Some years ago the wife of a farmore, living not many miles from Boston, came to my office to consult me, because she feared she was suffering from a disease which she fully believed was "killing her by mehes." With and no more flesh and ing and taking notes of her story of misery, I made a careful examination, and then told her that she was entirely free from all disease, but was simply worn out and needed six months of rest and good living.

She sighed deeply, and said it was impossible to follow such a prescription, as their earns would not permit it. She said, further, that their two children had outgrown the call was three days old. And so for tediousness and loneliness, I never felt it; for I have done a heap of sewing, old and new, which had accumulated during the past year when I could not sew, I was so miserable. eighteen weeks and still continues without promise of any early ending of the contest. Governor Stone has been requested to call an extra session of the legislature for the purpose sion of the legislature for the purpose of framing a law which will bring the present dead-lock to a close, and he has agreed that if a bill can be framed to have the desired effect he will immediately convene legislature. Public sympathy generally is with the mine owners who decline to arbitrate with an organization which they assume is supported on principles contrary to individual freedom, and whose leaders are tyrants, holding in subjection the people they profess to defend. Mr. Abram S. Hewitt, when interviewed on the subject recently, declared his nviction that appropriate legislation is the only remedy. He says:

"It would be far better to abandon the business of mining anthracite coal the business of mining anthracite coal than to concede the demand for any man or set of men to deny the rights of employment and labor upon which the whole structure of free government is founded, and to which this country owes phenomenal progress. In my judgment, therefore, the operators are only doing their plain duty in declining to arbitrate a question which is ing to arbitrate a question which is "The only solution of the trouble is for Mr. Mitchell to order the strike off without delay. When this is done, if there be grievances to be arbitrated right of association is not in ques-tion. This is admitted by both em' ployers and employes. What is denied, and properly so, is the power by the issue of union cards to refuse employ-ment to non-union men and thus condemn them to ostracism, starvation and death. Such a result is abhorrent to justice and is fatal to personal

"There is a principle more important than the obligation of private property to subordinate itself to the general welfare. The demand of any man or set of men, not occupying public office, to decide upon the con-ditions upon which labor shall seek its living and to make it subject to a license from irresponsible leaders, whether representing capital or labor, is in effect a claim to the power of life and death, and can never be considered with the control of the contro ed without a base surrender of

The coal operators, therefore, are

"The consequences of such strikes are so disastrous not merely to the par-ties concerned, but to the whole com-munity, that every effort should be nade as soon as the existing strike has been called off and the existing strike has been called off and the excitement is abated, to prevent by appropriate legislation the recurrence of such calamitous conflicts whereby every-body is injured and no one is bene-

"The enactment of such legislation will not be attended with more diffi-culty than in the case of other dis-putes now regulated by law and subject to the adjudication of the courts, when the miners shall realize that they are making war upon their own rights secured by centuries of conflicts and sacrifices and that a present victory will result in depriving them of all personal freedom. Such disastrous conflicts will cease to recur and arbit tration may then well be invoked to settle local disputes.

"The hope of the working classes in the future as in the past, for better the future as in the past, for better conditions, rests upon personal liberty and the security of property. The English-speaking miners understand this proposition perfectly well, but for the time being they are powerless in the presence of bad leadership and the state of terror which prevails in the coal region, subjecting them to obloquy, violence and death, by which unwilling acquiescence is enforced.

"What is wanted to end this destructive conflict is not arbitration, but the stern repression of violence and the assured protection of the miners who desire to earn a livelihood for themselves and their families.

"To this protection they are entitled and the government which falls." titled, and the government which fails to afford it is a reproach to republi-

with an ill-grace from a leader who began the conflict with an order calling on the engineers, firemen and pump men to abandon their task, thus ex-posing the mines to utter ruin. If this order had been observed the re-sumption of work would have been victims of this desperate expedient re-indefinitely postponed and the helpless duced to hopeless poverty. To rule or ruin is not a policy which com-mends itself to the American people who believe in the old-fashioned rule loyalists are bitterly aroused over the concessions granted to the whilom for and are demanding that the constitution of the colony shall be suspended. Mr. Chamberlain has promptly decided against such a measure. His policy is to assume honorable intentions on the part of the late Boer belligerents, and to avoid any measures which would tend to create hostile feelings. In this policy he is supported by all temperate thinkers, but the view of the loyalists is that while the rebels have been pardoned and granted favors on every hand, the services of the faithful have gone unrewarded. The complainants are in the position of the elder brother of the "prodigal son." It is not always easy to accept the old saw that "virtue is its own reward." loyalists are bitterly aroused over the Bent.

