New Church in Garafraxa.—Yesterday the corner stone of the new Congrega tional Church, near Douglas, Garafraxa, was laid with imposing ceremonies Amongst those present was the Rev. Love, Seduction, Abortion and Death.

A case of the above description has just been tried before Dr. Swan, Coroner, Woodstock. A young lady named Safety Fuller, and a gentleman named David Edwards, both respectably connected were the parties concerned. Edwards it appears had been paying his attentions "with a view to matrimony." The regard on both sides appears to have been mutual. Mr. Edwards had got everything ready to commence housekeeping, as was proved at the inquest, then went and asked the consent of the " stern parents" but was not accepted. The lover's ents" but was not accepted. The lover's pleadings were in vain; her parents were inflexible. Being thus refused, their clandestine interviews led to illegal intimacy, the result of which was that Miss Fuller became en ciente. Finding herself in this state she made known the fact to her mother, who at once rushed to a doctor for assistance; who to his credit be it said refused upon all points and warned her of the danger she would incur. Unheeding the alvice thus given, be it said refused upon all points and warned her of the danger she would incur. Unheeding the alvice thus given, and contrary to the desire of both Miss Fuller and Edwards, her parents assisted by a Miss Karns, persevered and at last, by the assistance of a male catheter, purchased by the latter succeeded in accomplishin their hellishg design. The patient lingered for about two weeks after, and as might be expected, death put an end to her sufferings, so cruelly inflicted by her heartless parents. Mr. and Mrs. Fuller, as well as some other members of the family, after giving their evidence at the first sitting of the inquest, left for parts unknown. This sad affair created quite a sensation in Woodstock, and the coroner is strongly condemned for his negligence, when he knew all the circumstances of the case, in allowing the guilty parties to slip in allowing the guilty parties to slip through his fingers.

SISTERLY LOVE .- The Mitchell Advoaic says: A battle between two young vomen, fought in usual womanly style by the pulling of hair, calling naughty names, smashing parasols over each oth-er's heads, &c., took place on Main street, on Tuesday, to the great amusement of the many who witnessed the scene. The combatants are sisters, and appeared to be well up in the business, each having fought with a determination to come ou the victor. Constable Hillen, who is always on hand when required, stepped in between the pugilists, but on seeing a proemstick whirled over his head by the enior fighter he retreated at double quick. The matter is likely to end in a

THE CROPS AROUND HARRISTON .-The Harriston correspondent of the Observer talks of the weather and the crops in that locality as follows :- The drought still continues, and is severely felt. The supply of water in wells, &c., is beginning to give way, and crops generally have suffered greatly. The fare is low, and there ought to be a big crowd for two reasons: first, to give encouragement to our players by the presence of friends; and secondly, because the Great Western Company is always generous and always ready to run an excursion train at reduced rates when asked to do so, and it would be only just for the people of Guelph to mark their appreciation of such kindness by a large turn-out.—And then the larger the crowd the better the fun. The late Rev. W. C. Burns. A few days ago information reache ountry of the death of the Rev. William Chalmers Burns, the senior mission ary in China of the English Presbyteria Church. Mr. Burns was son of the late Dr. William Burns, of Kilsyth, Scotland. He was born in the manse of Dun, For farshire, in 1815, before the removal of his father to the parish of Kilsyth. After receiving his elementary education at home, he entered the University of Glasgow, where he passed through the usual curriculum in the Philosophy classes. He curriculum in the Philosophy classes. He was placed for some time in the office of a lawyer in Edinburgh, but the employment was not congenial to his taste, and abandoning it he devoted himself to theological studies, in preparation for the ministry of the Gospel. In the year 1838 he was licensed as a preacher by the Presbytery of Glasgow, and immediately entered upon his labors as assistant to the late Mr. M'Cheyne in Dundee, whose place he filled during the absence of that accomplished and excellent man on the mission of enquiry to the Jews. Scarcely had Mr. Burns entered on his work in St. Peter's when his power as a preacher began to be felt. Gifted with a solid and vigorous understanding, possessed of a voice of vast compass and power—unsurpassed even by that of Mr. Spurgeon—and withal fired with an ardor so intense and an energy so exhaustless that nothing could damp or resist it, Mr. Burns wielded an influence over the masses whom he addressed which was almost without parallel since the days of Wesley and Whitefield. Crowds flocked to St. Peter's from all the country round; and the strength of the preacher seemed to grow with the incessant demands made upon it. Wherever Mr. Burns preached, a deep impression was produced on his audience. Only a few months after commencing his ministry in St. Peter's, Mr. Burns visited the home of his youth, and a sermon which he preached at Kilsyth was followed by a remarkable awakening in the congregation. Those present were so deeply affected that they refused to depart, and hours were spent in addresses and devotional exercises. Persons under anxiety of mind repaired in great numbers to the manse at Kilsyth, and other ministers were called on to take part in those exercises. Such was the beginning of what was termed the "Revival of Kilsyth." Mr. Burns continued to itinerate through Scotland for some years, preaching with great power and acceptance, but he steadily refused all proposals of a fixed to the proposals of a fixed to the proposal of the proposals of a fixed t a lawyer in Edinburgh, but the employtheir first missionary. To this work he was ordained in 1847. He had a wonderful aptitude for acquiring languages, and he achieved the herculean task of mastering the hieroglyphics of China, and both spoke and wrote the language of that country with facility. He made a translation into Chinese of the Pilgrim's Progress. To identify himself with the native population and establish an influence over them, he assumed the Chinese dress and conformed to their social habits. His Bible was constantly in his hand; and he became known not only in the villages which he visited but in Pekin itself, as the "Man of the Book." About twelve or fourteen years ago, Mr. Burns visited Scotland and many parts of Canada, and was welcomed wherever he appeared by vast assemblages of his old friends and admirers. Returning to the scene of his missionary labors in China, he continued to preach the Gospel by voice and by pen until he was attacked by fatal illness about the beginning of the present year. His death took place at Newchang, Manchooria, on the 4th of April. Mr. Burns was brother to the Rev. Islay Burns, one of the professors in the Free Church College of Glasgow.

