"Imitation is the Sincerest Form of Flattery."

The best proof that MINARD'S LINIMENT has extraordinary merits, and is in good repute with the public, is that it is EXTENSIVELY IMITATED. The imitations resemble the genuine article in appearance only. They lack the general excellence of the Genuine.

This notice is necessary, as injurious and dangerous imitations liable to produce chronic inflammation of the skin, are often substituted for MINARD'S LINIMENT by Dealers, because they pay a larger profit.

They all sell on the Merits and advertising of MINARD'S.

One in particular claiming to be made by a former proprietor of MINARD'S LINIMENT, which simply is a lie.

TOPICS OF THE DAY.

Anti Catholic Disturbances in Spain and Portugal.

The London Saturday Review, one of the leading Protestant journals of England, gives the following explanation of the recent disturbance in Spain and Portugal:

Our leading newspapers have either ignored the simultaneous outbreak of anti-clericalism in the three great Latin nations altogether, or else, believing implicitly the accounts sent to them by correspondents, have not hesitated to approve of it by describing it in their leading articles as a spontaneous outbreak, the result of a justifiable indignation on the part of the population at the gradual encroachment of the friars, and especially of the Jesuits, upon the liberties of the country. In reality, it is an artificially got up demonstration, organized by a certain Brotherhod which, although styling itself Masonic, is not in any way connected, so we are assured, with any of the lodges presided over by the honourable fraternity which, by its insistence on the recognition of the existence of the Supreme Being, its abstention from political and religious matters and its active benevolence, has won universal respect in this country. The Masonic lodges in the Latin countries are avowedly anti-religious, and do not for a moment conceal their intention to sap religious belief and replace it by some vague code of ethics which is their wisdom they consider infinitely superior to the teachings of the Gospel.

Somewhere about August last a certain class of Spanish and Portuguese papers, controlled and inspired by the Republican and secret societies which honeycomb the Peninsula, began to publish a series of articles directed against the religious orders. In this they evidently obeyed an inspiration emanating from the Grand Orient of Paris, where the eventual suppression of the regular clergy and the secularization of education was already being worked up into an anti-clerical crusade, the results of which became apparent at the beginning of the present year in the Parliamentary hubbub over the Associations Bill. Spain was the first country after France where the anti-clerical movement assumed anything like considerable proportions. Some few months ago a well-known dramatist produced a play at Madrid entitled "Elettra," on a subject of the Maria Monk order, which the Government thought fit to suppress owing to its being a pretext for an agitation which it provoked on its first representation. We have read the play, and it strikes us as a very indifferent work, both from the literary and the dramatic point of view. We doubt very much if it would have been allowed to pass the censor of plays in this country, not because it is glaringly immoral, but that it is calculated to offend the susceptibilities of a considerable section of the community. A well organized campaign broke out on the morrow of the suppression of this piece. Every Spanish town has one or more so-called Liberal Clubs, and these, being mainly composed of persons who have nothing to lose but might have something to gain by the fermentations of disorder, soon began to start anti-clerical demonstrations, which speedily degenerated into street riots. There was an incident of an extremely commonplace character, in which a young woman, twenty six years of age, was not comfortable at home and who, if we are to believe all we are told, "was hypnotized by the eloquence of a Jesuit preacher" and entered a convent and elected to remain there against the wishes of her mother. The similarity of this adventure with the main incident of the plot of "Elettra" sufficed to induce an excited populace, in obedience to the outcry of its leaders, to clamour for the suppression of all the religious orders as a punishment for an offence committed by one of their members. We have read carefully a vast number of Spanish and Portuguese papers expressing the opinions of both parties and dating from the very beginning of this extraordinary manifestation, and we do not find therein one single definite charge brought against any member, male or female, of any monastery or convent, either in Spain or Portugal. The promoters of these demonstrations have confined themselves entirely to these loosely generalities which in this country we usually associate with such inventive geniuses as the person Rutherford who was lately condemned and punished by a Protestant judge and jury for his gross attacks on conventional life and morality.

