ENQUIRY INTO THE HISTORY OF PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND PRIOR TO BRITISH DOMINION.
In the last number of these notes it will have been noticed that the population in 1765 is stated as being double what it was in 1764. Between these two years was 1765, the year of the expulsion from Nova Scotia of the French Acadians, whose and story is well-known. I think we have data before us from the number of those who found shelter in this island at not fewer than 3,000 souls. Says the History of Quebec on this occasion: "The number of persons here at Miramichi in a state of utter destitution is 500, whose only wish is to pass into the island of St. John. Here they will be fed in the meantime." Such of these poor people as would admit of being employed enlarged the settlement of Bedouque. The other settlers at St. Peter's, and at Miramichi, also received their proportion, until the Acadian element far outweighed that of the old French and British.

Here there were in 1765 a population on the island at the close of the French colonization (which it will be seen from the present account of at least 6,750 souls, or equal to more than 1,000 families. Captain Holland who surveyed the island in the ship Canada says that on his day, 1764, there were but 30 French families, and they were all prisoners of war. There had the missing thousand families gone? There must have been an exodus as complete as that of the Israelites from Egypt. Governor Fanning's census taken four years later, in 1768, showed the then total population of both nationalities as 4,372, of whom only 629 were of French extraction. Considerable obscurity and not a little doubt exists as to the expedition of the French from Prince Edward Island. The forcible abduction of a whole population of 6,000 persons could not be perpetrated without leaving some record or contemporaneous record of the details, especially as it was a second offence of the like nature. Yet such record seems to exist. Historicalians are not even agreed as to the year in which the alleged abduction took place. Mr. DeLorge, the historian of the French Canadian race, distinctly states in his "Acadians," vol. I, page viii, (proof) that 20,000 persons were deported from Grand Pre in 1755, and the other, as he implies, from this island in 1763, that is, six years before the fall of Louisbourg, and immediately after the treaty of Paris (Fontenoy). Captain Holland states that 30 French families were deported from Grand Pre in 1755, and the other, as he implies, from this island in 1763, that is, six years before the fall of Louisbourg, and immediately after the treaty of Paris (Fontenoy). The French, ever good military strategists, had about contemporaneous with the founding of Louisbourg, of their small force of 1,000 regular troops, spread a contingent of 60 to occupy the island as a permanent outlying post, and at the centre, on the river now called Hillsborough, where they erected a casemate and some minor outworks. By the militia-law of Louis-Quarante, all males from sixteen to sixty were liable to compulsory service in the militia. Here I would like to ask for information. In the notes to a poem called "The Fear of St. Anne," by P. S. Hamilton, Halifax, it is mentioned that a band of Soriquois from Bay Verte allied with a company of French under Capt. Croisille de Montesson, sacked Port de la Case, the Soriquois returning with their spoils to the mainland, and Montesson remaining in possession of the place. The incident is not mentioned in the ordinary histories, but from the context I infer it was during the time the Prise de Louisbourg was held by the British at the time of the siege. Was there any British force at that time? If not, when, how, and why did the incident occur?

To resume: The French Islanders could have had no political distinctions, but out as they were from any active participation in the events that agitated Canada. A blind loyalty to Church and State was the sum and substance of their religion. It is true a disturbing element of hate to the British could not be other than introduced by the Acadian refugees, but the original French Islanders were friendly. At that time the red men of the Maritime Province were constant allies of the French. No outrages seem to have been committed by the French during the time that they were here: Did many, or any of the French pioneers of settlement in this island were friendly with the Indians on the island to-day deny the traces of Indian admixture in their veins. On the mainland of what was once Acadia, on the contrary, the blood of the red man is regarded as a creditable ancestry. Baron Castine, and his former sovereign, signed a treaty with the Acadians, the Sieur Enand, one of the lesser nobles, married the daughter of a brave of the Soriquois, and without quoting other individual instances it may be said that the numerical inequality of the Acadians to the British was not due to the violence of "white men" meaning British, but there is no allusion to Indian assault. A delicate question here arises: Did many, or any of the French pioneers of settlement in this island were friendly with the Indians on the island to-day deny the traces of Indian admixture in their veins.

The Catholic Review has been pleased to announce that the Theological Council of Baltimore, in order to secure uniformity of discipline, petitioned the Holy See to release the faithful from the obligation of hearing Mass and abating from service works on the Feast of the Epiphany, January 6, the Annunciation, the Blessed Virgin Mary, March 25th, and the Solemnity of Corpus Christi, 4th Thursday after Trinity Sunday, a day that the Holy See has acceded to this request.

Prince Bismarck is the first Prussian who has been invested with the insignia of the Order of Christ and special distinction is given to the honor conferred by the selection of three representatives of Roman princely families to bear them to their destination and confer them upon the chancellor. The persons chosen for that purpose were Prince Bismarck, Prince von Bismarck, and Prince von Bismarck.

...the boat, and how glad it is to have the fault that the good resolution shall be kept - Ah, Horace Moore, you did a good thing for me when you saved me from that half, and if you did not do a good thing for yourself, then I am wild in my calculations.

It was evening when Sugg Witkall approached Matt again, and this time he spoke freely, but yet there was sign of effort enough to denote that he had resolved to say his mind.

"By the way, Matt, have you seen Lyon Hargrave lately?" "No." "Have you heard from him?" "No word. Have you?" "No."

"Do you know, Sugg, if I had not got this chance, I should have been tempted, in case of trouble, to come down on him for help. He has come into a fat thing. But it is well as it is. I get clear of New York, he is welcome to all I've done for him."

"So say I," responded Witkall, in a tone of relief. "But say, Matt, have you noticed who our second mate is?" "Of course, I have. I know him the moment I saw him. And I tell you, Sugg, I rather like him. It's a lucky thing that he don't know us."

"Very lucky. And, as you said, Matt, I like the fellow myself." "Sugg Witkall walked away whistling, and Matt Hargrave nodded mysteriously as he watched the slouching retreat."

On Tuesday morning the crew of the Speedwell were all on board, and the boat had been hauled out into the stream, and a couple of tug-boats engaged to take her down through the Narrows.

The first mate, Charles Huxton, had assumed command of his watch. He was a man of forty, or thereabouts; a native of Salem, Mass., stocky and strong; with thick, sandy hair, and complexion to match. In some respects he might be called a tiger, but he was a great good tiger to all who cheerfully and manfully did their duty.

The third mate was named William Lander - a man of eight-and-seventy - and a good seaman. If he was ever to be enticed from official advancement, it would be from intellectual lack.
