The Girl of the Cloisters

CHAPTER III.
A GIRL'S SONG.
"Good-night," he said, pressing the soft, white fingers, "good-night. Tomorrow! I shall come to-morrow morning to know—shall I ask him now?" looking beyond her into the room.

She flushed slightly, some true instinct telling her that it would be wiser to ask for herself.

"No—I will ask. Good-night," and drawing her hand, which for some unexplained reason he had held all this while, she turned and left him.

He stood for a moment looking up at the empty window, then his eye caught the rose that she had put down on the sill to shake hands with him.

He seized it as if he were famishing, and roses were good to eat, and—as we have no, or say few, pockets in our dress clothes nowadays, he put it gently under his waistcoat, where it made a deep red stain upon his snowy shirt front.

As he walked slowly and reluctantly away, he looked up at the sky.

"Our fate!" he murmured. "I wonder what it is! 'Ill-luck,' she said. Well, I shouldn't care so that we shared it together. Now, why didn't I say that? I always think of all my good things when it is too late to say them! And yet I'm glad I didn't!

Every moment I feel that my stupid blundering tongue will slip out something that will—will frighten her. If I did I should see her no more! No, no, she wouldn't understand the fine talk of London drawing-rooms. She—ah!" he paused suddenly.

"There is another star; whose fate is that, I wonder! Mine alone? Good or evil? What nonsense—and yet it sounded true when she said it! But I'd swear black was white and believe it, too, if she said so! Yes, I'm glad I came—I'm glad I'm going to stay!" and as he strolled along he put his hand in his waistcoat, found the rose, and held it against his heart.

Are there no more omens? Have signs and wonders, which used in the old days to be so useful, entirely disappeared and vanished?

I'm afraid they have, with a great many other good things we used to believe in. But if they still existed, the star Lela Temple and Lord Edgar watched together should have fallen into a London drawing-room and rolled ed at the foot of a tall, dark young man who leaned against the wall watching the dangers, for if there existed an evil fate for them, this man was it, and his name was Clifford Revel.

CHAPTER IV.
AT THE DANCE.
AT the moment Lord Edgar and Lela Temple were standing at the open window at the Abbey—very much like Romeo and Juliet, if they had but thought of it—Clifford Revel was leaning against the wall of Mrs. Drayton's dining-room in Elton Square, Mayfair.

Mrs. Drayton, and Mrs. Drayton's house, and more especially Mrs. Drayton's daughter, were well known in the world of fashion. Who Mrs. Drayton might be, society did not know, and did not, now, very much care, though it had, at one time, been both curious and suspicious; but that was before a certain prince, who rules society as despotically as the Emperor or Alexander does all the Russians, had, at a certain ball, asked, with his own royal lips, to be introduced to "that beautiful creature in the amber satin." That beautiful creature was Mrs. Drayton's daughter, and her fame and fortune were made, her position established from that moment. People no longer cared to ask whether Mrs. Drayton was a widow, and, if so, who and what her husband had been; but they made haste to send her cards for their balls and dinners and at homes, and so helped to keep the ball rolling which the august prince had so amiably started.

To-night was one of Mrs. Drayton's "at homes," and the cards which admitted her to the magic word "dancing" in one corner, and "small and early" in the other; in a word, it was a special night, and the small rooms for the houses in Elton Square were not mansions, were filling with the very best people, and the very best only.

They were not filled yet, and guests were still arriving, and Mrs. Drayton still stood at the door, with her hand apparently extended like a wax figure, to greet each arrival with the meaningless shake and the meaningless smile which society prescribes for the occasion.

Beside her stood Edith Drayton. It was difficult, it was impossible, to give a portrait of Lela Temple in her simple cream dress; it is not so difficult, it is just possible to convey some idea of Edith Drayton. She was tall, but not too tall, exquisitely formed, as graceful as a leopard; one moment reposeful and statuesque, the next lithe and alert, yet never spasmodic or impulsive. She was dark, decidedly dark, her hair almost of a raven black and of great wealth; her eyes were dark also, of that peculiar darkness which one is accustomed to attribute to a foreigner; they were not large—that was the one great fault of her face—and they were somewhat hard, though this defect she had learned to conceal or subdue by a sudden lowering of the beautiful lids, which made the eyes, half seen beneath them, look soft and emotional. Above these eyes—which never roved about—were a pair of delicate, dark brows, which met above the long lashes which, when the lids were lowered, swept the pale cheek like a fringe of fairy silk. The mouth was, as the poet says, "faultlessly faultless;" it was perfect, and yet—there were some who would have preferred that it should have been larger; that it should have been sometimes less coldly perfect, and as a wit had remarked, nearer a tear than a smile.

But, criticism as one would, the fact remained that Edith Drayton was one of the most beautiful girls in London, and that the leader of society had set his sign-manual to the verdict, and therefore settled the question beyond dispute.

To-night she was dressed in silk grenadine, with a dash of vivid crimson about it; a diamond pendant rose and fell upon her white neck, and on her arm a diamond serpent glittered like a circle of living fire.