The Portuguese demonstration, however, is far more remarkable than the Spanish since it affords still greater proof of organized conspiracy. It started at Oporto, where an incident happened which, as usual, has been greatly misrepresented in this country. We are assured by some of our most influential newspapers that "a young girl, the daughter of the Brazilian Minister at Oporto, has been incarcerated by the Jesuits in a convent against the wishes of her father."

The facts of the case are as follows: Dona Rosita Calmon is indeed the daughter of the Brazilian Consul at Oporto, but she is not "a young girl," being over thirty-three years of age. For a long time past the unfortunate terms on which this lady lived with her father were well known to her circle of friends and acquaintances. The specific charges which she brought against him are no concern of ours, but in the end they led to such scenes of violence between the pair that the gentleman threatened to shut his daughter up in a lunatic asylum, whereupon she appealed to law for protection, and even obtained it. After this, as may well be imagined, her home existence became less pleasant than ever. One day she went for a walk, met some friends, who were neither priests nor Jesuits, assured them that she was very miserable at home, and they advised her to enter a certain convent as a parlor boarder, which she did. The populace, misinformed as to the facts of the case, worked itself up to a frenzy of indignation, not only against the Jesuits of Oporto, but against the members of all the religious orders, the majority of whom were probably not even aware of Mlle. Calmon's existence. Instead of arresting and trying the accused monks individually or in a batch, the Portuguese Government has ordered the Jesuits and other religious orders straightaway to leave the country, which to their great inconvenience, some of them being very aged people, they have been compelled to do.

The highest indignation seems to have given much satisfaction to the vast majority of the English press, which usually prides itself upon its love of fair play. In this instance it has not hesitated to applaud an unjustifiable action, which, if the victims had been "Jew, Turk or infidel" instead of Jesuits, it would have stigmatized, and very justly so, as outrageous.

In Portugal there really was no reason for all this outcry, for, suppressed in 1834, the existing monasteries and convents may be counted on the fingers of both hands. The Jesuits were the first of the religious associations to return after an exile of nearly half a century. They did so about thirty-five years ago on the invitation of the Archbishop of Patriarch or Lisbon, and established a college at Oporto, just outside the walls of the capital. Since 1865 four or five other Jesuit Colleges have been opened in other parts of the kingdom. To these houses may be added two belonging to the French Fathers of the Holy Ghost (du St. Esprit) who are missionaries, three Franciscan monasteries and two very small Benedictine monasteries. The convents are not much more numerous and are nearly all educational and tenanted by Sisters mostly of foreign origin. Probably there are not more than a dozen Portuguese nuns all told, and these about as many monks. The Portuguese have and cry over the religious associations is a ridiculous but dangerous parody of the Spanish, which at any rate has a motive, for in that country there are a great number of monasteries and nunneries, Portugal is unfortunately a place where there are an amazing number of idle people who contrive to live on the smallest of incomes, and who use politics as a means to "arrive" and to add to their puny resources; hence this agitation, if not checked, it may eventually lead to the boiling up of one of those temporary republics which, after a good deal of blood-letting and blasphemy and a still greater degree of misgovernment, generally subside after a few months into that old order of things.

Irish religious convents give Catholics a decrease of 67 per cent; Protestants, Episcopalians, a decrease

A Story of Pius IX.

(From the Record, Louisvillle.)

In the days of Pius IX. a priest went on a pilgrimage to Rome. On the eve of his departure a poor, hard-working woman came to him and requested him to take a sum of money along with him for the Holy Father as her Peter pence offering. It was a very considerable sum. The priest was surprised that a poor woman should offer for this purpose so much money—a sum altogether disproportionate to her condition in life. He was curious to know how she came by it, and questioned her.

"Father," said she, in her simple way, "I have saved it up."

"How old are you, my good woman?" asked the priest.

"I do not exactly know; I can neither read nor write. But I must be over 50 years."

"And how long did it take you to save up this sum?"

"Oh, very long; I have been saving out since I was 11 years old."

