all jars and all quarrels will be loft in embraces. Let the commons in parliament affembled, be one and the fame thing with the commons at large. The diffinctions that are made to feparate us, are unnatural and wicked contrivances. Let us identify, let us incorporate ourfelves with the people. Let us cut all the cables and fnap the chains which tie us to an unfaithful fhore, and enter the friendly harbour, that fhoots far out into the main its moles and jettees to receive us. ---- " War with the world, and peace with our constituents." Be this our motto, and our principle. Then indeed, we shall be truly Respecting ourselves, we shall be respected by great. the world. At prefent all is troubled and cloudy, and distracted, and full of anger and turbulence, both abroad and at home; but the air may be cleared by this ftorm, and light and fertility may follow it. Let us give a faithful pledge to the people, that we honour, indeed, the crown; but that we belong to them; that we are their auxiliaries, and not their tafk-masters; the fellow-labourers in the fame vineyard, not lording over their rights, but helpers of their joy : that to tax them is a grievance to ourfelves, but to cut off from our enjoyments to forward theirs, is the higheft gratification we are capable of receiving. I feel with comfort, that we are all warmed with these fentiments, and while we are thus warm, I wish we may go directly and with a chearful heart to this falutary work.

"Sir, I move for leave to bring in a Bill, "For the better regulation of his Majesty's civil establishments, and of certain public offices; for the limitation of pensions, and the suppression of sundry useless, expensive, and inconvenient places;

" and for applying the monies faved thereby to the · public fervice. *"

Lord North stated, that there was a difference

* The motion was feconded by Mr. Fox.

between

betw

fom

mor

pof

Th

it V

agi

on

gi

tic

between this bill for regulating the eftablifhments, and fome of the others, as they affected the ancient patrimony of the crown; and therefore wifhed them to be poftponed, till the King's confent could be obtained. This diffinction was firongly controverted; but when it was infifted on as a point of decorum only, it was agreed to poftpone them to another day. Accordingly, on the Monday following, viz. Feb. 14, leave was given, on the motion of Mr. Burke, without oppofition, to bring in

1st, "A bill for the fale of the forest and other crowns "lands, rents, and bereditaments, with certain excep-"tions; and for applying the produce thereof to the "public fervice; and for fecuring, afcertaining, and "fatisfying, tenant-rights, and common and other "rights."

2d. "A bill for the more perfectly uniting to the crown "the principality of Wales, and the county palatine of "Chefler, and for the more commodious administration of "justice within the same; as also, for abolishing certain "offices now appertaining thereto; for quieting dormant "claims, ascertaining and securing tenant-rights; and "for the sale of all forest lands, and other lands, tene-"ments, and hereditaments, held by his Majesty in right "of the faid principality, or county palatine of Chefler, "and for applying the produce thereof to the public "fervice."

3d, "A bill for uniting to the crown the duchy and "county palatine of Lanca/ler; for the suppression of un-"necession of the superssion of the superssion of the superssion "tainment and security of tenant and other rights; "and for the sale of all rents, lands, tenements, and here-"ditaments, and foression, within the said duchy and county "palatine, or either of them; and for applying the pro-"duce thereof to the public fervice."—And it was ordered that Mr. Burke, Mr. Fox, Lord John Cavendish, Sir George Savile, Colonel Barrè, Mr. Thomas Townshend, Mr. Byng, Mr. Dunning, Sir Joseph Mawbey, Mr. Recorder of London, Sir Robert Clayton, Mr. Frederick Montagu, the Earl of Upper Offory, Sir William Guise, and Mr. Gilbert, do prepare and bring in the fame.

At the fame time, Mr. Burke moved for leave to bring in-4th, "A bill for uniting the duchy of Cornwall 5 "to

I the

Our

et us

uar-

par-

the

He to

ices,

the the

ains

end-

oles

prld,

ptto,

ruly

by

and

road

rm,

a a eed,

are

fel-

ver

em

en-

on lat

ve

a

"to the crown; for the fuppreffion of certain unne-"ceffary offices now belonging thereto; for the afcertain-"ment and fecurity of tenant and other rights; and "for the fale of certain rents, lands, and tenements, "within or belonging to the faid duchy; and for apply-"ing the produce thereof to the public fervice."

But fome objections being made by the furveyor general of the duchy concerning the rights of the Prince of Wales, now in his minority, and Lord North remaining perfectly filent, Mr. Burke, at length, though he ftrongly contended against the principle of the objection, confented to withdraw this last motion for the prefent, to be renewed upon an early occasion.

THE END.

tunu i kii tarinnaari