There were many beautiful women in the room, some whose photographs were displayed in the shop windows, but there was not one but paled before the dark splendor of Edith Drayton, who had come with her mother from none knew whence.

Clifford Revel leaned against the wall and looked at her, watched her. Of him we shall hear a very fair account if we listen to the two men who are at this moment ascending the stairs and entering the room. They are both well-known characters; the one is Lord Combermere, the other one of the great generals whose name has been on everybody's lips for the last six months.

"What a splendid girl—or rather a woman, Comby!" says General Rothsay, as they make their bow and receive the hand-shake and regulation smile. "Who is she?"

Lord Combermere smiled behind his closed opera hat.

"Fancy you asking that!" he says. "Why, that is the daughter of the mistress of the house!"

"Well, my dear fellow, how should I know? You brought me here, you know!" said the general, laughing.

"Yes, yes, I forgot! And you've been away for some months, haven't you? That accounts for it. And it's all been done in less than nine months. I give you my word six months ago none of us had heard of Mrs. Drayton and her daughter. Of course, she was in town, in this house, but barring rumors that she was the widow of a man who had made his money in malt, or banking, or patent medicines, we knew nothing of her. Then suddenly she became the fashion; it was her daughter who did it."

"She is beautiful enough to effect anything!" said General Rothsay, putting up his glasses to assist the keen gray eyes which had borne the hot sands of the desert and the glare of artillery.

"Just so! My face is my fortune, sir, she said," continued Lord Combermere, nodding and smiling to acquaintances as he spoke. "It was her beauty did it, Rothsay. All in a minute, too! And now all the world lies at her feet; even your humble servant, and the greatest general of the day."

The greatest general of the day smiled and looked round the room curiously. He had been absent nine months, and nine months make a difference at the rate the world spins along nowadays.

"Who is that fellow leaning against the wall?" he asked, presently.

Lord Combermere stuck his eye-glass in his eye and commenced a voyage of inspection.

"Oh, do you mean that tall, good-looking fellow near the door, looking at the beauty?"

"Yes," remarked the general. "He is a handsome man; clean-cut face; he should be somebody, I should think."

Lord Combermere smiled.

"Poor Revel! He is nobody. He might be a somebody if there was not a young Lord Edgar Fane. He—Clifford Revel—is next but one to the marquise, you know. But he might as well be next but one hundred. Young Edgar Fane is as young as he is, and likely to outlive him—worse luck for Revel!"

"Edgar—Fane," mused the general; "why that's the young fellow who nearly lost his life on the Matterhorn, isn't it?"

Lord Combermere laughed.

"I dare say, he is always up to some mad trick or other. Got himself smashed up in a steep-chase a little while ago. Fine young fellow; regular Apollo Belvidere, don't you know; but wild, frightfully wild!"

"I think I remember him," said General Rothsay; "one of my boys was at Eton with him. He was quite best ear there, and a good man all round, too. And he stands between this Clifford—didn't you say Clifford—Revel and the title?"

"Yes!" assented Lord Combermere. "So, unless young Lord Edgar breaks his neck, he doesn't stand much chance."

"It's a fine estate, isn't it?" remarked the general, watching the dancers.

"Magnificent. One of the best in England. The best, perhaps. And the present marquis—old Farintosh, I mean—doesn't live up to half his income. Nobody ever sees him. He used to go the pace like a steam engine one time, but he has dropped off the line long ago and become a misanthrope; hates everybody, don't you know, himself included."

General Rothsay laughed, then he turned his eyes against the wall and surveyed him carefully.

"Why does he stick there?" he asked—"this Clifford Revel, I mean."

Lord Combermere shrugged his shoulders.

"Goodness knows! He's a strange fellow! It's not at all unlikely that he will stick there, as you call it, for the rest of the evening; and yet he is one of the best dancers of the day. They say that he's sweet upon the beauty—Edith Drayton, I mean—but I don't know."

Then the two gossips parted. Lord Combermere joined the waiters, and somebody discovered the great general and bore him away to be worshipped as the lion that he was.

Meanwhile Clifford Revel still leaned against the wall as if he had been invited to occupy that position, and to do nothing else.

If he had been somebody, if he had been worth disturbing, the many manoeuvring mammas would have dislodged him hours ago, but he was, as Lord Combermere had put it, nobody, and the mothers with marriageable daughters knew him to be detrimental, and left him alone.

The dance went on; twelve o'clock had passed and still he leaned there, absolutely at his ease, his dark, piercing eyes taking in everything, though apparently not seeing anything, when Edith Drayton was wafted near him. She was dancing with a stout old earl, old enough to be her father, and who knew as much about dancing as the Polar bear at the Zoo, to which Lord Edgar was so anxious to take Lela Temple, and as they plumped and grated near the motionless figure against the wall, Edith Drayton tore the grenadine; at any rate she stopped short and caught up its flounces with an exclamation.