"And what had you in mind to do with the money before you learned that the Holy Father was in such straitened circumstances?"

"I intended to lay it aside for old age and times of sickness."

"But from what will you now live?"

"Oh, I shall continue to earn some more."

"True, but what if you take sick?"

"Oh, then I shall go to the poor-house."

The good priest endeavored to prevail on her to retain the money, but in vain. He had to take it along with him.

On his arrival in Rome he was granted an audience by the Holy Father, to whom he handed the money and explained how he came by it. As he spoke he noticed two large tears coursing down the cheeks of the much tried, venerable Pontiff. Presently Pius IX. took from his finger his ring, placed it on top of the sum of money, and then handing it to the priest said: "Now bring this money back to the good woman with our Apostolic Blessing, and say to her for us, that as long as we have a mouthful of bread we cannot accept of such a sacrifice. Say to her also that the reward of her child like and noble devotion to the Pope will surely not fail."

Simply "Catholicos."

(From the New Zealand Tablet.)

In the languages of Continental Europe no term is known corresponding to the official designation of "Roman Catholic" by which we are known in English-speaking countries. In French, Italian, German, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch and other European languages the title "Catholic" is applied to, and only to, the Church of Rome. Were the word "Roman" added it would be understood to mean the Catholics of the city of Rome. The same statement holds good in the East. In his "Visit to the Russian Church," Rev. W. Palmer (Anglican) tells how, to his great annoyance, the "Orthodox" Russians persisted in calling the adherents of the Church of Rome "Catholicos," pure and simple. The "Russian Orthodox American Messenger," as in its issues of January 1-13, 1899—does likewise. And the following paragraph appeared in the "Catholic Times" a few years ago from a correspondent resident in Cairo (Egypt): "In the East no one is called a Catholic if not in communion with Rome; if not called himself (an Anglican Catholic) here he would be at once considered a 'Roman Catholic' from England. All churches united with Rome are called Catholic, such as the Coptic, Greek Catholic, Syrian Catholic and Latin Catholic. Those in schism are called Orthodox. The Anglicans are simply English Protestants."

Interesting Happenings The World Over.

The situation in Portugal has not improved. Priests are savagely maltreated in the streets and the conduct of the inhabitants has been well compared to that of the Chinese Boxers.

The new Cathedral of Riphoe Diocese, situated at Letterkenny, was solemnly opened on Sunday, June 16. Cardinal Logue presided at the opening rites. Archbishop Kane preached at High Mass, and in the evening the Most Rev. Dr. McDermeck delivered a sermon in Gaelic.

Ireland's religious convents give Catholics a decrease of 67 per cent; Protestants, Episcopalians, a decrease of 3.5 per cent; Presbyterians, a decrease of 0.3 per cent, and Methodists, who number only sixty-one thousand, an increase of 10.4 per cent.

M. B. unciere, of the "Revue des Deux Mondes," is a very up-to-date Catholic and, moreover, one of the most valuable accessions to the Church of which French Catholicism can boast in this country, says the Paris correspondent of the "London Catholic Times."

He brings to the good cause the weight of his learning, his modern spirit and his powers as a confessor. Lecturing recently at the Catholic University of Angers, and preaching upon the iniquitous persecution of the religious orders, he showed these orders to be as useful and as much at their work now as at any previous period. He showed each order or congregation to be the expression of some particular virtue designated in the Gospel. He said that they serve as bonds uniting together the churches of different countries, and also as a connecting link between each church and the Pope. He pointed out the fallacy of the notion that there is ground for rivalry between the secular clergy and the congregations. "The secular clergy," he said, "need the help of the regular. The two religious bodies are bound together by vital interests, and what is an attack on the liberty of one is an attack on the liberty of the other. The present persecution of the Church," said the orator, "is not so much to the machinations of the thirty or forty thousand Freemasons of which France is scourged as to the upholding of the different vices of which the Catholic religion is the avowed enemy. The secular and religious clergy, or, in other words, the Church, are the only rampart remaining against the sovereignty of laic and the pre-tended civilization of the world of science."