THE SEA.—The sea is the largest of all cemeteries, and its slumberers sleep without monuments. All other graveyards, in all other lands, show some distinction between the great and the small, the rich and the poor; but in the ocean cemetery, the king and the clown, the Prince and the peasant, are alike distinguished. The same waters roll over them all—the same requiem by the minstrels of the ocean is sung to their honor. Over their remains the same storm beats and the same sun shines, and there unmarked, the weak and powerful, the plumed and unhonored, will sleep on until awakened by the same trump.

London, 31st.—The Session Parliament was prorogued to-day. The Queen was not present, and her speech was made by Royal Commission, and read as usual by the Lord High Chancellor. The cessation of attempts at rebellion in Ireland renders the further use of the exceptional powers granted by the two Houses needless. The speech also announces that a dissolution of Parliament will soon take place, in order that the people may reap the advan tages of the more extended system of representation recently provided, confident of their fitness for their new duties, and that their voice will be for the perpetuation of that civil and religious freedom which are secured by the institutions of the nation and the settlement of the realm. SATURDAY EV'G, AUGUST'1, 1868.

"Jump Jim Crow." We will recur to the subject.' Such is the concluding sentence of an article which appeared in the Advantage of the fair trial men are not absolved article which appeared in the Advertiser on Tuesday last—an article not very remarkable for the beauty or power of its diction, but imperishable from being in its roundabout and incoherent way, a most complete stultification and condemnation of that journal's own course for the last year and a half. We have waited for a recurrence to the subject, but up to the another point in the same article to present date there has been none. Why? Ay, there's the rub. Conjec ture might exhaust itself in a vain at-

"Partyism has its advantages and its abuses; but it is a matter of nice speculation how far a county can be healthy or prosperous without it. * * * * * * Men in power require watching and looking after by those interested. They have so many temptations to go astray, to deviate from the line of strict right, and of honest, above-board dealings, that even the best require all the influences of a good strong opposition to keep them in the narrow way. Hence we find when there are parties and these are pretty nearly equally balanced, that public affairs are likely to be more economically administered, corrupt and selfish influences to have less weight and the wishes of the people, and the claims of the country to have more consideration than where there is but one party or nearly so—and those holding the rules [reins?] of government can-do-as-they-like without caring or troubling themselves about what the great outside mass think about them. This is too patent to need further ement, but it is at the same time a fact that the people should never lose sight of."