"I've torn my dress, Lord Cavendish!" she said, pitiously.

"Eh? What?" panted the earl.

"Torn your dress? What's to be done? Eh?"

"I must get a pin!" she said, with a smile. "Have you got one?"

"No," he said; "but I'll get one."

"Thanks," she said; then the moment he had walked off she turned to Clifford Revel.

"Why do you not dance, Mr. Revel?" she said. "You have no dress to tear."

Forty Years in The Public Service—the Evening Telegram

Commer

between W
Canada

Will the British West Indies be with Canada? Will the union be commuted, be a political or commercial one? Will Canada benefit such a union? Such are the questions that the Montrealers who are for the West Indian news in the papers are asking themselves down in the West Indies. He has a desire for very much closer relations with Canada is made these days.

B. Macaulay, president of the Life Assurance Company and Canadian-West Indian League, probably knows more about the situation than any other man in Montreal. Macaulay has given years to the study of the subject, and has been a free trader between Canada and the British West Indies. He has made extended trips to the islands. He has discussed the subject of a commercial union with statesmen in Canada and of the islands, and has never wavered in his advocacy.

Political union, remember," he said, with emphasis to The Star this morning while discussing in his office the West Indian question. "No political union, I believe that will be a mistake on account of the great distance of the islands from Canada. The mutual lack of knowledge of either's needs, it would be unwise either should attempt to control government of the other. The that a Canadian federal election would turn on the vote of the British Indies would be equally as ridiculous as the controlling of West Indian affairs by a Canadian majority.

Commercial Union Needed.
It is a commercial union that we want," continued Mr. Macaulay. He reiterated his words: "We need commercial union with the British West Indies. We need it. They need it. It sides have everything to gain, nothing to lose. We gain a new market for our products, and these the days when the need of markets for our goods is so obvious that engaging the attention of every Canadian statesman. In return we get the food products of the West Indies—sugar, tropical fruits, cocoa, etc. Many of these products are to us now through American shipping houses."

He pulled down an atlas from a shelf and opened it at a map of Central America and the West Indies. "The islands fall naturally into two groups," he said. He laid his pencil delicately on the map to show the dividing line between the groups. The line lay across the Island of Porto with this Eastern group, which includes St. Kitts, St. Vincent, Grenada, Dominica, Barbadoes, Trinidad, and which is associated British Guiana on the mainland, Canada alone has a trade agreement involving 20 per cent. preferential tariff. It is their great product, but they do supply Canada with coffee, cocoa and a host of other tropical products. He went on to speak of difficulties the "sugar" islands and British Guiana would have had in getting their sugar before the war had not been for the preference granted them by Canada. European sugar was going freely into England and was consequently cutting into the West Indian trade. "The war had brought an artificial prosperity to the West Indies, but with coming of normal conditions the Indies were beginning to look for a further extension of trade necessary to their prosperity. The western group includes Jamaica

Scanty Legislation.

The eighth session of the twenty-third General Assembly of Newfoundland, which opens at 3 o'clock this afternoon, is not likely to be a lengthy one, and consequently the legislation to be enacted will be equally scanty, depending entirely on the decision as to whether the Government will face defeat at the polls next month or stave off the day of disaster until the fall, thereby getting the benefits accruing from a few extra months of power.

There is no doubt that little, if any, constructive legislation will be attempted, the reply of the Prime Minister to the Newfoundland Industrial Workers' Association, which waited upon him relative to the establishment of a bureau of labor, being evidence of this.

Many districts remain, as they were at last year's session, unrepresented. The Government had not the courage to open up and test either vacant constituency, and though much boasting was indulged in as to their strength and popularity, they were sorely afraid to essay the attempt. Nine seats in the House remain unoccupied. The Government strength at full muster is twenty-one, of which thirteen are in possession of annual salaries. The Opposition numbers six, providing the senior member for Harbor Grace takes his seat, which at last session was unfiled, and we may be sure of one thing, and that is there will be no lack of questions for the departmental heads to answer.

The searchlight of enquiry will be turned on many acts of the Government, and some exceedingly interesting developments may be expected. No opportunity will be given to "burke" the answers, and sins of omission and commission will alike be exposed.

Until the delivery and publication of the Address from the Throne, it is not possible to give an idea of the precise legislation which the Government propose to enact, other than the ordinary routine measures, but we would suggest to everybody the advisability of watching closely every move made by the party to the left of the Speaker at the present session. It is a far cry from Roumania to Newfoundland and yet there are some sinister rumours afloat that our finances may become mixed up with those of that unsettled and poorly governed State. For a Government which produces precedents of various kinds for anything and everything that is done, it will not be difficult to trot out another, should there be a desire to establish financial relations, for the protection of certain interests, between the bankrupt Government of Roumania and that of Newfoundland, by which arrangement tottering fortunes could be bolstered up at the expense of the taxpayers of the Dominion. We shall "wait and see."