The monks of the Grande Chartreuse give daily in private charity more than 3,000 francs. The supply of charity does not equal the demand of the poor of the monastery. Dom Michel, receives daily upwards of a hundred letters containing requests which, if complied with, would mean the daily giving of about 300,000 francs. When a house is burnt down in the locality the monks rebuild it at their own expense. These men are at the providence of the country round. In a secondary sense also they benefit their neighbors, for the monastery is a point of attraction which draws to it about 40,000 visitors and tourists each year during the summer months. The influx gives a considerable impetus to trade in the locality. Hospitality and extreme fragility go together at the Grande Chartreuse. This sometimes John Bull objects to, for he cannot understand, after making a long journey to see the great Carthusian monastery sitting down to a supper of cheese and stewed prunes. But the monks themselves set the example in this matter of fragility, for from September to Easter the dinner consists daily of a piece of bread and half a glass of wine.

The following is reported from Brussels as an authenticated return of the foreign missionaries and mission workers killed during the disturbances in China last year: Catholics, French 18 priests, two nuns; Datch, seven priests (including a Bishop), one nun; Italians, five priests (including two Bishops), two nuns; Belgians, three priests, one nun; Americans, one priest. In addition to these, six Catholic lay workers—five men and a woman were killed, making the Catholic total forty-six. Protestants, English, thirty-nine men, forty-six women, twenty-seven children; Americans and Swedes, twenty men, twenty-four women, thirty-four children; total, one hundred and ninety.

John Pollard, a bellringer at the Barley parish church, Linscombe, England, has had a most remarkable experience in regard to the reign of the late Queen Victoria. Born in the same year as the Queen, he rang at her accession to the throne, on her coronation day, and since then has never failed to take his accustomed place in the belfry on the occasion of her birthday celebrations, making his experience perhaps a record one by his taking a part in the ringing of a muffled peal on the receipt of the news of the Queen's death. Mr. Pollard is still very hale and hearty, and, with the exception of a little deafness, retains all his faculties unimpaired.

We shape ourselves the joy or fear, Of which the coming life is made, And fill our future atmosphere With sunshine or with shade. The theme of life to be We weave with colors of our own, And in the Hall of Destiny We so peruse have sown.

Locomotives and Locomotives.

The Montreal Witness has this to say regarding locomotives: It is not surprising that, after the first shock of surprise, resentment should be expressed by the makers of locomotives in the United States at the statement that their engines were 'dear as a gift, contained in reports concerning them.

Grit Pension System.

It is no wonder that the public expenditures have leaped up during the short Laurier regime from forty millions a year to sixty or seventy millions a year, when every Grit organizer, defeated candidate, or specially criminal heeler has to be provided for out of the public treasury.

LOCAL AND OTHER ITEMS.

The steamer ophir, with the Duke and Duchess of Cornwall and York on board arrived at Wellington New Zealand yesterday.

HEAVY frost last Saturday night did great damage to growing crops in St. John and King's counties, N. B. Even potatoes were killed.

ADVICES from St. John's, Nfld., say that the Newfoundland fishing opened well, but the fishing along St. Pierre and Miquelon is a failure.

A FIRE in the wood working building of Rhodes Curry and Co. Amherst, yesterday morning caused damage to the extent of four thousand dollars.

The Inverness and Richmond Railway, which will eventually traverse the full length of Inverness County, C. B., was opened on Saturday last from Broad Cove to Fort Hastings.

The closing exercises of Notre Dame Convent take place in the Convent Hall this evening. An excellent and most interesting programme has been arranged for the occasion.

The Caledonian Club has decided to hold their annual Club gathering at the Charlottetown Amateur Athletic Association grounds on the date of the Governor General's visit to the Island.

A LIGHTNING storm passed over the Province of New Brunswick, on Friday last, and did great damage. A house was struck near St. John and barns were burned at Temperance Vale and other places.

