MYSTERY OF A MISSING MAN

That a Thousand Searchers, a Pack of Bloodhounds

And a Reward of $55,000 Has Not Yet Cleared Up—The Inexplicable Disappearance of Edward L. Wentz, a Philadelphia Millionaire,

In the Tennessee Mountains a Month Ago—Was He Murdered?—Was He Kidnapped?—Was He Killed by Accident?—Is He in Hiding?

BRISTOL, Tenn., Nov. 10.—Missing since Oct. 14 somewhere on big, forbidding, towering Blue Mountain, Edward L. Wentz, a Philadelphia millionaire, clubman, mining expert, athlete, thousand men have sought him in vain for four weary weeks. Two packs of bloodhounds have coursed up a steep track or trace, without leaving a single track or trace, without leaving a single track or trace.

Special trains have been at the command of the searching parties. A score of trained detectives have left their homes to follow the mysterious trail, horses—all have been provided without stint, at a cost of $3,000 a day.

But, if the great mountain had silently gaped, quietly dropped the young man into the bowels of the earth and then closed up again, without leaving a single scar upon its rugged surface,

Edward L. Wentz could not have disappeared more completely. No more is known than that on that eventful day when the young man rode off on his horse for a ride up the mountain on a misty day, he was last seen.

Has anything happened to him? Has he mysteriously dropped out of sight? Has he been murdered? Has he been kidnapped? No one can tell.

THEORIES THAT DO NOT EXPLAIN. But these are the theories: That he met with an accident and died in some lonely fastness.

That he was murdered by mountaineers for reasons that are not known. That he was kidnapped for a ransom. That he has gone away of his own accord.

Some of these theories has gone unbelieved. All four have been followed and followed again. But it is as if the searchers, the determined brother, the distressed and despairing parents, all have been working in circles.

Each time they come back to the point where they started, baffled, dazed, disappointed, hopelessly, the horse standing in the road, the missing rider's raincoat tied to the saddle, no signs remaining—this—the mystery still remains!

SEARCHERS WORK ON A REGIMENT, all under one head. Each man is led and transported by his paid $2 a day. The regiment is divided into companies, each of 100. Each company has its complement of bloodhounds; 100 dogs, each of whom are further subdivided into squads of ten, of the ten acting as leader. Day by day they beat across great areas, their feet determined men, without leaving a track, for they know not what may happen. Each man is just ten feet away from his nearest mate, with the dogs last Albert Gerhardt, an insurance agent of Bristol, was seen going along the Kentucky road at a point at the base of Black Mountain, between Appalachia and Kellyville, about one mile from where Wentz was last seen.

But for the start of the mystery. Wentz and wife are the tales of the Cumberland range. In days bygone many the murder has been done; many the men who walked out upon some night, stragglers crossing the great ridge from Kentucky to Tennessee have had their lives snuffed out in the "wise" lives have been fought up and down the rocky slopes between moonshiners and the revenue officers.

It was among such people as these that Edward L. Wentz spent his days and his nights. He was a man of the great tract of 100,000 acres of the land of the Virginia Coal and Iron Company—which he owned a controlling interest in.

By night he was at his home in Big Stone Gap. The mountain divides Southwest Virginia from Kentucky. Its front is dark and somber. It is a black mountain. Where other mountains seem blue when seen from a distance, it is a great gray wall of blue.

It was on one of its rough roads that young Mr. Wentz was last seen four weeks ago last evening. He was riding his horse near Kellyville, a flag point on the Louisville and Nashville railroad. A few hours later he was found by a pack of bloodhounds standing in the forest near the place in Powell's River. The man mounted the horse, knowing who the man was and rode down the mountain to his home in the mines and the village. He thought the animal had run away from its master and he kept it until next morning. Then he rode the horse to the operations of Big Stone Gap, where he met Daniel B. Wentz, Edward's older brother.

Even then no one felt any alarm. Mr. Wentz had probably been out for a horse had escaped from his brother and that young Wentz was doubtless at the home of Charles Wax, up the mountain. He was not seen again until the afternoon of the 14th, when another horse up to Wax's for young Mr. Wentz to ride home. To his amazement he found that the young man had not been there at all.

The man galloped back madly to the Wentz home with the news that the horse had been found in the mines and the village. He thought the animal had run away from its master and he kept it until next morning. Then he rode the horse to the operations of Big Stone Gap, where he met Daniel B. Wentz, Edward's older brother.

There is a class of less offensive mountaineers, who will, however, perform the duty of the mountaineers of the Virginia City and Iron Company as a fancied right. They pick huckleberries in summer, and in the autumn they gather nuts for the market. In some places on the company's lands there are many chestnut trees. At this season they are being cut down for their wood.

On the day he disappeared this was in part by the mountaineers. He and Wax, one of the land agents of the company, were to provide warrants and place them in the hands of the sheriff of the county for the arrest of the trespassers.

Not far from the spot where Wentz is supposed to have disappeared, some of the chestnut trees. Some hold to the belief that Edward L. Wentz was seized by mountaineers whom he had accused regarding acts of trespass. That he was murdered by them, and that he was buried in a cave in the mountains.

Whoever can answer it will be made grand mannan. HERRINGS ARE STILL QUITE SCARCE—Where the Meteor Fell—Shot Two California Ducks—Why Young Gulls Starved to Death.

GRAND MANNAN, Nov. 14.—Herrings are still quite scarce. The wharves have been taking some saildines lately, which are quickly sold at ten and twelve dollars per hoghead to the boats and steamers from Eastport and Lubec. Some large herrings are being taken out of the wharves, but not in any quantities. Net fishermen are not doing much nor are the line fishermen. Whales are reported plentiful.