It is also currently reported that there will be an all round increase in Customs duty on imports, but should the Government decide to appeal to the country within the next few weeks, nothing whatever will be said about this during the short session of the Assembly. Millions of dollars for public works cannot be spent, under present conditions, without piling extra taxes on the consumers. The present import tariff bears heavily enough on the people. In addition there is the export, stamp, income and profits tax, all of which come indirectly from the pockets of the fishermen and laborers. A complete revision of the whole of our revenue producing services is most necessary, and the taxes thereof adjusted to bear equitably. The necessities of life pay all that they can stand. To increase their cost to the consumer should, and would, we doubt not, bring about a general protest. Hands off the tariff! unless it be to lower the rates and thus make them less heavy to be shouldered that have to bear the burden.

We advise the people of Newfoundland that the situation is critical. Let them closely and carefully watch the move on the political board when the pawns are placed in position by the master hand, the first arrangement of the pieces being made to-day.

WEDNESDAY, April 2, 1919.
Eczema is well known to be very difficult to treat successfully, and the number of so-called specifics for this condition is very great, but there is no certain cure. But cure is sometimes possible, and relief is almost certain, by the judicious use of Zylex Ointment. Zylex is a highly medicated preparation specially designed for skin troubles, and its curative results have been almost unbelievable. At any rate, no case of eczema, salt rheum, or psoriasis should be given up as a "hard job" until an honest trial of Zylex has been made. At both our stores. 50c a box.

The Majestic.

To-night's show at the Majestic will feature a big 5-act play, entitled "The Price," featuring Helen Ware, and conducted by George Broadhurst. "The Price" is a splendid social triumph film, and its clever portrayal of tragedy and suspense will draw forth the praise of all who witness it. An artist fitted to one who is the exact opposite in character and nature, meets and loves one who can sympathize with his temperamental feelings. The love is returned, but marriage, of course, is impossible under the circumstances. On top of this disappointment comes the news that his newly found friend has married. Unable to stand the artist succumbs. His wife, finding a diary kept by her late husband, sees how things lay, and determines to do something on the one whom she supposed to have caused all the trouble. What follows is full of intensely dramatic situations, the final readjustment following in good order. The fourth episode of "Zudora" will be shown to-night also.

Sydney Girls

GIVE R. N. R.'S A CONCERT.
An entertainment for the special benefit of the Newfoundland sailors who were in Sydney, C.B. waiting passage home, was staged at the Y.M.C.A. on Wednesday evening by the Sydney Business Girls' Club and a committee composed of Mrs. Allan Jost, Mrs. E. Cunningham and Mrs. J. R. McKimmie from the Ladies' Auxiliary to the "Y." An excellent program was arranged in record time, and the young ladies furnished an abundance of delectable sandwiches and cakes. The coffee, too, was pronounced delicious by all. The program, which was greatly enjoyed, as evidenced by the spontaneous applause and requests for numbers to be repeated, was all follows: Selection by the Christ Church Boys' Orchestra; vocal solo, Miss Nina Richardson; vocal solo, Miss Maude Williams; selection by orchestra; solo, James Calder; reading, Miss Josephine Fraser; vocal solo, C. O. Walsh; selection by orchestra, vocal solo (by request) Mrs. C. O. Walsh; vocal solo, Miss Nina Richardson.—Sydney Record, Mar. 27.

Diana Arrives.

The S. S. Diana, the second of the sealing fleet to return, steamed into port early this morning and anchored in quarantine grounds. She carries for 2,800 seals comprised of old and young. She pulled into Batrd's wharf early in the day and Dr. Campbell sent five of the sick that were on board, to the Fever Hospital. The sufferers of "flu" removed were Messrs. Manning, Whitten and three Molloy, all of Torbay. Only one of the number had to be removed from the ship on a stretcher, the others walked ashore. The ship was placed under quarantine. There were others of the crew slightly affected but these are remaining on the ship. The crew report a very hard spring, and dense fog prevailed during most of the time.

Shipping Notes.

DELAY DANGEROUS.
PARIS, April 1.
That is construed a warning that world could not long continue further delay in the adjustment of peace was delivered to the Allied and military representatives of the associated powers by Premier Wilson yesterday. It is learned that at a late hour on Monday he during the Conference taking place in Premier Clemenceau's room, the French War Office, and solemnly assured the conference of his belief that they would do all in their power to bring together the loose ends in the debate in an effort to secure peace terms upon which a treaty might be presented to Germany.

GERMANS CONCENTRATING LARGE FORCES.
PARIS, April 1.
The Germans are concentrating large forces in Eastern Prussia, under command of Field Marshal Von Ludendorff, according to the Paris edition of the New York Herald. The German forces are being gathered in Ludendorff and Thorn in order to delect the railway line from Danzig to Posen.

ITALY'S FRONTIER QUESTION.
PARIS, April 1.
Settlement of Italy's frontier question, contemporaneously with that of the Balkans, is insisted upon to-day by Premier Orlando at a conference of President Wilson, just before council of four convened to discuss the Italian frontier question.