The body of Baron Von Kettler, the German minister, who was murdered by Chinese in the early part of the troubles in China, has been removed from the legation grounds at Peking and shipped to Germany.

DAVID NATION, famous as the husband of Carrie Nation, has become weary of public life and is going into retirement. Mr. Nation says: "I cannot keep up with Carrie; her pace is too fast; I'm going to drop out of the show."

THERE was a large attendance at the market yesterday. A lot of wild strawberries were offered at 25 cents a quart. In consequence of Monday's storm very little fresh fish was in the market. A few potatoes changed hands at 20c, a bushel, and oats brought from 34 to 35 cents a bushel.

WORD comes from Montreal that about 90 per cent of the C. P. R. trackmen, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, were out on strike on Monday last. Trains, however, were moving regularly with little delay. It was feared engineers might refuse to run trains if the strike should continue.

READ the advertisement of Weeks & Co. the proprietors of the People's Store. Purchasers will find here a large variety of the choicest goods from which to select, and will be waited on by polite and attentive salesmen and women. Visit their store and examine their goods before purchasing elsewhere.

THE strike of the bricklayers and masons union at Sydney, C. B., is still on and there are no prospects at present of a settlement. The men are as determined as ever. The strike is the cause of serious delay in the progress of the Riter Conley work and the steel company also and a large number of laborers are affected.

THE mammoth tea party at Tracadie, will be the great attraction on Monday July 8th. The beautiful scenery of the locality, the convenient train arrangements and the cheap fares, apart altogether from the worthiness of the cause, are sufficient guarantees that the attendance will be large. Read the advertisement in this day's Herald.

THE monsoon has broken out in India. According to the despatch to the London Daily Mail from Simla, a favorable monsoon had started there on June 7, and rains were everywhere expected in India, except in the northern portion of the Punjab. The monsoon rains have thus started unusually early, and it is hoped that they will greatly improve the crop prospects.

HAROLD and Alfred Smith, brothers, were drowned Sunday afternoon while fishing in the St. Lawrence near Verdun asylum, Montreal, almost at the same spot where two young women lost their lives by drowning on Friday last. The boat was overturned in an eddy. Two Owens brothers escaped by clinging to the sides of the overturned boat, but the Smith brothers lost their hold and were drowned.

In this issue will be found the advertisement of the grand tea party at Kinkora, which takes place on Thursday the 27th inst. This tea party has the highest distinction of being the first to be held in this Province since the advent of the twentieth century, and that of itself should invest it with a novelty and importance sufficient to attract to it an unprecedentedly large number of visitors. Apart from this extraordinary and unusual feature the natural beauty of the locality will certainly be a drawing card. Then again the preparations that are making for the entertainment and amusement of all visitors are such as to ensure a very large attendance. Finally the worthy object, the completion of the magnificent new church, and the consideration that Kinkora is famous as a successful tea ground should not, and assuredly will not, be lost sight of. Don't forget the date; read the advertisement.

On Sunday last, the congregation of St. Dunstan's Cathedral made the jubilee visits to the church in procession, according to the prescribed regulations. Immediately after High Mass, the congregation, preceded by the cross-bearer, altar boys and clergy, left the church by the main entrance and formed in procession on Great George Street. Rev. Dr. Morrison led the march and Rev. Dr. Monaghan regulated the procession. The procession moved down Bachelor Street; turned off at the rear of the church and crossed to Sydney Street, then moved up Sydney Street to Great George and filed into the church by the main entrance. When all were in the church once more, Rev. Dr. Morrison recited the requisite prayers. All moved out again and reformed in procession going over the same route as before. Four visits were made in this way at that time. Again, at three o'clock in the afternoon, four additional visits were made in the same solemn manner. The attendance was immensely large.

He studied law and was called to the bar in 1865. He was elected to the Legislature in 1873 for South Brant, and held one seat continuously until his retirement from political life. He entered the Mowat Government in 1877 as Provincial Secretary and was Sir Oliver Mowat's right hand man until he became Premier in 1896 and Mr. Hardy became Premier. Last year he retired owing to failing health.

