CHAPTER I.

Two is A Train.

It is a touching spectacle for the outside public when a young lady, whom circumstances oblige to take a railway journey alone, is seen off to the station be ferficiends. To the object of all this solicitude it appears sometimes excessive. So at least, thought Dorothea, habitually known as Dolly Thompson, fith daugher of the Dean of St. Martin's, as the train that was to carry her to London, in couple of hours, dre w up at the platform, where she stood amid a body-guard composed of her mother, three sisters and a servant. Dolly was too well brought up to protest, but thought is free.

'I'm twenty-one,' she mused, disconsolide. Ye have been stood amid a body-guard composed of her mother, three sisters and a servant. Dolly was too well brought up to protest, but thought is free.

pouts can be shy, suggestive, arch and piquant as well as sorrowful. With lips very slightly parted and the corners in the faintest upward curve, how ever, is their normal position. Not so a large mouth with thin lips and minion teeth. Flashes of broad smiles, succeeded at once by a demure compression of the lips, are tremendously taking in such a mouth; and the lips need only a gentle droop at the corners to convey the idea of sensibility and se ductive melancholy.

When pigs come in cold weather, a few hours settles the question of life or death. If the sow is cross, the better way is not to disturb her; but with a quiet sow, much may be done to in sell furniture AS CHEAP as can be obtained in the Dominion.