BOLSHEVIKS REFUSED.
ARCHANGEL, April 1.
Bolshevik troops after a heavy bombardment Sunday of the Allied positions on the railway front and of Odozerskaja, attacked in the morning. The attack was repulsed completely by the Allied fire. The Russian Bolsheviks were met by their machine gun fire while the Allied artillery dispersed various groups of the enemy.

DELAY DANGEROUS.

PARIS, April 1. — That is construed a warning that the world could not long countenance further delay in the adjustment of peace terms was delivered to the Allied and military representatives of the associated powers by President Wilson yesterday. It is learned that at a late hour on Monday he was during the Conference taking place in Premier Clemenceau's room, the French War Office, and solemnly assured the conference of his belief that they would do all in their power to bring together the loose ends of the peace terms upon which a day might be presented to Germany.

Mail says, does not intend to return to England before the questions are adjusted in spite of his desire to attend the closing meeting of the British Labor Conference.

NOT TOO NEAR PARIS.

LONDON, April 1. — The preliminary peace treaty will not be submitted to the German delegates at Versailles, according to the latest information received here from French sources. The treaty, it is said, will be handed to the Germans at some town further from Paris as has been the rule with other conventions since the armistice.

DRIFTING STEAMER PICKED UP.

HALIFAX, N.S., April 1. — The American steamer Jason arrived here this morning in tow of the American steamer Raymano, which picked her up at sea. The Jason, which was owned in New York and was bound from that port to Harre, broke her rudder post in heavy weather.

A FOOL STORY.

PARIS, April 1. — (By the A.P.)—Somebody started a story this morning that Colonel E. M. House had announced that the peace treaty had been signed. The report spread rapidly all over Paris, and telephone wires to the American headquarters became hot with inquiries as to the truth of the rumor. It did not take long, however, for inquiries to reach the character of the report when they were reminded that to-day was April 1st.

REPORT NOT TRUE.

LONDON, April 1. — Regarding a report published in the morning newspapers that the blockade of the Central Powers had been raised generally last week, the blockade department of the Foreign Office explains that the blockade was lifted from German-Austria, but not Hungary.

MARSHAL FOCH OFF FOR SPA.

PARIS, April 1. — Marshal Foch will leave Paris to-night for Spa to meet Matthias Erzberger to discuss with him the Allied demand that Polish troops be permitted to use the port of Danzig. The Marshal has received full powers to negotiate with the German representatives. He will be in constant communication with the Council of Four.

KAROLYI RESPONSIBLE.

PARIS, April 1. — Documents in possession of the French and Roumanian Governments, the newspapers say, prove that the advent of the Communist regime in Hungary, was due in a great part to a manoeuvre of Count Karolyi in collaboration with the German Government. The movement was aimed directly at the Allied Powers, it is added.

Nfld. Scotch

Cured Herring.

New stocks of Newfoundland Scotch cured herring, received in New York within the past fortnight, show no particular improvement in quality over the supplies from the source which come in to market earlier in the season. Indeed the same disappointments were experienced with the latest arrivals. It is to be noted, however, that the quality of certain lots was better than the usual run of Newfoundland Scotch cured herring of the fall pack of 1918. The others were for the most part, of variable quality and among them were inferior goods. The stocks for the season may be fairly said to be inferior as compared with the same herring received last year and in preceding years. That prices would decline, of course, might have been expected. Since there is no demand and the advantage is to the buyers, very naturally the trade has become more discriminating. Jobbers when they buy at all demand a selection on their inspection. Most sellers willingly accede to this. Sales reported within the past few weeks have been few, but prices have fluctuated with almost every offering. Some are selling at $24 and $25, while other holders of substantial quantities are asking from $26 to $28. Small and poorly-selected fish are bringing less. — N. Y. Fishing Gazette, Mar. 22.

Proclamation of Peace With France

IN 1892. — It was on April 29, 1892, that a public proclamation of peace with France was made, and no doubt an account of the proceedings will be of interest just now. All persons in the procession mustered in the Stable Yard, St. James's Palace. The Herald and Pursuivants were in their proper habits, and preceded by the Sergeant-Drum-Major with his drums, and escorted, on either side by Horse Guards, they sallied forth and read aloud the proclamation in front of the Palace. A procession then formed, and moved solemnly towards Charing Cross, where another halt was made, and the proclamation read, the Herald looking towards Whitehall. Thence to Temple Bar—which, according to precedent, was shut, by the Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, and Civic Officials on the other side. The Minor Officer of Arms stepped out of the procession, between two trumpeters, and, preceded by two Horse Guards, rode up to the gates; after the trumpeters had sounded thrice, he knocked thereat with a cane. From the other side the City Marshal asked "Who comes there?" and the Herald replied "The Officers of Arms, who demand entrance into the City, to publish his Majesty's Proclamation of Peace." The gates being opened, he was admitted alone, and the gates were shut behind him. The City Marshal, preceded by his officers, conducted him to the Lord Mayor, to whom he showed his Majesty's warrant, which, his lordships having read, returned, and gave directions to the City Marshal to open the gates, who duly performed his mission, and notified the same to the Herald in the words, "Sir, the gates are opened." The Herald returned to his place, the procession entered the Bar, and, having halted, the proclamation was again read. The Lord Mayor, Sheriffs, etc., then joined the procession, the line of which was kept by different Volunteer Corps. The proclamation having been read a fourth time at Wood Street, they went on to the Exchange, read it there, and yet once again at Aldgate pump, after which they returned, and, halting at the Mansion House, broke up, the Herald going to their College at Doctors' Commons, the various troops to their proper destinations; and so ended a beautiful sight, which was witnessed by crowds of people, both in the streets and in the houses along the route. The illuminations at night eclipsed all previous occasions.—Ex.