THE house of Mr. Angus McBeth, of Grandview, King's County, was flagged Wednesday by the health officer, as the result of a letter received by the Lieut. Governor from the Board of Health Secretary at Quincy, Mass., who stated that Daniel McBeth, son of Angus McBeth, and his sister while on their way home to P. E. Island had been in contact with a small-pox contagion. Another version of the story is that McBeth was on his way home with his brother Kenneth and that Kenneth caught the disease from a companion who was with them, and who had only recently recovered from small-pox. Kenneth, therefore, had to remain in Quincy, while Daniel, some home alone. However it may be, there is small probability of the disease breaking out here, as it is about a month since the man left Quincy.

GRAND Tea Party! At Kinkora ON JUNE 27th, 1901.

The first Tea of the season; the first tea of the century and probably the last at that favorite tea resort, Kinkora.

The new Church now almost completed, is one of the handsomest edifices in the Province. Come and inspect it and bear us out in what we say.

The Greatest SUMMER ATTRACTION

—WILL BE THE— Mammoth Tea Party

—HELD— AT TRACADIE, Monday, July 8th.

The Parishioners of St. Bonaventure's Church, Tracadie, are making a united effort, and will leave nothing undone to make their Tea Party of Monday, July 8th, a great success.

The proceeds of this great demonstration will go towards the completion of their beautiful new church. A beautiful location for holding the tea has been selected, only a few minutes walk from Tracadie Station.

Tracadie, about ten (10) miles from Charlottetown, has many attractions for all who wish to spend a pleasant day and help a good cause. Driving from the city you pass through one of the finest farming sections of the Province. A beautiful level country, comfortable farm houses, large rich and well cultivated fields meet the gaze on every side, while ever and anon the waters of the Hillsborough river, appearing at little distances, lend enchantment to the view, and the placid waters of Tracadie Bay are within easy reach. This is truly an ideal spot to spend a pleasant day.

Dinner and Tea Tables supplied with everything of the best, and presided over by the ladies of the parish, will be spread in the old church (St. Bonaventure's Hall). Well supplied Refreshment Saloons, Ice Cream Saloons, Dancing Booths, Swings, Bowling Alleys and many novel amusements will be provided. In a word, everything will be done to make Monday, July 8th, a day of pleasure and amusement.

A special train will leave Charlottetown for Tracadie at 9:30 local time, stopping at all intermediate stations, will arrive at Tracadie at 10:30. A special train will also leave Mount Stewart for Tracadie at 10:45 local time, arriving at Tracadie at 11:15.

These special trains will return same evening, leaving Tracadie for Mount Stewart at 5:30 p. m., and for Charlottetown at 6:30 p. m. local time.

Following are the railway fares: From Charlottetown to Tracadie, good for regular return by special 45c

Blandine of Betharram.

BY J. M. CAVE.

(American Messenger of the Sacred Heart.)

"Surely her angel sees the Father face to face," thinks Sister Noella, as the little girl enters noiselessly and kneels once more at the foot of the bed.

"Sister Christmas!" How the faintly whispered words thrilled the nun's heart!

"Dear Margaret!" A tender caress, a few drops of cordial, and a finger on the lips as warning not to speak.

"What is it, dear Margaret?" "I see!" The large, dark eyes were closed; under their heavy lids lay a mist, like tears.

"Are you sure, dear Margaret?" "O, I see at last!" Still the lids were not lifted and the mist was thickening.

"What do you see, my dear?" "I see myself." A pause, and "Oh God, what a sight."

"The cry of pain, though weak as that of an infant, wrung the nun's heart."

"Margaret, dear Margaret, listen to me, or rather to the voice of one speaking through me. Look not upon yourself, you are not your own."

"My poor friend, listen to me! He is near you. He has spared you life for this alone."

Blandine is once more on the sunny hillside. She has been gathering sweet flowers for the convent chapel. She has her apron full of bright blossoms...

"What a lovely child!" thought the young man, "so simple and so modest. Just like a wild bird, he added, seeing her lightly speeding, flower laden, down the green slope."