Further, it appears that pork of excellent quality can be obtained from the mixed ration of equal parts of barley, oats, peas. The question has yet to be decided as to the proportion of maize meal that can be used in a ration without endangering the quality of the pork, and the stage in the growth of the animal at which maize should be fed if firm bacton is to result. Other matters receiving attention relate to locality, exercise and the feeding of green stuff, clover and roots. Of all the crops used here so far for pasturing pags, rape quite easily stands first. The principal points in its favor are: 1, its quick growth; 2, its wide range, as it grows well on almost any kind of land; 3, its long season, as it may be sown as late as September, and still do fairly well; 1, its evident palatability. greedily; and 5, its good to the quality of the bacon, producing as it does, a good firm carcass. It should be sown in rows about 24 inches apart, since when so grown it gives the greatest return per acre and is best adapted for pasturing. It should be sown fairly thickly in the rows, say three pound of seed per acre. An acre may be expected to carry from 20 to 40 pigs through a season, depending on the season and the condition of the crop when the pigs are turned in.

MODERN PIG FEEDING.

In the past some objections have been raised by the packers to the use of forage plants and roots for pork production, but the light of recent experiments would seem to show their lears or objections groundless, in fact, the good influence of a considerable proportion of green feed or roots in the ration of a pag can scarcely be over estimated. In our observations of experiments carried along the lines of feeding roots to hogs and determining results, the Drovers' Journal has noted two things quite invariably, viz.:

First—Feeding of roots in addition to grain and other feed quite frequently produces a better grain than is the case where the roots are omitted.

Second—If the addition of roots does not actually produce a gain in flesh, it prevents the possible falling behind by producing 100 pounds of flesh at a less cost of feed.

TABLE MANNERS PART OF EARLY EDU

To any but a doting parent the sight of an infant at table, throwing food and cutlery as far as baby strength admits, is nauscating, and nobody can be blamed for refusing invitations even from their best friends, when they know that the baby is a part of the entertainment. atertainment.

I do not wish to be considered by percritical, but it is bad policy, and worse taste, to entertain infants and animals at table, to my way of thinking, even when there are no visitors. I have eaten with both, and of the two I choose the animals, because they, at least, eat quickly and with tolerable neatness. A great deal of liberty is permitted, and bad habits are formed before one realizes that the baby is old enough to have any expension.

I have always maintained that it is unwise to include little ones in the family gathering at table before the are able to use their hands intelligently, and I see no reason to change my mind in the introduction of what is claimed as a remarkable aid to baby manners—a food pusher. It may reduce the spilling of food, but it will not improve haby's manners in other ways, I am sure.

Table manners do not receive much attention in modest homes even from adults. Occasionally there is found a mother of innate relinement who manages to give an air of distinction to her surroundings and generally feels a dead of ambition for her children. She seems to know that without good manners the struggle of life is hard, and so her children are equipped with the weapon which opens to them the doors of desirable houses.

All reforms must begin with the children, for they are tractable. Grown people become calloused to criticism and are the victims of habit to a serious point. It is not impossible to bring up a generation of courteous, well-bred people, and it is certainly as praiseworthy as the cultivation of physical beauty. Very small children can be fed by themselves, carefully and slowly, and brought to the table when they have learned to place small portions of food in the mouth, to keep the lips closed during mastication, to chew slowly and thoroughly, and to avoid drinking and talking until the food has been swallowed.

Characterial trains, according to the New York Heraid, happened to be seated next to enter them to find them.

'I never saw such a crowd in my life," said one of them to her neighbor, after she had counted her parcels twee with an air of certainty of find-ing their number reduced. 'My! it looks as if nobody could ever find any body lelse in a place like this."

"I've come to visit my daughter," she's the kind of the girl that would just let anybody just walk right over the victims of habit to a serious profits. It is might and the proving the courted them.

"In rever saw such a crowd in my life," and to avoid drinking and talking un-til the food has been swallowed. Choking is the most common childish fault at table, and it comes from care-of good manners.

Crumbling bread between restless fingers is a fault not always confined to children. It is a common enough trick at restaurant tables, where men ng with the knife, fork or spoon. The tands do not belong on the table be-ore food is served, and this is a rule

ed. There are forks and spoons with which to convey food to the mouth, and fingers, too, in some cases, yet was and fingers, too, in some cases, yet we see the knife preferred to all, every day, in public places. It has been my poor mites, have no idea of the hand cap they are placing upon their lives No matter how attractive a person may be, do not yield to the fascination of personality before the final test of eating. If you do, there may be an awful disappointment in store for you. I found it in a fashionable restaurant recently, when ah exquisitely dressee man took a seat at an adjoining table. He was the perfection of good breeding until the soup had been re-placed by fish, when his real educa in counting the journeys. This is the worst fault, the grossest, committed at table. world and the spot we are destined to occupy in it. Things are not just as we want them nor as we feel they cupy is, and will be, precisely what we choose to make it, says Woman's Life. Whether we do right or wrong, whether we are happy or otherwise, depends very largely, if not entirely,

We have all experienced the feeling of brightness which a sunshiny woman brings with her wherever she goes. She may have just as many worries She may have just as many worrnes to face, just as many anxieties to bear, but she overcomes them largely by a bright and sunny disposition. We are not all capable of laughing in the face of trouble or adversity, but we can at least make an attempt, and even if the laugh lacks the ring of heartiness, it is infinitely better than the frown or sigh