The Newest Prophecy.

(London Times Correspondence.) New York—Dr. Thomas Addis Emmet, the nonagenarian grand-nephew of Robert Emmet, whose death occurred in New York recently, has left a will in which—after leaving his estate of £200,000 to his children, two of whom live in London and Oxford—he predicts that England is destined to become a province of Ireland. Dr. Emmet was a life-long collector of Irish relics and a prolific writer on Irish subjects. In his will he declares that God favoured Ireland above all other countries, but is punishing the Irish people for ceasing to use their native language. He bequeathed the following prophecy to the Irish people:— "Comparatively, England is in decrepitude and old age and is living on the wealth of other peoples, while Ireland, after her regeneration, will have yet to gain the vigour of youth, and in justice—England must some day become an Irish province. This belief is a family inheritance.

LONDON GOSSIP.

PEACE AND ITS CELEBRATION.

LONDON, March 17th, 1919. — In view of all the latest news from Paris, it may not seem altogether premature for the Leader of the House of Commons to be invited to announce suggestions regarding the methods for celebrating the conclusion of peace, and to promise to bear in mind the desirability of affording local authorities ample time for making adequate preparations. Even yet it is well not to be too sanguine, for, owing to the well-known confusion in Germany, it is not at all certain that a stable Government can be so constituted as to guarantee the execution of the terms to which the delegates may agree.

DANCING PARTIES IN HOUSES.

Despite servant difficulties and other handicaps, the bigger London houses are now giving an astonishing number of dances. A great many people who are called by the next-best people the best people do not go to the great balls in public halls nor to the big hotel dances, but only to these house dances, where the company usually numbers less than fifty. These affairs begin as a rule at eight and last till five in the morning. They begin with dinner and end with breakfast, usually with bacon and eggs. It is said of this once homey fare that bacon and eggs at breakfast now is just like having ortolans for supper in pre-war days. These dances are very simple, often with no flowers and one professional at the piano. The impressive thing, according to an old social observer, about these dancing parties is the enormous number of them and the way the same people dance with one another night after night. It is a curious development of social manners that two persons of different sex not specially attracted to one another except by a style of dancing, will not go to a dance if one of them cannot go.

OUR AMBASSADOR AT WASHINGTON.

TON. — The Prime Minister's idea of the essential qualification for a successor to Lord Reading as Ambassador at Washington is, first and foremost, business experience. But so far he has carried his point. The Washington office has always been regarded as one of the plums of the diplomatic service, and the proposal to break with tradition by the appointment of an "outsider" is not welcomed. Sir Eric Drummond, once Mr. Asquith's private secretary and now at the Foreign Office, is mentioned as the new Ambassador if the "business man" suggestion fails to mature.

THE BREAK-UP OF TURKEY.

Signor Tittoni has declared in the Italian Parliament that Italy is "only" to get the central districts of Asia Minor without the Plain of Cilicia and the Port of Adana. I learn on authority that he is not well informed. Neither Italy nor any other Ally is likely to become the occupying State in the homeland of the Turkish race, the uplands of Asia Minor that remain Turkish, and control will probably be limited to Allied supervision of the revenues and debt. If the Allies succeed in persuading America to become protector of Armenia—they strongly urge her to take the duty—then the Adana region will be added to the new State to give it a Mediterranean frontage. The opposite Syrian coast from Alexandretta to Tripoli will be the maritime frontage of the new Arab federation whose capital would be at Damascus. The Syrian coast south of Tripoli with the Lebanon hills and valleys will be French. Then comes the Zionist State of Palestine, Jewish, but with strict guarantees for the interests of other faiths. For instance, the Jews will not be permitted to buy out or remove the Mohammedan mosque which occupies the Temple site. Egypt will extend its eastern boundary to Gaza; but Egypt also has its troubles. The Nationalist movement is strong there just now, and I hear that the native Ministers have resigned because we will not relax the censorship and other military precautions.

CHELSEA ART STUDIOS.