A short time ago, it seems but as yesterday, the Advertiser was arguing with much less logic than bitterness that partyism was not desirable, nay more, that its effect until Contederation had been fully tested, would be to ruin the country, and instead of its not being healthy or prosperous without parties that the whole Dominion would go to the dogs, and perhaps further, if every person did not respond harmoniously to the utterances of Sir John A. Macdonald and a trio of recreant Reformers. Our cotemorary has evidently received new light, but the direction from which the gays entered his understanding we cannot divine. Public reasons for his proselytism he has none. What! Has he not since the formation of the Coalition up to the present time in common with other Tory organs lauded every measure of both Governments how absurd soever they might be, nor have we hitherto heard extravagant administration, or "corrupt and selfish influences" even hinted at. All was noble and pure and true, and he a fool or worse who did not believe that it was so. Whence then this sudden awakening, whence these insinuations that a Ministry, which not long since was a paragon of virtue and excellence, requires "watching and looking after by those interested," and why this thrust in the ribs without even a warning growl? Did not the Advertiser accept and laud, or copy approvingly laudations of every ministerial measure passed at the recent sittings of both Parliaments. Had it a word to say against the Free Grants Act, a law conceived in the very spirit of penuriousness; had it a single objection to urge against the enormous expenditure required by the Fortifications Bill, did it utter a sentence in condemnation of Cartier's coercive Militia Bill, or did it pen a line condemnatory of that conglomeration of absurdities, the Postal Bill? No. it did none of these things-and what then can be the cause of its suddenly threatening to turn tail to a pet Ministry? It cannot be because of the selection of the Intercolonial route, for if our memory serves us right the Advertiser never expressed an opinion as to which was preferable. Perhaps it didn't know. Thus from its course we infer that it had no public reasons for the sudden veer it has taken, nor SPECIAL ATTENTION. can we imagine any propelling cause except a disgust with the uncertain ture might exhaust itself in a vain attempt to solve the mystery. Perhaps it was thought more prudent to allow a considerable interval to elapse between the time when re-conversion was announced, and the time when the fact would be reiterated. Our readers will perhaps have some difficulty in comprehending that a newspaper which was accounted particularly sound on the "no-party" doctrine a few months ago, should with more than weathercock fickleness, have veered round unaided by a political breeze, and become without the slightest previous notice the advocate of partyism, and of the immediate and clear definition of party lines. But if they will pardon us for inflicting on them a little of that sort of writing which is known as twaddle, we shall endeavour to substantiate our assertion. The "turnabout, and wheel-about, and jump Jim Crow." policy of our cotemporary is plainly, if not beautifully, illustrated in the following extract, which is the twaddle we alluded to:

silver river, winding through the lea, singing birds on every greenwood tree, sunsio of the never silent sea.

The deep and solemn wood, never changing witnesses that He, o made all these fair things so gracious mighty in His love, and prayerfully I whisper, "God is good."

Hushed for the night is labor's busy hum,
The patient oven from the home croft come,
Their yoke unloosened and their day's work lon
Down to the little spring.
In from the sea the fragrant breezes toam,
Bearing the scent flowers freshly blown,
And murmuring of their wild, free cecan home,
They gladden everything.

Like little lambkins hastening to the fold,
And seeking shelter from the night and cold,
Drift the with cloudlets to the gates of gold,
And enter one by one;
All day ranging about the quiet sky,
God's grid, wide pasture-ground stretched out on They've wandered, and now weary homeward hie,
Where gleams the sinking sun.

Into its rainbow-curtained setting-place
The golden orb rides down with stately grace,
Slow veiling in the clouds its radient face,
And lo! at its command,
Longer the shadows fall on rock and tree,
From my sight fades the harvest plain and sea,
And twilight clasps its pale arms lovingly
About the peaceful land.

What a world of meaning in these words! What music to a wanderer's ear? How it quickens our pulses and sends memory surging back, bringing on its return over the rocks and quicksands of time the recollection of the happy days of yore. Home, the dearest spot on earth, around which cluster and centre our best thoughts and wishes, for there dwell the dear ones.

dear ones.

"I am going home," says the schoolboy as he rests his head upon his hand,
and with open book before him endeavors to commit to memory the lesson for the morrow; but memory is wandering far away to the happy days long since past, carrying him back to his childhood's home, his early associates, and his book is a perfect blank.

"I am going home," says the merchant

("I am going home," says the merchant

"I am going home," says the merchant rising from his chair, and closing the ledgers which have occupied his attention through the long, weary day. He gives a few orders to his clerks, and drawing on his coat hastens to meet the loved ones. The smile that plays around his mouth speaks plainly of the pleasure he is anticipating in the reunion.

"I am going home," says the sailor on the wide ocean, as he paces to and frougon the deck of his homeward-bound vessel. The waves dash high against the sides of the ship, and breaking scatter their tiny drops around him; he heeds them not, is unconscious that the wind is screeching through the masts and threatening to burl him beneath the rolling waves. His thoughts are far away, and lifting his hand to screen his eyes from the glaring sun-light, gazes with an entreating look for some familiar token in the distance to indicate that he is nearing home. In thought the intervening miles have already been travelled and he stands in the presence of his family. The captain's voice awakens him from his reverie, and he endeavors to place his mind upon duty; yet it is in vain, for he is approaching his native land.

"I am going home,' says the wounded soldier. Comrades gather around the war-worn and scathed veteran, for a moment envying him the pleasure and home care he so much needs. Within one of our best hospitals he had received every attention the inmates were capable of bestowing, but day by day strength declined. The surgeons recommended change of air, and he is now going home. His eyes sparkle and his flushed cheeks tell of an inward excitement which thoughts of the future occasion. Though disease preys on him, not a happier man can be found in the camp, for those musical words resound in his ears.
"I am going home," says the dying Christian, while her body is racked with pair. No sigh, no complaint, not even a murmur escapes those parched lips; only these words, accompanied by a prayer by a heavenly smile breaking over those wasted features, "All is peace