"Ab, it is you, cousin, said Father St. Etienne, as he hurried by the path. 'I met your messenger, who told me that 'Monsieur St. John of the Cross' was in haste to see me.'"

"Oh indeed, are you quite sure?" Blandine was too innocent to remark the amused tone of the speaker's voice; she answered simply, "O yes, sir, quite sure."

"And not Germaine of Pibrach, or Genevieve of Nanterre?" "O no indeed, sir! I am only Blandine—of Betharram," she added, as if this were an indispensable adjunct.

The gentleman smiled in spite of himself, and the smile was so pleasant, the stranger's countenance so agreeable, that Blandine smiled back and was going on her way when the gentleman spoke again.

"Well, perhaps Blandine of Betharram could give me the information I seek, as well as Germaine of Pibrach, were she here."

Blandine did not understand the bantering tone, but she waited modestly and patiently for explanation.

"Is this the chapel of Louis XVI, the expiatory chapel, do you know?" "Yes, sir, this is the chapel visitors stop longest at."

"The gentleman looked at his watch. 'It's ten o'clock. Do you know Father St. Etienne?'" "Yes, sir."

"He was to have met me here at this hour. I am in haste. Where is the Father to be found about this time?"

"Perhaps in the chapel, sir, or at the residence. I can go and ask." "I have asked at both places. Some one suggested that I might find him here."

"I think I can find him, sir. He may be at the Villa with Sister Superior and the sick lady. You can see the house from here, sir. Just between the trees, there!"

"Ah, I see. Is there a shorter road in that direction?" "Just this broad path is the nearest, sir. I am going there, I live there—I can easily show you, sir."

"Well, very well!" If you are going there it will be easy for you, and easy for me if you will take a message for me. Can you remember a message, Blandine?"

St. John of the Cross," she exclaimed. "He was St. Teresa's saint. Sister Superior told us about him the other day. I will hurry, sir." She was starting off, when she felt the stranger trying to slip something into her hand—she eluded him, and was out of hearing in a moment.

"What a lovely child!" thought the young man, "so simple and so modest. Just like a wild bird, he added, seeing her lightly speeding, flower laden, down the green slope."

"Ab, it is you, cousin, said Father St. Etienne, as he hurried by the path. 'I met your messenger, who told me that 'Monsieur St. John of the Cross' was in haste to see me.'" the long night hours and the hours of daylight that were dark as night to her, she pondered over the question. Still, she deferred to make peace with God, though she admitted to herself that only in that peace could she ever be happy.

"Oh indeed, are you quite sure?" Blandine was too innocent to remark the amused tone of the speaker's voice; she answered simply, "O yes, sir, quite sure."

"And not Germaine of Pibrach, or Genevieve of Nanterre?" "O no indeed, sir! I am only Blandine—of Betharram," she added, as if this were an indispensable adjunct.

"Dear Sister Christmas," Margaret is saying to the nun, "you are very good. Yet, rather let me sink into the depths of my own wretchedness, misery and nothingness. Strike me still lower, for I see myself, and surely there can be no other abyss as deep and dark."

"To sink into the depths of our nothingness is well, dear Margaret, Father Faber tells us to do this, but also to remember while sinking, to have Jesus with us. To love Jesus while sinking, and keep our eyes fixed upon Him. Try to forget yourself. Here, take this. It is something tangible, something to rivet your thoughts upon. The one thing in which man can and must glory."

"Does the doctor give any hope?" asked Margaret after a long sigh, and a pause in which, though she did not reject the sacred symbol, neither did she venerate or clasp it. It lay in her hand neither accepted nor rejected.

"He says the fever is well over, and all must depend upon your nurse as to your health. You must get strong before seeking special treatment for your sight."

"Does he say nothing positive—nothing encouraging?" "He is not a specialist, you are aware, dear Margaret, and therefore could not pronounce any opinion. There is no specialist nearer than Bordeaux. Get strong speedily, then we will leave nothing undone for our good benefactress, be assured."