Chelsea's painters' studios are once more fuller than they have been for four years. Anyone who strays into Chelsea can once more see long foreign cloaks and big black boots worn by young men who try, in spite of their improved and robust physique, to look as if they had never been to the war. The spring show of pictures is, of course, going to exhibit a good deal of war-painting, but artists now prefer not to paint the violent furious studies that were done during the war. In a way this is a pity, for it was the red-hot work by the worst of the realists which in ugly lines and hideous colors really showed the agony of the war. But the quiet studies of the war, the quiet studies of the young men are now painting from memory will be more easily comprehended and appreciated by the public. One sees in the studies a number of delicate sketches of ruined buildings which suggest that we shall have a revival of paintings of picturesque ruins such as were the vogue in the days of Turner.

STILL NO ROOM.

Before the war the Underground Railways of London placarded their stations with posters, calling the public to make use of their quick and comfortable service. Now they display an intimation in scarlet letters that some poor wretch of a would-be passenger was prosecuted and fined the other day for trying to enter an overcrowded train. This is presumably meant as a warning to the rest of us. But the puzzling thing is why the overcrowding should continue. Railwaymen and omnibus men are back from the Army, more buses have been put back into service, many of the conductresses have been released, and transport should be easier all round. Yet the trains and buses are usually filled with strap-hangers, even in the middle of the afternoon. The Government ought to take a special census of London. Judging by appearances, the population must have increased a million or so since 1914.

PROFESSIONAL GOLFERS' FUTURE.

The Professional Golfers' Association is engaged in active work, facing the problem of re-employment among golf professionals and assistants. A sub-committee has been formed to deal with the matter, consisting of such great players as Braid, Taylor, and Vardon, and a suitable list of men open to engagement has been drawn up, and is available for the information of any club applying for it. One of the earliest important professional golf competitions will be the "Victory" tournament, which has been arranged by the association. All the principal golf professionals and the tournament will have nothing in the nature of cash prizes attached to it, the professional golfers preferring to run it as a victory celebration competition. It will be played off on dates to be arranged later, but in any case before June 1st, and will be divided into eight sections, controlled by the Professional Golfers' Association.

THE HAIR IN SUMMER.

One should remember in getting ready for the summer outing there are no available shampoos existing in the woods that surround the wild mountain camp, and none inhabiting the haystacks of the remote country farm.

So, it behooves the woman who is spending her summer vacation in a remote place to master the art of shampooing her own hair. And as it is although it can be mastered easily with a little patience. In the first place, you must have all the desired ingredients for a good shampoo at hand. These include a suitable soap or shampoo mixture, plenty of hot and cold water, a spray for rinsing and plenty of suitable towels for drying.

To begin with, if you have dry hair, do not shampoo the hair until you have time to perform the "ritual" properly. A hasty shampoo is usually untidy, but it is dangerous. It is a clear, sunny day. Have plenty of old, soft towels, and use the means of warming them. Start by washing your brushes and combs. Soft, copious water, not hot, tepid, with perhaps a dash of ammonia or brax will be needed for this. Do not allow the brushes to soak long. Rub them together briskly in about two to three waters containing soap.

Now, if your hair is dry, use a shampoo mixture, as follows: Beat one raw egg with a pint of lukewarm water and one ounce of rose-water. When thoroughly beaten, add a little salt. Rub this into the scalp, a good way being to have some one pour water from a small-tipped pitcher while you rub it thoroughly into the scalp, as if you wanted to reach the hair roots. Then rinse the hair with clear water, all lukewarm, but do not rub the hair with towels. As soon as the bulk of the moisture has been absorbed by the hair, sit yourself in the sun, gently shaking the hair, thus drying by radiation and the sun's rays.

RUSSIA.

I had hoped that the Russian people would get down to work in the season after their long winter passes, and that the country's distress would be a thing of the past. But the trouble is not done; the death is flowing, there is the death is moving; never a grim showing underneath a warm sun. We can only hope that the death may be safe and sane, and that the demagogue and traitor have been hanged up and slain; when the people get the notion that there is a danger of a revolution and a danger of a revolution for old Trotsky and his crew is dripping in a drizzle of rain that land of woe; and our one hope is so; steps of some kind should be taken to relieve the forsaken; how to save the Russian people? I'll be figured if I can.

Intelligently used, the bread-crumbs is a great labor saver; otherwise it is only a trouble. When frying oysters, try putting a little baking powder in the cream which they are rolled.

Books as Seen Through German Spectacles.

The following article has been forwarded for publication by a British officer with the troops in Rhineland. It is the translation of a descriptive account written by one of the correspondents of the "Pflanzlicher Post," of Baden, relative to the British advance, and the officer who sends it suggests that "its unconscious humor will render it more interesting to the Scottish reader than to the Germans."

For a day long I have been standing on the hard-bitten citizens of England watching the passage of English troops on their way to Rhineland. I have seen sorrow in their hearts, and I have seen a determination to endure all for the sake of their beloved Fatherland. The soldiers of Malmédy have stood, hand, saluting the colours of their own flag!

That is more natural than that we should see, who are the most patient and scientific investigators, should, despite the hard and bitter accusation, a spectacle even as humiliating as the occupation of our beloved land by the troops of the Germans.

Some facts concerning the Scottish regiments of English infantry may be of interest to our readers, and I have made many inquiries into the matter. I was so much startled when the "kirk" of the bagpipes echoed through the streets, and these fierce, well-trained soldiers came marching in their ranks, and was not, like many good ladies of Malmédy, shocked at the bareness of legs, which is so common a spectacle.

"Facts" About the Scots.

There is now a very large number of our German people know that the Scottish regiments are not all Scotch, but there are a great many facts which they do not know about Scotland and her war-like people which perhaps the first to put on the map.

The Highland people are a Celtic race, distinct from the English. Their language is different, their manners and customs are altogether at variance with those of the languid southern English. In physiognomy they differ materially from their southern neighbors. The Scotch have red hair and blue eyes, and are of a sturdy, frugal people, the majority of whom are engaged in hunting the deer which abounds in many parts of Scotland and in fishing the rivers for salmon, trout, and on some parts of the coast, herring.

They are intensely religious, their form of worship being Lutheran, and the holiness of a Scottish Sunday is proverbial. On that day no trams run, all the work ceases, and the sound of the "kirk" bells (it will be observed that the Scottish language is akin to German, and that what is "kirk" in Scottish is "kirche" in German) rings throughout the land, and everywhere may be seen the pious people wending toward their meeting houses.

What a Bagpipe is.

Much has been written and spoken about the so-called bagpipes of Scotland, and it will be difficult to describe to a music-loving nation exactly what a bagpipe is. It consists of several pipes attached to a bladder, which is filled with wind by the player, and the so-called music emerges from a number of small, periscopical tubes which hang down the player's back.

The sound thus emitted is even more difficult to describe. If my good German reader can imagine a subdued shriek super-imposed upon a wailing moan, accompanying a bad tenor who is singing through his nose, he will get some idea of the terrible sound. Bagpipe bands have usually a large number of drummers to regulate the noise, but, even with these, the bagpipers, owing to their lusty lunge, are able to make themselves heard.

He had bought the pharmaceutical chemist to give him something with which he might kill moths, and the pharmaceutical chemist had supplied him with camphor-balls; but the next day he was back again, holding some of the fragments of the balls within his hand.

Upper-Cuts.

The first recognized rules for prize-fighting were compiled by the first English champion, about 1740. Old rules allowed one minute between each round. Afterwards this was altered to half a minute.

A "round" in the old days of pugilism lasted till one or both of the competitors were down.

Corners were chosen by tossing a coin, the winner selecting the one with the sun at his back.

Previous to 1833, powder was used to enable the hands to be clenched when the competitor was tired.

After the introduction of the Queensberry rules in 1860, no fights were allowed with bare knuckles. Gloves used nowadays for boxing matches are between four and six ounces in weight.

Jem Mace, although he earned some £40,000 boxing with his bare knuckles, died in poverty a few years ago.

Carpenters use twelve ounce gloves for practicing.

As a young boy Carpenter laboured in a coal mine for a shilling or two a week.

A first class boxer's expenses during training amount to about sixty pounds a week.

Eureka!

The class was very bored. It was a reading lesson, and the book was full of big words.

"Archimedes," read Jimmy James, "leapt from his bath shouting, Eureka! Eureka!"

The teacher stopped him.

"What does 'Eureka' mean?" she asked.

"No one knew.

"It means," she said, "I have found it!" Now what had Archimedes found?"

After a long moment Jimmy ventured hopefully:

"Please, miss, the soap."

The Origin of "Hogmanay."

I will not attempt in the space of this article to do more than touch upon Scottish customs, many of which bear a curious resemblance to those which are celebrated in German folk songs. Many sore hearts in Germany will be the sorer to know that the Scottish are not a truly Christian nation like ourselves. They do not celebrate Christmas as do other Christians, but reserve their festivities for a feast called "Hogmanay," which usually falls on New Year's Day.

"Hogmanay" is one of the heathen deities whom the Scotchlanders still worship, and resembles Thor and Woden in his convivial character.

On the whole the Scotch are an admirable people, although steeped in foolish superstitions, and still awaiting that uplift which only the German spirit could have given to the dark and benighted people of the world. That, alas, is now denied them, and I can only hope that our friends on the Rhine who will be brought into contact with them for the next few years, will, by example and precept, contribute to the education of this picturesque race.

From where I write I can see through my window another Scottish regiment approaching. They are marching in regular step, and are singing that famous Scottish air, "Keep the hame fires burning" ("hame" is Scottish for "home.")

It is thy day, oh Scotchman! Germania lies prostrate at the killed foot

This Famishing World.
Food follies that maim and kill the rich and the poor; that cheat the growing child and rob the prospective mother of health; that burns up millions in treasure, and fill untimely graves. The remedy is clearly and logically given by Alfred W. McCann, author "Starving America," "Thirty Cent Bread," etc.: 400 pages, large octave. Cloth $2.35; by mail, $2.40.