"Your poor benefactress! How will she ever repay the debts contracted during this long illness?" "She paid them in advance, remember that, dear friend, and in all the years to come, remember that we still consider ourselves your debtors."

"How good you are, dear Sister Christmas. And yet it is your voice, and not your words, though they are sweet and precious, that strikes a chord in my memory at this moment, as on that dreadful night, that black night, that has no day." Margaret covered her face with her hands for a few minutes, but recovered herself and went on. "It was as if a voice spoke to me from another world in tones that I had heard in my youth. Fever and anguish made me forget it—it comes again to-day—speak, Sister, I would fain hear it once more."

Sister Noella knelt beside the couch. G, if she only dared to speak! But the pallid face warned her that the least emotion might undo the labor of long nights and anxious days. So, choking back the feelings that were striving for the mastery, even in her strong spirit, she said in a low and unnatural voice, "Let us say the Lord's prayer together."

"It escapes me now," said Margaret. She did not guess that the voice was purposely changed to deceive her ear. Sister Noella could not bear to arouse memories, however sweet, least the feeble frame should be shaken beyond its power of endurance. But in her clear eyes there shone a light that looked like hope, a light that, perhaps, is the reflection of a star shining in the distance.

Days passed into weeks. Strength returned very slowly to Margaret. For a while the hope lingered in her breast, that with strength would come some gleam of light. But no, all remained dark and melancholy began to take a strong hold upon her. "What was she to do?" she asked herself. In spite of the reiterated assurance that the community would ever remain her doctors, she felt her poverty keenly. Little or nothing in her purse. The house and ground tacitly given to the grey nuns. Tacitly meant to her solemnly, for she would not retract or break her word, even to herself. What had been given had been given, and could never again be hers. She was, therefore, a beggar. What then remained? In

A LARGE BOTTLE, 25c.

NINE BOILS. FOUR RUNNING SORES.

The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont. Some time ago my blood got out of order and nine large boils appeared on my neck, besides numerous small ones on my shoulders and arms. Four running sores appeared on my foot and leg and I was in a terrible state. A friend advised Burdock Blood Bitters, so I procured three bottles. After finishing the first bottle the boils started to disappear and the sores to heal up. After taking the third bottle there was not a boil or sore to be seen. Besides this, the headaches from which I suffered left me and I improved so much that I am now strong and robust again. Yours truly, Miss MAGGIE WORTHINGTON, Feb. 3rd, 1901. Galespie, Ont.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Fishin' Trout.

Oh! it's funny sorter work— Fishin' trout, An' yer jest gottar min' what Yer about. Yer must keep back outer sight Not ter give the fish a fright; All the time ye air a fishin', Yer must keep in one pershishun, Keep yer line a-gently awishin', An' keep wishin', wishin', wishin', That they'll bite.

If the water's pretty deep Let down low; If a trout's meanderin' round, Work up slow; If he gobbles up yer bait, There is no more time ter wait,— Don't yer show the least emotion When he takes this little notion To do honor to your potion; Give your rod a sudden motion, Land him—"nate!" —John J. Enman in P. E. Island Magazine.

Life.

The poet's exclamation: "O Life! I feel thee bounding in my veins," is a joyous one. Persons that can rarely or never make it, in honesty to themselves, are among the most unfortunate. They do not live, but exist; for to live implies more than to be. To live is to be well and strong—to arise a feeling equal to the ordinary duties of the day, and to retire not overcome by them—to feel life bounding in the veins. A medicine that has made thousands of people, men and women, well and strong, has accomplished a great work, bestowing the richest blessings, and that medicine is Hood's Sarsaparilla. The weak, run-down, or debilitated, from any cause, should not fail to take it. It builds up the whole system, changes existence into life, and makes life more abundant. We are glad to say these words in its favor to the readers of our columns.

Dear Sis.—

Within the past year I know of three fatty tumors on the head having been removed by the application of MINARD'S LINIMENT without any surgical operation, and there is no indication of a return.
